Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No one will dispute the correctness of the views which have been stated by my hon. friend, but I would ask him if there is any occasion to apply the rule on the present occasion. The Minister of Justice has told us that this Bill is simply to correct a clerical error by supplying the omission of words which were in the Bill when passed by the Railway Committee, but which afterwards were left out by an error of the clerk. This was brought to the attention of the Minister of Justice by the clerk himself. Nobody disputes this statement. If the statement of fact were disputed, the advice of my hon. friend should prevail; but as it is not, I cannot see why we should refer the Bill to the Railway Committee.

Mr. SPROULE. If the allegation of fact be correct, I do not see that there should be any objection, but the Minister of Justice says he has no personal knowledge, and I personally am in the same position.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There are members of the Railway Committee on both sides of the House. The statement has been made openly and no one has challenged it, so that we may accept it as true beyond doubt.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I did not make the statement of my personal knowledge, but on information given me by the clerk of the Railway Committee, who asked me to introduce this Bill. I have read a letter from him to that effect, which I read to the House when I introduced it. That letter will be found on page 5577 of 'Hansard.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That should remove any objection.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

NATURALIZATION AND ALIENS ACTS —AMENDMENT.

Mr. FITZPATRICK moved second reading of Bill (No. 147) to amend the Acts relating to Naturalization and Aliens. He said: As I explained on the first reading, this is intended to meet a difficulty in the province of Quebec. Under the law application must be made to the circuit court of the district. This court sits at the chief place in the district and in addition at other places. The clerks in the circuit court, in order, I suppose, to avoid unnecessary labour, contend that applications for naturalization must be made at the chief place or shire town, and cannot be made at other places where the court sits. Since introducing this Bill, it has attracted attention in the province of Manitoba, and I have a letter from the ex-chief justice of that province, Judge Killam, in which he suggests an amendment of a similar nature applicable to that province. Let me read his letter:

Winnipeg, 9th July, 1904.

Dear Sir,—Observing that you have introduced a Bill to amend the Naturalization Act, I desire again to call your attention to some points which I mentioned to you some time ago, when I was Chief Justice of Manitoba.

By section 11 of the Act, Revised Statutes Canada, chapter 113, the naturalization certificate is to be presented (in Manitoba) to the Court of Queen's (now King's) Bench during its sitting in the county in which the alien resides, or to the court of assize, &c., or to the county court of such county.

There are now no courts of assize and 'nisi prius' in the province. There are sittings of the Court of King's Bench for commercial and jury trials twice each year in each judicial district (which, under the interpretation clause is the 'county').

There are weekly sittings of the Court of King's Bench at Winnipeg for non-jury trials, also weekly sittings for motions and legal arguments. These have always been considered sittings within the Naturalization Act and many naturalization certificates have been brought up and read at these.

At times, at trial sittings, many parties are present as witnesses. But often at these, and usually at the other sittings there are only a few lawyers.

The reading of such certificates at these sittings gives no publicity and is often a great nuisance to the judge, the officials and those having business before the court.

I would suggest that all such certificates be presented in the county courts. This affords a far better chance of securing publicity among the neighbours of the alien, the sole object of such reading.

Chief Justice Killman sends me a draft-clause which he suggests as a substitute for that relating to Manitoba, which is as follows:

Said section 11 is further amended by striking out line 20 to 26 both inclusive and substituting the following:—'In Manitoba to the county court having jurisdiction where the alien resides or if there be no county court having jurisdiction there, then to some other county court in the province.

This amendment I will move when the Bill reaches committee.

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN. If I understand the object of this amendment of the law with regard to Quebec, then, taking the example given by the hon. minister (Mr. Fitzpatrick) the alien may be naturalized on applying to the circuit court in any town in which the circuit court sits, and is not obliged to apply at the sitting in the chef lieu, or chief town of the district. I think that is all right. But I would call the attention of the hon. minister to the second clause which makes the law retroactive, from and including 13th August, 1903. I suppose my hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) will give us some explanation and reasons for the introduction of this retroactive clause.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have not the statute here, and cannot refer to it, but the object of this second section is to give effect to any naturalization certificates which may have been issued in the interval by some of the circuit courts sitting outside the chef lieu.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA. I think I can supply the information asked for by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) not that I think it necessary to throw light on any question of law dealt with by the Minister of Justice, but that I happen to be familiar with the facts. Every year in my constituency many aliens are naturalized. The former Naturalization Act forms chapter 113 of the Revised Statutes. Section 110 of that Act named the courts in which certificates are to be presented. A part of that section is as follows :

In Quebec to the circuit court in and for the circuit within the jurisdiction of which the alien resides.

Last year in the Act introduced by the Minister of Justice, which appears as chapter 28 of the statute of 1903, but was changed so as to read :

In Quebec to the circuit court in and for the district within the jurisdiction of which the alien resides.

So, it will be seen that under the old Act a petition could be presented in the circuit within which the alien resided. But, in the new Act it must be presented in the circuit court of the district. As my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) knows what is generally called in our province, the district circuit court, as I understand, is a court which sits in the chef lieu where the superior court sits. Now, some naturalization certificates were presented last year before the superior court judge sitting at Papineauville, and the judge said that on account of last year's amendment of the Naturalization Act, they had to be presented at the district circuit court at Hull. I see that the retroactive clause carries back to the date when this Bill of last year was assented to.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. To explain my own position, I may say that I have never entertained any doubt that these petitions could be presented at the circuit court sitting anywhere in the district. But the difficulty is that the clerks of the court, over whom we have no jurisdiction, to save themselves the labour of these certificates, for which they get no remuneration, insist on the work being done at the headquarters of the court.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If the House will bear with me, I would call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the fact that retroactive legislation is objectionable in principle. I suppose I can get the assurance of my hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) that it does not interfere with any action of law pending before the court.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I cannot give that because I do not know. We might protect that point by amending the clause to provide that it shall not interfere with any question now in litigation. But I cannot say that there is no litigation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). This, of course, is objectionable on the face of it——

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I quite agree.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And possibly it would be better to add some clause such as the minister suggests. I do not know that I quite gather how this particular date of 13th August, 1903, was arrived at.

Mr. BOURASSA. This was the day on which the Act of last session was assented to. Of course, I am not contending that the present law ought to be changed. I simply pointed out that where it was printed in the old Act 'circuit' in 'which the alien resides,' it was printed in the Act of last year 'district.' The petitions I referred to, presented last year to the judge of the circuit court under this law, he would not receive, because he said they ought to be presented at the chef lieu.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The answer is perfectly satisfactory. The date is that on which the Act of last session became law.

Motion agreed to, Bill read a second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 2,

2. The circuit courts in and for territorial divisions of districts and counties in the province of Quebec are hereby declared to have had jurisdiction under the Naturalization Act, as so amended, on and since the thirteenth day of August, 1903, as if the said section 11 had been enacted by chapter 38 of the statutes of 1903 in the form of that section as amended by this Act.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It has been moved to amend section 2 by inserting 'Provided this clause shall not affect any pending action or proceeding.'

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I move to add the following as clause 3:

Said section 11 is further amended by striking out the lines from 20 to 26, both inclusive, and substituting the following :—

In Manitoba, to the county court having jurisdiction where the alien resides, or if there be no county court having jurisdiction there then to some other county court in the province.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) has suggested to me that the latter part of the clause might be modified with advantage to the effect that the other county court referred to should be the nearest county court.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I agree to that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is not exactly the language, but the idea may be there.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. He means the adjoining district ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What he wants is to go into the courts of the nearest district to the place where the man resides. I wish to amend this suggested amendment in such a way as to provide that if there is no county court within the district where the alien resides, then the application is to be made to the nearest county court within the place where he resides ; and for the purpose of preparing the proper amendment I would move that the committee rise and report progress.

Progress reported.

REVISED STATUTES—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 154) to amend chapter 61 of the statutes of 1903, respecting the Revised Statutes of Canada—Mr. Fitzpatrick—was read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 2,

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Section 4 of the present statute reads as follows:

> The Governor in Council, after such deposit of the said last mentioned roll, may by proclamation declare.

There is only one roll, therefore the use of the words 'last mentioned' is unnecessary.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I should think that this is a proper amendment. I have not specially examined the statute of last year, but I may say to the hon. Minister of Justice that under a somewhat similar statute in the province of Nova Scotia a very curious condition has arisen. Perhaps he may have heard something of it. It seems that a roll in exact conformity with the report of the commissioners with certain additions and corrections taken from the statutes of the same year was prepared ? In the margin of that some person had pencilled a word. It had been in the former statute, but it had been omitted from that statute by subsequent legislation. The statute of the province providing for the roll was to the effect that after the roll was prepared by the commissioners and after it was printed it should be signed by the Governor and the provincial secretary and that it should be regarded as the original roll. When it was printed it was printed with the inclusion of this pencilled word in the margin and the result was that very important litigation arose which was recently determined by the Supreme Court of Canada. In the litigation another point arose which is worthy of consideration at the present time; that is to say whether or not the printed roll so provided for by the statute and signed by the government and provincial secretary would have the same force and effect as the roll of parliament, or whether it could be controverted by evidence which could not be introduced to controvert. If the roll of parliament as finally signed and verified by the officers of parliament and the Governor himself could be shown by the most indisputable evidence to differ in any respect from the legislation as it had passed the committees of this House or had pased the third reading of this House and the Senate, you could not controvert it by any evidence of that kind because it imputes absolute verity. I would think that, taking every precaution to make sure that the roll shall be absolutely correct, it is desirable in this statute, if it has not already been done, to make it absolutely clear that the roll so signed by the proper authorities named in this statute shall impute the same verity and shall be as binding and conclusive as the roll of parliament itself would be.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not quite sure whether these amendments have been suggested as a result of the difficulty which occurred in the province of Nova Scotia to which my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) has referred, but I may say that these amendments have been prepared as a result of a report made to me by three gentlemen who went over this roll and who were appointed a sub-committee by the commission for that purpose. These gentlemen were Mr. Newcombe, Mr. Roscoe, and Mr. Sirois. These three careful and painstaking gentlemen having examined the roll have suggested these amendments.

Mr. GOURLEY. How far have they got with the revision ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I had expected to be called upon to make a statement when I brought down my estimates in connection with the item which I will have to submit to the House. Then I will be able to give all the details to my hon. friend, but I may say that the work is very far advanced and that I think early within the next year the whole matter will be disposed of.

On section 3,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the effect of that ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In one section they called it 'the last roll' and in the other 'the amended roll.'

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Welland canal—electric lighting and power plant, $100,000.

Mr. INGRAM. I notice that under the contract the government takes 500 horse-power and it may be extended to 700.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). Yes, if we require it. I do not think the original arrangement with the Lincoln Company was by tender, but tenders have been called for all the materials required.

Mr. SPROULE. What materials do you require ?

Mr. EMMERSON. They only supply the power under that contract, but we have to install the plant ; and everything is included in this vote.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the price per horse-power ?

Mr. EMMERSON. $14.

Mr. BLAIN. This contract is for the supply of horse-power only ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Last session the government explained that the supplies for the electric plant would be obtained by tender.

Mr. EMMERSON. That has been done.

Mr. BLAIN. Who were the tenderers ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The Canadian General Electric Company, the Packard Electric Company, the Canadian Westinghouse Company ; there were quite a number. All the materials were not purchased from the one concern. Some prices were lower on some articles than on others, and I selected from the tenders the articles that were quoted at the lowest prices.

Mr. BLAIN. What will the total construction of the electric plant, when complete, cost ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The estimate given by Mr. Parke, the electrical expert, of the lighting and the power plant is $250,000. It will not be exceeded I understand.

Mr. BLAIN. When will it be completed ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It should have been completed this month, but these companies have failed to come to time.

Mr. INGRAM. Is the government under any obligation to the contractors for power, in case the plant is not constructed by a certain time ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, when we are ready to take the horse-power we will pay for it.

Mr. SPROULE. What horse-power do you require for moving the gates, &c., in contradistinction to the power used in generating the electricity for the lights ?

Mr. EMMERSON. We require hardly 400 horse-power for the lights alone and the balance of the 500 will be required for the gates and bridges.

Mr. SPROULE. How many lights have you ?

Mr. EMMERSON. About 500 lights of 2,000 candle-power requiring about three-quarters of a horse-power to a light.

Mr. SPROULE. What length is the canal that you are lighting ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Twenty-seven miles is the length of the canal and we are lighting it throughout.

Mr. SPROULE. Does this complete the expense on the Welland canal ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, this completes the improvements. We have to take out the centre piers of the bridges that cross the canal. In the interests of navigation that becomes necessary. We are not doing that all at one time, but year by year as it becomes necessary we will do so. There is one in contemplation now at St. Catharines known as the Niagara street bridge. The centre pier will have to be removed and the present bridge replaced by a larger and heavier structure.

Mr. GERMAN. I would like to call the attention of the minister to the question suggested by my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) as to whether this will complete the expenditure in regard to the lighting on the Welland canal. I have been endeavouring to impress on the minister and I would like to impress on parliament this one fact that the proper thing for the government to do is to put in their own electrical plant and not to make any contract with any company. That is the cheapest way to do it ; there is water going to waste on the Welland canal in very large quantities. The government can install its own electrical plant, light the Welland canal and open and operate lock gates and bridges very much more cheaply in my opinion, and I think in the opinion of experts, than they are doing it under the contract which they have entered into now, although the contract which has been entered into is an exceedingly reasonable one so far as the prices are concerned. In view of what the hon. member (Mr. Sproule) has just stated, I beg to suggest that the proper thing to be done is for the government to install its own electrical plant and use its own water-power for lighting the canal and operating the locks and bridges.

Mr. SPROULE. That was the feature of it which attracted my attention. If we have power going to waste, why should we pay for power from an outside corporation? The power we are paying for is water-power. I understand that the government put in their own plant but pay the company for power. What power is it if not water-power that they are paying for ?

Mr. INGRAM. I suppose that the hon. gentleman from Welland is aware that this contract is for ten years. Is it not a fact that power is becoming cheaper from time to time in this district, and does not my hon. friend think that it is rather an unwise move to enter into a ten year contract for power of this kind when the price of power is being reduced very rapidly ? The plan advocated by the hon. gentleman (Mr. German), namely that the government operate the whole thing, might be very much cheaper he says and for that reason I think that entering into a ten year contract is not a good move. I think we could do better.

Mr. SPROULE. Why enter into a contract with an outside company for power, if we have water going to waste which contains all the power we require ? Why not use the water going to waste on the Welland canal, install a plant there, operate the locks and bridges and canal and light it as well, in that way.

Mr. EMMERSON. That might be done very rapidly but it would involve a large expenditure of money in order to utilize that power.

Mr. SPROULE. How could it ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is not something lying there to be availed of at any moment. For the utilization of that water-power a mechanical arrangement is required and the expense is considerable ; I do not know how much. However, be that as it may, it stands in this position that a contract was entered into and we are now under contract to take so much power from the Lincoln Company, and we have to furnish a certain equipment along the line of the Welland canal in order to utilize the power that we thus secure from that company.

Mr. SPROULE. If you use your own power you would have to do no more than you are doing to-day. If you have the water penned up and the requisite pressure it simply requires a wheel to bring it into operation. All you would require then to connect that with your machinery is a water wheel. Every one knows that that is not a very expensive item. Then you have the power, and if I understand correctly you are installing your own dynamos and other plant. Since the government must do that, why should they pay $14 per horse-power when they have so much power going to waste ? All they need do is to install the plant and utilize that power. You would then have your own power and would not be bound by any contract and could take advantage of every improvement to cheapen it.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not know as to the relative cost of furnishing the water-power and purchasing it, but I am informed that the government, if they wanted to utilize the water-power along the Welland canal, would have to spend more than they are paying this company.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you an engineer's report to that effect ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Then that is just mere rumour.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is more that a rumour, it is a statement.

Mr. SPROULE. By whom ?

Mr. EMMERSON. From the department.

Mr. SPROULE. That statement must be based on knowledge.

Mr. EMMERSON. However, the contract is let, and that is only a statement with reference to the cost. It may or may not be correct. I certainly cannot vouch for it. But I can say that $14 per horse-power is certainly a very reasonable figure, as water-powers are leased in Canada to-day.

Mr. SPROULE. I may tell the hon. minister that I am interested in a contract for the supply of electric power, not only water-power but the electric current as well, for $8 per horse-power, and we carry that five miles by wire.

Mr. EMMERSON. Where is that ?

Mr. SPROULE. Right where I live. That is a very reasonable rate, and it shows that where water is plentiful power can be supplied very cheaply. The minister says the contract is let and of course there is a vested right, but I am arguing antecedent to the letting of the contract. I am contending that business prudence would have suggester the necessity of making ample inquiry and securing sufficient data to satisfy the minister that the power could not be furnished cheaper by using the water that is going to waste in the canal.

Mr. EMMERSON. What is the date of the contract ?

Mr. SPROULE. 5th of December is the date of the Order in Council.

Mr. INGRAM. 1st of July, I think. The only point in this discussion is whether it would be cheaper for the government to generate their own power. That I think we must admit. You are furnishing everything outside the power, and since you have to go to so much expenditure in furnishing plant, why not complete your plant and furnish your own power ? You would then have control for all time to come instead of being in the hands of a company. I am strongly of the opinion of the hon. member for Welland that that would be the right step to take in view of the enormous water-power in the neighbourhood.

Mr. EMMERSON. Personally the matter has not come under my notice as to whether it would be advisable or not to utilize that water-power, but it does occur to me that it could not be utilized without the expenditure of a very considerable sum in addition to what we are spending. I did not even make personal inquiry to ascertain whether there is ample power along the canal, because there has been no occasion for me to do so. And I am therefore not in a position to give an opinion.

Mr. SPROULE. How much have you let in that canal to outsiders ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There is a great deal under lease, and the leases go over many years. Water-powers are being applied for.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there not still power, over and above what is leased, sufficient to do all the lighting of the canal and operate the gates and bridges ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think there could be some leased, but I have not had occasion to make inquiry, for the simple reason that we entered into a contract in 1902.

Mr. SPROULE. There is an excuse for the minister that he was not responsible at the time.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am not relieving myself of responsibility, but am simply drawing attention to the fact that personally I have not felt called upon to make inquiry.

Mr. SPROULE. If the minister is assuming responsibility for what his predecessors did, he is responsible for their mistakes and blunders as well as successes.

Mr. EMMERSON. Certainly.

Mr. SPROULE. We are selling power, I am told, in many cases at a merely nominal figure. Look at the power we sold on the Cornwall canal. I venture to say that there is over 1,000 horse-power, probably 2,000, on that canal, and we are selling it at $1,000 a year. That would not amount to $1 a horse-power, yet we are buying it back at $63 horse-power. Can that be called good management ? What is the essential cost of the development of power ? It must be developed by steam or water-power. All through the country the great requisite is water-power, because then you save the cost of fuel and machinery for the generation of steam. Wherever you have water pent up you can generate power very cheaply. And it is a permanent power. We have that power there, and we could sell it, or we would use it to generate electrical energy. But we lease the right to others for a nominal figure, and then we buy back at a considerable figure the power which they generate by using the opportunities that we have leased to them. I am not saying that the price paid by the government is exorbitant ; frankly, I do not think it is. But we could produce that power for our own use if we provided the proper means. The Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) says that it would be very costly machinery. The hon. minister is mistaken. Where you have the water already stored up, all you need is a pen-stock and a wheel. This will produce the power, and you can use that power to run a dynamo, a saw-mill or any other machinery. I contend that it does not show good business management for the head of a department to allow power to go to waste, and, at the same time, buy power from outsiders. And, especially, this does not show good business management when a contract is made for ten years to pay a certain rate per horse-power. No matter what inventions may be made to develop power cheaply, we are compelled to pay the same price under the contract. And if we find fault we are told that contracts are sacred, and, even if we can get the service at a cheaper rate, we must continue to pay the price agreed upon. I contend that the department should have had one of its engineers ascertain what power is available ; and, if enough power was going to waste to work the locks and bridges and generate electricity to light the canal, that power should have been used, rather than take power from an outsider under such a contract as this. In this case there seems ample evidence that we could supply the power at a rate much less than that we are paying. To say that is to say that the minister is not doing his duty in not having the investigation made to learn the best means of utilizing that power.

Mr. EMMERSON. The Lincoln Company, of course, sell their power. But they had to spend a very large sum of money in order to develop that power.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. Minister should not insist that it requires a large expenditure to utilize this power, now that the water is pent up.

Mr. EMMERSON. The power has to be developed, and that means a permanent investment.

Mr. SPROULE. What does the hon. minister mean by 'developed' ? The first requisite in the making of a water-power is a dam, and that is often a very expensive work. But in this case the dams are all made. The water is now running in the sluice-ways. It is only necessary to put in a wheel to utilize the power.

Mr. EMMERSON. But it means putting up buildings and installing machinery. I understand it requires a very large expenditure to develop water-power, and the mere fact that you have the water does not mean that you have power—you must harness it.

Mr. COCHRANE. But the main expense of harnessing is the making of a dam, and that work is already done. Common sense must tell the minister, as it tells me, that when a company is furnishing power to the government the company must receive interest on its investment, and that the government is paying that interest in the price it pays for the power.

Mr. EMMERSON. I admit that I am not an authority on these points. I am glad of suggestions from my hon. friends.

Mr. COCHRANE. Then if the minister is not an authority, why does he not——

Mr. EMMERSON. I am modest enough to admit that I am not an authority, but my hon. friend (Mr. Cochrane) perhaps is not modest enough to admit the same concerning himself.

Mr. COCHRANE. The difficulty is that the minister admits too much. Of course, we do not expect the minister now to know everything about his department. But he has a competent staff, and they are there for the purpose of giving him information. And I am very strongly of opinion that no minister should come down here and ask the House to vote money without proper information. There is no excuse for ignorance. If he has not been in his office long enough to learn it himself, his staff will furnish it for him. Does not the company that furnishes this power get that power from the water in the canal? If so, they must put in the necessary machinery to develop the power, and on their investment they must receive interest. I do not think it requires such an enormous amount of capital. In the section in which I live there are immense water-powers, but to utilize them is an expensive matter, because in every case you must first build a dam. But once the dam is made the putting in of the machinery is an insignificant thing. I believe, and I think the committee feel, that the minister should take steps to find if he could not utilize the power now going to waste and at the same time save money to the country. I am not finding fault with the amount he is paying if he must buy the power. But if we can use the power that we now own and so avoid paying to somebody else, it should be an advantage to have this power harnessed.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems that there has been no calculation made as to whether we can get power more cheaply by utilizing the water that is going to waste in the canal. I do not call that good business management; in fact, I think it is bad business management. The minister should make the same inquiry that a wise business man would make in such a case; and I think that that might have been done before now.

Mr. GERMAN. The contract price for this power is $14 per horse-power. At Niagara Falls, New York, manufacturing companies are paying from $25 to $30 per horse-power for electric power delivered on the spot. There are three companies carrying on operations to develop electric power on the Canadian side at Niagara Falls. It is said that when they have finished the work of development which is now going on, which, I think, will be this fall—one of them, the Canadian Niagara Power Company, by December, at any rate—you will not be able to get power from them for less than from $15 to $20 per horse-power. Under those circumstances, it can hardly be said that the price charged the government by the Lincoln Company is too high. I quite agree, however, and must again insist, that the proper thing for the government to do is to develop the power itself.

I quite agree with the idea that power should be given to the government to develop this power itself. I had an opportunity of discussing this matter with the late Minister of Railways and suggested to him that the government should put in plant and develop power rather than give the contract to a company; but he thought that at that particular time it was more advisable to enter into the contract for ten years. We know that this very company has been urging strenuously on the government that the contract should be extended; as a matter of fact people interested in the company have spoken to me about it, asking me if I would use my influence, if I had any, with the department to obtain a further extension of this contract.

Mr. SPROULE. They would like it for a hundred years.

Mr. GERMAN. No doubt. The price of power will be lower, but I doubt if it will be lower within the life of the contract. I think $14 per horse-power during the life of this contract is probably about as low a figure as you could get power for. I would not be in favour of extending the contract, and I think that if the government can see its way to put in plant of its own and utilize the water that is going to waste on the Welland canal to develop power which will operate all the locks and bridges and furnish light on the canal, it would be the best thing to do in the public interest. I have made that statement before, and I am prepared to stand by it, because I do not think it can be controverted. As far as price is concerned, I think the price that is being paid now is reasonable. The hon.

member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) asked how much power was being used by manufacturers on the Welland canal. I venture to say there is 100,000 horse-power, probably more than that.

Mr. SPROULE. Going to waste.

Mr. GERMAN. It is not wasted, it is in the canal.

Mr. SPROULE. It is practically wasted as long as it is not used.

Mr. GERMAN. We must have water there in order to have a canal.

Mr. SPROULE. Would not the water run on just the same even though the power was not used ?

Mr. GERMAN. The hon. gentleman says it does not cost much to put in machinery. I can tell him that it costs an enormous sum of money to put in machinery. Go to the Westinghouse Company and ask them what is the cost of dynamos per horse-power necessary to light and operate the Welland canal.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought the minister said they put in the dynamos and the plant themselves.

Mr. EMMERSON. I was mistaken with respect to that, I had not the contract before me.

Mr. SPROULE. As to the price of power, we paid that much for horse-power per annum already, before the contract.

Mr. GERMAN. It is $14 per horse-power per year.

Mr. SPROULE. But that was not in use during the full year.

Mr. EMMERSON. By the contract it is only paid proportionately, we do not have to pay for the whole year.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the minister tell us about how much it will cost the government to supply the power for electric lighting and the horse-power, separately ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The estimated cost of installing the arc light system ?

Mr. BLAIN. No, I am asking, when the $10,000 plant for both electric lighting and power is completed, what will be the total cost to the government of the power to be used for the gates, and the cost of the electric lighting separately.

Mr. EMMERSON. As I said to my hon. friend, the government expect to spend fully $250,000, and after expending that sum we will have a lighting plant and a power plant. Then we will be called upon to pay after that for the power generated by the Lincoln Company at the rate of $14 per horse-power.

Mr. CLARKE. Per annum ?

Mr. EMMERSON. At that rate per annum, in proportion to the length of time in each year that it is used.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman has already told us that. What I am asking is, how much do the government expect it will cost to operate these two distinct plants when the work is done. The hon. gentleman has told us $14 per horse-power. I suppose the government will have some estimate made as to how much it will cost per year to supply the power.

Mr. EMMERSON. The cost will not exceed $7,000. We hope it will be within that sum.

Mr. CLARKE. Before the Orders of the Day were called, I asked the right hon. the Prime Minister if he could give the House any information with respect to the military situation at Sydney. There have been reports in the newspapers that the militia who had been sent on duty to that town have been withdrawn, and their places taken by the regular military force of the Dominion. It has also been stated that a warship has been sent round from Halifax. I would like to know from the Minister of Militia what the facts are in connection with the trouble down there ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). Under the provisions of the statute, three magistrates of Sydney, Cape Breton, one of them being the stipendiary magistrate of the town, made a request upon the district officer commanding at Halifax for assistance. The district officer at Halifax called out, in the first instance, the local militia, which was not found to be adequate ; and later on he sent 200 men, I think, from the city of Halifax. As the difficulties continued, and appeared likely to continue for some time longer, and as these men were employed in Halifax in various ways and their absence was causing inconvenience, the district officer commanding asked headquarters to lend 100 men of the permanent force to go to Sydney and replace the active militia so that they might return to their homes and their work.

Mr. CLARKE. How many of the active militia were on duty ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. About 200, I think. This was agreed to, upon condition that the money, necessary to pay the cost of transportation and all expenses, was deposited in the bank at Sydney to the credit of the Receiver General. Upon that being done, and the department being informed of the fact through the bank—and I may say the money was deposited by the three magistrates already mentioned—the troops were allowed to go, and are there now, under these conditions. With reference to the warship, I have no information at all. I was not aware that a warship was there. I do know, however, that it is the custom of warships, British warships and others, to call occasionally at the port of Sydney. I presume this was merely one of the occasional calls.

Mr. CLARKE. I am very glad to have the explanation of the minister in this matter. When the announcement was made that the regulars were being sent and that a warship was proceeding to Sydney, I feared the situation was more serious than it really is.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at Three o'clock.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) seemed to take exception to the purchase of power for lighting and operating the gates on the Welland canal, and he seemed to be of the opinion that the government might have utilized the powers which they have on the canal. It is well known that I was not personally cognizant of the transaction at the time, but I find on looking into the matter that the expert employed by the department at that time, in a report presented in November, 1902, sets forth his views. I will read this report to the committee. The expert is Mr. Roderick J. Parke, consulting electrical engineer of Toronto. The report is as follows :

Ottawa, Ont., Nov. 28th, 1902.

ELECTRIC LIGHTING CONTRACT FOR WELLAND CANAL.

The Hon. A. G. Blair,
Minister of Railways and Canals, Ottawa.

Sir,—In accordance with your instructions I have examined and read the correspondence in the matter of the proposal by the Lincoln Electric Light and Power Company, Limited, of St. Catharines, Ont., to supply electrical power to the Dominion of Canada for the operation of electric arc lights along the canal and of electric motors at the various locks, bridges, shops, and so forth, on the canal, and I beg to submit my report herewith :—

The company propose to supply electrical power at the rate of fourteen dollars per horse-power for such amount of power as may be required to supply light for about 400 enclosed arc lamps of 2,000 candle power each, from the opening until the close of navigation, beginning May 1st, 1903, each year for ten years.

They further propose to supply power for about 100 lamps, all the year round for the water watch, presumably 2,000 candle power lamps for this service, and I further presume that the power required for the said 100 lamps is not to be added to the amount of power required for the total number of lamps (arc) in use during the season of navigation.

They further propose to supply any further power that may be called for in the future for operating lock gates and bridges and workshops at any time at the same rate per horse-power, namely, $14.

I infer from their letter dated November 21st, 1902, addressed to you, that it is not their intention to supply and install at their expense the necessary poles, wires and apparatus for distributing and utilizing the power so required for the canal, but that the government shall at its expense supply such equipment, the contractors merely delivering the energy at a receiving station to be erected by the government at some suitably convenient location on the canal, presumably at Thorold.

In my opinion the proposal of the Lincoln Electric Light Company to supply power required for the canal at the rate of $14 per horse-power, delivered at Thorold, is a reasonable proposition for the following reasons, namely :—

The superintending engineer of the Welland canal advises me that not more than about 400 horse-power is available at any one site on the canal, and as the maximum load is likely to exceed 400 horse-power at any time, a duplicate hydraulic plant and generating station equipment would be necessary or else some means would have to be provided at each lock, to store the energy during periods of light load (i.e., any load under 400 horse-power which would not be utilized by the motors for the time being, either by assistance of storage batteries or by means of an air compressing plant, so that when the maximum load, or in fact, any load, over the capacity of the power available at any one site (i.e. water-power) is thrown upon the system, such overload, could be carried by the storage batteries or by the reservoirs of compressed air. No matter which system of energy storage were used, the maintenance charges would be quite heavy, and certainly much greater than would be the maintenance charges on a motor equipment at each lock taking the power direct from the transmission line just when required ; if the power were supplied by the Lincoln or any other concern having ample capacity for the requirements of the canal, it would of course be always available and would dispense with the necessity for energy storage equipment at each lock. The cost per horse-power for distributing the energy obtained from the Lincoln Company would therefore be less to the government than if its own generating plant were installed.

A further argument in favour of awarding the contract to the Lincoln Company is that their rate of $14 per horse-power for the eight and a half months or nine months during which it would be required, is on the basis of $18.64 per horse-power per annum, which, in my opinion, is a reasonable charge, provided that the calculation of the power consumed be on the basis of a power factor of not less than ·80. If the power factor be less than ·80 the rate per actual horse-power per annum, increases proportionately as the power factor grows less. The proposal that the contract be made to cover a period of ten years is in my opinion a reasonable one.

The above report is respectfully submitted by

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) RODERICK J. PARKE.

From that standpoint it would seem to me that the department at that time very wisely determined to take the steps which they did. Certainly they must have felt that the cost to the government would be greater by the other process. The department have relieved themselves of an endless amount of worry, not to say expense, connected with the necessary superintendence, with the establishment and renewal of a plant and other irritating circumstances inseparable from an attempt to generate their own power. All these circumstances added to the expenditure of an additional amount of money as a permanent investment in establishing the plant gives a sufficient reason why the department of that day determined, and why the government approved of their decision, to purchase this power at a price which is recognized to be reasonable, instead of undertaking to develop their own power.

Mr. SPROULE. What is there in that whole report, with the exception of one thing, that bears on the question of cost? It says that because there is not sufficient power in one place this is a good plan and that the other plan would make it more costly.

Mr. EMMERSON. They would have to gather the power from all points and that would require a storage plant.

Mr. SPROULE. It requires a plant at two points but that is all the report says. Would the hon. gentleman tell me what it costs per horse-power for supplying electrical power at the Soo where the government are supplying the power with their own plant?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not that information. My deputy tells me he cannot give it off-hand.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister has brought that report down and advanced it as an argument to show that the department in buying power from the company have done the wiser thing of the two.

Mr. EMMERSON. Mr. Parke said it would cost less to take the power from the Lincoln Company at the rates offered than for the government to install its own power plant.

Mr. SPROULE. The only reason he gave was because it would necessitate two plants.

Mr. EMMERSON. He is an expert, and I presume he would not make the statement without believing it.

Mr. SPROULE. It should cost the government less than the company, because the company would have to pay interest on their capital and make a profit besides. It seems to me that where the government have wasted power at hand, it would cost less for them to utilize it than to rent power. I suppose there was some friend of the government in this company urging for a contract, and I presume Mr. Parke was brought on to give some reason to justify the government in doing so.

Mr. EMMERSON. You should not be suspicious.

Mr. SPROULE. It appears to me that the government could have utilized the power to be obtained on the Welland canal just the same as they utilize it at the Soo, where they found it cheaper and better to supply their own power. The conditions at the two canals are similar.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am informed by the deputy minister that there was no company at the Soo at that time to supply power, and that the government was obliged to install a plant.

Mr. SPROULE. I know that they were prepared to supply power to others and why not to the government?

Mr. EMMERSON. Perhaps the hon. gentleman knows of his own knowledge, but I have to take the statement of the deputy minister.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me it would have been the part of wisdom for the government to install their own power plant on the Welland canal where they have power to spare, as they did on the Soo canal. Owing to the deficiency of knowledge on the part of the minister he led us into the supposition that the government were installing all the plant on the Welland canal and that the company was selling only the actual power.

Mr. EMMERSON. I corrected that. I was under the impression in the first instance that that was so, but as soon as I found my mistake I corrected it.

Mr. SPROULE. It would be well for the minister to read up his case before he comes to the House, and not waste time by giving wrong information.

Mr. EMMERSON. If you make a mistake it is just as well to correct it.

Mr. BLAIN. Before one o'clock I asked the minister how much it would cost the government for the power for electric light, and how much for the power to operate the canal.

Mr. EMMERSON. The estimate of the chief engineer was that the whole yearly cost of the power to be purchased would be about $15,000.

Mr. BLAIN. How much for each separately?

Mr. EMMERSON. As near as you can estimate it, it would be about $8,000 for lighting and about $7,000 for power.

Mr. BLAIN. How does that compare with the present cost of lighting?

Mr. EMMERSON. There is a contract for $10,000 and there would be something extra in addition to that. Of course the difference in time in the operation of the locks should be taken into consideration ?

Mr. SPROULE. What do these 2,000 candle power lamps cost ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The arc lamps cost originally about $50 each with the transformer.

Mr. SPROULE. What I mean is : how much would each 2,000 candle power lamp cost per year according to the contract ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is a matter to be figured out on the contract.

Mr. SPROULE. That is valuable information because we know what each arc lamp costs in towns and cities and it is only by comparison that we can ascertain if the government is paying a fair price. The lamps on the Cornwall canal cost $108 a year, as nearly as I can figure out. These same lamps in towns throughout the country are supplied at from $50 to $75, the latter price applying where they run all night. I would like to know what they cost on the Welland canal.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am sorry I cannot give the exact figures. But that will be seen from the contract.

Mr. SPROULE. I would think that an estimate would have been placed before the minister showing what would be the cost per lamp per annum. He has a long list of data there from the report of Mr. Parke, the electrical engineer, who says the price is reasonable. You can get such a statement as that for almost any contract the government wants to enter into.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to ask the minister a question in reference to supplying material for this electric light plant. Mr. Parke, in his estimate, says that it will require 75,000 pounds of No. 6 bare copper at 16 cents per pound, a total of $12,000, to complete that work. The minister made the statement that he received tenders for the supply of these goods, and I would like him to state the price that was paid for this copper wire.

Mr. EMMERSON. My memory does not carry that figure, but I have sent for the information.

Mr. SPROULE. I would also like to have a statement of what these lights cost per year each.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is in the contract. The cost for each light is dependent on the circumstances and conditions. The number in operation at one time will govern the cost for that particular night.

Mr. SPROULE. We do not care for the circumstances and conditions ; we want to know the cost of each light per year.

Mr. EMMERSON. Some of them are not for the whole year.

Mr. SPROULE. I am asking the cost for the season of navigation.

Mr. EMMERSON. You have the contract before you. Is it necessary to allow the item to stand until I furnish the item as to cost of this wire ?

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose the minister will furnish it some time later ?

Mr. SPROULE. And the cost of the lamps as well ?

Mr. EMMERSON. If I can get the information, I will do so. I will study out the contract.

Welland canal—Improvements at Port Colborne entrance, $300,000 ($240,000 yet to be voted).

Mr. EMMERSON. The amount asked for this year is $300,000. The amount appropriated last year was $300,000, of which only $200,000 was expended. The total expenditure on this work up to May 1st, 1904, was $669,007.13. The amount this year is asked to continue the work of improvement at the entrance to Port Colborne. It consists of dredging, rock excavation, cribwork, and a concrete superstructure, forming two slips at which vessels may lie, and sites for elevators. That is the work that is now going on. There will be necessary, before the completion of that work, foundation for an elevator, and also, I suppose, ultimately an elevator. The total estimated cost of the works which are covered by the vote of this year is estimated at $1,150,000. That is for the work that is on hand now. The value of the work done up to June 30th was, in round numbers, $699,366. The value of the work remaining to be done is $450,633, and they are asking of this $450,633, $300,000. That would leave $150,633 further to be voted.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is it estimated that that amount will complete the work at Port Colborne ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is the work on hand. There will be in addition to that, of course, if the work is gone on with, an elevator and foundations.

Mr. COCHRANE. What does the minister mean to tell the committee when he says that $100,000 are required ?

Mr. BLAIN. How much money has been expended at Port Colborne and how has it been expended ? How much in elevators, how much in wharfs and dredging and so forth ? and how much do the government expect to expend to complete the works ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Surely my hon. friend has not been paying attention or he would have heard what I said.

Mr. BLAIN. I heard what the hon. gentleman said. He said that $400,000 had been spent and they were asking $300,000 to complete the present works under construction.

Mr. EMMERSON. I stated that the total amount expended up to the 1st of May, 1904, was $669,007.13, or bringing it down to the 30th of June, in round numbers, there was $700,000 expended. The estimated value of the work yet to be done is $450,663. We are asking $300,000 for this year to be expended in connection with that balance. This does not provide for elevators.

Mr. FOWLER. Is this being done by contract ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, Hogan & Macdonnell are the contractors.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the work they are doing ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Dredging, rock excavation, cribwork and concrete work.

Mr. CLARKE. What has been accomplished by this expenditure of $700,000 ? What area of harbour has been built ? what is the depth of water ? What will be the capacity of the harbour where this improvement is taking place ? I notice that you estimate for the works under construction an expenditure of nearly one and a quarter million. After these have been completed, what dockage capacity will you have ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There will be two slips at which vessels can lie alongside the elevator. At these points there will be 22 feet depth of water.

Mr. CLARKE. How many vessels can lie alongside these docks ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Eight vessels of the ordinary size. The docks will be 600 feet long and 200 wide and there will be two of them. At other points there will be 16 feet of water, and at the point where the elevators are to be situated there will be 22 feet.

Mr. CLARKE. The docks will have 2,400 feet frontage ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, and 22 feet depth of water covering the area which will be fed by the elevators.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the depth be 22 feet for the whole distance of 2,400 feet ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes. All around that and the entrance will be 22 feet. There is also an area outside and beyond the dockage where there will be 22 feet.

Mr. FOWLER. I understand the hon. minister to say that parts would be only 16 feet.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is at another point.

I will read the description :

The work now under construction provides for the formation of a wide channel leading from deep water up to the south end of the west entrance pier of the canal, and the extension of this pier in a southerly and westerly direction by the construction of two piers of cribwork with a concrete superstructure, each 600 feet long by 200 feet wide, connected across the north end by a pier 200 feet long. The water in this channel and around the piers will have a depth of 22 feet at low water level of Lake Erie, which is taken at 17 feet on the south mitre sill of the new guard lock. The present condition of works may be briefly described as follows :— The new docking on the west side of the canal basin is completed except 300 feet at the crossing of the Port Colborne town water main, preparations are now in progress for the lowering of the water pipe and completion of this part of the docking this fall. On the east side of the canal basin the new docking north of the Grand Trunk Railway elevator is finished, but the 900 lineal feet of docking on this side of the basin south of the elevator, embraced in this contract, was ordered last November not to be built, so that nothing has been done at this point this season. The dredging of the canal basin, principally earth excavation, is practically completed, except cleaning up the bottom.

Mr. CLARKE. What was the estimate in the first place?

Mr. EMMERSON. The first estimate was $900,000, but there has been a deepening near the Grand Trunk elevator since which has added materially to the cost.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the draft of vessels that come to this port ?

Mr. EMMERSON. About 18½ or 19 feet of water.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it expected that the same class will continue to be used or vessels of a larger draft?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is the same class as come through the Sault Ste. Marie canal.

Mr. FOWLER. This dock will accommodate as large a class of vessels as go through the Sault Ste. Marie canal?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Was any money expended last year on the elevators of Port Colborne ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Not by the government.

Mr. BLAIN. Or on elevator foundations ?

Mr. EMMERSON. In connection with the site for the elevators. I think that in making the cribwork they had in view the necessity for putting up elevators. They may have provided for possible elevator foundations, but no money was expended in placing those foundations.

Mr. BLAIN. Are the foundations for the purpose of construction, by the government, of elevators ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It can be done by the government or by anybody.

Mr. BLAIN. Is not that a little vague ? Last year the minister asked for $40,000 for foundations.

Mr. EMMERSON. That has not been spent.

Mr. BLAIN. Very well. Now, what I ask is whether it is the intention of the government to construct the foundations or to have them constructed by other parties. Surely the government have some plan. Or are we to understand that this expenditure at Port Colborne is made merely at haphazard ? Last year we were told by the ministers that a large proportion of our trade was going by the way of Buffalo. That has been the complaint for years—that trade was going by Buffalo that should come down our own waterways. It seems to me that the government should have decided by this time whether they would construct elevators at Port Colborne or allow others to do so. If the government does not reach a decision, does that mean that we are to go on losing our trade ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Although $40,000 was appropriated for the foundations of elevators last year, there was a great diversity of opinion. as to the size of the elevators required, nor was there any final determination as to whether the government should build and operate the elevators themselves or give the rights to private parties. I cannot say that that question is finally determined yet. But, in any case, foundations must be provided, and, while the government is doing the rest of the work they can make those foundations.

Mr. FOWLER. The reason for that, I suppose, is that, as you are building the dock you can make the foundation at the same time, and do it more cheaply ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, and have the work done.

Mr. FOWLER. Has anything been done towards preparing the foundations ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No actual work, but the plans are being completed so that the contractor can proceed.

Mr. FOWLER. Has anything been done with the docks ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, but not with that portion in which the work of foundation building will go on.

Mr. FOWLER. Are not the elevators to be on the docks ? Would not the foundation of the elevators form part of the docks ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Has not the building of the docks proceeded to the point where it is necessary to proceed with the foundation ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Provision is made for the building of the foundation. The outside of the dock, the concrete portion is finished but, in the centre, where the foundations are to be, provision is made for the building of the foundaiton.

Mr. FOWLER. What are the docks being built of ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is crib-work inside faced with concrete.

Mr. FOWLER. The concrete has been finished, but not the crib-work ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is not all done.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it the intention, if private parties are allowed to provide the elevators, to charge them for the foundation work ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That will be taken into consideration in arranging for any rights to be granted.

Mr. BLAIN. At what stage is the rock cutting between Humberstone and Port Colborne ? I understand that it is under contract. Has the contract been given to the same firm as the hon. gentleman mentioned ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The contractors are just beginning the work with a view to bringing that down to the depth of the Lake Erie water.

Mr. BLAIN. How much has been expended on the work ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No appreciable amount —they are just beginning.

Sault Ste. Marie canal, construction, $170,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is a work under contract with Messrs. Heckler Bros., of Sault Ste. Marie, for the dredging, and Mr. William Birmingham, of Ottawa, for the pier work. We are asking this year $170,000—last year $94,000 was appropriated for this work. The canal is cut through St. Mary's Island 1⅛ miles in length. The canal proper has a depth of 22 feet of water in the prism and 21 feet 6 inches on the mitre sills. The dredging of the lower entrance to 21 feet 5 inches is completed. Of this amount of $170,000, $100,000 is to be expended in deepening the upper entrance to 21 feet 5 inches and widening it to give a safer passage for vessels. The sum of $70,000 is to be expended on the entrance pier at the upper end south side. This pier is to be extended 800 feet. The sub-structure is to be built of cribwork to the lowest known water line, the top, of concrete, will be constructed on the front and rear of cribwork and between the two walls filled in with stone. These works when improved will make a safer entrance. At present there is only 18 feet of water in the upper end.

Mr. SPROULE. Are the government doing any work on the Canadian side, putting in plant ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The Public Works are building a dock, not the Railway Department. The channel is being deepened on the Canadian side, and the Public Works Department are building a dock at that point near the town of Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. SPROULE. In what shape is the canal now ? It is strange to see nearly all the vesssels going through the American canal, and the Canadian canal so little used.

Mr. GERMAN. One reason why the Canadian boats and the great Canadian Pacific Railway Company which controls the boats going up there, and which is the great company in the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite—the reason why they continually go through the American canal is because they get their supplies on the American side instead of getting them on the Canadian side, as they could if they liked. The government is now building a dock there with sufficient water for Canadian boats to land on the Canadian side, and for the Canadian Pacific Railway boats to land there. But they invariably go to the American side of the river to get their supplies. This matter came up in parliament last session, and the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) endeavoured to make an explanation, which however I do not think satisfied any one, as to why the Canadian Pacific Railway boats did not get their supplies on the Canadian side of the Soo as well as on the American side. But the reason why our Canadian boats go through the American Soo canal is because they get their supplies on the American side of the river.

Mr. SPROULE. That was not the answer given when the matter was up before. It was said that for want of dredging the entrance to the canal they could not conveniently get through, therefore they were obliged to resort to the American side ; also because on the Canadian side there was no place to land passengers.

Mr. GERMAN. They can go through the Canadian canal just as well as through the American canal—with fair and proper navigation, I am free to add. They have got docks there and a sufficient depth of water to land passengers there if they desire to do so.

Mr. SPROULE. Where ?

Mr. GERMAN. On the Canadian side of the river.

Mr. SPROULE. There is no dock on the Canadian side except an old one that was badly broken down.

Mr. GERMAN. The government is building a dock now. But there was one before that they could use if they wanted to. Now there is the question of the coal supply, and that matter came up last session, as the Minister of Customs would remember if he were here. I took occasion to look into the matter myself, and I know that you can get coal in Canada for ships' supplies, free of duty.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that true of other ships' supplies as well as coal ?

Mr. GERMAN. Ships' supplies for boats traversing international waters are free of duty, including coal, and they can get coal free on both sides. But it would have to be in bond, it would have to be kept in bond on the Canadian side of the river, and there would have to be a bonded warehouse. But if they are willing to keep it there in bond, ships' supplies for all vessels traversing international waters are free of duty. So there is no excuse for them going to the American side.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is every excuse. The Canadian Pacific Railway boats could not land at the Soo because there was not sufficient depth of water to allow them to approach the dock. I took passage there two years ago last fall, and we had to ferry across. So it is now, unless a dock has been built within the last year.

Mr. GERMAN. The government is building one now.

Mr. TAYLOR. But there is not water enough for a Canadian Pacific Railway boat to land at a Canadian port at the Soo. There has been no dock there since a year ago last fall.

Mr. FOWLER. If their coal would be cheaper on the other side, I should think their stores would be about as cheap on the Canadian side.

Mr. EMMERSON. I may tell the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain), answering his question of a little while ago, that the price of the wire per pound was 13⅞ cents.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister has his deputy beside him who knows all about the harbour. I would like to know if there is dockage and water sufficient for the Canadian Pacific Railway boats to call at the Canadian side.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is at the canal, not at the town.

Mr. SPROULE. It was emphatically denied in this House that the Canadian Pacific Railway could get coal any more advantageously on the American side than on the Canadian side. The hon. gentleman says they would require a bonded warehouse on the Canadian side before they could get their coal free. But if I remember right, the hon. member for West Toronto stated that they could get their coal on the Canadian side without paying duty as well as on the American side. It might be they would require a bonded warehouse. But when I was up there and we landed on the American side, the question was asked by many: Why don't you land on the Canadian side? and the answer was that they could not land there because there was not a dock and not sufficient depth of water. I am satisfied it is so to-day. Now from year to year we have been voting money in this House ostensibly for this purpose, and we never seem to accomplish the object. That has been going on during the past six or seven years, and no one knows whether we are any nearer to the accomplishment of the object than we were five years ago—so far as official information is given.

Mr. FOWLER. Is all this expenditure to be made at the canal, or is it to be used for making such a dock as has been spoken of?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is all at the canal. I stated that the Public Works Department have charge of the expenditure down near the town, and they are building a dock there, and dredging.

Mr. SPROULE. What depth of water have you on the mitre sill of the canal?

Mr. EMMERSON. We are deepening it to 25 feet 5 inches. It is now 18 feet at the upper entrance, and 20 feet 4 inches on the mitre sill. The canal proper has a depth of 22 feet of water in the prism, with 20 feet 4 inches on the mitre sill of the lock. It is 18 feet at the entrance. We are going to make the entrance correspond with the other end. We have completed dredging the entrance to a depth of 21 feet 5 inches.

Mr. SPROULE. Now you are at the upper end.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Do the Canadian Pacific Railway boats pass through the canal?

Mr. EMMERSON. Very seldom.

Mr. SPROULE. Do they go through at all?

Mr. EMMERSON. They have done so once or twice.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it a fact that the large Canadian Pacific Railway boats cannot land on the Canadian side for want of dredging and a proper wharf and if so how long is that condition going to continue?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have stated twice that the work is under construction by the Public Works Department. Some contractor is at work there upon it. I do not know the extent of the docking. I cannot give my hon. friend any information as to the docks now that are in course of construction because they are not under this department. My information is that the only dockage on the Canadian side now is at the canal.

Mr. SPROULE. Now you are doing dredging.

Mr. EMMERSON. And some pier work.

Mr. SPROULE. The pier work will be under the Department of Public Works.

Mr. EMMERSON. Not in connection with the canal. This is the entrance pier of the canal.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that let by contract?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, Mr. Wm. Bermingham of Ottawa, who was the lowest tenderer, is the contractor.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the price of the contract?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is a schedule contract.

Mr. SPROULE. Was there more than one tenderer for the work?

Mr. EMMERSON. There were eight or ten.

Mr. SPROULE. What are the schedule prices under that contract?

Mr. EMMERSON. There are a number of items. The prices are as follows:

Nos. of items.	Description of items.
1.	Timber in sides and ends of cribs sawn 11 x 11 inches, rate per lineal foot	$ 0 21
2.	Timber sawn 10 inches square for floor of concrete superstructure, rate per lineal foot	0 13
3.	Timber sawn 6 x 11 in face and ends of cribs below flooring, rate per lineal foot	0 20
4.	Timber for ties, stringers and bottoms flatted to a size to square 10 x 11 inches at small end, rate per lineal foot	0 20
5.	White pine plank 3-inch thick, per M. feet B.M.	20 00
6.	Binding pieces for cribwork 4 x 10-inch pine plank, per M. feet B.M.	28 00
7.	Wrought iron in bolts (best Staffordshire brand) for cribs, in L bolts for fenders, mooring posts, &c., rate per pound	0 06
8.	Boiler plate in guards or fenders, rate per pound	0 08
9.	White oak for fenders 12 x 12, rate per lineal foot	0 75
10.	Providing and placing complete mooring posts of cast-iron wherever directed, as specified, rate per pound	0 05
11.	Stone filling in cribs and superstructure, measured in place, rate per cubic yard	0 65
12.	Broken stone and gravel, rate per cubic yard	1 50

Nos. of items.	Description of items.
13.	Concrete in superstructure, rate per cubic yard..	$6 50
14.	Labourers for tearing down section of old pier, including superintendence and use of all tools, rate per day...	2 00
15.	Carpenters for levelling of old cribwork for concrete floor, including superintendence and use of all tools, rate per day..	3 50

Mr. FOWLER. Eight cents for excavation work seems to be a very large price. Of course it would depend very largely on the nature of the material to be taken out, whether it is rock or mud.

Mr. EMMERSON. This was the lowest tender.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the character of the soil there ?

Mr. GERMAN. It is a regular excavation of boulders. The price of dredging ranges from ten cents a yard in soft earth up to a dollar all depending on the conditions. This is simply digging out rock instead of blasting. It is a soft rock. I have seen the dredge working. Instead of blasting it out the dredge is so strong that the hooks of the dipper get into the rock and dig it out. They are digging it out in that way. The material is boulders and rock. It is certainly a cheap price for what they are doing. If they had to blast it would cost probably three times as much.

Mr. BLAIN. As to the question of the Canadian Pacific Railway boats not stopping on the Canadian side is that not a matter that the government should take immediate action upon ? The hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) stated that the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) did not give a very satisfactory reason to the committee last year why the Canadian Pacific Railway boats did not stop on the Canadian side.

Mr. EMMERSON. I suppose that is a matter of opinion.

Mr. BLAIN. I am quite sure the hon. member for Welland did not wish to misrepresent the hon. member for West Toronto. The hon. junior member for West Toronto made the statement before the committee last year that the Canadian Pacific Railway boats were unable to stop on the Canadian side because the water was too shallow and there was no wharf accommodation. It seems to me that that is sufficient explanation why the boats do not stop on the Canadian side. Does the hon. minister not think that this is a matter which requires immediate attention and action on the part of the government ? Here is a large line of boats passing close to the Canadian shore, yet these boats are compelled to go over to the United States side and purchase their supplies not because we cannot supply them in Canada, not because we have not sufficient merchants on the Canadian side or a sufficient quantity of goods of Canadian manufacture, but simply because the water is too shallow and we have no wharf accommodation for boats of that capacity to stay in while they purchase their supplies and give accommodation to the public. Surely that matter should be considered by the government at once. If that continues for many years longer our trade will be identified with the American Soo, and it will be difficult if not impossible to secure it for ourselves. Whatever other expenditure of money is made by this government, that is an expenditure that every man in Canada will support, and it should be undertaken at once in order that Canadian steamers may be able to purchase their supplies from Canadians.

Mr. EMMERSON. So far as the government can control the matter, they are doing everything to furnish a new dock with sufficient water on the Canadian side. If the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers or any other steamers want to purchase their supplies on the Canadian side there is nothing to prevent them. I can well understand that it is to their advantage, even regardless of the duty, to coal on the American side, because the coal comes to that point from the mines in Ohio.

Mr. GERMAN. It is the same rate of freight to the Canadian side as to the American side.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, but the question of bonding involves delay and expense and may be somewhat irritating. If they wished to purchase their supplies on this side and could do so to advantage I venture to say they would do it.

Mr. BLAIN. Do I understand that the large Canadian steamers can stop on the Canadian side and purchase their supplies, and take on and put off cargo ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think they can do so without question if they wish. I think the cargo could be put at the Canadian locks.

Mr. FOWLER. They cannot land their passengers at the Canadian locks.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think so ; they sometimes go through there now and go to the American side afterwards.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister would leave the impression, whether intentionally or not, that it is possible for large boats to stop on the Canadian side and transact their business with Canadians. Last year the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Osler) said on that point :

Mr. OSLER. There is no doubt that after building the canal at the Sault, we have neglected to build wharfs and other necessary railway accommodations. I think it is humiliating for any of us who go up on the boats to find them on all occasions passing through the American canal. I have gone up many times, and on no occasion, either going or coming, has the vessel passed through our own canal. I understand that one of the reasons was that the coal was dutiable when taken on at the Canadian Sault ; but the main reason undoubtedly is that there is no wharf accommodation, and that the approaches to the canal on both sides are quite inadequate for large boats to pass through the Canadian canal.

That was the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) and it is uncontradicted.

Mr. GERMAN. I do not wish the statement of the hon. member (Mr. Blain) to go uncontroverted. Last year the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Osler) stated that the Canadian Pacific Railway boats did not stop on the Canadian side because they could not get their coal there. The hon. gentleman asked me about it and I had the pleasure of sending him the regulations. There is plenty of water on the Canadian side of the river for any Canadian Pacific Railway boat that wants to go there.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where ?

Mr. GERMAN. On the Canadian side at the government wharf. It is quite true that the approach to the Canadian canal is not satisfactory. I believe the late government spent money in improving the approaches, but at any rate there is money being spent on that work now. In my opinion the canal on the Canadian side was a botched job in regard to the approach at the eastern entrances, because boats using it have to take too circuitous a route. But that is not the reason the Canadian Pacific Railway boats do not stop on the Canadian side. It is simply because they can get their supplies on the American side to better advantage. That is absolutely beyond controversy. They could get their supplies on the Canadian side if they wanted to, but it suits their purpose better to get them on the American side, and I challenge any member of this House or any man outside of it, to show that they cannot land their passengers at the government dock on the Canadian side of the river. They do not do so because they wish to get their supplies on the American side.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend (Mr. German) has said that there is good accommodation on the Canadian side but last year in his speech on the question he said :

> There is no dock at the Soo at which the upper lake boats can land.

Has there been a dock built since last year ?

Mr. GERMAN. Read all I said.

Mr. BLAIN. It is a very long statement, and I do not wish to have it repeated in 'Hansard.' It is the duty of the government to see to it at once that the Canadian Pacific Railway boats shall have an opportunity of embarking and disembarking passengers and loading and unloading freight upon the Canadian side. If the government do that these steamers will get their supplies on the Canadian side, and I am sure the Canadian people would support the government in any reasonable expenditure to accomplish that.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me very humiliating that we have such a town as Sault Ste. Marie and yet have Canadian lines of steamers arriving on the American side, dumping their passengers and freight there so that the passengers and freight have to be taken across the river in the ferry boats. It looks too much like a one-horse town. The Canadian town is a good town, alive, enterprising and active, and for years the same complaint has been made that boats cannot land there for want of accommodation. It seems to me the government is doing less than its duty when it does not provide what is required.

Mr. TAYLOR. Two years ago last fall I went to Sault Ste. Marie accompanied by my wife. I purchased tickets at Owen Sound and asked to have them made out for the Canadian Soo but they would not sell them to the Canadian Soo and we had to be landed on the American side and go over on the ferry to the Canadian side. During my stay at the Soo, a boat was sunk, some place east of the Soo and a blockade of shipping ensued ; I presume that 100 to 150 vessels of all sizes and shapes were tied up there but not one of them came to the Canadian side. I discussed the question with the people there, and I was told that the boats could not land on the Canadian side owing to lack of water. Yet the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) says that Canadian boats can buy supplies on the Canadian side. They cannot, because if they do they have to put the supplies on the ferry boat and take them across to the American side where they will be met by a customs officer as I was, and be obliged to pay duty. They could only put the supplies on board without paying duty while the boats were passing through the Canadian lock, but if another boat came along they would be unable to tie up long enough to do that, so that practically it is impossible for Canadian boats to take on supplies at the Canadian Soo, or to land passengers there with comfort. On my return I brought the matter before the House at the first opportunity but I presume that affairs are in the same position to-day as they were then. No boat of any size can land on the Canadian side of the river owing to the shallowness of the water. The old government built a canal and had it about completed when this government came in, but the approaches and docking facilities to-day remain just as they were then.

Mr. GERMAN. I would suggest to my hon. friend that he should do away with protection.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend would like to do away with protection and have us annexed to the United States. We have built a lock at an expense of millions of money on the Canadian side and it is doing no business because this government has been expending money upon useless docks all down the river and along the sea coasts, instead of taking a few thousands of that money to deepen the water at Sault Ste. Marie, a work which would be to the general advantage to Canada. It is a case of negligence on the part of the government in permitting this matter to remain as it has for the past nine years. After spending millions to build a lock, Canada is getting no benefit in the way of trade from vessels passing through that lock.

Lachine canal, slope walls, $13,500.

Mr. EMMERSON. This $13,500 is required for a dry stone wall, 2,300 yards at $2 per cubic yard. The coping, timber and stone of the dry stone wall will cost $13,500. This is to continue the repairing of the stone lining in the upper reach of the Lachine canal. The north side, it is expected will be completed during this coming season. It is slow work as it can only be done when the canal is watered in the spring.

Mr. SPROULE. How is it done, by contract or day labour ?

Mr. EMMERSON. By contract.

Mr. CLARKE. Who is the contractor ?

Mr. EMMERSON. A man named Lorrimer is the contractor.

Mr. CLARKE. Where does he reside ?

Mr. EMMERSON. In Montreal.

Mr. SPROULE. You advertised for tenders.

Mr. EMMERSON. Oh, yes. This has been going on year by year. I am informed that he has been doing the work ; but his contract is closed out and we will have to ask for further tenders for the continuation of the work.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the matter ?

Mr. EMMERSON. He got on too slowly. There was a limited time in which to do it, and he did not seem to hustle, so that great inconvenience resulted. We simply gave notice and closed out the contract.

Mr. SPROULE. What did you do with the percentage of the contract you got as security for the work being done ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That would be adjusted of course.

Mr. FOWLER. Have you paid that back yet ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, but it will have to be of course.

Mr. FOWLER. How long since you closed it out ?

Mr. EMMERSON. During the month of June.

Mr. FOWLER. Why not have called for other tenders ?

Mr. EMMERSON. We cannot unwater the canal until next spring. The only time we can permit the canal to be unwatered is in the spring, because of the business interests. The contractor delayed his work to such an extent that, acting on the report of the deputy minister, I authorized the cancellation of the contract.

Mr. FOWLER. The work has to be done in the spring before the canal opens ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes. When you have it unwatered, all the business is paralyzed. The contractor should have done 1,000 yards this spring and he only did 400. Therefore we will ask for tenders for next spring's work.

Lachine canal, dredging basins Nos. 1 and 2, $15,000.

Mr. SPROULE. How is that going to be done ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This is to continue the deepening of the basin on the lower section of the Lachine canal, to a depth of 15 feet. This work is nearly completed. It is done by the canal dredge under the direction of the Marine Department.

Mr. SPROULE. Were you working at that last year ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, there was no appropriation last year. In No. 1 basin we calculate there would be 12,000 cubic yards at 75 cents or $9,000, and in basin No. 2 8,000 yards at 75 cents, $6,000.

Electric installation, &c., Lachine canal, $8,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. There was an appropriation last year of $10,000 and we require this year $8,000. This is for electric installation on locks and bridge cabin. The present locks and bridge cabins are in a very dilapidated condition.

Mr. BLAIN. Do the government use their own power ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Trent canal, construction, $100,000.

Mr. CLARKE. Was there not some discussion as to where the outlet of this canal is to be ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is not yet determined.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the government sent an agent to examine the different routes ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, and I laid on the table the reports of those engineers. I think there were two different engineers. The people of Trenton and Port Hope have taken exception to the conclusions of the engineers and there will have to be another survey. There is a difference of opinion among the engineers and we will have to get some sort of arbitration.

Mr. SPROULE. Do the government engineers not make a recommendation ?

Mr. EMMERSON. They report the facts ?

Mr. SPROULE. Has the government reached any conclusion yet ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Not yet.

Mr. SPROULE. When do they expect to reach a conclusion ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Very shortly.

Mr. FOWLER. What portion of this canal has been completed ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is a canal without an end, it is short at both ends.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it of any use until it is completed ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, it is of use. The other day we went up to Peterborough and examined it and were much pleased with what we saw. It is navigable now for 170 miles of water stretches, with the locks.

Mr. CLARKE. What depth for traffic ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think it is about eight feet deep, with six feet of water on the mitre sill.

Mr. CLARKE. The people of that district would like to get some more information about it.

Mr. EMMERSON. Do you want me to go into the whole matter ?

Mr. CLARKE. No, but I think some opportunity ought to be given to gentlemen who represent that district to speak upon it.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is all arranged for.

Mr. VROOMAN. Could the minister say whether the work is being pushed on on the upper division, the division that is called the Simcoe and Balsam Lake division ? I think it is under contract now. That work, seems to be going on very slowly, it has been on the tapis ever since I was a boy, and seems to be interminable. I would like to know what is being done.

Mr. EMMERSON. The Simcoe and Balsam Lake division is being pushed on. The section known as the Larkin and Sangster division is nearly completed. On the other, I think the work is progressing now quite rapidly, but there has been some delay in the past.

Mr. VROOMAN. Is the Larkin & Sangster contract completed ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. VROOMAN. Does the minister mean to say that there are 170 miles of continuous navigation on that canal now ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The section between Balsam Lake and Kirkfield is completed. The next section is under contract to Larkin & Sangster, and is just about completed. Then the section between the Larkin & Sangster section and Lake Simcoe, is progressing well, that is the Brown & Aylmer section. Another lift-lock is to be put in on the Larkin & Sangster section, but the steel work is not yet completed. It is not yet under contract.

Mr. VROOMAN. Will that be as high as the Peterborough lift-lock ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That will be a fifty foot lift, fifteen feet less than the Peterborough lift-lock.

Mr. VROOMAN. When may we expect that will be completed ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The steel portion of it within a year. The substructure is completed now. However, we have got our hands in now and we will carry it right along.

Mr. VROOMAN. I think the minister must be mistaken when he says there are 170 miles of continuous navigation.

Mr. EMMERSON. I was wrong in making that statement. You can navigate from Feely's Falls below Peterborough, through to Kirkfield, a distance of 120 miles.

Mr. CLARKE. How much remains to be done to complete the work ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am not in a position to say that. $310,000 were expended on that canal prior to confederation.

Mr. CLARKE. How long will it take to complete the work ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Perhaps that could be worked out by the rule of three.

Mr. VROOMAN. I would like to hear from the minister a little more with regard to his visit to that canal, and of what use he thinks it is going to be. Is navigation complete from Peterborough to Lakefield ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, that is complete. I was delighted with everything I saw in Peterborough, and I am sure no one went away without feeling impressed with the importance of that water stretch.

Mr. VROOMAN. That is a very brief account. I am pleased, however, to hear the minister express himself in this way, because for many years, in fact ever since I can remember anything about politics, I have been hearing hon. gentlemen now sitting on the opposite side traducing and running down this work as being of no use. I am glad to see that the government and the party sitting behind them, appear to have changed their minds on that subject. What is the length of the construction from Peterborough to Lake Ontario and what would be the probable expenditure there ? I understand that $4,000,000 has been spent on this canal already.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is estimated to cost about $6,000,000 to complete. The cost will depend on the route. Some say that to go by one route will cost a great deal more than to go by the other. And, under any circumstances, the cost will exceed $6,000,000 according to the estimates of the engineer.

Mr. VROOMAN. What weight of freight can be lifted at one time on the lift-lock at Peterborough ?

Mr. EMMERSON. A vessel containing about 25,000 bushels of wheat can be lifted

Mr. HAGGART. It would be interesting to know the policy of the government with reference to the completion of the canal. If I understood rightly, it is completed to within 15 or 16 miles of the Bay of Quinte. What will be the cost of finishing that portion, and what will it cost to finish the uncompleted work at the Lake Simcoe end, which, if I remember well, is about the same distance ? And I would like the hon. gentleman to tell us how these lift-locks work—I see he was at the opening of them. Besides the one at Peterborough, which has been completed, I understand there is to be another at Lake Simcoe. What progress is being made upon it, and what amount is required to complete it ? This is an important work, and we ought to have the fullest possible information.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend asks what it will cost to complete from Feely's Falls to the Bay of Quinte, and also what it will cost to complete the section to Georgian bay. It will cost upwards of $4,000,000 to complete the Bay of Quinte end and about $1,500,000 to complete the part to Georgian bay.

Mr. HAGGART. What are the distances to be completed ?

Mr. EMMERSON. About 13 miles on the Georgian bay end and about 17 or 18 miles on the Lake Ontario end. The lift-lock recently opened at Peterborough works very satisfactorily. In saying this, of course I give the judgment of others, for my own judgment would not be of great value. The substructure of the other lock is completed, but the superstructure has not yet been contracted for.

Mr. HAGGART. Are any contracts proposed to be made for the work at the lower end of the canal and at the Georgian bay end ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is not routed yet.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister speaks of an expenditure of $6,000,000 to complete this canal. I understand that to cover the whole of the Trent Valley canal system. But I find that on 21st March last the present minister, in answering a question in this House, said that if the canal were carried out by way of Trenton it would cost $6,960,000, and if it were carried out by way of Port Hope it would cost $6,850,000. This, I presume, was made on the basis of careful estimates.

Mr. EMMERSON. That was according to the estimates made by the engineers who were sent.

Mr. LENNOX. That is as I understand it. But I presume the minister was speaking more definitely than he is just now. The estimates show an expenditure to be made of about $7,000,000 either way. What I would like the minister to explain is how much work this covers, and to what point it would carry the construction. We understand, of course, that we get to what is practically the St. Lawrence, whether the canal is made by way of Trenton or by way of Port Hope. The minister speaks of the Georgian bay end. Do his estimates cover all the expenditure required to carry on the work through to Georgian bay ; and, if so, by what route ?

Mr. EMMERSON. By the river route from Lake Couchiching to Georgian bay.

Mr. LENNOX. That would be by the River Severn. So this would include all the expense estimated to be incurred in carrying the canal by way of the River Severn to the Georgian bay. Has the department under consideration the idea of carrying it through by way of Barrie, coming out at Collingwood, or probably some miles east of Collingwood, by way of the Nottawasaga river ? I can direct the hon. minister's attention to that by saying that I understand that the Transportation Commission—I think it is only fair to refer to this—have that matter under consideration, and have been receiving evidence as to both these routes. From all the information I have been able to collect, it seems to me that the best course is to proceed to Orillia, thence to Barrie, through the open waters of Lake Simcoe and Kempenfeldt bay, and so west to the Georgian bay. That route would go through a magnificent country. And even if it cost more money—and I do not know that it would cost more—still I believe it would be found to be much more desirable than the route by the River Severn. However, I have no doubt that the hon. minister is waiting, the same as the people are waiting, for the report of the Transportation Commision in relation to this matter.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would ask my hon. friend if the route he is advocating is through the riding that is represented by my hon. friend ?

Mr. LENNOX. No, it is not. It is through the riding which is temporarily represented by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) and which I hope will be better represented when we assemble again in the new parliament.

Mr. EMMERSON. You anticipate being the man ?

Mr. LENNOX. No, I have a better riding still. Nothing would induce me to leave old South Simcoe. There is no riding which has such a pleasant ring in the ears of the Liberal government as South Simcoe and I have the honour to represent that riding. We have no canals in it.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think you are both to be congratulated.

Mr. LENNOX. We have no canals in it and no public works of any kind, but we have a magnificent Conservative majority, I am happy to say. I hope the hon. minister will take this matter into his most serious and careful consideration. Of course, I do not expect him at the present time to be influenced very much by what may be my opinion or the opinion of any one who is not an expert in matters of this kind as to which is the best route, but I am in hopes the matter will be carefully considered by the Transportation Commission and that we will soon have a report upon it. The other day when I called the hon. minister's attention to the question of the Transportation Commission he told me that it had made an interim report in reference to some ports in the maritime provinces. I think the whole of the evidence has been taken in regard to the Trent Valley canal. If that is the case I would urge upon the hon. minister to endeavour to get a report in reference to this matter without waiting for the general report of the commission. There was a time when there was some division of opinion as to the utility of this work. I am exceedingly glad that there is no division of opinion as to that now and that the present government, as represented not only by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals but as represented by the hon. Postmaster General, recognize that this is a great work and that there is great necessity for immediately pushing it ahead. I want to urge upon the hon. minister and upon the government that it is a loss of money if this matter is not taken in hand now and finished. I do not mean dribbling out a little money from year to year. I mean a sufficient sum of money to complete this work in the same way as the government would go at the construction of a railway, not dragging it out for an indefinite period of years but doing it within a few years and I would say a very few years as to that. There is no system that is more to be condemned than the system that governments practice once they have committed themselves to a certain scheme of merely making a parliamentary appropriation from year to year. What is the fact in reference to this canal ? It has cost us up to the present time almost $4,500,000. That means that it is costing the country for interest, without receiving anything by way of compensation, in round figures, $150,000 a year. What is the use of that. The moment the canal is completed we will be getting a return in some form. That is the only theory upon which this work can be prosecuted. That is the theory on which the government have continued the work and until it is completed, until communication is opened from the Georgian bay by whichever course may be adopted down to Trenton or Port Hope the country is not getting the benefit of this great work. It will get a great deal of benefit from it, not only the direct advantage of affording means of transportation to a large class of people along the line of the canal which traverses a farming district which in many parts is unsurpassed, but it will be of great incidental advantage to the people by affording direct competition with the railway and so reducing and controlling rates. In this I think the hon. minister will be ready to agree with me. Therefore, I think there can be no excuse that the government could urge or that the government would be disposed to urge for not taking this work in hand as a definite work to be completed within a reasonable date. I cannot prescribe the date but I would say within a few years, probably within four or five years at the outside. We have $4,500,000 in it now and within ten years we will have, according to the present rate of progress, $3,000,000 or $4,0000,000 more so that it will then cost us about $300,000 a year in interest. Until the whole work is undertaken as we undertake a railway or undertake to erect a public building, that is that we keep at it and do not let up until it is finished, we will be losing money by this transaction. I trust the hon. minister will give us a promise more or less definite now—I hope very definite—that some such policy as this will be pursued. I think the people look for it, I think it is fair, I think it must commend itself to a man of the astuteness and energy of the present minister as being the only wise and proper policy to pursue.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. My hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) is in error in saying that the canal as far as it has been constructed is unproductive.

Mr. LENNOX. I did not intend to advance the idea that it is absolutely unproductive, but as compared with what it will result in I consider that it is unproductive. I understand that there are a number of miles in use.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. At the present time I understand there are 120 miles of continuous navigation made possible by these improvements which are the subject of discussion at the present moment, and that this facility for traffic is of very material advantage to the district locally at the present time. Before the completion of the lift-lock the navigation was divided into two parts, north of Peterborough and south of Peterborough. There were on the waters from Peterborough northward thirty steamboats engaged in various classes of business and seven below Peterborough, making thirty-seven steamers with 120 miles of continuous and uninterrupted navigation. These vessels are engaged in carrying passengers, lumber, cordwood, grain and other native products. There are, as my hon. friend is aware, at Peterborough at the present moment certain cereal works manufacturing foodstuffs of various kinds and consuming daily enormous quantities of grain.

Mr. SPROULE. They do not bring that in by the canal.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. No, except from some adjoining local district.

Mr. SPROULE. I was there some time ago and the manager told me they were obliged to bring it in by train, and he spoke of the advantage the canal would be.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. They consume great quantities of grain and the bulk of it is brought in by train. I am told by the grain buyer for that concern, that they were grinding 22,000 bushels of oats per day and were looking forward to a greatly increased output. He told me that the great bulk of it came at present by rail, but nevertheless the canal will serve, and is to-day serving, a very good local purpose. I mention that to show that the expenditure up to the present is not dead money altogether. As to what should be the policy of the future with regard to that enterprise, it is not a matter that at this date need be regarded as open to any doubt. When the country committed itself to this enterprise by various expenditures, it committed itself to completing the enterprise as rapidly as circumstances would warrant, and we may look forward to the Trent Valley canal in the near future as completed to connect the Georgian bay with Lake Ontario at Port Hope, or Trenton, or some other point which may be determined upon as under all circumstances the best. I had the honour of visiting Peterborough on the occasion of the opening of this lock, and I came away filled with delight at what I saw there. The work itself is a credit to all who had a part in its construction. The only thing I have to regret is that though this enterprise had been pressed upon our predecessors for so many years, their interest in it was chiefly made known on the eve of the election, and that the prosecution of the work seemed to cease after election day. That has not been the case with the present government. We have not made it an election card; we have not made any boasts, but we have steadfastly pursued a policy continuing expenditure on that work, and to-day there are 120 miles of navigable waters. I trust that before long we shall see that canal system completed, and not only interprovincial trade passing through it, but that we shall also see it serving a very important local purpose. I would think that the wisest course to pursue would be for the government at the earliest moment to have a most complete inquiry as to the proper route to connect the system with Lake Ontario and with the Georgian bay, and when a decision is reached proceed with the work vigorously to completion.

Mr. HAGGART. The Postmaster General took a great deal of trouble to state that all the progress on this work was due to the present administration. Would the hon. gentleman point out what part of the work his government initiated on the Trent canal? My memory is that all the contracts that are under way at the present time were let by the Conservative government. He says that the government intends to push this work to completion, but look at the paltry vote of $100,000 which they ask for, and which would not pay for the contracts already let. What are these gentlemen doing in connection with making the Trent canal an election issue? When I asked the minister when he was going to let the contract down to the Bay of Quinté, his answer was that it was not routed yet. The Postmaster General says that when they decide where the outlet is to be, the canal will be proceeded with energetically. He is thus in a position to say to the people of Port Hope: Support our candidate if you wish to have the canal at Port Hope; and to the people of Trenton he will say: Unless you behave better than you have in the past there is no chance whatever of having the entrance at the Bay of Quinté.

The decision as to the entrance of that canal should have been arrived at long ago. The members of this House should have been told where the entrance would be before they voted any money. The government now take credit for the lift-lock. What had they to do with it? I listened to the speeches these gentlemen made the other day at Peterborough, and the name of the man who started the first lift-lock in America was never mentioned? I myself let the contract for the lift-lock and decided upon the principle of it, and yet the present Minister of Railways thinks it was all done under the able administration of himself and his Liberal predecessors. They had nothing to do with it. No work has been done on the Trent canal that was not initiated by the Conservative government, and the contracts let for it by that government. The present government had to go on and complete it because the contracts were let. That is the truth of the matter. I am glad to hear the Postmaster General say that this work will be of benefit to the people of Canada. That is a new idea of his, because when any expenditure on the Trent canal was proposed by the Conservative government it was denounced by the Liberals when they were in opposition. I say that the expenditure of $4,000,000 on the Trent canal has been returned twice over to the people of that section, and that is true if for no other reason than that it has controlled freight rates. But, Sir, we have no expenditure on public utilities in our section of the country. Poor Ontario fares badly; the public money is reserved for other places. What do you think of an expenditure of $100,000 on the Trent canal, a work which the people of that district have been expecting the completion of for years. Even to-day the government state that they do not know what route will be taken by the canal. Well, I can tell them that the route is decided. They are within 16 miles of the Bay of Quinté; are they going to stop there and go to Port Hope. I would like to see both routes adopted.

I think it would be better that the canal should be built both to Trenton and to Port Hope; then you would satisfy both sections of the country. However, in my opinion, the work is one of great utility to the people in that section of the country. The expenditure is a justifiable one and one that will have the result of equalizing freight to any man who lives upon any part of the canal and I am glad to hear that this undertaking, for which I let the contracts, has proved a success. I would like from the minister a comparison of the expense of working a lift-lock and of working an ordinary lock such as is in use in other parts of the country. What is the difference in time and expense of the two systems? We want the fullest information, and I would like parliament to know how this $100,000 which is voted this year is to be expended. Is it to be expended for the completion of the upper lift-lock in order to enable us to get communication with Lake Simcoe, or is it intended to expend it in some other way.

Mr. GERMAN. Having let the contract, the hon. gentleman no doubt decided in his own mind as to whether or not the canal should go from Rice lake to Port Hope or to Trenton. Did the hon. gentleman or his government decide that question?

Mr. HAGGART. There is no doubt that when our government were in it was never thought that the canal was going to Port Hope, but it was urged upon the government that this would be an equally advantageous scheme.

Mr. GERMAN. Then you decided against Port Hope?

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman has asked me to give an opinion of the two routes when the government which he is supporting has not given such an opinion. Do you think the opposition have not as much right to dangle the two routes before the people as the hon. gentlemen supporting the government?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. What route does the hon. gentleman favour?

Mr. HAGGART. Hon. gentlemen say that it is not routed, but would ask the opposition to adopt a particular route. We have not the routing of the canal.

Mr. GERMAN. You had it.

Mr. HAGGART. And then we proceeded upon a plan and intended to complete that plan.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. To what point?

Mr. HAGGART. But when these gentlemen got into power they said: No, the canal is not routed at present. They have not surveys or information enough to enable them to determine whether the canal is to go to Port Hope or to the Bay of Quinte. The general election is coming on this fall, and in each section of the country through which the proposed routes run, hon. gentlemen will be able to give assurances to their friends and will send letters into the country: Do your duty by our condidates and we will see that you get justice in the building of the canal.

Sir. WILLIAM MULOCK. The ex-Minister of Railways and Canals professes to say that his government really placed under contract the works which have now been completed, and manifested great energy, zeal and earnestness to complete that work, and if I understood him rightly he went on to say that the government or himself had decided in favour of the outlet to the canal at Trenton.

Mr. HAGGART. I never did.

Mr. COCHRANE. No he did not say any such thing.

Mr. HAGGART. I carefully avoided that and I told the reason why.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The hon. gentleman says he was working on a fixed policy rapidly to complete that enterprise and he dropped a remark that Trenton was their destination.

Mr. COCHRANE. No, he did not.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I am surprised that the hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) should seek——

Mr. COCHRANE. I am not surprised because I always advise people to tell the truth.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I am sorry that we have East Northumberland against East Northumberland in this matter.

Mr. COCHRANE. You need not say that at all. You have been fibbing to me for 18 years and I am not going to allow you to do it any longer while I am here.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) has informed us, that he had given great study to this question and was pushing it forward, and he has here stated to us that, according to his conception of the scheme, Trenton is the outlet. I am surprised that the hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) does not try to hold him to that expression instead of helping him to escape.

Mr. COCHRANE. I will attend to East Northumberland without any of your help.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. He is not helping East Northumberland at this moment. But to return to the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart). After all, what would be the policy of the late government that began this enterprise in 1880 and in 16 years had expended upon it in all $882,000, or the record of this government that in 8 years has expended $3,200,000 upon it. We have expended nearly four times the amount that my hon. friend's government expended upon it.

Mr. HAGGART. You have expended $3,200,000 ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. That is what I am told by the engineer. He said that all we have done is to complete the contracts he had let.

Mr. HAGGART. I said that.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I am now speaking on the information of the chief engineer, and my hon. friend will of course bring out any errors and the chief engineer will be obliged to give me the correct information. I will now give the information I have from the engineers who are now present, the chief engineer and Mr. Rogers the engineer in charge of the work. I wish to show my hon. friend how erroneous he is in his statement that we have practically done nothing except to allow the running on to completion of contracts which he had let before his government went out of office.

We found the following contracts let by the previous government and we have completed them : The contract of Brown, Love and Aylmer, the Corry and Laverdure contract and the Onderdonk contracts. These are the only uncompleted contracts handed down as legacies to the present government. The present government has let the following contracts and there has been expended on these contracts the sums which I am about to mention :

Larkin & Sangster....	$296,860
Dominion Bridge Co., for the lift-lock..	211,160
Brown & Aylmer..	282,660
Central Bridge Co., bridges...	32,420
Dominion Bridge Co., bridges.	4,301
Hamilton Bridge Co..	35,514
Conroy..	7,638
Edward Conroy, for piers.. ..	27,317
Grand Trunk Railway Company, track	23,490
James Bogue	6,625
Battle, for cement	610
Lakefield Cement Co....	60,948
Owen Sound Cement Co..	55,031
Rathbun Cement Co..	190,444
A. T. Rowley..	14,200
Sola cement..	23,214
Wurtelle cement..	5,428
Land damages	310,619

These land damages of course are not contracts, but are features of the scheme.

Mr. COCHRANE. Are there contracts for them ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. No you cannot contract for damages of that character. My hon. friend says that they were determined to carry this scheme through and therefore that we are only completing their work so that they are entitled to all the credit ; that we are simply drifting on with what they commenced.

He says that on the other hand we pronounced ourselves against the scheme and yet to-day are committed to it. Well, we have heard of the one who said he would not and yet he did and of the other who said he would and yet did not. To whom belongs the greater credit ? My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) when in office, favoured the Trenton route. Out of office he favours both the Trenton and the Port Hope routes. Any gentleman who would voice the opinion of his party as favouring two routes evidently favours neither, because he knows that no government would ask parliament to vote an expenditure for connecting that inland system at the two points.

Mr. GOURLEY. I would support both routes.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. There is another available route as well. That would be three routes. There is the Cobourg route. Is the ex-Minister of Railways going to give the go by to Cobourg? It is true that Cobourg in the last election or two did not support these hon. gentlemen, but prior to that it gave them good support. Why then turn their backs on Cobourg?

Mr. COCHRANE. You want to help your candidate.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I want to do what is right. It is contended by the people of Port Hope that the surveys made up to date in favour of the Trenton route are not reliable. They contend that their route has not received fair consideration. That may be true or it may not. I am sure that none of the officers who have been giving consideration to the selection of a route would unintentionally do any injustice; but nevertheless it is quite possible that the merits of one route may have been so paramount in the minds of the engineers that they paid no attention to a more desirable one. I am not offering any opinion, because I know nothing of the relative merits; but when a great portion of the community, when the people in the eastern part of the county of Durham and the western part of the county of Northumberland assert that they have a more desirable route, is it not the duty of the government to listen to their representations and give them an opportunity to make good their statement? We have received twice of late very influential deputations of prominent men from the county of Durham urging the government to have a careful examination made of the topography of their country before reaching a final conclusion. We would not be a representative government if we turned a deaf ear to such an appeal. Therefore before any government would be justified in committing itself to any special route, it should have unbiased and reliable advice as to which is the better route. This is the course we intend to pursue and one which will commend itself to the taxpayers of this country. When expert opinion is obtained and all information with regard to the business side of the question, the government will be in a position to decide. Did the ex-Minister of Railways ever have a survey made of the Port Hope route? Did the late government ever have plans and specifications showing the work to be done on the Port Hope route and a classification of the advantages and disadvantages, or did they reach a decision with regard to the Trenton route, without considering any other? I would like an answer to that question.

Mr. HAGGART. I will answer everything as soon as the hon. gentleman is through. The hon. gentleman took me to task about my statement that this government only carried out the contracts which the late government had let for the purposes of this canal. Well, there are two contracts which he let since he came into office—one to a Mr. Brown and the other to a Mr. Larkin. The contracts he read had reference to the Hamilton Bridge Company, the Dominion Bridge Company and other bridge companies and four or five cement companies. All these were for the purpose of carrying out the contracts which I had let when I was in power. The cement is for the purpose of building the locks and the iron and steel are connected with the lift lock, so that his boasted comparison between the expenditure of the late and present government falls to the ground. The hon. gentleman talks about the two routes. To go back to ancient history, the first route, the Trent canal route, was surveyed by the imperial engineers shortly after the battle of Waterloo.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Some seventy odd years ago?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes. The plan they adopted was by Trenton up to Lake Simcoe and further on into the Georgian bay. They built a couple of locks, I think, upon the Trent canal, which became the property of the province of Ontario when the assets of the provinces were set aside. The hon. gentleman asked me if I had a survey of the Port Hope route made. Why I never heard that route suggested until these gentlemen got into power. The first person I ever heard speak about it was my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane). He did not begin agitating until long after the work was under construction by the late government, and I do not know whether it was the late or the present government—perhaps it was the present government—which got a survey made of the two rival routes. We would like to hear which is the cheaper and better route. If I remember rightly, from the information which the present government brought down to the House and the surveys made at that time, it was decided that the Port Hope route was the more expensive and the most difficult to construct.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Who decided that?

Mr. HAGGART. The engineers did. If I remember rightly, I heard the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) criticising the report of the engineers, and pitching into the engineer in charge of the work, saying that his report and skill were not to be relied upon, insisting upon the government having another and a better survey of the route, because it was condemnatory of the Port Hope route.

Mr. EMMERSON. One of the reports I laid on the table was from an engineer who was connected with the department, Mr MacLeod. The other is the report of Mr. Rogers, the superintending engineer of the Trent Valley canal. But there was an independent report.

Mr. HAGGART. The report of the engineer in charge of the Trent Valley canal was in favour of the Port Hope route. Is that so ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not remember.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. It is.

Mr. HAGGART. I heard the hon. member for Durham criticising it in the House, insisting upon having a new survey of the route, because the route proposed, or supposed to be better than the Trent route, had been examined by the engineers attached to the department, who showed that it was more expensive and a less valuable route than the other.

Mr. SCOTT. Which one do you favour ?

Mr. HAGGART. I am not responsible for the route of the canal at the present moment. But the gentlemen who are responsible for the legislation of this House, when they come down with a vote, and we ask the fullest information, and when they have the fullest information from their engineers as to the feasibility of the one route or the other, ought to be prepared to give a decision upon the information they possess which route will be selected.

Mr. SCOTT. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he favoured the construction of both.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. I never said anything of the kind, nor insinuated anything of the kind.

Mr. SCOTT. My hon. friend from Colchester (Mr. Gourley) understood him so.

Mr. HAGGART. If the hon. gentleman interrupts me again, I wish he would be more accurate, and state something which is pertinent to the remarks which I make. It is unfair to make interruptions of that kind, especially when they suggest an inference that I said something some time ago and was saying the contrary now. I never did that. What I said was this : It is not my business to have a policy in reference to this matter, I am not called upon to give a decision between the Trenton route and the Port Hope route. What we say is that the government, when asking for a vote at the present time upon information from their own departmental engineers upon facts which are in their possession, ought to give the House the information and decide at once upon the route, instead of descending to the petty parish politics of holding up the two routes before the electors in the coming election and saying to them : Gentlemen, we are making an accurate survey of two different routes, and it may be that the route which you ask us to take will be the preferable of the two. Now, I want this information from the minister. I want to know when the contract will be completed for the upper section so as to give communication into Lake Simcoe ? I understand from the minister there are about 130 miles of continuous navigation completed. I did not think there was that much.

Mr. EMMERSON. 120 miles.

Mr. HAGGART. I am glad to hear it. That takes you to within 16 miles of the Bay of Quinte and within 17 or 18 miles of Lake Simcoe. I think that the true policy is for the government to make up their minds at once and go on and complete the canal. But I want an answer to these questions : When will that contract be completed ? What is the comparison between the cost of a lift-lock and ordinary locks serving the same purpose ? What is the time saved ; and whether this lock has proved to be the success that they expected ?

Mr. SCOTT. I much regret that my interruption has ruffled my hon. friend. But I am within your judgment, Mr. Chairman, and the judgment of the other members of the House, if the hon. gentleman, in his former remarks, did not advocate the construction of the canal over both routes, the Trenton route and the Port Hope route.

Mr. HAGGART. I stated distinctly that I did not, and here is the hon. gentleman getting up again in the face of my denial. If I did say so, and I stated afterwards that I did not say so he is obliged to take my denial.

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HAGGART. Why is he repeating it ?

Mr. SCOTT. I have not the slightest intention of declining to accept the present statement of the hon. gentleman. But I was proceeding to say that I was within the judgment of the chairman and the other members of the House that my hon. friend did——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. HAGGART. I will not allow the hon. gentleman to question my statement.

Mr. SCOTT. I will ask the hon. gentleman to read the 'Hansard' to-morrow.

Mr. HAGGART. Order.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Allow me to make a remark.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I will point out the rule. The rule is that if an hon. gentleman is charged with making a statement and denies it, his denial must be accepted, and the matter must end there.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I was going to offer a word of explanation, because, while I freely accept my hon. friend's denial, yet I am in the same position as my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Scott). My hon. friend from Lanark will remember that after his remarks I commented upon his attitude.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, I know.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. We are trying to clear the matter up. I want the hon. member for Lanark to do justice to my hon. friend from Assiniboia, who is quite ready to adhere to the rule of debate. I honestly believed that the hon. member for Lanark made the statement attributed to him by my hon. friend, and I think other members of the committee were under that impression. Probably the hon. gentleman does not remember what he said. He may not have intended to say it. That is his position. My hon. friend from Lanark did not intend perhaps so to express himself; but I am under the impression that every member of the House understood him to say that he favoured both routes. Then I proceeded to say: Why does not my hon. friend go further? There is a third route, why does not he favour that as well?

Mr. GOURLEY. That was myself.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the minister think I stated on the floor of the House that I was in favour of building both routes?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I think he said so, yes.

Mr. HAGGART. I never said anything of the kind.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. My hon. friend will find, I am sure, that he is mistaken. He did not intend to say so, and that disposes of the whole point. But my hon. friend will find on reference to the 'Hansard' that he so expressed himself.

Mr. COCHRANE. I regret that this matter has been dragged into little parish politics by the Postmaster General, and we have an illustration now how the progress of the estimates is hindered by ministers of the Crown dragging parish politics into a large question like this. I was never more surprised in my life than to hear the Postmaster General on a big question like this, when he was so elated by seeing the superstructure that is built and that magnificent lift-lock, that when we were taking into consideration the estimates to finish that job, he should drag in parish politics by referring to the member for East Northumberland as he did. I am here to say to the Postmaster General that I can go into East Northumberland and challenge the electorate upon the question whether I ever misled them in any statement I made. I do not think that any minister who is sitting on the treasury benches now and who was sitting in opposition in former years can truthfully make that statement in the House. They now say that we are aiding them. We are, and I want to tell the hon. minister who is now controlling the Department of Public Works and I want to tell the hon. Postmaster General that I am here to act upon a higher plane in promoting the best interests of this country and that I am not here to import little party politics into every question that is submitted for the consideration of this House. I care very little where the money of Canada is expended provided it is expended in the best interests of the country and I desire to draw the attention of the hon. Postmaster General and the hon. Minister of Customs to the fact that when we were promoting this canal we got almost abuse when the estimates were submitted. They made party and parish politics out of it, and they said that we were throwing away the people's money in order to secure the return of Conservatives to this House. They do not get that criticism from us now. We are prepared to vote the money provided it is to be expended for the promotion of the best interests of the country and for the development of trade. When we were in power we were developing great works in this country. We built the Soo canal. We deepened the St. Lawrence canals. What have these hon. gentlemen done? Millions of money have been frittered away for paltry party ends in the maritime provinces and in the province of Quebec. Although we built the Soo canal it is useless from the fact that these hon. gentlemen, instead of spending a few thousand dollars to build a wharf, are allowing all the trade to go to the American side. There was $60,000 spent to build a wharf to benefit an hon. gentleman who is in this House.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I want to ask the hon. gentleman——

Mr. COCHRANE. If you want any information in reference to the canals ask it from the engineers. That $60,000 that was spent to benefit an hon. gentleman sitting in this House, if it had been spent at the Soo, would have built a wharf there so that Canadian vessels would not require to go over to the American side to land. The large amount of money which has been spent on the Soo canal is almost useless because you have not made the entrance of the canal what it should be and you have not built a wharf on this side so that vessels can go in there. I do not care where this money was spent on this route and I am not opposed to it.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

WEST CANADIAN COLLIERIES, LIMITED.

House in committee on Bill (No. 80) respecting the West Canadian Collieries, Limited.—Mr. Oliver.

Mr. HENDERSON. I thought that this Bill had been referred to the Railway Committee. May I ask if it has been before that committee and if it has been reported back by them ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Yes. It has been before the Railway Committee and has been reported back by them.

Mr. HENDERSON. The endorsation, I see, reads, 'Reprinted as reported by the committee on miscellaneous private Bills.'

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The copy before me is signed by E. P. Hartney as being reported from the Railway Committee with amendments.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 150) to amend the Act of the present session to incorporate the Thorold and Lake Erie Railway Company.—Mr. German.

CANADA SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. INGRAM moved concurrence in the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 40) respecting the Canada Southern Railway Company.

Mr. SPROULE. Two of these amendments seem to be unimportant, merely adding the words 'subject to the Railway Act 1903.' But the Senate have cut out clause 10, which reads as follows :

Notwithstanding anything in this Act or any previous Act applicable to the amalgamated company, the Railway Act, 1903, shall apply to the amalgamated company to the exclusion of such of the provisions of any special Act of any provincial legislature as are inconsistent with the Railway Act, 1903, and instead of any general railway Act of any province of Canada.

It seems to me that that would have an important bearing, because, if there were any provisions of the provincial Act applying to this road which ought to be continued they would be made null and void and the company made entirely subject to the Railway Act of the Dominion. I do not know whether it will cause any injury or not, but it seems to me that it must have been put in there for a special purpose, to keep alive some provisions of the provincial Act, this having been originally a provincial company.

Mr. INGRAM. This clause 10 was hastily drawn when the Bill was before the committee of this House of Railways and Canals and Telegraph Lines. Since then the promoters have interviewed the Department of Railways and Canals and the Bill has been made perfectly satisfactory by the amendments to subsection 4 of section 5 and subsection 3 of section 7, which brings it under the Railway Act, 1903. None of these railways, as I understand it, are brought within the scope of provincial Acts. I understand that this is thoroughly satisfactory to the Railway Department.

Mr. SPROULE. That may be, and yet the Bill may not be entirely satisfactory to the Railway Committee. I think it was at the instance of the committee that this clause was drawn to protect the rights of province in the railway.

Mr. INGRAM. The Senate Committee looked carefully into the matter and deemed it well to make this change.

Mr. SPROULE. It may be all right. I am not saying that it is not. But I think that this clause that has been struck out was inserted by the Railway Committtee after careful discussion.

Mr. INGRAM. I think the clause was somewhat hastily drawn, and it was thought well after by the Senate Committee and after consultation with the Railway Department it was thought well to make this amendment.

Motion agreed to and amendments concurred in.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Canals—Trent canal—construction, $100,000.

Mr. COCHRANE. When you left the chair at six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the fact that when the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) was Minister of Railways and Canals and the Conservative party was in power we had the oppposition of a good many members of the present government to the carrying out of this Trent Valley canal scheme. We were accused of dilly-dallying and of insincerity in connection with that work. When the Liberals were in opposition one of the members of the present government proclaimed in sonorous tones that it was a burning shame and disgrace to tax the farmers of the country and bleed them white in raising $35,000,000 a year to govern 5,000,000 people.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Considering the government.

Mr. COCHRANE. Yes, considering the government; but while we were raising $35,000,000 a year the present government is raising $70,000,000 in taxes from the people and they are frittering away the money. The late government was building the Sault canal, and building the Canadian Pacific Railway, and deepening the St. Lawrence canals with a revenue of $35,000,000, but this government with double the revenue is simply throwing the money away on a wharf here and there without pursuing any well thought-out plan for the development of the waterways of Canada.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. What wharf do you object to ?

Mr. COCHRANE. Time would fail me to point out the iniquities of the expenditure made by the present government. Ask the Minister of Finance alongside of you and he will tell you.

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot ; I do not object to any of them.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am not objecting to them, but I am telling you where the money is going.

Mr. FIELDING. We know that.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am glad you do. You are accusing the late government of not hurrying on with this work, but all you did towards completing the St. Lawrence canal system was to take a contract away from a man, and you did not get the job finished any sooner than if you had left him alone. The Postmaster General wants to deceive the people. If he were honest with the people he would tell them which was the best place to have the terminal of this canal, and he would not have the audacity to talk about the town of Cobourg. If the Postmaster General had any decency he would wait until nearer election times before he attempted to bribe the people. He wanted to make the electors believe that I was opposed to having the terminal of this canal at Trenton.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The hon. gentleman is obstructing the vote at this moment.

Mr. COCHRANE. Why, my dear man, what are you doing ? For half an hour you talked unmitigated nonsense which you did not believe yourself, and which no one listening to you believed.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Why don't you let the vote pass if you are in favour of the canal.

Mr. COCHRANE. No intelligent man would have a doubt in his mind as to where the outlet of that canal is going to be. If you want it to be of any benefit you know where it is going to be, and if you were not humbugging the people and playing to the gallery you would state so openly. I do not care about the expenditure of money in East Northumberland——

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. You are not voicing the opinion of the people of East Northumberland in that.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am voicing the opinion of the people of East Northumberland, when I say that their desire is to have the public money expended where it will be for the best advantage of all Canada. We are not local in our ideas. Do you understand that ? I suppose it is incomprehensible to certain of these gentlemen opposite, how people can stand on a plane so high as that. The ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) is here, and he can tell that I always insisted that the public money should be spent in the best interests of Canada. I knew that if the money for this canal were wisely expended the canal would go down the Trent route. It is two-thirds way across the riding I have the honour to represent. It is navigable to Healey's Falls and with a lift-lock like that at Peterborough, it would bring it down to the level of the waters of the Trent, and then it would develop water-power all along that route. I want to tell the Postmaster General if he doesn't know it, that there is a bay below Healey's Falls, and from Chisholm's Rapids westward there are ten miles of navigable water, so that it is not all canal. If his estimate is right that there are eighteen miles to complete, then deduct the ten miles, and you have only eight miles of canal to Trenton. Does the minister think that he can locate the entrance of this canal at Port Hope when he knows that in the fall of the year the barges could not live on Lake Ontario, from the harbour of Port Hope to the harbour of Presqu'Ile. I may not live to see the canal completed, but I will live as long as I can and, I hope to see the Postmaster General out of power and then he will not be able to humbug the electors in talking about Port Hope or Cobourg or anywhere else in order to catch votes. These hon. gentlemen opposite know as well as I do that the outlet must be on the Bay of Quinté where the barges can take the inland waters, and bring their cargoes to Quebec and Montreal without transhipment. I do not want the Postmaster General to leave the impression that I am opposed to that canal going to Trenton. I thought that question was settled, and I believe it is settled, and the Postmaster General knows deep down in his heart that he is only humbugging the electors when he talks about it going to Port Hope or Cobourg.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. My hon. friend (Mr. Cochrane) pretends to be very anxious to have this canal completed to the town of Trenton. He belongs to a party that began that work in 1880. They were in that office from that time until 1896, a period of sixteen years. The total cost of that canal would be, I suppose, $10,000,000. In sixteen years they had not built one-twelfth part of that canal, in sixteen years they had not accomplished one-twelfth of the work. At the rate of progress they were making, it would have taken nearly two hundred years to have completed that work, and the hon. member would tell this House that he hopes to live to see it completed. The only chance he ever had of realizing that hope was that the enterprise should be put in the hands of an enterprising government. That happened to be the good fortune of the canal in 1896. My hon. friend (Mr. Cochrane) says that he never gave a thought to the Trenton route. I would have thought that, as representing East Northumberland, he would have given thought to it continually, would have been ever alert to guard the interests of East Northumberland and to see that the canal came by that route.

Mr. COCHRANE. I knew it was settled.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. You knew it was settled ?

Mr. COCHRANE. Yes.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. How did he learn that it was settled ? I have asked his late leader, the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, if it had been settled in that way by the Trenton route. What answer did I get ? The hon. gentleman made the confession that he favoured the Trenton route, but he receded from that in a moment, and my hon. friend from East Northumberland backed him up.

Mr. COCHRANE. No, I did not.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The Debates will show. I say that the hon. gentleman backed him up in withdrawing any expression he had given in favour of the Trenton route.

Mr. COCHRANE. No, I did not.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. And I had occasion to point out that my hon. friend was not doing justice to East Northumberland.

The attitude of the government in regard to the enterprise is perfectly plain. It is quite true that certain engineering reports have been made in favour of the Trenton route, and it may be that those reports are well founded and that the balance of argument is wholly in favour of the Trenton route. But inasmuch as a very influential section of the country has asked to have another route considered, I may ask my hon. friend if it is not only fair that their request should be listened to and that full consideration should be given to their contention ? My hon. friend has as much as said so himself at this moment, because he says he is not wedded to any route ; he rises above local considerations. No pent up Utica for him, and the money is to be expended where it will do the most good If a more thorough inquiry should show that it would be best to adopt the Port Hope route, my hon. friend will be found standing up here supporting the Port Hope route. Will he not ? He has made great professions of virtue, he is not a partisan in the sense that he would have the money misapplied. He is in favour of the Port Hope route, according to his statements here to-night, if it can be shown to be the better route, and therefore he, like others, is asking us to consider the whole situation and not to reach a conclusion after only a partial consideration of the question. So we now have a statesman instead of the former mere local politician from East Northumberland. He is willing to support this route if it is necessary for the benefit of Canada as a whole. I compliment him on the high stand he has taken. However, if he would really stand the test when it comes to submitting this to the decision of a final tribunal, time alone will tell. In the meantime the government propose to proceed expeditiously in the completion of this enterprise, as rapidly as the circumstances of this country will admit. The hon. gentleman protests against our spending money, and at the same time says he is anxious for the completion of the canal. We are told its completion will cost $4,000,000 or $5,000,000. Can we build it without money ? The hon. gentleman protests against the expenditure of money necessary for the completion of the canal ; therefore, he must be opposed to the completion of the canal. He cannot take all these inconsistent positions in the same breath. The country is committed to the completion of the canal : the government regards it as an enterprise of great promise, which is entitled to be completed as rapidly as circumstances will warrant. That is our attitude, and to that attitude we propose to adhere.

Mr. COCHRANE. The Postmaster General has continued on the same line, trying to make a little cheap political capital out of this great question.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Never dreamt of such a thing.

Mr. COCHRANE. And has put words in my mouth which I never uttered, and which he knows I never uttered. I am not going to allow him or any one else to say that I said certain things which I did not say.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. What did you not say ?

Mr. COCHRANE. I would think you would be above interrupting me. You should play the part of a gentleman anyway in the discussion. I never said that I was in favour of the Port Hope route. I said that I believed that that question was settled, and therefore I had not given it a thought, because I thought that any sensible government would decide on the route that had been decided on for seventy years past. That is what I thought, and I think in my own mind to-day that that question is settled just as firmly in the mind of the present government as in the mind of any previous government, only they want to make a little cheap notoriety out of the matter.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Nothing of the kind.

Mr. COCHRANE. You can shake your head; I do not think there is much in it, and it is easy to shake it; but I am not going to allow you to put words in my mouth and put me in a false position. I will repeat what I said. I never was asking the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals to spend money in my riding because I represented that riding. I thought the money would be expended when the proper time came, and I would wish to draw the attention of the Postmaster General to the statement that he has made, that he is going to complete this canal as rapidly as the circumstances of the country will warrant. Will he not allow the same latitude to the previous government as to the present government? This government is asking the House to vote $70,000,000, and should not the previous government have shown the same consideration for the interests of the country when it was in power with only $37,000,000 of revenue? I pointed out to him what we were doing with that $35,000,000. We were deepening and completing the canals, but the present government is doing no such thing. All public work, so far as canals are concerned, is now centred on the Trent canal, and although the Postmaster General tells us that the government is so anxious to complete this canal expeditiously, yet there is only a paltry $100,000 out of that $70,000,000 voted for that purpose. I cannot see how you have—I was going to say the cheek, but perhaps that would not be parliamentary—but I cannot see how you can stand up before this committee and tell the country that you are anxious to go on with this work when you are voting a total of $70,000,000, of which only $100,000 is to carry on this work, and then make a great plea on account of that expenditure. The contracts were all made by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, and you have carried them out. I think when you think the matter over and see what an exhibition you have made of yourself, you will feel sad.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. If you are anxious for the completion of the canal vote the money. The hon. gentleman is here obstructing the passage of this vote; if he is so anxious to have the canal completed why should he not have the money voted? If we have this amount of difficulty to get a paltry $100,000, what would the difficulty be with a larger sum?

Mr. COCHRANE. I was not objecting to it.

Mr. COCHRANE.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The country will understand how interested he is when he will not allow us to get the estimates through for this paltry sum.

Mr. COCHRANE. If the Postmaster General was not so willing and anxious to make political capital, and to make himself conspicuous, coming to the rescue of the Minister of Railways and Canals when it was not necessary, we would not have had all this debate.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have just a few words to say to the hon. the Postmaster General, because I think he has been making rather an unfair attack on my hon. friend from East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane). The Postmaster General complains that the previous government did not proceed rapidly enough with the construction of this public work, and compared the progress which the present government have made with that made by the late government from 1880 to 1896. But let me, Sir, draw attention to this fact, that from 1880 to 1896—and I believe the Postmaster General had the honour of a seat in this House all that time—the opposition of that day made every effort to obstruct this public work, and the hon. gentleman himself was one of the most prominent in that obstruction. If there were delays during those sixteen years the government of that day could not be held responsible.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Why not?

Mr. HENDERSON. Because every dollar that the late government succeeded in obtaining from parliament to expend on that work was practically, owing to the obstruction of the then opposition, like drawing teeth, to use a common expression.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. You had an overwhelming majority.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes; but day after day the time of the committee was wasted in obstructing that public work, and every effort of the opposition was directed to prevent its being proceeded with.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. No.

Mr. HENDERSON. We know the tactics that were resorted to by hon. gentlemen opposite in those days. Why, the present government has a very easy road compared with what the late government had in more matters than one. In the construction of public works they were opposed at every turn; and when they did succeed in getting a few hundred thousand dollars, they were hounded from one end of the country to the other for their extravagance. Those hon. gentlemen opposite who constitute the remnant of the old opposition were largely responsible for the delays that occurred, and therefore it ill becomes the Postmaster General—who was one of the foremost of those who denounced this public work as worthless and as being constructed for political purposes—to now taunt the late government with delay. I do not live in the neighbourhood of that canal, I do not pretend to know the topography of that country, I am not a judge as to whether Trenton or Port Hope is the proper outlet, the matter is one in which I am not personally interested; but I have no doubt that had the late government remained in power, they would have determined long before this what route was best in the interests of the country, irrespective of politics. I hope that the Postmaster General, now that he has had his memory refreshed, will withdraw some of the charges he has preferred against the late government for delays. The former government spent very considerable sums in preparing to push this work through. In 1887 they spent more money on that canal than the present government spent in 1899. From 1896 to 1903 more money was spent on the canal each year, except one, than was spent in the previous years. But the reason is evident. Hon. gentlemen on this side are patriotic. We believe in having a public work, which is of great advantage to the country, completed. We assist the government in these matters instead of giving it the bitterest opposition. I notice also that two of the contracts which, I understand, are just about completed, if not already completed, were let by the late government. They were given by the predecessors of the hon. gentlemen now in power—one of them in 1895 and the other in May, 1896. So that the late government should not only have credit for the money they did spend, but also for having pushed that work forward even to the very dying days of that administration. I think there is as much credit due to the ex-Minister of Railways, who gave out these contracts, as to the present government, which carried them to completion. We are not offering to the present government the factious opposition which hon. gentlemen opposite, when on this side, offered the late government. We act like men who take a keen interest in the affairs of the country, and hon. gentlemen opposite, instead of taunting us with the results of their obstruction in the past, should give us credit for helping them to expedite business in the present.

Mr. GOURLEY. I desire to say a word on this question. I think that a member from a province in which the canal is not situated will probably be in a better position to voice the sentiment of Canada than one directly interested in the work. I want to say here that it gives me the greatest pleasure to support the building of this water-way. Ever since I have entered this House I have endeavoured to inculcate the principle that we should not view any public question from a narrow provincial standpoint. I have gone so far as to say that we should be the last to advocate expenditure in our own particular province. That should be left to people outside, because the members themselves should regard all the provinces as but one country, and should be as interested in the development of every other portion of Canada as they are in the little spot in which they happen to live. I am now in a position to justify the stand I have taken ever since entering this House. When I received the invitation to visit Peterborough, I made up my mind to go and see the opening of this great public work. I went, I may say, in fear and trembling, because I believe that if there is a stain on the escutcheon of the Conservative party, it is the Trent canal. I concur absolutely in what my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) and my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) have said, namely, that no work was ever more represented by gentlemen constituting Her Majesty's opposition as a low political job than the building of the Trent canal.

I live in Nova Scotia. I was not familiar with the location of the Trent Valley canal. I knew nothing about the possibilities of the water-ways of that section. And so, I, and others in Nova Scotia like me, had to take the word of members of parliament. We, in Nova Scotia, had learned to respect members of parliament. We had men to represent us like, for instance, Hon. Mr. Ross, who, though he differs from me politically, would be fair in this discussion of a public question. He is a strong Liberal, and, if he ever went wrong, it was when he was swayed by that unholy passion. But, we were accustomed to public men who would fairly represent the interests of the country, and we could not believe that any public man would prostitute his position in the House of Commons, to misrepresent a work that was calculated to be a benefit to his country. I went to Peterborough, the other day, with fear and trembling. When I received an invitation from the government, I thought, at last, the government was to show the country the extraordinary character of this work. I fancied they would say: We found this scheme, which was a piece of political debauchery, only half completed; we have done the best we could with it; we are in possession of the record, and we want to lay before you the jobbery of the Conservative party in connection with this work. So, as I say, I went there in fear and trembling. The Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) was there, and he was one of the happiest men I ever saw. He seemed to be presiding over the completion of the work that was entirely to his liking. I did not think it possible that one who had inveighed against the Trent Valley canal could preside at the opening of that canal with such pleasure. Why, I recollect that we people in Nova Scotia were almost frightened out of our wits that the Conservative government had done something wrong in carrying on this Trent Valley canal work. We trusted the Conservative party and believed that, in the main, it was right. Still, we feared that, in connection with this matter, there must be something wrong. And the Liberal party in Nova Scotia used to tell us : Look at your corrupt government ; look at this infamous ditch in which the public money of Canada was pretended to be spent ; that money was not spent, except to be the means of corrupting and debauching the electorate. That was the opinion that hon. gentlemen opposite cultivated for eighteen years. And, even members of the Conservative party almost half believed it. The hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) amused me, some time ago, by telling me that, when the Liberals opposed the Conservatives so earnestly, strongly charging them with corruption, even he almost felt like deserting the government, for it seemed impossible that men could bring themselves to carry on such stern opposition, unless they believed something of the charges they were making. Of course, he said he had lived long enough to know that they did not mean a word of what they said. But, such was the earnestness of their advocacy, that even he wavered in his support of Sir John Macdonald, on several occasions. And, if we in Nova Scotia ever wavered in that support, it was over the question of this Trent Valley canal. So, you can imagine the feeling with which I went up to view this work. And, you can imagine my feelings when I found it to be such a splendid work for the development of the country. I believe in the development of Canada in every part—not less in Ontario and British Columbia than in my own country. I got hold of the map—I love maps and study them always. And, as I studied the map, it was borne in upon my mind that, whether this canal was to carry through freight or not, did not matter, for it is a splendid internal water-way, and will develop an immense country. I devoted a night or two to the study of the map ; and I assure you, Mr. Chairman, my esteem for the province of Ontario was not heightened. We, in Nova Scotia, are apt to believe that the people of Ontario are the narrowest people you can find. And, as I say, my esteem for them was not heightened by my study of this map. Why, you should have had this canal developed eighty years ago. You have settled along the St. Lawrence and taken the little peninsula of western Ontario, but you have left the rest of the country, up to James Bay, almost as bare as when Cartier came. And, you deserve no credit for what has been done. If confederation had not come, you would have been as backward as you were thirty-seven years ago. But, the other provinces have joined you, and have helped to develop your province. I was amazed, when I looked at the map, to think that any man of integrity could have opposed the development of his province by this splendid water-way. Every man in Ontario should have joined to get that country developed thirty or forty years ago. But the great misfortune of Canada is that we talk, and dispute, and decades go by, and nothing is accomplished.

Well, as I say, I went to Peterborough. And I must say that I admired the courage of the Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock). Why, his courage was Alpine in its grandeur. For a man who has spent years in opposing this canal to stand up here, and speak in its defence, shows that he possesses the courage of an African lion. And, when I recall the names of McMullen and Cartwright, associated for years with the most deadly opposition to this canal, I admire also the courage of the Conservative party in insisting upon the completion of this scheme. The Conservative party carried every dollar in support of this canal at the point of the bayonet. No Japanese assault was ever bolder, more masterful, or courageous, than the work of the Conservative party in carrying these votes for the Trent Valley canal, against the deadly opposition of their Liberal opponents. Why, these hon. gentlemen opposite must think that the people of Canada have no memories, if they think, for a moment, that we shall lose sight of one of the saddest, and most disgraceful, chapters in Canadian history, the opposition of Ontario Liberals, for eighteen years, to the development of their own province. We always thought that the narrow Liberals of Ontario were opposed to the development of the maritime provinces. We thought that their betê noir was Nova Scotia and the maritime provinces. But I find that they are equally opposed to the development of Ontario. Bred in a little mould, they could not bear the expenditure of a dollar for public improvement anywhere, even in the province of Ontario. That being the case, I can understand the feelings of contempt that such men as the hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane), and the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), must have for hon. gentlemen opposite. There is such a thing as carrying bravado too far. A statesman should have some sincerity. The Postmaster General would have commended himself more to me if, when this matter was under discussion, he had appeared in habiliments of sackcloth, and with ashes sprinkled on his head. That would have been his proper garb. Had he come here, and said : I have sinned beyond all forgiveness ; but I acknowledge my sin, and, in acknowledging it, I hope I have half won the forgiveness that I crave—had he done that, I would have thought him a man. But when he glories in his sin, when he tries to gain credit by it, he does not add dignity to the public life of Canada. Having seen this great water-way, I heartily support this vote, and I hope my party will support it, as a great work for the development of Canada.

I viewed with great pleasure that high lift-lock. The effect of that great engineering work is not confined to Peterborough, it solves many transportation difficulties all over Canada, for instance in the province of Quebec, where rivers drop down from a high plateau to another high plateau. This lift-lock will make the water-ways of Canada available to the commerce of the country. Therefore when I looked upon that magnificent feat of engineering and scientific skill, and remembered that it had been conceived to a large extent in its improved form by the genius of Canadian engineers, I was proud of Canada and of its sons. I am delighted to know that this parliament is charged with the development of more territory than any other parliament in the world, or any other government, barring that of Russia. We have half a continent in charge, we are simply standing at the edge of its development, and in the work of that development we shall find that this lift-lock solves many of the problems that will present themselves to our engineers. Therefore I hail with delight the opening of this lift-lock at Peterborough. I said some harsh things about the Postmaster General, but not intending to say unpleasant things, and I hope that when he looks at this great work and begins to realize its true meaning, he will ask forgiveness from high Heaven for the awful sins he has committed in not seeing this great work in its true proportions twenty-five years ago, and I hope God will forgive him.

Now my hon. friend seemed to treat with much levity the proposition of having two termini for this water-way. I would like to see half a dozen termini for this water-way. I am not pleading for either one or the other. You can locate them anywhere that will serve the purpose of making a through highway, because then you will want elevators and all the equipments of a port, and I regard this as infinitely valuable as a local and internal water-way. But so narrow minded was the Postmaster General, so bred is he in that little Liberal, Grit, Ontario way of his and of his party, that he could not dream of there being two termini to a great work of this kind. It would burst his head, I fancy, and shatter his brain if he once attempted to conceive it. In many ways I admire the hon. Postmaster General, I admire his good nature, and I wonder how a man of some humour can ever be sober when he is speaking and indulging in jokes of that character. I support the idea of two termini, one at Port Hope and one at Trenton ; you can make your third terminus wherever you will ; but in every section of this country where there is a little town growing up, it should be connected with this water-way in the same way.

Now allow me to refer to another thing. My hon. friend said : Let us get expert testimony about the settlement of the termini of this water-way system. But I recollect that when they were proposing to spend two hundred millions of money on the Grand Trunk Pacific system, and we proposed that they get expert testimony before doing so, they refused us, they laughed us to scorn, they said : Let us vote the money, get the railway started, and we will get expert testimony afterwards. That was their position. But hon. gentlemen, in a little matter of this kind, must play the cheap politician and hold this dangling in the air for the purpose of fooling the people of Ontario. I am bound to say that the people of Ontario will be infinitely greater fools than I think they are—and I have not the highest opinion of a great many of them, especially of hon. gentlemen opposite. In the lower provinces we always had an idea that there was a little soft spot in the pates of people of Ontario, but we never dreamed they would go so far as to take the hon. gentleman seriously when he proposes to dangle these two termini before their eyes, without meeting just retribution at their hands. If I were a Liberal of Ontario, after hearing the speech of the Postmaster General this afternoon, I would vote against him and his pary at once and for ever. It is too late in the day for public men to be eternally fooling and scheming about a question of this kind. We want integrity, we want ministers of the Crown, representing the people in this country, to settle these questions on the broad lines of statesmanship and patriotism, then they will be worthy of our confidence.

Now I want to congratulate the ex-Minister of Railways, the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), whom I have learned to respect. I was a stranger when I came into this House, and I had to make up my estimates of men as I met them. I have a very high opinion of the member for South Lanark. He has got convictions, and very few men have them. That is what I admire in him. Right or wrong, you know where to find him. It is a great credit to a man to have convictions about something. The misfortune is that so few of our public men have convictions, but the public man who has them must always be a strong man. But I never knew my hon. friend from South Lanark had such a claim upon the eternal gratitude of the people of this country as to be the father of this great system of the Trent canal. I honour him for supporting it twenty years ago, because at that time there was no Liberal public opinion in Canada. Every little fellow was struggling for his own province. There was no such thing as a man voting for a public work in the interest of the whole of Canada, but he had to vote from the standpoint of his township, or his county, or his province at most. Therefore, when the hon. gentleman started out to carry that canal forward—because it had started years before, but somebody had to carry it forward—and when that hon. gentleman undertook to carry it forward he was a brave man, because he had to meet, and oppose, and overcome objections of all sorts from the Liberal party in this House. When he undertook to vote money for this canal he found it a herculean task. Now, after having seen his efforts crowned with so great a measure of success, I hope he will be the father of many other great schemes for the internal development of Canada, and the great Conservative party who has supported him, and will continue to support him, will deserve the utmost credit from the people of this country.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the minister tell us about the lift-lock ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think there was a question by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) in respect to the route at the Georgian bay end. He referred to the alternative to the Severn, or river route, as it is called. That alternative route, around by Barrie to which he refers) was surveyed some years ago by Mr. Rubidge, an engineer connected with the canals of Canada for a great many years and who has recently died. He had a very large experience in connection with the canal.

Mr. CLARKE. A very able man.

Mr. EMMERSON. So I understand. He surveyed that route and reported, as I have been led to understand, condemnatory of it. He favoured what is known as the river route. I simply call my hon. friend's attention to the fact because he may not have heard of it, or he may not have known that the matter was ever under consideration. It appears that it was. My hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) has asked me a question with respect to comparisons between the ordinary lock and the hydraulic lift-lock. One set of ordinary locks would consist of five as compared with one hydraulic lock, or double lock as it is called. The capital cost of one set of five ordinary locks would be $275,000. One hydraulic lock, double set, costs $500,000. The cost of maintenance and wages on the five ordinary locks requiring twenty lockmen, two men to each lock with day and night shifts, each man at $400, is $8,000. The wages in connection with the working of the hydraulic lift-lock would be, for a lock master, one during the day and one at night, and four gatemen, $2,500, as against $8,000 for the five ordinary locks. The annual repairs to the five ordinary locks would be $1,000. They would cost about $250 each.

Mr. CLARKE. It would cost $1,250 if there were five locks ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes. The annual repairs to one hydraulic lock are estimated at $100. An element to be considered is the time of locking. With the five ordinary locks, sixty-five feet, one and a half minutes per foot, if will take one and a half hours for one vessel going up or down, or if two vessels go through the locks at the same time it will take one of them one and a half hours, while it will take the other vessel three hours to get through. By the hydraulic lock both vessels will pass through at the same time in twelve minutes. If the saving in wages and repairs, $6,650, in favour of the hydraulic lock over one set of five ordinary locks is capitalized at three per cent it will be equal to a sum considerably above $200,000. This, if deducted from the capital cost of the hydraulic, will leave the cost of the hydraulic lock very little more than the cost of one set of five ordinary locks, while the advantage in the saving of time by the use of the hydraulic lock is vastly greater than by the use of one set of five ordinary locks. These are the views of the engineer, Mr. Rogers, who is in charge of that work and who is certainly to be commended for the efficiency displayed by him in the carrying out of the work.

Mr. HAGGART. When will the canal be completed to Lake Simcoe ?

Mr. EMMERSON. In about a year; when the other hydraulic lift is finished.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. minister has not noticed my question as to whether it is the policy of the government to make immediate provision for the completion of the work not in sections and by dribbling out an amount of money each year, but as I suggested this afternoon by the making of provision for the immediate finishing of the work. I do not know whether the hon. minister takes it seriously. I think he does. Certainly the hon. Postmaster General does not take it seriously and I think the committee is entitled to some explanation as to how it happens that after the boast that has been made by the Postmaster General as to the rapid way in which the present government have been carying on the work, as to the generous way in which they have been providing money to carry on this work, we are only asked for an appropriation of $100,000 at the present time. The hon. Postmaster General says that according to the rate at which we were proceeding under the Conservative administration it would have taken a great many years to complete the work.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK About two hundred.

Mr. LENNOX. That is the hon. gentleman's way of stating it but it does not figure out. According to actual computation, according to the rate at which we are asked to vote money for this enterprise now, it will take at least 150 years to complete the work. Estimating that it will cost $7,000,000 it will take seventy years by dividing up the time. If you take into consideration that works are always deteriorating as they progress and if you take into account the additional sums of money that will therefore require to be expended during that time it will certainly take a century and a half at the present rate of progress before you may expect the completion of the work. The hon. Postmaster General points out that this work is proving very productive and beneficial at the present time ; in fact he says it is exceedingly beneficial, that this is a magnificent work and one of the greatest possible moment to the people located along the line of that portion of the canal which is now open. But, it is sealed at both ends and it is not a tithe of the benefit to the people that it will be if you open up the two ends. We have been working in the centre and it is the duty of the government to set to work vigorously and open up the ends. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals says that he does not know whether I ever heard of the surveys. Why, I live right alongside of where the surveys have taken place. We know a great deal about the canal, we are interested in it, and I am amazed to think that the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) who is attached to the government has never brought to the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals the fact that the people of North Simcoe are intensely interested in this matter. We have been studying up the reports of the engineers. The people of North Simcoe are greatly interested in the question as to what the Transportation Commission is going to do, and whether the route is by way of Barrie or by the way of Orillia and through Midland by the Severn river, the project is still one of great importance to the people of North Simcoe.

I am amazed that the minister does not realize that all the Simcoes, and especially North Simcoe are interested in this matter. The town of Barrie has the happy fortune of being now associated with South Simcoe, and by reason of my political connection with it in the future, I am urging upon the minister the importance of getting to work seriously. If this $100,000 for such a work came from any source but the government, I would say it was an insult to the intelligence of the people. Why, when this lift-lock has been opened and connection made between the two stretches of the canal, should this vote be cut down to $100,000 ? The Postmaster General only considers that the public are watching for the expenditure of money in each locality, but I look upon this as a great national work. The people of the United States are watching us and their most eminent engineers are pointing out that this immense improvement should be developed in the interest of Canada, and they are pointing out, too, that it will probably be their greatest competitor for the trade of the western states. At the present time there is every danger, on account of the building of the so-called National Transcontinental Railway, that our trade be diverted to United States ports, and it is more than ever important that we should see to it that our water-ways should serve the purpose for which nature designed them, and that this scheme inaugurated almost a century ago, should not be allowed to lag. Now that there is congestion of traffic in the west it behoves the governments to open up every avenue of transportation, and the most natural of these avenues is by Lake Superior through the Georgian bay to Montreal and through this very canal. It will not only open up a channel for the commerce of the west, but it will have the effect of compelling railways to largely reduce rates by reason of the competition it affords. I understand that this item is not to pass, as the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Ward) wishes to speak in reference to it, and on my own behalf, until I get certain papers, I would ask the minister to allow it to stand for the present.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have arranged with the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Ward) to have a discussion on this question, and if the item passes the same opportunity will be given to my hon. friend.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. member for Durham might take the matter up when I am accidently out of the House.

Mr. EMMERSON. I shall try to arrange that you will be present.

Mr. HAGGART. Any way there are several items for the Trent canal.

Mr. LENNOX. Can the minister give us an idea as to whether this work will be progressed with rapidly ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think I can say that the object is to make progress.

Soulanges canal—survey for breakwater, $2,000.

Mr. HAGGART. This seems a very large sum for a survey. You have the staff on the Galops canal who have done nothing for over a year and surely you can utilize them.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am advised by the deputy minister that this amount would be necessary. If we take the men from one canal to the other we shall have to charge their services to this work.

Soulanges canal—steel bridge at power house, $4,000.

Mr. HAGGART. I want to know the total expenditure on the Soulanges canal and what it costs to work each year. The Auditor General was comparing the cost of the Soulanges canal and the Cornwall canal, and there was a dispute between him and the Minister of Justice as to a very large amount.

Mr. EMMERSON. I will give my hon. friend a full statement at next meeting.

Soulanges canal—workshops, heating, lighting and machinery, $7,200.

Mr. EMMERSON. This includes $4,000 for the steel bridge at the power house over the tail-race. That is the first item. The next is the workshop. $7,000 is for the installation of machinery, wiring, electric lamps, &c. There are about 140 incandescent lamps at forty cents each.

Mr. TAYLOR. You can buy electric lamps cheaper than that retail.

Mr. EMMERSON. These are by public tender, advertised in the newspapers. The total estimated cost is $7,200.

Mr. LENNOX. Is there anything for the workshops themselves ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This is simply for lighting and heating and the machinery of the two workshops on the Soulanges canal.

Mr. LANCASTER. We have it stated in connection with the Cornwall canal that the workshops there will require a large amount of horse-power.

Mr. EMMERSON. There are two at Cornwall which will require sixty horse-power. This also requires sixty horse-power.

Mr. LENNOX. We were told that the workshops to be built at Cornwall were to serve the two canals.

Mr. EMMERSON. Oh, no. The workshops at Cornwall are to serve the St. Lawrence canals. They are separate altogether.

Mr. LENNOX. What is the meaning of this last item of No. 103 ?

Appropriation not required for 1904-5, $413,919.37.

I notice that recurring frequently and I would like to know what it means.

Mr. FIELDING. It means that the columns for the two years would not balance otherwise. That is simply striking a balance from the appropriation of last year. The different items coming under that head which it is not necessary to repeat are lumped together and put in in that way. It is a mere striking of the balance, an aid to comparison, and has no bearing on the estimates of the two years.

Mr. LENNOX. It does not balance.

Mr. FIELDING. It is intended to permit of a comparison of the appropriation for the two years.

Mr. LENNOX. The column comes to $2,000,000 odd but the corresponding column for 1904-5 is $1,500,000.

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. FIELDING. In order to show the amount appropriated last year, they take the amount for similar services this year and then in the case of other services for which no vote is required, they fill in the difference as an explanation of how the total of last year was made up. This practice has been adopted in the preparation of the estimates for generations.

Mr. LENNOX. It means that items of a similar class last year are not required this year and the items are added together and inserted in this way ?

Mr. FIELDING. Quite correct.

Mr. HAGGART. Are the whole final estimates made up and paid on the Soulanges canal now ?

Mr. EMMERSON. These are the total estimates.

Mr. HAGGART. Are the final estimates made out and settled with the contractors ?

Mr. EMMERSON. In so far as they can be settled between the department and the contractors they have been, but the contractors have an idea that there are certain additional sums which are due to them.

Mr. HAGGART. What I want to know is this. Has the department made its final estimates on the Soulanges canal ?

Mr. EMMERSON. All except the workshops.

Mr. BLAIN. How many men are employed in the workshops ?

Mr. EMMERSON. We require two or three carpenters and a blacksmith and a machinist.

Mr. HAGGART. Have you workshops on the Beauharnois canal ? Where was the work for that canal done before ?

Mr. EMMERSON. A good deal was done at Lachine.

Mr. HAGGART. And the workshops on the Cornwall canal did the work for the upper canals ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, on the St. Lawrence canals.

St. Ours lock, constructing new gates, $6,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Where is the work done —at Lachine or on the canal itself ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This is below St. John's on the Richelieu river. New gates were provided for this lock last year and they were placed in position at the opening of navigation this spring. The old gates are in a dilapidated condition, not fit for service, and this amount is intended to provide spare gates. Usually on the canals we keep sets of spare gates in case of accidents. This is to provide the timber and $6,000 is the estimate. The timber is estimated to cost $2,410; the castings are estimated to cost $700, the steel $140, the paints and oils $250, and labour $2,500.

Mr. LENNOX. Let by contract?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, done by the men employed on the canal. We must have men there to make these constant repairs. A great deal of the material in the old gates is good, especially the timber, and we put in new timber just as you would put in new ribs in a wooden vessel. You could not have this work done by contract.

Mr. LENNOX. This is not a question of repairs, but of constructing new gates.

Mr. EMMERSON. These new gates are made by the men in the employ. It was necessary to keep them to make repairs to the old gates, and as they are there it is cheaper to utilize them in making the new gates than to give out the contract.

Mr. LENNOX. I venture to say that the hon. gentleman will find that it would be much less expensive to have this work done by contract. This is a most improvident way of doing the work.

Mr. BLAIN. How much money was expended there last year?

Mr. EMMERSON. There was nothing expended last year on that item, because there was no appropriation.

Mr. HAGGART. Are these new gates made at the shops in Lachine or on the St. Lawrence canal?

Mr. EMMERSON. In the workshops at Chambly. A good deal of the work is done in the winter, and these men employed in the summer are given employment in the winter in connection with this work.

Carillon and Grenville canal—rebuilding—Grenville wharf (revote), $23,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This wharf was built twenty-one years ago. The part above water is in urgent need of being renewed. It is proposed to replace the cribwork with concrete. The whole amount was voted last year, but became available too late to be used during the year.

Mr. HAGGART. Will this $23,000 finish the work?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is the estimate. It is intended to invite tenders.

Mr. HAGGART. What did the wharf cost before?

Mr. EMMERSON. It was built twenty-one years ago, and I have not the figures as to the cost.

Mr. HAGGART. The portion under water ought to be as good as ever, and all that would need repairing would be the upper part. This seems an enormous sum for such work.

Mr. EMMERSON. The cribwork is to be replaced with concrete, which makes it much more expensive.

Mr. HAGGART. But it is only the part above water that is to be replaced, not the whole cribwork.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is a good portion of it.

Mr. HAGGART. And this is a good price. It must be a large wharf when the part above water costs $23,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is the estimate of the engineer. But the work is to be put up for tender, and I suppose there will be competition. Of course, the lowest tender will be accepted.

Mr. BLAIN. I understood the hon. minister to say that no money was spent at St. Ours Locks last year. But I would draw his attention to the fact that $800 was voted last year. Was not that expended?

Mr. EMMERSON. Not in connection with the gates at St. Ours.

Mr. BLAIN. I did not say for the gates. I asked if there was any money expended.

Mr. EMMERSON. There were two wharfs repaired in that lock last year.

Mr. BLAIN. What was the total cost?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not that information.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the expenditure be at the same point?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, at the same point—the St. Ours canal.

Mr. LENNOX. I understood the minister to say there was expenditure for new gates last year. What was the necessity for that?

Mr. EMMERSON. That was in the appropriation of the year previous. There was no appropriation in 1903-4. Of course, I was reading the explanation given by the engineer, and this explanation, of course was prepared last fall.

Mr. BLAIN. Under what item can we find the explanation of the $800?

Mr. EMMERSON. I will bring a statement of the expenditure for my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) if he wishes it.

Mr. BLAIN. Oh, no.

Welland canal—stone protection to banks of new canal, $20,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is represented that the rip-rap protection of the banks of the new canal has not been renewed since it was first placed about twenty years ago? It is all worn away in many places and the banks have been cut by the action of the water. It is estimated that $20,000 will renew the rip-rap protection on ten miles of the bank.

Mr. CLARKE. Will this work be let by tender ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Welland canal—to change valves and hanging gear of new Welland canal lock gates, $30,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is to change the Townsend valve, which never worked satisfactorily, being complicated, easily put out of repair and slow. This valve is being replaced with what is known as the butterfly valve. The valves are placed at the bottom of the gates. There are twenty-seven locks, in over half of which the valves have been replaced. The amount expended up to last May, 1904, was $14,498.62. The work is being done by the canal staff. The full expenditure on the work does not appear in the amount I have named. The account was not kept separately, the expenditure charged up to the vote to execute heavy repairs.

Mr. CLARKE. How long has the Townsend valve been used ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It has been in use since the opening of the canal. I was there myself and was shown this apparatus by the workmen, and, I thought the new valve a very great improvement.

Welland canal—to build retaining wall rock cut, $70,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This work is at Ramey's Bend. The expenditure becomes necessary because the deepening along the side of the present wall which is now going on tends to bring the wall down. It is already falling in places. It is proposed to build a concrete wall founded on the new bottom of the canal at a cost of $70,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Has the contract been let ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Lachine canal—rebuilding old Locks 1 and 2, $45,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is to rebuild and lengthen or extend the walls of the old locks 1 and 2 at Montreal. The walls were falling into decay, and becoming unsafe. This is contract work, Quinlan & Robertson are the contractors. This amount will complete the work. It is expected the locks will be ready for navigation in the course of the present season. The total expenditure up to the 1st of May last was $143,014. The estimated cost is $213,000. The work is certainly very necessary. It is all let by contract. Both locks were old. There are many market boats that go down through them.

Mr. HAGGART. I thought there was a plan for utilizing the old locks of the canal, taking them down altogether and building virtually a docking place for ships.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is a basin formed there which is to be utilized for the purpose my hon. friend mentions.

Lachine canal—under-pinning wall, basin No. 2, $7,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This work can only be done during the period when the canal is unwatered in the spring, a short period of about a month. The foundation of the new wall will probably be completed in a couple of seasons, after which it is expected the balance of the work will occupy two summers.

Lachine canal—lock gates, $10,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is required for repairs and for spare gates for the new locks. It is usual to keep on hand spare gates in case of accident.

Soulanges canal—arms for gates and heaters, $1,350.

Mr. EMMERSON. We require five spare arms for operating the gates, costing $50 each. Then we want 12 electric heaters, costing $30 each, 13 transformers, costing $50 each ; and the wiring is estimated to cost $140.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like you to bring down the amount expended on the power-house and the amount expended for electrical purposes, both for power and for lighting that canal. I want these amounts for the purpose of comparison with the expenditure on the Cornwall canal.

Soulanges canal — water-wheel governors and heaters, $1,500.

Mr. EMMERSON. We want to put in two new culverts at $400 each ; remove the old culverts and settle the new ones, $100 ; 6 electric heaters, at $40 each ; 6 transformers, at $50 each ; wiring, $60.

Soulanges canal—widening and deepening St. Amour's gully, $4,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This gully is about two miles above the lower entrance to the canal. The soil is very soft. There is a ditch which was not made deep and wide enough at first, and is now choked ; and in order to avoid damages to the adjoining farms by back water, this work is necessary. It is to be done. During the present season we expect to do the excavation, stone-lining, sodding and alterations to culverts.

Mr. HAGGART. Are they under the canal ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The culverts are under the canal. It is to prevent water doing damage to the farms.

Mr. HAGGART. We have had an enormous expenditure on the Soulanges for the purpose of taking that river under the canal.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is not the place.

Mr. HAGGART. But I do not know of any other place in which drains passed along the canal.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is on section 3 of O'Leary's contract.

Mr. HAGGART. Was there a drain before the canal was constructed ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, there was a natural water-course, but they carried more water into it by reason of the ditches on the side of the canal.

Mr. CLARKE. This work is all done by tender ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Wherever you construct a canal you have to drain the whole neighbourhood ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, and then you have claims for damages for injuring property.

Chambly canal—to extend and repair wall at head of Ste. Therèse island, $2,200.

Mr. EMMERSON. This work is necessary and the money is required to provide a boulder line on the slope above the piece of wall built in the last three years to protect the head of the island against the action of the Richelieu river. The water in the river, a year ago last spring, rose to an unprecedented height and the necessity of protecting the slope above the wall became apparent. There was $900 provided last year. Up to May 1st, it is estimated there has been $748.29 expended. We will require $2,200 more this year.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. minister seems to have branched out a good deal since last year. Last year $900 was all that was required.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, but that was for a separate wall. That wall was completed but this is for an additional wall to line the slope above the wall already built with small boulders extending about 1,400 feet, the total estimated cost of which is $2,200.

Mr. LENNOX. This is something that has developed since last year ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. And this $2,200 will complete the work ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is the estimated cost.

Mr. LENNOX. It will be let by contract ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It will be let by tender.

Chambly canal—to rebuild culvert, Denault's farm, $8,000.

Mr. HAGGART. That is a large sum for a farm. You had better buy the farm and make a present of it to some one.

Mr. EMMERSON. The culvert has been giving a good deal of trouble owing to leaks. It was examined during last winter and the timbers were found to be in a decayed and rotten condition, so much so that it is necessary to rebuild it. It is proposed to rebuild it of concrete as was done in the case of other culverts on this canal in the last few years. The excavation is estimated at $1,800. Other items are the removal of the old culvert, concrete and unwatering, the whole being estimated at $8,000. This is not for the protection of one farm.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the object of the culvert ? Does it drain more than one farm ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This culvert is under the canal and there is very much more than one farm drained but it is located on Denault's farm, it is given that name.

Mr. LENNOX. Will that work be let by tender ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. Has there been any money spent on that work in the last three or four years ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Chambly canal—to macadamize road west side of canal, $4,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. There was an appropriation last year. It is estimated that the materials and labour for the one and a quarter miles necessary to be done will cost $4,000.

Mr. HAGGART. What are you macadamizing it for ?

Mr. EMMERSON. They say the road is almost impassable during wet weather. During the construction of the canal the earth was removed from the side and used in the building of that tow path. It has spoiled the road. At some seasons of the year the water in the canal comes up to within a foot or two of the road and makes the road soft and wet. The highway is on government property. About a mile of the road was macadamized in 1873. The macadamized tow path extends on the east side of the canal between St. John's, lock No. 1 and Chambly lock No. 2.

Mr. LENNOX. This is on the west side?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. Is this a tow-path simply?

Mr. HAGGART. Oh, no. This is a road built for the benefit of the people of the country.

Mr. LENNOX. This runs parallel to the canal ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. Is the government expected to build these roads alongside of the canal for the accommodation of the public ?

Mr. EMMERSON. In building the canal they injured the road.

Mr. CLARKE. And this is making good the injury ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This makes good the injury. The road is impassable practically by reason of the act of the government in building the canal. Now it is necessary to macadamize the road in order that the public may get the benefit of it.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the government have to maintain this road for all time ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Part of this was done as far back as 1873.

Mr. CLARKE. I say will the government have to maintain this road for all time ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. If you encroach upon the road in building the canal you should restore it to its original condition, but I think the maintenance of the road should fall upon the municipality. What appears to be done in this case is that the government is keeping up at the expense of the country this highway which I think should be maintained at the expense of the municipality.

Mr. EMMERSON. The water in the canal has been raised since the canal was built. The lock-gates were raised and the height of the water was raised with the result that the soakage into the bank does great injury to the road.

Mr. CLARKE. The country seems to be getting soaked in this case.

Mr. EMMERSON. They think that the government rather than the road should be soaked. Perhaps there is some equity in it.

Mr. CLARKE. I dare say.

Mr. LENNOX. If it is by reason of the water rising it is quite proper to restore the road to a proper condition, but I do not think the government ought to keep it in repair unless some new condition arises. The ordinary repair of the road should fall upon the municipality.

Mr. HAGGART. If I remember rightly when I was minister there was a petition to have this road repaired. I think I got a report from the officer down there as to the liability of the government and I found that they had none. In fact I went over part of it myself when I was down there and I did not see any liability on the part of the government. The damages were paid for and the repairs made after the canal was built. It is alleged now, as the hon. minister says and it was alleged in my time, that the height of the water some how or other had increased in the canal. I do not think that is so. The man in charge of the waste weir has reported that there has been no increased water in it since the canal was built.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am informed by the deputy minister that there is no doubt the water was raised by the raising of the lock. The damage done to the individuals was paid for, but there is constant soakage from the canal to the road, and it is necessary to macadamize it.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the work been done ?

Mr. EMMERSON. About a mile was done last year, and there is about a mile and a quarter to do.

Mr. FOWLER. It costs $3,000 a mile ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. The people of the country will be amazed when they find it takes $3,000 a mile to macadamize a road.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is done by contract and tender.

Mr. CLARKE. Perhaps you are asphalting it.

Mr. CLARKE. No ; macadamizing.

Mr. LENNOX. It is time to give the government warning that the people will not be satisfied to pay $3,000 a mile for macadamizing a road.

Mr. TAYLOR. Vote the money ; it is the last chance the government will have.

Mr. LENNOX. There is something in that, but if the minister does get a chance I hope he will not do it again.

Mr. FOWLER. The cost of the macadam would depend upon how the work was done. If it is an ordinary country road $3,000 a mile would be an outrageous amount, but if it is made with broken rock it would be different. What is the character of the work ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is macadamized with broken stone.

Mr. TAYLOR. What depth of broken stone ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not the specifications here.

Chambly canal—renewing landing wharf, $6,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. The old wharf is beyond repair. The action of the ice each spring is very damaging, but with concrete walls and steel girders the work will be of a permanent character, except the timber flooring.

Mr. HAGGART. Will this complete ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. We appear to have voted $6,000 for this last year.

Mr. EMMERSON. No ; there are two wharfs, one above and one below the locks, and this is for the one above the locks.

Mr. HAGGART. Is it time we were adjourning ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I thought, if these items were not controversial, we would probably get through with them.

Mr. HAGGART. We cannot. Have you brought down the information we asked for the other day in reference to the Galops canal ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, I think so. Here is the Gilbert contract ?

Mr. HAGGART. Of what year ?

Mr. EMMERSON. 1897. This is the only contract. I asked the deputy for all the contracts with regard to these matters and he gave me these papers as copies of all there were.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. HAGGART. What do you intend doing on Monday ?

Mr. FIELDING. We propose going into supply and taking up the estimates of the Interior Department.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, July 18, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PAYMENT OF RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 157) respecting the payment of certain railway subsidies. He said : This is a Bill to make it possible to fix the amount of a subsidy before the work is completed. Under the present law a subsidy of $3,200 per mile is contracted for, and under the terms of the Subsidy Act, if the cost of the railway exceeds $15,000, an additional subsidy can be paid not exceeding $6,400 per mile. This Bill seeks to make it possible, at the request of the railway company, to have a contract entered into, upon the report of the chief engineer, for the payment of a fixed amount. The $3,200 would be paid on progress estimates, as at present, and 70 per cent of the cost above $3,200 would be payable, the remaining 30 per cent being held until the final completion of the work. The operation of the present Act causes very much difficulty to the department and also to the Auditor General. He favours fixing the amount beforehand, upon a survey and report of the chief engineer, by the Minister of Railways and Canals under the authority of the Governor in Council.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

LAND TITLES ACT—AMENDMENT.

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Minister of the Interior) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 158) to amend the Land Titles Act of 1894. He said : The purpose of the Act is to enable the owner of farm land to register a mortgage under the Torrens system before he has secured the deed from the company from which he buys, such as the Hudson Bay Company, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or any other land company. Under the Torrens system in the Northwest Territories, an agreement for sale, or anything except an absolute transfer, cannot be registered. There is provision for the filing of a mortgage before the patent issues in the case of land granted directly from the Crown ; but when a farmer buys land from a company, unless he has the deed as the owner, though he may have paid the full price, he cannot register a mortgage on the land. In practice this is found very inconvenient owing to delays on the part of the companies in issuing deeds, and it is proposed to allow the registration of a mortgage on the filing of a certificate from the selling company that the land has been paid for in full. While I am amending the Act in this way, I am taking advantage of the circumstance to remove a technical defect that exists in regard to the registration of maps and plans.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE CANADA ATLANTIC RAILWAY.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called. I wish to ask the following question of the right hon. gentleman who leads the government : Have there been any negotiations between the government and any other person or persons or corporations regarding the acquisition of the Canada Atlantic Railway ? Has any letter or assurance of any kind been given by the government or a member of the council that would encourage the proprietors of the Canada Atlantic Railway to believe that an arrangement would be carried out after the next election ? If so, what is the price that is agreed upon ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). There has been no negotiation of any kind. We have been approached on the subject, but we would not consider the question now.

THE MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE AND LT.-COL. WHITLEY.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Minister of Agriculture is not in his place. If he is in the building, I would like to have him sent for.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If my hon. friend wants to make a speech, we shall go into supply shortly, when he will have a better opportunity.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am not going to make a speech. I wish to draw attention to the fact that in the organ of the Minister of Agriculture of Saturday last——

Mr. FIELDING. What is that—the 'Gazette' ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I refer to the one that receives $80,000 a year from the treasury of the Dominion of Canada. I hold in my hand a copy of the Montreal 'Herald' of Saturday last, in which I find the following despatch marked 'special,' which is generally understood in the city of Montreal to be dictated by the minister himself :

Ottawa, July 16.—There is a feeling in military circles that Lt.-Col. Smart, commandant of the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons, should be heard from in reply to a slur cast upon his command. Col. Sam. Hughes on Tuesday evening made a rumour the excuse for the following statement concerning that corps.

Then follows the statement from 'Hansard' :

As the statement was made on the floor of parliament, and as there is no truth in it, the opinion here is that Lt.-Col. Smart should show his interest in the good name of his splendid corps by giving it a public denial. A number of the Conservative journals of the country are taking advantage of his silence to give a great deal of publicity to the matter.

Now, if the minister were here, I would ask him, what is current rumour in the city of Montreal. Is it true, or is it not true, that the Minister of Agriculture has once more turned down the Minister of Militia, and has arrogated to himself——

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Order.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has arrogated to himself——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has arrogated to himself the functions of the Militia Department ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Pardon me. I rise to a point of order. My hon. friend is entitled to ask a question or make an explanation; but if he wants to make a speech, he will have an opportunity in a few minutes to do so.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I will conclude with a motion now.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would suggest to my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) that it would be far more proper for him to take this matter up when the House is moved into committee. He could then make whatever statement he wished.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I shall, if necessary, conclude with a motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. I presmue the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) is going to move the adjournment.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes. Once more I say the Minister of Agriculture has overridden the Minister of Militia. It is rumoured in Montreal that the Minister of Agriculture has wired to Colonel Whitley, brigadier of this regiment, and demanded of him a statement of the facts in connection with this matter, and Colonel Whitley, the story goes——

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I judge from my hon. friend's remarks that he is about to make some statements about an alleged action of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am.

Sir WILLIAN MULOCK. I observe that the Minister of Agriculture is not at this moment in his seat.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am not responsible for that.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The hon. gentleman is not responsible, but as a military man would he not think it more fitting that his adversary should be present before he made an attack ? There will be an opportunity, as the premier has pointed out, of taking up this matter at a later period in the day, but if my hon. friend wants to go on——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes, I am making my statement, and the matter can be brought up again when the Minister of Agriculture is present, if we can get him here.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. He has been here before.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am giving what is current rumour in Montreal, and then when the Minister of Agriculture returns he can take any opportunity he chooses of contradicting this statement.

Mr. CLARKE. He will have the advantage of reading my hon. friend's statement.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. As my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) points out, he will have the advantage of seeing my remarks and having time to frame his answer. The Minister of Agriculture did wire to Colonel Whitley—I do not know the form of the telegram, but he demanded, I presume, the answer which is referred to here—he wanted a public denial. The story goes that Colonel Whitley was not in a position to give a public denial, but on the contrary sent a public message to the Minister of Agriculture, telling what the facts of the case were.

Mr. CLARKE. That correspondence should be brought down.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I think the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) is right. I wish to have that correspondence brought down, the communication addressed to Colonel Whitley and the answer that this officer sent to the Minister of Agriculture. I understand furthermore, from telephonic communication with Montreal, that it is rumoured that Colonel Smart is out of the city, but it is also rumoured that Colonel Smart was also wired to on Saturday or Sunday—certainly at some time—and a demand was made on him by the Minister of Agriculture for a denial of this statement. The story goes that Colonel Smart was not in a position to deny these statements, but his telegram to the minister was such as to show that the statements, while possibly not in their exact chronological order, were far within the truth. I would ask the First Minister to be good enough to see that these two telegrams or communications sent by the Minister of Agriculture to the commander of the regiment are brought down. I will also call attention to the fact that the Minister of Agriculture is still arrogating to himself the direct control of affairs in the eastern townships instead of having communications sent through the regular channel, through the Minister of Militia and the adjutant general to the district officer commanding and the officers in these various corps. I wish to put some facts on record. One officer did go into camp, a very good fellow, but an officer who was brought in at the last moment owing to the holding up of the organization by the Minister of Agriculture, and this gentleman, the story goes, rode into camp with his helmet reversed, with his gaitered shoes on instead of riding boots, with box spurs instead of jack spurs, with his spurs turned upside down and with two swords upon him——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He was a warrior.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES——one for peace, upon his left side, the other for war upon his right side. Another officer, one of the joint appointees of that Sunday meeting, when the Minister of Agriculture went down to the eastern townships and on the Sabbath day when the minister is so fond of upholding upon platforms in Ontario, held a meeting with the member for Shefford (Mr. Parmelee)—an officer who was a good fellow and against whom I am saying nothing personally, came into camp in a sort of mongrel uniform—in fact I understand there was very little uniform about him and that he was in such a state of intoxication that the brigadier saw fit to send him home.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Now we come to the two special appointments of the Minister of Agriculture. One of these a short time before coming to camp had been fined a large sum, $20 or some such amount, for assaulting an old man, and another had been concerned in improper framing of rifle returns, of cooking the rifle returns for his rifle association in the locality. That is one of the two officers whom the Minister of Agriculture forced on this squadron instead of Dr. Pickel and his cousin Tom Pickel. Another of these officers was proven guilty, as the documents read to the House by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) show, of having taken a false oath, and he came to camp with a black eye and was a rather discreditable and disreputable officer generally. These are the two officers appointed by the Minister of Agriculture. There are other stories connected with this camp to which I shall not refer at the present moment but which I shall take up later. There is another charge which I would ask the Minister of Militia to note. No one specially objects to the Minister of Militia receiving a salute on an occasion of this kind. He is the head of the department and a military officer, and as such no militiaman in Canada would object for a moment to the Minister of Militia sitting beside the officer in command of the camp and receiving the salute. I think that is quite proper. It is another matter however to have the Minister of Agriculture or any one else not connected with the militia going to the reviewing point and receiving a salute as the Minister of Agriculture did at Laprairie. It was scandalous and many officers when they saw this Minister of Agriculture receiving the salute hesitated as to whether they were doing their duty to their citizenship in not refusing to salute the officer in command when that salute would be received by the Minister of Agriculture. I wonder that the Minister of Militia allowed the Minister of Agriculture to arrogate to himself the salute. I wonder he did not send him back to his place in the rear. A staff officer of the brigadier dare not answer the salute. The staff officer sits perfectly rigid, while his superior receives the salute. I am surprised at the Minister of Militia allowing the Minister of Agriculture thus to bring the Militia Department into discredit.

I understand, too, that a militia order has recently been issued demanding an immediate return of the names and post office addresses of all the officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the militia of the Dominion of Canada. This is the first time I have ever heard of such an order ever being issued, and I would like the Minister of Militia at the proper occasion to give a full explanation of what this order means, and why it was necessary to issue it on the eve of an election. I would also like to know if these names, when procured, will be accessible to every one or whether they are for some special purpose. What is the object of having these names sent for at the present time ?

I see by the papers reference to some attempted interference with the right of free speech on the part of Colonel Ponton late in command of the Belleville regiment by the minister or some officer of the department, and I would like the minister, without formal notice, to bring down to the House the papers in connection with this matter, so that we can have full knowledge of the details of the case.

I move the adjournment of the Houes.

Motion to adjourn (Mr. Sam. Hughes) negatived.

THE AUDITOR GENERAL AND THE DAVIS CONTRACT.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE. Before you pass to the Orders of the Day, I wish to call the attention of the government to a letter of the Auditor General that appeared in the public press on Friday. It appeared in the 'Evening Journal' of this city. It deals with a debate that took place in this House last week. The final paragraph of the letter is as follows :

> Will Mr. Fitzpatrick bring the papers before the Public Accounts Committee immediately, where I can have an opportunity of being heard and where this difference can be disposed of, and other questions which may be involved in the Davis contract may be explained by me in the presence of Mr. Fitzpatrick and the members of the Committee ?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that the exceptional position of the Auditor General and his particular responsibility to this parliament, demand of us at all events that immediate compliance should be given with this request, and that he be given an opportunity of explaining all that he wishes to explain in connection with the Davis contract. It is very late in the session, and it would appear to me that there is no time now for a formal debate on the matter. I would like to ask the government whether it is their intention immediately to afford an opportunity to the Auditor General of explaining his position by remitting this matter at once, either to the Public Accounts Committee or to a special committee, to deal with.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). The matter presented in the communication to which the hon. gentleman has alluded is new, and it is perhaps rather surprising to see an official of the government and of parliament deal in this manner with public affairs. I am not prepared to say at this moment what action the government may take on the matter. I do not think there has been any lack of opportunity for the Auditor General to make known his views on all the questions that concern his department or on any others. I am not prepared to answer at the moment what action the government may take in view of his recent letter in the public press.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As the Finance Minister has said that the government is not prepared to deal with this matter, possibly he will be able, at a later date, and as early as convenient, to state what the government propose to do about it, more particularly with respect to calling—as I understood it—a meeting of the Public Accounts Committee, in order that the Auditor General may make any further communication or statement on the subject which he seems desirous of doing.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC—EMPLOYMENT OF ALIENS ON SURVEYS.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the Minister of Labour (Sir Wm. Mulock) if verbatim copies of the evidence which has been taken by His Honour Judge Winchester have been supplied from day to day to the Grand Trunk Pacific or to the Grand Trunk Railway authorities ? The matter was brought before the House some weeks ago, and a request was made to the minister for his views respecting the propriety of having the verbatim evidence printed and distributed among the members of the House. I would like to know in what position the matter stands now, whether the evidence is to be printed and laid on the table of the House before the estimates for the Grand Trunk Pacific surveys are discussed ?

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General). I am not aware that verbatim copies of the evidence taken before

His Honour Judge Winchester have or have not, from day to day, or at any other time, been furnished to the Grand Trunk or to any one. The inquiries are held publicly in open court, and the reporters or the public press are in attendance. There is also in attendance a stenographer on behalf of the commission, and it is his duty to take down in full all the testimony given, although I do not think, from the recent correspondence I have had with Judge Winchester, that we can hope to get the testimony in detail here before the House prorogues, if it prorogues at an early date, the inquiry not being closed. Yet I think that the substance of the evidence has really been given to the public by the means to which I have alluded.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the stenographer any permission or any instructions to supply copies of the evidence to the Grand Trunk?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I never heard of such a proposition. Upon what authority does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) make that statement ?

Mr. CLARKE. Upon a statement I have received from the secretary of the Society of Civil Engineers for Manitoba and the Territories. Does the hon. gentleman say that he has not given instructions or permission to the official stenographer to give reports of each day's proceedings to either the Grand Trunk or the Grand Trunk Pacific ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I do not understand the insinuations the hon. gentleman is making. Will he be kind enough to state specifically what he understands has been done.

Mr. CLARKE. I have already done so, and I will do so again. I asked the Minister of Labour if it was a fact that copies of the evidence taken before His Honour Judge Winchester had been supplied from day to day by the official stenographer to the Grand Trunk or to the Grand Trunk Pacific ? That is the information I want. I want further to ask if that information had been given with the knowledge and consent of the Minister of Labour ? I ask these questions because it seems to me that it is of the highest importance that this parliament should be placed in possession at the earliest possible moment of the official report of the evidence taken by the official investigator. It seems to me to be an extraordinary thing that the Grand Trunk or the Grand Trunk Pacific should be furnished with copies of the evidence taken before the parliament of Canada is supplied with it.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. If the hon. gentleman means to say or to insinuate——

Mr. CLARKE. There is no insinuation. I am asking a question that I have a right to ask.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I am quite prepared to disclose a full statement of the facts. But I want to say in the most emphatic way that I never heard, until this moment, of any such procedure being taken. I wish to state that no instruction, or permission, or authority was given to any person, to the stenographer of the department, or to any one else in the service of the government to deliver to anybody any evidence except in the regular way : that is, that as the inquiry was proceeding from day to day, and was completed by the judge, he should deliver to the Minister of Labour for the information of parliament the evidence that had been taken. I am perfectly satisfied that, notwithstanding the statement that has been communicated, the false information that has been communicated, to my hon. friend by the secretary, as he says, of the Society of Civil Engineers, there is not a scintilla of foundation for that statement. If I have not completely covered the hon. gentleman's question, I would ask him to consider as made whatever denial it is possible to express in words.

THE MILITIA BILL.

Hon. DAVID TISDALE. I would ask the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) if he is getting the Militia Bill reprinted, and if so, when may we expect it ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). The order for reprinting was given last week. I cannot say when it will be reprinted, but I will try and let the hon. gentleman know this afternoon.

COASTING LAWS FOR BRITISH PORTS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the government whether there has been any correspondence with the imperial government respecting the exclusion of foreign vessels from the coastwise trade. My reason for asking the question is that I have seen some remarks of Lord Lansdowne which I observe reported in the 'Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin' of June 25. The report of the remarks of Lord Lansdowne in that journal reads as follows :

> The noble Lord has called the attention of the House to a subject of the utmost importance, a subject which has attracted not his attention only, but that of many others besides. He is correct when he cites a resolution at the conference of colonial premiers in support of his views, and he is also correct in reference to the report of the Subsidies Committee. The resolution of the colonial premiers has been referred to the colonial governments for their opinions. We have received some but not all of their replies, and these vary in their nature. Some of the colonial governments are entirely opposed to the idea of excluding foreign vessels from their coastwise trade, and others, on the contrary, are desirous or intend to do so.

Then Lord Lansdowne proceeds to deal with that subject at considerable length, as reported in this journal, but it is not necessary for the purpose of my question to quote the remainder of his remarks. I wish to know whether any communications have taken place between this government and the government of the United Kingdom with respect to the matter referred to, and if so, whether there is any objection on the part of the government to bring down such communications and place them before parliament.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Speaking on the spur of the moment I think, though I am not quite sure, that we have had some correspondence on that subject lately—in fact I am pretty sure we have. But whether the correspondence is in condition to be brought before parliament I could not say to-day. Perhaps I could oblige my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) later on.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) would give us whatever information can properly be given to parliament on as early a day as possible.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will look at the correspondence, and see what there is, and then confer with His Excellency.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 155) for the relief of Annie Christman.—Mr. Calvert.

QUESTIONS.

FAIR WAGES RESOLUTION ON BONUSED RAILWAYS.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. For how many railways have schedules under the Fair-wage Resolution been prepared since the passage of the resolution ?
2. What are the railways ?
3. Have any of these railways been bonused by the government ?
4. Upon what principle has the resolution been made to apply to railways ?
5. Is it proposed by the government to continue to apply the resolution to bonus railways ?
6. Has the resolution been applied to any industry or railway simply because of the industry or railway receiving a bonus from the govment ?

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General) :

1. Fourteen.
2. Bay of Quinté Railway ; Halifax and Yarmouth Railway ; Ottawa, Northern and Western Railway ; Inverness Railway and Coal Company ; Canadian Bridge Company for bridge built for South Shore Railway ; Central Counties Railway ; Middleton and Victoria Beach Railway ; Beersville Coal and Railway Company ; Intercolonial Railway for a branch and double tracking ; Nova Scotia Eastern Railway ; Magnetawan River Railway ; Halifax and Southwestern Railway ; Chateauguay and Northern Railway ; Lindsay, Bobcaygeon and Pontypool Railway.
3. Yes ; thirteen railways received a subsidy.
4, 5 and 6. These questions have reference to matters of policy, and are answered by the record of the government.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY—ALIENS ON SURVEYS—WARRANTS FOR DEPORTATION.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. How many warrants have been issued by the Department of Justice, authorizing the deportation of persons reported by Judge Winchester as having violated the provisions of the Alien Labour law ?
2. Against whom and on what dates were such warrants issued ?
3. Have any of the offenders been deported ? If so, whom, on what date, and by what officers?
4. Has any report been received by the government from any person or officer to whom the warrants of deportation were issued, as to the execution or non-execution of the warrants ; and the reason, if any, given for the non-execution of the warrants ?
5. Have warrants been issued against all persons so reported by Judge Winchester ? If not, what exceptions were made, and for what reasons ?

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). One warrant has been issued, and twelve have been prepared, and five have been signed and handed over to the Commissioner of police. The first warrant was issued on 14th June last. None of the offenders have been deported by the police, as my information is that they have left the country. At the request of the Department of Labour, warrants have been issued, or are being issued against all persons reported by Judge Winchester as having violated the provisions of the Alien Labour law with instructions to report as to the manner in which each particular case has been disposed of.

ALIEN LABOUR LAW—ILLEGAL INTERPRETATION.

Mr. RALPH SMITH asked :

1. What are the names of the persons reported by Judge Winchester as imported, contrary to the Alien Labour Act, in connection with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway ?
2. What positions were given to them on the work ?
3. Have they all been deported ; or are any of them yet engaged on the work ? If so, who ?

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). The following are the names :

Cassius C. Van Arsdol, division engineer.
Edward R. McNeill, district engineer.

Walter Earl Colladay, assistant engineer.

MR. GEORGE DIXON'S HOMESTEAD ENTRY.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE asked :

1. Did Mr. George Dixon, Regina, enter for a homestead for a quarter section adjoining the town site of Craik, N.W.T., three years ago or thereabouts ?

2. Did he perform his homestead duties within the time specified by law ?

3. Has an extension of time been granted to him for the performance of those duties ? If so, on how many occasions ?

4. Is the government aware that Mr. Dixon has let some of this land to different people in small allotments, and that he has not broken any of the land, nor built any house on the same ?

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Minister of the Interior) :

1. Mr. George Dixon entered for the south-west quarter of section 14, township 24, range 28, west of the 2nd meridian, on the 7th of October, 1901.

2. Mr. Dixon has not performed his homestead duties, but his entry has been protected by the department for the reason that he is a poor man who made his entry in good faith and intends to go upon the land, which he has been prevented from doing through the disabling of one of his horses and, later on, through diphtheria and other sickness breaking out in his family. He has also met with other reverses which have compelled him to dispose of some of his stock, and it was therefore felt that under the circumstances it would have been a great injustice to have refused his applications for leave of absence.

3. Yes ; three times.

4. No ; but a few days ago a letter was received, in which it was stated that Mr. Dixon had let some five acres in allotments to residents of Craik. The charge will be inquired into.

THE ROSS RIFLE.

Mr. NORTHRUP—by Mr. Clarke—asked :

1. How many rifles, known as the Ross rifle, were contracted for by the government ?

2. What were the terms of the contract as to times of delivery and price ?

3. How many have been delivered, how many accepted, at what dates, and what is the cause of the delay, if any, in delivering ?

4. What tests as to efficiency and otherwise were stipulated for ; and have the rifles undergone the tests as prescribed ?

5. When and by whom were such tests made, and what reports or opinions were made or expressed by the inspectors ?

6. Have any reports been so made or opinions expressed unfavourable to the Ross rifle ; and have any rifles been since accepted ?

7. Were any commissions or committees appointed with regard to the Ross rifle ; if so, of whom do they consist ; and for what specific purpose were they appointed ?

8. Have any reports or opinions been made or expressed by such committees or by members thereof ? If so, what was the nature of the several reports or opinions ?

9. Were any and what members of such committees present at the tests of the rifle ?

10. Is the government aware whether the Ross rifle was at any time submitted for the approval of the imperial authorities, and with what result ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) :

1. The contract for the Ross rifle was laid on the table of the House shortly after the contract was made. The number of rifles contracted for was 12,000, but under the terms of the contract the government is under obligation to purchase all the additional rifles which it may require from the Ross Rifle Company.

2. The terms of the contract were that the rifle should be delivered within the past fiscal year at the rate, I think, of 1,000 rifles per month at the price named in the contract, $25 per rifle.

3. None have been delivered. The cause of the delay is that they are not finished.

4. I am not sure, as I have not the contract before me, but speaking from memory I think that no test is stipulated for, but that the rifles were to be subject to the satisfaction of the government inspector.

5. Answered by No. 4.

6. No reports unfavourable to the Ross rifle have been made as far as I know.

7. A committee composed of the Hon. J. M. Gibson, Col. Hughes, Lt.-Col. Anderson, chief engineer of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, Col. Otter, district officer commanding No. 2 district, and Major Gaudet, the head of the Dominion rifle cartridge factory, were appointed a committee to examine the Ross rifle, and as far as I know, all of these gentlemen, or nearly all of them were present at the test which was made. A comparative examination of the two rifles, the present service rifle, the Lee-Enfield, and the Ross rifle was made and the report, I think, was brought down and laid on the table of the House some time ago and was to the effect that all things considered the Ross rifle was superior to the Lee-Enfield rifle.

8. and 9. Answered by No. 7.

10. I am not sure whether the Ross rifle has been submitted for the approval of the imperial authorities, but I am inclined to think that it was at one time submitted to a subcommittee appointed by the war office to examine it and report upon it. I do not know the nature of the report.

RESIGNATION OF AUDITOR GENERAL.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. Has the government replied to the communication of the Auditor General, dated June 21st, tendering his resignation ? If so, what is the purport of the reply ?

2. Does the government propose to submit the question of the resignation and superannuation of the Auditor General to parliament for consideration and advice ; or does the government propose to deal with the matter without submitting it to parliament ?

3. Does the government propose to accept the resignation of the Auditor General and to grant the superannuation asked for ; or will the government endeavour to retain his services ; and if successful, recommend to the House that an increase be made to his salary ?

4. What action generally does the government intend to take in the premises ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance.) The Minister of Finance has acknowledged the receipt of the Auditor General's communication. No other correspondence has taken place. The matter is under consideration.

SPEED OF MAIL STEAMERS.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

What was the average speed per hour made during the year 1896 by steamships carrying British and Canadian mails from ports in the United Kingdom to Canadian ports ; and from Canadian ports to ports in the United Kingdom, respectively ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The average speed per hour made by the Allan Line and Dominion Line during the year 1895-6 from ports in the United Kingdom to Canadian ports and from Canadian ports to ports in the United Kingdom, was as follows :

ALLAN LINE.

West bound—Liverpool to Halifax (summer) average 8·9 knots per hour. Liverpool to Halifax (winter), average 9·0 knots per hour.

East bound—Montreal to Liverpool (summer), average 9·4 knots per hour. Halifax to Liverpool (winter), average 10·1 knots per hour.

DOMINION LINE.

West bound—Liverpool to Halifax (summer), average 9·9 knots per hour. Liverpool to Halifax (winter), average 9·4 knots per hour.

East bound—Montreal to Liverpool (summer), average 9·9 knots per hour. Halifax to Liverpool (winter), average 10·5 knots per hour.

PAY OF LETTER CARRIERS.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. Has any order been issued by the government, or by any of the departments, or any officer of the government, discontinuing the pay of letter carriers while sick ?

2. Is it the intention of the government to stop the pay of all letter carriers while they are off duty on account of sickness ?

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General) :

1. No.

2. The government has never so decided, each case as it arises is dealt with on its merits.

PILOTAGE ACT—AMENDMENT.

Hon. CHAS. FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice) moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 100) to amend the Pilotage Act—Mr. Préfontaine—be concurred in.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What are the amendments?

Mr. FIZPATRICK. The amendments are not of very great importance. The Bill originally provided that the Governor in Council might at any time in the interest of navigation appoint the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to be the pilotage authority for any pilotage district, that by Order in Council the pilotage authority might be changed to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The amendment made by the Senate is that the change can only be made :

Upon the recommendation of the shipping interests of the port or of the council of the board of trade.

I think this change is a very proper one.

Motion agreed to, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

SHIPPING CASUALTIES ACT—AMENDMENT.

Hon. CHAS. FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice) moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 102) to amend the Shipping Casualties Act, 1901—Mr. Préfontaine—be concurred in.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the Minister of Justice be good enough to state what these amendments are?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There are four amendments which are not of very much importance. The first amendment is to section 1 of the Bill. Under the Bill as we have it now the expression 'pilot' is defined in the following words :

The expression 'pilot' means any person not belonging to a ship who has the conduct thereof.

To which definition the following words are to be added :

After 'thereof' insert the following as subsection 2 :

2. The word 'pilot' is inserted after the word 'mate' wherever the expression 'master, mate or engineer,' occurs in the said Act.

The next amendment is in respect to the officers which the government may appoint to make preliminary inquiries respecting shipping casualties. That section is amended so as to provide that the territorial jurisdiction of any such officer or person shall be defined in the appointment. Subsection 2 of paragraph 4 is amended by adding the words after the word 'default' 'or by the incapacity,' so that the section will now read :

If, upon a preliminary inquiry, the officer holding it is of opinion that any loss, or damage, or the stranding of any ship, or any loss of life, has been caused by the wrongful act or default or by the incapacity of the pilot in charge. &c.

The next amendment is to section 27 of the Act of 1901 which is section 3 of the Bill we are now considering. By the Bill as it passed this House it was provided that the court could fine

Any licensed pilot in any sum not exceeding one half of the net income he derives from his service as a pilot, based upon his earnings for the previous year.

The change is that of the words

One-half of the net income he derives from his service as a pilot, based upon his earnings for the previous year.

There are substituted the words :

Four hundred dollars and not less than fifty dollars.

Motion agreed to, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY—MODE OF ANSWERING QUESTIONS.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ascertain just what rights members have in this House when they ask for information which they deem to be of importance, and which they have a right to receive from the government. A few minutes ago I rose in my place to ask the Minister of Labour whether it was a fact that the Grand Trunk officials had been supplied from day to day with the official report of the evidence taken before Judge Winchester ; and I am in the judgment of the House when I say that having asked in the most respectful manner for that information, I was treated in the most boorish manner by the Minister of Labour. It was suggested that in asking for this information I was making a statement that I had no foundation for making, and that charge I resent. The Minister of Labour has been long enough in this House to know how to conduct himself as a gentleman, and to respect the rights of others. I wish now to ascertain from the Prime Minister if I was not within my rights in what I did ? On the basis of a statement from Mr. Geo. L. Griffith, provincial secretary of the Dominion Institute of Amalgamated Engineers, I asked the question. That statement, dated Winnipeg, 14th of July, is as follows :—

The Grand Trunk Pacific officials have been supplied daily with a copy of the evidence by Judge Winchester's stenographer on instructions from the Minister of Labour.

That statement was mailed to me by the gentleman who has supplied not only the Minister of Railways, but the Minister of Labour and many hon. members on both sides of the House, with information respecting the allegation made in the first place, as to the employment of alien engineers, and respecting the conduct of the inquiry. Upon the strength of that statement I was quite within my rights in asking for information. I protest that my courteous questions were not treated in a way that I had the right to expect they would be treated. I do not desire to occupy the time of the House, except to say that so long as I have the honour of a seat here I shall strive to conduct myself in as courteous and gentlemanly a manner as possible ; but neither the position which the Minister of Labour occupies nor the length of time he has been in this House will save him from castigation if he does not treat hon. gentlemen as they have the right to be treated by him.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry that my hon. friend the Minister of Labour is not in the House at the present moment to answer the charge that has been brought against him by my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke). I do not think that my colleague is liable to any censure in this respect. As I remember the incident, my hon. friend from Toronto asked whether or not the Grand Trunk officials had been supplied from day to day with a copy of the evidence, and the Minister of Labour answered that he was not aware that anything of the kind had taken place——

Mr. CLARKE. Might I remind the Prime Minister that the Minister of Labour asked once or twice what I was insinuating.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Minister of Labour stated that he was not aware that any such information had been given to the Grand Trunk Company, and my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) was surprised, because he evidently anticipated an answer to the contrary. The hon. gentleman pressed the point and thereupon my colleague stated that the hon. gentleman was misinformed, that Judge Winchester had no such instructions, and that he was not aware that such a thing had taken place. I may further say that in the relations between gentlemen on both sides of the House, there is I believe an effort to carry on these relations in a gentlemanly manner, and I am quite sure that the Minister of Labour would be the last to be guilty of any boorishness—I do not think that was the proper word for my hon. friend to use. We are all human and liable to get hot, and probably in this very hot weather it is hard to keep cool.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Statements have been made to me to the contrary, of what the Minister of Labour would lead the House to believe. I am not presuming to pronounce judgment upon what the true facts may be, but I will read the statements that have been made to me from the same source which has been mentioned. This letter is from the Secretary of the Society of the Amalgamated Engineers, and it says :

Although copies of our letters to the government department were immediately forwarded to Mr. C. M. Hays, a similar courtesy was not afforded to us. The various communications of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway did not reach us until the second return sessional papers No. 124 ordered by parliament was brought down and a typewritten copy sent to us.

Further :

We respectfully asked the Minister of Labour to allow His Honour, Judge Winchester, to supply us with a typewritten copy of the evidence taken before the commission so that we could intelligently follow the investigation and render assistance, but our request was refused, although Mr. C. M. Hays and the Grand Trunk Pacific officials were supplied with typewritten copies of the evidence daily.

I do not know whether that is correct or not, but that is the statement made to me and I am informed that a similar statement has been made under date, July 14th, to the Minister of Railways.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Is that the same question that was up before this morning ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will repeat the extracts I have read for the Postmaster General who was not present. I have stated that I do not know whether the statements are correct or not, but they do not appear to be in harmony with the views of the Postmaster General.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I recognize the writer of that letter as Mr. Griffith.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I so stated.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. As to the statement that his letters to me were furnished to Mr. Hays whilst a similar courtesy was not extended to him ; that is incorrect. In any case where I transmitted a copy of Mr. Griffiths' letter to Mr. Hays I did the same to Mr. Griffith. I made no distinction between either of the parties to the case ; I was desirous of getting at the facts ; I wanted to see where the truth was. Mr. Griffith was charging--and as the facts have disclosed very correctly charging—that United States engineers and others had been employed, and Mr. Hays was not giving us that information that I thought the circumstances entitled us to. There was a withholding of testimony so that it was impossible to determine what the facts were. During the whole of that correspondence which I was conducting with Mr. Griffith and Mr. Hays, in order that each one should know what the other was saying to me, I deemed it my duty to transmit to the one the copies of the other's letters so that they would know what case was to be answered. Mr. Griffith was treated with every courtesy; just as much as Mr. Hays was. With reference to the statement that he applied to the department to furnish him from day to day with a verbatim copy of the evidence; this was after the inquiry had begun and when it was proceeding at Winnipeg. The department had no machinery for furnishing the public with verbatim copies of the evidence. The meetings were public, the press was represented. We had one stenographer to take down in shorthand the evidence. I should be amazed to learn; I am as satisfied as I am of my existence that there is not a scintilla of truth in the statement, that any officer of the department furnished verbatim or other copies to the Grand Trunk Company or to any other body. I am perfectly satisfied that it never occurred, but the stenographer is here and I will make inquiry at the department, and I will answer the hon. gentleman later on that point.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is perfectly satisfactory. I have no knowledge of the truth of the statement, but I thought it advisable to bring it to the attention of the hon. gentleman.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I am satisfied that it is an unqualified mistake.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But I would hardly regard this society as in the position of the general public, so far as its right to receive the evidence is concerned, because it is the body which brought the matter to the attention of the government. Therefore I would suppose that any facility of that kind might very properly be furnished to it.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. They were in attendance, and any one who read the Winnipeg papers would see that the evidence was taken down and published very fully by them—in some instances as fully as it was taken down by the stenographer—and every facility was afforded to them to know everything that was going on. Mr. Winchester invited co-operation, and no step could be taken by him that would in my judgment in the slightest degree promote a more efficient inquiry than has been held.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend has stated that there was a communication sent to the Minister of Railways similar to the one which he has received from Mr. Griffiths.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I said I am so informed. I have no knowledge of it myself.

Mr. EMMERSON. I may say that up to Saturday night I had not received any such communication, and so far as I have been able to go through my letters this morning, I found none. My correspondence was very voluminous, and I have not been able to open all my letters which have come in the mails since Saturday night; but if there is any such communication, I will bring it to the notice of my hon. colleague, the Minister of Labour.

THE TOBACCO INDUSTRY.

Mr. F. D. MONK. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I desire to place before the House a grievance in connection with the tobacco industry of Canada. I mentioned a few days ago to my right hon. friend the leader of the government that I would avail myself of this opportunity to place before the House certain facts connected with that industry, and I will proceed to do so as briefly as possible, concluding by moving an amendment to this effect:

That the government has not given the tobacco industry of Canada the protection and encouragement it is entitled to.

I think I shall be able to demonstrate that that industry has been neglected in a culpable degree by the government, in spite of the repeated representations made to the government in various forms, by deputations, by memoranda, and by correspondence. In fact, the day after I had given notice of this motion to my right hon. friend, my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue (Hon. L. P. Brodeur), gave notice of a resolution, the object of which is to remedy, at any rate in part, the grievance complained of, which is proof, I think, that the government has been remiss in its duty to this industry. I will refer to that resolution briefly as I proceed with the examination of this question. I will content myself with giving summarily to the House the information which I deem absolutely necessary to a proper understanding of this question, without which the House could not really appreciate the motion which I propose to move.

It may not be known to all the members of this House, though it is known to many, that the tobacco industry is one of great interest to a large number of people in Canada, and that the culture of tobacco, which has received an increased amount of attention in the last few years, is extremely remunerative. Therefore, anything connected with that branch of agriculture ought to interest us to a very large degree. The culture of tobacco, as it has been carried on by many of our people in different parts of Canada, is susceptible of yielding from $120 to $150 an acre, and even more. If you get from an acre, properly cultivated, 1,200 or 1,500 pounds of tobacco, which is sometimes obtained, you will receive for it at a moderate estimate 10 cents per pound. Consequently tobacco culture is one of the most remunerative kind; and if proper means had been taken to encourage that culture and the domestic trade in our own homegrown tobacco, as well as the foreign trade which that article is susceptible of obtaining, we would have done a great deal to enrich the farmers who give themselves up to this culture in different parts of the country. In the province of Ontario, tobacco is principally cultivated, I believe, in the county of Essex; but in my own province it is cultivated pretty extensively everywhere. In the counties of Montcalm, L'Assomption, and one or two others in their vicinity, the culture of tobacco is very extensive. It has been remunerative, and it is susceptible of being made still more so if the means suggested to encourage its cultivation and trade are adopted. It is cultivated to a considerable extent in my own county, and in other counties around the city of Montreal. In some instances where the culture has been carefully attended to, the results have been really phenomenal. So that the matter deserves the attention of the House as regards both the manufacture and the cultivation. Perhaps I had better proceed to mention at once what are the present duties upon tobacco. The customs duties on tobacco, cigars and cigarettes are $3 per pound, and 25 per cent ad valorem; on manufactured tobacco and snuff, 50 cents per pound; on cut tobacco, 55 cents per pound. The article is also susceptible to a very considerable rate of excise duties, which I will briefly give to the House. The excise duties are as follows: On foreign manufactured tobacco, 25 cents per pound; on Canadian home-grown tobacco, 5 cents per pound; on combination tobacco, that is, tobacco proper, partly of Canadian leaf and partly of foreign leaf, 5 cents per pound. Then, there is an excise duty which is in reality a customs duty, but which for purposes of convenience has been made collectable by the Department of Inland Revenue because that department has greater facilities for apportioning this particular duty properly, calculating the moisture of the tobacco and its proper weight. On raw leaf, foreign tobacco, there is an excise duty of 10 cents per pound; on stemmed raw leaf, scraps and cuttings, foreign tobacco, 14 cents per pound. I think that is the only original duty which has been imposed by the present government upon tobacco. The other duties to which I have referred existed previous to the present government coming into power. On cigarettes made from foreign leaf there is an excise duty of $6 a thousand; on cigars made from domestic leaf, $3 a thousand; on combination cigars, that is, cigars made partly from foreign and partly from home-grown tobacco, an additional excise duty of 16 cents per pound; and on combination cigarettes, an additional excise duty of 37½ cents per pound.

On combination cigars made from stemmed tobacco and scraps and cuttings of tobacco, a still further duty of 23 cents per pound, and combination cigarettes made partly from stemmed tobacco, imported into the country, and partly with homegrown tobacco, an additional duty of 53 cents per pound.

In connection with combination tobacco, the nature of which I have already explained, there are still further duties. Combination tobacco from foreign leaf is subjected to a duty of 20 cents per pound additional and combination tobacco made from stemmed foreign leaf, 23 cents additional. These special duties imposed upon combination tobacco have been so calculated as to impose upon tobacco made partly of foreign leaf and partly of native leaf, a measure of duty based upon the duty imposed on pure native tobacco and the duty imposed on foreign tobacco separately.

There is a duty on snuff tobacco, moist, of 18 cents and dry, of 25 cents.

There are still further duties which I feel I should mention so as to put the House in full possession of the state of our tariff as regards the article in question. There are still further duties on cigarettes as follows:—Foreign cigarettes not more than 3 pounds per thousand, a duty of $3 per thousand; foreign cigarettes, weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand, $8 per thousand; Canadian cigarettes, that is cigarettes made purely of Canadian tobacco, $1.50 per thousand; combination cigarettes, made partly with foreign leaf and partly with native leaf, $1.50 per thousand.

These duties which I have just explained in detail to the House result from the legislation passed in chapter 19 of 60 and 61 Vic., being legislation to amend the Inland Revenue Act and moreover in virtue of Orders in Council dated 1st July, 1897 and 19th of June, 1903. The object of these Orders in Council was to apportion in an equitable way the duties to be imposed and collected upon combination tobacco. Therefore I understand that what the present government has done, that is what constitutes its own legislation so to speak, is the imposition of a duty on the foreign leaf of 10 cents and a duty of 14 cents imposed on the stemmed leaf. There is also to be credited to this government the apportionment of the duties under the Orders in Council which I have just cited, and the excise duty upon combination tobacco in such a way as to collect the duty in a reasonable way upon the foreign ingredients in the combination tobacco and also upon the home grown leaf entering into its manufacture. Having stated the legislation that has been passed upon this subject, I deem it necessary to lay before the House the result of this legislation since the past few years. I shall begin with a statement of the quantity of tobacco manufactured in this country in the three classes of imported, Canadian and combination tobacco.

Mr. BRODEUR. Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to state how much protection the tobacco manufacturers are receiving to-day ?

Mr. MONK. I have, I think stated, that in giving the duties in detail. If my hon. friend wants to know what further protection they require, I will come to that in a moment.

The following table shows the quantity of tobacco of each kind manufactured in Canada from year to year :—

Year.	Imported. Lbs.	Canadian. Lbs.	Combination. Lbs.
1896..	9,169,299	4,447,978
1897..	7,980,884	668,627
1898..	8,408,129	1,901,224
1899..	7,349,270	2,093,883	368,019
1900..	6,931,132	2,368,935	1,173,839
1901..	6,761,532	3,106,662	1,201,759
1902..	7,109,309	2,932,043	1,282,806
1903..	7,361,575	3,151,724	1,770,767

That is to say, that within the past few years there has been less imported tobacco manufactured in Canada and a great deal more Canadian tobacco and a steady increase of tobacco manufactured partly with foreign and partly with native leaf.

Now, let us see in a second table how the industry stands in regard to cigars and cigarettes, imported, Canadian, combination, the same order as in regard to the manufactured tobacco.

Year.	Imported. Lbs.	Canadian. Lbs.	Combination Lbs.
1896.. ..	85,994,400
1897.. ..	106,496,180
1898.. ..	86,656,567	1,289,000
1899.. ..	105,359,828
1900.. ..	133,608,417	1,561,040	4,222,770
1901.. ..	258,514,867	2,383,966	6,581,640
1902.. ..	274,363,205	4,687,150	6,966,195
1903.. ..	335,222,014	2,881,360	6,622,288

This shows a considerable increase in the use of native leaf in the manufacture of cigarettes. Now, let us take the total manufactured tobacco :

TOTAL MANUFACTURED TOBACCO.

	Lbs.
Total manufactured tobacco in 1903..	12,688,775½
Canadian tobacco.	3,165,207 lbs.
Combination...	1,772,974 lbs.
Cigarettes with combination No.....	158,694
	5,596,875
	7,091,900½

In other words, if you substract from the total quantity manufactured the quantity of Canadian tobacco manufactured, you have a remainder of 7,091,900½ pounds, the exact amount of foreign tobacco employed :

There are some further figures which I desire to give in as brief a form as possible :

CIGARS MANUFACTURED IN CANADA, 1903.

Total of tobacco employed.. .. .. 3,131,377 bs.

Imported tobacco. No.	Canadian. No.	Combination. No.
162,397,342	2,935,560	6,663,330

TOTAL PRODUCTION OF TOBACCO BY MANUFACTURERS.

	Lbs.
Total of leaf tobacco produced in manufactures..	13,629,520
Leaf tobacco imported .. 8,341,685 lbs.
Canadian leaf tobacco .. 5,287,835 lbs

All the figures that I have given are from page 82 of the report of the Department of Inland Revenue for 1903. I gather from these figures that the quantity of imported tobacco has diminished in recent years, while the quantity of home-grown consumed is greater. The reports indicate that the quantity of home-grown has improved, and the country, although consuming a great deal more tobacco than formerly, has imported less of the foreign tobacco and has used a greater quantity of native growth. This is a fact that is not generally known, but which it is necessary to make known in order that we may appreciate the motion that is now before the chair. In view of these important facts, it is understood, those engaged in the culture and manufacture of tobacco have represented to the government on several occasions and in a variety of ways, as by petitions, deputations and so on, that it is now absolutely necessary to do something more than has been done hitherto to foster and protect that industry. It is necessary, in order to give that most remunerative culture and industry the encouragement that is deserved, to take additional means to ensure its still greater development. The principal points submitted to the government and upon which tobacco manufacturers and growers have made representation I may mention in their order, and briefly that I may not take up too much time.

In the first place, the industry has represented to the government most emphatically that it is necessary to adopt legislation in order to suppress the monopoly of the American trust, the American Tobacco Company. It is known that at present we are threatened throughout the country, and particularly throughout the province of Quebec and large centres like Montreal and Quebec with the absolute monopoly of the tobacco trade, a monopoly which, as I am informed, can be traced to the great American tobacco trust which is represented here by two Canadian associations incorporated under our own law, but which in fact, represent the American tobacco trusts ;—I refer to the American Tobacco Company and the more recently incorporated Imperial Tobacco Company. Conceiving that that monopoly is injurious to the trade and has a tendency to curtail the trade and to centre it all in the hands of this monopoly, the tobacco manufacturers have made representations to the government in order to have it abolished. Conceiving also that ultimately the monopoly will affect the tobacco growers of Canada as it will finally place in the hands of the monopoly control of the entire output of tobacco in Canada, the tobacco growers also have protested against this monopoly. The government, on several occasions have had deputations wait upon them, and, to some of these parties they have promised to put an end to the monopoly by legislation. In fact, last session, my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) in pursuance of this introduced an amendment to the criminal law having for its object the abolition of that monopoly. That amendment which was calculated to meet the existing difficulty, was abandoned. It is true that an amendment of an analogous nature has been introduced by my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue (Hon. Mr. Brodeur) since I gave notice that this subject would be brought up for discussion ; I will say a word about that amendment before I resume my seat. The tobacco industry has asked, further, as a means of encouraging this remunerative industry a moderate increase in the duty upon imported tobacco. I believe the deputation asked for an increase of ten cents per pound on foreign tobacco and fourteen cents per pound on the foreign manufactured article. This small increase is necessary under the British preference, for the great American tobacco trust has now more or less transferred the seat of its operations from the United States to England. We receive from England, particularly in recent years, very large consignments of tobacco, the property of this trust, which is sold here far more largely than before, under the rebate of the British preference, and at reduced cost of manufacture, I believe. In the third place the industry has asked for the use of a uniform stamp upon all tobaccos whether imported or not. The reason for that is that the green stamp used for Canadian tobacco solely, as experience shows, has the effect of rather impeding the sale of Canadian tobacco. As everybody knows there is, in some quarters a certain prejudice against the home-grown tobacco, and the colour of the stamp has the effect of preventing the sale of the home-grown tobacco.

I believe there are at the present time three stamps used by the Department of Inland Revenue, a black stamp, a red stamp and a green stamp, put upon the Canadian products. What they have asked is merely that stamps of a uniform colour may be used, and the testimony of all those versed on the subject is that it would be a great advantage in an indirect way to the cultivation of Canadian tobacco. They have asked in addition something which I think is of very great importance, and without which the industry to which I am referring cannot really prosper satisfactorily in this country. They have asked for the establishment—in connection with our experimental farms, I presume, would be the cheapest manner—of experimental stations where tobacco growers could obtain profitable information as regards the cultivation of tobacco, both for home and foreign market. Those acquainted with the subject know that our home market is insufficient, while there are large markets abroad for our tobacco which we can obtain with a little effort, there is no doubt whatever about that. They have therefore asked for these experimental stations conducted by the government itself, in order to encourage the cultivation of our own tobacco. Furthermore, they have asked for the establishment of a bureau of information in order to keep those engaged in the tobacco culture fully informed of the requirements of the home and foreign markets, exactly as is done at the present moment by the publication of bulletins by the experimental farm. The Central Experimental Farm gives the farmers information, both as regards the improvement of the growth of the products of their farms, and also in regard to the markets, domestic and foreign. There is no doubt that our tobacco growers, if information were carefully prepared by the government and given out to them in bulletins from time to time, could greatly improve and increase the output of tobacco.

Not long ago an important deputation came to Ottawa from my own province and laid all these matters very fully before the government. Without going fully into the details of their representations, I may say that the deputation was introduced to the right hon. the Prime Minister and to my hon. friends the Minister of Inland Revenue and the Minister of Finance. They asked for a small increase in the duty, they asked for a uniform stamp, for the reason I have stated, the establishment of experimental stations, the establishment of a bureau of information and for a law to put an end to the tobacco monopoly now in the hands of a trust. The deputation was introduced by my hon. friend from L'Assomption (Mr. R. C. Laurier). I find that the counties of Montcalm and L'Assomption were very well represented on that deputation by leading men, and among other delegates I may mention Mr. Wilfrid Legault and Mr. Claude, of the parish of St. Laurent, in the county of Jacques Cartier, and there were gentlemen from other parishes. Mr. Legault is engaged in the manufacture of tobacco at St. Laurent, and has taken a very active part in the representations made to the government.

Now I wish to submit that the government has not acceded, so far as I can see, to a single one of those requests, though the government has repeatedly recognized the justice of those demands and representations. Now in regard to the monopoly, the government assured those who wished to put an end to it, that the moment the existence of that monopoly and its injurious effects were established, that moment legislation would be introduced to put an end to that monopoly. Judge McTavish was appointed by the government to hold an inquiry in order to ascertain—I believe that was the restrictive scope of the inquiry—whether such a monopoly existed. I moved last year for a copy of the report of Judge McTavish. It contained many interesting details in regard to the existence of this monopoly, but I will not take up the time of the House in referring to them fully. As a matter of fact, the finding of Judge McTavish was that the monopoly did exist. In his report he gives us the text of the contracts that are made by the American Tobacco Company with dealers, with what we call jobbers in tobacco, and the text of the contract which the Imperial Tobacco Company makes with the jobbers in cigars and cigarrettes ; and he arrives at the conclusion, which is very clear, in the light of the texts of these contracts and of the accompanying testimony given in the investigation, that the monopoly exists, and that it is impossible for those who deal in the goods of the trust to do so with any prospect of profit except by conforming to the exclusive regulations of the monopoly. The American trust has secured the very best brands of tobacco, the best brands of cigarettes and the brands that have most favour in the market, and nobody can obtain a sale of these articles from the company except by signing this contract, which has a monopolistic effect. Judge McTavish therefore arrives at the conclusion that the monopoly really exists. It has the effect, says the judge, of restricting the trade to a few hands. He was not able, nor had he instructions, to inquire as to whether it injured tobacco growers, but I think he says in his report that it must ultimately have that effect. Judge McTavish points out that in the state of Massachusetts where a similar evil exists, legislation has been passed to put an end to it, but that was so recently that he had not been able to find out what were the results. Well, that inquiry having been made and the report laid before the government, it became the duty of the government to introduce legislation to put an end to what they admitted themselves was an evil. Last year the Minister of Justice, as I have already stated proposed to add article 520a to the Criminal Code in the following terms :

520a. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable, if convicted upon indictment, to a fine not exceeding , and not less than , and on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding and not less than , who, being a manufacturer of or dealer in any class of goods,

(a.) makes a sale of any such goods to a person who sells or intends to sell goods of that class in connection with his own business subject to a condition that the purchaser shall not sell or deal in goods of a like kind produced by, or obtained or to be obtained from, any other manufacturer or dealer, or

(c.) consigns any such goods to another person for sale upon commission upon such terms that the consignee can profit by such sale only if he does not sell or deal in goods of a like kind manufactured by or obtained or to be obtained from any other manufacturer or dealer : provided that it shall not be an offence under this section to appoint an agent or sole agent for the sale of goods or the making of contracts for the exclusive sale of goods.

That amendment, introduced by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, acting, I presume, from the conviction obtained by the government from this commission that the evil existed and that it was necessary to put a stop to it, remained a long time before the House last year and was ultimately dropped, for what reason I do not know. I know that some question was raised as to the effect this amendment might have on other lines of business that had been subject to close scrutiny, but it might have been restricted to the tobacco industry, since the evil existed and since the hon. Minister of Justice and the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue had promised faithfully that the evil would be remedied. The measure was dropped, and, as I stated a moment ago, the hon Minister of Inland Revenue, after I had given him notice of my intention to bring this subject before parliament, introduced a measure of an analogous nature which I do not think goes far enough. My hon. friend, in his proposed amendment, which is embodied in the resolution now before the House——

Mr. BRODEUR. Does my hon. friend think this is a proper opportunity to discuss this amendment ? I do not think it would be regular on a motion to go into Committee of Supply to discuss the subject of a notice of motion.

Mr. MONK. I am not discussing that motion itself, but I am discussing the nature of the remedy which it is evidently the intention of the government to apply in regard to this complaint. I do not intend to dwell at any great length upon it. We will discuss it when it comes up in regular way, but what he proposes is to give the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue the right, if he finds the condition of things to exist which is pointed out by Judge MacTavish in his report, which is alleged by those who complained to the government and which is described in the proposed amendment introduced last year by the hon. Minister of Justice, to withdraw the license from the licensed manufacturers who have a contract of that kind ; in other words, since the evil exists, since it has been recognized by the government, instead of applying the bare remedy which the government had promised to introduce, the Department of Inland Revenue has the power, if it finds that a monopoly exists, as it has been proved to exist, to withdraw the license from one of the licensees or one of the manufacturers. I will say at once to my hon. friend that I would rather see that done than nothing at all. The government should have the power at any time, if sufficient pressure is brought to bear upon it, to put an end to the evil in that way, but what I submit to the House is that it leaves the hon. minister the sole judge of the extent of the evil.

Mr. BRODEUR. I would like to know where the hon. gentleman gets that information, because I do not see anything of the kind in the resolution of which I have given notice.

Mr. MONK. This is the resolution of which my hon. friend gave notice on Friday last——

Mr. BRODEUR. There is nothing mentioned about the Inland Revenue Department or the Minister of Inland Revenue.

Mr. MONK. This is what it says :

> Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Inland Revenue Act, in providing that :
> (2.) Any license authorized by this Act may be cancelled in any case where a person who, being a manufacturer of any class of goods subject to a duty of excise, either directly or indirectly—

Then follow the clauses of the amendment introduced last year.

Mr. BRODEUR. It does not provide that this power is vested in the Department of Inland Revenue or in the Minister of Inland Revenue.

Mr. MONK. It is vested in the government, at any rate. It is an amendment of the Inland Revenue Act, and I suppose that any action that is taken to put this amendment into force would have to start with the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue. Probably it would require to be confirmed by Order in Council, but all I mean to say is that instead of curing the evil, as was promised last year, this is simply legislation having for its object to allow the government to cure the evil if it sees fit to do so. This is another example, among many which I have known since I became a member of this House in 1896, of the government taking into its own hands power which, I submit, ought to be exercised by parliament alone. This is in regard to the great grievance which exists and which the government has often been requested to put an end to. Now, as a matter of fact, and as I think the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue is aware, the trust or the monopoly has not remained idle since the holding of the inquiry by Judge MacTavish, but it has gradually increased its hold upon the trade, and it is threatening to get possession of the whole tobacco trade of Canada, in so far as the manufacture of tobacco, cigars and cigarettes is concerned. I find that the output of cigarettes in 1902 was 137,000,000, and that the American Tobacco company sold of this number 109,000,000 in Canada. Since 1901, I think it is admitted that the trust has seized hold of the manufacture of Canadian leaf under the name I have already indicated, of the Empire Tobacco Company, and by its exclusive contract, to which I do not like to refer at any greater length, but which is amply set forth in the report of Judge MacTavish, it is gradually getting hold of the whole business in tobacco, and it is a mere question of time when this huge corporation will be able to control absolutely the output of Canadian tobacco. Not only is that the fact, but those who are largely interested in tobacco growing and those engaged in the manufacture of tobacco, who are not dependent on the trust, and there are among these a great many experts, agree that that is the result to which we are tending now.

I do not think the government has a satisfactory record so far as the monopoly is concerned, and it is evidently because the government had a feeling of contrition and compunction, that, when they saw this question was going to be referred to in parliament, they judged fit to introduce the mild remedy of which the Minister of Inland Revenue gave notice last Friday. The government has refused to give any additional protection to the tobacco industry. All those interests in that industry agree that a little additional protection would be necessary, but the last deputation that came here to get additional protection was told by the government that it was too late this year, thereby giving them to understand that probably additional protection would be afforded at a later date. It is admitted on all hands that some additional protection would not diminish the revenue because the slightly increased rate of duty would amply compensate for the diminution of importations if such diminution would follow. Moreover, we must have foreign leaf in this country and Canadian leaf cannot by any possibility totally displace it. Even the most sanguine and enthusiastic supporter of the Canadian tobacco industry does not advance the pretention that the public demand will be satisfied with Canadian leaf alone. Canadian tobacco has been improved it is true, and we can send a great deal of it to foreign markets, but we cannot prevent the importation of the foreign leaf which is absolutely required in this country. There would therefore be no diminution of revenue and it seems to be admitted that the increase in the consumption of the commoner kind of tobacco would be a great help to the native industry. The demand of those interested, made to the government, that there should be uniformity in the stamps placed on tobacco is a most reasonable one. Dealers and growers have represented that the distinctive green stamp on Canadian tobacco creates a prejudice against it, and impedes its sale. They, therefore, ask that stamps of the same colour be used for all kinds of tobacco, and I do not think the government has given any sufficient reason why this demand should not be acceded to.

At One o'clock House took recess.

House resumed at Three o'clock.

ROYAL ASSENT.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following letter from the Secretary of His Excellency the Governor General.

Ottawa, 16th July, 1904.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Mr. Justice Sedgewick, acting as deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber, on Monday, the 18th instant at 4.30 p.m. o'clock, for the purpose of giving assent to certain Bills which have passed the Senate and House of Commons during the present session.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) F. S. MAUDE, Major,
Governor General's Secretary.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the House of Commons.

THE TOBACCO INDUSTRY.

Mr. MONK. Did time permit, I should be very glad to be permitted to go further into Judge MacTavish's report, and I would have been pleased to read certain letters which I have received from tobacco manufacturers and tobacco growers in the province of Quebec, strongly urging the views which I am endeavouring to impress upon the government. I now shall say a few words upon the refusal of the government to establish experimental posts in compliance with the request made by those who have experience in the matter. I shall also refer to the absolute neglect of the governmnt to establish a sort of information bureau for the growers of Canadian tobacco, and which could be established at small expense. The government is in possession of a petition signed by all the influential people interested in the tobacco industry in my province, and which promulgate the views of which I have given a brief resume. Neither the report of Judge MacTavish, not this petition, which bears one thousand signatures, nor the very important report of Mr. Blaise Dugas have been printed and circulated for the information of those interested in the industry as they should have been. Mr. Blaise Dugas, whom I do not know personally, but who is, I am told, an expert, was sent to Belgium two years ago to obtain complete information on the possibility of there being a demand for Canadian tobacco on the European market. That report of Mr. Dugas, which I moved for in this House was brought down on the 27th day of May last. I do not wish in any way to minimize the importance of the scant information contained in Mr. Dugas's report, but I say that he supports very strongly the argument that I am advancing for the information of the government. However, Mr. Dugas's investigation was very incomplete and very superficial. The information contained in his report as to the value of the Belgium and Dutch market for our tobacco is of little practical use. Had the government sent over samples of our tobacco with instructions to our representatives in London, Paris and Belgium to make a report, an equally good result could have been obtained at much less cost. The fact, however, that the government did send over Mr. Dugas proves that strong pressure had been brought to bear and that the question deserved greater attention than the government had seen fit to give to it. Mr. Dugas took ten or twelve packages of tobacco with him; he submitted them to some leading dealers in Antwerp, London, Liverpool, Glasgow and elsewhere, and we have his views as to their opinions.

What is important is this—and it will no doubt surprise the House—that this tobacco, taken principally from the counties of L'Assomption and Montcalm, not cured, not packed, not prepared as tobacco should be in order to obtain a favourable reception in European markets, was most favourably received by those who were privileged to examine it. I do not wish to take up the time of the House by reading extracts from Mr. Dugas's report; but if the government sees fit to have it printed, as it undoubtedly should be, members of the House will at once see, to their surprise, I am sure, that in England there is a very good market for our tobacco. The merchants who were consulted by Mr. Dugas are men of great responsibility, commendable in every way; and from the observations they made to him it is evident that in the markets of England, Scotland and Ireland, which consume over 100,000,000 pounds of tobacco a year, there is a good opening for our tobacco, provided that proper attention is given to the cultivation of the plants, the curing and the packing. Now, summing up the observations of the Belgian, Dutch, Liverpool, Glasgow and London tobacco dealers, I venture to say that they all agree that the samples which they inspected, which were brought over by Mr. Dugas would, with improvement, constitute a very good tobacco for sale on the British and continental markets. It appears, from the observations of these gentlemen, what most of us know, that what we require is not only an improvement in the cultivation of the tobacco, but proper training in regard to curing and packing it. But if these needs are provided, we have an unlimited market open to us in England and on the continent. In order to secure these ends it would be necessary for the government, as Mr. Dugas recommends in his report, and as all those who have any knowledge of the subject have earnestly urged upon the government time and again, to have some experimental stations. Members of the House will be surprised to hear, for instance, that most of the tobacco that is used in Belgium is grown in Wisconsin. The Americans have opened an immense market for their tobacco all over Europe; but they have spent far more than $30,000,000 in acquiring the necessary science in the cultivation of tobacco, and the curing and packing of it, to suit that great market. That is for us a very important point, because our market is strictly limited. The counties of Essex and Kent in Ontario, and the principal counties in the province of Quebec where tobacco culture is carried on furnish a sufficient supply for the needs of our own country; but if we had the means of introducing our tobacco upon the markets of Europe, a very much larger area might be cultivated with extraordinary success. Mr. Dugas, as I stated a moment ago, makes the suggestion in his report, that we should have experimental stations. I think these could be secured in connection with the existing experimental farms, the central farm and its branches, at a trifling cost; and it is impossible to appreciate the extent of the returns. In regard to the curing, there is no doubt that we would have to obtain the services of two or three experts from the United States, men conversant with the needs of the European markets. That would not be a very great expense, and most excellent results would follow. In order to do that I venture to say that our Minister of Agriculture would have to take a little more interest in the affairs of his department and a little less perhaps in the affairs of other departments; for, after all, with what great agricultural reform or progress has the Minister of Agriculture associated himself during his incumbency of the office? It was for a time boasted that he had invented cold storage; but everybody knows that the merit of the establishment of cold storage does not accrue to the Minister of Agriculture. He has merely perpetuated what he found when he came into office, and I venture to say that when the estimates of that hon. gentleman are discussed, I can establish that he has entirely failed to make that service what modern needs exacted, and as he has been asked time and again to do by those interested in cold storage, in my own province at any rate. He would have associated himself with a branch of agriculture, from which our farmers could derive infinite profit, if during his many trips to Europe, or while he has been here in the discharge of his functions as Minister of Agriculture, he had endeavoured to ascertain the cost of these experimental stations and establish one at any rate. The government in that regard has failed entirely to do justice to the demands of those who are interested in that branch of industry; and it has also completely failed, so far as I know, to establish a service of bulletins of information, with two or three experts in charge of the experimental stations, which we could create at a trifling cost. With the distribution of information, derivable at very slight cost, as regards the exigencies of the markets of Belgium, Great Britain and Europe generally, we would have seen the cultivation of tobacco increase throughout the country; we would have seen that great industry develop extraordinarily within the past eight or ten years, and the whole agricultural class of the country greatly benefited. As everybody knows, the cultivation of tobacco requires considerable care; and in our province, where a farmer, provided with all the information to which I have referred, cultivates four or five acres of tobacco with the large families with which we are blessed in the province of Quebec, that cultivation could be carried on at a trifling cost. It is almost incredible what profits our farmers would derive from the cultivation even if tobacco were selling at 10 cents a pound. The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Léonard), who takes some interest in this question, informed me a day or two ago that he had leased two acres of land at $10 an acre to a man expert in the cultivation of tobacco in his own county of Laval, and that the profit derived by the lessee at the end of the lease was over $365. This shows, what many of us do not fully realize, that the tobacco industry under conditions I have referred to would be a most profitable one in our country.

Now, Sir, I have glanced over the question of the increase in duties because it is possible that some members of this House would not view with favour an increase in the duties on foreign tobacco. Perhaps in 1896 that increase was less necessary than it is to-day, but as I stated the information I have is that this great tobacco monopoly has now taken a strong hold in England and tobacco instead of coming into Canada as it used to largely from the United States—I speak now of manufactured or cut tobacco—has been pouring into Canada in very large quantities from England for the benefit of the tobacco trust, under the Canadian preferential tariff and decreased cost of production. Under these circumstances, I think it becomes the duty of the government, if they wish at least to continue to that industry the protection which they had in view in 1897, to make some provisions against this changed condition of affairs. Now, I think I have stated as briefly as possible the present grievances of this industry in this country. The effects of the existing monopoly are to-day conceded on all hands to be most detrimental not only to the industry, to the manufacturers and shippers, but to the farmers as well. This has been admitted by the government. They have recognized the justice of the claims of those who suffer from that monopoly, and they have time and again as I can prove by letters which I have in my possession, promised delegations and individuals that they would remedy these grievances. As a matter of fact they started out last session with an evident or apparent desire to remedy that grievance, but they have failed to do so and even if we had the whole measure of which notice was given, I am satisfied, from letters in my possession and articles in newspapers, that this is not the remedy which interested parties contemplated and which the government promised. I have no doubt whatever as to the part which the Minister of Agriculture could have played in the promotion of this industry, which might be so remunerative to the farmers. I believe that great assistance might be given by doing justice to the demands expressed by those who are interested in the cultivation of tobacco. We could without any material increase in expense, have experimental stations in connection with our experimental farms. We could at a very small cost have a service of information by the regular issuing of bulletins which would keep those interested in that industry absolutely posted as to the requirements of our own and of foreign markets. Above all things we could, with an expenditure altogether out of proportion to the vast results obtainable. secure as the Americans have done, the expert assistance of two, three or even four experts who would especially instruct those interested in this industry in the very difficult art of curing, preparing and packing tobacco. I say that the expenditure under these heads would be comparatively small, but the results as already shown, would be of very great magnitude indeed. The cultivation of tobacco, as those who follow the question a little know, has fallen off in the province of Quebec, prices have gone down, and this in spite of the increase in the duties. Therefore we cannot for a single moment expect that we will improve this important branch of industry by simply piling up the tariff or adding duties on foreign tobacco ; we must do as others before us have done who are now reaping the most beneficial results, we must instruct our people as to the best method of cultivating tobacco in order to secure that product which will give us an entry into those great foreign markets that are open, ready and waiting for us. We must learn how to cure and pack our tobacco in order to obtain our proper place upon the foreign markets. Then not only will our manufacturers and dealers, our commercial classes, greatly profit by what can be obtained, but I venture to say that the agricultural classes throughout the whole of Canada will see an immediate increase in the price of tobacco, a very great increase in the demand for that article and an increase in the cultivation of that plant with the very best results.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Inland Revenue). My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) was good enough before recess to let me have the motion which he has just presented to the House and I am sorry to see that although he claims to be very friendly with the tobacco industry of this country he has been finding fault with the policy pursued by this government since 1896 upon the question of tobacco. We have tried since we have been in power to induce the farmers to produce tobacco and at the same time we have endeavoured to encourage the manufacture, not only of Canadian leaf, but also of the foreign leaf and I am glad to see that the result of this policy has been entirely satisfactory and has shown that the policy of the government in that respect has been the best that could be pursued. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) was not in the House before 1896 ; if he had been here at that time he certainly would not have presented the motion which he has just introduced before this House. We remember, before 1896, the growers and manufacturers of Canadian tobacco sought by petitions and otherwise, to move the government of that day to give them greater protection. We remember that delegation after delegation came to Ottawa, in 1894, 1895 and 1896, trying to get from the Conservative government protection for the Canadian producers of tobacco. But, in spite of all these efforts, they did not move the government which seemed to be much more interested in giving protection to other lines of production than in protecting the farmers who grow tobacco. But, when this government came into power, we thought it was our duty to do something for this important industry, believing that it might become one of the most important in the country. And I am glad to say that my hon. friend, (Mr. Monk) by the figures he has given to the House, has shown what fine results have flown from the policy then adopted. I will endeavour, however, to supplement what the hon. gentleman has said in that respect and to show that the policy of this government has given to the farmers of this country at least $1,000,000 more than they were getting under the Conservative regime. In 1896 there were twenty-seven factories engaged in the manufacture of foreign leaf. In 1903, there were only twenty-three of such factories, a reduction of four. Let us see how during the same period the factories engaged in manufacturing domestic leaf progressed. In 1896 there were only ten factories of domestic leaf, and last year that number had been increased to thirty, including those engaged in the production of combination tobacco. So, while we have decreased the number of factories of foreign leaf we have increased very largely those engaged in the manufacture of tobacco, of Canadian growth. In 1896, the tobacco manufactured from foreign leaf amounted to 9,609,194 pounds. In 1903, the last year for which we have the reports, the quantity had decreased to 7,726,316 pounds,—a decrease of 1,182,778 in the manufacture of foreign leaf to-day as compared with what it was under the Conservative regime. Now, take the figures for the Canadian leaf. Hon. gentlemen opposite, when in power, would not give any protection to the Canadian leaf ; they would not do anything for the Canadian farmer. The result was that, when they were in power, in 1896 we manufactured only 474,205 pounds of Canadian tobacco. Last year we manufactured of Canadian tobacco no less than 4,983,181 pounds, an increase in the manufacture of Canadian tobacco of 4,463,376 pounds. In 1896 the quantity of Canadian tobacco manufactured in the form of cigars was 515,870 pounds, making a total manufacture of Canadian tobacco in that year of 990,075 pounds. If we estimate this tobacco at ten cents per pound we find that the Canadian farmers received for their tobacco $99,007.50. Last year, 1903, besides the 4,938,181 pounds of Canadian manufactured tobacco, we used for cigarettes, 2,300,081 pounds and for cigars 9,598,890 pounds, a total of 16,837,052 pounds, as against 990,075 pounds under the Conservative regime. Take this total quantity at ten cents per pound, and we find that last year the farmers of this country with the protection they enjoyed from this government, received for their tobacco, $1,683,705.20, or $1,584,697.70 more than they received in the last year of the Conservative regime. There is the result of the policy of the government. And I cannot understand how, in the face of results like these, my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) and hon. gentlemen opposite generally can complain of that policy. But is it fair to say that all hon. gentlemen opposite complain of the policy of this government ? Some time ago I heard my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) speak words which indicate that he does not share the views of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier. Speaking of the government he asked: ' Why is it necessary that they should have surpluses to boast of from $14,000,000 to $16,000,000 ? They could get clear of a large portion by extending the reduction of duties from molasses to sugar. They could also make a reduction in the duty on tobacco, which would prove an immense boon to almost every man who contributes to taxation.'

Now who is right ? Is it the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) or is it the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) who has a right to enunciate the policy of the opposition since he is its financial critic? I am sorry he is not in his seat to-day ; but I suppose when the vote comes on he will be here to tell us on which side he stands. But that is not all. I have in my hands a circular which seems to have been issued by my hon. friends opposite, and which I will take the liberty of reading for the information of the members of this House. This is called ' Leaflet No. 4 ' and it is headed ' Put this in your pipe and smoke it.' I do not know whether the hon. member for Jacques Cartier had anything to do with the publication of this circular, but it is certainly published by the party sitting opposite, and I suppose before this debate is over they will repudiate it, because it is directly contrary to their motion :

PUT THIS IN YOUR PIPE AND SMOKE IT.

Every user of tobacco in Canada has been paying $4.75 more in taxes on tobacco as the result of Liberal rule.

How is the man who uses tobacco affected by its taxation under the Liberal government ?

Compare the taxes on tobacco collected by the present government with those collected by the Conservative government :

Liberal taxation on tobacco, 1897-1902.
Excise	$23,485,642
Customs	2,661,875
	$26,147,517

Conservative taxation on tobacco, 1891-96 :
Excise	$17,875,401
Customs	1,709,958
	$19,585,359

Increased taxation on tobacco by the Liberals in six years, $6,562,158.

The male population of Canada is 2,571,708.

Supposing 50 per cent of the male population of Canada are smokers, how does the increased taxation of tobacco affect each person using it ?

Under the Liberal government, each user of tobacco has been paying in taxation on tobacco alone $19.

Under the Conservative government, he was paying only $14.25.

Each smoker has been paying in taxes on tobacco alone $4.75 more under Liberal rule than he was under Conservative rule.

This increased tax on tobacco does not decrease the quantity used, and is quite unnecessary, even according to the government's own showing.

The government boasts that last year it had a surplus of $14,000,000. That is to say, it took $14,000,000 more in taxes out of the people's pockets than it had any need for.

If the revenues of the country are so much in excess of even the Liberal government's extravagant expenditure, why has the government imposed an additional tax of $6,562,158 on the users of tobacco since it has been in power ?

Have a quiet smoke, and think this over.

The Conservatives paid for their errors in 1896.

The Liberals must expect punishment for their vastly greater sins, and the government that succeeds theirs must be dealt with on its merits. In other words, turn out one government after another until the message can go out to the world that the conscience of Canada is awakened.

Now let us read the motion of my hon. friend :

The government has not given to the tobacco industry of Canada the protection and encouragement that it is entitled to.

The circular says there is too much protection, while the motion says there is not enough protection. Who are we going to believe, the hon. member for Pictou, who says : Reduce the duty on tobacco, or the hon. member for Jacques Cartier who says in his motion : Let us raise the duty on tobacco, or this famous circular which says : The Liberals are putting too high a duty on tobacco ? I leave to my hon. friends opposite the impossible task of reconciling these contradictory positions. I hope my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier will realize the false position in which he finds himself now. This sort of politics may do for his county, may entertain the people of St. Laurent where there are some tobacco growers ; but I think the time has come when we should denounce this kind of political warfare. I hope the Conservative party will be brave and courageous enough to come before this House with a uniform policy for the whole country instead of one policy for one section and another for somewhere else. My hon. friends opposite owe it to their party to repudiate that circular and to declare that it is not a faithful representation of the sentiments of their party.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have shown by the figures I have just read that instead of having neglected the tobacco industry this government has done its best to develop it. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier says that the preference is affecting tobacco imported from England, and that when it is manufactured by the American Tobacco Company in England it would be subject to the preference. I suppose my hon. friend has not read for some time the clause in the statutes relating to the preference. He will find in 60 and 61 Vic., chapter 16, the following proviso in the reciprocal tariff :

Provided, however, that these reductions shall not apply to any of the following articles, and that such articles shall in all cases be subject to the duties mentioned in schedule A, viz.:—Wines, malt liquors, spirits, spirituous liquors, liquid medicines and articles containing alcohol ; sugar, molasses and syrups of all kinds, the product of sugar cane or beet root ; tobacco, cigars and cigarettes.

My hon. friend must have forgotten that part of the statutes relating to the preference, as otherwise he would not have made this argument in connection with tobacco imported from Great Britain. We have a right to expect now that my hon. friend will repudiate the statement that he has made that the duty on tobacco imported from Great Britain is not the same as on tobacco imported from foreign countries. Now, Mr. Speaker, we have been in favour of a duty for the protection of the Canadian industry, we have also made a change which has been very beneficial to that industry. Before 1896 the Canadian growers and manufacturers asked our friends opposite several times to permit the mixing of Canadian tobacco with the foreign leaf. Several petitions to that effect were presented to the Conservative government, but in every instance they were refused. When the Liberal party came into power we permitted the mixing of Canadian tobacco with the foreign leaf, and the result has been a very large increase of the Canadian consumption of Canadian tobacco. In 1895-96 no cigars were manufactured in this country from mixed tobacco, but in 1902-03 we manufactured 6,660,330 cigars. So far as the tobacco itself is concerned, we had none in 1895-96, but last year we manufactured 1,772,974 pounds. So you see, Mr. Speaker, that this policy of permitting the mixing of Canadian tobacco with foreign tobacco has been fruitful, has given the best results and has contributed to a large extent to the increased consumption of Canadian tobacco. The reason for that is easy to understand. You cannot put on the market a very good brand of cigars unless you use a wrapper of the finest leaf. In the United States they generally use Sumatra leaf for wrappers and in this country they also use Sumatra to a large extent. By permitting the use of Canadian tobacco with foreign tobacco we enable the manufacturers to put into the inside of the cigar Canadian leaf which is just as good as foreign leaf and then wrap this tobacco with Sumatra leaf. The result has been that whereas formerly we were manufacturing very few cigars we are now manufacturing them by the million.

Now, coming to the question of the exclusive contract of the American Tobacco Company, I see that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier has stated that I gave notice of my amendment to the Inland Revenue Act to prevent those contracts being made by the American Tobacco Company only after he had given notice of his motion. The hon. gentleman is certainly mistaken in that respect because he will find that in the speech which I delivered on the 15th of June, in the debate on the budget, I made a statement in answer to him to the effect that this policy of the government would be carried out. If I happened to give notice the other day of my amendment it was simply because I had to give notice before the end of the session. The session is drawing to its end and it was important that notice of this amendment should be given as soon as possible.

Mr. MONK. I think I am right in saying that my hon. friend gave notice of his legislation after I had told himself and the right hon. Prime Minister that I intended moving this motion and that was after the right hon. Prime Minister had on two occasions stated that the government had no more legislation to bring down this session.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think my hon. friend is entirely mistaken. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister stated the other day when the question was put to him for the first time that there would be certain Bills to be introduced to the House and some departmental legislation. My hon. friend, when I addressed the House on the 15th of June, heard me declare as positively as it was possible to declare that we were going to do something in regard to these exclusive contracts. It has been the policy of the government since last year to introduce some legislation in respect to that matter and we think the best way of preventing these exclusive contracts is by the way which has been suggested by this notice of motion; that is to say that we shall declare that the licensees of the government be not permitted to carry on any combine or trust in this country. The reason for adopting this procedure is very obvious. The question has been asked as to why we should not meet this condition by an enactment in the Criminal Code. Under the Criminal Code we could only condemn these persons to certain penalties but I think the measure which is before the House in regard to these exclusive contracts will be more effective than if proceedings were carried on under the Criminal Code. Under the Criminal Code you would have to take proceedings day after day. Under the proposal which is now before the House if persons are found to be carrying on business on the strength of these exclusive contracts their license can be cancelled and consequently the remedy is more effective than if it were provided for under the Criminal Code. Therefore, I say that it was not on account of the declaration made by my hon. friend the other day that we introduced that legislation but it has been done in pursuance of the policy declared last year by the government, declared to some extent by myself on the 15th of June last, and declared by the notice which I gave the other day.

My hon. friend, speaking on the question of tobacco, said that we should provide for uniformity in stamps. He asked for a declaration of policy on the part of the government in regard to that subject. There is much to be said in favour of having a uniform colour of stamps for foreign and Canadian tobacco. I had thought at first that this question might be solved simply by departmental regulation but I find that it cannot be dealt with very conveniently in that way and that if treated in that way it would not prevent frauds upon the revenue. The best way to deal with this question would be by legislation and it may be dealt with by providing different scales of duties applicable to different kinds of tobaccos. We cannot deal with the question this year because certainly the session is far advanced. But, I may say that this question has engaged the attention of the officers of my department. The general inspector of tobaccos is now considering the question and if it should prove to be possible and feasible to have this change brought about it may be carried out, although I make this statement without making any formal promise to the House. There is not unanimity among the Canadian tobacco manufacturers in this respect. Some are in favour of the change while others, and perhaps the most prominent ones, are opposed to a uniformity of stamps because they believe that Canadian tobacco is gaining such a reputation for its quality that before long it will be in very great demand. I do not know whether that statement is correct or not, but at all events I may tell my hon. friend there is a great divergence of opinion even amongst manufacturers of Canadian tobacco.

In regard to the experiments carried on with respect to the cultivation of tobacco I may tell my hon. friend that the reflections which he has made upon my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) are not at all deserved. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture is now seriously examining that question and under his direction some very important experiments were carried on at the experimental farm. I may also add that this spring he sent to the state of Wisconsin two gentlemen with instructions to observe how they seed the tobacco there and I understand his intention is to send these gentlemen back to Wisconsin in the fall to find out the best way of curing it. They have been well received by Governor Hoard, of Winconsin, and this cordiality has resulted in the establishment of very satisfactory relations between the Wisconsin authorities and the Department of Agriculture upon this subject.

Mr. MONK. May I ask the hon. gentleman who these parties are who are sent to Wisconsin and if they have made a report ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I think their names are Mr. Dugas and Mr. Denis. I do not exactly remember the names but I know that two gentlemen were sent to Wisconsin to find out the best way to cultivate tobacco in this country.

Mr. MONK. Have they made any report ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know ; perhaps not because I suppose the report will cover the whole year. They have been there during the seeding time and I suppose they will go there during the summer and during the fall to see how the tobacco is cured. The reflection cast upon the Minister of Agriculture is not deserved, because no man could do more than he has done to facilitate tobacco culture in this country. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) must not forget that we have had an experimental station at St. Jacques, so to that extent we are carrying out the policy he advocates. I am sorry that my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) has wrongfully censured the government, and endeavoured to unburden on it his own want of devotion to the interests of the Canadian tobacco industry. The policy of the government has been fruitful of good, and it has been thus fruitful without adding any increased taxation upon the Canadian consumer.

Mr. GOURLEY. How much tobacco was grown in Quebec last year ?

Mr. BRODEUR. We have not the figures by provinces, but I shall endeavour to get a detailed statement for my hon. friend. I was about to say that in spite of the increased duty on foreign leaf, the Canadian consumer is now paying less than formerly for this tobacco, as the figures will prove. In 1896 he paid for domestic plug chewing tobacco 81 cents, and this year he pays 53 cents for the same quantity of tobacco.

Mr. CLANCY. And the same kind ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, I suppose it is the same kind. I am not a smoker, but I am told by those who do smoke, that Canadian tobacco is very much better than the foreign tobacco. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) apparently does not accept that statement, but I make it on the authority of a gentleman who changed from foreign to domestic tobacco, and he now says that the Canadian tobacco is the better. When hon. gentlemen opposite become more Canadian than they are now, they will perhaps give up the foreign leaf and smoke our own good Canadian product. Let me continue to quote the figures. In 1896 plug smoking tobacco cost eighty cents when it now costs fifty cents, and in 1896 foreign smoking tobacco cost $1 when the smoker can now get the same quantity for forty-six cents. In these three kinds of tobacco the consumer is now paying in one case fifty-three cents less, in another case sixty per cent, and in the third case seventeen per cent less than he did formerly. And why is this the case ? It is because instead of smoking foreign leaf tobacco which is pretty heavily taxed, the consumer now smokes Canadian tobacco on which the tax is only five cents per pound. The net result of the policy of the government is that we have given to the Canadian producer a large amount of protection which encourages the growth of tobacco in Canada to the value of $1,500,000 more than under the Conservative regime, and at the same time we have reduced to a very large extent the price of the tobacco itself.

Mr. CLANCY. Was it the policy of the government, of which the Minister of Inland Revenue is so distinguished a member, in raising the duty on tobacco to especially encourage the growth of Canadian tobacco in Canada.

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly that was the purpose and intention. The purpose was to favour as much as possible the growth of Canadian tobacco, and the figures I have quoted prove that the policy of the government in this respect has been a sound policy, which ought to meet with the support of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. S. E. GOURLEY. I congratulate my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) sincerely, that by the introduction of this motion he has drawn from the government the first clear honest distinct and manly statement in favour of a protective policy, that I have heard since I came to parliament. I congratulate the Minister of Inland Revenue for casting aside the hypocrisy of his party, and in a manly way stating his own policy in reference to this question. If members of the government would always admit that they looked with horror upon their past and promised to do right things in the future, I would cease to berate them, and would endeavour to help them on in their career. I believe that in the end Canadian tobacco will be found to be of the most superior quality, because every product that can be grown in this northern country is of the highest excellence. We grow the best men and women in the world, and the country that grows the best men and women will grow every inferior product in the highest excellence. What are the Ontario members doing in this debate ? Do they know that in 1896 their province raised 11,000,000 pounds of tobacco, and that last year it raised only

3,000,000 ? It would seem from these figures as if the policy of the government was helping Quebec, while it was destroying poor Ontario, and yet there is not a man of them opposite who seems to be aware of the condition of the tobacco industry in that province. I recently searched through the reports of the Dominion statistician and I discovered that in 1902 we raised 500 pounds of tobacco in Nova Scotia, 30,000 in Prince Edward Island and 61,000 in British Columbia. There are no returns from Quebec, but I suppose Quebec is so much on top now that it need not be mentioned in statistics. In 1896, Ontario raised 11,000,000 pounds of tobacco leaf, mostly in the county of Kent and Essex, while in 1902, the last year for which we have returns, it only raised 3,000,000. I do not understand how this result can come from the policy of the government, because if they afford adequate protection it is bound to strengthen the growth of tobacco all over the country. No man who has seen the benefits of protection as conferred upon the United States of America can doubt that a wise system of protection would encourage Canadian industries. I congratulate the Liberal party in coming around to that sane view. I was somewhat surprised however, that the Minister of Inland Revenue, who is somewhat liberal in his views, should attempt to make a little political capital out of this question. He should remember what befell the Postmaster General a few days ago, who, when he was discussing the Peterborough lock tried to introduce a political issue, and before he got out of it he was the worst whipped man I have ever seen in the House of Commons. I thought the Minister of Inland Revenue had more discretion ; I thought he had the French discretion, never to attack until he was sure to win ; I thought he had the Napoleonic genius to win or retreat, but he seems to have been off his guard this afternoon. Why the Conservatives could not hold by the policy they had. Such were the continued and persistent attacks of the Liberal party that the then Minister of Finance, Mr. Foster, showed awful weakness in going back from his policy of high protection and making sugar and several other articles free. What happened ? From that day I lost confidence in Foster—in everybody connected with the government. It did much to defeat the Conservative party, because the opposition told the people that the government had never believed in their policy.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Did I correctly understand my hon. friend to say that he lost confidence in Mr. Foster because of the action he took in connection with the tariff in 1896 ?

Mr. GOURLEY. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What has he to say about the gentleman who wrote the leaflet on tobacco which he read a moment ago ?

Mr. GOURLEY. I am coming to the leaflet. I say I lost confidence, and I am frank in that. There is nothing like frankness among friends, and I say the Conservative party showed awful weakness in betraying their party by giving into you people—giving into your endless talk about things you never believed in for one moment—instead of going on building up and strengthening their tariff. They would have been in power to-day if they had done that instead of playing into your hands. You evidently do not intend to be defeated by any of your free trade nonsense, because you are abandoning every shred of it and throwing it to the winds, and adopting protection. My hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue is the advance guard in declaring that the old policy of the Liberal party is gone forever, and that protection, pure and simple, is its policy to-day. I want to tell the Minister of Finance, when he goes to Nova Scotia, not to wear the mantle of hypocrisy which he has worn so long, but to throw it off and to appear in the costume which the Minister of Inland Revenue has put on and worn so worthily to-day. With regard to that circular, I do not think the Minister of Inland Revenue should have pursued the course he did. In this country—and unfortunately we have many illustrations in the province of Quebec—there is a class of people who are always advocating a sectional policy. I know nothing about it. I have been brought up in an atmosphere where that humbug could not last for a moment. I admire the French Canadian people in many ways, and I wonder that they have not a man strong enough to take those people who are talking sectionalism and shake the life out of them, as Chapleau did the people who were talking sectionalism at the time of Riel. It is a pity they have not a strong French Canadian who would do the same thing to-day.

Mr. SCOTT. Haven't you got Mr. Tarte ?

Mr. GOURLEY. The proof of the pudding is in the eating of it, and when I see people in Ontario licked into being national men instead of sectional men, I want to see a big, powerful man in each province able to destroy sectionalism of every kind. However, I was going to say that I think it unfair that the Minister of Inland Revenue should have brought that little bit of a circular into this discussion. I venture to say it was written in Ontario or Quebec.

Mr. BRODEUR. If my hon. friend will tell me who published the circular, I will withdraw my speech.

Mr. GOURLEY. I have never read or seen it ; but I say it was very wrong for a minister of the Crown to attempt to read a circular which has no authority, so far as I know, and which does not bind me or anybody else. Probably no man in this House ever saw it. Some man who wished to earn a few pennies writes something which he thinks may be in the interest of his party or the country, and the Minister of Inland Revenue brings it forward to bind the great Conservative party. It binds nobody and deceives nobody. It does not dignify the debates of parliament to introduce matters of that kind. It is a good tu quoque argument, if arguments of that kind are to prevail in Canada. It may do to catch somebody at a public meeting, but it does not mean anything.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How about the hon. member for Pictou ?

Mr. GOURLEY. He has a right to inveigh against surpluses if he wishes, and if his constituents believe in that kind of thing. I believe we should have far more surpluses in this country ; but we should spend them in the development of the country. You people are afraid of expenditure, you are not attempting to develop this country at all. We want two or three thousand miles of railway in Nova Scotia, and you will not build any. The whole country is undeveloped to-day, while you people are piling up surpluses. I do not object to surpluses, but I object to your not spending them in the development of the country, but giving them to your friends and encouraging boodle.

Mr. BRODEUR. But my hon. friend must see that the hon. member for Pictou was advocating a reduction of the duty on tobacco.

Mr. GOURLEY. Yes, he did specifically mention the subject of tobacco. Well, my hon. friend has been here ten or fifteen years, while I have been here only four years, and he may have got impregnated with the notions which you people have been preaching. I have not ; I steel myself against them ; and you have so improved in your conduct that we perhaps need less will-power to do so now. But even a man of good sense who was here before 1896, and who listened to the distinguished men leading the opposition talking the twaddle they did for ten years, might have lost some of his intellectual virility, and Mr. Bell may have suffered in that respect. However, I support the hon. member for Jacques Cartier in advocating a strong duty to give the Canadian tobacco-grower absolute protection against all comers, until he shall get his industry into that state when he can face the world alone. I believe the time will come when the Canadian will face the world and conquer it in a fair field of battle. But this is not the moment ; we have not the capital, nor the skill, nor the training. I support the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, and I say the Minister of Inland Revenue will not be able to convince the people of Quebec that it is a sufficient answer to his argument to quote a circular written by nobody, and representing nobody's views on this side of the House that I know of.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). It was mailed from this House to members of parliament.

Mr. GOURLEY. That does not bind anybody. Suppose you mailed a warrant to hang me to-morrow, that would bind nobody.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). What about the franking of it ?

Mr. GOURLEY. People have a right to send any material they like to the country. That is a very weak argument. If my hon. friend has taken the correct course the people of Ontario should be up here inquiring seriously into the question how their province has been deprived of this industry. This industry has been stricken down from 11,000,000 pounds of tobacco to 3,000,000 pounds in three or four years. That is a question for the people of Ontario. You stand jeering and laughing at the quibs and jokes of the Minister of Inland Revenue which would be very timely and appropriate in addressing school boys. He did that well but I am sure that he fancied he was addressing school boys rather than serious men or he would have produced arguments more timely and suitable than those which he advanced. The reason I desire some information about the province of Quebec was to find out whether a similar loss had occurred in that province. In Ontario the industry has declined from 11,000,000 pounds to 3,000,000 pounds, and if there had been a similar decline in Quebec it would fully justify the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). I am attempting to master the beautiful language which my hon. friend speaks as his mother tongue, and when I do master it I am going to the province of Quebec to ask the people of that province whether it was sufficient answer to the charges of my hon. friend Jacques Cartier for the hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue to read to the House a circular which he found somewhere.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY. It is rather refreshing to hear the Minister of Inland Revenue declaring the new doctrine of the Liberal party. He has now become quite a protectionist. In answer to my question he declared in unequivocal terms that it was the policy of the Liberal party to give protection to the tobacco interests, to encourage the growth of tobacco in Canada and that for that reason the increased duties were imposed in 1897. I think I understood the hon. gentleman to say that in the most unequivocal terms.

Mr. BRODEUR. If my hon. friend will permit me, what I said was that the policy of the government has had for effect to encourage the production, the growing of Canadian tobacco.

Mr. CLANCY. Then I have not misunderstood the hon. gentleman. Has the hon. gentleman forgotten that he has marched in the ranks of the Liberal party for many years declaring that protection had ruined the farmers? Have hon. gentlemen forgotten that they went up and down the back concessions declaring that when the Conservative party imposed duties upon every article produced by the farmers of Canada these duties were utterly worthless to help the farmers of this country? Does he deny that that was the policy, the doctrine, as preached by his own party—and by himself as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) suggests. When did he become convinced that farmers should have more protection? Let me read to my hon. friend what the Minister of Finance said when he introduced the revision of the duties in 1897. The hon. minister should have consulted the Minister of Finance before he made his statement this afternoon.

THE TOBACCO INDUSTRY.

Mr. CLANCY. I think I shall be able to make it perfectly clear to the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur), that the policy of the Liberal party in 1897 was not to protect the tobacco industry. Of course, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brodeur) has told us that that is the policy now. But there has been no announcement of a change, and, where there is a difference of opinion among the ministers on a fiscal question, we must accept what is told us by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs. By the way we have heard the announcemnt of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that it is impossible to protect the farmer. The policy of the Liberal party, he told us, was to raise a revenue. If protection was afforded by a revenue-raising tariff, it was a mere incident and something which the hon. gentleman has always felt called upon to apologize for. The necessity for raising a revenue he always acknowledged but he would not acknowledge the necessity of protecting the farmers, but grudgingly allowed them to get the benefit of whatever protection might be afforded by a tariff for revenue purposes. I had better read to the Minister of Inland Revenue the policy of his party in 1897, and ask him to revise his views, unless the party has changed its policy since that time without announcing that change. In 1897 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) said :

> How far it is possible for our growers to displace foreign leaf was much disputed before the tariff commission——

That was a committee of the members of the cabinet which received the representation of those who desired to show how the condition of the country could be favourably affected by tariff amendments.

> —but, if the Canadian producer can as a result of this duty get some advantage, we see no reason why he should not have the same opportunity afforded him as has been afforded by other industries. Our main purpose is to get revenue. But, at the same time there is no objection to the growers of tobacco in Canada receiving the advantage from this resolution.

In other words it was a matter of pure indifference——

Mr. PATERSON. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLANCY. Is it not wonderful, Mr. Speaker, how little comfort satisfies that hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) ? Here is a plain statement from the Minister of Finance that the object is simply revenue, but, if they get the revenue, the government will not object to the farmers getting an advantage. That is the plain English of the whole thing. The Conservative party has set forth its views in 'Leaflet No. 4' to which the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) draws attention. The hon. gentleman need not withdraw a single sentence. He read sound literature. It is true from start to finish and in every detail. Let me read——

Mr. PATERSON. Will the hon. gentleman inform us where he got that leaflet ?

Mr. CLANCY. I will be more frank with the House than the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) was about his 'Pointers No. 3.' The hon. gentleman had literature prepared in his own office ; yet, though that matter was under discussion here for two evenings, he could not tell us where that literature came from. I will tell the hon. gentleman that this 'Leaflet No. 4' was prepared, owned and circulated by the Conservative party. And it is literally true—every sentence of it. There is nothing to conceal about it. Let me make reference to what is contained in that literature :

Liberal taxation on tobacco, 1897-1902..	$26,147,517
Conservative taxation on tobacco, 1891-1896..	19,585,359
Increased taxation on tobacco by the Liberals in the six years..	$ 6,562,158

I would ask the hon. Minster of Customs (Mr. Paterson) and the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) if that is true ? I wait their answer.

Not a single syllable from these hon. gentlemen. What does that mean ? That sum of money was taken out of the pockets of the people of this country as a mere matter of revenue, as stated in the most explicit terms by the Minister of Finance. Neither of these hon. gentlemen can deny it for it is a plain positive fact. But how is it about the protection to the farmer ? If the Conservative party were giving aid to an industry, it would give it, not as a mere incident to the raising of revenue, or as if it were ashamed to own it, but openly and for the purpose of developing the industry. But hon. gentlemen opposite insist upon taking the money from the people by taxation, and, if, as a result of that, protection is given to a Canadian industry they apologize for it—until the statement of the hon. minister (Mr. Brodeur) here to-day. Hon. gentlemen have increased the taxation, but they have not given the corresponding protection to the Canadian tobacco grower to which he is entitled. The hon. Minister (Mr. Brodeur) has read with approval from this leaflet No. 4, the statement that the Liberal policy has had the result of taking $6,000,000 from the people in six years more than was taken from them under the former government. Will he now say that the tariff that has taken so much from the people has in it that measure of protection to the tobacco-growing industry the protection to which it is entitled to ? The hon. gentleman talks about cheap tobacco. But who pays this large amount of increased taxation ? The hon. gentleman is mum again—not a word to say. I think we can leave these two hon. gentlemen, the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to settle the question between themselves, and, when they settle it, I will be delighted to withdraw every word I have uttered on this subject.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Monk).

Amendment negatived.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. The hon. member for West Queen's (Mr. Haszard) has not voted.

Mr. HASZARD. I was paired. If I had voted I would have certainly voted against an increase of the duty on tobacco.

DOG-FISH PEST.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the motion is carried, I would like to inquire of the government whether the report of the Commissioner of Fisheries with regard to the dog-fish pest and other matters, has been laid on the table of the House. I observe that eleven weeks ago to-day the hon. member for London (Mr. Hyman) stated, in reply to a question from the member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach), as follows:

1. The Commissioner of Fisheries was authorized to hold an investigation into the dog-fish pest and other fishery matters on the shores of northern New Brunswick. The investigation concluded on April 21st.
2. The report is in preparation, to be laid before me in a few days.
3. The report referred to is awaited before deciding the question of a dog-fish bounty.
4. A large number of suggestions are before the government, and steps will be taken when the report referred to is presented.

I have inquired more than once of the officers of the House, and I cannot find that this report, which was to be brought down within a few days, on the 2nd of May, has been brought down yet. I would like to inquire the cause of the delay.

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). At the time that answer was made it was expected that the commissioners would meet and prepare their report. Some members of the commission are members of this parliament, and unfortunately they have been unable to attend to this question during the sitting of the House. Their preliminary report is not yet ready, but I will make inquiries and see whether it is possible to have it down before the vote is taken.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I may say to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that it seems a little surprising that a report which at that time was to be presented within a few days has not been presented after eleven weeks. I suppose the constitution of the commission was known as well then as it is now. The minister has not referred to any unexpected circumstances, or any cause which would seem to me sufficient to justify the delay. It is of great importance that this report should be brought down. I have had many communications on the subject, and I have desired more than once to address the House on the subject, but I have waited from time to time until the report should be brought down, because it seemed unadvisable to enter into a discussion when we were daily expecting the report. I would ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries whether he has any idea, any expectation that the report will be laid upon the table of the House in time to have a discussion on the subject before the conclusion of the present session. It is a matter of very great importance indeed to the fishermen of the maritime provinces; it is one which has attracted a great deal of public attention there and elsewhere, and it is highly important that this report should not be longer delayed, unless there is some very grave reason for it. Therefore, I would ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to expedite this report, and let us have it within a day or two, if possible. The answer which I have read did not mention any others of the commissioners, but referred to the fishery commissioner only. It was said that he was making an investigation, and would be prepared to make his report almost at once, which would be laid on the table within a few days. Now my hon. friend refers to some other members of the commission who are not mentioned in this answer at all. I see no reason, for my part, why this report should not have already been before the House.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. As regards the commissioner of fisheries, Mr. Prince, I may say that we have already in the department an exhaustive report from him on that question. The question has been taken up, not only by himself but by the other members of the commission who sat during last winter, investigating this matter as well as some others. In the department we understand perfectly well that this is an important question, and it is because of its great importance, and the great number of suggestions that have been made to us, some contradictory of each other and others tending to involve the government in a very heavy expenditure, that we are studying this question very carefully before we make a report which would be practicable. At the present time I do not think that any of the suggestions made to the commissioners have been found practicable. Of course it is only reasonable that they should confer together before coming to a conclusion. I will inquire to-morrow of the commissioner of fisheries whether he is in a position to make, if not a complete report, a temporary report on the question. We do not ignore the importance of the subject, and when the papers are before the House the hon. gentleman will see that we have been dealing with it in earnest, and the volume of correspondence and information which has been gathered will show that we have neglected nothing.

Mr. SPROULE. Who composes the commission?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. So far as I remember, it is composed of Mr. Prince, Col. Tucker, Mr. Copp, Mr. Armstrong, Mr. Bowers, and one or two others whose names I forget at the moment. They were appointed a few days after the close of last session.

Mr. SPROULE. Have they been engaged ever since in making a report?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. They have made preliminary reports on other questions, but on this, the most important of all, they have not yet made a report.

ITALIAN IMMIGRANTS AT MONTREAL.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I would like to ask the Minister of Labour if he has sent his deputy minister to Montreal to investigate the circumstances of the Italians who have arrived in that city and are said to be in destitute circumstances. Has a report been made to him, and if so, when will it be laid on the table of the House? It is also stated in the press that this matter has been referred to Judge Winchester to investigate and report upon, and can the hon. gentleman give us any information on that point?

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General). I sent the Deputy Minister of Labour to Montreal to endeavour to ascertain how these Italians that were reported to be stranded in Montreal, came to Canada. He endeavoured to ascertain the facts, but he found a great deal of conflicting testimony. He came to some conclusion upon the subject, but I cannot say that he made a report, because the testimony was contradictory, so much so, that I recommended to Council, in order to get at the facts, that Judge Winchester's commission should be enlarged so as to embrace this subject. Accordingly his commission was enlarged, and I expect that Judge Winchester will begin to investigate this subject as soon as he is through with the inquiry in regard to alien labour troubles in Montreal, Judge Winchester is to-day in the city of Montreal. I am most anxious that he shall first complete the inquiry into the Grand Trunk alien labour question, and the moment that is done, he will take up the other question, perhaps during the present week, but on that point I am not quite sure.

Mr. WILSON. Will the minister produce any report that was presented by his deputy?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I can hardly call it a report. It was a memorandum made to me. I am not sure whether it was of a confidential character or otherwise, but I think it rather went to the extent of saying that he could not satisfactorily determine anything, because of not being able to compel witnesses to give evidence under oath, and to submit to cross examination.

Mr. WILSON. If it is not confidential, will he lay it upon the table?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. No, because I do not think it is of the slightest value. My hon. friend can look at it and see for himself. The very fact that my deputy could not get the evidence shows that it is of no special value, nor do I think it will prove of much value to the commissioner himself.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. PREFONTAINE.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Indians—Ontario and Quebec, general legal expenses, $3,000.

Mr. CLANCY. When this matter was under consideration on a former occasion the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) promised to bring down the instructions given in regard to the survey of Walpole island. Perhaps the hon. gentleman has that information now.

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Minister of the Interior). I will give the hon. gentleman a statement of what is taking place:

On the 22nd December, 1900, the authority of His Excellency in Council was obtained to spend $2,250 and $750 from the capital funds respectively of the Chippewas and Pottawattamies of Walpole island for surveys. The reason for making the expenditure is stated to be the impossibility of properly administering the lands and roads unless the islands are properly surveyed. Instructions were issued to G. W. McGeorge, Esq., of Chatham, on the 13th September, 1901, a copy of which is attached. When the attention of the department became known, the Indians petitioned that the work be not undertaken, alleging as a reason that their funds would not bear the cost. The department having used the argument that it was intended for their benefit and would undoubtedly lead to good results and a more businesslike administration of their property, a memorial was received in June last from the chiefs and councillors representing the chief agricultural Indians of the island, requesting to have the survey proceeded with. The surveyor has done some preliminary work, chiefly laying out the road allowances about the island and tracing the internal roads, and 'picking up the points of the lands of the Indian locatees.'

I have an extract from the letter of the surveyor which substantially gives instructions which were given to him.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman might state shortly the plan upon which the survey is to be made.

Mr. SIFTON. The instructions given were as follows:

The Indian holdings as they now exist are to be surveyed and permanently posted, making only such necessary changes as may be required to straighten boundaries and this should not be done without the concurrence of the chief and councillors and the owners of the holdings affected. If any such change is objected to and you think it is very desirable, you should by argument endeavour to remove the objection. Wherever possible the rear boundaries of two or more holdings should be one straight line. For this purpose additions may be made to the holdings.

The present roads should be made as wide as possible up to and not exceeding 66 feet in width. They may be diverted, changed or closed as may be decided on consultation with the agent, chief or councillors. All new road allowances should be 66 feet wide.

That is the plan in substance.

Mr. CLANCY. What provision is there for lands unclaimed ? The hon. gentleman knows that there is a very considerable quantity of land which is neither occupied nor claimed, and when the holdings are surveyed there will, of course, be a considerable quantity of land which is neither occupied nor claimed. The department have no doubt taken into consideration what the effect of the survey under such circumstances will be.

Mr. SIFTON. The instructions further provide that :

After the Indian holdings are surveyed and posted, you should lay out the remainder of the lands in double fronted concessions. The lots should contain 80 acres. The distance therefore across a concession of regular width will be 80 chains and the width of regular lots 20 chains, allowance for side roads should be made where considered advisable ; generally not nearer than every five lots.

An hon. member on the other side of the House, who is not in his place at present, asked me for some information respecting the improvements made by squatters on the Doncaster reserve. I have a statement, which I will lay on the table of the House.

Nova Scotia, salaries, $1,225.

Mr. SPROULE. What are these salaries for ? Are the people who receive them teachers ?

Mr. SIFTON. The Indian agents and their salaries in Nova Scotia are as follows :

John Lacy, Annapolis	$ 50
James Purdy, Digby	50
Chas. E. Beckwith, King's	50
Charles Harlow, Queen's and Lunenburg	100
Rev. Chas. E. McManus, Halifax	50
A. Wallace, Hants	50
Thos. B. Smith, Colchester	50
F. A. Rand, M.D., Cumberland	50
Rev. J. D. McLeod, Pictou	100
John R. McDonald, Antigonish and Guysborough	100
Rev. John Fraser, Richmond	100
D. Macpherson, Inverness	100
A. J. Macdonald, Victoria	100
D. K. McIntyre, M.D., North Sydney	75
W. H. Whelan, Yarmouth	50
R. G. Irwin, Shelburne	50
Rev. D. MacAdam. Sydney, C.B.	75
Total	$1,225

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What are the duties of these gentlemen ?

Mr. SIFTON. The duties of the agents are to have an oversight over the Indians generally, to provide them with medical attendance and to report to the department anything that requires the attention of the department, as, for instance, special medical attendance, or occasionally they have some work to do in connection with getting wood for the Indians, or providing wood lands or something of that kind.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have a communication now and then informing me that their lands are being entered upon. I brought two cases before the minister, both in regard to reserves in my own county.

Mr. SIFTON. We have had complaints that the Indians had trespassed on the timber lands of other people, and the opinion of the Justice Department was that the party should be left to their own recourse, and that the government was not liable. That is rather a poor remedy against the Indians, but we have exercised all the persuasion we can to endeavour to prevent it happening.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The complaint I had was that the Indian timber was taken by other people.

Mr. SIFTON. In that case we have no difficulty in finding a remedy for we can seize the timber and make them pay a penalty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Indian chief complained to me in the case I refer to, and on making representation to the department I had a very prompt reply from the minister stating that he would send an officer to investigate it.

Mr. SIFTON. The deputy minister went down there, and it was found that parties were cutting timber on the Indian reserve, and we seized the timber.

Mr. SPROULE. It used to be a very common thing for certain parties to take timber from the Indian reserves. What is the punishment for that?

Mr. SIFTON. The practice is to seize the timber and compel the parties to pay double dues and costs. In cases where timber is valuable and that penalty would not be adequate, we take the timber away from them altogether and proceed for other penalties as well.

Mr. SPROULE. What are the dues for timber on Indian lands?

Mr. SIFTON. It varies as to the kind of timber. The timber seized is required to be put up at public competition. There is a schedule for each kind of timber, but what the details are I do not remember. We charge double dues and costs if we consider they are trespassing.

Mr. SPROULE. That is a very inadequate punishment for such an offence. In the case of hemlock for instance the double dues would only amount to $2 or $3 a thousand.

Mr. SIFTON. If a trespasser cuts timber of any value before he is discovered we seize the timber and sell it, and in addition fine him. It may happen that a man who has lumber alongside the Indian reserve may trespass unintentionally, and we would let him off by charging double dues. If a man knowingly cuts timber which he has no right to, we proceed against him for other penalties.

Mr. SPROULE. I am told that it is a common practice to take Indian timber, and that often the department knows nothing about it. The ordinary value of timber is far more than double the dues, so that such a penalty is not adequate.

Mr. SIFTON. The timber on Indian lands is well and carefully protected. Wherever such an offence has occurred full satisfaction has been demanded. I think I may say there is practically no trespass on Indian lands.

Mr. SPROULE. That shows how little the minister knows about it.

Mr. SIFTON. Will the hon. gentleman give me the information ?

Mr. SPROULE. I have been told that men have taken Indian timber in large quantities.

Mr. SIFTON. Where ?

Mr. SPROULE. In the Georgian bay district.

Mr. SIFTON. When?

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know the exact date, but it is some years ago.

Mr. SIFTON. Probably when the Conservatives were in office.

Mr. SPROULE. No, but since the present government has come to power, and I am told that persons have come down here to try to settle these cases. I have been told that some people take the Indian timber, pay the penalty, and go back the next year and do the same thing. It is distinctly an injustice to the Indian. It is no punishment to the man who has taken the timber, because after he pays the double dues, he has a very large profit.

Mr. SIFTON. If my hon. friend will specify the time and place that it has taken place, I will have the matter looked up, and will show that he is not correct.

Mr. SPROULE. It is not my place to play the detective.

Mr. SIFTON. My hon. friend has not a right to say that a man is stealing timber from the Indian lands without giving particulars. The same inspector is in the department who was there when I took office. His work is particularly to look after the timber on the Indian reserves, and I am perfectly satisfied that his work is well and carefully done, and I should be very much surprised to find that there has been any loss of timber. I remember one case of trespass on a very valuable limit, but the matter was settled in such a way as to prevent loss taking place.

Mr. SPROULE. My hon. friend says I have no right to say what I did. I have a right to state in this House what is common rumour from reliable sources, and I will exercise that right, regardless of whether it pleases the minister or not. If it were necessary, I could give the names of parties who have done this in the past. I have always held that that punishment was no adequate punishment whatever, and as evidence of that, I cite that fact that the same men have been punished in the same way more than once, and have gone and done the same thing again.

Mr. CLANCY. We have passed from the item concerning the province of Ontario ; but I have been looking over the report which the hon. gentleman sent to me, and I do not find any report upon which the Order in Council of the 22nd of December, 1900, was based. There is the report of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, but I assume that that is based upon some report with regard to the conditions upon the island. Can the minister tell the committee whether he has the report upon which this Order in Council was based, setting out the facts contained in the report of the Superintendent General ?

Mr. SIFTON. I am not aware whether there was a formal report or not. If there is, I will let my hon. friend have it.

Mr. CLANCY. There must have been some report made by somebody connected with the Indian Department. The surveys branch would have nothing to do with that. Can the hon. gentleman call to mind who would likely have made a report of that kind ?

Mr. SIFTON. I cannot remember.

Mr. CLANCY. I am afraid my hon. friend has had no report.

Mr. SIFTON. What I said was that we proceeded on representations from the lands and surveys branch as to the difficulty of administering the affairs of that reserve without a survey.

Mr. CLANCY. Did the hon. gentleman send one of the officers up there to investigate the matter ?

Mr. SIFTON. I do not remember.

Indians, N.S.—relief and seed grain, $2,700.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How much is relief and how much is seed grain ?

Mr. SIFTON. About one-third is for seed grain and about two-thirds for relief.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How many Indians are in Nova Scotia ?

Mr. SIFTON. 1,930.

Indians, N.S.—medical attendance, $3,700.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How much was expended last year?

Mr. SIFTON. The expenditures were: in 1900-01, $3,658; in 1901-1902, $3,696; in 1902-1903, $3,542.

Indians, New Brunswick, salaries, $1,308.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In connection with this item I might bring to the attention of the minister a communication from Alexander Prisk, an Indian Chief, bearing date Bathurst, 29th March, 1904. It is as follows:

I am herewith inclosing you a communication I received from Ottawa in reference to fishing privileges belonging to our reserve on the Nipisinquit river. You will note the contents. I know nothing of our fishing privileges on this reserve having been leased for our benefit at a rental of twenty-five dollars a year. If so, I would like to know to whom the money was paid and what was done with it as none of it has been received by us. I would like to know also if we can fish in this or rather in these waters, they having been leased without our knowledge or consent. I would be obliged to you if you would bring this matter up and have an understanding about it for me.

Respectfully yours,
ALEXANDER PRISK,
Chief.

P. O. Chief Alexander Prisk,
Bathurst, Gloucester County, N.B.

Then there is an inclosure as follows:

Ottawa, 23rd March, 1904.

Sir,—In reply to your letter of the 19th instant regarding the disposition of fishing privileges on the Nipisinquit Indian Reserve, I beg to say that in 1896 the Indians surrendered the fishing privileges on this reserve to be leased for their benefit and under said surrender the department leased the said privileges to Mr. Henry Bishop for a ten year term at an annual rental or $25. The agent of your reserve was fully advised of the granting of the lease.

Your obedient servant,
J. D. McLEAN,
Secretary.

Chief Alexander Prisk,
Bathurst, N. B.

I thought it advisable to allow this matter to stand until the hon. gentleman's estimates came up but I have received another communication asking why I am not doing something about it. I would be glad to receive some information about the matter.

Mr. SIFTON. My hon. friend will see that at page J—149 of the Auditor General's report a credit for the amount received and the particulars.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He wants to know what their rights are and whether they still have the right of fishing in those waters.

Mr. SIFTON. I could not speak positively but I think they have surrendered all powers. Under this correspondence they have surrendered the right to fish and unless there was a special reservation in the surrender to keep for themselves the right to fish they cannot fish.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course I cannot expect the minister to give me the particulars at once, but perhaps he would have the officers of his department prepare a little memorandum and send it to me so that I can inform the Indians what the position is.

Mr. SIFTON. The only point would be whether the surrender reserves the right of the Indians themselves to fish.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The chief also seems to know nothing of the surrender. We might have particulars as to how the surrender was accomplished. I do not know the practical details and I would simply like enough information to make it plain to him that the Indians surrendered their rights and that nothing was done unjustly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How many Indians are there in New Brunswick?

Mr. SIFTON. 1,699.

Medical attendance and medicines, $3,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems that with very unfailing regularity the medical attendance for the Indians throughout the maritime provinces costs about $2 a head all around, from year to year. It never seems to vary much from that.

Indians, P.E.I., salaries and travelling expenses, $300.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you any Indians down there?

Mr. SIFTON. 361.

Mr. SPROULE. You tax them a dollar a head for agents and travelling expenses.

Relief and seed grain, $925.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the minister give an explanation as to how the grain is distributed?

Mr. SIFTON. We have a local agent there and it is practically left to his discretion.

Mr. COCHRANE. Are these Indians farming and if so why do they need seed grain every year?

Mr. SIFTON. The maritime province Indians do not go very extensively into farming.

Mr. COCHRANE. Then why do you call it seed grain if they do not go into farming? This is a large amount of money to spend for seed grain. We have Indians in Ontario, but I do not see anything for the Indians in Ontario.

Mr. SIFTON. If you will look at the head of this page you will see that the Indians of Ontario receive as much as the other Indians.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). They are farming now more extensively than ever before but still only to a limited extent. They are building their houses, and cultivating patches for themselves more than ever before.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it the policy of the goverment to supply the Indians with seed grain every year? What do they do with the grain which they grow?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). They feed their cattle.

Mr. SIFTON. In the case of the maritime province Indians the position of the government is just this. We simply have to exercise a sort of paternal supervision over them, and have to do the best we can in each case as it arises. The agents do their best to induce them to follow such vocations as will enable them to be self-supporting. But, where there is a case of distress, the distribution of seed grain and so on is carried out, and this must be largely at the discretion of the agents. No hard and fast rule can be adopted, and more than a hard and fast rule can be adopted for the relief of distress in Ottawa.

Mr. SPROULE. The government seem to have some sort of rule, because the same amount is voted every year.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the condition of the Indians there that they should be differently treated from those in the other provinces? This is an old settled province. Have the Indians been taught habits of industry, and have they learned to farm or carry on any other productive labour? What is the reason for this condition on the part of the Indians? It surely cannot be lack of opportunities for employment. Is the difficulty in the administration? There must be something wrong. Perhaps the hon. minister will explain the condition and tell us why these Indians should be distinguished from other Indians under apparently similar circumstances.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). When they put in their little crop they move about from place to place sometimes making butter tubs, sometimes barrels, and so on. Then, when the hay is about fit to be cut, they move back to their little farms. The crop that they raise they feed to their few cattle and horses. I am intimately acquainted with the habits of the Indians in my own county.

Mr. CLANCY. That is hardly an explanation. These people are supposed to be able to sustain themselves. I can understand that, as the Minister of the Interior says, there must be a certain yielding to circumstances, that no hard and fast rule can be laid down. But it seems very strange that these Indians are not to sustain themselves in a province where employment can easily be had.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). They never hire out.

Mr. CLANCY. The sooner the hon. gentleman teaches his constituents a lesson in industry the better.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). My constituents work, but not the Indians.

Mr. SIFTON. In the maritime provinces we have about 3,900 Indians altogether. The total appropriation for these three provinces amounts to about $16,000. So, while this may seem a fairly large appropriation for the purpose of giving assistance, we cannot be said to do anything that is to be regarded as supporting the Indians. The government does not assume that duty. We simply give assistance where we think it absolutely necessary. In Ontario the circumstances are somewhat different. Some of the Indian tribes in Ontario have valuable lands and have settled down and become farmers, and are quite independent. But the Indians in Nova Scotia have not taken to farming to the same extent, and, while they do not receive very much more from the government, they do receive some more. I do not think the conditions can be improved at present. The difficulty lies in two things—in the first place the Indians have not land of a character to support them; and in the second place, they are of a roving disposition, and my hon. friend knows that it is utterly impossible, in the case of a tribe that has the habit of roving to induce them to settle down.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. As the Indians have received this for years, does not the hon. Minister think that they will regard it as a perquisite and that, on that account, it will be very hard to take it from them?

Mr. SIFTON. For my part I agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. LaRivière). I think the Indians regard it as he says, and I do not think we are paying more money than we ought to pay.

At six o'clock Committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Indians, P.E.I.—relief and seed grain, $925.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like the minister to give us some explanation of how this grain is purchased, what kinds of grain are purchased, and whether, at the close of the year, there is an investigation to find out if the Indians are pursuing the business of grain-growing in a proper way, whether they are improving or remaining at a standstill?

Mr. SIFTON. The seed is purchased locally by the agents. The quantities purchased in any particular place are very small. It would be inadvisable to buy large quantities, because we do not require large quantities. It is mostly garden seed, seed potatoes, and things of that kind. We get reports from the agents annually as to the condition of the Indians. There is very little change in their condition, it remains about the same as it was twenty years ago. The Indians in the maritime provinces are of a somewhat different class from those of Ontario, they are engaged in different avocations and move about.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there any effort on the part of the government to educate the Indians in farming, or is this contribution simply made to keep them alive? Is there any expectation that they will ultimately become self-sustaining in respect to grain-growing?

Mr. SIFTON. We do not carry on any system of farm instruction for these Indians as we do in the Northwest. The Indians understand agriculture fairly well, in a small way, and it would be no benefit to give them farm instruction.

Indians, P.E.I.—medical attendance and medicines, $650.

Mr. BLAIN. Is that item for medical attendance paid to local doctors; and, if so, to how many?

Mr. SIFTON. I can perhaps explain best that matter by referring the hon. gentleman to the explanations that were given in the House last year. In the Auditor General's Report we have a statement of the sums paid to each doctor. To one, $17.50; to another, $76.20; to another, $19.50; to another, $24—it runs along in that way. The work is not sufficient to justify putting them on a salary, and when cases of sickness occur doctors are called in. Their bill is certified by the agent, and if it is found reasonable it is paid. We have a standing difficulty with medical practitioners about the size of their bills, and the department has a good deal of difficulty in keeping the expenditure within limits.

Indians, Manitoba and Northwest Territories, —annuities, $143,475.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I notice a decrease of $1,210 in this item since last year. How many Indians are there now in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories who are in receipt of annuities?

Mr. SIFTON. My hon. friend will understand that before the payment of an annuity can be made under the treaty, we have a calculation made each year upon the census returns received from the agents, and which vary slightly from year to year. In making up the total on the basis of the returns in our hands, it is this year some $1,200 less than last year. We do not always expend the exact amount that is voted, but we make an estimate upon the basis of the returns which we receive, the money is sent out, and if the number of Indians that are returned by the agents do not appear to be paid, of course the balance unpaid comes back.

Indians, Manitoba and Northwest Territories —implements, tools, harness, hardware, lumber and building material for Indians, $6,700.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Would the minister explain this item?

Mr. SIFTON. The commissioner gives us a statement of what he requires under each head, whether flour, or bait, or hayforks, anything of that kind, all that goes into the bill. The amount is made up for each agency, and the estimate is based upon that. I have here a list of the sums that are paid in each agency: $50.40, $60.70, $476.75. Take the Clandeboye agency, $50.46, it is made up of such articles as scythe snaiths, scythe stones, grind stones.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Are they purchased by tender?

Mr. SIFTON. These small articles are not. For supplies that are purchased in large quantities we advertise annually a list of the articles we require. Then we receive tenders, which set out what each article can be supplied for. Of course, the hon. gentleman will understand that in the case of a large number of these small articles it would be impracticable to purchase by tender; for instance, when a man says in one of his requisitions that he wants harrow teeth, or a trace chain, little miscellaneous things in each agency, that it would be wholly impracticable to purchase by tender and local competition. Large supplies of food are all purchased by tender. These small articles are purchased by the agents at the ordinary current prices.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The purchases are not made all at the same time?

Mr. SIFTON. No. For instance, at Portage-La-Prairie we require this year a hay rake at $35 and a hay fork at $7.26. When we want such articles as these the agent buys them at the ordinary retail price.

Seeds, field and garden, $1,933.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Is this an expenditure which changes from year to year?

Mr. SIFTON. It is pretty much the same every year.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. There is an increase of $716. Is that because the farming and gardening operations of the Indians are being conducted on a larger scale?

Mr. SIFTON. In this case we receive from each of the agencies a requisition and of course as the farming operations increase on the part of some of the reserves we require to get an increased amount for seed. I may just give my hon. friend an illustration of the way in which we get these requisitions. We get a requisition, for instance, from the Pelly agency, where they require 80 bushels of wheat for seed. The agent sends in a requisition based upon the fact that the Indians will have a certain amount of land prepared for crop. There is no way of keeping it at any fixed amount. A requisition will come in one year and it could not by any possibility be the same as a requisition in another year. The commissioner exercises his supervision over the matter and if he thinks the amount asked for is unreasonable he makes a recommendation to the head office and it is finally adjusted.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Are the Indians improving in their farming operations, and are they indulging in farming operations to a greater extent each year?

Mr. SIFTON. Yes, I think I may say there has been a very great improvement in the last few years. The improvement depends almost entirely on the character of the agent. We have some agents who are extremely successful and some who are not. We have from time to time to change our agents around. We find that one agent is not getting along well with a band, that he is not suited for the work which he has assigned to him and we make a change. We have had to make quite a number of changes recently. The greatest improvement that has been made in connection with the agencies in the Northwest Territories, which are under the charge of Mr. William Graham at the File Hills. He has been in the department for a number of years. He took charge some years ago and he was very successful with the Indians in the File Hills, with the result that the Indians upon that and one or two neighbouring reserves raised 65,000 bushels of wheat. He has been so successful in connection with cattle raising that we are buying a considerable number of heifers which we require for the Indians on the reserves in his inspectorate. We have made him an inspector which will enable him to extend his work to the whole inspectorate. Mr. Markel has lately been promoted to the inspector of the western division and it is hoped that he will be able to bring about a very great improvement in connection with the farming operations of the Indians in Alberta. There the Indians have very fine reserves and great scope for carrying on the business of cattle raising, and it is expected that we will be able in a short time to make them become self supporting as a result of the work that will be carried on under Mr. Markel's supervision. Upon the reserves that have been in charge of Mr. Graham the improvement has been so great that we have ceased to distribute rations to the Indians as was formerly the custom. In Manitoba the improvement is not so marked. The scope for improvement is not so great there. I am not able to speak with the same degree of positiveness as to the improvement there, but in the Territories generally speaking there has been a very considerable improvement.

Indians—Manitoba and Northwest Territories—live stock, $40,395.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. There is a very large increase for live stock.

Mr. SIFTON. I will give my hon. friend a statement of the purchases to be made and which are to be paid out of the vote which is asked for here. We require for the Northwest Territories 8 stallions, 14 oxen, 72 bulls, 1,036 heifers. We are estimating for the oxen $50 to $80 per head, bulls $75 to $125 per head, stallions $250 to $350 per head, heifers 27 to 28 per head. As to the stallions two are for the Piegan reserve, two for the Blood, two for the Blackfeet, one for the Duck Lake reserve, and one for the Touchwood Hills reserve. It has been arranged that the stallions shall be bought locally by the agents because we find that range bred stallions are more satisfactory. Of the oxen four are required for Moose Mountain, 6 for Pelly, 1 for Berens river, 1 for Fort Frances, 2 for Clandeboye. Of the bulls we require 4 for the Manitowapah agency, 2 for the Pas, 1 for Birtle, 1 for Assiniboine, 2 for Qu'Appelle, 2 for Touchwood, and 3 for Pelly, 2 for Duck lake, and 2 for Carlton, 2 at Sadie lake, 3 at Edmonton, 2 at Hobbema, 6 for Blackfoot, 30 for Bloods, 10 for Piegan. Of heifers we require 1,136 altogether, 200 for the Piegan, 30 for Blackfeet, 6 for Assiniboine, and 900 for the Blood reserve. The members of the committee will see from the statement I have made that quite a number of cattle are going to the reserves in the Alberta district where we are trying under the department's supervision to get the Indians to engage in cattle raising to such an extent that they will soon become self-supporting. So far as direct dependence on the government is concerned, though a comparatively short time ago they were rather backward, they are improving very much in their temper and spirit. There is great difficulty in getting them to engage in farming operations, but it is hoped that they can be rendered self-supporting by keeping cattle.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Who purchases these animals on behalf of the government, and who fixes the prices?

Mr. SIFTON. The prices are fixed by officers of the department, in most cases. I will give my hon. friend, if he likes, a statement showing where they have been purchased; and the prices paid for them.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I would like to have that, because I know that many have been supplied by individuals, and unless the matter is thrown open to competition, these gentlemen may get a good deal more for their animals than they are really worth.

Mr. SIFTON. My hon. friend will see that it would be practically impossible to buy cattle as you would buy tea or coffee, which is bought at so much a pound for a certain specified quality. An animal must be valued according to its worth. The cattle bought in the west were personally inspected by Mr. Markle, who is a good judge of live stock. A considerable number were bought at the Calgary spring sale, where the stock breeders sold the animals by auction. Mr. Markle bought 33 bulls at an average price of $117. That was lower than we paid for the animals bought farther east, taking freight into consideration. He bought six stallions at $160 a piece.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I presume most of these high-priced animals are thoroughbreds ?

Mr. SIFTON. All pedigreed.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The object, then, in supplying the Indians with these well-bred animals is to improve their stock, and not merely to increase the number ?

Mr. SIFTON. Both to increase the number and improve the quality.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The reason I desired to know who on behalf of the government made these purchases was this. For instance. I mentioned the other day that a certain gentleman who is now the Liberal candidate in one of the constituencies supplied many animals to the government. As he gets a pretty good price for his stock when sold to private individuals, I presume he would not get less from the government ; and I wanted to know how the government purchased the stock, who inspected them and who fixed the prices.

Mr. SIFTON. Last year we thought we would make an improvement in the method of purchasing by placing Mr. Markle in charge of all the purchases in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. That is Mr. Markle who used to be at Birtle ?

Mr. SIFTON. Yes.

Indians, Manitoba and Northwest Territories —provisions, clothing, ammunition, twine, medicines and medical attendance for Indians, $173,068.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Would the hon. minister state how much has been expended under each head ?

Mr. SIFTON. Last year the estimate was $193,472. The great effort this year has been to make a reduction in this estimate, the purpose being to supply a relatively large amount for the purchase of cattle. This item is made up of the following : Food supplies, clothing, ammunition and twine, medicine, medical attendance, hospitals, freighting supplies, and some special amounts aggregating altogether $9,000 or $10,000. The reduction shown refers principally to the supplies of beef and flour on the Sarcee, Stony, Blood and Peigan reserves. The decrease on the Blood reserve is $8,019; on the Blackfoot, $2,940; on the Peigan, $936; on the Sarcee, $987; and on the Stony reserve, $474. The reduction is in pursuance of the attempt to reduce the food supplies to the Indians, and endeavour to make them see the necessity of making themselves self supporting. These supplies are in large quantity and they are all purchased by public tender.

Indians—Manitoba and Northwest Territories—triennial clothing, $2,698.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Are these supplied under treaty ?

Mr. SIFTON. Yes ; regular distribution under treaty.

Indians—Manitoba and Northwest Territories—day, boarding, and industrial schools, $303,292.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I wish to ask the minister if the policy hitherto followed by the government with regard to industrial schools is being changed ? I understand that one of these industrial schools in Manitoba and another one in the Territories, are being closed, and that boarding schools on the reserve are substituted in lieu thereof. Is that a new policy on the part of the government ?

Mr. SIFTON. I have discussed this question of industrial schools in the House several times before, and I stated what my views were. My views have not changed, and the policy of the department is just the same as it was when I explained it on a previous occasion. My own belief is that the system of industrial schools as I found it in operation when I took office, is not the best, or the most effective, or the most economic way of improving the condition of the Indians. I thought the system adopted was an artificial system. I found that Indian boys and girls were being kept in these schools in some cases until they were 23, 24 and 25 years of age. The Dominion of Canada is not under any obligation to conduct a system of education for an Indian tribe, under which the education of each child becomes so expensive and so artificial. I put in force a rule that children were not to remain in the schools after the age of eighteen, and that rule has been followed except in a very few cases where for special reasons it has been relaxed. We have substituted a less elaborate system ; a system of what we call boarding schools where a larger number of children can for a shorter time be educated more economically and generally more effectively. What we desire to do is not to give a highly specialized education to half a dozen out of a large band of Indians, but if possible to distribute over the whole band a moderate amount of education and intelligence, so that the general status of the band would be raised. While some of those engaged on behalf of the different churches in Indian education, were not of my view at the time, I believe they have pretty well come to that opinion now. I did not think it was justifiable for me to change the policy which had been deliberately entered upon and in regard to which a large amount of money had been expended, so I stated to the House that while on the whole I held that view, I was not prepared to discontinue the industrial schools which existed. I thought I was bound to continue them much on the existing lines, but that the rule should be enforced that pupils should not remain to an advanced age. I held, however, that in the establishment of further institutions, the principle should be followed of conducting a boarding rather than an industrial school system. My hon. friend (Mr. LaRivière) is probably aware, that the authorities of St. Boniface industrial school have found that the principle I have advocated was the principle which should be applied in the carrying out their work, because the department accepted a proposition of theirs by which they agreed to take off our hands at a valuation the buildings and the property of the industrial school at St. Boniface, and to build three boarding schools in lieu thereof. They agreed with my opinion that the boarding schools, where a less elaborate and lengthy system of education would be carried on and a larger number of children benefited (these schools being placed at different points upon the reserve) was much more beneficial than the carrying on of one industrial school at St. Boniface. We are carrying on the industrial school which exists at the present time. Our desire is not to multiply them, but to inaugurate boarding schools wherever additional educational facilities are required. Experience shows that in order to get really effective results, the boarding school must be resorted to. In some places where we have day schools, and where we cannot incur the expense of a boarding school, the results are not as satisfactory as we could hope.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Do I understand that the boarding schools are as effective as the industrial schools? I would remind the hon. gentleman that the education of the Indians does not merely consist in teaching them to read and write, but that in addition they have to be civilized. In that case if you keep the Indians within their reserve I am afraid the civilization of the Indians will not be attained. I believe that the best way to civilize them is to remove them from their reserves and get them to lead a civilized life at least for a certain length of time. I fear that the civilization of the Indians will not be attained by keeping them on their reserves, removed from the knowledge and influence of civilization. I do not think that the question of cost should be taken into consideration in such a cause, and I fear that we are going back on a system that was found to be good. I see from the last report of the deputy superintendent of Indian Affairs that he proclaimed the system of industrial schools to be far better than the other system on that very account.

Mr. SIFTON. The result of my observation and study in connection with the industrial schools was this, that the attempt to give a highly civilized education to the Indian child, keeping him in a school until he was 22 or 23 years of age and attempting to teach him a trade, was practically a failure. I have no hesitation in saying—we may as well be frank—that the Indian cannot go out from a school, making his own way and compete with the white man. Experience shows that when you give an Indian every possible chance until he is 22 or 23 years of age you cannot afford to turn him loose to look after himself; you will get no satisfactory result, an Indian cannot succeed in competition with other people. That was why the teachers in some of the schools insisted on keeping the pupils after the age when they ought to be sent out. When I asked: Why do you keep these pupils here? The answer was: We did not know what to do with them. If they go out they must either attempt to compete with other people or go back to the reserve. I have no doubt myself that a system between the day school and the industrial school, whereby any child would be taken in at a moderately early age and kept for four or five years of training in the school, is the system under which you will get the best results. I may say that in the inspectorate of Mr. Graham, the Qu'Appelle inspectorate, this system has been inaugurated. Mr. Graham has set apart a portion of the reserve where the pupils from the industrial and boarding schools are encouraged to settle and take up allotments, so that they have practically a separate settlement, one being alongside the other they have a certain amount of encouragement to continue a civilized life. That system has been in operation for a comparatively short time, but Mr. Graham is satisfied it is going to prove successful and I myself am satisfied on general principles that it will probably be the most successful way of bringing about a higher state of civilization amongst them.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Might I ask the hon. minister if it is the intention to continue the Elkhorn industrial school and are the trades still being taught to the Indian pupils in that school?

Mr. SIFTON. No change has been made in the Elkhorn school except that we are trying to cut down the expenses. The expense has been very high, I think unreasonably high, and there has been a contest between the head office and the commissioner in regard to keeping it down. The expense was cut down a little during the past year. My hon. friend will find in the report of the department the following statement :

We are encouraging the boys to take up agriculture, as we feel that this is the most important industry that can be taught them. The boys are instructed in carpentry, painting, bootmaking, baking, farming and gardening. A number are also constantly employed in the general work about the institution, and in keeping the grounds in order.

The girls are taught cooking, housework, laundry work, dressmaking, plain sewing, knitting and crocheting. They perform all the necessary household duties, in all of which they show great aptitude.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I notice an item on page J—71 of the Auditor General's Report :

Legal expenses, T. G. Mathers, Attorney General vs. Garrison.

I do not ask for an explanation of this item for legal expenses on account of the amount, which is very small, but I would like to know the cause of that legal expense being incurred. Was it in connection with the case which I brought to the attention of the minister a few years ago where Garrison had purchased a printing plant from the industrial school and sold it to a fellow-Liberal for the purpose of conducting a Liberal newspaper in the constituency of Brandon, and, having received his money, did not pay the government the original purchase money ?

Mr. SIFTON. My hon. friend I am afraid is responsible in a way for the item.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I hope so.

Mr. SIFTON. He brought to my attention the fact that a printing press had been sold and not paid for. I gave directions to have proceedings taken to recover the amount and this is the expense of suing Garrison. We found, however, that he was not worth anything, and we got nothing.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Have you anything else beside the judgment ?

Mr. SIFTON. No.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Have you the cash ?

Mr. SIFTON. No.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. That is a remarkable statement. Several years ago I brought this to the attention of the minister. When the printing trade was being done away with in the industrial school a printing plant was left on the hands of the government. A Mr. Thompson desired to lease this plant from the government for the purpose of conducting a paper. He had many advertisements contracted for by the tradesmen of the town and the government agent there leased the plant to Mr. Thompson with the stipulation that he could cancel the contract by giving six months' notice. Thompson, however, was to have the first option of purchase. In a few months Thompson was notified by the Indian commissioner that at the end of six months his contract would cease. He desired to purchase the plant, but the government refused to sell it and it turned out that the reason was they had arranged with Garrison, the editor of a Liberal paper in Virden, to take over this plant. Garrison purchased the plant from the government, but he sold it to another gentleman, Mr. Wildman, who is now using it in the publication of the Griswold 'Ledger,' in the hon. gentleman's own constituency. Wildman paid Garrison, but Garrison has not paid the government to this day. I brought this matter to the attention of the government on several occasions and two or three years ago the acting minister (Mr. Sutherland) promised to investigate the case. I do not know if he has done so, but it seems strange if an investigation has not been held. The attention of the government has been drawn to this thing several years in succession, but the furthest advance they have made to the present day is the expenditure of $21 for legal expenses to get judgment against the man who sold the plant and pocketed the proceeds. It is, I say, a remarkable statement and it seems strange that Garrison, who has been running a paper in the interests of the hon. gentleman in the town of Virden, is not worth the few hundred dollars for which he sold that plant. It is a direct loss to the government. The judgment, I am sure, will not put anything in the treasury and I think the government are deserving of severe condemnation for the very great laxity they have exhibited in connection with the collection of this money, especially since they erred in the first place in refusing to Thompson the opportunity to purchase the plant when he was willing to pay for it. I would like some explanation from the minister.

Mr. SIFTON. The first time the hon. gentleman brought the matter up I promised an inquiry, and I think I brought the correspondence down several years ago. My hon. friend will remember that the late Indian commissioner, desiring to close up the office, gave instructions to have the press sold. It was sold to this man, Mr. Garrison, The first time my hon. friend called my attention to it I said no proceedings were taken, but when he called my attention to it again I found that proceedings had been taken, and we got a judgment. The stock did not realize the amount, and consequently we had to collect the money.

Mr. CLARKE. Could'nt you get the press back?

Mr. SIFTON. The press disappeared.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The press has gone into another town where it is published in the interests of the hon. minister, so he has now the privilege of having two papers supporting him at the expense of the public treasury. When Mr. Thompson asked the Indian commissioner why he was not permitted to purchase the printing press, the Indian commissioner put all the onus on the minister, and said his instructions were from headquarters to sell the plant to Mr. Garrison, not to lease it to Mr. Thompson. When I brought the matter up in the House a few session ago, the minister put the onus back on the Indian commissioner. I think the minister is the guilty party.

Mr. SIFTON. Whatever my course may have been in relation to the matter I am prepared to take the responsibility.

Indians—Manitoba and Northwest Territories—surveys, $7,000.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I desire to ask for an explanation in reference to the Crooked Lake Reserve. I asked the minister a few weeks ago if it was the intention of the government to throw that open to settlement in the near future, but his reply was not a definite one. The reason I am asking for a definite reply is because representations have been made to the settlers, residents and intending locators in that portion of the country, that this reserve, or a portion of it, will be opened in the near future, and the people there are very anxious to know whether it is the intention of the government to throw that open.

Mr. SIFTON. I understand the question covers the lease that lies north of the town of Broadview. The people there represented that they were desirous that a portion of the territory north of the town should be opened to settlement. The officers of the department have been for some years past desirous of procuring the consent of the Indians to the opening of a portion of that reserve, not the whole of it, perhaps a third or a quarter of it. We have not yet formally submitted the question to them, because as my hon. friend will know, if you submit the question of the surrender of their land to an Indian band they will vote against it, and it will be impossible to get them to agree to it after that. They probably consider that it is a point of honour with them to stick to the decision that they have taken. It is therefore extremely imprudent to submit a question of that kind to them unless you feel sure that you are likely to get a favourable decision. In this particular case the officers at Winnipeg have instructions to take such steps as may be deemed desirable. The agent is moving in that direction, and will ask for their consent just as soon as he has reason to expect a favourable conclusion. We have in that case, and one or two others, a statement of the disadvantages under which the towns are labouring from a portion of the surrounding country being practically uninhabited Indian reserve. I understand it is very desirable to get a settlement if it can be obtained.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I understand the government have adopted a policy whereby all these little patches of land known as reserves may be thrown open, in the more settled parts of the province of Manitoba and the Territories and an equivalent found elsewhere. They are an impediment to colonization, and are not in the best interests of the Indians themselves. It is not desirable that the Indians should live in the midst of a settlement, because they will not improve, and they will contract all the bad habits that are practiced by their neighbours. In fact I see by reports here from all these small reserves near ordinary settlements that complaints are made by the agents that cases of intoxication from the use of liquor are becoming much more numerous among the Indians. But a step in the right direction has been taken with respect to the Indian reserve at Roseau River. A portion of the reserve has been thrown open for settlement. I see it stated that the land was sold at public auction, and it realized somewhere in the neighbourhood of $13 per acre. It is valuable land for settlers, but useless for the Indians because they do not cultivate it. If the balance of the Indians at Roseau River were removed and the rest of the reservation thrown open for settlement, it would be in the best interest of the country and of the Indians themselves. I see by the report of last year, that of $99,000 realized from the sale of that portion of the Indian reserve at Roseau one-tenth has been spent and applied in the interest of the Indians themselves. I do not know that there are any records of that expenditure, but I would like to know what was bought with the money.

Mr. SIFTON. Just a word with regard to what the hon. gentleman (Mr. LaRivière) says as to the general question of policy. Whatever may be deemed desirable or otherwise, the fact of the matter is that the Indians own these lands just as much as my hon. friend (Mr. LaRivière) owns any piece of land for which he has a title in fee simple. The faith of the government of Canada is pledged to the maintenance of the title of these Indians in that land. Under the arrangement that we have made with them, our faith is pledged that we will not disturb them in the occupation of the land which has been reserved for them, except upon their own consent being given in a specified form. We follow the policy of getting the consent wherever we can when we think it will not interfere with the means of the livelihood of the Indians; for we realize, as my hon. friend does, that it would be to the interest of the Indians that the land should be thrown open for settlement and sold, and that they should be paid the interest on the proceeds rather than keep the land while putting it to no use. But my hon. friend recognizes the fact that we have to proceed in a diplomatic way and get the Indians to surrender their lands when they are willing to do so. The officers of the department, having constant dealings with the Indians, know how far it is safe to go in each particular case. In the case to which my hon. friend refers, that of the Roseau reserve, after urgent requests had been made by the settlers, with some difficulty the inspector, Mr. Marlatt, I think it was, secured the consent of the Indians to sell a portion of that reserve. Under the law, the Indians are entitled to be paid in cash ten per cent of the proceeds of the land sold for distribution among themselves. I presume that the original intention of putting that in the statute was to offer a sort of inducement to the Indians to sell, for the Indian, like some whitemen, has a fairly good appreciation of cash in hand, and the fact that they were going to secure something might be an inducement to them to surrender, when possibly they would not surrender if they were not going to get something immediately. The rest of the money goes to the fund held for their purposes.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Was that distribution of ten per cent made in money or in kind?

Mr. SIFTON. Part of the money was paid, the accountant tells me, in cash and the balance in goods, which were purchased by Mr. Marlatt at their request. And Mr. Marlatt makes a report, which will appear in detail in the Auditor General's Report.

Indians—Manitoba and Northwest Territories—Sioux, $5,659.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What is the explanation of that item?

Mr. SIFTON. The Sioux Indians are at the Birtle agency, Assiniboine agency, Qu'Appelle agency, Carlton agency, and a few in the Portage la Prairie agency.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Has there been any treaty with the Sioux Indians?

Mr. SIFTON. I do not think so. They have not been recognized as Canadian Indians. These are the Indians, or the descendents of the Indians, who came over from the United States at the time of the Minnesota massacre. They are not recognized as Canadian Indians, but the government thought at the time that, rather than have them in a discontented state, while not paying them annuities, and while no treaty obligations exist, it would be well to set apart reserves for them, appoint agents and furnish certain small supplies to enable them to get along. There about 600 of them altogether.

Indians—Manitoba and Northwest Territories—Mills, saw and grist, $4,327.

Mr. SIFTON. There is an increase here of $2,065. This includes the establishment of a saw-mill at Pas agency and a contribution for a saw-mill at the Norway House agency. These mills are for the purpose of cutting lumber, and are operated by the Indians themselves.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Do they cut timber on the reserve?

Mr. SIFTON. Yes, where there is timber available on the reserve; but where there is no timber on the reserve, I give them a permit to cut on Dominion lands.

Mr. WILSON. Is this merely to pay for the building of the mills, or is it to pay for their operation?

Mr. SIFTON. At the Pas agency we give $1,800 for a saw-mill, consisting of a 25-horse-power engine, with shafting, belting and all the necessary outfit.

Mr. WILSON. For the mill alone?

Mr. SIFTON. Yes. Then we make a contribution of $1,000 for establishing a mill at Norway House. The Indians themselves will pay the rest.

Mr. WILSON. What will the one at Norway House cost altogether?

Mr. SIFTON. As it is a long way to Norway House it may be a little expensive—$2,000 or $2,200 delivered there. The Indians at Norway House are outside the treaty limits, but they are fairly well advanced. They are pretty well civilized—as much so, perhaps, as any other Indians in Manitoba. The rest of the vote consists of small items for repairs and supplies in connection with the mills we have at the other agencies.

Mr. WILSON. How many mills are there altogether?

Mr. SIFTON. Ten altogether.

Mr. WILSON. Are they all sawmills?

Mr. SIFTON. There are three sawmills and six combined saw and grist mills and one grist mill.

Indians—Manitoba and Northwest Territories—general expenses and management, $166,852.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Is the increased estimate this year owing to the increased cost of managment resulting from an increase in salaries and other expenses in connection with the management, or what particularly constitutes the increase in the estimates?

Mr. SIFTON. The total increase is $7,561. There are the following increases in salaries in the commissioner's office : Mr. McKenna, from $2,400 to $2,600 and Mr. Paget, from $1,700 to $1,800. That vote will not be required at all. These estimates were made up last fall. The main estimates are made up before the beginning of the new year. I have since decided to remove Mr. Paget to the inside service and a special vote will have to be taken in the supplementary estimates for his salary. Mr. Lash is increased from $1,700 to $1,900, Mr. Betournay from $1,200 to $1,250, Mr. Jean from $1,000 to $1,100, Mr. Richardson from $900 to $950 and a stenographer from $480 to $550. The increases amounting to $770 altogether. In treaty No. 8 we have an inspector named Mr. H. A. Conroy.—Treaty No. 8, the last treaty that was made and comprising the Indians away north in the district of Slave Lake. Mr. Conroy is the inspector in charge of that inspectorate and takes out the money to pay the annuity payments that are made and makes an annual trip for that purpose. We are increasing his pay from $1,800 to $2,000. Then we are putting up buildings at Norway House agency costing $4,000. On the Pelly agency we are increasing the farmer's salary from $600 to $660, appointing a farmer at Cote's reserve at $600 and putting up new agency buildings costing $4,000, the increase at the Pelly agency being $4,660. At the Crooked Lake agency we are increasing the farmer's salary from $600 to $660. At the Saddle Lake agency we are increasing the farmer's salary from $540 to $600, at Edmonton from $480 to $540, at the Stony agency we are increasing the agents salary from $900 to $1,000, the Sarcee agency we are increasing the agent's salary from $1,000 to $1,100, at the Blackfeet agency we are increasing the farmer's salary from $600 to $660, these increases totalling altogether $10,170. There are items in the estimates of last year amounting to $2,609, which are not required and this makes the net increase $7,561.

Mr. CLARKE. When the item of 'schools, day, boarding and industrial,' was up, I intended to ask the hon. minister as to the percentage of Indian children that pass through the Indian schools who retain the veneer of civilization which they receive there ? I visited the Indian school at Brandon, was very much interested in the work, and would like to know from the hon. minister if these children after passing through the school are sent back to the reservation, and if so how many of them lapse again ? How many of them retain the polish they get in the schools, and what becomes of them?

Mr. SIFTON. I could not off-hand give the hon. gentleman the exact statistics.

Mr. CLARKE. I just want the hon. gentleman to state generally.

Mr. SIFTON. Speaking generally the result has been that the pupils of the industrial schools have not been able to go out in ordinary life and compete with white men. I have stated my opinion as to what was the result and what was likely to be the result of this form of Indian education. I am perfectly satisfied that you cannot take the child of the ordinary prairie Indian, put him in the industrial school, keep him there until he is twenty-one years of age and turn him loose to make his living amongst white men. He has not the physical, mental or moral get-up to enable him to compete. He cannot do it. The result has been that to a large extent the Indians who have been educated in this way have gone back to the reserves. I do not think that this work has been in any way lost because I can say to my hon. friend from my own knowledge, having lived in the Northwest since 1876, that there is the most marvellous change in the general character of the Indian bands.

Mr. CLARKE. Is that the result of the infusion of educated civilized Indians into the reservation ?

Mr. SIFTON. I think that is very largely the result of the educational work that is being carried on. I think we have got less per dollar from the money we have expended in the industrial schools than we have from any of the other schools. I believe in the day and boarding schools. We have got a great deal more for the money which has been expended on these schools. While we have not educated them to such a high point, we have infused a great amount of education amongst a larger number. A very promising experiment is being made by Mr. Graham, the inspector of the Qu'Appelle agencies, who has been most successful in bringing about a better state of affairs amongst the Indians under his charge. He has made good practical farmers out of them ; they raised 65,000 bushels of wheat last year ; we are buying cattle from them for supplying other reserves ; they are most successful, and we have ceased the distribution of supplies amongst them. Mr. Graham has adopted this plan : He has set aside locations on certain portions of the reserve, and he encourages the young men and the young women who come from the schools to marry and settle down upon these locations. He endeavours to see that they are not interfered with by the rest of the Indians. As a matter of practice, one of the most serious difficulties in improving an Indian band is that just as soon as an Indian couple show an inclination to thrift and gather a little property around them, all their Indian relations think it is not necessary for them to work just in proportion as this couple is prosperous. Their relations take their supplies, and consequently they have no encouragement to accumulate property. Mr. Graham has been most successful in this experiment. A few years ago I put him in charge of three different agencies and lately I have promoted him to be inspector, so that he has a larger scope for his activity. I believe Mr. Graham will solve the problem if it can be solved, and he will solve it by endeavouring to promote settlement in a separate locality of those who come from the schools, and where they can have as much higher type of civilized life than they could if they settled amongst the other Indians.

Indians, British Columbia—salaries, $21,540.

Mr. EARLE. There is an increase of $500 here over the vote of last year.

Mr. SIFTON. That is explained by an increase of $300 in the salary of Mr. W. MacLaughlan, senior clerk in the commissioner's office in Victoria, and an increase of $200 in the salary of Mr. Stevens, of the same office. These increases are made upon the report of Mr. Vowell, the superintendent. Mr. MacLaughlan was appointed in 1891 and Mr. Stevens in 1900.

Indians, British Columbia—relief, $8,000.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the cause of the increase of $3,500 in this vote ?

Mr. SIFTON. Mr. Vowell, the superintendent, reports that the vote in previous years did not cover the expenditure, and that this amount more approximates the outlay. Mr. Vowell says that although every effort is made by the agencies to curtail the expenditure, yet many sick and helpless Indians, without friends and relatives, would be in a very bad state if it were not for the kindly interest taken in their welfare by the department. The fact is that in a province like British Columbia, when population advances we come more into touch with the Indian tribes at different places, and our officers become cognizant of cases of distress that did not come under their attention before.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Are the British Columbia Indians increasing in number ?

Mr. SIFTON. The number is practically stationary.

Indians, British Columbia—day schools, $10,000.

Mr. EARLE. How many of these schools are there ?

Mr. SIFTON. Thirty-three.

Indians—industrial and boarding schools, $78,550.

Mr. EARLE. How many of these schools are there in British Columbia ?

Mr. SIFTON. Seventeen.

Mr. EARLE. What is the explanation of the reduction of $3,100 in this vote ?

Mr. SIFTON. Last year we voted several sums for building and repairs at some of the schools, and we do not require that vote again this year. We have this year increased the allowance for the Indian boys and girls at Metlakatla, Port Simpson and Alberni, and the increase deducted from the decrease leaves the reduction $3,100.

Indians, British Columbia—travelling expenses, $5,600.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. For whom is this expense incurred ?

Mr. SIFTON. It covers the travelling expenses of all the agents and the superintendent of the staff. There is no separate appropriation for each agent.

Indians—British Columbia—office and miscellaneous (including hospitals, irrigation, dyking and suppression of liquour traffic), $14,620.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What is the cause of the increase ?

Mr. SIFTON. This is made up as follows : Contingencies, and unforeseen expenses in connection with the Indian office at Victoria, $2,600 ; grants to hospitals, $2,500 ; to provide for the prevention of the sale of intoxicants to Indians and the punishment of offenders, $1,500 ; to provide for dyking and irrigation of land, $5,000 ; for agent's residence at Hazelton, Babine Indian agency, $5,000. The item of contingencies is intended to cover all contingencies at the Indian office at Victoria and the different agencies, such as repairs, light, rent, fuel, &c. In addition to the office at Victoria, there are nine agencies. The amount is not more than sufficient to meet the requirements. It is the same as that of last year. The item for hospitals explains itself. The number of patients treated during the year was : at Lytton, 298 ; at Port Simpson, 70 ; in the case of the others, the details are not given. The vote for dyking and irrigation is taken for the purpose of enabling the agents to undertake small works of that character where they are necessary in order to enable the agents to engage in agricultural pursuits.

Mr. EARLE. Where is it proposed to carry on the irrigation and dyking ?

Mr. SIFTON. My officers tell me that this vote of $5,000 is taken from year to year. There are no definite plans for the work of this year. The work done last year was at Cowichan on the Cowichan river, amounting to about $500.

Mr. WILSON. We ought to have an explanation of the kind of work done, and why the vote is taken every year and not expended.

Mr. SIFTON. My hon. friend is perfectly right. I overlooked the fact that there was not a detailed statement of the work required to be done with this vote. I have no objection to the committee reducing it, though perhaps it had better be allowed to stand. It can only be expended on such a requisition as we had before from the superintendent showing the necessity of the work. I will see that it is overhauled next year, and that we have a detailed statement of what is required.

Mr. EARLE. I would like to ask the minister if any progress has been made in the removal of the Indians from the Songhee reserve.

Mr. SIFTON. Not a bit. We are not a particle further than we were before. When I last spoke about it in this House my hon. friend will remember that I went to an enormous amount of trouble and a good deal of expense to get the matter in to shape, and we were in a position to make a bargain with the Indians, but unfortunately we could not come to terms with the then local government. The local government at the last moment set up a claim which made it impossible for us to carry out the arrangement. I am quite prepared at the present moment to carry out the proposition I made then, but unless the local authorities are willing to co-operate with us we are unable to act. I am quite prepared to instruct the officers to go on and carry out the proposition made then, but unless they co-operate we cannot do that. I am satisfied that if the local government would join in the proposition I made some years ago it could be carried out.

Mr. EARLE. I noticed some time ago that the local government had taken steps to select a site for the Indians and that there was a possibility of the matter being settled.

Mr. SIFTON. They have not given us any advice as to that.

Indians—Yukon—relief and medical attendance, $8,000.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. That is an increase of $3,000.

Mr. SIFTON. The number of Indians actually located in the Yukon Territory is estimated at 702. The expenditure for destitute Indians for 1902-3 was $6,118.40, but accounts remaining unpaid on the 30th of June would bring this to over $8,000. I may say that we have no Indian service in the Yukon and we simply spend this money under the direction of the commissioner of the territory. In connection with the vote of $5,000 to provide education for the Indians of the Yukon, I may say that last year we spent under this head $2,029.66. The department has not established any per capita rate for boarding schools or day schools within the territory, but last year gave a total grant in consideration of certain educational work being done in the district. The work is principally carried out by the Church of England at Forty-Mile, Caribou Crossing, Selkirk and Moosehide. The number of pupils enrolled at these schools is 100. The most important school is at Forty-Mile and is a combination of day and boarding school. We have not put up any buildings, but simply give the Church of England a small grant for this work.

Indians generally, P. H. Bryce, medical inspector, part of salary, $1,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This item requires explanation.

Mr. SIFTON. The increase is caused by the appointment of Dr. Bryce, late secretary of the Ontario Provincial Board of Health. I have appointed him as chief medical inspector of the Department of the Interior and Indian Affairs. A portion of his salary, $2,200, is charged to the department of the Interior, and $1,000 to the Department of Indian Affairs. The intention is that his time shall be divided between the two departments, and this $1,000 is therefore charged against the Department of Indian Affairs for the time he devotes to its service. The intention is that Dr. Bryce shall take a tour of inspection and endeavour to improve the medical attendance and the sanitary arrangements on the various Indian reserves. Hon. gentlemen who have taken any interest in the discussion of Indians affairs from year to year, particularly in the discussion of medical attendance on Indian reserves, must have observed that this question came up repeatedly. It was largely in consequence of these discussions and the opinions I formed upon them that I decided to endeavour to bring about some improvement in that direction. While we have an efficient service as far as medical attendance is concerned, there was a lack of supervision by a medical authority; the only supervision that was possible heretofore was given by officers in the department who are not medical men and therefore I thought it was desirable that we should have a medical man to make visits of inspection and report all necessary improvements. I appointed Dr. Bryce after a good deal of consideration, and I have no doubt from the experience we have already had with him that he is a very efficient officer. I am sorry to say that up to the present time, he has not had very much time for the Indian Department. This of course is the busy season with the Immigration Department, and as he has had to reorganize a system of thorough medical inspection of the immigrants of whom we are receiving a very large number, his time has been fully occupied. However, after the busy season in connection with immigration is over, he will devote some months to improving the medical service on Indian reserves. The item of $1,000 for salary is, for a portion of his salary and the increase of $1,000 in the next item in connection with travelling expenses is to pay for his travelling expenses.

Mr. CLANCY. I am afraid the hon. gentleman will not cure the infirmity of his appointments by the appointment of Dr. Bryce. The hon. gentleman has been a long time in his department and he knows the Indian character very well. He knows perfectly well that nothing disturbes matters upon a reserve so much as a change of physicians. It takes the Indians a long time to become acquainted with their physician, but if they once have confidence in him then they will call upon him. If they have not that confidence they will allow their children and wives to remain without any medical assistance.

Now, the hon. gentleman has been making changes in some of the reservations, and appointing men on purely party grounds. I am very sorry to learn that party spirit has gone so far that the hon. minister feels bound to yield to the pressure brought to bear on him and to make these undesirable changes. I am personally aware that some of these changes are not in the interest of the Indians. Without offering criticism on the appointment of Dr. Bryce, I can scarcely see how he is going to remedy the difficulty the hon. minister refers to. I take the case of the appointment at Walpole Island. Dr. Mitchell was the medical attendant there. But I believe he was guilty of being a Conservative, and that was sufficient reason, in the opinion of the hon. minister, why he should be decapitated, and the hon. gentleman did not hesitate at the operation. Another gentleman was put in the position, a gentleman against whom nothing can be said. But the change meant that the Indians went on employing the physician they had been accustomed to employ. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) would cease dismissing Conservative physicians he would not find it necessary to try this new remedy of his under Dr. Bryce. I would like to know in what particular he expects that Dr. Bryce will be able to overcome the difficulty that the minister himself has created. The hon. minister tells us that there is a good service. If he is convinced of that, why Dr. Bryce? It would look a little as if the additional $1,000 for Indians is a pretext, rather than a reason, for giving Dr. Bryce an addition to his salary. It is a rather ingenious thing to divide that salary between the Indians and immigration, especially when the hon. minister tells us that Dr. Bryce cannot attend to one of them, to say nothing of giving attention to both.

Mr. SIFTON. The appointment to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) principally refers to was made a good many years ago——

Mr. CLANCY. Not so many.

Mr. SIFTON. Well, six or seven years ago, and the Indians have had time, since then, to apply my hon. friend's theory and become acquainted with their doctor. I will not go into a lengthy discussion of the case, because my hon. friend and I have had it out already several times in this House. Leaving that aside, I think my hon. friend will admit that there is room for a considerable amount of systematic work in the way of improving the sanitary conditions on the Indian reserves. The question was brought up frequently in this House, especially last year in connection with the Brantford reserve. After that discussion I secured the services of Dr. Bryce, who was not then an officer of the department, to investigate and make recommendations as to what should be done. After considering his report and going into the matter with my officers, I came to the conclusion that we could well afford to incur the additional expense involved in engaging a competent medical inspector, who would take hold of these questions, look at them from a scientific standpoint and, with the assistance of local physicians, make regulations and provide instruction for the Indian councils. For, in many cases the councils of the Indian bands would be perfectly willing to make sanitary regulations and, to a certain extent, appreciate and carry them out. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) shakes his head. Upon this very Brantford reserve they have a board of health amongst the Indians, and they have sanitary regulations which the Indians endeavour to carry out. But it is largely by reason of the fact that there is no competent superior officer to point out the difficulties and the means of remedying them, and also to give direction and encouragement, that better work is not done. I am satisfied that, in the course of three or four years—of course, it must be a matter of time—the difficulties I refer to would be fairly well overcome. With a competent man undertaking it—and we have the right man in Dr. Bryce—we shall make satisfactory improvement.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) says the matter to which I referred has been pretty well threshed out. It is not so very long ago that this change of appointment was made, but I must say it was carried out at the very first opportunity that offered for work of that kind. I have been waiting for six years for the hon. gentleman to offer either an apology or a reason for what he did, but up to this time I have not had either. As to the sanitary condition, that is a thing much to be desired. But the hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that, while you may have a board of health, it will do no good if it is a board of health only in name. It is a very difficult matter to enforce any sanitary regulations on Indian reserves. I am well persuaded that, no matter how laudable the hon. gentleman's object may be, he will find himself entirely helpless in the enforcement of any sanitary regulation. Those who know the Indians and their condition, realize that long after the hon. gentleman has ceased to do work in the department, there will be little change in the condition of the Indians in that direction. I had hoped that the hon. gentleman would be able to give us some more practical reason for employing Dr. Bryce—a very estimable gentleman, I may say, but that fact alone does not justify him in being placed in a service where no substantial good can be shown as likely to arise from it. Men who have some knowledge of the Indian character will expect but little to come from the scheme that the hon. gentleman has outlined. I suppose that the only thing that we can do is to assume that the hon. minister has been more upright in this than he was in the dismissal of the Tory doctors in the past.

Mr. WILSON. I see that $1,000 of Dr. Bryce's salary is charged to the Indian Department and the balance to the Interior. I see also that $1,000 is allowed here, in the Indian votes, for travelling expenses. How much will be charged against the Interior for travelling expenses ?

Mr. SIFTON. Dr. Bryce's salary will be $3,200, of which $2,200 will be charged to the Interior and $1,000 to Indians. There will be no fixed charge for travelling expense to the immigration branch—travelling expenses will be paid out of the general vote.

Mr. WILSON. You pay in travelling expenses from the Indian Department $1,000 and the balance, whatever it may be, from the Interior ?

Mr. SIFTON. I have not made myself clear. The salary is $3,200, of which we charge $1,000 to the Indian Department, because, roughly speaking, it is expected that about one-third of Dr. Bryce's time will be given to the Indians. The vote of $1,000 is taken for travelling expenses. Against this vote we charge travelling expenses, whatever they may be, in the Indian Department. If he is doing Indian work his expenses will be charged to that vote.

Mr. WILSON. And if they are more, they will be charged to the department.

Mr. SIFTON. If they are more they cannot be paid, because we won't have the money. Whenever he goes away on a trip, as he constantly does go to seaport towns, his travelling expenses are paid out of the general immigration vote.

Mr. WILSON. When the immigration matter comes up I hope the minister will be able to give us more reasons why the immigration requirements are put into a bulk vote, while the details are given in the other estimates. My own impression is that the immigration vote should be separated into details as well as the other votes.

Indians—New Brunswick—additional amount required, $1,200.

Mr. SIFTON. This is the only supplementary item that is required, and is to pay expenses incurred last year. It arises from an outbreak of small-pox that occurred in the summer of 1903 in the town of Woodstock and the county of Carleton, twenty-eight cases in all.

Mr. SCOTT. Before we leave the subject of Indians, there is a matter that I wish to bring before the attention of the committee. It may be remembered that at an early stage of this session I essayed to discuss the claim of a gentleman named Jean Louis Legaré, of Willow Bunch, who more than twenty years ago was instrumental, at the time following General Custer's war with the Indians in the American Northwest, in inducing Sitting Bull and his Indian band to leave Canadian territory and to surrender to the United States authorities. At that time I was not permitted to make a full explanation, nor do I intend to-night to deal with this matter except in the shortest possible way. Certain of the facts in connection with this matter are indisputable. It is an admitted fact that Mr. Legaré was the person instrumental in inducing Sitting Bull and his band of Indians to leave Canadian territory and go back to the United States and surrender to the United States authorities. Mr. Legaré did this at large expense to himself, with much loss of time, but chiefly in the loss of a whole year's trading supplies. He was at that time a trader at the Wood Mountain mounted police post, about 100 miles south of Moose Jaw.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What was his object in acting as he did ?

Mr. SCOTT. He was a trader in that neighbourhood, and a large number of turbulent Indians came into Mr. Legaré's neighbourhood. Originally, I suppose his object was self protection, and his interest in the other people in that neighbourhood. At all events the Indians ate up all his year's supplies, and later on, at the instance I believe, partly of the agents of the Canadian government and more largely at the instance of the agents of the United States government, Mr. Legaré, proceeded with his efforts to induce Sitting Bull to go back to the United States, and finally he was successful. He alleges that his losses in time and supplies were in the neighbourhood of $46,000. The only payment so far as I know that he has ever received, was $2,000 which the Canadian government voted him shortly after, not by way of indemnity or compensation, but merely as a recognition of the service which he had rendered, not alone to the United States government, but to the government of Canada. He filed a claim against the United States government amounting I think to about $46,000. He filed this claim 20 years ago, and last year the estimates presented to the Congress in Washington included an item of $8,000 for Mr. Legaré in satisfaction of that claim. It was only during this last session of Congress that the item was voted. The latest information I have, which came to me about six weeks ago or two months ago, was to the effect that up to that time Mr. Legaré had received no part of the $8,000 voted by Congress, and when we remember that legal agents had been in charge of the matter for so many years, the probability is that none of the money, or at least a very small portion of it, will ever reach Mr. Legaré.

That I may say, will explain why this matter is brought up here more than twenty years after the event. Up to the present time it was hoped by Mr. Legaré and his friends that the United States government would do what was proper in the way of satisfying his claim. But now he and his friends are aware of what is to be done or not done by the United States government and the fact remains that he is to be left without any substantial satisfaction as far as the United States government is concerned. About twenty years ago, in addition to the $2,000 voted by this parliament as a recognition of Mr. Legaré's services, it was intimated to him, not officially, but by men prominent in connection with the government at that time that an additional consideration would be given him in the way of a grant of a township of land. What I am going to suggest to the committee now is, that, even at this late date, now that the government and parliament know that Mr. Legaré is obtaining practically no satisfaction from the government of the United States in regard to his claim of $46,000, in view of the fact that it was promised to him even though unofficially about twenty years ago that in addition to the $2,000 that was voted to him as a recognition of his services a township of land would also be granted to him and in view of the fact that this township of land was never granted to him, the people and the parliament of this country ought to do justice to themselves as well as justice to this citizen who at that time rendered what was undoubtedly a very great service to the country at great risk and loss to himself by carrying out the promise made to him unofficially twenty years ago and giving him a grant of a township of land.

Mr. SIFTON. I do not want to pass my hon. friend's remarks over without the courtesy of a reply, but I simply want to refer my hon. friend to the fact that he has already urged these considerations upon me a very great number of times and that heretofore I have not seen my way clear to do anything in the direction which he suggests. It has been intimated that our friends are desirous of adjourning early on account of the sultry weather and if the item of civil government is passed we will adjourn.

Civil Government—Department of the Interior—salaries, including C. H. Beddoe, $2,300; F. S. Checkley, $2,000 and J. B. Bollard, $1,200, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $137,056.50.

Mr. SIFTON. The explanation of the increases is as follows:

	Increase.
Promotion of F. S. Checkley to a chief clerkship at $2,000 from the 1st class, at $1,850	$ 150
Increase to accountant, Mr. Beddoe, in addition to statutory increase	100
Promotion of Mr. A. Chisholm to 1st class	50
Promotion of P. Marchand, in addition to statutory increase	200
Promotion of Mr. G. P. Pope, in addition to statutory increase	250
Appointment of J. D. Bollard to 2nd class	1,200

Then there are the appointments of five temporary clerks to the third class who are entitled under the Civil Service Act of last year to be transferred from the temporary to the permanent list. This does not increase the staff but places these clerks under this vote. They are as follows:

Miss E. N. H. Mercer	$642 50
Mrs. A. Macmaster	600 00
Miss M. Casey	600 00
T. W. Hodgins	557 50
J. M. Larkin	512 50
	$2,912 50

Appointment of one additional junior 2nd class clerk, A. Masson, $800.

Then there are the following statutory increments:

Chief clerks: 3 at $50, 3 at $25	$ 225
Technical officers, 2 at $50	100
1st class clerks: 8 at $50, 4 at $25	500
2nd class clerks: 16 at $50, 13 at $25	1,125
Junior 2nd class clerks: 28 at $50, 1 at $37.50, 13 at $25, 3 at $12.50	1,800
Messengers, 2 at $50	100
Total	$3,850

These increases total altogether $9,512.50. Then, there are the following decreases:

Difference between salary of Mr. C. J. Steers, promoted to 1st class at $1,500, and salary of Mr. F. Clayton, deceased.	$300
Difference between salary of Mr. Connelly, promoted to 2nd class at $1,200, and salary of Mr. C. C. Rogers, deceased	200
Difference between salary of Mr. Surtees, promoted to 2nd class at $1,200, vice Mr. Steers, promoted	150
Difference between salary of Mr. Robt. Addison, to be appointed to junior 2nd class at $800, vice Mr. Connelly, promoted	150
Total decreases	$800

This makes the net increase $8,712.50. The total vote of last year was $121,691.50. The increase which takes place consequent upon the provisions of the Civil Service Act of last year is $6,652.50, making a total of $128,344, and the increases which I have just enumerated bring this up to $137,056.50.

Mr. WILSON. Perhaps the hon. minister will be able to tell us how many officials he has in the inside service altogether.

Mr. SIFTON. As nearly as my deputy can state the number is 290.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman spoke about placing some of the temporary employees on the permanent staff. I would like to ask him if any others have been put on in their places as temporary employees ?

Mr. SIFTON. No.

Mr CLANCY. There are no temporary employees in the hon. gentleman's department ?

Mr. SIFTON. I do not say that. We have not put all the temporary employees on the permanent list by any means. We have put a number of them on. When my supplementary estimates come up for consideration I will have a vote for 28 or 29 more temporary clerks who are being transferred. Under the Civil Service Act of last year you will find that the minister may, with the concurrence of his deputy, appoint any officer who is a temporary clerk to the permanent staff. We are endeavouring to work out a plan upon which that can be done satisfactorily although I am bound to say to my hon. friend that it is very difficult. We have a large number of employees all fairly efficient and to arrive at any plan whereby those who are more efficient can be picked out from those who are less efficient is not an easy matter. But my deputy has made certain recommendations which I will explain when the vote comes before the committee.

Mr. CLANCY. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the policy of the department is to finally place all the employees on the permanent staff as far as possible ?

Mr. SIFTON. That is the policy of the Act. The policy of the Act, I think fairly construed, is that these officials should not be left on the temporary list but that when the deputy has decided that their services are required and that they are not likely to be discontinued within any reasonable time they are entitled to be on the permanent staff.

Mr. CLANCY. I understand there are in all the departments a large number of temporary employees who have been there for a number of years, who have not passed the civil service examinations, but who are deprived of promotion and statutory increases.

Mr. SIFTON.

Mr. SIFTON. The word 'temporary' is somewhat confusing. Some years ago the third-class clerks were abolished, but that grade is now reinstated. We employed what was called temporary clerks, but they were required to pass the civil service examination and they get a statutory increase of $30 a year. These employees were made third-class clerks. They were not temporary employees who had no fixed status in the service, but to all intents and purposes they were members of the service. However, their salaries were voted in a lump sum and their employment was renewed by Order in Council from time to time.

Mr. CLANCY. Are there not a large number in the Interior Department who have not passed the examination, but who are nevertheless very efficient clerks and who have remained for years temporary employees.

Mr. SIFTON. I do not know the history of the employment of those who were there when I took office, but practically none have been appointed since without passing the examination, except two or three in the Dominion Lands Branch who do special work. There were, I think when I took office a number of lady employees who had not passed any examination, and some of them will be appointed permanently under this rule.

Mr. CLANCY. Will they be required to pass an examination before they come in?

Mr. SIFTON. The Act of last year does not require them to pass an examination.

Mr. WILSON. Does this $290 include temporary clerks or only the permanent staff.

Mr. SIFTON. Everybody.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. SIFTON moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. CLANCY. What business will be taken up by the government to-morrow.

Mr. SIFTON. There may be some Bills, and I shall be going on with the balance of my estimates.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The third reading of the Railway Act will be taken.

Mr. WILSON. Do you intend going on with the immigration estimates before the committee reports ?

Mr. SIFTON. I do not know what stage the committee is in.

Mr. WILSON. It is almost ready to report. I do not see the use of taking evidence if you cannot use it in the House.

Mr. SIFTON. My hon. friend (Mr. Wilson) has had the evidence for some time and he does not need to wait for the report.

Mr. WILSON. If the minister will look at the rules of the House he will find we cannot use evidence taken in the committee until it is reported to the House.

Mr. SIFTON. We had better discuss that to-morrow when the time comes.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.35 p.m.

SCHOOL OF MUSKETRY.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) moved :

For copies of certain papers referring to the School of Musketry at Ottawa.

He said : These are papers in connection with the statement made in this House a few days ago by the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes). The hon. member for North Victoria made the following statement :—

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have received a communication to the effect that the young men who have come here to learn musketry are being taxed for the maintenance of clubs, for the maintenance of an extra mess, and for extra furnishings generally. I am also informed that privates are called upon to act as servants to officers, and that these young men who are brought from the farms to learn musketry are subjected to prison discipline. They cannot leave the camp grounds unless they get a pass and they must be in at a certain hour in the evening or they are disciplined. I am told that a number of officers and men were informed that they need not bring extra clothing or bedding, but that they had to purchase them here at considerable expense. I do not know whether or not the officer in charge of the musketry school is responsible for this. This officer goes on to say that he thinks the country pays the Cartwright family dearly enough without having the men who come to take the musketry course taxed by this extra expense. I do not think the people of this country want the young gentlemen, privates or officers who come here, to be subject to prison rule. I do not believe that a young man who comes here and chances to be a private, should give up one hour of his time to act as servants to any officer, nor do I think that the country should pay these men to act as officers' servants. I direct the attention of the minister to these grievances which I believe are founded on fact, and which should be stopped at once. I do not ask him to give any answer to-day, as I have not had time to give him notice that I would bring it up.

To which I replied :

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This school of musketry has been in operation for a couple of years, and this is the first time I have heard any complaint. I was not aware that the system in force this year differed from that of previous years. I am sorry that my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) saw fit to make the reference he did to the Cartwright family. I scarcely see what that has to do with it, and I am sure that my hon. friend himself would be the last man to say or to insinuate that any charges that may be imposed on officers attending the school could go into the pocket of as honourable a gentleman as Col. Robert Cartwright is known to be. I am sorry that he made that gratuitous slip. I am very glad, however, that he has called my attention to the fact, and I will make inquiry and be prepared to make a statement on the subject.

I have here, Mr. Speaker, a memorandum addressed by the commandant of the school, Colonel Cartwright, to the Adjutant General. It reads as follows :—

Rockcliffe, Ont., 14th July, 1904.

From the Commandant Canadian School of Musketry to the Adjutant General, Headquarters.

Statement by Col. Sam. Hughes, M.P.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that my attention has been called to a statement in regard to the Canadian School of Musketry made in parliament by Col. Sam. Hughes.

In order that no time may be lost in disabusing the public mind of misconception in regard to the Musketry School, which might be conceived by the public if this statement were left unanswered, I forward herewith for your information :

1. A marked copy of the musketry regulations for the Canadian militia, showing the camp bedding, &c., allowed to each officer, non-commissioned officer and man.

2. An extract from the regulations and orders in regard to servants at the Musketry School.

3. Nominal roll of the non-commissioned officers and men of the Royal Canadian Regiment present at the Canadian School of Musketry, showing the capacity in which each non-commissioned officer or private is employed.

4. Parade state, showing the number of officers, non-commissioned officers and men at the Canadian School of Musketry.

In regard to the above papers, I might say first that the officers' mess is managed by a committee. Preliminary arrangements, subject to their approval, have to be made with caterers, who have everything in order to proceed with the mess from the first opening of the school. The fees are of the most moderate description and will bear the closest possible inspection.

The staff-sergeants have a mess, other non-commissioned officers have a mess, and the private soldiers have a mess. These messes are managed by a committee, in the same manner as all similar messes are managed in the service. They are spending their own money under the supervision of the adjutant.

Private Soldiers.—There are no privates taking the course at the Canadian School of Musketry. There are, however, privates from the Permanent Corps, sent down to Rockcliffe for fatigue purposes. They are used in various ways, as shown in the attached schedule. It will be observed that the proportion of officers' servants to officers is much smaller than that allowed by regulations. It would be a great hardship to prevent these men making extra money as officers' servants, most of the men count on making extra in this way when coming to Rockcliffe.

Bedding.—In regard to bedding, the full allowance of bedding as laid down, has been allowed to officers at this camp. Owing to the fact that at a previous camp officers were allowed sheets and pillow-cases, there may have been some disappointment on this score, but all the officers to whom I have spoken on the subject consider that sheets and pillow-cases are unnecessary for camp life. In any cas it is not a very great hardship for an officer desiring these luxuries to provide them for himself.

Clothing.—In regard to extra clothing, the officers have been given specially to understand that while at musketry work they may wear out their old uniforms. A certain number of fatigue suits have been procured from stores to issue to officers and non-commissioned officers desiring to use them.

When proceeding to Ottawa in uniform officers are required to be properly dressed. As yet, however, the adjutant has not had reason to order any officer or non-commissioned officer to procure extra uniform.

Passes.—Passes are only required for extraordinary circumstances, such as men wanting to stay out all night, or aftr 12 o'clock, or to get off some parade or other duty.

Officers are expected to sleep in camp, as at other camps.

It is, of course, thoroughly understood that officers or non-commissioned officers misbehaving or showing indifference to their studies will be sent home.

The Musketry School affairs, mess accounts, and expenditure are simply arranged and easily investigated, and the more they are investigated or examined the more the absurdity of the attack on the management of the school will appear.

I do not bear Col. Sam. Hughes the least animosity in regard to the statements he has made, because it is clear that he has been misinformed by some malicious person, who ought to know; and probably by this time does know, that he has made a series of absurd and misleading statements.

The question as to whether officers attending a course of instruction should be permitted the use of a soldier servant is a matter of general policy, upon which there may be a difference of opinion.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Signed) R. CARTWRIGHT,
Lieutenant-Colonel,
Commandant, Canadian School of Musketry.

The Hon. the Minister,

Forwarded. I concur in the above. (Sd.) Aylmer, Colonel, Commanding Canadian Militia.

15.7.04.

I shall not detain the House by reading the rest of this report, except to read the list of officers. The list of officers now in charge of the school is as follows :

Lieut.-Col. Cartwright, commandant.
Capt. Kemmiss Betty, adjutant.
Capt. Groves Contant.
Capt. de la Ronde, Q. master.
Surg.-Lieut. Birkett, M. O.

In addition to this, I have the following letter addressed by the commandant of the school to the Adjutant General :

Rockcliffe, Ont., 15th July, 1904.

From the Commandant, Canadian School of Musketry, to the Adjutant-General, headquarters.

Statement by Colonel Sam. Hughes, M.P.

Sir,—I have the honour to report, for the information of the officer commanding the militia, that the under-mentioned non-commissioned officers paraded this morning before my adjutant, and, upon being interviewed individually, each made a protest against the statement made by Colonel Hughes in the House, and which was published in the 'Citizen' of the 13th July. (Clipping attached.)

Each stated that he considered the same both inaccurate and misleading, and as unjust to himself as a student and to the staff of the Canadian School of Musketry.

Each was asked whether he had any complaint whatsoever, and whether his liberty had at any time been curtailed, and each non-commissioned officer replied in the negative, emphatically denying that there was any shadow of reason for complaint.

They requested that this protest be forwarded through the proper channel, in order that the same may be brought to the notice of the Minister of Militia, and that the insinuations contained in the remarks of the member for North Victoria be denied in the House, from whence they emanated :—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I may say that the hon. member from North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) was called away to attend the funeral of an old friend, but he will probably be back to-morrow.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 159) respecting the Pacific Bank of Canada.—Mr. R. F. Sutherland.

SUPPLY—DOG-FISH PEST.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the motion is carried, I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) whether he has any further information on the subject I mentioned yesterday. Is he quite sure that the commission to which he referred, of which the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Copp) is one and some other gentlemen whom he named, is the commission formed for the purpose of dealing with this particular subject and is not a commission formed for the purpose of dealing with some other subject ?

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). In answering the question put yesterday by the hon. gentleman, I referred to the report of Prof. Prince, which is published in the annual report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries for 1903. His report is very voluminous, and goes over the whole question, showing that two years ago this matter was brought under the notice of the department, and a special study made of it by Prof. Prince. It covers about thirty pages of the departmental report of last year. Now as regards the study of this question which has been made by Prof. Prince, I will read from his report showing what was done during last year :

In view of the pressing importance of the dog-fish nuisance on the Atlantic coasts generally, the members of two commissions have been authorized to take evidence from the fishermen and report. One of these commissions, consisting of Professor Prince and Mr. Morais, held sittings in Gloucester and Restigouche counties in April last, and made recommendations based on the statements laid before them ; but this commission, however, was very limited in its scope.

The second commission, consisting of Colonel Tucker, M.P., as chairman, and Messrs. Copp, Armstrong, Bowers and Venning, with Reverend Father Turbide as a member in respect of the Magdalen islands, held sittings at various points on the Magdalen islands and the Bay of Fundy, and as the commission was authorized to inquire into the herring, sardine and lobster fisheries, as well as other important matters, it has been impossible to cover the whole ground as yet, and until the close of the second sittings this summer, it will not be possible for that commission to make final recommendations.

The question is a very large one, which will involve very considerable expenditure of public money to properly cope with it, and it is plain therefore that reliable recommendations can be made only after a very wide survey and a considerable amount of evidence from different parts of the coast has been received.

The erection of reduction works has been suggested, and it is possible that an experiment may be started at once with a view to utilizing the dog-fish for oil, fertilizing and food purposes, and the department is in communication with important parties with a view to arriving at this end.

The department has already carried on some experiments with dog-fish as lobster bait ; but these have so far not proved very satisfactory, and should be carried on in a more extensive way later in the fall

E. E. PRINCE.

I may add that I have a report of the experiments that have been made, and which are very interesting. Experiments are being carried on on a still larger scale at the present time, and instructions have been given to the men employed on the fishery protection boats to see what can be done to alleviate the nuisance that is complained of. As regards the intention of the government on the subject, it will be seen within the next few days that numerous suggestions have been made. One of them, for instance, was to offer a premium for each dog-fish caught, the premium suggested being 1½ cents each. While the department were considering this suggestion, we received very valuable information showing that to cope with the difficulty in the way suggested, by offering a premium for each dog-fish, would cost an immense sum of money, and involve an expenditure of over $100,000 a year. The department therefore has come to the conclusion to put a certain sum of money in the supplementary estimates in order to erect reduction works where the dog-fish can be treated for oil and for fertilizing and other purposes. I repeat that the department is fully aware of the importance of this question, and will adopt all practical means to abate this nuisance. In dealing with a question of this kind, certain studies have to be made and certain experiments carried on. This nuisance is not new, it has existed in the waters of various countries, and it has been dealt with in different ways. On the coast of France, for instance, they use the flesh of the dog-fish as food, and it appears that in certain countries the people have no objection to eat that kind of fish. They find it a little coarse, but still it is palatable. But in Canada up to the present time people have strongly objected to use the flesh as food. Gradually, however, it may be that as a result of the experiments that will be carried on, people may come to find the flesh of the dog-fish as wholesome a food as some others ; and I think it will be found that the taking of this fish can be made a profitable commercial pursuit. Under these circumstances, I think the House and the country will be satisfied, when the supplementary estimates come down, that we have not ignored the importance of this question, and that we are trying in the most expeditious manner to give satisfaction to the fishermen.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The subject is certainly one worthy, not only of the immediate attention but of the immediate action of the government. The reason I thought it necessary to bring this subject to the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, was as I explained yesterday, because I found that on the 2nd of May we were promised the report of the commission within two or three days, and we have heard nothing more of the matter from that time till this. I do not believe that the people of the larger provinces of Canada realize the importance of the fishing industry to the Dominion as a whole. In speaking of the fishing industry, I am speaking of course more particularly of the fishing industry of the maritime provinces with which I have been endeavouring to make myself acquainted during the last two or three years. There has been a great deal of encouragement given to the different industries throughout this country in various ways during the last quarter of a century ; but certainly the inshore and deep-sea fishing industries of the maritime provinces have, on the whole, received as little encouragement in proportion to their importance as any of the great industries of Canada. I hope to live to see the day when the provinces of Ontario and Quebec will be fully supplied with the best fish in the world from the fisheries of the maritime provinces ; and until that day comes, and until even that market is extended much further west than the provinces I have mentioned, I for one will not be satisfied. As I mentioned last year, I think that one difficulty under which we labour in the maritime provinces with regard to this matter is that our fishermen still pursue very much the same methods that they pursued fifty, or sixty, or seventy years ago. Not very much advance as I understand—and I am speaking subject to correction by those in the House who understand the subject possibly better than I do—not very much advance has been made in our methods of catching fish. Possibly there may have been some advance but not much. But I understand from those who are qualified to speak on the subject that not much advance has been made in the methods of curing the fish. I am told by those who are engaged in the business that herring prepared in Norway sell at a much larger figure than our herring, and that the herring caught and cured in Scotland sell at a much higher figure than ours. So far as that part of the industry is concerned, the supply of fresh fish to the markets of Quebec and Ontario has made some progress. But that market is still in its infancy, and it cannot be much improved until better means of transportation are provided than exist at present, and I believe those means can be very much improved.

But this is only in passing. The industry as a whole is in very great danger from the invasion of the dog-fish. I have read the report of Prof. Prince to which attention has been called by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I think he is under the apprehension that the pest may prove only temporary. As a matter of fact it has been scourging the fish and the fishermen on our coasts during the past six years from about 1898 and during the last two years it has been particularly destructive. In order to give the House some appreciation of what this destruction is, let me quote from the report of Prof. Prince, at page 52, of the 36th Annual Report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, for the year 1903. His words are as follows :—

> The direct harm that a plague of dog-fish can do is well nigh incredible. Thus in 1882 the pack of cured herring in the Shetland Isles was 134-000 barrels, whereas in 1888, owing to the presence of dog-fish, the total quantity fell to 99,-000 barrels, and in 1889, even lower i. e. not more than 47,000 barrels or only about one third of the pack two years before and representing therefore an enormous total loss.

Then, quoting press reports, further on he says this as to our own fisheries along the Atlantic coast :

> Every week brings reports from widely different points about the trouble by dog-fish, which are far more formidable pests by sea than the potato-bug is by land. Therefore some people contend that the government should take the matter up and do something to exterminate the invading swarms of dog-fish, or make them scarcer. Now let it be remembered that the fisheries department is not altogether unmindful of the loss suffered each year from this source. The officials, as we remarked before, have been instructed to collect information and tender advice. That was the proper thing for a preliminary step, and the parties applied to should have responded to the best of their ability, but it cannot be learned that many of them did so.

I may say that as far as I am personally concerned, I have not had the difficulty which Prof. Prince mentions in his report, because I have applied to some people familiar with the subject and I have in every instance received full and comprehensive and very practical reports, some of which I propose to submit to the House before I sit down. Prof. Prince's report is quite exhaustive and it is of course so long that I could not venture to inflict the whole of it upon the House. He says at page 57 of the report :

The government has been urged to offer a bounty for the capture of a dog-fish. In some parts of the world dog-fish are caught for their oil, but the industry is not very profitable. It is claimed, however, that if a bounty was offered the fishermen would make systematic efforts to destroy this pest, that as the dog-fish were killed off the value of the fisheries would increase and that in a few years the bounty could be withdrawn without injury to the fisherman.

Then he goes on to mention about a dozen suggestions which have been made to the government. Some of these do not commend themselves to my judgment and apparently they do not commend themselves to the judgment of Prof. Prince. After dealing with those suggestions he goes on to say :

If, as seems clear, the commercial products yielded by dog-fish bring such low returns in the market, that it will not pay oil and fertilizer factories to utilize them, and cannot therefore pay the fishermen to fish for them or even to save them when caught accidentally, then a bounty paid by the government seems to be necessary. The livers of dog-fish bring to the fishermen 25c. per pail and at least 50 dog-fish are required to make a pail of livers, and the loss of hooks, bait, and time, have all to be included, hence only the encouragement of a bounty will ensure the energetic and continuous destruction of these fish. Certainly the suggestions numbered 1, 2 and 3 would probably harm the schools of valuable fishes as much as the detested dog-fish, while the employment of a few vessels or government cruisers would not suffice to deal with so general a pest as the dog-fish on our shores. Reliance can be placed only on the co-operation of the fishermen all along the coast stimulated by a bounty fairly and effectively distributed on a workable basis. Unless, indeed, the dog-fish in the meantime take the course they have so commonly done in former times and on other coasts, and disappear as suddenly as their hordes originally have appeared. The problem would then solve itself.

I would also like to bring to the attention of the House, because the suggestions which are here made may be of assistance to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries in dealing with the subject, a communication which I have received from a gentleman who is very well known in Nova Scotia and who is very largely interested in the fish business. This is Mr. Howard Smith, of the firm of N. & M. Smith, of Halifax. I asked him in the month of January last to give me his views on the extent of the pest and the best way to deal with it, and Mr. Smith was good enough to write me a letter, dated the 28th January, which is as follows :—

Dear Mr. Borden :—As promised, I send you herewith a few ideas and suggestions as to how best to combat this bête noir of our coast fishermen, the voracious dog-fish. I do not speak from experience as a practical fisherman, merely repeating sundry scraps of information picked up from the hardy toilers on our shores, who, on good grounds, consider this their worst enemy.

I think that Mr. Smith's modesty has led him to probably undervalue the information upon which he speaks, because I happen to know that he has devoted a good deal of time and study to this question and has taken a great deal of interest in it. He goes on as follows :—

Nor are they alone suffering from its ravages. Reports to hand this year from Norway, state that the fishery there was greatly handicapped on account of the enormous schools of dog-fish following the codfish, &c., as they swam over their favourite haunts and feeding grounds. Newfoundland fishermen also view with alarm his first appearance last year in small schools. Our American neighbours have awakened to the injury done, particularly their inshore fishery, and the Gloucester newspapers, and fishing gazettes, cry aloud for government action to eliminate, as far as possible, the evil.

I have lately read that 'Mr. Irving Field' of Harvard University, under the direction of the United States bureau of fisheries, has devoted the summer to the study of the scarcity of lobsters and their destruction by other denizens of the sea. He has brought out the fact that dog-fish is one of the fiercest enemies against which the lobster has to contend, working more destruction than any other of the finny tribe. This species of shark is very voracious, and is declared to be no small factor in depleting the number of lobsters on the coast.

'Mr. Field by the examination of the stomachs of several hundred of the dog-fish, found that next to the rock crab, and the spider crab, the lobster is the chief article on which the dog-fish feeds. In several of the stomachs were found lobsters partially digested, which measured over seven inches in length, and the presence of two smaller lobsters in a single stomach was not uncommon. If this be true, an additional reason exists for making wear upon the dog-fish.

'Mr. Field also experimented with dog-fish as food, and declares it to be an article of great merit. Both himself and colleagues partook of it, and pronounced the fish savoury and palatable. It was afterwards served in the marine biological station to hundreds of students and professors engaged in scientific work, without their knowledge of the species, and all pronounced it one of the finest flavoured of fish. It is a favoured fish with those natural epicures, the Japanese, and it is also used as a food by the inhabitants of the Bermudas, by whom it is called 'Nurseflesh.' The name, and difficulty in preparing the fish is the chief objection to its use as an article of diet.'

I have been repeatedly told the fish is an excellent article of food, if care is taken to keep from deteriorating until cooked. Unless put on ice, it turns bad in ten or twelve hours, the flesh being particularly rich. Our herring or mackerel exposed in the same manner would keep at least 24 hours. Its possibilities as an article of food to be put up in any quantity, are yet in an experimental stage. Personally, I think it is only a question of prejudice due to the name and the depredatory habits of the marauders.

One thing sure, and that is, they can be used as a fertilizer, after the oil has been extracted from the liver, and the skin can be dried for sand-paper purposes, the latter giving an almost indestructible surface for polishing. Moreover, the fins, by simply boiling in water, produce the finest glue. One ounce of glue is said to be obtained from seven ounces of fins.

Now here is the germ of my ideas. Bonus fertilizing factories, say at the rate of $2 to $3 per ton output, whenever a certain proportion of their output is dog-fish residue; pay the fishermen ¼c. per dogfish to enable them to fit out and attack, this, their natural enemy.

Mr. KENDALL. How much?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Smith says a quarter of a cent. I do not know whether that is adequate or not.

Mr. COWAN. That is cheap fishing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This is a bounty, my hon. friend (Mr. Cowan) must understand. Although my hon. friend seems to regard this as a humorous subject as I have observed by his conversation when I was speaking, let me tell him that this is a subject of some moment to the people of the maritime provinces, and that possibly it would be well for him to try and get a little information on the subject rather than to spend his time in jeering while the subject is being discussed.

Mr. COWAN. It is an inspiring subject.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN:

For the above remuneration, I feel sure, they would make a dead set on it, and you, or any other politician, instrumental in securing such a measure, would be their ideal representative.

These factories could be under the supervision of the fishery wardens or government fishery agent, in each county, the bonus to the fishermen to be paid through the factory owners, who would be solely responsible to their shippers, i.e., to the people supplying them with the dogfish. They would be remunerated by the government paying them 25c. per 200 for the dog-fish horns, i.e., ¼c. for each dog-fish, two horns being on each fish). I mention 'horns' because the tails, heads, or other part of them could be imitated from other fish, not so the horns. These could be burnt, or easily destroyed afterwards.

In this way you would be encouraging a new industry, manufacturing fertilizing, glue, &c., fostered under a policy that you advocate, and the fishermen would be profitably employed when the dog-fish virtually stops all other work. There is no question of the damage done, which, measured in dollars runs up to the hundreds of thousands.

These dog-fish first appeared on our coast about the time the so called Cape Shore mackerel fleet from Gloucester, came down fishing from Yarmouth to Canso in the spring. The fish seemed to follow these vessels swallowing all the entrails, &c., of the mackerel, as thrown overboard. They usually remain here until the run of fat mackerel in the late fall, principally feeding on what are called 'bait fish,' i.e., the younger schools of herring, mackerel, caplin, &c., and, as Mr. Irving Field states doing irreparable harm to the infant lobster. If this is so, you can readily see the damage done is simply enormous.

I direct attention to this part of the communication and I have no doubt that many of my hon. friends on the other side of the House from the maritime provinces will be able to substantiate what Mr. Smith says:

Take a case like last year, when the fall schools of fat mackerel passed southward to their winter feeding grounds in the vicinity of Florida (or wherever else it may be). The dog-fish unfortunately infested our shore, and were on the inside of the schools of fish with the result that the body of mackerel kept miles off shore, and the expected harvest for our hardy toilers, passed along, virtually untouched. In former years, with no dog-fish, it was not an unusual thing to hear of 10,000 barrels of mackerel being taken in a day between Halifax and Lunenburg.

Hon. gentlemen will note that Mr. Smith is speaking simply of a single day's catch.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Ontario). What is the value of a barrel of mackerel?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mackerel have very much increased in price during late years; my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall) can give you reliable information as to that.

Mr. KENDALL. The value ranges from ten to fifteen dollars.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That would represent from $100,000 to $150,000 for one day's catch along that portion of the shore between Halifax and Lunenburg. As Mr. Smith explains these fish remained off shore last year for the reason that the dog-fish got between the mackerel and the shore, so that the mackerel were driven off and the fishermen could not catch them. Mr. Smith continues:

The same remarks apply as to herring, codfish, &c. Our inshore fisheries are no longer profitable, and this is the only explanation so far forthcoming.

Now, why I advocate the establishing and encouraging of fertilizing works is this. If the fishermen are bonused per 100 to catch these fish, after cutting out liver (for the oil) and saving the token, i.e., tail, horns, or whatever else it may be, they would throw the rest overboard. Now, bitter experience has taught us that this method of polluting the fishing grounds is dangerous in the extreme, witness the total disappearance for years from Fortune bay, Newfoundland, of herring that every fall came there in countless millions to feed. The careless throwing overboard of herring that fishermen had caught, attempted to freeze, and weather turning mild caused them to deteriorate, so poisoned the favourite haunts of the fish that they left years ago, and have not yet returned in any quantity, and a most profitable industry was thereby ruined. Most stringent laws in Newfoundland, now govern this feature of the question, and as a result, Bay of islands, Newfoundland, where these same herring now go, gives up every fall from its depths, sixty to one hundred thousand barrels of pickled and frozen herring.

I may say that Professor Prince in corroboration of what Mr. Smith has said, states in his report, that these dog-fish seem gifted with an exceptionally keen sense of smell; that they frequent portions of the coast where fish offal or dead fish are thrown overboard, and that this practice has the effect of attracting dog-fish to the locality. Mr. Smith continues as follows:

To come nearer home, and to the question at issue with us. Years ago the Cape Ann fishermen were greatly troubled by dog-fish on their haddock and hake grounds. The dog oil was profitably handled then, and when the fishery was interfered with by these dog-fish, they rigged trawls to catch them for their liver alone, throwing the body overboard,—result, no fish of any kind will feed or breed on these fishing grounds.

Mr. Smith continues by saying that if some scheme on this line were worked out, he thinks such progress would be made in exterminating the dog-fish as would before long afford a very desirable relief from this pest. I also communicated with another gentleman in the maritime provinces who has very great experience in matters relating to the fishing industry. I asked his opinion on the subject, and although his views differ slightly from those of Mr. Smith, still, as he is a man of very great experience, and as this question is to be considered by the government, and as I know a number of my friends in the maritime provinces take a very keen interest in the subject, I will read a portion of this gentleman's suggestions to the House, in order that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries may have them before him if he sees fit to consider them, and possibly make some use of them. The gentleman to whom I now refer is a man of the firm of A. Wilson & Sons, of the city of Halifax, who are large dealers in fish.

Mr. WILLIAM ROSS (Victoria). Is that Mr. Robert?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Messrs. Wilson, of Halifax, well known fish dealers. My hon. friend is no doubt well acquainted with them.

Mr. WILLIAM ROSS (Victoria). I am well acquainted with them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend will agree with me that they are men of excellent business standing, and men of excellent business judgment in every way.

Mr. WILLIAM ROSS (Victoria). Certainly; that is the case.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Wilson says:

That you may the better understand the position of the fishermen to-day with reference to this matter, it is necessary to state that they have always been more or less annoyed by dog-fish, but previous to the past six years or so the dog-fish would visit a section of the coast and after a brief stay move away to some other section or off shore and very probably would not again appear on that particular section during that season. This condition was of course very annoying as it destroyed either partially or totally the gear in the water at the time of the arrival of the dog-fish and prevented operations during their stay.

This was borne with christian fortitude (?) by the fishermen as something that could only be removed by an act of God. During recent years the prevalent conditions on nearly all parts of the coast of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick have been a continued annoyance from dog-fish during the fishing season.

They have been particularly destructive to nets and traps and as these supply bait for other kind of fishing, they have in that way greatly interfered with line fishing.

During the mackerel fishing last fall the dog-fish seemed most numerous and turned what is usually the most remunerative branch of shore fishing into a ruinous operation for most fishermen by destroying more gear than their catch would pay for.

This was certainly a very bad phase of the trouble, but what is we believe a more serious one is the fact that these dog-fish that were caught by nets, traps and lines were thrown back into the water dead, and in that way polluted the fishing grounds which has in many instances made some of the inshore grounds less productive and in other cases practically non-productive.

This is a very serious phase of the case because fishermen very naturally will throw these dog-fish back into the water if they cannot put them to any profitable use. Professor Prince, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Wilson all agree as to the absolutely fatal results to the fisheries that will be produced by continuing a practice of that kind; yet it does not seem to me that this practice is likely to be discontinued unless you can give to the fishermen some inducement to bring the fish to shore, so that they can afterwards be profitably used for fertilizing or for their oil, or for some other commercial purpose. It is not only the damage that the dog-fish themselves do, but it is the fact that when caught they will be thrown back to pollute the fishing grounds, which has to be taken into consideration by the government. Mr. Wilson continues:

These conditions did not obtain in former years when fishermen brought their dog-fish ashore for the sake of getting the oil from the liver.

In recent years dog-fish oil has been so low that fishermen would not bother handling the dog-fish, which they abhor, for the remuneration they would receive from the oil.

It is a fact that the inshore fisheries do not now produce anything like the quantity of fish that they did formerly, and the fouling of the grounds by dumping dead dog-fish is one of if not the chief reason for this.

In view of the foregoing we think that some effective measures should be taken at once to exterminate the pest.

We have every reason to believe that a market could be made for the dog-fish if they were properly cured and dried for export to the West Indies, Central and South America and the Mediterranean. We are advised that the dog-fish caught off the cost of Norway are cured and marketed in the Mediterranean ports.

I think Professor Prince reports that these dog-fish have been caught off the coast of Norway for a great many years, and that not only have they been utilized for their oil, but also for food purposes in the manner suggested by Mr. Wilson. This letter continues.

We tried last December to get a sample of these dog-fish sent out to us to verify the fact that they were exactly the same kind of dog-fish as we get on our shore, but were too late applying for samples as all had been disposed of. We think there is little doubt but that they are exactly the same, because we know that what few dog-fish are taken by British North Sea fishermen are identical with ours. We noticed by late editions of our newspapers that the Department of Fisheries intended looking into this dog-fish question through or by the biological society during the coming season.

This appears to us to be putting the matter off for another year at least for no earthly good that we can see, and which will work considerable harm as it will give the dog-fish another year in which to multiply.

No amount of scientific research will in any way lessen the scourge, and we think their life and habits are sufficiently well known. Now we would like to suggest the following course instead of that proposed by the Department of Fisheries.

That a sum of say ($10,000) ten thousand dollars be set aside for the purpose of having a quantity of dog-fish caught, cured, dried and exported with a view of making a market and commercial value for any and all dog-fish that can or may be caught hereafter.

That the Department of Fisheries select a thoroughly competent practical fish curer to put this test through. That he be empowered to select as many competent curers (fishermen or others) at as many different points along the affected coast to supply a stated quantity of properly cured dog-fish under a guarantee of say two dollars per quintal for only fish that come up to the standard. Any badly canned fish to be the canner's loss. These fish to be gathered together at Halifax or some other suitable shipping point for distribution to the different markets as a trial. This would enable the government to use up in the vicinity of 5,000 quintal of dog-fish this year; and if the experiment proved a success in the selling markets, as we believe it would, it would not cost the country one cent, because they would get the total cost of fish back in returns, and would probably do away with the necessity of the giving of a bonus for the destruction of the dog-fish by demonstrating that they had a commercial value.

There have been numerous other suggestions put forward for the destruction of the dog-fish, but all so far as we have heard, have been in the nature of recommending a government bonus or bounty without a reasonabe recommendation for the utility of the dog-fish when caught, except that of manufacturing glue from the skin, oil from the liver, and fertilizer from the balance.

This scheme would be workable only at points where large fleets operate, because it would only be at such points that a sufficient quantity of dog-fish could be had to warrant any concern erecting and operating a plant. This as you are aware would cover very few points on our coast where the fishing villages are so numerous and yet so small. Then, again, the advocates of this plan assert that a bounty of not less than $4.50 per ton would pay them, which we conclude means that they would want that bounty paid them as long as they operated.

A bounty may yet be necessary, but we think not, if our suggested experiment is tried in a businesslike manner through a thoroughly competent man.

Then he makes some criticism about the way in which such matters have been handled, which I will not read to the House. I have also made an inquiry of and had a conversation with another gentleman who is very well known in the fishing industry of Nova Scotia—Mr. E. C. Whitman of Messrs. A. N. Whitman & Sons, of Canso. He discussed the matter with me more fully than he has written to me on the subject. His opinion as conveyed to me in a personal interview was decidedly in favour of a bounty, and the erection of reduction stations in order to utilize the fish for fertilizing purposes, after first extracting the oil, and making use of any other products of the fish that might be commercially profitable. I may, however, read what he has written to me on these and other matters, in response to my request to give me a memorandum of what he thought might reasonably be done by the government to place the fishing industry of the maritime provinces on a better basis than it occupies to-day. His memorandum of requirements is as follows:

1st. Improved transportation between the east and the west by better refrigerator cars and faster time.

That undoubtedly is absolutely necessary if we are to supply the markets of Quebec and Ontario with fresh fish, as the abundance of these fish in the past would amply justify us in expecting that they could be supplied.

2nd. Have an exhibit of our fish and fishery products at the St. Louis exhibition.

3rd. Have an exhibit at all important fairs in western Canada annually, and during the exhibition have fresh ocean fish properly cooked and tastefully served to visitors.

This is of course for the purpose of impressing our friends in Quebec and Ontario, and especially my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. Cowan) with the advantages to be derived from an occasional diet of fish from the maritime provinces.

4th. Establish one or more experimental fishing stations where the most improved methods of catching, curing and marketing fish may be demonstrated. At one of these stations operate for a year a modern steam trawler (as is now being done by the South African government), as well as a steam herring drifter, to demonstrate whether these methods of catching fish are as superior here as they have proved themselves in other countries.

I believe this proposal has not altogether found favour with some of the fishermen themselves. They have some objection to or prejudice against it. I am not myself in a position to say whether it would be advisable to adopt it or not; but the methods of catching fish in the maritime provinces might certainly be improved, and it is beyond question that the methods of drying and curing fish might also be improved, and it only needs a little assistance to the fishermen to enable them to adopt these improvements. The fishermen along the coasts of the maritime provinces are as intelligent and adaptable people as are to be found anywhere in the Dominion of Canada or on the continent of America, and if they are given the means of learning improved methods, I have not the slightest doubt that they will at once avail themselves of them. He goes on to say:

> At these stations all waste material, such as offal and non-edible fish should be utilized and converted into fertilizer, oil and glue.
> 5th. Pay a small bounty for the destruction of dog-fish to the fishermen or to reduction works established to make fertilizer and oil from them.
> 6th. Enlarge the scope of the biological station and make it a permanent structure on the plans of the United States Fish Commissioner's Station at Wood's Hole, Mass. Make it of sufficient importance and interest to attract each year our best scientific men to investigate the fisheries and to discuss them.

I have thought that the importance of this subject justified me in bringing these suggestions to the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. There is no doubt that this pest has continued for five or six years and that up to the present time no means have been taken by the country as a whole to do away with it beyond the recent investigations which have been made by the Department of Marine and Fisheries. We have not the report of these investigations before us; but the consensus of opinion, so far as I can gather it, seems to be that in order to accomplish the destruction of the dog-fish, or at least an abatement of their numbers, so that they will not interfere materially with the fish which frequent our shores, some aid by way of bounty or otherwise will have to be given to the fishermen to catch them. That seems to be the consensus of opinion on the part of those whom I have consulted or with whom I have conversed on the subject, and who are well qualified to speak with authority on a question of that kind. I admit that it is not a matter into which the government should plunge hastily. I realize fully that proper experiments and investigations must be had before the subject is dealt with; but I would respectfully submit to the government, and especially to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that nearly three months have elapsed since his answer to which I have referred was given in this House, and the government seem to be making haste, not simply slowly, but altogether too slowly in this regard. The fishing season of this year will very soon be past, and it is important that some means should be taken to abate this scourge during the past season. I therefore trust that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will give his early and earnest attention to this subject, and if possible do something by which the fishing industry of the maritime provinces will be placed once more not only in as good a position as that which it formerly occupied, but even in a better position. If this is not done, and if the prediction of Prof. Prince that the dog-fish will disappear should prove to be unfounded, the results will be disastrous to a very important industry in the maritime provinces and indeed to the country as a whole; because this industry is valuable not only for the wealth it produces, but also for the hardy race of mariners which it sustains. In view of all these considerations, I trust that my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will move a little more rapidly in this matter, and that some effective measures may be taken during the present season.

Mr. A. J. S. COPP. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to discuss this matter, but merely to refer to a misunderstanding that seems to exist with regard to the two commissions which have been appointed. The commission of which Prof. Prince is a member is, I believe, in a position to report, and has already reported on this question. The commission of which I am a member is not in a position to report. I may say that we had no means of meeting until after the last session of parliament.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would my hon. friend explain the exact object of the commission to which he belongs?

Mr. COPP. The scope of that commission embraces the lobster question, the herring industry, and I think also the dog-fish. We only assembled after the close of last session and as matters of great importance had to be attended to in the Magdalen Islands, the commission first went there and settled the question as to the spring season of the lobster catch. We then, in December met at St. Andrews and proceeded to Grand Manan. My hon. friend will remember that last winter was probably one of the worst in the history of Nova Scotia and it was very trying for us moving around in St. Andrews Bay. We found that it was impossible for us to hold our meetings with any success. We then held a meeting at North Head, Grand Manan and also two meetings at Grand Harbour. Finding that we could not make any headway we concluded to adjourn and to meet again at the call of the chairman under instructions from the Minister of Marine. It is, I believe, the intention of the commission to assemble immediately after the close of the session and I am in hopes that we will be in a position to make a report that will commend itself to hon. gentlemen of this House, and probably in some way solve this question of the extermination of these pests. There seems, however, to be a great difference of opinion as to how the bounty shall be applied. I do not think there is any question as to the need of a bounty, the great question is how shall that bounty be given. That is the question upon which we shall be called upon to report. I feel as the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) feels, that this is a question of great importance to the fishermen and people of the maritime provinces. I do not agree with him that the Minister of Marine is not dealing with this matter; I think he is dealing with it in a way that will commend itself to the fishermen of the maritime provinces, but it takes a little time. It is an entirely new question and is one that in my opinion should not be dealt with hastily. The question as to whether the bounty shall be paid to the fishermen direct or to fertilizing factories or in some other way is one that should receive consideration and be dealt with not in a hasty manner, but in a way that will commend itself to the people who are most interested.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR. Would my hon. friend inform the House who are the members of the commission to which he belongs?

Mr. COPP. The commission of which I am a member consists of Col. Tucker, chairman; Mr. Denis, assistant commissioner of Fisheries, Mr. Armstrong, of St. Andrews, Mr. Bowers, of Westport, Pictou county and myself.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I wish to join the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) in pressing this very important matter on the attention of the government. I would have done so earlier in the session but I was aware that the government were dealing with this question and endeavouring to solve it. As was remarked by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) it is not a question with which we ought to deal hastily; it is one of great difficulty. I expect that the government are overwhelmed with suggestions to deal with the matter in one way or another, but while it is easy to suggest, it is very difficult to apply practical remedy. For example, the editor of the 'Coast Guard,' one of the most important fishing newspapers, has stated that a bounty of one and a half cents per dog-fish would probably involve an expenditure of $50,000 a day. That was his estimate, provided that one quarter of the fishermen who might engage in dog-fishing would drop their other work and attend to the catching of dog-fish.

Mr. CLARKE. What would be the advantage to the country?

Mr. SINCLAIR. The advantage of course might be the preservation of our fish. The fisheries are of so much importance that it is worth while spending a great deal of money for their preservation. We have in Canada the most valuable fisheries in the world; we have a coast line on the eastern shore, between the international boundary and Labrabor, of something like 5,600 miles.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The estimate which my hon. friend has given of $50,000 a day as the cost of a bounty of 1½ cents per dog-fish, seems to be a very large estimate. It would mean nearly three and a half million dog-fish a day.

Mr. KENDALL. That estimate is rather under than over.

Mr. FIELDING. Fishermen might make a specialty of catching dog-fish rather than other fish.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I am told by fishermen that dog-fish are easily caught. A clever fisherman can catch from 500 to 1,000 a day and with a bounty of 1½ cents per dog-fish he could make good wages. Probably 1½ cents would be high. At all events that is the estimate of Mr. Nickerson, who is an expert in fishery matters.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Smith suggested only ¼ of a cent.

Mr. SINCLAIR. That is very small. If a fisherman caught 1,000 a day that would give him only $2.50. 1,000 a day is probably too large an estimate, but it would not be difficult to catch 500. The great difficulty is that these fish are not Canadian fish, they come here from the coasts of the United States. They start from the Gulf of Mexico and come along the coast of the United States, arriving here late in the season. This ought to be an international question. The United States ought to assist if we are to deal with this question, because they own more dog-fish than we do, and it is their dog-fish that our fishermen are worried by, when they come here and maraud on our coasts. They have been talking of this question in the United States and a number of proposals have been made, but nothing more definite has been done in the United States than in Canada. During the last session of Congress this question was up and in the Massachusetts legislature a Bill was introduced to pay a bounty of 2 cents per dog-fish, but it was defeated; the authorities there thought it was too large a contract to undertake.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They do not charge any export duty on the dog-fish ?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I believe not. The Cape 'Ann News,' a few days ago, said in reference to the dog-fish pest on the coast of Maine :

From indications the fishing industry off the Maine coast will be seriously injured, if not practically ruined for a time at least. This is due to the dog-fish plague which is beginning to assume serious proportions. The dog-fish increase so rapidly and keep other fish so frightened that they threaten to seriously interfere with fishing for the whole season.

In conversation with the Rockland Star man, one of the oldest and best known fishermen in that section made the statement that unless some way was found to exterminate these pests the fishing interests would be practically ruined.

'Something has got to be done,' he said, 'and that right away. It is a matter that will not allow of delay, but the question is what shall be done ?'

Years ago we had the same kind of a plague with blue-fish. They are just as bad as the dog-fish when they congregate in large schools and can drive any fish except lobsters. The latter used to fight the blue-fish just the same as they do the dog-fish to-day. Now, however, you hear practically nothing about the destruction wrought by blue-fish because they do not destroy. The reason for this is that they are kept caught up so close that they do not have much of a chance to get together and make attacks on the other fish. The blue-fish has been discovered to be a fine food and there is a great demand for it and immense quantities of it are now sold during the season.

We have gotten rid of the blue-fish and now we have the dog-fish, something just as bad. The question is what shall we do to them to get rid of the pest ? It is known that their flesh is not poison and can be eaten, but on account of its stringy composition it is not popular so it is not very probable that the fish will ever become a great food. They have one feautre of value, however, and that is their skin. This makes one of the finest kinds of sandpaper imaginable. It is just like an emery stone and very smooth. It is possible that perhaps this part might be utilized to such an extent that there might be quite a demand for the fish, but this does not seem probable.

Then he goes on to suggest that a bounty is probably the best way of settling the question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do we suffer from the blue-fish?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I believe not, at least I am not aware that we do. I suppose that probably the best solution if it can be arrived at is to make this fish marketable, to find, if we can, some commercial use for it. As private capital does not seem willing to undertake the task of doing that, I think some government assistance should be given. I have also been in correspondence with Mr. Whitman, who has been studying this question for a number of years, and he does not seem to be much in favour of a bounty. I will read an extract from the most recent letter I have had from him.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He was in favour of it when he discussed it with me.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I think he is in favour of it, but I think he feels that it might lead to a good deal of difficulty. In the first place, if you give a bounty for catching the fish you must also find some way of utilizing them. As the leader of the opposition has suggested, it would not do to throw them into the sea, it would not do to pollute the water with them. Consequently you must face this question. What are you going to do with them after you catch them ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There must be some inducement to bring them ashore.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Certainly, and I trust the government will be able to provide ample inducement to the fishermen to bring them ashore. Mr. Withman's letter says :

I am sure this is a difficult matter to deal with. May I offer a suggestion ? Let the department establish at some central point a reduction plant to test what commercial use can be made of these pests. If it is found that they can be profitably reduced to oil and fertilizer it will lead others to undertake the business. The government can by such an experiment prove whether a bounty is necessary or whether a high enough price can be paid for the fish to induce fishermen to catch them.

At this experimental plant some dog-fish can be prepared for lobster bait, some more for export to southern countries, where they are used for food, a few can be tinned and any other possible use for the fish tried.

A plant of the most approved process, The Edison Process, to treat 20 tons a day, can be installed for about $20,000 and would want a working capital of about the same amount to run it for a year.

Now that is valuable information. To erect one of these plants at some point on the coast would cost about $20,000, and for an expenditure of about $20,000 more it could be run for a year. He does not tell us what the profit would be. If we produced 20 tons a day of fertilizer in one of these factories, the chances are that it would be a profitable industry and that private capital would be induced to go into it and develop it, provided that the government first took it up and showed that it could be made profitable. I think that is one of the most practical suggestions that has been made. Of course there are many other ways proposed of disposing of these fish. It has been said that they could be used for lobster bait, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries very promptly tested that question. A ship was fitted out with lobster traps and sent along the coast to find out whether these dog-fish could be used for lobster bait, and a return has been made to the department which I have seen, and which shows that the experiment has not been successful, that the lobsters do not take that bait as readily as they do other species of bait that have been used. These experiments of course are useful, but you will see, Mr. Speaker, the difficulty of the situation, and how important it is that all these experiments should be tried, and that all the information we can possibly obtain should be got before any step is taken. I have every confidence that we can safely leave this important matter in the hands of the government.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I do not often speak in this House, but when I do speak I generally make myself understood, and am not afraid to express my opinions very frankly and freely. I corresponded with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on this subject, and I objected to the personnel of this commission. I do not think that a gentleman learned in the law, busy at his profession, studying the decisions of eminent jurists both in Great Britain and the United States, is at all the most fit person to be placed on a commission of this kind. Neither do I think that the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Tucker), who has had a military training and whose turn of thought may be in that direction, is eminently fitted to serve on that commission. Do not suppose, Mr. Speaker, that I aspire to be placed on the commission myself. I have a sufficient sense of my own ability to lead me to decline the offer if it were made to me. If the Minister of Railways and Canals wished to appoint a commission to deal with a difficult railway question he would appoint eminent engineers for that purpose.

Mr. COPP. Do I understand the hon. member to say that he wished to serve on that commission ?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I said that I had sense enough of my own inability to fill that position, and that I would not accept it if it were offered to me ; and that, I think, would have been the proper course for my hon. friend to pursue. Now I read the report of Professor Prince, it is an exhaustive report, and he has dealt with the matter from a scientific point of view. He speaks from the experience of a practical fisherman ; and my idea of a commission would be one composed of men trained all their lifetime to the business of fishermen, selected from different parts of the province, and not confined to men from the Bay of Fundy, inasmuch as the difficulty extends over the whole coast of Nova Scotia to Prince Edward Island. I had letters on this subject the other day from fishermen in my own county who had taken their nets ashore. They are idle now from the scourge of the dog-fish that frequent the coast. The same nuisance exists at the entrance to the Bras d'Or. Now the main question is, what can be done to reduce this nuisance, for to exterminate them altogether is out of the question. There are three main ideas held on this subject. One is that they may be used for fertilizing purposes. Then there is the oil. A gallon of dog-fish oil is only worth about 15 cents, and if the government would raise the price of that oil to 25 or 30 cents, at most, the fishermen would catch dog-fish for the sake of the oil and confine themselves to that fishing alone.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General). How could the government raise the price from 15 to 30 cents ?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). They might as well do that as give a bounty on the dog-fish caught. It is only a different way of expending the money.

Mr. KAULBACH. How does the hon. gentleman propose that the government should raise the price of oil ?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I have been asked that question already. The government propose to spend a certain amount of money for the purpose of reducing the quantity of dog-fish. Might they not just as well take part of that money and give it to the fishermen, who would then spend their whole time catching dog-fish for the sake of the oil ? They won't do so now because the price is too low. Now the idea that dog-fish can be used for lobster bait is absurd. Lobsters are like ourselves, they have a taste of their own, and they select what will suit their taste and reject what does not. Only in the last resort will lobsters take dog-fish for bait, when they can get nothing else. The fish in the sea have their tastes, and prefer certain kinds of bait to others. The animals on land have their tastes also, and so do we in this House. Now there was an idea thrown out by Mr. Smith, I think, in the report that was read by the learned leader of the opposition, about the quantity of mackerel that would be caught from Lunenburg to Halifax. The dog-fish may frighten the mackerel off the shore so that they won't frequent their old haunts. But the quantity of mackerel that the dog-fish would eat would have no more effect on the great body of mackerel than the flour that the members of this House would eat compared with the quantity that is produced in Ontario or the great Northwest.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He said that the dog-fish got between the shore and the school of mackerel and drove the mackerel off the shore so that the fishermen could not get at them.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I think there are two things that interfere with our success in catching mackerel as we used to do ; first, as has been stated, the dog-fish drive the mackerel into deep water, then in the second place the purse seines used by the American fishermen in the spring of the year frighten the fish out into deep water, whereas in the old times they used to trim the shore. A question has been asked about the price of mackerel. Mackerel is divided into three classes. Spring mackerel, belong to class No. 3 because they are poor and thin. Mackerel that are caught in August are No. 2. They are getting fat and white. Mackerel caught in September, October and November are No.1. There are three classifications depending on the fatness of the fish and the size of them and there are three prices. I have sold mackerel at $22.50 a barrel and the year before last from $18 to $20 a barrel could be readily got for No. 1 mackerel in the market at Halifax. But last year the price was lower. Spring mackerel find a market in the southern states and West Indies and fat mackerel all over the United States. I understood from the reports that were made the papers that some of these commissioners had reported already and had recommended that the tail should be cut off the dog-fish as an evidence of their having been caught and destroyed. I know enough of the dog-fish to know that if you cut their tails off and let them go they will be as destructive as ever. I do not think any person possessing a sane mind would adopt that method of destroying the dog-fish.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think my hon. friend has misunderstood. The suggestion was that the horns should be preserved for the purpose of identification, not that the fish should be thrown away. Both letters that I have read express the very strong opinion that the fish should not be returned to the water. They mention it as a very great evil that they should be returned to the water.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). So it is. Dog-fish can be used for fertilizing purposes if the proper system is adopted. I would suggest to the government to have a thousand cans of dog-fish canned at some of our lobster canneries in Nova Scotia, that they put them up carefully and send them as an experiment to China, Japan, India, southern Europe and whatever other countries they think might take them for food. If they found a profitable market in these places or in any other places then the fishermen would begin to catch dog-fish, can them and sell them as they are now selling the lobster. These are my theories. Advance the price of oil, catch the dog-fish for fertilizing purposes, can a number of them and ship them as an experiment to different markets to see if they will be used for food.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. That is being done now.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). On a very small scale.

Mr. BELL. Where ?

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. By Mr. H. A. Baker, of Gabarus.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). We have the statement made by the hon. leader of the opposition that the methods of catching fish are the same to-day as they were fifty or sixty years ago. I do not know, so far as codfish, haddock, salmon and mackerel fishing is concerned that the present methods can be very much improved upon. I speak of the Island of Cape Breton, to which a certain number of Newfoundland fishermen have come and where they have settled among our fishermen. They have instructed them as to the proper means of curing and drying fish, and I think that the fish that come to the Halifax market from my own county and from Cape Breton generally are just as good as perhaps they can be made under any circumstances. I have watched the fish market in Halifax and I have watched the landing of fish. I have spent 26 years of my life among fishermen and I ought to know something about the subject. I may say that the fish cured in the western part of Nova Scotia, are not at all to be compared with those which are cured in eastern Nova Scotia and on the Island of Cape Breton.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do they treat them by the same process as that applied to Scotch and Norwegian cured and pickled fish ?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). Their methods of putting them up are very different. For instance, our fat herring are split up and their bellies are salted inside before the fish are salted. Our barrels are poorer and perhaps some of the methods of curing fish are not equal to those employed in the old country. If you get a Norwegian barrel you can knock it about just the same as you could a stone. It will hold its pickle, but if you roll one of our barrels over a rough place it will become leaky, the pickle will be spoiled and immediately the pickle is spoiled the fish are useless for the market. What I have to urge is this : Advance the price of oil, encourage the use of dog-fish for fertilizing purposes, have a certain quantity of dog-fish canned and let an experiment be tried in the different markets of the world. No person from the province of Ontario has the least idea of the destruction to our fishermen and the fishing industry by this plague of dog-fish, and I think I may repeat what has been suggested by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, that it would be a good thing if the people of Ontario would adapt themselves to the use of more of our fresh and salt fish. If they did so their ideas would be very much enlarged. They would look better and they would be a different class of people altogether from what they are now.

Mr. KAULBACH. I understood my hon. friend (Mr. Ross) to say that fish cured in the eastern part of Nova Scotia including Prince Edward Island——

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I did not include Prince Edward Island.

Mr. KAULBACH. Well, then the eastern part of Nova Scotia.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). Yes.

Mr. KAULBACH—were of a superior character to those cured in the western part of Nova Scotia. Does he include pickled fish as well as dried fish ?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I refer particularly to dried fish. I have been in the lofts in Lunenburg, and I have handled fish there and let me say with all due respect to those industrious fishermen in that country that they do not cure their fish—it is impossible for them to do so—as well as the fish that come from Newfoundland or from the northern part of my own county are cured.

Mr. KAULBACH. The hon. gentleman may have seen an inferior quality because I think our fishermen in the western part of Nova Scotia cure their fish fully as well as they do in the east. We have quantities of fish imported into our harbour from the east and I can see no difference at all.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I know that if a cargo of Cape Breton codfish were to be sent to Lunenburg they would bring a higher price than fish cured in the western part of Nova Scotia. But, our people are not in the habit of sending them there.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I want to say one or two words in regard to this very important question, important not only to the maritime provinces, but to the whole of the Dominion of Canada, and to the members of this House from every province of the Dominion. I think, from the remarks we have heard and from the information we already possess on this question, no very practical results can be obtained unless some arrangement can be come to internationally with the people of the United States to meet this great and growing pest and evil. If the people of the United States do not enter into a mutual international arrangement with us, it may be necessary for us to proceed ourselves ; and that being so, we should lose no time in taking energetic measures to get rid of this pest as far as possible. If this pest continues, it goes without saying that something will have to be done. I believe that the government is fully alive to the importance of this question, and that the Department of Marine and Fisheries will lose no time in doing whatever is possible and practicable in the matter. I cannot agree with some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Wm. Ross), although he is an old and highly respected member of this House. I am not a lawyer, and consequently I am not prejudiced in favour of that profession, which includes so many respectable members of the community, but still I think that on any commission a lawyer, or any man who is accustomed to collect and collate evidence, is a useful addition to such a body. The members of the commission are not giving their own private opinion ; they are simply meeting the fishermen and getting their opinions ; and any man who has had experience in preparing evidence can put that evidence in proper shape and report to the government. I have one word to say to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries with regard to this commission. I understand that the members of the commission have given their services free.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). Travelling expenses, et cetera, are paid them.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. If that commission is to go on taking evidence, I would suggest to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that one of its members should come from the province of Prince Edward Island. The fisheries of that province are of great importance, and if the province had a representative on the commission he would be able to give very valuable assistance. In conclusion, I repeat that I believe that the department is seized with the very great importance of this question, and that no time will be lost, no time should be lost, in taking measures to exterminate this pest if at all possible.

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). This subject came up a year ago, and in the interval the Department of Marine and Fisheries has appointed a commission to deal with the dog-fish pest and, amongst other things, to ascertain the best means of utilizing these fish when they are caught. I have had frequent conversations with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on the subject, and he has impressed me with the great interest which he takes in it. He told me he was awaiting the report of the commission in order to arrive at a conclusion, but I would now remind the hon. gentleman that this is a case of extreme urgency. If we delay taking action, awaiting the report of that commission, and if we are to go into an elaborate investigation as to the utilization of the fish themselves when caught, very irreparable damage may be done to our fisheries. The fall mackerel will soon arrive on the coast of Nova Scotia, and the catching of fall mackerel, I need hardly say, is a very valuable industry. These fish are very capricious, and if they encounter dog-fish when they arrive on the coast they may strike out from our shores, the result of which would be that this very valuable fishery would be lost to the province of Nova Scotia. Let me make this suggestion. In old times the Nova Scotia government gave a bounty of 50 cents a hundred for dog-fish ; a large number were caught, and the ravages of these fish were materially reduced in consequence. I would suggest that, pending the report of this commission, the government should establish two stations for the purchase of dog-fish ; one westward of Halifax, somewhere between Sambro and Halifax, to obtain the catch on the west coast of Nova Scotia ; and another east of Halifax, say in the county of Guysborough, to obtain the catch of the east coast. Officials of the department could be sent down there to take the dog-fish caught by the fishermen, and a bounty of half a cent apiece should be paid. I mention that amount, because it was the sum offered in former times by the Nova Scotia government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How long ago is it since that bounty was given in Nova Scotia ?

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). I think it is more than fifty years ago.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did it produce good results ?

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). Yes ; it reduced the number of dog-fish on the coast very materially. There is some doubt as to whether a quarter of a cent per dog-fish would pay the fishermen an ordinary wage but fishermen and pilots with whom I have spoken tell me that a bounty of one-half cent each would induce the fishermen to get new gear and go into the business of exterminating dog-fish, partly because of the remuneration itself and partly because of the benefit which their extermination would be to our fisheries. I would like the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to take that into consideration, and while he is awaiting the report of the commission to consider the necessity of granting this bounty.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. A. S. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with the hon. gentlemen who have preceded me that the dog-fish pest in Nova Scotia amounts to a calamity. The great fishing industry, which in all probability is the second industry in the maritime provinces, is valued at $14,000,000 or $15,000,000 yearly. I need not add to what has already been said on that score. With regard to the dog-fish pest, the hon. member for Victoria (Hon. William Ross) and the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Matheson), tell me that about the year 1850, when they first engaged as young men in the fishing business, dog-fish were unknown. Other fishermen have told me that between 1840 and 1850 the whole maritime coast was beset with these voracious enemies of the fish and about this latter date they practically disappeared. About 1889 they reappeared along the coast of Nova Scotia, at first in small numbers ; but of late years they have increased to a degree that makes it necessary for us now to endeavour to do something to mitigate the pest.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask the hon. gentleman whether or not since the period he names there has ever been a recurrence of them ? It might be interesting to know whether they come at regular periods or not, or whether anything can be accurately known in regard to that.

Mr. KENDALL. So far as my information goes, they almost entirely disappeared shortly before 1850, and they reappeared about 1888 or 1889. I remember distinctly when they returned to the coast of Cape Breton. Old fishermen whose recollection went back sixty or seventy years told me that they had not seen them before for about forty years. Since 1889 they have been on the coast every year in gradually increasing numbers. Various proposals have been made to the government for dealing with the pest. Among others it has been suggested that so much per tail should be paid for the dog-fish captured. My own idea, based largely on what I have observed as well as on statements which I have read, is that we should very seriously if not entirely deplete the treasury before we entirely exterminated the dog-fish in their season. However, it strikes me that something immediate must be done. The pest is probably temporary. The fishermen have for a number of years shown a great tendency to leave the maritime shores and go to the United States. What can best be done to tide over the present difficulty and keep them on the coast, ready for the period, perhaps one year off, perhaps five or ten years off, when the dog-fish shall disappear ? I think the measures suggested by Messrs. Whitman, of Canso, and Wilson, of Halifax, as read by the hon. leader of the opposition, are in the main the most promising measures that have been suggested. I may say that similar measures were placed before the Minister of Marine and Fisheries some months ago, and I am pleased to know that he proposes to deal with this matter in a comprehensive way. From the prices that fish guanos bring in the markets of the world, I think that if a large amount of money were placed at the disposal of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for the establishment of reduction plants, the country would in all probability sustain no serious loss on that account. It is not unlikely that even after these reduction plants for the purpose of making guano from dog-fish should no longer be called for, they would still be of use in reducing other fish offal, of which we must certainly have tens of thousands of tons on the shores of the maritime provinces.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. For what purpose is the oil extracted from the livers of these fish used ?

Mr. KENDALL. Machine oil largely, and I am informed that if subjected to the proper process it may be utilized as cod liver oil now is, for medical purposes. However, I do not speak authoritatively on that subject. While we are on this matter, I wish to bring to the attention of the House—the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has already given it his attention—the importance of providing more refrigeration for the fisheries of the maritime provinces. During the last five or six years we have made some progress. I think some twenty-eight or twenty-nine small refrigerators have been established along the coasts, and there is a demand for more. We shall require in all probability forty or fifty more. But no matter how many are put up, these are only intended to meet the requirements of the shore fishermen. They will never meet the requirements of the great fishing fleet that goes to the banks and the gulf, and I must press on the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries the necessity of making ample provision for this great fleet as soon as possible. I am quite sure that the measure will never be entirely satisfactory until we have three large refrigerators, one say in the Bay of Fundy, one about the Strait of Canso, and one in the gulf, say at the Magdalen Islands. With these we should also require at least two small steamers of the Scotch steam trawler type, fitted up with refrigerators, to convey bait from the points where it can be obtained to the large refrigerators, and from them to the different points where it cannot be obtained, and also to convey fresh fish caught off the coast to the Atlantic termini of the different railway systems. And here let me point out to the Minister of Railways that in my opinion, and in the opinion of many men connected with the fishing industry, it is essential that refrigerators be established at the Atlantic termini of the railways. We need not occupy our minds about refrigerators at the great markets, for there they are already provided. I wish also to point out to the House that the importance of this matter is seen in the fact that the Newfoundland government only last winter subsidized an American concern by guaranteeing five per cent interest on the bonds of the company to the extent of $500,000, under an arrangement by which the company provides bait for the Newfoundland shore fishermen and deep-sea fishermen, and purchases an enormous quantity of fish from the N wfoundland fishermen and transports it to the American market. I mention this to show that if we are to keep in the race we must take vigorous steps to place a first-class system of refrigeration in the hands of the fishermen of the maritime provinces. The magnitude of the industry will amply justify any such expenditure. However, I know that I do not have to press this necessity upon the attention of the present hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries with the slightest degree of apprehension as to the result ; because I am sure that every one in this House is thoroughly conversant with the fact that the hon. minister, since he took charge of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, has never turned down any measure of great importance that has been suggested to him. It is not long since he instituted in the St. Lawrence river a number of Marconi stations and established from the great lakes to the mouth of the St. Lawrence a chain of acetylene gas lights. And it is only a few weeks ago that he made arrangements to have a system of electric bells throughout the River St. Lawrence —a system which has proved very effective along the American coast. I have no doubt that he will also make provision for the extension of a like system to the maritime provinces and make ample provision to deal with the conditions that now threaten our fisheries. Of course there is always a great temptation to adopt proposals more or less popular in certain localities, but that is scarcely the way to deal with a question so important as this. For my part I have every confidence that the hon. minister is taking all necessary measures and dealing with this matter as its importance requires.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH. The shore and deep-sea fisheries of the maritime provinces is an important factor in the welfare and success of that portion of the Dominion, and representing as I do the largest fishing constituency in the Dominion is a sufficient apology for speaking on this subject at the present time. The great magnitude and increased importance of this industry, if cared for properly, is such that it demands and should receive the best consideration of the government, and as well the recognition and support of the representatives of both political parties in this House. It is a well known fact that the past few years the dog-fish have taken all but complete possession of our north Atlantic waters, and in the summer season the almost exclusive control. They have appeared the past few years in such myriads that other fish are driven from our shores, and are becoming so destructive to fishing property, such as lines, seines and nets, that fishermen fear to put their seines in the water, when the dog-fish infest these waters, lest they would lose them completely. Even when trawling in deep water they are found to eat the fish off the trawls leaving nothing in many instances but the head. The dog-fish is a menace to every description of fish, and what they can't destroy they drive away, hence during the season when the run of dog-fish exists all eatable fish are driven from our shores, the bait fish as well, hence the great scarcity of bait at this season.

The cod-fishing industry is the most valuable adjunct to the wealth of our maritime provinces, and should be protected in the best possible manner not only by a system of propagation, but by a careful consideration as to how all edible fish can be maintained and become a valuable commodity for export. Our forest wealth to a great extent is becoming exhausted or much curtailed. Our mines have their limit, although the limit may be far removed, but our fisheries may be preserved and made marvellously productive, and as lasting as the hills for all time to come. But we must seek a remedy to see this pest dog-fish removed. I know of no industry except farming, and its kindred branches in which this permanency can be claimed. If all other industries diminish, the sea will continue to yield her increase undiminished, if methods are employed to remove the dog-fish pest and we adopt the system to keep up the supply of edible fish.

I have advocated in this House bureaus of fishing for the advancement of the fisheries, from which valuable information can be gathered, equally as great as the benefits that are at present derived from bureaus of agriculture, and I cannot understand why a measure of this sort is not encouraged and adapted with a view to the improvement and greater development of our fisheries.

We have been suffering now for a number of years from what is known as the dog-fish pest. These fish are not indigenous to our waters, but come from the south and I agree with those who spoke previously that it may well be treated as one of international interest. In my opinion we should consult with the United States government and ascertain what suggestions they have to offer. As I understand, they have also taken the matter up and have suggested that a certain amount be paid to their fishermen for the capture of these fish. But that this proposition could be carried out satisfactorily, I have grave doubts. At the same time we can move independently of them to a certain extent. It would be better, however, if we could have their co-operation, especially as they are as much if not more interested in getting rid of this pest than we are. This pest is looked upon by our fishermen as most formidable—one that must be taken in hand and mastered as soon as possible. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries, whom I have interviewed on several occasions, seems desirous of doing what he can and willing to receive any suggestion that may be offered him to get rid of the evil. Whatever is done should be done promptly and we should insist on prompt action. Our forests are diminishing steadily owing to the demands of commerce and the anxiety of our lumbermen to realize on their limits as rapidly as possible. Our mines though considerable, will no doubt some day, happily far removed, become exhausted, but our fishing industry is one that will last for all time. But we require to employ every means to foster it and protect it as much as possible. The removal of this pest (the dog-fish) is one of those means. What we require is to ascertain what remedy would be effective. The giving of a bounty has been suggested. I have already suggested that a bounty of $5 per ton should be given instead of by actual count. The removal of the tail of the dog-fish and then letting it go would not kill the fish in my opinion. As I am informed by the fishermen, the fish would still continue to live, and if they should die in consequence of the removal of their tails, they would pollute the waters and the remedy would be worse than the disease. The reason why I suggested weight instead of number in giving the bounty is because when a fisherman comes in with a large quantity of fish, these fish are very difficult to handle because their fins and tails are like files and injure very quickly all those who handle them. But if the bounty were paid by measure, then the fishermen would get all they are entitled to and quick despatch. With regard to the suggestion thrown out by a previous speaker, that we should utilize the dog-fish as a fertilizer and have one fertilizing establishment that would not be practicable. Why? Because it would not be possible for those who catch the dog-fish to bring them to the factory to be converted into a fertilizer when far removed, but you would require to place factories at the points where the fishing is carried on to the greatest extent. Canso is an important point, but there are other points which would require those factories equally as much as Canso. In giving a bounty to the fishermen we are not only encouraging the fish industry, but we are benefiting that industry by the removal of this pest and in the course of time might be able to get rid of it entirely just as lobsters are less in number than ever before is due to the overcatch, and to the increase in price and the demand.

I therefore feel that the bounty, if given, should be paid by weight, at such a rate as the government could afford to give. I would also suggest that a bounty be given for the oil. The oil is an article of commerce that can be utilized for mechanical purposes and in other ways. I am informed by farmers that as a fertilizer the oil would not be as good as the body of the fish itself. Thus, according to my recommendation, the fishermen would have a bounty for the quantity of dog-fish caught, and also for the oil that would be obtained from the dog-fish. I would also suggest the establishment of fertilizing establishments at different points along the coast so that they might receive a bounty as well. By thus providing for the manufacture of fertilizers the farmer as well as the fishermen would receive that benefit to which he is entitled from the bounty for the capture of dog-fish. At present we are compelled to send to the United States and purchase fertilizers. Some fertilizers are manufactured in Canada, but many persons having practical knowledge of the value of the fertilizers say that the fertilizers which they obtain from the United States, irrespective of the duty are better than those manufactured in Canada. Personally I have grave doubt with regard to that assertion; I think that cannot possibly be correct, but the analysts would be able to ascertain the comparative values of these fertilizers by the tests to which each class could be subjected. The dog-fish could thus be utilized in such a way as to benefit both classes of the community and I am free to state here that the dog-fish could be used as a feed as well. I know from past experience that dog-fish, prepared and dried as it can be with very little labour, can be employed as a feed for cattle—not for cows that are being milked, nor for cattle that are being fattened for beef, but for young cattle, young swine, and horses. If the fish can be prepared in that way I would suggest to the Minister of Fisheries that he also give a bounty of so much per ton for all fish so prepared in that way as an article of feed. We thus have three advantages from capture of these fish, the bounty for the oil, the bounty for the dog-fish as a fertilizer and the bounty for the manufacture of these fish into a good product. If this idea is favourably received by the Minister of Fisheries then I would say let him act upon it promptly so that the fishermen will be able to obtain immediate benefit. If the matter is left over for consideration they would not receive that immediate benefit. I am in receipt of numberless letters from parties who are interested in the fisheries, who urge very strongly that some action be taken by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. These people will await the disposal of this subject with a great deal of interest.

I referred some days ago to the subject of the preservation of fish in cold storage. I would not now have brought this matter before the House but as our friend from Sydney (Mr. Kendall) referred to cold storage for fish and also to cold storage for bait purposes in Newfoundland for sea fishing, I may say that I feel that something should be done in this matter. There is no reason why we cannot have a more satisfactory service than is obtained under the process at present used at North Sydney. I referred when speaking previously on this subject to a system that is employed by Mr. Eaton, the patentor who has informed me that not only in theory but in practice his system has been found to give satisfactory results. Throughout the United States immense amounts of money have been employed in the industry of cold storage, and Mr. Eaton is now having one plant put up at Montreal, another he is arranging for at Toronto and another is about to be set up here in Ottawa. In order that the House may have a clear idea of the advantages of this system, I shall read to the House the prospectus of the Eaton Company:

Mr. WRIGHT. Are these plants being put up in Ottawa and Montreal by the government or by private individuals?

Mr. KAULBACH. Private individuals, capital subscribed. The prospectus is as follows:

THE EATON ICE PROCESS.

Ice of absolutely pure quality and free from bacteria, can be made in large quantities by the Eaton process for 10 cents per ton laid down in the icehouse.

Present cost of production.

Ice of much inferior quality, such as is obtained from the St. Lawrence or Back river, costs 75 cents per ton laid down, and is sold by the trade to large customers at $2 to $3 per ton, delivered at their place of business.

Comparative qualities.

While all river or lake ice, even the very finest, contains great numbers of germs and impurities dangerous to the health, Eaton ice is absolutely free from both, being made from water which has undergone careful scientific filteration. Nor does it contain air-bubbles, which in the ordinary article cause a loss of 40 per cent by melting, Eaton ice is hard as flint, so hard that it has a metallic ring, and it can neither rot nor become honeycombed. The absence of imbedded air prevents it from melting and from creating any moisture, it can only evaporate from the outside. Thus while dealers now are compelled to lay in a stock of 8,000 tons of ordinary ice for every 5,000 which they deliver during the season in order to effect a clear loss of 3,000 tons by melting, no loss of any consequence would occur with the Eaton ice, the loss by evaporation being merely nominal.

Absolute certainty of supply.

Ice famines are of no infrequent occurrence, owing to mild winters which do not permit the formation of cakes sufficiently thick to survive the storage period. The thinner the cakes of ice which are collected from the river, the greater will be the subsequent loss from melting in the icehouse during the summer.

The Eaton process obviates this danger in its entirety, while cold weather enables the process to be worked to the best advantage, there is no necessity for greater cold than that of the ordinary freezing weather which prevails in Canada for several months in the year. At a temperature 25, or 26 F or 30 or 40 C., one half inch of ice can be made per hour or 12 inches in 24 hours. With lower temperatures, it is made correspondingly faster. The horizontal dimensions of the ice cake are of course, limited only by the space available for the ice-bed and by the amount of the water supply. This would seem to prove that Canada is the country par excellence for working the Eaton process.

Comparative cost of production

	Good river ice	By Eaton process.
Sawing, per ton..	$0 14	None.
Carting..	0 50	.....
Packing..	0 06	.....
Melting..	0 25	.....

Cost of manufacture of Eaton ice in an 8,000 ton house. Two hundred gallons of water from city mains, at 20 cents per thousand gallons, making 4 cents for water used to make one ton of ice.

Cost of water for 8,000 tons of ice.. ..	$320 00
Labour, 6 men 30 days, at $1 50..	270 00

Actual cost of making ice in 8,000 ton house is therefor 7⅜ cents. To this must be added the interest charges on outlay for ground and plant. Larger plants will work cheaper still, because a considerable saving can be made in the cost of building and wages.

Plant and machinery.—The Eaton process works entirely without chemicals or machinery. Nature alone does the work of freezing. An expensive plant, therefore, is unnecessary; only houses to store the ice, with a water power attached to each for the treatment of the water, all built of the plainest materials. A 20,000 tons plant can be put up in this city for about $10,000, and larger plants proportionably cheaper

Size of Canadian market.—According to carefully collected statistics, there are consumed annually in the city of Montreal, at least 500,000 tons of ice, and in Toronto double that quantity, while the joint consumption of the lesser cities may be put down at another 500,000 tons, or at least 2,000,000 tons per annum, in Ontario, Quebec and the lower provinces. This is believed to be a very conservative estimate. Besides this local consumption, there is an unlimited field for export, for if the city of Portland, Maine, can export 5,000,000 tons of ordinary ice per season, ice which has to be brought 160 miles by rail, leaving 50 per cent of its substance in transit, there is manifestly no reason why St. John and Halifax could not build up a large business by shipping Eaton ice made at the wharfs and losing only a paltry percentage by evaporation. Ordinary good ice sold during the hot season, commands as much as $20 per ton at New Orleans, and $12 to $15 per ton at St. Louis; France and England, too, are ready to pay high prices for good ice.

Canadian company to work the Eaton process.—Mr. Eaton is the sole owner of the patents covering his process of making ice and handling water in Canada He has conveyed to the Union Ice Co., Canada, the sole right to use his process in the province of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island for the full term of the life of the patents. He has undertaken also to give to this company the free uses of any further improvements which he may make in his process, for the above territory.

The capital of the Union Ice Company is $500,000 in 100,000 shares of the par value of $5 each, fully paid and non-assessable. If a suitable property can be acquired, and a 20,000 ton plant erected, which can be done easily in three or four weeks, so as to be ready for the first cold weather in January, the house ought to be filled with ice before January 1st. When this has been done, the local ice trade can be given an opportunity to examine into the quality of the ice, the working of the process, the cost of production, and their own chances of competing with a system which works far cheaper and more certainly than the river. There being no desire to interfere with their trade, they can be offered all the ice they want at a figure considerably below what they are paying now; the stock necessary to fill their contracts can be carried for them in the company's houses until delivery time, and thus they will be saved the large outlay in cash for sawing, carting and packing, which they now must face every winter. If they decide to act thus as distributors of ice only, they will be able to get along without their icehouses and may realize upon their real estate and buildings. These inducements are thought to be so palpably plain that the trade will become at once the company's customers and all enmity and ill-feeling will be avoided.

I must apologize, Mr. Speaker, for occupying the time of the House in reading this lengthy description of the system of ice production. I may say also that Mr. Eaton has described to me the virtue of the ice that is thus made. He says that the water goes through an electric process which deprives it of all the germs that water would naturally possess. The ice thus formed is therefore clear of all impurities of every description, and retains its congealed quality much longer that if it had not undergone this electric process. He further says in his prospectus that it removes all air globules from the ice, which in ordinary ice have a tendency to destroy the fish or meat when it is brought in contact with them. He further says, as I have remarked on a previous occasion in speaking on this subject, that the ice made by this process retains all the phosphoric properties contained in the fish or meat; whereas by the ordinary process of packing these articles in ice, those properties disappear much sooner. He also states that fish when deprived of its phosphoric properties is worthless, even as bait, and the fish will not take it. He goes on further to say that when ordinary bait is removed from the icehouse and taken on board a fishing craft, the bait will last but a very short time, whereas by his process it will last considerable longer. He also told me that he would think nothing of wrapping a pound of ice in a piece of thick paper, putting it into his satchel and travelling to Boston and back, and the ice would be in almost as perfect a condition as when he started. If that is the case it certainly offers many advantages over any other method of manufacturing ice that I have yet heard of. I have occupied a considerable time in givin expression to my views in regard to the question of dog-fish and the remedy to be applied for the purpose of securing the removal of this pest with which the fishing industry of the maritime provinces has to contend. I sincerely hope the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will seriously take the matter into his consideration and act in a prompt manner in order that the fishermen of the maritime provinces may have the encouragement which they anticipate they will receive from the bounty which I suggest. I do not suggest a bounty of a merely nominal sum to the industry but a bounty sufficient to induce the fishermen to work actively to accomplish the end which is desirable, that is the removal of the dog-fish from our coast. It need not be a permanent thing. It need only be given a trial. If it is found that it does not work satisfactorily a change can be made and the hon. minister can adopt other methods.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Mr. Speaker, while the interest in this subject may be limited to a number of members in this House, I think its importance to the maritime provinces fully justifies the time and attention that have been given to it to-day. As the representative of a fishing constituency and as a minister from the maritime provinces, I naturally have the warmest interest in the subject. I have had much correspondence concerning it with people in the fishing business, including some of the gentlemen whose names have been mentioned in the discussion to-day and whose large experience entitles their opinions to the utmost consideration. I have repeatedly been in communication with my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) on the subject, who at all times has manifested the warmest interest in the matter and the strongest desire to bring about some satisfactory solution. As he has indicated in the answers which he has given to questions which have been asked during the session, difficulties have been met with owing to the wide differences of opinion as to what is the best mode of dealing with the evil. That the evil exists, and that it is a great one, is fully realized, but the proper method of dealing with the matter is a question which necessarily requires time for consideration. I can only say that my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has repeatedly assured me that it is his desire to co-operate with the maritime representatives in the matter, and when I came recently to prepare the supplementary estimates for the current year, which are not yet before the House, the hon. minister asked me to include a considerable sum to enable him to carry on some experiments along the line of what has been the general expression of opinion this afternoon ; that is, the establishment of reduction works for the treatment of dog-fish, both as to the preparation of the dog-fish as a food product and as to the production of oil and fertilizers. I can assure my hon. friends opposite, who have spoken on the subject, that my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is entirely in sympathy with all that has been said, and has given the most substantial evidence of that fact by asking me to give him the necessary appropriation to carry out these proposed experiments.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance if any attempt has been made to establish a cold storage service once a week between the maritime provinces and the province of Ontario. I allude now to the transportation of such fish as kippered herring and finnan haddies. I do not allude to those kinds that are in tin cans, but I refer to the kinds that are packed in boxes. We begin to receive them from the maritime provinces, St. John particularly, in November. They begin then to send them to us by express. The express companies have given us a very low rate on fish, but the difficulty is that we cannot get them at every season of the year. If the Lenten season is very late in the spring, we want a supply of fish, and to get this supply we must have a cold storage service from the maritime provinces to Ontario. If a car came up once a week, leaving St. John or some other maritime port every Wednesday or Thursday so that we could have the fish here by Friday, and we knew that a car was coming every week, it would be a great advantage to us. We are anxious to receive this fish in Ontario. We cannot get them unless we get them from the maritime provinces, and why can we not have fish the same as the people in the maritime provinces have ?

Mr. FIELDING. Something has been done along the lines suggested by my hon. friend, but there is ample room for expansion as he has suggested. The Intercolonial Railway, and I think the Canadian Pacific Railway, are providing some facilities for bringing fish in cold storage, but I believe that the opportunities for an expansion of this business in the upper provinces are very great indeed, and I am delighted to hear my hon. friend say that the people of Ontario are looking forward to obtaining supplies in that way. Something has been done, but there is ample room for improvement on the part of both of the railways.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am told that an express car is run from Vancouver to Boston, attached to the Imperial Limited, which carries an enormous mass of halibut every day in the week, and surely if this can be carried all the way from British Columbia to Boston and sold at remunerative prices, the fish of the maritime provinces could be taken to Ontario, Quebec and even farther west.

Mr. F. B. WADE. Mr. Speaker, I think the discussion which has taken place to-day must be productive of great good, because there seems to be but one opinion on both sides of the House, and that is that everything possible should be done for the benefit of this great industry. The fishing industry of the Dominion of Canada is worth about $23,000,000 annually. The fishing industry of the province of Nova Scotia is worth some $8,000,000 annually, and an industry of those proportions in a province of the size of Nova Scotia is one of very great importance indeed. I am sure that we are all anxious that it shall be fostered in every conceivable way, and I am glad to say that in all the communications I have had with the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Prefontaine) and his officials, they have always manifested the greatest interest in this industry and the desire and determination to do all they can to benefit it. In regard to the fishing industry as a whole, one of the great questions in connection with it is the transportation question. There is no doubt about that. If you have fish in the maritime provinces and you have consumers in Ontario, you must have means of transportation in order to get the fish from one place to the other. Unfortunately in Nova Scotia large sections of the fishing country have been deprived of transportation facilities, particularly from Halifax to Barrington and Yarmouth, and from Halifax east to the Strait of Canso. But it will only be a short time until we have a railway in operation along the southwest coast of Nova Scotia, and I trust that in the near future we will have a railway to the east from Halifax to the Strait of Canso. Then, with refrigerator cars, it will be possible to send large quantities of fresh fish to the markets of the west.

In regard to the methods that are being pursued at the present time, although the methods have been improved very considerably, I think it will be necessary in the near future for the fishermen of the maritime provinces to make very radical changes in the methods they have been pursuing because of the change in the market. They have to turn to the home markets more than in the past, because the West India markets, for reasons which I need not now stop to mention, are being lessened. Already this work has been begun, and firms are being established to prepare fish in the most attractive forms, and they are shipping as far west as Winnipeg and Regina. I agree that while the fisheries in Nova Scotia are worth $8,000,000 annually there is no reason why, with certain improvements, these fisheries could not be made to be worth at least $15,000,000 per annum in a very short time. That is a very great consideration. To illustrate that, I may say I know of a locality in my own county which is bordering on the Bay of Fundy. A few years ago I suppose the whole output from this one settlement was not more than $500 or $600 a year. But a pier has been erected at this place, which enables the fishermen to carry on their industry during the winter, which is the time for the haddock fishery, and as a result the output from that place is something like $20,000 a year.

The government is every year providing facilities to enable the fishermen to more profitably prosecute their calling. The result in the place I have mentioned is that we have received back in return more than $20,000 per year, and wherever that can be done the industry will be stimulated. I am glad that parliament is so alive to the great disadvantages our fishermen are labouring under because of the presence of these dog-fish. For some two or three years I have had my attention called to this matter very closely ; I have had communications with fishermen and with fish dealers, and with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the officers of his department. Everybody recognizes the evil, but the great question has been how it can be remedied. The government has been ready to do everything it can do, but the question remains what shall be done ? There has been a difference of opinion, and that is natural because people cannot very well decide how it is possible to provide a remedy. Many intelligent people tell me it is idle to think of exterminating the dog-fish ; others think they can be exterminated. There is a great deal of capital invested in the shore fisheries and a great many men are dependent on these fisheries for their livelihood. During the season this dog-fish scourge is on, these men are absolutely unable to earn a dollar. They go out in their boats and attempt to fish, but the lines are seized by the dog-fish and cut and the hook carried away, so that it is impossible for the fishermen to pursue their calling. If some means were adopted by which the fishermen during this season could catch dog-fish and make a small wage, even if it were only a dollar a day, it would save them from actual want which often results now. I have had extensive correspondence about this matter with people who are in a position to know, and I think the consensus of opinion among the best informed people is, that the government should do something in the way of aiding the erection of reduction works in certain localities along the coast. It would not be necessary for these reduction works to be so very close together, because the fish could be gathered up and delivered to them. The reason I think it would be necessary for the government to assist in this enterprise, is because of the uncertainty of a continuance of this dog-fish evil. They have been here before and have suddenly disappeared and that may happen again at any time ;—let us hope it will happen soon—but that uncertainty is sufficient to deter private capital from engaging in the establishment of reduction works. I therefore think that if the government would assist a private company in the erection of their plant, requiring them in return to take all the dog-fish offered at a stipulated price, the most good could be accomplished. Then, whether the dog-fish were present or not, the fishermen would be enabled to earn a livelihood. I am satisfied that these reduction works could be made substantially self sustaining, but even suppose there was a considerable loss, the government is assisting other industries and it is but right that our great fishing industry should be assisted also. It is a matter for congratulation that there is on this question such a unanimity of opinion in this House; and that we are all actuated by the one desire to support the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in an earnest endeavour to exterminate this plague and to give courage to our fishermen who have been so tortured by it in the past.

Mr. O. TURGEON. I would not venture to occupy the time of the House were it not that my constituents are deeply interested in this question. I can heartily endorse the remarks of the leader of the opposition, and also the remarks made by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House in reference to the importance of our fisheries and the necessity of their preservation. I have the honour to represent a fishing constituency which represents one-third of the fishing industry of the province of New Brunswick; the total value of the fisheries of that province being about $4,000,000 of which $1,500,000 comes from the county of Gloucester. The fishermen of my county have suffered as well as the fishermen of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island from this dog-fish pest which has been engaging the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and his department for the last year or two. In the waters frequented by the fishermen of my county on the Prince Edward Island banks as well as along the north shore of New Brunswick, these dog-fish have been in existence for over forty years, but until recently in such small numbers that the attention of the fishermen was not particularly attracted to them. Last year, after the first of August the fishing industry carried on in Gloucester county by over 220 fishing vessels virtually ceased, and evidence was given before the commission to show that the resultant loss amounted to over $50,000. The fishermen of my county have urged upon me the necessity of asking that the government shall come to their assistance. Last winter the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was kind enough to appoint what I might call a local commission, consisting of Professor Prince, and Mr. Pierre Morais, of Caraquet, to take the evidence of the fishermen in that district. When we realize that the products of the fisheries amount to $15,000,000 in the maritime provinces, and to $23,000,000 in the whole Dominion, it is easy to see what a great necessity there is for preserving this industry. I believe that with an earnest effort to develop our Canadian fishing industry it could be made to double in value within the course of a few years, so that New Brunswick would produce $8,000,000 or $10,000,000; Nova Scotia, $25,000,000 or $30,000,000, and the whole Dominion of Canada, $50,000,000, instead of $23,000,000 as at present. I am glad to say that the government is showing an interest in this matter and that their desire is to encourage the fishermen of the maritime provinces. For a number of years past we have had larger and more numerous appropriations for the construction of breakwaters and lighthouses, all calculated to facilitate the fishermen in the pursuit of their calling so that they may now get in and out of the harbour at night time as well as in the day, at low tide as at high tide. Instead of having to leave the banks on Friday night or early Saturday morning as was the case a few years ago, in order to get home for Sunday, the fishing fleet can now engage in fishing for a part of the day on Saturday, knowing that in view of the advantages that have been conferred upon them by the government, they can come into the harbour at night, and thus they have more time to prosecute their operations.

The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has certainly shown great interest in dealing with this calamity by appointing commissioners on the subject. While these commissioners have not yet reported, a number of suggestions have been made of more or less practicability. Some of them may be practicable along certain portions of the coasts of the maritime provinces while not practicable along other portions. Some suggestions have been made in this House and outside of this House, which may be practicable along the coast of Cape Breton, but not practicable for the fishing fleet of the county of Gloucester, which is isolated from the other fishing fleets of the maritime provinces. Every means which can be devised to diminish the dog-fish calamity should be taken as far as practicable. Among the suggestions which have been made is the establishment of fertilizers. I believe in the establishment of these fertilizers along our coasts, and I am surprised that the people of Canada have not sooner realized their necessity. At the same time, if we wait until these fertilizers are ready to do the good work they are likely to do, perhaps our fishermen will have lost patience and will have abandoned the fishing industry entirely. The men engaged in the fishing industry are laborious and active, and, as the hon. leader of the opposition said this morning, their valour and intelligence can be appreciated as well as the valour and intelligence of any other class of the Canadian people. They are willing to grapple with any difficulty and help themselves out of the difficulty. It has also been suggested that a bounty should be paid to the fishermen, varying in amount. Such a bounty seems at first sight to be extravagant, and likely to bring Canada into a very large expenditure. It cannot be so, as our fishermen would only devote to dog-fish time that could not be otherwise utilized when at sea, on the fishing banks. Our deep-sea fishermen have no ambition to become fishers of dog-fish for the rest of their lives. They are anxious that the dog-fish pest shall be exterminated without their assistance, if possible. It has been suggested also that the government cruisers employed in protecting the coasts of the maritime provinces should be equipped in order that they may capture dog-fish in large quantities. They might be equipped with large seines of strong cord, similar to those which the Americans used in depleting our waters of mackerel and other fish at the time of the Washington treaty. If those men were able with their destructive engines, to destroy such fish as mackerel, we ought to be able to find means for destroying the dog-fish, which is threatening to destroy our shore fisheries. I would suggest co-operation between the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the fishermen of the county of Gloucester and of the maritime provinces at large. I am sure the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has at his command men of ability, energy and tact, who would be willing to give their services and their best ability to the large interests of the country. men like Commander Spain and Commander Wakeham, placed at the head of such a fleet, would, I am sure, in the course of a few weeks show, to the advantage of Canada and the advantage of the fishing interests of the maritime provinces, that their efforts would be worth the small expenditure they would cost. I understood that the sum of $25,000 has been placed at the command of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for this emergency. The hon. minister has already assured us that he is ready to combat any emergency, and I believe he is as willing and ready to combat this emergency of the dog-fish calamity, in the interest of the fisheries of the maritime provinces, as he has been to equip the gulf and river St. Lawrence for navigation. For the destruction of the dog-fish pest prompt and vigorous action is required. Our fishermen cannot afford to wait for three or four years, for in that time, in their ambition, they will certainly leave the country and look for better employment; and once they leave they will not come back to that industry. We are exerting ourselves to promote the interests of our fishermen. The people of Montreal, Toronto and the west are asking for the fish of the maritime provinces. Let us show our fishermen that they will be encouraged as well as the men of any other industry. I believe that a large amount should be placed at the disposal of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. If he does not find the necessity of expending it, he need not expend it; but it should be there for the occasion. I believe that practical suggestions will be found only as the department engages in the work and looks for practical suggestions—it is only when you are at work that the best suggestions come to you; and I believe the suggestions will receive consideration, not only from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, but from his hon. colleagues in the Council and from every member of this House.

Mr. ANGUS McLENNAN. Mr. Speaker, just one word with regard to this very important subject. No member of this House need apologize for calling attention to the importance of an industry which amounts to something like $22,000,000 or $23,000,000 annually to the Dominion of Canada. Representing, as I do, a very important constituency, containing as it does a seacoast of about 150 miles, containing also a very important salmon-fishing river, I do not feel that I should apologize for a moment for making a few observations in reference to this matter. With regard to this last commission that has been appointed, I cannot agree with my hon. friend from Victoria (Hon. Wm. Ross) in objecting to the personnel of that commission. I think the personnel of the commission is all right, but it is important to take into account the local conditions in various parts of the country. When our fishing industry is scattered along 5,000 miles of coast, it is obvious that a commission picked from one locality would not be calculated to understand local conditions so readily as a commission picked from the various localities along the coast.

I find, on looking over the personnel of the commission then, that it is composed of gentlemen representing the Bay of Fundy constituencies and the Department of Marine and Fisheries. And if there is to be any change made in its personnel, my only suggestion would be that it should be composed of gentlemen taken from the various parts of the coast, leaving the selection to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries and his colleagues. I must say in passing that I can only add my mede of praise to the conduct of the hon. minister in connection with the duties pertaining to his office. I would call attention particularly to one feature in his administration and that is that he is always ready to get rid of 'red tape' and deal with a measure upon its merits. That certainly has been my experience, and that certainly is a feature of the hon. gentleman's administration well worthy of commendation. As this dog-fish pest has assumed such serious proportions as to become a menace to a most valuable industry, there is no need for me to say anything regarding the urgency of our doing something to extirpate it. What requires to be done is for each gentleman from the maritime provinces to offer suggestions as to the means he considers best to get rid of the pest. It has been suggested that a reduction factory should be established for the purpose of enabling this fish to be utilized as a fertilizer, and according to the estimate of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) that would cost something like $20,000 for the plant and $20,000 to run it. I am told that this is a very moderate estimate, and I observe in this connection that while the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Wm. Roche) agrees to this proposition, he couples his endorsation of it with the suggestion that the experiment should be tried on the Halifax coast. He leaves out of consideration the fact that we have a coast of something like 5,000 miles to deal with and that the dog-fish are not disposed to remain on the coast of Halifax any longer than anywhere else along our shores. It may then be urged that if the visits of these fish are of so transitory a character, why make so much ado about them. Well, one week of the dog-fish around our coast means perhaps two months destruction of our fisheries. Not only do these destroy the fishing lines, but also all the fishing nets and what is more it is well known by fishermen that the presence of this pest on the coast for one week will scare away all species of other fish for weeks at a time. Therefore do I say that the presence of this pest on our coast for one week might lead to the destruction of our fish for two months possibly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But they do stay much longer.

Mr. McLENNAN. Yes, unfortunately they do, but I am merely supposing a case. And I say that the transitory character of their visits would certainly tell very much against the establishment of a permanent institution such as a reduction plant. For the past thirty years I have lived among the fishermen and frequently have talked this subject over with them and the conclusion I have come to is that the best way to meet the evil would be to grant such inducements to destroy the fish—would be to give a bonus for every gallon of dog-fish oil sent to market or reduced or so much per head for every fish caught. That would be much more effective than a reduction plant, inasmuch as it would cover our whole coast. It might be said that an army of officials would be required to check the counting of these fish, which would certainly be an objection, but at the same time I am sure that the money we would spend in a month or so in this way would be much more than compensated for by the additional value given to our fisheries. I would therefore urge upon the minister and his colleagues the advisability of experimenting along this line and to pay a bounty either of so much per fish caught or so much a gallon for every gallon of oil. Two most important classes would in this way be benefited, because after the oil would be taken from the fish the residue would make a capital compost to be used on farm lands, and I venture to say that this compost would find a ready market, so that the only expense to which the government would be subjected would be the expense of furnishing the needed incentive in the shape of a bounty for every gallon of oil rendered or every fish caught. There is just one point to which I wish to call attention, and that is with regard to the lobster fishing industry, and I refer to this because the commission has not yet finished its work. I would call attention to it in particular to the operations along our coast. No doubt the investigations of the previous commission have been productive of the very greatest good, but there are certainly some defects in the conclusions at which they arrived. One of these defects is the great inequalities in the length of the season in different districts. I would therefore suggest that the commission pay particular attention to the equalizing of the lobster fishing season around the Island of Cape Breton. There is nearly a month's difference in the time within which fishermen can prosecute that industry in different parts of the coast around that island. I am sure the House will agree that a difference of three weeks in the open season in one locality is quite unreasonable.

With regard to the proposition to establish factories for the manufacture of oil and other valuable products from the dog-fish, I would again say that this would be a very costly way of disposing of the fish, although it might be profitable in some localities. The great obstacle would be the difficulty of applying such a system along 5,000 miles of coast. From the southern side of the Bay of Fundy to Labrador there is a fishing coast of that length and to establish these factories would involve an immense expense. What is more, the fish is of a migratory character and when a factory had been built at great expense perhaps in three weeks after its completion this pest would migrate to another shore. I would therefore press upon the government the choice of giving a bounty per head for every dog-fish taken or else of so much a gallon for every gallon of oil extracted. In this way the whole coast would be covered much better than by experimenting in any one locality.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does my hon. friend think the fish could be used for food to any extent ?

Mr. McLENNAN. I have never heard of it being used for food among our people.

Mr. WADE. I believe that some have been canned.

Mr. McLENNAN. Not that I have heard of. The oil is quite valuable, and as a fertilizer they are excellent. The farmers along out coast would lose no time I am sure in adopting them as a fertilizer and paying the fishermen for them. I make these observations on behalf of the fishermen along the 150 miles of coast in the county which I have the honour to represent. What holds true of that coast, no doubt holds true of several other constituencies in the province from which I come.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. Might I ask the hon. gentleman if the dog-fish has ever been analysed so that we might be able to tell whether it is fit for food or only for manure? Before we undertake to discuss the dog-fish, we should know its component parts, and what it is fit for. It has been discussed ever since we started this morning at 11 o'clock, but I have yet to learn what it is good for. It seems to be a great evil to the fishermen, and we should know what it is worth.

Mr. McLENNAN. Dog-fish have been analysed and are found good as food. I think 90 per cent of the fish is good for food, and the bi-products form excellent fertilizers.

Mr. S. E. GOURLEY. I was glad to hear the hon. member for West Elgin ask this question, because I apprehend that this question should be discussed by the people of Ontario more than by the people of the maritime provinces. This is one of the vital questions of Canada. The fishery interests of the maritime provinces are the most vital in Canada. They are infinitely superior to the wheat interests, the mineral interests or the agricultural interests of Canada. This matter should be taken up in the most liberal spirit so that the government if necessary may spend not only $100,000, but $1,000,000 to exterminate this pest. This is a new menace to the fishing interests in the maritime provinces. What we want is a commission that will summon to its aid the most scientific knowledge in the country to determine where these dog-fish grow and then to ascertain the best and most effective means to secure their extermination, because exterminated they must be, otherwise they will destroy the fishing industries in Canada. They are the most important industries in the world. Down by the seas you have a maritime and a commercial people. Without a maritime and commercial population this country would be inland, and inland countries have ever been failures. You must have a mercantile country. The men who control the sea, who go abroad, are the ones who determine the character of a country. You train these men in the fisherise of the maritime provinces, and if you want a navy——

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, oh.

Mr. GOURLEY. I am surprised at the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Macpherson). Is he so narrow as to be absolutely unaware of the enormous proportions of the fishing industries of the maritime provinces? The other matter is the commercial interest of this country, in which British Columbia ought to have some concern. I am surprised that hon. gentlemen should take so little interest in this matter. I suppose if it had been a question that offered some personal advantage to some one, they would have been on their feet. But apparently no subject that does not offer some personal reward to some members of this House appeals to their hearts or their statesmanship. I want the hon. gentleman to know that the fish industries of the maritime provinces are among the most important industries in this country. The only thing I regretted in the remarks of the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson)—who is generally liberal to a fault and sometimes conservative to a fault—was his remark that this discussion commenced at 11 o'clock and it was time to finish it. Why, Sir, in the interests of Canada it should be continued for two months, if it were necessary. If it were some little vote of $2,000 for a wharf, then I suppose he would be willing to let it continue for a week. But when a vital interest is being discussed when the great fishing interests of this country are at stake, that is another thing.

Now I want to say that without great fishing interests you cannot have a commercial marine and you cannot have a navy. I want to see in a few years a navy, so that if my children desire to pursue a naval course they can do so on Canadian vessels instead of having to go abroad. I want to see a navy in this country. From what other source can you find men to man your navy unless from those who are engaged in the fishing industry? Can you man your navy with men from Ontario or from Manitoba? Why, Sir, a ship manned by Manitobans or Ontarians would sink in half an hour. You want the men down by the sea to man your ships. Maritime people alone can produce a successful navy. These are the sailors that fight on the ships that win victories, it does not depend on the number of the ships or the tonnage of the navy. Now if we want a navy in this country we must encourage the great fishing interests of the maritime provinces. I say that if need came we could furnish in the maritime provinces 20,000 or 50,000 of the finest sailors in the world. Give them three months training on board a ship, and they would fight the fleets of Japan and Russia combined, and sink them. I want to see questions of this kind appeal to the manhood of Canada, and relegate little questions to county councils. This is a vital question, and I ask the government to spare no pains in dealing with it. If it takes $100,000, vote it; if it takes $1,000,000, vote it; vote all that is required to destroy the pest of the dog-fish. I have no technical knowledge of the fishing industries myself, I only know that with $1,000,000 you can get the technical information necessary to protect our fisheries. Therefore I would ask parliament to vote, if necessary, $1,000,000 to save the fishing interests of the maritime provinces, because they would serve for the foundation of a great commercial navy which I hope to see built up in this country.

Mr. R. G. MACPHERSON. I do not knew why the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Gourley) singled me out for some of his jibes.

Mr. GOURLEY. I will tell you why. I noticed on one or two occasions while I was speaking—I do not know whether it is the training that British Columbia people receive or not, I am not familiar with their training—but I noticed that the hon. gentleman was acting in a very boisterous manner, what I would call an ill-bred manner, in attempting interruptions.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, I think I am in the judgment of every member of the House if my conduct since I have been here does not at least stand a fair comparison with that of the hon. gentleman. I do not think I have ever got up in this House and rambled all over God's green earth in making a speech. If the hon. gentleman is annoyed because, in conversation with a gentleman at my right, who said something to me which caused me to laugh while the hon. gentleman was speaking, I am prepared to apologize for my laugh, though to tell the truth I was not laughing at anything the hon. gentleman said, because most of what he said was not worth laughing at. Even if I did wish to laugh at him while he was speaking, there is no law in this country to forbid me. I think my breeding is quite as good as his, and I think my conduct in this House will compare favourably with his own. I would not have spoken on this dog-fish question if the hon. member had not unnecessarily brought my name into the discussion, but we in the west have some interest in this particular question. But we have not come to parliament like the hon. member for Colchester asking the government to contribute $1,000,000 towards exterminating the pest. We have dog-fish on our coasts and have had for years, but we deal with the pest ourselves, instead of asking the government to interfere on our behalf in the exercise of paternalism. I am a Canadian first, last, and all the time, and I believe that what is good for Nova Scotia is good for British Columbia. We in British Columbia have settled the dog-fish question some time ago. We have erected refineries there. We catch the fish and render them into oil and use the offal as a fertilizer. The result is that we have two companies there who are now making money out of it, and we do not come to the Dominion parliament asking for paternal assistance. I believe there is a little too much paternalism exercised by the government in behalf of people who expect government assistance for every little industry they start, or every little difficulty they get into. No doubt our people in British Columbia would be pleased if they could receive some benefit in the way of a bounty towards destroying the dog-fish pest. Our dog-fish are just as disastrous to other fish as they are down in the maritime provinces. The only difference is that our dog-fish do not go into the rivers in such large quantities, they stay in the open sea. Our salmon go into the fresh water, and when the dog-fish do not follow them into fresh water, but are caught in traps and by an apparatus made specially for the purpose, consisting of strong steel hooks which the fish cannot bite through.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are they put to any use in British Columbia?

Mr. MACPHERSON. Yes. The oil is largely used as a lubricant, they call it skidway oil. We use a lot of it in our country in lumbering operations. That may seem strange to people in the east. But we have no snow there to facilitate the getting out of logs, and the people use skidways which they grease with this oil. Dog-fish livers make an oil equal to cod liver oil, and a good many people use it medicinally. I am aware from personal knowledge that it makes as good an oil as cod liver oil. There is no better fertilizer than the residue from the refinery.

Mr. GOURLEY. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should talk of paternalism when we have aided British Columbia——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. GOURLEY. I merely wanted to make an explanation and refer to the lead bounties which we granted British Columbia last year.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

SIR ELZEAR TASCHEREAU AND LORD DUNDONALD.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair I wish to draw the attention of the government to a cablegram which appears in the evening papers—in the Evening 'Citizen' of to-day and in the Ottawa Evening 'Journal.' The cablegram is to the same effect. That in the 'Citizen' reads as follows:

London, July 19.—Sir Elzear Taschereau, chief justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, says he is indignant at the political capital being made out of the Dundonald affair. He says the London 'Times' is being loaded up by Ottawa Tory sources. There are few Scotchmen back of the whole agitation, and he cannot see how the British government, if alive to its own interests, can fail to recall Lord Dundonald before the end of the week.

In the 'Journal' of this evening the cable is as follows :

London, July 19.—Sir Elzear Taschereau says he is indignant that political capital is being made of the Dundonald affair. The 'Times' is loaded up by Ottawa Tory sources. Few Scotchmen back the whole agitation. He cannot see how British government, if alive to its own interests, can fail to recall Dundonald before the end of the week.

I can hardly believe it possible that these cables reflect accurately the views given in public by this distinguished jurist. His Lordship enjoys an enviable reputation as an impartial jurist, but if he desires to maintain that splendid position he must refrain from the public discussion of purely political matters. It is hardly in accord with the fitness of things that His Lordship —who is at present in London in attendance upon the sessions of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the Supreme Court of the empire—should make use of this language, or should give utterance to these views regarding a gallant British officer who is only defending himself against the unfair and unjustifiable attacks which have been made and are being made upon him. Lord Dundonald is no longer in the service of Canada. He no longer occupies the position of General Officer Commanding the Canadian militia, and if, as it is claimed by some hon. gentlemen, that, notwithstanding the fact that he occupies no official position in Canada or in connection with the Canadian government, although a distinguished officer of the British army, it is impolitic on his part to make public speeches or to discuss a matter of this kind in which he is so vitally interested, what shall be said of the course which is being pursued by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada in this connection ? I would like to ask the government if the statement I have read has been brought to its attention ; if this statement has been authorized ; if the government approves of it, and if it will make some definite announcement as to the position of the government, either now or at the sitting of the House to-morrow ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I am afraid we cannot either now or to-morrow give my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) the precise answer he wants. We cannot deny that our attention has been called to the matter because my hon. friend has called our attention to it to-day, but this is the only way in which we have become acquainted with the statement and I think it would not be wise for us to assume anything to the disadvantage of the distinguished chief justice of Canada upon a mere cable report. I think that before forming any opinion as to any utterance of Sir Elzear Taschereau it would be wise for us to get fuller information. We have no information at the present time upon the matter to which the hon. gentleman has drawn attention.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to draw the attention of the hon. minister to the fact that these cables have come by our own special Canadian cable service that is paid for by the people of Canada, and they are likely to be official on that account. That is the reason why I think we are entitled to have some definite statement from the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FIELDING. If the hon. gentleman wishes to imply that these cables are in any way under the control of the government or that the government have anything to do with them he is certainly mistaken. We grant a sum of money to aid the Canadian Press Association in the dissemination of their news but they manage the matter entirely and I can assure my hon. friend that we have not really any more control over these cables than he himself. I do not wish to offer any opinion whatever concerning them.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. minister misapprehends what I meant to say. I meant to say that this cable service was supposed to devote most of its space to Canada. It was for that reason that the cable service was subsidized and for that reason I believe the service will be more likely to be official and accurate than an ordinary associated press cablegram might be expected to be.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC—EMPLOYMENT OF ALIENS ON SURVEYS.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General). Yesterday the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) stated that he had received a communication from Mr. Griffith, secretary of the Amalgamated Engineers of Canada, to the effect that verbatim copies of the evidence being taken by His Honour Judge Winchester in connection with the alien labour inquiry now being conducted had been delivered to the Grand Trunk or the Grand Trunk Pacific. Yesterday I gave, as far as I was in a position to do so, as I could only speak from belief, a most unqualified denial to the statement, but I added that I would put myself in communication with the stenographer who accompanied the judge at once and ascertain the facts. I found that the stenographer was absent from Ottawa being in attendance on Judge Winchester in Montreal where he is still engaged on the inquiry. Accordingly I sent the following telegram to Judge Winchester :

Ottawa, July 18, 1904.

His Honour Judge Winchester,
Windsor Hotel, Montreal, Que.

(Rush.)

Have been asked in the House whether statement of Mr. Griffith is correct that Grand Trunk or Grand Trunk Pacific was furnished daily with verbatim copies of evidence taken by you in connection with present inquiry. What are the facts ?

(Sgd.) WM. MULOCK.

To which I received last evening the following reply :

Montreal, Que., 18, 04.

Hon. Sir William Mulock, K.C.,
Ottawa, Ont.

No evidence whatever has been furnished any one in connection with inquiry. I have myself only received certain portions of it on which to found my interim reports. Griffith's statement untrue.

(Sgd.) JOHN WINCHESTER.

RESIGNATION OF LIEUTENANT COLONEL GREGORY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair I would like to direct the attention of the government and more especially that of the hon. Minister of of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) to the fact that the correspondence brought down relating to the case of Lieutenant Colonel Gregory does not seem to include the correspondence between the district officer commanding No. 2 district and Colonel Gregory, which as I understand ought to be available. Perhaps that can be supplemented at an early date.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). I understood that everything was brought down but I will make an inquiry.

Motion agreed to and House went into Committee of Supply.

SUPPLY.

Government of the Northwest Territories—registrars, &c., $39,000.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the cause of the increase ?

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Minister of the Interior). There has been a very large increase in the business done in the Northwest Territories ; the revenue has grown from $10,000, in 1896 to $74,800 last year. The increase of $7,000 is caused by the appointment of eight clerks at Regina at a salary of $600 each ; a clerk at Edmonton, $480 ; two additional clerks at Edmonton, $1,200 ; increases in salaries to the staff generally, $1,635 ; increase in contingencies, $485, total increase, $8,000. One clerk with a salary of $1,000 has resigned leaving the net increase, $7,000.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK.

Government of the Northwest Territories—insane patients, $70,000.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I understand this money is paid under an arrangement with Manitoba. Has there been any change made in the manner in which the Northwest lunatics are looked after ?

Mr. SIFTON. No change. We provide for the maintenance of 148 patients at $1 a day, $54,200 ; transportation, $4,500 ; clothing, &c., $500 ; additional cases, $6,408. This expenditure is constantly increasing. In 1896 it was $33,500 and for the six months from the 1st of July to December 31, 1903 it was $30,431, so that I think $70,000 would be a conservative estimate. We simply pay according to a scale.

Government of the Northwest Territories—grant for schools, clerical assistance, printing, &c., to be paid half yearly, $707,979.

Mr. SIFTON. This is a subsidy vote for the Northwest government and when the main estimates were made up several months ago we did not have any communication from the Northwest government as to their requirements, I simply inserted the total amount of last year's vote which would go on account of the amount that will be required for this year. It is intended to ask for the balance in the supplementary estimates. When we come to that vote, we will then know the exact amount, and I will put before the House a statement of what has been asked for by the Northwest government, so that it probably will be a more suitable time to discuss the matter.

Yukon—salaries and expenses in connection with administration of the territory, $235,540.

Mr. SIFTON. There will be a further estimate in connection with this amount. We pay out of this vote the salaries and what is called the living allowances of the officials of the Yukon Territory. They have been getting a living allowance of $1,800 a year each, in addition to their salaries, on account of the excessive cost of living in that territory. Last summer I formed the opinion that the time had come when this living allowance ought to be cut down and I directed the deputy to estimate for only $900 a year for each official instead of $1,800, I had in my mind at the time that it was not likely that the amount could be cut down to $900 and I desired to discuss the exact amount with the inspector, the member for the Yukon Territory (Mr. Ross) and the commissioner who have better information in regard to the Yukon than I have. This vote includes only $900 for living allowance and the additional amount will be put in the supplementary estimates, I desire to state that it is my intention to ask the committee to vote for the married men an allowance of $1,500, and the single men an allowance of $1,000. Instead of all the officials getting $1,800 a year living allowance, the married men will get $1,500 and the single men, $1,000, except in the case of some of the higher officials.

Mr. COCHRANE. Why doesn't the minister give them a salary, and let them provide for themselves ?

Mr. SIFTON. It is a difficult question. One or two of the other departments do that. It involves putting the salary up to such a figure that it would be difficult to make a comparison with the salaries paid in other places. It seemed to me to be much more satisfactory to pay about the same salary that we pay to a similar official in this part of the country and to add a living allowance suitable to the conditions of the country. When the conditions of the country change, we can reduce the living allowance. Otherwise the official might think whatever the conditions were that was his salary. He cannot say that now. When the conditions change, his living allowance ought to change too.

Grant to Yukon council for local purposes, $125,000.

Mr. SIFTON. This is in the nature of a subsidy.

Grant to Yukon council for maintenance and construction of roads and bridges, and maintenance of public buildings, $200,000.

Mr. SIFTON. This is also in the nature of a subsidy, but I desire to move for the reduction of this amount by $65,420, for the following reason : There has been some discussion as to whether the public buildings in the Yukon Territory should be administered as to their maintenance by the local council or by the Public Works Department. This estimate was made upon the basis of the local council carrying on that administration ; but the commissioner recommends that the method which formerly prevailed, of the Pubic Works Department administering the Dominion public buildings directly, is the more satisfactory, as it is the logical way. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works is going to estimate for this amount in his estimates, which will be laid before the House in a few days.

Mr. WILSON. I do not think the minister has given us any good reason why these buildings should be administered from Ottawa instead of by the local authorities. It seems to me they could be much better administered by the men on the spot.

Mr. SIFTON. The Yukon council is in the nature of a local government. It has properties of its own to administer, a separate revenue and a separate budget. These are Dominion public buildings, and not buildings of the local government.

Mr. COCHRANE. For many years I have thought that it was better to give the Northwest Territories local autonomy and let them manage their own business. Why should they be kept in leading strings any longer, with all their monetary affairs directed from Ottawa ?

Mr. SIFTON. If my hon. friend will reflect, he will see that there is no province in the Dominion where the provincial government administers Dominion public buildings.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am not talking about Dominion public buildings. I am talking about the Northwest council taking care of its own affairs. In the province of Ontario we do not get subsidies to build our roads and bridges. We have to build them ourselves, and for that reason there is more economy practiced than there would be if they were built by officials appointed by the government at Ottawa. I think the time has arrived when the Northwest Territories should have the power to manage their own affairs in the way they consider best adapted to the country.

Mr. WILSON. I understand from what the minister has said that up to the present time these buildings have been administered by the local authorities, and he has not given us any particular reason for the change, except that they are Dominion buildings.

Mr. SIFTON. Last year a change was made by which some of the Dominion public buildings which had been built by the Department of Public Works were turned over to the local government to administer. They sent us an estimate of how much it would cost and we supplied the money. In that way we have not the same control over the expenditure, and the commissioner has written to the Minister of Public Works pointing out that to have some buildings owned by the Dominion administered by the local council and others administered by the Department of Public Works involves a confusion of accounts. They were all administered by the Dominion the year before last, and the commissioner recommends that we go back to the old system. The same men will handle the money and attend to the business. It is practically only a change in the method of book-keeping.

Motion agreed to, and item reduced by $65,420.

Surveys, examination of survey returns, printing of plans, including $13,000 for Irrigation Surveys, &c.. ..	..$750,000
To provide for purchase of steel cases for Survey Records of the Department..	14,100
	..$764,100

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. How much was surveyed last year ? The hon. gentleman told us last year that it was his intention to have 500 townships surveyed in the Northwest during this year. How many townships have been surveyed and where have the surveys been made ?

Mr. SIFTON. I have a statement of the work done last year but have not got it under my hand. I shall lay it on the table to-morrow. The work for this year is as follows :

1. Three parties under daily pay at $15,000 each—$45,000.

Three survey parties are to be kept at work for twelve months in the Peace River District, establishing base lines and block outlines, which are the governing lines of the system of survey of Dominion Lands. These lines have to be marked on the ground in order that subdivision surveys may be undertaken in the near future.

Each party is in charge of a Dominion Land Surveyor whose salary is $7.50 per day. The assistant is paid $3 per day ; the the cook and labourers are hired at the current rate of wages of this district. A party consists of fourteen men besides the surveyor and the assistant. The cost is about $45 per day.

2. Three parties under daily pay at $10,000 each—$30,000.

Three parties are to be employed during the coming season in surveying base lines and block outlines west of Edmonton and from Lesser Slave lake westwards along the 19th base line. These parties will be of the same strength as those sent to Peace river.

3. Five parties under daily pay at $7,500 each —$37,500.

For surveying the outlines of townships between the base lines before commencing the subdivision and for making subdivision and other surveys which cannot be executed under contract, it is proposed to have five parties. One is to work in Manitoba, one in Southern Alberta and three around Edmonton and at Athabaska Landing. An outline party consists of a surveyor in charge at $6.50 per day, an assistant at $3 per day, a cook and nine or ten labourers. The cook and labourers are engaged at the current rate of wages of the country in which they are working. The cost is from $30 to $35 per day.

4. One party under daily pay at $17,000.

The surveys made more than twenty years ago were marked by wooden posts and mounds. The posts have been destroyed by prairie or bush fires and the mounds being more or less obliterated, new settlers have great difficulty in finding the limits of their lands. The lines of these old surveys are being gradually renewed and marked with iron posts. By taking the townships in large blocks and employing a numerically strong party, the work can be done for five to six dollars per mile, which is less than half the cost of the original subdivision. It is proposed to renew the marks of survey in a block of fifty-one townships near Touchwood Hills, in eight townships at Willow Bunch in Southern Assiniboia and six townships near Prince Albert, or in sixty-five townships altogether. The work is to be done by one party consisting of a surveyor at $7.50 per day, four assistants at $3 each, twenty-nine labourers and a cook at current wages. The cost is estimated at $75 per day.

5. Three parties under daily pay at $7,500 each—$22,500.

For restoring the marks of obliterated surveys in Manitoba and near Edmonton, two parties are to be employed. Another party is to retrace the lines of townships in Manitoba which were badly surveyed. The lines will not be changed but plans will be made showing their directions and lengths and the actual contents of every quarter section. The parties will be of the same strength as those employed for the survey of township outlines.

6. Two parties under daily pay at $8,000 each —$16,000.

The surveys in the British Columbia Railway Belt are made by two parties, one attending to the eastern part of the belt and the other one to the western part. The parties are of the same strength as those employed for the survey of township outlines The cost per day is a little more than in the Northwest Territories on account of the higher wages of labourers.

7. One party under daily pay at $6,000.

Mr. A. O. Wheeler completed last year his survey of the Selkirk range in the vicinity of the Canadian Pacific Railway. His report and map are being published and will prove of great interest and value to the constantly increasing number of persons who are visiting the mountains every summer. He is now to commence the survey of the Rocky Mountains between the Gap and the Columbia river and to prepare a report descriptive of the country. His salary is $2,000 a year ; he has two assistants at $75 and $60 a month respectively and during the summer engages a few labourers for work on the ground. His office is at Calgary, Alta.

8. One party under daily pay at $5,000. It is proposed to have an exploration made of the Peace River District for the purpose of ascertaining where the best lands for settlement are situated. After these lands are located, steps will be taken for their subdivision at an early date. Incidentally, information will be collected to assist in selecting the 3,500,000 acres in the Peace River country which the province of British Columbia has agreed to convey to the Dominion. The party is to be in charge of Mr. Thos. Turnbull and will consist only of a few labourers. Mr. Turnbull's salary is $2,000 a year.

9. Four parties under daily pay at $6,000 each—$24,000.

The subdivision of townships into sections being executed under contract, it is necessary to have a thorough inspection made in order to make sure that the surveys have been properly and accurately executed and that the charges for doing the work are in accordance with the terms of the contract. Four Dominion Land Surveyors will be employed as inspectors ; each will have a party consisting of six labourers and a cook. The salary of the inspectors is $6.50 per day and the cost of each party is estimated at $25 per day.

10. Fifty subdivision survey contracts at $7,600 each—$380,000.

The Dominion Lands Act provides that except in special cases the township subdivision surveys of Dominion Lands shall be performed under contract at a certain rate per township, per mile, or per acre, fixed from time to time by the Governor in Council or by competitive tender. The present rate has been fixed by the Governor in Council and varies according to the difficulty of the work, from $7 per mile in bare prairie to $30 and $35 per mile in the woods. The subdivision of a township (not including the exterior boundaries laid out by surveyors under daily pay) requires the survey of forty-eight miles of section lines and of the lakes and rivers within the township. The cost varies from $350 in the bare prairie to $2,000 and over in the woods. A full township provides sixty-four free homesteads.

The surveys contemplated for the coming season comprise four hundred townships, the bulk of the work being situated west of the South Saskatchewan and south of Battleford, where a block of one hundred and eighty-three townships, mostly prairie, is to be subdivided The location of the townships is as follows :—

	Townships.
Southeastern Manitoba	8
East of Lake Dauphin	5
Near Fort Pelly	14
Southeast of Prince Albert	42
South of Battleford	183
North of Battleford	6
West of Fort Pitt	48
West of Fort Pitt near Battle river	35
On Red Deer river	9
West of 5th meridian, between Calgary and Edmonton	50
Total	400

These townships are to be divided into fifty contracts of about $7,600 each. The cost of the subdivision is estimated to average $950 per township.

11. Irrigation surveys, $13,000.

The irrigation surveys and the administration of the Irrigation Act are under the supervision of the Commissioner of Public Works of the Northwest Territories. The work includes the measurement of the discharge of streams and a topographical survey of the country suitable for irrigation, with a view to the best utilization of the quantity of water available. Two or three survey parties have been engaged on this work for several years and a number of observers are employed at various points on the streams. The work is to be continued as before at an established cost of $13,000

12. Yukon survey office, $40,000.

13. Employees at Ottawa, $90,000.

The greater part of the surveys staff consists of temporary clerks paid out of the appropriation for Dominion land surveys. There are at present ninety-seven persons thus employed. They have to examine, plot and prepare for publication, the surveys made by surveyors in the field and to attend to the miscellaneous work incidental to a large survey office.

The plans of townships subdivided and of other surveys are lithographed for departmental use, for distribution to agents and for sale to the public. The lithographic office, where the work is done, consists of nine employees and costs about $4,800.

In the photographic office, plans are copied, enlarged or reduced as needed and plates for photozinography prepared. The office consists of six employees and costs about $3,040.

14. 20,000 iron posts, $5,000.

The corners of townships and sections are marked with iron posts made of gas tubing. The price averages 25 cents each. 20,000 posts are needed for the coming season.

15. Miscellaneous, $19,000.

This item is to cover surveying instruments, printing and supplies of various kinds.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Is any surveying being done at the present time in Manitoba under the auspices of the Dominion government?

Mr. SIFTON. There are, among others, five east of Lake Dauphin.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. In what townships are these five being made?

Mr. SIFTON. I have not that information. My table does not give the exact townships, but I can obtain it for my hon. friend. I can give the committee a map of the country so as to show the townships that are being surveyed.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The reason I ask is that in one township, township No. 19, range 19, which is in the permanent timber reserve there are many settlers who have petitioned the government to have it thrown open for settlement. There is practically no timber in the township and in view of the fact that land has been sold by the railway companies in that township, it seems to be the height of folly to retain it in the timber reserve. Either the settlers should be notified that it is to be kept as a timber reserve and no settlement permitted, or it should be thrown open for homesteading.

Mr. SIFTON. Are there a number of half-breeds in that township ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Yes, it is near Clearwater lake.

Among papers which were brought down in answer to a motion by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Stewart) I noticed some correspondence between the Dominion and provincial governments, showing that the provincial government sold some land in this township, but it had not been surveyed by the Dominion government and the attention of the Dominion government was drawn to this. Again some railway companies have their lands situated in that township, and have been selling some of their lands to settlers. The township is practically without timber and the half-breeds who have settled in it are anxious to know whether they are to be permitted to remain there. Some of them have waited on me and asked me to bring the matter to the minister's attention. I forwarded several petitions, which I received, to the department asking that these settlers be notified as soon as possible whether or not they are to be allowed to take up homesteads. I had a conversation with Crown Timber Inspector Stevenson, in Winnipeg last year and he said that legislation would be introduced this session in regard to that timber reserve. Is it the intention of the government to introduce such legislation or what decision has been come to in reference to this particular township.

Mr. SIFTON. I have had the facts brought before me and have given them some consideration. As to the people being notified not to take up homesteads, I think my hon. friend will admit that they were perfectly well aware that this land is on a timber reserve, but my hon. friend will no doubt agree that it is sometimes necessary to do more than give notice in order to keep people off government lands. As to the colony in this particular township to which my hon. friend refers, some of the cases will be more or less difficult to deal with. It is not settled under the provision of the Dominion Lands Act at all. I have not been able to make up my mind positively as to how this township should be dealt with, but I think I have all the facts and only one point remains to be cleared up. I may say to my hon. friend that I think some land now in the reserve will have to be taken out of it before we make a final settlement of the question. One of the railway companies, I think it is the Canadian Northern Railway, have the right under the old Order in Council to select lands in that timber limit, but this railway was notified by the department some time ago that the department was willing to give them other lands in other places. The last communication which I saw on the subject was to the effect that their sales were not irrevocable and they were willing to carry out the suggestion as to the government acquiring these lands. We are considering the question now for the purpose of seeing what can be done. Of course the question of protecting a purchaser may arise. What I propose to do is to endeavour to effect an amicable and reasonable settlement all around so that I can introduce legislation which I would have introduced before this if this question about the land sold by the railway company had not been brought up. When that is out of the way I shall introduce legislation to finally define the bounds of these timber limits. As to the odd numbered sections, so far as the Canadian Northern is concerned, they have agreed to dispose to us of their sections in exchange for lands in other places and practically the only question which remains is whether there are any individual purchasers who have to be reckoned with. As to that we are now getting information.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Petitions have been sent to the government for several years past in reference to this, and the invariable reply has been that the department intended to send out an inspector and that as soon as his report was received the government would act on his report. I understand that one officer was sent out there last winter, made an investigation and reported. I think his name was Mr. Stewart.

Mr. SIFTON. My hon. friend refers probably to Mr. Stewart, chief of the forestry branch.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Yes; he called and saw me after his inspection and told me he was going to report in favour of doing either one of two things, that the government should either close the township entirely, the government should buy up railway lands and give lands in exchange and have the township joined to the permanent timber reserve, or else that a certain reserve should be set apart for these half-breeds, giving them small limits inside of the township. This I understand is the nature of his report and having that report, I do not see what else the minister is waiting for, unless, as some of these half-breeds think—and there may be some foundation for their belief—that the government is hesitating until after the elections. These gentlemen have votes and it may be that the government do not like to turn them off the land before the elections, nor do they wish to allow them to take homesteads in these townships.

Mr. SIFTON. How long have they been there ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Some have been there twelve months, some have come more recently and some have been there a couple of years. Some of them had votes in the last provincial election—but perhaps I had better not give the minister too much information about them. At any rate the inspector reported as long ago as last January or February and having received that report, I do not see why there should be hesitation on the part of the minister to decide as to what he should do in regard to this particular township.

Mr. SIFTON. My hon. friend knows well, of course, that these people had no business to go there in the last two years as this is a permanent timber reserve. My hon. friend and I both know perfectly well that it is sometimes difficult to keep people off government reserves, especially if there is any timber on them, or in their neighbourhood. But what I want to say is this: We want first of all to get the reserves into the hands of the government. The railway company has agreed to it, and practically the only difficulty we have now is to get exact information as to whether there are any persons on timber lands and where they are. Our whole object has been to ascertain and make the final boundaries of the reserves.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I can assure the minister that there have been some purchases by settlers from the railway company, and some of those purchasers are located on that land purchased from the Canadian Northern Railway. Has the minister received the report of Mr. Stewart who was sent up there last winter to investigate ?

Mr. SIFTON. No doubt we have a report from Mr. Stewart, but he was not sent up there for the purpose of reporting on the details of this matter. He went up there to look after this timber reserve.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I would like the minister to bring down Mr. Stewart's report. The minister knows there are many Galicians settled on those timber reserves, and have been for the last five years. They are being allowed to develop their land, some of them are improving their land, and I understand that the Department of the Interior has not discouraged them to any great extent.

Mr. SIFTON. I venture to say that no officer of the department has directly or indirectly encouraged them to go on the timber reserves.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I am not charging that. I am saying that the minister is not taking any steps to remove them, seeing that they are trespassers on this land. They are allowed to sell the timber, they set fires, in consequence of which a great deal of timber is destroyed.

Mr. SIFTON. The hon. gentleman knows what the law is about fires.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. This very township 19, range 19, is not being thrown open to homestead entry because it is part of the timber reserve. There are hundreds of Galicians scattered throughout the Riding Mountains on government land; in some cases three or four Galicians are located on one quarter section. They have not been removed as trespassers, and they are allowed to cut down timber and sell it. I do not blame them for that because that is practically all they have to maintain them during the winter. They go out to labour in the summer time, and in the winter they cut and sell wood. Now, I would ask the minister if he would allow settlers from Ontario to go up there in shoals of hundreds and settle on those lands. I think they would not be allowed to remain there five years as trespassers, as these Galicians have been allowed to remain. The whole Riding Mountains are literally crowded with Galician settlers, and either this land ought to be thrown open for settlement, surveyed and properly divided into quarter sections, or these people should be removed by the government and the timber reserve should be permanently maintained.

Mr. OSLER. I would ask the Minister what amount was received by the government last year in repayment of land surveyed, from either the railway company or other sources?

Mr. SIFTON. No payments have yet been made by the company.

Mr. OSLER. Are the individuals charged?

Mr. SIFTON. No, there are different contracts with different companies. Some companies are liable to pay and others are not.

Mr. OSLER. I ask the question because I notice that you are charging the whole of this amount, $750,000, to capital. When the land is sold the proceeds are credited to revenue; but in the case of these surveys you are crediting revenue twice, that is to say, you are taking credit in the Interior Department, as I see on L—115, for $103,281, on revenue account.

Mr. SIFTON. The Interior Department are not responsible for the book-keeping of the Auditor General.

Mr. OSLER. That is the system that has been adopted and it ought to cease at once. You cannot imagine a more vicious principle of keeping accounts than to charge up to capital an advance for survey purposes, and then when that is repaid, to credit it to revenue. It is so palpably wrong that I hope, the attention of the minister having been called to it, the practice will cease.

Mr. SIFTON. I will call the attention of the Minister of Finance to the remarks of the hon. gentleman. We charge the cost of surveys to capital account, that is the ordinary practice; but when the money is repaid, the 10 cents an acre, that is paid into the consolidated revenue account.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Has there been any survey parties sent out to survey lands in the municipality of Rossburn, within the last couple of months?

Mr. SIFTON. If my hon. friend has anything in his mind and will give me a few details perhaps I will be able to answer him.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I understood a survey party was sent out under the auspices of the Canadian government to do some surveying.

Mr. SIFTON. As to dividing?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Yes.

Mr. SIFTON. Quite likely.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Have this government built any colonization roads in Manitoba?

Mr. SIFTON. No, we have not built any colonization roads in Manitoba but we have cut some trails through wooded and swampy sections for which we had a special vote of $15,000 last year.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Has any of that been expended or is there any work being done for this purpose in the municipality of Rossburn.

Mr. SIFTON. This was in another part of the province between Lake Manitoba and Winnipeg.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. There is no work of that kind being carried on now in this municipality?

Mr. SIFTON. No.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I suppose under this heading I could as conveniently ask some questions in regard to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company's grant as under any other heading. I understand that during the past year a report has been handed in by Mr. Speers, the government agent, in regard to the work that has been done by the company in settling their territory. Under the contract entered into by the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company with the government I believe they were to locate some twenty settlers on their homestead lands and twelve others on other quarter sections and that they were to receive all the other even numbered sections in the township. I believe that outside of the agreement those who have voluntarily gone in and settled on these homesteads have been counted as amongst those who were located by the company.

Mr. SIFTON. Yes.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What defence has the hon. gentleman for that? Why should any voluntary settler going in and locating in any of these townships be counted as amongst those located by the company?

Mr. SIFTON. Because there was not a single settler in that part of the territory when this arrangement was made with the company. It was not considered advisable to send settlers in there. The territory was considered to be barren. It had been examined and the conclusion arrived at was that it was totally unfit for settlement. It was settled simply because people went in and settled there. We never thought of advising settlers to go there. It was quite impossible for us to determine as to whether the settlers who were there went in as the result of the efforts of the company or as a result of our efforts.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The hon. minister has therefore no means of telling how many of these settlers have gone in voluntarily?

Mr. SIFTON. We have the homestead entries.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. But they have entered voluntarily.

Mr. SIFTON. They all enter voluntarily.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The hon. minister has no means of ascertaining how many have gone in voluntarily and not as the result of the exertions of the company?

Mr. SIFTON. What my hon. friend wants to know is as to whether we can distinguish between those who have gone in as the result of the efforts of the company and those who have gone in as a result of the efforts of the officers of the government, or voluntarily. We have no means of distinguishing except this, that we know that our officers never advised anybody to go in there. Our officers have never made any effort to send anybody there. At the time this arrangement was made we were not prepared to take the responsibility of advising the people to go there. These people came to us and said: We are prepared to put people there. We are quite satisfied that the people we send there will be able to handle that kind of land satisfactorily. We said: Very good, if you are, go ahead.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Mr. Speers reported last December and in persuing Mr. Speers' report one is struck with the fact that he does not say himself definitely that these settlers are really on the land. They have already secured 150,000 acres out of 250,000 acres which they are to get from the government on the strength of the number of homestead entries which they secure not on the strength of those who are absolutely on the land, because it has been charged through the public press that many of these are fictitious entries made by those who have no idea whatever of locating upon the land and I think it is a very poor criterion of actual settlement merely to take the recorded list of entries. But, already 150,000 acres of land have been handed over on the report of Mr. Speers, although that report does not say that these men are in actual occupation of the land. It simply goes on to say that so many homestead entries have been made and it is taken as evidence that the company have fulfilled that portion of their contract. I do not think that is fair or just. In support of the position which I take in regard to this matter I would read a letter that appeared last year in the Toronto 'Globe' from a gentleman who has himself voluntarily homesteaded in that country. It is as follows:

ABUSE OF HOMESTEAD REGULATIONS.

'Homesteader,' Regina, writes:—We noticed an article in the 'Globe' of July 10th referring to the abuse of homestead rights in northern Ontario in regard to the waste of timber. We have something going on here equally as bad. I have homesteaded on land seven miles from Regina and Prince Albert Railway. I made my entry in the last of September and went on my land in the beginning of May. I made my entry here direct in the Dominion land office without the intervention of any land company, but I am in the midst of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Co.'s territory and have seen some of the methods of settlements going on. They agreed with the government to find twenty homesteaders in each township, in the choosing of lands this company has been given the privilege, hitherto not accorded to any company, of choosing what lands they please for sale, whether odd or even numbered sections and leaving for homesteaders what lands they please, whether even or odd. As a consequence all or nearly all the homesteads are poor or almost worthless and the company has the best land for sale. As a result there is a great laxity in regard to homestead regulations. These poor homesteads are offered as an inducement by the company to intending purchasers and many buy on that understanding. Many of them never expect to live on them, but to hold the homestead for a while and then sell out with the homestead thrown in as an inducement for purchasing. Those who have gone in on homesteads cannot tell what is homestead and what is sold and can get scant information, as the government land agents, at least the one I had to get my information from is a relative of the president, and consequently in sympathy with the said company and their purchasers. Where we are at present there are three of us who have started in actual residence of our homesteads, and for six miles around there are only three living on homesteads, yet there are many homesteads around us taken up as soon as ours and no one on them. We are almost alone and like Robinson Crusoe for loneliness, in the midst of a large tract of land held by land speculators. Nearly all has been sold or homesteaded around us, but now, more than nine months after entry, there is nothing doing and no one on these homesteads held by the speculators waiting for the rise in the price of land. We think the department at Ottawa did a very unwise thing in allowing this company to make odd numbered section homesteads. If there were a uniform system as to what was homestead and what land company land. we poor homesteaders could see that these absentee homesteaders had their claims cancelled, but we can not get any but scant information as to what is not homestead. An American can secure favours with this company that an native Canadian cannot enjoy. We know of cases where men had made excuses to the land agent and they do not intend to come on their homesteads until next spring. They just came in and promised to have five acres broken and then went away to Minnesota again. We think this is an unjust stretching of the rules and regulations in regard to homestead regulations and very unfair with those who are complying with them. We are of the opinion that the ways and methods of this land company need to be investigated, as the way in which homestead regulations are violated is the laughing-stock of those who are on homesteads and by none more than Americans who have taken homesteads. They think we must have a very strange government that will allow any company to do as has been done by the Saskatchewan Valley Land Co. I may say that what I am speaking of takes place a little over a hundred miles north-west of Regina.

Mr. SIFTON. What is the date of that letter ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. It is from the 'Globe of the 1st of August, 1903. Apparently this gentleman is not an opponent of the government; at any rate, he is a devoted reader of the Toronto 'Globe,' and he sent his communication to it. I happened to see this letter last fall, and I thought it only proper to bring it to the attention of the minister because if these charges are true they are very serious, and they show that my contention is strictly correct; that these gentlemen come in, take up homesteads, purchase a certain amount of land at as low a rate as possible from the company; wait until the price increases; sell it; pocket their profit, and throw their homestead in, which may be of inferior land.

Mr. DAVIS. What is the name of the writer of that letter ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I said he signed it 'Homesteader.'

Mr. DAVIS. Oh; it is an anonymous letter.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I presume the Toronto 'Globe' has the writer's name, and if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) desires to get it he will probably receive it from his friends of the 'Globe' much readier than I could.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. SIFTON. I was asked before six o'clock as to the conditions of sale by the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. It is evident that the person who wrote letter read by my hon. friend (Mr. W. J. Roche) was under a misapprehension with regard to some points. His statement with regard to the homesteading of odd numbered sections is made in entire misapprehension of the facts, because there has been no homesteading of the odd numbered sections in that tract at all. The odd numbered sections were reserved long years ago for the land grant to the Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway, and the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company having purchased the land grant of that railway had the right to select the land from these odd numbered sections. We do not deal with the odd numbered sections at all; our dealing was altogether with the even numbered sections. As to the question of the settlement being bona fide or not, the settlers make their settlement in accordance with the ordinary rules. Every settler has to make his affidavit in the regular form, stating that he is bona fide taking up his land for his own benefit alone, and that he intends to reside and make his home upon it. Under the law he has six months to go upon it and reside, and an extension of time may be given. I do not remember whether there were any extensions of time in this particular tract or not, but the number of extensions is comparatively small, and the extensions have been given on what seemed to be reasonable excuses. That which is referred to by the correspondent as indicating bad faith is no indication of bad faith at all. He says a number of people went there and took up their homestead entries and went back to the States. Well, that is what a great many settlers from the United States do. They take up the lands and go back for their families, as most of them do not bring their families in until the next year. However, before they get the land they have to fulfil the settlement duties. So far as this particular tract is concerned, some time an order was given to the homestead inspector to make a thorough inspection of the whole tract. Patents were granted by officers of the department to the extent of something like 150,000 acres. There was deposited $50,000 on account of the balance of the land, and we shall have the report of the homestead inspector as to the exact performance of the settlers' duties. I do not think there is any fear that the transactions will not be carried out.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The gravamen of the charges made in that letter, and what I intended to convey was that the government had disposed of 150,000 acres already on the strength of the homestead entries, and that there was no real proof that settlement had taken place. The minister does not attempt to contravene that statement. On the strength of Mr. Speers' report he has handed over 150,000 acres out of the 250,000 acres, and Mr. Speers does not attempt to prove that these settlers are actually on the land. That they have taken the homestead entries is an evidence of good faith that these settlers are on the land, but as a matter of fact they are not. Notwithstanding that after the homestead entry has been made, six months is given to them to go on the land, the gentleman who wrote this letter has distinctly stated that nine months have elapsed and practically none of them were on the land.

Mr. SIFTON. I hope my hon. friend will not assume that the statements in this letter are to be taken literally, because on the face of it the writer shows that he does not know the facts when he says the odd numbered sections are being homesteaded.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. That is a technical point which the minister takes advantage of. This gentleman may not be aware that they purchased the odd numbered sections from the Regina and Long Lake Railway Company, but in other respects the writer shows that he is well acquainted with local conditions. He tells us that in a radius of six miles there are only six settlers, and he shows that he understands what he is talking about. He gives evidence that homestead entries have not been followed up by actual settlement. What we complain of is that 150,000 acres of this land grant is practically handed over to the company without satisfactory evidence that the settlers have been secured to the country. This government has stated that they have reversed the policy of their predecessors and reserved the land for the settlers, but we charge that they have practically done nothing of the kind. The government has sold this land for $1 an acre ; the land may not have been worth very much when they sold it, but according to Mr. Speers' report some of the poorest of that land has been sold for $5 an acre by that company, and it sells up as high as $10 an acre. Another feature is that the government is taking scrip as well as cash in payment. In other words, instead of having $150,000 in cash for the 150,000 acres, Mr. Speers reports that they have scrip to the amount of $98,000 and cash to the amount of $52,000.

In my opinion scrip was never intended to be utilized for the payment of lands in blocks such as this contract called for ; and I do not think it is right or proper for the government to practically assist any band of speculators, who no doubt purchased this script at a very reduced figure, possibly at 50 cents on the dollar or less to make large profits by accepting it at par. I see that there is a stipulation in the contract that they can pay in scrip or in cash. That feature of the contract I condemn. I think the government, when disposing of the lands so cheaply, should have insisted on being paid in cash and not in scrip. I also desire to point out that in the agreement entered with these gentlemen, there are the names of two Canadians, Mr. Macdonnell and Mr. Adamson. Mr. Macdonnell, I understand, is the leader of the opposition in the territorial assembly. Mr. Adamson is the Liberal candidate in one of the constituencies for a seat in this House. I think it is not according to strict propriety that Mr. Adamson should be in that position and at the same time connected with such a large land speculation. The hon. minister can see how he could use his position in many ways to bring pressure to bear on settlers who have taken up land, in order to secure their support. I think strict propriety should induce the government to advise Mr. Adamson either to retire from the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company or from his candidature for the Dominion House. I think the hon. minister himself will scarcely defend Mr. Adamson's position. I desire to ask the minister also, is it or is it not a fact that Mr. Turiff has some connection with the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company ? I have heard not only from his political opponents, but from many of his political supporters that Mr. Turiff is secretly connected with that company. In fact, they have intimated to me that he was compelled, through fear of his connection with it being disclosed, to resign his position of Dominion Land Commissioner. He also is a Liberal candidate for the representation of Eastern Assiniboia in this House, and he can use his position to influence the electors in the same was as Mr. Adamson. The minister will know whether that statement in regard to Mr. Turiff is true or not. If it is, he should not be allowed to occupy the position he does in connection with the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company and at the same time be a Liberal candidate for this House.

Mr. SIFTON. With regard to the contract, I may say that the number of settlers in the district was given in the report of the land agent last December, and upon that the officers of the department acted. The only question can be whether the settlers will remain on the land. Instructions have been issued to an inspector to go there for the purpose of verifying the fact. I have not the slightest fear that the conditions regarding settlement will not be carried out. As to the price paid for the lands, all I can say is that these lands would have been homestead lands if we had not disposed of them in this way. Had settlers gone upon them, they would have returned no funds to the government. By the sale the lands returned to the government $1 an acre, so that, so far as money is concerned, the government is $250,000 ahead. The lands were surveyed sixteen or seventeen years ago, but settlers had passed through them and had gone to various other parts of the country. My information is that there were only three or four homestead entries in good standing in the department at the time the lands were disposed of. At the present time we have the prospect of a well-settled territory as a result of the arrangement made. As to the payment of scrip, it makes no difference in the world to the government whether the land is paid for in money or in scrip. Scrip is receivable in payment for Dominion lands, and sooner or later the government has to redeem it. As to Mr. Adamson's connection with the company, all I have to say is this, that we do not exercise any control over the electors of Humboldt. They have a right to nominate any one they like for a seat in this House, and they nominated Mr. Adamson. As to Mr. Turiff being connected with this contract. I never heard any rumour to that effect until something was said about it in one of the committees of the House. I believe Mr. Turiff was asked if he had any connection with the company, and he said he had not. That is all I know about it. When the rumour came to my knowledge, I asked him if he had any connection with the company, and he said he had not. It had nothing to do with his resignation of the position of Commissioner of Dominion Lands. Mr. Turiff had nothing whatever to do with the contract. It was made with the president of the company, Colonel Davidson, who discussed the matter with the deputy minister. My deputy informs me that various members of the company were here, and that he discussed the matter with them. I never discussed it with them or saw any of them in connection with it. The question was submitted to me by the deputy minister, and I approved of it. So far as Mr. Turiff is concerned, he had nothing to do with and gave no advice in connnection with this matter, and I am informed that it was never brought before him. As to the general features of the transaction, the operations of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, resulting from the acquisition of this tract of land, have been of immense benefit to the Northwest. If we had given the land to it for nothing, we would have received benefits ten times over in return. This company has been exceedingly efficient as a colonization agent. It has placed a lot of valuable settlers not only on this tract but on the remainder of its tracts. I can recall no feature of our colonization policy in the Northwest which has been attended with greater success than the efforts of this company. Every one familiar with the district will bear me out in what I say, that on this land, which was tenantless for many years, we have at the present time a very large and thriving settlement, which bids fair to grow not only in numbers, but in wealth. I think the transaction is in every way advantageous to the country and one which will promote good settlement.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The minister has stated that settlers would not go into that country in years gone by, which is very true. Many years ago the land in that particular district was not looked upon as being very superior land and was not taken up as there were hundreds of thousands of acres of much better land available. But, as occurs in many countries, land is now being settled upon and purchased in Canada that would not have been taken up a few years ago. The minister states that an inspection of those lands will be made and that actual settlers will have to be provided for before the balance of the land will be handed over to the company. That is all very well after 150,000 acres out of the 250,000 have been handed over to them upon the mere strength of the homestead entries. I think it is a distinct admission by the minister that he has been rather remiss in this matter, and has been late in taking the stand he now proposes.

Mr. SIFTON. If the matter had been brought to my attention when the report was brought in, I would have given instructions that a special report should be made. As soon as it was brought to my attention I gave instructions for a special report.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The minister was rather tardy in giving instructions, because it is well known that 150,000 of the 250,000 acres have come into possession of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company without sufficient proof being furnished for members of this House to see that the conditions of their contract have been complied with. In fact, I think when the discussion was up last session the minister himself remarked that they were not likely to fulfil their conditions, that is the condition that they were to have two-fifths of their settlers in these townships inside of two years. The minister then said :

> The two years are not yet up, but will be in a few months. It is very doubtful if they will be in a position to get anything.

That was in July last, but 150,000 acres of these lands have been handed over on the ground that the company have complied with the conditions, that is that thirty-two settlers have been provided for each township. As a matter of fact, they have taken the report of Mr. Speers of the number of entries as proof in that regard. I wish to draw attention to this fact, that in order to arrive at that conclusion they had to group the townships. I ask the minister if that was the intention in the first place ? Had they not to take the townships separately, and did not this condition apply to each individual township rather than to a group of townships, for which an average would be struck ? I understand, according to the report of Mr. Speers, that the latter procedure has been followed ; whereas, as a matter of fact, the agreement and the intention of the agreement was that they were to secure thirty-two settlers in each individual township.

Mr. SIFTON. As to the last question which my hon. friend has raised, I may say that where they take any land they will have to take the whole township, and will have to have an average of so many for the whole township. They cannot scatter their settlement.

Mr. DAVIS. I think that no one in this House is as well acquainted with this tract of country as I am, because ever since the railway was built through that section I have been travelling up and down it, that is for the last thirteen or fourteen years. To my mind, the bargain that has been discussed this evening is a first-class bargain for the people of this country. For thirteen years there was not a settler in that district, not a homestead was taken except three or four, where some section foremen made some homestead entries. No one would go in, and I may say that if the whole tract had been offered to me previous to this arrangement with the government, simply on condition that I should pay the taxes, I would not have felt justified in taking it. What are the facts of the case ? This company has spent a lot of money. All is not gold that glitters. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) talks about their getting the land so cheap. He forgets to take into consideration the vast amount of money that they have spent in advertising, not only that tract of country, but the whole Northwest. If we could trace it up, I fancy that a great deal of the immigration we are now getting should be attributed to the advertisements of these people in the United States. I have been in some of the large cities of the United States and have seen what this company have been doing. They took up a special train of ten or fifteen pullmans loaded with people from the western states, senators, &c., to show them what that country was like, and that train must have cost them a great deal of money. They took that land when there was no one upon it, and now the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) tries to make out that this land has been granted to them on homestead entries, but that the people are not there. The people must be there, for there are large towns all along that line, which have sprung up since that company undertook the work of filling that country. There are large towns, large lumber yards and machine factories, dozens of stores, &c. If there was not some one back in the country these people would not be doing business, and if my hon. friend would take the trouble to go up the line of the Qu'Appelle and Long Lake Company, he would find that a large number of people have gone in there. Even the gentleman who wrote that letter would not have been there if it had not been for the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. He was in the west for thirteen years and never thought of going into that district until the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company began operations there. Then he went there and thought they had a good thing. Like many other people, he thought that all was gold that glittered. He, too, neglected to consider that this company have spent an enormous sum of money in advertising that country and advertising the whole Dominion. When the whole transaction is threshed out, I venture to say that the company will make very little money out of it. My hon. friend alluded to the fact that Mr. Adamson was a member of that company when it was formed some three or four years ago and the purchase was made, and he seemed to think that for that reason Mr. Adamson had no right to be a candidate. I have never before heard such a doctrine as that. Because a gentleman four or five years ago happened to have transactions with the government it is contended that he cannot now become a candidate if the people want him to run. The people of this country have not shut out Canadian Pacific Railway directors, for instance. If that rule had been enforced, many of those who occupied seats on this side of the House previous to 1896 could not have been members, because if you traced up their records you would find that a majority of them had acquired timber limits or had some such dealings with the government of the day. It is ridiculous to talk about such a doctrine. This gentleman went in there two years ago, and if the people of Humboldt want him—as they have shown by their large vote in his favour at the convention that they do want him—they will elect him by a large majority, and I think they have a perfect right to do so. The bargain, taking it all around, is one of the best bargains ever made for this country. It has already done a great deal for the western country, not only by the filling up of the regions which were always in the past looked upon as useless, but by filling up other sections of the country, because this company has spent thousands and thousands of dollars in advertising this country. This company have carried on their operations in a very businesslike way. The first thing they did on the prairie was to survey a town. Then they built large hotels with their own money, built livery barns and appointed men to show settlers over the country in order that they might select lands. They ran the hotels free. People came in under these circumstances, and now my hon. friend asks : Is it certain that the people on the land were brought in by that company ? Considering that the land lay there for thirteen years without any person going on it, we must assume that any one who is on the land there must have gone on it, directly or indirectly, through the efforts of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has made just such a defence as one would expect. He tells us this is a good bargain. I do not know whether he is interested, but no one would be astonished if he furnished a portion of the scrip.

Mr. DAVIS. This has gone so far that not only from speakers on the other side but also from the Conservative press in this country comes the charge that I am a scrip speculator. That was stated in an article in the 'Mail and Empire' the other day ; and although I do not take much stock in what appears in that paper, yet as this charge is repeated so often, I wish to state now that out of the thousands and thousands of scrip issued in the Northwest Territories at the time, I did not buy more than fifteen in all, and I bought that to put on some lands of my own.

Mr. CLANCY. Of course I must accept the hon. gentleman's statement, but his defence is not quite what it was on the last occasion. On the last occasion his defence was that he had paid just as much as other people did for the scrip. Now it appears to be that he only bought a very limited quantity. However that is unimportant one way or the other. One thing perfectly clear is that the contract has been utterly disregarded in every feature. We have the declaration of the hon. minister himself, copied in the report of Mr. Speers, that there is nothing more to show than that entries were made there, without a particle of proof that there was a single settler. I do not say that there are no settlers. Perhaps there are, but there are no pretense that the company fulfilled the contract, and that is the difficulty. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that his attention was called to that after the grant of 150,000 acres had been made. I would like to ask him if he was aware at the time the 150,000 acres were granted this company that he only was in possession of a report stating that so many entries had been made and not stating what settlers were upon the land.

Mr. SIFTON. No, I was not aware until after the grant was patented. When it was brought to my attention I gave instructions that an actual inspection should be made. My hon. friend must understand that a matter of that kind might go a certain distance without being brought to my attention. As soon as it was brought to my attention, I gave instructions to have an actual inspection made and also calling attention to the provisions of the contract.

Mr. CLANCY. I quite understand that small transactions might slip through, but am unable to understand how the officers of his department could take upon themselves to grant 150,000 acres of land without the authority to do so. Who took upon themselves to carry out a large transaction of the kind upon the report then given ? Who was the guilty party ?

Mr. SIFTON. My deputy in the patent branch issued the patent. When the thing came to his knowledge he brought it to my attention. We discussed the terms of the contract and I gave my instructions.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. minister knows that the contract was before his officers. It provides as follows :

> It is agreed that the purchasers shall place twenty settlers on each free homestead land in each township and twelve on lands which may be sold by the purchasers, before they shall be entitled to the remaining even numbered sections. In other words, there shall be in each township twenty quarter-sections to be settled on by homesteaders and twelve on the company's sections which the settler may purchase.

That contract was in the minister's department, and some person in the department must have taken upon himself great responsibility. Surely the hon. gentleman has no officer in his department who would attempt to issue a patent for 150,000 acres of land upon the report of Mr. Speers which disclosed nothing that entitled the company to the lands. He cannot pass that over by saying that some one unknown to him had committed an act of that kind. Was it done on the recommendation of his deputy.

Mr. SIFTON. No.

Mr. CLANCY. If the deputy did not recommend it, who did ?

Mr. SIFTON. We will make a careful search and find out exactly how the transaction took place. My hon. friend must understand that there have been placed on these lands an average of twenty-one settlers in each township where the company are operating.

Mr. CLANCY. That is not disclosed in the report.

Mr. SIFTON. As to whether the settlers have actually remained there or not, we have sent out our inspectors to find out. As the fulfilment of the remainder of the conditions, we have the deposit of $50,000 and the remainder of the 100,000 acres which the company will not willingly give up without trying to earn it. True the land has increased in value, but it is through the efforts of the company, and I have not the the slightest doubt that, under present conditions, they will go on and earn that land. A year ago I had doubts, because at that time they had not been successful, but at present I have not the slightest doubt, and no doubt the report will show that all those settlers are there. The government has perfect security.

Mr. CLANCY. I have not talked about security. That is another branch which we may discuss later on. I have not stated what security the government has for the carrying out of the contract. I am calling attention particularly to the gross irregularity, I may say the criminal conduct of an official in his department, with a contract of that description before his eyes, when it is disowned by the minister himself, denied by his deputy, and still neither of these gentlemen knows who is the guilty party. It is the most extraordinary statement I ever heard made in the House of Commons—that 150,000 acres of land is handed over to this company. Why, Sir, what conclusion will the country draw from that circumstances? Either that the officers in his own department must be concerned in it, or they would never have taken upon themselves to be guilty of a transaction of that kind. Yet we are told by the minister that there is no impropriety in Mr. Adamson becoming a candidate—a candidate in support of the hon. gentleman himself, a candidate in his interest, a candidate that has been a participant in that transaction, a candidate to whom 150,000 acres of land was handed over. Will any person say there is no impropriety in that? It is a transaction that seems perfectly plain to be a conspiracy against the interest of the people. It is idle for the hon. gentleman to talk about the security. If there is any security it is not because he carried out the conditions of the contract, or that he was careful that his officers observed their duties. If he has security, it has been given in utter disregard of that sort of thing. Now I leave the hon. gentleman to stand convicted of a transaction in his department that shows the loosest kind of administration of the business of the people of this country. The department must have fixed designs upon the people of this country to have evaded the instructions and to hand these lands over to these persons who were not entitled, according to any information in the department, to a single acre. The hon. gentleman, only two or three months before, declared that so far as he knew then he did not think they were entitled to an acre of that land. I do not think the hon. gentleman is in a very enviable position. He had better hunt up the culprit in his department and dismiss him.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The hon. minister and the member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) have spoken about this land as having become valuable simply because it passed into the possesison of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. For thirteen years nobody would settle on it, the hon. member himself would not have taken it for the taxes. Settlers passed by it and went into a more productive portion of the country because this was worthless. But as soon as the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company got possession of it, does he mean to say that the quality of the land improved so much simply because it changed owners? It is true that these gentlemen advertised extensively, and how did they advertise? In a manner that commends itself to the minister? I do not think so. The minister rather repudiated them last year. If it is true that these were worthless lands that nobody would settle on for thirteen years, they were no use, what did the Saskatchewan Land Company do? They issued a prospectus lauding those lands to the skies as being amongst the most productive in the Northwest Territories. This was brought to the attention of the minister last session by the leader of the opposition:

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand that the company has issued a prospectus in which these lands were described in very glowing terms.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am not responsible for the advertisements of land companies.

The minister was quite unwilling that the land company should advertise these as being among the most productive lands in the Northwest Territories, because it would induce settlers to come in under false pretenses. If they are as good as described by the member for Saskatchewan, I do not think the members of this company need to be commiserated because of their bargain with this government. Take the 150,000 acres of which they have already secured possession, and which they have got at $1 an acre. In reality they have not paid $1 an acre, they paid $98,000 altogether in script, which they may have purchased for fifty cents on the dollar. But assuming that they paid in cash $1 an acre, or $150,000 they have sold that land, putting it at a low average, for $5 an acre. Mr. Speers in his report states that most of the land has been selling at $5 an acre. As a matter of fact it has sold from $5 to $10. But putting it at the lower figure, $5 an acre, they received $750,000. Deducting all expenses in connection with the transaction I think you will find that they have made $600,000 profit.

Mr. SIFTON. The hon. gentleman tries to make the point that the lands were sold at an undervaluation. There was a tract of 3,500,000 acres of land set apart from which the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway Company might select about 800,000 acres. That arrangement was made many years ago before I took office. Matters progressed until I had been in office for a year or two, and the company alleged that they were unable to earn 800,000 acres of land in the 3,500,000. This 3,500,000 was examined and reported upon by officers of the railway company and by officers of the government, and by far the greater portion of it was classified by them as being actually worthless, unfit for settlement, of such a character that the company could not recoup themselves out of it. So bad was it that this railway company brought an action in the Exchequer Court of Canada for the purpose of compelling the government to make good the contract, and to give them the equivalent of the 800,000 acres. We gave them 3,500,000 to select from, and they brought action in the Court of Exchequer for the purpose of proving that there was not 800,000 acres in that whole tract fairly fit for settlement. This particular tract that we are talking about is the worst of the 3,500,000 acres. It was considered absolutely hopeless in every possible way. Within a year before this transaction took place, the solicitor of that railway company came to my office and asked me if I would favour securing from the government of Canada authority to pay them $1.25 an acre instead of giving them the 800,000 acres they were entitled to. That is to say, although they had 3,500,000 acres to select from, they wished me to make an offer, which they would accept, to settle with the company by paying them at the rate of $1.25 an acre for the whole 800,000 acres. This 250,000 acres was in the worst district and sold at $1 an acre a few months afterwards to these people with the settlement conditions to which I have referred and which are set out in the contract. Let me point out further that in the next season this land presented a little more favourable appearance. I am not alluding particularly to this tract, but to the whole 3,500,000 acres. The same people who bought the 250,000 acres went to the people who owned the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan land grant of 800,000 acres, and bought their entire land grant which they could select from this 3,500,000 without any settlement conditions. They bought the whole 800,000 acres from shrewd speculators like the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Osler) who I believe was interested in the transaction; they bought the whole 800,000 acres I think for $1.75 an acre, with the privilege of selecting it from the 3,500,000 without any conditons whatever. There could be no more absolutely conclusive evidence of the fact that the dollar an acre we got was the full value of the land without any settlement conditions whatever. If we had sold it for a dollar an acre without any settlement conditions we should have made a very good bargain.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. In referring to the hon. gentleman's remarks last year as to the number of settlers sent in by the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, I find that the hon. gentleman said:

> Of course they have sent in a considerable number. I recollect now they applied to get some patents, and they filed some information with regard to settlers. But the evidence which they filed did not prove that they had complied with the conditions and consequently we did not give them the land.

Will the hon. minister explain what evidence the land company filed with the government in order to claim the patents for their land? Was it homestead entries?

Mr. SIFTON. I presume they referred to homestead entries as sufficient evidence. I was not willing to act upon that, but subsequently the officers issued the patents on Mr. McCannel's report.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. That is the ground upon which we are condemning the hon. gentleman. It seems that last year the company had made application on the strength of homestead entries to get their land. The hon. minister refused and notwithstanding that refusal the land has been handed over to them on the strength of that evidence.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to say that the explanation in regard to the land seems rather strange in view of the fact that when you look over the surveyors' field-notes you find that land is graded No. 1, No. 2, No. 3 and No. 4. Quite a portion of this land is graded No. 2 and No. 3. Under those circumstances it could not have been such very bad land, because No. 2 and No. 3 would be fairly average good land.

Mr. SIFTON. This land is in the worst tract of the whole lot.

Mr. SPROULE. These are your own surveyors' field-notes as to quality.

Mr. SIFTON. It has been examined by expert land examiners on behalf of the railway companies and on behalf of our department and so far as this particular tract of land is concerned we have their statement that it was no good, that it was absolutely worthless.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the examination of your surveyors of no value? It has always been regarded as of value. For the last twenty years or more we have been getting that information and settlers have accepted it as evidence of the quality of land. If land is graded as No. 1 it is regarded as the best land, if No. 2 it is fairly good land, and if No. 3 it is fairly good land, and if No. 4 it is regarded as not being very good land. The value which was attached to it twenty years ago has been accepted. Whatever means the surveyors took of satisfying themselves of the quality of the land, I presume that the land is the same as it was before.

Mr. SIFTON. That is not the statement of the expert examiners.

Mr. SPROULE. The expert examiner is not likely to go over it as carefully as the surveyor did, because the surveyor has to run up both sides of each section and he makes his report upon it. The land examiners are not likely to go over the lots as carefully as the surveyor is required to do.

Mr. SIFTON. That is what they were sent there for.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think the inspectors go over every foot of land when they go into a locality to ascertain what is the general quality of the land.

Mr. SIFTON. This matter was a sore subject with the department, a subject of dispute, a subject that became so acute that the railway company finally sued us for damages in the Court of Exchequer. They claimed that they should select the land farther north. They did not claim that they ought to have taken this land.

Mr. SPROULE. What portion is good land and what portion is bad land, because what I saw of it did not lead me to the impression that it was bad land? There is another thing which seems to strengthen me in the impression that it is not bad land and it is the fact that it has been sold to farmers who have gone and examined it for themselves and who ought to be good judges. It has been sold to them for $5, $7 and $8 an acre. That does seem to be conclusive evidence that the land could not be so very bad.

Mr. SIFTON. I hope it will turn out better than we expected.

Mr. SCOTT. Before this arrangement was made you could not get any person to look at the land at all. A very strong corporation, the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway Company were using every means even going so far as to go to the courts to prove that the whole district was absolutely worthless and for years every effort proved entirely unavailing to get any person to get off the train and examine the land.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. They have read the speeches of some of your friends.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman if he knows anything, knows that one reason was because there were a few dry years in that country it led to the impression that the land was in the dry belt and was of practically no value for farming purposes. The result was that a good many people who had settled on that land during the dry years got up and left it because of the feeling which they had that they could not carry on agricultural pursuits successfully. But this same district to-day seems to be as fine as any other district in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. SCOTT. Very likely this district will prove so, but what I have stated is the absolute fact that no person could be got to get off the train to look at this territory. For a hundred miles through this territory where there had been a railway in operation since 1890 only three homestead entries had been recorded. Between Lumsden, twenty miles north of Regina, and Saskatoon, on the south branch of the Saskatchewan river, a distance of over 100 miles, except one little ranching community at Dundurn, although a railway had been running through that country for twelve or thirteen years, there was not a single farmer, not one single settler, and people could not even be prevailed upon to look at the land partly as a result of the action of the railway company which had gone to the length of going to the courts to prove that the district was absolutely worthless.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is in possession of the facts, or whether he has ever been there or not. But, we have to accept his statement that there is only one farmer in that district. My information is a little different, but we have to accept his statement and take it for granted that he knows. I would only remind him that the Calgary and Edmonton Railway runs through a section of the country that is regarded to-day as one of the most valuable in the Northwest Territories and that a few years ago you could go northward for 100 miles from Calgary and find very little land settled. Up to the last few years you could go to many of these stations and right up to the railway you would find no land settled. That railway was in existence for settlers and running all right. The real cause was that there was plenty of other land available for settlement and that a few dry seasons frightened the people out of that country. I know many who left that district believing it was not likely to be fit for agriculture, but I take it that the reports of the surveyors are as good evidence as we can have of the quality of the land, and they grade it into two or three classes.

Mr. SCOTT. The very same people compose the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company and the Calgary and Edmonton Land Company, as are interested in these lands, and they made no objection against accepting the lands along the line of the Calgary and Edmonton Railway. The conditions along that line were quite different.

The southern portion of the Calgary and Edmonton Railway is through range country where until recent years there were not many homestead entries made.

Mr. SPROULE. Why were there no homestead entries made when there was a railway there ?

Mr. SCOTT. North of Calgary for a distance of perhaps fifty miles, similar conditions prevail to those prevailing south of Calgary to the American boundary line. It is range country and until recent years there were ranches and ranching towns every few miles along the line, but there were not many homesteads. On the Prince Albert Branch Railway north of Regina, when you got north of the town of Lumsden you ran for more than a hundred miles without seeing a single individual except a few section men in summer and even they were not there in the winter time. Let me say to the House that if it had not been for this arrangement made with these American land speculators, these enterprising people, I venture to say the railway of the hon. gentleman's friend from Toronto (Mr. Osler) would be out of commission to-day, and they would not be running trains over it. On the 11th of February last year, I was on a train on that line which wandered off upon the prairie. I do not think it was running at a greater speed than ten miles per hour, but the ties were so rotten that even with the aid of the winter frost they were unable to hold the rails to keep the train upon the right of way. Until this arrangement was made two years ago, there was so little business along that line of railway, that the Canadian Pacific Railway which has been operating it for the owning company headed by the member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) could not find any encouragement to make betterments upon the road, and it got into such a condition that it was almost dangerous to travel upon it. I say it again, and I say it advisedly, that had not that arrangement been made the railway would be at this moment out of commission. Hon. gentlemen opposite, in the attitude they have taken to-night, are quite consistent with their previous political history. It reminds me that some years ago when Sir Wilfrid Laurier spoke at the board of trade banquet in Toronto after the Conservative Minister of Finance who had read long pages of statistics to prove that Canada was prosperous, Sir Wilfrid remarked that if he were at the head of the government and wished to prove that prosperity prevailed, he would ask the people to put their hands in their pockets to find whether prosperity existed. Our friends on the other side of the House still prefer to quote statistics and to hunt up departmental records, but for my part I prefer to go into the country and see the existence of prosperity along that line of railway, where only three or four years ago there was nothing but desolation. To-day you can see thriving towns with hundreds of people doing a prosperous business. It is only four years ago this fall that my hon. friend from the Yukon (Mr. Ross) and myself took a trip along that railway to that little ranching district of Dundurn. There was a building called Dundurn station, but no agent and no operator, and we had to wait on the railway line from ten o'clock in the morning till well after dark before we could get a train. There was no agent and no operator to give information, and we dare not leave the railway track for fear the train might come along at any moment. I was up there again a year ago last winter after this arrangement had been made with the Saskatchewan Land Company, and there was an agent at Dundurn station and I suppose a dozen large buildings, where a few months before there was nothing to indicatae business or prosperity. This Saskatchewan Valley Land Company arrangement, taken by itself, has proved perhaps the most effective and successful of all the measures of the Minister of the Interior towards North-west progress.

Mr. SPROULE. The argument of the hon. member (Mr. Scott) is rather amusing, because it is not so long ago that we heard him declare in this House, that this railway line was so inefficient that it prevented settlers from going into the country. To-night he says that but for this land deal that railway would not be a paying concern. He now contrasts the policy of the present government with the policy of the late government, and he says that because of the policy of this government there were thriving and prosperous towns and fertile country districts settled by farmers. If the land there was bad, it would not be settled with prosperous farmers ; you would not find settlers take up their homesteads on land of such inferior quality as he described this land to be.

Mr. SCOTT. I have not said that the land is bad ; I do not think it is. It is perhaps not as good as in some other sections of the country. There may be certain sections of it not particularly good, but I do not wish to be understood as saying that the land is bad. I believe that a very large portion of the land in that district may be found to be very good indeed.

Mr. SPROULE. Why, five minutes ago the hon. gentleman said that the land was so bad, that the railway company went into the Exchequer Court to try to get out of taking it.

Mr. SCOTT. They said it was bad ; I did not say so.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman said that these shrewd railway men after sending their agents to inspect the land, actually refused to take it because it was so bad.

Mr. SCOTT. I did not say so; they did.

Mr. SPROULE. And yet a few minutes afterwards the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) gets up and says that owing to the salutory policy of the government, there are rich and prosperous farmers settled on this land. It is quite plain that there is a nigger on the fence, and that any argument the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) may present to the House in regard to that section of the country must be taken at a discount. He has a peculiar kind of hydrophobia, which, whenever the member for Toronto or that railway company is mentioned, causes him to jump up in his seat as if he were worked by a spring, to denounce that hon. gentleman and the railway company with which he is connected. He places at his service any argument that accidentally comes into his mind on the impulse of the moment, regardless of whether it is logical or not, or whether it is in accord with the argument he presented a few moments before. He has given an example of that to-night. In my judgment the argument which he gives on one side and then on another makes his testimony of very little value to the country.

Mr. HENDERSON. From what I have heard of the operations of this company in this House and in another place, there does seem to be something very remarkable about it. The minister tells us that out of 3,500,000 acres of land, those who constructed the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway, now operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, had the opportunity of selecting 800,000 acres. After the selection of that quantity, there would still be 2,700,000 acres. I understand that the Saskatchewan Land Company purchased from the government 250,000 acres at the miserably low price of one dollar an acre, and that they did not get the poorest land, but had the privilege of selecting the 250,000 acres out of half a million acres. Is it likely that these shrewd American speculators, who went up there and pulled the wool over the minister's eyes and got such a bargain, were going to take the poorest land, when the fact is that they were getting selected land? It has not yet been explained to me why the government would allow an American company to go into a tract of land of 500,000 acres and pick out 250,000 acres of the best land they could get, and then hand it over to them for a dollar an acre, and receive payment in scrip, which, as the hon. gentleman for Marquette says, possibly did not cost them more than fifty cents on the dollar. It looks to me like a huge job. In the first place, I do not think the Minister of the Interior should have the power to sell the lands of that western country to any company at a dollar an acre. In my ignorance I thought it was the policy of the Liberal party to keep the land for the settler. We heard that years ago; but when these gentlemen get into power, it is the land for the speculator, and at the miserably low price of a dollar an acre, while the settler has to pay $5, $6 and $7 an acre for it. Well, this is not the first time that the Liberals have abandoned the policy they preached all over the country. It is only a sample case, but to my mind it is one of the dirtiest samples ever exposed in this House.

Mr. SIFTON. I want to correct a remark I made a moment ago. When speaking of the sale of lands to the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway Company, I said that the price was $1.75 an acre. It was $1.53 an acre.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Now that the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) has indulged his monomaniac propensity to have his periodical fling at the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler), that being evidently the object for which he rose to his feet, I would like to ask the minister if Mr. Pierce is still inspector of surveys?

Mr. SIFTON. No.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Have any surveys been conducted in the Peace River country in the past year?

Mr. SIFTON. There have been some block outline surveys, and one small tract has been subdivided.

Dominion lands, chargeable to income—commissioner's salary, $3,200.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. There is an increase there.

Mr. SIFTON. There has been a general increase in the salaries of the civil servants, and this is not as large proportionately as the increases of other officials.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. There is a new official.

Mr. SIFTON. Yes, J. W. Greenway, formerly inspector of school lands.

Dominion lands—superintendent of mines, $3,000.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What are the duties of the superintendent of mines

Mr. SIFTON. The superintendent of mines during the last year has been engaged largely in the development of the system of examining ore deposits by the Swedish method. He published a work on that subject last year in order that mining institutes might post themselves on the matter. The hon. gentleman knows that there are vast deposits of iron in Canada. The work has been very highly commended by scientific mining bodies all over the world. Latterly

I appointed him to go to Europe at the head of a commission for the purpose of investigating the process of melting by electricity, and his report on that subject will be issued in the course of a week.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is the Department of the Superintendent of Mines established by statute ?

Mr. SIFTON. The office was created by statute many years ago.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I notice in last year's 'Hansard' that the Prime Minister said, in reference to the superintendent of mining :

> There is no doubt that with this amount of money voted by parliament the government has perfect authority to create such a work, but it will last only one year. Unless it is provided next year it will lapse, ipso facto ; it cannot be continued from year to year as it could if it were established by statute.

Mr. SIFTON. My hon. friend is referring to a special vote for the superintendent of mines. The office was established years ago by statute. In the actual organization, we have not got the accommodation for the work he is carrying on, which is very largely laboratory work and requires scientific apparatus.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How many men has he under him ?

Mr. SIFTON. He brings in specialists from time to time. We had to secure an electrical expert from Peterborough and a metallurgical expert from England to assist the investigations in Europe.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is not the position of superintendent of mines a provisional position, or has the Dominion mines of its own which require a superintendent ?

Mr. SIFTON. We have the direct supervision of the mining territory upon Dominion lands, but the office he holds is for the purpose of carrying on investigations of a general character.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would like to ask how it comes that Dr. Bell has not been gazetted as the head of the geological survey ? He has filled the position now four years and deserves every consideration, and I think some explanation should be given why he has not been permanently appointed. He is only receiving a salary of $2,400.

Mr. SIFTON. I am responsible for making the appointment and am not prepared to recommend Dr. Bell. I have personally very kindly feelings towards him. He is the senior officer of the survey, and I appointed him the acting head in the hope that I would be able to make his position permanent but have not been able to do so. I prefer not to make any statement further than this, and my hon. friend will know that the question of the qualifications of scientific men is a very difficult one for anybody who is not an expert himself.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If Dr. Bell is not fitted for the position, how comes it he has been kept in it for four years ?

Mr. SIFTON. I have had the reorganization of the department in contemplation for the past two or three years, and next year hope to be able to complete it, but so far have not been in a position to do so.

Mr. SPROULE. Who is the superintendent of mines ?

Mr. SIFTON. Dr. Haanel.

Mr. SPROULE. What was the result of his trip to Germany about the use of electricity in smelting ore ?

Mr. SIFTON. The report will be ready for the printer in a couple of weeks, and I shall have much pleasure in sending a copy to each member of the House. I could not state satisfactorily in a few words the results of his report. If I entered into very full details, I might say something which might be misleading. The reason of the delay in getting out the report is because we only received the report of the metallurgical expert from England, who was appointed to examine into and make an analysis of the different processes of manufacture of steel, a short time ago.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the hon. minister not say in a general way whether the process is a success or a failure ?

Mr. SIFTON. Speaking generally, it may be said that the report is encouraging and will demonstrate that given satisfactory qualities of ore and reasonably cheap power, electric smelting can be carried on successfully in some parts of Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. There is not much enlightenment in that. Given fairly good quality of ore and plenty of heat, you can smelt the ore. That follows as a matter of course. What experience has Dr. Haanel had to justify his being regarded as an expert in that line ?

Mr. SIFTON. He has the experience of a practical chemist and practical electrician.

Mr. SPROULE. Where did he gain his experience ?

Mr. SIFTON. In a German university.

Mr. SPROULE. My information is that his only experience has been gained in study at the university. It is one thing to study and another to apply the theories you have learned at a university. It requires years of practical experience to make an expert.

Mr. SIFTON. Of course, the government cannot have experts in every line. All the government can look for is a man who has more or less general attainments, and when any special questions come up, he engages specialists from time to time. We have had an expert electrician from the Canadian General Electric Works at Peterborough, and a metallurgist from England recommended by competent authorities there. No government could keep in its employ men who were specialists in the different branches, with regard to which inquiry from time to time may have to be made. All we can do is engage specialists as they are required. At present we are contemplating making an inquiry into zinc in British Columbia, and we shall have to engage a man who is a zinc expert. What we want for a superintendent is not a man who is in the ordinary sense a specialist in any particular branch, but, a man of general scientific education, who will be able to direct particular inquiries.

Mr. SPROULE. I would not regard such a man as an expert at all. An expert is a man who has acquired special knowledge of a subject by the experience of a long time, and who puts that knowledge into practice. I am informed that Dr. Haanel is only a very commonplace man in his line, and was regarded in every line of life as rather a failure. But he is trotted out as an expert and is given a salary as an expert, being placed over the heads of other men in his line. I am informed that among other occupations he was in the ministerial line, but whether he was a success or not in that line I do not know. I do not think that this man will impress the intelligent people of the world.

Mr. SIFTON. When he was appointed he was professor of physics in Cornell University at Syracuse.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would like to say a few words on behalf of Dr. Bell. I certainly am surprised to hear that he is not likely to receive the appointment of the Director of the Geological Survey. For forty-eight years Dr. Bell has been travelling throughout this country gaining information, and certainly he is a fountain of information with reference to the mines and topographical work of this country. He undoubtedly deserves the greatest credit from the people of this country. I have read his reports for years, and when we consider the efforts he has put forth on behalf of the people of this country in developing their mines, their woodlands and their agricultural lands, I am sure there is not a man in the House but will feel sore when he realizes that Dr. Bell is to accept a position secondary to any man in this country. He has crept up step by step until he is one of the most eminent geologists in the world, I may say, to-day. It seems that a geeat injustice must have been done him, when we realize that he has been dragged along, year after year filling the position of Director of the Geological Survey of this country ably and well. If he had not filled it properly, why was the position not filled by some one who was capable of doing so? Now, at his time of life, after the efforts and labours he has put forth on behalf of this country, I say it is a shame and a disgrace that a man holding the position that he does in the scientific world, possessing his ability, should have to accept a secondary position.

Mr. SIFTON. Does my hon. friend know that when his friends were in office Dr. Bell had been in the Geological Survey for over thirty years, and yet his friends appointed a young man over his head as Director of the Survey, a young man who had been only comparatively a few years in the service? My hon. friend must know that while we all respect age and experience, something else besides age and experience is required. My hon. friend must remember when he comes to pass judgment in matters of this kind, that I have had better opportunities of understanding the situation than he has had. My hon. friend has had no experience in the administration of the department, but he must realize that after administering the department for several years and being brought into daily contact with the details of its operation, I am in a fairly good position to express an opinion in regard to such a matter, and that I could not possibly be animated by any other motive than a desire to do what would be fair to Dr. Bell. Nothing would be more pleasant to me than to appoint Dr. Bell, but the most pleasant thing is not always the most satisfactory thing. If I felt I could appoint Dr. Bell I would do so. My hon. friend must give me credit for believing that the conclusion at which I have arrived is based on the facts that have been brought to my attention.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Might it not be fair to Dr. Bell to suggest what there is lacking in the man that he is not capable of carrying on the work of the department? I feel the position keenly, because I have known Dr. Bell, through his work, for many, many years, and realize that he has been a most valuable man to this country.

Mr. SPROULE. What position does Dr. Bell occupy in the department, and what is his salary?

Mr. SIFTON. He is acting Director. He has filled that position since Dr. Dawson died about three years ago.

Mr. SPROULE. How long has he been in the department?

Mr. SIFTON. He has been forty years in the Geological Survey.

Mr. SPROULE. What salary does he get now?

Mr. SIFTON. $3,200, I think.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I think it is only $2,300 now, and that he has not even had the statutory increases the last two years.

Mr. SPROULE. Has he reached the maximum of his class, and what class is he in ?

Mr. SIFTON. Officers of the Geological Survey are called technical officers, and their salaries are especially voted every year. At the time Dr. Bell was appointed acting Director he was getting $2,400 ; I am not sure whether he is now getting $3,200 or not, but I think so. Of course, we are not now passing Geological Survey items, and I have not the papers under my hand. When we come to the items of the Geological Survey, I will be able to tell my hon. friend.

Mr. GOURLEY. What salary was Dr. Dawson getting at the time of his death ?

Mr. SIFTON. $3,200.

Mr. GOURLEY. Has Dr. Bell been getting that salary while performing the duties since Dr. Dawson's death ?

Mr. SIFTON. During the first two years he did not receive the full salary, and I remember that the reason why he did not was that the question had come up upon various occasions as to whether officers of the government filling higher positions temporarily should receive the salaries of the officers for whom they were acting. I sent it before the council for the purpose of being discussed, and that was the decision that was arrived at.

Mr. SPROULE. What class is Dr. Bell in at the present time? The minister's statement is very indefinite regarding the salary. He says he thinks he gets $3,200.

Mr. SIFTON. He is not in any class. The officers of the Geological Survey are not classified as are the officers of the civil service. They are rated as technical officials and their salaries are specially voted.

Mr. SPROULE. In the Auditor General's Report he appears to get $2,400.

Mr. SIFTON. I said the salary of the director was $3,200. The question whether Dr. Bell was to get the salary of a director was up on one occasion and it was decided that he should not. I do not remember whether he has been getting it this last year.

Mr. SPROULE. It is quite clear that he has not. By the Auditor General's Report he has been getting $2,400. It would be interesting to know why he has not been getting more. Ever since his predecessor died I suppose he has been getting the same salary. The statutory increase, I presume, would not apply to him, if he does not come under the Civil Service Act, though as a technical officer, he would be eligible for the statutory increase there as well. It would be interesting to know when his salary was increased, and to what extent, during the past few years. I have heard it said that he gets a much smaller salary in proportion than others who are doing equally valuable work, and that in addition he is not a permanent appointment, that some one else might be put over his head at any time. I assume from what the minister says that he is not likely to appoint him. It appears that he has been in the service for 48 years.

Mr. GOURLEY. I must say that a salary of $2,400 for an officer who has been 48 years in the service of the government, affords little encouragement to men of talent and scientific ability to engage in the service of the government.

Mr. SIFTON. I am not responsible for the scale of salaries in the Geological Survey. I do not think the hon. gentleman ought to ask me, in the case of a gentleman who has occupied the position of a scientific man in that department for the last 40 years, why I do not think he is a desirable man to put at the head of that department. I think he is a very respectable gentleman, and performs valuable public service, but if I remain in office and endeavour to put the Geological Survey on a much more useful basis, I do not think he is a good man for the position and would not recommend him.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the minister to infer in his answer to the hon. member for Lambton that he was not a suitable man for the position. Then we have the fact that the minister brings in a new man who has had no experience at all, and gives him $3,000 a year, Dr. Haanel, without any experience, and no other qualification as disclosed to us except that he was a schoolmate of the minister when they were at college. Now it does seem to me that this is the old story that kissing goes by favour. The minister puts a friend of his in a high position, without any knowledge upon which to base his judgment; he puts him into this position, and gives him a salary over and above a man who has rendered faithful service for 48 years, and whose education so far as we know has been all that a man should require to make him an expert. In addition to that, he has had training and experience for that length of time, yet a new man is brought in without any experience at all, and put over him and given a larger salary.

Mr. SIFTON. No new man is put over him at all.

Mr. SPROULE. Because Dr. Haanel is given a higher salary, therefore he must have a higher position.

Mr. SIFTON. Dr. Haanel has nothing to do with the Geological Survey at all. His duties are connected solely with metallurgy.

Salaries of inspectors, Dominion lands and Crown timber agents, sub-agents and clerks in the outside service, $121,700.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The minister said a while ago that he was going to advance the salaries of the officials all round. Take for instance, my own town of Minnedosa, the agent of the Dominion Lands Office there, has been in receipt of $100 a month for many years past. I refer to Mr. Flesher. I notice that the clerk, Mr. Hogarth, has been in receipt, until the past year, of a salary of $65 a month, while this year his salary has been advanced to $100 a month. The head of the office remains at the old salary. I would like some explanation.

Mr. SIFTON. I was speaking of a general increase in salaries under the amended Civil Service Act. We have made some increases for officials who were not affected by that amended Act, not as a result of or by the action of that amendment, but because of the fact that the salaries ought to be somewhat increased. A certain scale of increase was provided for those who were affected by the Act. But I had no reference to officials of the class my hon. friend refers to in the outside service. I have an impression that the gentleman my hon. friend refers to is a very old man.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. He is old, but he is very active.

Mr. SIFTON. My impression was that he is an old man, and that the clerk did most of the work. If my hon. friend thinks he is deserving I am quite prepared to consider it. He has had the same salary for a long time.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The clerk's salary was increased from $780 to $1,000, but the head of the office, Mr. Flesher, remains at the same salary. Mr. Flesher is a very active man. He is up in years but he never misses a day from his office. He does the greater portion of the work notwithstanding that the clerk is much younger. I am not complaining that the salary of the clerk was increased but I consider that if his salary was increased Mr. Flesher is entitled to have his increased as well.

Mr. SIFTON. I will look into it.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. In view of the fact that before another session we will be in the throes of an election campaign, I think the hon. minister will be aggrieved to hear that some of his officials, inspectors, &c., have been taking a very active part politically.

Mr. SIFTON. When ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. They are doing it at the present time.

Mr. SIFTON Will the hon. gentleman specify ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Yes. A year ago a question in regard to civil servants taking part in elections in Manitoba came up for discussion in this House when the hon. minister was not present. I brought to the attention of the House the specific case of Mr. Thos. Young, homestead inspector at Dauphin. His case was one which the right hon. Prime Minister stated came within the rule which he had laid down. The right hon. gentleman stated that if he accepted the nomination of the Liberal party for the Manitoba legislature he would cease to be an employee of the Dominion government. Mr. Thos. Young at that time did accept the nomination on behalf of the Liberal party. I pointed out to the House that I felt confident what was going to be the result, that Mr. Young was being allowed to retire temporarily during the campaign and that when the campaign was over and the elections consigned him to private life again he would be appointed to his position. I tried to get some specific declaration from the acting minister as to whether that procedure would be followed or not. The reason I was so sceptical in regard to the action that the government would take was that the same thing happened in my own constituency where my opponent in the last election who had been homestead inspector was allowed to resign to take part in the contest and who, after being defeated, was reappointed to his position. I instanced that as an illustration that most likely that procedure would be followed in the case of Mr. Young. On the 6th of April in this House I asked the hon. minister the following question ?

1. Did Mr. Thos. Young, homestead inspector, Manitoba, resign his position during the year 1903 ?

The reply was :

Yes.

The second question was :

If so, what was the date of his resignation ?

The answer was :

12th July, 1903.

I may say that that was the very day upon which I was personally present at a political meeting where Mr. Thos. Young had spoken from the same platform as I myself had been speaking from. Yet, he resigned on the 12th July. The third question was :

Was Mr. Young a candidate at the provincial elections in Manitoba last July ?

This is the very innocent answer which the hon. gentleman gave :

The department has no information on this point. He was reported in the press as being a candidate.

I think the hon. minister is not nearly so innocent as he would imply by that answer, because I read Mr. Thos. Young's acceptance of the nomination last year. That ought to be official enough. So official was it that the right hon. Prime Minister recognized this case as coming within the rule laid down and as constituting an infringement of a civil servant's proper duties and declared that he should be asked to retire. The fourth question was :

Is Mr. Young now in the employ of the government ? If so, in what capacity ; what is the date of his appointment, and the amount of his salary ?

The answer was :

Yes, Mr. Young is now employed as forest ranger for northwestern Manitoba. He was appointed on the 9th November, 1903, at $125 per month.

So that, the very thing that I predicted would happen, did come to pass. Not only was Mr. Thos. Young reappointed, but he was reappointed at an increased salary to soothe his wounded feelings for having been defeated in the previous contest. He had been prior to the time he resigned in receipt of a salary of $100 a month and he was reappointed at the rate of $125 a month no doubt to recompense him for the loss of time consequent upon the campaign.

Mr. SCOTT. He had had more experience.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Yes, he was a sadder and a wiser man. This same Mr. Thos. Young to-day is a most active politician and no person in that part of the country be he Liberal or Conservative, will say anything to the contrary. But, Mr. Thos. Young is not the only one. There is a gentleman named Yeo, a land agent in the Emerson district whose particular duty seems to be to look after the Galicians. Mr. Yeo was the party who was put in charge of bringing the Galicians out last year to register. They were not then qualified to register. He brought them out a month ago to register.

Mr. SIFTON. He is a sub-land agent. The men who are appointed as sub-land agents are given small salaries, are not supposed to devote their whole time to the service and are not therefore in the ordinary sense government agents.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. It appears that the hon. gentleman discriminates according to the amount of salary his officers get.

Mr. SIFTON. He only gets $25 a month.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. There is another official, Mr Harvey. I think he is supposed to be an interpreter. Would the hon. gentleman inform us what Mr. Harvey's duties are supposed to be ?

Mr. SIFTON. My deputy informs me he is an interpreter at Winnipeg.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What is his particular duty ?

Mr SIFTON. He is in the immigration service.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What does he do ? Does he accompany parties of foreigners around and interpret ?

Mr. SIFTON. The interpreters are there for the purpose of being in communication with foreign settlers when they come in. He interprets for the foreign settlers when they come in and he is also sent out with settlers to assist them in making locations.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. He accompanies foreigners to their new locations. I wish to direct the hon. minister's attention to the fact that Mr. Harvey has been during the past two or three months devoting his time and attention to my humble self.

Mr. SIFTON. What has he been doing?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. He is acting as interpreter for the Liberal candidate in his canvass. I do not know whether it comes within the scope of his duties or not but it is a notorious fact that Mr. Harvey has accompanied from house to house Mr. S. L. Head, the Liberal candidate for Marquette interpreting for the Galicians. I do not think it is the duty of this gentleman to accompany any candidate, Grit or Tory because he is paid by Conservative money as well as Liberal money and I do not think the hon. Minister of the Interior will defend any such action on his part. I have not the slightest doubt that when I draw the attention of the hon. minister to his conduct he will have this gentleman summarily dismissed, because we know that other officials have been dismissed upon the representations made by hon. members of this House. I can assure him that what I am telling him is a fact because if it were not a fact I would be the last one to say so. The fact is that he has been accompanying the Liberal candidate from House to House, in the Galician settlement acting as interpreter and one old Galician in his quaint way, describing his actions and manners afterwards, said that he put him in mind of a man spreading butter very thickly on bread. I wish to draw the hon. minister's attention to this fact and I am sure that he will have this gentleman's conduct inquired into. I do not ask that this gentleman shall be decapitated without being given an opportunity to present his defence.

Mr. SIFTON. I will not undertake to dispute what my hon. friend says. It certainly is not the business of an official of the immigration department to travel around with any candidate or to act as an interpreter for him. I cannot say that I have in my mind the names of all the officials of the service and I was not aware that a man by the name of Harvey was there. My deputy informs me that he is an interpreter. This is the first I have heard of the matter to which my hon. friend refers and I will give instructions to have the matter investigated. The instructions will be not only to him but to other officials in the service.

Mr. SPROULE. It would hardly be expected that the minister would remember the names because their names are legion.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I may point out that all the Conservative members in Manitoba would appear to have had their own experience with regard to this state of things. There was a Liberal convention in my riding last fall when the election was expected, and several aspiring Liberal candidates appeared on the scene. It is said, that at the convention, a government official who was one of the scrutineers worked the thing in such a way, that he turned the wheel in favour of the candidate who did not have a majority of the votes.

Mr. GOURLEY. He switched.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I may say that two of the aspiring Liberal candidates were government officials. One was an old official who has been in and out of the local legislature, and who when out of the legislature is a regular official of the government, and when in the legislature is paid by the day. This official had his name on the list of candidates presented at the convention, but the wheel of fortune was turned over to an official of the Public Works Department, and who is now supposed to be the Liberal candidate. Candidate No. 1 was dissatisfied and complained that he had been robbed of the convention, and so the fortunate candidate had to come down to Ottawa to complain that his brother official was interfering with his chances of election. The unlucky candidate was called down to Ottawa and the Deputy Minister of the Interior made him an offer to go to France on an immigration mission, so that he might be away during election time and not hamper his Liberal friend. This official did go to France but no election took place, and the other candidate has had to resume his work in the Public Works Department. The aspiring candidate who had been robbed of the convention had to come back from France and he had to cable and cable for money to enable him to do so. The government it would appear did not want to see him again, but at all events after very considerable delay he managed to get enough money to take him to his home. He has now resumed his duties in the Dominion Lands Department in Winnipeg as an inspector of something, and we are awaiting the election. I might say that at that convention held by the Liberals of St. Boniface—as a matter of fact there were three conventions but I refer to the last—there were no less than twenty officials of the Dominion government attending the convention to select a candidate to oppose me and to try to defeat me at the coming election.

Mr. SIFTON.

Mr. CLARKE. They have a big contract on hand.

Mr. BOYD. The Minister of the Interior and some of his supporters seem to look upon this as rather amusing, judging from their smiles, but if they had been here from 1893 to 1896 and had listened to the castigation handed out to the Conservative government if an official interfered remotely in an election (not to speak of the flagrant interference of the present officials of the Interior Department), these hon. members would have a different smile upon their faces from what we see to-night. We all remember that last session we brought to the attention of the government the fact that a number of the officials of the Interior Department were taking a very active part in the local elections, that they were in fact Liberal candidates, and we predicted that after their defeat they would resume their positions. That prediction has been verified. As the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) has forcibly drawn to the attention of the minister, his officials are again taking a prominent part in the political struggle. It is most unfair to permit these officials who receive their pay from the country as a whole, to participate in political contests. I am surprised that the Minister of Interior, who when he is at home gets the credit of going into the fight fairly and fearlessly, should allow such underhand conduct as this. It has been said that he could not get Liberal candidates unless he looked for them in the ranks of his officials, but I venture to think that if he paused and thought about it a little, he would put an end to this indecent state of things. It is now said that three or four of the Liberal candidates in the field are identified with the Saskatchewan Land Company, beginning with Mr. MacKenzie up in Alberta and going along to Mr. Dawson and Mr. Turriff and right down pretty nearly along the whole line, that is the rumour; the minister may not hear it but it is talked about and even written about in the newspapers. If the minister did his duty, or had any desire to see fair play he would put a stop to these officials interfering in politics.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Before this item passes, there is a matter I would like to bring to the attention of the Minister of the Interior in reference to a dispute between certain sections of the Galician people in township 18 range 3. I will state the circumstances so that the minister may take them into consideration. It appears that three years ago Father Philas, head of the Order of Basilians in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, made application for a homestead entry of legal subdivision 16 of section 27, township 18, range 3 east. The application was made for the Greek Catholic church and $10 entry fee was paid. A receipt was given for the entry fee and the entry was made in the books of the Dominion Lands Office. The Greek Catholics then proceeded to build a church on the property which cost somewhere in the neighbourhood of $500, and at a meeting of the Greek Catholics of that district five trustees were elected to look after the property on behalf of the congregation. Everything went along all right until about a year ago, when some priests of the Independent Greek Church—another branch of the Greek Church—went into the district and succeeded in getting two of the trustees to leave the Greek Catholic Church and come over to the Independent Church. They then formed a congregation known as the Greek Independent Church and took forcible possession of the church which the Greek Catholics had erected. When the Greek Catholics found that two of their trustees had deserted and gone over to the enemy, they held another meeting and elected two other trustees to fill their places. The five trustees of the Greek Catholic Church then caused the church to be locked, but the Independent Greek Church Congregation or some one acting on their behalf, forced the lock and took possession. Matters have been going on in this way ever since, and Father Philas went to the Dominion Lands Office and made a complaint against the action of the Independent Greek Church, and he was promised that matters would be investigated. He called at the land office in Winnipeg a few days ago, and was informed that a Mr. Foley, one of the homestead inspectors had been sent out to the district to investigate, and had sent in a report on the basis of which the department had decided to issue a patent to the Independent Greek Church trustees.

The Greek Catholic trustees were not notified that Mr. Foley was going out into that district, and they were therefore not consulted by him while he was out there. If the state of affairs is as represented to me —and I have every reason to believe it is, for I have been informed by Father Filas himself—it seems to have been a very high-handed proceeding on the part of the government to act on the report of one of their officials who only consulted one side of the arrangement, and did not consult those who contributed their money to build the church. I would ask the minister to investigate the case at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. SIFTON. I do not know the circumstances of the case, but it is of sufficient importance to warrant us in finding out what both parties have to say, and I will have it investigated.

Salaries of extra clerks at head office and advertising, including $5,000 for extra service in connection with Dominion lands, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $38,500.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Does this advertising include the advertising of land regulations and mining regulations ?

Mr. SIFTON. Not altogether.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What is the increase of $11,000 for ?

Mr. SIFTON. The details of the increase are as follows : In connection with the Dominion Lands Branch there have been eighteen additional appointments of the writer class, whose salaries altogether amount to $10,175 ; there are statutory increases for two clerks, amounting to $105 ; there have been increases in the salaries of clerks and messengers under the provisions of the amendment of the Civil Service Act of last year, amounting altogether to $3,860 ; and there is an increase in the amount for advertising and printing of $3,100 making a total of $17,000 odd. There have been decreases by the appointment of four clerks of the temporary staff, paid out of this vote, to the permanent staff as junior second-class clerks. Two temporary clerks have been made permanent. Four clerks have been transferred from this to another branch. One has resigned from the service, which makes a saving of about $6,000 or a net increase of $11,000 in the vote.

Dominion Lands—protection of timber lands in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, and tree culture in the Northwest Territories, $40,000.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What are the regulations regarding portable saw-mills ? I understand that, as they are enforced in the Dominion reserves at Dauphin, farmers are not permitted to have portable saw-mills set up within the reserve, and must haul their logs some miles to have them sawn. They object to that seriously.

Mr. SIFTON. The farmers are not supposed to have portable saw-mills. My hon. friend knows the practice better than I do. The practice followed is this. People set up portable saw-mills for the farmers who get permission to take out logs for their houses. I have a fairly good idea that what is being done is perhaps not altogether within the spirit of the regulations, but the net result is that the new settlers are getting their timber for building purposes the cheapest way they can, and I do not think that public policy requires the practice to be interfered with. As a matter of fact, the regulations do not contemplate the farmers setting up portable saw-mills. They are supposed to take out a certain number of logs for the purpose of building their houses and not more.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Are they not permitted to saw logs to build a frame house ?

Mr. SIFTON. A man would not likely set up a portable saw-mill just to cut up logs for one house. A number of people club together and a portable saw-mill is set up.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Suppose a number of people club together and have one portable saw-mill set up by one of the farmers who saws for all the rest, what is the objection ? The hon. gentleman has his officials to see that they do not cut up the logs for sale. Is it not a fact that some of those timber reserve lands were surveyed a few years ago ? Have none of the timber reserves been sub-divided ?

Mr. SIFTON. Not so far as I know.

Mr. SPROULE. What has been done with regard to tree culture ? Who is doing that work ?

Mr. SIFTON. It is being done on the plan I explained to the House during the last two or three years, under the supervision of Mr. Stewart. The free distribution of trees in Manitoba is not being carried on to as great an extent as heretofore. Private individuals are now going into the business of furnishing seedlings, and in a short time the free distribution may cease. In the Territories, however, it is necessary to continue it on a large scale. If my hon. friend would take the trouble to look up the report of the chief of the forestry branch, he will see what is being done. For the year 1904, in the province of Manitoba, 1,200,000 young trees were furnished, and in the Territories 500,000, so that for this year 1,700,000 have been furnished.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought these were furnished by the experimental farms.

Mr. SIFTON. We raised some of them on the experimental farms. At Indian Head we have purchased a small plot of ground upon which we intend to raise seedlings.

Mr. SPROULE. Where did you get the million of trees planted out ?

Mr. SIFTON. We raised them from the seed.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that the work was being done by the experimental farm. We have money voted for the purposes of that farm, why put an item in here to duplicate the same work ?

Mr. SIFTON. We raise the seedlings on the experimental farms.

Mr. SPROULE. Where have you plantations outside the experimental farm ?

Mr. SIFTON. We have 160 acres at Indian Head, which are not upon the experimental farm, but a particular place set apart for the purpose of raising seedlings.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that the only place ?

Mr. SIFTON. Yes, outside the farm.

Mr. SPROULE. How much of this money is intended for that work ?

Mr. SIFTON. This is the total vote for the whole service. The expenses in connection with the shrubbery are set down in the superintendent's estimate as $3,405, paid out of this vote.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE.

Mr. SPROULE. I have never understood that there was any tree culture outside of the experimental farm, and that the seed sown there was given out to the farmers generally. I cannot understand why you have an item here for that purpose. I cannot understand why we would require an item here for that purpose when we vote money enough to carry on the work of the farm.

Mr. SIFTON. This is a special branch. The work might have been carried on by the Department of Agriculture as a part of its work, but it was determined to do it in my department. The cost is the same ; if the Minister of Agriculture were doing it he would have to ask so much more money than he does. There is a small plot of land at the experimental farm of which our men are making use.

Mr. SPROULE. This is another instance of that duplicating which is done and it would seem that sometimes the object of it is to provide work for some one.

Mr. SIFTON. The farm is not doing this work at all.

Mr. SPROULE. Then what are they spending the money for ?

Mr. SIFTON. This is not an appropriation for the experimental farm ; it is an appropriation for the forestry branch ; the officers of the forestry branch make use of a small amount of land on the farms to do this work.

Mr. SPROULE. You employ a Mr. Stewart as timber inspector or something of that kind and now Mr. Stewart is starting to scratch up little patches on the experimental farm and sow seeds. At the same time we have a staff at the experimental farm who are doing that work. The same thing prevails in other lines, as for example, in the case of the chicken fattening stations, some of which are apparently started simply to give a little patronage to friends, but there are very little returns from them. If we want to go into the cultivation of trees in connection with the farm or not, do it at one place in the Territories.

Mr. SIFTON. That is exactly what we are doing. We started this work at the farm because that was the most convenient way of doing it and we wanted to get on with the work, and as the result of our experience we have established a small place in the neighbourhood of Indian Head where we intend to carry on the work exclusively.

Mr. SPROULE. This item is so worked that we are not able to judge of the different purposes for which it is intended. Where is Mr. Stewart located permanently?

Mr. SIFTON. Here.

Mr. SPROULE. If Mr. Stewart has his headquarters here is he more likely to be successful in carrying on tree planting at Indian Head, than a man in charge of the farm there who has been doing the work for years ? How much of this vote is used for fire protection and how much for tree planting ?

Mr. SIFTON. The items are as follows :

Salaries, officers and assistants :—
Superintendent	$2,500
Assistant superintendent	1,200
Inspector	1,000
Clerk	520
Manager Indian Head nursery	900
Supervisor	1,000
A. P. Stevenson, supervisor of tree planting in Manitoba, ten months with team at $100 per month	1,000
Four additional agents during summer months for inspection work	2,000
Foreman of Brandon nursery, 6 months.	380
Freight and express charges on plant material, including cost of deivery of trees and seeds to applicants in all parts of the country	1,000
Cost of growing and purchasing plant material. This includes wages of men employed in the nurseries and in gathering seed and also cost of trees purchased outside	4,500
Travelling expenses for all officers of branch. This includes expenses of superintendent, assistant superintendent, inspector and four additional agents for tree planting and about twenty fire rangers	5,000
Printing and stationery, including fire notices on parchment paper, copies of fire Acts, instructions to tree planters, forestry circulars and bulletins, &c.	4,000
Building fire guards	1,500
For purchase of books for use in office; subscriptions to periodicals on forestry, &c.	500
Proposed report from Dr. C. A. Schenck, (the eminent expert on forestry, an amount which may or may not be expended)	500
For purchase of implements, &c., for new forest nursery station	500
For inspection and assistance in tree planting in older provinces	1,000
Pay of forest fire rangers and inspection of timber lands :
In Railway belt British Columba	5,000
" North Saskatchewan district	2,000
" Riding Duck and Porcupine Mountains	2,000
" Foothills of the Rocky Mountains	1,000
" Moose Mountain timber reserve	500
" Turtle Mountain timber reserve	500
" Eastern Manitoba and Lake Winnipeg district	1,000

Altogether $40,000.

Mr. SPROULE. That does not give any information ; this item refers only to Manitoba and the Northwest Territories.

Mr. SIFTON. It should include British Columbia.

Mr. SPROULE. In addition to that the minister has it all mixed up, part of it for fire protection, part of it for tree culture, part of it for farms and part of it for other lines, so that we are as much in the dark as ever. We should not have them all put together so that we cannot ascertain what is being spent on these different items in order that we may judge whether the criticism is what it should be or not. If we had the work that took place on the farm and the number of officers employed, we would be in a better position to judge intelligently of this expenditure, but it is all jumbled up, two or three things together and we cannot separate it so that it can be properly analysed. I think that ought to be done for the benefit of the House.

Mr. SIFTON. My hon. friend will note that I gave the figures of the $12,000 for the payment of four fire rangers in respect of Dominion lands.

Mr. SPROULE. Is all the rest of that for tree culture ?

Mr. SIFTON. Substantially, yes. It includes the salaries of officers who take charge of this fire protection.

Miscellaneous—maintenance, construction of roads, bridges and other necessary works in connection with the Hot Springs Reservation near Banff Station, Northwest Territories, $27,020.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there anything in the report of the Interior Department showing what is being done from year to year at Banff ?

Mr. SIFTON. There is a report every year to the head of the department which shows what has been done, it is printed in the departmental report. This vote is required for payment of salaries, caretakers, repairs for roads, bridge over the river, purchase of animals, new roads, clearing land. The report of the superintendent is found on page 25 of last year's departmental report.

Mr. SPROULE. Under whose supervision is this work done, or is it done by day labour ?

Mr. SIFTON. Most of it is done by day work under the supervision of the superintendent. The museum that was put up a year ago was of course built by contract, but nearly all the work of building bridges and repairing roads is done by day labour. That is found to be the cheaper and more satisfactory way of doing it. If my hon. friend has had the pleasure of visiting the park he has found that some of the best road-making done in Canada has been done in that part. The superintendent has done marvellously good work for the amount of money at his disposal.

Mr. SPROULE. What kind of animals do you intend to buy ?

Mr. SIFTON. We have bought goats, bulls, four or five elks. The superintendent has been endeavouring to get specimens of the mountain sheep. He has been trying to get a couple of buffalos from the far north within the past two or three years, but he has not succeeded yet, and I have practically given up further attempts. The report shows that at the present time we have forty buffalos, eight elk, four deer, fourteen angora goats, besides moose and some other animals. Three buffalos were presented by Mr. T. G. Blackstock, of Toronto, and fifteen or sixteen were presented to the government by Lord Strathcona. The others have been bought from time to time within the last five or six years.

Mr. SPROULE. We are voting an item to be used the present year, and I think we voted the same item last year.

Mr. SIFTON. We take this estimate so that the superintendent may have the money in case he desires to use it.

Mr. SPROULE. How much of that vote last year was spent for the purpose of buying animals ?

Mr. SIFTON. The Auditor General's Report of last year only shows an expenditure of $79.50.

Mr. SPROULE. Was it for the purpose of supplying this park that the hon. gentleman got his hon. friend the Minister of Finance to put goats on the free list ?

Mr. DAVIS. They are going to Ontario.

Mr. SPROULE. They need not send goats to the Northwest. I ask the hon. minister where he got the goats ?

Mr. SIFTON. They are a rather rare breed of goats.

Miscellaneous—construction of roads, bridle paths and other necessary works in connection with the Yoho park reserve and immediate vicinity, $10,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Where is this park ?

Mr. SIFTON. Yoho Park is a continuation of the Banff park. The Banff park runs up to the British Columbia line and in the railway belt, beyond the British Columbia line, we have set apart a park contiguous to the Rocky Mountain park. Yoho park contains magnificent natural scenery and some glaciers which are declared to be equal to the Alpine glaciers. The Canadian Pacific Railway have spent a considerable amount of money in sending in experts for the purpose of definitely locating the glaciers and we are building bridle paths so as to make them accessible to tourists. They are a very great attraction to tourists going through to the coast. The Canadian Pacific Railway have taken a great interest in developing the tourist business. We have done what we could to make the park attractive and accessible. This particular vote is for the construction of a road from Field to Takakaw Falls including two bridges across the Yoho river, $9,000 repairs to tote road, Field to Hector, $300 ; repairs from Field to Ottertail, $500 ; trail from Emerald lake to Burgess Pass, $400 ; trail from Emerald lake to Glacier, $150 ; extension natural bridge to Canyon, $100 ; a total of $10,450. We are asking for $10,000.

Mr. SPROULE. How is that work being done ? Have you another staff of men there and if so, how many of them ?

Mr. SIFTON. No, there is no staff there. This is part of the other park. The difference is only in the name.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you not think it would be better to put the whole of it under one vote ? What object is there in dividing it up ?

Mr. SIFTON. It is across the British Columbia line ; that is all. What is known as the Rocky Mountain park is taken out of the Northwest Territories and is under the legislative jurisdiction of this Federal parliament. In British Columbia we own the park only as a private individual might own land. We own that much land there so there is a difference in the legal position in which we are placed. There would be no objection to calling it Banff park but at the time the park was established Yoho was suggested and it was given that name.

Mr. SPROULE. When you own the property, as a private individual would own it, why do you require to divide it up and have one item of $10,000 for this park and another item of $27,000 for the other park ?

Mr. SIFTON. It is exactly the same as if we had it under one name.

Mr. SPROULE. Perhaps if you had one item it would be a larger vote than if you divided it up into two smaller items.

Mr. SIFTON. The roads would cost the same.

Mr. SPROULE. The roads would cost the same but when we take up the Auditor General's Report to ascertain what expenditure has taken place to embellish this park you have to look under two different names to find it. Persons not familiar with the circumstances, not having heard the explanation of the minister, would not be likely to find out what the expenditure had been. They would look for Banff park and they would see the expenditure that had taken place there but they would not know that there is another park which is an addition to this same park.

Mr. SIFTON. If my hon friend will bring in a Bill to put it under one name I will vote for it.

Mr. SPROULE. If I am assigned the duty I might be inclined to do that. I would not be so much disposed as the hon. Minister of the Interior is to hide away items in half a dozen different places that should be put under one vote.

Miscellaneous—cost of investigations and demarcations and other astronomical work of the Department of the Interior, including cost of instruments. Salaries of temporary officers and clerks may be paid out of this sum at rates exceeding $500 per annum, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $63,000.

Mr. SIFTON. Of this vote of $63,000, $43,000 is required, for the operations on the 49th parallel west of the Rocky Mountains, including salaries of surveyors and assistants engaged thereon. This work is being carried on under the agreement between the British and United States governments. It will consist of running the line and cutting out a vista throughout, cutting the necessary trails, making a triangulation to measure the distances, making a topographic survey of the adjacent country, taking necessary astronomical and other observations, and the purchase and placing of monuments to replace the existing mounds of loose stones. The estimated running expenses of the parties are $24,000, the salaries of surveyors and their professional assistants $11,000, and the cost of monuments, $8,000. In connection with the astronomical work the salaries amount to $12,580, and in connection with field astronomical work the estimate is $3,500. This last amount is to cover the expenses of observers engaged in the determination of latitudes and longitudes in the eastern provinces. Then, there are travelling expenses amounting to $900, and books, stationery, &c., $3,020, making a total of $63,000.

Mr. SPROULE. That is for the boundary between our country and Alaska ?

Mr. SIFTON. No, there is nothing here for that. We will have a supplementary vote for that.

Mr. SPROULE. Where is this work being done ?

Mr. SIFTON. This is for the actual surveying of the boundary, on the 49th parellel of British Columbia.

Mr. SPROULE. Between British Columbia and the United States ?

Mr. SIFTON. It is very expensive because of the fact that it is in a mountainous country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the position of the work at the present time ?

Mr. SIFTON. I will be able to answer that to-morrow.

Mr. SPROULE. How much was spent of last year's vote ?

Mr. SIFTON. I think I am safe in saying it was all spent.

Mr. SPROULE. That is no information at all. I asked also how much of this work was done, and when it would be completed, and the minister could not answer that question either.

Mr. SIFTON. I will have a statement prepared for my hon. friend to-morrow.

Miscellaneous—cost of litigation, $11,000.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. At page L—57 of the Auditor General's Report I see an amount of $1,368.98 paid to Howell, Mathers & Howell, which I believe is in connection with the litigation which took place on behalf of the municipalities of Argyle and Springdale regarding the school taxes. Would the minister explain what position that matter is now in ?

Mr. SIFTON. It is in the Department of Justice, and I would prefer to let the Minister of Justice do that. I think he read a statement in the House last session showing what the legal result was. I will call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the matter, and ask him to make a statement.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Are these lands paying the school taxes ?

Mr. SIFTON. I have no doubt the school taxes are being levied against them in pursuance of that decision. If they are not paid I suppose the local government would sell them for taxes.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think the government should allow lands set apart for schools to be sold for taxes.

Mr. SIFTON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) does not perhaps understand. A suit was instituted for the purpose of determining whether the Canadian Pacific Railway was liable to taxation by the local municipal authorities. One suit was taken with respect to Manitoba and another with respect to the Northwest Territories, because the conditions were supposed to be different. I do not want to be held responsible for the exact legal correctness of what I say, but I understand it was held that in the Territories the land was liable for school taxes, and in reply to my hon. friend (Mr. W. J. Roche) I said that under the local ordinances I presumed the school taxes were being levied, and if the taxes were not paid the lands could be sold.

Miscellaneous—maintenance of assay office, Vancouver, $13,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Are you doing less work there, to account for this decrease ?

Mr. SIFTON. The office was very much over-worked last year ; the work is not so great this year, and the expenses are less.

Mr. SPROULE. What staff have you, and their salaries ?

Mr. SIFTON. The manager, $2,500 ; the assayer, $1,500 ; assistant assayer, $1,300 ; melter, $1,400 ; janitor, $950 ; and various other expenditures for supplies, &c.

Miscellaneous—engraving, lithographing and printing maps of Dominion and Northwest Territories, $15,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Did you issue any new maps last year ?

Mr. SIFTON. A new map of the Northwest Territories was issued four or five months ago, and I will send my hon. friend half a dozen copies if he wishes.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to see them. Are you sending out any more new maps this year ?

Mr. SIFTON. I make it a practice to send all these publications to the members, and I did not think about that one, or I would have issued instructions to send it out.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. minister intend to get out any new maps this season, and if so, of what districts ?

Mr. SIFTON. We are carrying on the work of issuing new sheets of different portions of the Dominion constantly, with new information. The particular vote for which I am asking is for four different sheets—one for the southwestern portion of Ontario, one for Quebec, one for New Brunswick, and one for southern British Columbia. This is in addition to reprinting some of the maps which we have with additional information up to date.

Mr. SPROULE. What are these maps intended to show—the geological deposits ?

Mr. SIFTON. They are not geological maps. They are maps of Canada. I have no doubt my hon. friend got a copy of the map of Canada which we issued a short time ago.

Mr. SPROULE. It was a mere outline map. Maps which would be valuable would be maps showing the railways, the land sold and the land unsold, the land settled and the land unsettled. So far as I know, there is no map of that kind.

Mr. SIFTON. The new map issued a year or so ago contained all the information which it was possible to put on a map. There was so much information on it that it had to be engraved on copper. A map showing where the land offices are and information of a similar kind would have to be published as a special map. It could not be put on a large map of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. But you are not getting out a large map of the Dominion of Canada. You are only getting out sectional maps.

Mr. SIFTON. My hon. friend will understand that the officers are perfecting the geography of Canada, and are getting out a portion at a time.

Mr. SPROULE. The information does not go far enough. I asked whether it was a railway map, a land map or a geological map, or whether it contained all this information ? We sometimes have inquiries for maps of this kind. Where, for instance, can I get a railway map of the Northwest or British Columbia ?

Mr. SIFTON. My hon. friend can get a railway map by looking at the map of the Dominion of Canada which was issued last year.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What work will be taken up to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of the Interior will continue his estimates, to be followed by the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. SPROULE. What line will the Minister of the Interior take up to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. Immigration.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman cannot take up immigration until the report is down and we have some little time to consider it. We have not got it yet.

Mr. SIFTON. There is nothing in the report except the evidence taken before the committee, and the hon. gentleman has had that. There is no use of holding up the estimates until the evidence is sent down by the committee.

Mr. SPROULE. We are in this awkward dilemma, that the report is not before us, and we cannot discuss it until it is.

Mr. MACLEAN. Can the Minister of Finance tell us whether the Minister of Justice intends to go on with his Railway Bill to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know.

Mr. TAYLOR. As the Minister of Agriculture is not here, I give notice to the Minister of Finance that on the motion to go into Supply, I shall have something to say with reference to the report of the Department of Agriculture.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, July 20, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

PORT PHYSICIAN—FRASERVILLE, QUE.

Mr. DANIEL—by Mr. Taylor—asked

Has Doctor Gilbert of Fraserville, Quebec, been appointed port physician at that port ? If so, at what date was such appointment made, and at what salary ?

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). There is no doctor employed at Fraserville on a salary for the treatment of sick seamen.

POSTMASTERSHIP AT CHESLEY, ONT.

Mr. BLAIN asked :

1. Has the postmaster at Chesley, Ontario, been appointed ?
2. Who received the appointment ?
3. Is the position permanent ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General). No appointment has been made to the postmastership, at Chesley, as yet.

SPEED OF MAIL STEAMERS.

Mr. McCOOL asked :

What is the average speed per hour being made during the present year, 1904, by steamships carrying British and Canadian mails from Moville to Rimouski, and from Rimouski to Moville, respectively ?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The average speed per hour made during the year 1904 to the present date, by steamships carrying British and Canadian mails from Moville to Rimouski and from Rimouski to Moville, is as follows :—

Moville to Rimouski, average 11·8 knots per hour.

Rimouski to Moville average 13·1 knots per hour.

SCHOOL OF MUSKETRY.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to say a few words. The Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) furnished the House with a statement from the Officer Commanding the School of Musketry to which I wish briefly to direct the attention of the House. A few days ago it was my privilege to make certain statements——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) allow me to interrupt him ? I would suggest that the motion for supply, which is the next order to be taken up, should be moved, and then he can make the remarks he desires to make.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. But there may be another motion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understood there was to be none. But even if there is one, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) can make his remarks, unless he himself desires to conclude with a motion.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And speak on the other motion also ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, certainly.

SUPPLY—INTER-IMPERIAL PREFERENTIAL TRADE—DISMISSAL OF LORD DUNDONALD.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to bring to the attention of the government certain remarks of the Solicitor General (Mr. Lemieux) as reported in the press despatches. The Solicitor General seems to have undertaken to give information to the British public with regard to more than one matter. The first subject is the attitude of this country respecting preferential trade. The history of that movement in this country and in Great Britain is pretty well known. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) adopted it as part of his platform in 1896. He declared himself as much in favour of inter-Imperial preferential trade as was Sir Charles Tupper, and promised to do everything he could to obtain it. In 1897, a preference was granted as a measure of free trade and as a compromise between the warring factions of the government. The right hon. Prime Minister went to Great Britain and told the people there that Canada wanted no preference in return for the preference we had granted, that our action was in return for the splendid freedom which Great Britain had given us. And he further said that he did not want Great Britain cursed with the protection which has wrought so much evil in Canada. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) repeated the same observations in 1901 on at least two occasions. At the Colonial Conference in 1902, this government practically threatened the government of Great Britain with the withdrawal of the preference unless some preference was given in return. No meaning could be placed on the language except that. It was not language used casually, but was contained in a carefully-prepared memorandum. So, it became apparent that the views that the right hon. gentleman had expressed in 1897, and that had been repeated by the Minister of Agriculture in 1901, had ceased to occupy the minds of this government, and that their intentions pointed in the very opposite direction. In 1903 and during the present year there has been a movement led by Mr. Chamberlain in Great Britain. That movement has attracted great attention not only in the mother country but throughout the empire. It has been asserted against Mr. Chamberlain, that Canada was taking no interest in that movement, and it has been pointed out that, while only one or two provinces of the Dominion and certain boards of trade had adopted resolutions favouring Mr. Chamberlain's policy, the parliament of Canada had given no sign—had expressed no opinion whatever, upon the advantages or disadvantages of his policy.

The excuse, the reason for this, put forward in government organs—and I believe it is no secret that the right hon. gentleman shared that opinion—was that this being a matter of political controversy in the United Kingdom between those who favoured Mr. Chamberlain's policy and those who were opposed to it, it would be unbecoming and in bad taste for this parliament to express any opinion upon the subject. That view was voiced by the hon. the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) in his speech upon the budget last year, when he said in so many words that it would be unbecoming for parliament to take any part in the movement by signifying the willingness or unwillingness of Canada to adopt a policy such as that which Mr. Chamberlain was advocating; although it is a policy, so far as its essential features and its principle are concerned, which had been adopted by both parties in this country in the election campaign of 1896. Well, if that were a good reason why the parliament of Canada should refrain from expressing any opinion upon the subject, it seems to me that it is a much stronger reason why a member of this government, visiting the United Kingdom on official business of this country, should not attend partisan meetings in the mother country and express himself as either opposed to or in favour of Mr. Chamberlain's policy. That hon. gentleman's remarks are thus reported in a cable from London, under date July 18:

> Surprise is expressed at the speech delivered by Mr. Rodolphe Lemieux, the Solicitor-General for Canada, at a Liberal demonstration at Dollis Hill House on Saturday. After remarking that Canadians were following the fiscal discussion very closely, Mr. Lemieux said they should apply to the present position between the Colonies and the Empire, the old axiom, 'Let well alone.' He added that Canadians were loyal, happy and satisfied to live under the British flag, but if they wished to tighten the tie, they would break it.
> The anti-Chamberlainite papers are making use of this statement, the inference made being that a section of the Canadian Cabinet is opposed to the preferential policy despite Mr. Fielding's declaration in the budget speech. This is regarded specially unfortunate on the eve of the publication of the report of the tariff commission, which is expected to base the whole Chamberlainite policy emphatically upon closer Anglo-Colonial trade relations.

I may say that I do not regard the language of Mr. Lemieux in dealing with the tie which binds the mother country to the colonies as especially happy. The suggestion that a very slight movement might break the tie between the mother country and the colonies is one which I think will not be appreciated by the majority of the people of Canada, and is one as to which I do not think Mr. Lemieux speaks for the majority of the people of Canada, if he desired to suggest any such condition of public opinion as existing in Canada at the present time. We have another report, under date July 19. But I may say before coming to that that the language of the Solicitor General to-day is in marked contrast to that of the Prime Minister himself when in Great Britain some years ago, because on that occasion, if I remember rightly—I do not presume to quote his exact words—he said that whenever the beacon fires were lighted on the hill-tops, Canadians would rally to the support of the empire, or words to that effect. The report under date July 19 is as follows:

> Fuller reports of the political demonstration, at which Hon. R. Lemieux spoke on Saturday, show its bitterly partisan character. One speaker spoke of the downward path that had led Mr. Chamberlain to his present condition of the most reactionary figure in politics. Another declared it would take the whole time of the next Radical Parliament to undo the misdeeds of the Balfour Ministry.
> Mr. Lemieux declared that Canada asked nothing in return for the preference, and was ready to continue it without asking anything in return, because Canadians were not going to put their loyalty up for sale. He added that they should apply to the present position between the Colonies and the Empire the old maxim, 'let well alone.'

Mr. Lemieux was perfectly correct in that part of his remarks wherein he states that Canadians are not going to put their loyalty up for sale, but it is to be borne in mind that we have always been told by the present administration that in dealing with commercial matters, with trade relations between the mother country and the colonies, the mother country was absolutely devoid of sentiment and would deal with us purely on business principles. We do not propose in Canada to put our loyalty up for sale, but we do profess, or at least some of us have professed to believe, that a policy by which mutual preferences would be granted by the mother country on the one hand and the colonies on the other hand would be of great importance indeed, not only commercially, but as a means of solidifying and uniting the empire.

I would also like to call attention to Mr. Lemieux's remarks on another occasion, to a cable despatch in which he is reported to have said:

> Unless the British government recalls Lord Dundonald immediately the bitterest feelings will be aroused in Canada against the imperial military authorities.

Well, I doubt very much if the hon. Solicitor General has any mandate from the people of Canada to express that opinion. He on this occasion also said :

The 'Times' is always against the Laurier government. It gives Lord Dundonald's version of the case completely ignoring the government side. There is no doubt but that Lord Dundonald is now playing into the hands of the Canadian opposition in view of the coming elections. The meeting held in Toronto was nothing else but a pretext to arouse the feelings of Ontario against Sir Wilfrid Laurier, but rest assured there is enough common sense in Canada to understand the true position.

Mr. COWAN. He told the truth then.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend thinks that is the truth. I think it was the Postmaster General who made that remark.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I did not make the remark, but I will endorse it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am very glad to have the endorsation of that remark by the Postmaster General. Another gentleman, I think, in the British House of Commons said that the opposition were endeavouring to exploit Lord Dundonald.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend the Postmaster General endorses that remark also ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I do.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. All I have to say is that if there is any reason for making that statement I am not aware of it. Perhaps the Postmaster General, if he comes to address the House, will be good enough to state the facts upon which he grounds that expression of opinion for which he, as a cabinet minister of this country, ought to be held responsible. I say that the Conservative party has not endeavoured to exploit Lord Dundonald, and has not——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And has not had anything to do, so far as I am aware, with any reception which has been tendered to him on any occasion. I say that, speaking upon my responsibility as leader in this House of the Conservative party, and as knowing something of that party's affairs. I say further, that the opposition in this House have a perfect right to criticise the action of the government in connection with the administration of the militia, and, therefore, in connection with the circumstances which led up to the dismissal of Lord Dundonald. If that is exploiting Lord Dundonald, they have a perfect right to exploit him. If by the expression 'exploiting Lord Dundonald' anything more than that is meant, then I say that those who make that charge, and especially the Postmaster General, who has not been afraid to endorse it, as he calls it, in this House, ought to state the facts on which they rely when making any such statement. Lord Dundonald has been exploited, has he ? When the circumstances of his dismissal were brought up in this House, was it not in order for the opposition to call attention to and discuss the facts connected with the administration of the militia which had been stated in his speech in Montreal, and which were practically admitted by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), as well as by the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) ? Were their mouths to be shut, and are they to be precluded in any way from discussing various matters connected with the Militia Department, of which Lord Dundonald has spoken since his dismissal ? For what is an opposition in parliament, if not to discuss matters of this kind ? I do not understand the suggestion of the hon. Postmaster General.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. We are not here to make incendiary speeches.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Hon. gentlemen.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who is not ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. No one.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is referring to himself or not.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I refer to any one who makes incendiary speeches in this House or out of it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman's observations are of a remarkably general and vague nature. Until he comes down to the particular I will not deal further with his remarks.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. He is just soliloquizing over his own misconduct in days gone by.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Be good now.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As far as Lord Dundonald is concerned I am not here to defend him. He is absolutely able to defend himself but when public men in this House and in this country, such as the hon. Postmaster General, are apparently of the opinion that Lord Dundonald, since his dismissal from the position of General Officer Commanding, is bound to sit silent under the most venomous, and if his statement is to be believed, the most untruthful attacks, and not say one word in his own defence, I say that is a position which I do not acquiesce in for one moment. The position of the hon. Postmaster General seems to be that Lord Dundonald is to be gagged and that he is to be subjected to every possible charge that can be made against him in this parliament and in this country.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Will the hon. gentleman allow me ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Certainly.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. My observations had no reference whatever to Lord Dundonald himself. My observations had reference to those gentlemen who are exploiting Lord Dundonald for their own political advantage.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, I think the hon. Postmaster General's observations must particularly have reference to himself and no doubt an uneasy conscience is that which prompts such observations. If there has been any exploiting in this incident I would be able to show, if it were desirable or necessary to do so, where the exploiting has been. I will give you one illustration and more can be given. Those who enter these grounds may read the inscription which has been many months near the entrance gates :

'Lisez le Canada,' organe du Sir Wilfri Laurier.

In that paper only of yesterday's date there is a long extract, not an editorial, but a long extract from another journal published for the obvious purpose of convincing the people of Quebec that Lord Dundonald unjustly discriminated against them. I would call that exploiting this incident for political purposes. I would call that exploiting this incident for unworthy purposes more than anything that I have heard of in connections with the whole question. A great many other illustrations of the same kind could be given. But so far as I am concerned in regard to Lord Dundonald I have taken the opportunity in this House of speaking upon the incidents which led up to his dismissal. I have not justified his remarks at Montreal as not being a breach of discipline. Lord Dundonald himself has said that he knew perfectly well what he was doing when he made these remarks and that he did it with an obvious purpose, but that did not preclude me from criticising the government in connection with the facts which led up to Lord Dundonald's dismissal and it does not in the least vary the original condition of affairs which in the judgment of Lord Dundonald made it necessary for him to speak out on that occasion. Whether he was wise or unwise, whether he was guilty of a breach of discipline or otherwise is a subject I have not discussed in this House beyond pointing out that so far as the military regulations which were invoked by the right hon. leader of the government were concerned, they could have no application to that particular incident ; otherwise, dozens of military officers throughout the country who had spoken in commendation of the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence and of the administration of the militia would be equally liable with Lord Dundonald to dismissal because the regulation that was cited by the right hon. Prime Minister applied not only to terms of reprobation but applied equally to terms of commendation of a superior officer.

I think it is to be regretted that the hon. Solicitor General has taken part in a bitterly partisan gathering in the mother country and has seen fit at that gathering to discuss a subject which is a matter of political controversy in the mother country, which is so much a matter of political controversy in the mother country that the right hon. Prime Minister and his government have thought that we should not discuss it or deal with it by resolution in this House during the past two years.

I think it is also to be regretted that he spoke in the tone in which he did of the loyalty of Canadians, because, as far as I am concerned, I believe that the loyalty of Canadians in the province of Quebec, in the province of Ontario, and in the other provinces of Canada is made of more substantial stuff than that which would be gathered from the remarks of the hon. Solicitor General.

Right hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, the occasion of the speech which we have just listened to from my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) is the publication of certain remarks which are attributed to my hon. friend the Solicitor General now in England upon official duties. Upon these remarks the hon. leader of the opposition has made some comments which I think are hardly justified by the occasion. I do not believe that my hon. friend or any other member of this House would consent to be tried and judged upon telegraphic extracts from reports of what he may have said in any part of the world or even in Canada. I do not believe that it would be fair to my hon. friend the Solicitor General to come to any conclusion upon the remarks which have been attributed to him and which he is said to have made in a meeting of the Liberal party in Great Britain. I have only to call the attention of the House to the fact that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition has quoted two versions of the remarks which have been said to have been made by Mr. Lemieux on that occasion and that these remarks do not bear at all the same construction. One of these versions could not only be accepted without comment and without criticism but could be accepted as fairly expressing the views of anybody. If Mr. Lemieux attended any meeting at all I do not think that of set purpose he went to any political gathering in Great Britain and until such time as we have received from Mr. Lemieux himself an authoritative version of what he said, I decline for my part to discuss the statements of Mr. Lemieux.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is my right hon. friend under the impression that this was not a political partisan gathering ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not say that. Mr. Lemieux may have found himself in a political gathering—I do not know that ; but I remember on one occasion I was myself accused of having attended a certain meeting—it was the occasion of Mr. Redmond's lecture in Ottawa—when I had been there merely as a spectator and had paid for my ticket like everybody else. I did not think I had done anything to which exception could be taken.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My right hon. friend did not speak.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I did not speak, and when we know what Mr. Lemieux really said it may be that no objection can be offered to it at all. It is the fate of all of us that certain language may be attributed to us which has not been reported properly ; and, moreover, if Mr. Lemieux made a speech there it must have been a speech which would occupy some time in its delivery, but as we have it cabled it is condensed into one or two sentences, so that it would not be fair to hold Mr. Lemieux accountable on the basis of what must be a very incomplete report. The only thing which Mr. Lemieux is alleged to have said, and which has caused comment in this country, is a reference to the loyalty of Canadians. Well, Mr. Speaker, for my part I have only this to say once for all : I do not think we are called upon to defend our loyalty on any occasion. It is very much to be regretted that any Canadian should find himself called upon from time to time to defend his loyalty ; but it is unfortunate that we have to take that stand sometimes, and Mr. Lemieux may have found it advisable to defend himself and his own countrymen. We find our loyalty attacked —I will not say on the floor of this House—we find our loyalty attacked, if not openly, by way of insinuation. The newspaper press of a certain party has time and again stated that we are influenced by secret motives when we pursue a certain line of policy as a political party. Not only that, but if one of us by a slip of the tongue utters a word which he immediately corrects, even that is supposed to betray the secret feelings of the heart. Under such circumstances, and as we are all human, allowance must be made if a man reflecting upon these facts thinks it advisable to utter certain language in defence of the loyalty of his countrymen of his own blood, which under other conditions there should be no necessity for uttering. For my part, I should not attempt to defend Mr. Lemieux or anybody else. Our history is there to speak for itself. I agree with Mr. Lemieux that our loyalty is not for sale, and that whatever may be the attitude taken on the question of the preference it should not weigh one iota in the loyalty which we have for, and which we owe to Great Britain. I have said on previous occasions, and I have not been contradicted—I think the leader of the opposition endorsed the views I expressed a moment ago—I have said on many occasions that our commercial relations with Great Britain should be above all things based on considerations of mutual interest. When we gave the preference we gave it without any return on the part of Great Britain. We thought we were serving the interests of Canada on that occasion, and if we have to discuss the question later on, we should again decide on our course in a manner which will serve the best interests of Canada. That is all I have to say with regard to the alleged remarks attributed to Mr. Lemieux.

As to the observations Mr. Lemieux is stated to have made in an interview, even for these remarks I would not hold Mr. Lemieux accountable until he has had an opportunity of stating whether the views put in his mouth are true or not. I hold it to be a sacred principle in political and public life, not only between party and party, but between individual and individual, that a man is not to be judged upon what he is reported to have said unless he has had an opportunity of saying : these are my words or these are not my words. If Mr. Lemieux said yesterday that Lord Dundonald ought to be recalled, I imagine he simply reflected not so much his own opinion as the opinion of the British government, expressed not later than yesterday in the British House of Commons. As to the action of Lord Dundonald, I have not a word to say. He has chosen his own course ; his course is before the public ; it is for the public to decide. As to that incident, I have said everything I want to say on the floor of this House, and unless perhaps our attitude is again challenged. I may perhaps make this remark, that whilst it is said in the Conservative press that the dismissal of Lord Dundonald has been unjust and tyrannical, the hon. the leader of the opposition is himself bound to admit that in this House he will not challenge the dismissal of Lord Dundonald. More than this I will not say upon the present occasion.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In his concluding remarks the prime minister referred to the action of the British government yesterday as reported in the press, but a moment before the right hon. gentleman condemned the leader of the opposition for basing his remarks on a newspaper report of the speech of the Solicitor General, which he thinks may not be correct. On what authority does the Prime Minister justify the British government for its expression of opinion yesterday ? On what authority did Mr. Arnold Foster address the House of Commons yesterday, and state in these words as reported.

Mr. Arnold Foster (Secretary of State for War) welcomed Mr. Churchill as the spokesman of the opposition in this debate which was not calculated to contribute to the public advantage. One question was that of war office discipline, of which he was in charge, and the other was the advisability of this debate. He saw that no advantage could arise from this debate except to make bad blood between two great branches of the empire. Did Mr. Lloyd George, he asked, speak as the representative of Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

I might here remark that it is a strange coincidence that the right hon. the first minister finds himself endorsed by the disloyal men of the empire ; by Mr. Lloyd George, a pro-Boer.

An hon. MEMBER. And Winston Churchill.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I will deal with Winston Churchill later. Mr. Lloyd George is a gentleman who is hooted in every part of the United Kingdom if he addresses a public audience.

Mr. FIELDING. What about Campbell Bannerman ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. We have not come to him yet.

Mr. Foster continued :

No. representation, he continued, has been made to the imperial authorities by the government of Canada which is well able to take care of itself.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The government of Canada took care that the people of this country were taxed to send cable messages to the old land to parade the views of the Canadian government before the British public. Why were not both sides of the case cabled over by the Minister of Finance ? Why did he dare to take the money of the people of Canada to cable over his Order in Council, and not let the whole case be presented to the people of England ? More than that, the Solicitor General is very conveniently in England to impress the British public with the views of the government, and to hold threats before them of this kind :

Unless the British government recalls Lord Dundonald immediately, the bitterest feeling would be aroused in Canada against the imperial military authorities.

I want to tell the First Minister that Mr. Lemieux does not represent the loyalty of this country ; let that be distinctly understood.

Some hon. MEMBERS. He does.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Who does ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sam. Hughes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Not Mr. Lemieux.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. Is he not loyal ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No, he is not loyal. Any man who has been proven in this House to have gone to the province of Quebec in the campaign of 1896 and paraded treason and disloyalty to the empire——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Put him out.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) is certainly taking great liberties with the freedom of debate.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Very well, I shall endeavour to confine myself within the rules. I will tell you what Mr. Lemieux did, and let you judge. He demanded that his fellow-electors in the province of Quebec should vote to turn out the Tupper government——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. TALBOT. And they responded.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. To turn out the Tupper government because they were spending $3,000,000 to buy rifles for the defence of Canada. Declarations of gentlemen were quoted again and again in this House to show that Mr. Lemieux was guilty of saying to his people : 'You don't want to return such a government as that to power ; vote for Laurier, who will see that no Canadian is sent to fight as a British soldier in any part of the empire.' These were the appeals of this gentleman ; and Mr. McIntosh, the gentleman on whom the First Minister passed such a eulogy the other day, pointed his finger at Mr. Lemieux in this House and said. 'It is behind the bars of the penitentiary you should be for treason instead of preaching loyalty in this House.' Hon. gentlemen will not be permitted to take one line in certain parts of this country, and then, when they are hobnobbing around other centres, to preach along other lines. It is our intention to see that they pursue the same line on both occasions. I repudiate the idea that Mr. Lemieux has any commission from any loyal man in Canada to use the language he does on the other side of the Atlantic. Mr. Arnold Foster goes on :

Did Mr. Lloyd George, he asked, speak as the representative of Sir Wilfrid Laurier ? No representation, he continued, had been made to the imperial authorities by the government of Canada, which is well able to take care of itself.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. So long as it has the people's money to pay for its cablegrams. He went on :

The discussion, he said, will not tend to establish good feeling between Canada and the motherland. Lord Dundonald, continued the Secretary of War, went to Canada as an officer of the Canadian government and no one had imputed any misconduct to him, other than want of judgment. Not being in agreement with the Canadian government, the latter dismissed him at once, when he became a British officer on half pay. Lord Dundonald could stand as a member of the Canadian Commons and could not be deprived of right to take an active part in public life. Mr. Arnold Foster believed it, however, to be undesirabe for any officer to take part in public controversies, and the War Office had informed Lord Dundonald that his conduct was undesirable, and requested him to return to England to be heard in his own defence. He had therefore instructed Lord Dundonald to return home and not take any further part in political controversies.

Gentlemen have played their little game. They have read history, and they remember that when the imperial authorities, many years ago, planted a British colony in South Africa, and were inclined to build that colony up on loyal lines, the protests from the disloyal element in South Africa resulted in stopping the planting of British colonies in that country. They know that the imperial government is cowardly in relation——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. They know that the imperial government in its dealings with its colonies has always bowed to the disloyal cries rather than bring on a ruction.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

An hon. MEMBER. Treason.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes, and I want to tell you that had Great Britain continued to plant her colonies in South Africa from 1820 onward, in place of bowing to the disloyal cries of the Boers, there would have been no war in South Africa ; and the desolation of thousands of homes would not have taken place had the government of fifty years ago showed backbone. Then there is a speech by Mr. Churchill, the gentleman who is noted for his escape from a Boer prison, and who goes around telling people what a terrific time he had in escaping, when the fact is that the Boer sentry who was with him waited three-quarters of an hour and wasted three boxes of matches pretending to light his pipe in order that the gentleman might escape.

Mr. R. F. SUTHERLAND. Might I ask the hon. gentleman a question ? Did he stay captured after he was captured ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Mr. Winston Churchill was taken prisoner, and the arrangements for his escape were made. I may say that if my hon. friend will possess his soul in patience, and if the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Russell) will possess his soul in patience, accounts will be squared with them, and with the Minister of Justice too, before the close of the session. Let them make no mistake about that. The Minister of Agriculture may expand a broad grin over his countenance. All I have to tell these gentlemen is that they will have an opportunity of having accounts squared before the end of this session. Let them make no mistake about that. Mr. Winston Churchill said :

Although Lord Dundonald considers himself right in making the protest, he could have done so in a less harmful way.

How ? By having it filed away in a pigeon hole, just as similar protests from loyal governors in South Africa and other British colonies have been filed away for generations. If the gentlemen in South Africa who recommended that certain loyal lines should be followed in that country had been heeded long ago, there would have been no war ; and if those gentlemen had pursued the course that Lord Dundonald has pursued, of cutting the painter, the history of South Africa from 1899 to 1902 would not have been written as it has been ; but that country would have been loyal from the start. I want to say from where I stand that Mr. Arnold Foster has no mandate under the law or the constitution of the British empire to use the language towards Lord Dundonald that he has. I do not know what Lord Dundonald's views are ; I have not seem him ; I have only returned to the city this morning ; but if he is the man I take him to be, he will tell Mr. Arnold Foster in plain language that he has no more right to utter such words as he has uttered than the smallest page in the House of Commons. Lord Dundonald is as free as the air we breathe, Sir.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Lord Dundonald is neither directly nor indirectly under the control of Mr. Arnold Foster, and I am surprised that any government in Great Britain could be found to bow to the influence of any colonial government, and take the course the present government has taken in relation to Lord Dundonald. I trust, Sir, that Lord Dundonald will see his way clear to teach Mr. Arnold Foster and the loyal elements in Great Britain as well as the disloyal elements, that the free men of the empire, some of them, yet live. Mr. Winston Churchill says further :

No one could deny that Lord Dundonald was being exploited by the opposition party in Canada for party purposes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Lord Dundonald has been charged in this House, and he has been charged by the organs of the government with a desire to impose militarism on the people of Canada. That has been discussed before, Sir. It has been shown, on the contrary, that Lord Dundonald has not either directly or indirectly attempted to impose the spirit of militarism upon this country, but he has charged the Minister of Militia with having attempted to impose militarism upon this country with relation to the Col. Ponton matter and other matters. We have also the incident of the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons, in connection with which the Minister of Agriculture has been caught red-handed in all sorts of dealings in his attempt to impose militarism on the people. He has been charged with a desire to impose fortifications along the border which will cost some $50,000,000. This charge he has exposed to be a campaign falsehood of the Liberal party. He has been charged with attempting to overthrow responsible government when it has now been clearly proven that not he but the Minister of Agriculture and the government are the ones who departed from that principle. Lord Dundonald followed strictly and religiously all the lines of responsible government until he found that patience had ceased to be a virtue. When he found himself subjected to the petty, contemptible annoyances of the Minister of Agriculture, he did what any man of spirit in Canada would have done and resented that mischievous meddling. And when the right hon. the First Minister soars into one of his eloquent periods and boasts of his loyalty to the mother country and decries the introduction of race issues, let him begin at home. Let him be honest enough to tell his followers: gentlemen, you are unjust to Lord Dundonald, you are untrue to the best interests of Canada in keeping up these race cries. Sir, there is not one tittle of evidence to show that Lord Dundonald has been guilty of injustice or unfairness to any French Canadian. Let the Prime Minister reprove his own followers. Let him write an article or send a telegram—and the country will pay for it—to his own organs, telling them that their iniquitous crusade and their attempts to array the French Canadians against the English speaking people of this country must cease. Then and not until then will we have some faith in his professions of loyalty. But until he stands up and repudiates the disloyal utterances of his own organs, we will not have faith in the sincerity of his professions. Sir, the people of Canada will not bow down to these gentlemen and allow Lord Dundonald to be dragooned and blacklisted in every corner of the Dominion. Because free citizens of this country dare stand up and defend a fellow-citizen of the British Empire, we are charged with exploiting Lord Dundonald for political purposes. I want to tell these gentlemen that the spirit of liberty is not quite dead in Canada yet, and before this matter is over they will find out that the people take the same view of it as we do. It looks very much as though the game of these hon. gentlemen had succeeded and as though the British government had been weak enough to yield to their importunities.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

An hon. MEMBER. Do not be disloyal.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It looks as though they have been weak enough to yield to the demands of hon. gentlemen opposite. All I have to say is that I am very much disappointed.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

An hon. MEMBER. No doubt.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have never had the knack of standing before an audience in one part of Canada and preaching one doctrine and then going into another part and preaching disloyalty.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am unable to do otherwise than stand up and express the honest sentiments of my heart on all occasions, and I have no hesitation in saying that I am surprised that Arnold Foster dared used the language he did last night in the Imperial House of Commons.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. COWAN. Another good man gone wrong.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I want to tell this House and country that Lord Dundonald is not the man I take him to be if he will bow for one second to any illegal, unjust mandate of any official to return to his own country sooner than it suits his own convenience. Mr. Arnold Foster will find that the spirit of liberty is not dead in the colonies altogether yet, if it is in the old land.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh, treason.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes, I mean every word of what I say, and I want to tell these gentlemen that before they are done with this issue they will find that they are reckoning without their host. I made some statements the other day with reference to the school of musketry. I stand here to reiterate every statement I then made and claim that every one of them was proven absolutely by the statement of the officer commanding the corps itself. Inasmuch as I do not require to bask in the sunshine of the shadow even of such great men as the First Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I owe them no obligation. They cannot override me and force me to bow down before them. They cannot demand of me: did you or did you not do so and so? When I read the statement the other day in the papers, I was ashamed to think that thirty-five or forty young men, taken from any part of the Dominion, could be found so subservient, especially when wearing the uniform of His Majesty, as to let any man, be he the commissioner of any school of instruction or the officer of high rank in the militia or even the minister himself, to line him up and ask him, did you or did you not do so and so ? Every man attending the school was lined up the other day and asked the question : did you do so and so ? In place of telling the commander to go to a warmer clime——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES—and mind his business, these men seemed to bow to the little tyrant pro tem. More than that, in reading up the correspondence in relation to the Ponton matter, I was sorry to see that although Col. Ponton had the manhood to resist the mandate of the minister, yet he so far bowed down as to give the explanation demanded of him. That man is not a proper citizen of Canada who will obey an illegal order. He is not a loyal citizen who will bow down to an unjust or tyrannical command. I maintain that every officer and man in that school of instruction who would allow Col. Cartwright to ask him such a question shows that he does not realize the first duty of a citizen of this country. The statement I made here that the men were taxed for the maintenance of the club was perfectly correct. Every officer has to pay $3 club subscription in addition to his mess charges, and he has to pay 85 cents a day which does not include the 25 cents a day for government rations. That is simply for board, because these officers and men lodge in the tents furnished by the government, and for what they pay, they could board in the King Edward Hotel of Toronto or the Russell House in Ottawa.

An hon. MEMBER. What about the Grand Union ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The rates there are a little higher.

Mr. COWAN. Is that a special rate in the King Edward—25 cents a day ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. They have a place there set apart for bootblacks and gentlemen of that character which might suit my hon. friend, but I never look for it.

Mr. COWAN. I never boarded that cheap.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Privates are compelled to act as servants to officers.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There are no privates attending the schools.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Hon. gentleman opposite laugh. It is an easy thing for ignoramuses to laugh, but all I have to say is that the minister read a statement in the House the other morning which deliberately contradicts his statement now.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister says that there are no privates taken for the course of military instruction, but there are a dozen privates of the permanent corps sent down to Rockcliffe for fatigue purposes.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Oh, yes, of the permanent corps.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And the minister knows that long ago I brought up the question of the permanent corps doing fatigue work.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) was this :

I am also informed that privates are called upon to act as servants to officers, and that these young men who are brought from the farms to learn musketry are subjected to prison discipline.

I say there is not one word of truth in that statement.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I want to tell the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) that he is making a statement to this House that is not true.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I say there are no privates there who are called upon to perform such duties as the hon. gentleman speaks of.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There are men of the permanent corps who are called upon to perform those menial services, and the Minister of Militia knows it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I know my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) wishes to be fair in this matter. These young men who are from the farms—

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The Minister of Militia will kindly take his seat until I am done with him. My statement was this :

I am also informed that privates are called upon to act as servants to officers.

There is my statement.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. 'Young men who are brought from the farms to learn musketry.'

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What I said was this :

These young men who are brought from the farms to learn musketry are subjected to prison discipline.

The point that I make to-day, that I have made before, and shall go on making and urging until this thing is righted, is plain : It is hard enough to keep our permanent corps together as it is. Desertions occur every day. If you turn up the reports you will see that nearly as many men desert every year as enter the force. Why ? When we send a young man to join one of the permanent corps, what duties is he assigned to ? Is he taught how to defend his country or how to become an instructor for the militia ? No. He is set to blacking boots and doing menial work for—

An hon. MEMBER. For snobs.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES—to dancing attendance upon those who seek to pose as an aristocracy. I object to this and shall continue to object. These young men who are sent to join the permanent corps should be used as means of instructing our militia, and not as servants. And what I want the Minister of Militia to say is that these men of the permanent corps who are down at that school doing fatigue duty, simply doing the dirty work around that camp, shall be sent back to the permanent corps to attend to the duties that properly belong to them.

Mr. COWAN. Where was Turpin ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Turpin was never called upon, Sir, to perform such duties as these. I want to impress upon the Minister of Militia the importance of this matter of treating properly the men of the permanent corps. We do not engage these men to do menial work. Why, the reports show that our permanent force is so reduced that it cannot perform the duties assigned to it. Years ago I brought this matter up, and pointed out that the law of the country provides that these men are to be trained to become instructors and to help in the education in military matters of the officers of the militia. If these gentlemen in camp want servants, let them get them elsewhere. And, if the Minister wants fatigue parties for the dirty work about the camp, he can get them at less expense, not by setting young men of ambition at such duties, but by engaging men who are content to remain in that class. So, my statement that these men are called upon to act as servants to the officers is borne out by this memorandum of the commandant of the school of musketry. My next statement was in relation to the young fellows from the farms being subject to prison discipline, which has already been read. I demand that these young men shall not be subject to inquisitorial rules regarding coming in at a certain hour and so on. These young men are as capable of taking care of themselves as is Colonel Cartwright or any officer in Canada, and they should be as free to come and go as the officers themselves. That is the ground I take, I cannot be driven from it. One other statement I made was as regards extra clothing and bedding, the statement of Colonel Cartwright frankly admits the truth of what I alleged. He says :

Mr. SAM. HUGHES.

Owing to the fact that at a previous camp officers were allowed sheets and pillow-cases there may have been some disappointment on this score, but all the officers to whom I have spoken on the subject consider that sheets and pillow-cases are unnecessary for camp life.

Therefore, the statement I made that the same rule did not prevail as in other years and that there was dissatisfaction, is borne out by the statement of Col. Cartwright himself. These are all the statements I made, and every one of them is admitted. Col. Cartwright says, further :

I do not bear Col. Sam. Hughes the least animosity in regard to the statements he has made, because it is clear that he has been misinformed by some malicious person.

I do not want any controversy with Col. Cartwright. I may say that Sir Adolphe Caron, formerly Minister of Militia, who is now within the precincts of the House, will, I am sure, bear me out when I say it was more through the action of your humble servant than through that of any other man that Col. Cartwright was given a position when—however, I do not need to discuss that, further than to say that it was desired on his part to be appointed an officer in the permanent corps. I have endeavoured, so far as I could, to be a friend of Col. Cartwright ever since. But the sunshine of his favour is not absolutely necessary to my life. Therefore, perhaps, I may seem not to be sufficiently impressed by his statement that he does not bear me any ill will. Now, at page 7209 of 'Hansard' I drew the attention of the minister to the fact that Col. Cartwright seems to have paraded these men before him and to have demanded of each of them a confession much the same as a school teacher might do with the children in a little country school.

Mr. BENNETT. Were the prisoners warned ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have not the order before me. But I want to tell the minister that this kind of thing is not in harmony with the democratic spirit of the country or with the military regulations. And, so far as I am concerned, it shall not be permitted in this country. No officer has a right, and no officer should dare, to bring his men before him and ask any such questions as seem to have been asked of these men. I want the minister to endeavour to have the militia carried on in accordance with the principles of individual liberty and of self-respect on the part of the men. If he does not do it, we will endeavour to give him such instruction as we can in the principle of liberty. I want him to understand that the militiaman loses none of his rights as a citizen when he dons His Majesty's uniform, unless he contravenes the militia regulations. If the minister allows that liberty to be curtailed, we will try to bring to bear upon him the influence of the public opinion of this enlightened and democratic country. I want him to try to cultivate in the members of the militia the spirit of independence that should be in the heart of every man. I trust that the minister will give this matter his attention and that, in the first place he will inquire of Col. Cartwright by what authority he dared to bring these men before him and ask each one to answer his question in relation to certain matters reported in 'Hansard' and in the press of this country. And, after he has taken that matter up, he may hear from me about it on another occasion. And I would ask the minister also, when we may expect the fulfilment of an order that, I understand has been issued, demanding the name and the post office address of every officer and man in the militia regiments throughout the Dominion of Canada ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). In view of the statements the hon. member (Mr. Sam. Hughes) has made that every one of the allegations made by him in this House the other day has been absolutely and literally proved by the papers I laid on the table yesterday, and a portion of which I read to the House, I think hon. members generally will agree with me that it would be an impossibility to convince that hon. gentleman that any statement made by him is incorrect or unfounded. And I may say at once that I do not propose to enter upon so hopeless a task. But I will make one or two observations and only one or two. First, I may say that I am informed, upon what I believe to be very excellent authority, that only one officer of the school now convened at Rockcliffe had any communication, direct or indirect, with the hon. gentleman and that that one officer absolutely denies that he stated to that hon. gentleman anything upon which he could found the charge which he has made.

One single word with reference to private soldiers. The hon. gentleman made a statement and endeavoured to appeal to the sympathy of the House and of the country with regard to the improper use that was being made of private soldiers brought from different parts of the country to be taught musketry. His statement was this:

I am informed that privates are called upon to act as servants to officers and that these young men——

What young men ? These privates.

These young men who are brought from th farm to learn musketry are subjected to prison discipline.

The answer to this is to be found in the official document which I laid on the table of this House.

Private soldiers.—There are no privates taking the course at the Canadian School of Musketry.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Everybody knew it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (reading)

There are, however privates from the permanent corps sent down to Rockcliffe for fatigue purposes. They are used in various ways as shown in the attached schedule. It will be observed that the proportion of officers' servants to officers is much smaller than that allowed by regulations.

Mark these words :

It would be a great hardship to prevent these men making extra money as officers servants ; most of the men count on making extra in this way when coming to Rockcliffe.

These men are paid for the work which they do, yet the hon. gentleman did not give the slightest indication of the fact that the men are doing this duty voluntarily in the first place and in the second place are paid for it. There was not one word in the hon. gentleman's statement to indicate that fact.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Every fool would know it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would invite the hon. gentleman—since the matter has gone so far and since he is still absolutely certain that all the statements he made are absolutely true, and since I have given up the vain attempt to satisfy him that they are not true—to be good enough to give me the names of the officers or men who made this complaint.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does the hon. gentleman want a statement ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I want the hon. gentleman to understand that when I find him writing a letter to Colonel Ponton, an officer on the reserve list——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am asking for the names. I insist upon my right to go on.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Very well I wish——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. If the hon. gentleman is prepared to give me the names now or to send them to me I shall be glad to get them.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In order that the hon. gentleman——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. But I demand the names, and if he is not prepared to give them I will conclude.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. By what right does the minister demand a name from me ? He demands the name. Who is he that demands a name ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Now, Mr. Speaker, one more point.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That is the reason that I will not give the names.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman, Mr. Speaker, attempts to give the impression that there is something of a star chamber organization at the Rockcliffe Rifle Ranges. He speaks of men being brought up there and questioned as to what has happened. He knows perfectly well that it is a rule of military life that the men in the ranks or non-commissioned officers at any time when on duty, may be asked by their superior officer whether everything is satisfactory.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes, that is right I know, but that is not what they were asked.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He knows that perfectly well, but let me tell him and this House that I am informed and I have no doubt whatever of the fact that these men asked their superior officers to give them the opportunity——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Hear, hear.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN—to make a statement and deny these objectionable charges.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Hear, hear.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Now, Sir, with reference to the order. The hon. gentleman has asked me why a certain order which I have not seen has been issued. I was not aware that an order had been published but I do know that it is intended by the department to keep statistics in reference to all those who have attended the militia camps this year ; to keep a record of all the names of the officers, non-commissioned officers and men. This has been established as a rule of the department for this year and for the future, for statistical purposes, chiefly for the purpose of enabling the pay department of the militia to compare the pay-lists which have always been kept with this list of names and addresses in order to prevent an evil which has existed in the past by which some men go from one corps to another, enlist in different corps and draw money from the Dominion treasury improperly.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I wish to make a personal explanation. The minister asked me why I will not give this name. In the first place the minister himself has upset the rule by trying to dragoon Colonel Ponton.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. What has that got to do with it.

Mr. SAM HUGHES.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It shows the spirit of the minister and in the second place I——

Hon. Mr. BRODEUR. Order.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I repudiate his authority to ask me for a name and in the second place I am not going to submit any officer or man of the force of this country to any petty persecution on the part of any official be he ever so high or ever so low.

Mr. R. F. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say just one word in respect to the discussion which has taken place and the reason for my addressing the House will become obvious as I proceed. It has been suggested by the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) that these men were paraded, and, practically compelled to make a statement in respect of this matter. Now it so happens that a day or so before the men made their statements two of these men came to me in the House and stated that every man in the force was very indignant at the aspersions cast upon them by the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) in the House and that they desired in the most practical and forcible way to express that indignation. They asked me to take the matter up in the House. I stated that it was a proper thing for the men themselves to take up and that a course which was quite open to them would be to go back to the camp, talk the matter over among themselves and ask the commanding officer for an opportunity to express their opinions. I have no doubt that that is exactly what they did and that the course which they pursued was based upon the suggestion which I made at that time. So that so far from these men having been paraded and forced to make this statement it was an expression of their indignation and truly states the facts of the case.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Will you allow me a word ? In view of the somewhat violent and abusive attack which has been made from the other side on the British government I think it is desirable——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FIELDING. I think it is desirable that a word or two should be said on that question. There are many matters in which the Canadian government and the Canadian parliament would naturally desire the co-operation and assistance of the government of the mother country, and in all such cases we would naturally appeal to that government for aid and assistance. But there are other matters in which no such aid is needed, and this unhappy Dundonald business was one of that kind. Mr. Arnold Foster, very correctly stated—and it is perhaps the point of his observations which we appreciate most—that this is a matter in which the Canadian government have shown that they were well able to deal with the situation themselves. It was stated correctly by Mr. Arnold Foster that this government have made no protest whatever with regard to Lord Dundonald. We have not felt called upon to make any such protest. Lord Dundonald was an official of the Canadian government when he made what I regard as an unfortunate mistake, a mistake which many a brave soldier makes when he comes to deal with civil affairs. We felt that we had to deal with that question as between the Canadian government and one of its public officials. It is not to be supposed for a moment that any Canadian official, a servant of the government—I do not use the word in an offensive sense, because each one of us is a servant, using the word in its proper sense—can be permitted to go out and make public attacks upon the ministry of the day without being rebuked or dismissed. It is not necessary to discuss what had happened prior to that. It was enough to know that a servant of the government of Canada had made the grave mistake of making an attack upon the ministers who were his superiors in power. It was necessary for the vindication of our self-respect, it was necessary for the vindication of the principles of responsible government, it was necessary for the vindication of all that Canadians have valued in their struggles for self-government, that the right of the responsible ministers of the day should be asserted, and there seemed to be no other way of asserting this right than by dismissing that eminent and distinguished officer. That being the case we did not feel it necessary to make any protest as to his further action, but nevertheless, we appreciate in the highest degree the manner in which that question was dealt with yesterday in the imperial parliament. The statement that was made in the imperial parliament that Lord Dundonald was being exploited for the benefit of a political party in this country is unhappily too true. Whatever motives Lord Dundonald may have in the matter, and I will not attempt to question his motives for a moment, we all know that gentlemen politically opposed to the government of the day have seized upon this question in the hope that they may turn it to political advantage. They have been endeavouring to beguile some Liberals into a participation in the movement, but I venture to believe that after the experience that has been had in the city of Toronto, no other example of that kind will be given. I therefore desire to say that I endorse emphatically the statement that the Dundonald question was being exploited for the advantage of a political party and that in that respect, whether willingly or not, Lord Dundonald was being used as an instrument in a movement not calculated to advance the best possible relations between the civil and military authorities, or between the imperial and colonial governments. While we made no representations on the subject we rejoice to know that the Secretary for War, Mr. Arnold Foster, Mr. Winston Churchill, Mr. Lloyd George, whom, notwithstanding the reference of my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes), I am bound to speak of as one of the most distinguished members of the imperial parliament, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman and all the members of parliament who spoke on this question in the great House of Commons of England recognize and appreciate the position of Canada, that they recognize that this is a purely Canadian question, that they recognize that the Canadian government and the Canadian parliament are the proper people to deal with the question, and in their intimation to Lord Dundonald, a distinguished soldier, that it was not desirable that he should participate in these party conflicts they have taken a step which again proves that the mother country can be relied upon at all times to uphold and to appreciate the principles of responsible government which we Canadians fought for many years ago.

Hon. DAVID TISDALE. Mr. Speaker, I am sure you cannot have failed to have observed the extraordinary nature of the logic of hon. gentlemen opposite in connection with this incident so far as the debate has gone. The right hon. Prime Minister declined to say a word in condemnation of the Solicitor General, for the uncalled for and improper utterances he is credited with having made because the report of these utterances appears in the newspapers; yet, when reference is made to Lord Dundonald by the newspapers based on imagination or otherwise, is there a word of protest? This whole incident we are discussing in so far as it is connected with what has happened in the old country, is simply based on the statements of newspapers. When the newspapers say that the opposition are exploiting Lord Dundonald for the purpose of making political capital, that is sufficient in the eyes of hon. gentlemen opposite to condemn the opposition. Even if this were a true statement of the utterances of the Solicitor General, would the right hon. Prime Minister condemn a word of them? This question since it was first brought up, has been widened by hon. gentlemen opposite, been widened into an attack upon the Conservative party and upon the bête noir of hon. gentlemen opposite—Lord Dundonald. I was glad to observe that neither the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) nor the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) ventured to say one word in disparagement of that distinguished soldier who was lately our commander in chief here. I was glad, because this is in marked contrast with the course pursued by some of their associates, with some of those who sit behind them and in marked contrast with the course universally pursued by a strong element of the Reform press. They have not hesitated in any way to accuse him of everything that it is possible to imagine. Ever since what? Ever since, with the courage of a patriot, knowing it was to his own disparagement, admitting like a soldier, a gentleman, and a Briton, that he was, prepared to pay the penalty, he felt himself impelled by his duty to speak out. Before I dwell any more upon that, let me call the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance to one thing that he did. I say that it was not worthy of him to describe Lord Dundonald as a servant of the people. It is true in one sense; it is not true in the larger sense. He is not the servant of the people in one sense. He is no more so than the members of the government who are the representatives of the people in the higher sense and I would not think of applying that term to the hon. Minister of Finance or to any man sitting in his place because of the distinguished position he occupies in this country. He (the Minister of Finance) is more than the servant of the people; he is the representative of the people. So is Lord Dundonald. He is an official of the Canadian government, but I regretted to hear the word 'servant' so frequently used in connection with a distinguished gentleman, always distinguished since he entered the great imperial service and a gentleman who upon his own merits during the course of his military career, has fought his way up to the exalted position he now occupies. It was not worthy of the hon. Minister of Finance to do as some of the satellites behind him have done; that is to bring up the question of Lord Dundonald being a servant of the people so as to make the people think they had a power over this gentleman which the law of the country does not give them. Then, the hon. gentleman brought up the question of responsible government. A good point was made by one hon. gentleman opposite, this morning, one that I appreciate because I do not think it is necessary that we should be called upon in both parties to defend our loyalty as often as we are called upon to do. I agree with the proposition that according to their light all the people in this country are loyal. But I do make this charge, and I regret it exceedingly—I am too near the end of my term of service in this country to say anything which I do not believe to be absolute reality—that gentlemen in the province of Quebec endeavour to make their compatriots believe that we in the province of Ontario do not believe in their loyalty and that we are abusing and maligning them. I have stood up for the rights of my French Canadian compatriots and I have paid for it by a hard political fight when I had to give a vote to preserve the constitutional rights of the people of Quebec, I say stop that, stop that the Prime Minister, stop that the Solicitor General stop it all. We in Ontario, Reformer and Conservative are as much as possible stopping it. It does not do any good and it does a great deal of harm. Why does the hon. Minister of Finance then bring up the question of responsible government? Why is it necessary? We have heard more about responsible government since the Dundonald incident than it ought be necessary for us to hear in five years. No principle of constitutional government is imperilled, and if it were, Conservatives and Liberals alike, would rush to safeguard it. Let these gentlemen opposite give us some argument to show that constitutional government is in danger, and let them cease to play to the gallery and expect such nonsensical talk to be taken as argument. If I am put in possession of a single proof that the Conservative party is open to the charge of exploiting Lord Dundonald, or trying to make political capital out of the incident, I will go against my party. No, Sir, the Conservative party is too noble a party to betray the late Commander in Chief, a man who has proven himself to be a hero, and who to his own discomfort, and, when at the apex of his great career, has placed himself in at least a delicate position, in order to right the wrong. I am beginning to think, Sir, that we have been too careful in this matter and that too little has been said by us in defence of Lord Dundonald.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. TISDALE. Hon. gentlemen opposite may laugh if they please, but I will substantiate this statement. I can tell them that their cries of militarism, constitutional government, and responsible government will not blind the good sense of the people of Canada. I have come to the conclusion that the Conservative party, in very fear of introducing politics into this, have neglected to defend Lord Dundonald as he ought to be defended for the manly part he has taken. There is no difference of opinion as to the power of the government if they saw fit to do so, to dismiss Lord Dundonald. But, Sir, there is another view of the case; there is a larger view of the case, and that is that the people of Canada must set about to remedy the evil which Lord Dundonald impelled by patriotism and a high sense of duty has exposed. Is there a Reformer in Ontario who will deny that it was patriotism and a high sense of duty which impelled Lord Dundonald to the action he took. Can any other reasonable or unreasonable motive be suggested? I can tell these gentlemen opposite that the people of this country, as distinguished from the politicians, will appreciate the very soul of the motives which inspired Lord Dundonald. He is a reformer and he has sacrificed himself to bring about reform. Martyrs are made for the good of the christian, as well as for the good of the political world, and I have no doubt that history will realize that for the sake of the Canadian militia Lord Dundonald has offered himself up as a sacrifice. He is not a politician. His military and his private career show that he is an honourable and noble man. His name is a household word in the British empire and particularly in Canada since the relief of Ladysmith. Our brave young lads who God has spared from the risks of war, brought to their Canadian homes, honour and praise for Dundonald's name. He came here to serve the empire and his great inducement was that he might make soldiers in a simple way of the brave Canadian lads who, Conservative and Reform ,are similar to those who served under him in South Africa. A part from the politicians and apart from the party press, Lord Dundonald is honoured in Canada and his motives are correctly appreciated. And what objectionable demonstration has he taken part in since his dismissal ? The first was a private dinner at the Rideau Club, which I had the honour of attending and at which there was no politics. The next was a great demonstration in the capital of my province, the centre of commerce and education, a city worthy of any country, a city that is the pride of Ontario, and the pride of myself, because although I was not born there, I was educated there and lived there part of my life. The citizens wanted to honour Lord Dundonald, and a committee composed of men of all political beliefs was named to entertain him and present him with an address appreciative of what he did. Thousands of Conservatives and thousands of Reformers assembled in Toronto to do Dundonald honour. They expected him to make his defence against the charges hurled against him, and they would have been disappointed if he had not done so. It would be too much to expect that he should keep his mouth closed. When the address was presented he made the speech of an honourable man, the speech of a true soldier, and even in his defence he revealed no departmental secrets. In that he was unlike the Minister of Militia who tells us whatever he pleases about Lord Dundonald's report and then refuses to produce it. In a manly and straightforward way Lord Dundonald answered the charges that had been made against him in public and in private.

Beyond that he ventured not a foot. I cannot understand how people, even to advance political interests, could pretend that in that speech and in that gathering there was anything political. Ask the people who were at it, unless paid partisans or representatives of party papers. It was a great spontaneous tribute which any man should be proud of. Now, with regard to the recall. Hon. gentlemen opposite shouted when they heard of it ; but how has he been recalled ? We do not know. But I will venture to prophesy—because there is only one way, under British rule and British law, in which he can be recalled. He is no official of the British government. He was an official of Canada. When he was dismissed, he was free to discuss anything. I doubt if there is one hon. gentleman sitting on these treasury benches who would have kept his mouth closed as the general has done, about things which have happened in the department. He did not say anything about his report, but he did deny some which seemed inspired from their knowledge of things unpublished as to the alleged 'Private' report suppressed by the Minister of Militia. He acted as a gentleman, as he is ; he acted the man, who is more than the gentleman in some ways ; he acted not only the man but the brave man and the patriotic man ; he told the truth, and the people of this country will believe him. I want to tell these hon. gentlemen that in attempting to exploit this matter upon us, they are exploiting it upon themselves. They are suffering the consequences to-day, because the people will believe the man, not the politician, but the great imperial soldier that he is, and he tells the truth. As to his return, what is he to-day ? He is a soldier on half pay ; and you will find, with all this talk, that he is going home because he has been called home for some service. I want to say—and this is only incidental—that I never saw the general but twice, both times at dinners. He would not know me if he saw me on the street to-day. I know his aide-de-camp, whom I have met two or three times socially. I asked him when the general was going to leave, saying that I would like to call on him before he left ; and he told me that he was going to leave the first of the week after next. Probably the recall had been made then. Mr. Arnold Foster, like the right hon. the First Minister, does not tell the House more than is necessary on these matters, and it is not proper that he should. I will venture to say that Lord Dundonald has been recalled for some duty, and that he was recalled before this incident occurred.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. TISDALE. Hon. gentlemen will all agree with me in this, that he cannot be recalled except as a soldier. So that his recall is no very great matter. In England they know too well what such cries mean to make any demonstation over it, unless they want some politics over there too, and unless the newspapers make a great deal of exitement. I will guarantee that he has not been recalled on account of this incident.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. May I interrupt the hon. gentleman for one moment? The report published in this morning's 'Citizen' places in the mouth of Mr. Arnold Foster the following words.

Mr. TISDALE. We have had them already.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. But they are entirely in contradiction of the statement which has just fallen from the lips of the hon. gentleman. They only occupy three lines.

Mr. TISDALE. The hon. gentleman is quite welcome to all the comfort he can get out of them. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman was there, but nothing could render his arguments more ridiculous than this. His distinguished leader in this House has said that you must not put faith in newspaper reports, and there was not sufficient justification for him to say whether his colleague in England had made the statements imputed to him or not.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. This is in the 'Citizen.'

Mr. TISDALE. I want to get through by one o'clock, and if my hon. friend wants to make a speech, he can do it afterwards. It really has nothing to do with the subject. I may be wrong in regard to Lord Dundonald having been called home before this incident; but if the public press is to be received as an authority, we all know that it was announced ten days ago that he would sail from Montreal on the 29th of this month, and the whole programme was given. So that I am not much of a prophet in one way, except that I am giving as the probable reason that he has been recalled for some service. A man who is on half-pay cannot be called back unless it is for duty. So that all this talk about that matter is aside of the mark. In confirmation of the position I take, I want to quote the following from an independent paper, the 'News'—and Goldwin Smith said the same thing in the 'Weekly Sun:'

> Mr. Lemieux makes a curious demand of the British government when he declares tha it must 'recall' Lord Dundonald. The for mer General Officer Commanding holds no po sition from which the British government ca recall him. He is at present a major-general on half-pay. He held that status from the day that his South African brigade wa broken up. He was 'lent' by the War Office to Canada. When he was dismissed, he re verted automatically to half-pay. As long as he remains unemployed he has the liberty of action enjoyed by any British subject. He can travel in Africa, live in Canada, or tak part in British politics. Major-General Wauchope, who fell at Magersfontein, in 189 contested Midlothian against Mr. Gladstone. Lord Charles Beresford varies his sea-services with spells of work in the House of Commons. Captain Lambton, of Ladysmith fame, recently stood for parliament on a aggressively Liberal platform. The only way in which the British government can 'recall Lord Dundonald is to make haste to give him another post. That would be taken as evidence that it approved his attitude here. Even then he could decline an appointment which he did not wish to accept. Generals are free men, like the rest of British subjects.

I have got tired of all this talk about Lord Dundonald's recall. I have been wondering whether it was possible that our hon. friends opposite were so driven by the near approach of the elections as to be alarmed at the expression of feeling in the country, not so much about Lord Dundonald as about the truth he has told in regard to the present state of the Militia Department. They will not hesitate to try and cast a distinct slur on a general who did more for Canada in the time he was in command of our forces than any previous general has done in twice the time. Not content with making him pay a penalty for speaking out as a patriot, they want if possible to make the people in the old country believe that he had turned politician and went on the public platform to excite public opinion against the government. But the general himself has given an answer which proves the truth of the statements he made, and completely disposes of this personal attack; and, wherever he may go, he will be followed by the good-will of the Canadian people, and I am only giving expression to that goodwill when I say 'may God bless him whereever he may be.'

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. A. C. BELL. The matter which we were discussing when the House rose at one o'clock—the Dundonald incident, as it is usually called—has attracted, and is likely to attract, a good deal of attention in this country. I do not know that I should have thought it necessary to say anything at all on the subject on this occasion were it not for the very definite and explicit manner in which the hon. the Minister of Finance strove to fasten on the Liberal-Conservative party the charge of making this an issue in this country or, as he put it, exploiting this incident for political advantage. That charge has been made by a gentleman with a good deal of authority, and therefore is worth noticing, but that gentleman has not thought it necessary to support his assertion with any evidence whatever; and I think it will not be difficult to show that all the evidence tends to prove that while some effort has been made to turn this incident to political advantage, that effort has been entirely made by the Liberal party, led by no less a gentleman than the right hon. the First Minister. From the moment this incident became public, the government recognized how dangerous it was for them. They should have remembered, however, that the incident was not the creation of their opponents or of Lord Dundonald, but that it owes its existence to one of their own number, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). And it was not hard to see, from the moment this matter came before this House, that the government had made up their mind exactly what line they were going to take. The right hon. gentleman himself, on the first occasion, unquestionably decided that he would treat Lord Dundonald as an opponent of his administration and an ally of the Conservative party, and practically accused him of endeavouring to dragoon the government of the day. And in order to make that charge as offensive as possible, he proceeded further to inform the House and the country that the one who was endeavouring to dragoon the government was a foreigner. Nothing could have been better devised to raise the feeling of the Liberal party against Lord Dundonald and any gentleman whom it might be the policy of the government to associate with him at a later stage of the affair. There could be no question at all from the very outset that the government had determined to stand by the Minister of Agriculture and dismiss the General Officer Commanding; and in order to justify their doing this, they determined to make it a political matter and fasten all the odium on the opposition. On general principles, we might at once conclude, from the fact that the Finance Minister accused the Conservative party of making capital out of this matter, that they themselves were doing the very thing with which they were charging their opponents. From the moment this incident became known to the people, the government treated Lord Dundonald with very little courtesy. He was spoken of by the First Minister as a stranger and a foreigner who had undertaken to dragoon the administration, and the Minister of Militia, a little later on, sneered at the general as a nobleman and a patrician, and said it was wonderful condescension on his part to speak to him, a plebeian and an ordinary citizen of Canada. It seems to me that it was anything but good taste for a gentleman known as Sir Frederick Borden to sneer at titles. If the Minister of Militia has a right to feel a reasonable pride in the fact that the British government has seen fit to honour him with the title of 'Sir,' he should have some respect for the higher title worn by Earl Dundonald. But the hon. gentleman was not the only one to indulge in that course. He was followed by my hon. friend from Hants (Mr. Russell), who said, in a mocking tone: Is this a time for discoursing when we have to deal with lords and dukes?

Mr. COCHRANE. And judges.

Mr. BELL. That came in a little later. So that from the beginning it was manifestly the purpose of the government to endeavour to belittle the effect this incident must naturally have on public opinion by trying to excite popular prejudice against Lord Dundonald personally and any hon. gentleman on this side who might say a word on his behalf. When this matter was discussed Earl Dundonald received very little support from hon. gentlemen opposite; and it was nothing more than ordinary fair-play that some gentlemen on this side should have taken care that the general's side of the case was fairly presented to the people. That was done, and nothing else beyond that; and I would like my hon. friends opposite to point to one single act or word on the part of any Conservative leader here or elsewhere which can be used as a basis for the charge that the Liberal-Conservative party was endeavouring to make political capital out of this incident. It was not sufficient for the Finance Minister to reiterate that the Conservative party was exploiting this matter for political purposes. And what we want in this matter is evidence to show that something of that kind is being done. There can be no doubt that all the evidence is to the contrary—every particle of it. There had been a constant effort made by the members of the party of hon. gentlemen opposite to throw odium on Lord Dundonald. We have, first of all, Mr. Preston, who writes letters to the British press, for which he is censured and notified that he will be dismissed if he repeats the offence. We have then Mr. Lemieux, a member of this administration, practically making the very same statements—begging the question and practically calling upon the government of Great Britain to recall Lord Dundonald from this country. Then we have Sir Elzear Taschereau. Is he speaking in the interests of the Conservative party? He is Chief Justice of Canada. He is on the other side of the Atlantic: yet he makes the assertion that this is being made a political question in this country. On what authority does Sir Elzear Taschereau make that statement? He says that the London 'Times' is being stuffed or loaded up by Ottawa Tories——

Mr. COWAN. Hear, hear.

Mr. BELL. And his statement is endorsed by my clever friend from South Essex (Mr. Cowan)——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BELL—and, in fact by every hon. member on the other side. They all endorse that statement of Sir Elzear Taschereau, that the London 'Times' is being loaded up by Ottawa Tories. The London 'Times' is regarded as the most independent journal published in the world. I remember, when, a few years ago, hon. gentlemen opposite were quoting the London 'Times' with great delight because, a little hastily and without fully knowing all that was involved, it bestowed a degree of praise on the party of hon. gentlemen opposite, which they entirely failed to deserve, for their preferential tariff. The London 'Times' was then quoted as a great authority by hon. gentlemen opposite. It was not then loaded up by Ottawa Tories. But would it be fair for us to assume that it was then loaded up by Ottawa Grits ? If we are to believe that that great newspaper can be loaded up by interested parties that would be a fair assumption. I do not think there is the slightest warrant for what Sir Elzéar Taschereau said. Is he exploiting this incident for political purposes ? Who is that gentleman ? With whom are his sympathies ? Will it be said that he is exploiting this incident for Conservative purposes ? Would it not rather be said that he is exploiting it for Liberal purposes ? Is not that what is being openly done by Preston, Lemieux, Taschereau and the whole party from the Prime Minister himself down to the last joint in the tail of his following ? And my hon. friend from Nova Scotia (Mr. Fielding) gets up and is so zealous in support of British connection and has such strong condemnation to utter of any one who would exploit such an incident for political purposes. We know how his loyal, honest, honourable soul is wrought upon to think that anybody should do such a thing. Would he do it ? Not he. Why, he never thought of such a thing and he is burdened with grief to think that any party would do it. Well, Mr. Speaker, I know that hon. gentleman, and I know his record, and the record of those who have been associated with him. And I know that in every case where we have had an opportunity of looking upon their deeds we have found that every act they condemn, they only wanted an opportunity to proceed to do in the most extreme manner themselves ; if they denounced opponents for having taken any course, they only waited a chance to so completely outdo their opponents in that course that thereafter those opponents would never be mentioned in that connection. The people of this country know their record, that record of broken promises, absolute failure ever to do anything they promised, and of readiness to do everything that they had sworn not to do. So, there is no occasion to fear that the utterances of the Prime Minister or the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) will for a moment deceive the people of this country as to their course on this question. The Finance Minister has said that the government of this country is able to take care of itself. Unquestionably it is. He says that it has not appealed to the British government for any assistance. I presume not, since he says so. But I say this—that if the British government have recalled Dundonald, then, it is perfectly true, as my hon. friend from South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) said that they could only recall him as a half-pay officer. They might invite him to return, but they could not order him to do so, except as half-pay officer. And, if they have recalled him it is probably because they desire to advance him to a position of higher honour and power. They know that his action was taken with a view to strengthen the defences of this country and so make Canada more valuable as a part of the empire and to strengthen the bonds that unite it with the empire. The British government, if it has acted as suggested has acted very generously to the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and his supporters. It is always inclined to do so. I presume it may have thought it expedient to do so. Because the threats—for Sir Elzéar Taschereau did not hesitate to threaten the British government with the displeasure of this government, for he says, 'I cannot see how the British government, even in its own interest, can fail to recall Lord Dundonald before the end of the week.' What interest of the British government was threatened by the presence of Lord Dundonald in this country that Sir Elzéar Taschereau must inform them that there was danger to that interest in allowing Lord Dundonald to remain here ? It strikes me that this interview which purports to have been given by the Chief Justice is a forgery, or else Sir Elzéar Taschereau was so ill-advised as to utter, in the course of his interview a threat—I was about to say a veiled threat, but it was not at all veiled, but very distinct and very plain, that the presence of Lord Dundonald in this country would militate against the interest of the empire and would justify this government in taking such a course as would not be in the interest of the British government. What else can the language mean, if it means anything at all ? But I do not believe for a moment that the British government in this case has done more or less than they have uniformly done in dealing with the government of the right hon. gentleman. They have acted with him and with the people of Canada as they have acted with all the colonies, in a most generous fashion. They are probably far enough away from this little matter to view it calmly, and probably to view it in its proper proportion. For, to my mind, it was not a great matter in the first instance, and, if the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) had acted with proper dignity and not descended to an attack on Lord Dundonald and every one who called himself Lord Dundonald's friend, it would never have been other than a small incident. But, as I say, the British government have acted generously ; they have acted as they do toward friend and foe, toward the colonies, toward the United States and toward every country with which they have any dealings, with the greatest magnanimity. If Lord Dundonald's presence is embarassing to the administration, no doubt the British government is willing to withdraw him and, as far as possible, to relieve them from the embarrassment from which they are suffering. It is not the first time the British government have acted generously with hon. gentlemen opposite. For twenty years the Conservative party in this country, which certainly deserved well of the British government if any party ever did, for there was never any question as to their willingness to do everything in their power to strengthen British connection and to make Canada a source of strength to the empire—for twenty years that party endeavoured in vain to have the Belgian and German treaties denounced by the government. And it was only when the present government had involved themselves in a morass of difficulties, after they had got into a slough of despond from which they could never hope to extricate themselves, that, to release them from their difficulties, the British government denounced those treaties. And, in this case, also, if the British government have acted as stated, they have simply followed the course that they have always followed in acting generously to the hon. gentlemen opposite. And I think hon. gentlemen on this side have no objection to seeing that step taken by the British government. But we must remember that, in what they have done they have stretched their courtesy. Why should they have recalled Lord Dundonald from this country? For, even if it can be proven that he was taking an active part in hostility to this government, is that a reason why the British government should take such a course?

Why should they do it? He was no longer a servant of this government, but a half-pay officer of the British government. Major General Laurie was a half-pay officer of the imperial government when he carried the county of Shelburne and sat in this House as an active opponent of hon. gentlemen opposite. Was there a question of recalling him because he took an active part in political warfare in this country? There is just as much right to recall Lord Dundonald on account of any action he takes in connection with the political history of our country as there would have been to recall General Laurie at a time when he was an active fighter in the Conservative ranks in Canada. The Liberal-Conservative party are charged with taking such steps in this matter as would give a political complexion to this Dundonald incident. They have never done so in any one respect. The courtesies shown to Lord Dundonald everywhere throughout Canada have been extended to him as a man and a soldier. The demonstration in Toronto was participated in by members of both political parties.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Hear, hear.

Mr. BELL. He will be welcomed in Ottawa in a few days by members of both political parties and the men who will come together to do honour to Lord Dundonald will, in so doing, do honour to themselves. He is now no longer an official of this government; he is simply a resident in this country who is entitled to honour and distinction because he is one of the brightest and bravest fighters in the British service and one of those who have done most to add honour and lustre to the British arms. He is a man whom our young men would do well to copy and if he had remained in Canada he might have been an inspiration to young Canadians, and might have influenced many of them to rival the deeds of arms that have made Dundonald and his race famous. Lord Dundonald need not feel sad because he has been turned down and gored by the Liberal party. Have they ever treated any one even in their own ranks any better? What treatment did they accord to the ex-Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) a short time ago? What treatment did they accord to the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair).

Some hon. MEMBERS. He's all right.

Mr. BELL. The very same gentleman from Hants was set to work to buzz and sting about the Minister of Railways, who was cast loose out of the mosquito net a short time ago to entertain our friend Colonel Hughes. Alexander Mackenzie knew, what that treatment was. Mr. Blake knew what that treatment was. In my own province the man whom Nova Scotians and Canadians generally would unite in saying was the greatest and brainiest man of his time, Joseph Howe, was hounded to his grave by that party, the moment he had ceased to serve them as they thought they should be served. Lord Dundonald, who, no doubt, is looking upon all their efforts and attacks with equanimity, may well console himself with the knowledge of the fact that in being the object and butt of their attack he is simply one of a glorious company who have suffered in the course of time from that same attack. It would be better for the Liberal party if they would treat this question as it should be treated, as one that must necessarily occur in all departmental matters. If the right hon. the Prime Minister had taken a different line when he got up to initiate the attack on Lord Dundonald the incident would never have attained the importance or extent it has. It is to the attacks of hon. gentlemen that all the importance of this question and all the dangers to that party which may arise out of it are due. If they had treated it as they should have, if they had treated Lord Dundonald as a gentleman, as they should have, after he ceased to be an official they would not need to have that alarmed and uneasy feeling in their breasts to-day that induced the Minister of Finance to rise in his place and quote one of his most oft used expressions, insinuating that the Conservative party in Canada are endeavouring to make any political capital whatever out of this. I defy the Minister of Finance, I defy the Prime Minister to furnish any proof.

Mr. COWAN. You are doing it now.

Mr. BELL. I point out that every utterance of every hon. member opposite, of every official or quasi official, on the other side of the Atlantic, who could obtain access to the columns of the British press, is directed towards the effort to injure the Conservative party in connection with this matter. Is the Conservative party responsible for Preston ? Is the Conservative party responsible for Lemieux ? Is the Conservative party responsible for Taschereau ? Is the Conservative party responsible for Sir Frederick Borden, who gets up here and sneers at the title of Lord Dundonald ? In every respect, in every point of this matter in which anything like an attempt has been made to arouse feeling, the charge can be successfully made against the Liberal party and its leaders in this House.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I had no intention whatever of taking any part in this debate which I had hoped would not last very long in view of the length which the session has already attained and the fact that we are all very anxious to get home. But inasmuch as it deals particularly with a question in which I am always interested and further because certain statements have been made by hon. gentlemen opposite which I think should not be passed over, I will ask the indulgence of the House for a few minutes. I shall not attempt to deal with the speech of the hon. gentleman who has just concluded (Mr. Bell) beyond saying one or two words with regard to points made by him. I was surprised to find that the hon. member for Pictou should descend once more to attempt to stir up strife between the various races of this country by introducing that word 'foreigner' into this debate. The hon. gentleman has asked for proofs from the Minister of Finance and other members on this side of the House that the Conservative party was trying to make political capital out of this Dundonald question. I say that proof can be laid on the table of this House to-morrow when the unrevised 'Hansard' is published and the speech of the hon. gentleman is seen. I was present in this House when the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) made use of the word 'foreigner,' and I heard him withdraw it before the Conservatives entered their protest—

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, you did not.

Other hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON—quick as they were to do so. Since that time I have read in 'Hansard,' although I was not present in the House when the speech was made, the acceptance of the explanation of the Prime Minister by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and yet the very next day after that leader had accepted that explanation, his leading journal in the capital city of Canada, the Ottawa 'Citizen,' devoted an editorial of almost a column exploiting once more, for political purposes, the inadvertent use of the word 'foreigner' by the Prime Minister. And now here again to-day we find this lieutenant in the maritime provinces of the leader of the opposition reintroducing this word and once more endeavouring to stir up strife because of it. It does seem to me that our charge that the Conservatives are attempting to make political capital out of this whole question is proven and proven to the hilt by the speech of the hon. gentleman. I was glad of one thing however. I would be sorry indeed to think that His Majesty's loyal opposition were a unit in the view as to the British government expressed by one of their leaders, the belligerent member for North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) who called the British government a set of cowards or words to that effect. I was glad to find that the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell), on the contrary, pronounced them a set of magnanimous gentlemen. But all this goes to show, all this quarrelling in the family circle of hon. gentlemen opposite, all this breaking away by their party press, from the acceptance of the premier's explanation by the leader of their party goes to show that there is a dreadful lack of discipline in the Conservative party and that certain prominent gentlemen in the Conservative ranks will in their turn have to be recalled if the leader of the opposition is to have an easy time in future. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) said—and his chest was visibly expanded while he said it—that Conservative loyalty at least, had never been challenged in this country. Mr. Speaker, I fancy it never has been challenged since the days when sundry gentlemen, at the time feeling somewhat sore over the Rebellion Losses Act, actually went so far as to rotten-egg the representative of His Majesty, Lord Elgin.

It is quite possible that it was impugned at a later date when the then leader of the Conservative party went so far as to say, in discussing a certain tariff issue, that if the result of the tariff then adopted, the national policy, was to injure British connection—then so much the worse for British connection. However, I would not willingly recall these matters had not the hon. gentleman practically challenged the loyalty of the great Liberal party of this country. For my part, I do not believe that there is such a thing as disloyalty in the Dominion of Canada. I have yet to meet a man, either Liberal or Conservative, who is disloyal. I believe we are true to the last man to Canada under British connection, but I do think it is bad taste indeed for hon. gentlemen opposite to rise in their places in the House and try to create the impression in Canada, yes, and beyond its borders, that the Liberal party, representing as it does more than half the people of Canada, is absolutely disloyal to Canada and disloyal to the British empire.

But, enough of this. Let me rather come down to something which has arisen out of the recent utterances of Lord Dundonald in regard to the administration of militia matters in Canada. I would refer to his phrases 'fool's paradise' and 'government indifference to the militia.' I would call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that in the last three years we have spent $10,000,000 upon the militia of Canada, that this year we are spending $3,500,000 upon it and that we have increased the annual expenditure upon the militia by from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000. I do not believe you can find a greater test of the good wishes of the government towards any particular branch of the public service than that which is afforded by the estimates. If you find that the government is supporting a certain branch of the public service by liberal expenditures and taking the chance of criticism from the opposition and from those people in the country who are against large expenditures you may say at once that the government is not indifferent to that particular branch of the public service. But, if we live in a fool's paradise to-day what kind of a fool's paradise did we live in before 1896? The rules of the House will not permit me to characterize the kind of fool's paradise that we lived in prior to 1896. But then I can prove to you by comparison that it was certainly a very superlative kind of fool's paradise as compared with the fool's paradise in which we are said to exist now. We find that the government is now giving the militia of Canada annual drills. I have been in the militia of Canada for nine years under the late government and for eight years under this government, so that I think I am in a position to speak with some little knowledge and authority on this subject and I say that there never was anything more detrimental to the true interests of the militia than the system which was pursued under the Conservative government in this connection; that is the system of calling out the militia every other year to get its training. I had almost made a bull by speaking of calling it out every other year to get its annual drill. As a matter of fact the regiments simply went to pieces because of inactivity, consequent upon the two years of idleness which intervened between one camp and another. It was reserved for this government under the energetic and able management of the present hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) to call the militia out every year, but two, I think, in full strength, and in these two years in very tolerable strength, the officers and non-commissioned officers and a portion of the rank and file being drilled during these two years. That fact is one of the best evidences that can be adduced in proof of the interest that is being taken in the militia of Canada. Then, I am going to refer to something which, although it is a small matter, still has its significance. It was reserved to this government to obtain for the Fenian raid veterans medals which they had earned a third of a century ago. It was reserved for this government to obtain a long service medal for every officer and man who has served twenty years in the militia. It was reserved for this government to put an end to the life and good behaviour tenure of commanding officers, something utterly subversive of the best interests of the militia, because we found in regiment after regiment colonels who had retained their commands for periods ranging from twenty to thirty-five years, with the result that there was no promotion in the ranks junior to that of the commanding officer to be looked forward to and it was impossible to get men to go in and take an interest in such a force as that. If the government and if the active head of the Militia Department had been indifferent to the militia, do you imagine that these matters, some of them small in themselves, but which are somewhat important to the militia, would have received their close attention, the best evidence of which is that these changes have been made? Not at all. But, let me give a little further testimony. What about the cadet corps to-day? It was reserved for this government to develop this system of cadet corps. To-day, we have thousands of boys coming up in the schools all over the country getting their preliminary drill and their training in the art of rifle shooting in consequence of the energy and thoughtfulness of this government and entirely in the absence of any thing being done under the old government. We have organized an army medical corps. We have a splendid army medical staff and bearer corps. Whereas in the past hon. gentlemen opposite had their regimental surgeon with his little pill-box, we have this army medical corps with field hospitals and stretchers for the wounded men and officers of the militia force, all of which are necessary to an army in the field. If an army corps were called upon to-day to go upon active service it would take no time to organize the medical part of the army corps because we have the nucleus for doing it and inasmuch as that is a scientific branch of the service it is something that could not be improved or dealt with in a haphazard way. But, as a result of the organization of this service our fellows, if they were called upon to take the field, would have careful treatment for their wounds or in case of disease.

Mr. WARD. Under what General Officer Commanding were these improvements made ?

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. These improvements were made under the present government ; I do not care from what General Officer commanding the suggesting came. As I understand it, it is the government that has the power of the purse-strings and the power to say whether this or that shall or shall not be done, and the members of the government, as wise men will take the advice of experts. We do not necessarily expect those in the civil departments to be experts in certain lines themselves, but if they take expert testimony, and if having obtained good advice, they act upon it, then they deserve the credit if they give us a good up to date system. We have an intelligence department which we were before entirely without. This department is made up of picked men, selected from the militia in various parts of Canada to collect information which would be of the greatest practical use in case the force was called out upon active service. We have organized the engineers, another corps, that cannot be improvised. We may have had a few in the old days, very few, but today we have an engineer corps which is a most useful part of the militia force and in the city of Toronto that corps has been organized in connection with the school of practical science which increases its usefulness, because as young men finish their course in the school of science they scatter through Canada and each man becomes a valuable instructor in each particular locality. The government have organized rifle clubs and established rifle ranges. These are things upon which we all agree in this House. Everybody says that our young men in Canada ought to be taught how to shoot. My hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) said within the last week that he heartily approved of this plan and that he would use his best endeavours to encourage the practice of rifle shooting in the part of the country from which he came. What government was it that first introduced rifle clubs and spent thousands of dollars upon rifle ranges upon which these riflemen could practice ? It was the Liberal government, the government which assumed the reins of power in 1896, the government which had been pronounced indifferent to the militia, the government which is training up our young men to be proficient in rifle shooting and providing magnificent material with which to fill the ranks of the active militia should it be found necessary to extend it to a war strength. The government have established a school of musketry. We have under able men who have gained their experience in the South African war, organized the school of musketry in spite of the fact that according to the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) some persons have been compelled to do the boot-polishing of other people.

Then Sir, we have the Dominion arsenal (and this to my mind is a matter of very great importance) and it will surprise many of the people of Canada who do not keep posted in these matter to know, that whereas in the days of the Conservatives that factory could turn out about a million and a half cartridges a year, this government has increased its productive capability six fold and the output will be further enlarged I have no doubt. We have to-day a small arms factory in Canada. We had been told we have too few rifles in Canada, I have said so myself, but I am glad to say that this government with an energy which is most commendable has entered into a contract with Sir Charles Ross, the result of which is that he has established a small arms factory capable of turning out 1,000 rifles a month, and which working day and night, would be capable of turning out 24,000 rifles a year, which is more than half as many rifles as are in stock in Canada today. More than that, it is this government which has voted large sums of money to buy more rifles so that the unsatisfactory present condition of a shortage in rifles will cease, and yet this is the government which has been accused of indifference towards the militia of Canada. I pass on. We are now making in Canada steel gun carriages which we never made here before. That is Canada for the Canadians in the true sense of the term. We are spending our money within the limits of Canada ; we are giving employment to the people of Canada, and should an accident happen to any of the artillery paraphernalia we could remedy that accident ourselves without having to send the broken parts to England in time of war even, and await their return. I believe that if the progressive policy of the Minister of Militia is followed out as it will no doubt be, it is only a question of a short time till we will be manufacturing the cannon themselves in Canada as well as the steel carriages and the small arms.

We have heard a great deal about the troubles in the permanent force. My hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) who is not in his place much to my regret, thought it a shocking thing that members of the permanent force should be asked to clean the boots of sundry officers at the Rockliffe ranges. Here, by way of parenthesis I must be allowed to express my great admiration for the hon. member (Mr. Sam. Hughes) who to my mind is utterly wonderful in his versatility, for he certainly runs the gamut of man from the belted earl to the bootblack, and to-day it was the bootblacks turn. The fact of the matter is, that these men of the permanent force are glad to accept the position of officers, servants for the time being. Their work is not heavy ; they are liberally tipped ; and I would like to ask the hon. member (Mr. Sam. Hughes) what about himself ? For years he was a colonel in the active militia and as such entitled to an officer's servant in camp. I wonder if he allowed a servant to blacken his august boots.

Som hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no ?

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I fancy he had a servant, and that servant was probably drawn from some farm in North Victoria, and yet the hon. gentleman rises in horrified indignation over the fact that any young farmer in Canada should have to clean the boots of any other man. I do not for a moment suppose that the one and only Turpin ever cleaned his boots, but they are not all Turpins after all and I fancy that in camp for years past, he, in common with all other mounted officers, has permitted his servant to black his boots, and has even tipped him for so doing, because after all the hon. gentleman is not lacking in generosity. It is true that the permanent force has been asked to furnish servants for the rifle ranges ; that is a bagatelle ; I explained it.

What has this government done for the permanent force. In my opinion the permanent force is an extremely important part of the active militia in Canada, because it is that force that furnishes instructors for the balance of us, and for that reason its officers and men should be among the very best obtainable in Canada. It was reserved for the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) to introduce a pension Bill, the result of which will be that these officers and men when they reach the age limit will be reasonably taken care of by the people of Canada, and to my mind nothing has ever been done which will go so far to encourage the enlistment of the right class of men for officers and privates as the introduction of this pension Bill. And, Sir, this was done by that government which is indifferent to the militia of Canada. I might go on multiplying examples, but I must hurry along.

There was one other little matter that I noticed in the speech of the hon. member (Mr. Sam. Hughes) with feelings of mingled pity and amusement. He attacked poor Arnold Foster and fairly wiped him off the slate. It was the passing of the second Foster. It aroused feelings of pity almost, in my breast, and I have no doubt also in the breast of some hon. gentlemen opposite. That was bad enough, but when the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), in connection with the now historic bootblacking incident, threw in the words that the bootblacking was done for a 'lot of snobs.' I think I am justified in offering a word of protest. I have had many years experience with the officers of the Canadian militia, and the expression 'a lot of snobs' is about as inapplicable to them as to any body of men I ever knew in my life. I understand that the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) himself once took a commission in the active militia. He did not follow it up I regret to say, and he is not now a member of that honourable body, but I sincerely trust that he did not leave the force because he found his fellow officers to be a lot of snobs. I have known the men of the regiment which comes from his constituency intimately for years, and to tell the truth, Mr. Speaker, a more gentlemanly or more pleasant lot of fellows it would be hard to meet. I trust the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) will withdraw that very offensive expression, which I am sorry to say was accepted by the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes).

There is still another matter with which I wish to deal for a moment. I refer to the attack of the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) upon the Solicitor General, who is not now present in this House. I have the greatest respect for the Solicitor General and I believe he stands high in the estimation of the members of this House on both sides of the Speaker's chair.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. Yes, and it does seem to me to be rather a cowardly thing to introduce into this debate the expression alleged to have been used by some other man ; that so great was the treason and treachery of the Solicitor General that if he had his deserts he should be behind prison bars. I can tell you, Sir, that in my opinion it will be many a long day indeed before the Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux is ever found behind prison bars. I can tell you, Sir, that the loyalty of Mr. Lemieux will stand comparison with the more noisy loyalty of the hon. member for Victoria. I can tell you, Sir, that the Solicitor General comes from a race who have proved their loyalty by more than word of mouth : A race who proved their loyalty in 1776 beneath the walls of old Quebec, thirteen years after they had passed under the British flag; and who proved their loyalty once again in the campaign of 1812, when but for their magnificent courage and cleverness at the battle of Chateauguay the left flank of the British defence in Canada would have been turned, and to-day we would not be discussing questions of loyalty in a British parliament. It ill becomes any man in this House, or any man in Canada to attack the loyalty of the Solicitor General, or of the French Canadian race from which he springs.

And now, Sir, one word by way of personal explanation and I have done. I think I may say truthfully, that while not being a carping critic, I have been at least an honest critic of militia matters in this House. Last session I made a speech with regard to the then state of the rural militia, in which I used an expression which it appears has become somewhat famous, although at the time I did not realize it would be so frequetly quoted. I said that owing to the lowness of the pay then prevailing the rural militia had faded away until it could only be described as the skeleton of a skeleton. I do not apologize for that expression; I believed what I said then, and I believe now that what I said was then true. But, Sir, we have a government which is just waiting for advice. We have a government which is not so high and mighty as to get up and say : No, we will have none of this advice ; because this man was so outspoken we will show him that what he says does not cut any ice (to use a vulgarism). On the contrary, we have a government which says: We will look into this ; this is a charge laid by one of our supporters who ought know something about it because he is one of the militia force himself. And, Sir, the government did look into it, and the result is that an increase of pay to the force for which I and others were asking was granted, and to-day I am glad to tell you, Sir, that the skeleton of a skeleton has disappeared, and once more we have in Canada as fine a rural militia as this country ever boasted, and that is saying a good deal.

I have come from the camp where we had under canvass this year more than 5,000 men. In my own regiment we had a force of 350, and I can assure you their physique was as far ahead of the physique of the fifty cents soldier as their numbers were ahead of the numbers of the regiment in the last camp. I have read reports from the other camps published in the 'Canadian Military Gazette,' which of late has been very harsh in its criticism of the administration of the day, giving glowing accounts of the personnel and the numbers of the regiments at London, Laprairie, Sussex, and every other point where camps have been held. And so what I have said has been justified by events. This up-to-date government, taking the advice of those who were in a position to know and acting upon it, has so reclothed this old skekleton with flesh and blood and skin and so rejuvenated it that I could scarcely recognize it if I saw it stalking through the streets. Now, I have finished. I thought that ten minutes would be enough for me to say what I wanted to say ; but when one begins to discuss the magnificent improvements made in the militia of Canada by this government, time is all too short in which to complete the task.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE. We have had an admirable illustration to-day of the saying that a certain class of people will rush in where angels fear to tread ; because if there is a man in this House who might with absolute propriety have remained silent on this question, it is the hon member for Haldimand (Mr. T. S. Thompson). He did not touch upon a single subject, it seemed to me, on which he was not himself vulnerable ; and the criticism he directed towards others might with great propriety have been directed towards himself. He talked about the loud lip-loyalty of the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) in what he had said and done. The hon. member for North Victoria gave to the world an example of his sterling loyalty—not lip-loyalty, but fighting loyalty—to that extent that he was ready to go to any part of the world to support and maintain the British flag under which he lives. Was it so with the hon. member for Haldimand ? He was on hand at the dress parade at the Queen's Jubilee. He was before the eyes of the world in a large degree then. He was willing to take all that was going on a free pass, as a soldier on dress parade ; but when the South African war came, where was he ? Did he offer his services then ? Did he join the hon. member for North Victoria and go to maintain the British flag in South Africa ? No. Some said he was under the bed. That loyalty of his, which is so demonstrative to-day, was mere lip-loyalty at the jubilee ; but when there has been any fighting to be done. there has been a notable absence of it in his career. After that came the coronation, and there he was for another dress parade.

Mr. BENNETT. Hear, hear—free lunch.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, a free lunch, and the hon member for Haldimand was on hand again—dress parade, lip-loyalty. free advertisement He was one of the magnificent men belonging to the militia of Canada. Well, that kind of loyalty the world will size up at its proper value. He is always a great loyalist for dress parade, but when any hard work or any fighting is to be done, he is not there. I will leave him to the people of Canada, and they will deal with him.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I am satisfied.

Mr. SPROULE. Then the hon. member for Haldimand referred to the fact that the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) once belonged to the militia, but had left it. Well, when they began to feed them on dog biscuits, it was about time to leave them ; but I will guarantee there was something behind that. The hon. gentleman went on to criticise adversely the staetment made by the hon. member for North Victoria regarding the present Solicitor General, Mr. Rodolphe Lemieux, and his family, and regarding the statement that if certain persons had their deserts they might be behind prison bars. Does the hon. gentleman remember anything about the incident? Was the hon. member for North Victoria justified in referring to it ? He only desired to give the world an idea of the class of man who was acting with that high-handed authority when in the mother country representing the Canadian government. Do you remember the act? His own father denied his name, and gave another name in order to put his son in parliament; and yet the son comes and justifies that act in this House. Is that creditable to the man? If the people in the British parliament knew it, I venture to say they would attach that importance to his statement which it deserves, and no more. The hon. member for Haldimand made the statement that the Conservative party were exploiting Lord Dundonald for political purposes, and that it was susceptible of proof. He made that staetment positively, but did he give any proof? He never attempted it; he simply gave his own bare, bald, unvarnished statement. If there was any proof of it, the hon. member either had it or ought to have had it, or he should not have made the statement. He did not attempt to substantiate it by any proof. Was the proof of that statement found in the complimentary dinner given to Lord Dundonald in the Rideau Club, when the Reform element of the club went around and asked their friends not to go there lest they might do him honour? Among all the Conservatives at that dinner, not one single reference to politics was made that could in any way be regarded as an attempt to make political capital.

Mr. A. T. Thompson. Very different from the meeting at Toronto.

Mr. SPROULE Any one reading the account of that dinner could not fail to come to the conclusion that the utmost propriety was exercised both by Lord Dundonald and those who were there to do him honour. We hear a great deal about what took place in Toronto. I do not wonder that there was some demonstration in Toronto, where the loyal sentiment is so strong.

Mr. TALBOT. You have a monopoly of it?

Mr. SPROULE. I am not saying we have. If I were looking for any degree of monopoly of loyalty, I would not apply for it over there. Considering that the military sentiment is so strong in Toronto, that the Scotch element is so strong, that everything that goes to make a military esprit de corps is so strong in the city of Toronto, and considering what was done to the man whom the people regarded as the very highest type of military man, I am not surprised that there were some demonstrations and some evidences of dissent at the shabby way Lord Dundonald was treated. I am not surprised at it by any means. The hon. member says that the loyalty of the Liberal party was challenged. I did not hear anybody directly challenge the loyalty of the Liberal party.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON I did not say directly; I said challenged. It was challenged indirectly.

Mr. SPROULE. It must be either directly or indirectly challenged. If it was not challenged at all, why was there any need to refer to it?

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. It was challenged.

Mr. SPROULE. Where and when? The hon. gentleman has not given us a single evidence of example. But why is the statement made? To furnish an excuse for drawing attention to the fact that, as he said, the Conservative party had rotten-egged the Governor General over the rebellion losses Bill, and this was done to show that there might be some disloyalty in the Conservative party. But that tu quoque argument is no argument at all. Two wrongs can never make one right. If the hon. gentleman had shown us that allegations had been made that the Liberal party, as a party, were not loyal and that he was endeavouring to combat that charge, I could have respected the argument; but when the argument was simply, you are another, it is one which the lowest class of individual in the country can use, and I will allow the hon. gentleman to reap the full benefit of it. Above all men in this House he should be the last to defend the government or the Minister of Militia, because only a year ago he treated us to a most scathing condemnation of the government with regard to their administration of the militia.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. If the hon. gentleman will do me the honour of reading that speech, he will see that my criticism had relation to but one portion of the militia, the rural infantry, and that within the present year I gave the government great credit for having established these subsidiary services, and not ten minutes ago I explained that the cause of my criticism had been removed and everything was right again.

Mr. SPROULE. Hon. gentlemen on that side of the House are very often called upon to explain away their own words and take great pains to do it. But what was the gist of the hon. gentleman's whole argument? It was that the militia of Canada had been reduced to such an attenuated condition that it was only the shadow of a skeleton.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Under the management, development and equipment by this government, that was the condition of our militia, and that would be the fighting capacity of the rural battalions if they were called upon. What kind of a body would they have been to send to South Africa? I repeat that the hon. gentleman's speech was a scathing condemnation of the government. It showed how utterly they had mismanaged the militia during the seven years they have been in office. Therefore the hon. gentleman is the last man who should rise and attempt to say anything in defence of the administration. He then went on to show what the government were doing. He said they were waiting for advice and were willing to take it and act upon it, and that the result might be seen in the capital turnout of the militia this year. He said that the government were responsible, because they controlled the purse strings, and unless they doled out the money our militia could not have reached its present state of efficiency. Well, if the General Officer Commanding furnished the brains, if he devised the plan, and the country supplied the money, what right had they to claim so much credit? The General Officer Commanding outlined the plans and furnished the brains, and the only credit to which the government is entitled is for having done what they were told, and if for the time being they controlled the purse strings and paid out the money of the people, I do not see that they are entitled to much credit on that account. I would not have thought it necessary to say anything on this question but for one statement made by the Minister of Finance, which I thought very much uncalled for. There is nothing in the facts to justify it. He said that he repudiated the attack of the opposition on the British government. But when did the opposition make any attack on the British government?

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) speaking for the opposition, did.

Mr. SPROULE. In my judgment he did not, and I leave it to the House and the country to judge between us. All he did was to draw attention to the fact that the criticisms in the old country came largely from the Little Englander class, who are not the highest type of loyalists in England—the pro-Boer element; but so sensitive is the British government lest anything might be done which would alienate the colonies or create any hard feeling between them and the home government, that they availed themselves of the earliest opportunity to put a stop to anything of the kind. What is their position? Through misrepresentations they were led to believe that there might possibly be more of a political character in this controversy than any injustice to the General Officer Commanding. Their attention was drawn to it by Mr. Lemieux, the Solicitor General, who made statements that I consider were not warranted by the facts. What was his version? I have the paper before me containing it. In that paper I find that Chief Justice Sir Elzear Taschereau, said that the London 'Times' was loaded up from Ottawa Tory sources and that there were few Scotchmen at the back of the whole agitation. He said it was a trivial affair which the opposition were endeavouring to magnify and use for political purposes. Then Mr. Lemieux followed on the same lines, and told the government that if Lord Dundonald were not recalled within a week, their failure to do so would be regarded as an attack upon Sir Wilfrid Laurier rather than a defence of Lord Dundonald, and it would weaken the ties between the Canadian colony and the motherland. Is it any wonder then that the British government should have availed themselves of the earliest opportunity to put a stop to anything of the kind. All that my hon. friend from Victoria meant to say was the British government were sensitive in this matter, that they were so afraid something might be done, which would stir up feeling in the colonies, and were so afraid these might be true in the statements and misrepresentations made them that they availed themselves of the earliest opportunity to try and stop any possible complications.

Mr. TALBOT. But he used the word 'cowardly.'

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, and I do not think it was the best word that might have been used. But what was he referring to when he used the word 'cowardly'?

Mr. TALBOT. The government of Great Britain.

Mr. SPROULE. No, he spoke of the party which was dealing with the subject, and it was in this connection I understood him to use the word 'cowardly.' He meant it in the sense that they were afraid to stand up for their rights for fear of causing irritation and because of their anxiety to conciliate the Canadian people. It was on this account that they were afraid to come out as boldly perhaps as the circumstances would justify. That was the sense in which he used the word, as I understood it, and in no other sense did he use it. Now we are told that Lord Dundonald did something he should not have done. He should not have spoken. Well, we pride ourselves in declaring that every man in Canada should have British fair-play. But is it British fair-play to attack a man in this House and not allow him to defend himself? Is it British fair-play not to allow Lord Dundonald to make use of the only channel of which he could avail himself in his defence? He did not use it without having been solicited to do so.

Mr. TALBOT. He chose it.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman is making a statement he is not warranted in making.

Mr. TALBOT. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPROULE. That laugh reminds me of the scriptural quotation: 'For as the crackling of thorns under a pot, so is the laughter of a fool. This also is vanity.' What justification is there for the hon. gentleman making that statement ? Lord Dundonald was invited by the hon. member for North Victoria to give him information with regard to the facts, and he did so. A member of parliament went to him and asked him for the facts. Was he doing an improper thing in giving that hon. gentleman the facts ? Did he invite the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) to defend him ? There is not a word in the correspondence that justifies the belief that he did. And no person has made such an allegation, until the hon. member (Mr. Talbot) made it here to-day, and he has made it upon grounds that do not justify his statement. We pride ourselves upon our British fair-play. And yet here was an officer who was regarded as a man of the very highest type of honour, a man of great ability, a man of known sterling character and integrity, a man belonging to an ancient and honourable family, who is maligned and abused ; and yet, if he says a word in his own defence, he is spoken of as one not to be tolerated in decent society. Is that fair-play ? Is there a chivalrous Frenchman on the other side who would say that it is fair-play ? I know they would repel such a suggestion, for there is too much chivalry in their nature to favour anything but honour and justice. Yet here is this officer summarily dismissed like a dog from the service ; and when he avails himself of the right of every British subject to defend himself—not to attack the government, but to defend himself—he is denounced as interfering in politics. It was not any desire on his part to enter politics or to interfere between parties that led him to speak in his own behalf. He has himself most positively declared that he never did interfere in political matters. And, though his whole course is known to his opponents, there is not a single example given to show that he introduced politics in anything he said or did since coming to Canada. He scrupulously avoided saying or doing anything of that kind. There is no claim that he violated the proprieties of life by introducing partisanship in any form. Yet, though he is thus unfairly attacked, the attempt is made to deny him the right to reply. We are told that even a worm will turn if trod upon; shall we say that a British soldier shall not defend himself when attacked ? Some say that he was a British officer on half-pay and had no right to speak in opposition to the government. What does Arnold Foster say about that ? He says :

> Lord Dundonald could stand as a member of the Canadian parliament and could not be deprived of the right to take an active part in public life.

If he could stand and be elected to this parliament, as another did before him, if he could take part in all the discussions of public life, was he not free to defend himself ? Would any hon. gentleman opposite deny him that right—would he dare to do it ? These hon. gentlemen sit here sheltered by the privileges of parliament, and cannot be attacked in the courts or elsewhere. But Lord Dundonald is responsible to the courts for every word he utters. Above all, he is responsible to his own honour, and he has too high a sense of the proprieties of life to say anything wrong. I have read every one of his speeches, and it seems to me that he has shown himself one of the most discreet men who ever spoke on a public platform. He has carefully refrained from attacking the government. When invitations have been offered him to speak under circumstances in which his speech might be susceptible of that construction, he has not accepted them. To deny him the right of self-defence is to do him a great injustice, and not only him, but many warm admirers of his among his own countrymen. I see that Sir Elzear Taschereau says that there are a few Scotchmen behind Lord Dundonald, thereby implying that the whole thing is insignificant, and that only a few Scotchmen pay attention to what Lord Dundonald says. I want to tell him that the Scotch element in this country is a force which, when the day comes, will make itself known with no uncertain sound, and will declare its opinion of the treatment meted out to this member of their nationality. I very much mistake their temper and sense of fair-play if they do not resent the insult cast upon one of their race, a man of the very highest honour, an officer of conspicuous gallantry, and the descendant of a noble line. At any rate, I am quite content to leave it with them. But I could go further and say that you will find the same spirit to-day, not only amongst the Scotch, but amongst the Irish, amongst the English, amongst the Germans and amongst the chivalrous French. I am much mistaken in my judgment of human nature if many French Canadians do not resent the treatment of Lord Dundonald. They admire chivalry, they admire courage, they admire honour ; and I would not do them the injustice of saying that they admire these less in a man of another race than in one of themselves. It was said to-day—at least it was insinuated—that Lord Dundonald was making a race and revenge cry out of this affair, and that he was doing injustice to the French. He denied that and repudiated it. And has a single example been given to this House, even one of the smallest kind, that would go to show that Lord Dundonald had been guilty of even anything that bore the semblance of doing injustice to the French race or to any of its members ? Why, the very reverse is the case. He said that in every respect he admired them, that he loved them and was ready to give them an equal place with men of every other nationality in the country. He had nothing to say of them, except what was in their favour. But people desirous of making political capital for themselves are willing to do injustice to Lord Dundonald by endeavouring to create the impression that he was desirous of doing what was wrong to the French Canadians. That was unworthy of any man outside of this House, and much more unworthy of any one who has the honour of a seat here. If such a statement is made here, it should be made upon proof, instead of being put in the form of an insinuation against a man who is not here to defend himself, and to whom, if they could, these hon. gentlemen would deny even the right to speak on his own behalf on the public platform.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP. I rise, Mr. Speaker, not to attack Lord Dundonald, nor to defend him, but merely to draw attention to two striking omissions in the observations of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). When the motion was made this morning that you leave the chair, the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) called attention to two utterances of a member of this government who is now in the old country, one touching the Dundonald incident and the other on the subject of preferential trade. Regarding the Dundonald incident, the right hon. gentleman who leads the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) very properly took the ground that it was not fair to attack a public man on the ground of reported utterances of his unless it was shown that those utterances had been revised by himself. If so I can quite see that it would be improper to condemn the Solicitor General until his words had been proved to be those with which he was charged. But, Sir, even while the right hon. gentleman so spoke, it seems to me that a glorious opportunity was afforded him. Without in any way repudiating his Solicitor General he could have said, disbelieving that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) spoke as he was charged, that had his Solicitor General so spoken, had he said that unless Lord Dundonald was recalled within a week it would be an attack upon the Laurier government, he (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) might have repudiated any such statement as that. The right hon. gentleman in addressing that House on that utterance of the Solicitor General, in no way repudiated the sentiment alleged to have been uttered by that gentleman, and when he went on to attack Lord Dundonald for his conduct, the one conclusion that could be come to by the House and the country was that when the right hon. gentleman abstained from expressing any difference in opinion from the alleged utterance of the Solicitor General that he agreed with the Solicitor General in the utterance he had made. It seemed to me that all throughout this discussion not only to-day but on other occasions the main point at issue has not always been reached by hon. gentlemen on either side. It always seems to me that there is a great desire on the part of the government and its supporters to concentrate attention on the fact that Lord Dundonald was guilty of an indiscreet utterance and was punished therefor. If Lord Dundonald was guilty of an indiscreet utterance and was punished therefor that question is closed and we have nothing more to do with it. But I venture to say that the members of this House and the people of this country are deeply interested in the charges made by Lord Dundonald and the point which this country would like to see cleared up is whether the charges of Lord Dundonald are true or false. If they are true, a lamentable state of affairs exists in our militia system. If they are false, the sooner, for their own sake, the government prove them false the better. To show how hard it is for ordinary laymen like myself to discover the truth in regard to the militia system let me remind the House of the utterances of the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. A. T. Thompson) this afternoon. That gentleman is always eloquent, and always speaks well and I will do him the justice of saying that I never knew him more eloquent and apparently sincere than he was this afternoon. When I heard his glowing eulogium on the militia system and the credit which he gave to the government, and especially to the Militia Department, on the industry, ability and skill which had been brought to bear on the militia forces in the last eight years, when in tones of proud triumph he called attention to the fact that in the last three years—that is not including this year—we had actually spent $10,000,000 for the improvement of the militia system, I was reminded of an incident which occurred in this House only a short year ago. In my effort to discover the real situation as to the Militia Department I referred back to the 'Hansard' and now let me give the House the opinion of an expert, a colonel commanding a regiment, speaking in this House with a full sense of responsibility. This is what the House was then told :

> Well, Sir, in all seriousness, after due consideration and recognizing the importance of the assertion, I say here to-day in my place in parliament that the militia, so far as the rural part thereof is concerned is in an infinitely worse plight to-day than it was two years ago, and that in my opinion another year under present conditions will utterly demoralize it.

That, Sir, is the opinion of an expert, the colonel of a battalion only one short year ago. Let me go further. I find in the same speech, this sentence :

> I have shown that we were called upon to furnish the skeleton of a skeleton, I now state that we have actually turned out the shadow of a skeleton of a skeleton. Can anything so ghost-like be longer called a militia force. True the officers and non-commissioned officers, the most important part, showed up in very fair numbers, but this will not continue. Men must have a pride in their unit or they will cease to act. I know the case of one company which this year had two officers and six non-commissioned officers to command two men, one of whom was the cook.

Perhaps the Minister of Militia can inform us how many of these officers now belong to the corps in which seven lieutenant-colonels are required to command 100 men. This apparently is above that average, two officers and six non-commissioned officers to command two men, one of whom was the cook. And that was the Canadian militia system under the admirable administration of hon. gentlemen opposite at the end of three years, during which we spent $10,000,000 to secure their efficiency. The hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. A. T. Thompson) this afternoon said that the only fault he had to find with the government last year was the meagreness of the pay. This gentleman last year, addressing the House, said :

A great deal of unnecessary trouble was caused this year by withholding notice for camp until within from three weeks to ten days of the time ordered. Knowing that some regiments were not to be called out, a feeling of uncertainty pervaded the whole, and I can assure you that recruiting is too unpleasant a job to be undertaken on chances. When the summons did come, it was found that some of the best regiments had been overlooked.

That, Sir, is an opinion of the administration of the militia by the Militia Department given by the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. A. T. Thompson) in this House last year. I do not wish to contradict anything he said to-day. Far be it from me to impute any improper motives to him, but surely we are entitled to some explanation from the hon. gentleman which will account for the marvellous discrepancy between the statement made a year ago and the statement given to this House to-day. That hon. gentleman gloried in the fact that in the last three years we had spent $10,000,000 on militia affairs, and were spending this present year $3,000,000. Does he not see that that proves the loyalty and generosity of this House, and it proves the confidence the representatives of the people had that the people would support any reasonable expenditure to maintain the efficiency of our militia. But, Sir, what sort of a commentary is it that $10,000,000 have been spent on the militia and at the end of three years that is all we have to show ? Surely it is not in the interests of this country that we should have an hon. minister at the head of the department quarrelling with and dismissing a gentleman who is admitted to be the most competent man we ever had in such a position in Canada, a gentleman who, during the last year by the assurance of the hon. member for Haldimand this afternoon, has raised the militia to a degree of efficiency that could not have been conceived possible a year ago. What are we to think of the business ability of the head of a department who will lose the services of such a man for such a paltry incident, take it at the very worst, as that he spoke inadvisedly at an inopportune time ? Surely the interest of the people of this country should be considered. It is all very well for the ministers to be touchy about their own dignity and importance, but in view of the statement made by the hon. member for Haldimand a year ago and to-day, the people of this country have some right to ask where we are when this business administration deprives us of the services of the best man we ever had, shutting the door for ever to the coming to Canada of such another man, for having made the statement that a minister had interfered outside his own department, in the Militia Department, a statement which that minister himself has admitted during this session was true to the very letter. So we have this conceded that Lord Dundonald has spoken the truth from beginning to end and Lord Dundonald is punished, the Canadian militia must lose his services, simply because he told the truth. There is of course an old saying that the greater the truth, sometimes the greater the libel.

I wish to protest against the attention of this House being called exclusively to the question whether or not Lord Dundonald was right or whether or not Lord Dundonald should have been dismissed when the real question that now interests us, the incident of the dismissal having been closed, is what we are getting for the $10,000,000 we have spent and the $3,000,000 we are spending this year.

There is one other question raised by the quotation from the speech of the Solicitor General read by the leader of the opposition, and I was surprised at the Finance Minister not referring to it. The Solicitor General, speaking in the old country, must of necessity speak with a certain authority. I do not propose this afternoon to blame him for what he said. If I were to blame him for what he said, I would be blaming myself, inasmuch as a short time ago, I said that I thought it was only reasonable that a man should not be judged by newspaper reports. Therefore, I do not intend to blame the hon. Solicitor General so much for what he did say, but I desire to call the attention of the House to the opportunity that presented itself to the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) when he rose to speak, it being particularly within his functions, in regard to the alleged statement of the hon. Solicitor General that Canada did not want a preference for what we had given to the old country by way of the preferential tariff because we had given it freely and ungrudgingly without desiring anything in return. This is perhaps the most important question that is now before any portion of the British empire to-day. We must remember that we have a fiscal warfare going on in the old country at the present time. Great Britain is distracted as it has not been since the days of the Reform Bill or possibly the Repeal of the Corn Laws over this great question of preferential trade. We know that it has been said in the old country by some that representatives of the present government, when attending the conference there a few years ago, expressed their approval of the principle of preferential trade. We know that in the election of 1896, when the right hon. Prime Minister went to London, Ont., he delivered a speech on the subject of preferential trade, when, to do the right hon. gentleman justice, I think he made the ablest and most eloquent presentation of the advantages of preferential trade to Canada that I have ever seen or heard, a presentation that must have convinced every one present, of the benefit and advantages that would accrue to Canada. He went on in his powerful appeal to point out from his standpoint that he and his party were the only ones who could secure this great boon for Canada, that the Conservative party could not secure this boon saying: Place me and my party in power and our first duty will be to secure preferential trade. No more powerful argument could be addressed to the people than that which was used by the right hon. Prime Minister. So, there are some people in the old country, who, knowing what took place in the Intercolonial Conference, and knowing of such utterances as that by the right hon. Prime Minister, believe that this government is in favour of preferential trade. There are others in the old country who, being deceived by the position which the right hon. gentleman took at the Cobden club, are convinced that this government is opposed to preferential trade. What a glorious opportunity was given this morning to the hon. Minister of Finance or to the right hon. Prime Minister, without agreeing with or disagreeing from the utterances of the Solicitor General to say: If he did use that language we repudiate it because we are in favour of preferential trade. If the government desire preferential trade the government could have done more in one minute this morning by such an utterance as that from the hon. Minister of Finance than the opposition could do by six months of touring through the country and speaking from every platform from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I appeal to the government and I ask them to take advantage of this chance. One of the reasons why I rose this afternoon was to call the right hon. Prime Minister's attention to the fact that the government are already committed to the principle of preferential trade and here to-day, without a vote of the House, with one single utterance, he to-day, could have given an impetus to the cause of preferential trade, if it would be the boon to Canada which the right hon. Prime Minister proved it would be, and in that I heartily agree with him, If he had done so he would have done more for Canada than he has done in many a day gone by. But, I can see that the hon. Minister of Finance was embarrassed because the hon. Solicitor General, speaking with a certain amount of authority, is reported to have said that we were not in favour of a preference because we have given a preference to the mother country without expecting anything in return. The right hon. Prime Minister, I remember, when speaking two years ago, flatly contradicted that utterance. We have his statement on 'Hansard' that we did not give this preference as a matter of gratitude expecting no return, but that there were sound business reasons for giving this preference, that it was a benefit to ourselves, that it would get us goods cheaper—good sound free trade doctrine—and that it was hoped that as a result of giving them this preference they would give us something in return. There seems to-day to be a large portion of people in the mother country who are ready to give us something in return and I would appeal to the hon. minister to take advantage of such an opportunity and state frankly that the preference was given in the hope that we would be given something in return. And that we are prepared to deal with the mother country along this line. I would endorse the hon. minister in going further, having said that much, and saying that if the mother country declines to deal with us in the matter of a preference we will have to recall what we have done, having done it in good faith and having failed. I sincerely hope that the charge that has been made by the government against the opposition and the like charge which has been made in the old country will turn out to be without ground; that is that the opposition are trying to exploit Lord Dundonald for their own purposes. I have no hesitation in saying that if the opposition were to take hold of the Dundonald incident and endeavour to use Lord Dundonald's sympathy for party purposes they would be unworthy of their positions in this House, but, I can quite understand altogether apart from party ideas, that, be they Reformers or Conservatives, Scotch, Irish or English, the citizens of Canada who have an admiration for Lord Dundonald regret the particular mode in which he is leaving the country. I can quite understand that they feel it due to this gentleman who came to Canada, who has done so much for the militia as the hon. gentleman for Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) has proved this afternoon, and who has to leave this country under circumstances which are very much to be deplored, should desire to show to him and show to the world, that, whether he was right or wrong in that particular, small controversial question, Canada believes he was true to Canada and true to the empire.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I might not be excused for taking part in this debate if it were strictly a military or militia matter, not being a military or militia man, but as it appears to be largely a political matter I presume I have the privilege of addressing the House. The question, as far as I understand, which has been particularly argued to-day is as to whether Lord Dundonald has or has not been exploited as a political issue by the opposition party. Apparently that question has aroused the interest of a more important body than ourselves, apparently the decision there has been that he has been made a political issue by the party of the opposition, and apparently that decision has not found favour on the other side of the House. To-day we have had the tune carried from treason by the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) to blasphemy by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) in expressing their views in regard to this matter. For my own part I think we might consider it in a little different light from that in which it has been considered so far in the debate. As to whether hon. gentlemen opposite are exploiting Lord Dundonald as a political issue or not—I think they have afforded the proof to-day. They have denied and reiterated the denial with a persistence that I think would entitle them to the appellation given by Lord Beaconsfield to his opposition at one time; that is to say, an organized hypocrisy, for if any body of men have without regard to rhyme or reason taken Lord Dundonald as a political issue it is our friends of the opposition and their party press. I will not depend upon mere assertion to prove this. I suppose every one will admit that the Montreal 'Gazette' is an exponent of the Conservative party, and its leading exponent if the test of respectability is to be applied. In the Montreal 'Gazette' of July 16, I find the following paragraph in the editorial notes:

> Goldwin Smith thinks a great wrong is being done Lord Dundonald by making his difficulties with the government a party question. There is no necessity for worrying. It will not be a party question after the Laurier government has been buried under in the next election.

If that is not a plain and explicit statement by the leading and most respectable organ of the Conservative party, that with Lord Dundonald they expect to win the coming elections, I admit that I do not understand the English language. I will not burden 'Hansard' with other quotations of similar character, but every gentleman of this House can read such expressions in the Conservative newspapers from day to day and from week to week. I cannot imagine what is the purpose of hon. gentlemen opposite in making the preposterous assertion in this House that they have not carried Lord Dundonald into their politics, for surely they cannot expect that the country, much less their own constituents, will believe it.

But, Sir, there is something more than this exploiting of Lord Dundonald by the Conservative party. I have noticed that their campaign has lagged considerably of late, until to-day the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell), revived the silly slander against the Prime Minister in connection with his use of the word 'foreigner' as applied to Lord Dundonald. I may be pardonald for putting this case in a way in which I have not yet heard it put. It is within the knowledge of every member of this House, and within the knowledge of every man in the Dominion who read the remarks of the Prime Minister, that instead of making the most remote allusion to Lord Dundonald as a foreigner or a stranger to the Dominion of Canada, the expression was simply applied to Lord Dundonald as a stranger in the eastern townships, a fact which no one will deny, and least of all Lord Dundonald himself. That being the case, the expression cannot be construed as being in any way offensive to Lord Dundonald or as properly or improperly describing his connection with Canada. When these gentlemen opposite carry on this campaign in such a way, and then come to the House and declare that there is no politics in it, it is an evidence of hypocrisy that has seldom been equalled in this little world of ours.

The conduct of the Conservative party in this campaign, reminds me that when some nations which are neither honourable nor courageous are engaged in warfare, they, upon occasion, place their women, their children or their hostages between themselves and the enemy, and then should these be injured by the bullets of the enemy, they raise the cry that non-combatants are being slaughtered. If Lord Dundonald is not a party to this political campaign, the Conservatives in this country are putting Lord Dundonald in front of their battle ranks and holding him there to receive the attacks that may be made on them. Then they complain that Lord Dundonald is attacked.

Well, Sir, we will not attack Lord Dundonald; we will get around behind Lord Dundonald and just for one moment discuss the position of these gentlemen who are using him in this dishonourable way. The charge made by Lord Dundonald against this government; the charge that has a purpose and that means something to the people of Canada, is, that the government has neglected the militia corps. That charge is the gravest one that could be made against any Canadian government, because it means disloyalty to Canada and disloyalty to the empire if it be true. I say, Sir, that this government does not suffer by a comparison of their loyalty either to Canada or to the empire, with the loyalty of the governments which have preceded them and which are honoured by the support of the Conservative party. Who speaks of loyalty to the empire ? The empire has been engaged in many wars during the last half century, but it was a Liberal government that first sent Canadian soldiers to take part in the wars of the empire. It was a Liberal government who did this, and Sir, it was the very government whose loyalty forsooth is called in question by members of the opposition, and by insinuations made against it by Lord Dundonald. When has occasion arisen for the manifestation of loyalty to the empire, that the Liberal government of Canada has not responded ? In case of war the instance is recent, in matters of trade the instance is almost as recent. It was a chieftain of the Conservative party who once said : If our tariff is bad for British connection, so much the worse for British connection. And, yet, the followers of that chieftain are the men who to-day charge disloyalty against this government which has given the British manufacturer a preference in Canada and asked for no return. But more than that, because it did not ask for a return in kind from the motherland, this government is accused by the Conservative party of disloyalty to Canada and to Canadian interests, and in every manufacturing city in the Dominion the campaign is daily waged against it on that ground. We do not fear a comparison of our loyalty with the loyalty of the Conservative party. Whether in French Canada or in English Canada, the Liberal party has been true and loyal to the British empire.

And now a few words in regard to Lord Dundonald himself. Lord Dundonald is spoken of as a soldier and a gentleman ; a great soldier and a noble gentleman. We do not find fault with either his military title or his civil standing. He is welcome to it all, and our friends on the other side are welcome to all the advantage the qualities of Lord Dundonald bring them, when they use him for their party purposes. But, I would like to call the attention of the House and of the country to this fact : That Lord Dundonald cannot be protected in the mantle of his noble lineage and his high military position, and at the same time act as a party hack and agent of the Conservative party.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Shame.

Mr. OLIVER. Hear, hear ; it is your shame.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Shame.

Mr. OLIVER. Hon. members ought to be ashamed ; I am sorry they are not. The attempt is being made to hoodwink the people of this country in regard to this question and to claim immunity for Lord Dundonald for his action as a Tory party-heeler on the ground of his lineage——

Mr. OLIVER.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Shame.

Mr. OLIVER. All right—and on the ground of his military position. It has been questioned to-day whether Lord Dundonald had a right to speak out as he has done on political platforms here and there throughout this country. No man properly questions his right. He had a perfect right to do so—to go on the platform in Toronto and speak his mind, and make such charges as he pleased against the government of this country—to charge disloyalty if he liked ; but he cannot expect to be protected in doing so by the sanctity of his position ; and that is what hon. members seem to hope that he is able to do. They hope to get the advantage of a nobleman and a general of the British army fighting in their ranks, while he, so to speak, shall be encased in 'that divinity which doth hedge about a king,' and which shall prevent legitimate criticism by his and their opponents.

Let us judge the action of Lord Dundonald by the standards that would be applied to a common, every-day colonial civilian—the Minister of Agriculture if you like—and see just how he stands, and whether he is or is not a partisan of hon. gentlemen opposite. I was struck by a very strong expression which his lordship used in his speech in Toronto. He said he had turned the search-light on the inner workings of the Militia Department. I think a little turning of the search-light on the action of his lordship on that particular occasion would not be amiss. Under what circumstances did he turn on the search-light, and what was the occasion ? The occasion was a private or semi-private banquet given in his honour by militia officers of the city and district of Montreal. The banquet, I say, was private or semi-private, I am not prepared to say which ; but it was certainly not public, inasmuch as only one newspaper was represented at it—so the newspaper itself has stated. Lord Dundonald has told us in his manifesto and on the platform that he had great grievances against this government of Canada, that the empire had great grievances against it, that the loyal people of this country had great grievances against it, because of its neglect of Canada's imperial defences ; that we were living in a fool's paradise at the mercy of our neighbours because of the neglect of this government. Could language be stronger ? Could charges be more severe ? Lord Dundonald did not deal with those charges at that Montreal banquet—a proper matter to be dealt with, if ever there was one, at a strictly military banquet. That surely would have been a subject worthy of turning the search-light on ; but it was not upon that subject that he turned the search-light. His search-light was turned upon the inner workings of the department.

It was turned upon the appointment of one Dr. Pickel to a position in the militia force; and when the question came to be thrashed out in parliament—and it has never yet been denied—the position of the Minister of Agriculture was found to be the correct position, and the position of Lord Dundonald the wrong position, looked at from a strictly military point of view. The Minister of Agriculture had asked that a competent man be placed in a position requiring competence. Lord Dundonald was offended because a man who was not competent was not placed in that position. The charge was not even made against the Militia Department of which he was an official and with which he was connected; it was made against the government of the day through the Minister of Agriculture. The charge was political interference under the administration of the government of the day. It was not a military matter; it was not a militia matter; it was not turning the search-light on the defenceless condition of Canada. What was it? If the Minister of Agriculture or some other plain colonial had attended a banquet as a guest under such circumstances, and had made that statement to the gentlemen present, what would he have been doing? He would have been attempting to arouse political dissatisfaction and animosity in the minds of the officers of the militia there present against the government of the day. Lord Dundonald was not turning any search-light on, because it was a private or semi-private banquet, and not a public demonstration. It was so private that his remarks were not published when the proceedings of the banquet were published. They were suppressed—'suppressed' is the word used—at the request of Lord Dundonald's friends. Did he turn on the search-light? It was only when some injudicious partisan of the opposition, having heard accidentally of the remarks of Lord Dundonald, thought they were too good to let drop. He wanted to use such good political ammunition in public. He was not willing to let it go as it was intended to go and stay where it was intended to stay, where it would poison the minds of the officers of the militia against the administration, but would not bring discredit upon the General Officer Commanding. But when this injudicious newspaper friend gave the matter to the light of day, and when his lordship was called in question about it by the militia authorities, when he was brought to the mark and had to either say that he had said it or take it back, then he turned the searchlight on. I take the liberty of saying that the action of Lord Dundonald at that banquet in Montreal, what he said and the way he said it, is fair evidence that what he did there he had been doing on previous occasions, and had he not been brought to book at that time, he would have been doing it yet. And what would he have been doing? Acting as the political agent of the party of the opposition, abusing his position as an officer of the imperial government and as an officer of the government of Canada, for the purpose of advancing the party interests of hon. gentlemen opposite. What else? Had a private individual done this, no one would have had a word to say in his defence. How much more guilty then was Lord Dundonald, who lent the prestige of his name and reputation to everything he said? Let us have fair play in this matter. Let us deal with these things on a fair footing and call them by their right names. If we are to have fair play, let us have it; and if we are to have treachery, let us have treachery and deal with it as such.

This incident does not stand alone. Some weeks have passed since that time, during which Lord Dundonald has been the recipient of numbers of demonstrations in his honour. It was the privilege of Canadian citizens to give such demonstrations in his honour as they wished, and the privilege of Lord Dundonald to accept them if he saw fit to do so. He saw fit to accept them as being strictly non-political. They were given to and accepted by him as non-political. There was a demonstration in Renfrew and another in Ottawa in his honour, and it was perfectly understood of both of these that they were strictly non-political. A demonstration was offered him by the people of Toronto, which, it was also understood, would be strictly non-political as were the others. I presume that that demonstration was accepted by His Lordship on the same understanding as were the others. There were many people gathered in Toronto at that meeting for the purpose of doing honour to His Lordship and the position he held in the army and the English nobility. No doubt many were present who felt aggrieved at his dismissal and others who acquiesced in that dismissal, as I believe every member of the opposition does, because although that question has been raised two or three times in the House, not one member of the opposition has ever dared to challenge a vote of the House on the course taken by the government or so place on record his views with regard to it. People went to that non-political demonstration, knowing it be such on the authority of the chairman of the committee. But what happened? Lord Dundonald made there a violent attack on the government of this country. He abused as he had done before, the position in which he found himself. This we have on the authority of Mr. Ellis, the chairman of the committee. He took advantage of the demonstration, in which he must have known there were Liberals taking part, to make a violent attack on the government and its policy. He had a perfect right to do so as a citizen, but he cannot be upheld in doing so as a man of strict honour. I think it is well that we should have a straight understanding with regard to this question, and just in order that there may be no mistake in regard to what I say, let me quote the words of Mr. Ellis, as published in an interview which appeared in the Toronto 'World.' Mr. Ellis, I may say, is a leading Conservative of the city of Toronto. In that interview he said :

> I was surprised at the whole tenor of his remarks. I do not think the committee expected it ; I certainly did not.

There was therefore a distinct breach of faith with the committee which organized this demonstration—at least as far as the chairman was concerned and a large number of those who attended. It appears that his attitude and the remarks he made were so far aside from what was expected, so far regardless of propriety, that they brought about this discussion in the British House of Commons, and the statement by the Secretary of War that he has been requested to return to England to speak in his own defence. I was somewhat amused at the construction placed upon this statement by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale). He said he would venture the prophecy that Lord Dundonald was being recalled in order to give him some higher position. Well, although I am not familiar with the workings of the British government, I know that it is customary in the management of public affairs in that country for the government, when they find it necessary to discipline some of its high officials, to let them down easy by apponting them to some other office. We have heard of appointments to the Chiltern Hundreds, and there are other appointments of a like character. It is quite possible that Lord Dundonald may receive some such appointment from the British government, and no one here will object to anything which the British government may do with or for him. But I would like to call attention to this fact, and I think it is perfectly right that I should do so, because we have heard a great deal about the transcendent military ability of Lord Dundonald. If he is a great military genius, if he has a great military record, then certainly, let the cause be what it may, the loss of his services to Canada will be considerable. But if it should happen peradventure that his record is not so transcendent, that his abilities are not so marvellous, then the loss to Canada will be considerably minimized. And in looking over the papers, I find that at the time when the British army needed the best officers it could get, at a time of stress and trouble, the British government apparently did not think sufficiently of those transcendent abilities or this marvellous record to appoint Lord Dundonald to a command in South Africa. He went there just as our friend from North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) did, as a soldier of fortune, and secured an appointment in the field after he got there.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I object to the use of the words 'soldier of fortune'——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES——coming from a gentleman of such calibre as the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver).

Mr. OLIVER. I will withdraw the expression and say instead a soldier of misfortune.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. A victim of the intrigue and cowardice of the Liberal government.

Mr. OLIVER. As the hon. member has charged the British Conservative governments of the present and past with cowardice, we can accept with equanimity his criticism of this government. I wanted to say that this was no discredit to Lord Dundonald, and I do not wish to be understood as impugning any discredit to him. He may have been a most successful soldier in South Africa. He may have been even as successful as our hon. friend for North Victoria.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. OLIVER. Although we must admit that he did not say as much about it. I merely want to point out that this record of his, and these military qualifications of his, the loss of which are so much bemoaned on the part of this unfortunate country, do not seem to have struck the British government at the time when they needed the best talent, and the most of it, that they could get. Therefore, I am bound to suppose, in view of all the circumstances, that, when His Lordship comes to take his place in the fighting ranks of the members of the opposition as a soldier of fortune once more, neither will they gain so much, nor will Canada lose so much by being deprived of his military services. We do not grudge hon. gentlemen opposite their new recruit. We wish him luck of the company he has, and we wish them luck of the qualifications he has brought to them. The campaign which they instituted on his behalf throughout this country is of a character according thoroughly with the campaign which his lordship himself initiated while he was still in the service of the country.

Mr. E. B. OSLER. The last speaker (Mr. Oliver) has echoed, perhaps in stronger language than we have heard from other members, but probably all the more truly, the sentiments of the members of the government towards Lord Dundonald ; in fact, has expressed them with a frankness which they have not yet ventured. They have made the charge that Lord Dundonald is being exploited by the Conservatives for political purposes. I make the charge that Lord Dundonald was exploited, was intended to be exploited and is being exploited by the party of hon. gentlemen opposite, for political purposes entirely. I attended the meeting in Toronto held in honour of Lord Dundonald. It was a spontaneous tribute to that gentleman, such a meeting as I never thought to see, such as I never thought could be held in any city or any community. It was not a political gathering; it was an expression of feeling by the people themselves. No political party could ever expect to hold such a meeting. I want to answer one charge made by the last speaker—and it is the only one I shall deal with—that Lord Dundonald committed a breach of faith in making the statement he did. I lunched with Lord Dundonald on the day of the meeting. I only arrived in town that day, but found the invitation to lunch awaiting me. I sat next to the chairman, Mr. Ellis. I asked him what the proceedings at the meeting were to be. He told me who the speakers were. I asked him what Lord Dundonald had to say, and he told me that the committee had discussed that, and that they had decided that they would make absolutely no allusion to politics, but that Lord Dundonald was free to say what he liked; they had never spoken to him, or suggested that his utterance should be restrained. I think that that answers the charge. That meeting, being such as I have described was, it seems to me, compensation to Lord Dundonald for all the discredit the present government hoped would be cast upon him. It was a meeting to compensate any man for misfortunes of that kind. Do you mean to tell me, Mr. Speaker, that five thousand people went to that hall expecting to hear Lord Dundonald speak about the weather, or to ask them how they did? They expected to hear Lord Dundonald defend himself—not so much against the charges made in this House, because he had a reply to the charges made here, though the minister tried to suppress it—but to those base slanders issued against him by the various newspaper organs of this government. He was perfectly entitled to reply to these charges, to reply to them in the strongest manner possible; and I will venture to say that of the 5,000 people who were in that hall 4,900 went away perfectly satisfied with what Lord Dundonald had said on that occasion. If this is made a party matter, if it is made more a party matter than is necessary, the fault is entirely with the government and the manner in which they have dealt with this question. What is a party matter, and one that the opposition are quite right in taking up, is the report that Lord Dundonald had read in this House as to the condition of the militia. And one point every speaker on the other side has tried to avoid—has tried to lead the discussion off to side issues by attempting to make this a personal issue between the government and Lord Dundonald—and that point, the main point which the people want to know, and do know by the utterances of the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) is that the government are interfering for political reasons with the militia of this country. Take that fact away, and the whole matter would fall as flat as any agitation ever did. That is the one point in which the people are primarily interested. On that point they believe Lord Dundonald absolutely, and he tells them that the militia is being made a political engine. We had the denial of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) on that point when the matter was first brought up; we had his unqualified acceptance of it and his admission that this was the truth, before he sat down. We had the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) also accepting it, though it was strongly denied at first. And when hon. members opposite got used to it, one after another verified the statement that the militia was as much a party question as the letting of contracts or the appointments to be made from one end of this country to the other. That is the point that interested the people—not the personality of Lord Dundonald—not the fact of his dismissal—but the fact that he has turned the searchlight on the scheme of this government to make a political engine of the militia of this country. Now, the dismissal of Lord Dundonald, as one hon. gentleman said, would have passed off with very little comment had it not been that the manner of that dismissal roused the feelings of the people. I venture to say that there is not a business man in this House on either side who would have dismissed the lowest clerk in his employ, even for the gravest offense, unless it were an offence against honesty, as Lord Dundonald was dismissed by this government. To an outsider it would look as if they deliberately considered how they could heap the greatest insult upon him. And, to my mind, that is the gravest charge next to the charge that has been proved and accepted—that the ministers are debasing the militia of this country into a mere political machine, which, as I say, is the point that is most regarded and most keenly resented by the people. Now, quotations have been made from the London despatches. Those against the government, the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), tells us, must not be accepted because they may not be true. But those in favour of the government hon. gentlemen opposite accept without hesitation. Yet the very despatches that they object to are those that are sent over by the Canadian Associated Press which are paid for by this government to the amount of $15,000 a year. Now, let me read the closing words of one of the speeches, that of Mr. Lloyd George, Liberal. He says:

It was grossly unfair and mischievous that Lord Dundonald should be allowed to stir up strife—a feud between the two races in Canada.

Now, Sir, Lord Dundonald in his speech in Toronto made a very pleasing and earnest reference to the French Canadians of Canada. He stated that in all his military career and since he came here he had made no distinctions between religions and nationalities and he also stated that he had the greatest admiration for the French Canadian citizens. He spoke with enthusiasm, and no part of his speech was received with greater enthusiasm by that vast audience than the sentiment expressed from his heart on that one point. No man could have spoken more earnestly, no remarks could have been more appreciated. Now let me read an extract from a telegram to the Toronto 'Globe,' of December 20, 1901. It is as follows :

London, Dec. 12.

The meeting at Birmingham has sent the following telegram to Mr. Chamberlain :—

Lloyd George, the traitor, was not allowed to say a word. The citizens have passed resolutions, expressing confidence in the government, and their admiration of your unique and fearless services for King and country.

That is the class of men who are making mischief in this country. Can you imagine a man who is doing more mischief than such a one as this, who makes false statements, who puts false views into the mouth of any man in this country, publishes them in England, whence the Canadian Associated Press, paid for by this government, cables them out here That is the kind of literature that makes trouble, if trouble there is, between the nationalities. I listened with pleasure to the remarks of the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) and I think that if we all paid attention and took to heart the words which he spoke we would be the better for it. I can assure any one of my French Canadian fellow citizens, on that side of the House or on this side, that if they come to Toronto or to any other place in Ontario they will have a reception as cordial, as enthusiastic as they will get anywhere in their own province.

Mr. LANCASTER. From the Conservatives.

Mr. OSLER. I will not say from the Conservatives, but from the Orangemen. I am not a member of that body. From the people of Ontario the French Canadians will get the warmest possible reception. I deplore greatly that there should be this constant bandying of words as to differences between one nationality and another. If it should be so that there was a feeling of hostility it should be the duty of every one of us to try and overcome that because we have to live together in this country, whether we like it or not. There is no such feeling, Mr. Speaker, in Ontario, and I say that it is despatches of this sort, the work of these mischief makers, who are looking through every page of the newspapers to clip a word here and there, publish them, and magnify them, that are making the mischief and trouble and I appeal to every member of this House to, as far as he can, endeavour to put a stop to that state of affairs.

At the meeting in Toronto, Lord Dundonald said :

I had almost forgotten to mention one other charge insinuated against me in parliament, of having made a difference between a French Canadian officer and an English-speaking one—in favour of the latter. I have already shown in the paper and it has not been contradicted, how groundless was this charge. Here in this great capital of the great English-speaking province of Ontario I desire to say that no man's race or religion has ever biased me. The French Canadian militia know full well that I have always had their interests at heart and have been actuated by the utmost possible friendliness for them.

That statement was cheered to the echo, and I know that sentiment is the sentiment of the people of Ontario, notwithstanding the trouble that men like Lloyd George tried to bring about. Let me repeat that the charge that the Conservative party are endeavouring to make political capital out of this Dundonald matter is absolutely untrue. If political capital is to be made out of it the charge is to be laid at the door of the members of the government and their supporters who have from the very beginning of this question endeavoured to abuse Lord Dundonald, to make it a personal matter as against Lord Dundonald, to connect him with the opposition, so that they may hide away from the public gaze the grave charge which His Lordship has made that the government are debasing the militia for party purposes.

Mr. H. A. WARD. I listened with great attention to the remarks of the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. A. T. Thompson). He spent nearly half an hour in an elaborate defence of the government and particularly of the Militia Department, but he seemed to be perhaps unaware that in making that elaborate defence he was at the same time pronouncing the greatest possible eulogy upon Lord Dundonald. Every one of the reforms in the militia system which he mentioned during his short speech was I believe, with perhaps one exception, introduced by the late General Officer Commanding. I believe that if the hon. gentleman were to speak out what is actually in his heart he would say, as every militia officer in this country would say, that Canada did suffer a great calamity in the loss of Lord Dundonald's services to the militia. My hon. friend in referring to what has been done by the Minister of Militia referred chiefly to the army service corps and the medical corps, but he left out one which is perhaps of as much importance as the two which the mentioned, namely the intelligence corps which was established under the advice of Lord Dundonald. Laymen perhaps may not understand what the army service corps is and what they have accomplished in the camps in this country. But I will tell hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, what the army service corps has done. That corps has introduced into the camps of the militia of this country, not only good bread but good beef which they very seldom had before that reform was introduced. Every animal that was used by the militia in camp was slaughtered by this army service corps and the bread which was of the best in the country, was baked by the army service corps and delivered to the quartermasters of the different regiments in camp. At the camp at Kingston this year through some strange mistake made by some of the officials of the Militia Department, instead of live animals being called for in the contracts, dead meat was called for and the consequence was that after having an experience of the best beef that could be produced in this country during the camp last year, we had to submit this year to beef of a very inferior quality for the men. How that mistake occurred, I am not going to say but it was more than whispered that some contractors in Kingston desired to make a little out of the camp which they had not made last year, and as a consequence that little mistake crept into the calls for tenders for the contract for beef there. I certainly hope that the Minister of Militia does not intend to abolish that portion of the service which the army service corps has given to the militia camps but that next year he will see to it that no such mistake is made in the advertisement for tenders for beef and that we shall have the beef as it was last year, of the very first quality.

In reference to the intelligence corps, which was initiated by Lord Dundonald, who brought a very efficient officer of his staff to this country to establish the crops, I may say, as every one knows who followed the progress of the campaign in South Africa, that the British were terribly handicapped by not having proper maps of the country over which they were fighting. Lord Dundonald, recognizing this fact, introduced an intelligence department here, which will give to the militia of Canada military maps of all the country over which an army operating in Canada would possibly have to fight. That would be about two years ago. Another thing which was referred to by the hon. member for Haldimand was the magnificent improvement which has been made by the present Department of Militia and Defence in the manufacture of cartridges. I am sorry that the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence is not in his seat at the present time, because I would like to draw his attention particularly to this fact. The hon. member for Haldimand stated that the present government had increased the capacity of the cartridge factory in Quebec sixfold. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman, and I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence, if this is a fact, where are the cartridges that are manufactured in this cartridge factory in Quebec. I am informed that at the present time there are only sufficient cartridges to supply the whole militia force of Canada, if in the field, for about two hours, and if that factory has a capacity six-fold as great as it had under the previous government, I would ask in all sincerity where are the cartridges that are being manufactured? There is another thing that may properly be brought to the attention of the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence, and it is this: We have only one cartridge factory in this Dominion. Supposing, for the sake of argument, we were having trouble, and that the cartridge factory at Quebec was shut off by an army coming into this country, what position would the province of Ontario be in? I think this is most important, and I am glad to hear that there is some chance of the government taking up the matter of establishing another factory somewhere in the west.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Again on Lord Dundonald's recommendation.

Mr. WARD. They are doing this, as my hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) says, on Lord Dundonald's recommendation. It was rather amusing to listen to the speeches of the hon. member for Alberta and the hon. member for Haldimand. They both set up a straw man, and, as it were in strident tones, knocked him down again. I have never heard any charge of disloyalty made against the Liberal party from this side of the House, and yet these hon. gentlemen spent several minutes in trying to prove that such a charge had been made; and after setting up this straw man, they undertook to knock him down again. We all believe in our loyalty, and there is not a man on this side of the House or on the other side who is required to say anything about it. The hon. Minister of Militia and Defence, I am glad to say, is not in his place, but——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am here.

Mr. WARD. I see the hon. gentleman. The hon. member for Alberta said, in the course of his remarks, that Lord Dundonald was altogether wrong all through these proceedings, and that hon. gentleman used language which, I am glad to say, has been peculiar to himself and has not been adopted generally by hon. members on the other side of the House. But he has nothing whatever to say about the action of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). The hon. Minister of Militia and Defence, for whom I have great respect, said at a banquet—and it is something for which he ought to be commended—at Montreal, given to Sir Percy Girouard, that he would not tolerate any interference with the militia even by a colleague, and that the interference of a colleague, or of any person politically, would sap the very foundations of the militia system. I am sorry to say that the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence should have seen fit to have abdicated his functions and delegated his duties to the hon. Minister of Agriculture at the time he knew there was a controversy going on in regard to the formation of this regiment in the eastern townships, in which the hon. Minister of Agriculture was taking a great deal of interest. I say it is an unfortunate thing that the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence should have delegated his functions to that hon. gentleman, knowing the facts of the case, and allowed him to manage his department during his absence. If 'Hansard' reports him rightly, he said that the trouble could not possibly have occurred if he had been present at the time.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am sure the hon. gentleman will allow me once more to correct that statement. I said nothing of the kind. I said that if I had been in Ottawa at the time that the organization of the corps in the eastern townships was commenced I would have consulted my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture, and that probably this trouble would not have occurred.

Mr. WARD. I do not wish to misrepresent the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence, but I think that what he has said virtually bears out the statement I made. I simply wish to convey this fact to the minds of hon. members that he did say something to the effect that if he had been present during the organization of the corps this unfortunate trouble would not have occurred. It is extremely to be regretted that it did occur, and I simply wish to emphasize the feeling of the militia corps generally throughout the country, that Lord Dundonald was the best officer we ever had, and that the militia has suffered a great disadvantage as the result of his removal. What is to be regretted still further—perhaps this is not exactly the time to make statements of this kind, but I had not an opportunity of taking part in the two debates that took place in the House—is the summary and unceremonious manner of the dismissal of Lord Dundonald. We know very well that all through this unfortunate incident very scant courtesy has been shown that brilliant soldier, and that in no way has the government recognized the services that he has rendered to this country. I was surprised to hear the hon. Minister of Finance speak so positively on the strength of what had been said by Mr. Winston Churchill in the British House of Commons of the Conservative party exploiting Lord Dundonald. I have looked in vain in the speeches of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House to-day to find any evidence in confirmation of that statement. In the city of Toronto, as my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) has said, there was not a word of political significance uttered by any of those who made speeches there, and if the government are inclined to take what Lord Dundonald has said in his own defence, and very rightly said, as evidence of his acting with the Conservative party, it is their business. There has been no effort, as far as I can learn, or as far as I have seen, to exploit Lord Dundonald. He is quite capable of taking care of himself in every sense of the word, but it is to be most deeply regretted that we have lost the services of this gentleman to the militia force, and I cannot reiterate that statement too often. Many things have been said of Lord Dundonald of a very derogatery character by the press of the country and by hon. gentlemen on the government side of the House, and it is not to be wondered at that he should take the very first opportunity of defending himself, as he did most effectually in the city of Toronto. Hon. gentlemen may have remembered not very long ago the accident which happened in New York, by which a very large number of people were drowned on the 'General Slocum,' and that afterwards reference was made to one of the ballads of Colonel John Hay, who is now, I think, Secretary of State of the United States government. It was referred to in this way, that in the fact of the engineer having died at his post, another 'Jim Bludso' had been found. There is another poem of Colonel John Hay, which hon. gentlemen supporting the government might take to heart in connection with this very Dundonald incident. It is a little ballad devoted to the remarks of Sergeant Tilmon Joy, to the committee of white men in a western town who had got together and passed resolutions expelling a nigger. I will give you one of the verses, so that you can see the application :

> I reckon I git your drift, gents,—
> You 'low the boy shan't stay ;
> This is a whiteman's country ;
> You's Dimocrats, you say ;
> And whereas, and seein', and wherefore,
> The times bein' all out o' j'int,
> The nigger has got to mosey
> From the limits of Spunky P'int !
> Le's reason the thing a minute ;
> I'm an old-fashioned Dimocrat too,
> Though I laid my politics out o' the way
> For to keep till the war was through.
> But I come back here, allowin'
> To vote as I used to do,
> Though it gravels me like the devil to train
> Along o' sich fools as you.

Now gentlemen, there was no Tilmon Joy found in the Liberal cabinet when in that very unceremonious way, not a nigger, but a gentleman and a soldier, was expelled from the limits of Canada. There was not one found amongst the Liberal ministers would stand up for Lord Dundonald and prevent his expulsion from this country. They all with one accord held up their hands for that magnificent Order in Council to absolve the Minister of Agriculture from any wrong doing—although they said in the document itself that these statements regarding the Minister of Agriculture were unnecessry to the record. They passed their Order in Council and sent it forth to the country, and the General Officer Commanding was expelled without one voice being raised in his favour in that cabinet council of Liberal ministers. I can tell hon. gentleman opposite, that they will find when they appeal to the country, that there will be a good many Sergeant Tilmon Joys in Canada.

Mr. SAMUEL BARKER. I desire to say a few words on this question, not for the purpose of discussing the militia, but to repudiate as a Conservative, the imputation that the Conservative party has been using the Dundonald incident, or Lord Dundonald himself for political purposes. I assert, that if it had come to the knowledge of the Conservative party, that the Minister of Agriculture had interfered and meddled with the appointments to the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons as we now know he did, we would have taken the course we have taken whether Lord Dundonald had been at the head of the militia or not. No matter who the man might have been who was the General Officer Commanding, the position we took would have been taken, and would have been persisted in as we intend to persist in it. I go further and say, that if Lord Dundonald had condoned the action of the Minister of Agriculture, if he had been silent on the subject and the matter had come to our knowledge, we would have taken this same action, regardless of Lord Dundonald or his opinion. The point is, not what Lord Dundonald thinks or does not think, but the interests and welfare of the militia of Canada, and the absolute necessity now and at all times to prevent such political interference with appointments to the militia as that which we have been condemning. I object to the language of the Finance Minister when he speaks of this as a Dundonald question. It is not a Dundonald question as regards this House or as regards this country. It might more properly be called a Fisher question ; but above all it is a militia question, and a question of the non-interference of politicians with the militia. That is the question before the House. I object to the Minister of Finance charging the Conservative party with using Lord Dundonald for political purposes. The Conservative party has never thought of such a thing, and I can assure hon. gentlemen opposite, that the Conservative party as a party are not quite such fools as to treat the question in that manner. The matter is a very serious one; it has gone to the hearts and will stay in the hearts of the people of this country, and we would only weaken the attack we have made and will continue to make upon the government, by treating it as a personal question relating to the gentleman who happened to be the Commander in Chief at the moment. I want to say a word as to a quotation made by the Minister of Finance. I do so because in apparently making a quotation he has used language conveying a very different signification from what appears in the paragraph he was reading from. The report in the paper says :

> No representation had been made by the government of Canada, which was able to take care of itself.

That is a very simple statement indeed ; a commonplace remark ; that the government of Canada is able to take care of itself. Let us see how the Minister of Finance turned it, or I would say twisted it, in order to give it a different meaning. These are his exact words, I have obtained them :

> But there are other matters in which no such aid is needed, and this unhappy Dundonald business is one of that kind. Mr. Arnold Foster very correctly stated, and it is perhaps the point in his observations which we appreciate most that this is a matter in which the Canadian government have shown that they are well able to deal with it themselves.

That is a very different thing from the report of what Mr. Foster said, as it appears in the newspapers. The Minister of Finance uses language that would convey to the people of Canada, that Mr. Arnold Foster has approved of the past action of the government of Canada in this matter, that the government of Canada in what they have done have shown that they were well able to deal with it themselves. Why does the Minister of Finance want to turn the words ; why did he not use the exact words in the newspaper report ? why did he want to use Mr. Arnold Foster as apparently approving of the action that the Canadian government had taken in this matter ? The Minister of Finance had the exact words before him, and I object to his wrong interpretation of the words of Mr. Arnold Foster, which interpretation is as far from being the truth, as is the statement that we are using Lord Dundonald for political purposes. The Minister of Finance went out of his way to pay a compliment to Mr. Lloyd George. He said :

> Mr. Lloyd George, I am bound to speak of as one of the most distinguished members of the imperial parliament.

Well, I think most of us know something of Mr. Lloyd George, and we know that if he is distinguished for anything it is for his extreme political opinions. He is distinguished as being one of the small party that were known in England as the pro-Boer party ; a party which would never have sent a soldier to South Africa if they had had their way. Mr. Lloyd George is a gentleman who would have withdrawn the British flag from South Africa if he had had his way, and this is the gentleman the Minister of Finance belauds here as if he were one of the greatest men in England There is a rather significant paragraph in this paper which was not read.

Mr. Lloyd George spoke of 'the pain this controversy would cause Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who, as was truly said, was one of the staunchest friends of the empire at the time of its great struggle.' Well, those who know Mr. Lloyd George know perfectly well that the man he would call the staunchest friend of the British empire in that great struggle would be a man holding his own opinions as to submission to the Boers; and I doubt very much whether the First Minister of Canada will take it as a compliment that that remark has fallen from Mr. Lloyd George. If the hon. Finance Minister wants to stand on the same footing as Mr. Lloyd George does, he will accept that compliment; but I think there are few men in this Dominion who would want to stand in the same shoes as Mr. Lloyd George does with regard to South Africa.

Now, Sir, when we took up this question in this House, I was under the impression, as I think most gentlemen on this side were that we were doing our duty as members of the opposition. We were criticising one of the departments of government. We had heard of certain things that were being done in the administration or non administration of the Militia Department that ought to be condemned, regardless of the source from which the information came, except that we knew the facts stated to be true. We condemned what had been done. Was that not our duty? What would be the object of our sitting here as an opposition if we were to allow such a matter as that to pass uncondemned when we were considering the Militia Department? For what purpose are we here? We criticise and condemn the railway administration. Are we exploiting somebody when we do that? We took up the Grand Trunk Pacific matter a year ago and criticised it and condemned it, and we had the assistance of Hon. Mr. Blair in doing so. Were we exploiting Mr. Blair? Surely the fact that Mr. Blair happened to join us in our condemnation of the government was not an exploitation of Mr. Blair by the opposition. Nor is the fact that we happened to think and speak about the Militia Department as Lord Dundonald did, an exploitation by us of that eminent soldier for party purposes. Our view of the misconduct of the hon. Minister of Agriculture in meddling with the militia has nothing whatever to do with the General Officer Commanding. We have exploited—as apparently we want to use that word so much in this House—the Treadgold Commission, and with some effect; but I do not know that in doing that, we exploited any particular gentleman connected with it. We have been taking up the Audit Department. Was that exploiting Mr. McDougall? Surely we can take up and discuss and criticise a department without acting for or using a particular individual who happens to be connected with it. Now, I object to the Finance Minister trying to sidetrack this question by diverting the attention of the public from the conduct of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and that of the hon. Minister of Militia to Lord Dundonald. Lord Dundonald can defend himself. We do not attempt to defend him here. It is not our business to do so. Our business is to criticise hon. gentlemen opposite in regard to the conduct of the affairs entrusted to them, and we generally do so, no matter who the man may be who may be helped or hurt by our criticism.

At Six o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at Eight o'clock.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 120) respecting the Montreal Terminal Railway Company.—Mr. L. P. Demers.

SUPPLY INTER-IMPERIAL PREFERENTIAL TRADE—DISMISSAL OF LORD DUNDONALD.

House resumed debate on motion of Mr. Fielding, for the House to go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. BARKER. Before six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the action of the opposition in the House with regard to the question under discussion as it affected the militia, and I ask what could the opposition have done when it learned what had been attempted with regard to the Scottish Dragoons, other than it did. I ask whether we did more than our duty, and I think that question can only be answered by the statement that the opposition did its simple duty and no more. If there has been any exploiting, who has been guilty of it? Did the Conservative party exploit the Montreal banquet? I think not. I do not think that any hon. gentleman on the other side would pretend for one moment that the Conservative party, any more than the Liberal party, had anything to do with or any knowledge of that banquet, before it took place. Did we exploit the publishing of the proceedings at that banquet in the press? I think not. It is not even pretended that we did. Did we exploit the minister's letter demanding from the General Officer Commanding an explanation of what occurred at that meeting ? Certainly not. Nor did we exploit the publication in the press of that correspondence. We took no part in it. It all took place without any interference of the Conservative opposition. I do not believe, Sir, that anybody will question that statement. The incident arose entirely outside of the Conservative party. Whatever interference there was before the matter was brought to the attention of this House came from the Liberal party alone. When the facts came before us, we condemned the Minister of Agriculture for his interference and meddling. We condemned that minister who, not content, Mr. Speaker, with the plough-share, wanted to don the sword as well; who, not content with the management of one department of the government, which certainly should exercise all the qualities he possesses, undertook to interfere with and control another department with which constitutionally he had nothing to do. Nor was it a mere temporary interference with the departmental functions and duties of his colleagues. No, this had been going on for months. It began in the early days, almost at the very inception of the organization of this regiment. We find, as was shown in the discussion in this House, that from the very beginning the Minister of Militia was almost ignored in this matter. From the very outset, the Minister of Agriculture was interviewed by the officers and by everybody interested in the formation of that dragoon regiment. They came to him as if they were dealing with something affecting the experimental farm. They never went near the Minister of Militia, and one would have wondered why they went to the one gentleman and not the other, had not political developments been brought to light, had we not found that the Minister of Agriculture was interfering, not because he had more experience in militia matters than his colleague, but because his own political interests were involved. It was for this reason alone he interfered in this matter and took it entirely out of the hands of his colleague, the Minister of Militia, who, I regret to say, calmly submitted to the interference. And indeed there can be very little doubt that the Minister of Militia went out of the way at a convenient moment in order to give his colleague full swing and let him deal with this matter to suit his own political purposes. He dealt with it, not in the interests of the militia, but in the interests of his political party—a party of course which would not think of exploiting such a thing as a regiment of dragoons or any other regiment for party purposes. That, Sir, was the position under which the matter came before this House, and we dealt with it in that light. We had some notable words from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), words that we could find no fault with. He said, as reported at page 4582 of 'Hansard':

> No political consideration should be allowed to interfere.

Well, Sir, there is nobody on this side of the House who will dispute that, for it coincides exactly with our own view ; and, if the hon. gentleman had only practised what he professed, there would have been no discussion upon this subject in Canada, there would have been no discussion upon it in the British House of Commons, nor should we have had all this turmoil and trouble over the question of the General Officer Commanding, who, probably, had it not been for the course pursued by hon. gentlemen opposite, would have been General Officer Commanding to-day and would have continued in that position for some years to come. What is the fact ? In the face of these good professions of the hon. gentleman that no political interference should be allowed to interfere, we find the true state of things explained at page 12 of the papers brought down by the government, in which the colonel of the regiment who speaks at peril of his commission,—so that, I think, we can accept every word of what he says as certainly not going beyond the truth—puts the facts in this form :

> Mr. Fisher objected to him——

That is, to the proposed major of the regiment.

> —for no other reason than that he was a strong political opponent of his, and was quite determined to block the whole organization unless Dr. Pickel's name was withdrawn.

That, Sir, is the fact. That is the way the hon. Minister of Agriculture acts in the fact of his profession, put on 'Hansard' that 'no political considerations should be allowed to interfere.' And yet we are charged with using for political purposes this question that has been brought before the House and before the country in such a manner. I would like to ask hon. gentlemen opposite what is to be the result of this sort of thing if it goes on. If we are to have militia trained on political lines, where are these regiments and the officers who command them to find themselves placed ? Will the colonel of the regiment sit at his mess table, and arrange all the good grits on his right hand and on his left all the bad Tories ; or if the other party happens to be in power the Conservatives on the right and the Grits on the left ? And when the question arises of which soldier is to be raised from the ranks and made a corporal, is the first question to be considered what his politics may be ? Are they to consider whether he is a good party man or an indifferent party man ? Are they to consider, when they are making a man a sergeant, whether he has done his whole duty as a politician, or whether, perhaps, he has a cousin, or a nephew, or a brother, who happens to be on the opposite side? Are these the considerations that are to be taken up whenever anything is to be done for the militia? And yet, that would be the inevitable result of the conduct of the Minister of Agriculture, and the conduct of the Minister of Militia in submitting to this uncalled for and unconstitutional dictation. That most unfortunate conduct of ministers led to the speech made at the banquet at Montreal. Sir, I do not care whether that speech was an indiscretion or not. There have been many indiscreet things done that have resulted in good; and, however, indiscreet Lord Dundonald may have been—and we need not enter into the discussion of that here—I trust and believe that the conduct of the Minister of Agriculture in this matter will result in great good to the militia of Canada, for the outcry against his interference on this occasion will put down, once for all, any desire of a minister, no matter to what party he may belong, to ever again interfere in such a manner with the appointments in the militia.

I do not care to pursue that subject further; we discussed it pretty fully when it was before the House, and for my part I think it ought to have been left there. But was it left there? After we had discussed the question in this House, was it ended? And, if it did not end, who continued it? Was it the Conservative party? I think not. Who was it made attacks, after the discussion in this House, upon Lord Dundonald? Did not we find the whole Liberal press filled with the attacks on the General Officer, charging him with political intent, charging him with incompetency, and reflecting upon him in every possible manner? Why, I think the Minister of Militia went so far as to question the English used by the Earl of Dundonald. There was nothing that they did not say. Was that exploiting the Dundonald incident? Was that continuing the Dundonald question and using Lord Dundonald for political purposes? I do not care whether they used it for attack upon their opponents or for their own defence, the men who pursued that policy used the Dundonald incident for political purposes. And hon. gentlemen opposite, and not the Conservatives, are the guilty parties. But there was more, Sir. Who furnished to the Liberal papers information that was contained only in private or suppressed reports? Who conveyed to the Toronto 'Globe' information on which to base charges that Lord Dundonald had made extravagant demands on this country? Was that exploiting this incident on behalf of the Conservative party or was it exploiting it on behalf of hon. gentlemen opposite? I think they were carrying on the warfare on political lines when they were acting in this way. Was not the attack upon Lord Dundonald in nearly every Liberal organ? And, when Lord Dundonald was asked up to Toronto to address the people, was he to go there and be silent with regard to the matter on which he had been attacked? Were hon. gentlemen to be given the opportunity to say that Lord Dundonald, by silence, admitted what was charged against him? These hon. gentleman would have been delighted if only Lord Dundonald had held his tongue. They would have come out next morning and said: Lord Dundonald dared not deny the charges they made. And as to the people who asked him to speak is it to be supposed that the ladies and gentlemen of Toronto who went by the thousand to receive him, expected to listen to a lecture on cavalry tactics or to a reading of the latest edition of his work upon drill? What did they go for? Why, the question was red hot in the country, Lord Dundonald being the hero of it; and these people went to hear what Lord Dundonald had to say in his own defence against the attacks that the Liberal papers were making upon him. That is what they went for, and there was not a man or woman in that hall in Toronto who would not have been disappointed if he had left unsaid the things he said—there is no question about that. It is absurd for hon. gentlemen opposite to say that Lord Dundonald took advantage of the position. Why, it would have been sheer nonsense to ask such a man to go from Ottawa to Toronto to address five or six thousand people in Massey Hall and yet say nothing on the only subject in which they were interested. And are we to suppose, do hon. gentlemen opposite suppose, that the people of Toronto are so unintelligent that they do not appreciate the proprieties? Do the gentlemen opposite suppose that the reception which the general met with on that occasion did not show clearly where the hearts of the people were on the subject? Do they suppose that the acclamations with which he was received meant nothing? Do they suppose that when the people of Toronto took the horses from his carrriage and dragged it to the station they did not endorse everything he did and said? Does it mean nothing when a man receives in Toronto, the chief city of Ontario, the grandest reception that any man ever received there? And yet hon. gentlemen say he is being exploited for political purposes. I can understand how he might have been exploited. I know that if only 400 or 500 people had gone to that meeting he would have been exploited for the Liberal party. The difficulty is that it was a grand success, that the people showed their sympathy with the man. The whole difficulty lies there: it was not that he went to the reception, it was the fact that he carried the people with him and that he made it plain that he has got the heart and sympathy of every man in Canada. I do not care whether you speak of the incident as regards Quebec, as regards Ontario, or as regards any other province. I believe that Lord Dundonald to-day could go into any county in Quebec or in any other province in this country and meet with as good a reception as he met with in Toronto. It is absolute nonsense to say that Lord Dondonald was seeking a political result. I believe that there are few men within sound of my voice who know what Lord Dunuonald's politics are. For my own part I do not know ; I never heard what they are, and I do not think any one here can give me that information. Lord Dundonad cares no more about the politics of Canada than he does about the politics of Australia or New Zealand. He is a British subject and soldier, who is here for one purpose, to do good for the militia of Canada. That is his sole purpose and whether Conservatives are in power or Liberals are in power is a matter of absolute indifference to him. Nobody can question that, and I venture to say that if a Conservative government had been in power and the Conservative minister had done what the present ministers did, Lord Dundonald would have acted in precisely the way he did, Mr. Speaker, I should have liked to have heard the denunciations of hon. gentlemen opposite if in such an event they had been sitting on this side of the House. It would be a treat to hear the First Minister get up and denounce as an outrage upon the people of this country that an officer sent here to command the militia should be treated in such a manner for political purposes. Had a Conservative minister of Agriculture taken advantage of his position to meddle in the organization of a militia regiment, and to prevent the giving of a commission to a political opponent to a reputable man simply because he happened to be a Liberal, what an outcry we would have had ! If the First Minister could only come over here and make such a speech for us it would be worth reading a dozen times over. But it is the other way around, and hon. gentlemen opposite look upon it in another light. The Minister of Agriculture is allowed to interfere, to intrude upon a matter with which he has nothing to do, and to do more mischief to the cause of the militia of Canada than he can do good in his agricultural department if he lives a century. I have served in my time in all ranks in the militia from private up to commanding a company. I can carry my mind a great many years back and in all my time, until this intrusion of the Minister of Agriculture, I never heard of political interference in the militia. I know, Sir, that in the city of which I have the honour to be one of the representatives, we have an old regiment, the 13th of Hamilton, which is a credit to the country. That regiment for years was commanded under the Conservative government by a Liberal Colonel, a Liberal of the Liberals, the present Attorney General of Ontario, and I say to his credit that I do not believe that in all the many years that he commanded the regiment there was ever a question on his part or on the part of any officer of his regiment as to whether an applicant for a commission was a Liberal or Conservative. The great difficulty in these cases is to get the men who can afford to take the positions. I can understand thoroughly the position of the people down in Sweetsburg. In Hamilton, where perhaps we have at our command more men of means than they have at Sweetsburg, the trouble is to get men who will assume the expense, and it is rather a favour to a regiment than otherwise for a young man to accept a commission. A new regiment has recently been formed, a Scottish regiment too, and I can only say that I hope and believe it will always have as excellent a reputation as the old 13th for freedom from party politics. I know too that in the battery of artillery that has been for many years a credit to the city of Hamilton, there were under a Conservative government, four Liberals and only one Conservative officer and I have been assured by gentlemen connected with that battery they never heard one word as to the political leaning of any man holding a commission in it. I think that what I know of Hamilton is the case in Toronto and throughout the province of Ontario, and I have yet to learn that there is any other condition in the province of Quebec. I believe that the same spirit has actuated the people of the province of Quebec and that it has remained for the Minister of Agriculture to endeavour to start a new order of things and to intrude politics into the militia to affect, perhaps, the chances of the return of some particular man to the local legislature or to the House of Commons.

Mr. E. GUSS PORTER (West Hastings). I would not interpose to prolong the discussion of this matter, which to my mind is a most unfortunate affair, both in the interests of Canada itself and in its relations to the British empire, but for the fact that there is involved in this discussion a principle which is of the utmost importance not only to Canadians but to British subjects throughout the world. It involves to my mind a principle which is being unwarrantably violated by the government of the day. The principle to which I refer is this : Shall a British subject in any part of the British domain be denied that privilege which we all claim to enjoy—the right of free thought and free speech ? I do not believe that in Canada such a sentiment as that, the denial of free thought, and free speech will be tolerated by the people. I do not believe it would be tolerated in any other part of the British empire and it is because this principle is involved that I take this occasion to offer a few remarks upon the question of the dismissal of Lord Dundonald and the action of the government in connection therewith. Prior to the speech made by Lord Dundonald in Toronto I concede that the matter was fairly treated and might be fairly treated as a matter of etiquette as between himself and the government under whom he was serving, but once the government had satisfied itself by wrecking its vengeance on Lord Dundonald by the summary dismissal of that gentleman from its service he ceased to be under the control of this government and as a free born British subject he was entitled to speak as he did speak in the city of Toronto. He was, as my hon. friend says, after his dismissal by the government an elector of the Dominion of Canada entitled to all the rights and privileges appertaining to a British subject in this country.

I want just for a moment to contrast the action of the government in its dealings with Lord Dundonald with its action in its dealings with another and as celebrated an individual but one who is not celebrated upon the same lines. The offence charged against Lord Dundonald was an act of indiscretion. It was charged that he was guilty of a breach of etiquette as between himself and the government and without calling upon Lord Dundonald to justify himself or make his defence before this government or before the country he was summarily dismissed as every hon. gentleman in this House knows and as the country knows full well. He was not offered the privilege of any ordinary British subject, not possessing the merit that Lord Dundonald has won, of making his defence. He was not accorded the privilege which is offered to the ordinary criminal of the land of making amends for his first offence by trying to do better. He was not offered the opportunity of retracting what he had said and endeavouring by his conduct in the future to satisfy the government of the day and to satisfy its requirements in regard to his position. He was a man as full of honours as he was full of years. A young man though he may be, I venture to say that the honours which have been heaped upon him as a result of the service which he has rendered to his country very much predominate, override and overshadow anything that has occurred during the few years he has spent here. I venture to say right here that the name of Lord Dundonald, although he may have been discredited by this government, will be held in honour and in reverence by the people of Canada and of the British empire when this government has gone down in disgrace. But, Sir, let me refer to the analogy that I spoke of a moment ago. We have in the service of the government to-day another man who has a history in Canada. He is not the hero of Ladysmith. He is not the man who had the courage to lead our Canadian boys to victory in South Africa. He is not the man who had the courage to take his life in his hand to defend the British empire. He is the man who went throughout the length and breadth of Canada to do dirty nefarious, political election tricks and was afterwards appointed to the position that he now occupies in Great Britain. I refer to Mr. W. T. R. Preston. There is this difference between the two gentlemen that I speak of: One, Lord Dundonald, full of honour; the other, W. T. R. Preston, practically driven from Canada by dishonour. How does the government treat these two men? The man who would command the respect of this government, who would command the respect of the people of this country is cast out and discredited. Mr. W. T. R. Preston is given a position of emolument, a position of profit, an important position under this government and not only that, but, Sir, he is guilty of the very same offence, if it may be considered an offence, that Lord Dundonald has been charged with by this government. During the discussion of this very matter and since Lord Dundonald's case has come before the government, Mr. W. T. R. Preston has taken occasion to write a letter to the public press. What for? For the purpose of defending Lord Dundonald?—no, For the purpose of defending the British people?—no. For the purpose of the business for which he is employed?—no; but, for the purpose of defending this government that he felt was in need of defence. When he was guilty of that indiscretion what did this government do? Did it say to Mr. Preston as it said to Lord Dundonald: You have been guilty of a grave indiscretion and off comes your head without a defence?—no, no; not at all. When it found out that he had been guilty of an act of indiscretion and when the matter was pressed home to this government very strongly, so strongly that it felt it must do something, what did it do? The government wrote home and told him that he must not do it again, that it would give him another chance. I am reminded of the fact that his salary is to be increased this year. Perhaps this is the reward for his activity in serving the government in this way. This is only one instance of the way in which this government has treated Lord Dundonald in comparison with the way in which it has treated gentlemen in its employ who are favourable to it. I do not mean to have the House infer from this that Lord Dundonald is unfavourable to the government. I do not believe that Lord Dundonald is unfavourable to the government. I believe that Lord Dundonald by every expression he has given utterance to since this matter has come before the people and by his acts during the time he was employed in the administration of military affairs in this country, has shown that he is not unfavourable to this government, that he is not unfavourable to this opposition, but that he is favourable to the whole people of Canada and that he is true to the British empire. So, I think it is paltry, it is low, it is mean for any one to charge Lord Dundonald with being unfavourable to either one political party or the other. High as our political standard may be, Lord Dundonald looks to a still higher standard; his object is that of a true patriot. I wish to call attention to another matter, and I make reference to it particularly because it occurred in the riding I have the honour to represent, and it illustrates as forcibly as can be illustrated, the honesty and the integrity of Lord Dundonald and the high purpose of the man. It proves that he was not actuated or influenced by political, or any but the highest motives. Lord Dundonald spoke of this matter in his speech at Toronto, and the facts are these. Shortly after Lord Dundonald took office in this country, Lieutenant-Colonel Ponton, of Belleville, a gentleman who occupies in the riding I represent, and in the entire district in which he lives, a reputation that might be the envy of any man. Colonel Ponton comes from military stock; his great grandfather, his grandfather, and his father had the privilege of occupying the positions of colonels or lieutenant-colonels in the British army. He is a military man from start to finish. He commenced his service in the Queen's Own, passed to the 15th Argyle Light Infantry of Hastings and ultimately became commander of that regiment. After a long and honourable service in the militia, he was retired retaining rank. After his retirement from the service, at a citizen's banquet which was in no way concerned with military affairs, Colonel Ponton was asked to respond to the toast of the army and navy, on account of his long service in our active militia. He took occasion to point out some of the weaknesses of the present administration, in conducting militia affairs. I have Colonel Ponton's own word for it, that within three days after he made the speech, he had a letter from the department here demanding to know whether he had used these expressions or not. Colonel Ponton is a man of the stamp of Lord Dundonald, and his answer to the department was: I did give expression to these opinions, I am a retired officer, I was exercising my right as a British subject, and I refuse to withdraw a single word I uttered. What was the result? It has only come to linght since the Dundonald matter has been under discussion. As an appendix to that letter, he said to the minister: Having answered your question I demand to know who has made this charge against me, and in what way I have violated my duty? That letter was handed over to Lord Dundonald with the request from the department, that he should recommend the dismissal of Colonel Ponton, but what did Lord Dundonald do? He refused to allow political exigencies to interfere with the proper administration of the militia of Canada, and as Lord Dundonald told us in Toronto, he ordered the correspondance to be pigeon-holed, and Colonel Ponton still occupies his position as a retired colonel of the 15th Argyle Light Infantry and this government did not have the courtesy or courage to answer Col. Ponton's demand. But this is not all. During the time that controversy was going on between the government and Lord Dundonald, there was a correspondence between Lord Dundonald and a most honourable gentleman who at one time occupied the most prominent position in Canada, and who is to-day honorary colonel of the Argyle Light Infantry, and the action of Colonel Ponton upon that occasion was justified by that gentleman, and Lord Dundonald's action also upheld. And Sir, I have not the slightest fear that when the investigation that is mooted—I was going to say ordered—when the investigation comes that will probably take place in regard to Lord Dundonald's action in this country; when the evidence comes to be sifted in the old country after his return, I have no doubt whatever that Lord Dundonald will be able to answer satisfactorily the charges made against him, and to confute those who are opposed to him. I have every confidence that Lord Dundonald will be able to acquit himself honourably at home as he has already honourably acquitted himself in Canada. And, what is the charge made against Lord Dundonald? They say he has been guilty of an act of indiscretion, but the real fact is that the charge against him amounts to an indictment that Lord Dundonald told the truth, a thing which is entirely antagonistic to the principle of this government. Lord Dundonald endeavoured to the best of his ability, in the report which he signed and presented to the government, to bring before the people and parliament of Canada the things that were necessary to put our militia force on a proper footing. After he had exhausted, as he says himself, every reasonable means of gaining redress, he was driven, on account of the political interference with the establishment of the 13th Scottish Dragoons, to give public expression to his utterances at the Montreal banquet. There was no other alternative left, and we can but praise the man who had the courage to sacrifice his own chances of advancement for the purpose, not of helping the government or the opposition, but for the purpose of benefiting the whole Dominion of Canada. Reference has been made to publications in the press of Great Britain, dealing with this Dundonald incident. I have had placed in my hands to-night the latest reports in regard to that matter, and as the search light is turned on, and the British people begin to understand the true inwardness of the affair, public opinion becomes more and more in accord with Lord Dundonald. Let me read to the House a statement in a cablegram published in the Montreal 'Star' to-night:

Winston Churchill although attacking Lord Dundonald admitted that the allegations he made were probably only too true.

Mr. Arnold Foster, Secretary of War, said he pronounced no opinion upon the merit or demerit of Lord Dundonald's action, before Lord Dundonald had been heard in his own defence.

The British government would not condemn a man before he was heard, but I am sorry to say this Canadian government has been guilty of that offence.

The 'Morning Post' says:

His offence was a splendid indiscretion in a case in which position and reputation were risked to serve the public interest.

To my mind that fairly expresses the sentiment of the people of Canada, Lord Dundonald has made a sacrifice for the people of Canada, and I doubt not that when the time comes—and it cannot come too soon—the people of Canada will show at the polls that they uphold Lord Dundonald, and that they uphold the Conservative party who uphold him, by defeating the government which has without just cause or excuse inflicted this great and unjust punishment upon this patriotic soldier of the empire.

EXPERIMENTAL FARM ACCOUNTS.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. For some time past members of the government and their supporters have asked me: Taylor, when are you going to let us away; as much as to say that the chief whip of the opposition, or the opposition itself, could decide the length of this session. I thought the government were anxious to get through the work of the session, and I know the opposition, consistent with their duty, are anxious for prorogation. It is the duty of the opposition to criticise, and criticise fairly, not only the estimates, but every measure introduced by the government. Consistent with that duty, the opposition were willing to work night and day in order to hasten the end of the session. Last evening, Mr. Speaker, before you left the chair, I gave notice that to-day I would discuss for a short time a report which has been published by the Minister of Agriculture and circulated through this country, which is not in accordance with the facts. This morning, after the House had been moved into Committee of Supply, the hon. leader of the opposition brought up a matter on which, I think, the country was anxious to hear something said; that was the course pursued by the Solicitor General in the old land. After the hon. leader of the opposition had made his statement, the right hon. the Prime Minister replied. Then my hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) had something to say, and the matter, to all intents and purposes, was ended. I rose to perform the duty of which I had given notice, when the Finance Minister asked me to give way and allow him to say a few words. He then took occasion to repudiate his leader, because when the leader of the opposition brought to his attention the fact that a member of the government had made statements not consistent with his position as such, the right hon. leader of the government said we should not believe newspaper reports. Yet the Finance Minister, abandoning that rule, immediately read a press report of something that happened yesterday in the British House of Commons, and upon it based a political speech. That started the ball rolling. He had to be replied to from this side of the House, and then the government put up the hon. member for Haldimand and Monck (Mr. A. T. Thompson) to swallow himself and the speech he made last year, when, after this government had been in power for seven years and had spent millions of money, which had been voted freely by the people of this country, he said that we had only the skeleton of a skeleton of a militia force in Canada. To-day the government asked him to get up and clean the slate, and say that no government had done as much for the militia force as this government. After that they put up the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) to speak of Lord Dundonald, one of the greatest statesmen and one of the ablest military men we have ever had in this country, as a Tory heeler and to apply other offensive epithets to him. Then the debate continued, and the whole day has been wasted by the government. Yet they ask the opposition: When are you going to let us away? The opposition are prepared to stay here, and will stay here, as it is their duty, to fight every measure brought in by this government which they consider not to be in the interest of the country.

This government came into power in 1896, and the right hon. the Prime Minister, when he announced his cabinet, informed the farmers of this country, on every hustings from which he addressed them, that he had put one of themselves into the responsible position of Minister of Agriculture—a horny-handed son of toil, like one of themselves, to administer that important office. Every member of the cabinet boomed the Minister of Agriculture as being a practical farmer and a thorough business man. The hon. gentleman is not satisfied with the Prime Minister and all the members of the cabinet booming him, but he takes occasion, through his own paper in Montreal, to boom himself. In the report of the Minister of Agriculture for the year ended October 31, 1903, his last report, the hon. gentleman starts by saying, 'May it please Your Excellency,' and in the very next sentence he puts a lie or a misstatement into the Governor General's mouth by saying that during the last session of parliament he had secured the passage of an Act to prohibit the importation, manufacture or sale of adulterated, process or renovated butter, oleomargarine, butterine or other substitute for butter, and to prevent the improper marking of butter. If the hon. gentleman had been honest and true, he would have stated to His Excellency : 'Thirteen or fourteen years ago the hon. member for Leeds introduced a Bill to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of adulterated butter ; the hon. member for Leeds was a supporter of the Conservative government which was then in power ; I was in opposition ; I opposed by my voice and my vote the passage of any such measure ; the Conservative government adopted the suggestion of the hon. member for Leeds, and put on the statute book a law prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, butterine or other substitutes for butter, and it has been the law for many years.' And yet the hon. gentleman says to His Excellency that he introduced such a Bill and that it became law, although such a law has been in force for the last ten or twelve years.

An hon. MEMBER. Stole your thunder.

Mr. TAYLOR. The farmers of this country know that it was through my action that that law was placed on the statute-book of this country, in spite of the opposition of the present Minister of Agriculture, who spoke and voted against it.

Now, I want for a few minutes to show how this practical farmer and business man is conducting the Department of Agriculture. It is no wonder that this immense surplus of $57,000,000 has been accumulating owing to the good times since this government has been in power, through no action of theirs. They cannot point to any expenditure of public money which has been made for the general advantage of Canada, or to any great public work which they have accomplished with this $57,000,000. It has all been squandered, and the Minister of Agriculture has helped to squander it. In the year 1895-96 the Conservative government conducted the experimental farm in the same way in which the present Minister of Agriculture is conducting it, and yet the expenditure, as shown by the Auditor General's Report for that year, at page B—7, was $34,205.87, to which should be added goods supplied by the Department of Public Works, as shown on page Q—70, amounting to $5,999.44, making a total of $40,205.31. Less the revenue $3,784, showing a loss to the country in that year of $36,420.57. That was under the Conservative administration. How is it now under my hon. friend's administration ? 1892-3 (see Auditor General's Report D—36) expenditure $59,287.60 and V—94 of same report $9,996.92, making a total of $69,284.52. Against this there is the revenue from sales of steers $4,082 and of other articles $2,947, making a total of $7,056, thus leaving a loss to the country of $62,228.52, as against $36,482.57 under the late administration, or nearly $30,000 more under the hon. gentleman's administration, which the experimental farm cost, than it did under the preceding government. I have here a detailed statement of the expenses of each department in connection with that farm :

	1895-6.	1902-3.
Salaries, general	$3,434 43	$5,974 96

	$19,173 25	$44,478 28
		19,173 25
Increase		$25,305 03

This shows an increase in every department and an increase in the cost of salaries alone of $3,000 under the hon. gentleman's administration as compared with the late administration. Why ? Because the hon. gentleman has picked up a lot of supporters and stuffed them everywhere he could and they are drawing salaries and doing very little work. That is a sample of the way in which the $57,000,000 of the people's money have been wasted. A lot of it has gone in the employment of useless officials who are drawing large salaries and spending heavy sums running around the country to no good purpose. And not one supporter of this government can point to any great work such as the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway to account for this immense expenditure. Nor can he point to anything in return but the most trifling reductions in our public debt.

Take the decennial census and compare what it cost under this government with what the late government did it for. The Conservative government had a census taken two or three times and all it cost was about $500,000 a year. But this administration has had the census taken once, and although it is not through yet, it has cost to the present one and a quarter million dollars or two and a half times what the Conservative administration did the work for.

Then my hon. friend is a sort of a faddist. He is not satisfied with running these experimental farms, but branches out into all sorts of useless expenditures. I moved for a return a short time ago to see how much he had wasted in another fad. He made up his mind that the farmers, who were building up a cheese business long before he became minister, did not know anything about it, and he set to work to establish cheese curing rooms at Brockville, Woodstock, Cowansville and St. Hyacinthe—two in Quebec and two in Ontario. I have the return here in detail, and I presume some of my hon. friends behind me would perhaps deal with this question more fully. I find that in these four stations which he had built to show the farmers how to cure cheese, he spent $82,327.56, according to the return brought down, which he says is up to date. But though he built those stations, the farmers will not patronize them, and he has had, in order to get them to fall in with his scheme, to pay them for drawing their cheese and putting it into these rooms. The one at Brockville would not have a single cheese in it if the farmers were not paid for hauling it in. And not satisfied with that, he bought a lot of cheese last year, for which he paid a high price and that cheese he is holding to-day when the price is low. I moved for a return to date and it does not show that any of the cheese he bought was sold up to the date at which this return was made. I do not purpose dealing with this matter further, because at Brockville every cheese manufacturer, be he Grit or Tory, condemns the scheme as one of the worst ever perpetrated by any government. One of the strongest Grits in the country has been particularly outspoken in his denunciation of that scheme. Before the government decided to incur this heavy expenditure, why did they not say to the farmers: we have an idea that cheese can be cured by a cooling process better than by the way you are doing it, and if you will establish factories of a certain size all over the Dominion, we will give a bonus of from $200 to $500 to each factory, provided you will adopt the process on a plan prepared by the department. But instead of that he went to work and established these four factories which cost as follows:

At Brockville	$16,606
At Woodstock	25,705
At Cowansville	22,352
At St. Hyacinthe	17,656

And he made these expenditures in sections where there is practically no cheese. At Brockville station there are a few factories close by, but they have to go away out into the interior to get a sufficient quantity of cheese to keep the station running, and they have the station marked 'Government Cool Storage Illustration Station,' and pay the farmers for hauling the cheese, and the cheese is shipped from that station when the sales are made. No practical farmer nor any practical Minister of Agriculture would have adopted the plan such as my hon. friend has established at these four different points in Ontario and Quebec.

Then, not satisfied with running his experimental farm and running cheese curing roms, my hon. friend started another fad, and invited the farmers all through the country to go into chicken fattening stations, a lot of which he established at different points. Let me show you how he has managed this business. Here is a table showing the different places where he established these stations, showing the result of each, taken from the Auditor General's Report D—106:

And when I brought up the matter last year, the minister said that the reason why the expenditure so greatly exceeded the receipts at all these stations was that the cost of labour was so great and that these experiments were carried on for the benefit of the public, in order to show the farmers how to make money out of fattening chickens. Well, Sir, I have gone through the expenditures of these several stations and have made out a table showing the receipts, and against these the expenses for purchase of chickens and for feed, leaving out altogether the expense for labour, and still I find that there is a loss in every case:—

Here we have a loss of $363. And yet the hon. gentleman is spending the money of the people of this country for gentlemen to go about telling the farmers that money is to be made by fattening chickens under his process, while the figures I have given show that actually more is spent for the chickens and the feed than he gets for the chickens when he sells them. And he explains that this is all an experiment for the benefit of the farmers. It is really to find employment for some of his supporters in different parts of the country. He certainly ought to have a revenue sufficient to pay the cost of the chickens and their feed. With the facts before them he will find it rather hard to convince the farmers of this country that there is money in the business as he would have them conduct it.

I could point to half a dozen other fads the hon. gentleman has engaged in, every one of them wasteful of the people's money. But, at this late date in the session, I shall not deal with these further than to say that everything the hon. gentleman touches, he makes a miserable failure of. Why, he thrust a meddling finger into the affairs of the Militia Department, and see the mess he has made of it.

The hon. gentleman has had printed and sent broadcast through the country not only the report of his department, but also the report of the Experimental Farm. I have here the report of the Experimental Farms for last year. At page 429 of that report, the hon. gentleman gives a statement of the expenditures of the Dominion Experimental Farms for the year ending June 30, 1903. He shows a total of $44,104.36 as having been expended on the Canadian Experimental Farm here. Then he credits the proceeds of sales and brings out a balance, showing, according to his figuring, that the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa costs the people of this country $40,622.50. Now, if that statement were correct, we could find no fault with it. But, as a matter of fact the statement is misleading. There is no farmer in the country or business man in the country who can learn from that statement the real expense of running this Central Experimental Farm. In the same way he gives the cost of the experimental farm at Nappan, of the farm at Brandon, of the farm at East Indian Head and of the farm at Agassiz.

These expenditures make a total of $84.-126.18. This, according to this report, is the total expenditure upon the experimental farms of this country. Now, we had this question up here before, and when the hon. gentleman asked supplies for the expenses of these farms, I stated then, as I state now, that these figures are not correct. Instead of $84,000 these farms cost over $103,000. Why, the hon. gentleman has not charged the experimental farm with any coal to keep the fires going nor with anything for lights. What farmer can run his business without taking into account the expense of fuel and light? But the hon. gentleman, to show that he has been economical smothers that part of the account as well as some other items. And so he tries to make it appear that the experimental farms cost only $40,000 that year when the fact is that they cost about $60,000, as shown by the Auditor General's Report. Let the farmer run his business that way, and it would be easy for him to show a profit. He could say: I will not put in anything for wood, for the account is not paid yet. I have not paid for my electric light and coal oil. I will not put that in my expenditure. I will put in the expenditure so far as I have paid it, but what I have not paid for I will not put in the account but I will put in the receipts and in that way show that I have made a profit. But the hon. gentleman takes another plan; he puts down what he pleases and publishes to the farmers of this country, this business man of a farmer whom the Prime Minister tells the farmers of Canada is a practical, horny-handed son of toil, and a business man, who is to be believed in everything he says and yet he publishes at the expense of the people that report by the dozen. Yet the statements he gives to the farmers in it are not in accordance with the facts. I therefore beg to move:

That all the words after the word 'That' in the proposed motion be left out and the following substituted therefor:—

That this House affirms its belief in the correctness in the report of the Auditor General, and regrets that the Minister of Agriculture has omitted to set forth in his report a true and accurate statement of the expenditure upon the Dominion Experimental Farms.

That the difference between the expenditure as shown in the report of the Minister of Agriculture and the expenditure as shown in the report of the Auditor General amounts to no less than $19,145.66.

That this House regrets that the Minister of Agriculture has placed in his report a statement which must necessarily mislead those who do not fully investigate the matter.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). The hon. gentleman has brought this question up to-night as a motion of want of confidence in the government on going into supply. I had supposed from what the hon. gentleman had said on a former occasion that he was going to discuss this question in Committee of Supply when the details could be discussed across the floor of the House. I shall not go into the details of the resolution which the hon.

gentleman has submitted to the House to any extent to-night. It seems to me that a discussion and investigation of that kind would be more appropriate in the Public Accounts Committee, than on the floor of parliament, with you, Mr. Speaker, in the chair. It is quite impossible for this House to follow a long detailed statement of figures of this kind, to investigate them and to go into them in a way that would be intelligible and which would elicit the exact facts and the full truth. The hon. gentleman on a former occasion, however, did make certain reflections based on a comparison of the statements in the Auditor General's Report and in the report of the experimental farms in reference to the expenditure of the various farms. I shall place before the House a few figures to show the hon. gentleman that while he appears to have found a discrepancy there is in fact absolutely no discrepancy at all. I have here a statement of the figures from the Auditor General's Report and also a statement from the farm report, from which the situation can be readily understood.

EXPLANATION OF TOTAL.

In other words the accounts are exactly identical except that the proportion of the salaries, which, in the Auditor General's Report, are charged to the central farm, have been in the farm report charged to the different farms and appear in the accounts of these farms on the succeeding pages. The whole thing comes out identically and exactly the same. Therefore, this accusation that the statements appearing in the farm report are inaccurate and misleading and not in accordance with the Auditor General's Report is unfounded because they are exactly and absolutely in accordance with the Auditor General's Report except for the difference in the division of salaries and expenses incurred by the different divisions of the experimental farms.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the hon. minister if in his report at the end he puts in the accounts charged by the Department of Public Works to the experimental farm.

Mr. FISHER. No, I do not because these appear in a different department and apply to a different class of works altogether. The Public Works Department work at the experimental farms has nothing to do with the management of these farms. The report of the Public Works Department explains that. The report of the farms does not contain the work of the Public Works Department, but it does contain the work of the experimental farms and of the Department of Agriculture in connection with the farms.

Mr. TAYLOR. Does the Public Works Department supply coal and wood to the farms ?

Mr. FISHER. It does.

Mr. TAYLOR. Does my hon. friend charge that up to the expenditure ?

Mr. FISHER. No, coal and wood are charged to public buildings on the farms as elsewhere. That has been done ever since the establishment of the farm and it was the same under the regime which the hon. gentleman supported before 1896 as it is to-day. Exactly the same system was adopted and exactly the same charges were made in 1896 as to-day. The results are identically the same. The explanation of the difference which the hon. gentleman attempted to show which at the time I gave in general terms, I have now given in exact detail, and it fully sustains what I said then. The hon. gentleman went on to talk about a number of other things connected with my department. I shall not go into the details as I said a few minutes ago. I am going to deal with the question on broad principles only. The hon. gentleman went on to speak about the census. I am surprised after what occurred last session in this House that the hon. gentleman or any of his friends should bring up that question. There was a motion introduced during the last session of this House upon which that question was thoroughly discussed, a motion which hon. gentlemen opposite moved on going into supply of censure upon this government, and especially upon the Minister of Agriculture in regard to the compiling of the census. I then showed very clearly what the result of that census was and the House was so satisfied with what I showed that it voted down by one of the largest majorities that a Liberal government ever had in this House, the motion of hon. gentlemen opposite. I freely admit that it did cost a great deal more than the censuses which hon. gentlemen opposite took in 1891 and 1881, but, Sir, I also showed and I was able to prove to a demonstration that the census of 1901 was an accurate census, was a census which gave full information in regard to the statistics of this country, whereas the census of 1891 was a census which was not only full of inaccuracies, but was full of deception and deceit and which went before the people of the country and showed falsehood and deceit on almost every line and page. I venture to say that it is far better for the people and far more to the credit of the government to be able to show true and accurate statistics of this country than to show inaccurate and false statistics even if the true statistics do require a little more money to get. It is easy enough to compile a census in the way in which the census of 1891 was compiled. It is easy enough to bring down schedule after schedule and inaccurately and carelessly compile them, but it is a different thing altogether to take these schedules and go over them and check them and go over them again and see that they are accurate. I need not go into that question as I did last year. I need not point out that in the whole of the province of Quebec while the census of the land area was taken in arpents and the census of the crops was taken in minots when the schedules came to be compiled in Ottawa the minots were written as bushels and the arpents were written as acres with the result that the whole province of Quebec made a poorer showing in its production than any other part of the Dominion. This is only one of the hundreds of specimens of the way in which the census of 1891 was compiled. It is easy enough to make compilations of that kind but if the census had been properly and accurately compiled I venture to say that it would have cost more than the census of 1901. I do not for a moment shrink from taking credit for the fact that upon the census of 1901 we have spent enough money to make it an accurate and true census of the statistics of Canada, not such a census as the census of 1891 was, and which has gone abroad to the country and to the world as misrepresenting the people of Canada, misrepresenting their numbers, misrepresenting their industries, misrepresenting their productions in a way that is a shame and a disgrace to the people who compiled that census and who are responsible for its taking.

The hon. gentleman has gone on to speak in regard to some other branches of my department. He spoke about the cheese curing rooms. He said that I have inaugurated some experiments in regard to improvements in cheese curing. That is quite true. I glory in the fact. I am willing to take all the credit or all the disgrace connected with that fact. It is true that a few years ago the quality of our cheese was being criticised on the English market because of the condition in which it arrived in Great Britain. It is true that a certain unevenness of quality was remarked and that we investigated the reasons so as to ascertain whether it was due to the fact that our cheese was not cured at the proper temperature to make it as good as it could be made. We had discussed this question with the cheese-makers in the country. Prof. Robertson, myself and other officers of the department had gone to the great dairy conventions of the country and had discussed the question as to what ought to be done to remedy this evil. We found, as a matter of fact, that the evil was largely if not altogether due to the uneven temperature of the cheese-curing rooms. Then, the question arose: How could it be demonstrated that our cheese should be cured in an even temperature? We discussed it with experts. The result was that we established large central curing rooms. There was no use in carrying on experiments of this kind on a small scale by which a few cheese might be cured here and there. It was necessary to cure enough to show that this method was the proper one to remedy the defect which then existed. We did that. These central curing rooms cost a good deal of money. The hon. gentleman has given a lot of figures which I cannot dispute. I have not the figures under my hand necessary to do so. I will have to take the hon. gentleman's figures as being correct which is rather a large supposition when the hon. gentleman refers to figures in this House.

The hon. gentleman must know, if he has studied the question, that the result of the cool curing has been an absolute success; that the cheese so cured brings a higher price and that the people who handle that cheese in the English market, our only market for the export of cheese, prefer it and pay a higher price for it than for the ordinary cheese. I shall not go into any lengthy details, but I will point out, that during the present session the cool-cured cheese sold in the markets of St. Hyacinthe, Cowansville, Brockville and Woodstock. On June 9th, in Brockville the board price of cheese was eight cents, but every cheese that came out of the government cool-curing room sold for from 8 3-16ths to 8⅛ cents. On June 16th, the ruling price was 8 cents, and the price of the cool-cured cheese was 8 3-16, 8¼ and 8⅛ cents. On June 23rd at Brockville, the cool-cured cheese commanded 7⅞ and 7 11-16ths cents as against 7½ cents for the ordinary cheese. This shows that buyers appreciate the superiority of the cool-cured cheese and are willing to pay more for it. On June 27th, the board price was eight cents, and again the cool-cured cheese sold for 8⅛, 8¼ and 8 3-16 cents. There is another remarkable illustration of this. There was a factory near Brockville which had not access to the cool-curing room because it had already all the work it could do. That factory went to the manager and said: If you allow us to bring our cheese to the cool-curing room we will not only pay you as usual, but we will treat our cheese ourselves and pay all the expenses of it, because a buyer in Montreal has offered to pay us ¼ cent more for our cheese right straight through the season if we can get it cured in the cool-curing room. One of the largest buyers in Montreal considered that cheese cooled in this way at the government station was worth one quarter cent per pound more than the cheese cured in the ordinary factory. I think I have said enough to show that the statement of the hon. gentleman in regard to the cool-curing rooms is absolutely without foundation. I have shown that the men who are engaged in the business, the buyers in Montreal and in England and that sellers in Canada, appreciate and understand the value this process has been to them, and are prepared to endorse the policy of the government. I may say that during last winter I have had application after application for the establishment of cool-curing rooms all over Ontario, and if the people engaged in the industry were not satisfied with it, they would not have made this application. The statement which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) has made is absolutely without foundation and it only shows his ignorance of the cheese industry in this country.

And now as to the poultry industry. I may point out that before these fattening stations were established it was practically impossible in Canada to get fattened poultry for the table. We were exporting no fattened poultry to Europe, but immediately after the establishment of the fattening stations our poultry exports to Great Britain increased from $18,000 the year before, to over $230,000 the year after. Since that time our exports to England have dropped off, and the reason is that the Canadian market has awakened to the fact that good fattened poultry can be bought in Canada and to-day, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Halifax, Sydney, Hamilton, Guelph and the other cities within reach of these poultry fattening stations absorb the whole output so that they cannot export one pound of poultry, and the supply in fact is not equal to the local demand. The hon. gentleman says that these poultry stations have been expensive. They have been to a certain extent expensive, but it must be remembered that experimental and educational work has been going on at them. It is idle to suppose that an experimental and teaching station would meet the expenses by its output alone.

Mr. TAYLOR. The chickens should pay for themselves and their feed.

Mr. FISHER I will not pretend that an experimental station in this or any other country will pay its own way in revenue from its sales. If the hon. gentleman wishes to take issue with me on that, I am ready to go before any audience in this country and fight the point out with him.

Mr. TAYLOR. I invite the hon. gentleman to a mass meeting in my constituency and we will discuss it

Mr. FISHER. Very well, I will go there.

Mr. TAYLOR. Name a day.

Mr. FISHER. I will name a day when the elections come, and I will meet the hon. gentleman. I know the hon. gentleman thinks he has a Tory hive in Leeds, but I am not afraid in the least to face the hon. gentleman, or any other of his gang, and to meet them on the platform, because I believe that the farmers of Leeds in general are intelligent men. That is rather a difficult thing for one to believe in view of the fact that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) has been representing them for so many years. But I still have faith in human nature, and I am led to the conclusion that the constituents of Leeds have not been told the whole truth about public affairs or the hon. gentleman would not represent them in this House. I state emphatically that experimental work is a good investment in the interest of the farmers and agriculturists of this country, even though it should cost more than it gives in money return. I believe that by reason of the experimental work which is being carried on by the government of Canada—a good deal of it carried on before I came into office, more of it carried on since I came into office—as a result of that experimental work to-day the farmers of Canada have at their command a mass of information which is of the utmost utility to them ; a mass of information which is better and more complete than the information which the farmers of any other country on the face of the earth have to aid them in their business.

That is not a boast which is undue or unfounded. It is a boast which I make because of the statements of the people in foreign countries who are coming to Canada for information, for models, for examples as to how best to carry on the work of agriculture. In view of that fact, I venture to say that the trivial criticisms of hon. gentlemen opposite will fall to the ground, and farmers of Canada will support the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in its efforts on their behalf.

Before I leave this poultry business, I would like to read a few statements of men who, having learned of what could be done in the way of fattening poultry, have entered into the business on their own behalf, and have made it pay.

S. Cox, Auburn Ont., January 27, 1904 : The few chickens I fed I had very good success with and think it is the ideal way to fatten chickens. I received 10 cents per pound, plucked, not drawn, and could have sold ten times as many at the same price. I think the price for chickens not crate-fattened was from 6 cents to 7 cents per pound.

Arsène Tremblay, Chicoutimi, P.Q. : Profiting by the example of the illustration station at Chicoutimi, I fattened my poultry and obtained a much better result. The chickens sold for 95 cents a pair, that is to say, nearly 12 cents per pound, something to which we have not been accustomed. Until the last year we have sold our poultry for 40 cents to 50 cents per pair. I have only congratulations to make on the system taught by the Department of Agriculture. The happy result I obtained this year encourages me to increase my flock of poultry next year.

William Soules, Bondville, Que., bought several hundred chickens at 7 cents per pound, live weight, fattened them and sold them in Montreal at 12½ cents per pound, plucked weight. After deducting the price of feed and skim-milk from the price realized for the chickens, he stated he had made a profit of $20 per 100 chickens fatted.

James. W. C. Moore, Eldon, P.E.I., February, 1904 : Experience in chicken fattening has proved to me what can be done in making the business a profitable investment. Before the fattening stations were established chickens were sent to market in a poor condition and could not realize more than 5 cents per pound. Now farmers can realize 10 cents per pound.

D. Marchbank, Montrose, P.E.I., January 25, 1904 : My opinion is that most of our farmers make a great mistake in not taking more interest in the poultry business. I find it pays me for I ship my fowl to J. A. Leaman & Company, Halifax, and received 10 cents per pound for them last year. I received an order from them in February, stating that if I had any more of the same stock on hand they would pay 13 cents per pound, so I consider this much better than selling them in Alberton for 5 cents and 6 cents per pound.

James W. C. Moore, Eldon, P.E.I., February 1, 1904: Experience in chicken fattening has proved to me what can be done in making the poultry business a profitable investment. Before the fattening stations were established chickens were sent to market in a poor condition and could not realize more than 5 cents per pound. Now farmers are taking more interest in poultry and can realize 10 cents per pound.

If, by the expenditure of a few thousand dollars a year, such information can be given to our farmers as to enable them to sell their chickens at 10, 12 or 13 cents a pound, where they were formerly selling them for 5 cents a pound, I venture to say that the $4,000 or the $5,000 of expenditure is an absolutely good investment for the people of Canada. My hon. friend denounced me and the government pretty thoroughly for our extravagance and our increases of expenditure. I am willing to accept the full responsibility of the increased expenditure on the experimental farms and the other branches of the Department of Agriculture. Whenever I can see any way of profitably expending money so that money can be put into the pockets of the farmer of Canada, I am going to come to this House and ask for that money ; and I am glad to say, and I am proud of the fact that my colleagues and the majority of the House have abundantly supported me in that policy. I am proud of the confidence of the House in this respect, and I can assure the House and hon. gentlemen opposite that I will do my best to deserve that confidence in the future by studying how money can be profitably spent for the benefit of agriculture in Canada ; because in this young country, which is developing vast areas of agricultural land, a great live stock industry, including poultry, and various manufacturing industries which are closely allied with the agricultural interests, I venture to say that our prosperity largely depends on the success of our agriculturists. If to-day Canada is prosperous, if our trade and commerce is advancing by leaps and bounds, it is largely due to the fact that our farmers are increasing their products enormously from year to year, and are receiving extra prices for them. The result is that they have a large amount of money to expend on manufactured products, and they help the transportation interest by supplying the articles to be carried, and by consuming articles which have to be carried to them. Therefore, I believe that the expenditure of money on behalf of agriculture, if done wisely and well, is abundantly justified. When the hon. gentleman a little while ago was talking in a loud voice, somebody said his thunder had been stolen. No, Mr. Speaker, it was not the thunder that had been stolen. The thunder was all there; the noise was all there; but there was no lightening for the hon. gentleman for it strikes nowhere and accomplishes no harm to those against whom he is speaking.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX. Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman who has just sat down had adopted throughout the whole of his speech the responsible attitude which he assumed in the last four or five sentences of it, perhaps we would not have so much reason to complain; but unfortunately it was only during the last four or five sentences that the hon. gentleman recollected that he was the representative of an intelligent and peaceful class of the community, the farmers of Canada. Before that he assumed an attitude which he has been fond of assuming lately, which I venture to say does not very well become him, that is, a belligerent attitude, in which he attempts to intimidate hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. So long as the hon. gentleman assumes the gentle, ladylike attitude which becomes him so well, we have no great reason to complain. The people of the country recognize that in having the hon. gentleman as a representative of the farming class, they have not exactly a horny-handed son of toil. Still, they are prepared to believe that he is a respectable citizen of Canada, endeavouring, according to the light he possesses, which is not saying very much, to promote the interests of the farmers of Canada.

But the hon. gentleman has not seen fit to meet the issue and has preferred to bluster and make an unseemly noise. The square issue is this. In his report on the experimental farm on page 429, the hon. minister gives the expenditure for the year ending 30th of June, 1903, as amounting to $84,128.18. That statement my hon. friend from Leeds has shown to be false and misleading. The true figures are $19,141.66 in excess of that amount. How that expenditure has been divided among the various farms is a matter of no practical interest at present. What we are concerned with is the fact that the total expenditure is over $103,000, whereas the hon. minister in his report puts it down as $84,000. On looking hurriedly at page V—94 of the Auditor General's Report, I find various items of expenditure in connection with the Central Farm at Ottawa—not one cent of which is included by the hon. minminister in his statement, amounting to $8,205.68, showing the total expenditure to be $84,000. Again on turning to page V—112, I find an expenditure, for instance, of $1,430.22 in connection with the Ottawa Experimental Farm not included in his statement, and on the next page, V—113, I find an expenditure of $110.65, which is equally left out. The hon. gentleman has been compelled to admit that in his statement he deliberately omitted the items, of coal and wood, light, &c.; and I venture to say that if he goes to the riding represented by the hon. member for Leeds or any other riding in this country, he may speak for hours and will not be able to convince the people that he has any justification for leaving out of the expenditures connected with these farms for coal and wood and other items amounting to over $19,000. Let him speak for any length of time he chooses, he cannot prevent ther coming to the conclusion that any statement which does not include these items is a garbled and dishonest account. Therefore when the hon. minister instead of frankly telling us that he has blundered, tries to excuse himself by saying he has followed the system which was pursued in the old days, he is using an argument which will not commend itself to the people. The question is not what former governments have done, because we are bound to progress, and those who cannot keep pace with the march of progress had better get out and make way for others who can. Let me say to this gentleman, who used to be content with the sickle and the pruning hook, but who now, while he dangles a scythe from his left hand, swings the sword in his right, that it ill becomes him to speak as he has done, and that it would be much better for him to try and give some reasonable explanation for his conduct. When he speaks, as he has done, of the constituents of my hon. friend from Leeds, as the gang led by that hon. gentleman, let me tell him that his head seems to be swelling larger and larger visibly because forsooth he thinks he has got the better of Lord Dundonald in the petty struggle which he has forced on that gentleman, and that when he attempts to decry the people who support such men as my hon. friend from Leeds and other members of the opposition in this House, he will learn perhaps before long that these men will show where their strength lies, and that even with his pruning hook and sword he cannot intimidate the great electorate of this country.

Mr. ROBERT HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of following the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) in his general argument, but only desire to deal in a general way with a matter which has been alluded to, and to which, as I am acquainted with the facts, I feel justified in calling attention. Reference has been made to the poultry stations, and the one established at Holmesville has been especially dealt with. Holmesville happens to be in my own riding. It is in the centre of a strongly Conservative part of the constituency. Yet I challenge any hon. gentleman on the opposite side to come into the riding of West Huron and attempt to convince the farmers there that the government's expenditure on the poultry station at Holmesville was an unwise or extravagant expenditure and make a single vote thereby. While the figures given in the Auditor General's Report show an apparent discrepancy between the receipts and expenditure, they are misleading to this extent, that, unless you know the circumstances, you cannot fairly judge as to the actual results of the work of the station As the hon. minister has said, there was no desire or expectation, in establishing these poultry stations—as is the case with other experimental stations—that they would be self-sustaining. But a large number of chickens are sold during the year after the Auditor General's Report is closed. If the report was made out to show the receipts for a year of the poultry station's operations, it would show that, except for expenditure on capital account—for buildings and so on—there would be very little loss. As a result of the work of the station at Holmesville—and I speak only of that, for it is the one with whose work I am familiar—in our section of the country, where we formerly bought chickens at 25 cents and 30 cents a pair the farmers are now selling them, as stated by the hon. minister, at 10 cents per pound. The people have so improved their raising of poultry through the lessons they learned in connection with the poultry station that they are now supplying the local demand at 10 cents per pound—and let me say that they cannot fully supply the demand even at that price. The hon. gentleman may take exception to anything he likes in connection with the Department of Agriculture, but I challenge him again to take exception in West Huron to the work of the poultry station in that riding. Even the hon. gentleman's Conservative friends endorse it. I know a large number of Conservatives who believe that it has been one of the best institutions ever established under the Department of Agriculture. Men who, at the outset, thought it nothing but an election dodge are willing to admit that it has been practically useful in the development of the poultry industry.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. Inasmuch as something has been said concerning the poultry stations, and as the station established in the town of Renfrew has been referred to, I shall say a word in defence of it, if defence is required. I do not think that any one in the Dominion expects that the experimental farm is going to be an unqualified success financially, and that the balance will invariably be on the right side. But I know that throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion the people are fully satisfied with the work done there. If anything were necessary to prove that fact that proof would be found in the large number of excursions that come to the farm every year from every part of the Dominion of Canada. The farmers come because they expect to learn something, and they go away satisfied because they have learned something. And let me say one word of the work that is being carried on by Professor Saunders at that farm. If nothing else had been accomplished by the experimental farm except the successful crossing of wheat and the production of new varieties which will ripen two or three days earlier than others of equal usefulness and value, these experiments alone would make the experimental farm system an unqualified success. These new varieties of wheat will put millions of dollars into the pockets of the farmers of the Northwest, for they are looking for a wheat that will ripen early. The farmers are getting rich every day under the patronage of this government, and that I shall be able to prove. With reference to cool curing of cheese, if there is one thing in relation to the cheese industry which stands out prominently above the others as a marked success, it is the cool curing. If anything were necessary to prove that, I can furnish that proof. It is only a few weeks ago that a deputation of farmers came from the township of Ross to my own town of Renfrew, to the creamery company there, and asked if they could not make arrangements for the cool curing of cheese for the various factories in that section. They said that about twenty factories wanted to bring in cheese and have us cool them and keep them, because we have large cold storage rooms and we could care for the cheese better than they could be cared for elsewhere. They said they could get more for cheese that was cool-cured, and besides there was not the shrinkage that there was under the other system of curing, and they were prepared to give fair remuneration if we would undertake this work for the various factories in that vicinity. And that matter has been taken up for consideration. What the result may be it is impossible for me to say. Now, with reference to the chicken industry. Of course, nobody expected that these experiments were going to be a financial success in themselves, because it is impossible for one to get at once the right kind of chickens to make a success of the system of fattening. The first year it is likely to be a comparative failure. The next year they get a better class of chickens, and year by year the financial results are more favourable. With reference to the industry in my own town, I remember the difficulty we had in selling eggs years ago—say in 1893, Chickens were bought at 5 cents per pound, and we were glad to get rid of them at that price. The difficulty was to sell them. Now, the thing is changed, and chickens are readily sold at good prices. The same was true of eggs. In 1893 we bought them and sold them at 8 cents per dozen. Allow me to give you one little incident with reference to the eggs; and I hope, Mr. Speaker, you will pass it over to the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor). In 1893 I was purchasing thousands and thousands of dozens of eggs at 8 cents a dozen. A farmer came to my store with a basket of eggs and asked me what I would give him. I said: 'The best

I can do is 8 cents a dozen. Do you see those cases outside ? I have just sold them at 7¾ cents a dozen—I am losing a quarter of a cent on every dozen.' 'Well,' he said, 'what are the farmers of this country going to do ? We cannot raise eggs at that price. We will have to go to the other side, or do something else. The fact is that that price will not pay for the wear and tear of the hens.' Now, let me show you how all this is changed. And, in order to show, I will read a few lines from a circular I received the other day from Montreal :

Montreal, June 14th.

Dear Sir,—We will give you 14 cents for all the fresh eggs you can ship this week.

How does that compare with 8 cents a dozen in the old Conservative days ? I think that the farmers realize that they are living under a different administration, and will give credit to whom credit is due. Now, I wish to say a word with reference to the fattening of chickens.

Mr. POPE. What do you pay for eggs ?

Mr. WRIGHT. We pay 15 cents a dozen, and cannot get enough of them at that. Now, let me read an extract from the Renfrew 'Mercury' of February 14th, 1902—this date being just a short time after the chicken fattening station had been established in Renfrew. And let me call your attention to the fact, and to ask you to bear it in mind, that the person who gives the information to the Renfrew 'Mercury' is Mr. David Muirhead, a leading Conservative in our town, and president of the Farmers' Institute :

An Admaston farmer resolved to make a test—to see if in farm practice there was really any profit in fattening chickens on the plan followed at the government's experimental station here a short time ago. So he took 30 ordinary chickens—not at all large ones—and fed them on oats and barley, mixed with low grade flour—for five weeks, and then sent 24 of them off to a Montreal commission merchant whose name was one of several which had been furnished him by Mr. F. C. Hare, the government's demonstrator. He received answer that the 24 fowl had weighed 158 pounds, and remittance was made for them at the rate of 11 cents (eleven) cents a pound in Montreal. The expressage cost the Admaston farmer 80 cents per 100 pounds, so that he received $10.20 per 100 pounds net for his fowl. The fowl were kept confined in coops, were fed twice a day, and in the five weeks the thirty ate 8 bushels of oats, 2 bushels of barley, and 100 pounds of low-grade (unsaleable) flour with just enough skim-milk added to make the food moist. Water to drink and gravel to peck were supplied. The farmer was so well pleased with the result of his experiment, that he will fatten more chickens next year. He knows nothing that pays better for the amount of labour involved. The merchant to whom he sold rather took his breath away by writing that if he could supply broilers weighing 1½ or 2 pounds in April or May, he would get 45 cents a pound for them.

I wish to place before the House account sales of the eggs that were shipped from my town last winter. I have here an invoice of eggs which were sold to Bate & Co., in Ottawa :

February 10, 12 dozen fresh eggs at 40 cents, $4.80.

How does that compare with your eight cents under the Conservative rule ?

February 17, 12 dozen fresh eggs at 40 cents, $4.80.
February 19, 12 dozen fresh eggs at 40 cents, $4.80.
February 26, 24 dozen fresh eggs at 40 cents, $9.60.
March 4, 24 dozen fresh eggs at 35 cents, $8.40.
March 11, 24 dozen fresh eggs at 35 cents, $8.40.
a total of $40.80.

This will show you whether there is money in raising eggs if you do it properly.

Mr. BLAIN. Might I ask what change has been brought about by this government to cause the price of eggs to go up ?

Mr. COCHRANE. They have got a lot of suckers around.

Mr. WRIGHT. They are teaching the people how to raise the eggs, and to have them for market at a proper time. They also have helped to obtain a market for them. We are getting a home market now and we are also getting more for anything sent abroad than we got before. I have here some invoices of eggs sent to Walter Paul, of Montreal. Here is one :

January 25, 9 dozen eggs at 40 cents, $3.60.
January 25, 3 dozen eggs, small, at 30 cents, 90 cents.

This shows you the discrimination there is now. In the old days there was not this discrimination.

I have here also an invoice for eggs shipped to Mr. Henry Gatehouse, of Montreal :

January 12, 24 dozen eggs at 30 cents, $7.20.

I have others which show about the same rates.

I have here also invoices of chickens sent to Mr. Gatehouse.

Here is one :

October 1, 2 coops chickens, 60 — 66=126 at 12 cents, $15.12.

That certainly is better that the 5 cents a pound which we got in the old days.

Here is another :

March, 30, 50 pounds fowl at 9 cents a pound, $4.50.

There were 6 fowls in this and they netted him 75 cents each.

Here is another one :

October 30, 139 pounds chickens at 10 cents a pound, $13.90.

There were 20 chickens in this lot so that they netted him 70 cents each. Surely this ought to prove that the lessons which have been given to the farmers in our section of the country have been productive of much good. If any other evidence is necessary to prove that the farmers are doing better than they did we can find it in the export of farm produce which is now being made. In 1896 we exported only $50,000,000 worth of farm products whereas last year we exported no less than $114,000,000. In 1896 we sent in round numbers only $14,000,000 worth of cheese, whereas last year we sent out $25,000,000 worth. Surely this shows that this country is progressing and that the farmers are moving onward.

A good deal of fault has been found with regard to the Minister of Agriculture himself, the statement being made that he is not a proper man to fill that position. I would like to show you how an outsider regards the present Minister of Agriculture. Here is a letter which was published in the Renfrew 'Mercury.' The letter was written from Riverside, California, on March 31, 1904. I need not read the first part of the letter but I shall quote this portion which refers to the Minister of Agriculture :

> In an agricultural way you have gained enormously over this country. Speaking recently with one of the ablest men who are taking care of our agricultural and horticultural interests at Washington I was really pleased to have him say that the Department of Agriculture in Canada was far in advance of that in this country.

Surely this does not look much as if we had inefficient men at the head of affairs here. I am proud to say, I am proud to know that the farmers of this country are progressing and when the day comes for the farmers to give their verdict I have no doubt in my own mind that the verdict will be that the present government shall be returned and that the Minister of Agriculture will be maintained in his position. Then the farmers will go on progressing at the same rate as they have done for the last six or seven years.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. I would not have taken any part in this discussion were it not that a remark made by the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) caused me to look at the record of that chicken fattening station of which he seems to feel so proud, and criticism of which he seems to think would be of no assistance to his opponents in his own riding. I think it is a function of the government to make experiments and we do not expect the result of the experiments in each case to be a profit, but in this experimental station at Holmesville—and I believe the same thing is true of all the chicken fattening stations—the proceeds of the sales do not pay for the feed and the cost of the chickens bought, and surely the feed cannot be charged up to experimenting. Surely if they are feeding these chickens on new improved scientific principles they should be able to sell the chickens for the amount which the feed cost and the cost of the purchased chickens, especially when we are informed that they are sold at an advanced price, at a price 2 to 4 cents more than the ordinary price. In connection with this Holmesville fattening station the only item outside of feed and purchased fowls which I will take into account are $13.40 for coal oil and $28.40 for plucking the chickens. There are $9.85 for cold storage and all the rest is for feed and the cost of the chickens, making the total cost $902.85. In this not a single dollar is taken into account for labour, but no farmer or any one else could fatten chickens without some labour.

Mr. HOLMES. In the Auditor General's Report for last year, the hon. member will find that there is an expenditure of over $1,000 for buildings.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. I am not taking one single cent of that into account. If the hon. gentleman had listened he would have heard me state that I did not take into account a single cent except the cost of chickens and the feed. I did not count in a cent for labour or for sundries although there is an item of $100 charged for sundries. The total cost for feed, chickens bought and the three small items mentioned about which there can be do difference of opinion as to the propriety of the charge is $902.85 and the receipts from the sales last year were $564.57 leaving a deficit of $338.28, although we are counting nothing but the cost of the feed and the chickens themselves and the minor items before mentioned.

Mr. TAYLOR. What did the chickens sell for ?

Mr. E. D. SMITH. I am not so much surprised at the loss when we think of the sale price. I find in the Auditor General's Report at page D—112 the statement that 730 chickens weighing 2,617 pounds sold for $97.92, an average of 3¾ cents a pound though the minister and the member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) both stated these government fattened chickens sell at very high prices—about 10 cents per pound. If the hon. member for West Huron told his constituents the whole truth I am afaid he might not find them so well pleased with the chicken fattening stations. I turn to another sale of poultry from the Bienville chicken fattening station and I find that eleven cases containing 550 pounds sold for $40.26 or 7¼ cents per pound so that all the government fattened chickens do not bring 10 cents a pound. I have no word to say in condemnation of experimental stations. I do not expect them to pay but I do say there is no reason why the amount brought for these chickens should not pay for the cost of the food and the cost of the chickens originally if the thing is conducted properly.

Amendment (Mr. Taylor) negatived on division.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Dominion lands—amount required to pay accounts in connection with the late J. E. Mailhoit's survey, $245.66.

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Minister of the Interior). This surveyor died while the survey was in progress and there were certain accounts to be paid.

Mr. MACLEAN. I would like to ask the hon. minister whether he has ever considered the idea of buying out the lands of the Hudson's Bay Company and those of the Canadian Pacific Railway ?

Mr. SIFTON. The question has never been considered.

Mr. WILSON. I notice that the cost of surveying lands in the Northwest Territories is charged to capital account. What is done with the money that you receive for the lands ? I do not understand why the surveying of this country should be charged to capital account when, as I presume, you take the revenue and use it for ordinary expenses.

Mr. SIFTON. These surveys have always been charged to capital account.

Mr. WILSON. That is no reason. We want the reason why they should be charged to capital account. It does not follow that because other people did so it is a good reason. If you are using the money that you get for these lands for ordinary expenses I do not see why you should not pay for the surveying out of ordinary revenue ?

Mr. SIFTON. The former government charged the surveys to capital account on the principle that they added to the value of the land. I do not think my hon. friend would expect that at this hour of the evening we should debate this question exhaustively. We have continued the practice of the former government. A very proper question was raised by the member for West Toronto when he pointed out that the cost of surveys was charged to capital account, and when this money was refunded by the railway companies the refund was placed to the account of ordinary consolidated revenue. I will call the attention of the Minister of Finance to that and he will probably deal with it at a later date.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Has the Blood reserve south of Calgary been thrown open for grazing lease purpose ? If so, who has secured the lease ?

Mr. SIFTON. This is connected with the Indian Department, but I have no objection to answer the question now so far as I can from memory. The land has not been thrown open in the ordinary sense of the word but the Indians surrendered the Blood reserve for leasing purposes on the application of Donald McEwan and Company. The proposition of this firm was submitted to the Indians who held a meeting and accepted it, and it was agreed to by the department. The lease is very complicated in its character, and I will lay a copy on the table when the supplementary estimates for the Indian Department come up. For many years the Blood Indians have been in the habit of allowing leasing privileges upon the reserve, and that terminates when they agreed to a lease of the whole reserve.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Have the Indians assigned to the government the leasing privileges, and does the revenue go to the Indians ?

Mr. SIFTON. It is not exactly that, but perhaps that may be the substance of it. The company made a proposition to the Indians in presence of officers of the government, setting out all the terms upon which a lease should be granted. The Indian band in accordance with the law met and agreed to it, and the lease was then ratified by the department. The revenue goes to the Indians.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Have the lessees the privilege of releasing it ?

Mr. SIFTON. No.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. My information is that they have released these lands. I have heard that one large firm of cattle exporters have bought a bunch of 8,000 extra cattle to put on this reserve.

Mr. SIFTON. They have no right to release.

Mr. CLANCY. Last year we got from the sale of Dominion lands $1,695,000 which went into revenue and we chargd to capital account for surveys $449,000, so that more than $1,000,000 goes to the credit of the Minister of Finance in this way to make up his surpluses. What we get for the sale of our land, which in itself is capital, we put into the revenue, and at the same time we charge the cost of surveys to capital. I am sure the good business sense of the Minister of Customs will revolt against that system of book-keeping, although he seems to like surpluses. It is no excuse to say that the former government did this, because the revenue from the sale of our lands is now a very considerable amount, and whether the former government did or did not, the system is deceiving and misleading. Perhaps the Minister of the Interior with our assistance can induce the Minister of the Interior to amend his book-keeping.

Mr. SIFTON. This revenue includes the payment of dues and mining fees, and it is not all received from Dominion lands.

Mr. CLANCY. The greater portion of that revenue comes from the sale of Dominion lands.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Reverting again to the leasing of the Blood reserve, can the minister state approximately what number of acres it contains ?

Mr. SIFTON. It is a very large reserve, but I cannot state the number of acres.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Does the minister think that reserve should be leased in the ordinary manner ?

Mr. SIFTON. It could not be leased in the ordinary manner.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Ordinary Dominion lands, as I understand it are leased at the rate of two cents an acre for a period of twenty-one years, but does not the minister think that when such a large acreage of Indian lands is to be leased it should be advertised, public competition invited, and the lease given to the highest bidder ?

Mr. SIFTON. When the hon. gentleman sees the lease, I think he will find that the terms are more advantageous than the terms in the ordinary lease of Dominion lands. It would be impossible to deal with this matter in the way he suggests, because the Indians would not agree to it. The agreement of the Indians to the lease would have to be secured by the persons who made the proposition, and by these persons giving to them a variety of things which the Indians insist on. If we put it up for tender it would not answer the purpose of the Indians at all.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. If it is advantageous to the Indians to get 2 cents an acre, under the ordinary system, it would be doubly advantageous for them to get 4 cents an acre ; and if the leases were thrown open to competition, they might have secured a greater revenue from the lands than they do by leasing them to one individual. If the minister makes an investigation, I think he will find that the party to whom this land was leased, released it to some other parties in part or in whole, and that it has been stocked with Mexican cattle, which have been brought to that country in thousands.

Department of the Geological Survey—salaries, including J. F. Lyons at $800, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $59,475.

Mr. SPROULE. What work are you doing on the survey this year ?

Mr. SIFTON. Mr. Faribault with two assistant geologists is working in the more westerly of the gold districts of Nova Scotia. Mr. Fletcher with two assistant geologists is engaged in King's, Annapolis and Cumberland counties. Dr. Henry S. Poole is to complete the work necessary to construct a geological map of the district around Lake Ainslie in Cape Breton. Dr. Ells, assisted by Mr. Robert Johnston, has been at work in Charlotte county, New Brunswick, and has since gone to work in British Columbia. Professor L. W. Bailey is defining the boundaries of the rock formations in the counties of York and Carleton, New Brunswick. Dr. J. A. Dresser is continuing the work of previous years in defining the copper-bearing belts in the eastern townships. Dr. Robert Chalmers is investigating the surface geology of the county of Gaspé and of the country along the south side of the lower St. Lawrence. Professor Ernest Haycock and Mr. Frank Johnston are to complete a geological map of the southwestern part of the county of Ottawa. Mr. C. W. Willimott is collecting supplies of minerals for educational institutions and for the new museum. The work will lie principally in the province of Quebec, but he will also collect in Ontario and Nova Scotia. Professor W. A. Parks, assisted by Mr. H. L. Kerr is at work on the western side of Lake Temiskaming. Dr. A. E. Barlow, is to continue work in the Timigami lake region. Mr. E. D. Ingall and Mr. Theo. Dennis are working in the neighbourhood of Bruce Mines. Messrs. Wilson and Collins are working in the country lying northward of Long Lake. Mr. Charles Camsell is working in eastern Manitoba and those parts of the country between Lake Winnipeg and the Severn river. Mr. O'Sullivan is engaged on the southern and western coasts of James Bay. Mr. McInnes is following up work which was begun last year in the region lying to the south of Hudson Bay. Mr. Lawrence Lambe is making a collection of fossil remains found in the Cypress Hills in the Northwest Territories. Professor John Macoun is working in the botanist park in the Rocky Mountains, as botanist and zoologist. Mr. D. B. Dowling is working in the coal fields of the Rocky Mountain region. Mr. A. P. Low is engaged in the Hudson Bay expedition, accompanied by Mr. C. L. King. Mr. R. W. Brock is engaged in the Lardeau mining district of British Columbia. Dr. R. A. Daly is engaged in a survey along the boundary line in British Columbia. Mr. McConnell is engaged in the Yukon Territory. Mr. Joseph Keele is investigating discoveries of gold on the Stewart river in the Yukon Territory.

Mr. INGRAM. Are these all the names of the parties connected with the Geological Survey Department ?

Mr. SIFTON. I have not given them all, because they are not all at work in the field. If my hon. friend would like to have the list, with the salaries paid, I will give it : The acting director, Dr. Bell, $3,500 ; Dr. Whiteaves, $2,600 ; Dr. Hoffmann, $2,600 ; Professor Macoun, $2,450 ; Dr. Ells, $2,350 ; Hugh Fletcher, $2,350 ; R. G. McConnell, $2,350 ; E. D. Ingall, $2,100 ; A. B. Low, $2,050 ; L. N. Lambe, $1,900 ; Robert Chalmers, $1,900 ; William McInnes, $1,900 ; H. M. Ami, $1,900 ; E. R. Faribault, $1,900 ; A. E. Barlow, $1,850 ; J. M. Macoun, $1,800 ; F. G. Wait, $1,750 ; D. B. Dowling, $1,700 ; C. O. Senecal, $1,700 ; R. A. A. Johnston,

$1,600 ; R. W. Brock, $1,400 ; W. J. Wilson, $1,250 ; Theophile Dennis, $1,250 ; Joseph Keele, $1,550 ; two vacancies, one at $1,150 and the other at $1,100 ; John Marshall, $2,000 ; C. W. Willimott, $1,500 ; R. L. Broadbent, $1,500 ; L. N. Richard, $1,250 ; A. T. McKinnon, $850 ; J. A. McGee, $825 ; John Thorburn, $800 ; and J. F. Lyons, $800.

Mr. INGRAM. Has the hon. gentleman any control over these men ?

Mr. SIFTON. Yes, the same control as we have over government officers generally.

Mr. INGRAM. What do you do with men who are incompetent in this department ?

Mr. SIFTON. If incompetency is brought home to any one, the usual practice is to remove him from office.

Mr. INGRAM. One of these gentlemen by the name of Macoun has made a report which has caused a great deal of strife. He has been accused of incompetency, and an hon. gentleman was to have made a charge against him but so far has not done so. If he is incompetent, why is he continued in the service ?

Mr. SIFTON. I do not know that any body has said that Mr. Macoun is incompetent. I have certainly never endorsed any such statement. I think that in the line of the scientific work in which he is engaged, he is perfectly competent. I hope the hon. gentleman will not reopen the discussion which took place in the Agricultural Committee. All that I have to say is this, that the conclusion I arrived at with regard to Mr. Macoun was that while perfectly competent, so far as scientific attainments are concerned, he drew sweeping conclusions from rather insufficient data. My hon. friend will perhaps understand that in the case of the reports of the officers of the Geological Survey, no minister can pretend to revise them. They are under the direction of the head of the service, who decides what should and what should not be published. It will be admitted by members on both sides that Mr. Macoun was imprudent in issuing his report without consulting his superior officer, but that is far from saying that he is incompetent.

Mr. INGRAM. Are we to understand that it was by Mr. Macoun's instructions that the report was published or printed ? As I understand, he went out to the Peace River district and made his report. When he did that, his duty ceased, and if the head of the department saw fit to have it printed, I cannot see how Mr. Macoun can be blamed.

Mr. SIFTON. All the officers submit their reports to the director and he sends them to the Printing Bureau to be printed. The director uses his judgment in supervising each report before it is printed.

Mr. INGRAM. Are we to understand that the hon. gentleman has withdrawn the report or censured Mr. Macoun for having made a sweeping statement ?

Mr. SIFTON. No, I cannot withdraw a report. When a report is issued, that is the end of it. But I have given instructions that it is not to be circulated any further.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Are the gentlemen who go out on these geological surveys directed by the department to any special locality, or is that left to their own officers ?

Mr. SIFTON. Each year the director of surveys submits to me a recommendation suggesting what work should be done and giving the names of the men he recommends to be sent out in each particular case. I discuss the matter with him and he gives the necessary information.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Has the director the power of overruling the directions of the minister ?

Mr. SIFTON. No.

Mr. INGRAM. The minister says he has given orders to stop the circulation of Mr. Macoun's report. Is he aware that a committee of this House has ordered that the evidence be printed and that a large portion of Mr. Macoun's report, which the hon. gentleman has ordered to be suppressed, is to be embodied in the report of the committee ?

Mr. SIFTON. I am aware that the committee adopted a report, but I have not seen it and do not know what it is. As regards the circulation of the report, I acted on my own judgment before the committee had reached a conclusion. The committee had serious difficulty in reaching a unanimous conclusion, and before they had finished their deliberations, I gave orders that the circulation of Mr. Macoun's report should cease.

Mr. INGRAM. That is the report already printed, but I am drawing attention to the fact that large portions of that same report are to be embodied in the report submitted by the committee. Now, does the hon. gentleman approve of sending out in another form, large portions of the suppressed report ?

Mr. SIFTON. I suppose my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) will admit that I ought to have the right to read the committee's report before I approve of it. As to the circulation of the report of the committee, the hon. member will understand that that does not rest with me as head of the geological survey, but with the House.

Mr. INGRAM. But I am drawing attention to the fact that large portions of the report the circulation of which is discontinued is to appear in this report of the committee. The hon. gentleman is the head of the department, and if he suppresses or withholds Mr. Macoun's report from circulation, what position is he putting his department in by approving—if he does approve—the circulation of large portions of it in another report ? May I suggest to the hon. gentleman another course ? Here is a report which the hon. gentleman says contains wide and sweeping statements in connection with the Peace river district. He is withholding that report on account of those wide and sweeping statements. But large portions of that report will be embodied in the report of the committee to be printed and circulated. Now, would he not be doing better if he allowed the other report to go in with that of the committee. Then the other report would be circulated along with the evidence given before the committee, and those interested would be able to judge of the truth or falsity of the statements made.

Mr. SIFTON. When the contents of the officer's report were brought to my attention, I considered it and thought the circulation of it should be suspended, and it was suspended. But we have not burnt the copies. Those that were not put in circulation are in the office of the Geological Survey. The committee of the House considered that report. When the report of the committee is before it, the House will decide what to do, but we can hardly decide what to do until the report of the committee is made known.

Mr. SPROULE. That suggests the awkward position we are in. We are discussing a report of a committee that is not before the House—in fact a report that has not been made. The government is responsible for these reports not coming down——

Mr. SIFTON. How ?

Mr. SPROULE. Because the government controls all the committees, and controls the estimates as well. The government has no right to ask the House to consider estimates where the merits cannot be discussed without considering the effect of reports that are not before the House.

Mr. SIFTON. The question of the report of the committee has nothing to do with the voting of supplies for the geological survey for the year now beginning.

Mr. SPROULE. Certainly it has.

Mr. SIFTON. As to the statement that the government controls the committees, my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) is too old a parliamentarian to make a statement of that kind. He knows that the government does not control the committees. The Committee on Agriculture meets when it sees fit. I was not at any of its meetings, and did not exercise the slightest supervision or control over its deliberations. I understood from the reports of the daily press that they were sitting and considering the report.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) makes a statement that he knows is not borne out by the facts—the statement that the government does not control the committees. Does not the government have its majority on every committee that majority being sent there to carry resolutions when necessary ? We cannot carry a resolution——

Mr. SIFTON. But the hon. gentleman can make a great fight.

Mr. SPROULE. But the government's friends are drummed up and, if necessary, the committee is held up until a majority are present to carry any resolution that may be desired. That has been done time and again this session. But that is not the main question. The minister says that the report of the committee has nothing to do with this report. Why, what is this vote ? It is a vote of the salaries of the Geological Survey Department. Is or is not Mr. Macoun an officer of that department ? If he is we are voting his salary. Is he a discredited employee, or does he still enjoy the confidence of the government ? Do they still regard him as a good man ? The minister says that professionally Mr. Macoun is a good man. But is he reliable ?

Mr. SIFTON. I understand that my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) thinks he is.

Mr. SPROULE. I frankly confess I do.

Mr. PATERSON. Then vote his salary.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not objecting to voting his salary. But other members of that committee, especially supporters of the government, have said that this officer is not a competent man or reliable man, that his report should not go out but should be recalled. Are these statements justified by the facts? We do not wish to embarrass the government, but we want to know what they are going to do about this matter in view of what occurred in committee of this House.

Mr. INGRAM. This is a serious matter though members of the government assume to treat it so lightly. Let me draw the attention of the government to the fact that this officer has been charged with deliberately making a false report in connection with a new section of the Dominion. This is an exceedingly serious matter for the men who are interested in that section of the west. It does not matter how long or how short a man has been in the service of the government if he has taken advantage of his position to deliberately make a bad report upon a portion of the country without justification for it, he must have some unworthy motive. And that is what this officer is charged with. And, if that charge is true, the question that must meet the government is whether they will continue to employ this officer. If he is innocent, the government should make it clear that he has not been guilty of deliberately making a false report, which is the charge against him by the supporters of the government. There are men who have their interests in the far west and their country should not be run down unjustifiably. If it is a good country for the settler to go into it should not be misrepresented.

Mr. SCOTT. Did Mr. Macoun run down the Peace river country ?

Mr. INGRAM. He is charged with deliberately making a bad report. I do not say he did, but my hon. friend's (Mr. Scott's) friend from the west has said he did. I hope he does not deny it, because it is on record.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend does not complain that Mr. Macoun deliberately made a false report ?

Mr. INGRAM. I have not been there and cannot say.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. But does he believe it ?

Mr. INGRAM. What I say is that government supporters have charged this government official with deliberately making a bad report. I want to know, before we vote his salary whether he is a good man or not. He has been in the service of the government for many years—for a longer time than the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) has been at the head of it. But, if he is the kind of man that he is stated to be by supporters of the government, he should not be in the employ of the government. Personally, I have a better opinion of the gentleman and do not believe the statements made against him. I have no reason to dispute anything he has stated in his report. I have not the knowledge to enable me to form an opinion as to the facts. But I should judge, from the man's appearance and conduct and all that I can learn about him, that the minister is correct when he leads the committee to believe that he is competent as a professional man in a work of this kind——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Then my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) ought to be satisfied.

Mr. INGRAM. I am not satisfied.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have some personal knowledge of Mr. Macoun. I have seen him in the service and have always thought he was a competent officer. But my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) will agree with me on one point. As to the report of Mr. Macoun I am not prepared to say whether it was right or wrong, but even a good man will make mistakes sometimes. And we shall see whether Mr. Macoun in making his report gave a proper character to the country or not—that is a matter to be investigated. This is a matter to be investigated—but even if Mr. Macoun had made a mistake, as all men are liable to make mistakes, I would not refuse to vote his salary. If it should turn out afterwards that the report of Mr. Macoun was inaccurate it would perhaps detract from his professional reputation but for all that I would not deprive the country of his services. I see no reason why his salary should not be voted even if it turns out that in this matter he is in the wrong.

Mr. INGRAM. If it should prove that the statement of a government supporter is correct that Mr. Macoun made a deliberate misreport what would the Prime Minister have to say ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If the statement has been made that Mr. Macoun made a deliberate false report this may be an issue as to which Mr. Macoun has not been tried. Every one may have his opinion on that. If it were proved, and if it should turn out to be true that he has made a false report he would not be worthy of credit but for my part I would give him the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. SPROULE. It should be understood that we are not objecting to voting his salary, but we think that his character should be vindicated and the department should state whether he is regarded as a competent man.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think the Minister of the Interior has given him that character.

Mr. SIFTON. The evidence of that is that we are asking for his salary.

Mr. SPROULE. He said that professionally Mr. Macoun is all right but he talked in a general way. Now if he is competent professionally and is reliable, then in my judgment that is all that could be expected of him and if the department and the government are prepared to retain him I take it for granted that they must regard him as a competent man or otherwise they would not ask us to vote his salary.

Mr. INGRAM. I wish to raise a solemn protest against the manner in which information of this character is brought before any committee of this House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is hardly to the point.

Mr. INGRAM. It is a point. The Geological Survey Department have in their employment what they call competent men, men whom they send into a new section of country to ascertain the nature of its climate and soil and all its good and bad qualities. That is the duty of the Geological Survey Department. They send these men in, get the information and publish it. The moment you undertake to do what the Agricultural Committee has done this year you do what is not in the interests of the people of the country. Why ? Because the very moment such a thing is brought to the attention of the Agricultural Committee and the officer is brought there there seems to be more in the question of party politics or in some personal or selfish influence on the part of members of the committee than in the question at issue. No member of that committee seems to have any personal knowledge worth speaking of in connection with the Peace river district yet they were disputing the evidence of that man who had been there for months.

Mr. SCOTT. What was the point.

Mr. INGRAM. My point is that if you are sending competent men out upon a geological survey and these men make their report, then the Geological Survey Department is responsible for the report they make and to get that information before the Agricultural Committee is not a wise or proper course.

Mr. SCOTT. Then what is the complaint against ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Against the Agricultural Committee.

Mr. INGRAM. I say so in this House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend says that he has a complaint against the method pursued this year in the Agricultural Committee in discussing an official of this government. He may be right or he may be wrong, but I suggest, and I think that on reflection he will agree with me, that this is not the moment or the occasion to make that complaint against the Agricultural Committee. The report of that Committee will, I believe, come up in a few days and that will be the best time to discuss that matter. Mr. Macoun's report was a surprise to everybody, certainly it was a great surprise to me when I read the character he gave to the Peace River Valley, and every one else, probably including my hon. friend, was surprised. I would be chagrined and sorry if the report of Mr. Macoun turns out to be correct ; he may be right, and if so all the worse for the country. He may be wrong, as I hope, and if he is wrong, every one will be glad. In the meantime I do not believe that he made an incorrect report with intention. I think perhaps he acted with some levity, was not careful enough, but even if he acted without sufficient accuracy, and acted too hastily in placing before the Canadian public a report in contradiction to all the accepted doctrines, even believing all that, I would not dispense with Mr. Macoun's services. I think he is a good man ; every man is liable to commit errors and I hope he has made one on this occasion. Even if he has I would be sorry to part with his services.

Mr. INGRAM. The right. hon. gentleman has said we should discuss this when the report is brought down. But we are voting the salary now.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. And nobody objects.

Mr. INGRAM. Only to this extent that I disapprove of calling any gentleman from the Geological Survey Department before the Agricultural Committee as was done in this case to obtain information of this kind or to repudiate a report issued by the Geological Survey Department. If the Agricultural Committee did not like that report then it might be quite in order for them to pass a resolution disapproving of the report and drawing the attention of the minister in whose department this man is employed, but to bring the official before the committee for that purpose is something of which I disapprove entirely. I am sure that no good will be attained by circulating the evidence or the report of that committee.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I do not object to the voting of Mr. Macoun's salary ; in fact I would favour increasing it, as I hope the minister has done. I think he is a very excellent official, but I do not agree with his conclusions in relation to part of the Peace River Valley. There is a great deal of misapprehension in regard to that country. It is a tract of country some hundreds of miles in extent, and the part to which objection is taken is not the Peace River Valley proper but the foothills of the mountains, 50 to 70 miles in width. I want to point out here that, as the hon. member for Alberta knows, the country immediately west from Edmonton and from 50 miles east of the Yellowhead Pass is similar to the part which would be covered by Mr. Macoun's report. You cannot find in the foothills of the mountains in any part of the west, land anything like as suitable for settlement at present as the country more remote.

Mr. OLIVER. In climate or in what respect ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Climate, nature of the soil, &c. We know that that district is much more subject to frosts.

Mr. OLIVER. My opinion is that near the mountains it will be found that the climate is more favourable than farther east.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am not going to enter into a discussion of the question but as far as the country near the mountains is concerned any person who knows anything about the Northwest Territories, as my hon friend does, will know that when you get into those parts of the country in which there are so many muskegs and wet areas you get into a climate not as favourable as that to be found farther east where it is burnt over and cleared. In discussing Professor Macoun's report let us remember that he does not condemn the whole Peace river valley but he simply speaks unkindly of a portion that is, say seventy-five miles from the Rocky mountains. If you examine Professor Macoun's report you will find that the only part of the country that he refers to is within seventy-five miles of the foothills. He does not condemn the part extending farther down for some hundreds of miles. While I do not agree with Professor Macoun's conclusions yet I have every reason to believe in the truth and accuracy of his statements. Although I do not know whether I shall have an opportunity of seeing him, I did purpose taking the opportunity of pointing out to him that in taking temperatures in the Northwest a great many officers of the Geological Survey simply put the thermometer close to the ground. I want to tell the officers of the Geological Survey, through you, Mr. Chairman, that if they put one thermometer a few inches from the ground, another thermometer three or four feet from the ground, which is the height of a nice stalk of wheat, and another thermometer higher up there is not a night in the year, especially in the summer time, in which the thermometers will vary several degrees. I would suggest to Professor Macoun and others not to attach too much importance to what they learn from farmers in that district. There are a great many farmers who in the early days were semi-missionaries, traders, and men who knew nothing of farming in the country that they came from, and who will take years to acquire a thorough knowledge of farming in the country in which they have settled. I knew Professor Macoun well, I knew his father and as I told Professor Macoun in the committee I was surprised that he differed from the report upon the foothills that his father had given. I am satisfied that Professor Macoun's conclusions will, when the country gets cleared up be found to be more or less erroneous, However, I think an officer who has the energy, pluck and manhood that Professor Macoun has should be continued in the department and that he should receive a good increase in salary.

Mr. BLAIN. What instructions were given to Professor Macoun when he was sent out to that country to make a report upon it ?

Mr. SIFTON. I asked the director when the report was brought to my attention for a copy of his instructions. It turned out, when the director came to look into the matter, that Professor Macoun's instructions were verbal, that they had not been reduced to writing and that he was to make a general report on the character of the country.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask the hon. minister when he gave instructions for the report to be withheld from the public ?

Mr. SIFTON. It was some time after the discussion arose in connection with it. I cannot just say when. It was about the time that the discussion commenced in the newspapers, probably a week or two after it was discussed in the newspapers I do not remember the exact date ; it is probably two months ago now.

Mr. BLAIN. I may draw the hon. minister's attention to the fact that this is not the report that was given to the committee. The information given to the committee was that the hon. minister gave instructions to withhold the report from the public long before the House met at all.

Mr. SIFTON. I am afraid my hon. friend must be mistaken

Mr. BLAIN Are we to understand that the hon minister allowed the circulation of the report until after the House met and the Agricultural Committee had the report brought before them for examination ?

Mr. SIFTON. I tell my hon. friend I cannot remember the exact date when the order was given. It was about the time the discussion started in the press in regard to this report. It was at that time that I sent for a copy of it myself, examined it and discussed it with the acting director. In the course of a few days I came to the conclusion that the circulation of the report should be suspended and I gave the order. I do not remember at this moment the exact date when that took place. Without looking at the written instructions that were given I could not say.

Mr. SCOTT. The report was not printed or in circulation before the House met.

Mr. BLAIN Is the hon gentleman sure of that ?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. gentleman give the date at which the report was printed and circulated ?

Mr. SCOTT. No, I am not able to give the precise date but I am perfectly satisfied that at the time the House met early in March the report was not in circulation ?

Mr. BLAIN. Will my hon. friend say that the instructions to withhold the report from the public were given after the committee on agriculture met ?

Mr. SCOTT. I have no information upon that point at all.

Mr. BLAIN If the hon. gentleman has no information it is useless for him to undertake to correct the statement we are making. May I ask the hon. minister if it is the custom of his department when sending an officer to a country like the Peace River district to report upon it to send him out without any written instructions.

Mr. SIFTON. That is what took place.

Mr. BLAIN. Is that the policy of the department ?

Mr SIFTON. No, I was under the impression the instructions had been in writing. Dr. Bell was under the impression the instructions were in writing and when I spoke to him he said he would send me a copy of the instructions. It would be his duty to prepare the instructions and to see that they were properly given. When he came to look into it he found the instructions were not given in writing. I gave a specific direction that in future all officers when sent out should be furnished with instructions in writing.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the hon. gentleman not think that this item should stand until the Agricultural Committee bring down their report so that the committee will have a chance to discuss the whole matter ?

Mr. SIFTON. The hon. gentleman can discuss the report of the committee when the report comes down. There is no reason why the item should not pass.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon gentleman will remember that a great deal of discussion took place upon this report of Professor Macoun's and that the House will be very much interested in this matter.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It will all come up on the report.

Mr. BLAIN It will all come up on the report but the committee will not have as good an opportunity on the report as it will on the item before us.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot see that. No one desires to withhold the salary of Professor Macoun. We are all agreed that he should be retained in the service and paid his salary.

Mr. BLAIN. But, it is the government that have discredited Professor Macoun if he is discredited. It is the hon. Minister of the Interior who has taken it upon himself without a proper examination to say that Professor Macoun's report is not a correct report and therefore it should not go out to the public. I think we have a right to discuss that.

Mr. SIFTON. There is no reason why the hon gentleman should not discuss it if he sees fit.

Mr. BLAIN. I am not objecting to it, but I would suggest that this would be the proper place and time to discuss the whole question.

Mr. SIFTON. You can discuss the report of the committee when it comes down. As to my action in suspending the report the hon gentleman can discuss it now if he sees fit.

Mr. BLAIN. Probably the hon. gentleman will tell the committee what items in the report he objected to, and if it was upon these items that he decided that the report should be withheld from the public. The minister selected one of the most competent officers in his department to make a report on that country, and that report having been published, it was rather an important thing for the minister to take upon himself to withhold the report. Notwithstanding the action of the minister, if the report of the Agricultural Committee is adopted, a considerable part of this report will be sent broadcast throughout the country.

Mr. SIFTON. I suspended the publication of the report because I thought that Mr. Macoun's conclusions as to the character of the country were too sweeping. I doubted that his conclusions as to the unsuitability of the Peace River district for farming purposes were justified by the facts, and until that is settled I suspended the publication of the report. I did what any member of the House would do in my position, if he were attending to his business. Among men of common sense there cannot be any difference of opinion about it.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman is now asking for salaries, and when he condemns this report and forbids its circulation, it is his duty to point out to us the page of the report to which he objects. On account of certain rumours that this report was to be suppressed, I read it long before Mr. Macoun was called upon to give evidence. It is our right to know what page of that report the minister objects to.

Mr. SIFTON. The hon. gentleman cannot be serious. The report draws general conclusions unfavourable to the agricultural capabilities of a large section of this country and pending the result of the investigation of that question, I suspended the circulation of the report. I do not take exception to any particular page of the report ; I take exception to the general conclusions of an unfavourable character which it contains, and until the Agricultural Committee reports I am not prepared to modify my conclusion or to express a further opinion about it. I am afraid that is all the information the hon gentleman can get from me.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the minister intend that for a threat ? I do not know that the minister knows any more about that country than we do ; but, at all events, he should tell us what part of that report he objects to.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to give my impression of Mr. Macoun, and the reason why the committee felt that perhaps his report or his evidence should not be published. Mr. Macoun was in that very extensive country for only about three months, and the committee felt that he might not have had sufficient time to ascertain the general character of the country. The minister will find that the committee recommends that other parties be sent out to explore that country and make a report. For that reason I was opposed to publishing Mr. Macoun's evidence, and I was in favour of the minister withholding the report that had already been published. I hope the minister will give us an intimation as to what he intends to do with reference to sending out sufficient exploring parties to cover the whole Peace River territory. How many copies of the report were circulated ?

Mr. SIFTON. A large number of inquiries had been made in the department about this country before the report was printed, and a considerable number of copies were sent out. As to further explorations, we will consider that when we get the committee's report.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that these geological reports are for sale at booksellers throughout Canada ; and, if so, how could the minister recall them ?

Mr. SIFTON. I believe all the members of the House and members of the Senate should receive these geological reports, and if there is any such desire I will endeavour to get a change in the Order in Council governing their distribution.

Mr. SPROULE. I think we now receive them ; but, as I understand it, these reports are for sale at the booksellers in the different cities, and, if that be the case, how could the minister recall their circulation ?

Mr. SIFTON. That only applies to the fully bound copies of the report of the surveys for the year. The separate reports are not dealt with in that way unless there is some special demand for them.

Mr. SPROULE. My information from the department a few years ago was the very reverse. I was endeavouring to get some of these reports for certain parties, and I was told that they could be purchased at certain bookstores, either the volume containing all the reports, or the reports of the separate branches, and that the maps accompanying these separate reports could be got at the same time.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Might I ask the minister whether Dr. Bell is not entitled to the statutory increase ?

Mr. SIFTON. Yes, I have not any doubt that he is.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I understand he has not had the increase for a number of years?

Mr. SIFTON. He has not, because he has been an applicant for the position of director. The question of an increase has not been considered. If he applies for it, I will recommend it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. With reference to the reports, I had occasion to purchase a number for my constituents, and I inquired how much money was collected for the reports sold, and I understand that there was not sufficient collected to pay the salary of the man who collects the money.

Mr. SIFTON. Quite likely.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would it not be wise after spending $153,000, which the department expects to spend this year, to have the reports circulated free ? It would be much better to spend a few hundred dollars in that way, I should think, than to spend a lot of money gathering information and then practically lock it up.

Mr. SIFTON. I discussed the question of the circulation of the reports with the late Dr. Dawson, who was the director at the time the Order in Council was passed providing for the method by which they are disposed of ; and the reason he gave me why the government at that time had decided to charge a fee for the reports was that otherwise people would get into the habit of writing for them without making any use of them. The small charge put upon them is not sufficient to deter anybody who wants the reports of the Geological Survey from getting them.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister stated that if Dr. Bell applied for the statutory increase, he would be likely to get it. Why does he not grant it to him ?

Mr. SIFTON. Dr. Bell made up the estimate himself, and if he had put it in, I would have recommended it. My attention has never been called to the matter before.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the minister not grant the statutory increase to any one who does not ask for it ?

Mr. SIFTON. The rule is that the deputy reports to the minister recommending the officers whose salaries are to be increased. If Dr. Bell had put in his own statutory increase, I would have recommended it.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose that while he could recommend it for others, he might feel a little delicate about recommending it for himself.

Mr. SIFTON. We follow the ordinary rule.

Mr. SPROULE. How many in this branch are receiving the statutory increase this year, and how many received it last year ?

Mr. SIFTON. Twenty-two technical officers are receiving it this year. I have not the number for last year.

Mr. SPROULE. Is Mr. Macoun one of them ?

Mr. SIFTON. His name is on the list for this year, and I have not any doubt that he got the increase last year.

Geological Survey—exploration and surveys, printing and publication reports, maps, &c., wages of assistant explorers, draughtsmen, clerks and others, purchase of specimens, books, instruments, stationery, mapping materials, maintenance of Museum, laboratory apparatus, chemicals, miscellaneous expenses, &c., advances to explorers, $60,000.

Mr. SPROULE. It would be more intelligible if we had the amount to be expended on each of these items instead of lumping them all together. We should know, for instance, how much is spent on printing and publishing the report and have some idea whether it is better to sell them or give them away. The hon. minister made a statement, with which few will agree, that people ask for reports they have no use for. I do not think anybody would ask for a report, which he did not intend making use of.

Mr. SIFTON. These items are voted in this way every year.

Mr. SPROULE. What does the minister intend spending on explorations and surveys this year ?

Mr. SIFTON. I have been putting geological estimates through the House the last eight years and that question was never asked before. The Auditor General's Report shows how every dollar is expended. The only way I could obtain the details of each for this year would be to put a clerk at work, separating the items in the Auditor General's Report, to total them up, and I could then read them to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPROULE. Surely before the council decided on the amount to be expended, it must have the details of each item. It must know how much is required for exploration and surveys and so on.

Mr. SIFTON. The usual practice has been to vote a lump sum. The director then knows what amount of money he has to go on with the work, and he divides that amount among the several branches of work required to be done.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is any of this to be used for the purpose of exploring for gas and oil ? For a few years previous to 1898, several thousand dollars were spent in this direction. Is any of this amount to be used for that purpose this year ?

Mr. SIFTON. No.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is going to be done with the machinery which has been stored for a number of years at Edmonton, tubing and casing. Is it to be allowed to rust and get rotten ?

Mr. SIFTON. We voted a certain amount for the purpose of putting down certain test wells. They were searching not for gas but for oil. The test wells were put down, but the officers were not successful in finding oil and the project was abandoned.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is it not reasonable to ask that a certain amount should be voted for that purpose ?

Mr. SIFTON. It might be, and I am quite prepared to hear my hon. friend's views on the subject.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It would be of great interest to the industry at large to have certain explorations carried on as they were previous to 1898. The money would be well spent in carrying on explorations of that nature, and these explorations would be of great benefit to the geological department provided the money was expended judiciously.

Mr. SIFTON. The work which was done did not result in any benefit at all because the tests were not successful in locating any oil in paying quantities. My hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) is familiar, no doubt, with the oil business, and he will probably agree with me that the oil prospector is the man who is going to find the oil—the man who makes a business of prospecting is more likely to find it than the scientific officer of the geological survey. The work of the survey, so far as that is concerned, is more properly done by giving information as to the locality in which the geological deposits are of such a character that oil may be looked for there with some probability of finding it. But as to putting down test holes and carrying on the practical work of prospecting for oil, experience shows that we had better leave that to the prospector. As I said, we were not successful in the test holes put down though these experiments cost a good deal of money. Under our Northwest land regulations we encourage the making of tests for oil, and a number of commercial companies are carrying on testing operations at the present time, some of them with a degree of success. In one or two locations there are wells which, though not very productive, yield oil in paying quantities.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It is an easy matter to engage men of experience in the business. The reports of the Geological Survey show that there are sections in the Northwest in which some oil has been found and in which the officers think it desirable to explore. Would it not be wise to engage men qualified for the business and expend a few thousand dollars in well directed efforts to develop that industry ?

Mr. SIFTON. That is a fair question for consideration. I would not be inclined to say finally that that would not be a good plan.

Mr. WILSON. The hon. minister has not explained the increase of $10,000 in this item.

Mr. SIFTON. The ordinary vote is $60,000. In the endeavour to practise that economy which is such a distinguished characteristic of the present government we reduced the vote last year very much against the will of the director. This year, I take a step in the other direction and have increased it again to $60,000, besides voting $19,000 for special explorations.

Mr. BLAIN. Referring to the question of exploring for oil, as I understand it, the department has expended some thousands of dollars for the purchase of a plant which is now stored at Edmonton. This is a matter which should receive the attention of the minister. He knows that the consumption of oil is a large item of expense to the people, and that new discoveries of oil will probably be of great benefit to the people. It does not seem to be in the public interest that the hon. gentleman should spend some thousands of dollars in the purchase of a plant and then allow it to be stored away out of use. On the contrary, I should think it would be wise to place a few thousand dollars at the disposal of the department to put that plant in operation. It is not a satisfactory answer to say that experiments were made for a year or two, but that as they were unsuccessful the efforts were abandoned. It is well known that in several parts of the Dominion oil has been found where, in the earlier days, it was thought it could not be found. I would strongly favour the suggestion of the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) that some money should be spent in examination and experiment for the purpose of discovering oil.

Mr. OLIVER. In regard to the suggestion of the hon. member for East Lambton, (Mr. Armstrong) as I happen to represent the part of the country to which he refers, I may be allowed a word or two. I do not wish to take the position of asking or demanding special expenditures in that part of the country. At the same time, if it should be the will of parliament to authorize an expenditure for boring for oil in that part of the country, certainly the project would have my most hearty approval. As to the experiments that have been made, I have a little crow to pick with the geological survey in that matter, and will take this opportunity of placing the facts before the committee. It is a number of years now since the late government thought fit to institute explorations for oil in that part of the country. They put down a well at Athabasca Landing, 100 miles north of Edmonton, where there was no sign of oil. They found none. They put down another well at Victoria, 80 miles northeast, where there is not and never was—never was reported to be—any sign of oil. They did not find any. They also put down a well at Pelican Rapids, down the Athabasca about 120 miles below the landing where there has always been a flow of natural gas. They struck a very heavy flow of natural gas, but so far as I am aware no oil, and they suspended operations. The machinery having been transported 120 miles down the river by flatboat, I take it that the government believed that it would cost more to take care of machinery there than it was worth, and that if they undertook to bring it out it would cost more than it would be worth when brought out. My quarrel with the Geological Department is this—that they bored three wells where there was no sign of oil and where nobody suggested that there was a sign of oil. They arrived at the conclusion that they should bore there because of some theory of the director of the survey. They refused to bore for oil where there were surface indications of oil—they could not be induced to bore there. What I want to suggest to the minister is that if, the House being in generous mood as it seems to be, provides the money for further oil boring operations and the government undertake the work, the boring should be done where there are indications of oil, and not where there are no such indications.

Mr. INGRAM. Where is that?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot say that there is oil, but I can say that there is evidence of oil, in a location about 25 miles slightly of north from Edmonton. That has been known for many years. It was brought to the attention of different representatives of the geological survey, but they would not bore there. I would respectfully suggest that if there is to be more boring for oil in that country the boring should be done where there are indications that oil will be found.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the hon. member say that the late government refused to have their officers bore for oil where there were indications of oil and had them bore where there were no indications.

Mr. OLIVER. It was not the government but the Geological Survey who bored where there was no oil. I am suggesting to the minister that if he takes the money he should bore where common sense would indicate borings should be made.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that officers in the Geological Survey instructed their men to bore where there were no indications of oil whatever?

Mr. OLIVER. I assert most positively that the late director of the Geological Survey, Dr. Dawson, directed that the boring should be carried on at two certain places, at which neither Dr. Dawson nor any one else ever suggested that there was any evidence of oil.

Mr. BLAIN. That is rather a reflection on the late Dr. Dawson.

Mr. OLIVER. Dr. Dawson had reasons of his own. He had the borings made upon a geological theory which in that particular case did not happen to be correct.

Mr. BLAIN. Does my hon. friend think it will be worth while for the government to set aside a certain amount of money for the purpose of making further tests in that section of the country ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not sufficiently expert to give an authoritative opinion and of course it is not my responsibility, but as the minister said to the man on his death bed who asked as to the utility of making a large bequest to the church, 'there will be no harm in his trying it.'

Mr. BLAIN. I am sure the hon. gentleman's constituency will not be much interested in that statement.

Mr. OLIVER. In the southern part of my large constituency private individuals are boring successfully. I was speaking more of the north ; I would say it it much more to the advantage of Canada that private enterprise should bore where oil is likely to be found than that public enterprise should bore where oil is not likely to be found.

Mr. BLAIN. You have more faith in the government than that ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have very little faith in our Geological Survey Department. This is only one instance from which I have formed that opinion.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am surprised to hear the words of the hon. member for Alberta. I do not think he would use them if he realized the importance of developing an oil industry such as we hear is likely to be developed in that country. His constituents I think, will be anything but pleased at the half hearted manner in which he asked support from the Geological Survey Department in this matter.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not ask them and I do not intend to.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That is a good thing for the hon. gentleman's constituents to know. I believe that we do not spend sufficient money on the Geological Survey. The opening of even one mine would more than bring back to the country the amount of money expended in this way.

Mr. INGRAM. 'Purchasing specimens,' what does that mean ?

Mr. SIFTON. That refers to some small purchases from time to time of some small specimens of rocks which may be in the possession of private individuals. The department may require them for examination or may not have a sample of that particular variety. The amounts paid are very trifling.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought this was to purchase specimens for exhibition. You usually use a portion of your vote every year for the purpose of supplying specimens to schools and collegiate institutes.

Mr. SIFTON. I should have added that in some cases where very fine geological specimens are in the hands of private individuals and the officers of the survey think they would be of value for the permanent museum they are purchased. Of course, the amounts that are paid are comparatively small. As to the cabinets of minerals that are sent to the schools they are not purchased. They are collected by the field officers. They make these collections for school purposes out of the surplus collection that they make in the course of their work in the field.

Mr. BLAIN. I see an item of $260.03 for postage paid to the Ottawa post office. I understood that the reports were sent out free of postage. Perhaps I am wrong on that point.

Mr. SIFTON. I presume that that is for postage for letters sent to foreign countries that have to be paid for.

Geological Survey—for special explorations and surveys in British Columbia and the Yukon and the publication of reports and maps thereon, $19,000.

Mr. SPROULE. This is a new item.

Mr. SIFTON. I gave the hon. gentleman the particulars as to that work.

Mr. SPROULE. When ?

Mr. SIFTON. That is in the list I read.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman gave them, I have no remembrance of it. He gave a statement of the general work that was to be done in the different localities.

Mr. SIFTON. That included the work in British Columbia. There is no special reason why this should have been put in a special item.

Mr. SPROULE. Why do you put it in a separate item ?

Mr. SIFTON. The ordinary vote is $60,000 but the director, after the first list had been made up, obtained my sanction for doing additional work in British Columbia and for the submission of the amount of money that was required to do that additional work. The amount is $19,000 and a further item is put in for it.

Geological Survey—to provide for plotting and compiling of surveys, plans, maps, and utilizing field notes, &c., $5,566.25.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Holmes). The hon. Minister of Interior (Mr. Sifton) moves to amend the item by adding the following :—

Salaries, greater than $500 per annum may be paid from this vote, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the explanation of that? There is nothing about salaries in this item.

Mr. SIFTON. If the director requires to call in an expert for a short period he will have to pay him whatever his services are worth, or whatever the person who is employed demands and the director thinks a fair amount. These services are only of a temporary character and it amounts to very little, but the terms of the Civil Service Act are such that he could not pay a man under such circumstances more than $500. He would have to go in as a clerk at $500 a year, and in order to enable the director to employ persons of special capabilities for a short time this is put in. As an illustration, I may say that one of the officers lately was making a special investigation into the question of nickel, and there was some metallurgical work that was required. As they did not have an officer in the survey to do it, they had to employ somebody temporarily, and they secured the services of a gentleman from McGill College, who was paid, I think, $100 a month.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to ask the hon. minister whether there is anything in this item, No. 198, for any further explorations in the Peace River district?

Mr. SIFTON. No.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to ask if it is the intention to have an item of that character placed in the estimates?

Mr. SIFTON. I cannot say till I see the report of the committee.

To pay for assay apparatus and chemicals, metallurgical, petrographical, library and clerical assistance (salaries greater than $500 per annum may be paid from this vote, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act), $6,300.

Mr. SPROULE. How is it that you have to put salaries in here again?

Mr. SIFTON. The remarks I made a short time ago apply to that.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to know if Mr. J. B. Lindsay has any land leased in townships 8 and 9 and ranges 5 and 6, west of the 4th meridian. I shall be glad to furnish the hon. minister with a short note I have here if he would be good enough to furnish the information. What I want to know is how many acres of grazing lands, with the date and price, have been leased to Mr. J. B. Lindsay, in townships 8 and 9, range 6, west of 4th meridian, or in township 8, range 5, west of 4th meridian, and what homestead entries have been made in township 8, range 5, west of 4th meridian.

Mr. SIFTON. Will the hon. gentleman send the memorandum down?

Mr. INGRAM. Yes.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he has brought down that report that he promised in regard to Mr. Stewart?

Mr. SIFTON. I will bring it down to-morrow.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. There may be some Bills at the earlier stage, and in supply the estimates of the Prime Minister, the estimates of the Minister of Agriculture, and in the afternoon the estimates of the Minister of the Interior will probably be resumed.

Mr. SPROULE. What Bills?

Mr. FIELDING The Prime Minister did not state.

Mr. WILSON. I had an understanding with the Minister of the Interior that he would go on with the immigration estimates immediately after the Bills. If we get into the other estimates we cannot tell when they will be reached.

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of the Interior tells me that he will be ready to go on with his estimates immediately upon supply being moved, so that the Interior estimates will have priority.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.50 a.m., Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 160) to amend the Bank Act. He said: This is a measure of which mention was made some days ago in connection with the programme of business for the remainder of the session. While I propose to repeal a statute passed in 1899 and reenact it in amended form, this is only done for convenience of drafting, and the actual change which is made is very slight indeed. Some of our banks are doing business in British colonies other than Canada, notably in the case of the British West Indies, and it is found to be convenient in the way of business to permit those banks to issue notes expressed in the currency of the colony in which they are doing business. We have provided for that in our Bank Act by allowing them to issue notes in pounds sterling as well as in dollars and cents, which is the form of our own currency. A case has arisen, however, in one of the West Indian Islands which it is found is not quite covered by the terms of the Bank Act. In the island of Trinidad, one of the largest and most important of the British West Indian colonies, they use dollars and cents as we do, but while their currency corresponds in form to ours it does not correspond in actual value. The West Indian dollar is worth a little more actually than the Canadian dollar, therefore a note circulated in the Island of Trinidad redeemable in Canadian currency would be a cause of confusion. The bank in question proposed to overcome the difficulty by making a deposit of securities with the colonial government equal to the difference between the Canadian dollar and the West Indian dollar, to the extent of the whole issue of the notes in that colony. But the British government which has a supervision over the Island of Trinidad—for it has not quite the same system of government that we have—the British government thought that it was an undesirable way of dealing with the matter, and the Colonial Office suggested that the Canadian government should be asked to make such an amendment to the Bank Act as would recognize the issue of notes expressed in the currency of the colony itself, that is in the West Indian dollar instead of the Canadian dollar. It is wholly a technical matter, and does not depart in any way from the spirit of the Act already laid down. As the imperial government think this is the best way of dealing with it, I propose such an amendment to the Act as will make it clear that our banks can issue their notes in the currency of any particular colony in which they are doing business. We have already done that in relation to pounds sterling, and we simply adapt ourselves to the peculiarity of the West Indian dollar as distinct from the Canadian dollar.

Mr. SPROULE. Will those notes be a sufficient legal tender here ?

Mr. FIELDING. The notes will be redeemable only in the office of issue, provided that if at any time they cease to do business in that colony, they must then redeem them at any office or bank in Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. But they would not be legal tender here ?

Mr. HAGGART. Do the assets of their business in the West India islands appear in their balance sheets here ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, they have to make a return, and are subject in all respects to the conditions of the Bank Act.

Mr. FIELDING.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SECURITY BONDS FOR PUBLIC OFFICERS.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. Has the government taken any action yet on the statement made by the Honourable Minister of Finance, on the 19th of May last, respecting the placing of its guarantee business with British and Canadian guarantee companies exclusively ?
2. Has notice been given yet, and if so, when, to foreign guarantee companies of the intention of the givernment to place no more of its business with them ?
3. After what date does the government intend to do its guarantee business exclusively with British and Canadian companies ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Instructions have been given the various departments that so soon as the existing policies in foreign companies expire they will not be renewed, but the business will then be given to British and Canadian companies. No special date has been fixed, because the policies will not expire upon an even date, but whenever the policies do expire that will be the method adopted.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC—PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to trespass upon the attention of the House for a very few minutes in connection with a matter that is personal to myself. In the 'Mail and Empire' of Tuesday, July 19, 1904, there appears an article under the heading 'The Rush for the Stuff,' from which I take the following extract:

But noteworthy as the departures will be, that which will attract the largest share of attention will be the acceptance by Mr. Fitzpatrick of the valuable solicitorship of the company.

I may say that the company here is the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Certainly the company ought to be willing to pay Mr. Fitzpatrick handsomely. He has secured for it a splendid contract. But what do you think of the morals of Ottawa when a lawyer sits in the cabinet and makes a bargain for the country with a railway company—a bargain under which an immense obligation is thrown upon the people, and a small obligation is cast upon the company? What do you think when that same lawyer, after having occupied, or having appeared to occupy, the position of representative of the people, becomes, immediately after the contract has been put through, the paid legal representative of the company with which as a minister he has been bargaining? Look at the danger involved in a transaction of this kind. A man may sit in parliament, he may occupy a position in the cabinet, and while bargaining, apparently for the country, he may really be the representative of the company with which, as a minister, he is transacting public business. A bargain may be devised, the minister may know that if it goes through he will get a very highly paid position. He sees to it that the interests of his employers or clients of the near future are duly attended to. He takes care to push the thing through in as good a shape as may be for the company, for he wants the position, and the money attached to it. Is this right?

This statement constitutes the most serious charge that could possibly be made against a professional man. I quite realize that in so far as certain elements in this country are concerned a man who happens to be connected with public life can be charged with every crime short of murder, but in so far as our professional reputations are concerned it seems to me that we ought to some extent to be protected by the ordinary rules of decency. I need not say that there is not a word of truth in this statement. No such offer was ever made to me or ever contemplated or would have been entertained, and the gentlemen connected with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway know better than to make any such offer or entertain the hope that an offer of that description would be entertained for a single moment. I think that this statement is absolutely——

An hon. MEMBER. Malicious.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will not say malicious, but it is absolutely unjustifiable in view of the fact that when this ridiculous story was first spread I took the pains to deny it, and I think that in the very same number of the 'Mail and Empire' as that in which this article appeared my denial is to be found; at all events, the Ottawa 'Citizen' of July 19 contained a denial of the statement. It does seem to me that under these circumstances, I am justified in expecting that the same publicity will be given to this denial as was given to the charge contained in this article. That is all I ask for and that is what I mean to have.

NATURALIZATION AND ALIENS—AMENDMENT.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 147) to amend the Acts relating to Naturalization and Aliens.—Mr. Fitzpatrick.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). When this Bill was up for consideration some days ago my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) suggested with respect to the amendment I introduced providing for the naturalization of aliens in Manitoba that some alterations should be made so as to provide that an alien should be obliged to apply to the county court nearest to the place where he resided. In view of that I have prepared this amendment, which I have submitted to my hon. friend, and which, I believe, he found to his satisfaction. I therefore move:

That section 11 be further amended by striking out the lines from 20 to 26 thereof and substituting the following; In Manitoba to the county court, which has jurisdiction where the alien resides or if there be no county court in that jurisdiction, then to the county court nearest to his residence or the county court the place of holding of which is nearest to such residence.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill, as amended, reported, read the third time and passed.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 148) to amend the Dominion Elections Act of 1900—Mr. Fitzpatrick—read second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. HAGGART. I did not notice the House going into committee, but I may say that the leader of the opposition is away, and he would like to be here when this Bill is going through.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Very well.

Progress reported.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Are you ready to go on with Bill (No. 149) to amend the Representation Act of 1903?

Mr. HAGGART. That had better stand too.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Can we take Bill (No. 152) respecting the arbitration with the Grand Trunk Railway Company?

Mr. BARKER. I think there will be some discussion on that. I would like the hon. gentleman to let it stand.

Orders allowed to stand.

SEED-GROWERS' ASSOCIATIONS.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) moved second reading of Bill (No. 151) respecting the incorporation of seed-growers' associations.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. FISHER. This Bill is founded on the lines of a law which was passed by this parliament a few years ago to authorize the incorporation of live stock associations. Gentlemen who have followed recent events are aware that a good deal of discussion has occurred in the country in regard to the seeds that are used by our farmers for sowing purposes. A number of persons interested in seed-growing and anxious to bring about a better quality of seed which should be true to name have formed themselves into an association, but there is no law under which this association or subsidiary associations can be legally constituted. I have been asked to introduce this Bill, which would make those associations legally incorporated bodies. The real reason for this is to provide machinery by which a certificate of the purity of the seed can be given. The Bill authorizes the formation of these associations and the confirmation of the by-laws. The association was formed only a couple of months ago at a general meeting, which was held at Ottawa, and the reason of the late introduction of this Bill is because of the but recent action of those interested. I think the measure is in the interests of the farmers of this country, and I hope there will be no opposition to it, and that it will become law even though introduced at this late period of the session.

Mr. LENNOX. The association will be capable of contracting debts ?

Mr. FISHER. The Bill would indicate that.

Mr. LENNOX. Section 9 provides that the liability of each member shall be limited to the amount of his membership dues. If this association can contract debts, there would seem to be no adequate provision for meeting these liabilities.

Mr. FISHER. Would it not be better to discuss the details in committee ?

Mr. LENNOX. This is a question of principle. When we incorporate companies with limited liability that is set out on the face of the Bill, and they are so advertised. This association may be necessary, or it may not be necessary, but anyway the proposition on the face of the Bill is that the liability of the members shall be limited to the fees they happen to owe. Can the minister guarantee to the House that this is satisfactory ?

Mr. FISHER. The by-laws of the association will have to be approved before the association can become incorporated, and these by-laws would be known to any one who is connected with the association. There are a large number of associations in this country, agricultural societies and live stock societies, which are incorporated in the same way. The members of these associations are not liable for the debts of the association beyond their membership fee ; and yet the association, being a body corporate, has power to deal with the subjects within its control, and all its property would be liable to that extent, but no further. I think that would be a sufficient safeguard to the public dealing with it.

Mr. LENNOX. What the minister says is certainly true to some extent, in regard to agricultural associations and other associations of a similar kind. But I cannot see that his reference to the question of by-laws can help him, because by-laws are subordinate to the Act, which determines the liability and the status of the association and the remedy which any person can have against it. I do not want to offer any unfair opposition to the Bill. I merely want to draw attention to these points. If the minister, having looked into the matter, is of opinion that this association can be incorporated without danger to the public, I do not propose to say any more about it at the present stage.

Mr. FISHER. The provision discussed by the hon. gentleman is exactly the same as the provision incorporating live stock associations.

Mr. SPROULE. I take it that the annual fee would provide a fund from which all ordinary accounts would be paid. It is not likely that this association would be disposed to engage in anything like commercial transactions. The only expenses incurred would be the carrying out of the objects of the association, such as keeping a record and publishing that record.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. CLANCY. While the hon. Minister of Agriculture has stated that this Bill is on the same principle as an Act already on the statute-book relating to live stock associations, he clearly perceives, I am sure, that the conditions are not quite the same. Without offering any very decided objections to the Bill, I wish to point out that we are incorporating an association, which may be started by five persons, and on which the hon. gentleman proposes to confer very wide powers in the shape of by-laws which are not before this House, and which may be changed from time to time. That may be a menace to persons who are not members of the association. It is said by the minister that they may become members ; but there is no reason why any man should have to become a member of such an association in order to escape difficulties adverse to his interests that might arise from its operations. The first thing we ought to have from the minister is a copy of the by-laws, which might be made a schedule of this Bill ; otherwise we do not know what powers this association may exercise. The hon. gentleman may answer by saying that the by-laws must be subject to the approval of the minister ; but that is not a sufficient safeguard. I think we ought to know at the beginning just what we are doing. Let me point out further that all such legislation as this is asked for in the name of the people. I have not quite as much confidence as some may have in that being the real object that impels men to seek extraordinary powers from this parliament. I am not denying that the public receive great advantages from these associations ; but I have always viewed with some suspicion those who seek legislation of this kind in the name of the public interest. There will be to some extent a close corporation, which means that those in the association will have the seal of approval from the Department of Agriculture, and, after following the experiments, may be able to control the sale at very much increased prices of seeds which are the products of these experiments. I would like the hon. minister to consider the point I raise, that we ought to know just what powers are to be given by this parliament to the association, by way of making by-laws to govern it afterwards.

On section 1—application for incorporation,

Mr. FISHER. I think it would be impossible for us to put in a schedule of this Act the details of all the by-laws of this association. My hon. friend will notice that in section 5 there is an outline of what these by-laws and rules shall provide for :

(a.) the registration of the history of selected seeds for use in the production of one or more kinds of field or garden crops ;
(b.) the admission, suspension and expulsion of members ;
(c.) the election of officers and their duties ;
(d.) the mode of convening annual, general and special meetings ;
(e.) the audit of accounts ;
(f.) the location of the head office and the branch offices, if any.

Mr. CLANCY. The two first ones would be the objectionable ones, if any.

Mr. FISHER. The general association which was formed here this winter passed what I might call preliminary or tentative by-laws. I have just sent to my department to get those and they will be here in a few minutes, but I hardly think it would be advisable to incorporate them in the Bill. The regulations and by-laws might be very different in each association. This Bill does not contemplate the formation of one association only for the whole Dominion, but according to section 4, it provides :

Not more than one association for keeping the records of selected seeds for each different kind of seed or garden crop, shall be incorporated under this Act.

There might be an association for the growth of seed corn, another for the growth of seed wheat, and so on, and each of these would have different by-laws and regulations. In the Act incorporating live stock record associations, on which this Bill is modelled, there are no such by-laws or rules, nor are they to be found in the Acts incorporating various other agricultural organizations.

Mr. CLANCY. Under this Bill you can only have one distinct association for each kind of seed. But take localities where different classes of cereals are grown and where different associations may be formed, will you have one set of by-laws and rules for all ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think it would be possible for more than one association to be formed to deal with any one particular class of seed. The seed growing oats in the province of Ontario, for instance, would have to be under one association, but that association might have its local branches. Otherwise you would have a clash of authority between the different associations in the issuing of certificates. We would then experience the same difficulty which has arisen to a certain extent in the live stock business, and there would be one class of pedigree or certificates which would be valuable and another of no great value.

Mr. HAGGART. The objection to legislation of this kind is simply this. Although these corporate powers are given for a most laudable purpose, the danger is that they may result in the forming of corporations for speculative purposes without the usual liability attaching to the parties connected with them. That might be remedied by giving power to any one upon certain conditions, such as the payment of fees and agreeing to certain by-laws, the right of becoming a part of the corporation. The danger of a Bill of this kind is that three or four parties may form themselves into an association and become a close corporation.

Mr. FISHER. The by-laws must be approved by the Department of Agriculture, and certainly no Department of Agriculture would think of allowing a by-law to be passed which would prevent anybody interested in the business becoming a member of the association. Sections 1, 2 and 6 guard against the danger my hon. friend anticipates.

Mr. LENNOX. I think that probably, so far as that point is concerned it would work out under sections 1 and 2, in connection with the schedule. But what that brings us to is this—we are doing what we are frequently invited to do, we are framing skeleton legislation and leaving it to the minister to fill it in according to his judgment. We are putting into the hands of the minister not only powers that are frequently asked by the ministers, but we are going a good deal further than we usually go. We are asked to give the minister indefinite power in a new field, in an experimental matter where we have, so far as I know, nothing definite in the way of knowledge or experience. It would be right for the minister—and I presume he will do it when called upon—to give us a distinct statement of exactly what this association, when formed, is intended to do, and what their powers are to be, and to outline—as he has thought the matter out—what will be the effect of their action assuming that they carry out his intentions. Now, here we have under section 4:

> Not more than one association for keeping records of selected seeds of each distinct kind of field or garden crop shall be incorporated under this Act.

Now, suppose that one association is made for keeping the records of selected seeds of wheat, another for barley, and so on with the various kinds of grain. But it is not confined to grain for it covers garden products as well. Suppose, that five persons, as provided under this Bill, form a society to keep the records of seed wheat for Canada. (By what particular method this is to be done I do not know; no doubt that will be explained to us.) But, suppose that all these five people live in the Klondike. We shall thus have in the most extremely distant portion of the Dominion the association that will have control of the records of seed wheat for Canada. And another association in a section distant from the centre of the Dominion may have control with reference to seed oats, and so on. Then, we have it in the Act that no other association can be formed. How that can be beneficial, or how it can work out satisfactorily, I am at a loss to know. The minister says—though the Bill does not say it—that there may be branch associations. I submit to the minister that that will not be found satisfactory. It is bad enough to have the parent association consisting of five members controlling the whole matter in regard to one kind of produce, but it would be infinitely worse if that association could farm out the business all over the Dominion. I submit that that will not be satisfactory. As I said, this may be a good Bill or a bad one, but it is certainly the duty of the members of the committee to have such facts placed before them as will enable them to judge that the Act will probably result in good. This is an experiment, and, until it is shown beyond all reasonable question that there is necessity for it, that there is a difficulty to be overcome and that this measure is likely to overcome it, we should not move in the direction proposed—we should not make a plunge in the dark. The first thing is to have the minister define clearly the object of this association, and to state how it is to accomplish that object, what power it will have when in operation and what control we shall have over these powers as exercised from time to time.

Mr. FISHER. I think that if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) examines the Bill, he will see that section 5 answers most of the points he has brought up. From the experience of other agricultural associations, I infer that no by-laws will be proposed by the association—and certainly, if proposed they will not be approved by the department—which will not authorize anybody interested in the business to join. Taking the instance given by hon. gentleman that five people in the Klondike form into an association for the selection of seeds for the growing of wheat, let us see how it would work out. If they submitted by-laws which were accepted, then anybody in Ontario or any other province might join the association, and the people in the Klondike would be immediately swamped by the majority against them if they attempted to do what was not in the interest of the production of this kind of seed throughout the whole of Canada. There is no possibility under the provisions of this Bill that any group of people can seize the association and manage it for their own gain, for every association must be open for people in any part of Canada to join it.

Mr. HAGGART. There ought to be a clause to that effect. Otherwise there is danger of it becoming a close corporation.

Mr. FISHER. To provide that anybody engaged in the business for which the association was formed might join? I think that section 5 which provides for the admission, suspension and expulsion of members could be added to or we could put in a special section to provide that any person in the business would be eligible for membership.

Mr. HAGGART. Not eligible merely, for that leaves it in the power of the corporation. They should have the right to join.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think there would be any objection to that. I will frame a clause for that purpose.

Mr. HAGGART. Let the Minister of Justice draw up a clause.

Mr. SPROULE. I take it that this will be the same as the live stock associations. Any one who pays his $2 is eligible to all the advantages of the association. When he wishes to register anything, all he has to do is to make out the papers according to the prescribed form of the association and send his fee.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to seem petty or small, but there is a point of order which it seems to me worth while to call attention to. A number of gentlemen on the other side, entering the chamber, deliberately walk by this side, and do not even do the gentleman who happens to be speaking the courtesy of bowing as they pass. I noticed that last night the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) deliberately walked by the gentleman who was speaking, and did not even deign to bow as he passed between that hon. gentleman and the chair. The hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) has just walked by on this side of the House past the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and has not done him the courtesy of bowing, although this is not the side by which he has to pass. Now, the rule is clear that no member shall pass between the member who is speaking and the chair. Yet, the hon. member for West Huron has done it five or six times, while gentlemen on this side were speaking, yet he did not even extend the courtesy of bowing his head as he passed. I do not like to bring these matters up, but I insist upon the rights and dignity of hon. gentlemen on this side being respected.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand the Minister of Agriculture to say that a largely attended meeting was held in the city of Ottawa during the winter for the purpose of giving some opinion respecting the formation of a society of this kind. I would like the minister to give the committee some explanation as to the number of representative men that assembled themselves together. Perhaps at the same time he would give some information as to the resolutions they passed, and what general demand for the formation of an association of this kind has come from the people of Canada. Perhaps the minister would say as to whether there were representatives from all the provinces of Canada, whether the introduction of a Bill of this kind has the approval of the Minister of Agriculture of the local governments, and of the officers of the experimental farms. What I fear is the danger that we are going to spread out this kind of thing until the average farmer will not know just where he stands. It would bother the Minister of Agriculture himself to know whether he is controlling the whole of the agricultural interests of Canada or not. It seems all these organizations should come within the scope and control of either the Dominion government or of the local government; and I rather see in this some indication that a certain number of men may form themselves together for the purpose of registering seeds of different kinds, and then they will lead the farmers to believe that it will not be possible for them to grow any other kind of seeds than those registered. It may be that in certain sections of Canada people may be growing a class of seeds which it may not be possible to have registered under this association. I think it is a measure that requires mature consideration on the part of the minister. I fear he is rather hasty in this legislation. I think it would be interesting to the committee if the minister would give us full information regarding these gentlemen who assembled together in Ottawa recently, what was their object, and whether they made any very extended recommendations to the minister for the introduction of a Bill of this kind.

Mr. FISHER. I am glad to give the hon. gentleman the information he asks for. In regard to the provincial governments their Departments of Agriculture were all communicated with, and a good many of them were represented at the meeting which took place here about three or four weeks ago. They expressed their sympathy with this work.

Mr. BLAIN. How many?

Mr. FISHER. Three departments were represented by officials, and two by letters which were written to the officer of my department who had charge of this meeting—that makes five provincial departments. There are to-day about 140 gentlemen scattered all over the Dominion who have given in their names to form the Dominion Seed Growers Association.

Mr. BLAIN. Are those farmers chiefly or business men?

Mr. FISHER. Farmers; I do not think there are business men concerned in it at all. They are men who are interested in the growing of seeds. The work of growing seeds has been gradually increasing in this country, and there has been correspondence with the officers of my department for about four years, until it has culminated in this gathering which took place at Ottawa. It was in consequence of a general interest which has been felt in the country at large and resulting in a request for a gathering of all those who were interested to organize themselves for the purpose in view. They formed themselves into an organization and passed by-laws, a copy of which I have under my hand. I will read to the committee the one which indicates the objects of the association:

The object of this association is to advance the interests of seed growers and other farmers by,

(a) Making regulations respecting the growing, selecting and preserving of seeds of various kinds of farm crops for the guidance of its members;

(b) Causing records to be kept of the history of seeds produced by members;

(c) Fixing standards for seeds that may be eligible for registration;

(d) Publishing information as to standards;
(e) Issuing certificates of registration to members by which hand selected seed or the product therefrom may be known from other seeds;
(f) Such other means as may be expedient from time to time.

Then they went on to adopt certain rules and regulations :

The general officers of this association shall consist of a president, three vice-presidents, a secretary and ten directors, elected each year at the annual meeting, which body shall have power to add five directors to its number.

Then it goes on to define the duties of these officers in the usual way under incorporation.

Membership. The association may admit as operating members the persons now enrolled as members of the Macdonald, Robertson Seed Growers' Association, any person resident in Canada who may choose to make seed-growing a special branch of their farm operations, and who agree to conform to bylaws and regulations of the association.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it would be better to change that word 'may' into 'shall.' 'May' leaves it optional.

Mr. FISHER. There is no objection to that change. This is the other section relating to membership. The association may admit as honorary members persons who may be directly or indirectly interested in agriculture in Canada, but who may not be producers of seed, and such honorary members shall be eligible to hold office or otherwise enjoy all of the privileges provided for the members of the association.

Mr. CLANCY. Do I understand that honorary members will be entitled to vote in making the by-laws ?

Mr. FISHER. They would here.

Mr. CLANCY. That is a very extraordinary privilege to give honorary members.

Mr. OSLER. I think the minister said this Bill was based upon the Live Stock Associations Law. On the face of it, this looks like a monopoly. An important clause of the Live Stock Bill is to be left out, clause 8 which reads :

The association may consist of annual subscribers and life members, and the annual and life membership fees shall be fixed by the members at the annual meeting or at a meeting of the association called for that purpose.
2. Any person who has not been expelled from the association may become a member thereof by giving or sending his name and address to the secretary, together with the annual or life membership fee ; and such person shall thereupon be entitled to the rights and privileges, and subject to the liabilities of a member as fully as if he had signed the application for the incorporation of the association.

That covers all the points that appear to be left out in this Bill.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think there is any objection to that. It was left out because, for the present at any rate, there was no intention of charging fees for giving certificates. It is not intended to charge for registration. That is the only reason it is left out.

Mr. OSLER. In time these certificates may become valuable, and the association would naturally charge a fee for them, and that would create a serious monopoly.

Mr. FISHER. There is not only no intention or desire to create a monopoly, but there is every intention and desire to prevent the creation of a monopoly by this Bill. The suggestion of my hon. friend is well worthy of consideration and it will obviate the difficulty that has been referred to.

Mr. SPROULE. There may be a condition adopted in regard to the payment of fees. The association could include in its regulations a provision that a member who pays his annual fee is entitled to such a certificate free just the same as a member who would be in a live stock association, although if a pedigree is got out there is a charge.

Mr. CLANCY. I thought the hon. minister would conclude reading the proposed by-laws of the association.

Mr. FISHER. These by-laws are rather voluminous. There is a number of them that are the ordinary by-laws of any association and which deal with the duties of the office. I hardly think it is worth while to go over them all in detail.

Mr. GOURLEY. Read the by-law about membership.

Mr. FISHER. I have just read that. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) suggested that the word 'shall' be substituted for 'may.' I think that is wise. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) asks whether honorary members have the power of voting and controlling the organization. I think that power ought not to be given to honorary members. Any person who does not wish to join the association and pay his fee I do not think should have the power of voting and perhaps controlling the association. I would suggest that a change should be made in these by-laws.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman under his hand the by-law which relates to the issue of certificates of registration ? That is a very important matter.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, as regards registration of seeds it says :

There will be three distinct classes of registration for seed :
1. In the hand-selected class there will be registered as 'hand-selected registered seed,' only seed obtained from heads selected by hand from the plants relatively the most vigorous and productive on a registered hand-selected seed plot of at least the third year. The registration certificate 'hand-selected registered seed' will show the number of years of antecedent selection, as for instance, 'hand-selected registered seed of the fourth year' or the tenth year as the case may be. Such seed will be suitable for use on hand-selected seed plots to produce 'improved registered seed.'

2. In the improved class there will be registered as 'improved registered seed' only grain obtained from a crop produced from hand-selected registered seed. The registration certificate of improved registered seed will show the number of years of antecedent selection of the crop from which it was obtained, as for instance, 'improved registered seed from a crop of the third year' or of the tenth year as the case may be. Such seed will be suitable for use on improved seed plots to produce 'general crop registered seed.'

3. In the general crop class there will be registered as 'general crop registered seed' only seed obtained from a crop produced from improved registered seed. Such seed will be suitable for use for the general crop of the farm, and the product from it will not be eligible for registration.

That is the rule in regard to the registration of seed as proposed. I may say that the gentlemen who drew up these rules have been engaged in the production of selected seeds for three or four years. About four years ago Sir William Macdonald, of Montreal, offered a certain sum to be distributed in prizes amongst people who would select seed, hand packing it, selecting it and growing it under certain rules and regulations. These people have more or less multiplied and the seed that has been produced from their hand selected seed has been sold as such seed. It is partly out of that that the Seed Growers' Association has grown. The work has been carried on very largely under the direction of Prof. Robertson, who has been entrusted by Sir William Macdonald with the administration of the fund offered for prizes.

Mr. CLANCY. How is the certificate perpetuated or transferred from one holder of the seed to another ? For instance the seed may undergo a change by passing through three or four hands and yet it is the same seed. I have heard no provision or rules so far by which that certificate will pass from one person to another. It is the same seed, but how will you preserve its identity until it is finally disposed of for sowing purposes ?

Mr. FISHER. It would have to be accompanied by a ticket or certificate, the grower having just so many tickets for so many bushels. In the event of a man raising fifty bushels of a certain seed he would get fifty tickets. Each one of them would accompany a bushel of seed and if the seed passed through two or three hands more it would be accompanied by a ticket in the same way as when an animal is sold it is accompanied by a certificate.

Mr. CLANCY. Would the certificate issued to the grower be a sufficient warrant in the hands of the second holder or in the hands of the next person to establish the identity of the seed ?

Mr. FISHER. Fraud might occur in the substitution of ordinary seed for selected seed by one or other of the persons through whose hands it passes, but there is in the Act a clause providing penalties for a fraud of this kind just in the same way as the law operates in regard to animals. A man may buy a registered animal, the animal may die and he may substitute another animal and pass it on, but if he does so he will be committing a fraud in which case he will be liable to penalties. I do not think there would be any more danger in regard to this than there is in regard to live stock. Any safeguard that it is possible to invent will be invented to prevent such fraud. That will have to be a detail of the regulations of the association.

Mr. BRUCE. How is such a certificate obtained in the first place ? Is there any government supervision over the grower or do you take his word for it ?

Mr. FISHER. The association would have to send an inspector before issuing the registration certificate. The association by-laws would provide machinery by which under certain conditions the association could issue the registration certificate.

Mr. BRUCE. Is it the intention that the seed of 140 growers shall be accumulated in one place and distributed from there, or is it intended to allow the grower to sell it as he pleases ?

Mr. FISHER. It will not be accumulated in one place. The grower distributes his own seed under the rules of the association.

Mr. COCHRANE. I understand the hon. minister to say that the plan upon which this Bill is based has been in operation for some years. What has been the result in connection with this seed that has been hand-picked ? Has the result been such as would warrant any outlay in regard to this subject ? Have the crops been more productive ?

Mr. FISHER. The observation of the Macdonald Seed Growers' Association is that the increase has been 19 per cent. The result of selection of seed for three years has been 19 per cent in regard to the number of seeds per head, and 27 per cent in the actual increase of production per year.

Mr. COCHRANE. Has that been ascertained by actual measurement or weight ; or is it imagination ?

Mr. FISHER. Actual test.

Mr. COCHRANE. It appears to me that you are incorporating a body of men who might perpetrate a good deal of fraud on the unsuspecting public.

Mr. FISHER. I suppose there is possibility of fraud in almost anything.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is there not a probability there would be ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think so. For six years there has been a corn growers' association in the United States, and the result is an increase of 50 per cent in the production from those seeds which were selected and registered.

Mr. COCHRANE. I hope the Bill may result in good, but there is a good deal of nonsense in this paternalism as if you were dealing with a class of men who did not know how to conduct their business. From my earliest recollection I knew that you could increase productiveness by changing your seed and by selecting it so as to get larger kernels. The farmers know all that without any paternalism from an association that is given power to defraud the public and that very likely will, unless human nature changes.

Mr. FISHER. That may be true, but the organization will enable them to do their work successfully.

Mr. COCHRANE. Farmers know their business as well as most people and they do not want any organization to tell them. This society cannot give them any better seed than they themselves could get if they took care.

Mr. GOURLEY. I have had a letter since I came here asking me what kind of punishment could be inflicted on a merchant who sold seed oats which was mixed with seed of every imaginable kind of trash. In Nova Scotia we have to depend on the people of Ontario for our seed, and I am very anxious that this Bill shall go through, if it will bring about the result hoped for. Most people are not good judges of seed and they have to trust to the seed dealer, and we know that bad seed is sold all over the country. The hon. member (Mr. Cochrane) is quite correct that there may be fraud but if the Bill will help in any way to give us good seed, I shall be glad to see it passed.

Mr. LENNOX. The committee is liable to be misled by what is read from these proposed rules as distinguished from what the Bill actually says. The minister told us that any person who was engaged in the growing of seed would be eligible for membership in this association, but the Bill says: 'Any person' and does not restrict it to seed-growers. Five dishonest men or five exceptionally honest men, as, for instance, five lawyers, could form themselves into a seed-growers association so far as the Bill goes. Any men who want to get control of this matter and exact for themselves undue profits from the farmers, can associate themselves together under this Bill. We may not always have the happiness and blessing of having the present Minister of Agriculture ; we may have some other Minister of Agriculture, and he has power to give these associations what they ask. Again, although the Bill is said to be mainly for seed-growers' associations, and although that is in the title of the Bill, there is not one word in the Bill itself to show that it has any connection with seed-growing. The men who associate themselves together need not grow one pound of seed. They are simply an association for the purpose of keeping records—not a seed-growers' association or an association of farmers, but simply a speculative monopoly of persons not necessarily connected with production of any kind. The minister said I had overlooked the 5th section. I did not overlook it ; but there is not one word in that section about the growing of seeds. The association may be controlled solely by a monopoly, and the only safeguard we have against that is the control of the minister. I say again that I am distinctly and positively opposed to this skeleton legislation and to giving the minister the power, not simply of framing one set of rules, but of framing a new set of rules for every association that may want to be incorporated. I am casting no reflection on the present Minister of Agriculture; I am speaking of the matter in the abstract. It is too much power to give to any one man. It is the equivalent of delegating to a minister of the Crown power to say what shall be the laws of the country. As representing a rural constituency, I particularly object, on behalf of the farmers, to allowing any Minister of Agriculture to say what shall be the rules in regard to the main basis of the success of the farmer, namely, the seed which he shall put into his ground from year to year, and the price which he shall pay for that seed. I am not in harmony with this everlasting evidence of paternalism. I have faith in the intelligence of the farmers. I believe they have got along very well in the past. They are one of the main elements which have gone to make this country what it is, and there is no need of our everlastingly legislating for them and keeping them in leading strings, as the minister seems to want to do from time to time. A perusal of the Bill is sufficient to convince me that it does not express the ideas that are set forth in the by-laws which have been submitted to the committee or the ideas that have been enunciated by the minister himself. It is loose, careless and indefinite. I do not say this for the purpose of being offensive, I say it because I am bound to say what I believe to be the truth in regard to this Bill. In a new matter of this kind some excuse may reasonably be urged; but the main objection to the Bill is that it places too much power in the hands of the minister, and takes away entirely from parliament that control which parliament should have and is bound to exercise on all occasions in regard to the rights of the people.

Mr. FISHER. Far be it from me to wish to arrogate to myself or to any minister or to the department any powers which are not proper or for which there is not a sufficient precedent. The form of this Bill is the form which has been adopted in regard to agricultural associations of all kinds. If the hon. gentleman will take the trouble to look at the various Acts dealing with agriculture and live stock societies, he will find that the principles embodied in this Bill are practically the same as those which have already been crystallized in legislation, not only of this but of local parliaments dealing with similar work. There is no new proposal in arrogating authority to the minister of the department in this Bill. Various suggestions have been made which are of considerable value. The hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) and the hon. member for Toronto West (Mr. Osler) have made suggestions which can be incorporated in the Bill, and I would ask that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again in order that I may prepare one or two amendments suggested and which it will be desirable to insert in the Bill.

Mr. GILMOUR. Is this Bill merely for the purpose of registration, or does it go further ? Will it give power for the sale of seeds ?

Mr. FISHER. No, it is merely for the purpose of legislation.

Mr. LENNOX. Will there be any fee for the certificates ?

Mr. FISHER. That will be decided by the association itself just as is done in the case of registration of live stock.

Mr. GILMOUR. How can you compare the two ? Live stock continues, the animals registered are continued, but the seed must perish before being reproduced. We should know the conditions under which registration shall be continued. They ought to be set out in the Bill.

Mr. FISHER. It would make the Act very cumbersome indeed to embody in it all the by-laws and regulations under which certificates can be issued.

Mr. GILMOUR. I think it absolutely necessary. This gives very wide powers, and we do not know where we are going to begin or end.

Progress reported.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that we were to have the supplementary estimates today. Will the hon. Finance Minister tell us when he is going to lay them on the table ?

Mr. FIELDING. In the preparation of the estimates there is always the possibility of delay, and I doubt if they will be down until to-morrow. I cannot promise definitely, but I hope to lay them on the table to-night or to-morrow.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at Three o'clock.

SUPPLY—WEIGHING OF DAIRY PRODUCTS IN MONTREAL.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. RUFUS H. POPE. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, I wish to call the attention of the House to a subject of great importance to the farming community, especially to that portion of the farming community that is engaged in dairying. And I shall conclude my remarks with a motion. For many years there has been a great grievance with regard to the manner of weighing dairy products shipped from the port of Montreal. This grievance is felt especially by the eastern townships and by the eastern portion of the province of Ontario. The urgency of the case was made apparent to the government some three years ago, when they issued a royal commission, addressed to W. G. Parmelee, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, for the investigation of this matter. At the beginning of the session I endeavoured to get some information in connection with the matter. Over two years have elapsed since Mr. Parmelee held this commission. It was felt—and rightly felt—by the farming community who are interested in the sale of dairy products that their affairs are handled in a neglectful way, not at all in keeping with their importance. For two years this matter has been hanging fire since Mr. Parmelee was appointed. Early in the session I took the opportunity to put the following questions :.

1. Was there a commission appointed to investigate the weighing of butter and cheese ?
2. If so, when was this commission appointed, and what was the name of the person or persons who constituted the commission ?
3. At what places, if any, did the commission hold sittings ?
4. Did they take evidence, and were reporters and newspaper representatives admitted ?
5. Has the commission reported ? If not, why not ?
6. At whose request was the commission appointed ?

This question was answered as follows :

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT (Minister of Trade and Commerce) :

1. Yes.
2. The commission was dated the 7th December, 1901. Mr. W. G. Parmelee, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, was the person appointed.

3. Sittings were held at Montreal, St. Hyacinthe, Victoriaville, Brockville, and Cowansville.

4. Evidence was taken. Reporters and newspaper representatives were present during the sittings at Montreal. None appeared at any of the other sittings.

5. Yes.

6. The commission was appointed in consequence of numerous complaints having reached the government re the weighing of butter and cheese.

You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) stated that reporters and newspaper representatives were present at the sittings in Montreal. I had heard that that was not the case, that they were not permitted to be present. And so when I received this answer from the Minister of Trade and Commerce I took the opportunity of communicating with two newspaper men in Montreal, the first was the reporter of the 'Gazette' on that occasion. I received his answer as follows :

Reporters were not admitted, but were handed a prepared statement by Parmelee after the examination was over each day.

I also applied to Mr. Paul, of the 'Star,' and received the same answer in the shape of an affidavit. So it is evident that the answer given me by the Minister of Trade and Commerce is not in accordance with the facts. As the right hon. gentleman told me that the report had been made by Mr. Parmelee, I wrote to the right hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) and asked him if he would be good enough to send me a copy. The right hon. gentleman replied that he would be very pleased to do so, but that the report was not in his hands ; it was in the hands of the Minister of Agriculture, and I would have to apply to that hon. gentleman. At that time it was rather surprising. But since then we have been afforded an opportunity to learn how the departments are being run in couples, so we are not at all surprised when we are sent from one department to another for information. So I wrote to the Minister of Agriculture. And, on the 27th May, eleven days after my letter to him, I received the following answer :

Department of Agriculture,
Minister's Office,
Ottawa, May 27th, 1904.

Dear Sir,—Yours of the 16th instant would have been replied to earlier but that the report for which you asked was one in the Trade and Commerce Department. I have obtained it and have had a copy made so as to afford you the courtesy of receiving it before the order of the House is passed as by your motion. I may add that I shall be very glad to facilitate the passage of the motion when it is reached.

Yours truly,
SYDNEY FISHER.

R H. Pope, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

The motion referred to was one calling for all the documents in connection with this matter. The only thing I have received in answer to that motion is a copy of that report. However, we on this side are accustomed to treatment of that kind from the government. Of course, the government is necessarily the custodian of documents relating to public matters. When we, as an opposition, seek to perform our duties in criticising the acts of the government, and those for whom they are responsible, we can only do so on the information contained in documents in the charge of the government. It is evident that in the public interest that information should be furnished promptly. But that is not the treatment that has been accorded to the opposition by the government of the day since they came into power. On many occasions we have had to piece out the information as best we could, or wait until the government was pleased to furnish it. I presume that I will have to wait until next year for full information with regard to that matter to be forthcoming. However, there is sufficient in the report of Mr. Parmelee to warant me in the conclusion that the government have been neglectful of the best interests of the farming community. This matter was very earnestly brought before the government and the people of Canada by Mr. Bull, a gentleman with whom the Minister of Agriculture was acquainted, for I found that that hon. gentleman gave Mr. Bull a certificate of character. So far as I am concerned, I have practically no acquaintance with Mr. Bull. I met him here once when he called attention to this matter, and he furnished me with certain information he had received from the Minister of Agriculture and others, as well as with many letters to him congratulating him on making the move in the matter five or six years ago. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) said of Mr. Bull in 1902 :

Having known Mr. Bull for a long time personally, although not connected with him in any business way, I gave him that letter of introduction. Mr. Bull appears to have presented the letter to the High Commissioner's office and to have received a letter from Mr. Colmer, secretary to the High Commissioner, introducing him to certain people with whom he wished to open business relations.

He also said :

He has been a produce dealer there, and has done a good deal of buying and selling of butter and cheese in Montreal. He informed me that he wished to open direct communication with the old country and it was for that purpose that he asked from me a letter of introduction to the High Commissioner, so that when he went to England he might have somebody to whom to refer. Mr. Aaron Bull, whose name is mentioned there, is one of the most respectable and substantial farmers of my county, a gentleman whom I could trust and rely on in every shape and way ; an old Quaker, if I may use the term, whose name is noted for integrity and substantial standing in the community in which he lives. Mr. Charles A. Bull is his son, and he is a young man who, as I say, went to Montreal some years ago to enter business, and who, as far as I know, has conducted himself in a proper and trustworthy way.

So I take it for granted that Mr. Bull, being a trustworthy person, according to the Minister of Agriculture, I may have confidence in statements he may have made to me. It is not necessary for me to put on record all the letters and copies of letters from the various parts of the dairying sections of Quebec and eastern Ontario in order to show the absolute need of this investigation and of some change in the law. That would take a long time and would serve no good purpose. Sufficient to say that they are here in any number. The existence of them is known, no doubt, to the Minister of Agriculture and those who take an interest in this question. I find that the Minister of Agriculture, in 1900, in replying to the letter of Mr. Bull, said :

About the city weighers. I am not sure I could appoint a man to weigh the butter. I could, however, perhaps authorize somebody like Ruddick to be a referee in cases of dispute. If you or anybody else will work up a case such as you describe in general terms there is no doubt we could make such a row about it that either the local government or I would have to appoint a weigher. Instances such as you give me, if in detail as to dates, &c., and accompanied by such certificates carefully prepared and tabulated, would present such a case before the dairy associations or before the Butter and Cheese Board that they could not help acting.

That was the opinion of the Minister of Agriculture in 1900. He felt that he was corresponding with a man of some consequence and worthy of his confidence. This is further shown by the fact that it was since then that the minister gave Mr. Bull the certificate of character to which I have referred. Now, we find that, on 27th March, 1901, he says :

I have yours of 25th March. It is of the utmost importance that you should send me at once all the papers on the short weight matter.

So, back in 1901, three years ago, this was a matter of urgency in the best interest of the farmers of this country, and deserved immediate attention. And when I read this report, although the evidence upon which it was based was taken behind closed doors, without any of the frankness about the investigation that ought to have been manifested, it becomes clear that enough was known to warrant the commissioner in making this report, and to warrant the government in seeking to make a change in the system of weighing. However, after three years there does not seem to be the same urgency about the matter. The minister says in another letter to Mr. Bull :

Department of Agriculture,
Ministers's Office,
Ottawa, April 20th, 1901.

Charles A. Bull, Esq.,
441 St. Paul Street,
Montreal.

My dear Bull,—I have yours of the 16th. I find your statement and the papers you sent me so utterly inadequate that I will have to try and work it out with you personally if I can in any way succeed in getting a definite or clear statement from you. I have not had a moment's time in which I could do it this week. As soon as I have it I will send for you, but there is no use of your coming up here when I can't see you. In the meantime, I have written to the Board of Trade asking for a list of those authorized to weigh. I have looked up the law and found just who is empowered and authorized to appoint all weighers in Montreal. I find that McLeod is not so authorized. I have written to him asking on what authority he puts his advertisement in the paper and weighs butter and cheese. I am moving in the matter as fast as I possibly can, and the reason of any delay that there is, is because you have not been able to give a clear and definite statement which would be of any use in a public discussion in a matter of this kind.

Yours sincerely,
SYDNEY FISHER.

Consequently he still feels on the 20th of April, 1901, that there is reason for immediate action. We find again in April of the same year :

I am now in a position, after correspondence with the various authorities to state that Mr. John McLeod has no official status.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding that this man has no official standing and has no right from a legal standpoint to do so, he is allowed to continue to weigh butter and cheese from that time to this ; and when this parliament is just closing, and without action on the part of this government, that man who has no status, that gentleman who is paid—so I understand it, by the men who are actually buying butter and cheese, the man who has no reason to favour the farmer and has every reason to favour the gentlemen who are handling that product at the expense of the farmer—that gentleman still keeps on weighing. The correspondence will show, as I proceed, the unfairness of the system under which this product is handled, and I shall convince every hon. gentleman in this House that it is a shame that this parliament closes without giving some relief, and some better assurance that the farmers will be treated honestly. I find this report is dated the 22nd of October, and it gives a list of the names of all those men who are entitled to be weighers, and it does not include Mr. McLeod. Then on May 11, the minister writes to Mr. Bull :

I have yours of the 10th in regard to the meeting at Brockville. I have really nothing to add to what I have already stated. My statements are categorical and I defy anybody to challenge their accuracy. I have written to Mr. Hodgson on exactly the same lines as I wrote yourself and Benham, with the exception that in my letter to him I replied to his letter to me and consequently may have used some words slightly different, but the sense is the same as I wrote you. I have already said that the only legal and official weighers are Mr. Cameron and his assistants and that nobody else has any official or legal standing. The law authorizes nobody but the Board of Trade to make these appointments. I therefore cannot make an appointment without a change of the law.

He recognized on May 11, 1901, that we should have a change in the law. Of course this correspondence is very unsatisfactory, as you can understand, because I have not the letters that Mr. Bull wrote, I have not the arguments he advanced, I am not in possession of the information that warranted Mr. Bull in writing as he did to the Minister of Agriculture. But as I proceed you will see an estrangement taking place between him and the Minister of Agriculture. This is very near the beginning of it, when he writes him this peremptory letter. But he admits here that there should be a change in the law. Then on October 5, the minister writes to Mr. Bull :

I have yours of the 1st October. I have not been able as yet to see my colleagues about this matter, consequently cannot give you any information.

And that was previous to his taking charge of the Department of Militia. You can imagine how busy he has been, when he has the care not only of his own department, but the management and superintendence of the Department of Militia. Then his private secretary writes under date of October 19 :

Referring to your letter of the 18th, I write to inform you that Mr. Fisher left yesterday for Knowlton to return here only on Wednesday next. If the matter of short weights is of immediate importance to you, you had better address him there, although I doubt whether he could attend to it before he returns.

Perhaps he is too busy selecting officers down at Knowlton. The minister writes on October 30 to Mr. Bull :

I beg to acknowledge receipt of yours of the 18th October. I expect to see Sir Richard Cartwright in connection with subject-matter of your communication in a few days——

This was on October 30, 1901, and it has taken him a year to go across and see Sir Richard Cartwright, although he recognized in the very beginning that this was a matter of importance, a matter of urgency that should be attended to immediately.

——when I will write you the result of our interview.

Then his secretary writes on November 22, to Mr. Bull :

Mr. Fisher left here this morning for his home to return probably on Tuesday, when your letter of the 21st will be laid before him. I fear you are acting too hastily, if you are espousing the best interests of the farmers concerned. Mr. Fisher is at the present time actively engaged upon the very matter which you wish to give prematurely to the public. Communications of the greatest importance are actually passing between him and the Department of Trade and Commerce——

Think of that.

——with a view to finding some substantial solution.

Two ministers putting their heads together, working determinedly on November 22, 1901, and we are talking now in July, 1904, and nothing done yet. This is the friend of the farmer, the practical farmer advertised by his leader throughout the country, working industriously as a farmer knows how to work, coupled with the ability of the Minister of Trade and Commerce—two great departments working yoke in yoke ; and still at the end of four years we are precisely where we were when we began, excepting that Mr. Parmelee has made a report. He reports on the number of pounds of cheese that this system is cheating them out of, and has been for several years :

Mr. Fisher expects to have before him upon his return to Ottawa a reply from Sir Richard Cartwright——

Sir Richard is going to write him. Is'nt it funny ?

—in answer to his own letter of the 18th.

Is'nt that splendid ?

It would indeed be a pity to have his well directed efforts marred even ever so little by such an ill-timed communication as you seem prepared to give to the press.

This gentleman, after working two or three years, is getting uneasy when he realizes the farmers' loss through the delay. He knew of the complaints against the system by which the farmers were being cheated out of their money. He was aware of it, no man in a better position to know, no man, according to the certificate of character and integrity given by the Minister of Agriculture, had any better right. Then on December 4 :

I have yours of December 3rd. You will have to learn patience. Royal commissions are not issued in a day, in a week or in a month, very often.

Think of the little minister writing that.

The government has a good deal else to do. This is a matter I have been trying to bring before the government and have it arranged for. As it happens, I think it is now completed, but until it is completed I am not going to tell you or anybody else what is being done——

Secret.

—nor can I, as that is a matter which is confidential and cannot be talked about.

Cannot be talked about. Silence. The farmer can be beaten all this time, no trouble about that, and it was not a secret.

As soon as anything can be told I will tell you.

Yours very truly,
SYDNEY FISHER.

This is lovely. Now December 16, 1901 :

C. A. Bull, Esq., Gould Cold Storage Building, Montreal.

He has got frozen by waiting, December is a cold month.

In order to prepare for the work of the commission when it sits, Mr. Fisher would like you to be good enough to supply him with a list of those who have made complaints in regard to the weighing of butter and cheese, together with their addresses. When Mr. Fisher returns from a trip which he is just undertaking to the maritime provinces he will probably address a circular letter to those complainants and probably to others.

That is if he has time, if he is not too severely pressed, if he does not have to attend to military matters, if he does not have to conduct correspondence with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, if he has not anything else to do he may address a circular in the interests of the farmers of this country, to somebody.

Perhaps you can have this ready before the return of the minister to Ottawa, say next Thursday or Friday. In making out the list of complainants you might give separately the names of corporate bodies, as a different circular letter will probably have to be written to them.

Then on December 16, the minister writes to Mr. C. A. Bull, Esq., Gould Cold Storage building, Montreal.

My dear Bull,—An Order in Council of December 7 appoints Mr. Parmelee, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, a commissioner for the purpose of investigating the matter of weighing butter and cheese in Montreal and elsewhere. Mr. Parmelee will not be able to take the matter up until the month of January some time. In the meantime you and those interested must prepare yourselves to come before him where the advertisement of his sitting as commissioner is made. I need not insist upon it to you that you must be prepared with a good case or else things will go against you.

All right.

You will have to move your people to prepare themselves to give their evidence concisely and clearly. As a matter of friendly advice you yourself ought to write out every word you wish to say. You cannot speak clearly when you come to speak to other people. You get excited and are liable to be misunderstood. I therefore would strongly urge you to prepare what you want to say, write it over and work it over, correct it and condense it, and then read it when you come before Mr. Parmelee. If you do not do this, knowing you as I do, I know you will get into a mess and make a very bad appearance before the commissioner. I hope that you will take care about this.

An hon. MEMBER. Who says that ?

Mr. POPE. This is signed by 'Sydney Fisher' writing to his friend. Well, he did not make any mess of it because I have a letter from Mr. Parmelee the member for Shefford in which he says :

Your evidence is splendid and I am going to publish it. I got Cleary to go in. Others have promised to go into Cowansville. I fancy we will be able to make out a case strong enough to justify remedial legislation.

Evidently this poor man, thanks to the kindly advice of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, got through with the ordeal with credit to himself. Then, on January 4, we find the following :

Ottawa, January 4, 1902.

My dear Bull,—I have yours of the 3rd instant and thank you for the information contained therein.

The chief reason our eastern township's beef is worth so much less on the market is that it is from dairy stock and only half fed. The western beef is nearly all from the beef breeds and consequently is more suited for that object. This we can hardly help, as our live stock work is chiefly dairy work, but dairymen might feed their animals better and get them into better shape.

As to Mr. Parmelee's investigations—I hope to see him within a few days and let you know just what he is going to do. Be sure and be ready for him when the time comes. I got your letters all right.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) SYDNEY FISHER.

Mr. C. A. Bull,
Gould Cold Storage Building,
Montreal, P.Q.

That was in 1902. Time moves on. From one year to another we go and this correspondence is the only means of relief. I think I shall have to send this bundle to the farmers of Canada to show them the measure of relief which they have obtained within the last few years.

Ottawa, January 8th, 1902.

My dear Bull,—I have your letter December 26th inclosing list of complainants, for which accept my thanks. I will see Mr. Parmelee as soon as possible and find out when he will be able to hold the meeting.

I am sorry to hear of your illness, but trust you are all right again.

Yours sincerely,
(Sgd.) SYDNEY FISHER.

Charles A. Bull, Esq.,
Gould Cold Storage Building,
Montreal, Que.

Then, this is the circular that is spoken of in these letters.

Ottawa, January 16th, 1902.

Dear Sir,—Some time ago a number of complaints were laid before me in which statements were made as to the weighing of butter and cheese in the city of Montreal. These complaints appeared to be of such a serious nature that I, as Minister of Agriculture, felt it my duty to look into the subject.

I found that the question at issue seemed to be more nearly in the domain of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who in a general way has charge of the inspection of goods in Canada.

He never thought of that in the beginning.

I therefore consulted with Sir Richard Cartwright and with others of my colleagues. Various things contributed to delay action, but a short time ago an Order in Council was passed appointing a Royal Commission to investigate the whole subject, with a view to ascertaining the exact facts, and if necessary making a recommendation based on these facts which would guide the government and parliament in future action.

Mr. W. G. Parmelee, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, has been named Royal Commissioner. He has arranged to sit for the purpose of investigation in the city of Montreal in the office of Mr. Craig, chief grain inspector, Room 42, Canadian Pacific Railway Telegraph Building, corner of St. Francois-Xavier and Hospital streets, opening his investigation at ten o'clock on the morning of Tuesday, January 28th, continuing, if necessary, on Wednesday the 29th. He will also sit at St. Hyacinthe on Thursday the 30th and at Victoriaville on Friday the 31st, at Brockville on Tuesday, 4th February, and at Cowansville on Tuesday the 11th February; commencing at nine o'clock in the forenoon in all these smaller places.

As you have submitted some views on this matter I must request you to take pains to appear before the commissioner and give expression to your views and any facts which bear upon the subject, and if amongst your acquaintances and friends or neighbours there are any who can give information of value bearing upon this subject, I must ask you to urge their attendance, so that the fullest possible information may be obtained in an accurate and trustworthy form.

The subject is one of great consequence to the producers of dairy products and all those engaged in these goods. It is, therefore, of the utmost national importance that the whole truth in regard to this matter should be obtained, as otherwise some mistake might be made in future legislation or departmental action. Relying on your interest in the matter and public spirit to induce you to appear and give what information is at your command.

Mr. Speaker, that information was given away back in 1902 and we are now going on towards the close of 1904. The question that was of national importance as the hon. Minister of Agriculture said in his circular to these people has been neglected to this hour. We are at the closing of this session. Yet no legislation has been proposed and these wrongs that have been perpetrated upon the farming community for all these years are to continue for another year and indefinitely so far as the farmers of this country are aware. Then, the next letter is as follows:

Ottawa, Jan. 18, 1902.

My dear Bull,—In reply to yours of yesterday, if Mr. Parmelee requires more days to appear in Montreal he will take them later on, but he will judge of that himself when he goes there. Do not go into too many details in the evidence, although of course you must take steps to show anything that is wrong for which there is fair complaint.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) SYDNEY FISHER.

Chas. A. Bull, Esq.,
Room 8, 17 St. John St.,
Montreal, P.Q.

He says to Mr. Bull that if you know anything wrong which is a subject of fair complaint why tell it, but be careful and not tell too much. To show you the character of this investigation I will now read a statement signed by Mr. A. C. Cross as follows:

WHITEWASHING.

To the editor of the 'Witness.'

Sir,—In to-day's issue of a morning paper it is announced that the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce is to proceed this morning with an inquiry into that long-standing controversy about the system of weighing cheese.

Those who do the weighing will see the notice, and, by taking a few steps, can appear before the commissioner. The farmers whose cheese is to be weighed, will probably know nothing about the inquiry until it is over. Under such circumstances, what else can be expected but the time honoured whitewash of the Butter and Cheese Association, followed by lots of cheap denunciation in parliament of those who assail the honour of reputable Montreal citizens.

Perhaps we shall hear some support of these reputable Montreal citizens to-day.

I now learn that the commissioner has just announced that newspaper reporters are not to be admitted to the sittings because the apartment in Mr. E. F. Craig's office is not large enough.

When I asked the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce if such was the case he said that they were there but when I asked the gentleman who represented the papers, they said that they were not allowed in, that they were only furnished with a prepared report. Well, there is evidence in that of a want of veracity in this country.

This is not the way to satisfy farmers that when they sell a hundred pounds of cheese they will be paid for a hundred pounds instead of for the number of pounds which the purchaser chooses to say that there are according to a rule of his own making.

Mr. Parmelee says to Mr. Bull:

Ottawa, Feb. 26, 1902.

Chas. A. Bull, Esq.,
17 St. John St., Montreal.

Sir,—I have yours of yesterday's date asking to send you the report of the Butter and Cheese Association.

I do not find it in my possession—I presume it is among Mr. Broderick's papers which I cannot get at present. When it turns up I will send it to you.

Yes, I am going back to Montreal but I cannot state at what date.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) W. G. PARMELEE,
Deputy Minister.

Mr. Broderick seems to have disappeared with his papers. I do not know whether Mr. Parmelee ever got them back or not. There was some difficulty, I believe, in connection with the secretary of that commission. He took occasion to disappear.

Ottawa, March 7th, 1902.

Dear Mr. Bull,—Mr. Fisher has handed me your letter of March 5th, requesting me to send you the pamphlets on the food products of Canada, as you request. This I have done.

In regard to the transmitting of the notes of the Royal Commission, not much progress has yet been made, but the matter is receiving Mr. Fisher's daily attention.

Yours sincerely,
(Sgd.) KEVILLE DOHERTY,
Private secretary.

C. A. Bull, Esq.,
Room 8, 17 St. John St.,
Montreal, P.Q.

This letter was written on March 7th, 1902. We are now in July, 1904. The hon. Minister of Agriculture was, as far back as 1902, giving his daily attention to the transcribing of these notes and still the report of that commission is not yet printed or published for the benefit of the farmers of Canada. He must be working over time. Then there is another letter :

Ottawa, 27th March, 1903.

Chas. A. Bull, Esq.,
117 King St., Montreal.

Sir,—In answer to yours of yesterday's date, I beg to state that I am in hopes to be able to make up a report on the investigation in question at an early date.

It is true Mr. Fisher, before leaving, requested me to have a report ready as soon as possible after the meeting of the House ; but so far it has been an utter impossibility for me to devote the time to it necessary. Every moment has been taken up. The parties so anxious for a report will have to abide with patience——

Patience began away back in 1900, it is continuing on the 27th March, 1903, it still continues and the farmers of this country must abide in patience while these people dock their cheese and butter to an extent that no other country would tolerate.

The parties so anxious for a report will have to abide with patience until an opportunity presents itself when I can get a day or two to spare which will be used in going through the papers again and making up the report, which really should have been made up some time ago.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) W. G. PARMELEE,
Deputy Minister.

I should think it ought.

Ottawa, July 8th, 1903.

My dear Bull :—I have just received your letter of the 7th July, and I must say that I am very much surprised at the tone of it.

I would just like to see that letter ; I suppose it is one of those patient letters that the minister had been asking him to write.

I have done all I possibly could, both for you and for the cause which you have worked in.

Think of that, and he did not do anything.

I count upon you to do everything you can to prevent any party capital being made from it.

Eh ? Cute ; see him smiling.

The matter of the report is such that I cannot force it on, although I am trying my best to get Mr. Parmelee to bring it to a close. You can do a good deal no doubt to allay any difficulties which may arise and it would be very unfortunate if you were to try to raise any.

Yes ; he kept these farmers waiting while they were beaten on every box of cheese and butter, and he advised them to be patient, resting calmly in the serene satisfaction that they had him for their representative and it would be all right.

What you say in regard to Mr. Parmelee I am sure is quite unjustified, as he is a true friend to farmers and the dairymen. I am sure that you have misjudged him in what you say in regard to him.

This is not a personal matter as between you and anybody else, but is a matter of consequence to all farmers, and must be dealt with in a broad and proper way.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) SYDNEY FISHER.

What a shame for the Minister of Agriculture to sit there, who has no right to be there except as a farmer, and yet dabbling in many things he has no business to stick his nose into. I am now reading a letter dated July 8th, 1903, two years after the investigation and three years after the Minister of Agriculture himself acknowledged that it was an urgent matter of national importance. You can see by the letters I have been reading, that if we had the whole of this correspondence it would be more interesting. Mr. Bull, who lives down there, and can appreciate things that we do not know of, knows that it is rumored in our section of the country that the great exporters of this produce brought a strong influence to bear, to suppress the report, and Mr. Bull goes so far as to say that it was an improper influence. I am not in a position to say that it was an improper influence, but I know that some extraordinary influence was brought to bear of a political character in order to prevent this report coming out as it ought to in the interests of the farmers of this country.

Ottawa, July 23rd, 1903.

My dear Bull,—I just have yours of the 22nd instant in regard to your business matters.

The fact is I am very ignorant in regard to banking and the necessary commercial security to give for accommodation at banks. I do not know any bank manager in a business way——

He was awfully lucky.

—and I cannot make a suggestion to you in regard to the matter.

Answering the last paragraph of your paper. Certainly do not try to trap people in the way you suggest. It would only make trouble for yourself in the future, and I do not think it would do any good to anybody, besides being a business I would not advise you to have anything to do with.

I will try to give you the names of some fruit men with whom you can communicate.

I am still trying to get Mr. Parmelee to make his report, but he is an old man, and it seems difficult to get him to move. He has a good deal to do during the session in his departmental work, and I suppose is putting that off.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) SYDNEY FISHER.

What next ?

Dear Mr. Bull,—I have yours of July 28th.

I do not understand your reference to what you lost, as it is not at all clearly stated. I do not see from your statement that it has anything to do with the report of the government. I do not think it is possible for that report to be out in a week. You undertake in this letter to practically hold me up, as we commonly say, on such a matter. If this is the case I have nothing further to add.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) SYDNEY FISHER.

Here we have evidence of that warlike disposition that has induced the Minister of Agriculture to dabble in militia matters. He is brave behind his own pen in his own office, and he cannot understand that this gentleman, not a farmer, but representing the interests of the farmers, should say that a loss has been caused to the farmers by the action of the government. Talk about Mr. Bull holding him up ; it was the Minister of Agriculture who was holding the farmers up.

Ottawa, Aug. 7th, 1903.

Dear Mr. Bull,—I have just received your letter of the 5th August, and am making inquiry in regard to what you say in regard to Mr. Woodard.

In regard to the second paragraph of your letter, in which you seem to imply that the Ottawa authorities have been holding back the report on the weighing because of money having been paid to them—this is unworthy of you or anybody else. You ought to know that there is nothing of the kind in it. As to what you did in the matter, you know perfectly well that you did it of your own free will and of yourself. I tried to advise you as to what to do, but in many instances you did not follow my advice, and I cannot hold myself in any way responsible for what you did. Certainly at the time you did it I thought a great many of the things you did were ill-advised and not likely to accomplish any good.

Mr. Bull was only reporting what was current in Montreal. How much direct evidence he had it is not for me to say, but he is a trustworthy man, as can be shown by the pedigree given him years ago by the Minister of Agriculture. Mr. Bull comes of a trustworthy family ; he can be trusted beyond all question of doubt, and he writes thus to the Minister of Agriculture, and the minister is indignant :

Ottawa, Sept. 23rd, 1903.

Dear Sir,—I have yours of the 31st of August. I note that you did not speak to me the other day because you understood that I had hard feelings against you, and have expressed such in confidential letters to people.

No hard feelings ; I don't believe the Minister of Agriculture ever had hard feelings against anybody.

I must say that this is not in any way true. I do not know what your authority is, but on the contrary I am very glad to do anything I possibly can within reason to help you. Many requests you have made to me are unreasonable and I cannot undertake to meet them.

In regard to your threat of the 'hotter time' that I will have in the next election, I can tell you frankly it has no effect on me. I am not accustomed to submitting to such threats. I can assure you they have no weight with me in any way whatever.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) SYDNEY FISHER.

No matter how much the farmers would suffer ; no matter how long they are kept waiting, the Minister of Agriculture is above everything of that sort. He is above attending to his official duties as Minister of Agriculture, but he is not above sticking his nose in the departments of other ministers. Now, Sir we will come to the report itself, and there is a letter to the Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright, G.C.M.G.—I don't see anything of the farmer in that title.

Sir, the undersigned having been, under authority of the Royal Commission, bearing date the 7th of December, 1901——

And we are now speaking in 1904.

—appointed a commissioner 'to investigate, inquire into and report upon complaints and difficulties in connection with the weighing of butter and cheese,' has the honour to hand you for the information of His Excellency the Governor General, this his report upon the result of such investigation ; the conclusions arrived at and his recommendations in connection therewith ; together with a copy of the evidence taken under oath or affirmation in the course of such investigation ; all as required under the terms of the said commission.

Of course we have not a copy of the evidence, as the documents were not brought down which I asked for. However, we are accustomed to that sort of treatment, and just as long as the people will put up with this treatment of their representatives, will that practice continue of debarring members from getting the information to which they are entitled and which they require in order to make their arguments conclusive.

Regular sittings were held at Montreal on the 28th and 29th days of January, at St. Hyacinthe on the 30th, at Victoriaville on the 31st of the said month, at Brockville on the 4th, and at Cowansville on the 11th days of February, 1902, at which places some forty-eight witnesses were duly sworn and examined touching the complaints referred to, and of their knowledge of the practices in vogue in connection with the weighing of butter and cheese at time of marketing the same.

Other written, as well as oral, information was sought and obtained, which, not being under oath, was not therefore transcribed or embodied in the evidence herewith submitted.

It does not say where that evidence comes from or on which side of the question it was.

It was at the time the intention of the undersigned to hold other sittings and investigations with a view to obtaining further evidence corroborative or otherwise of the sworn statements made and correspondence upon the subject, but circumstances prevented until too late in the season and such action was eventually abandoned as not being strictly necessary.

If it was necessary, there is no reason why it should have been abandoned because he had over a year in which to obtain evidence before making this report.

The complaints as set forth in the copy of the Report of the Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council alluded to as accompanying the Royal Commission are to effect that difficulties have frequently arisen and continue to arise in connection with the weighing of butter and cheese ; that the Butter and Cheese Association at Montreal has in its employ as a weigher a man not duly authorized under the statutes to act as such, and insist that his weights must be taken as correct and payments accepted on the basis thereof ; that his weights are not always correct and that therefore the vendors being forced to accept such weights are at the mercy of the association and are compelled to accept less than their proper due were the weighing correctly done.

It is a well known fact that an old weighing beam was in use there for years. Whether it is in use now or not I cannot say, but it was in use for years, and it is well known that it was incorrect. The weigher had a new one made, but they thought it cost too much and they would not take the trouble of putting in a new beam, so that they may still be continuing the old imperfect system.

The man referred to is Mr. John McLeod, who, it appears from the evidence submitted, styles and advertises himself a ' public weigher '——

But he is not legally a public weigher, as shown by the letters of the Minister of Agriculture produced in his inquiry two of three years ago.

—and states that he was appointed as such by the Montreal Butter and Cheese Association in January, 1894, and who produced a notice of such appointment signed by the president, vice-president and the secretary of the association.

These men who are handling that butter and cheese , because forsooth they chose to select this man to do the work for their personal benefit, styled him a public weigher. Would you, Mr. Speaker, think of shipping butter and cheese from the interior to Montreal when you know there is no fair arbitrator between the producer and the shipper ? The lack of such a fair arbitrator is sufficient in itself to breed discontent, dissatisfaction and mischief, even were the weighing correct, and we have very good reason to know it was not. In fact the very system adopted of making calculations is bound to make the result unfair to the men who are producing butter and cheese.

The present officials of the association deny any knowledge of such appointment. The president of the association, when under examination, styles Mr. McLeod a ' licensed public weigher, licensed by the city ' (vide pages 55 and 56 of evidence).

Which of course we have not got.

In a letter of date the 27th February, 1901, from the secretary of the association he points out that the public weighers are not appointed by the association. The president of the Montreal Board of Trade, under date April 15th, 1901, states that Mr. Duncan Cameron is the official weigher appointed by the council of the board and gives a list of his sworn assistants, among which does not appear the name of Mr. McLeod.

He is not even an assistant to the man recognized there as the weigher for the trade. He is not, I believe, as he should be an official of this country above suspicion, an impartial arbitrator between the farmers and the purchasers. He is not even an assistant to the man who holds the position there of weighmaster. Still he goes on from year to year :

Under date of the 23rd April, 1901, Mr. McLeod states that he was appointed deputy weigher for Montreal in May, 1878, and in a letter from the then president of the association of date the 1st April, 1901, it is stated that Mr. McLeod was sworn as assistant to Mr. Muirhead, Mr. Cameron's predecessor, in 1878, and has acted as an independent weigher since Mr. Muirhead's death in 1882 ; and that on the formation of the association in 1893, it was deemed expedient to formally recognize both Mr. Cameron and Mr. McLeod as competent weighers, but their public position was not conferred on them by the association and it had not control over them.

It appears to the undersigned that notwithstanding the formal appointment of Mr. McLeod by the association in 1894, and the denials of such appointment subsequently made, the association has and does recognize Mr. McLeod as an official weigher——

That is what Mr. Parmelee said.

—of equal authority with Mr. Cameron, and that in point of fact the bulk of butter and cheese is weighed by Mr. McLeod and his assistants ; and while possibly the association or members thereof do not insist upon his being exclusively employed as a weigher, he is given the preference, and the impression has gone abroad that as the appointee or employee of the association, his weights must be accepted, while in point of fact since the death of Mr. Muirhead in 1882, he has had no legal status whatever, yet at the same time the undersigned has no doubt that his work is as well and correctly done as is that of the legally appointed official weigher, Mr. Cameron.

Well, Mr. Parmelee comes to that conclusion not through any practical experience. I have shipped butter and cheese and had it weighed in Montreal and no one —I do not care who he is—who has not some pull with that association, is satisfied with the weights. For my own creamery I have had had three separate makers of butter in a single year, and I warned them to be very particular so that they might be able to take oath with regard to every box of butter I shipped forward. We shipped it and it was cut in Montreal. I made my objections, but the variations in those weights continued to the close of that season. After the difficulties of that season, I determined to get out of the hands of this association. This man may be a fair man, but he is not fair to those who manufacture butter and cheese. He is only fair to those who purchase. Consequently I shipped from that time on to parties not connected with the association, and I had no trouble. I put 56 pounds in a box if I wanted to. My weights were correct and paid for. After that I found my butter again coming under the hands of this man and again found it impossible to pack 56 pounds in a box. Under the circumstances I speak warmly because there are many farmers treated in this way but who cannot raise their voices in the House in this connection. They are the men who signed these petitions; who signed these letters; who put forth years of effort to right these wrongs; who brought pressure to bear upon this government and urged them to take hold of this matter and give the farmers some relief. And, after all their work of years, here, at this late day of the session, it is imposed upon me, a man without the responsibilities of government, to rise in this House and again bring this question forward. When you think of these things, I think you will say that it is a shame that I should be obliged to make a speech here to-day upon this subject. The report goes on:

> In the handling of the immense quantity of butter and cheese that passes through the port of Montreal annually, say between two and three million packages——

Think of that! Between two and three million packages. Imagine what a variation of a pound or two or even of a fraction of a pound means when you come to the handling of two or three million packages. No one can calculate the amount of money that has been lost to the farmers during the summer which is now in progress, though the government had this report dated 22nd of last October, showing the urgent need for a change. The recommendations of this report are not sufficiently strong. Still, they are in the right direction. And, although this report was before the government on the 22nd of last October, they allow these thousands upon thousands of packages of butter and cheese to go out of this country, weighed by a man who has no official standing, who is repudiated by the dairymen of the province of Quebec and eastern Ontario, a man whom we do not believe to be honest whether he is or not.

> In the handling of the immense quantity of butter and cheese that passes through the port of Montreal annually, say between two and three million packages, it is only natural to expect that mistakes will occasionally occur, aside from which in numerous instances the weighers are accused of giving short weights, when upon investigation it is shown that the fault was not theirs but rather of the makers and shippers from country points who are prone to regard a cut in weights given by the weigher as a discrimination against them in favour of the Montreal buyer or consignee, as the case may be.

We do not need this official report to make us appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. We all know that when cheese is shipped too green it will lose in weight. We know that if it is shipped in dry boxes the boxes will absorb the moisture. For all that allowance can be made. But, when I come to read a clause or two further on, you will see under what system they arrive at the average weight. When you speak of butter, however you speak of a commodity which loses weight but very little in such handling as it is necessary to give it. It is packed fresh, handled fresh and shipped fresh. No matter who the man may be who makes the statement that butter loses materially in weight the statement is not correct. Butter is shipped from the creamery this morning and weighed in Montreal to-morrow, and it should move the balance in Montreal about the same as in the creamery.

> The most prevalent cause of loss in weight is unquestionably that of the practice throughout the butter and cheese producing sections of the province of Quebec and the eastern portions of Ontario, of shipping their cheese too young or green. There is such competition between makers to show a 'record' that cheese is largely shipped before it is ten days old and in some instances direct from the hoop, and shrinkage en route to Montreal is, under such circumstances inevitable.

Everybody understands that.

> It appears in evidence that in so far as regards western Ontario the cheese is not shipped until from fifteen to thirty days old, that the shrinkage in weight is much less, and therefore has not been the subject of complaint.

The same reason holds good in a minor sense with regard to butter, where, in order to show a record of production, it is sometimes shipped, especially when in tubs, containing more moisture than the average, and consequently loses somewhat through evaporation and soakage.

Very little, when it is hermetically sealed.

There is a rule of the Montreal Butter and Cheese Association which the undersigned cannot but consider unfair to the factory men. and that is——

Now, here is the whole story.

—in connection with the manner in which cuts for short weight are made under rule 2 as adopted by the Board of Trade, July 10th, 1901. There is no objection to the first paragraph of the rule, but there is to the second which reads :—

Now, I would call your particular attention to this.

Actual weights must be shown on certificate, but no gain shall be applied against losses in the average ; gains of 2 pounds and over shall be governed by rule 3. A further rule provides that not less than five packages of cheese nor more than ten per cent of each particular lot shall be weighed.

Why, Mr. Speaker this shows that the butter and cheese are not weighed at all. It would not stand law for a minute. Say there are fifty packages of cheese and you weigh only five of them. You go before the court and the judge asks you, 'Did you weigh that cheese ?' and the answer is 'I weighed five packages and averaged the rest.' Why he would send you back with instructions to weigh forty-five more. And yet this kind of thing goes on for years and is still upheld. We have had an investigation, or rather we have had the mockery of an investigation with none of the benefits of it. All the benefits of the situation have been left to flow into the coffers of those who are handling our butter and cheese in the city of Montreal.

The effect of this is that, supposing that there is a lot of fifty packages, five of which would be weighed and, supposing the first package showed a loss of one pound, the second a gain of one pound, the third O.K., the fourth a loss of one pound and the fifth a gain of one pound, a cut is made of two pounds in every five packages of the whole lot, that is to say, of twenty pounds, whereas the average shows no loss whatever.

In other words you get no credit for your overweights, and you are cut when you are short ;—'Heads I win, tails you lose.'

Under the system of weighing in force and allowances insisted upon, it too often happens that at least one package in every lot is judged short weight. Therefore, all is cut accordingly. And it appears that frequently not sufficient care is taken to note the overs, it being claimed that the scales are set at the weight marked at the package and if the beam goes up sharp it is too often registered as O.K., and no particular pains taken to note the amount of overweight.

Now, is not that a nice state of affairs ? These deductions have been made in the handling of between two and three million packages. The results of the farmer's labour are handled in this fashion as they go through this great port, and, though the government, on the 22nd October had these facts before them, no action has been taken. And, though the investigation was held two years ago no report was submitted until last October. Sir, if ever there was a time when a resolution of want of confidence in the government and in one of its departments should be moved, I am justified in the motion I shall present to you in a few moments.

This practice is a source of great annoyance and is looked upon by the factorymen, to speak mildly, as fraudulent.

Well, they are kind.

This rule is insisted upon by the buyers for the purpose, as they explain——

Of course they would have an explanation. Can you imagine a set of men banded together in an association handling between two and three million packages of cheese and butter not being able to give an explanation why they cut the farmers for shortage and never give them credit for overweight ?

—of avoiding cuts for short weight at the point in Europe to which they ship.

Do they know how they will weigh out in Europe ? If they do and if there is a shortage why do not they provide for it in the price they pay the farmers for the cheese and not take this underhand, unfair, dishonest means of getting even—and better than even—with the farming community of this country. Why, they admit the whole thing. They say that they are guessing at what the goods are going to weigh out in Europe. They intend to cut the farmer enough to pay for the shrinkage that may take place not only between his factory and Montreal but between Montreal and Europe. They buy the goods and surely they should be willing to run their own risk, instead of transferring to the farmer that risk of handling between this country and Europe as well as the risk between the factory and Montreal. That is a safe way of doing business, but it is mighty hard on the man who milks the cows and makes the butter and cheese.

This the undersigned looks upon as entirely another transaction for which the country maker should not be held responsible.

Mr. Parmelee is quite right—but the farmers are suffering just the same. And these hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, by their neglect, by their indifference to the interests of the people, are permitting the farmers to be imposed upon by these men. And for what purpose ? The Minister of Agriculture told Mr. Bull to be careful to do nothing to disturb matters and create party capital, because that capital would be against his own party the one that he loves so much and serves so faithfully. This is the Minister of Agriculture, who is so much beloved by his party. I could well understand his writing that letter to Mr. Bull, warning him to take no action that would hurt his party, but, on the other hand to let the farmers suffer, let them be hit, let them be bit. After he had warning, so much warning that he was obliged to take action, he went to work; but when these gentlemen said: Stop, we are Liberals; we belong to your party—Mr. Ayer and all those gentlemen who are supporters of this government in Montreal, nine-tenths of these exporters belong to that party, perhaps nineteen-twentieths of them—I say when these men interfered they received instructions to stop. The reports were slow, at last they came, and now they are pigeon-holed since the 22nd day of last October, and the farmers of this country continue to be cheated since that time.

The rule and the practice, the undersigned thinks, should be cancelled, and when a lot averages full weight the maker should get the benefit thereof, or should get credit for all over weights instead of being mulct on the whole when a portion only is under weight.

This is the report of the commissioner whom this gentleman appointed. This is the man who represents the farmers, the practical farmer of this government. He has had time to frame his legislation here, but to-day we heard him spending his time trying to make political capital, getting up nothing more than campaign literature out of an organization of seedsmen. He had better spend his time in framing legislation to protect these men, instead of trying to reconstruct the Militia Department of Canada. He should devote some more of his time to the farmers of Canada. There are many farmers in the counties of Missisquoi, Brome and Shefford who are suffering from the application of this tariff, who have suffered for years, and he knows it. He can spend time in interfering with the political part of a militia organization, but when it comes to the defence of the farmers' interests he has no time at his disposal, he is over-worked, he is too tired, he cannot get a move on. The farmers of this country must suffer from it.

Most of the butter and cheese is sold on Montreal weights, therefore the maker must rely on the integrity of the weigher, as he has usually no opportunity of seeing the packages weighed on their arrival, and for this reason there is a strong demand for the appointment of official weighers at the point of shipment. This in a general sense, the undersigned thinks impracticable as butter and cheese is shipped from nearly every railway station in Canada, and it is manifestly impracticable to maintain an army of official weighers to do the work.

The butter and cheese is usually sold at the various boards, but the delivery is not made at such boards except in so far as regards such as may have been manufactured in the immediate vicinity thereof, or nearer thereto than to any other station, so that even the appointment of official weighers at such boards would not afford the relief demanded.

The maker has the remedy in his own hands by declining to sell on Montreal weights and perhaps in some sections the competition between buyers is so great that they might come to terms and accept under certain conditions the factory weights, but the undersigned is of the opinion that such a course would only have the effect of creating dissatisfaction on the part of the buyer instead of the seller, and lead to as much friction, if not more, than at present obtains.

In conclusion the undersigned has the honour to suggest that the Act 28 Vic., chapter 6, be so amended as to provide for the appointment of weighers of butter and cheese by His Excellency the Governor in Council, instead of permitting such appointments to be made as at present, by boards of trade. This would give the weigher a status that he has not at present and would go far towards regaining the confidence of the factory men who now are aware that the weighing in Montreal is not in all cases done by an official weigher, but rather by an appointee of the butter and cheese association, which association is composed of buyers, some of whom might be, under the circumstances, regarded as exercising undue influence over a weigher when their own appointee.

Respectfully submitted,
(Sgd.) W. G. PARMELEE.

Sir, that is the conclusion of this report vindicating the appeal of all these people from time to time for relief from the distressing conditions under which they found themselves placed. Mr. Parmelee found he did not have to go very far; he did not have to make a second or third visit to Montreal, his first touch at these centres showed him that there was something wrong, that there was something unjust, that there was something unfair towards the farming communities who shipped to Montreal, and that they were being deprived of money they ought to receive as the result of their labour. Mr. Speaker, I think I have said enough to satisfy every hon. member of this House that the government have been criminally neglectful, have been careless, and have been indifferent to the best interests of the dairymen who, in the eastern part of Canada at least, have been wronged; the report practically tells us so. It tells us that the system of taking all and giving nothing in return is not business, it is not law, it is not honest, it is not fair to those men who are working day after day and producing the dairy product of this country and shipping it to Montreal. It is not fair to them, and it is not creditable to this government that three years should have been taken up in getting out a report, and that when the report is out relief should not be given to these people, although recommended by that report, at the first meeting of parliament that takes place after the report is made. I say the Minister of Agriculture has been neglectful of his duty to the dairymen. He had enough evidence of this wrong before he ever appointed Mr. Parmelee, he had no need to appoint him. He did not need a royal commission to act, but the truth is that he was afraid of somebody, he did not dare to act off his own bat, because he had been told by these gentlemen in Montreal more than once to be careful how he proceeded, his political friends warned him not to go too far. Consequently, when he really did appoint Mr. Parmelee, the latter only gave in his report last October. I say that it is unfair, it is discreditable on the part of this government, it is unjust to the farmers of eastern Ontario and of Quebec, who have been deprived of hundreds and thousands of dollars which they are entitled to, and would have received if their products had been fairly weighed in the city of Montreal. In view of all these facts, I beg to move :

That all the words after the word 'that' in the proposed motion be left out and the following substituted therefor :

In the opinion of this House the dairy farmers of Canada have wrongly suffered great loss for many years through the system allowed to prevail by the government in regard to the weighing of butter and cheese at the port of Montreal and for the government's neglect to provide any proper system for such weighing as shown by the investigation and report of Mr. W. G. Parmelee, Royal Commissioner, bearing date 22nd October, 1903 ; and this House regrets that since the date of such report no action has been taken by the government to remedy the state of affairs shown thereby.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT (Minister of Trade and Commerce). Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can blame the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pope) very much, because, apparently, his speech was chiefly directed at my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), but I may just say that it was only at three o'clock that I was aware that the hon. gentleman was going to move in this particular question, and I have hardly had any opportunity, except from his own speech, of examining the facts in detail. I think it will have struck hon. members of this House that despite the very great zeal the hon. gentleman may have for the interest of the farmers of Canada, whether east or west, his desire if possible to cast discredit upon my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture is evidently greater than his zeal for the interests of the farmers of Canada. A great many things that he said, I think might very well have been spared. I think that everybody from one end of Canada to the other who has paid the slightest attention to the operations of the Department of Agriculture since my hon. friend became the head of it, is aware that no Minister of Agriculture in the past has ever done a hundreth part as much for the welfare of the people of Canada and for the benefit of the farmers of Canada as the present Minister of Agriculture has done, and as between himself and the hon. member for Compton I do not believe that in the hon. gentleman's own constituency on a ballot vote he would find one man in ten to say that my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture was not the zealous and firm friend of the farmers of Canada.

Mr. POPE. May I ask the right hon. gentleman if he was ever in my constituency ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a good while since, I am bound to say.

Mr. POPE. I thought so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A good while since, but I know something of the feeling of the farmers of Canada and I have the honour to represent a constituency which contains as many good farmers as are to be found in the county of Compton, and which is one of the very largest cheese exporters at this moment in the whole Dominion of Canada.

Mr. POPE. They are getting rid of you.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think, if the hon. gentleman chose to come up to the constituency of South Oxford and to encounter me there he would come to that conclusion. Others have tried that experiment and they have retreated in considerable discomfiture. In respect to some of the statements that the hon. gentleman has made, I wish to state, on the information given to me by my department, that reporters were allowed to be present at the meetings held by Mr. Parmelee. I took the trouble since this debate commenced to inquire of that gentleman whether this was the case and I am informed that the reporters were permitted to be present. I have no personal knowledge of the matter, nor do I suppose the hon. gentleman has, but I leave it at that. The statement of my deputy is that reporters were invited and were present.

Mr. POPE. According to the affidavit they were not.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think Mr. Parmelee's word is quite as good as any statements put in the hands of the hon. gentleman whether supported on affidavit or unsupported on affidavit, and I for one would accept Mr. Parmelee's statement quite as freely as I would the sworn testimony of all the reporters the hon. gentleman can collect together from one end of the Dominion to the other.

Mr. SPROULE. That is hard on the reporters.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know my deputy and I know perfectly well that he is incapable of making a misstatement of any kind. In respect to the delay in connection with this particular matter in regard to which the hon. gentleman addressed the House for an hour and a half I would point out that during the greater portion of the years 1902 and 1903 the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce was incapacitated by a very severe and dangerous illness, involving his absence for many months from Ottawa, and this was the reason why the delay of which the hon. gentleman complains took place. As to the allegation which the hon. gentleman has made, on what evidence is best known to himself, that improper influence was brought to bear to prevent the production of this report or the laying of it before the House, I give it the most unqualified contradiction. No sort of improper influence was brought to bear on me or upon my deputy and so soon as Mr. Parmelee's health permitted, this report was brought forward. I am not aware that there have been any complaints recently. I think that these complaints, if my memory serves me, extended over a number of years and extended to the time of our predecessors as well as to that of ourselves. But, I may observe in reference to this matter that in the course of his report Mr. Parmelee points out, what is no doubt the case, that a great deal of the difficulty that has occurred, has arisen from the simple fact that in those portions of the country to which the hon. gentleman more particularly refers there is a habit of packing cheese and butter without giving the product sufficient time to dry and that in consequence there is a very considerable shrinkage from time to time which naturally results in disputes between the buyers and sellers. I was at pains to make inquiry in western Canada, as was also Mr. Parmelee, as to what the difficulties were which they experienced, and I found that in the western section of the country a sufficient space of time was allowed for the natural shrinkage to take place and that they had very little complaint to make as to the weighing of cheese or butter in Montreal. In the eastern section, I am informed, although I have no knowledge of the subject myself, that there is considerable difficulty owing, as I have said, to the fact that the cheese is hardly given a sufficient length of time to enable it to be properly dried out, or at least properly free from moisture before its submission to the weighers. Under such circumstances there will be considerable friction and difficulty. As for the recommendation of Mr. Parmelee, I have some doubts, although I cannot give expression to any positive opinion on the subject, as to whether it is desirable or wise that the government should take the matter entirely into the hands of the department and appoint official weighers themselves. That is a matter upon which my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Fisher) may desire to consult with his colleagues as it is his bounden duty to do. Mr. Parmelee pointed out also, and that was one result of his investigation which was worth something at any rate to the producers, that they were not in any way bound to accept Mr. McLeod's weighing and that the remedy was very largely in their own hands if they chose to exercise it. No doubt there was one point which the hon. gentleman made and which has been alluded to by Mr. Parmelee which I am free to say requires consideration and which perhaps calls for a remedy, and that is the practice of charging farmers for the loss and not crediting them with the gain in the case of special packages. I am free to say that that is a matter which deserves and should have due consideration. Since the report came out I fancy that these complaints are not as frequent as before, although the hon. gentleman may be better advised on that subject than I am. But the allegation he has made that reporters were excluded and the complaints that he has made as to the extraordinary time that has elapsed are really unfair and unfounded. The delay was not due to any improper influence, but to the fact that Mr. Parmelee was reduced almost to a condition of imminent danger for a period of many months during which I was obliged to give him leave of absence. That is the real cause of the delay that the hon. gentleman has spoken of and I think that when the facts are stated the House will have no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the hon. gentleman's zeal has outrun his discretion in this special matter.

Mr. M. AVERY. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers of this country have been literally robbed by the system of weighing cheese in Montreal. I went down there myself to see what the trouble was and I found that the cheese were cut one pound per box and sometimes six or seven pounds on fine cheese. I thought that it might be possible that the cheese makers were not giving us proper weight and so I had the cheese weighed myself, but notwithstanding that I found that the weights were again cut in Montreal. I believe these men in Montreal club together to make something out of each farmer and that is the way we are robbed. It is time that the Minister of Agriculture and the government should look into this matter and protect the farmers of the country. He was informed of this grievance on the 13th of October last and yet he has done nothing up to this moment. I suppose if the opposition did not press this matter now, the Minister of Agriculture would still rest on his oars and do nothing. It would become him a great deal better to look after the interest of the farmers and not go around meddling with the appointment of officers to a militia regiment. He should leave the Pickels of Sweetsburg alone and try to get the farmers out of the pickle they are in. If this thing goes on it is time to change the Minister of Agriculture and put some one in this place who will discharge the duties of the office.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Pope).

Amendment negatived.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. members for Durham East and Nicolet have not voted.

Mr. WARD. I am paired with the hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) or I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. BALL. I am paired with the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Tobin). Otherwise I would have voted for the amendment.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Immigration—Salaries of agents and employees in Canada, Great Britain and foreign countries, $135,000.

Mr. WILSON. Before this vote is passed, I would like to make a few remarks in a general way about immigration. We have been increasing our vote from year to year until it has reached a very large amount. At the last session of parliament, we voted $595,114, which was covered by five items in the estimates. For some reason or other, the hon. the Minister of the Interior, who has charge of this department, does not see fit to divide up this vote as is done in other departments. This year we are asked to vote $150,000 more, which will make the total $745,014. In addition there has been spent on immigration buildings during the past year $41,764, which is a considerable item, and which makes the total expenditure for the year on immigration alone $786,-

993. I do not suppose that any one would particularly complain of the size of the vote when taking into consideration the fact that this is a new country and that its territory is almost boundless, provided we were getting value for our expenditure. But the difference of opinion between that side of the House and this is that we consider we are spending a very large amount of money and not getting an adequate return. It is true that we are getting a good many immigrants, but it is equally true that some of those are not desirable. The character of the population we are bringing into the country is a matter of very great importance. We consider that at present we have a population which will compare favourably with that of any other country in the world, and what we require to do above everything else is to keep that standard up, and that we can only do by being very particular as to the class of immigrants we bring in. While our laws in this respect have been improved quite considerably within the last few years, they are still not up to the mark, and it is in the recollection of every member of this House that a large number of Italians were stranded in Montreal a few months ago. Had our laws been what they ought to have been and had they been rigidly enforced, that could not have happened. We had 3,500 to 4,000 Italians landed in Montreal without any apparent means of support, and who were a great burden on the people. That was so noticeable that even the Toronto 'Globe' could not pass it by, and pointed out how our laws were inefficient both as regards immigration and alien labour, and insisted that they ought to be amended. On that occasion, the 'Globe' in its issue of the 16th of May, 1904, used these words :

> The stranding of a great force of Italian labourers in Montreal shows serious defects in our immigration and alien labour laws. It is stated that 5,000 more of the same class will be brought to Canada during the present season.

Well, Mr. Chairman, would you believe it, that in the annual report of the Minister of the Interior, there is not a single Italian mentioned as having come to this country. I called attention to this in the committee and pointed out to the deputy minister how we ought to have a true record in that report of the nationalities of all our immigrants, and I think I had his promise that in future that would be done. These things ought to be on record, so that we would know from time to time from what nationalities we draw our immigrants. In addition, I find that the Montreal 'Star' said last spring that the poor law guardians in the old country had pauper children to the number of 7,000 which they thought were good enough to pass inspection in this country and which they intended sending over. Whether they have come or not, I am not aware, but these are matters we should seriously look into, and if possible not allow any one to enter this country who would become a charge on the public as a pauper or who would be likely to swell our criminal classes. Then we had a steamer which came from the far east on board of which a man had died on the passage out and was buried at sea, and which our quarantine officers reported as all right. But one of the passengers landed in Vancouver had smallpox and died in a few days and the people of Vancouver gathered up the remaining passengers and quarantined them in that city. It will be recollected also that a railway train carrying passengers from that steamer, was quarantined at North Bay which caused a great deal of expense to the province of Ontario. And all this might have been avoided if the quarantine officers in charge at Vancouver had done their duty and discovered that there was a man on board suffering from small-pox.

We find that the city charities of Montreal during last year deported 113 people, some of whom were sent to the United States, some to England, and some to their homes in Canada. Then, I have a report from Mr. Macpherson, the agent of the Dominion Steamship Company at Quebec, in which he says that a large number of diseased persons have been allowed to land in this country. He says that one of the clerks in this own office, as a result of mingling with those people, took trachoma, and that in the country north of Quebec there are many people affected with the same disease. He says that on the authority of the doctor. He also says that out of 80,000 immigrants who landed at Quebec fully 10 per cent were diseased persons. I do not know whether this is true or not ; but it is reported in the Montreal 'Herald' of December 26, 1903, and that is a paper which is favourable to the government, and which would not make such report if it were not true. Then we have a report from Mr. Macdonald, an architect in the city of Winnipeg, who states that many of the immigrants who came out on the same ship that he did, came from sections in Scotland where there was small-pox, and that when they landed at Halifax and it was reported that there was no disease on the ship, they were allowed to go where they pleased without any examination, until they got tickets to travel by the railway to their destination in the west. He also says :

> Then there are a certain class of city street loafers from Glasgow, Edinburgh, London and Liverpool, who should never be encouraged to come to Canada. They are only a detriment to this country. On the boat that I came over on there was a large number of English not fit to settle here.

I do not know whether the law is strong enough to prevent such a class of people from landing on our shores. If it is not, it certainly ought to be made so, because we have quite enough of that class of people in our cities and towns, even in a country so good as ours. No matter how scarce labourers and mechanics may be in the country, those men are always too busy to want a job ; and in the winter time their families have to be cared for, and they themselves have to be fed by people who are charitably disposed. We do not want to increase that class in our country. I have a letter here which was written by Mr. Parker, who was in the employ of this government during the whole of the fiscal year of 1903, and who reported up to the end of December of that year. The report which has been brought down to this House in a return which I moved for, says that Mr. J. H. M. Parker brought in 413 immigrants for whom he was paid $978 in the fiscal year 1902-3, and that from the 30th of June to the 31st of December 1903 he brought in 334 persons, for whom he got $761. Mr. Parker writes to the public press—I find this in the 'Mail and Empire' of the 30th of January—that there is three times as much money spent in the United Staes for immigrants as there should be, and that not half as many people are brought in as ought to be brought in for one-third of the money. He goes on to say that out of 17 immigrants who are there on salary, only five are at work ; the others simply get agents to work for them and they are paid by commission. He says there was an agent in Indianapolis for five years who sent only three men into this country. I do not know whether that is strictly true or not ; but I know that Mr. Scott, in his evidence before the committee this session, said that Mr. E. P. Holmes was appointed to Indianapolis on the 12th of January, 1900, that he was there until June, 1902, and that he did not report that he had sent any immigrants into this country from that place.

Mr. DAVIS. Is that Captain Holmes ?

Mr. WILSON. No. I know Captain Holmes, and if it had been he, he would have done something for his money. The other gentleman I do not know anything about. He was certainly there a good while, and if he did anything he did not report it, although it is usual for people who succeed to report their success to the department. There is another serious matter in connection with this. This man says in this letter that any one visiting the Northwest, by going to one of these commission agents, can get a certificate entitling him to a ticket for one-third fare. They say that commercial travellers take advantage of this. That certificate is sent to the head office of the railway company at Montreal, and is sent from there to the Interior Department ; and the officer who gave that certificate gets $3 if the party happens to be a male, $2 for a female and $1 for a child or any person under eighteen years of age. So that the railways are beaten out of two-thirds of their fare and the country pays from $2 to $3 for every one of these people who comes to the country as a visitor or a traveller. The reason given for this is that men are appointed not because of their fitness for the post, but because they have a political pull. Unfortunately that is true no matter what party is in power, but it seems to be particularly true of the present government. We know that defeated candidates have been appointed. Whether they have a special fitness to solicit immigrants or not I do not know. But if this work were attended to on a business basis, these things would not happen. There are in the United States 273 agents on commission ; but it appears from the return brought down to the House that only 75 of these did any work. The commissions paid to them amounted to $14,898, and they report having brought into this country 6,509 persons. You can easily understand how they could report that number if what Mr. Parker says is true—if the people who come in as visitors, speculators or persons doing business or persons who wanted a cheap fare into the country, are counted as immigrants.

Now, we have in Great Britain 13 agents under salary. We pay to these agents in salaries $19,163 ; we allow them living expenses of $3,246 and travelling expenses of $4,480. Altogether, we are paying our salaried agents in Great Britain $26,880. In addition to these, we have a whole army of officials in Great Britain. We have people who are agents for the steamship companies and who act also for the government. There are 273 of these in Great Britain and Ireland, according to the reports brought down. They are called booking agents. I see they receive all the way from 7 shillings to £147 17s, 6d. from the government. We have in the United States, on salary, 23 agents, to whom we pay in salaries $25,320 ; living expenses, $8,650, and travelling expenses, $10,859, or a total to these salaried agents in the United States of $44,830. As a matter of course, we have been getting many immigrants from the United States. I do not think that this is to be attributed entirely, or nearly entirely, to the agents of the government. As we all know, there is a great boom in the Northwest, and the agents are exploiting that country. They have agents all over the United States who are sending in immigrants.

Mr. SCOTT. What started them ?

Mr. HENDERSON. We did.

Mr. WILSON. At any rate, I do not think it was my hon. friend (Mr. Scott) who started them. Of course, if that hon. gentleman claims that the government made the good times, I can only say that I trust we shall have no more bad ones ; for, surely the government are not so wicked as to punish all the good people in the country merely to injure some wicked Tories. Surely we shall have good times if it is in the power of the government to make them. However, I think that hon. gentlemen have too good sense to claim that they are the authors of the good times. The good times come from the increase of population in the Northwest, resulting from the good advertising that country has had. We have plenty of good land in that country, and when a man can get 160 acres of land for nothing, in a region where the crops have been splendid for a number of years, and reports of whose fertility have been spread broadcast all over the world, is it any wonder that people are coming to a country like ours? Is it any wonder that people take up land when they can begin ploughing the morning after they reach it? It is not as it was in Ontario, Quebec and the other provinces, where the forest had to be cleared before anything could be planted. That land is ready for the plough. Moreover, the opposition in this House is not decrying that country, as was the custom of hon. gentlemen opposite when they were on this side of the House.

Now, I desire to say a word—I do not wish to detain the House long at this late day of the session—as to the treatment of immigrants by the United States. The United States has many restrictions upon immigration. For instance, it is a penalty under the law for any one to land a person in the United States who is not entitled to be landed according to law. And agitation is being carried on with a view to making that law more stringent. I have before me a Bill which was introduced in the last session of Congress, under which the penalty for the offence I have referred to is made imprisonment for not less than three months and not more than two years, with a fine of $1,000. This shows the view that the people of the United States take of immigration. I understand, of course, that they are in a better position to refuse immigration than we are, having already a very large population. It is true they have lots of vacant land, but their population is multiplying very rapidly. They are spending more money, I think, in keeping immigrants out of their country than we are spending in bringing them in. Of course, they get a great part of that money back from the steamship companies or the immigrants, for every one has to pay $2 a head—man, woman or child—who goes into the United States as an immigrant. They have 116 officers along our southern border to prevent the entrance into the United States of undesirable immigrants. They rejected last year about 5,000—some for diseases and some for other causes. We deported, according to a report which covered about a year and a half, something over 400. What became of the rest? Are they still in our country? It seems to me that persons that the United States will not receive because they are diseased, or paupers, or likely to become paupers, should not be allowed to stay in our country. We may have all the feelings of sympathy that we like, but we must remember that we have a duty to ourselves and to the world, to make our country great and strong, and to do that we must protect our citizens against the contact of this kind of population.

Now, I wish to refer for a few minutes to the reports of the farm delegates who were sent to the old country. Some of these delegates, I dare say, were good men, while some were not so well adapted—I should judge from the reports—for the work required of them. I think it unfortunate that the minister should have selected all these men from one party. I do not say he should have selected a large number from the opposition, but, for the sake of the influence they would have in the old country, he should have chosen men all of whom were fairly well adapted to the business in hand, instead of choosing men to be sent to the old country merely to give them a trip and allow them to do pretty much as they like. There were 27 of these agents, and we find that they were pretty liberal with the public money so far as tips are concerned. They paid $450.86 of our money as tips. They paid out over $100 for accident insurance. Now, I would like to know why we should pay the accident insurance of any gentleman in this country. I have made a few extracts from the reports of these agents. I do not wish to weary the House, so I shall not read them all. The first one is that of Mr. P. Campbell. He concludes his report by saying:

> In conclusion I would advise the government not to be in a hurry to fill up this country with foreigners——

I do not know whether he means Scotchmen or not.

> —but to keep the land for our own people as there are thousands of British subjects who would be only too glad to come to this country.

That is about the most intelligent thing he says. And for that we paid $506.95. Mr. Campbell paid in tips $18; advertising, $121—he must have been pretty well advertised—besides $22 for printing; board and lodging, $172.85, and sundries, $34.65. So for sundries and tips he paid over $50. The next gentleman we have is Mr. A. L. Hall; he cost us $578. He says he had a good time. His board and lodging cost us $249 I will read a paragraph of his report:

> While in England I had a very pleasant although busy time. I was kept moving from one town to another and in that way saw a good deal of the country. Everywhere I went I was treated with the utmost courtesy and found people very anxious to come to Canada, a great many more would have come but did not have the means.

Now that is about as important as any part of the report. I think it should have been the duty of a gentleman representing the government to the people of England, to make a full report of what he did. But a good many of these gentlemen did not think it their duty to do so. The next gentleman I come to is Mr. M. Watts. He cost us $319, and if you add the $150 that we paid to all of them but one—there was one the government seemed to favour beyond all others, for they gave him $250—but to this gentleman they gave $150, making $465. Here is the way he winds up his report :

The farmers there wanted the cattle embargo lifted as they want our cattle for stockers, and they want the privilege of getting our beef cattle upon arrival to feed them for three months. This would create a better price for our beef cattle.

I imagine this gentleman forgot that he was immigration agent, he thought he was representing the Department of Agriculture, and he was trying to make a place to send our cattle too, instead of getting people to come to this country. This gentleman cost this country $467 for his trip. Then we have a report from Mr. S. L. Head. He cost us $415. He says, making several recommendations :

First, that only men who have had a practical experience should be engaged as lecturers.

I do not know whether he meant that as a reflection on his colleagues. If you are going to send men, that is not the kind you ought to send.

Second, that the work should be done during the fall and winter.

Third, that a much greater effort should be made to induce the British farmers to come to Canada, and that the chief energies of the department be expended along that line.

In this matter he differs entirely with Mr. Preston's statement of a few years ago. Mr. Preston said it would not be prudent to advise farmers who were well situated in the old country, to come to Canada, because, he says, they would be generally disappointed, they would not be able to make a success in this country. He said he did not feel like encouraging that kind of immigration. As a matter of fact, I think we in Canada look upon that class of people as being the most desirable, because they are men of means who would develop the country in the right direction. Besides that, they would make good settlers, and exert the right kind of influence in the country. Therefore, I would differ materially with Mr. Preston in that matter. Next we have Mr. Robert Forke. This gentleman, while he spent $430, seems to have been economical in a good many things. But here is what he says :

In connection with my visit to the old country under the instructions of the Department of Immigration, I have the honour to report as follows :

The meetings of which there were seven were all well attended and very successful, receiving a good notice in the local papers at the different places visited. There was usually a pretty steady stream of callers seeking a personal interview, and I had the privilege of hearing many expressions of approval of the steps taken by the Dominion government to disseminate information about the country.

These seven lectures seem to have cost the country a good deal, each lecture cost $61. I do not know anything about this gentleman. He may be a very eloquent man or he may not ; he may be well fitted for his position, but certainly his report does not indicate it. I think the minister will agree with me that these reports ought to have pointed out more fully what these gentlemen did as servants of this country in Great Britain when they are sent over there to get immigrants. We ought to have a full detailed report of what they have done. Then we have Mr. John Kennedy. He lived pretty well while he was in that country, and seems to have spent $225 for board and lodgings. Here is what he says:

I inclose the account of my expenses of the trip to the old country, which is correct to the best of my knowledge, and I hope it will give satisfaction.

That certainly is a very important part of the report so far as he is concerned, and I presume his account has been settled. I will read the balance of his report :

I would say as far as I was concerned the trip was satisfactory, as I found the people eager to hear from Canada on immigration. I had eighteen meetings and stood the rest of the time in office at Belfast. I would have had more meetings, but I had to stay in the office on account of Mrs. Kelly going to Dublin. The time was too short, we ought to have been one month earlier.

Now that is the whole of that gentleman's report, for which we paid $456. I will refer to one more of these gentlemen, Mr. John Dougan :

As requested I forwarded a few of the impressions the trip made on me.

Advertising was not well done, owing to the friction amongst local shipping agents.

The work does not seem to have been well done because the agents in the old country were not agreed about it. I suppose the minister will dismiss those who made the trouble.

Some of the places selected for the delegates were unsuitable, two of my places were in barber shops with no accommodation for visitors. Where the speakers preceded the delegates, the delegate's quarters were crowded for several days from morning till night. On the whole I think good will come of the visit. Many people told me they would take the first opportunity to sell their belongings and sail for our country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call your attention to another matter here. There were two or three others, but I do not think they made any recommendations whatever. Then there was Mr. Arthur Kilburn who was allowed $250 for his fee. Would the hon. minister tell us why Mr. Kilburn is paid $100 more for his services than any of the other delegates. It seems to me that he was simply like the other delegates yet the other delegates in that class only got $150. There were just a few of these delegates who spent any money in advertising. J. H. Medcalf spent $121.05, Rev. J. L. Brown, $6.93; James Dale, $24.33; John Cowan, $4.87; D. MacVicker, $26.07, and W. H. Bryce, $37.48, making a total of $221.43. We find that these gentlemen paid out in tips $448.29, for sundries, $315.61, and for accident insurance over $100. I do not think that these people should be allowed to insure their lives at the expense of the people; neither do I think that they should be allowed to spend money freely in sundries and tips. If they want to be generous they should be generous out of their own pockets. We sent over fifty-four delegates and we spent upon them $25,000. I think the deputy minister told us in the committee that he had heard from one of these delegates that he had been instrumental in bringing ten or twelve people to this country. He did not say that he had heard from any more of them. That one delegate brought in ten or twelve people, and we have paid a little over $25,000 for them. I presume that some other hon. gentlemen will have something to say, that the hon. minister will have something to say, and I expect to have something more to say on the items as they go through.

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). Before my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson) sits down I would like him to explain whether the impression I have is correct that he has adduced as proof of the greater stringency in the regulations against immigration into the United States the fact that they charge $2 a head for admission to that country. If so I would like to ask him whether that is a novelty or not.

Mr. WILSON. It is not a novelty for the last two or three years. Before that it was only $1 a head but there has been an effort to make it more than it is now even as the hon. gentleman will know if he has paid any attention to what the United States people have been doing. There is a very strong feeling in the United States, if I can judge from what I read in the newspapers and from the report of the Immigrant Department at Washington, against allowing any but the very best class of settlers into the country.

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). I merely beg to say that this has been in force for forty years.

Mr. WILSON. What, the $2 tax ?

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). Yes, I paid it myself in 1867 while passing through Portland on my way to Ottawa.

Mr. SIFTON. I ought to be indebted to my hon. friend for giving the committee so much detailed information in regard to the affairs of the Department of Immigration and with a good many of his remarks I find no fault. I was glad to hear my hon. friend say that he is not disposed to quarrel with the amount of the expenditure.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to state that what I said was that we would not feel disposed to quarrel with the amount if we felt sure we were getting value for it. We have some doubt about that.

Mr. SIFTON. If my hon. friend takes that position I am prepared to take the position that we do get value for it and I think there is no great difficulty in showing that. As to a number of points which my hon. friend mentioned, being mere statements of fact as to which there is no dispute, such as questions of expenditure, salaries and that sort of thing, they require no special intention on my part because they are matters of record. But, my hon. friend referred to the question of permitting immigration of such a character as is illustrated by the employment of the Italians, who came to Montreal a few months ago. I may say that such a movement is in no sense a result of the work of the immigration department, and that in the present state of the law the immigration department has no power whatever to deal with a case of that kind. In the case of persons who come into the country as they came, not by way of steamship, although a few came by steamship, but by rail as the majority of them did come, there is no power under the law at the present time to interfere with these people or to prevent them from coming into Canada. As to the extent to which we should exercise the principle of exclusion that is a matter for serious consideration. It is not a matter which particularly belongs to the discussion of the immigration question or one which is connected with the work of the immigration branch. When the facts in regard to that particular matter were brought to my attention I asked my hon. friend the Minister of Labour (Sir William Mulock) to detail an officer of his department to make an investigation, not having an officer in my own department whom I thought particularly fitted for that kind of work. Mr. King, the Deputy Minister of Labour, was accordingly sent to make an investigation. He made a report and as a result of his report a further investigation was directed to be made.

Mr. WILSON. May I call the hon. minister's attention to the fact that the other day the hon. Minister of Labour said that he did not make a report, that he simply gave him a memorandum.

Mr. SIFTON. The memorandum was the report. I do not know why my hon. friend desires to draw a distinction between a memorandum and a report. I do not know the difference between a memorandum and a report. Perhaps my hon. friend will explain what he means. I was not here when the statement was made. However, Mr. King was sent down for the purpose of ascertaining the facts, he communicated them to the minister and as a result a further investigation was directed. While I am on that point I may say that the whole subject as to the extent to which exclusion should be practised in connection with that class of people, that is to say persons who are not of criminal antecedents, persons who are not exactly in the ordinary sense of the word paupers, persons who cannot be excluded by medical examination, but persons who by reason of the fact that they may, on account of their condition and circumstances shortly after they arrive here, become a charge upon the public, is a subject that we have under consideration at the present time, and my hon. friend the Minister of Labour has a Bill upon the Order Paper—I think it has been introduced—with which it is proposed to deal with the subject.

The question of the appointment of inspectors to carry out such exclusion as may be decided upon by parliament, is one which will come rather under his supervision than under mine. I believe the system of medical inspection at the ocean ports at the present time is as strict as it is practicable to make it. Dr. Bryce, formerly of the Board of Health, Toronto, has been appointed chief medical inspector of the department and under his system the immigrants landing at ocean reports are put through a very careful and thorough examination. Under the Department of Agriculture we have the quarantine service in charge of Dr. Montizambert, and under that service persons are detained for what are called quarantinable diseases. After the ships pass quarantine as having a clean bill of health, the passengers are then permitted to land, but under certain restrictions, and each passenger is required to go into a room where he is submitted to a careful medical inspection by our medical inspectors. Each man, woman and child who lands in Canada, personally passes through the hands of the doctor and must be certified to as being free of disease of such character as would warrant us returning them. If persons are afflicted with disease of a somewhat trifling character, but still of such a nature as would not justify the physicians in letting them pass, we have erected a detention hospital where they are treated at the expense of the transportation companies, who pay that expense proportionately.

Mr. CLARKE. What proportion of the expense is borne by the steamship companies ?

Mr. SIFTON. At the end of a certain period an account is made up setting forth the proportion of the expenses chargeable against each transportation company.

Mr. CLARKE. How is that ascertained ?

Mr. SIFTON. By taking the total cost of treatment of all the passengers detained. I was about to say that the general expense of supervision, the salary of the chief inspector for instance, is not charged against the transportation companies. But the expense of the treatment is charged—

Mr. BOYD. Is the minister correct in saying that the expense of the detention of immigrants is paid by the transportation companies ?

Mr. SIFTON. The expense of treatment is.

Mr. BOYD. The expense of treatment and detention ?

Mr. SIFTON. The expense of treating a patient at the detention hospital while he is there is charged against the transportation company that brought him, and if he turns out to be incurable, the transportation company is required to take him back. My hon. friend will understand that there are defects in all human arrangements. We cannot calculate the expense of a matter of that kind to a copper, but that is the general system that is carried out as carefully as it can be. It is only within the last year it has been whipped into shape and no doubt it is still susceptible of improvement, but I doubt if it is open to very much improvement so far as the actual inspection is concerned. Whatever may have been the case in former years ; and while we had a fairly good system of inspection, since Dr. Bryce took charge and got his organization into shape, the medical examination at the ocean ports is now as complete and as satisfactory as we can make it. My hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson) referred to some statement made by a man named Parker in a letter to a Toronto paper reflecting upon the immigration service in the United States of America. The explanation of that letter is the fact that Mr. Parker's services were found unsatisfactory and were dispensed with, and as is not uncommon under such circumstances he endeavoured to take satisfaction by rendering what he thought was an unfavourable account of the work of the department in which he was no longer an official.

Mr. CLARKE. How long had Parker been in the service of the department ?

Mr. SIFTON. Two or three years : he was a sub-agent paid by commission.

Mr. CLARKE. Where was he operating ?

Mr. SIFTON. In the neighbourhood of Duluth. My hon. friend will understand that in the case of these sub-agents who are paid on commission and who have the power of giving certificates to persons intending to come to Canada, the department is in considerable danger of being defrauded, and notwithstanding the greatest possible care and closest inspection, we occasionally find we have an agent who is unsatisfactory, or who, even though we cannot prove it, we may suspect has defrauded us. We had one or two cases in which we suspected a sub-agent of giving fraudulent certificates, and while it was difficult to find absolute evidence of it, yet we did what a private individual would do if he strongly suspected that he had a dishonest employee, we got rid of him as quickly and as quietly as we could. As to the agent at Indianapolis, the particular results of the work in Indiana did not come to my special attention, with regard to this matter, but I may say that the work in Indiana for some time was not very successful. That is one of the states in which we found it extremely hard to encourage the movement. We sent a large number of sub-agents to the different states and carried on an active propoganda, but I am not prepared to say that they were all equally successful. In some cases the agents were successful ; in some places they were not, and in some places after they had been working for a considerable length of time success came all at once.

Mr. CLARKE. Did I understand the hon. minister to say that the system of inspection is so efficient now that every immigrant landing in Canada is inspected by our officers ?

Mr. SIFTON. Yes.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. SIFTON. When the committee rose at six o'clock, I was speaking of the medical inspection of immigrants at the different ports. I was saying that at the beginning of this season we had inaugurated a system of inspection which I have reason to believe is about as perfect as we can make it. Some difficulties have been experienced from the landing of very large numbers of immigrants on the same day. We had thought that we had abundant accommodation, but it has proved for this reason to be somewhat insufficient at Quebec and Halifax. There have been one or two cases in which it has been somewhat difficult for the officials to handle the numbers arriving; but I can safely say that during the present season the inspection has been pretty thorough and careful. I would be quite pleased to receive suggestions for improvement from any members of the committee who have given the matter any attention ; but the matter has received the most careful attention from the medical inspector and the deputy of the department, and the result of their efforts has been fairly satisfactory. We are making preparations for the purpose of securing further accommodation at Quebec, Halifax and St. John, and by next season I think we shall be amply equipped for any possible demand that may be made upon us. Some remarks were made by my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson) in regard to the immigration from the United States. My hon. friend expressed the opinion that the agents in the United States were not the cause of the very large and satisfactory movement of farmers from the western and northwestern states of Canada. I readily admit that if the country for which they had to work did not offer very great inducements, it would be quite impossible for any agents, however vigourous or active or faithful they might be in the discharge of their duties, to bring about such a movement of population as we have recently seen. But I do not think any person who has given close or careful attention to what has been going on during the last few years, will say that the movement would have taken place to any considerable extent if the work of acquainting the people of the western and northwestern states of the conditions in Canada had not been attended to. I need not repeat what I have said to the committee on former occasions in regard to the different methods adopted in carrying on that work. The lack of knowledge which formerly existed among the farmers of the western and northwestern states in regard to conditions in northwestern Canada was almost incredible. The most remarkable ideas on the subject prevailed amongst those people, although they were at a comparatively short distance from the boundary line. Systematic and determined efforts had to be made and were made for the purpose of acquainting them with the actual advantages of the Northwestern Canada. The people of the western states have now become fairly well informed as to our country ; but the natural result of the work that we have been doing has followed, and the American railways which are interested in preventing the movement of people to northwestern Canada, have inaugurated a very vigorous campaign, a campaign attended with the expenditure of considerable money and a great deal of energy on the part of their agents, for the purpose of checking as far as possible the movement which our people have inaugurated. We have no doubt received considerable assistance from land and colonization companies engaged in the work of selling lands in the Northwest ; but it must be remembered that most of these companies came there only two or three years ago, purchased their lands and interested themselves, because of the movement which had been inaugurated and the information which had been supplied in the western states. From the seed thus sown they expected to reap, and I have no doubt have reaped, a very valuable reward. But I am quite clear that if we desire to maintain the movement of population from the United States to Canada, we will have to continue our organization there and make as vigourous efforts as in the past.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to know whether the immigration from the States is as large this year as last.

Mr. SIFTON. Not quite. Up to the present the difference is about 4,000 in favour of the last calendar year.

Mr. WILSON. Are any of the states or the Washington government interfering to prevent our agents doing their work there ?

Mr. SIFTON. I have no information except what I have seen in the press despatches indicating that the Washington government purpose calling the attention of the British government to the fact that we have an organization in their country for the purpose of attracting settlers to Canada. Until representations reach us, I cannot say how authentic the information is or not or what shape the representations will take. But up to the present we have received nothing but courtesy from any of the United States officials with whom we have come in contact. I took a trip to the United States a year ago last January, and found no disposition on the part of the municipal authorities or prominent people of the different localities where our agencies are stationed, to prevent the operations of our agents. In the last eight or nine months however, there have been some indications that efforts have been made to get the Washington government to take action in that direction. I am not aware of any law of the United States which would enable the Washington government to take any action at present, but the committee will understand that any representations from that government, even supposing there was no law on the statute books, would have to receive very careful consideration from us. For myself, I think that everybody who is familiar with affairs in the Northwest will agree that the movement of population from the western states to our Northwest has been of a most valuable character. Even should it fall off materially in the near future, still an enormous amount of benefit has been done to our Northwest by the settlement in that country of those industrious and progressive farmers, and the testimony of our people is universal to the effect that the class of settlers we have received from the western states is of the very highest quality. With regard to the general question, I may say that any movement of population is of more or less uncertain and varying character. We find that people in one of the states are on the move this year. Next year the people of the adjoining state will be more disposed to move; and we find that after we have been getting settlers from any particular locality for two or three years, the flow of settlement from that district is likely to decrease, because the supply of people who are disposed to move has been, to some extent, for the time being, exhausted. In England, for instance, last year the majority of immigrants came from the neighbourhood of London, and this year the larger portion came from the north of England and Scotland. The flow of immigration varies in that way, so that we have to keep continually working to have the movement kept up to its present dimensions. Respecting the work done by our farm delegates, to which reference was made by the hon. member for Lennox, the delegates were not sent to England for the purpose of making reports to us on the conditions there. Of course they did make such reports when they came back, but that was not the purpose for which they were sent. But the idea was rather, and it was well carried out, to furnish the agents we have there with men who could go into the country and talk with intending settlers, so that intending settlers might have an actual idea of what Canadian settlers were like and in what sort of way they carried on their operations. It was for that purpose they were sent over, and the testimony of our agents is that their work has been most valuable and that to it is due a great deal of the increase in the movement from the British Isles last year. Of course in work of this kind, we have to vary our operations just as in certain lines of business. What is effective one year may not be another, and different methods have to be adopted from time to time to suit changing circumstances. Up to the end of the fiscal year 1903-4, the number of immigrants from all sources exceeded the number of the previous year by something like 2,000, but I am under the impression that at the end of this calendar year the number will be slightly less. Our agents in the United States attribute the falling off in immigration from that country this year to the unfavourable season. The season when people move to a new country, the early spring, turned out to be unfavourable. The spring was late in the Northwest and the means of transportation in some places were congested, and there was difficulty in getting the transportation which intending settlers require, and the reports sent back by those resulted to a considerable extent in checking the movement in the early part of the season ; and once the movement is checked, it is very difficult to make up the falling off in the later months.

Mr. OSLER. Is any record kept by the officials on this side of the immigrants rejected by the United States authorities and turned back upon this country ?

Mr. SIFTON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) means those rejected by the United States inspectors along our boundary ? No. We have no way of checking that.

Mr. OSLER. I asked Mr. Sargent, the Commissioner General of Immigration of the United States, whom I met a few months ago, as to the undesirable class of immigrants seeking entrance to the United States and the efforts of his department to prevent their entrance. I asked him if he would send me a statement of the number of immigrants rejected by his department as coming from Canada. On the 5th instant, I received a letter from Mr. John H. Clarke acting commissioner. This letter is addressed to Mr. Sargent and is forwarded to me. It says :

Number refused admission to the United States at various Canadian border stations from June, 1903, to 31st May, 1904 : total number rejected 2,441, causes for which such exclusions were made being as follows : likely to become public charges 961, contract labourers 305, afflicted with dangerous contageous diseases 663, temporarily detained and not appearing for re-examination 11, to prevent separation of families 61, aliens seeking admission minus certificates 442, idiots and insane 8—making the total of 2,441.

In view of the minister's statement just before we rose at 6 o'clock, that every immigrant coming into this country was medically inspected as to his fitness, this letter is a very serious one.

Mr. SIFTON. If my hon. friend (Mr. Osler) will permit me—I explained that I referred to this year, and that I was not prepared to make that statement with regard to past seasons.

Mr. OSLER. This statement is for the present season up to 31st May 1904. It does not include the last month or two, which probably would show a larger number of immigrants. Now, one or other of two things must be deduced from the statements made in this letter. Either this inspection is not being carried out as the minister thinks it is, or—very much more serious—we must have in Canada a class of people who are immigrating, or we must have among our own people an enormous number afflicted with contagious and dangerous diseases who are leaving our country for the United States. I hope that the former is the case, for that is something that may be remedied with comparative case. But, if it is the latter, and if we have among our population a sufficient percentage of people afflicted with dangerous contagious disease to supply an emigration of 653 in ten months, that is something that will require the most serious attention of the government and a very close investigation. I am always accused of speaking from a railway point of view. So, I suppose I cannot be accused of wishing to restrict immigration into this country. No one believes more strongly than I do the necessity of proper immigration into Canada. But I think that no one realizes more than I do the absolute necessity that that immigration shall be of the right class. In the United States, with one boundary on the southern ocean, they have all varieties of climate. They have the natural conditions which will enable them to assimilate with comparative ease Italians and other people from the southern parts of Europe. We cannot do that. We cannot gain any advantage by bringing to this country weaklings from the south of Europe. If the immigration is to be successful, we must have people from the northern countries, from the strong nations of Europe. The government, I think, owe it to the country and to themselves to take every possible precaution that, neither through their immigration agents nor—what is more dangerous as to this class of persons—through the various steamship companies, which receive a bonus for immigrants besides their passage money, are people of this class landed in this country. As I have said, we are very much more bound to discriminate as to the class of immigrants than is the United States. If they reject these diseased people, we ought to reject them with tenfold stringency. But, we do not seem to be doing that. We are not taking care to keep out of Canada the people who come from the southern parts of Europe, many of them afflicted with diseases which are not only dangerous to themselves but are dangerous to the people of this country by reason of their contagious character.

Mr. KENDALL. Before this item passes, I would like to say a word as a medical man. I have heard no more ridiculous criticism expressed in this House at any time than the criticism made in regard to the health of the immigrants brought into this country. I would like to say to the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Osler), that if he would refer to his own distinguished brother, who is probably the greatest medical man that Canada has ever produced, he would find his opinion on this matter different from that which the hon. gentleman has just expressed. I wish to tell him that if this parliament had the courage it should have, it would at once take up certain questions of public health and deal with them. They are matters of momentous importance to this country, whereas the matters to which he refers are mere bagatelles.

Mr. CLARKE. I have not the advantage possessed by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Kendall), of being a medical man, and of being able therefore to speak with authority as to the seriousness of the charges that have been made by my hon. friend on my right (Mr. Osler), and as to the inadvisability of allowing diseased persons to become residents of this country after they have been pronounced unfitted to become residents of the United States. The hon. gentleman probably knows more than the corps of expert medical men who have been appointed by the United States government to pay special attention to this very matter. I think I am justified in concluding, without meaning any disrespect to the hon. gentleman, that if the United States medical authorities entertained the same opinion that he does they would not go to the annual expense of maintaining along our border and in some of our principal cities groups of expert medical examiners to inquire into the physical condition of those who are seeking admission into the United States, and of rejecting them for reasons which, in the hon. gentleman's opinion, are a mere bagatelle. I have stated before in this House, and I repeat it, that the facts which have been disclosed show a disgraceful condition of things. I do not desire to throw the entire blame upon the Department of the Interior ; I rather commend the vigilance of the United States authorities. It is to me most regrettable that we have presented to us in the official reports of the Commissioner General of Immigration of the United States an annual statement showing the number of immigrants destined for the United States, who have been booked by our Canadian route, but who are not permitted to enter the United States because of physicial disability. I do not know how many dozen officials the United States have stationed along our borders. I believe 116 is the number. In addition to these they have their officials stationed at Montreal and elsewhere in our country ; and these gentlemen have it in their power to say whether immigrants who come thus far on their way to the United States shall be permitted to continue their journey and enter the United States, or whether they shall be debarred at Montreal or some other Canadian port, and be obliged to remain in this country. I appreciate the difficulties of the situation, and commend whatever the Minister of the Interior is doing to put a stop to this unsatisfactory condition of things. But I am afraid that the hon. gentleman was not speaking advisedly at six o'clock when he said that every immigrant landing in Canada was carefully examined by expert medical men.

Mr. SIFTON. I referred to people who come by seaports, we have no means of checking those who come in by rail.

Mr. CLARKE. I am speaking of those only who come across the ocean, the immigrant class who land at our ports. I understood the hon. gentleman at six o'clock to say that all these were carefully examined by our own medical men. Of course I am not in a position to dispute that statement. But I do make the assertion, that if the statistics which my colleague has presented to the House are reliable—and they are official documents bearing the approval of the United States government officials—then I say that the examination made by this government must be lax, or else the examination made by the United States medical officers must be much more rigid than that which our officials make when immigrants land at our Canadian Atlantic ports. I do not think the fact that immigrants are poor, are destitue, as long as they are mentally, physically and morally fit, should debar them ; I do not think their poverty should prevent them from getting a chance to make a living in Canada. But I do say that people who are rejected because they are suffering from loathsome diseases——

Mr. KENDALL. What diseases ?

Mr. CLARKE. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman ; loathsome diseases, the classification is ; and are not fit to become citizens of the United States, ought certainly not be permitted to remain here and become a charge upon the people of this country. If they are permitted to land and proceed as far west as Montreal on their way to the United States, they certainly should not be permitted to remain in Canada if they are rejected by the United States authorities and not allowed to enter that country. I think that is a reasonable proposition and one that will commend itself to the Minister of the Interior. Two months ago I read a statement in the House from the last official report of the United States Commissioner General of Immigration, showing that some 4,000 immigrants were debarred from entering the United States at our various border ports. I asked the Minister of the Interior what became of these people, and he promised to make a statement, if my memory serves me, when these estimates were being considered. We have not had that statement from him to-night. I cannot understand by what machinery or method these people, whose destination is the United States, are permitted to come thus far on their journey, are then prevented from continuing their journey, and are left upon our hands, especially if they are suffering from loathsome and dangerous diseases. This matter ought to engage the attention of the minister and he ought to endeavour, if possible, to devise some means whereby these people will not be allowed to come so far on their journey. If they are not fit because of their physical and mental disabilities to enter the United States, they certainly ought not to be permitted to land in Canada ; but if they land in Canada they certainly ought not to be permitted to remain here if their condition is such as is stated by the United States officials. Now I have a report for several months of the present fiscal year, showing the number of immigrants debarred from entering the United States from Canada. The return is made by ports, and I would like to draw the attention of the minister to these statements. If he wishes I will give them to him so that he can see for himself what is contained in them, and decide what remedy might be applied to put a stop to this state of things. In July of last year, the first month of the fiscal year 1903-1904, this report shows that there were landed at Quebec and St. John 3,241 immigrants, and of this number 77 were debarred, and of these 57 were suffering from loathsome or dangerous contagious diseases—these are the words used in the heading. I do not know what these diseases are, I do not know who the persons were; but these are official returns from the United States immigration department. Now what I am drawing to the attention of the minister is the fact that year after year there is published a statement showing the number of these immigrants from Europe wending their way to the United States through Canada, who are prohibited from continuing their journey and who are left stranded in Canada.

What is to be done with these people? Can there not be an improvement made in the medical examination? Can that medical examination not be made more rigid, so that they will not be allowed to land at Halifax, St. John or Quebec, or whatever the port is? I will not weary the committee by reading all these returns that I have from month to month up to the 1st of May, but I want to draw the hon. minister's attention to the fact that in these monthly statements there are figures showing the number rejected at Vancouver as well as at Quebec and St. John. The figures for the other ports are not given in these tables. In some of the months the number rejected at Vancouver is considerable. In the month of July the number rejected was 6, in August the number rejected was 18, in September the number rejected was 25, and I may tell my hon. friend from Cape Breton that of the 25, 11 are classified as suffering from loathsome or dangerous contagious diseases. In October the number rejected was 18, in November 28, and so on. These tables show that in the six or eight months for which I have returns hundreds of immigrants have been rejected, have been debarred from entering the United States because they have been physically unfit. I do not know whether the diseases from which they are suffering are loathsome and contagious—I hope they are not for the sake of this country, because these people are left here—but I repeat the statement that they are debarred because of their physical condition, because they are classified as suffering from loathsome or dangerous contagious diseases, and it is not right that these unfortunate people should be maintained at the expense of the taxpayers of Canada, when they are immigrants destined for the United States, who are prevented from entering that country by the corps of United States officers who are doing duty at the ports of Canada and along our border. We have brought this matter to the attention of the hon. minister again and again, and while we recognize that he has been appointing some medical gentlemen to intercept the flow of these people, yet from the statement which my colleague has presented to the House, and from the figures contained in the statements which I have in my hand, there is certainly a great deal more to be done in this matter. I am sure the hon. minister will admit that if these figures are correct the situation is not a satisfactory one. We should be able to exercise as rigid a supervision over the immigration coming into Canada as is exercised by the United States officials over the immigration going into that country. People who are debarred because of their physical disabilities, and who are not fitted to become citizens of the United States—who are not good enough, if I may be permitted to use that expression without intending to use it in the offensive sense, to become citizens of the United States—are certainly not good enough for Canada. It is quality that we should aim at rather than quantity, but if we are to have quantity—and we have room for a great many immigrants in this country—we should certainly see to it that the necessary moneys are expended to enable us to make our medical examination of all immigrants as rigid as it is possible to make it. There is another phase of this matter, but probably I had better leave that until the discussion of this question is concluded. I shall be glad to place these statements in the possession of the hon. minister, and if I have misapprehended what their purport is, I shall be glad to be corrected; but in view of these statements, and in view of the statements which my colleague has presented, I think there is a screw loose yet, and I hope the hon. gentleman will see how urgent is the necessity that our system of inspection shall be equal to that which prevails along the border on the part of the immigration officials of the United States.

Mr. KENDALL. I do not wish to be misunderstood. I fully agree in all the arrangements that are made to provide necessary quarantine at the ports of debarcation, but I repeat that if the few scores or few hundreds of infected people who came into this country are really, from the point of danger, a bagatelle compared with the amount of contagious disease which we, as a parliament and as a civilization, permit to stalk broadcast through the land. I do not think there is any medical man in this House who will question that. I may say that it is a popular thing, perhaps, in the United States, as it is here, for hon. gentlemen in parliament to make a loud outcry against the possibility of the importation of disease from foreign countries. It is a very popular thing, but I submit that the medical associations of this country are probably the bodies best qualified to judge of what the danger to Canada is from the importation of disease from outside, and I do not think that up to this time the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior have had any very strong recommendations from the medical bodies of Canada on this point. I speak, of course, subject to correction, but I again assert that we permit year after year loathsome and contagious diseases to be propagated in this country, and we have not the courage to take measures to prevent it.

Mr. OSLER. The doctor has touched on a very delicate subject. He refers to the diseases which have been a curse to civilization as far back as civilization goes. He, as a member of the medical profession, and all of his brothers, are unable to suggest any remedy for these diseases, and although he makes the accusation that we in this parliament are making a loud outcry about a small number of contagious cases, whether they are from the outside or not, I do not think that he will take the responsibility of bringing a law into this House to check the evil to which he refers, bad enough as it is. But that does not prevent us from doing what we can to prevent an evil which is checkable. The other is not checkable, in so far as civilization has not been able to suggest a remedy, but we are dealing with something which is checkable ; and if he, as a physician, says that the fact that 680 persons suffering from dangerous and contagious diseases have been refused admission to the United States is something that does not affect Canada, I think he is making a mistake. That is a statement that laymen will not agree with, no matter how much doctors may endorse it.

Mr. KENDALL. I did not say that certain cases should not be kept out. I do not wish to be misunderstood in that.

Mr. OSLER. The hon. member said that this was simply a bagatelle, and that I was talking trash.

Mr. KENDALL. I said it was a bagatelle compared with the great evils that are stalking unchecked through the country.

Mr. OSLER. May I suggest to the hon. gentleman, as a member of the very honourable profession of medicine, that he take it up and bring in a measure to check the evil resulting from the diseases to which he refers ?

Mr. KENDALL. I admit that I have not the courage to deal with some of the evils to which he has referred, some that probably will not be mentioned, but take the case of consumption, of tuberculosis—we have not the courage to deal with it, and it is a disease which is a hundred times more important to the health of Canada than any of the ordinary contagious diseases that we refuse entrance to at the ports.

Mr. PUTTEE. I am not a member of the Agricultural Committee, and I understand that committee has been gathering a good deal of information regarding the immigration of the past year. As the report of that committee is not available to us, I will have to ask the minister for some information. I find in the report of the deputy minister the following short paragraphs :—

> In connection with the work of the department in the old country, it may be interesting to note that all booking agents represent the department and are paid seven shillings for each whole ticket and a half of that amount for half tickets on all agricultural settlers coming to Canada.
> In addition to this the department has a large number of local agents, most of whom are booking agents. They are paid at the rate of twelve shillings for each whole ticket, and half that amount for half tickets on all agricultural settlers.

From that statement it is evident that we pay to the agents a fee for every agricultural settler that leaves Britain for Canada. If that is the case I suppose there must be receipts for the payment and tabulated statements of the number we pay for, and consequently the number that come to settle in Canada. Can the minister give us that statement ?

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to refer to the statement of the member for Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall) and more especially because he is a medical man who would be expected to appreciate at its full value what it means to import diseased individuals into Canada and scatter them throughout the country. The hon. gentleman stated that the number of diseased immigrants was a mere bagatelle compared with the total, but when we know that one diseased person may affect 125 or 175 persons, we ought to be able to appreciate what it means to import contagious or infectious disease. The report of the chief commissioner of immigration for the United States, tells us that in 1903 they deported at the Canadian line no less than 1,439 immigrants who were affected with contagious and infectious diseases.

Mr. KENDALL. What were they ?

Mr. SPROULE. It does not specify the disease, but it says they were dangerous and contagious diseases, and that is sufficient for a medical man to understand the danger. Now, as the Americans deported 1,439 to Canada, and as we sent back to Europe and the continent only 300, it stands to reason that over 1,100 are left in Canada suffering from dangerous contagious diseases. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Kendall) says that you do not hear the medical men complaining about this ; but he must have been in the House last year or the year before when an eminent medical man from Montreal drew attention to the fact that many of these diseased persons were drifting into the hospitals and into the thickly populated portions of the community, and that they were also found in the country places amongst farmers. For three years in succession attention has been drawn to this in the House, and each year the government state that it is exercising every vigilance. This year the Minister of the Interior says he has commenced to take precautions, but last year and the year before he said the same thing. The minister has told us that in the present state of the law he cannot interfere with immigrants coming into Canada if they are not diseased, but who might be otherwise undesirable. Well, it is the minister and his supporters, and not the opposition, who have the power to change the law to make it effective, and why do they not do so? I believe there is great room for improvement in our quarantine regulations. I have noticed that in Ontario a very common disease is trachoma or granular eyelids, which is regarded as very contagious when chronic, and patients suffering from it have been admitted into the hospitals at Toronto and at Montreal. Does that not verify the statement made by the American Commissioner of Immigration, that whereas they have turned back 1,439 diseased persons to Canada, we have sent back only 300?

Mr. KENDALL. Were these all trachoma?

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know and I do not care so long as the disease is dangerous and contagious.

Mr. KENDALL. Does the hon. gentleman not know that in a shipload of immigrants with a few cases of trachoma on board, the disease might spread and not show for some days after the immigrants were landed here. How could the medical inspector turn such people back?

Mr. SPROULE. There is no doubt the disease might spread on shipboard, but it would only be a few days until it would become evident, and any intelligent medical man could recognize it. If he found one case of trachoma he would know the others who associated with the sufferer and continuing in his inquiry any intelligent medical man could tell very readily what the nature of the disease was. That being so, caution should be exercised to prevent these people going through the country and mixing with other people. All who are brought here are not quarantined. Some are kept for a short time for treatment, and then allowed to go. But there is that undeniable fact, that many must be in the country somewhere, and to that extent the quarantine efforts of the department are a failure.

Mr. KENDALL. Will the hon. gentleman answer me this question? Is it within human power, unless a whole shipload of immigrants are quarantined for a certain length of time, for any medical man to say that a certain number will not develop the disease after they leave the ship?

Mr. SPROULE. That might happen.

Mr. KENDALL. It might not only happen, but it has happened again and again.

Mr. SPROULE. When are these people examined? They are all examined at once when they cross the line; and yet 1,400 have been sent back by the American quarantine officers. Surely our Canadian professional men are as intelligent and can detect the disease as readily as the Americans. There are undoubtedly many other cases in the incipient stages of the disease which are not detected by the American officers, and these would add to the number for the year. The fact that our inspectors did not send these cases back suggests to me that our Canadian regulations are not as strictly enforced as they should be. I want to say a word or two with regard to the other immigration that has been coming in of late; I notice that our country of late years has been overrun with a large number of people whom I regard as undesirable immigrants. I do not know whether they are Russian Jews or Italians or what they are, but you will find them wherever you go throughout the country. Only two weeks ago, when I was at home, I made a trip of about twenty miles, and in that distance I met no less than half a dozen of these men whom I call Russian Jews, pedlars with packs on their backs, some of them lying and resting in fence corners. I do not say that these are the worst class, because they are not as bad as diseased people; but to my mind they are not a very desirable class. They do not enter into the industrial activities of the country. It is true, they carry on a trade, a sort of Jew trade. I sometimes think they may be allied with others and have something to do with the robberies that occur from time to time. They go into houses and ply their trade with an assiduity which is peculiar only to themselves. They are a filthy-looking class of people. In summer they may be seen in every direction; in winter they are found around hotels and railway stations plying their trade. They are not the class of people likely to elevate the society or the civilization of the Canadian people, and they are not likely to assimilate with our people to any advantage.

Mr. SIFTON. What would my hon. friend suggest to prevent them coming in?

Mr. SPROULE. I would suggest a stricter regulation at the frontier, the same as the Americans have; if necessary, I would put a poll-tax on every one of them; and I would deport those who are likely to become a charge on the charity of the people as soon as they land. There is no reason why we should be obliged to accept the riff-raff of every other country in the world, and tax the charity and generosity of our people to maintain not only those who have moderate health, but those who are affected with incurable diseases.

Mr. PUTTEE. Can the minister give me the information I asked for ?

Mr. SIFTON. We can readily give information as to the number of people to whom we paid bonuses and the places where they were paid. The bonuses are paid to the steamship agents in the British Isles and on the continent of Europe. The statement comes from them to the department here, it is sent to the office at Winnipeg to be checked, it is brought back and adjusted between the department and the office of the steamship company. If my hon. friend would like a statement, I can have it laid on the table to-morrow.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the minister if we are paying for the immigrants who come in and settle on the lands of the colonization companies. For instance, we are informed that a number have settled on the lands of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. I was told that many of these come in as immigrants for which the agents in the United States were paid $3 a piece, and then the land company takes advantage of them, and reports them as having been brought in by themselves ; and for that the land is given to the colonization company.

Mr. SIFTON. The only check we have upon the people who come in and are reported by our agents as having been sent through their efforts, is the fact that the agent gives a certificate to the intending immigrant, and upon that certificate the bonus is paid. That is checked by our inspector. Of course, there is no possible system under which at times we are not liable to be defrauded to some extent. The only thing we can do is to watch the inspection as carefully and closely as we can. There may be a few people to whom the bonuses are paid who are not sent by agents, but they are only a very few.

Mr. SPROULE. When are these certificates collected ? Have you not information as to where the person is located ?

Mr. SIFTON. The certificate given by the agent entitles the intending immigrant to reduced fare. It is presented to the railway company, which returns it to us, and upon receipt of the certificate the bonus is paid.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose a man in the United States wants to make a trip across the line and go back again, he can get one of these certificates, I should think, without much difficulty. How do you know that there is not one such in every ten you are paying for ?

Mr. PUTTEE. Seeing that nearly all the steamship agents in Great Britain are also agents of the Immigration Department and that they get a bonus for every prospective settler they can sell a ticket to, it ought to be an easy matter to find out how many declared settlers come from Great Britain to Canada. Of course the agent usually asks each man whether he intends going farming. It means money to the agent if the man should say yes, and he says 'yes,' and the agent has that extra money. I wanted to get that number because I want to see what the immigration amounts to which comes from Great Britain. There is a great deal more in immigration than settlers who go on the lands. I believe that half the immigration from the old country is not settler immigration. The report of last year gives from Great Britain a total of 41,000, and this year I understand it is estimated that the total will not be quite so large. I have here the 'Daily Record' and 'Herald' of Glasgow, Scotland, dated June 22. It will be remembered by those who take an interest in this matter that at the end of May and in the early days of June there were large parties arriving in Quebec, from Glasgow principally, who found that they had been lured into Canada under false pretenses and representations ; and at that time, particularly in the first week of June, our newspapers had on their front pages articles dealing with this matter. When these papers got to Glasgow the 'Record' sent out its representative to discover what it could about the matter in Glasgow ; and on the 22nd of June, the 'Record' published a statement which its reporter got from Mr. Græme Hunter, a gentleman whom we had over in Canada, a year ago last June, for a few days. This is the statement that the 'Record' published

> Mr. Hunter showed documents from the employers of labour in Canada requesting him to forward tradesmen of different kinds to fill situations. We have orders for 26,000 people for Canada. We put 14,740 into Canada last year and of these we have only 123 who were unsatisfied or unsatisfactory. Last year we assisted fares to the extent of £18,420, of which only £800 remained to be paid.

The special statement to which I want to draw particular notice is this : 'We put 14,740 people into Canada last year.' The statements of Mr. Hunter on a good many things are not accepted, but I believe he is reliable in this regard. He is what is called in Great Britain the king strike breaker of the British Isles, and I believe his statement can be relied on when he said he put 14,740 people into Canada last year. And this is only one agency. I have evidence here to show that another large agency, the Leopold agency in London, with offices in the same building as the Canadian government immigration offices, also sent out large numbers, and seeing that the total immigration was 41,000 and that this year it will not be more than that, it is fair to assume that the average immigration for the year from January before last to December last would be 40,000 from Great Britain. Of course the immigration department reports for a year ending with June, and no doubt this gentleman was talking of the calendar year. He sent out 14,000 and I am bound to say that this and other agencies of this class, which are making use of misrepresentations, are sending altogether one-half of the immigration we are getting from Great Britain.

Mr. CLARKE. Are they paid by the Canadian government ?

Mr. PUTTEE. As far as I can see, the only way they could get paid from the government would be by checking these men through as settlers and through government agents. I do not believe however that they were paid by the Canadian government. I am not going to deal with the question of the difference in the cost of immigration which the taking of this fifty per cent off the settler immigration would make. Last year we spent three-quarters of a million dollars on immigration, and if you take the number of immigrants who went on farms and divide that into the amount of dollars, you can say that each immigrant cost so much. And I believe it would be fair and just to cut off fifty per cent of the immigration, which would make the average cost of each immigrant considerably higher. But what I want to deal more particularly with is this immigration which is not brought in for farming purposes, but which serves its purpose, and which the labouring men of the country warned the people against, and the labouring men have seen their prophecies fulfilled. I am not going to deal with this question either in opposition to or in favour of the immigration policy in respect to the settlement of land. I appreciate the fact that there is in Canada a scarcity of farm labour, that this question is a large one and growing, and that it looks as if it were going to be more serious in the future. The difficulty so far is one to which we have not attempted to apply any remedy, and the government have settled on no policy as to how we are going to supply the farmers of Canada with labour by the month or the year. I believe we have not properly started on that problem yet, and it is a serious one. But what I want to point out is that the wage-workers, the city workers, should not be expected to bear the whole brunt of carrying labour on the labour market for nine months in order that the farmer may use it for two or three months. There is this practice in vogue in Canada among the majority of farmers. In Ontario it is used to a considerable extent and in the west to a large extent. Our farmers require labour just in about the same proportion as they require binders. They require it just when their crops are ripe. They want it for a short time and at a reasonable wage for that short time, and then cast it over on the general labour market for the rest of the year. It is not fair, nor is it a solution of the problem, to imagine that by filling the cities with labour for nine months in the year, the farmer can get relief for two or three months. I am not going to advise the farmer, but if he does not run his business in such a way that he may employ labour all the year round, perhaps he is not managing it as it should be. And it is possible that farms might be run here as they are in other countries, where the farmers can offer employment by the year. Some hon. members, especially from the west, may say that there are positions offered on the farms by the year. No doubt there are, but this advice is always given to the men : It will be better for you to work by the year at five dollars, eight dollars or ten dollars per month than spend your time during nine months looking for work, and work during a couple of months at $35 or $40 per month. But the question I am dealing with is the question of immigration, which is not settler immigration, and I do not want to mix it up with the other at all. I do not want to exaggerate any condition of affairs, and am not going to rely altogether on my own judgment. I wish however just to read a paragraph from a Winnipeg paper, written just after a large work had been started there a few months ago. It is headed : 'Unskilled Labour Cheap ; common labourers are being paid 15 cents per hour.'

Mr. CLARKE. What paper ?

Mr. PUTTEE. The Winnipeg 'Free Press.'

An hon. MEMBER. That is not a good authority.

Mr. PUTTEE. I am simply quoting news matter and not editorial matter.

> Common labourers are being paid 15 cents per hour, which is the present rate in the city for unskilled labour. Some surprise was expressed by the reporter for the 'Free Press' at the low scale of wages, but the manager of the employment agency said that there was no difficulty in securing Galicians and Hungarians at this figure. On inquiry from other sources this statement was confirmed, as several large employers of rough labour say that they can get any amount of unskilled labour at the price stated. One employer said that this was the lowest rate he had paid in the last three years for the same class of labour.

That gives an idea of the demoralized state of the labour market, so far as the wage-earner is concerned in Winnipeg and the west this year. Fifteen cents an hour for unskilled labour means a drop of 7½ cents. and I will risk my word that skilled labour, in most instances, took a corresponding drop. Now, this is a serious thing. The labourer cannot possibly live decently on what he earns at fifteen cents an hour. It is a serious matter for every wage-earner in the country. And, perhaps, I may be permitted to point out the contrast. When wages are at this low rate it means that all hope of enjoying the prosperity of the country is gone so far as concerns the man who sells his labour for wages. It was complained all last year, and for some time past in fact, that some people in other countries were—as it is called—dumping goods in Canada. That means, our manufacturers say, that others were actually selling goods to the people of Canada for less than it cost to produce the goods. And this was supposed to be—perhaps was, but I will only say supposed to be, as it is not necessary that I should deal with that question now—a serious state of affairs. That was the manufacturers' complaint. It looked like being an issue in this country. But it was forestalled; it was headed off. We have this session the dumping clause and we are told by the Minister of Finance that it is one of the most radical propositions ever adopted by any parliament, and that this government and this parliament are leading the way. But the case here is worse than dumping, for dumping is sending goods into this country and selling them here at less than it costs to produce them. But we are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars of public money every year, and other parties in this country are spending many thousands of dollars of money that does not belong to the government to bring in Canada, not farm settlers, but skilled workmen and labourers of all kinds to depress and break down the labour market in Canada. Is that fair to the worker? We declare that our principle in Canada is protection. Protection indeed——

Mr. ROSAMOND. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Puttee) is mistaken. Skilled labour is scarce in Canada.

Mr. PUTTEE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Rosamond) says that this is because skilled labour is scarce. Does the price of an article drop when it is scarce, or does it rise? What have I just read to you? Fifteen cents an hour for labour, when labour ought not to be asked to live in the West for less than twenty-five cents an hour, and twenty-two and a half cents an hour is cutting it very fine indeed. Are we to believe these statements about scarcity of labour published as matters of news in our daily journals, and published not only in Canada, but sent over to some of these agents whose contracts I am going to read to you?

I merely point out the contrast and the unfairness of this treatment of labour in a country that believes in protection to the manufacturer. Now, last winter, the Winnipeg Trades and Labour Council issued a circular and sent it to Great Britain. They sent it to over four hundred newspapers in the old country. It was promptly repudiated by the officer of the government, W. T. R. Preston, as other circulars have been repudiated by him, and was adversely commented on by nearly all the newspapers in Canada. The men who drew that up, though they represented 48 labour organizations in the city of Winnipeg, were told that they were men who did not understand what was going on, and that they were so purely selfish that they would rather see the country stand still than be required to get out and hustle like other people. That was only a few months ago. But the thing that the circular pointed out has come to pass, and yet the press of the country has not seen fit to admit the difference between what they promised and the facts as we see them to-day;—with one exception, the Toronto 'Globe' did have the fairness to acknowledge the corn and to say that a very serious injury had been done to labour in this country by the coming to pass of what the Trades and Labour Council of Winnipeg had predicted. Now, it is a fact—and the Minister of the Interior has told how, some time ago, he had a general knowledge, though not a special knowledge, of it—that there are in Great Britain agencies which are sending out people to Canada under guarantees that they have no business to give; and these people to whom these guarantees are given find themselves disappointed when they come here. Hundreds and thousands are miserably disappointed by the treatment they receive. A number of these agencies have represented themselves as agents of the Canadian government. And, to give the House an idea of the literature put out in Great Britain by these agencies, I will just read one sent out by what is now a fairly notorious agency, the Canadian Labour Bureau. This precious document is headed 'Immigration and Unemployment.' 'Canadian Labour Bureau, 13 Charing Cross, London, S.W.' and then, in small letters, 'In the same building as the Canadian Emigration Department of the Dominion of Canada.' Then in large letters, 'Immediate Employment Guaranteed! Good Situations, High Wages.'

My dear Sir,—I would draw your attention to the fact that, owing to the rapid increase of population in Canada, and to the consequent development of the country, as also to the general commercial prosperity, there is an almost unlimited demand for experienced and inexperienced help of every class, both males and females, in all the various towns of Canada.

Good hands are required for the iron and steel trade, the building trade, as well as for mines, factories and other industrial establishments.

Almost every mail from Canada brings applications for help which is urgently needed, and the inclosed list deals with the actual vacancies that this bureau has to offer at the present time, for men who are strong, able and willing to work, and who are anxious to improve their position in a country which holds out such excellent prospects as does the Dominion of Canada.

Generally speaking wages are higher than in England, and the cost of living lower.

Nobody booking through this office need be afraid of being without work on arrival in Canada, as it is my principle never to send any one out unless there is a direct opening for him to go to. An introduction from this bureau guarantees permanent work with a reliable firm to suitable men.

No fee will be charged ; the only condition being that every applicant who secures employment through this bureau has also to arrange his passage here.

Mr. BLAIN. Who advises that ?

Mr. PUTTEE. That is published by 'Yours faithfully, Canadian Labour Bureau, Louis Leopold, Secretary.' This matter was brought strikingly to my attention the last time I was in Winnipeg. The fact is I could not stay in the office and attend to anything I wanted to do by reason of the men who came in in numbers showing me the guarantees issued by this Leopold. And these same guarantees of employment have some bearing on the question, which I will deal with later on, as to who it is that wants these men. Here is one of these guarantees which was given to me by one of the men who brought it out from England. It is headed 'Canadian Labour Bureau' and then comes the coat of arms of Canada :

13 Charing Cross, London, S.W.,
8th April, 1904.

My dear Sir,—This will serve to introduce to you Mr. W. J. Boorn who is proceeding to Winnipeg with a view to taking employment as a carpenter. I shall be grateful if you will advise him in his best interests and if you will give him suitable work, or if you will address him to a firm who are in need of his class of help. I beg to commend him to your kind consideration and to thank you in anticipation for anything you may do on his behalf.

I am, dear, sir,
Yours faithfully,
Canadian Labour Bureau,
LOUIS LEOPOLD,
Secretary.

The President,
The Manitoba Construction Co.,
Madomock Block, Fort St.,
Winnipeg.

That was brought to me soon after it had been presented to the foreman of the construction company, and the foreman told the man who delivered this, that there had been 150 of them there that day, and advised him to go back and sue Louis Leopold for bringing them out under false pretenses. The hon. gentleman asks who he represents. I believe that in this business he represents more particularly the Canadian Manufacturers Association, but financially he represents Louis Leopold himself. He had reason lately to cause the publication of a letter in Winnipeg in which he states :

It may interest the representatives of the Winnipeg Trades and Labour Council to know that the position in this building has added largely to the result of my business, and that the government officials have even tried several times to get me out of it, but have failed, as I have secured the premises on a long lease.

This agency is in the same building as the Canadian government agency, and he boasts here that this brought him a great deal of business, though he says that the Canadian government cannot get him out. But the point I am trying to drive home is that when it comes to the manufacturer asking for anything we can take such radical steps, but when it comes to the workingmen asking for anything, the furthest we can go is to put an advertisement in the English papers saying that we are not responsible for this man's doings. I think that the authorities should find some effective means of stopping this matter where it is now. I brought the same matter up last year ; if it had been effectively dealt with then we would not have been overrun, as we have been overrun, with a lot of deluded mechanic immigrants this year. I have here the prospectus of this Louis Leopold Company, and I have a tremendous list that was sent over of so-called vacancies in Canada—list after list, giving the number, not only in each trade but in each particular branch. There are also a number of letters that have been sent to me by men to whom Louis Leopold gave them, sending them to various members of the Manufacturers Association asking for work. The Manufacturers Association of course is the body that asks for 25,000 workingmen. I have here a bunch of these recommendations, and every one of them is addressed to a concern in this country that had a strike on at the time. Why, under this same rule it would be just as well if the Sydney Steel Works were to telegraph over to Britain now that they wanted 2,000 men in Sydney right away, that business was so pressing that they wanted the men. Of course they have locked out their men, and so have these other concerns to whom recommendations are sent. In view of this list of vacancies, I may mention that in to-days papers there is a further statement from the Canadian Manufacturers Association in which they claim that over 7,000 vacancies are existing now, giving the numbers, province by province, and in some cases the trades are given. That is the kind of statement that leads people who are not working for wages and who are not in touch with those that are, to imagine that there is a scarcity of skilled workmen in Canada to-day. If that statement to-day is honest and fair, I say that the one of last year was not, and I do not believe that this one is either. If it is, if their intentions are right, instead of saying that there are 7,000 situations vacant, let them come up and give the names of the institutions who want these people, and the kind of employment they are able to furnish, the wages, the hours ; and if those hours are fair, and if the wages are fair, and they are published in the papers of Canada, I will guarantee that to-morrow there will be five applications for every job that these men have to give out. Yet that statement is published to-day, and is sent over to Louis Leopold and to Græme Hunter, that they may post it up in the windows of their offices in Glasgow and London to-morrow, so that they may sell more steamship tickets and get their rake-off, get their deposit, and have their pay as well from the Canadian Manufacturers Association. That is the kind of thing we ought to stop, that is the kind of immigration that is coming to Canada at the present time. I have here an article cut from the Toronto 'Globe' of June 1st. It acknowledges this state of affairs, it could not help doing it in Toronto at that time—shipment after shipment of Scotchmen in the metal trades especially were arriving in Toronto. I have some other recommendations here, some of the complaints that they offered to give me under oath if I wanted them. I have one here, and I believe some were sent to me from the Toronto District Council with the intimation that copies had been sent to other members of parliament. Here is a statement with the coat of arms of Canada upon it :

The Canadian Labour Bureau,
13 Charing Cross, London S. W.,
April 18, 1904.

Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your letter of 17th instant, re vacancies in Canada for bricklayers, and beg to say in reply that I can place this class of labour immediately on arrival in Winnipeg at the rate of 55 cents per hour.

That is on the 18th of April. I was in Winnipeg on May 4th, and there were 250 idle bricklayers on the streets then. Yet this gentleman on the 18th of April was telling the people in England to whom he wanted to sell tickets, and whom he was asked to send out to this country, that he had immediate employment for them in the city of Winnipeg at 55 cents an hour.

This is an excellent wage, as the cost of living is lower than in this country, very good board and lodging can be had for 12 shillings per week in this town, the lowest fare is £8. If you decide to go out, I shall be pleased to book your passage and will give you a letter of introduction to the gentleman who applied to me for this help and he will place you at once. If you prefer work in Toronto I can also place you there, wages are lower but the cost of living is less, Fare £6.19.7. I shall hope to hear from you in this matter, when I will give you all further information you may need.

This is addressed to Mr. W. R. Davis. This gentleman was what they call in his trade, 'on the rocks,' and was trying to get money to go back. Here is another one much in the same strain. Now I do not need to go further. I have a lot of stuff in connection with Græme Hunter, of Glasgow, but his professions are pretty well known. I know the reply is that these men are not connected with the Canadian government. I see their connection has been repudiated. But I have read from the report of the deputy minister that every steamship agent practically in Great Britain is an agent of the immigration department.

Mr. CLARKE. What do you mean ?

Mr. PUTTEE. That he is made an agent of the Immigration Department for the sake of recommending Canada and selling tickets to Canada rather than to other countries. I notice, for instance, that the commissioner over there, Mr. Preston, recognizes it; in fact I imagine that there has been trouble there, he evidently recognizes that there might be, though he states the contrary. He says :

Very many of the booking agents on account of this financial advantage accruing to them, were believed able to exert some influence in cultivating public opinion in their own localities in favour of the Dominion. In doing so, even if they found such a course financially advantageous, they have not been guilty of conduct which any business man has the slightest occasion to be ashamed of.

I draw the inference that there have been some pretty shady dealings with ticket agents using the stationery of the Dominion government. It may be said to be necessary for Mr. Preston to appoint ticket agents in Great Britain to be immigration agent so that they could put in a good word for Canada when the undecided immigrant comes along, but see how it connects the department generally with this mechanic immigration which has been coming out. Here is a bill that was given to me by a man who brought it in his pocket believing that its presentation would give him work at 55 cents an hour. It is headed :

CANADA WANTS MORE MEN IN THE BUILDING TRADES.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the date ?

Mr. PUTTEE. It would be published in the spring. Its last quotation is dated January 1, 1904. From what I know of the conditions of the building trades in Canada, I would say that the tremendous difference between the building trades in a Canadian city and the building trades in the cities where the men are to whom these circulars are sent out ought to be pointed out. I know a great many men who have worked in the west, in Winnipeg, for twenty years in the building trade who have their records showing what their incomes have been and I am assured by them that in years gone by their records show that the actual number of working days only averaged from 114 to 135 in the year. The Britisher knows nothing about this. It is hardly one day in three. Even at $5 a day it gives a man an income of about $650 a year, not an extravagant income, but to state the fact that the building trades are so highly paid in Canada and to put it before the mechanic in the old country without any explanation and with the seal and endorsement of the Canadian government misleads. This circular proceeds :

Statement by the Government Emigration Commissioner.

Mr. W. T. R. Preston, the Canadian government Commissioner of Emigration in London, supplies the following facts under date of June 10th, 1903 :—

In reply to the suggestion regarding mechanics and artisans, I may say I have received application for assistants from employers of labour in Canada to the number of nearly 20,000. All the leading Canadian journals contain columns of advertisements asking for mechanics and artisans. These newspapers declare that but for the lack of labour building operations on an unprecedently large scale would be undertaken everywhere. One letter just received from a very large employer of labour in Toronto makes the statement : 'Toronto alone at the present time could absorb 25,000 of such people.' In Winnipeg, ordinary mechanics' labourers receive 1 shilling per hour, carpenters and painters 1s. 8d. per hour, while stonemasons, bricklayers, plasterers and others earn from 2s. to 2s. 2d. per hour for a day of ten hours.

In the Dominion of Canada 'Labour Gazette' for May, published by the government, letters from authentic correspondents appear stating 'No man who is able and willing to work need be without employment of some kind.' 'The chief needs of the present time are more labourers and dwelling houses.' 'A scarcity of men is reported in almost all branches of trade.' 'The farm help supplied this year has been of superior kind ; wages are very good, running from £4 to £6 a month, and board.'

The Dominion government is simply repeating the information that is sent over in this prospectus of the Canadian labour bureau.

The Emigrants' Information Office, London, which is under the direction of the Colonial Office, furnishes the following authentic particulars under date of January 1st, 1904 :—

The spring is the best season in the year for mechanics to emigrate to Canada. The mechanics from whom the demand throughout Canada is most general in spring and summer are men in the building trades, especially carpenters. The building, metal, engineering, shipbuilding and manufacturing trades generally, continued busy throughout last year, and skilled men, such as carpenters, plumbers and blacksmiths had no difficulty in procuring work.

Further on it says :

Men engaged in the building trades are therefore advised to proceed to Canada at the earliest opportunity. Winnipeg or Toronto are the places recommended, and cards of introduction will be provided by the undersigned to the government labour bureau to enable men to get into work at once. Full particulars of each man's requirements are sent to Canada well in advance of his arrival. Special parties will leave England every week during the spring and summer, and judging by the extensive new building and railway construction contracts that commence this season, there will be an unprecedented demand for carpenters, bricklayers, masons, blacksmiths, plumbers and painters, especially at Winnipeg and other towns in western Canada.

Passages booked and fullest instructions furnished by Walter E. Rumsey, Canadian emigration agent, 1 Market Street, Shrewsbury.

This man is simply a steamship agent, a ticket agent, but having been made a sub-agent of the Canadian government he issues a circular of that kind sanctioned by the Canadian immigration agent. It directly places the responsibility on the Immigration Department, and I think the department ought to stop it and stop it once for all. I notice that by the item we are now discussing the amount of the salaries for the Immigration Department is increased by $25,000 this year. I think the Immigration Department is getting far too large. It has been in the fortunate position of having been able to increase its expenditure, after the Boer war when Great Britain could not find employment for her people, and it may look as if the increased immigration is due to the large expenditure of money that we are making. I hardly think that is the fact. I am not going to say that one does not back up the other, that the immigration agents are not working in conjunction with the land companies and helping to produce the results. The land companies have obtained control of blocks of land at moderate rates and they give the incoming settlers the privilege of paying $4 or $5 an acre more for that land than they would have to pay if we had not allowed these companies to get these large blocks of land. These companies are sending in the people. They are sending in a greater number than the immigration agents are sending in. They are sending in fifty per cent of the people. It does not seem to be a proper thing in view of the fact that our immigration expenditure is now three-quarters of a million a year to increase it. I know that neither party wishes to attack with any kind of vigour the immigration policy. The wage workers of the country well know and other people well know that the immigration policy is not much more than a menace to them, that a great deal of this mechanic immigration that designedly comes along is encouraged by people in Canada who wish to keep down the rates of wages and who wish to have what they call a fluid labour market. I believe that the immigration estimates could be materially cut down. We have been increasing them in recent years. But, while we have had large immigration expenditures for many years we have reduced them during some years and there did not seem to be very much difference in the results in those years and I am bound to say that the conditions existing in other countries have as much as anything else to do with the settlement of our lands. I do not for one moment interpose any objection to having agents in other countries publishing and distributing authentic information, or to have agents looking after the interests of the country, but it looks to me to be a dangerous thing to have so many agents in other countries often idle hands as they have proved to be. We have had many instances of it already, as the letter that is now on the ocean addressed to our commissioner in London proves as the report—it is only a report—that Washington will interpose proves, and as the protest from Ireland against our agents there proves. I believe we are making friction where we should not make it; I believe we are spending a great deal of money we need not spend, and I believe it is unfair to the wage earners in Canada to leave unchecked this system of bringing in labour to pauperize the labour market, and at the same time listening always to propositions to increase duty and make goods dear.

Mr. CLARKE. I draw the attention of the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall) to some statements which appear in the last printed report of the United States Commissioner General of Immigration; and perhaps he will not treat these statements as flippantly and as lightly as he did the statements made by my colleague as to the quality of some of our immigrants. At page 46 of the last printed report of the United States Commissioner General of Immigration you will find this statement:

> In the year 1903 the number of officers engaged in preventing these undesirable immigrants from entering the United States from Canada was increased from 66 to 116.

It was found necessary, in order to preserve the United States from the undesirable immigrants from Canada, to increase the number of officers to that extent. The report says, at page 46:

> During the twelve months ended to-day many persons have applied for admission to the United States via Canada whose personal appearance and general conditions should have precluded the possibility of their having been allowed to embark on any vessel designed to carry passengers under conditions of health and comfort.
>
> It is only necessary to relate that in some instances the filthy conditions have been so abominable as to render it impossible for our medical examiners to give them the attention required by our laws and regulations. The Bureau, like myself, will have to leave it to conjecture how fellow passengers huddled together in the close quarters of an Atlantic liner have endured the contaminating presence of such persons.
> Admission to the United States has been invariably denied to such applicants and in some instances it has been deemed unwise to return them to Canada, and deportation to Europe has been effected.

These immigrants were so bad that the United States officers feared to send them back to Canada, because, I presume, they would make attempts to re-enter, and so they shipped them home via New York. The report further says, at page 48:

> Covering a direct line of more than 4,000 miles of frontier including three ocean ports, and inspecting more than 100 trains daily and a large number of ferries, 'sound steamers,' and the growing fleets that ply the Great Lakes, these inspectors, in all kinds of inclement weather, and frequently under most trying circumstances, have boarded every train, met every ferry and every steamer, whether by river, lake or sound, and have prevented the amazing total of 5,158 diseased and otherwise objectionable aliens entering the United States, and have done all this without causing a single complaint on the part of the travelling public.

Then follows a tabulated statement of the number of arrests made along the border of persons trying to smuggle undesirable immigrants into the United States. Year after year we on this side of the House have told the Minister of the Interior that we are prepared to assist him in making a reasonable appropriation to ensure a more efficient medical inspection than that which takes place at the present time. How is it possible that hundreds and hundreds of immigrants who reach Montreal from St John or Halifax are so diseased as not to be admissible to the United States, if a right medical examination was made at the port of landing? How is it possible that such immigrants are allowed to land at Quebec and Montreal? What we demand is a more rigid medical examination. These immigrants should not be permitted to embark on the other side of the Atlantic, but if they contract disease on the voyage they should be sent back at the expense of the steamship companies which bring them out. If the statements of the United States officers are reliable, such immigrants should be rigorously kept out of Canada. It is extraordinary that we should have the opposition and criticism of hon. gentlemen opposite rather than their support, when we draw the attention of the Minister of the Interior to this matter. We are as anxious as he ought to be to secure eligible immigrants, but we enter our emphatic protest against the laxity of the system which permits hundreds and hundreds of immigrants to remain here who are excluded from the United States. We have just as skilled medical men in Canada as they have in the United States, and if they are able to successfully grapple with the difficulty, so should we. I believe that in some cases the United States employ Canadian medical officers, which is a compliment to our professional men, and if that be so, we certainly should have no difficulty ourselves in finding a sufficient number of suitable inspectors to protect our frontier and ocean ports against the incursion of these immigrants. My hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson) drew attention to the conditions prevailing in Montreal last spring, when thousands of destitute Italians were permitted to come into this country, and we have not so far been able to place the responsibility for their admission. Some of these poor immigrants became a charge upon the good people of Montreal. The Minister of Labour did not know whence they came. He sent his deputy, a very able and a very clever man, to make inquiries, but he gave it up as a bad job ; and now we have an investigation going on by one of our county judges. Surely there must be something wrong in the machinery of the Labour and Immigration Departments when this untoward condition of things is allowed to go on. We have to call in one of our judges to ascertain where these people came from, under what conditions they were brought to the country, and what has become of them. It is certainly a very serious problem, and it is our duty to raise our voice in protest on every available occasion, until we are satisfied that the plan of the Minister of the Interior is the most efficient and most rigorous method that can be devised to exclude diseased and undesirable immigrants from Canada. My hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) has referred to the methods adopted on the other side of the Atlantic to induce people to emigrate to Canada. Last fall, through the co-operation of a friend in England, I secured a large number of circulars issued by Mr. Louis Leopold, advertising situations vacant, &c., and I sent them to the secretary of the Dominion Trades and Labour Congress so that he might see what was going on. My correspondent found the office of Mr. Leopold in the same building as the office of the Canadian immigration agent at London ; he found these circulars bearing the Dominion coat-of-arms, with the words 'Canadian Labour Bureau' ; and he found all the surrounding circumstances calculated to mislead the ordinary intending emigrant to believe that if he came to Canada through the instrumentality of this bureau, he was coming under the auspices of the Canadian government itself.

As I have said, I gave these documents to the secretary of the Dominion Trades and Labour Council, that he might see for himself what was going on, and take the necessary steps to try to awaken the people of the old country as to the misrepresentations that were being made to induce people to come to this country under the promise that immediate permanent employment could be procured. The last time I was at home I had a visit from a friend of mine, who left me two or three papers which I will take the liberty of reading, and I will then pass them over to the hon. minister that he may take steps to put a stop to these misrepresentations which are still going on. Three Scotchmen, named Ferris, Brown and Allan, were induced to come to Canada, and were assured of immediate permanent employment at their trade. These men were represented to me to be miners, men who mined the stone of rock surrounding the coal seams. They had splendid letters, I am told, from those by whom they had been employed for many years, and would have made excellent citizens if the representations made to them had been carried out. They were told that if they came to Toronto they could find employment at once. I need not tell the hon. minister that there is no employment for miners in the city of Toronto ; and they looked in vain for work. They were engaged, when my friend called on me a couple of weeks ago, in helping to clear away the debris at the scene of the recent fire. The following letter is to Mr. Ferris :

Canadian Labour Bureau,
Shipping Agency, 11 Nelson Place,
Stirling, 16th April, 1904.

Dear Sir,—I have now pleasure in sending you herewith three boat and rail tickets to Toronto for yourself, Geo. Brown and John Allan, also a supply of luggage labels for each. Inclosed you will also find two very good letters of introduction, so that you are all sure of employment. You should be ready to embark at Plantation Quay, south side, Glasgow, on 23rd April, at 2 p.m. The balance of the passage money to be paid at 25 Bothwell Street, Glasgow.

Send luggage to reach Glasgow the day before sailing.

I shall be pleased to furnish you with any other information you may desire.

Mr. Ferris was also given a letter by this same Mr. Louis Leopold from the Canadian Labour Bureau, 13 Charing Cross, S. W.

Canadian Labour Bureau,
London, S.W., 14th April, 1904.

My dear Sir,—The bearer of this letter is Mr. John Ferris, who is desirous of getting work in Toronto. He is a brickmaker by trade and I should esteem it a favour if you would advise him as to where he is likely to obtain suitable employment. He is willing to take any work for the time being until he can get a berth in his own line. Thanking you in anticipation for anything you may do on his behalf.

I am, dear sir,
Yours faithfully,
Canadian Labour Bureau,
LOUIS LEOPOLD,
Secretary.

This letter is addressed to R. J. Younge, Esq., Canadian Manufacturers Association, Toronto, Canada. Now, Mr. Chairman, there ought to be some means devised to prevent men from being deceived in this way by agents who represent themselves, and who would appear from the heading on the letter paper, to be agents of the Canadian government. I believe the government has recently published in the old country papers an announcement respecting some of these people ; but that to my mind it not sufficient. There ought to be some effort made to secure the co-operation of the imperial authorities to stop this work, which is engaged in, I presume, by those who get a commission from the steamship companies to induce people to come to this country. These men, I believe, two of them at least, are married men who left their families behind them, expecting to bring them out in the fall. They will leave Canada in the autumn and return home, and they will not act as very earnest advocates of immigration to Canada after their own experience. If this kind of work is permitted to go on unchallenged, a great deal of damage will be done to Canada. As the hon. member for Winnipeg has said, many misrepresentations have been made to induce mechanics to come to this country. These men have not been able in many cases to get the employment or the wage they were told they could get, and many of them have become dissatisfied and are writing to their friends in the old country denouncing the misrepresentations under which they were induced to come to this country. This is no doubt a difficult matter to deal with, but I do not think we on this side of the House would be doing our duty if we did not point out to the minister the conditions that exist, and I can assure him that he will have our co-operation in any steps he takes to put a stop to a condition of things that is most disgraceful. The effort made by the Department of Labour to keep people from coming in here cannot be regarded as successful. Apparently the machinery used by the Minister of the Interior is not all that it ought to be. We are ready to assist him in perfecting that machinery, because we believe it needs perfecting, and in applying the precautions that ought to be taken. The number of immigrants may be somewhat smaller in years to come, but a better class of people will come to our shores, and the result on the whole will be much more beneficial than if the existing condition of things is permitted to continue.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE (Halifax). The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat mentioned, if I heard him correctly, that there had been some 5,000 undesirable immigrants who presented themselves on the frontier of the United States and were rejected or deported. My hon. friend also mentioned the port of Halifax and the port of St. John as having contributed to that number. I would ask him if he has any number that he could give of these undesirable people who have been traced to entries through the port of Halifax. I know that the inspection by the United States authorities at Halifax is very rigid, and they have rejected all suspects that came under their scale. I also know that the inspection for admission into Canada is equally precise and rigorous. The two inspections are conducted in the same building and almost under the same conditions. Therefore I would like to ask my hon. friend if he has the information at hand, how many of those who presented themselves on the frontier came through the port of Halifax.

Mr. CLARKE. I presume all of them came through the ports of Halifax, St. John and Quebec. I do not know of any other ocean ports through which immigrants come to Canada by the Atlantic.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE (Halifax). I would ask him if he knows that one of them came through the port of Halifax ?

Mr. CLARKE. I suppose probably a percentage of them came to St. John, to Halifax and to Quebec.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE (Halifax). I want to get exact figures on that point, because it reflects on the inspection at that port.

Mr. CLARKE. Surely the hon. gentleman would not expect me to inquire from the United States authorities how many came through Halifax, how many through St. John and how many through Quebec ? I have given the statement of the commissioner general of immigration of the total number deported, and not permitted to enter the United States, who were going to the United States through Canadian ports. He can determine himself how many came to Halifax, St. John and Quebec. My hon. friend from Lennox points out to me on page 53 of the report a tabulated statement which I will pass over to the hon. gentleman if he likes. This gives the grand total of rejections and deportations as 5,158. The number going to Halifax was 9,573, of which 9,443 were admitted, 130 rejected and 83 deported to Europe from the border. That was by the Dominion Line. The number that came by the Allan Line was 3,399 examined ; 3,368 admitted, 31 deported to Europe, 22 deported to Europe from the border. By the Hamburg-American Line, examined 1,775, admitted 1,746, deported to Europe 29, deported to Europe from the border 89. Then the returns are given from the other ports of St. John and Halifax. I will send the table over to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. KENDALL. I must protest against any effort to misrepresent my attitude on this question of the quarantine against infectious or contagious diseases. I took no such stand as the one attributed to me. The hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) told us that a distinguished surgeon, representing Montreal (Mr. Roddick), again and again brought the attention of the committee to the undesirable quality of immigrants arriving in Montreal, many of whom were suffering from contagious diseases, and were moving freely around the city and enviorns.

Mr. SPROULE. No, the hon. member has got all mixed up.

Mr. KENDALL. I do not think so.

Mr. SPROULE. I am sure, because I know what I intended to say. I said that it was stated in the Montreal papers that these people had found their way into the hospitals and into the private homes of the country, that we had time and again drawn attention to the danger in this House, and that the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Roddick) had spoken of it as well and had referred to the fact that these people were to be found in the hospitals and must have come in through our Canadian ports.

Mr. KENDALL. That is just what I said.

Mr. SPROULE. No, the hon. member said that an eminent physician of Montreal, who has a seat in this House, had time and again drawn attention to it. As a matter of fact, he did not. I said that it was in the papers time and again, that time and again we had drawn the attention of the government to the fact, and that the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Roddick) had spoken of it in the House.

Mr. KENDALL. I went through the 'Hansard' for the last three years and could not find any evidence that Dr. Roddick had referred to this matter.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman will look through 'Hansard' more carefully again, he will find it.

Mr. KENDALL. If there is one hon. member in this House, who is well qualified to deal with the subject, it is the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Roddick), and if there was great danger to this country, that gentleman would have been here and have rung the changes on the matter again and again. He would have pointed out the defects of the quarantine stations in Montreal, Grosse Isle and other places in such a manner that there would have been no doubt as to the danger. And I submit that when he did not take that pronounced stand on this question, we are probably magnifying the danger that does exist. I do not deny that there is danger, but I say that in our criticisms of the arrangements to prevent the importation of disease at these points, we are straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel. There is one way in which the House and the country can reach a fair conclusion. It has been suggested to the medical men in this House that on the next occasion when a large immigration steamer comes from Europe, they should take the train and go to Grosse Isle and watch the inspection; and I can assure the hon. gentleman, from the knowledge I have of the port of Halifax, that the medical men in charge there are men well qualified. One is a very distinguished surgeon and the other is a physician of very large practice and high respectability. I am sure that the inspection there is very thorough, and I do not doubt that in Quebec and Montreal the inspection will be found equally thorough. Instead of harping about imaginary evils, it would be far better for the medical men on both sides to go and observe really what is going on at these stations, and we would then be in a better position to discuss the question to advantage.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman rose to set right the impression in this House that he was antagonistic to the quarantining and the prevention of contagious diseases, but now he attacks the opposition for harping on an imaginary danger. Is it an imaginary danger when the American inspector draws attention to the fact that owing to the diseased condition of these immigrants, over 1,300 had to be sent back at the Canadian border?

Mr. KENDALL. They have done just what hon. gentlemen opposite are doing—straining at gnats and swallowing camels.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the hon. gentleman engaged in professional life at all, or in freezing bait for the purpose of catching fish?

Mr. KENDALL. I am not running a small drug store at a country cross-road.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not catch what the hon. gentleman said. But if he were a medical man and practiced at all, he would appreciate what it means to import contagious diseases. One or two cases of small-pox will cost hundreds and thousands of dollars, not taking into account the very severe trouble that people are subjected to by its introduction into their neighbourhood.

Mr. KENDALL. With the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Sproule's) permission, I would like to ask him a question. Will the hon. gentleman or any of his friends produce evidence of contagion from a case of trachoma?

Mr. SPROULE. I ask the question again. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kendall) a medical man at all? The question naturally suggests itself when he talks in that fashion. No medical man would waste his time in answering such a question as the hon. gentleman has asked. If he wishes to quote authority—certainly I do not, because every medical man knows it—let him go into the library and bring out any book and read it. These matters are on record in our own debates, for the authorities were quoted a few years ago in this House, to satisfy just such incredulous people as the hon. gentleman. There is not an author who does not say that it is contagious.

Mr. KENDALL. We all know it is contagious; I did not say it was not.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, what more is required ? Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kendall) say that is a proper thing that a person affected with a contagious or infectious disease should be brought in and planted in a community in our country on the plea that there is no danger ?

Mr. KENDALL. I did not say so.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman says that we are dealing with imaginary difficulties. He says : 'I have heard no more ridiculous criticisms than those of the opposition regarding the health of immigrants.' These are the hon. gentlemen's words. Now, what has brought about the quarantine regulations that are being enforced to-day but the criticism—ridiculous criticism, the hon. gentleman would call it—from this side of the House during successive years ? It was frankly admitted that there was comparatively speaking no restriction upon these immigrants coming a few years ago. But, year after year, we drew the attention of the House to the matter and criticised the inaction of the government. The result was that the government introduced the system which they are carrying out to-day and which they declare to be almost perfect. Yet, an hon. gentleman on that side speaks of our criticism as ridiculous. Is it ridiculous on the part of the representatives of the people to seek to prevent the importation of contagious and infectious disease ? The hon. gentleman says we have enough of that at home. So we have—and far too much. But do we lessen what we have at home by allowing the importation of disease promiscuously from abroad. Would our government be doing its duty in allowing that ? Woud they be carrying out the quarantine regulation that the country expects them to carry out ? The hon. gentleman suggests that if we want to see what this really means, let the medical men of this House go down to the port when an immigrant ship comes in. No doubt if that were done, extra effort would be made to show that most admirable quarantine regulations were being carried out. They would be on dress parade.

Mr. KENDALL. If the hon. gentleman saw one or two shiploads of immigrants he would be able to judge how much of this is serious and how much trivial. I say that the bulk of these cases are trivial cases, and it would be a gross injustice to these immigrants and to Canada to refuse them admission. Of course, a number of these cases are dangerous and should be quarantined.

Mr. SPROULE. No man who knows anything of medical science can speak of contagious disease as being trivial. A case of small-pox may be imported from across the line, and before we are done with it, it may cost us thousands of dollars and the same is true of scarlet fever and of trachoma. It is hard to know when it is stamped out. It may spread to only one or two or it may spread to a hundred. You take a case of trachoma and keep the patient for weeks and months, and even years, and you may have the disease on your hands still. You may get it apparently cured, and still the patient will relapse, becoming unfit for any employment and a danger to the whole community. And yet the hon. gentleman speaks of it as being insignificant and trifling.

Mr. KENDALL. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Trachoma is an infectious disease and these reports show it is the most common of infectious diseases among immigrants. Yet the hon. gentleman, who professes to be a medical man demands to be told of an instance in which this disease has spread. Looking at it as medical men do we not know what the results of a contagious or infectious disease is when planted in a community ? That disease may spread, and it cannot be regarded as an insignificant thing, nor can we afford to relax our efforts to prevent its importation. And are we of the opposition doing less than our duty when we call attention to it and urge upon the government to improve and carry out carefully their quarantine regulations ? Why, it is the opposition who should have credit for this system which the government have adopted and which they declare to be perfect. Instead of being abused by hon. gentlemen opposite, and especially by the medical men among them, the opposition should be given credit for their efforts to protect and promote the health of the community.

Mr. CLARKE. I venture to say that if my hon. friend the junior member for Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall) will inquire in the library he will find that within the last twelve months some protests have been made —I cannot say that I remember the particulars—from medical associations regarding the importation of diseased immigrants. I will endeavour to find them for him. I am satisfied that protests have been made on that subject by some of the medical organizations of this country. Let me point out that, if the opposition are wrong in their criticism, they certainly do not desire to be wrong, or to take up the time of the committee in pressing upon the government precautions against dangers which may fairly be regarded as of trifling importance. It is because they regard them as more than a bagatelle, which, I think were the hon. gentleman's words.

Mr. KENDALL. If the hon. gentleman will allow me—I was comparing the two dangers. I said that one was a bagatelle compared with the other. I did not say that it was a bagatelle in itself.

Mr. CLARKE. We are glad to hear the hon. gentleman's explanation. But 'Hansard' to-morrow will tell of the flippant way in which my hon. friend (Mr. Kendall) dealt with the statement presented by my hon. friend and colleague from West Toronto (Mr. Osler). Of course, we accept the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kendall). But let me draw his attention as a medical man to a statement I have here. The immigration into the United States last year reached the enormous total of 857,046—almost a million people. Of that number 35,920 came through Canada—less than five per cent of the total. Now, at page 59 of Mr. Sargent's own report, this extraordinary statement is made :

As specially indicative of the value of the system of inspection conducted through the agency of the Montreal office, attention is directed to the number of rejections on account of communicable diseases, 1,439 as compared with the grand total of rejections on the same account at all the seaports of the United States, 1,773.

Through the one port of Montreal, as a result of the rigid medical inspection made by the United States officers, there were within 350 as many undesirable and diseased immigrants detected and sent back as were found in all the United States ports. Surely, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kendall) will not think that any criticism directed to prohibit the importation of these people into the country was trifling—was a bagatelle ?

Surely we are in the line of our duty in endeavouring to impress on the minister that every reasonable precaution should be taken to stop the inflow of these people into this country in their endeavour to get into the United States ? As the hon. gentleman knows, and as these reports have shown from time to time, the steamship agents who induce immigrants to come from the continent have got on to the fact that the inspection is extremely rigid in the United States, and they have been diverting the flow of immigrants through our ports into the United States. The Minister of the Interior has taken some steps to bar them from coming in, and now we are presenting him with the report of the Inspector General of Immigration for the United States, showing the conditions which he declares still exists, and the rejections he is obliged to make to keep out of the United States undesirable immigrants. I think we ought to have the help of my hon. friend the junior member for Cape Breton in impressing upon the Minister of the Interior that he is not doing his duty to the people of this country in allowing these diseased immigrants to come in here on their way to the United States, and when they are stopped at the border, being left in this country as a charge upon the taxpayers. If they are still permitted to come into Canada, the steamship companies should be responsible for their maintenance while in the country, and they should be sent back at the expense of these steamship companies to the country whence they came. If the minister will promise that these matters will have his careful attention we will let the item pass.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE (Halifax). I beg to call the attention of the member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) to the statement in the book he has sent over to me, on page 53 of the report of the Commisisoner General of Immigration for the United States. In this report it is stated that 4,542 persons presented themselves at the frontier for admission into the United States. Out of that number 1,002 were rejected because they had no certificates, 1,575 because they were paupers or persons likely to become public charges—that is more than half. In addition, a few were rejected for other reasons, leaving out of the whole 1,430 who had dangerous contagious diseases. So the magnitude of the number left here is not so vast as the hon. gentleman says. Now I may allude to the port of Halifax. The statement is here given of the number of immigrants that were deported from the ships side at Halifax, and that fills up the whole. The total is given, those admitted and those deported, and there is not a single individual who came through ports of Halifax or St. John who is put down as having gone through to the United States by the frontier.

Mr. CLARKE. I gave the hon. gentleman the report to read ; he evidently has not completed his task. If he will turn up the number who came by the Hamburg-American Line he will find that there were deported from the border, 59.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE (Halifax). Not one is given as from the port of Halifax.

Mr. CLARKE. If the hon. gentleman will look at it again he will find that I am correct and that he is mistaken. I will send the book back to the hon. gentleman. However, Mr. Chairman, there is no use in continuing to argue with a gentleman who speaks in a trifling way of 1,439 cases of dangerous and contagious diseases having been kept out of the United States, out of the total border rejections for all causes of 4,542. Will any hon. gentleman seriously contend that that condition of things is satisfactory, when 1,400 or 1,500 people, afflicted with contagious diseases, whose destination was the United States, are barred on Canadian soil and left here stranded by American officials ?

Mr. SCOTT. What became of them ?

Mr. CLARKE. God only knows. I have been trying to find out for the last three or four years.

Mr. SCOTT. Did you ever meet any of them ?

Mr. CLARKE. Yes, I am sorry to say I have met them. I say that it is with the desire of assisting the government to put a stop to this condition of things, which is disgraceful, that we have raised these questions from year to year. I am sure the Minister of the Interior will bear testimony to the fact that in offering these criticisms for years past we have pledged ourselves to give him any reasonable assistance we can to inaugurate a thorough medical inspection that will keep this class of immigrants out. I will send the book back to my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Roche) so that he can read it again.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE (Halifax). I did not say one word as to whether it was desirable that these people should be allowed admission to the United States, or even as to whether they should be allowed to come into Canada. The hon. gentleman coupled the ports of Halifax and St. John, and I took the trouble to look up the numbers that came through those two ports, because his statement reflects on our inspection there. I know the inspection is very rigid. In that column of figures, my hon. friend will see that the total number of admissions is given and the number that were deported. If these two items were added up the total would show there was no remainder to represent any who could have presented themselves at the border. They are not put down in that column as having presented themselves at the border. I did not speak of the desirability of allowing these people to come in, or of what means should be taken to prevent them.

Mr. OLIVER. Before the item passes I would like to say a word in regard to a matter concerning which I heard some adverse criticism earlier in the day, that is, as to the measures taken by the Immigration Department during the early spring of this year and the year before to induce a proper class of immigrants to come from Britain. The department sent over last spring and the spring before a number of practical farmers to different parts of the old country for the purpose of inducing a proper class of agricultural immigrants to come to Canada. I was sorry to hear that system criticised adversely this afternoon. I wish to put on record my view that it is the most effective method which the department has yet adopted for the purpose of inducing a desirable class of British immigrants to come to this country. I think we all agree that the system previously followed of resident agents in the old country was very largely a failure ; and we must admit that the practice of paying a bonus to steamship companies was largely a failure. Both these systems were failures for obvious reasons. I believe that by bringing in contact with the agricultural population of the British islands successful farmers of this country, there is a reasonable probability of securing the class of immigrants we most desire. I do not know whether the department intends to continue this system, but I would not like this item to pass, after having heard the somewhat adverse criticisms that were made, without giving my strong endorsation to that system which has been adopted recently, and which I am satisfied has already been productive of very good results. But still we can reasonably expect that it will be productive of very much better results as time goes on if the system is continued, and as the agricultural population of the old country become more intimately acquainted with the actual farmers who have made a success of farming life in our western country. I do not know but that it would be a good idea to include in these excursions farmers from eastern Canada as well as those from western Canada ; but, speaking of the west, I would certainly, as a western man, wish to endorse most strongly that system of inducing immigration, and I do not consider that the expense so far incurred is at all out of proportion to the benefits likely to accrue ; in fact, I think that a very large part of the money which has been hitherto spent for immigration purposes in the old country, both in the employment of permanent agents there and in paying bonuses to steamship companies, was money absolutely thrown away, or worse than thrown away, and that whether this amount that is now spent be large or small it is for a good purpose, and there is every reason to believe that it will produce a good result.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask the hon. minister if it is the intention of his department to send farm delegates over this coming year ?

Mr. SIFTON. I understand my hon. friend refers to the sending of delegates in the fall. I have not come to any conclusion in regard to that. We certainly will not send over any large number.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. minister state how these delegates were selected last year ? Did the department make the selection themselves or were they selected on the recommendation of members from the west ?

Mr. SIFTON. I selected from my own constituency some men whom I knew personally, but in the selection of men from other counties I took the advice of my hon. friends who were acquainted with these men, and who recommended them.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. In reference to immigration literature, I believe there was a harvest number of the Winnipeg 'Free Press' issued specially for immigration purposes. Will the hon. gentleman say how many copies were distributed, and what it cost the department for distribution and printing ?

Mr. SIFTON. I am not sure that I am certain as to the publication to which the hon. gentleman is referring.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. There was a special harvest number of the 'Free Press' gotten out last fall. I think there were 170,000 or 200,000 copies.

Mr. SIFTON. In 1903 ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. October 7, 1903. I desire to bring this matter to the attention of the hon. minister, because I think it was an injudicious and very unwise distribution of this kind of literature, and one more calculated to injure the country than to bring immigrants to our shores. I think there were somewhere in the neighbourhood of 200,000 copies printed and distributed. My information is that after they had gotten out a certain number of copies and they had been put into general circulation there was found to be an error of judgment on the part of some one, they were withdrawn from circulation and other copies were sent out in lieu thereof. I brought this matter up in the Agricultural Committee, and I asked the commissioner if this was the case. He said there were some statistics which were incorrect, and that that was the only reason why the original distribution was called in and suppressed. I have a copy of each edition, and I find that there was only a very slight difference between the two copies. In the first copy that was gotten out I notice that there are several placards. Here is one representing Uncle Sam standing on one side of the fence looking over into Canadian territory. This placard reads as follows :

> We wish to own our own farms in Canada. Upwards of 50,000 Americans gone to Canada within the past year.

This is one of four placards in the first distribution, or I really believe this is the last edition. It is headed as a sample copy. The one bearing date of October 7th I believe is the second edition, and if so, I think it is more injurious than the first, because I find that two of the placards appearing in the first were changed to read as follows :

> None but the trusts deserve the dough. Here the protective tariff makes the farmer sweat.

This was for distribution on the other side of the line, and was designed to induce American citizens to come over and settle in Canada. I think that would be more apt to antagonize an American citizen than to encourage him to come and settle in Canada. I know that if literature of that kind were circulated in Canada to induce citizens of this country to settle in the United States it would be regarded more as an insult than as an invitation to go there. Not only do I find it injudicious in that respect, but I have taken some sample clippings from this distribution which are calculated to injure our own country. We had a bad storm last September, I think about the 10th or 12th, a storm of almost unexampled severity in the history of our country. Though there was a severe snowstorm, there was no reason for publishing that all over the world, and no reason particularly for publishing it in the United States, where we expect the bulk of our immigration to come from. Still, these are some of the quotations taken from this literature :

> 'As a result of the big storm.'—'The usual drawbacks occur, danger from frost and drought.'—'Small yield from poor farming, from gophers and bad effects of weeds.'—'In the latter place (Southern Alberta)——

I am sure my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) will resent these specimen statements—— > —come suddenly and as no shelter is provided, often ninety per cent of a drove is lost in a single storm.'

Mr. CLARKE. Where is that statement made ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. That is in this document prepared for distribution, and this is the character it gives to the constituency represented by my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver).

> 'The recent storm had lowered the grade of the wheat.'—'This locality suffered from the drought.'—'Late wheat has suffered some damage from frost, and some that was cut early is slightly sprouted.'—'Bad weather.'—'Raging storm of the 12th instant (September).'—'Notwithstanding the severity of the storm.'—'The past storm.'—'The wheat buyers pronounce that your wheat is frozen.'—'Wheat is really frozen, the snow lying so long on the stooks injured the kernel, and the frost following really injured the wheat.'—'The wet weather has deteriorated the value about 4 cents per bushel.'—'Off colour by reason of the damp weather.'—'the big storm.'—'The wheat was not fit to market.'—'There was no snow here, so the wet has not soaked into the stacks as much as it otherwise would.'—'The snow is nearly gone.'—'The grain is in a very bad condition and will all have to be cut one way. Some say some of it will not cut at all.'—'The recent storm.'—'The big storm.'—'Severe wind storm, with its accompanying fall of snow did considerable damage.'—'By the force of the wind and the weight of the snow oats were prostrated to the ground. Farmers think they will raise sufficiently to be cut at least from one direction.'—'Heavy rain.'—'Damage by the recent storm.'—'The big storm.'—'Continued bad weather.'—'Storm was the worst ever seen by the oldest settlers.'—'Since the snow storm.'—'The snow has injured the crops.'—'The storm.'—'It will never be cut though, as it is lying down never to rise again.'—'Rain, snow and frost.'—'All grain uncut is frozen.'—'Damage done by last Saturday's storm.'—'The storm of the third week of May was a very disastrous one—hundreds of the young cattle perished. Then followed the month of —June—no rain at all. The rain—has retarded operations—cattle are backward on account of the wet weather in August.'

Storm and bad weather are mentioned forty-four times in the issue, and the references include all seasons of the year, all sections of the country, and all kinds of grain in one general defamation. Does anybody suppose that that kind of literature is calculated to attract settlers to our shores ?

Mr. TALBOT. What is my hon. friend reading from ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I am reading extracts taken from this issue sent out by the department as immigration literature. These are reports of correspondents sent to the 'Free Press' all over the country. We do not wish to deny that we had a bad storm, but why should we pay $7,000 to the Winnipeg 'Free Press' to advertise that to the world. True, it was simply so much pap for the political organ of the Minister of the Interior, but I think every candid man will admit that those of us who reside in that part of the country have a grievance ; that the people of Canada should be called upon to spend so much money to advertise a thing in a special edition gotten out for the express purpose of sending it broadcast through the American union. We spent $800,000 on immigration last year, and the question arises : Are we getting sufficient value for that both in quantity and in quality—and quantity is not the most essential thing by a great deal ? I was surprised to hear the member for Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall) minimize the danger we are subjected to through the importation of persons suffering from contagious diseases. He seemed to think that this was rather a trivial matter. I do not deny that we have many of these contagious and infectious diseases within our own borders, but when we have so much of the home grown article is it not doubly astonishing that we should add to it by importation ? The hon. gentleman from Cape Breton seemed rather to resent our criticism, but I think the Minister of the Interior will himself admit that the criticism of his policy from this side of the House in years past has in some measure urged on him the necessity of improvement, and I give him credit for that.

Mr. KENDALL. I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. W. J. Roche) wishes to misrepresent me. My position is, and I have stated it several times ; that we cannot be to particular to keep out certain diseases, but I said that certain contagious diseases were trivial, that a large proportion of these cases referred to are trivial, and that we would do an injustice to this country and an injustice to the immigrants if we rejected them on that account.

Mr. SPROULE. These blunders take a lot of explanation.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the minister decline to give an explanation of the circulation of this literature ?

Mr. SIFTON. This literature was bought by an officer of the department because it was considered desirable literature. I was in England when the arrangement was made, and hon. gentlemen know that a minister in charge of the Immigration Department cannot read every publication that is bought and circulated on behalf of the department. I am not prepared to say at this moment that if I had read through that publication and had found the statements to which my hon. friend (Mr. W. J. Roche) has referred to be a true account of unavoidable circumstances in the Northwest, I would take that as a reason why it should not be distributed. From the time I have taken the immigration work under my charge, we have considered that the truth was good enough to be told with regard to the Northwest, and in telling the truth we have succeeded in this at least : that the people to whom we addressed our literature, believe the representations made in it. If I found in a document which my officers thought was desirable literature to be circulated, that the truth was told as to a storm or anything of that kind, I am not at all sure I would have rejected it simply because that which happens in every agricultural country was shown to have happened in Northwestern Canada. I can express no opinion about it ; it was not my own personal act, but I venture the statement that the people who read that paper were not prejudiced against Canada, by reason of that statement, because any one who knows anything about agriculture in all countries, knows that conditions of this kind arise at times. I have been asked for an explanation and that is the only explanation I can give.

My hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) referred at some length to a number of things which have been explained before and in respect to which the position of the government has remained absolutely clear, and it seems like foolish repetition to keep repeating the same explanation over and over again. However, inasmuch as my hon. friend (Mr. Puttee) has the appearance and earnestness in urging some of these points, perhaps I might say a word in regard to them. So far as his statement is concerned, that the labour market in Winnipeg is in such a state that ordinary unskilled labour is bringing only fifteen cents per hour, I say at once that I positively refuse to accept that statement as being a correct description of the labour market in Winnipeg. I do not think it is correct, and I will require more evidence than the hon. gentleman's remarks before I accept it as correct. I was in Winnipeg before my hon. friend (Mr. Puttee) represented that city, and I have seen the workingmen of that city packing their grips and travelling out because there were no people coming in ; because the country which is tributary to Winnipeg and of which Winnipeg is the entrepot, was not being settled up. I can tell my hon. friend that the reason why this $6,000,000 worth of buildings is going up in the city of Winnipeg now is because of the successful immigration policy carried on under this government. If my hon. friend's constituents are prosperous and if the city he represents is prosperous, it is the immigration policy which my hon. friend has done his best to prevent and discourage which is largely responsible for that prosperity. With regard to the point to which attention has been drawn at great length, respecting the misrepresentations which have been made in the old country, I can only say that that is one of the things which is going to take place under any system of encouraging the immigration of agriculturists. No one ever saw an army without camp followers, and no one ever saw a great movement of population without a certain residium following it, and certain things happening as a consequence of the movement having been inaugurated. It is quite true that certain persons have taken advantage of the immigration movement from Great Britain to Canada, of the advertising we have done, and of the dissemination of information which has taken place under this department, for the purpose of making money in a cheap and easy way by making false representations to mechanics and other people in order to induce them to come to Canada. But the government of Canada is not responsible for that, and I repudiate any responsibility for any false representations made by any one in the United Kingdom. Until this parliament assumes the responsibility of placing on the statute-book a law to enable us to deal with cases of that kind—and I doubt the possibility of parliament placing any such law on the statute-book—I am not disposed to hold myself responsible for anything done in that way. As to the labour bureau setting itself up and making false representations as to the condition of the people in Canada, that is the responsibility of the people making them. We have no law whereby we can prevent any person who sees fit to place a heading on his letter paper which leads an uneducated person to suppose that he is an agent of the Canadian government. We have no law by which we can prevent or punish him. That which we can do we have done. We have sent to a large number of the British newspapers a distinct statement warning the public that the people who are making these representations are not authorized agents of the Canadian government. We have endeavoured to get rid of that office in Charing Cross, but so far without success.

Mr. CLARKE. What steps have been taken to get rid of it?

Mr. SIFTON. We have taken the step of calling the attention of the joint landlord of these people and ourselves to the fact that this man was making false representations and was giving us trouble, and that it was very much desired by ourselves that his tenancy should be terminated. But we are informed that his lease has not expired, and he has as much right in that building as we have.

Mr. CLARKE. Has his lease the same term as that of the Canadian government?

Mr. SIFTON. I do not think so. When my deputy minister went to England some months ago, one of the things which I discussed with him was that he should make an effort to get those people out of that office; and my recollection of the conversation I had with him when he came back was that representations had been made to the landlord, and that the landlord had promised to do the best he could to meet our wishes. My deputy minister says that Mr. Leopold expressed his intention to resist every attempt to put him out. My hon. friend knows enough about the law of landlord and tenancy in England, to know that he cannot put a man out at a very short notice. I do not recollect the length of the lease, but the possibility is that it will be some time at least before we can get rid of him.

Mr. CLARKE. What length has our lease to run? It might be easier for us to go out and leave him there.

Mr. SIFTON. It might; but if my hon. friend saw the building, I hardly think he would advise that. With a great deal of care we have selected an office which everybody who has visited England is pleased to see as the office of the Canadian government. It is in a most desirable locality, and we have gone to a great deal of expense to have it fitted up in an attractive way. We have taken workmen from Canada to fit it up with Canadian wood; it is heated with a Canadian furnace; everything in it is representative of Canada, and the location is regarded as a desirable and satisfactory one from the standpoint of Canada. I doubt very much if the fact that this man has an office upstairs and is carrying on the propaganda he does, is a sufficient reason for us to move. I have little doubt that in a short time he will find it unpleasant and unsatisfactory to continue, and the difficulty will be terminated.

Mr. CLARKE. Is the minister aware that the officers of his department send men upstairs to this man to book their passages?

Mr. SIFTON. I do not think that is the case. If my hon. friend has any information to that effect, I would be very much indebted to him if he would send it to me, and I will promise, if he so desires, to regard the source from which it comes as confidential. The instructions which I have given have been most explicit, and there can be no possible excuse for any officer of the department, either directly or indirectly, in any shape, form or manner, being connected with or encouraging the traffic these people are carrying on.

Mr. CLARKE. Is this immigration office which we are complaining of on the floor above the ground floor ?

Mr. SIFTON. It is a little office on the floor above a portion of our office, which is on the ground floor. There is a stairway going up to it, and the entrance to the stairway is alongside the entrance to our office.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there a lift ?

Mr. SIFTON. Yes. There is an elevator and also a stair. The office to which reference is made consists of one little room.

Mr. CLARKE. They book passengers there, and that is about all they do ?

Mr. SIFTON. Apparently. This man Leopold is a steamship agent, I believe ; but, as I have said, everything we can do for the purpose of making it clear that the Canadian government is not responsible for this work has been done.

I want to say a word or two with regard to the subject of medical inspection. From the time Dr. Bryce took charge, I think I can say the inspection became effective. The changes which he brought about became effective about the 1st of April, and since that time I think the medical inspection has been as effective as it can be made. I cannot imagine any way in which it could be made more effective. If my hon friends will take the trouble to go and see the method by which this inspection is carried on, they will be satisfied that the fault does not rest with our officials at the present time. In the first place, we have an inspection for quarantine purposes conducted by the Department of Agriculture. We do not depend on that at all, because the quarantinable diseases do not include all the diseases of an infectious or loathsome character. At the port of Quebec, for instance, the immigrants are landed on the dock, and are sent to a passage way in a building and are ranged off in such a way that they cannot get away. They are brought through a narrow passage which leads through a turnstile into the room where the doctor is waiting to inspect them. There the examination is made and the immigrant has to pass inspection to the satisfaction of the doctor. There is only one possible way in which the inspection can fail to be effective, and that is if the doctor is incompetent ; and as the agent and officers of the department are present and take charge of the immigrants as they are put through the inspection, it is next to impossible that the doctor could be incompetent without some one being aware of the fact. During a short visit I paid to the station at Quebec, no less than 2,400 people passed through the hands of the inspector during that day. In the twenty-four hours there were no less than three steamers arrived loaded with immigrants. It is possible of course that two or three or a half a dozen of this large number might have got through who were affected, not with any serious disease, but with some skin disease of an apparently trifling character ; but taken on the whole, we have a system which I think is effective. I fully recognize the paramount importance of making whatever system we may adopt as effective as possible. I want to add further this remark, that I think my hon. friend, after a little reflection, will admit that no matter what kind of inspection we may have in Canada at the seaboard and all along the border—of course we have none at present along the border, and that would be a very large question of policy to consider—you would still have large numbers of people rejected by the American inspectors as unfit to enter the United States. Take the case at Sault Ste. Marie. For years people have been coming across from northern Michigan in small groups to work in the woods where pulpwood is taken out. Many of these people are Canadians who had gone to Michigan and who were returning from that state. When the lumber mills were closed in Michigan for lack of logs, a considerable number of people who had been engaged in that business crossed our border ; and when the time came when many of them wanted to go back, the Americans had established a most rigid system of inspection at the Sault. Under that system many of the people were prevented going back. Our agent there told me personally, in answer to an inquiry regarding the number of people who had been stopped there, that the excuses under which people were rejected by the American inspectors were in many cases absolutely ridiculous. One man was rejected on the ground of deformity, simply because he had one-half an inch taken off one of his fingers, and that man had come in from the United States in that condition. These inspectors placed along the line will find excuses for rejecting a considerable number of people, and however thorough our system of inspection may be, there will be more or less of that sort of thing all the time.

Mr. CLARKE. What we object to is that in a city like Montreal there shall be stationed medical inspectors representing a foreign government who shall winnow the immigrants who landed at Atlantic seaports and passed our inspectors.

Mr. SIFTON. If my hon. friend can tell me any better way of putting an end to this than having a rigid system of inspection of immigrants as they land, I shall be happy to consider it.

Mr. CLARKE. The American officers should examine them at the port where they land and give them a certificate through to the United States.

Mr. SIFTON. That is done where it can be.

Mr. CLARKE. The immigrants are brought to Halifax and St. John, and from there by rail to Montreal, and at Montreal the great bulk of them are rejected.

Mr. SIFTON. When they are ticketed to the United States, they are examined at the seaport by the American doctors and there dealt with, but the cases to which the hon. gentleman refers are those of people who have landed at a Canadian seaport from a foreign country and are not ticketed to the United States. These have passed our inspection, and we cannot watch every man who passes the inspection and send some one with him to see what he does. All we can do is to make our inspection as strict as possible.

Mr. CLARKE. Those people who are rejected by the United States officials ought to be sent, at the expense of the United States or of the steamships which brought them over, back to where they came from.

Mr. SIFTON. That is a fair question for consideration. It is a system of checking the rejections by the officers of the United States, and it is one we have not yet adopted. It will involve great expense.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman knows that our Canadian steamship companies have to pay $2 a head to the United States officials for the cost of examining these immigrants.

Mr. SIFTON. In many cases when persons are refused admission to the United States at points such as Detroit and Sault Ste. Marie, if these people came lately from foreign ports and the American inspector can ascertain that fact, they are taken straight to New York and shipped from there back to where they came from, and the cost is charged to the steamship company which landed them in the first instance. But in order to check the rejections by the United States inspectors, we would have to watch the operations of each American inspector, and that would require a considerable amount of organization and expense. That is a point I have had under consideration with the Minister of Labour, and in respect of which we will have to ask for some legislation as well as an appropriation of public money in order that it may be effectively dealt with.

Mr. DAVIS. I want to allude for a moment to this paper that the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) was kind enough to send over.

Mr. TAYLOR. The $7,000 paper ?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes. I find that the hon. member for Marquette has gone through this paper and selected a line here and there and read it to the House to try and make the House believe that it is decrying the country. Now, you can take the Bible and you will find where it says there is no God.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, 'The fool saith in his heart, there is no God.' But if you leave out the words 'the fool saith in his heart,' you will find that it says 'there is no God.' This hon. gentleman has garbled this article right through. This, to my mind, is a very fair article. I do not think that any person in this country wants to lead people to believe that we do not have frost occasionally, that there is no rain, that we do not have a little wind. There would be no use in it because people coming in from the United States are travelling all over that country, and they are communicating with their friends. Now, this writer is speaking of a portion of Saskatchewan and he says :

> The crops of this eastern part of Saskatchewan have been good and better, never good and poor—the old settlers say they have never known a failure ; last year and this year have shown very fine crops, both in quantity and quality.

And he underlines this :

> The usual drawbacks occur, danger from frost, drought, small yield from poor farming, from gophers, bad effects of weeds.

But he leaves out the following :

> But in no part of the Northwest, and therefore in no part of Canada is a yearly crop of wheat, oat, barley or flax more assured than in the Saskatoon district.

The hon. gentleman has picked out a little piece in the middle where the writer says there are the usual drawbacks, such as are to be found in any country. But, taking the whole article I think it is a very fair one. I would not object to it going out. It is written about a part of my constituency, and I have no objection to it whatever. I believe in telling the truth about these matters.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIS. I am not alluding to the gentlemen of medical knowledge who raised the question in the House a couple of years in succession about the danger to the country from deceived immigrants. I suppose the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) alluded to the hon. member for St. Antoine, Montreal (Mr. Roddick) who is an eminent medical man. I took the trouble to go over that hon. gentleman's speeches, and I found that he had not referred to the matter at all.

Mr. SPROULE. I never made that statement. I have already denied that I made it and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) has no right to repeat it. I said that this matter had been repeatedly brought to the attention of the government and, amongst the sources from which information came, I mentioned the fact that the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine (Mr. Roddick) had spoken of it.

Mr. DAVIS. Last year.

Mr. SPROULE. No, I was speaking of the last two or three years. I am not sure that it was last year, but I am sure that I am right in my recollections of what was said.

Mr. DAVIS. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) will hunt up 'Hansard' I think he will find that the hon. member for Montreal West never mentioned the matter.

Mr. SPROULE. I will take the trouble to look and satisfy myself, although I am confident that I was right.

Mr. DAVIS. Now, with reference to the latter part of this quotation referred to by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) it refers to the district of Alberta, and the hon. member (Mr. W. J. Roche) said to my hon. friend from that district (Mr. Oliver) that this was a very nice way to speak of his part of the country. The hon. gentleman knows well, I suppose, that the old proverb is true of the people of the west every one thinks their own crow the whitest. This gentleman, writing from Saskatoon, says that he thinks it is a better part of the country for cattle-raising than Alberta. He says it is said by those familiar with both places that Saskatoon is a better and more certain ground for ranching than Southern Alberta.

The people of Saskatoon think that way rightly or wrongly. And this writer goes on to say:

> In the latter place blizzards come suddenly, and as no shelter is provided, often ninety per cent of a drove is lost in a single storm.

He is simply giving his opinion as to which of these sections is the most suitable for cattle-raising. Everybody knows that you may run cattle on a ranch for six, seven or ten years and save a very large percentage of them, but occasionally we have a very severe winter and perhaps seventy-five per cent of your cattle are lost. This writer is merely giving his opinion and trying to show that that part of Saskatoon is safer for raising cattle than Alberta.

Mr. CLARKE. Read what he says further on.

Mr. DAVIS. I suppose the part the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) refers to is that which I have read with regard to Alberta. Now, he gives his reasons:

> In the latter place blizzards come suddenly, and as no shelter is provided, often ninety per cent of a drove is lost in a single storm.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) think the government should send out literature which it takes so much time to explain?

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) can take the paper and read it and he will see that there is nothing wrong about it.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman is taking twenty minutes to explain it.

Mr. DAVIS. I can remember when hon. gentlemen opposite sent out literature when they were running the immigrartion affairs of this country, and that literature had very little effect in bringing in immigrants. The complaint raised about it is that it did not tell the truth.

Why, as I am reminded by an hon. friend near me they even sent out campaign literature last session which they had to withdraw. For my part, I do not see anything wrong with this article. It tells the truth and that is what we want. There is no use making things out different from what they are. Why, fault is found because this writer speaks of frost. You have frost in Ontario or in Quebec——

Mr. POPE. Never.

Mr. DAVIS. There will be a political frost in the province of Quebec about the time of the next general election. I hope it will not strike my hon. friend from Compton (Mr. Pope), but it may even extend that far. Now, the hon. gentleman (Mr. W. J. Roche) speaks of the cuts in this paper. Well, here is one of these cuts. A wall is represented and behind it the United States is pictured in the well-known figure of Uncle Sam. There is a placard showing that farm lands there are at from $70 to $150 an acre, and that there is no more government land. Another placard says: 'None but the trusts deserve the dough.' What is wrong about that? Every one knows that in the United States they have followed a system of excessive protection such as hon. gentlemen opposite would like to foist on us and so have built up trusts that are driving the people out of the country.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman a question. He tells us that he believes in stating the truth in these matters. That cut shows that there is no more government land in the United States. Yet it was stated by the Minister of the Interior that one reason why the immigration was not greater was that in the United States they had a lot of unoccupied government land that they were offering to the settlers. Does that paper tell the truth there?

Mr. DAVIS. My hon. friend must remember that they are constantly opening up Indian reservations and so on and there might not have been any government land when this paper was published. The part my hon. friend from Marquette objects to is this: 'The protective tariff makes the farmers sweat.' He says that that is poor advertisement for the United States for it is running down their country. Well, I have a ltle knowledge of the people who are coming over from the United States, and I think that ninety per cent of the men are coming to get away from the high protective tariff and the trusts that are fostered by that tariff. Then, on the other side of this cut, Canada is represented with the placard 'Millions of acres free.'

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. How much did these American immigrants get for their land before they came to Canada? According to that newspaper cut, land there is worth from $75 to $100 an acre. That is the effect of high protection.

Mr. DAVIS. Surely the hon. gentleman does not say that it is high protection that has made the land worth $75 an acre. High protection has not made land worth $75 an acre. If high protection made land dear, it is strange that in 1896 farm lands in Ontario had gone down so far that you could'nt sell them for enough to pay the mortgage. Since the duty has been reduced farm lands have gone up 50 per cent.

Mr. POPE. That is a false statement, and you know it.

Mr. DAVIS. It is true in Ontario, and in the province of Quebec, too.

Mr. POPE. It is a common lie.

Mr. DAVIS. I will venture to say that in the constituency which the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) represents there were a great many houses with slats on the windows in 1896.

Mr. POPE. That is the old story repeated by the Minister of Agriculture fifteen years ago. You ought to get somebody else to post you.

Mr. DAVIS. A lot of people were living in houses that were nailed up with slabs, because they were so poor that they could not buy window glass. Is there anything wrong in saying that we have millions of acres of land to give away free to settlers in the Northwest? It says that settlers' effects are brought in duty free. Anything wrong about that?

Mr. CLANCY. Is that new?

Mr. DAVIS. Is there any reason for concealing it, because it is not new? Did you do it in 1896?

Mr. CLANCY. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. When you brought over Jew pedlars that we had to arrest in the Northwest Territories and put into jail? I heard some gentleman complain about the miserable class of immigrants we are getting at present. When the hon. gentleman's friends were running the immigration machine they spent a great deal of money and got very little results. The immigrants were like gophers, dodging into one hole and dodging out of another; they came in on one train and out on another. They said they brought in 16,000 immigrants in one year; but if they did, I venture to say there were 25,000 went out—the census shows that. The census shows that in a certain number of years they were supposed to bring into this country something like 1,000,000 people, and they got the money to do it with, but when the census was taken all these people had evaporated, and the natural increase had gone as well.

Mr. CLANCY. Because the hon. gentleman and his friends were telling the world that this country was not fit to live in.

Mr. DAVIS. The member for Marquette is doing the same thing at present; he is putting on 'Hansard' a matter to show that the country is no good. To show how far afield the hon. member for Marquette had to go, how hard pressed he was for something to say against the government, he selected out of a whole page one line and garbled it to bring an accusation against the government. He read this paragraph:

> There was very little number 1 hard in 1902, and while the prospects for this grade were good a few weeks ago, as a result of the big storm——

He underlines these words, 'As a result of the big storm.'

> —there will be not much more this year, or in other words, the grades will compare equally for the two years.

If there had not been a big storm I do not know what the hon. gentleman would have done for some ground on which to criticise the immigration department. Everybody knew there was a storm last year, and that it reduced the grade of wheat. It was no use for the hon. gentleman to try to hide that when we had thousands of people travelling all over the country examining it and writing to their friends in the United States. One of the reasons for which the minister has been so successful is in the character of the immigration literature. In all the immigration literature that has been circulated by this government in the last five or six years there has been a fair statement of the conditions which we have in this country. People do not come in under false pretenses, they know the length of the winter, they know we have good seasons and occasionally we have bad seasons, and when they come they find that we have given them nothing but facts. The fact that we had 125,000 immigrants last year shows that our immigration literature has borne good fruit. These people who came in last year do not come empty-handed; whereas, in 1896, the hon. gentlemen opposite brought in people that had not much money. These people who came in last year brought in six or seven million dollars in cash or goods. They also brought in with them a lot of money of which we have no account at all. I suppose when the immigration officials ask a man how much money he has got, he says I have $100, $200 or $300. That is the record that the Minister of the Interior gets. But when a gentleman comes into that country with $300 in his pocket, he looks over the country, he makes up his mind that it is a good country to settle in, and he immediately writes back to his agents and tells them to sell out his holdings. Those are sold for $6,000 or $7,000, and that money is all sent across the border and deposited in a Canadian bank, but the Minister of the Interior has no record of that at all. So it is impossible for us to arrive at an estimate of the amount of money these people have brought in. The manager of the Union Bank at Saskatoon told me that when he opened business there the head office instructed him to be very careful about making loans, told him to keep his loans inside his deposits. He started out with the idea that he was not going to do much business but he was not there one month until he could not loan out half the money he was getting in on deposit from these people that were coming into the country. I say that to-day we have a record of some $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 these people have brought in, but they have brought in millions more besides. A lot of wealthy people came in from the United States. Hon. gentlemen talk about the vast public debt, some $35 per capita. Now, every one of these 125,000 is helping to reduce that debt, they are all taking a share of it on their shoulders. In bringing in 125,000 people you bring in six millions of money, and you get all that by an expenditure of $650,000 on immigration. I think it is pretty good business, and if the minister keeps on the people of this country will be pretty well satisfied.

Mr. BLAIN. I am sure the Minister of the Interior will be grateful to the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) for coming to his rescue in defence of the campaign literature that he is circulating under the guise of immigration literature. I do not know whether the literature my hon. friend has read is correct or not, but I think it is fair to say that it is not in the best interests of the people of Canada. We complain that the Minister of the Interior selects the leading political journal of his province and pays out of the public treasury $7,500 to circulate it under the guise of immigration literature for the purpose of inducing people to come to Canada. I have no time at this late hour to enter into a discussion of the matter contained here. The hon. member for Saskatchewan has gone over this paper very minutely this evening, and I do not intend to follow his example, but I will just produce one illustration. I have here some reports of the farm delegates that were sent to the old country by the hon. Minister of the Interior last year for the purpose of telling the people there of the grandeur of the Northwest of Canada. One of these gentlemen has made a reference to this kind of campaign literature, and perhaps he would be a good authority. Mr. W. H. Bryce, who was one of the farm delegates selected by this government, says :

> The information that is given in the literature that is distributed is not what the people want. They do not believe what is printed.

That is what this gentleman says about this kind of literature. I repeat the statement that I think the hon. minister should consider the expenditure of money a little more carefully. I say that it will always be open for discussion and that some portion of the Canadian people will have some right to condemn the hon. gentleman if he is going to subsidize one of the leading political organs in his own province for the purpose of inducing old country people to come to Canada.

I want to say one or two words in respect to the old country delegates, and if it is the policy of this government to continue sending successful farmers from the Northwest to the old country I would like to direct the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that there was practically no preparation for these gentlemen when they arrived in Great Britain. The evidence of that fact comes from these gentlemen themselves. I will turn to the evidence afforded by some of these gentlemen to show why I make this statement. Mr. E. J. Thomson, delegate to Scotland says :

> One suggestion I omitted at its proper place was this : The delegates should be met at the port of landing and instructed as to his district and to proceed to it direct, and at once and thus save the expense of going to London or elsewhere.

Here is a delegate who was sent to the old country. There was no preparation made for this gentleman and he asks that some preparation should be made so that the delegate could go to work immediately without travelling hither and thither in the old country. Another gentleman, Mr. H. C. Whellams, in his report to the government, says :

> On the third of March I went to Gloucester, and I was at first somewhat disappointed to find no advertising done. I at once arranged with the papers for a thorough and complete system of posting and advertising through the columns of the local papers, also by means of hand bills posted throughout the country.

Here is a gentleman sent to the old country to tell the people about the Northwest and when he arrives at his destination he finds that no advertising has been done. Nobody knows that he is in the old country at all. He makes this complaint in his report to the government. Mr. Hugh McGillivray another of these delegates says :

> I started at Aylesbury, the county town, and visited all the principal towns, taking a town each day on market days. I advertised in the local papers ahead and on my arrival would put up posters furnished by the department that I would be at a certain hotel all that day and evening.

When he went to the market town he would take the posters in his pocket and after he had arrived at the town he would announce that he would be in that town all day. These are some of the points that I would bring to the attention of the hon. minister if it is the policy of the government to continue sending these gentlemen to the old country. I am sure it cannot be said that we are not spending enough money on Mr. Preston and his colleagues in the old country. Surely these gentlemen would have an opportunity of making some preparation for the delegates that we sent over there and who cost the people of Canada $25,000. These gentlemen direct the attention of the government to the fact that no preparation was made for them and how does the hon. gentleman expect that he is going to do a great service to the people if some preparation is not made for these delegates and if the people in the old country who are desirous of coming to Canada and occupying our lands are not notified that these gentlemen will visit their localities and tell them about the advantages of the Canadian Northwest Territories ? How did the hon. gentlemen expect that they would find these delegates when they only remained in these towns from one to two days ?

I would like to ask the hon. minister what the policy of the government is in respect to the scarcity of farm hands in Ontario and eastern Canada or if the government has any policy upon that question. Is the hon. gentleman going to give that question any consideration or not and does he propose putting any amount in the estimates so that the people of Ontario and eastern Canada may be better supplied with farm hands ? I did hear the hon. gentleman make the statement that there was no complaint of that kind made during last year. The hon. gentleman has been misinformed because several complaints have been made and the complaint I think is as great as ever it was in the central part of Ontario and in Quebec. Yet the hon. gentleman seems to give it no attention. In view of the fact that this condition has existed for so many years and that there has been coming to the government year after year a universal complaint that farm hands in Ontario and the eastern part of Canada were scarce, it is time that the hon. gentleman gave some attention to this question so that the farmers of eastern Canada might derive some advantage from the very large expenditure of money that is being made for immigration.

Mr. SIFTON. We have been giving the subject attention for the last two years. We sent some thousands of labourers to the province of Ontario who were distributed amongst the farmers in that province. I am informed that a very considerable number have gone this year. I am quite satisfied that a larger number could have been absorbed and profitably placed in the province of Ontario if a more effective system of distribution were adopted. There is a system of distribution through the officers of the government of Ontario centralized at Toronto. In my judgment a thoroughly effective system of distribution for Quebec and Ontario would be to provide agents at the port of debarkation so that the labourers would be taken charge of when they landed at Quebec and distributed from there to the point where they were to be employed. I am giving that my attention and I hope with the cooperation of the governments of Ontario and Quebec to adopt a system that will be effective.

I am bound to say that a great deal of caution is necessary in dealing with a subject of that kind. It would be very undesirable for the department to dump a large number of labourers either in Ontario or Quebec and find that the system of distributing them was not effective so that a considerable number of them were left without employment. We could not take a risk like that, we have to consider a variety of things such as the housing of the labourers while they are getting employment, and in Quebec and Ontario these present a good deal of difficulty. We have our establishment at Winnipeg and the people there have got into the habit of sending to the provincial and Dominion agents so that the result is that the work of the two governments together results in a very effective system of distribution. Both last year and this year we have sent a very large number of labourers and have supplied a very pressing demand, and we hope to be able to make it more effective as time goes on.

Mr. POPE. In our section of the province of Quebec we have received kind consideration from Mr. Marquette, the provincial immigration agent at Montreal, but we have not been able to get the number of labourers we require. In eastern Canada we can utilize not only immigrants who are suitable as farm labourers, but our industrial development there is capable of employing many who would not be suitable in the west. If it were arranged that the public who desire servants would know where to apply for them, they would very soon all be placed. We have this advantage, that one or two years training on a farm in eastern Canada, would be very useful for these people if they should afterwards go west. Our farmers' sons are rapidly going to the west, and the farmers find themselves short of labour. There is thus an opportunity of developing the usefulness of these immigrants as suitable settlers in the west.

Mr. FOWLER. The extracts read from this issue of the 'Free Press' contain a serious libel upon the district of Alberta as a ranching country. The very fact that it seemed to afford the member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) great satisfaction to be able to read these libels on Alberta, is all the more reason why the hon. gentleman from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) should come to the defence of his district. The hon. member for Saskatchewan seemed to read these libels on Alberta with great glee, and to wish to add his testimony to their truth. Those who attended the meeting of the Agriculture Committee were pleased at the manner in which the member for Alberta stood up for his district when it appeared to be attacked by Mr. Macoun, and I think on one or two occasions the hon. gentleman became so excited that he wanted to engage in fistic encounters with those who did not agree with him in his views, but to-night he is as mum as a mouse, and never opens his mouth in defence of his district. I hope that even though it is midnight, the hon. gentleman will tell us whether it is true as read from the 'Free Press' by the hon. member for Saskatchewan, that ninety per cent of the cattle in Alberta died in the storms that raged in that district.

Mr. OLIVER. I am sure the House will excuse me of responsibility for a lack of mentality on the part of the member for King's (Mr. Fowler). The fact that he does not understand something has nothing to do with the case. If any statements were made depreciative of the district of Alberta, it would have been an occasion for me to protest, but the hon. member for Saskatchewan did not read, or make any such statement. He read a letter addressed to the Free Press from a resident of the district of Saskatchewan, in which it was said that the correspondent had heard that certain things occurred in Alberta. I will not take upon myself the responsibility of contradicting everything that every body in Canada has heard in regard to the district of Alberta. If any of these gentlemen opposite will get up and make a statement derogatory of Alberta, I will be prepared to talk to him.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Did not the member for Saskatchewan back up that statement?

Mr. OLIVER. These gentlemen opposite are very absurd. The correspondent from Saskatchewan was claiming superiority for his country as a ranching district, because they did not ranch there at all but stabled their cattle which in Alberta were kept out during winter, and he said he had heard that the cattle in Alberta had suffered great loss.

Mr. POPE. Ninety per cent.

Mr. OLIVER. He had heard that.

Mr. POPE. Do you say that?

Mr. OLIVER. No, I do not say that. I am not responsible for what this writer heard.

Mr. POPE. Will you contradict it?

Mr. OLIVER. No, I won't. I would not be so foolish as to contradict every idiotic rumour a man may hear. The district of Alberta is not in need of defence against absurd rumours. The 'Free Press' did not say that cattle in Alberta had suffered a loss of ninety per cent, and when the hon. member for King's said it did, he was not telling the truth. It was exactly in line of the attitude of the member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) who deliberately undertook to mislead this House and to mislead this country in regard to these reports having appeared in the 'Free Press' and for which he was brought to task by the member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis). If it would be a crime against this country, had these statements appeared in the 'Free Press,' supposing they had been as the hon. member for Marquette said, how much greater crime it was against this country, against the district of Saskatchewan and the district of Alberta, that these statements should be embodied in 'Hansard,' and become a part of the permanent records of this country, as they have been as the result of the hon. member's efforts. If the facts were as the hon. member for King's said they were, when they were not, then he committed a greater offence against the welfare of this country than the man who wrote them or the man who published the paper, because he made them a part of the official record of this country on his responsibility as a member of parliament.

Mr. FOWLER. I would very much prefer being accused of lack of mentality than to be proved out of my own mouth of an absolute lack of honesty and lack of candour, and that is the position which the just now ferocious member for Alberta occupies before this House. The hon. gentleman listened to-night to an attack by one of his colleagues on the district he represents, and he sat there dumb as an oyster apparently not daring to open his mouth; and when I challenge the hon. gentleman to stand up in his place and defend the district from which he comes, he tries to draw a herring across the trail and accuses the hon. member for Marquette of defaming the Northwest when the hon. gentleman for Marquette very properly drew the attention of this House to the fact that this government was spending over $7,000 of public money to disseminate in the United States absolute libels and falsehoods respecting the country.

Mr. SCOTT. The hon. member for Marquette did not say they were libels. He said they were probably true, but they should not be circulated.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman for Marquette did characterize them as libels. He drew the attention of the House to the publication of that sheet for the purpose of showing the wrong that was being done to this country. Because a storm had occurred in the Northwest only once in twenty years, the people to whom the paper was sent, which did not mention that fact, would suppose that it was the usual occurrence, just as the writer of that article reflecting on the district of Alberta as a ranching country did not say it occurred only once in twenty years, but would have the impression go forth that it was the usual occurrence in Alberta, and that the district around Saskatoon was preferable for raising cattle. Speaking of Southern Alberta, the paper said :

> It is said by those familiar with both places that Saskatchewan is a better and more certain ground for ranching than southern Alberta. In the latter place blizzards come suddenly, and as no shelter is provided, often ninety per cent of a drove is lost in a single snow storm.

The hon. gentleman who represents the district of Alberta sat silent when the statement was made about his country ; and yet he pretends to be an honest representative of the people of that district. In the Agriculture Committee, because he forms an unfavourable opinion of Mr. Macoun, he wants to fight everybody in sight. The hon. gentleman had better confine himself to his own district, and not wander so far afield.

Mr. DAVIS. You had better do that yourself.

Mr. FOWLER. The district from which I come does not need any defence. But I have some interests in that very country about which I am speaking.

Mr. DAVIS. Not very much.

Mr. FOWLER. I think they are pretty extensive ; from my standpoint they are at least ; and I am interested in not having that country defamed. That is my excuse for speaking on this occasion, if any excuse is needed. The wrong in this attack is that this paper goes out with a stamp of government approval. I was a little surprised tonight at hearing the hon. Minister of the Interior, in speaking of this matter, try to shift the responsibility on his officers ; but he did not say that he would see that the officer who was responsible for allowing that paper to go forth in that shape would be castigated or even reprimanded, as Mr. Preston was for having written that letter. Notwithstanding that, he said it was perfectly right that these statements should go forth. You want to induce farmers from the United States to settle in the Northwest Territories, and you do it by saying that in Southern Alberta, one of the most important districts of the Northwest, ninety per cent of the cattle are destroyed by reason of the blizzards that often rage throughout that district. It seems to me the hon. member for Alberta has to-night given a most pitable exhibition in sitting silent and not until the lash was applied to him would he rise and say a word on behalf of the district which had been so abused and maligned by the documents which had been distributed by the government of which he is a supporter, a thick-and-thin supporter—an hon. gentleman who professed at one time to be an independent member, and who has developed into one of the most ardent thick-and-thin supporters of the government that can be found within their ranks. He wanted to inflict violence on those who disagreed with him in the Agricultural Committee in regard to what was said by Mr. Macoun with respect to the little-known and sparsely settled Peace River district, and yet to-night he sits mild as a cooing dove and listens to this abuse of his own district of Alberta.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. member made some reflection on my candour. He said he would rather be accused of lack of mentality than lack of candour. I think he has given evidence to-night that he is as lacking in candour as in mentality, and that he is absolutely lacking in both. I am sorry that my conduct in this House has not the approval of the hon. gentleman ; but as I did not come here under his approval, I will try to suffer under his disapproval. I am here at the approval of the district of Alberta, the district which he says has been maligned by the reading of a quotation from the Winnipeg 'Free Press' by the hon. member for Saskatchewan. If there could be anything more absurd than that statement, it would be the whole attitude and action of the hon. member himself and the part he has taken in this debate to-night. The hon. gentleman is surprised that I sat silent. Well, certainly this House would be surprised if he sat silent and also more greatly surprised if he talked sense when he did not sit silent.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not think the hon. gentleman has succeeded in saying anything very clever, although of course he drew forth a cackle from the back benches over there. So far as mentality and candour are concerned, I would be prepared to be judged by a competent jury, but I would hardly consider these gentlemen on the back benches as competent to give a verdict. In neither respect would I care to be reduced to the low level of the hon. gentleman, and I am confident that a comparison of the speeches made by both of us, as shown in the 'Hansard,' would prove that the hon. gentleman has occupied at least ten times longer the time of this House during this, or any other session when we both occupied seats in this House, than I have. I would go still further and would guarantee that in the one-tenth of the time I have talked, as compared with the time the hon. gentleman has taken up, I have talked a thousand times more sense than he did in ten times longer time. No one has yet been able to discover in any speech the hon.

gentleman has made one single, solitary, minute portion of sense. He is looked upon by the great majority of this House, not excluding a great many of the members on the other side, as a sort of mountebank.

Mr. OLIVER. I only wish to refer, not to what the hon. gentleman has just said, but to the allusion he made to my action in the Agricultural Committee. He said I was anxious to use physical force in that committee. I want to say here and now that in that committee, in defence of the district I represent and the people I represent against attacks made by an officer of this government and other members of that committee who sit before me, I was compelled to risk the application of physical force to myself by those hon. gentlemen and take chances upon it or else to submit to just such bullying and just such abusive language as the hon. gentleman has undertaken to deal out to me to-night. I want him and his colleagues to understand that neither in this House nor in the Agricultural Committee shall I submit to hear the country or the people I represent slandered or insulted by any members of this House, whether they are capable mentally or not.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to bring a witness to bear out the statement of my hon. friend and see whether or not all the blame attaches to members of the opposition. I find that in its issue of April 23rd last, the Montreal 'Witness,' thus speaks of the hon. member for Alberta :

> Mr. Macoun, who is one of the best known of the staff of the Geological Survey——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This discussion is out of orler.

Mr. INGRAM. When you reach the danger point, you raise the alarm.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would ask the committee to keep to the question before the House and not introduce a personal controversy. Neither is it in order to discuss what took place in the committee, the report of which is not before the House.

Mr. SPROULE. Before this discussion came up, I asked that the report of the committee be presented to the House in order that we might deal with it, and we were told that we could deal with it at any length without its being laid on the table.

Mr. INGRAM. When I was interrupted, I was about to quote from the Montreal 'Witness' and I propose to continue my quotation :

> Mr. Macoun, who is one of the best known of the staff of the Geological survey. . . . . This would come home with especial force to Mr. Frank Oliver, M.P., for Alberta, and we can quite appreciate his bitter disappointment with Mr. Macoun's report, especially as he has been responsible for much vaunting of that country abroad. Such disappointments, however, and however much he may disagree with the report, does not justify him in charging Mr. Macoun with deliberate misrepresentation of the facts. . . . But if Mr. Macoun's report is doing any great injury, it must be principally because of the great publicity it has received owing to the disgraceful scenes this week in the House of Commons Committee of Agriculture, for which Mr. Oliver is principally to blame. . . . . There seems in this case to have been at least none of the aridity referred to above as one of the drawbacks of the climate. Who can tell that better luck may not come to these settlers as it did to those of Manitoba ? It is at least better to hope so than to threaten to horsewhip Mr. Macoun and call him a liar as Mr. Oliver thinks it the proper thing to do.

Mr. SCOTT. Do you say that is a true report ?

Mr. INGRAM. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. Did the hon. member for Alberta ever threaten to horsewhip ?

Mr. INGRAM. Certainly he did.

Mr. OLIVER. I rise to say I did not.

Mr. INGRAM. I say he did.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is out of order to quote from any newspaper any reference to a committee, and I decline to allow any one to bring in any matter that happened in the committee until the committee has reported.

Mr. INGRAM. I believe, Sir, you are quite right. I fully agree that we have no right to discuss the report, but what I am proving is that the opposition are not open to the charge made by the hon. member for Alberta and I am substantiating the statement made by my hon. friend from King's and am quite in order in doing that. I have in my hand an article which perhaps the hon. member for Alberta may have read. The Toronto 'News' had the hardihood to express an opinion about that hon. gentleman, and I find in the Edmonton 'Bulletin' language of this kind. I do not say that the hon. member penned the article, but after I read it, perhaps hon. members will come to a conclusion as to who is responsible. Speaking of the 'News' the 'Bulletin' says :

> Its reputation based on its short and not over brilliant career under its present management is that of a cross between an attempted bandit and a would-be thug. That is one who—speaking in a literary sense—would rob for profit and murder from principle—always providing the opportunity were favourable.

I do not say that the 'Bulletin' is the hon. gentleman's paper. If it is not, he is in a position to deny that it is.

Mr. OLIVER. Does the hon. gentleman deny the description given there of the Toronto 'News'?

Mr. INGRAM. All I have to say is this, that the editor of that paper is in my judgment as competent to edit a paper as the hon. gentleman is. I can tell him more, that the leader of the great party he is supporting will corroborate my statement.

Mr. OLIVER. I notice that the hon. gentleman's answer is entirely non-committal.

Mr. INGRAM. I thought I was answering fully and fairly. I think that the management of the Toronto 'News' is quite capable of answering any editorials that appear in this paper. In respect to the immigration literature—or campaign literature, for it seems to me to be about the same thing nowadays—I find that the Department of Immigration has paid the Winnipeg 'Free Press' $7,000 for a paper issued by that concern. Now, if the Department of the Interior were doing its duty, it would not allow any literature intended to be used for immigration purposes to be sent out without scanning every line to see whether the circulation of it is in the interest of this country. So, I say that when the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) allows the government to circulate at the public expense a newspaper which states as a mere rumour something derogatory to his constituency, he is not doing his duty to those who sent him here, nor is he displaying the energy which he displays when Mr. Macoun, a government officer made a report about his part of the country. Is that lack of energy due to the fact that there are a couple more senatorships being given to the Northwest, or is it because there is an edition of 5,000 immigration pamphlets being published by the Edmonton 'Bulletin?' This pamphlet, the newspapers tell us, comprises 80 pages profusely illustrated with scenes from the district and business places of Edmonton and with portraits of many of the leading men of the town. I wonder if the hon. gentleman himself would be included. These pamphlets, I understand, are to be distributed in the United States and Great Britain. So we have $7,000 for this edition of the Winnipeg 'Free Press' and we have an edition of 5,000 copies coming from the Edmonton 'Bulletin' Office. Is there anything for the Regina 'Leader?' Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) say that there is any of this patronage for the 'Leader?' Now, is this system in the interest of the people? Is it in accordance with sound policy to dole out payments for immigration literature as patronage to favoured people in the Northwest Territories? The government has its printing bureau here. If they would furnish that printing bureau with better facilities why could not all that work be done there?

Mr. FOWLER. Then, what would become of the papers?

Mr. INGRAM. I do not know, but I do know what would become of some of the independent men of this House. Instead of their submitting to the discipline mentioned by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) we should find them with the old frankness and outspokenness of the hon. member for Alberta, not moved by considerations of immigration pamphlets or senatorships.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know whether hon. gentlemen opposite think they can do in this House as they thought to do in the Agricultural Committee, prevent me from expressing myself and defending my position by bullying and interruptions. They were not successful there, nor will they be here. Nor will they succeed by piling up misstatements in regard to myself or throwing out vile insinuations, a thing of which we find them to be very capable. Though they may judge other people by their own standards we have to consider where these things come from. In regard to the statements made deliberately by the hon. member for East Elgin that in the Agricultural Committee I threatened Mr. James M. Macoun with horse-whipping I wish to say that that statement is absolutely untrue.

Mr. INGRAM. I say it is true.

Mr. OLIVER. I said that Mr. James M. Macoun deserved horse-whipping, and I say so still. But I did not say that either I or anybody else was going to horse-whip him.

An hon. MEMBER. You knew better than to try it.

Mr. OLIVER. That is a sample of the argument placed before the Agricultural Committee, during sitting after sitting, in support of Mr. James M. Macoun in discrediting a large and important section of the Northwest Territories. I am glad these hon. gentlemen have brought the discussion into this House, so that the country may be well informed of the position.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would draw the attention of the hon. member (Mr. Oliver) to the fact that I have ruled that the discussion that took place in the committee cannot be referred to here. We have to deal with the items before us. What took place in the committee is past and gone and we have nothing to do with it.

Mr. OLIVER. I will observe your ruling, Mr. Chairman. Now, I may refer to the insinuations of the hon. gentleman as to the pamphlets printed in the 'Bulletin' Office. I am connected with the Edmonton 'Bulletin.' This is a matter not worthy the consideration of this committee, but seeing that an hon. member has brought it forward, I suppose it is only fair that the facts should be known. The connection of the Edmonton 'Bulletin' with the pamphlet is this: Mr. Sutter, who is the Immigration agent at Edmonton has seen fit to get up an immigration pamphlet as a speculation of his own. That pamphlet, I understand, is being paid for by the merchants of Edmonton who are taking advertising space in it. The 'Bulletin' was successful in getting the contract for the printing of the pamphlet from Mr. Sutter. The 'Bulletin' does not know the government in the transaction in any way, shape or manner, and I am not aware that Mr. Sutter knows the government in the transaction in any way, shape or manner.

Mr. POPE. Is he a government employee ?

Mr. OLIVER. He is, but I am not aware that he is getting government assistance in getting out this pamphlet.

Mr. FOWLER. Are you aware that he is not ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, it is none of my business. But I know that he has solicited a considerable amount of support from Edmonton business men to get out the pamphlet, which is designed, I believe, for free distribution. It is a custom in the progressive towns in the Northwest to get out pamphlets in just such a way as this and place them where they will do the most good, distributing them amongst the government immigration agencies as far as possible. That is what, I understand, has taken place in regard to that pamphlet. So far as its being a matter of government patronage, I am not aware that the government have anything to do with it. I am only aware of it to this extent, that I understand the 'Bulletin' had to compete for the work of printing the pamphlet.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like some statement from the minister on that point. It seems there is being a pamphlet got out for distribution for immigration purposes by a government employee at Edmonton, Mr. Sutter, and that it is being printed by the Edmonton 'Bulletin.' I would like to know if the government are purchasing that pamphlet or paying any consideration for it ?

Mr. SIFTON. I do not know anything about it. I never heard of it before.

Mr. DAVIS. The opposition seem to be in a jubilant mood to-night ; there efforts have been great in the last two days. They have talked a great range of subjects ; they have discussed dog-fish, a live earl, fat chickens and sore eyes, and now they want to talk blizzards. Now with reference to this discussion about the district of Alberta, my hon. friend from King's, N.B. (Mr. Fowler) tried to make out that I had said something disparaging to the district of Alberta. I want to say that I did nothing of the kind. I merely read a portion of an article that was written by some resident of the district of Saskatchewan living close to Saskatoon. The hon. member for Marquette took exception to this supplement in the Manitoba 'Free Press' that has been circulated, saying it cast reflections upon the country. This is an article written about the Calgary and Southern Alberta district. It was doubtless written by some resident of Alberta Here is what this article says :

Calgary, September 20th.

One week of steady, fine weather, such as sunny Alberta is famous for, has settled the crop question which has been the leading topic of conversation in this territory for many a week.

Here is where the member for Marquette gets his work in. He underlines the following :

The lateness of the season was alarming, but after the fall storms——

He stopped at the 'fall storms.'

—there has come the usual fall sunshine, during which the grain has ripened bountifully, and the farmer has harvested with ease. The climate of Alberta is once more vindicated and the crops are fully up to expectation. The districts around Calgary, from Innisfail to the northern frontier, have harvested their 400 bushels of wheat, 1,500 bushels of oats and 200 bushels of barley, all of an excellent quality, to the quarter section.

Why did he not read that part of it ? He underlines again the following :

The slight frost of the last storm——

And stops there, he did not read the next line.

—is found to have done very little damage.

He took good care to mention the frost, but he did not take such good care to say that there was no damage done by that frost.

The production of wheat is light because in the country around Calgary the cultivation of it has been almost given up, although the yield per acre averaged much over 20 bushels.

I submit that is a very good article about the district of Southern Alberta. I do not see anything wrong in that.

Mr. SPROULE. Does he mean to say that an article stating that they have almost given up the cultivation of wheat is a good article to distribute amongst intending immigrants ?

Mr. DAVIS. I have not heard of any immigration agent advising any person to go to Calgary to raise wheat, they advise people to go there to raise cattle. It is a good ranching country as well as a good wheat country. The writer of this article goes on to say :

The farmers simply found that other grain was more profitable.

They went out of wheat raising, because they could make more money growing barley and oats.

As to oats, there will be many phenomonal crops. Some farmers claim as much as 75 bushels to the acre.

Does the hon. gentleman want anything better than that ?

—but the average appears to be really about 40 bushels to the acre. The barley is pronounced all right by those farmers who are least disposed to boast of their wealth. There has been an immense increase in the acreage over past years, but for obvious reasons of the large immigration as well as of the progress accomplished by those previously settled, it will be much larger next year.

The whole of that article is a good article. This writer mentions frost, of course. He says there was a slight frost, but it did no damage. The hon. member for Marquette read there was a frost, but he left out the part that said there was no damage.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I placed on the 'Hansard' more than what is underlined there, as the hon. gentleman will find on reading 'Hansard' to-morrow. I read out a great deal more than he has read himself now. There is a great deal underlined that I did not read.

Mr. DAVIS. If he was quoting from this paper, I hope he did not read anything that wasn't in it. I think that is a very good article about Alberta. I don't think any one could write a better article. But the hon member for Marquette garbles the article. he reads a portion and leaves out a portion. He does not read the portion where the writer says it did no damage. He has picked out a few lines to serve his purpose. A man may make a paper say almost anything by picking out a few words here and there. The Bible says there is no God, if you only read a portion of it.

Mr. WILLIAM ROSS (Victoria). The Bible does not say that. It is the fool who says that.

Mr. DAVIS. I say that you can read out of the Bible that there is no God. But, take the line before that and the Bible says : 'The fool hath said in his heart there is no God.' My hon. friend from Marquette takes this paper, leaves out a few lines here and a few words there, and garbles its contents for the sake of earning for himself, I suppose, a little kudos in his own constituency, but he must be hard up for an argument against the hon. Minister of the Interior or the immigration branch when he can find nothing better than that. If there were 200,000 copies of that paper circulated and if they cost this country $7,000 I think, judging from the number of desirable people who have been brought into this country the money was well spent and I do not think that it is open to any person to say anything against it. The hon. member for King's New Brunswick (Mr. Fowler) tried to place in my mouth words that I did not say by attributing to me the statement that I said something derogatory of southern Alberta when he knows that I did not say anything of the kind. I merely read an extract from a letter written by a gentleman who is enthusiastic about the southern district of Saskatchewan and who says that southern Saskatchewan is a better district in which to raise cattle than any other part of the Northwest Territories.

Mr. FOWLER. I said that the hon. member for Saskatchewan read this from the paper for the purpose of contrasting the two districts and he has done the same thing now. That is what I said as 'Hansard' will show.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I wish to draw the attention of the committee to the statement made by the hon. member for Saskatchewan and to compare it with that made by the hon. member for Alberta. The hon. member for Saskatchewan has stated that he approved of the publication of these 200,000 copies and of scattering them broadcast throughout the American union to be paid for by Canadian money. As to the storm what did he prove by that ? I would draw his attention to the fact that the 'storm' does not refer to the storm of the 12th September alone but refers to storms occurring in May as well and that this paper refers to storms, frosts, &c., more than forty times in the same issue. While the hon. gentleman says that is perfectly true, what does the hon. member for Alberta say ? He says that he would not take up the time of the House in denying such an idiotic rumour, that it was absurd, that he dismissed it as unworthy of credence, a statement written by some anonymous person from the Saskatchewan district which he did not think it worth while to make a denial of in this House. Yet the hon. member for Saskatchewan says it is absolutely true. When he quoted this letter from Saskatchewan he also backed it up by stating distinctly that it was true that in some of these storms seventy-five per cent—I remember particularly that he got fifteen per cent below what the correspondent had put it at—of the cattle perished.

Mr. SCOTT. Is that true or not ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. It is absolutely untrue and I am condemning the government for distributing this literature and paying $7,000 for the purpose of libelling the country. While the hon. member for Alberta states that I am more responsible for having had it placed in 'Hansard,' even if it were true and denounces me for it it was this hon. gentleman who wrangled by the hour and contended that it was quite in order to have what he called libellous statements published and distributed broadcast in reference to his own Peace river country. How very consistent that hon. gentleman is ! The hon. gentleman will acquiesce in using public money for the purpose of paying $7,000 to the Winnipeg 'Free Press' when there was no necessity for that edition, scattering it broadcast and telling the people of the United States that there was a most exceptional storm on the 12th September, that the crops were damaged and that the farmers could only cut their grain if at all in one way. He is prepared to justify that. If we are spending our money for immigration literature we do not desire to say what is untrue or to publish a libel on the country. Although that hon. gentleman would not defend his constituency to-night, although he would not say that this statement is untrue I say that it is untrue as far as my knowledge goes. Although not a resident of the district I have a sufficient knowledge of it to know that there have been no storms in it in which ninety per cent of the cattle were destroyed. Again I say I denounce this statement as untrue and I say that it is to be regretted that so many thousands of dollars of our money were paid out for the purpose of sending broadcast through the American union a libel upon our country which could only injuriously affect the immigration which we expect to get. In proof of that I have only to say that the hon. gentleman who placed those papers before me stated that he had a letter from a family in the United States who wrote that they had intended to emigrate to Canada until they read the description of this storm in that literature.

Mr. OLIVER. The anxiety which hon. gentlemen opposite show for the welfare of Southern Alberta is very touching. I am sure it will appeal to the people of that favoured district very much. It would be a very sorry thing for southern Alberta as well as the Northwest Territories if they had to depend upon hon. gentlemen opposite for good will or good report. In regard to the results, of the publication of this $7,500, copy of the 'Free Press' and the fear that is expressed by the hon. member for Marquette it may relieve his mind on that point if I tell him that the immigration to Southern Alberta this year, according to the best information given to me, is larger than to any other part of the Northwest Territories not excepting Northern Alberta, so that if there is any application of this edition of the 'Free Press' to the district of Southern Alberta that suggestion and that allegation made by the hon. member for Marquette and other hon. gentlemen have been absolutely disposed of by that fact.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. They could not have read it.

Mr. OLIVER. Showing that the argument they have adopted was as unfounded as their intention was unfair. I here make the statement once more that this hon. gentleman has on his responsibility as a member of parliament representing a western constituency placed upon the pages of 'Hansard' statements which are deliberately garbled and when read in 'Hansard' will lead any person to believe, if they believe the hon. gentleman at all, that the country is not the country that it is or ought to be in order to attract settlers. The hon. gentleman has taken that position in this House, he has taken it deliberately and with malice aforethought simply and solely for the purpose of attacking a member of the government who has done so much to make the Northwest——

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman, as I understand it, makes a statement that my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) deliberately and with malice aforethought did so and so.

Mr. OLIVER. Exactly.

Mr. SPROULE. Is such a statement in accordance with parliamentary rules of debate ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) did state that another hon. gentleman had made a statement deliberately and for the purpose of misleading it is certainly unparliamentary.

Mr. OLIVER. Even if it is true ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, I will withdraw it even if it is true.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. As a usual thing I pay little or no attention to the Billingsgate that the hon. member for Alberta usually furnishes this House with. I do not propose to descend to that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I do not think I am out of order at all.

Mr. OLIVER. Is the hon. gentleman in order in using the word Billingsgate ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I am quite in order and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) should be the last man in the House to take exception to my remarks.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The rule is that an hon. member cannot say to another hon. member, anything other than one gentleman would be supposed to say to another.

Mr. OLIVER. I presume the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche) is not subject to that rule.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. If there is any man in this House who indulges in offensive language to members on this side, it is the hon. member for Alberta. When any one differs from his views, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) cannot combat it in ordinary language, but he must descend to such language as the hon. member (Mr. Ingram) read from the Edmonton 'Bulletin' in reference to the Toronto 'News.' The hon. member (Mr. Oliver) has changed his opinion in regard to the 'Free Press.' He defends it to-night, but a short time ago referring to the 'Free Press' in the Edmonton 'Bulletin,' he referred to it as a journalistic prostitute. In view of the language he can indulge in, I do not think there is any lecture coming to me from the hon. member for Alberta.

Mr. INGRAM. This all proves that the Department of the Interior should carefully scan every line of literature that is circulated for the purpose of promoting immigration. The hon. gentleman from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) accused the member for Marquette of deliberately garbling this literature, notwithstanding that my hon. friend (Mr. Roche) denied it.

Mr. OLIVER. I don't think he denied it.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I will deny it now, if you are not satisfied.

Mr. INGRAM. If we who indulge in honest criticism can take exception to language in this literature, how very likely it is that those opposed to immigration to Canada will use it for their own purpose. I understood from the Minister of the Interior that he rather approved of this literature.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. member for Marquette stated that he did not want to publish an untruth, but at the same time he did not want to publish the truth.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I absolutely deny that I said anything of the kind.

Mr. INGRAM. I have no hesitation in saying that under certain circumstances it would not pay us to spend public money to publish the truth about such things as this.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I was eight years in the parliament of Nova Scotia before confederation; I have been a representative in this House for a number of years, and I must say that the style of debate I have heard to-night is no credit to either one side nor the other. Surely we ought to remember that we are gentlemen in this House, and that these contradictions from one side to the other should be avoided. This style of debate is sickening.

Mr. INGRAM. The Minister of the Interior says he has never heard of this publication by the Edmonton 'Bulletin.' What we want to know is whether it is the intention of the department to pay for the whole or any portion of this literature.

Mr. SIFTON. I answered I had never heard of it before.

Mr. INGRAM. That is not an answer to the question.

Mr. SIFTON. Will the hon. gentleman wait till I get through? I said I never heard of it before and that we had no intention of paying for it.

Mr. INGRAM. I am glad to hear that statement.

Mr. SIFTON. I made it before.

Mr. INGRAM. Is it the policy of the department to allow one of its agents to issue literature for circulation abroad, promoting immigration to any particular section?

Mr. SIFTON. I see no objection to that. Of course if it were brought to our attention we would not permit a statement derogatory to any other district.

Mr. INGRAM. That is after the literature is published. You would lock the stable door after the steed is stolen. Unlike the Liberal opposition before 1896, there is not a gentleman on this side of the House who objects to voting money for a wise expenditure on immigration. When we placed items for immigration in the estimates before the Liberal opposition told us that the expenditure was too large.

Mr. SCOTT. Because you got no results from it.

Mr. COWAN. You paid for literature before it was printed and it was never circulated, although the man got the money.

Mr. INGRAM. Please give an instance.

Mr. COWAN. Prior to 1896, when the ex-member for Assiniboia was proprietor of the Regina 'Leader,' you paid him $2,000 and you were to receive several thousand copies of his paper to be circulated abroad. You paid him the $2,000 before it was printed. You never got a paper to circulate abroad, and he charged at the rate of $22 per column for inserting in connection with the fair held at Regina, the breeding of the different horses that were entered in the speeding ring at the horse races. I remember that one item calculated to attract immigration to the Northwest Territories was the entry of a race horse named Skyscraper, bred out of Thunderbolt and sired by Spinaway. This thing was investigated by the Public Accounts Committee, and there are members opposite to-night who opposed the commissioner's report censuring that sort of thing.

Mr. INGRAM. Is that the whole truth?

Mr. COWAN. Absolutely, because I examined the witnesses myself before the committee and the evidence is on record.

Mr. INGRAM. Is the hon. gentleman as truthful about this as he was about the duty on corn.

Mr. COWAN. I was truthful about the duty on corn and I am truthful about this. The hon. gentleman was mistaken about the duty on corn, but I thought I had given him enough information to make him wise.

Mr. INGRAM. The answer of the government he supports contradicted his statement, and bore out my statement on that matter.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I hope hon. gentlemen will not get on the corn question now.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman has made a statement in regard to the Regina 'Leader' and the contract with the late member for West Assiniboia. I understand that that gentleman sold out to my hon. friend who is now the honoured representative of that constituency.

Mr. COWAN. He did not sell out until long after.

Mr. INGRAM. My hon. friend from Regina, I understand, bought that paper from the late representative of West Assiniboia, with that contract included ; and when the hon. gentleman took over the plant, he did not include the contract.

Mr. COWAN. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. That was concerning the printing of law reports.

Mr. INGRAM. Perhaps it may be as stated by the hon. member for South Essex. My hon. friend from West Assiniboia is here, and he will bear out whether it is correct or not.

Mr. SCOTT. If I may be permitted to say so, I do not very much relish this item which has been brought into the discussion. As far as that is concerned, except as to the amount, the statement of the hon. member for South Essex is absolutely accurate. I think it was $400 or $500 in place of $2,000.

Mr. INGRAM. I am afraid my hon. friend is cornered again. What I want to find out from the Minister of the Interior is the policy of the government in issuing immigration literature. The hon. gentleman to-night noticed a discussion in which certain members of this House are charged with garbling immigration literature. I want to ask him if he allows his agents to issue immigration literature in any town in the Dominion of Canada without first submitting it to the hon. gentleman or his officers ? If anything is wrong in that literature, how can he conscientiously right the wrong that may be done by having the literature circulated. The hon. gentleman says he has no objection to any immigration agent providing any literature.

Mr. SIFTON. We have no rule in regard to the matter to which my hon. friend has referred. I believe there have been three or four cases in which agents of the department have assisted in preparing literature for the district in which they were doing the work. Mr. Sutter, the agent at Edmonton, is a very capable and satisfactory agent, and if he asked to be allowed to prepare a pamphlet, I would not have the slightest objection to his doing so. If afterwards he said something in the pamphlet which was improper or incorrect, he would be censured for it in the same way as any other officer.

Mr. INGRAM. I think that is a very dangerous policy to adopt. If the immigration department had strong opposition from the railway companies of the United States, some of the employees might be tempted to issue immigration literature that would be very injurious to Canada. Every line of immigration literature prepared by any officer of the government should be submitted to the department and the department should be held responsible for the issue of proper literature. The policy at present pursued is a dangerous policy.

Mr. HENDERSON. I quite endorse the statement made by the hon. member for East Elgin. I think a great deal of care should be exercised in the selection of the literature that is published and sent abroad either to the United States or Great Britain, so that only proper literature shall be sent out. I deprecate the idea of allowing private individuals to prepare matter of this kind. But we some times find objectionable literature issued even under the superintendent. I hold in my hand a volume which has been sent out from the Interior Department with the compliments of the superintendent of immigration at Ottawa, and on one page of this volume I find this :

Corby's IXL Rye Whisky, Purity Rye Whisky, Canadian Rye Whisky, Three Government Standards ; Corby's Famous Whiskies, distilled and bottled in bond by H. Corby, distiller, Belleville.

Is it necessary to have this kind of matter put into immigration literature ? I do not think it is worth while to use the money of the country to pay for literature of that kind.

Mr. SIFTON. What is the name of the book to which my hon. friend is referring ?

Mr. HENDERSON. The 'Canadian Year Book' for 1904, distributed by the Immigration Department. I merely point this out to show that the Immigration Department is not exercising a proper superintendence over the literature it is sending out. This book contains a great deal of useful information, but this is not the kind of literature which should be sent abroad through the government.

Mr. SIFTON. This is a sort of a year book issued by a private individual. I do not remember seeing a copy of it before. I remember at the time it was issued we paid something for an advertisement in it. I think that that is the extent of the connection the Department of the Interior had with it. The circulation, I think, was guaranteed to be so many, and we paid something for the advertising. I am quite unable to see anything improper in that. It is not departmental duties. The hon. gentlemen are suffering apparently for want of ammunition if this is all they can discuss.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose we will have to submit to the hon. gentleman's statement, but I want to draw his attention to this. The paper was issued May 24, 1904, and the bottom part of the paragraph says it is designed for the use of immigration agents in the United States and in the old country, an edition of 5,000 being printed for this purpose. It is only fair to the committee that a gentleman who is in the employ of the government should submit these documents for the consideration of the committee. I do not think it is right that an agent in any part of Canada should have the right to get up an advertising medium under the guise of an immigration pamphlet and send it out to all parts of Canada, the United States and Great Britain, without the department or somebody authorized by the department examining into it and finding out whether it is in the interests of the people this document should be sent out for immigration purposes. Will he say to whom in Ottawa this agent sent some copies, because no doubt it is in circulation at present ?

Mr. SIFTON. I do not know. I have not seen the document, I do not know what is in it. I am not responsible for what appears in the Edmonton 'Bulletin.' As my attention has been called to the statement that the pamphlet has been written by Mr. Sutter, I will give instructions to have him written to. But I am satisfied to have him write a description of Alberta and the department may be just as responsible as if it had been prepared here in Ottawa in the department itself. I have every confidence in Mr. Sutter's ability.

Contingencies in Canadian, British and foreign agencies and general immigration expenses, including salaries of extra clerks at head office, $533,000.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I understand that the Brandon immigration buildings were destroyed some time ago—one by fire and one by a windstorm. Is it the intention to rebuild ?

Mr. SIFTON. Yes.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—SIR ELZEAR TASCHEREAU.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE. Before that motion is carried I would like to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman who is at present leading the House (Mr. Fielding) to a cablegram in the Montreal 'Star' of yesterday—July 21, as follows :—

Sir Elzear Taschereau has left London unexpectedly for Canada. He sails from Liverpool by the 'Ionian' to-day.

It is not known whether this sudden change of plans is due to a summons from Ottawa, but it necessitates his breaking important private and public engagements here, including the hearing of an important Dominion redistribution appeal before the Judicial Committee.

I would ask the hon. minister if he is aware of this, and whether any communications have passed between the Chief Justice and the government, and if the government were made aware of Sir Elzéar Taschereau's intentions to leave England as suddenly as he seems to have done ?

Mr. FIELDING. I have no information on the subject, but I think it highly improbable, as the government have no authority over the judges of our court.

Mr. CLARKE. And the government are not aware of the action of the Chief Justice ?

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot say absolutely. If the hon. gentleman wants definite information, I must ask him to give notice in the usual way. The government have nothing to do with the judges of the Supreme Court.

Mr. CLARKE. But does it not seem an extraordinary thing for the Chief Justice who is over in England for the purpose of hearing these cases to leave London before the cases are heard ?

Mr. FIELDING. Judges sometimes do strange things.

Mr. SPROULE. What work shall we take up at the sitting to-day ?

Mr. FIELDING. The House will be moved into Committee of Supply and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) will take up his estimates.

Motion agred to, and House adjourned at 1.30 a.m.—Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, July 22, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

SUPPLY—SIR ELZEAR TASCHEREAU.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he has any information to communicate to the House with reference to the movements of Sir Elzear Taschereau? Before the House adjourned this morning I took the opportunity of calling the attention of the Finance Minister who was leading the House to a cablegram which appeared in the 'Montreal Star' of yesterday announcing that His Lordship had left London suddenly and intended to sail by the steamship 'Ionian.' Is the right hon. gentleman aware that he has left London suddenly; and, if so, what is the reason? Has he been recalled?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no information whatever.

Mr. BARKER. Have the government made any inquiry as to the remarks of Chief Justice Taschereau, as they did in the case of Lord Dundonald?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is a difference between the position held by the Chief Justice and that held by Lord Dundonald. We asked Lord Dundonald in regard to the remarks he had made, as he was an official of ours. Sir Elzear Taschereau is not an official of this government.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART. When are the final supplementary estimates to be brought down? Is there any other legislation to be brought down than that on the order paper?

Mr. FIELDING. I stated yesterday that I hoped the estimates might be down to-day, but I am inclined to think they will not be down until Monday.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is not contemplated to bring in any more legislation.

Mr. HAGGART. I see a report in the papers that a Bill is to be introduced in reference to superannuation in connection with the Intercolonial Railway.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As to that I cannot say in the absence of the Minister of Railways. There may be some departmental measures, but it is not intended to bring anything of a contentious nature.

Mr. SPROULE. At this stage I think we ought to have some information from the government in regard to the Bills on the order paper which they intend to put through and those which they intend to drop. It is rumoured that it is not the intention of the government to put them all through. Can the Prime Minister give us any information on that point?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. On Monday next my hon. friend the Minister of Finance intends to bring down the estimates. Then we shall have practically everything we intend to bring down during the present session, unless some measures of a non-contentious character; and then if my hon. friend is in a mood to go home as much as I am, we may give him some information and perhaps be guided by his intention.

Mr. SPROULE. It is not the opposition that is running the House, but the government.

Mr. HENDERSON. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Commerce, I beg to ask the Minister of Finance if he can inform the House when we may expect another meeting of that committee? There is still one important Bill undisposed of, and it is very desirable that the committee should meet at an early day in order to finish up the business.

Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid I am not able to give my hon. friend any information on the subject. I was under the impression that the business of the Banking and Commerce Committee was completed. There is one Bill, I understand, which has not been disposed of; but I was informed, as I believe my hon. friend has been, that that Bill was not to be proceeded with. If that be the case, I do not see any need of calling the committee. I have no objection to it being called, but I have no information of what the intention of the chairman is. I am inclined to think that the promoter does not intend to proceed with the Bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. I may say that while the promoter may not intend to proceed with it, possibly the committee may.

Mr. FIELDING. I will take the responsibility of saying, as one member of the committee, that as it is a private Bill, if the promoter does not want to proceed with it, I do not see how anybody else can have any interest in pressing it.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is in the hands of the committee.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Experimental Farms, $100,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. When we had this item up before, the minister promised to bring down a statement showing the reason for the discrepancy of about $20,000 between his report and the report of the Auditor General as to the expenditure on experimental farms.

Mr. FISHER. When this matter was up before, the hon. gentleman pointed out what appeared to be a discrepancy between the statements in the Auditor General's Report and the statement at the end of the farm report of this year, on page 429. The Auditor General's Report at page D—36 gives a statement of the expenditure on the Central Experimental Farm, amounting to $55,-205.60. The discrepancy that appears is due to the following: The salaries of the officers at the central farm are charged in the Auditor General's Report all to the Central Farm, but in the experimental farm detailed expenditure the salaries of the director, $4,000; accountant, $758.31; assistant accountant, $416.65; stenographer, $800; amounting to $5,974.96, are divided amongst the different farms in the ratio of thirty per cent to the Central Experimental Farm and 17½ per cent ($1,045.62) to each of the other farms. This makes a total of $4,182.47 to be deducted from the items in the Auditor General's Report. In the botanical and entomological division 30 per cent is charged to the central farm and 17½ per cent to each of the others. This division is charged $3.787.56 in the Auditor General's Report. The salaries of Messrs. Fletcher, Guignard and Gibson are comprised in this figure with some other slight expenditures. The total of the four parts charged to the branch farms is $2,345, which deducted leaves $1,442.56 charged to the central farm. The chemical division is divided in the same way. The salaries of Messrs. Shutt, Charlton and the other gentlemen amount to $4,100, and the additional expenses make a total of $4,706.86 in the Auditor General's Report, out of which $3,296.76 is charged to the branch farms leaving $1,410.10. The travelling expenses are the same in both cases. There are a number of small items of freight on exhibition supplies at Nappan and charged to central farm in error amounting to 35 cents to be deducted and $120 for value of grain for exhibitors to be added. The telegrams and telephones are not divided and they amount to $144.06. In office help, &c., there was a proportion of office help charged for the distribution of seed grain as marked on the vouchers, which the Auditor General through some error charged to the central farm. That item comes to $4,018.71 instead of $4,543.71. In printing, stationery, newspapers, and periodicals, cost of money orders for chemicals, payment of chemicals, supplies and seed, instead of being $109.09 should be $104.35. In seed-grain, trees, &c., we have to add to the Auditor General's figures 97 cents and for freight on seeds from Ottawa to Nappan chargeable to Nappan $1.20, we have to deduct from the Auditor General's figures which will make that item $446.21 instead of $446.44. The horticultural division is the same in both, viz., $5,110.92. In the distribution of seed grain, trees, office help, &c., there was $525; for office help, $125.48 value of grain supplied by Brandon Farm; $712.64 value of grain supplied by Indian Head Farm, $438.43 supplied by central farm, less screenings used for seed, $334.55, leaving the difference of $1,467 which ought to be added to the Auditor General's figures making it $6,029.56, instead of $4,562.56. The farm report shows $5,871.82 to which is to be added $157.74 for the distribution of seed, and the two lumped together make $6,029.56 exactly the figures which appear in the Auditor General's Report. Under seed testing, and care of green houses, &c., the cost of taking meteorological observations is charged in the farm account as contingencies has to be deducted from that item in the Auditor General's Report. The reason of this is that the man who takes charge of the green houses is paid for the meteorological observations. The Auditor General has put that in with seed testing and care of green houses, whereas in the farm report it is charged to contingencies. The item in the Auditor General's Report is $1,091.39. the same item in the farm report being $1,019.39. If you subtract the $72 from the Auditor General's Report it brings it down to the $1,019.39. The item for arboretum, forestry, and care of grounds is the same in each report. In live stock the value of one short horn bull sent from Ottawa to Agassiz $350, is to be deducted from the Auditor General's figures, leaving the balance, $1,-146.08. This was credited to the central farm stock in the Auditor General's figures. In farm work, &c., as the division of cereal breeding, &c., had only been in operation for a portion of the year, the expenses were included in this item and they amount to $2,805.47. There was also a small charge for services in London, England. of $25.54, making the item altogether in the Auditor General's Report, $7,913.36. There was credited in the Auditor General's Report to the Central Experimental Farm, for feed supply to poultry, and various other items amounting to $1,072.52, which deducted from $7,913.36, leaves $6.840.84 the exact item that appears in the report. For draining implements. blacksmithing and harness supplies, manure and fertilizers and dairy department, the items are the same. In the poultry department the value of feed suplied from the farm $218.59 ought to be added to $1,773.45, which makes $1,992.04, the exact item in the farm report. In Bee supplies the item is the same.

The following table will show the difference between the Auditor General's figures and the Farm's figures, 1902-3:—

These are the only discrepancies in the details and I think I have here shown that practically with the exception of slight details and I think I have here shown that three-quarters of this difference is included in the division of salaries and the division of wages. Otherwise the discrepancies are only slight differences of opinion in the charges of certain items.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman has produced a large number of figures showing divisions and subdivisions to account for the discrepancies, but I say to you Mr. Chairman and to this committee that neither he nor any other person can account for it in any other way than by saying that the statement which he has published and sent out to the country is not a fair statement. I make the proposition now that he can refer the figures I am about to give to any accountant he may name—and I will ask hon. members on both sides to take down the figures I am about to give and if they do not say, one and all, that the statement I make is correct in every particular, then I will say that the hon. gentleman's statement is correct. He has said: I have run the farm at Ottawa, I have run the four other experimental farms and the total expenditure of the people's money which I made in connection with the running of those farms has been $84,128.10. I will give these figures from his own report. We have here a statement of the expenditure on Dominion Experimental Farms for the year ending June 30th, 1903. The figures for the different farms are as follows:

Central Experimental Farm	$40,022 36
Nappan	11,499 95
Brandon	11,581 67
Indian Head	10,568 57
Agassiz	10,455 63
Total	$84,128 18

Mr. FISHER.

That, the minister says is the total expenditure of the money of the people of this country in running these farms.

Now, we will see what the Auditor General says, and I will ask hon. members on the opposite side to write down these figures or to refer to the Auditor General's Report to verify them.

Farm—Page in A.G.		Amount.
Central (Ottawa)	D—36....	$55,205 60

"	V—95....	379 12
			8,028 70
Grand total..			$110 782 58

Besides this there is a special vote for printing and distribution as stated in the minister's report at page 432, of $7,000, making a total expenditure of $117,782.58.

From this there is to be deducted the reenue from the different farms as follows :

Farm—page in A.G	Revenue.
Central (Ottawa) D—130	$2,974
Nappan..	D—129.. $834 55
Indian Head	D—129.. 702 12
Brandon..	D—128.. 591 23
Agassiz..	D—128.. 410 84
Total..	$5,512 74

Leaving a balance of expenditure over revenue of $103,269.84, and the hon. minister reports he has only spent $84,128.19, or $19,141.66 less than the actual expenditure. That is the statement I made yesterday and which I repeat, and I challenge the minister or any auditor or accountant to contradict it. Will the hon. gentleman go on the platform and tell the farmers that they can run their farms without fuel and light ? Yet in making up the expenditure, he leaves out these two important items. Turn to the Auditor General's Report V—112 and you will see there charged against the experimental farm the item of boiler inspection company, inspection of two boilers, $20. If a farmer used a boiler for the purpose of cooking grain and anything went wrong with it, would not the cost of repairs be a charge against the farm ? Then take these other items :

Thos. Fitzsimmons, cartage of wood to farm, 5¼ cords at $1..	$ 5 25
John Heney & Son, sawn maple, 25 cords at $8, 10½ at $6.50	268 25
McCulloch & Co., furnace and nut coal, 154 tons at $7.25, 2½ at $8....	1,136 72

Then there are repairs to the buildings which I have not taken into account. I have just taken down the coal and wood and inspection of boilers, making a total of $1,430.32. I have not taken into account the sundries :

Detailed, 1901-2, page V—137..	$3,229 27
Detailed with Ottawa building, repairs, V—110..	1,381 50

Then on page 113 there is :

Experimental Farm, Canada Atlantic Railway, transportation of ten barrels of gasoline from Buffalo..	$10 70
Star Oil Works, Buffalo, 515½ gallons of 88 per cent gasoline at 19 cents.. ..	97 95

These are moneys expended in connection with the farm, yet they are not included in the statement of my hon. friend published as a statement of the total expenditure. If we turn up V—94 of the Auditor General's Report we find other charges which the minister has omitted :

Street car tickets, $18.85 ; cab-hire, $4 ; post office money orders, $4.36 ; sundries, $2..	$29 21
Lime, 75 bushels at 22 cents ; papering brush, $1.35 ; pair of scissors, $1.50 ; jointer, $2.50 ; large pine roller, turned, $5.25 ; 2 porous cells, $1.20..	28 30

These items are made up of goods purchased by the Public Works Department as expenditure in connection with the farm, yet the hon. gentleman ignores all that, and in his report he says that the total expenditure is $84,000, whereas that amount is $19,141 short of what was actually expended. And until he explains where that $19,000 was got, this item should not pass, but should be reduced by that sum.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman has made some very strong statements.

Mr. TAYLOR. Very correct statements, which required strong language.

Mr. FISHER. And this the hon. gentleman is master of. He has quoted from the Auditor General's Report, and I accept as correct the figures which he has taken from that report.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then you will accept my whole statement as correct ?

Mr. FISHER. No, figures and deductions from figures are two different things. The hon. gentleman quoted the Auditor General's Report, which is divided into sections, and section D is applied to the Department of Agriculture. In that section there are many figures which correspond exactly with those in the departmental report. Then the hon. gentleman went to the section which is devoted to public works and took a lot of items out of that department.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was that not expenditure in connection with the experimental farm ?

Mr. FISHER. They are expenditures of the Public Works Department in connection, it is true, with the experimental farm.

Mr. TAYLOR. You could not run a farm without them.

Mr. FISHER. Perhaps not.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then you should have added to your account that expenditure.

Mr. FISHER. I have followed the method adopted by the Auditor General and prefer his plan to that of my hon. friend.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Auditor General's Report has nothing to do with the report of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. FISHER. If my hon. friend will only keep cool, I will be able to explain the matter to him. He has become confused by figures from two different parts of the Auditor General's report. I prefer following the lines of the division of expenditure adopted by the Auditor General, and I have kept to them and have put into the farm report the figures which the Auditor General has embraced under the heading 'D,' which applies to agriculture. I have not gone through the whole of the other departments to find out whether there are in them any figures which might possibly be twisted into subserviency of my work. The hon. gentleman is aware of the fact that the Public Works Department deals with the public buildings of the Dominion. It takes care of the post offices. It pays for the heating, lighting, management and repairs to post offices, but these are not charged against the administration of the Post Office Department by the Auditor General. The Public Works Department deals with the care of custom offices all over the country, and it heats, lights and repairs them and pays the caretaker.

Mr. TAYLOR. When the Minister of Customs or the Postmaster General can seek to contrast the revenue of their departments with the cost of running those departments do they show every item of cost ?

Mr. FISHER. They do not. What I have done in that respect is exactly what the Post Office Department and the Customs Department do. The Post Office Department does not charge itself with the expense of caretaking, heating or lighting the post office buildings. Nor does the Customs Department charge itself with these items in connection with the custom house. Nor does the Auditor General charge these departments with the expenditures made by the Public Works Department in connection with these buildings any more than he charges such expenditures against the experimental farms. And the hon. gentleman has proved that by going to the Auditor General's statement and actually taking the figures from the accounts of the Public Works Department and adding them to the charges made by the Auditor General for expenses of the experimental farms. The hon. gentleman has cited the Auditor General. He has appealed unto Cæsar. I agree to that appeal, and I go before Cæsar with him. And Cæsar, in the person of the Auditor General, tells us in his report that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) is entirely wrong. It could hardly be otherwise, because the figures that I have given with respect to the experimental farms are identically the figures of the Auditor General himself.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) and the Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) and the other ministers are dealing with the public funds of this country. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) says to the people of this country : I have spent $84,000 of your money in running the experimental farms. I say that that statement is not correct. I go to the source of the information to which the hon. gentleman has referred me—the Auditor General's Report. I take every dollar that was paid in connection with the farms in order that I may know what the expense to the country of those farms has been. The Auditor General simply keeps accounts of the money he distributes for all purposes——

Mr. FISHER. Under different heads.

Mr. TAYLOR. Of course. But, under whatever head it may appear that does not affect the amount that the people have to pay for the running these experimental farms. Could any farmer in the country run his farm without paying for fuel and light ? And why has not the hon. gentleman the manliness to charge all the amounts of such expenditure in connection with these experimental farms ? I submit that question as a practical question to any farmer in the country. The farmers of this country have put this hon. gentleman in as Minister of Agriculture, and he is supposed to handle their money carefully and with judgment. He reports to the farmers that he has spent $84,000 of their money in running the farms, but he says nothing about other items aggregating $20,000 that has been spent in this connection. Suppose that the president of a company or the manager of a bank were to make a statement to his shareholders in which he left out of account $20,000 of the expenses incurred in running the company, how long would he be allowed to hold his position ? Why, he would not be left in office twenty-four hours. And that is what I call upon the farmers to do, to say to this hon. gentleman : You have published a false statement of your expenditure——

Mr. FISHER. I give just what the Auditor General gives.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman says that he appeals to the Auditor General. Well, I will meet him at the Auditor Generals office at any hour to-day or to-morrow, or any day next week——

Mr. FOWLER. Except Sunday.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, except Sunday ; I won't work on Sunday and I won't travel on Sunday. I will meet him in the Auditor General's office at anytime he likes and will accept the Auditor General's statement as to the correctness of what I say.

Mr. FISHER. I shall not go to the Auditor General——

Mr. TAYLOR. You are backing out already.

Mr. FISHER. No, there is no need to go to the Auditor General, for he is here in this report. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) is subjecting himself to unnecessary worry. He used to be on this side of the House, and supported a former Minister of Agriculture. But he did not indict that minister because of the way the accounts were made out although they were kept in exactly the same form as before by the Auditor General and by the farm accountant. I am sorry he thinks the Auditor General makes up the accounts so badly.

Mr. TAYLOR. He has made them up correctly, and I quoted from his report.

Mr. FISHER. I have taken the figures exactly as they are in the Auditor General's Report. So the hon. gentleman need not get excited over it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am not excited. But I represent a constituency of farmers and I do not want them to be deceived.

Mr. FISHER. This is a case, evidently, where appearances are deceitful. I am sorry the hon. gentleman should appear to be excited when he is not excited.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is my nature.

Mr. FISHER. I think it is. And I will let it go at that, acknowledging that nature is too strong for us sometimes.

Mr. LENNOX. Probably we can get along without being excited, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) who has charge of this matter will be fair. The statement at page 429 of the Experimental Farm report, issued by the hon. gentleman, is headed in this way : 'Statement of Expenditure on the Experimental Farms for the Year ending June 30th, 1903.' Then the expenditure for the several farms is set out, all in the same manner. It will be sufficient for my purpose to read the heading of the first,—'Central Experimental Farm, Expenditure 1902-3.' Now the hon. gentleman says he will appeal unto Cæsar in the person of the Auditor General. We are having a great variety of names for that gentleman of late, many of them not very complimentary, I am sorry to say. Cæsar was a warrior, a great military genius, and, as we are appealing to warriors and great military men, I shall appeal to a greater military authority than even Cæsar—I appeal to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) himself. He can hardly object to that, for he combines the virtues of Cæsar, Hannibal, Napoleon and all the rest of them. It hardly comes well from the hon. gentleman to twit the hon. member from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) with being excited, or belligerent or anything of that kind, for, although now the hon. gentleman, while dealing with his estimates, exhibits a mild demeanour, yet, the other night upon the same question his attitude was very belligerent. He might take to himself a little of the suggestion that he has offered to the hon. member for South Leeds.

What I want to ask the hon. gentleman is this : Does it matter at all what system of book-keeping prevailed some years ago if that system is wrong ? Is it fair to the country, is it fair to the farmers, whom the hon. gentleman officially represents, that he should persist in that which misleads, which deceives the people, which prevents them having an adequate grasp of the true condition of affairs ? I ask the hon. gentleman as an honest man, aye, as an honest farmer, I speak again as a farmer to a farmer, and I ask him, is he giving the people a fair representation of the case when he presents a statement which is headed as expenditure of the farms, unless he includes in that statement all the expenditure of the farms ? When he says that the total expenditure is $84,128.18, is it honest, is it truthful, to omit from that expenditure the sum of $19,141.66 found in the Auditor General's report ? The hon. gentleman says that he has made it up exactly in the same way as it has ben maede up before. Now I ask if it is not time that we should have honest and straightforward book-keeping, whatever we may have had in the past. Is it truthful, is it fair to send out to the people of this country a statement which purports to be the sum total of all the expenditure on these farms, and yet the hon. gentleman has to admt in this House that there is $19,000 of ordinary expenditure for the year ending 1903 which has been deliberately omitted from that statement ? And what class of expenditure is it ? It is expenditure for ordinary repairs, it is expenditure for little matters in connection with the various farms, it is expenditure for coal, for wood, for fuel and a thousand other small matters that arise in connection with the management and carrying on of the farms. Now let me appeal to the hon. gentleman as a farmer. He said the other day that he was ready to go out and discuss these matters on the hustings with the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor). Let him go there, or let him send some one who is not acquainted with the facts the hon. gentleman has mentioned to-day. Suppose at the meeting I happen to mention that the total expenditure on the farms for the year ending 1903 was $103,269, and a good supporter of the hon. gentleman says: No, it was $84,128. I say the hon. gentleman is wrong, but he says he is right. He then reads this published statement of the Minister of Agriculture on page 429 and following pages purporting to give every dollar of expenditure in connection with the farms, and by it I am absolutely wrong. What will the people say? I venture to say that Grit and Tory alike, every man in that audience will have to come to the conclusion that I am wrong. Why, because this statement of expenditure on the Dominion experimental farms for the year ending 30th June, 1903, if it means anything, means the total expenditure on those farms. Now this is not an issue between the Auditor General and the hon. gentleman, it is an issue between the people and the hon. gentleman, and I appeal to the hon. gentleman himself, not to Cæsar, not to the Czar, as some hon. gentlemen opposite now call the Auditor General—I appeal to the hon. gentleman himself, to this great and distinguished combination of militarism and agriculture, I appeal to him to treat the people fairly, and not suppress a sum of $19,000 from the amount which he says gives the total expenditure on these farms.

Hon. WILLIAM PATERSON (Minister of Customs). The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) asked me a question to-day in reference to this expenditure. There is a report of the experimental farm, there is an accountant connected with that farm, and it is for him to pay out the money. In these tables that are given here I understand there appears another report, a statement that the expenditure is made up and paid by him under the true head.

Mr. TAYLOR. I refer the hon. gentleman to page 429 of the report.

Mr. PATERSON. I saw the heading, but his report does not show that the expenditure for coal is included, he does not say that. If the question is asked by the hon. member for Leeds why he has not put that in, the answer would be that he did not pay for it, he is giving an account only of what he himself has done. But it is evident that other payments have been made. But I do not see that we should blame the government because these other payments are found in the Auditor General's Report. Now the Auditor General is not under the direction of the director of the experimental farms or of the Minister of Agriculture, in the preparation of his statement. He is the master in that respect, and he has determined that the proper way of keeping these accounts and of publishing them, is to give them, as I understand it, under the head of experimental farms. The expenditures are made directly by the accountant of that farm, while other expenditures that are incurred are not paid through him, but being paid through the Public Works Department, he places them under the head of the Public Works Department. Now, I suppose the Minister of Agriculture could have no objection if the Auditor General saw fit, under the head of experimental farms in his report, to put in the items that are paid for out of moneys that are placed in the hands of the Public Works Department. The Minister of Agriculture or the director of experimental farms could not object. But they have no power to tell the Auditor General to keep his accounts that way. The Auditor General keeps the accounts in the way that he deems right, and therefore, under the head of Public Works, he says, I will put the coal that is used on the experimental farms, and I will put these other items. It seems to me the blame does not lie with the Minister of Agriculture, but that if there be any blame, and I do not see that there is any, it must lie with the gentleman who has full authority and power to present these accounts to the public as he pleases. Now the Auditor General I presume would reason this way: This House votes for lighting and heating of public buildings, a certain sum is voted for that purpose, and out of that the Public Works Department take charge of the heating and lighting and caretaking, for instance, for the Customs, the Post Office, the Inland Revenue Department, and perhaps in some other cases, and the Public Works Department pays the caretaker of the building, the fuel, the lighting, and defray the whole expense.

Well, that expenditure appears in the report of the Auditor General, giving the country to understand and know that it has taken so much money to light, say a public building in Ottawa. Is the Auditor General then to divide up the cost of heating, lighting, &c., and charge so much of it against the Post Office Department and so much against the Customs Department? I cannot see that this heading is deliberately intended to mislead and I do not think that anyone can see that. It says that it is a statement of the expenditure on the Dominion Experimental Farm for the year ending June 30, 1903. It gives the different expenditures and then it is signed by the accountant of the department. In this the accountant gives the statement of the expenditures made to him. How could he give other expenditures which were not made to him?

Mr. CLANCY. He knew of the other expenditures and my hon. friend must know that he knew of them and he could have included them.

Mr. PATERSON. Then should the Post Office Department, the Customs Department, the Inland Revenue Department, &c., take their proportion of this expenditure and publish it ?

Mr. CLANCY. This is a statement going to the country showing how a particular account has been made up. It is not on the same footing as the accounts of the Post Office or Customs Departments. If the accountant failed to put in every item of expenditure in connection with that farm, no matter what service it was for, so long as it belonged to that farm, the account would be misleading.

Mr. PATERSON. Apparently I cannot mark it any plainer.

Mr. TAYLOR. You have done very well ; you have done the best you could.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman says the accountant could have asked the Auditor General—

Mr. CLANCY. No.

Mr. PATERSON. How then would we know the amount of coal ?

Mr. CLANCY. He could go and find out as any honest man who wanted to make a true account could, and put in a foot note—

Mr. PATERSON. My hon. friend has suggested a foot note. There might be a suggestion there. These accounts have been kept in that way from confederation or from the institution of experimental farms and—

Mr. LENNOX. Does the hon. gentleman pretend that it makes any difference whether the accounts have been kept in that way in the past or not ? It is a question of what is fair and honest.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman says it is a question of what is fair and honest. I would not like to put it in that way because the hon. gentleman would be saying that for all these years since the farms were instituted the accounts have been kept unfairly and dishonestly. I would not like to say that, and I do not know whether the hon. gentleman says that or not. If a change in book-keeping can be made which will make the subject plainer, that is a fitting matter for consideration, but do not attribute unfairness or dishonesty to the accountant who prepared the statement of last year because he simply gave a statement and made an account of the expenditure in precisely the same way as it had been made by every accountant since experimental farms were instituted. If the Auditor General took the view of the hon. gentleman opposite—and he is the one particularly charged with showing to the people of this country how the public moneys are expended—it is quite open to the Auditor General to do what the hon. gentleman says. It is easier for him to do it, than it is to have it done by the plan suggested by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) as he will see, because the hon. member for Bothwell admits this account will have to go to different coal dealers and to the parties who made repairs and ask them for their accounts. He might be told by these parties : We have rendered our account to the department that ordered it. The hon. gentleman has all of these accounts. If the hon. gentlemen are right, the Auditor General should at once give instructions that in future the coal for experimental farms and all expenditures of that kind instead of being put in the report under the head of public works, is to be put under the head of experimental farms.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it the duty of the Auditor General to keep the accounts of the various departments and make out their book-keeping to ascertain whether the accounts have been properly paid, and value given for them.

Mr. PATERSON. The Auditor General has all of these accounts before him and he could as easily instruct his accountants instead of putting expenditures of this class for experimental farms under public works, say that they are to be placed under letter D, experimental farms. He has all the details and would simply have to give instructions.

Mr. TALYOR. Why should not the accountant of the farms do this ? He has the accounts in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. PATERSON. My hon. friend must see that according to his argument if there is any fault in the book-keeping his criticism is entirely against the Auditor General.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, it is directly against the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. PATERSON. It cannot be against the Minister of Agriculture. He did not pay for the coal, he did not pay for the repairs, and as he did not pay for these things he is not warranted in putting them in.

Mr. TAYLOR. He says that his statement gives the total expenditure in connection with the farms.

Mr. PATERSON. He does not.

Mr. TAYLOR. He does.

Mr. PATERSON. This is headed :

Statement of the expenditure on the Dominion Experimental Farms for the year ending June 30, 1903.

He does not say total expenditure.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the minister when on the platform was asked from the audience how much the farm at Ottawa cost, he would turn up this report and say : There are the minister's figures for it ; they are correct. Every farmer would believe this for it is in the blue-book.

Mr. PATERSON. The farmers would not nor would the hon. member for Leeds. The Auditor General can easily arrange this and it is he who is to blame if any blame there be in this matter.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, he is not.

Mr. PATERSON. The thing could be accomplished at once by the Auditor General doing what the hon. gentleman asks should be done, because if we were to give his instructions to the accountant of the farm, it could be easily arranged. He could send to the accountant of the farm a statement of these different expenditures for coal, &c., and say : that is to be included in your report. It is the Auditor General that has to deal with that. The Auditor General can instruct the accountant to give him the figures and he need not put the expenditure under the head of public works, but under the head of experimental farm. You take the public buildings throughout the Dominion where you have Customs, Post Office, Inland Revenue, and perhaps Indian Department offices, and there is no estimate made of the proportion that should go to each department. I take it that the public know that in carrying on the different branches of the public service, under the head of public works expenditure, items such as have been brought to our attention today are charged.

Mr. INGRAM. Suppose the hon. gentleman is addressing a meeting in my constituency as he usually does, and some honest farmer were to say : Mr. Paterson what is the total expenditure on the experimental farm at Ottawa ? Would the hon. gentleman say $84,128.82, or would he say $103,269.84 ? If I were absent I suppose he would give the lower figure, but if I were present he would say $103,269.84.

Mr. PATERSON. Oh, you don't believe that. To be frank, I would not be telling the whole truth, as I understand it by the discussion here to-day, if I were to give that lower figure mentioned, but I would be justified in saying that the total expenditure as shown by the accountant was $84,128.82, although there were charges to other branches of the public service a portion of which were incurred for the farm.

Mr. INGRAM. The good practical common-sense farmers want to know the truth regardless of all these niceties of book-keeping, and when the Minister of Agriculture stated in the report that the cost of the experimental farm was only $84,128.82, it was not an honest statement of the expenses of the experimental farm. As my friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) says : this is a misleading report. There is no getting around the fact that it is not true. We are not disputing the manner in which the Auditor General keeps the accounts, but we are disputing the dishonest statement in this report and no man can deny it. No man can say it is a correct statement and tell the truth. I have no doubt that gentlemen on the other side of the House when they address the farmers will say that the expenditure on the experimental farm was $84,128.82, whereas if they told the total truth it would be $103,269.84. That is the whole thing in a nutshell and no one can dispute it.

Mr. PATERSON. It is hardly the whole thing in a nutshell. We have frequently debated in this House questions as to the system of book-keeping and for instance as to whether the distinction between capital and ordinary expenditure should not be abolished. That, however, has not been done, and the old system has been continued. I suppose the reason is that these statements are valuable for purposes of comparison. Since the farm was instituted the accountant makes up his statement on exactly the same lines, and thus you can make a comparison between the statement in 1896 and the statement in 1903. If you now added certain charges which were not added before you could not have a fair comparative statement. I am not judging the question as to whether it would not be better to change the system or not, but I am pointing out that in preserving the old system it is useful in comparing the expenditure. If you wish to adopt a new system you could not get at a comparison without adding a note to explain the difference. There is no attempt to mislead the people. The accountant does not say that it is the total expenditure, and no one can be deceived by his statement. The remedy is easily in the hands of the Auditor General if he wishes.

Mr. TAYLOR. Don't obstruct the passage of the item.

Mr. PATERSON. All right.

Mr. SPROULE. I was rather amused at the desire of the Minister of Customs to throw the blame on the Auditor General instead of on the Minister of Agriculture. That seemed to be the whole aim.

Mr. PATERSON. Not to blame.

Mr. SPROULE. He said : Who is to blame ? It is the Auditor General—he could have done this and done that ; he could have picked out all these various items and put them together, and could have done the book-keeping for the farm as well as auditing the accounts. Is the Minister of Customs not aware that the duty of the Auditor General is only to audit the accounts?

Mr. PATERSON. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I think added to that is the duty of presenting these accounts to the public.

Mr. SPROULE. I was going to say that. In regard to the accounts of the Public Works Department, it is his duty to ascertain whether the expenditure has been made in accordance with the conditions of the vote of parliament and the law which provides for such expenditure. When he finds that it is correct, he has a right to show it to the public in some way. He puts it under the various branches, and shows it by his index, and in doing that he has done his full duty. He has nothing to do with showing how or where the money has been expended on the farm ; and the Minister of Customs, instead of blaming the Auditor General, should blame the Minister of Agriculture, whose duty it is to show how and for what the expenditure has taken place. The hon. Minister of Agriculture says the hon. member for South Leeds chooses to appeal to Cæsar, meaning that the Auditor General is Cæsar. Well, Cæsar was right and Fisher was wrong, that is the only difference. It is not the duty of the Auditor General to compile the different expenditures and to say : Everything that was spent on the farm is to be found here. He shows by his index where it is to be found under the various heads, and in doing that he has done his whole duty. On the other hand, what is the position of the Minister of Agriculture ? Suppose all these farms belonged to me, and I put a steward there to run them, and placed at his disposal so much cash for that purpose ; and suppose I instructed him to make a statement to me yearly as to what had been done on these farms. Suppose I owned a farm at Ottawa, another at Nappan, another at Brandon, another at Indian Head and another at Agassiz ; and suppose I looked over the statement he made to me to see what had been done with my money and how much it had cost to run each of these farms ; what am I to expect by that statement ? Am I to regard it as giving part of the expenditure or the whole of it ? I put my steward over the different properties and ask him to render me an account which will show the income and expenditure on all these different farms. Would I regard him as doing his duty or as worthy of the position he occupies if he rendered me an account which misled me ? As a farmer I was misled by the account given in the hon. minister's report. If I ask any farmer in this country to tell me what it has cost to run these farms, will he not take that account on page 429 of this report and say, there is the account of the expenditure. When I come to balance up my cash account and find that it is $19,941 short, I ask, what has become of that money ? He tells me : I used part of that to buy coal for the experimental farm, to make repairs on the building, to provide other little necessaries. I say : That does not appear in your account. No, it does not, but the farm requires these things. How long would any man in this House keep a steward who managed his farm in such a way as that ? Would he blame the Auditor General for that ? Would he not blame the man who is in charge and who is responsible for the making out the accounts ? What is the answer of the hon. minister to-day ? That was the way it was done before. It may have been, but is that the proper way for a business government to argue ? Is that the correct thing to say to the people when they endeavour to analyze the cost of the various departments of this government ? The present government, when in opposition, over and over again claimed that the methods of their predecessors were wrong, and promised that if they were put in power they would adopt the right method. Why have they not done so? Why do they desire to shield themselves behind the Auditor General and throw the blame upon a man who is no more responsible than I am, and exonerate the party who is charged with the responsibility of showing the farmers of the country how much it has cost to run these farms ? The Minister of Agriculture has appealed to Cæsar, and Cæsar is right, while the Minister of Agriculture is wrong.

Mr. PATERSON. If the hon. gentlemen see that they are wrong, I do not wish to proceed with this matter much further ; but this is the point I make. Here is the report which the Auditor General presents to the public in his report on page D—29 :

EXPERIMENTAL FARMS.

Summary.

Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, (Page D—36)..	$55,205 60
Branch Experimental Farm, Nappan, (Page D—40)..	9,043 04
Branch Experimental Farm, Brandon, (Page D—44)	9,251 09
Branch Experimental Farm, Indian Head (Page D—47)..	8,825 15
Branch Experimental Farm, Agassiz, (Page D—49)..	7,649 58
	$89,974 46

This is a summary of the expenditure on the experimental farms as given to the public of Canada by the Auditor General. Why is it not said that the Auditor General, in giving that summary to the people of Canada has given out a statement that is not true ?

An hon. MEMBER. Oh.

Mr. PATERSON. That is the language which hon. gentlemen opposite are applying to the statements made in this report. I am not saying it is not true, I am not finding a word of fault with the Auditor General, but I say that my hon. colleague has followed the plan adopted in the Auditor General's Report, and if you find fault with the Minister of Agriculture, you must deal out the same criticism to the Auditor General. What was there to have prevented the Auditor General from putting these items connected with the experimental farm, but which are charged to Public Works, under the heading of experimental farms ?

Mr. CLANCY. He could not do that, because the items were voted for public works and not for the experimental farm, and the Auditor General charges against each department the expenditure voted for it.

Mr. PATERSON. I think the hon. gentleman is right, but in any case the Auditor General could have added a foot-note—as hon. gentlemen opposite say the Minister of Agriculture should have done—explaining that these items were expenditures on the experimental farms, although charged to public works.

Mr. TAYLOR. If my hon. friend will turn to V—113 he will find that the Auditor General has done this. He will find there certain expenditures under the heading of public works marked as belonging to the experimental farm.

Mr. PATERSON. But you do not find any reference to this in the edition dealing with the experimental farms. If the hon. gentleman finds fault with the Department of Agriculture for not having a foot-note showing that other expenditures connected with the experimental farm were to be found under other heads, he should find fault with the Auditor General, because there is nothing in his report giving the expenditures on the experimental farm to show that under the heading of public works there are other expenditures directly connected with those farms. But the Auditor General gives the expenditure of the experimental farm as amounting to $89,994, which is the statement embodied in the report of the Department of Agriculture. And if a foot-note be advisable in the one case, it is equally so in the other.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) described my report as a dishonest and misleading statement, and said that if I followed the practice of former years, that practice ought to be changed. I am not prepared to admit that my statement is misleading or dishonest. It is an actual statement of the disbursements of the farm according to the system followed by all former accountants. The hon. gentleman says that that system ought to be changed and that there ought to be in the statements the items of expenditure on the farm which are charged to public works as well as the expenditures voted for the farms themselves. Well, that suggestion is worthy of consideration and I do not take very strong exception to it. But hon. gentlemen opposite would be ready to condemn the government if the government were to change the system of book-keeping hitherto followed. We would be immediately accused of doing something very wrong. I am afraid that these hon. gentlemen are rather suspicious and they would suspect us of trying to hide something, of trying to show a different comparison if we were to change the system which has hitherto always been in vogue. I say positively that the same system as is followed in this year's report has been in vogue ever since the establishment of the experimental farm. It was in vogue under my predecessor. The reports issued by my predecessor contain exactly the same statements and the same discrepancies, taken from the Auditor General's Report. I have here two of the reports under the late government.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the use of the minister taking up time to establish that when everybody admits it ?

Mr. FISHER. Does the hon. member for Leeds admit that the statement which I have published, and which he denounces as dishonest and misleading, is exactly the same kind of statement as my predecessors were publishing ? Does he charge them with the same crime ? Does he charge them with having made similar misleading and false statements ? If he does, I have nothing more to say. If he will stand up now and say that what he has been accusing me of his own leaders were guilty of, his whole attack falls absolutely to the ground as far as any party advantage is concerned. But the contention of the hon. member for Simcoe is different. He says the system should be changed. That is a question for consideration. It may be a bad system, but if it is bad to-day, it was equally bad under my predecessors. It was a bad system when the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) and the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) supported it and allowed it to pass without objection or criticism. The whole argument from a political point of view falls entirely to the ground, and there is simply left a question of book-keeping, which I am quite ready to consider and discuss ; and if the Auditor General thinks it best to make that change in our report, I am ready to follow his advice. But up to the present I have been following the lines laid down by the Auditor General and in doing so I have been doing exactly what all the Ministers of Agriculture from Sir John Carling, who established the farms, down to myself, have been doing in connection with the book-keeping of the department.

Mr. TAYLOR. I gave the hon. minister yesterday the figures in the Auditor General's Report for 1895-6, as they compared with 1902-3.

Mr. FISHER. I am not comparing expenditures ; I am comparing systems.

Mr. TAYLOR. The office expenditure under the late administration was $1,750, and under the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) it is $4,935.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman is altogether shifting his ground.

Mr. TAYLOR. The late government administered the affairs in connection with the experimental farms more to the satisfaction of the country on an expenditure of $19,173 than the hon. gentleman does on an expenditure of $44,878.

Mr. PATERSON. That is not the question.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) is very anxious to get his colleague out of a hole. But he cannot do it, with all his sophistry. He wants to appeal to the Auditor General. Well, in the Auditor General's Report page V—93, he will find another summary of expenditures of experimental farms : Nappan, $30.06 ; Brandon, $496.61 ; Indian Head, $1,759.78 ; Agassiz, $379.12 ; Central Experimental Farm, $8,205.68. And this is not included in the summary given on the other page.

Mr. PATERSON. The Minister of Agriculture is not to blame for that.

Mr. TAYLOR. Does not the accountant of the experimental farms get all the accounts, and must he not approve them before the Auditor General will pay them ?

Mr. FISHER. Not until after the Auditor General's Report is issued.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Auditor General's account covers the fiscal year, just as the experimental farm report does.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) has not understood what I mean. The Auditor General's Report is printed and laid on the table long after the report of the experimental farms is prepared and sent to the printer. So, we cannot make up the report on the basis of the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Auditor General will not pay a cent until——

Mr. FISHER. I am not talking about payments, but about the reports—

Mr. TAYLOR. I am talking about business, and I am showing that the hon. gentleman does not manage the experimental farms in a businesslike way. This we are told is a business government——

Mr. FISHER. I accept that.

Mr. TAYLOR. —and we want them to manage the affairs committed to them and to present reports like business people. The accountant at the experimental farm must initial the accounts before they are paid. Why, then, does he not enter each account as an expenditure ?

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) should be reasonable and listen to what is told him. The hon. Minister of Agriculture pointed out that it is impossible to do as he suggests because the report of the experimental farms is in type before the Auditor General's Report is placed on the table, so it is impossible to base the experimental farm report upon the figures in the Anditor General's Report.

Mr. TAYLOR. We will take that statement with a grain of salt.

Mr. PATERSON. You should not say that.

Mr. FISHER. I made the statement positively.

Mr. TAYLOR. The accounts are closed to the same day—30th June—and there is no account in the Auditor General's Report relating to the experimental farms but is shown to the Minister of Agriculture's accountant long before the entry is made in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. FISHER. No, not one of the Public Work's accounts is shown to us. We know nothing about them until the Auditor General's Report comes out.

Mr. TAYLOR. All he has to do is to go to the Auditor General at any time——

Mr. FISHER. Not for the same items.

Mr. TAYLOR. All he has to do is to find out from the Public Works Department what has been spent for the experimental farms—how much coal has been bought, how much has been paid for light and so on. All these items must be taken account of by the farmer in his business ; yet, the hon. gentleman renders his account to the people of Canada without charging these items and in a form that will mislead the people. A good many people have almost as much faith in a blue-book as they have in their Bible. They think that nobody would put out a blue-book that is not in accordance with the facts. Yet, here is a blue-book which misrepresents the expenditure on the experimental farms to the extent of about $20,000. And when this is pointed out, the Minister of Customs comes to the rescue of his colleagues. The Minister of Agriculture himself says that he will appeal to Caesar in the person of the Auditor General. And when I accepted that and offered to go with him to the Auditor General he backed down. Why ? Because he knows the verdict will be against him. There is not a farmer who reads my statement, but who will say that I am right and that the report put out by the Minister of Agriculture is a misleading one. The hon. gentleman has shown himself an unworthy steward, and he will be dismissed by his masters, the people. I have just read the figures from the Auditor General's Report of one whole series of items that do not appear as charged against the experimental farms in their report, although the money was spent on account of the experimental farms. Suppose that every business in the country were run that way. Suppose my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) ran his factory in Brantford——

Mr. PATERSON. No, I am out of business.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, he has stock in the business and has a business manager there. That business manager will prepare a statement for the directors of that company. If that statement showed a deficiency of $19,000 in the bank account, the manager would very soon be dismissed. And I believe the people will say that the Minister of Agriculture has been guilty of a similar offence in sending out this misleading blue-book ?

Mr. PATERSON. How many have you sent out ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Not one. I would not send out a lying document to the people. I discovered the error as soon as I opened it. Yet, the Minister of Customs will get on the platform and talk about this Minister of Agriculture, represent him as a horny-handed son of toil, and a sound business administrator, although it has been pointed to him here to-day that this report does not give within about $20,000 of the expenditure on the experimental farms.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have been listening carefully to the discussion, and I have one suggestion to make to the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) The question that he refers to is one that ought to be discussed in Committee of Public Accounts. It is a question of the method of keeping accounts, and it is almost a waste of time to discuss such a question here.

At one o'clock committee took recess.

Committee resumed at Three o'clock.

Mr. CLANCY. I would ask the Minister of Agriculture to turn to page 78 of the report of the experimental farms. The hon. gentleman will find there under the heading 'Balance sheet or financial statement of live stock feeding operations on 200 acre farm. July 1, 1902 to June 30, 1903.' A table is given under the heading of comparative receipts. Commencing at the top of that table the number of horses is given at 19 in 1902 ; in 1903 they are at the same number. The returns are put down at $2,041.20. That return is extended in the column of gross returns made up of increase in value, value of products and animals sold. Will the hon. gentleman tell us how he arrives at that $2,041.20 ?

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend will notice that the statement is under the heading of 'Balance sheet or financial statement of live stock feeding operations on 200 acre farm, July 1, 1902 to June 30, 1903.' The whole of the horses on the farm are charged there, 19 in number. That is the return of the value of their work on the experimental farm of 200 acres, and the value of their work apart from this.

Mr. CLANCY. There is a statement here that does not quite accord with the hon. gentleman's statement. It says :

> In the case of horses, the services of the nineteen head are valued at $3,061.80, but since the labour of 6 horses is required to do the work on the 200-acre farm, only $2,041.20, or two-thirds of the value of their labour is credited to them.

That would mean, since there are only six horses engaged, $340 for each horse. Now how is that arrived at ? How is the work of six horses put down at that value ? Other horses are running about the fields or the barnyard. How is that enormous sum of $340 arrived at as the value of each horse ?

Mr. FISHER. I was not quite correct in what I said before, I cannot myself quite understand that statement. It appears to be contradictory. I will have to telephone to the accountant and find out just what that means.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps the hon. gentleman can explain the next item : 'Shorthorns, pure bred and grade.' On July 1st, 1902, there were 16, valued at $2,155, or an average price of $135 each. The next year there were 20, valued at $3,410, or an average of $170 each, making a difference between the two years of $1,255 increase. Then under the heading of 'Returns' there is $627.77, making an increase in value altogether of $1,882.77. Will the hon. gentleman tell us how that has arisen ?

Mr. FISHER. In the first place, there is an increase in the number of animals. In the second place the 20 animals are different from the 16 animals. Then the animals are valued at the beginning of the year and at the end of the year, showing that they had increased in value. The increase in the value of the 20 over the value of the 16 is the amount which the hon. gentleman mentions, $1,255. Then in addition, the produce sold from these animals is put down at $627 77. Part of that produce sold is the number of calves, and part is milk production. The two things together make up the sum that is to be credited to the shorthorn herd as their product during the year ; that is to say, the increase in value of the animals and the value of the product sold during the year, amount together to $1,882.77.

Mr. CLANCY. It cannot be milk, because that is charged on the other side of the account. The hon. gentleman accounts for it in this way: That in 1902 there were 16 animals, and in 1903 there were 20 animals. The average price in 1902 was $135, and the average price in 1903 was $170. Now how many of these animals that were there in 1902 were there in 1903; how many were purchased, and what was paid for the animals in the meantime?

Mr. FISHER. I have not under my hand a list of the animals or of the individual animals. I cannot tell how many of those 16 are included in the 20. I have a list of the cows in the earlier part of the report, but that would not include the bulls. But the fact is there were 20 animals at the end of the year and 16 at the beginning. That not only causes an increase in value by the 4 additional head, but the probability is that some of these animals were of greater value at the end of the year than at the beginning, arising from their growth and their increased productiveness. Each animal is valued separately, and its just and fair value at the time the valuation is taken is put upon it.

Mr. CLANCY. The farm report gives a balance in favour of the live stock operation of $2,245.26. That includes an allowance for the feed of all kinds given to these animals, but from the figures given here it would seem that the amount paid to the men enumerated as being employed in the care of this stock came to $2,856. I notice in the Auditor General's Report that the sum put down for wages for the care of stock is $3,087.45. I am sure that the hon. gentleman will scarcely say that that is the whole cost of the raising of this stock. There are other men connected with the farm whose salaries have been paid, and the live stock should bear at least some proportion of these salaries as well as the other branches. I refer to such officials as the director, the accountant, &c.

Mr. FISHER. I can only say that the statement on pages 78 and 79 of the Farm Report is a summary of the work on the 200-acre farm, which includes in its management the stock on the experimental farm. The statement was prepared in a summary form, and does not pretend to go into all details. I confess that I do not understand the situation in regard to the horses, and I have sent for that information. There are a large number of employees on the farm who have nothing to do with the stock. The charge for the care of stock in the Auditor General's Report is different from that in the Farm Report, and I do not understand the difference. I have sent for that information also. I do not think it is fair to charge the salary of the director, &c., to the 200-acre farm.

Mr. CLANCY. To what would you charge it?

Mr. FISHER. To the experimental work. A farmer running a 200-acre farm would not have a director and an accountant. The request has been made that this account should be kept in the way a farmer would run his farm.

Mr. CLANCY. This is under the control of the director, and there are other persons whose services are constantly required in this connection.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think that will be a fair charge against it. If it were an ordinary farm, the man running it would correspond to the farm foreman, or the agriculturist, who is solely directing the operations.

Mr. CLANCY. Then, too, there is no charge made for pasture for these animals during the half year when they must have pasture.

Mr. FISHER. I do not at the moment see anything in this report for pasture, although that should be included. If the animals are fed on the farm, the pasturage ought to be charged to them the same as the feed in the winter. I will see that it is done another year.

Mr. BLAIN. There is an expenditure of $7,000 for printing and distribution of bulletins and reports, which is not charged to the farm at all. Is it not an expenditure in connection with the farm, and why is it not charged to it?

Mr. FISHER. It is an expenditure in the way of distributing the knowledge acquired on the farm, but, of course, it is in no way connected with the operations of the farm. It is done by a staff of clerks who are paid specially out of this $7,000, and it appears on both sides of the balance.

Mr. SHERRITT. Coming from an agricultural district, I may be excused for saying a word or two on this matter. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) stated that he did not distribute any of the reports of the agricultural department to the people in his riding. I am not in that position, because there is no departmental report that I have distributed so freely as this one. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) stated that he did not distribute these reports because he did not wish to distribute any thing that was false. I consider myself just as honourable and as honest as he is, but I regret to say that I am not in that position, because I sent out these reports believing that they contained the truth and up to the present debate I was not aware that they are misleading. It is true that certain matters which were brought out in the discussion last year and the year before led me to believe that these agricultural reports were to some extent wrong. For instance, when I questioned the minister as to how he valued his hay, he said he valued it at eight dollars per ton and he weighed it as it came in from the field, whereas every one knows that hay is supposed to shrink about one-third, and the course pursued by the minister in that respect was to my mind greatly misleading. However, I did not think the report of the Agricultural Department was misleading to the extent it is. I have had many applications for these reports by my constituents in North Middlesex, and I sent them out without any explanation. It would appear now that in order to have them properly understood I should have sent the Auditor General's Report along with them. Had I sent the Auditor General's Report out at the same time as the agricultural report, I believe the farmers of North Middlesex are quite intelligent enough to go through both reports and arrive at correct conclusions from a study of each, but placing that agricultural report in the hands of any man it is not possible for him to understand it correctly, or to see that there should be $19,000 added to the expenses of the farm more than is therein stated, I was amazed to hear the Minister of Agriculture say that this report is not misleading. To my mind that is a ridiculous statement. I was pleased with what the Minister of Customs said to some extent; because, although he tried to go all round it he did not undertake to justify the report or to say that it was not misleading. However, he did say that because the wicked Tories had done the same thing prior to 1896, that was sufficient justification for the Minister of Agriculture to send out a misleading report. I am satisfied that not one of these gentlemen on the opposite side of the House in discussing public questions on the platform has ever referred to the fact that the expenditure on the experimental farm is much larger than is shown in the report. On the contrary they based their remarks on the figures contained in it as being found in the blue-book that could not lie. I may say that from this out, when sending out the report of the Agricultural Department, I intend to send an explanation stating the real facts of the case. Not only is this report misleading to men who seek information, but I think it is a very bad example to the young men of our country that a man occupying the high position of Minister of Agriculture should not only send out this misleading report, but should stand up in the House as he did and state it was not misleading. I fail to see how any person of the intelligence and ability of the Minister of Agriculture could say that this Agricultural report is not misleading. It is said that the Auditor General's Reports are public property. That is true, but every one is well aware that there are a dozen of the agricultural reports put in the hands of the public for every one of the Auditor General's Reports. There is no possible way for the average farmer to find out what the true state of affairs is by reading that report as it is at present published. I do not wish to detain the House, but coming from an agricultural district as I do, I consider it is my duty to stand up here and confess to having sent these reports out not knowing they were misleading and that there was an additional expenditure of $19,000 in connection with that farm which was not known to the public.

Mr. CLANCY. I notice that the teams are put down at $2.50 a day, which of course includes the man. If you allow the man $1.25 a day that would leave another $1.25 a day for the team, and of course the horses have to be fed. Suppose the six horses worked 300 days, instead of having $2,000 to their credit they would only have $375. Then there is a charge of 2½ cents a bushel for threshing. That is the ordinary price paid to these machines going around the country, but the men have to be fed in addition to that and the 2½ cents a bushel does not anywhere near represent the cost. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that there is not a man in Canada who could get his threshing done, including the pay of the men engaged, their board and so on, for 2½ cents a bushel. Every farmer in the House knows that that is perfectly ridiculous. I would like to know how that figure is arrived at.

Mr. FISHER. In the first place, let me reply in regard to the horses. If the hon. gentleman will look at the bottom of page 58 and at the top of page 59, he will find a full explanation of the cost of the horses. It shows that on a team there is a margin of 32 cents a day, after paying for the feed of the horses, and $1.41⅔ per day for the driver. The 32 cents per day covers the wear and tear on the harness and replacing the horses as they grow old. A daily allowance of 16 cents per horse amounts to $48 in the year of 300 working days. That shows abundant margin left for wear and tear on the harness and for replacing the horses. If the hon. gentleman examines that account, I think he will find it accurate. I cannot myself see any flaw in it.

Mr. CLANCY. I will point out the flaw. In the first place, the calculation is made on nineteen horses when only six are used. When you divide the amount among nineteen, you will get a much smaller amount for each horse.

Mr. FISHER. The calculation is worked out for each horse; it does not matter whether the number is nineteen or six. When you take a pair of horses to do some work, we charge that to two horses. The cost of feeding and caring for a team comes to $2.16. We base this on 300 working days; but when the account is for eating, the charge is for 365 days. For the cost of horse labour $2.50 per day is allowed for each working day, which leaves a margin of 32 cents on a team, for wear and tear of harness and replacing horses as they grow old. That 32 cents on 300 working days amounts to $48 for every horse on the farm, which is an abundant sum to cover wear and tear of harness and the replacing of the horses.

Mr. CLANCY. To what account is charged the days on which the horses are standing idle? I will give an extreme example, and will put the average cost of a horse at just what is stated here. Suppose the horses work only one month during the year, do you simply charge their labour at the rate of $2.50 a day, and keep them for the whole year? The hon. gentleman has kept these horses at a certain expense, and he is not charging that to any other service. The statement is entirely misleading.

Mr. FISHER. I will take the hon. gentleman exactly at his word. I only wish to make a fair statement, and I take the statement shown as one. Six horses on a 200-acre farm would have to work practically 300 days in the year.

Mr. CLANCY. Do they work half that?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, as a matter of fact there are not ten days in the year in which the horses on the experimental farm are idle. I say that positively, because there is a great variety of work, and the horses are kept working all the time, every month in the year. In the winter time there is teaming to be done, hauling manure, and a great deal of teaming backwards and forwards to the city. That might not and would not be the case on an ordinary farm; but at the same time I think my hon. friend or any other farmer would arrange his work so that six horses on a 200-acre farm would be employed 300 days in the year. If he did not do that, his management of the farm would not be as economical and careful as it might be. The statement is based on a horse working 300 days in the year, which gives them about 15 days ordinary working days in which they would not do anything. The work of each team is charged at the rate of $2.50 per day, which I do not think is unreasonable. The details are given on page 59.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not think there is any man of experience in the use of horses in this House who will say that even in the most favourable weather, you can use a horse more than twenty days in a month. The hon. gentleman astounds me when he adheres to that calculation made to show that any man could employ a team of horses during 300 days in the year. If you can get a farmer in this House who will back that statement, I will make the hon. minister a public apology.

Mr. FISHER. We have at the farm the actual details of what every horse does every day, and I will incorporate a summary of that in next year's report.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman would also have to incorporate a certificate as to the perfect sanity and character of the man who would make such a statement.

Mr. ROBERT JOHNSTON. It is quite evident from the discussion we have had that the report of the Minister of Agriculture is completely misleading as regards the expenditures on the experimental farm. When this report of the Minister's Department is sent out, the public accept it of course as giving a correct statement of the facts; and if any one on the hustings were to declare that the experimental farm at Ottawa costs more than was set down in the report, no one would be inclined to believe him. But we have it amply proved in this debate that no less a sum than $19,000 has been left out in the statement of expenditure. That sum has been expended on the different experimental farms but not one dollar of it is accounted for in this report. Of course we can understand that the minister who not only has charge of the Department of Agriculture—the most important in the country and one which gives abundant scope for the exercise of all his energies and ability—but also at intervals takes charge of the Department of Militia, cannot be held strictly accountable, but it is high time that the people should know how this department is managed. Why should the people's money be spent in getting up a report which is absolutely incorrect? How are we to find out how much is spent on these farms? As the great taxpayers of this country, we have a right to have a proper report and not a partisan report. We have a right to a report that will enable us to make comparisons between the acts of this government and of their predecessors. I remember that when hon. gentlemen opposite were appealing to the country, they criticised these points of book-keeping and declared that if they were put in power they would submit the accounts to the public in such fashion that everybody might know how the money was spent. And they said: If we do not act in accordance with our professions, turn us out. The amount of money they are spending and the way they are accounting for it is a flat contradiction of every promise which they gave in this respect, and I believe that at the next appeal the country will take them at their word and turn them out. I hope that in the future we shall not have such a wrangle about these points but that the facts will be placed before the people so fairly and so clearly that there will be no difficulty in understanding what is the actual cost of these experimental farms.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to call attention to page 59 of the Experimental Farm Reports. It shows that for the twelve months from December 1st, 1902, to November 30th, 1903, the food of the horses was valued at $1,552.10. To care for the horses cost $560, making a total cost of $2,112.10 for 19 head, or $111.16 to feed and care for one horse for the year, or 37 cents per day, counting 300 working days in the year. Now, why confine it to the 300 working days of the year? These horses had to be kept for the 365 days of the year.

Mr. FISHER. The total cost of keeping each horse is $111.16, and if this were averaged over 365 days it would make less than 37 cents per day. This would cause a reduction in the apparent cost for each working day. If we were to do that, the hon. gentleman would have a right to complain that we did not provide for the keep of the horses for those days when they were not working. We have charged up against the 300 working days enough to cover the cost of the keep of the horses for the 365 days of the year.

Mr. CLANCY. The statement of the hon. minister is, perhaps, correct. If so, I was in error——

Mr. FISHER. I am sure my statement is the true explanation, and that the hon. gentleman's criticism was based upon a misapprehension. I would like to say to him also that I have an explanation about the comparative statement with regard to the horses (page 78), to which he referred. I have not seen the officer who is in charge of this department, but I can see through it now in a way I could not before. It says:

> In the case of horses, the services of the nineteen head are valued at $3,061.80, but since the labour of six horses is required to do the work on the 200-acre farm, only $2,041.20, or two-thirds of the value of their labour is credited to them.

The reason for that is this: The feed raised by the 200-acre farm feeds all the horses and the rest of the live stock on the farm that we are now taking account of. But the work of six of these horses is required for the 200-acre farm. Therefore, we have no right to credit all the 19 horses with doing work. But if we have 13 horses whose work is not applied to the 200-acre farm, but is given to the rest of the experimental farm establishment, then the 200-acre farm deserves to be credited with the value of the services of these 13 horses. For all practical purposes it is enough if one-third of the value of the services of all the horses is left out, because about one-third of the labour of all is applied to the 200-acre farm and two-thirds is applied to the other work in the experimental farm establishment.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) has pointed out that only six horses are doing the work. Are not the other 13 also working horses?

Mr. FISHER. Not all engaged in farm work. There is the horse that draws the 'bus to and from the farm, and the horse used for driving purposes. They have nothing to do with the 200-acre farm.

Mr. CLANCY. Then why should they be taken into account in the way of profit?

Mr. FISHER. Because the 200-acre farm feeds and provides for them.

Mr. CLANCY. But he is giving credit of $2,041 to six horses that are working.

Mr. FISHER. The six horses are necessary on the 200-acre farm, and their services are not counted. Their maintenance has to be provided by the 200-acre farm, and therefore they are not charged with their maintenance or credited with their work. But this 200-acre farm also supports 13 other horses, whose work is not necessary on the 200-acre farm. They might be kept elsewhere and put at outside work and, if they were, the 200-acre farm would have a right to be credited with the value of their services.

Mr. CLANCY. But they are not performing any.

Mr. FISHER. They are performing services for the rest of the establishment. The other parts of the establishment are benefiting by these horses that are maintained on the 200-acre farm. Suppose that the 200-acre farm raised 1,000 bushels of oats and that Dr. Saunders, as director, took the oats and sent them out to farmers all over the country, would it not be fair to credit the 200-acre farm with the 1,000 bushels of oats? You certainly ought to, just the same as if they were taken to the market and sold. So the hay, the oats, the meal and the work of the men are charged to the 200-acre farm, and are applied to the keep of the 13 horses which are not needed for the work on that farm. Therefore, we credit this item with two-thirds of the keep of 19 horses, only one-third of the 19 horses being needed for the farm, and we credit the farm with two-thirds of the keep of the horses which are not used.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman states that only 6 horses are employed on the 200 acre farm.

Mr. FISHER. The 13 horses are working for somebody else.

Mr. CLANCY. Here are 6 horses employed. If you have ten men and only employ five, you are certainly not going to pay wages to those you do not employ.

Mr. FISHER. These horses are working elsewhere, but they are fed and maintained there on the farm. Supposing the hon. member was a farmer and he required for his own use 4 horses. But he had an opportunity in the neighbourhood of running some teams for a lumber yard or a brick yard, and he kept on his farm 16 other horses and he fed them there, and fed the men and maintained them there. But if he got his wages for sending them out to work for others, would he not consider it right to credit his farm with so much of the wages that he got for letting out those horses? This is a similar instance. The 200 acre farm requires 6 horses, but it maintains and feeds 13 other horses which are used on another part of the experimental farm, and that other part must pay to the 200 acre farm the value of the services of those horses, and this item is the value of the services of those horses which is credited to the 200 acre farm.

Mr. CLANCY. Assuming the horses were of the same value, although only 6 of them worked out of the 19, it would mean the live stock were entitled to a credit of $2,041. On the other side of the account, the feed of course is charged up for the keep of the 19 horses. But there is no statement here showing how that $2,041 is arrived at.

Mr. FISHER. The paragraph above is not quite so clear as it might be. I did not understand it when I first read it.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman will see that each horse has to earn over $100, each one of the 19, because they are credited with $2,041.

Mr. FISHER. I have just been given a list of the work done by the other horses. There are 3 for the omnibus, 4 are used for the Horticultural Department, 3 or 4 keep the lawns in order, and 3 are riders. This makes up the 13 horses extra.

Mr. TAYLOR. And there are 13 men to look after them?

Mr. FISHER. The men who look after the horses go with them. But I think my hon. friend understands now the explanation which I have given.

Mr. CLANCY. I will understand if the hon. gentleman tells me how he arrives at what each horse earns, and how he earns it.

Mr. FISHER. The services of the horses are put down at $3,061.80.

Mr. CLANCY. How is that arrived at?

Mr. FISHER. I will have that worked out in a minute or two. Perhaps there are some other questions the hon. gentleman would like to ask me in the meantime.

Mr. CLANCY. I may say that I do not intend to prolong the debate. I only want to see how he arrives at that figure.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to know that myself. I take the figures from my officers as being correct, and I have no doubt they are. I have found, when I tested them by working them out, that they were correct.

Mr. CLANCY. In working them out, it might be well to make this further calculation. I am unable to understand why we should take six horses and credit two thirds of the value of their labour to them, as in the statement on page 78 of the report.

Mr. FISHER. The word 'their' in that statement on page 78 is improperly used. It refers not to the work of the six horses but of the nineteen horses.

Mr. BOYD. I would ask the minister what position Mr. W. S. Sparks occupies in the department and what his salary is.

Mr. FISHER. He is not now in the department nor in this country, but during the last winter he was employed for some institute work.

Mr. BOYD. At whose request was he employed in the institute work?

Mr. FISHER. He was introduced to me and in conversation discussed matters connected with horse breeding and training in this country. He had been recommended to me by a number of people and he asked me if he could not perform any service for the department. I then put him on to give addresses on horse training, &c., and he also acted as judge at various shows with the approval of the department.

Mr. BOYD. Was he employed permanently?

Mr. FISHER. No; he received so much a day and expenses in the usual way.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. I feel interested in these estimates because I am interested in agriculture. Every member in this House, no matter whether he is a practical farmer or a lawyer, is interested in agriculture simply because one half of all the exports of this country are the products of agriculture. Therefore anything that could be done to encourage farming and to induce the farmer to produce more productions of a better quality is of great good to our country. I think the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) is entitled to the thanks of the country for having elicited a good deal of information in reference to the false system of book-keeping that has been practised ever since confederation, apparently, in regard to the experimental farm. I hope that from this time forward the Minister of Agriculture will see that everything in connection with the farms is so placed that there will be nothing misleading about it and that every man reading the returns will be able to tell exactly how much the experimental farm costs us. The minister says that this system was inaugurated long before he became minister and therefore he claims that he is not responsible for it, but he knew about it and when he knew about it, he should have amended it. Therefore the minister will pardon me if I say that he should not be excused and cannot blame the hon. member for Leeds for bringing this matter up because it certainly is, as the hon. member for East Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour) says, misleading. Yesterday we had an agricultural discussion and I suppose it would be hardly proper for me to refer to it, but I may say that I voted against the minister yesterday afternoon simply because I considered that he had not discharged his duty in the matter of placing an official weigher in Montreal. That thing has been discussed and the matter settled, and I hope that the minister will see that the farmers of the country get justice, so that when they send their stuff to market there will be some one there with authority to stand between the buyer and seller and see that justice is done. This matter seems so far to have been neglected but I hope that the resolution will not be in vain. Every farmer on that side should have voted for it yesterday, and they would have done so if they had heard the question discussed but many of them were not in the House. I do not wish to make any further remarks on this subject but I would say that I am prepared to assist the Minister of Agriculture in everything that he can do to aid the farmers. Complaints have been made in reference to the cold storage systems that have been started in different parts of the Dominion. I think that this cold storage is all right and that inducements should be offered to start cold storage plants all over this country. There is no doubt but that ultimately they will be established in every city, town and village because they are a necessity and because they will enhance the value of all our perishable products. Therefore I think the minister is right when he encourages the farmers to make use of this system. I would like to send reports of the experimental farms to all the farmers in my riding, but I do not think I had better send them out unless there is a foot note to the effect that all the lighting and all the coal is charged to the Public Works Department. I think a farmer would make a very poor showing if he did not take into calculation the cost of fuel, wood, &c., on his farm. I think he would soon come out at the wrong end, because it is a matter of great importance, and $19,000 is about one-fifth of the cost of the whole experimental farm. Thus one-fifth of the real cost of running this experimental farm is charged to capital account or some other account. I hope that in the future this will all be set forth so plainly that he who runs may read.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) in reference to horses. A pair of horses earns $1.08, which would make 54 cents for one horse, and a man earns $1.41⅔ according to the average wages paid to teamsters. That leaves $1.08 and a small fraction for two horses, or 54 cents for each, which at 300 days would be $162 a year. For nineteen horses it would be $3,078. The figures here are $3,061.80, but that is due to the fact that one or two horses were sick and did not earn anything. Roughly speaking, two-thirds of the earnings are taken and credited to live stock on the farm and that leaves $2,041.20 as the earnings of the horses for outside work.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not believe it is possible for each horse to work 300 days in the year, but at all events we are dealing with the live stock section here and not with a 200 acre farm.

Mr. FISHER. I think there is something in the argument of my hon. friend but as the work of six horses was required for that 200 acre farm we credit their services to it.

Mr. CLANCY. In order to be consistent, the minister should revise these figures. Evidently he has mixed up the farm with the live stock.

Mr. SPROULE. How many thoroughbred cattle are on the farm, and to what breeds do they belong ?

Mr. FISHER. The statement on page 78 shows the breeds but does not say how many are pure and how many grade.

Mr. SPROULE. You have them mixed up. How do you make the returns ?

Mr. FISHER. These returns are the revenue from the animals and their increase in value ; if they decrease in value it would be deducted.

Mr. SPROULE. What do you do with the swine ?

Mr. FISHER. We breed them and sell them. The chief revenue is from young pigs for breeding purposes and the sale of fat pigs raised on experimental work to the butcher.

Mr. McGOWAN. Are the pigs all pure bred ?

Mr. FISHER. Not all, but most of them.

Patent Record, $5,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is an additional vote, caused by the increased numbers of patents issued. It is all for printing, and is paid over to the Printing Bureau. We get a larger revenue, of course.

Experimental farms, $10,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is to cover last year's expenditure, which is brought up to the amount I ask for this year.

Exhibitions, $45,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Does this include the St. Louis exhibition ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Whom have you sent as commissioner to that exhibition ?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. William Hutchison is the only commissioner.

Mr. FOWLER. What other officers are there ?

Mr. FISHER. There are a number of secondary officers, men in charge, besides certain officers who have been sent to explain our exhibits. I will get a list of them for the hon. gentleman, and in the meantime we can let the item stand.

Item allowed to stand.

For the branch of the Commissioner of Agriculture and Dairying, including live stock, dairy, cold storage, extension of markets, poultry, seed and fruit division ; employees paid from this sum not to be subject to the Civil Service Act, $220,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is the usual item for this branch of my department. It is the same amount as we have had for the year just past. Some expenditures which we have had during the last year will not be needed in the future, because the payments for cold storage on steamship lines are closed up, and we shall not have to spend the same amount for that service this year that we did last year ; but I propose to extend the service in other directions, so that we shall require about the same amount of money.

Mr. SPROULE. What work is being carried on under this branch ?

Mr. FISHER. In the first place, we have work of a general character in regard to the commerce and transportation of agricultural products. The branch is divided into seven main divisions, which are set out in the report of the department for the year. I will give the estimated expenditures for the ensuing year :

General head office	$31,000
Live stock division	34,000
Dairy division..	61,000
Cold storage division....	19,600
Fruit division..	25,500
Seed division..	17,900
Extension market	19,000
Poultry division..	15,000
Total..	$220,000

Mr. SPROULE. How many hands employed in the general head offices ?

Mr. FISHER. Besides the commissioner, whose salary is $5,000, there are employed Mr. O'Hara, Mrs. Henderson, Mr. Thomas, and several others and the messengers, whose aggregate salaries amount to $5,650. Then there is the publishing work, for which the clerical staff costs $1,500. There are also the renting of offices, $1,800 ; caretaker, $500 ; messenger, $365 ; printing and stationery, $3,500 ; travelling expenses, $1,800 ; and contingencies, $4,400. About $4,500 are left open to be allocated according to any plan that may be worked out during the year requiring extra expenditure.

Mr. SPROULE. What are you doing in the live stock line ?

Mr. FISHER. We provide lectures and assistance to various fat stock shows. My hon. friend no doubt attended the Guelph fat stock show and must have noticed the great interest taken there in the department where illustrations, demonstrations and lectures were delivered. The interest taken in these is simply wonderful and that is the work to which we specially devote ourselves.

Mr. SPROULE. How much do you pay for these lectures ?

Mr. FISHER. I propose next year to devote about $4,000 to the five shows.

Mr. SPROULE. Then you have $30,000 left.

Mr. FISHER. There have been established what are called straight stallion shows and breeding animal shows at different points. For these we have laid aside $1,000. We have undertaken work in connection with the ordinary fairs—the country and township local fairs. We have been trying to get those established on a fixed basis, so as to have a certain amount of similarity in the prize list and management. We hope to make these fairs model fairs. Our work in the Whitby fair was very flatteringly commented on.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the hon. gentleman's department co-operate with the local directors ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, these fairs are entirely managed by their local associations. We only advise them when they write and ask us. The live stock commissioner has had many experiences in that work when employed by the Ontario government as institute manager. That is, when they ask for a little help in this respect we give it. We have not been giving them any prizes or any money for them to spend ; but when they come and say that in this or that respect they are a little weak, we try, by sending them a judge or some one to help them in their management, to improve the quality, management and style of these fairs. We set aside $1,000 for this purpose.

Mr. SPROULE. Upon what principle do you divide it ? Does the minister give assistance to every one who applies ?

Mr. FISHER. A thousand dollars would not go far if we did that. We try to make conditions that we will give aid when the people do certain things. Speaking from memory the only fairs that have received assistance of this kind so far are those of Whitby and Richmond, Ontario.

Mr. SPROULE. This accounts for about $6,000 out of a vote of $34,000. What is the balance to be devoted to ?

Mr. FISHER. A part will be devoted to work in connection with auction sales of live stock in British Columbia, the Northwest Territories, Ontario and the maritime provinces. The live stock associations of these provinces have been arranging for auction sales of live stock, and we have been helping in the work. That will cost us according to our present plans $2,450. Then we have been helping local fairs with expert judges. Some years ago there was a good deal of dissatisfaction expressed as to the men obtainable as judges for small local fairs. The suggestion was made that we should try and supply competent men to judge the various classes exhibited. We have been able, by arrangement with well known judges of different classes of live stock, to secure their services. In response to the applications sent us from the local fairs, we have been able to supply a very considerable number of expert judges, sometimes officers of the departments and sometimes men whom we have secured from outside. We have had most appreciative letters from the different fairs where these gentlemen have acted, and the demand for their services is growing all the time. We have now hundreds of requests from all over the country to send judges of this or that class of live stock to the different fairs.

Mr. SPROULE. What do you pay these judges ?

Mr. FISHER. We pay them $3 a day and their travelling expenses. We do not pay for their maintenance at the place where the fair is held, but make it a rule that the people shall entertain them. We seek to arrange a circuit for each man so as to reduce the expense.

Mr. SPROULE. Are only Grits employed on this job ?

Mr. FISHER. Not at all. I could give a long list of men thus employed who are strong supporters of the opposition. I do not say there are no Grits, because, as the hon. gentleman knows, many of the best live stock men in Canada are Grits. But I might mention, for instance, Mr. Joseph Brethour who is one of the leading swine breeders of the country and who has always been a good Conservative. We have employed him for the last two or three years. Another name that occurs to me is Robert Johnston, of South Ontario, who never cast a Grit vote in his life, I believe.

Mr. SPROULE. How much of this vote will be used in this service ?

Mr. FISHER. About $3,700. One feature introduced with regard to the work of these judges has proven very acceptable. We have asked the judges to explain their reasons for their judgment, illustrating their talk with the animals in the ring. In this way they point out exactly why one animal was given first prize, another second prize and another none. Under the old practice, the judge made the award and nobody knew why—sometimes the audience found it pretty hard to understand. But we have insisted that our judges give reasons for their opinions. I have been told by many farmers personally that it is a grand thing to give the public in this way the opinions of competent judges.

Mr. BLAIN. When a man is sent out to judge, let us say, horses, at a fair, does he become the absolute judge of that department ? Are the prizes awarded on his statement alone, or does he co-operate with the local judges ?

Mr. FISHER. The one-judge system at fairs is being more generally adopted. Our judges generally act alone. But, of course, we only send them out on request.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that where a board of directors send in word that they require the services of a judge the minister will send out a competent man at the expense of the department ?

Mr. FISHER. We have been doing a great deal of that, making no charge except that we require that the people shall entertain the judges.

Mr. BLAIN. That is not quite what I wanted to know. Suppose that twenty counties ask for a judge, will the minister send a judge to each of them ?

Mr. FISHER. Wherever we can. But if we are not able to get competent judges if we will not send out anybody in whom we have not the most perfect confidence.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the minister send to the same place repeatedly ? For instance, I understand that some judges were sent to Whitby last year ; will he send judges every year to the same place ?

Mr. FISHER. I think so. We sent to thirty-three fairs last year altogether.

Mr. SPROULE. What other lines does the minister intend to take up that will require the balance of this item ?

Mr. FISHER. We have been doing a good deal in the way of institute lectures. The local governments, as a general rule, carry on institute work within the several provinces. They are constantly applying to us for assistance. The province of Ontario is very well equipped in that respect, but the other provinces have difficulty in getting competent men to act as lecturers. My department has a number of officers in its employ whom we are able to spare for this service during part of the year. In New Brunswick as a rule, the institutes meet for three or four weeks at one period of the year and then for three or four weeks at another season. We try if possible to provide speakers on such and such a subject who will go round to the various constituencies, and we have been able to supply a certain number of men to meet all demands. If we can secure thoroughly competent men to do that work we are glad to do so. When an official of the department is sent out on that business his expenses are charged to this item in the estimates. We cover all the provinces to a certain extent, but we do less in Ontario, because the local government is attending to that.

Mr. SPROULE. What consideration do you allow them ?

Mr. FISHER. Three dollars a day and their expenses. That is the price the Ontario government pays. When they are doing this work they are not paid their salary in addition. If their salary is by the year, they do not get the $3 a day, they get nothing but their expenses. We have men employed who are not on salary, but who engage in this business for one or two months in the winter or in the summer. These get $3 a day and expenses. But when a man is an officer of the department on a salary, he gets nothing extra.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman give us a list of all those men employed last year and bring down the amount that each got ?

Mr. FISHER. I will lay that on the table.

Mr. SPROULE. How much have you for that ?

Mr. FISHER. We take $3,575. Twenty-eight speakers were employed last year, who attended 199 meetings. Generally two of them go together, in some cases three, and in some cases one. Then we had last winter a national stock convention of live stock men who came here on invitation of the farm, to organize a live stock association somewhat on the lines of an organization of a similar character in the United States and of one in Great Britain. We hope to continue that effort, and the department will incur some expense. There is the printing of a report for distribution, stenographic expenses, and expenses in bringing people from a distance, officials who are chosen, by the local associations.

Then we are working out what is called a standard of excellence, with a bulletin or report of the work and conclusions of the live stock association. We expect that to cost $2,500. The officers of the department and the leading breeders of the country are trying to establish what we might call a score, by means of score cards, or standard of the different breeds of animals in the country, which we call a standard of excellence. We have a large number of breeds of animals, and the judges at fairs find that the types which breeders have to aim at in their breeding are not well described. There is hardly any description of it, and the live stock commissioner with some assistance in the department is working to establish and to get out a book of standard excellence for the different breeds. It is rather an elaborate piece of work and a difficult one. It has to be done in conjunction with the leading breeders of each particular breed. Some bulletins will be issued in connection with that work. We shall have to spend money in the way of getting information, and employing a clerk to compile it. Then we will have to pay for printing and issuing that information There are a great many cuts and illustrations of the typical animals of each breed which will be included, and these will be expensive. Then bulletins on the subject will be issued and will have to be paid for, as well as the printing and distribution.

Then there is work in connection with a national live stock record. My hon. friend will remember that the meeting of the live stock men this winter asked us to establish a Dominion record. That is a pretty difficult task. There are local records to-day in different parts of the country. We wish to carry out the views and ideas of the live stock men of that convention, and I think their aim is a very laudable one. The object is to have one thoroughly recognized record for every particular breed in this country. At the present time there are records in Quebec, Nova Scotia, Ontario and in the west, but one does not recognize the other in every case. The consequence is that a man may buy an animal to-day which he is told is a thoroughbred, which is registered, and he may be given a pedigree and certificate of registration. But when he comes to sell that animal to somebody else, the buyer looks up some other record to find the animal, and he does not find it, and he says this animal is not a pure bred. Of course there is a lot of dispute and difficulty in consequence. Farmers are wasting their money and are being deceived, not intentionally perhaps, but at the same time are being deceived in the purchase of pedigree live stock. The live stock men ask us to work toward the establishment of a national record. It will be a difficult task, a great many different and sometimes conflicting interests will have to be reconciled. At the same time I want to try and bring it about, and that will involve some expenditure of money. We shall need to bring people together from different parts of the country to discuss the matter.

Then there is the suggestion of a live stock census—quite a different thing from the census we have heard so much about. There is being an effort made to improve the quality of particular dairy cows. One of the most effective pieces of work ever done, I think, in the improvement of dairy animals has been done by ex-Governor Hoard of Wisconsin, a well known dairy writer and authority of the United States. Governor Hoard edits and publishes a journal known as 'Hoard's Dairyman,' in the neighbourhood of his own home, where he has not only a printing office but a record office. He has been making records of the different herds of animals, and of individual animals, and showing the difference there is between the herds in different parts of the country.

The records which he has already collected are very startling and have attracted a great deal of attention in the dairy world. I venture to say that no work could be done which would do so much to improve our dairy animals as the keeping of records to show the great difference of production and of work, if I may call it so, of our dairy cows. I want to inaugurate that kind of work and to try to bring it about that our dairy interests throughout the country will not only study as to which is the best herd, but as to which of the animals in each herd is doing good work and which is running her owner into debt, for I am sorry to say that there are a great many cows in this country which are not only of no use to their owners but are worse than useless because they run them into debt. A great deal of work of this kind has been done in Denmark where the dairy interests are the best organized of any in the world. I have had a report upon the system established there for this purpose and it seems to have worked out most satisfactorily. If we can accomplish one-tenth, I might almost say one-hundredth, of the good results which have been accomplished by this method in Denmark in Canada during the next ten years, we will add $1,000,000 per annum to the value of the product of the same number of cows.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the minister explain the superiority of the Danish over the Canadian system ?

Mr. FISHER. The organization there is very superior. They have been doing work among their farmers which we have not yet been able to accomplish. The dairymen have formed among themselves associations for this kind of work and they keep records of each cow and then compare notes. Each association employs an expert to make tests of the milk, for butter-fat, &c. They have also adopted more generally than any other country in the world the co-operation system in dairying by which the factories are owned and operated by joint stock companies, the shares of which are held by the men who supply the milk. In that way each and every one is interested personally in his own success and in their joint success, with the result that the work is carried on in a better manner and with better organization than in any other place in the world.

Mr. BLAIN. What kind of cows do they use ?

Mr. FISHER. Chiefly the dairy breed which is native to Denmark, called, I think, the Anglian.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. Carried.

Mr. SPROULE. No it will not be carried for four hours unless we get the information.

Mr. FISHER. Certainly the hon. gentleman will get all the information he desires.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. Carried.

Mr. SPROULE. We come next to the dairying.

Mr. FISHER. We have for dairying $60,000.

Mr. SPROULE. To what extent have cheese makers availed themselves of these cheese curing rooms ?

Mr. FISHER. We have the four establishments and they have been filled to overflowing with the exception of that at St. Hyacinthe. Those at Cowansville, Brockville and Woodstock were full to overflowing all season and this year that at St. Hyacinthe is also full.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any charge for the use of the rooms ?

Mr. FISHER. We have taken a certain amount of the profit. There are two profits due to the curing of cheese in this room. The cheese is of a better quality so that there is an average increase in price of about one-eighth of a cent a pound. There is also less shrinkage in cheese cured in these cool curing rooms than in the ordinary curing rooms and we have taken for ourselves the difference in the shrinkage.

Mr. SPROULE. Do cheese shrink at all if properly cooled ? I wonder what my hon. friend from Perth (Mr. MacLaren) says to that ?

Mr. A. F. MacLAREN. I was going to ask the minister about the paraffining of cheese. Cheese which has been paraffined does not shrink, but cheese which has not been paraffined does shrink. I have known cheese which has not been paraffined to shrink from one to three pounds a box in ordinary cellars or curing rooms in two or three months, but if the cheese is paraffined there is very little shrinkage. I would like to have the minister's opinion as to that.

Mr. FISHER. The cheese in our curing rooms are not paraffined until they are about ten days old. We experimented with paraffining cheese at the very commencement, but now we wait until it is ten days old. As we know, the cheese does shrink in the first ten days of the curing, but after they are paraffined they do not shrink much more.

Mr. A. F. MacLAREN. Do you still paraffine cheese as you put them in storage, when they are ten days old ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. MacLAREN. Do you think it is a good idea ?

Mr. FISHER. My expert officers think so.

Mr. MacLAREN. It would be a great mistake to paraffine them too soon and before a certain amount of evaporation takes place. It would not be a bad idea to issue to the cheese-makers throughout the country instructions as to paraffining, because sometimes they paraffine them too soon, and sometimes when they are too old.

Mr. FISHER. That information has been given.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it the intention to extend these four central stations ?

Mr. FISHER. These were established as a test in the curing of cheese, and also as a test of the feasibility of collecting cheese for curing under one roof. These four establishments were quite sufficient to carry out this test. I do not think it will be necessary for the government to increase the number of these curing rooms, but this year I intend to undertake the work along somewhat different lines. A good many people think that the system of central curing rooms is not so economical and efficient on the whole as to induce a large number of factories to improve their own curing rooms. I have been arranging this year to fit up and improve four ordinary cheese factories where the cheese would be cured under ordinary conditions, except that there would be the addition of a room where the temperature could be controlled. I propose to spend a little money on that.

Mr. SPROULE. How much ?

Mr. FISHER. I think $5,000.

Mr. A. F. MacLAREN. Where are these factories to be located ?

Mr. FISHER. In the Lake St. John district. In that district the dairying is making great strides, but still they are not in a central district where they can get the advantage of these curing rooms, and we intend to fit up four factories there to illustrate this kind of work.

Mr. TAYLOR. In reference to the paraffining of cheese, I want to read the following extract from the trade bulletin :

> The London special correspondent of the 'Trade Bulletin' writes that journal 'Bristol buyers advise me this week that there is too much waxed cheese coming in, and as they have objected to this before, it is a pity makers do not take the hint.'
> The 'Trade Bulletin' thereupon returns to the discussion of the subject and says : 'It is to be regretted that the government Agricultural Department at Ottawa should have advocated the waxing of cheese with paraffine by factorymen, especially as there is such great objection to paraffined cheese on the other side of the Atlantic, and as our makers are supposed to study the requirements of the trade there, it is to be hoped that they will discontinue this highly objectionable practice. A Montreal exporter while in England last fall was instructed by three firms there not to ship them a box of waxed cheese as their customers strongly objected to them, on the grounds that the cheese lost considerable weight ; one importer stating that he would not buy waxed cheese unless he was allowed 2 pounds per box. What is required in the English market is cheese with a bright natural skin in the summer time, and cheese made in the fall should appear in the natural condition with a nice dry green mold on the skin, showing a little maturity. Paraffined cheese prevents this natural appearance, besides causing loss in weight to the retailer. As so many objections continue to be raised in the great consuming centres of Great Britain against waxing cheese, surely our factorymen will not persist in a practice that is calculated to injure the enviable prestige of their goods in the English market.

Cheese have to evaporate, and if you paraffine them and seal them, just so soon as the retailer cuts them on his counter they will evaporate, and he will suffer loss. The British market is protesting against this system. This question and the question of the cool curing rooms was discussed at the Brockville Board of Trade a few days ago. The minister is not going to extend the cool curing rooms, and the reason is that his friends are protesting against it. Mr. Evertts, one of the strongest supporters of the present government in the constituency, has this to say :

> M. K. Evertts, the extensive cheese manufacturer, who now resides in Smith's Falls, spoke at considerable length, roundly denouncing the Ottawa government on its dairy policy, particularly the introduction of the experimental cheese curing stations, which he characterized as the biggest humbug ever imposed upon the people.

That is the language used by one of the supporters of the Minister of Agriculture, a gentleman who is a large manufacturer of cheese in the constituency of Leeds, and who is opposed to these cool curing rooms. As a matter of fact, the one at Brockville is not central, but we find that the government last year spent $1,100 to pay the farmers for drawing their cheese to it, because they would not do so without that inducement. Mr. Evertts controls some eighteen or twenty factories, and he says that this system introduced by the Minister of Agriculture is the biggest humbug ever perpetrated upon the people. That remark does not come from a Tory source ; it comes from a gentleman who is one of the strongest supporters of the present government and who is one of the largest cheese manufacturers in the country. The Minister of Agriculture says he will spend $5,000 in the Lake St. John district this year, and I find that last year $3,475 were paid as bonuses in Quebec, that Prince Edward Island got $150, and that Ontario got $325.

Mr. FISHER. For what ?

Mr. TAYLOR. I believe that any factory that puts in a load of sawdust and a few loads of ice gets a bonus.

Mr. FISHER. These are all butter factories ; not cheese factories.

Mr. TAYLOR. If instead of spending $82,000 on these illustration stations he would give it in bonuses to factories producing a certain quantity, he would have object lessons all over the country, and not have the thing confined to four places all over the Dominion.

Mr. FISHER. These bonuses are under a system which has been established for seven years. A bonus of $100 is paid to any butter factory which would establish a cold storage room, and this has induced factories to put in cool storage rooms and has contributed very materially to the improved quality of our butter. I believe that nearly three-fourths of all the butter factories in Canada have adopted this system. There are a great many more butter factories in Quebec than in Ontario. Every one knows that while Ontario is the great cheese-producing province, Quebec is the great butter producing province. The people of Quebec, with their natural enterprise, put up these butter factories first and got the bonuses. A great many of these factories were drawing bonuses before, but a good many did not begin until last year.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you give a bonus wherever there is a butter factory ?

Mr. FISHER. We give a bonus wherever there is a butter factory fitted up with cold storage and otherwise equipped in accordance with the requirements. We give $50 in the first year, and $25 in each of the two succeeding years, if it is operated, making $100 in three years. I am glad to know that over two-thirds of all the butter factories in Canada have earned the bonus, the result being that during the last year or two we have not expended quite as much as we did a few years ago. The province of Quebec is increasing its number of factories, and consequently its production of butter very largely and rapidly, and therefore draws more of these bonuses than other parts of the country. All other parts of the country, however, are free to draw it wherever the conditions are fulfilled. My hon. friend spoke about the paraffining of cheese. I am free to admit that there has been a difference of opinion on that subject. When paraffined cheese was first sent to England the trade viewed it with some suspicion, and in some instances sent out instructions to buyers not to buy it. But we have this noteworthy fact, that during the present season at every one of these stations the cheese in the cool-curing rooms has been all paraffined, and this cheese has been sold under a special brand and at a higher price than any other cheese in the neighbourhood.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Evertts contradicts that.

Mr. FISHER. I cannot help that ; the facts contradict Mr. Evertts. My hon. friend knows perfectly well that cool-cured cheese is sold in a class by itself and commands from one-eighth to one-quarter cent per pound more than any other cheese sold on the same board. Mr. Evertts is a well-known dairyman, and if he said that at all, he must have said it over a year ago.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was less than a year ago. It was last fall.

Mr. FISHER. That was when the prejudice still existed with regard to paraffined cheese. I admit that when the cheese was paraffined at a day old, the results were not as good as they are to-day, when it is paraffined at ten days old.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Evertts did not refer to the paraffining at all. It was the cool-curing he referred to.

Mr. FISHER. I thought the hon. gentleman said that statement had reference to the paraffining. I can only say that the price obtained to-day for cheese which comes out of the cool-curing rooms is sufficient to refute that statement, whether it applies to paraffining or cool-curing.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you pay all the cost of this system ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. When we first established these factories, nobody knew what it would cost, and we thought it advisable to facilitate as much as we could the dairymen sending their cheese to them.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you continue that system now ?

Mr. FISHER. It is proposed to continue it this season ; but in another season it will not be worked out on the same basis. As an illustration I may state that this year a factory at Brockville which had not been sending its cheese to the cool-curing room came to the manager of the station and begged to be allowed to do so. The manager asked the reason, and he was told that it was because a Montreal firm had informed them that they could give a quarter of a cent per pound more for the whole season's output if it were put into the government cool-curing room than if it were cooled at home. I am satisfied that in another year all the factories will draw their cheese to the cool-curing room, because we have proved the advantages of it.

Mr. SPROULE. That may have been a device of the buyer of the cheese. The devices of the trade are very numerous.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think the hon. gentleman need assign that motive.

Mr. A. F. MacLAREN. When cheese is properly cured, put into cold storage at the proper age, and properly paraffined, its quality is greatly improved. The great difficulty is the lack of education on the part of those dealing with the cheese when to paraffine it. Last year a great many cheeses were paraffined too green and put into the cold storage room too green; but now they are doing better and getting a higher price for the cheese. It is all a matter of education, and when that is accomplished the paraffining and cold storage of cheese will be of great benefit to the people of this country.

Mr. TAYLOR. Speaking of the cool curing stations, Mr. Evertts, said:

The money used in the erection and carrying on of these curing rooms was a useless expenditure. Mr. Evertts claimed that the results achieved did not warrant their continuance in operation. They did not aid the patrons in obtaining one-sixteenth of a cent more for their cheese than others.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, this year.

Mr. TAYLOR. (reading)——

He challenged a single person to contradict him. These rooms were held up as models for others to follow. How many had built curing rooms after the fashion of the Brockville pine monument? Not a one. And as to the cost of construction, operation, &c., the country was yet in darkness, notwithstanding a deliberate promise made by Professor Ruddick last year to give such information. Mr. Evertts said the dairymen were getting their eyes opened. There was too much playing to the gallery by men in high places.

If anybody gets the benefit, it is the buyer, because the seller does not put his cheese into these curing rooms. No farmer or manufacturer will hold his cheese two or three weeks. He sells to the buyers every week, and if any one puts the cheese in to these cool curing rooms, it must be the buyer. Take the Brockville board and you will see that the cheeses sold there have not been in the cold storage rooms. The department paid $1,111.06 for hauling cheese to the station and deliberately bought a lot and put it in these rooms and are still holding it. They have not sold it yet, if the return brought down is correct.

Mr. FISHER. I have not got this week's sales at Brockville, but I have the report of the 27th of June and I find that the prices then were eight cents, but that the cool cured cheese brought 8 3-16, 8⅛, 8¼, 8⅜ and 8½.

An hon. MEMBER. Who got the benefit?

Mr. FISHER. The patrons and the bankers did. The buyer will get another benefit because when he sells in England he will get ⅛ of a cent more or ¼ of a cent more for this cool cured cheese than for the other. What is more, those paraffine cheeses that came from the cool curing room weighed more per hundred pounds of the milk put into them than did the other cheese which was sold for eight cents. So that the patrons who had their cheese in the cool room gets the advantage both ways. My hon. friend has said that no one has taken advantage of this. Why, right in Mr. Evertt's own district, I have a list of the factories who have cool curing rooms on the model of the one at Brockville, but of course not on the same scale. There are these cool curing rooms at Oxford Mills, Patterson's Corners, the Farmer's Own Factory, the Enterprise Factory and a number of others. And there is a factory with these cool rooms in the Smith's Falls section, so that the hon. gentleman will see that these factories have taken example of the model we have set them and are doing the work themselves. The object is to improve the dairy business, and we have to expend money for the purpose of getting at the facts. Then we can give the facts and data to the public and the public can make use of them. The results are not to be estimated by the returns of any individual outlay, but by the advantage which the whole industry reaps from the expenditure. That is the principle we go on in our agricultural investigations.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not a fact that the minister has purchased cheese which he has not yet sold?

Mr. FISHER. When we were making the experiment we tried to put in one or two cheese in each case from the same vat—two of them in the cool curing room and two of them in an ordinary curing room. As those cheese belonged to the patrons, it would not be fair to experiment with them at the expense of the experimenters. Therefore we bought them, and as last year the cheese market was rather demoralized, a good many we bought early in the season could not sell to advantage.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought that last year was a great cheese market.

Mr. FISHER. If the hon. gentleman will ask the buyers and sellers he will find it was not. The patrons got high prices, but we were buyers and were in the same position as many who bought cheese at prices in the early part of the season which it has never reached since.

Mr. SPROULE. How much was the aggregate loss?

Mr. FISHER. The year before there was a profit and last year there was a loss. The whole transaction is not yet finished, but the loss will be under $2,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the minister know how much of that is due to the bad system of keeping and curing cheese and how much to the fall in the market ?

Mr. FISHER. There was no bad system of keeping and curing. The cheese that was cured sold at a higher price than the other.

Mr. A. F. MacLAREN. If you paid the average price this spring, there would be necessarily a loss of two or three cents a pound after paying interest and storage.

Mr. FISHER. They have been shipped to England, but we have not yet got the returns. We had to keep them for experimental purposes in order to judge of the effects of cool-curing as against the ordinary curing. Had we shoved them off on the market, we would not have been able to test them.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought that by the fall the cheese were pretty well sold off.

Mr. FISHER. Not so soon as that. In any case it would not do to shove these cheese off on the market a few days after they were bought.

Mr. SPROULE. But the hon. gentleman says he got them from week to week commencing last May. Surely they did not need to be kept until this May.

Mr. FISHER. I am told that they were sold at an average of three or four months old. But we cannot make up a statement of the exact details until we get the returns from England.

Mr. SPROULE. And the hon. gentleman lost about $2,000 on the transaction ?

Mr. FISHER. About that.

Mr. SPROULE. That is an admirable example to set the farmers.

Mr. FISHER. Even if we had bought these cheese as an ordinary commercial transaction we might have lost on them, as business men have lost this year. But, we had to keep the cheese regardless of the condition of the market in order to carry on the test we were making. Had we shoved them on the market to take advantage of a temporary rise in price, we might better never have bought them at all, because our tests would not have been carried out and our report could not have been made.

Mr. SPROULE. That is about on a par with the explanation given by the boy as to why the rabbit climbed the hemlock tree—he had to climb it, the dog was so close behind him.

Mr. TAYLOR. I find that in 1902-3, the minister purchased for the Woodstock cool-curing room, $3,085 worth of cheese, and in 1903-4, $6,829 worth. Now, can he tell us why he wanted to buy about $10,000 worth of cheese ? And will he say, in view of these purchases, that he has not been speculating in cheese ? I have the reports for the other cool-curing rooms here, and I find that altogether he bought about $40,000 or $50,000 worth of cheese. The cheese that he bought for Cowansville in 1902-3 he sold at a loss of $224.78. For the next year he bought $4,103.47 worth, from which he has a revenue of $1,370. But in this return he says that the cheese for that year is not all disposed of and so the revenue is not all in.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 155) for the relief of Annie Christman.—Mr. Calvert.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Mr. FOWLER. I was asking the minister before six o'clock about the salary of the assistant to the commissioner, at St. Louis, Mr. E. P. Eastman.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Eastman receives $7 a day to cover everything. He also receives his transportation from his home to St. Louis and back at the close of the exhibition. That is what I pay to all of those of that status.

Mr. FOWLER. Is the minister aware that he is not a British subject ?

Mr. FISHER. No, I was not aware of that.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Eastman is not a British subject, he is an American. He has been resident for some years in New Brunswick but has always refused to become a naturalized British subject and remains an American citizen to this day. I think the minister could not have been aware of that.

Mr. FISHER. No I was not.

Mr. FOWLER. I suppose the minister will follow up the course which I believe is being adopted with respect to American engineers on the Grand Trunk Pacific and will at once have the appointment cancelled. It seems to me there would be enough Canadian applicants for a position of that kind and that it should be given to a Canadian rather than to a foreign citizen.

Mr. FISHER. I certainly intended to appoint Canadians and I will inquire into that matter.

Mr. FOWLER. If the minister finds that this person is an American citizen I would like to know what course he will take.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to inquire into all the circumstances of the case before making a definite answer, but certainly my policy would be to employ Canadians under all circumstances.

Mr. FOWLER. I can scarcely conceive of any circumstance which would justify an appointment of this kind. The fact that this gentleman has resided for some time within the borders of Canada would not be a justification, if the gentleman has persistently refused to become a Canadian citizen. His appointment would be worse under these circumstances than if he had been on this side only a few months and had not gained that knowledge which would convince him of the superiority of Canadian over American citizenship. I would like to have a straight expression of opinion from the minister as to what he would do if the facts bear out my statement.

Mr. FISHER. If the hon. gentleman's statement is absolutely accurate all through it would appear to be an exaggerated case. I can, however imagine that a man might reside in this country for many years and not become naturalized. In my own county which is a border district I have known men to live in Canada for 20 or 30 years who have never gone through the form of naturalization, and the question of their citizenship has never come up unless they have sought to vote at an election and have been challenged. Of course if my hon. friend is correct in saying this gentleman has persistently refused in an offensive way to become a Canadian citizen that would have to be taken into consideration. I would not care to say more than I have, that in a general way my policy would be to employ Canadians only, and if an individual in the government employ showed himself to be antagonistic to the nationality of Canada I do not think it would be wise to retain him in our employment.

Mr. FOWLER. When I say he refused I mean that he refused by neglecting to do so although the matter was brought many times to his attention because he had on several occasions tried to vote and had been challenged, run out of the booth and refused the chance to vote. Thus the matter has been brought very closely to his attention and it certainly must be some inherent dislike to Canadian citizenship that has prevented his becoming naturalized. He has been an active politician outside of voting but he has never been permitted to vote because he would not become a Canadian citizen although reaping all the benefits of Canadian citizenship.

Mr. FISHER. I will look into the matter carefully.

Mr. BLAIN. What will the total cost of the St. Louis exhibition be ?

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that we have spent in the neighbourhood of $125,000 for the past fiscal year and that the total cost will be between $275,000 and $300,000 according to expectation.

Mr. BLAIN. Is not that very much larger than was anticipated ?

Mr. FISHER. I think, speaking from memory, that I estimated it would be about $250,000 to $275,000.

For the branch of the Commissioner of Agriculture and Dairying, including live stock, dairy, cold storage, extension of markets, poultry, seed and fruit division ; employees paid from this sum not to be subject to the Civil Service Act, $220,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. The day before yesterday when we were discussing poultry stations and chicken feeding, I understood the minister to say that the poultry, owing to the experimental way in which they were fed and marketed, realized 10, 12, and 15 cents per pound. Now I find in the Auditor General's Report, that from the Alberton station, P.E.I., there were sold to Montreal 321 pounds, for $16.05 of these specially fed, scientifically killed chickens, packed in a crate and sent in cold storage to Montreal, realizing 5 cents a pound. From Mount Stewart, P.E.I., there were sent 52 cases to Great Britain, 2,466 pounds, realizing $236.15, or a fraction over 9 cents per pound, less freight and all expenses. Of 433 pounds of poultry from Rogersville, N.B., 201 pounds were sold in Montreal, realizing $10.05, or 5 cents per pound. From Bondville, Que., 11 cases were sold in Montreal, 558 pounds, realizing $40.26, or 7 cents per pounds, after deducting freight expenses. From Chicoutimi there were fourteen cases sold to Great Britain, 557 pounds, for $33.25, or 6 cents and a fraction per pound. Holmesville, Ont. —my hon. friend dilated for a long time on the great showing made by Holmesville—I see there were 59 cases, containing 750 chickens, weighing 2,617 pounds, sold in Great Britain and realizing $97.92, or 3¾ cents per pound. Now, any old woman in the country, catching a scrub chicken, twisting its neck her own way, could pluck the feathers off it and sell it for a good deal more than these chickens that were killed scientifically, packed in crates, put in cold storage and sent to Great Britain and sold for 3¾ cents per pound. Renfrew—I am sorry my hon. friend from Renfrew (Mr. Wright) is not here ; I find in the Auditor General's Report D—112 what was done at Renfrew. There were sold to Great Britain twelve cases, 625 pounds, for $43.84, or 7 cents per pound. That is what the chickens brought raised in Renfrew. Now these are just a few samples, and I want the minister to explain why he made the statement the day before yesterday with regard to the chickens that were experimented on, when some of them did not bring as much as the cost of their food, to say nothing about any other expenses ; they did not realize as much money as was paid out for the chickens and for the food they ate. Why, these chickens sent from Holmesville to Great Britain only brought 3¾ cents per pound.

It must be either that the chickens were spoiled after being scientifically fed, or in the killing process their necks were broken the wrong way. Something must have damaged the flavour of the meat, or it would have brought more than that; or it was perhaps the defective cold storage of the hon. gentleman. I want the hon. gentleman to explain how that came about.

Mr. SPROULE. He might also remember the statement he made yesterday, which was supported by the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. Wright), that owing to the splendid way the chickens were fattened, the attractiveness of the food to the human family, the market had been wonderfully increased, and people were consuming much more; the market had increased and the chickens realized a larger price.

Mr. FISHER. I have not got the details here to show why some of these lots were sold at those low prices. But right alongside of them my hon. friend will see there are other instances where chickens did sell at 12 and 13 cents a pound. I have not got the details of these sales at low prices. There must have been something wrong, but what it was I cannot tell. What I read the other night was a statement of those men who had sold at the prices indicated, who had watched the operation of these stations, and had themselves sold the chickens at the prices I gave. The chickens were fattened on the principles taught at those stations, which these gentlemen themselves had managed successfully in that way. There must be some explanation for the low prices, perhaps in regard to the export, or something of that kind.

Mr. FOWLER. Was the station in Prince Edward Island in charge of a man named Haszard, who is now the hon. member for West Queen's ?

Mr. FISHER. That station was not in charge of Mr. Haszard. It was in charge of a Charlottetown gentleman who was recommended by Mr. Haszard to run that station, and for a little while the accounts of the station went through Mr. Haszard's hands. But he was not then a member of the House. Because the accounts went through his hands for a little while his name appears in the Auditor General's Report. As a matter of fact he was simply the medium of communication between the department and the man who was doing the work at that station.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that man still in charge; I think he was not a very successful operator ?

Mr. FISHER. That station is closed and I believe the man who had charge of it is doing business on his own account.

Mr. FOWLER. The same business.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, fattening and selling chickens.

Mr. FOWLER. The cost of that station was $290 and the return $6. I hope he will do better than that on his own account.

Mr. FISHER. If the hon. gentleman had the full information he would find the circumstances different.

Mr. FOWLER. That is what the Auditor General's Report showed.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, but the Auditor General's Report closes on the 30th of June, and while the expenditure appears one year the receipts would appear in the next year.

Mr. SPROULE. That does not account for it, because for two or three years in succession the expenditure has been very much larger than the receipts. Yesterday the minister told us with a flourish of trumpets that his cold storage was perfection, and that the method adopted for fattening chickens was perfection, but now we find that the chickens fattened at Holmesville under his scientific system were sold in England for three and a half cents per pound, so that either the cold storage or the fattening process is a failure. Will the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Holmes) explain ?

Mr. BLAIN. Is it the intention of the department to continue the chicken fattening stations as heretofore ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. Occasionally we close some up and then we start another in a different locality so as to educate the people in the vicinity of each station, and in some cases the men in charge go into business on their own account. I have promised to start one or two in Manitoba, and one or two in British Columbia next year in compliance with the wishes of the people, who are anxious to have them.

Mr. SPROULE. How many stations are now in operation ?

Mr. FISHER. Seventeen.

Mr. SPROULE. What was the revenue from, and the expenditure on these stations last year ?

Mr. FISHER. That would have to be figured out.

Mr. TAYLOR. I can give my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) the information. According to the Auditor General's Report these seventeen stations cost last year $14,929.49; the revenue from them was $4,327.85 and the net loss to the country $10,601.64.

Mr. SPROULE. That's a splendid lesson for the farmers of the country.

Mr. TAYLOR. More than that; taking the cost of the feed and the cost of the chickens, not including labour or any other expense, the loss was $2,693.66. At Holmesville, there was a difference between the sales and the cost of the chickens and the feed of $363. We are told that this is accounted for because the chickens had their necks twisted the wrong way and they sold for only three and three-quarter cents per pound in England. At Bondville, P.Q., the cost of chickens and feed was $889, the sales brought $485, and the loss $404. The Bondville chickens sold for five cents a pound in Montreal and some shipped to England from Holmesville brought only three and three-quarter cents to seven and a half cents per pound. This proves that either the cold storage or the fattening system is defective.

Mr. FISHER. No one ought expect that the work of these stations should be covered by the sales, but there is some justification for what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) says. I believe it is correct to say that in some cases the chickens have not sold for as much as the food and the first cost of the chickens. I have been inquiring and I have found that there have been mistakes made and some leakages. The management of some of these stations cannot be allowed to continue. I do not expect that the sales of the chickens will cover the teaching and illustration work, but they certainly should pay for the prime cost and the cost of the feed. There is no question about that; there is no excuse for anything else and I am now having it thoroughly investigated to see just where the leakage is. It is abundantly possible to buy chickens in the ordinary markets from the farmers, fatten them, and sell them at a profit. That has been done over and over again in these stations. There are instances in which it has not been done. I believe that in some cases they have bought poor chickens. In other cases they have been incited by competition to buy too many chickens and to pay too much for them. The proper control has not been exercised over these operations ; but I expect to correct that, so that such instances as my hon. friend has cited will not be found in future. But I think it is important that the work should go on in the country, because I know how successful it has been in many ways, and how it has resulted in a very large increase in poultry production, and a considerable increase in profit to a large number of farmers and poultry owners who have followed the lines of this work.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend says there is a leak in some of these stations, and he is having the cause of it investigated. There must be a leak in every one of them, because every one shows a loss as between the cost of the chickens and the feed and the revenue. There have been the following losses : Alberton, P.E.I., $74.98 ; Eldon, P.E.I., $181.49 ; Glenfinnan, P.E.I., $155.08; Mount Stewart, P.E.I., $113.57. Rusticoville, P.E.I., $75.08 ; Vernon River, P.E.I., $36.74 ; Amherst, N.S., $331.77 ; Mabou, N.S., $151.39 ; Andover, N.B., $227.57 ; Rogersville, N.B., $105.45 ; Bondville, Que., $397.79 ; Chicoutimi, Que., $97.74 ; Bowmanville, Ont., $258.69 ; Holmesville, Ont., $455.85 ; Renfrew, Ont., $12.23 ; Calgary, N. W. T., $18.24. And yet the hon. member for West Huron says the farmers of his part of the country are delighted with this system, under which the chickens have been sold for 3¾ cents a pound after having been fed on this scientific plan and after having had their necks broken in the most scientific manner. No wonder my hon. friend wants it to continue in his constituency. I think the opposition would do right to oppose the voting of a dollar to continue this business, and to ask the minister to stop it at once, so that that loss to the country of $10,000 which occurred last year will not be repeated.

Mr. SPROULE. I think they must have fed these chickens on sawdust and starved them to death. I am surprised that the minister is not almost ashamed of himself, after the glowing speech he made yesterday about the wonderful development there was in the poultry trade of this country owing to the splendid lessons which had been given to the farmers by these chicken stations, and the increased price at which poultry had been sold as a result of being scientifically fattened. He made out that the consumption had been immensely increased because the chickens were so much more appreciated. He had told the farmers of this country that he wanted to go into a new line which would only cost them $14,929. and yet the very first year there is a loss of $10,000 out of the $15,000 expended—two-thirds of the whole sum, besides all the labour which went for nothing. What a wonderful sense of gratitude the farmers of Canada ought to have toward the Minister of Agriculture for these chicken-fattening stations. It seems to me that one of two things accounts for the result—either that the system is bad or that the cold storage is bad. We were treated to a glowing description of the cold storage, which was represented to be the very best that could be devised ; yet the chickens were sold at 3¾ cents a pound when an old woman can bring chickens to the market from the barnyard, where they are not fattened at all, and sell them at 8 cents or 9 cents, or 10 cents a pound. I want to point out that at each of the experimental farms there is a chicken branch and a professor of poultry. What is he doing ? He is teaching the farmers the best breeds for laying purposes and the best breeds for fattening. All these farms are experimenting along these lines and every year their reports give the results of these experiments. We thought that was enough. A couple of thousands of dollars a year are spent at the Central farm for this purpose, and I do not know how much at the other farms. Why should this work be duplicated? The hon. minister is starting another system of chicken stations and experimenters all over the country, so that at each place a good supporter can get $300 or $400 for amusing himself by fattening chickens that sell at 3½ cents or 3¾ cents a pound. We have reports from the experimental farms distributed to the farmers of the country, containing presumably the very knowledge we are trying to get from individuals in various parts of the country. Is it necessary to squander the public money in this way? For every dollar of return to the people they spend $3, of which $2 have gone to the government supporter or gone to waste in order to show how you can fatten chickens at a loss every time. What kind of a lesson is that to give to the farmers of the country? Will they thank the government for it? Will they regard the Minister of Agriculture or those under him as adepts in the chicken business? I do not think they will. The very disclosures which have been made are the strongest argument that the money used for this purpose is thrown away, and that the boasted cold storage which we have heard so much about is a failure as well. There is no doubt whatever of this, as otherwise more would have been realized from these stations. Take the chickens on an ordinary farm that are running about picking up refuse and comparatively speaking not fed at all, they are sold at better prices and yield more profitable returns.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it the policy of the hon. gentleman to continue keeping up these fattening stations? It seems to me that when a fattening station has been in operation in any locality for two or three years, the farmers there ought to have learned all they can from the process, and these stations might very well be abandoned. Take the station at Holmesville, and the figures show the expenditure last year $2,793.79 and the revenue $554.57, leaving a deficit of $2,229.22. If this station be established for educational purposes, my hon. friend who represents that county has not been very well educated. Of course he is occupying the chair and I do not want to say very much about him, but he told the House that the people up there were delighted with it, and that before these chicken fattening stations were put in operation, chickens were sold at about five cents a pound, whereas now they are sold at ten cents a pound. But it appears that the chickens fattened in the very establishment to which he was referring were sold at three and three-quarter cents a pound. It therefore does not look as if the policy adopted by the Minister of Agriculture was very educational in its effect.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. FISHER. The poultry business has undoubtedly been stimulated by the establishment of these stations. There is a larger number of birds raised and fattened than ever before, and as a rule the prices are higher because these birds are better fattened. The hon. gentleman has made a suggestion which is quite in line with what we have been doing. As a general rule these fattening stations are not carried on for more than two or three years in certain localities. But in Holmesville and in one or two places in Prince Edward Island and the province of Quebec, we have breeding stations. We have found by a series of experiments that the birds we raise do better than those we buy for fattening purposes, and we therefore have been breeding birds of a particular type; and as a matter of fact, last season a large number were sold for breeding purposes instead of being fattened. Over 2,000 were thus sold. My hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has hit the nail on the head to a certain extent, because we have been trying to encourage the breeding of this type and have probably been selling them too cheap.

Mr. TAYLOR. They do not cost anything to raise.

Mr. FISHER. It costs something to raise them. But we find there is always a strong request to us not to close a station once it is started, and I have perhaps not been as strict in that respect as I ought to be and hope to be in future.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it a good plan to have so many of these establishments? If the stations on the experimental farm are carried on on the same lines and the information disseminated through bulletins, our farmers will get all the information they need in that way.

Mr. FISHER. I think that the object lessons furnished by these stations has done a great deal of good.

Mr. SPROULE. I am unable to see how that can be. If a farmer were to follow the example set by the government, he would soon find himself in the poorhouse, and the only lesson he would take from these stations would be to avoid what is being done there because their experiments result in a loss. I think it is radically wrong that we should not only keep up these stations on our experimental farms, but duplicate them all over the country. There is evidently a great leak somewhere, and it is about time that it was found out, because year by year this thing instead of getting better is getting worse. It seems to me it is about time to drop the business and come down to common sense.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I know something about the business in Prince Edward Island. Whether or not the stations there are paying, is not the question. It is true there is quite a difference between the receipts obtained from the chickens fattened and sold according to the methods followed at these experimental stations and the expenditure, but the stations were not established to make money, rather to educate the people in this line of business. I know that the farmers of Prince Edward Island, where these fattening stations are in existence, are now raising a better breed of chickens and making more money. The local market has been very much improved. The price in the Charlottetown market is now fully 100 per cent more than it was a few years ago.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the price now ?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. A pair of chickens last year was bringing in the local market from 80 cents to $1. A few years ago they would sell at from 40 cents to 50 cents. As to the receipts from these chicken fattening stations, I know that in some cases a breed of chickens was purchased for the purpose of showing that it would not be profitable to raise them. It was not intended to make a profit in every case. I know also that whatever may be said as to beneficial results from the fattening of chickens at the experimental farm, the farmers where these illustration stations are carried on have obtained very much benefit through them, and would be very much opposed to having them closed. Whether the expense is too great or not, that may be a question for discussion. But I have not the slightest doubt that, whatever the direct results, the indirect results in the way of benefits to the farmers are very marked, and as the farmers do not get much in the way of protection or bounties, I think that all they get in this way we should not begrudge them.

Mr. SPROULE. As the hon. gentleman is so sure of the beneficial results, can he tell us how many farmers in his section have adopted the cramming process ?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I know that they are raising a better breed of chickens.

Mr. TAYLOR. Are they feeding with cramming machines ?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. They are paying more attention to raising and feeding. The business is very much improved.

Mr. SPROULE. In the county from which I come there is not one of these stations so far as I know. Yet the quantity of chickens raised is about ten times as great as it was a couple of years ago.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. You do not want a station there ; you are getting along well enough without it.

Mr. SPROULE. I am showing that the development of the poultry trade is not due to the information disseminated by means of these chicken fattening stations, because where that information has never been acted upon the development is quite as great as it is elsewhere. The best evidence that this information is not acted upon is the fact that not many farmers have adopted the cramming process. I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. J. Hughes) if he can point to one man in his section who has adopted that process ?

Mr. EMMERSON. If the committee will bear with me for a moment and will permit a digression from the chicken question, I would like to refer to a statement with regard to Mr. Eastman, who is engaged at the St. Louis exhibition. The statement is made that he is an American citizen. I wish to correct that statement, and say that Mr Eastman has lived in the province of New Brunswick for upwards of thirty-five years, that he has been engaged in the lumber business, that he is a man of the highest character, and that he is a naturalized British subject.

Mr. SPROULE. When was he naturalized ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Within the last two or three years. I had to do with his naturalization papers myself and know the circumstances. I think it due to that gentleman and to the committee that the information should be given.

Mr. SPROULE. Did he get naturalized to vote for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) or to get this position ?

Mr. EMMERSON. He had neither object in view, I fancy. His family is established here, and he wished to claim all the rights of a British subject. I am sure my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) will not feel angry at the fact. I should think, rather, he would rejoice.

Mr. SPROULE. I am pleased to know that after thirty-five years Mr. Eastman was convinced that it was the part of wisdom to become a British subject. But the statement was made that he was sent out of a polling place and refused the right to vote because he was not a British subject by birth or naturalization.

Mr. EMMERSON. He could not be sent out of a polling place under those circumstances, because he never sought to vote until he was naturalized. I am familiar with his personal history and with his relations to the politics of the country. He is a man of the highest character ; treasurer for the province of New Brunswick of the High Court of Foresters ; known and very highly respected all over the province, and a prominent business man connected with the lumber industry.

Mr. SPROULE. Not a word was said against his character, and there was no desire to reflect upon it. The question was simply whether he was a British subject.

Mr. EMMERSON. He is not the man to seek to vote unless he had the right to vote, and I contradict the insinuation or the statement made against him.

Mr. ROBERT JOHNSTON. The hon. member from Prince Edward Island (Mr. J. J. Hughes) has given us a lecture on the benefits to the farmers of his section resulting from the chicken fattening stations. He spoke of it as a protection to the farmers of Prince Edward Island. If it is a protection to the farmers of Prince Edward Island and it does not pay expenses that means that other parts of the country have to pay for the protection given to his constituents. Is there one of these stations that last year received enough from sales to pay for the chickens and the feed, to say nothing of other expenses ?

Mr. FISHER. I have not the figures under my hand, but I am informed that several of them did.

Mr. ROBERT JOHNSTON. I would ask the hon. member for Prince Edward Island whether any of the stations in his section paid for the chickens and the feed ?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I have not the figures.

Mr. ROBERT JOHNSTON. I am assured by those who have looked into the matter that not one of these stations have received enough from chickens sold to pay for the chickens and the feed that went to fatten them. This may be a protection to the people of Prince Edward Island, but is it fair to the rest of the Dominion ? It is surely unfair for one section to ask another section to pay for its benefits through a scheme that is established for the advantage of a few people who are supporting the party in power. This scheme has been a failure so far as making money is concerned, and if the people who are educated by these experiments follow the example of the people carrying on the experiments, it will certainly not add to our national wealth.

Why should they start any more ? We have in Ontario a splendid agricultural college and an agricultural farm for experimental purposes, and any one who wants to learn how to feed and fatten chickens can easily get the reports from that college, without it being necessary to duplicate these establishments all through the country. I think it is the duty of each province to start an agricultural farm and run it as its own expense. Now since the Minister of Agriculture has made a fair test of his business, I do not think it is in the interest of the farming community that he should continue it. Taking into consideration the cost of the test, the rent of the buildings, and all these things, he now knows for a certainty that chickens have not brought in any year the cost of their purchase and their feed ; and yet he wants to bleed the country to the tune of a good many more thousand dollars to establish these stations in other places. I know very well that where he starts a feeding station no Tory need apply for a position; but when it comes to paying the deficit each Tory has to pay his share. Now I would ask the Minister of Agriculture to drop these experiments since he has found them a failure. He acknowledged a while ago that the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) had struck the nail on the head when he said there was a leakage somewhere in giving out the fowl. I venture to say no Tory got those chickens at less than they are worth.

Mr. FISHER. Lots of them.

Mr. ROBERT JOHNSTON. If they were given away they were given away the same as appointments—to political friends.

Mr. FISHER. They were not given away, they were sold to anybody that came along.

Mr. ROBERT JOHNSTON. For less than they were worth ?

Mr. FISHER. For less than they would have fetched if we had tried to sell them for a high price. Our object was to disseminate the breed throughout the country.

Mr. ROBERT JOHNSTON. In Ontario all we have to do is to look up the records of what is done in the Agricultural College at Guelph, and we can certainly do as well fattening chickens there as the hon. gentleman. I would ask him as an honest representative of the farmers, after he has tested this business and found it a failure, to drop it.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice one thing peculiar about these experimental stations. There are three in the province of Ontario, and every one of them is in a Reform riding. One would imagine if they are to continue for the province of Ontario there should be some of these stations in Conservative ridings.

Mr. FISHER. Perhaps the Reform members look better after their constituents.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps the hon. minister hears them better when they call. I see one at Bowmanville, in the county of Durham, represented by a good supporter of the present government. Another is in the county of West Huron, rather a noted county in western Ontario.

Mr. FISHER. A distinguished county.

Mr. BLAIN. The other is in Renfrew.

Mr. FISHER. Another distinguished county.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps they will be a little more distinguished after the next general election. But it does seem a little strange that these three establishments for the province of Ontario should be found in three Reform ridings. My hon. friend said he was selling these chickens cheap to the farmers, I hope he will not take advantage of that practice when the election comes along. I think the minister will not deny that the chickens sold by the farmers generally in the province of Ontario are equal in every respect and bring as high a price as those from these establishments. For myself I do not think that these establishments so managed are in the interests of the people of Canada, but if the hon. gentleman thinks they are, he should distribute them more fairly, instead of confining them to Reform ridings.

Mr. LENNOX. I have the greatest respect for the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Blain) and for the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), but I do not share in the views they have expressed on this question. I am quite prepared to consent that in all these experimental matters we should pay out more money than we receive. If the minister could not account for the difference between the net receipts for the chickens and the expense for their food, I would have some hesitation in supporting the continuance of the experiment. But the minister has accounted for the deficiency. He has annnounced in the most definite way that this industry can be carried on in a manner that will make it ultimately profitable, and I believe that is the case. I do not think, however, the hon. minister has been as candid as he ought to have been, because the announcement he has made to-night he could have made last night when the same subject was before the House. I think we may now accept his statement that the shortage comes, not from the fact that a profit cannot be made, but from the fact that there has been mismanagement, and probably something worse than mismanagement in these matters. Now I suggest that the government shall continue these experiments. I believe there is an enormous demand for chickens. I believe that money can be made out of the business, and I believe in opening up all the avenues of industry and profitable investment in this country, and as this is one of those industries which is directly connected with the farm. I would like to see it continued. I want it continued in the future upon a proper business basis. The minister has admitted that there has been a leakage in this matter. He says that he does not believe it results from any favouritism. I do not care how it has happened, I think it should be prevented. This branch of the experimental work should be continued and in the future it may be made a profitable branch of the work. I think it is right to experiment in regard to this industry and I think that notwithstanding what has been said by the hon. member for Peel the farmers will approve of the expenditure of money upon this experiment but they will hold the government of course to an honest and careful expenditure of money even though it is for experimental purposes.

Mr. SPROULE. We are doing all this work at the farm and are sending out every year from 50,000 to 100,000 bulletins containing this information. I do not think we should duplicate any of this work. Why should these fattening stations be maintained, especially when out of every three dollars you put in them you lose two ?

Mr. ROBERT JOHNSTON. I can easily understand how the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. J. J. Hughes) or any other member from a county where a fattening station is operated should be in favour of them. These stations provide a home market for these farmers for their chickens, and of course a home market is always the best. The fattening station takes up all the chickens from the surrounding country at a good price without any trouble to the farmers so of course they are in favour of it. But people who live in other parts of the country do not profit from the establishment of these stations as do the hon. member's supporters. In the county of Huron, of course, the station at Holmesville furnishes a home market for the chickens raised in that county and takes them off the hands of the farmers without any expense or trouble.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me that the system of fattening chickens adopted by the Minister of Agriculture is rather getting away from the legitimate mode of farming operations. I think myself that the business of the farmer is to raise chickens, to raise as many as he can. In this the government can very materially assist him by having at all times a supply of the eggs of the best breeds of poultry not only for laying purposes but for food. Let the farmers be encouraged in every way possible by providing a full supply of eggs of the varieties that are most approved of, for the purposes of the fattening stations. I know in the section of country from which I come this process of stuffing chickens is not in vogue. I have not heard of its being adopted by any one, but I have known a person with a large poultry yard who desired to get rid of his whole flock to find no difficulty in selling them all, live weight, at 10 cents a pound. That I think is a great deal better than fattening and stuffing and selling them at 7 cents or even 10 cents a pound dead weight. I have an idea that it would be much better and more profitable to encourage the farmer to raise the chickens and sell them to professional chicken fatteners. You will find in large places such as Toronto, companies which will do this class of work. In Toronto I know there is a large company which will take all the chickens they can secure within a radius of some 30 or 40 miles of that city.

Mr. FISHER. At the fattening stations we do about the business the hon. gentleman speaks of, that is we buy the chickens from the farmers and fatten them. At the rearing stations we do that partly and we also raise them from eggs in order to compare the results from chickens raised on the spot and fed from birth and those which are picked up from farmers around. At the breeding stations we have been breeding birds which we think especially adapted for fattening purposes and also selling breeding eggs. That is the educational work that has been going on and largely as a result of what we have been doing the market in Toronto has vastly improved. I do not claim credit for the whole of it, but I do say that since we have commenced this fattening and preparing for market, and since attention has been directed to it, it has been constantly increasing and there is a very large market.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think it is a matter that should be left largely to private enterprise. Are there any other fattening establishments throughout Canada such as I have described at Toronto.

Mr. FISHER. There are one or two others, but I think this is the best.

Mr. SPROULE. When the supplementary estimates come down we will want further information on cold storage, fruit, seed, and some other matters.

Mr. FISHER. I will be glad to give the information.

Mr. SPROULE. You had better not give it to-night, because it will take you till seven o'clock to-morrow morning. You can give it on the suplementary estimates.

Mr. FISHER. Very well.

Mr. BLAIN. We will also want some information about this 'extension of markets.'

Mr. FISHER. Very well.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken up on Monday ?

Mr. FIELDING. The adjournment was rather earlier than I expected, and I had no opportunity to see the premier. I think I may safely say that we will continue in supply, and probably with the railway estimates.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 9.35 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, July 25, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

TOBACCO COMMISSION.

Mr. F. D. MONK. Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the government, I would like to move :

That the report of Judge McTavish on the tobacco industry, the evidence taken by him and all documents filed, be printed forthwith, and that rule 99 be suspended for that purpose.

We have before us a very important resolution presented by the Minister of Inland Revenue (Hon. L. P. Brodeur), the object of which is to remedy the grievances referred to in the commission with which Judge MacTavish was charged. Furthermore, the subject-matter is one which has attracted a great deal of attention, and I think it is highly desirable that the members of this House should be conversant with the results of this commission.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT (Minister of Trade and Commerce). I do not want to object to the motion, but I will suggest that my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) wait until the Minister of Justice is present in the House. We will see that my hon. friend will have an opportunity of moving this resolution.

CANADIAN PRIZE WINNERS.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I desire to refer to a matter which I think is of sufficient importance to be brought to the attention of the House ; that is, the fact that a Canadian, Private Perry, of Vancouver, B.C., has won the King's prize at Bisley camp. Private Perry, I believe, is the first Canadian-born soldier who has won this prize, although this prize was brought to Canada once before ; it was then brought by a citizen of Canada, but not by a man who had been born in this country. Private Perry also served with distinction in South Africa. I had the honour of sending a cablegram, as soon as the news reached Canada, to Private Perry through the commandant of the Bisley team, congratulating him upon his success. I am sure that this is a matter for congratulation upon the part of the militia of this country, on the part of this parliament and on the part of the people of Canada generally.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I can heartily endorse, on behalf of the opposition, the statements that have been made by the Minister of Militia, and I may say that I feel proud to know that the former winner of the King's prize was a Canadian citizen, even if he were not a Canadian born. I am not aware that it makes a difference whether a Canadian is born within the bounds of the Dominion or not, so long as he is a good Canadian citizen. We welcome all, they are not strangers to this country, so long as they become good Canadian citizens. I was a little surprised to see the minister make that distinction.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, get out.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Mr. Perry is an old Toronto boy, and has reflected credit on the militia force, both as a member of the Royal Grenadiers of Toronto, of the South Africa corps and of our Bisley rifle team.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I wish to remind the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) that Canada has won even a larger share of honour, for a Canadian-born, although at present connected with the King's Colonials in London, Major Howard, the agent-general of the province of Nova Scotia, has won another of the great prizes at Bisley, the St. George's prize.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. And, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Lou Scholes, a distinguished Canadian of Toronto, has shown himself to be the first oarsman of the world. Although many of our friends opposite come from the sea, we who live inland, on the shores of the great lakes, are expert in the matter of the oar, and we also are proud that our fellow-townsman, Lou Scholes, of Toronto, is one of a trio of Canadians who have distinguished themselves before the whole empire.

TOBACCO COMMISSION.

Mr. F. D. MONK. I may perhaps renew the motion I made in the absence of the right hon. the Prime Minister, as to which the Minister of Finance asked me to wait until the Minister of Justice arrived. It is a motion for the immediate printing of the evidence, &c., taken before the Royal Tobacco Commission. This evidence is of so much importance that I believe it should be circulated, not only amongst the members of this House, but among the large number of people outside this House who take a lively interest in this question.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. For my part, I can see no objection to the motion, but I do not see the necessity for immediate haste. I shall communicate with my colleague, the Minister of Justice, and when motion is made to go into committee my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) will have an opportunity of renewing his motion.

QUESTIONS.

CANADIAN AND BRITISH POSTAL RATES.

Mr. BLAIN asked :

1. What was the Canadian rate of postage in 1868 on letters, papers and parcel post ?

2. What was the rate of postage on letters, papers and parcel post to Great Britain in 1868 ?

3. What changes in rate of postage on letters, papers and parcel post have been made since 1868 for Canada and Great Britain ? And what are the dates of increase and decrease ?

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General). Mr. Speaker, I find that the answer to this question is altogether too voluminous for the matter to be dealt with in the manner suggested by my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) in the way of questions and answer.

EXPERIMENTS WITH TOBACCO.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. Have any portions of the experimental farms been used during the past year for experimentation in tobacco-growing ? If so, what portions, and with what results ?

2. Have any bulletins been issued from the Department of Agriculture concerning the cultivation, curing and packing of tobacco since 1896 ?

3. Has the report made by Blaise Duguas on trade with Belgium been printed and circulated by the government ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance).

1. In 1903 about two-thirds of an acre at the Central Farm at Ottawa, was devoted to tobacco ; 51 varieties were tested in small plots, and three of the most popular sorts in larger plots. The very cool season of 1903 was not favourable for the tobacco and it did not fully mature. It was, however, cut and cured and has been used chiefly for spraying for the destruction of insect pests.

2. A bulletin on tobacco culture, No. 30 of the Experimental Farm series, was prepared by Dr. Wm. Saunders, Director of the Experimental Farms, and published in April, 1898. In this bulletin the following subjects were discussed : The growth of tobacco in Canada. the preparation of the soil, sowing of the seed, planting, cultivation, suckering, saving of seed, insect enemies, harvesting, drying, bulking and earliest and best yielding varieties.

Much information regarding tobacco and its cultivation has been given in the Annual Reports of the Experimental Farms from time to time since 1893, as follows :

	Page.
Report of Central Farm for 1893—
Experiments with tobacco	121
Hints on tobacco culture	124
Analysis of leaves and stems	124
Harvesting and curing tobacco	125

Report of Central Farm for 1898—
Results of testing of 35 varieties of tobacco 118
(With particulars as to cultivation, also dates of topping, total weight of first grade leaves, weight of second grade dried leaves, weight of third grade dried leaves and total weight per acre.)
Report of Central Farm for 1899—
Results of testing 48 varieties of tobacco in small plots, 1½ acres being devoted to three of the most promising varieties 115
Report of the Central Farm for 1900—
Results of the tests of 56 varieties of tobacco, six of which were grown in field plots and dried and cured in the tobacco house 137
Report of the Central Farm for 1901—
Results of a trial of 46 varieties of tobacco, including particulars as to their growth and treatment, with the yield of the different varieties per acre for three years ; also a special report on the best six varieties under test 125

In all these experiments particular attention has been given to the relative earliness, yield and quality of the different sorts under test.

Similar experiments were conducted in 1902, and 1903, and are now in progress for 1904, and the results of these three years' trial will be given in the Report for 1904.

Experiments in the growing of tobacco have also been made at the branch experimental farms, one of which is located at each of the following points : Nappan, Nova Scotia ; Brandon, Manitoba ; Indian Head, Northwest Territories and Agassiz, British Columbia ; and the results have been given in the Annual Reports of the Experimental Farms. This information will be found in the Reports for 1896, 1897, 1898, 1899, 1900 and 1901.

SIR ELZEAR TASCHEREAU AND THE DISMISSAL OF LORD DUNDONALD.

Mr. CLARKE—by Mr. Sam. Hughes—asked :

1. Has the government taken any steps to ascertain whether Sir Elzéar Taschereau, Chief Justice of Canada, was accurately reported in the following cable interview, which appeared in the Canadian newspapers on Wednesday last, July 20th :—

'London, July 19.—Sir Elzéar Taschereau says he is indignant that political capital is being made out of the Dundonald affair. The 'Times' is loaded up by Ottawa Tory sources. A few Scotchmen are back of the whole agitation, and he cannot see how the British government, if alive to its own interests, can fail to recall Lord Dundonald before the end of the week' ?

2. If so, does the Chief Justice admit the accuracy of the interview in question ?

3. If no action has yet been taken by the government to ascertain the accuracy of the above interview, is it the intention of the government to take action ?

Mr. HYMAN.

2. That whereas the Fredericton and Saint Mary's Railway Bridge Company has made default in payment of the advances of money paid to it by the Governor in Council under the statutes of 1887, chapter 26, and of interest thereon, which said advances and interest were made a first charge and lien and were duly secured by a mortgage on all the property, real and personal, of the Bridge Company, and by reason of such default all the property, real and personal, and all the rights, franchises, easements and privileges of the said Bridge Company became by virtue of the said last-mentioned Act and mortgage forfeited to the Crown, it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council, by his officers or agents, to enter and take possession of the said property, rights, franchises, easements and privileges on behalf of His Majesty, and operate the same or any portions thereof as part of the government railway system.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

House in Commitee of Supply.

Steam service between Victoria and San Francisco, $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman a question relative to another department. Is Mr. J. J. Jackson, formerly of Woodstock, now in the employ of the government, and where ?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT (Minister of Trade and Commerce). He is, but I would suggest to my hon. friend to bring that up under the heading of commercial agencies.

Mr. BENNETT. When will that be reached ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I hope very shortly.

Steam communication between Halifax and Newfoundland via Cape Breton ports, $2,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This steamer calls at a number of ports. It makes fourteen trips in the year.

Steam communication during the season of 1904, i.e., from the opening to the closing of navigation, between the Mainland and the Magdalen Islands, $15,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This service was formerly weekly and is now semi-weekly.

Steam communication during the season of 1904, i.e., from the opening to the closing of navigation, beween Prince Edward Island and the Mainland, $12,500.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This service is conducted by the Charlottetown Steam Navigation Company via Northumberland. It is the same vote as last year.

Steam communication from July 1, 1904, to June 30, 1905, between Grand Manan and the Mainland, $5,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This boat calls at a number of points. It is the same contract as heretofore and expires 1906.

Steam communication for not less than 52 full round weekly trips between St. John and Halifax via Yarmouth and other way ports from July 1st, 1904, to June 30th, 1905, $10,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The contractor is Messrs. Thompson & Co., of St. John.

Steam communication during the season of 1904, i.e., from the opening to the closing of navigation, between St. John and Minas Basin ports, $3,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Fifty-two full round trips must be made every year. It is a weekly service.

Steam communication from July 1, 1904, to June 30, 1905, between Pictou, Murray Harbour, Georgetown and Montague Bridge, $1,200.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is with the Three Rivers Steamship Company. They call at each point in Murray Harbour.

Steam communication from July 1, 1904, to June 30, 1905, between Quebec and Gaspé Basin, touching at intermediate ports, $7,500.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is with Bouchard Brothers. The steamship is the 'Gaspesia.' It touches at a great many ports of call, nearly thirty.

Mr. MONK. I have heard that this steamer is not a particularly good boat. Does the right hon. gentleman consider her fit for the service ? I would like to know also if there is anything in the contract to oblige the contractor to bring a steamer to Montreal. The steamers going from Montreal to the lower province ports, in the direction of Gaspé, which have good passenger accommodation, are at present overcrowded. There would be room for four or five more suitable steamers on that route, and it would be important that the 'Gaspesia,' if suitable, should come to Montreal for passengers and freight.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is a trip from Quebec round to Gaspé Basin, calling at a very large number of very small places, and steamers of the class my hon. friend describes would object exceedingly unless very heavily subsidized, to calling at all these small places. The hon. gentleman will note that to call at all these places would be almost an impossibility for a steamer going to the lower provinces.

Mr. MONK. A steamer from Gaspé coming as far as Montreal would command a very large quantity of freight, for with these ports that my right hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) has mentioned Montreal does a very large business. In the next place, for tourist or summer travel, I think the only suitable steamer we have from Montreal to the Gulf is the 'Campana,' and to go in this steamer you have to secure accommodation a long time in advance. That is why it seemed to me that without an additional subsidy it would be possible to have a good steamer go between Gaspé and Montreal.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have taken a note of my hon. friend's (Mr. Monk's) suggestion, and I shall be very glad to give these people better accommodation if possible. Of course it is under contract for this year. But next year we shall see if we can get a better steamer for the service.

Steam communication between a port or ports in Prince Edward Island and a port or ports in Great Britain, $5,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That service was performed by the 'Manchester Trader' last year. I am afraid I shall have to ask the House for a small additional vote later on in order to secure this service.

Direct fortnightly steam service between Montreal, Quebec, and Manchester, England, during the summer season, and between St. John, Halifax, and Manchester during the winter season, $35,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is known as the Manchester service proper. The contract is with what are known as the Manchester Liners, Limited, the vessels being the 'Manchester City,' the 'Manchester Commerce,' the 'Manchester Trader,' the Manchester Corporation,' and the 'Manchester Shipper.' It is a regular fornightly service. The amount is a little reduced. They used to charge us £8,000 sterling, but they have accepted $35,000 for the present year.

Direct monthly steam communication between Canada and South Africa, $146,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps the right hon. minister would give us some information as to the results, so far, of this service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As my hon. friends are aware, this has been a tentative service with a view to developing our trade with South Africa. Apparently a reasonable amount of trade has been developed and I think it will ultimately become a very useful adjunct to our commerce. At first this contract was with three different companies, each doing a portion of the service, Messrs. Allan, Messrs. Furness-Withy and Messrs. Elder-Dempster. The Allans have retired in favour of the Furness-Withy, the latter now doing two-thirds of the service. Our agents in South Africa report that there is a strong disposition to trade with Canada on the part of our brother colonists in Cape Colony and Natal. For a time, trade was very much hampered by the fact that at the close of the war a huge quantity of articles, many of which had been supplied from Canada, were dumped by the British authorities on the market, and so our exportations to South Africa were considerably interfered with. They are beginning to get better now. The manifests sent to us show a very fair cargo going out. The trouble is we have very little return cargo.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How often is the service ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The trips are monthly and there is a special clause in the contract by which Canadians have preference ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In freight or in room ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In freight and in room if they give reasonable notice.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What class of boats are used ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Boats of 5,000 tons with a speed of not less than 10 knots. I have here a return which I promised to prepare for the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), and I shall send to the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) only asking that he send it to the hon. member for West Toronto.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has the hon. minister carried out the promise he made some time ago to look into the matter of the freight rates from New York ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is some information on that subject in the return which I have just handed in.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who are the government agents in South Africa ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Jardine is our commercial agent. He has a kind of a roving commission over the whole of South Africa from Cape Town northward.

Steam communication during the season of 1904, i.e., from the opening to the closing of navigation, between Gaspé Basin and Dalhousie or Campbellton, $12,500.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That service was performed by the steamer 'Restigouche.' But she did not give satisfaction to the parties, and I have endeavoured to secure a new steamer. But it has not yet made its appearance. In the meantime the service is performed by the steamer 'Admiral,' the one that used to perform the service formerly. I trust to have a steamship specially constructed for the route put upon it next year.

Mr. MONK. The 'Admiral' was last year on the line between Murray Bay and River Ouelle. Does the present arrangement mean that there will be a new steamer on that line this year ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That service at Murray Bay is being performed by a steamer in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. I believe that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) proposes to have a new steamer built especially adapted to that service both summer and winter. That matter will be discussed when the estimates of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries are before the committee.

Steam communication from April 1, 1904, to March 31, 1905, between Port Mulgrave and Canso, and Between Port Mulgrave and Guysborough, and from the opening to the closing of navigation in 1904, between Port Mulgrave, Margaree and Cheticamp, $8,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is the service we had last year the contractors being Messrs. Hugh Cann & Son. The vessels are the 'Malcolm Cann' and the 'John L. Cann.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How frequent is the service ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There are three routes : Route A, from Mulgrave to Canso ; route B, from Mulgrave to Guysborough ; route C, from Port Mulgrave to Chéticamp, calling at Port Hastings, Margaree and Chéticamp Harbour. On the first, it is a daily service ; on the second, from Mulgrave to Guysborough there are four trips made weekly ; on the last, one trip weekly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This is a service of great importance to those who are engaged in the fishing industry in Canso, and I have had a communication on the subject from persons who have undertaken the business of forwarding fresh fish to Ontario via the Intercolonial, and who complain to me that in the case, I think, of at least fifty per cent of the shipments during one season, the boat failed to make connection with the train at Mulgrave ; I am not absolutely sure of the percentage, but to the best of my recollection it amounted to that. The result was that the fish were detained for twenty-four hours, persons who were to be supplied in Montreal and Ontario were disappointed, and of course there was a deterioration of the goods to be forwarded. I think some effort should be made to have that service improved in that regard. I understand thoroughly that there are perils of the sea and difficulties of navigation which have to be taken into consideration, but it would be better to have an improved class of boats and give them more subsidy rather than to have so important a business as that to which I have referred, injured and possibly destroyed altogether. The hon. gentleman is of course aware, as is every one in the business, that in order to carry on the business of supplying fresh fish they must be enabled to guarantee a certain supply daily to Montreal or to any other place to which fish are to be forwarded. If you cannot guarantee that, through lack of good communication or by reason of an insufficient supply of fish being brought in by the fishermen, the result will be that the trade will go somewhere else. For example, the gentleman to whom I refer, who is largely engaged in this business at Canso, said that a certain fish dealer in Toronto told him that he would give him an order for only one-third of what he required daily, but he added, I would be willing to give you an order one-half or two-thirds if I were sure the supply of fish would be adequate, and if your means of communication were absolutely certain. I believe the supply of fish is getting better and better. Those who are engaged in the business are sending out more fishermen, some of them to one part of the coast, others to other parts of the coast, so that from one source or another the proper supply of fish will be brought in, and that part of the business seems to be put upon a fairly good basis. The other part, adequate communication, seems to be still lacking. Of course that may be supplied if certain railway lines now projected in the province of Nova Scotia are constructed at an early date. However, in the meantime we have to depend on a service of this kind. and it is of exceeding importance that that service should be made reliable, otherwise this business cannot be carried on.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I quite agree with my hon. friend that it is not merely a desirable thing in itself, but it is of great importance as a feeder to the Intercolonial. My hon. friend is perhaps aware, as I am, of the difficulty we have had in getting decent fish supplied in Ottawa, and I should be glad to contribute as far as possible towards improving the service so that we may get fresh fish daily supplied to our breakfast tables in the west. I may say that we have altered the route with the purpose of helping this, Arichat is now dropped, and another service was authorized last session from Petit de Grat to Mulgrave that enables us to effect a great improvement. I understand from my deputy we had a good many complaints last year, but this present year the service has been better, and the complaints have ceased. However, I entirely agree, for every reason, both for the encouragement of the fishermen, for the benefit of the Intercolonial and for the supply of the western provinces, that it is highly desirable that all reasonable assistance should be given.

Mr. MACLEAN. I hope the minister will go a step further and urge upon his colleagues the support of the proposal I have made to put the express companies under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission so that their express charges may be regulated. In that way good will be accomplished, both in promoting interprovincial trade and the fresh fish of the maritime provinces and in the fruit of the west. Nothing will prevent an interchange of that trade so much as jurisdiction vested in the Railway Commission to control the rates of the express companies.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am of the opinion that any improvement in that direction, on a large scale at least, would have to come from the railway companies themselves, through arrangements with the express agencies. My hon. friend is probably aware that the two great express agencies, the Canadian Company and the Dominion Company, are both parts and parcels of their respective railroads ; the Grand Trunk completely controls the one, and the Canadian Pacific Railway controls the other. As to the vexed question of meddling with the express rates, I would rather not enter on that controversy just now.

Mr. MACLEAN. But it is an essential part of the issue.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It must be done by the action of the Intercolonial, and the Grand Trunk Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I should hope they might be able to see their way to run a fish train daily, as is done in some portions of the United States, through and through. I see no reason at all why a fish train should not be run from Nova Scotia or from the lower St. Lawrence, at any rate, as far as Toronto. I have more than once spoken of it and recommended it, and I will do so again.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In this connection I may say that I brought to the attention of the House the other day the fact that upon the Intercolonial Railway only one express company is permitted to carry on business. I think my hon. friend from Toronto suggested that another company applying was to be regarded as guilty of impertinence because it insisted upon having absolute control of the business upon the line of the railway company with which it is associated. Still I do not know that this conduct should be regarded as more impertinent than that the company, retaining control of the railway which it happens to be associated, should also desire to have complete control of the Intercolonial. However, that may be, the object of my suggestion would be amply met if we could have applied to the Intercolonial a provision which I find in the Railway Act with regard to express companies, and it is found in section 278.

> Every company which grants any facilities for the carriage of goods by express to any incorporated express company or persons, shall grant equal facilities, on equal terms and conditions, to any other incorporated express company which demands the same.

The difficulty about the Intercolonial Railway is that that provision does not at the present time apply to it. It may be that section 278 is not very fully carried out by the great lines of this country which have express companies connected with them. But nevertheless there is a law which apparently is capable of being carried out and if it were done under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission it night possibly—though there may be unexpected difficulties—afford some of the relief by way of competition which has been advocated very forcibly by several hon. gentlemen in the House.

Mr. MACLEAN. This clause has been appealed to on former occasions and it has not proved efficacious. As a matter of fact what I said before is true that the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, notwithstanding this clause, have resisted any attempt on the part of express companies other than their own favourite companies which they own themselves to get upon their systems.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Can they successfully do that ?

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes, one of the greatest lawsuits that has been tried and one in which the greatest amount of money has been spent was undertaken in an effort to force the Grand Trunk Railway Company to allow a rival express company, organized in the city of Toronto, to share the business of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. The express company employed the late Mr. Dalton McCarthy, an immense amount of money was expended, but finally the rival company was beaten out. In connection with the Intercolonial Railway my idea is that this government should have a first-class express system upon its own road and that it should undertake to provide for express business in fish and other trade as between the maritime provinces and the west. I take the ground that the Intercolonial Railway should not be given over to two rival express companies unless the railway companies owning the express companies are prepared to grant the same privilege which they enjoy on their respective lines and unless in some way provision is made for the loss of revenue that would be entailed upon the Intercolonial Railway according to the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals who does not happen to be in the House at the present time. My contention is that in the first place there should be a thoroughly equipped express system between the differnt provinces and I want to see everything done to facilitate that, but I also want the express companies who have franchises to live up to the conditions that they ask the government to live up to. They ask the government to allow them on the line of the Intercolonial Railway but they will not allow us on their lines. What I would prefer to see if the government is in the railway business is that it should be in the express business as well. Let it own a first-class express system. If it pays a private company to give $100,000 a year for the privilege of operating on the Intercolonial Railway it will pay the government to carry that business on its own account.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course, since any litigation has been undertaken under the provisions of this section we have had established a Railway Commission with a supposedly simple method of procedure. The object of this section is very plain. It is undoubtedly to prevent discrimination upon any railway line. I would think that the Railway Commission would be capable of enforcing that section and I do not see any reason why it should not. If the objects of the section are plain and if there is any omission in it which enables that plain object to be defeated, it will be desirable to have such amendment made in the section as to carry out what obviously was the object in the first instance. As far as the Intercolonial Railway is concerned there is a good deal in what my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) suggests. All that I brought to the attention of the House the other day was that in the meantime it would be a desirable thing and I should imagine in the interest of the people of the maritime provinces that more than one company should have power to carry on express business on the Intercolonial Railway. Of course, that power could be given subject to the provision that it should cease at once, should the government decide to establish an express company of its own.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is a matter that will appertain more particularly to the Department of Railways and Canals but I may say to my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) that I think he will find that there are practical and physical difficulties in the way of operating two or three express companies on the same train. My idea about the fish matter would be that there should be special fish trains. I think that the trade is likely to grow to such proportions as to warrant that and I think, as regards the trade in the United States, that I am correct in saying that special fish trains are run without any reference to the express companies.

Steam service during the season of 1904, between Sydney and Whycocomagh, $1,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is given to the Bras d'Or Steamship Company, Limited. There has been no alteration in the terminal point. They make two round trips each week.

Steam service during the year 1904, between St. Stephen, N.B., and St. Croix river points, Deer Island, Campobello, and the Inner Islands, Passamaquoddy Bay and L'Etete or Back Bay, $3,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is as usual. The Deer Island and Campobello Steamship Company have the contract and the service is performed by the steamer 'Viking.' They make two round trips each week and they call at a great number of small points.

Steam service during the year 1904, between Quebec and Blanc Sablon, calling at ports and places along the northern shore of the River St. Lawrence between such terminals, $8,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The contract is with Holliday Brothers and the steamer is the 'King Edward.'

Mr. MONK. At what ports does this steamer call? Was this service performed last year?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, the same service was performed last year. The vessel leaves Quebec and it usually makes no calls till it passes Esquimaux point. Natashquan is the terminal point to be extended as occasion requires to Blanc Sablon. The vessel makes very few calls in the interval.

Mr. MONK. Is there just one steamer?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The 'King Edward' is the only steamer employed. She makes semi-monthly trips.

Mr. MONK. How many trips were made last year?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I believe all the trips they were bound to make; that is to say, semi-monthly trips during the season of navigation were made. There was no interruption, I believe, of the regular trips. What they may have done in the interval I am not aware, but the trips that were called for in the contract were completed.

Mr. MONK. I do not suppose they made more than eight trips at the most.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My deputy tells me that all the trips from the end of April were made semi-monthly. That would cover about six months, or five and a half months. They stopped only when the buoys were taken up somewhere about the 20th November.

Mr. MONK. Has the steamer passenger accommodation?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The 'King Edward' has. It is a superior steamer and was built expressly for the route.

Steam service during the season of 1904, between Sydney, C.B., and Bay St. Lawrence, calling at way ports, $1,500.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The contract is with the Bras d'Or Steamship Company and the steamer is the 'Weymouth.'

Weekly steamship service between Halifax and Canso, $4,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is done by the steamship 'Strathcona,' owned by the Halifax and Canso Steamship Company.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is that the same 'Strathcona' that is used in the wrecking.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The other I am told is the 'Lord Strathcona'; this is plain 'Strathcona.' The wrecking steamer is a very expensive article and we could not possibly hope to get her for $4,000.

Winter steam navigation service during winter of 1904-5, between Quebec and St. Lawrence harbours, down to Murray Bay and River Ouelle, $12,000.

Mr. MONK. Was anything done last year towards establishing this service?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, we were not able to get the winter service performed. After a great deal of consideration I understand from my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that he has come to the conclusion that it will be necessary to have a special steamer constructed and he proposes to apply to the House for power to have such a steamer put on. The problem of winter navigation of the St. Lawrence, as my hon. friend is aware, is interesting and important, but it is clear that if you are going to make a success you will have to have steamers of unusual strength and probably of unusual power constructed in order to enable the service to be carried on with any satisfaction, and therefore the minister thinks it will be better to have a steamer built expressly for that service. Later on we will be in a position to give the details about it.

Mr. MONK. I am glad to hear this announcement because it interests us greatly in Montreal. I think the experiment would be well worth trying because a steamer of that kind would not cost an extremely large amount and even if the experiment proved unsuccessful the steamer would still be of use. My hon. friend will notice that we take power to spend $20,000 a year on steamers going into the Gulf. We have just passed an item of $8,000 for the 'King Edward' service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is a summer service.

Mr. MONK. And we have this past two years voted $12,000 for the winter service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. MONK. We have to guide us the experiments made in Russia under the invention of the late Admiral Makaroff.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You refer to the famous Kronstadt ice-breakers I presume?

Mr. MONK. They have been used in the Baltic Sea and on Lake Baikal. I see they have broken through very thick ice, three, four and five feet or even more. There is no doubt I think that we can also navigate the St. Lawrence, at any rate to Quebec, all through the winter with a steamer of this description. I was surprised in reading a review to observe what a comparatively small amount an ice breaker costs.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does my hon. friend know what such a one as he has referred to costs ?

Mr. MONK. I do not know the exact figure.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the sum is large.

Mr. MONK. I read several articles in one of the periodical reviews on these ice-breakers. I have not any of the data here but I was surprised at the relatively small cost ; it is of course always a considerable sum. I anticipate that a steamer of this description could be used to very good effect in the spring in opening up the navigation to Montreal earlier than the river is naturally opened. There are one or two places in Montreal and Quebec where the bridge is maintained even after the ice is rotten everywhere else. If we had a steamer of the strength of the 'Ermaak' for instance, that ice could be easily broken up, and it has been considered by many that the navigation could be opened at least three weeks earlier than at present. That would make an immense difference to the people along the St. Lawrence, between Quebec and Montreal. We spend $20,000 to $25,000 a year on winter navigation from Quebec downwards, and I anticipate that a steamer of that kind would be available in summer as well as in winter. It seems to me it would be easy for us to get a steamer that would be able to obtain the same results as those which are secured in Russia. The government could easily obtain exact information as to the cost, &c., of those used in Russia and there is nothing which prevents us following the same course here as has been pursued in that country. I think this should be a matter for the earnest consideration of the government at the earliest possible date. These experiments in Russia date back several years and since reviewers and newspaper men have been able to obtain information pretty exactly it would be easy, I think, for the government to have these results for their guidance. Thus, without spending more than is now being spent very profitable results could be secured.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I dare say that it will prove practicable to do pretty much what my hon. friend has been suggesting. I may say that the subject to which he refers, the extending of the period of navigation from Quebec—and of course if possible from Montreal—by several weeks at the beginning and end of navigation, has attracted the attention both of my own department and of that of Marine, and I understand that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who I regret to say is not present will have certain projects to submit to the House having in view the carrying out of this idea. It is reasonably certain that with proper appliances we could extend the period of navigation from Quebec outward for a considerable period. As to the question of opening it earlier in the spring my hon. friend has stated what is no doubt correct that there are occasional barriers that could be removed by such a steamer, but whether you could depend upon that in view of the enormous masses of ice that are frequently encountered in the gulf to increase the period of navigation in the spring I am not quite so certain.

Mr. MONK. I refer principally to the inland navigation, so far as the spring is concerned, between Quebec and Montreal.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I was rather referring to ocean navigation. That could undoubtedly be extended. Whether it could be extended all the year is another question.

Mr. MORIN. I agree with what has been said by my hon. friend from Jacques-Cartier (Mr. Monk). It would undoubtedly be useful and advantageous for the government to have a boat so constructed as to be able to open the ice on the St. Lawrence river above Quebec. I have been living there for upwards of sixteen years, and understand very well how the matter stands. Navigation is sometimes open in Montreal three or four weeks before it is open at Quebec simply because there are no boats at Quebec able to break the ice. Sometimes what is called the key is only about ten miles long in the Narrows at the Quebec bridge and if the government had a boat of the kind described they could open that channel for both local and the general navigation. The steamships from Europe very seldom come to Quebec before the month of May. Of course, they cannot come until the channel is open ; but the government could make preparations to have the channel open from Quebec to Lake St. Peter every year by the 15th of April. Does my hon. friend know what ports it is proposed to stop at from Quebec down to Murray Bay ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have not been able as yet to obtain any steamer capable of carrying on that navigation in the winter season, and that fact has led the Minister of Marine to consider the propriety of having a boat built for that express service. When that is obtained it will be at the disposal of the authorities to call at any point that may be thought expedient between Quebec and Murray Bay ; but I cannot state at what particular points it will call.

Mr. MORIN. There are very few points at which it will be necessary for it to call. The principal point will be Baie St. Paul. On the north shore, from Quebec down to St. Joachim, there will be no need of a steamer, because the cars run there every day ; and on the south shore the country is served by the railway all the way down. Baie St. Paul is well served by a stage route. A steamship mail service on that short route could only be established at a very large expense. Then, in many winters the ice freezes from Quebec down three or four miles, and it would be next to impossible to open a channel through it. I have often heard the ferrymen and the men who handle the boats say that the ice is sometimes fifty, sixty or even one hundred feet thick at Quebec in the winter season.

Mr. WILLIAM ROSS (Victoria). The points of call for this steamer are I think matters to be decided after the steamer is built and brought here. There are no steamers at present capable of doing the work except those owned by the government of Russia, and therefore a steamer must be built. When the ice is formed I think this steamer will prove to be successful to a certain depth of ice ; but when it comes to the drift ice in the gulf, it will probably have to be discontinued. But I think the experiment is well worth trying in the interest of navigation on the St. Lawrence.

Summer service between Murray Bay and Rivière Ouelle, $6,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This service was done formerly by the North Transportation Company, and the steamer 'Admiral' was employed. It is now conducted by the Intercolonial Railway as a kind of subsidiary service.

Mr. MORIN. Is not the government paying too much for carrying the mail between these two places, especially in the summer time ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The parties we employed complained bitterly that it was not enough, and withdrew their steamer. We have had a great deal of trouble in getting anything to keep up the navigation there. Of course, a large number of passengers cross between these two points, and the steamer is in a sense a feeder for the Intercolonial.

Mr. MONK. I think my hon. friend from Dorchester is perhaps right, that this amount is either too much or not enough. The government acted very wisely in establishing this service, which has been very useful, enabling people in Montreal whose families were at Murray Bay to go down on Saturday, and return to their business at Montreal or other western points on Sunday evening. At the same time, the 'Admiral' is a very old steamer, and the accommodation it provided was most inferior in every way, although a considerable sum, comparatively speaking, was charged for the trip across. For the sum of $6,000 there ought to be a better steamer provided, and the government ought to fix the rate at a more moderate figure. This steamer is a very important feeder for the Intercolonial Railway, and last year it had very large passenger and a considerable freight traffic ; so that its profits must have been considerable. With regard to the larger question of keeping that ferry going all the year round, my hon. friend knows that the ferry between Quebec and Lévis crosses very regularly the whole year round, and it is asserted by many that the crossing between Murray Bay and River Ouelle could be performed just as easily. I think the government ought to consider the advisability of providing such service, either by itself constructing a steamer, or by giving a larger subsidy for a better steamer than that which runs at present. If the opinion which I have obtained is correct, that service could be provided without any very considerable additional expense.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. All I can say regarding the subsidy is that the party who got it complained very bitterly that he lost money and would not tender again, and we have had great trouble in supplying the service.

Mr. MONK. If my memory serves me right, the charge for crossing from Rivière Ouelle to Murray Bay, some eighteen or nineteen miles, is fifty cents, or a dollar for the round trip. In view of the subsidy of $6,000 and the kind of steamer that did the service last year, that seems to be a little excessive. It tends to prevent the extensive traffic that should exist, because that is the only means of daily communication between the north and south ; it would be the sole navigation in winter. This year the government should arrange that the fare should be more moderate.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I found it impossible to get anybody to tender for this service. I tried several times, and sent out several applications. I tried to obtain vessels in the upper lakes since we could not obtain them in Montreal or Quebec, and finally the matter was taken in hand by the Departments of Railways and Marine at my request. At present the Railway Department have borrowed a vessel from the Department of Public Works, and are running it as a kind of ferry. I cannot tell what rates the department are charging, but they have great interest in encouraging the traffic, and am sure will make the charge moderate.

Mr. MONK. If the department is doing the service, they can control the rates. I strongly call attention to the consideration that if that service were performed winter and summer and reasonable rates charged, there would be a great traffic indeed over that line, because it is the only outlet the north shore has. There is no communication between Quebec and Murray Bay except by water. I think that matter should engage the attention of the government.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have taken a note of what my hon. friend says, and will call the attention of the departments concerned to it. This is quite a recent vote.

Mr. MONK. Yes, only since two years. It was a very meritorious innovation, and I think could be improved.

Mr. TARTE. What is the name of the boat that is running now ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is the 'Eureka,' and belongs to the Public Works Department.

Mr. TARTE. I would ask the right hon. gentleman to look carefully into this matter. I know the boat very well. The department got it when I was minister. An upper deck has been added to it, which causes it to roll very much in a heavy sea. I think if the hon. minister will look carefully into the case, he will find it advantageous to change this boat for another one soon. I have been on board it many times, and while I would not like to say anything that would injure the line, because I am very favourable to it, I think that the boat has been raised by two decks, and it would be safer to change it for another. I do not want to throw any cold water on the line—very far from it. But I do not think the boat would be able to stand a heavy storm.

Mr. EMMERSON. The difficulty in getting a boat at all was so serious at one time that it looked as if that service could not be attended to this year. The matter is one of very great importance to the people in that section, especially those on the northern side, and it is a matter of prime importance to the Intercolonial.

Mr. MONK. Hear, hear.

Mr. EMMERSON. We have constructed, at considerable expense, the Rivière Ouelle branch for tourist traffic. If a properly constructed and properly kept boat were to run between Rivière Ouelle and Murray Bay, the traffic would be very considerable indeed. Last year it was quite an important factor in increasing the earnings of the Intercolonial. The matter is having very careful attention, and every activity was displayed during the past two months to procure a boat. There was no other boat available in the Public Works Department, and it was impossible to get one from the Marine Department. There have been negotiations with a view of getting a special boat, and I hope it may be possible to secure such a boat. I am informed by some parties interested in that section of the country, and particularly by my hon. friend from Charlevoix (Mr. Angers), that this boat is not quite large enough, but she is considered safe and satisfactory for the present. We are putting forth every effort to get a larger boat with a view of later service, and I have reason to believe that the efforts being put forth by the Marine and Railway Departments, in connection with the Public Works Department, will result in a service being established which will accommodate, not merely the summer tourist traffic, but the later traffic of the fall, and even of the winter months.

Mr. TARTE. The boat now in use is a very strong one. I went all around the gulf in it, but that was before the upper decks were added. She draws 12 feet of water. If the captain is a safe man, he will not take the risk of running during a storm, because the boat could not stand a storm, raised as she has been.

Mr. MONK. I am glad to hear the Minister of Railways anticipate that considerable business will be developed by this line. The Intercolonial is not paying so much that we would not be glad to see its traffic increase. It would be increased a very great deal if there was really good service there. The boat at present in use is, of course, inadequate for the traffic. I do not know who runs the ferry boats between Quebec and Lévis, but the boats are very strong ones, and the owners have no doubt acquired extensive experience in that kind of navigation. If one-half I have heard be true, we could navigate from Murray Bay to Rivière Ouelle almost continuously. The crossing might be interrupted a day or two, but could be carried on pretty regularly. Under these circumstances, I should think my right hon. friend might perhaps call for tenders for the construction of a suitable boat. It would not require a very fine boat, though that might be desirable for summer traffic, but it would require a good, strong, safe boat; and, the traffic being what I anticipate between the north and south shore and over the Intercolonial, it would require a boat of considerable size. I think the matter ought to be attended to without delay.

Steam communication between Prince Edward Island, Cape Breton and Newfoundland, $8,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This was a contract with Messrs. Hugh McMillan and Henry Aitken.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. What will be the starting point in the province of Prince Edward Island for this service and what will be the port or ports of call in that province ? Also, what will be the port or ports of call in Cape Breton and the port of destination in Newfoundland ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Leaving Charlottetown, thence to Bridgetown, Annandale and Souris, Prince Edward Island; thence to Glace Bay and Sydney, and thence to St. John's, Newfoundland; returning over the same route.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. In any agreement that may be made with a company for this service, that will be one of the conditions, of course?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is our intention, of course.

Steam service between Canada and Australia, $194,666.66.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hon. gentlemen probably will remember that we used to pay £25,000 for this service. he Australian government and ourselves have added £15,000 of which we may pay £9,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What steamers perform this service? What is the frequency of the trips; and what trade, if any, has been developed; also between what ports in Canada and Australia is the service conducted?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The service is performed by the steamships 'Miowera,' 'Aorangi,' and 'Moana.' It is a four weekly service, and is carried on from Vancouver to Sydney.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is this the same as the service to Japan?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, it is the same service except that we made last year the addition I have referred to, of £16,000 of which we pay £9,000, and the Australian government the balance.

Steam service between Paspebiac and Gaspé basin, during the months of December, 1904, and January, 1905, $3,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is in the nature of an experiment to see if we can prolong that service during the winter months. We are now in negotiation and hope to obtain the service.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We had an item in the estimates for this year; did the hon. minister utilize that?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, we did not succeed in getting a boat to carry on the service during December and January. They were afraid to face the ice in the Gulf at that time.

For the service of a wrecking plant on the St. Lawrence for the year ending June 30, 1905, $10,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is in the nature of a retainer. For this the wrecking plant must be held in readiness constantly to go to any vessel that may be in trouble.

Mr. J. D. REID. When did the government begin granting this subsidy?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it was two years ago.

Mr. J. D. REID. As the hon. minister is aware this same firm has been in the wrecking business for the last thirty years. The same plant has always been kept in readiness. These people have been making a lot of money annually. About two years ago when Captain Leslie, of Kingston, whom the hon. minister knows well, removed his wrecking plant down to that district to take part in assisting these vessels that were wrecked, and spent an immense amount of money, the hon. minister immediately gave this other wrecking firm a subsidy. By this, of course, Captain Leslie is placed at a disadvantage. It seems most unfair that when a gentleman with the ability of Captain Leslie, a gentleman whom, I am sure, the minister will say is a most reliable man and whose wrecking plant is a very fine one, removes down there, he should be met with a subsidy to an opposition concern. This wrecking firm has been in existence for thirty or forty years without a subsidy, and I would like to know why this subsidy of $10,000 is now paid to it within the last two of three years. What is the necessity for it? They had their plant there, I saw the plant there ten years ago, they had an enormous plant of their own. They have some vessels, I think they sold the 'Lord Stanley,' but they have got the 'Strathcona,' a vessel of about the same size. There seems to be something wrong in this matter when a subsidy is given at this particular time, though another wrecking outfit has gone down there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So far as I remember, the subsidy was granted to the Messrs. Davis before Captain Leslie had gone down there at all. I think it is only within the last year or two that Captain Leslie has gone down the St. Lawrence.

Mr. J. D. REID. He has been there some time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In the next place, the 'Lord Strathcona' is a very much more powerful boat and has much better appliances for wrecking than any that have been in the service before. I can only say that this was a request upon the government by, I think, the entire shipping interests in the St. Lawrence. An enormously large and influential petition was presented to us, and I remember that a large deputation called on myself and I think the Premier. The whole of the shipping interests of the St. Lawrence made a request to us that we would see that this service was kept constantly in the best condition. Unless this grant was given it would be optional with Mr. Davis to have taken his craft anywhere, and I believe he had been in the habit of taking it occasionally far outside the St. Lawrence to assist vessels in distress to go to Boston and New York. I have no wish, as the hon. gentleman knows himself, to discriminate in favour of one against the other ; but when the whole St. Lawrence trade come to us and request that we should insist on this vessel being kept steadily in readiness, it seems to me a proper request to make, and everybody knows that at that time the St. Lawrence route was a little in disfavour owing to the number of accidents that happened and the great difficulty in bringing assistance to vessels in distress. Since this grant has been made a very considerable salvage of property has been successfully effected, which, I think, could not have been affected unless this vessel had been always in hand and ready to go out.

Mr. J. D. REID. I know that Capt. Leslie has effected quite a lot of salvage since he has been down there, and I know for a fact that his wrecking plant is just the same now as it has been for the last ten or twelve years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The 'Lord Strathcona' is a much better vessel than they ever had before.

Mr. J. D. REID. I think the 'Lord Stanley' was the best steamer there previously. I have seen the 'Lord Stanley' and she was the larger vessel. They have purchased the 'Strathcona' since this subsidy was given and they are making a large amount of money there yearly. They never went to Boston, because there is a large wrecking plant at Boston which they could not interfere with. It is a very easy matter for Mr. Davis to get up a petition and every one of the vessel men will sign it ; they would not want to refuse for fear they might get into trouble themselves. As this wrecking firm has been in existence for the last thirty or forty years, and in addition the government have given them the Lévis dry dock,—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not aware of that.

Mr. J. D. REID. I understand that to be the case. This has all been given free, and if such is the case, it does seem strange that the government should now give this subsidy. In addition, by giving this subsidy, the Minister of Trade and Commerce is doing his best to get Captain Leslie and his fleet off the St. Lawrence. I know for a fact that he has saved vessels when the 'Strathcona' could not get there soon enough. I think it would be fair for the Minister of Trade and Commerce to divide this subsidy with Mr. Leslie, or else give him a subsidy as well, because he has rendered great services to the shipping industry. I think the minister should be a little easier with Captain Leslie and not give these people a subsidy that will have the effect of driving him out of business and thus leave the vessel men in that locality at the mercy of one firm.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This objection will apply, I am afraid, to a great many subsidies besides the present one. But I am advised that the 'Lord Strathcona' is very much the most powerful steamer that has ever been engaged in the wrecking business on the St. Lawrence. The first subsidy was granted to an inferior steamer, the one the hon. gentleman referred to, the 'Stanley.'

Mr. J. D. REID. When was that granted?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A matter of three or four years ago.

Steam service between Petit de Grat and the Intercolonial Railway terminus at Mulgrave, $3,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is for the purpose of facilitating the transport of fish between these two points, and it relieves the other vesels from calling at Arichat.

Steamboat service between Canada and Mexico, $50,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to this vote I may say to the committee that contracts have been called for the purpose of ascertaining whether we can promote communication between Canada and Mexico. The Mexican government have agreed to give a similar sum of $50,000. We will receive in a little while, I hope, some communication on this head. The intention is, in the first place, to see if we can establish a service on the Pacific coast from Vancouver and Victoria, touching at various points on the Mexican Pacific ocean. If we succeed in that we will also see if we can establish a service on the other side, going from points in the Gulf of Mexico up to St. John and Halifax. As yet we are not in a position to say how far our negotiations will be successful, or what tenders we will receive. I trust in a short time that I shall be in receipt of the information.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Were tenders issued in the first instance calling for a service on the Pacific side ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They called for both. But the Mexican government appeared to think that it would be better for them to have a service on the Pacific side, and they propose to devote the major part of their subsidy to that side. We are at a disadvantage no doubt in the Gulf of Mexico owing to the number of American routes that converge there. I should like myself to see the service established on both sides of the continent, but we may have to confine ourselves in the first instance to the western side. If the hon. gentleman remembers the geographical configuration of Mexico, he will see that our chances are better on the Pacific coast than on the Atlantic coast at present.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the nature of the trade that is expected to be done ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That nature of the trade that we will expect to do on the Pacific coast will be chiefly the export of coal, lumber, and possibly a certain amount of fish. Those I think, will be the staples and any general cargo that may be picked up from time to time. The difficulty there is, as in other places, that the Mexicans have not a great deal to send us back. They may send us hides and tropical fruits such as we receive from the West Indian islands on the Pacific side. On the eastern side we might have a better chance of obtaining a certain amount of trade in sisal via St. John and Halifax, and we could no doubt send down to the maritime provinces a considerable amount of lumber and fish. Mexico being a large fish consuming country. But, in this as in many other cases the most favourable circumstance is that the Mexican government are anxious to encourage us. This offer was volunteered by them. The Mexican government have made a proposition, or at any rate, they have shown the greatest willingness to encourage us and I think I may venture to assure the committee that the disposition of the Mexican people generally is very favourable to Canada. I presume my hon. friend is aware of the fact that Canadian capitalists have been entering into some very large enterprises in the city of Mexico and its vicinity and altogether the temper of the Mexicans towards us is very good. How far these commercial advantages will aid us in establishing a large trade remains to be seen but I do not think we can go amiss in meeting an offer such as we very seldom receive from any other quarter. They are contributing dollar for dollar.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the amount of our export and import trade ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Our trade with Mexico is very small at the present time but it is probable that a certain amount of our exports go to Mexico via New York and are classified as imports from the United States. The total amount of trade is very small at the present time. Whether we can develop a larger trade remains to be seen.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This is somewhat in the nature of an experiment ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is in the nature of an experiment but we have thought that when the Mexican government have displayed so much good-will we might better meet them. There are good reasons why we and the Mexicans stand particularly well with each other.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at Three o'clock.

Trent canal—to complete west entrance pier at lock, $1,500.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). This pier was completed for a length of about 175 feet. It requires about 125 feet of further extension and it is estimated that the cost will be $1,500. The same remarks apply to the next item for $1,500 for the pier at Burleigh.

Trent Canal—Dredging—Katchawannoe lake, $3,500.

Mr. EMMERSON. We require to deepen the channel between Lakefield and Young's point in a number of places as during periods of low water the boats ground.

Mr. LENNOX. Why is this charged to income ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Because it is an old part of the canal that has been navigable.

Mr. LENNOX. We generally have to make a complaint the other way.

Mr. EMMERSON. I know, we are damned if we do and damned if we don't.

Mr. LENNOX. I am not going to object to this.

Trent canal—blasting and dredging channel above lock 1, Lakefield, $3,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. The water here is very shallow and requires to be deepened at least two feet. This work is all done by contract except the dredging. We have a dredge and do our own dredging.

Trent canal—to provide one dredging engine, boiler and steel boom, $6,500.

Mr. BLAIN. Is that awarded by tender and contract ?

Mr. EMMERSON. We will ask for tenders. There was an item last year for the rebuilding of the hull of the dredge 'Otonabee.' That has been completed and it was intended to place the machinery of the old dredge in the new hull but it was found that the amount of repairs on the machinery would be so great that it is deemed more economical to purchase new machinery. We will ask for tenders from the trade.

Mr. J. D. REID. Do you simply write to a few firms in the trade ?

Mr. EMMERSON. We advertise in the newspapers.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is that going to be the rule ? It has not been done for the last few years.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have been doing it right along.

Mr. J. D. REID. You have not been there very long.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. There is an improvement already.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is this to be advertised ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I assume that no change will take place ; I have not contemplated any change.

Mr. J. D. REID. There were a great many cases along the canals where tenders were not called for in the newspapers.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is only in the case where there are only a few manufacturers of certain articles in which case we send a circular to them and so avoid the expense of advertising, but with respect to cement and all other items of that kind in connection with the canal, so far as I have had any experience in the department and been able to observe, general advertisements are placed in the newspapers. I know that every newspaper in the country wants an advertisement.

Mr. J. D. REID. Prior to 1896 the government would advertise for tenders along the St. Lawrence in the local papers.

Mr. EMMERSON. So we do now.

Mr. J. D. REID. Tell me of one newspaper along the St. Lawrence canal in which there is given an advertisement for supplies ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not suppose my hon. friend reads some of the newspapers in which the advertisements are to be found or he would see them. We cannot advertise in all the papers. I know that we advertise in the Peterborough, Hamilton, Toronto and Ottawa papers. We are sometimes a little select ; we have to select one out of a great number.

Mr. J. D. REID. No tenders are called for locally by advertisement but letters are sent to a few friends of the government asking them what they will furnish supplies for, and the same thing applies to the building of scows.

Mr. EMMERSON. I say most distinctly with reference to the scows that we would not invite general competition all over the province. That would cost more for advertising than the amount appropriated. In the immediate vicinity there will be a general advertisement. There are three dump scows required in that section of the country for which we ask $2,500 in this vote and the public will have an opportunity of competing, but it would be unwise and unbusinesslike to ask for tenders all over the province owing to the expense of advertising.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like to know why tenders are not asked for along the St. Lawrence for supplies or for the building of scows. If the minister would advertise in one or two papers, one in each county along the St. Lawrence, I am sure that would not be asking too much. There are dozens of men there who can furnish supplies or build any scows required. The cost of the supplies for the maintenance of the canals has been almost doubled since 1896, and I do not believe one tender has been called for in the last seven years. The parties furnishing these supplies are outside of the county, and there are many people in the county friends of the government too, who would be glad to furnish these supplies. Therefore I think the government should adopt the system of advertising for tenders instead of distributing these orders without proper competition. It is understood that these shall be advertised for tender ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What are these to be used for ?

Mr. EMMERSON. In connection with the dredging along the Trent waterway.

Trent canal—to complete rebuilding dam at Peterborough, $4,000.

Mr. LENNOX. Is this the last item connected with the Trent Valley system ?

Mr. EMMERSON. In the main estimates. I do not see my hon. friend from East Durham (Mr. Ward) here. He wants to speak on the subject, and I am going to arrange so that he will have the opportunity to do so.

Mr. MORIN. I wish to ask the minister if he is going to bring some more estimates regarding the railway, as I wish to ask some questions ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Does my hon. friend want to ask regarding the Intercolonial or the Grand Trunk Pacific ?

Mr. MORIN. I do not know.

Mr. EMMERSON. Then, I do not understand my hon. friend. If he wants information on either, he will have the opportunity when the proper items come up ; but in connection with canals, it would be a little irregular.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand that my hon. friend wants to ask some questions in regard to the construction of a railway near Lévis. So long as the opportunity is afforded to him, that will be satisfactory, I think.

Mr. MORIN. The minister will know at once whose railroad it is, which is under construction near Lévis.

St. Peter's canal—dredging, $2,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. $1,500 of this is a revote. This amount is to be expended for removing a shoal at the south entrance of the canal and also for doing some dredging at the north entrance. At low tide there is only nine feet of water, and at times vessels cannot leave the canal until the tide rises. There was difficulty last fall in getting a dredge to do the work. It will cost approximately 60 cents a yard, as a dredge will have to be brought from a distance for a few day's work. The whole is expected to cost about $2,000.

Rideau canal—to rebuild bridge at Smith's Falls, $5,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is to rebuild a bridge across the west channel of the Rideau canal, below the basin, at the town of Smith's Falls. The present bridge was built many years ago of timber, and has been repaired and maintained ever since. It is over twenty years old, and is beyond repair.

Mr. LAVELL. Has the minister made any arrangement for rebuilding the dam at Poonamalee ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That will necessarily be provided later on, we could not in the main estimates, which were prepared before the accident occurred.

Mr. LAVELL. I hope some provision will be made for covering the damages caused by the breaking of the dam.

Culbute canal—damages by flooding caused by dams of the canal, $2,305.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is this an annual charge ? What does it mean ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This canal is on the Ottawa river. The canal has not been much used, and very serious damage has been caused by flooding. For 1903-4 there was an appropriation of $2,315, which was paid. The damages were inquired into by Mr. Surtees, civil engineer, of Ottawa.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If it is a case of permanent flooding, one would have supposed that the land covered by the waters thrown back by the dam should be expropriated once for all. If that is not the case, I would like to understand just what the situation is. It seems unusual that a charge for flooding should be an annual charge.

Mr. EMMERSON. This canal is now abandoned entirely and by proclamation has been done away with. That was done within the last two or three months. It was built previous to confederation for the benefit of the lumbermen on the Ottawa river. There was only sufficient land procured for the purposes of the canal and none purchased to guard against flooding, and the result has been damages from year to year. An unusual damage occurred a year ago last spring near the township of Allumette Island and under the advice of the Justice Department we made the best settlement we could.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. One would suppose that if the canal were no longer useful, it would be better to do away with the dam instead of paying $2,500 annually, which represents an interest charge on $75,000 at the rate the government pays interest.

Mr. EMMERSON. An attempt was made to do away with it. One-third of the dam was blown up but the lumbermen universally protested. They said that even though abolished as a canal and even though the government repudiated liability in connection with it, yet it should remain as it was, so that they might get whatever benefit from it they could. The government will no longer be liable for the value of the damage done.

Chambly canal—to macadamize towpath, $9,075.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is to macadamize ten and half miles nine feet wide, twelve inches deep in centre and nine inches at the sides. It will be let by tender and contract.

Mr. BLAIN. Has any of the towpath been macadamized heretofore ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, this towpath was a number of years metallized with gravel from Lake Champlain. It is now almost impossible to procure this material, and as the metal is practically worn out, we must substitute macadam, ordinary macadam without delay. It is supposed to cost $3,000 per mile. The amount asked for will only macadamize three miles.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is not that kept in regular repair annually ? Last year quite an amount was spent.

Mr. EMMERSON. That was in connection with the road and not the towpath.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is not the towpath kept in repair regularly ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes. The towpath is on one side of the canal and the road on the other. Some portions of the roadway were macadamized last year, and a vote was given a few years ago to macadamize a further portion of the road.

Mr. J. D. REID. Surely $3,000 a mile is a very large amount to macadamize a narrow road.

Mr. EMMERSON. I can give the estimate. The cost per mile for the material, labour and rolling is $3,025. That is the amount made up by the engineer. Of course we will ask for public tender and will then discover whether this is too high an estimate or not.

Mr. J. D. REID. What position can the government take in so far as the collection of tolls is concerned ? There are $34,068 paid for the collection of canal tolls and none have been collected for the last two years. There is no reason why the lockmasters should not be utilized to issue passes and thus save $34,000 per annum. Even though there were a mistake in the lockmaster issuing passes, it is easily recti-fied. It seems to me that that amount of $34,068 should be saved.

Mr. EMMERSON. As my hon. friend knows, it was determined to try the experiment of abolishing the tolls on the canals for two years and see what effect that would have on the traffic of the country. It was also stated that these men, some of whom were long in the service, should be continued in order to keep an accurate record of the business done. After this year, the whole matter will be determined. It may be that the tolls will be permanently abolished, but we will know from the returns given just what the effect has been.

Mr. J. D. REID. This is the second year. What was the result of the year's operations? Did it increase trade? Are the results such that the government would continue the present free system?

Mr. EMMERSON. Last year there was some improvement. As to this year, judging by what has been done up to this date, it would be a question whether, taking the average into consideration, there has been an improvement in the trade.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not think that the re-imposition of the tolls would be a good move. The abandonment of the tolls tends to bring more trade by the St. Lawrence route. But, for the very reason that I think the tolls should not be re-imposed, I feel very strongly that the government should at once reduce that expense. If the hon. minister will not do it this year, I hope that next year the government—whatever government may be in power—will put it right.

Mr. EMMERSON. Any opinion offered by my hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Reid), or by myself, on that subject, could be only a casual opinion, and the government could not act upon it. It is necessary to have accurate information with respect to the trade. On the basis of that accurate information the government will determine what is the best policy. I know how difficult it would be to restore the tolls, even though in the judgment of the country it would be wise to do so.

Mr. J. D. REID. The lockmasters are quite capable of issuing the passes which would be the basis of the information. Of course, where money had to be collected—and it was collected in large amounts—the lockmasters, perhaps, did not wish to take the responsibility of holding that money, especially for the small salaries they are getting. But there is no reason they should not issue the passes. It does seem ridiculous and absurd that a man should be paid $1,000 for doing work that the lockmaster, who is already under pay, could do. And this work is done by the lockmasters on the Rideau canal. That being so, why cannot the lockmasters do it on the St. Lawrence canal?

Mr. EMMERSON. It would not do to do this work in a careless or haphazard way. This information was necessary. Quite a number of these men were in the service, and, to carry out the hon. gentleman's idea, they would have to be superannuated or dismissed; with the result, possibly, that at the end of two or three years it would be necessary to fill their places again. The extra expense is certainly not to be taken into consideration as against the importance of the information that these gentlemen are required to secure and furnish for the department.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister's statement is a reflection upon the men on the Rideau canal, who actually do this work.

Mr. EMMERSON. Nobody has been dismissed on the Rideau canal. The men who were doing this work before on the Rideau canal are doing it now just as on the other canals.

Canals, miscellaneous—surveys and inspections, $3,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is an ordinary annual vote. The expenditure under this head for the year ending 30th June, 1904, was $3,252.18.

Mr. J. D. REID. Since the death of the late Mr. Rubidge, the steamer 'Alert' has been in charge of the superintendent of canals in that district. Surely the government are not going to furnish the superintendent with a pleasure yacht to run up and down the canal. There has never been anything of that kind in the history of this country on any of the canals. This boat, in fact, is larger than the ordinary pleasure yacht; she is a steamer that costs $8,000 or $10,000 per annum to run.

Mr. EMMERSON. The steamer 'Alert' has been for years employed on the canals that were under the supervision of the superintending engineer, Mr. Rubidge. By the death of Mr. Rubidge the office became vacant, and it has not been filled. In the meantime the boat has been placed in charge of the superintendent of canals in the same way as the rest of the plant connected with the canals. At one time, in addition to the superintending engineer, they had a superintendent of the Cornwall canal and also a superintendent of the Williamsburgh canal. The present superintendent, Mr. Stewart, is now in charge of both canals. He has to go from one place to the other. The point raised by my hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Reid) is one that occurred to my own mind as to the necessity of continuing the steamer. If the dredging is to be done and the engineers—even though there is no superintending engineer—have to get out at the different points, and if the superintendent has to go to the different canals, it may be necessary, for the present at least, to continue the steamer. Meantime, I purpose taking into consideration whether some cheaper method cannot be devised, and this steamer placed elsewhere or disposed of.

Mr. J. D. REID. I remember the way the 'Alert' first came on that route. A number of years ago the government had under construction the Cornwall canal, the Farran's Point canal, the Williamsburgh canal, the North Channel and the Galops Rapids. At each one of these works there was an engineer in charge. The late Mr. Rubidge was superintending engineer over all the works, and the government furnished him with this steamer to enable him to run up and down and inspect them. These works have practically all been completed, and there is nothing going on at the present time except at Galops Rapids and the North Channel, which are side by side. At that time there were two superintendents not very distant from each other. When a change of government took place it was decided to abolish their positions, and these two men were dismissed, and Mr. Rubidge was placed in charge of all the canals as well as of the work of construction. These two men that were dismissed were Dr. Hickey and Mr. Ross. Shortly after it was decided that it would be well to appoint two men as assistants, but practically they were in the same position as the others had been. One is Mr. Lally at Cornwall, just as able a man as Dr. Hickey or Mr. Ross. One was appointed for Morrisburg and one for Cornwall, with Mr. Stewart superintending the two systems. Now we have got the same number of men as before, though they are called by different names. Mr. Stewart is over the canal in the same way that Mr. Rubidge was, except that he has no construction work to do. I am satisfied that this expenditure of $8,000 or $10,000 per annum for this steamer running up and down, is waste of money. Suppose this man wants to go from Morrisburg to Cornwall, a distance of twelve or thirteen miles. In the olden times the superintendent hired a livery man to drive him up at a cost of $2 or $3 per day, while the cost in the whole season would probably be $300 or $400. But now this steamer is put on, with a crew, and it will cost a lot to run her up and down. A pleasure party will be brought on board of this steamer, and she will run up to Cornwall and on as far as Prescott, and then turn and head down towards Williamsburg probably at a cost of $50 for the trip; whereas the superintendent could drive along the whole system in a couple of hours and at very small expense. Now the government have put on a boat which is a laughing stock for the whole public, even strong Liberals cannot believe that it will be continued. It is such an outrageous thing that the government should drop it. I was told the other day that Mr. Stewart had started out with a great pleasure picnic from Morrisburg, simply going to Cornwall, I presume.

Mr. EMMERSON. I don't know as to that. I am satisfied that Mr. Stewart will not make any improper use of the boat, or any use that is not necessary in connection with the canal. My hon. friend knows that Mr. Rubidge had this steamer for all these years, and I do not know that my hon. friend made any serious complaint about the cost.

Mr. J. D. REID. I complained about this steamer every year, about its being kept up for Mr. Rubidge's service after the work was completed.

Mr. EMMERSON. Mr. Rubidge only died a month ago, and the matter came under my observation very recently. I have not had an opportunity of looking into it myself. I hoped the session would have been through before now, and that I would have an opportunity of going down there and studying the situation. In the meantime this boat has been placed under the charge of the superintendent of these canals, who is the proper man to have charge of her. Also there are some engineers engaged finishing up the work, and this boat is placed at their disposal the same as Mr. Rubidge used it in connection with the canal works. I shall determine what to do, and if we find that the work of the superintendent can be carried on by the use of a train or in any other way, the cheapest and best course will be adopted.

Mr. J. D. REID. I understand that when Mr. Rubidge died Mr. Rheaume was placed in charge.

Mr. EMMERSON. No, Mr. Rheaume has not been placed in any different position from that he occupied as assistant of Mr. Rubidge. He is kept on there, but the superintendence of the work is maintained at the head office here. Mr. Rheaume has no position analogous to that of Mr. Rubidge. There are three or four assistant engineers there, my hon. friend probably knows the number better that I do.

Mr. J. D. REID. Mr. Stewart is simply using the boat to run up and down the canal. Mr. Rubidge had not done much with the boat during the present season because he was too ill, and the boat was lying at Cornwall doing nothing. I do not know why it should be taken out and put on a new service running up and down the canal. If it had been placed in Mr. Stewart's charge to be responsible for it, that would be a different thing. Every time she goes out it means a lot of money. Mr. Stewart goes down to Cornwall armed with a letter from the department, showing that this boat is handed over to him, is in his charge and that he can do as he likes with it because it is handed over to the engineering staff, and Mr. Rheaume's responsibility for it has been taken away.

Mr. EMMERSON. Mr. Rheaume was in no way responsible for that boat. Mr. Stewart, the superintendent of the canal is responsible for its proper use just in the same way as he is responsible for any other plant in connection with the canal. He is instructed to place the boat at the disposal of the engineers in connection with the work on the canal. He is now using it in connection with the work on the canal.

Mr. J. D. REID. He is employing it for his own use on the canal. There is no work of any kind going on now. I hope that when this matter comes up again it will be straightened out in such a way that the public as a whole can feel that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals does not wish to put an expenditure upon these canals such as was never known or that no person, either Liberal or Conservative, would undertake to justify.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to know why the vote is required. Is not this inspection and survey made by officers of the department? And if so, what is the purpose of the vote?

Mr. EMMERSON. Are you referring to the $3,000?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is in connection with the travelling expenses of officers. Officers of the department and resident engineers are sent out to different points from time to time and this is to cover their expenses.

Mr. FOWLER. How much did you expend last year?

Mr. EMMERSON. $2,252.18.

Mr. LENNOX. You are asking for $3,000 and this is a revote.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is an annual vote, not a revote.

Railways and canals—surveys and inspections, railways, $18,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is for the same thing.

Mr. LENNOX. If the hon. minister will refer to the Auditor General's Report for 1903, pages W—48 and W—47, he will find an account of the expenses of the cattle-guard commission amounting to $6,942.83. Then it says:

Less charged to surveys and inspections, railways (page W—47), $1,946.61.

leaving an apparent total of $4,996.22. I want to know from the hon. minister what is the reason for taking off that $1,946.61? That is a portion of the expenses incurred in connection with the railway cattle-guard commission. Turning back to page W—47 we find, referring to that item of $1,946.61, the expenses of Mr. F. W. Holt, under the heading of 'Miscellaneous surveys and inspections; cattle-guard commission' showing that this is an item in connection with the cattle-guard commission and that alone. I refer to that because of the somewhat peculiar system of bookkeeping which seems to obtain and for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that the commission actually cost us $6,492.83. In conection with the matter I had occasion to ask some questions a short time ago. The questions and answers appear in 'Herald' of the 13th July last. I asked:

Did the services of Geo. Robertson, Esq., as commissioner, from August 16, 1902, to February 13, 1903, 181 days, include a Sunday service as such commissioner?

The hon. Minister of Public Works gave the following answer to that question:

Mr. Robertson was paid $5 per day for days he actually worked, which did not include Sundays, and reasonable travelling expenses and living expenses when absent from home.

As a matter of fact the hon. minister will find, whether it is due to an error or otherwise, that, if he takes the dates that Mr. Robertson puts in his own account——

Services: Aug. 16, 1902-Feb. 13, 1903, 181 d. at $5, $905.

—it includes every Sunday. It surely could not have been the intention that Mr. Robertson should work on behalf of the country in connection with the inspection of cattle-guards and superintending the general conduct of that wall-eyed steer on Sundays as well as on other days of the week. I do not know how it is that the hon. minister gives the answer in the way he does saying that he was only paid for the actual work he did not including Sundays.

Mr. EMMERSON. I got the answer from the accountant of the department.

Mr. LENNOX. It is not a matter of great importance but it is as well to be correct.

Mr. EMMERSON. Certainly, I supposed the accountant to be correct.

Mr. LENNOX. If the hon. minister will add up the figures he will find that they include every day. I also find from the returns that have been brought down that there is a difficulty between Mr. F. W. Holt, one of the commissioners and the government. I have asked whether the difficulty has been adjusted but I have not received an answer. Probably the hon. minister will answer me and say whether the matter is settled or not.

Mr. EMMERSON. I can tell the hon. gentleman how the matter stands.

Mr. LENNOX. Probably I had better say what I have to say. While Mr. Holt got for his services $150 a month he is claiming a thousand dollars more, according to his correspondence. He gives reasons which I think ought to commend themselves to the minister although I do not know whether they would commend themselves to the farming community. I notice in connection with these accounts that the grievances which used to be urged against the Conservative Premier in regard to the charging of cab-hire are continued by the Liberal government. There are also charges here for the polishing of these gentlemen's boots which I suppose would have to be done if they were at home. They also include an account for the expenses of providing office room at St. John and so on. I find that Mr. Holt says that the arrangement made with him by the government was that he should get $150 a month and his actual expenses. He claims that he is entitled to more money. These expenses include not only items such as I have mentioned but they also include railway fare. If the railways are to be exonerated from the payment of any other sum I think they might at least have been asked to bear that part of the expense, to carry these parties from place to place. Mr. Holt further claims that he is entitled to extra compensation and in writing to Mr. Schreiber on the 7th of January, 1904, he puts in this very weightly claim. I want to call the attention of the minister to it, and indirectly the attention of the country, as indicating exactly what was done on behalf of the people in the matter of cattle-guards and the kind of investigation that actually took place in this matter. Mr. Holt says :

> When the tests were completed we had not then found a thoroughly satisfactory guard. . . . . It then became my duty to find out the reason——

I have some doubt about that, but that is what he says :

> —the only way to do this was to study the structure of the animal as a piece of mechanism. This has been done as to his anatomy by the veterinarian as a surgeon, but I have been unable to find an idea as to his capacity as a machine other than in his ordinary walk.

I suppose he means his ordinary walk in life.

> In emergency motions as in passing a cattle-guard.

It breaks off abruptly there. I do not know exactly what he means. I suppose he means that no special study has been made of the animal in emergency motions as in passing a cattle guard.

> And it was from this point of view I have had to treat it. In making this search, I have found that there is very little literature available to the general reader, &c.

And upon this basis he contends that he is to apply himself seriously to this matter, studying this question seriously from the standpoint of the mechanism of the animal and his action in cases of emergency and that he is therefore entitled to at least $1,000 more. I do not know how the government looks upon it, but he gives very good reasons, and I am sorry to say casts some doubt upon the bona fides of the government in this matter. He says : I went at it seriously, I thought the government were in earnest. He does not say that the government were not in earnest but he suggests that the government did not bona fide intend to find out a suitable and sufficient cattle-guard. I would be glad to have an explanation from the minister as to the position in which the account stands, as it does not appear to be closed.

Mr. EMMERSON. It seems to be generally admitted by Mr. Holt and all interested that he was employed in connection with this commission at a fixed rate of payment which was settled at the rate of $150 per month and all his actual travelling expenses and other expenses incident to the work of himself and his co-commissioner. He was paid in accordance with that agreement but subsequently he presented to the department a claim for an additional amount because he had been employed longer than he had anticipated when he accepted the position. Mr. Holt, is, I may say, an engineer of good reputation, and personally I would speak in the highest terms of him both as a man and, so far as I had experience with him, as an engineer. He was arbitrator with Mr. Walter Shanley and Mr. Surtees in a celebrated case in New Brunswick in connection with which I was employed as one of the counsel. Later on I appeared before a tribunal of which he was a member and I may say that on both of these occasions he distinguished himself by the care with which he considered everything and the attention he gave to the cases and the arguments presented before the court. As I knew him well professionally and personally as a friend, he, naturally, after I came into office, presented his view of the case to me. Although the matter had been determined by the department previous to my accession to office he thought I would review it. I did so ; I went into the matter very closely, and I felt that an agreement having been made and carried out both by himself and the department I could not recommend that the decision of the department should either be reviewed or set aside by action of the Council. I felt that the Auditor General too would not authorize any departure from an agreement which had been carefully entered into and acted upon by both parties to it. Under these circumstances, while I would have liked very much to have seen him get an additional amount I felt that by reason of the agreement entered into by him it was impossible to allow him any additional compensation, even although the time occupied by him was longer than he had anticipated. Usually in such cases when men are willing to work for so much a month the more months the merrier, and I would rather argue it from that standpoint, but in this case a different view was taken by Mr. Holt. I am sorry that Mr. Holt was dissatisfied with the decision but I certainly could not reverse it and I think that the judgment of this committee will be that the decision arrived at by me was correct.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the minister think that Mr. Holt was required to spend as much time as he claims to have spent in this investigation? Has the minister satisfied himself as to the length of time he took in making this supposed investigation? I ask this because the prevailing opinion in Ontario, so far as I can understand, is that ten times as much time was consumed as was necessary and not one-tenth as much information was obtained as should have been secured. Any ordinary man, not claiming to be especially skilful can find cattle-guards that will turn cattle at a crossing. This gentleman seems to have spent month after month in accomplishing nothing, whether he was trying to accomplish anything or not I do not know but his effort seemed to be to find some defect in every cattle-guard which was submitted for his examination. I attended almost every meeting of that commission in Ontario and I know that a great deal of useful information was submitted to him and many models were shown to him but he did not find any of these worthy of consideration. He seems to have gone off to discover the structure of the animal and how he would walk in an emergency. I cannot understand for the life of me what Mr. Holt was getting at there unless he was trying to make a report to this government that the railways could not get an effective cattle-guard.

I repeat that at all the meetings in Ontario at which I was present, and I was at all but two, a great many good structures were offered to these gentlemen; and there were no two opinions that many of them were effective, and would turn back ninety-nine out of one hundred animals. The hon. gentleman, not expecting at that time to be Minister of Railways, probably did not go down to the fair grounds here, as I did, when Mr. Holt was experimenting, or he would have found that the situation which Mr. Holt was trying to deal with there was not the situation as it existed in the country at all. He did not have a highway, from which the animal would have to turn aside to the right or the left to get on the railway, but he constructed a railway, and put the animal on the track, and surrounded the track with human beings on both sides, and urged the animal along the track and over the guard to the open highway; and as the animal had no other way to go, he struggled across. Therefore, because the animal got over the guard, Mr. Holt said the guard would not turn back the animal. That was very different from the situation in the country which Mr. Holt was employed to investigate. Therefore I think Mr. Holt has been very well paid, particularly as he chose to make a bargain at $5 a day; but I wonder that the minister did not tell him that three-fourths of his time was wasted, and that the commission accomplished nothing. I do not know why the report of this commission has not been published and circulated through the country. I can only suppose that it is because it does not contain the information which the government thought it ought to contain. Perhaps it is not a work of very great literary quality; but I do know that when this matter was brought up in the House, the reason the late Minister of Railways gave for not making the railways liable was that he was going to have the matter investigated by a commission, and that when he found what was the safest and most effective guard—a guard which he might call the standard—he would pass a law to make the railways adopt it; and they would be liable if they did not adopt it and not liable if they did and it failed to turn back the cattle. But, like many things which this government has promised, that did not happen, and we got the law which was contended for by myself and others on this side of the House, making the railways liable in any event and allowing them to provide their own guard. We are now dealing with the cost of this commission. I understand that Mr. Holt got $5,000, and that he wants $100 a month more. I think the minister, when inquiring into this question, ought to see whether or not Mr. Holt earned the money he did get. The farmers of the country, who are paying this expenditure of $6,000, which they have always claimed through their representatives in this House who knew anything about the matter, was a useless expenditure, believe that the results of this commission have been absolutely nil to the country. I think the Minister of Railways owes it to the farmers who pay the larger portion of the taxes of this country, to see whether Mr. Holt earned the money he did get or not, and, if he did not, to have it refunded. The farmers do not know what particular instructions were given to Mr. Holt; but they have a right to suppose that he was instructed to do his best to ascertain what is the best guard that could be obtained. I understand that the report says that there is no guard that can be obtained that will turn cattle. Now, the farmers of this country will not swallow that; I may as well tell the minister that first as last, I may also tell him that at these cattle-guard meetings I saw models of a good many guards with which the commissioners could not find fault; but they did try to find fault with every guard presented to them.

Several questions were discussed at these meetings as to the structure of the guards; opinions were taken from the farmers and mechanics present as to what sort of mechanical contrivance should be used; and I have looked in vain in the commissioner's report for all that evidence. If it is so, as I gather from the hon. member for South Simcoe, that these gentlemen charged railway fares while travelling through Ontario, that is an imposition on the country, because I was on the train with them, and I know they travelled from one place to another on passes which were furnished to them by the railways. I know they did not pay their railway fares then.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend does not say that they charged for railway expenses which they did not pay out?

Mr. LENNOX. I do not think they have charged all their railway fares, but they have charged some.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is, where they had not passes.

Mr. LENNOX. I might ask the hon. minister if it is the intention of the government to publish the report of this commission? It should be published unless that involves a large expense, because we might as well know what was done. It looks to me as if it could be published at an expense of a very few dollars, judging by the public accounts, where there is a charge for a typewritten report of the commission, 600 copies, at 5 cents each, $30. If it is a 5 cent report, I think we ought to have copies of it.

Mr. EMMERSON. Is not that 5 cents per folio?

Mr. LENNOX. I do not see anything to show that it is 600 folios.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have been asked by my hon. friend from Lincoln as to whether I thought Mr. Holt took up more time than was necessary. If I were to answer that question, I would say that if more time was taken than was actually necessary, it was not done intentionally or for any improper purpose by Mr. Holt. I have a sufficiently high opinion of him to reach that conclusion. There is a great difference between men in this respect. Some are quick in thought, in action and in speech. Some are slow in thought and in speech. Mr. Holt may have been slow in his methods to work out the ideas he had before him, but he claimed to me it was necessary for him to take that time, and that he was entitled to some additional compensation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Because he was slow?

Mr. EMMERSON. No; he claimed that he did the work with great rapidity, and that the speed made by him in reaching a conclusion was a further reason why he should be paid more. I have decided against Mr. Holt, although he is a personal and, I believe, a political friend of my own. I am informed that Mr. Holt did not urge the cattle in any direction on this track. The Deputy Minister of Railways was there, and he said that the only thing that was done was to place hay on the track on either side of the cattle-guard, and the cattle were driven along and, seeing the hay, they turned in its direction. I intend studying the report, which I have not yet had time to do, but as the matter comes under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission, I have felt that it was incumbent upon that commission rather than me to deal with it.

Mr. LANCASTER. In view of what the minister has said, I can only say that there must be a double sort of structure down at the grounds where these experiments were made, because I not only saw the animals forced over the guards, but remonstrated with Mr. Holt about the way they were treated. His answer was that he wanted to put each guard to the strictest possible test. I told him two or three times that it was not a fair test to force an animal over the guard. There was no way for the animal to escape except to struggle over the guard. As regards the printing and publishing of this report, the only reason I can see for publishing it would be to show the farmers what little value this government gives them for their money.

Mr. BLAIN. I am in favour of the government publishing the report. As I understand from the hon. minister, the cost will not be very great. The government has already expended about $5,000 in testing cattle-guards——

Mr. LENNOX. Almost $7,000.

Mr. BLAIN. I stand corrected. As the government has spent almost $7,000 in testing cattle-guards——

Mr. EMMERSON. No. I do not understand my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) to say we have expended $7,000 in testing cattle-guards.

Mr. BLAIN. The country has been expending $7,000 for the purpose of testing cattle-guards to find——

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) has a right to choose his own language. I only wanted to know what he meant.

Mr. BLAIN. I only wished to state the case as it is. So, I will ask the hon. minister to explain it to me.

Mr. EMMERSON. I understand the work of testing the cattle-guards to be that which was done out here at the Exhibition grounds, which was attended by my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) and in relation to which he disputes the declaration of the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals—another illustration that if half a dozen men attend a dog fight each will give a different account of it. The total cost of the commission is something over $6,000, but I should think that the work of testing cattle-guards was that done out here at the exhibition grounds.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not know that the hon. minister has made it much clearer. I made the statement that the cost of testing the cattle-guards was about $7,000, and I understand that the exact figure is $6,942. This money has been spent in the effort to find out whether a suitable cattle-guard had been invented. I think that some of the guards submitted for examination were very suitable and might be adopted by the railways in Canada. I know of one, patented by a gentleman from Cookville, Ont., and brought to the city at considerable cost to the inventor, to be submitted to tests. I understand that for more than an hour and a half in one case, and more than two hours in the other case, the cattle were unable to get over this cattle-guard. The inventor felt that it would be a suitable cattle-guard for use on our railways, and if the government were making the test for the purpose of recommending or prescribing a suitable guard this one, perhaps with others, should be most favourably regarded. Furthermore, the cost is very little—not more than $7. A practical engineer who saw it said that it could be manufactured in large quantities at $5 each. The government have not done their duty in regard to cattle-guards submitted for test. And I have no hesitation in saying that, as the government have spent $6,942 in testing and paying the officers to make observations in connection with the test, the government should spend whatever small further sum might be necessary in order to publish the report. So long as the government keep the report secret, people will imagine that there is something wrong about it. The people should know how their money was expended and what the results were. Whether those results are valuable or not valuable is a matter for further consideration.

Mr. EMMERSON. It seems to me unnecessary to publish the report of the commission. The evidence has been taken and typewritten ; the report of the commissioners has been made ; and the whole now comes under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission who are the ones to finally settle this question.

Mr. BLAIN. Was not the test made under the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Emmerson's) department and was not the report made to his department ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, and the whole business laid before the Railway Commission. At the time the commission began its work the Railway Department had jurisdiction and they naturally reported to the Railway Department, and about that time this parliament transferred jurisdiction from the Railway Department to the Board of Railway Commissioners. I do not know that my opinion under any circumstances would weigh with hon. gentlemen opposite, but it certainly would not have the weight of authority even if expressed, because the individual holding the position of Minister of Railways at this day is not clothed with jurisdiction with respect to this matter. It seems to me that in discussing a matter of this kind, we can hardly hope to accomplish great good through the department of Railways.

Mr. LENNOX. When I called attention to this matter, I did not suppose that it would be discussed for so long a time. Certainly, I shall not take many minutes in what further I have to say on the subject. The amount of money spent is not so very important in itself.

Mr. EMMERSON. If my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) will allow me : There was one thing he called my attention to—and very properly—the Auditor General's statement of the expenses of making a deduction. There was a deduction from the sum total because a proportion of the time of Mr. Holt was taken up in connection with the inspection of railways, and it was held to be properly chargeable, apart from the cattle-guard question, to the Railway Department.

Mr. LENNOX. So far as the $2,000 is concerned, I only called attention to that so that there might be no misunderstanding. Expense amounting to practically $2,000 by reason of the fact that the government had an investigation of the cattle-guard question on which there was a total expenditure of $6,942. I notice what the minister said as to Mr. Holt being a little slow.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not wish the hon. gentleman to say that I said so. I am willing to accept Mr. Holt's estimate of himself that he was very speedy.

Mr. LENNOX. As to whether the minister considered Mr. Holt slow, I am not concerned about that, except that I think it right to call attention to the fact of the investigation that took place ; and I think that if we take his own estimate we get a good gauge of the investigation that, as a matter of fact did take place. When Mr. Robertson retired in February the House was sitting. I was instructed by the Minister of Railways that the investigation was then practically completed. So we find that for four months afterwards the investigation continued, and with no practical benefit to anybody. Now with reference to the report, I do not think the minister has taken pains to ascertain how that matter stands. If this was a five cent report, being a matter of less than two folios, less than a page at all events, it might be well to have a copy. I have gone to the trouble of going over the matter, I find there is a lot of interesting matter in it but none that is very valuable. There are 988 pages of this stuff, and I think four-fifths of it is absolute rubbish. It is a repetition of letters, of copies of letters, of letters original and so forth. There is nothing in it of the nature of a report. You cannot tell where any report begins or where any report ends. The commissioners reported the evidence, but they have made no finding. If there is no report worth five cents a copy, there is no report at all that I could conscientiously recommend to have published because I would say that three or four hundred pages of evidence are reported but no finding as a result. I do not think the minister is right in the conclusion that this is a matter for the Railway Commission. I think it is a matter for his department. Mr. Robertson appears to be of no particular value in the matter, because he was allowed to leave before he had completed his duties, before he had made any report. We paid him for six months time, including Sundays, $905 and $843.42 for expenses, and we got nothing from him in return. The other gentleman spent ten months, and complains that his salary was not large enough.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How much was expended last year on account of this item ?

Mr. EMMERSON. $11,277.77.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What was it expended for ?

Mr. EMMERSON. In connection with the surveys and inspection of subsidized roads.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why were the commissioners, to whom reference has been made, paid before they made their report ?

Mr. EMMERSON. As a matter of fact, they were paid by the month, as they went along.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That seems an unusual way of doing business.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think that is the usual way with these commissions.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. One of the commissioners, apparently, not only broke away from the commission, but he ceased operations and did not make any report. The House does not enjoy the advantage of appreciating his opinion on the subject of cattle-guards. How is that serious defect ever to be remedied ? Does the hon. Minister of Railways think it ever can be remedied ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Mr. Robertson was chiefly appointed for the purpose of taking evidence ; he was not a scientific man at all, only an ordinary common sense business man.

Mr. LENNOX. Very common sense.

Mr. EMMERSON. Well, I like to see good, genuine common sense men on such a commission, with the emphasis on the common,' and Mr. Robertson is such a man.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not reflecting on either of these gentlemen, I am discussing the methods which were pursued. If the only duty of the commissioners was to take evidence, it would strike one who was not familiar with the technical way of dealing with these commissioners, that perhaps one could have done it as well as two—that would seem to follow from the minister's remarks. Might I inquire whether any marked difference was found in the efficiency of the commission after Mr. Robertson had ceased to co-operate with Mr. Holt ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Mr. Robertson only ceased when Mr. Holt started in to draw up his report from the scientific point of view ; he studied the question from the scientific and mechanical side.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Have we not been robbed—I trust 'robbed' is not too strong a word—of the aspect of the question presented from the common sense side to which my hon. friend has drawn attention ? As I understand it, Mr. Robertson was the common sense man of the commission, and the other gentleman was the scientific man. If we are to have presented to parliament only the scientific side and not the common sense side, how are we to understand the latter side ? Is it likely that at any time in the near future the common sense side will be presented to us by Mr. Robertson ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I may explain to my hon. friend that the people of the country and parliament can draw their own deductions from that common sense presentation of the evidence. I do not wish to have it crystallized here ; parliament is supposed to have a great amount of ordinary common sense, and I do not suppose we need it to be crystallized in a report.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then do we understand that Mr. Robertson gave evidence himself ?

Mr. EMMERSON. He took the evidence and arranged it. I want my hon. friend to understand me. Mr. Robertson arranged who should give evidence at the different points where the commission sat. Mr. Robertson attended to the business side of the commisssion and the other gentleman was as the scientific member of the commission, having scientific knowledge as an engineer. Mr. Roberston arranged where and when the meetings should be held, he was practically the chairman of the commission. They went from place to place taking this evidence, and he has reported that for the benefit of parliament as I think for the benefit of the Railway Commission, because that is the tribunal which will have jurisdiction in the settlement of this matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The difficulty seems to be that although the common sense to which my hon. friend refers may have been crystallized in the case of Mr. Robertson, parliament does not enjoy the advantage of having the crystals placed before it.

Mr. EMMERSON. The evidence has been reported to the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I know. My hon. friend says that Mr. Robertson's common sense was valuable in connection with this evidence. To what can that amount unless Mr. Robertson is possessed of some intuition which enables him to select the proper persons to give the evidence? I suppose that any man possessing an ordinary knowledge of the difficulties that surround the construction of a cattle-guard could have taken this evidence in about one quarter of the time and at about one-tenth of the expense that has been incurred. As far as I can see the whole commission has rather degenerated into a humbug. The only advantage that the country enjoys is that of paying the expenses of these gentlemen during a very considerably greater period than one would reasonably have expected to be occupied in making this inquiry.

Mr. LENNOX. There is one question which the hon. minister did not answer. I did not notice it at the time but this 'common sense' discussion has brought it up. Mr. Holt in claiming compensation does not present the same view as that of the hon. minster in regard to the common sense of the other commissioner. Mr. Holt claims that the whole weight of the matter fell on him, that he was the chief person engaged in the inquiry and that therefore he is entitled to greater compensation. That is a matter that we will have to leave to be decided later on when we get more light upon it. But, the hon. minister has not said whether he agrees with the suggestion which is more than once repeated in the correspondence of Mr. Holt, that the government were not in earnest, that the government did not want the work to be done, that the government were not serious in the matter and that he was serious. As to that I would like the hon. minister to answer. Does he agree with Mr. Holt in his suggestion that the government were not serious, or is he able to say that the insinuation that they were not serious has been repudiated by the government? I object very decidedly to this expenditure considering that we have nothing in the nature of a report from Mr. Holt or from Mr. Robertson. Mr. Robertson did not pretend to make a report. He performed a service for the party in another capacity by dropping out of the commission entirely to contest an election in the interests of the Liberal party and for that service I suppose he is excused from making a report.

Railways and canals—Miscellaneous—railway statistics, including clerical assistance, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $2,500.

Mr. MACLEAN. Are these statistics required to be collected under the new Railway Act.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is the usual vote from year to year. These statistics are provided for in the Railway Act.

Mr. MACLEAN. In connection with these statistics I would urge upon the hon. minister that the Railway Commission and his department should be more active in getting statistics. It developed here only the other day that while the Railway Act requires railway companies to file their standard passenger rates—

Mr. EMMERSON. They have until November to do it.

Mr. MACLEAN. I know that because the commission gave them an opportunity as a result of my calling attention to their dereliction in connection with the matter. All these statistics that are called for under the Act should be made good immediately. I also want to point out for the information of the Railway Commission that all statistics bearing on railway questions and especially on railway tariffs ought to be in the hands of the commission and available for the public. Anything I desired to ascertain in connection with railway operations I have had to go out and collect myself at very considerable expense. I have had to send out my own commissioners to find out these things and I think the time has arrived when the Railway Commission ought to collect these statistics and that they ought to be available for the public. I would also say that the Railway Commission should see that its clerks assist those of us in the House who desire to get information and the information when obtained ought to be available for every one.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Before this item passes I would like to bring a matter to the attention of the hon. minister and I might as well bring it up on this item as upon any other. I want to ask the hon. minister if he will be good enough to tell the committee about McLaren's Creek. Last year and the year before there were items in the estimates for the construction of a roadway across McLaren's Creek but the work was stopped. I do not find any item in the estimates at all this year. Last year the department sent up an embankment about half way across the creek, but the dredge was taken away and no more has been done since. I understand that a gentleman in the Senate who claims to exercise patronage in that riding interfered and had the dredge taken away. This was not done in the hon. minister's time so that if he does not know anything about the matter he can give me the information at a later stage.

Mr. EMMERSON. My information is that the department offered to pay one-third of the cost of making the roadway providing the municipality, or interested parties, paid the remainder. The department started in to do their work and they were ready to do it but the others would not and the department has delayed matters until those interested are willing to perform their part of the work. That is my information.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I presume I know as much about this matter as any person but I never heard a hint once before that the municipality were supposed to do something. The understanding was that the road was to be left in such a position that the municipality could finish it up. This is the first time that I ever heard that the government were to pay one-third and the municipality two-thirds of the cost. The municipality have no right to do any of it at all. Owing to the construction of the government dam at Bobcaygeon teams have to go two miles west and two miles back to the east again to reach Lindsay. If it were not for the government dam, the creek would be readily accessible. I do not know where the hon. minister's information comes from. If there is any correspondence in the matter I would ask the hon. minister to bring it down or I will go over to the department and see it.

There is another matter that I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. minister and it is in regard to Pigeon river bridge at the mouth of Pigeon river. It was taken away by the ice last winter. Inasmuch as the Pigeon river will be open to navigation as soon as the Trent canal is completed I would ask the minister to have his engineer look into it and consider the advisability of having a swing bridge at that point.

Salaries of extra clerks, copyists and messengers other than those who have passed the civil service examination, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $3,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is the usual vote in connection with the department. Last year the full amount was expended.

Mr. FOWLER. Would the minister give a list of these people ?

Mr. EMMERSON. During the season these extra clerks are employed ; they are Ottawa people, but I have not the list here.

Mr. FOWLER. That is very vague information.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not the list ; it is the usual number of people, but I could very readily get the list ; there are some three or four.

Mr. FOWLER. I think we ought to know what this is for, and who gets it.

Mr. EMMERSON. I find I did not go far enough in my explanation. There are two stenographers in the minister's office who are paid out of this vote.

Mr. FOWLER. Extra ones ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No ; employed continuously outside the civil service. They are paid $600. They are Miss Scott and Miss Quain. Then we have temporarily employed for the session Miss Helmer and Miss Stewart, who are paid at the rate of $500 a year for the session. Miss Scott and Miss Quain are employed in the office of the private secretary of the minister, doing the typewriting all the year around, and I know that they are very hard-worked officials, because they have no holidays on Saturdays, and their day's work is not concluded at four o'clock as in the case of appointments under the Civil Service Act.

Salaries of engineers, draughtsmen, extra clerks and messengers, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $29,450.

Mr. EMMERSON. During 1903-4 we had employed and paid out of this vote Thomas Ridout, consulting engineer ; R. C. Douglas, hydraulic and bridge engineer ; E. B. Johnston ; J. B. Spain, chief draughtsman ; Mothersill, auditor of the engineers' accounts ; Leslie, draughtsman ; T. L. Simmons, inspecting engineer ; Mr. Lawlor, assistant law clerk ; the photographer and extra clerks, who are not on the permanent staff under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. FOWLER. What proportion of this goes to the extra clerks ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There are 15 extra clerks, in addition to the messengers. About $18,000 of it goes to the higher officials, the engineers, &c., and the balance goes to the extra clerks and messengers.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you have the same clerks every year ?

Mr. EMMERSON. They have been described as the permanent temporaries. They are not on the civil service list ; they are employed temporarily, but they are permanently there.

Mr. FOWLER. I would suggest that the minister bring in a short Act to put them on the permanent list.

Mr. BLAIN. How many officials were engaged in the minister's department last year who had not passed the civil service examination ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Since I have been in the department no additional ones have come in. A new assistant law clerk came in, Mr. Alward, but he is not required to pass any examination. Mr. Alward simply replaced Mr. Hansard, who was the former assistant law clerk, who was promoted to the position of law clerk on the resignation of Mr. Ruel, who has taken a position at Toronto.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose that we are to understand that the minister will not employ any one who has not passed the civil service examination for positions for which an examination is required ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Only temporarily, as the work requires.

Governor General's car, repairs and alterations, $2,000.

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to ask the minister how many of these so-called government cars there are. I see it stated in this morning's paper that the Minister of the Interior left in his private car on Saturday for Winnipeg. I remember seeing in one of the prominent newspapers last winter that one of the government cars had arrived in Winnipeg to bring a relative of the Minister of the Interior to Ottawa for Christmas.

Mr. EMMERSON. That was a mistake.

Mr. BENNETT. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon—it was not a mistake. One of the government cars left here and went to Winnipeg to bring a relative of the Minister of the Interior down to spend Christmas.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Brought his father down.

Mr. BENNETT. What I want to know from the minister is for what degree of relationship may the cars be sent ? What is the extent of the consanguinity, and how many of these private cars are there ? It will not do for the minister to say that these things are not done. I myself saw two government cars standing in the Union Station at Toronto, and there was not a minister in one of them. It was a party of ladies.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. A pleasure excursion up the line ; and when an hon. member of this House dies, and his fellow members wish to attend his funeral, they have to pay for their own Pullman's. The government would not even provide a private car to take the body of the late Mr. McCreary to Winnipeg. I thought it was simply disgraceful. These cars can always be got by any of the ministers or their friends who want to make a junketting trip through the country, making exhibitions of themselves, and laughing at the poor farmers sweating in the fields. And yet when a member of the minister's own party dies, his body is sent in a baggage car to the Northwest.

Mr. BLAIN.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think the hon. gentleman' language is not within proper bounds. The use of private cars is to-day just what it has been since there have been private cars.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. EMMERSON. I happen to know something about that. When a minister applies to the Department of Railways for a car, it is assigned to him and the department knows nothing about the purpose for which he wants it. The ministers do not own private cars. The Department of Railways and Canals has, I think, five official cars, of which two are at Ottawa, and if a minister wants one in connection with any business he may have in hand, and if it is in the yard here he gets it on his requisition. Beyond that the department has no knowledge. I am sure the statement made by my hon. friend about junketting is simply a figure of speech. He wishes to convey an idea of a condition of things which does not exist, and I am sure that on reflection he will feel like withdrawing the statement.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. My language is not at all overdrawn. I say to the minister that it is a scandal in his own party. Hon. members sitting on his own side of the House have objected to it in much stronger language than I have used. I may not repeat the language because it was in the shape of personal attacks on the ministers and their friends.

Mr. INGRAM. They used to call them small potatoes. I do not know what they call them now.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I will not repeat the language which was used by members of the minister's own party, because it would not be parliamentary. If it comes to a vote, they will fall into line, but in their hearts they condemn the misuse of the cars ; and on the occasion of the death of Mr. McCreary, when one of these cars might properly have been used to remove his body to Winnipeg, members of the hon. minister's own party were indignant when they learned that the body had been sent, in a baggage car ; and some of those who went with it came very near being left behind and not reaching Winnipeg at all.

Mr. EMMERSON. With respect to the statement of my hon. friend I would say that this is the first time I have known that there ever was a request made to the Department of Railways for a car to go to Winnipeg on the occasion of the much lamented death of Mr. McCreary. I never heard of it before. If any such request had been made. I am sure the Department of Railways would have been only too pleased to have met the wishes of Mr. McCreary's friends.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to me very strange that the minister should require a request for a car under such circumstances. A prominent member of the Liberal party died practically in the House while in the service of his country, and his body was carried in a baggage car instead of one of the government cars being used for that purpose. As a matter of fact, several ministers were approached on the subject by the member for North Victoria, and each one said it was not in his department. It should not have been necessary for any request to have been made at all.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is a wonder the hon. member did not mention it to the head of the Railway Department.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I rang up the office of the Minister of Railways half a dozen times at the request of some of his own friends. I was told that the minister was not there, but was at Council. Then I rang up the Privy Council office. The message was sent to the Prime Minister while the cabinet was in Council, and I do not know what became of it. I also rang up the office of the Minister of the Interior, and spoke to the deputy minister and several other officers of that department; but nobody seemed to care enough about the matter to do anything. I spoke personally to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and he declined to interfere. The sum and substance of it is that they had no more use for the late member of Selkirk, and they allowed his body to go to Winnipeg in a baggage car, while they kept the private cars for pleasure trips up and down the side lines.

Mr. BENNETT. Do I understand the minister to say that the statement I made about a private car having been sent to Winnipeg to bring down a relative of the Minister of the Interior is incorrect?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, because I have no knowledge of the matter.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman said before that it was a mistake. He gave the statement a point blank denial.

Mr. EMMERSON. Because I did not understand what it was.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the rule as to the extent of relationship governing the sending of these cars across the country? Has the minister any policy on the subject?

Mr. EMMERSON. I thought I made myself quite clear, that any minister asking for the use of a car can get it if there is one available. This is the custom that has prevailed for a great many years, long before this government came into power, and it continues. The department does not have a record as to the use to which a car is to be put. That must be for the judgment of the minister getting the use of the car.

Mr. BENNETT. How many of these government cars are there?

Mr. EMMERSON. There are two here for that purpose.

Mr. BENNETT. How many at other points?

Mr. EMMERSON. At Moncton there are three official cars. Then there is the Governor Generals' car, with which the Railway Department has nothing whatever to do.

Mr. FOWLER. That makes five outside of the Govenor General's car?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it true that some time last year one of these cars was sent from Moncton to California? If so, for what purpose was it sent?

Mr. EMMERSON. What time does my hon. friend refer to?

Mr. FOWLER. Say within the last two years. I think it was some time yast year.

Mr. EMMERSON. Sir William Mulock had one of the cars to go to Mexico.

Mr. BENNETT. What—Sir William Mulock, the farmer's friend?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is it the same gentleman who was sympathizing with the farmers in Ontario the other night, who was rolling over the country to Mexico in a private car?

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend had such a quantity of sympathy to express that I do not know how Sir William Mulock could find opportunity to get a word in.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If Sir William Mulock were to die, his body ought to be sent home in a baggage car the same as Mr. McCrearys. I would be quite satisfied to see him sent home that way.

Mr. BENNETT. How much money is invested in these private cars?

Mr. EMMERSON. These are practically the same cars as have been owned by the government since the early days.

Mr. BENNETT. No, the hon. gentleman is quite wrong in his history of these government cars.

Mr. EMMERSON. I could not tell you the amount of money invested for that purpose.

Mr. BENNETT. There was only one government car in the old days and that was the 'Jamaica.'

Mr. EMMERSON. They began with one.

Mr. BENNETT. And these magnates have five now. I suppose that is because the ministers have always lived in private cars of their own. What do these cars cost on an average ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I can tell my hon. friend that he is very much mistaken when he says the late government had only one private car. I remember at the time of the funeral of the late Sir John Thompson, down at Halifax, there were four different ministers who had private cars at the time, each one having a car of his own.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the hon. gentleman sure that those four carriages were owned by the government at the time ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Quite certain.

Mr. BENNETT. What were the names ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I could not tell you that. One of the cars now in use cost $4,500. Another one cost $9,500. The one bought for the Duke and Duchess cost $20,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Are you not building another private car ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There is something in the estimates for the Governor General's car and I was going to explain that when I got the opportunity.

Mr. FOWLER. Is there not an item of $18,000 to build a new car ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The Railway Commissioners will require a car if they have not already purchased one.

Mr. FOWLER. That is ordered now.

Mr. EMMERSON. Whether they have actually ordered it or secured it I do not know.

Mr. MACLEAN. How much is it to cost?

Mr. EMMERSON. $20,000.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. minister has not answered my question about that trip to California.

Mr. EMMERSON. There was no trip that I was aware of to California except the one to Mexico.

Mr. FOWLER. This private car was sent to Moncton in connection with Mr. Tiffin.

Mr. EMMERSON. Mr. Tiffin is the general traffic manager and has an official car in which he travels on business. Whether he went in it as far as California or not, I am not in position to say.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Tiffin was away on leave for six months, and it was during that time he had this car. My information is that during those six months he had this car with a party of friends, and went to California in it at the expense of the people of Canada.

Mr. EMMERSON. It would not be at the expense of the people.

Mr. FOWLER. The government own the car.

Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, but if he took the car away on such a trip it would not be at the expense of the government.

Mr. FOWLER. Would he pay for haulage ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is a courtesy extended by railways.

Mr. FOWLER. What would he pay ?

Mr. EMMERSON. He would pay his living in the car and all the expenses connected with it.

Mr. LENNOX. Which of the cars went to Mexico ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think it was car 109.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is it not a fact that when private cars are used by other ministers than the Minister of Railways, the railway companies generally charge for the haulage ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is paid by the individual minister and not by the government. All the expenses are paid by the individual and he simply has the use of the car.

Mr. J. D. REID. What is the charge per mile ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think my hon friend will find that the courtesy is extended by railways to a minister even on American roads. They extend the courtesy of haulage. I know they do in Canada. I think that the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway never charge any of the ministers for transportation and the Intercolonial does not charge railway directors. Unfortunately these railway magnates do not go down over the Intercolonial often enough, or they would realize better what a fine country we have down there.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would not say a word about private cars. If the minister goes off on business, it is his duty to travel in a private car, but what irritated me was that at the very time when poor McCreary's body was sent away in a baggage car, I heard from Liberal members in this House——

Mr. EMMERSON. I am only sorry my hon. friend did not state the matter to me. All that would have been necessary would have been to mention the fact to me. I never heard a whisper of it. I regret that the suggestion did not occur to myself.

Mr. MONK. What is the name of the car built for the Duke and Duchess of York ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No. 109.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that the one the minister uses for his own private use ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Do not put it in that way. It is the car that has been used by the Minister of Railways, and I have the temerity to use it now.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Perfectly right.

Mr. FOWLER. I understood that the hon. minister went to Nova Scotia with a party of friends. I presume he had car No. 109 ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is the car I had.

Mr. INGRAM. What private cars were there in connection with the government railways and used by the ministers in 1896 ?

Mr. EMMERSON. A return was brought down about that during this session. I have not the papers here.

Mr. INGRAM. The minister might ask his deputy for the information.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is one additional car now over those that existed in 1896 in connection with the Department of Railways.

Mr. INGRAM. Was there a Governor General's car previous to 1896 ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes ; that is the one that has cost so much to repair. It is called the 'Victoria.' It was provided for the use of the Governor General. His Excellency has reported time and again within the last two or three years that it was much out of repair. It seemed to be cheaper to purchase a new car than to incur this annual expense for repairs. In a few minutes I shall ask the committee to vote $18,000 for a new car for the Governor General.

Mr. FOWLER. Then what is this $2,000 for ?

Mr. EMMERSON. For the changes necessary to make it into some other kind of a car.

Mr. J. D. REID. As a private car ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No ; it is not so intended.

Mr. INGRAM. We have one car now in addition to those we had in 1896, and when this $18,000, to which the minister refers, is voted, that will make a second additional car.

Mr. EMMERSON. No ; that will put the 'Victoria' out of commission, so that there will not be an additional car.

Mr. INGRAM. Then why spend this $2,000 ? If that amount is spent on a car, it must be in order to keep the car in use.

Mr. EMMERSON. This item was put in last February, of course, before the determination had been reached to build a new car. Since then, talking with His Excellency and others who are interested, it seemed to me it would be better to vote money for a new car ; and my idea is to utilize the old car in some way in connection with the Intercolonial. If that cannot be done the money will not be spent.

Mr. LENNOX. Then it is not true, as was said a few minutes ago, that this will make an additional car which will become available for the Intercolonial or officials of the government ?

Mr. EMMERSON. My idea is to make it into a passenger car in connection with the Intercolonial.

Mr. FOWLER. The government is going to provide an additional car for the Governor General and also a car for the Railway Commission. Besides this they have one additional car since 1896. That makes three new cars since 1896.

Mr. BENNETT. In the four cars which he says were owned by the government prior to 1896, does the minister include the Governor General's car ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. BENNETT. What were the four cars ?

Mr. EMMERSON. My memory is not good enough to give the hon. gentleman that information.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not expect the hon. minister to be able to remember details of that kind. But he has his officials beside him, and surely they can tell him.

Mr. EMMERSON. They do not remember.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. minister tell me that the deputy minister does not know how many private cars there are on the road ? Why, any school boy living along the road can tell that.

Mr. BENNETT. I may tell the hon. minister that as long ago as 1892 there was an old car that stood down here on the siding that was used by the ministers of that time during an election tour. I think it was the only car around here. I do not think the minister can be allowed to make the statement that there were four cars at that time unless he gives us the names.

Mr. EMMERSON. There was the 'Ottawa,' the 'Cumberland,' a car known as No. 24, and another car whose name or number I do not know.

Mr. BENNETT. Where were the four cars kept ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Two here constantly—the 'Ottawa' and the 'Cumberland.'

Mr. FOWLER. And where were the four in commission ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I gave the exact information to answer that question, but I have not the notes at hand, and I cannot remember.

Mr. FOWLER. I think we ought to be able to get the exact number of these cars, there are not so many of them. The minister says that in 1896 there were four cars ; I want to know whether those four are still in commission, and if so, where are they used. For instance, at Moncton—as I understand it, Mr. Pottinger, the general manager, has a car of his own, Mr. Tiffin also has a car of his own. Are there any other cars kept at Moncton belonging to a particular official ?

Mr. EMMERSON. We have two cars at Moncton, one No. 75, used by the general manager and the general superintendent, the other, the number of which I do not know, is used by the traffic manager. Then we have one used by the deputy minister, which was also used by the deputy minister previous to 1896 ; that is known as the 'Ottawa ". Then we have the car known as the 'Montreal', I do not know her number. In addition we have the car No. 109, the one that has been used by ministers. That makes five, and as I stated there were four previous to 1896 ; the sixth is the Governor General's car.

Mr. FOWLER. The 'Ottawa', used by the deputy minister, is that also used by members of the government ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is still known as the deputy minister's car, and is used largely in the business of the department. When it is not engaged on that business it is used by members of the government. When ministers want a car and send in a requisition to the department, if the other car is not ready that one is taken. On the occasion this last winter when the Postmaster General was ill car 109 was used by him in going to Mexico.

Mr. FOWLER. Do I understand it is the intention of the minister to condemn the present Governor General's car and use it as a passenger car on the Intercolonial ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is my idea, to convert it into a passenger car.

Mr. LENNOX. I understand that these cars are made with compartments, and it would seem to involve a good deal of sacrifice to make that change. But I would point out that we have this condition of things, that the estimates are brought down with a vote of $2,000 to repair the Governor General's car ; we have no objection to that, if it is necessary.

Mr. EMMERSON. I may explain that we put that item in the estimates when it was supposed that the car would continue to be used as the Governor General's. Since then I have changed the estimates and put in an additional amount of $18,000 for a new car ; and I have decided to change the present car used by the Governor General into a passenger car for the Intercolonial, probably a parlour car.

Mr. LENNOX. That appears to be a second thought on the part of the minister, we must follow events as they have occurred.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is no second thought at all.

Mr. LENNOX. We discussed this item at considerable length before the minister made this intimation, we are discussing this $2,000 item for the repair of the Governor General's car, and just now the minister announces that it is not for that purpose at all. Then I think I am justified in assuming that probably it is an afterthought when he says that it is to be turned into a passenger car. Now I venture to predict, having regard to circumstances as they have occurred, that it is highly probable that the minister will again change his mind, and that the car will be devoted to the same class of service as the other cars that are denominated official cars, and that it will make one more car available for members of the administration. It seems to be impossible to ascertain just how many official cars we have. It is remarkable that it should be impossible to know clearly by name and number their proper official designation, and how many cars we have. An inquiry was made a month ago upon this question, it was referred to several times in the House, and the minister has sitting at his elbow the deputy minister, and yet we cannot get explicit information as to what cars we have in the service of the government. So far as I understand, we have the Ottawa, the Montreal, the Cumberland, we have No. 109 for the Minister of Railways, we have No. 75 and No. 34. I think we can now safely conclude that after the purchase or construction of another official car for the Governor General, we will have seven or eight cars at all events.

Mr. MACLEAN. Are these two new cars to be built in Canada ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There is only one car to be constructed, the Governor General's car, which is to be constructed in Canada.

Mr. MACLEAN. I think he said the commissioners had ordered a car for themselves.

Mr. EMMERSON. They purchased a car. I think they got it for immediate use, from the Pullman Company.

Mr. FOWLER. Where are they going to have this new car built ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not think I should tell my hon. friend at this moment. I have an offer from people in Canada, but I am not prepared to accept it until the vote is passed. However, I have stated that it will be built in Canada. I have an offer that will enable us to have it built in Canada within the sum mentioned in the item.

Mr. FOWLER. Was this car 109 built in Canada ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. MACLEAN. Did the minister authorize this expenditure on the part of the Railway Commissioners ? On what authority did they order it or purchase it ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Under the authority of a vote. It was necessary for them to have an official car for the Railway Commission. They were obliged to go to Toronto and other points in the west, and there was no car in the service of the Department of Railways and Canals that would accommodate them. There are three commissioners, and they have their officials with them. It is quite a large party. They require at least three rooms, one for each commissioner. There is no car at present available, not one of the cars has that number of rooms and it is therefore necessary to have such a car for the Railway Commissioners. Efforts were made to purchase one from the railway companies in Canada if they had any available but none could be found that would at all suit the requirements. The Railway Commissioners have assignments for holding meetings in the west at very many points and they require to leave here at a very early date.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not think the hon. minister has answered the question as to where their authority came from. Is there a sum of money placed at their disposal to be used as they see fit ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Not at their disposal, but, at their disposal with the authority of the Governor in Council.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the amount ? Is it unlimited ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No. There was an amount placed in last year's estimates for the expenses in connection with the Railway Commission. The expenditure of that had to be authorized by the Governor in Council and they have received authority to purchase a car for $20,000.

Mr. MACLEAN. The authority of the Governor in Council ?

Mr. FOWLER. We never anticipated that the item of $20,000 passed last year would go without the authority of parliament for the purpose of purchasing a car. It was for incidental expenses, and the purchase of a private car was scarcely contemplated. I would think that it would cost them at least $20,000 to provide a private car suitable for their purposes.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend will admit that they should have an official car.

Mr. FOWLER. Is not this car, which I understand is so beautifully fited up, sufficient for them ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is not large enough.

Mr. FOWLER. How many officials do they carry with them ?

Mr. EMMERSON. They have at least one engineer and they have a number of secretaries.

Mr. FOWLER. Does each one have a secretary ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Not each one. They have one secretary and they require a stenographer, and I think they will require a legal assistant.

Mr. FOWLER. Have they any yet ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think they will have one.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will they take a chaplain with them ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Is my hon. friend open for such a position ?

Mr. MACLEAN. I think this commission ought to have a car but I think it is a reflection on Canada and the industries of Canada that that car should be built outside of this country. Some arrangement should be made whereby the car should be built in this country. They require a first-class car as far as accommodation is concerned. I do not begrudge them that, but it is a reflection on our country and on our manufacturers that we should not be able to build that car in this country. Some provision surely could have been made until such time as a Canadian built car could be placed at the disposal of the Railway Commission.

Mr. EMMERSON. When I asked tenders from Canadian car builders for the Governor General's car there was only one concern in Canada that was willing to undertake it. All the car men were written to and asked for prices and the firm to which I have referred were not in a position to undertake it until next autumn. That is the position and it is necessary to have the car for these people at once. If you hired a car from the Pullman Car Company you would expend in their exorbitant charges for rental in a few months almost enough to build a car. Therefore, in the interest of economy it was deemed advisable and necessary to buy this car elsewhere.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Governor General's car—repairs and alterations, $2,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. As I understand there are five of these government cars besides the Governor General's car which makes six altogether.

Mr. EMMERSON. I explained that there are two cars here, two at Moncton, and the one generally used by the Minister of Railways No. 109, although it is not exclusively used by him at all times.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then there is one now to be supplied to the Railway Commission.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think that car has been arranged for and that they are going west within a day or two.

Mr. J. D. REID. That then makes six cars, besides the Governor's car.

Mr. EMMERSON. If my hon. friend wants to include the Governor General's car that will be six. Let us understand it; I do not wish to hide anything in respect to it. I am speaking of government cars here and at Moncton under the charge of the department. There are five of such cars. The Governor General's car and the Railway Commissioner's car are not under the control of the Railway Department.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then there are seven private cars used by the government and the Railway Commission ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Do you not think you had better say official cars, offices on wheels ?

Mr. J. D. REID. Very well, official cars. Do I understand that there are only two of these cars used by Ministers of the Crown ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There are none of them assigned to Ministers of the Crown. Ministers occasionally require the use of a car and they make application to the Department of Railways and Canals, and if there is one available it is assigned to their use for a particular trip.

Mr. J. D. REID. Could the minister give me any information as to the cost to the country of maintaining each of these cars ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I gave that information to the House in answer to a question.

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to enter my protest against the government sending Canadian money to the United States to purchase a private car to be used by the Railway Commission. The minister stated that last year $20,000 was voted to be expended by the Railway Commission.

Mr. EMMERSON. I did not name that amount because I did not have it before me.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the hon. gentleman say what the amount was ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I cannot from memory.

Mr. BLAIN. There was an amount voted last year to be placed at the disposal of the Railway Commission. As I understand a request was made to the Governor in Council for a private car to cost $20,000 for the use of the Railway Commission and the Governor in Council gave their sanction to that amount being expended.

Mr. EMMERSON. In last year's estimates.

Mr. BLAIN. I think it was the duty of the Governor in Council to stipulate that the car should be purchased within the limits of Canada. My hon. friend has said that an advertisement was published asking for tenders for the purchase of a car and that the only reply——

Mr. EMMERSON. Not for that car. I said that as respects that car an effort was made to find out whether such a car could be secured in Canada at all. It was impossible to get it in time or in fact before next fall or winter. So far as the Governor General's car was concerned, it was not required immediately. I have received an offer from one Canadian manufacturer to furnish such a car to be delivered sometime during the present fiscal year, but the car required by the Railway Commissioners, could not now be furnished at all in Canada and it was necessary to get one that was already constructed.

Mr. BLAIN. We accept the minister's explanation. But I say that a car which is good enough for the Governor General and which can be constructed in Canada is sufficiently good for the Railway Commission.

Mr. EMMERSON. So it would be if we could get it.

Mr. BLAIN. The government should have stipulated when voting $20,000 for a car for the Railway Commission that that car should be purchased within the limits of Canada. The minister says that one could not be secured before the fall or winter. Even if that be correct—and I accept the statement and say it is correct—I say that the Railway Commission should have used one of the cars that is at the disposal of the government now. There is a car for the Governor General, a very expensive car, which was constructed by the government a short time ago at a cost of $20,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have explained to my hon. friend that that car is not large enough for the Railway Commission. They require for their purpose a car containing three rooms. I think my hon. friend will take that statement as being correct.

Mr. BLAIN. I accept the hon. gentleman's statement; I am not disputing that at all; but the Railway Commission is not travelling through this country all the time, but only occasionally.

Mr. EMMERSON. They want to be away two or three months in the west, and they need a car. They should have gone at an earlier date than the present.

Mr. BLAIN. When was the commission appointed ?

Mr. EMMERSON. In February last.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister and the government knew full well that the commission would require a car. I am not saying whether the car already constructed is suitable for the requirements of the commission or not; but I do say that a car that would have been suitable could have been ordered, and if the commission had to wait five or six or even twelve months to secure the construction of that car in Canada, they should have done so and they could in the meantime have used one of the cars already at the disposal of the government. I do not think the people of Canada will sanction the expenditure of money in this way. Here is a Canadian Railway Commission travelling through western Canada in a car on which is written, 'manufactured in the United States,' when they should be travelling in a car on which would be written, 'made in Canada,' which is the popular term now. I say the government did not discharge their full duty to the people when they voted that $20,000 should be spent on a car without stipulating that the money should be spent in Canada. The hon. minister says they could not wait. Well, there are a good many people in Canada who have to wait, and if the Railway Commission do not meet any greater obstacle than that of having to wait five or six months for a car, they will get through their duties very easily. I object, and I think the Canadian people will object, to the government setting this example by passing an Order in Council placing at the disposal of the Railway Commission $20,000 of Canadian money to be spent in the United States.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister has referred two or three times to the fact that an appropriation was made last session for the use of the Railway Commission. I ask him now, what was the amount of the appropriation placed to the credit of the Railway Commission last year?

Mr. EMMERSON. $40,000.

Mr. LENNOX. I venture to say that not one dollar of that appropriation was intended to be used for the purchase of a car, and I call the attention of the minister and the members of the government present to that abuse of their power. There was absolutely no excuse for it. The minister says none of the cars owned by the government are large enough. I am not prepared to say that is not correct. It may be, and I think very likely is so, that some different accommodation may be required in the end from that furnished by any cars at present owned by the government. But we have five government cars, and if one of these cars was not sufficient to accommodate these gentlemen, two of them would have been sufficient, and should have been assigned to their service for the time being rather than that this large amount of money should be devoted to this purpose without the sanction of parliament, and the money sent to the people of the United States—the manufacturers of Canada deprived of that money, and, a great deal worse than that, the fact advertised throughout Canada and the United States that such a car could not be manufactured in Canada. The minister has brought forward no reasonable justification for the action of the department or the government in this matter. It was not necessary for these gentlemen to have absolutely convenient accommodation upon this trip to the west. They are not going to take evidence or hold investigations in any unfrequented places along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway or other railways. They are going to hold investigations at the large centres, and it was not necessary that they should be able to lodge upon their car during the time of those investigations. It would have been reasonable for these gentlemen for the present to have had one official car at their disposal. Others could very well have been accommodated in a state-room upon a Canadian Pacific Railway pullman car; and the other officials, the engineer and others, could have obtained very fair accommodation upon the pullman cars of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Therefore there is no justification whatever for the government having appropriated this money to this purpose. I submit in the first place that it is absolutely unconstitutional because the money was not voted by parliament for that purpose; and, in the second place, even if it had been voted for that purpose, it is a very poor principle on which the government has acted, in diverting the money to the United States, to the pecuniary loss and the great detriment of the people of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT. How does this car compare with the car built for the Duke and Duchess?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is a larger car, and has more accommodation.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the difference in length?

Mr. EMMERSON. I cannot tell, because it is the Railway Commission which sees to the dimensions of the car and the arrangement of it. It has better accommodation for a greater number of people than the car purchased for the Duke and Duchess. The car purchased for the Duke and Duchess is not a car that surpasses every other.

Mr. LENNOX. A very comfortable car.

Mr. EMMERSON. As my hon. friend says, it is a very comfortable car, and I have no wish to decry it.

Mr. GANONG. By whom was this car built?

Mr. EMMERSON. By the Pullman Car Company. There is no concern in Canada at this moment in a position to take an order for a car of that character. They are not fitted up for the purpose. There is only one concern which contemplates doing that business, and they are not in the position to do it now. They do not furnish pullman sleepers in Canada.

Mr. GANONG. They may not furnish pullman sleepers, but they can build a car plenty good enough for the class of railway commissioners we have.

Mr. EMMERSON. They will not undertake to do it.

Mr. GANONG. They are not given much opportunity.

Mr. EMMERSON. Surely my hon. friend will not make that statement in the face of what I have just said. I have said to my hon. friend that they are not in a position to do it, and I say that from their own statement. I hope my hon. friend will not show me the discourtesy of insisting that they have not had the opportunity.

Mr. GANONG. Who are these people to whom the hon. gentleman refers ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The Crossen Company, of Cobourg ; the Rhodes, Curry Company, of Amherst ; the Rathbun Company, of Deseronto. These are the only three concerns that make cars in Canada.

Mr. GANONG. Did they give any statement as to the limit of time they would take ?

Mr. EMMERSON. They were asked whether they could tender for any cars. One said they were not in a position ; the others said they would not accept the order at all. The Rhodes, Curry Company said they were not now in a position, but that they would place themselves in a position so that by next fall they could undertake the construction of such cars.

Mr. GANONG. Evidently if the government had not been in such a hurry, and the ministers been willing to make a little sacrifice and travel as ordinary people do, we would have sufficient cars to accommodate the commission. There is another question I would ask. This car has been made by the Pullman Car Company, of Chicago. I presume that the company will have a travelling advertisement on it. Will their name be on this car, and where it was made and the date ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I presume so. I have not inquired, but I observe that on cars throughout the country the name of the maker is always painted somewhere.

Mr. GANONG. I would suggest that the minister should have that painted in black, as a sign of mourning for the poor Canadians who cannot build a car for the commissioners.

Mr. EMMERSON.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the $20,000 come out of the $40,000 voted last year ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. I have a copy of the Railway Act. Subsection 4, section 21, refers to the expenditure of money. I see under this subsection that :

> The salaries or remunerations of all such officers, clerks, stenographers, messengers, and appointees, and all the expenses of the board of, and incidental to, the carrying out of this Act, including all actual and reasonable travelling expenses of the commissioners, secretary, and of such appointees or members of the staff of the board as may be required by the board, to travel, necessarily incurred in attending to the duties of their office, shall be paid monthly out of moneys to be provided by parliament.

Does that clause cover the expenditure ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think so. It is to be paid out of the vote last session of $40,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Under this particular clause, does the hon. minister think the government are justified in making that payment ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think the government is justified in paying for the car as an incidental expense connected with the Railway Commission, and it has already been provided and paid for.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the item passed the Auditor General ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I could not say.

Mr. BENNETT. The only words I see in the clause that possibly could attach to it are these : 'travelling expenses incurred in attending to the duties of their office.' Surely he will not contend that under those the government are entitled to take $20,000 out of the $40,000 voted by parliament and use it to build this car. Assuming, for the sake of argument, that last year the government stated that $20,000 of this vote was intended to be for the purchase of a car, does the hon. minister assume that it would have gone without protest ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am sure I would not assume that. I do not know of anything that would go without protest, but I assume it would have gone all right.

Mr. BENNETT. I do congratulate the minister on his frankness. He says anything will go with the majority of the House.

Mr. EMMERSON. Any reasonable proposition which ought to go.

Mr. BENNETT. In the face of the fact that the government have five private cars for which the people have no use, is it not the height of extravagance to buy another one ? When one minister wants to bring a relative from Manitoba, he sends a private car for him. Another one takes a private car on a jaunt to California. Another minister takes a private car for a trip to Mexico.

Mr. EMMERSON. No minister took one to California.

Mr. BENNETT. When the mnnister was asked about one of these private cars being sent to Manitoba to bring the relatives of one of his colleagues down here, he knew nothing about it. When he was asked with reference to one minister or his family taking a private car to California, he knew nothing about it. The people are long-suffering, but there must be a limit to their endurance. Had the minister stated last year that five of these private cars were standing on sidings not being used at all——

Mr. EMMERSON. I do no think the hon. gentleman is justified in making that statement.

Mr. BENNETT. I mean for the purposes of the government.

Mr. EMMERSON. Three of them are in use by the officials of the Intercolonial.

Mr. BENNETT. One was used by the Postmaster General to go to Mexico on a trip ; another was handed over to the tender mercies of a government official to go to California ; while another was used for one of the ministers to send for one of his relatives to come to Ottawa. There were times probably, when these gentlemen did not travel in this style ; when they were pleased to take the ordinary cars of which the train was made up. An hon. gentleman behind me suggests 'first-class'; but they did not always get up to that even. perhaps. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) laughs. I was in this House when that hon. gentleman was on this side. I will give him credit for not having been so blatant about the use of private cars as was the present minister the Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) and some others. But those hon. gentlemen scorned the use of private cars. We remember how, when the present Prime Minister attained office in 1896, he was offered a private car to come to Ottawa, but he said he preferred to travel in the ordinary car as a plain democrat. And this was heralded all over the country. This will all be interesting and amusing to the people of Ontario. And we remember that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) said that so far as the Conservative party were concerned they could not elect a man in Quebec at all——

Mr. FIELDING. If the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) will permit me, I made no allusion——

Mr. BENNETT. Will the hon. minister allow me to finish the sentence ?—and if one of them did get here it would be through an accident or a mistake.

Mr. FIELDING. That is right.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. minister lost his head as he was applauded vociferously by his supporters. And perhaps that statement will be heard of in the province of Ontario and other parts of this Dominion. The people of Ontario will be called to listen to the remarks of the junketting Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) who used to go about the country reviling the ministers who used private cars, even though half a dozen of them travelled in one coach. And when the people remember that he took one of these cars belonging to the country—and, forsooth the best one, the one impregnated with the air of royalty—and, as 'a democrat to the hilt' junketed off down to Mexico, while another car is sent by one of the ministers to bring his father from the city of Winnipeg, they will realize where these 'democrats' are to-day. And, so far as the statement of the Minister of Finance is concerned, if he will refer to 'Hansard' he will find there in black and white—that if a Conservative were elected from the province of Quebec, it would be the result of an accident or of a mistake.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That applies to all the provinces.

Mr. BENNETT. The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will be making a tour of Ontario within the next two months. He will have all the influence of this government behind him ; he will have all the influence of the local government behind him, and he will have all the influence of the Grand Trunk Pacific behind him ; and I think he will come back from that province with the same stinging rebuke of defeat that was administered to him in 1900.

New car for the Governor General, $18,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Carried.

Mr. MACLEAN. Provided that it is made in Canada.

Mr. LENNOX. We understand that the minister tells us that this eighteen-thousand dollar car is to be made in Canada ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I stated that the Governor General's car was to be built in Canada. I hope it is not necessary to repeat it more than once.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. minister say where it will be built ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am not in a position to make a statement on that point until the offer is accepted. Perhaps my hon. friend may infer from what I have already stated.

Railways and canals—chargeable to collection of revenue—canals—staff and repairs, $789,562.

Mr. LANCASTER. I propose to bring up again the question of the payment of the employees of the Welland canal which I brought up last session and, on their behalf to try to find out some reason from the government why it is that they have not been paid an increase. Last session, when this item or a similar item was under discussion, I took some trouble to place before the House and the government the position of the lockmasters and tenders and the bridge masters and tenders upon the Welland canal. We received a promise from the then Minister of Railways that the matter would be given attention and that a supplementary estimate would be brought down. A supplementary estimate was brought down, and a statute was passed which provided for an increase of twenty-five cents a day on the canals throughout Canada. Yet, strange to say the employees of the Welland canal have been told that they are not to get the increase and tney have not yet received it. Though it is a repetition of what was said last year, I propose to state the position of these men, who, I think, are entitled to their increase in an additional way to that in which they were entitled to it last year. Last year they were entitled to it on the merits and this year they are entitled to it technically as well, if I understand anything about the meaning of a statute. These men earn from about $360 to about $400 a year. Last year I pointed out, and I may now repeat—as we have done a good deal of business and the matter may have been forgotten—that the salaries of civil servants, who make about as many thousands as these men make hundreds, were increased on the ground that the cost of living had increased and that they needed more to support themselves in the scale of living to which they had been accustomed. To-night, I have pointed out, and I repeat, that you are beginning at the wrong end. If the cost of living has increased and you are going to increase salaries, you ought to begin with the men who get three or four hundred dollars and not with the men who get three or four thousand. At all events if you do not begin there you should finish there—the men who make only three or four hundred a year certainly should be increased if increases are to be made on any ground. Now the circumstances of these men on the Welland canal have not been well understood by this government, I fancy, or they would have increased the wages years ago. I find that these men have not had an increase —though it seems to have been supposed that they have had—since what is called the New Welland canal was built twenty-five or more years ago. The officers, men who get from $1,500 to $2,000 and so on, have had their salaries increased.

This government appears to think that when a man gets a good salary it is a sufficient reason for increasing it, whereas the man who gets a mere pittance of a few hundred dollars a year must remain at that figure. I find also that these men are required to have a certain amount of skill in locking these vessels through the canal, and that they do have skill is shown by the fact that there have been very few accidents on that canal ; Still they get less than ordinary labourers do. The question was asked this session by some hon. gentlemen opposite, what wages were paid to the labourers on the Soulanges and Lachine canals and on the St. Louis lock, and the answer, as found on page 5582, made by the Minister of Railways, was, that the ordinary labourers are getting $1.50 a day on these canals. These labourers however do not require any skill or any knowledge about the mechanism of the locks and no particular fitness for that position at all. Now what do the Welland canal employees get ? The labourers get $1.50 for nine hours work. I am not finding fault with that, that is about the same as labourers get on other canals. But I am speaking about lock tenders and bridge tenders upon the Welland canal, those men who are not employed the year round, and still are prevented from getting any other lucrative employment outside the canal. They work only about eight months in the year, and they get $45 a month.

Mr. EMMERSON. Some of them take their turn at employment during the winter season.

Mr. LANCASTER. They get very little that way. I am safe in saying that their average salary does not exceed $360 a year. Now these lock tenders and bridge tenders are paid 14½ cents per hour, while the ordinary labourer gets 16⅔ cents per hour. In other words, men who have no skill get two cents an hour more than lock tenders and bridge tenders who are required to have skill. Now I do not wish the minister to think that it is only these men who are concerned ; the whole country is concerned in having properly qualified and therefore reasonably paid men upon these locks. The other night when we were discussing railway estimates, the Postmaster General saw fit to interject the remark that the Welland canal employees were appointed for political reasons and that I might expect these men would vote against me. Now I want the minister to understand that I don't care anything about that. If a man votes against me I still want him to be paid a fair wage while he is working for the King. I don't want the minister to think that he is pleasing me if he does not raise the salaries of these men, even if every one of them voted against me. No matter how they exercise their franchise, as long as they are kept in the service, I want to see them paid a reasonable price for the work they do. The whole country is concerned in these men being properly paid, because if you do not pay men reasonably well you cannot expect reasonably good service from them. These men lock and unlock not only bridges for railway trains, but bridges over highways for vehicles of all kinds; therefore they are entrusted to a certain extent with the lives of many people, and the travelling public upon both the railways and highways as well as ships are concerned in having this work properly done and these men properly paid.

Now the wages of workmen on the Intercolonial are higher than those on this canal. During this present session the minister took good care to tell us on the 7th of June, in introducing his estimates, that he had increased the wages of the Intercolonial Railway employees, and he took to himself much credit for doing so. He also increased the wages of the men on the Prince Edward Island Railway, giving as a reason that living expenses have greatly increased. Now the canal employee getting $45 a month for a day of twelve hours, only gets 14½ cents an hour, working twenty-six days in the month. If they do a little extra work on Sundays, they get paid for that, so it is fair to leave that out of the discussion. I don't think anyway that they ought to be called upon to work Sundays. Now if they work twenty-six days in the month for eight months, and they have no chance to earn anything extra worth speaking of, that means from $360 to $400 a year. But their living expenses have increased just as well as they have increased for the man who is getting $2,500 or $3,000 a year. If the latter suffers from increased cost of living he only has to economize in luxuries, he does not need to economize in the necessaries of life. He may have to buy less opera house tickets, he may have to take a shorter vacation or a less expensive vacation in summer, and forgo a few little pleasures of that kind. But the man who gets $360 or $400 a year has got to forego probably shoes for his children to go to school in, he has got to forego perhaps fuel and clothes to keep them warm in winter; he has to economize in the absolute necessities of life. Last year I made a plea on behalf of these men, and the then acting Minister of Railways said he would consider it. An estimate was brought down, that estimate was made a statute, and now I am curious to know, and so are the lock tenders on these canals, why that statute has not been carried out, because it has not been carried out by the government. We know of this government having made pledges and having broken them and apparently thinking it was not a serious thing. We have got a step further now. We have a statute of the Dominion passed last year providing that these men should have an increase of 25 cents a day and they have not received it. I refer the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to chapter 4 of the statutes of 1903 which is the Appropriation Act (No. 4) of last session and page 92 of this statute where he will find under the heading of 'Collection of Revenue—Railways and Canals' and under the sub-head of 'Canals" the following:

> Generally—increase of 25 cents per diem to the wages of lockmasters, lockmen, bridge men and ferry men of the various canals, $37,000.

There is the statute providing that the increase shall take place. These men have been told, that, notwithstanding the fact that the Act came into force in October last, they are not to get this increase, that this government are not going to give it to them. I do not know where this government stand upon this matter. We got a statute passed providing for an increase of 25 cents a day to lockmasters, lockmen, bridgemen and ferrymen on the various canals. None is named. If that money is paid to the men on one canal it must be paid to the Welland canal employees. I am told that it had been stated by the superintendent of the canal, or at least it was stated on the streets of St. Catharines, that the government had said that this increase was not intended to apply to the Welland canal. If the government meant that they should have said so in their statutes. After I went home last session and told these men that this statute had been passed they were entitled to believe that they were going to get that 25 cents a day. If they are not going to get it no one should get it. There is no canal mentioned; there is none excluded. There is no authority on the statute for paying that 25 cents a day to anybody if there is no authority for paying to the lockmasters, lockmen, bridgemen and ferrymen on the Welland canal. These men knowing that this statute was passed, knowing that this is the law of the land, knowing that this is the only way you can make a law that is binding on this government, surely had a right to expect that they would get the benefit of it. But, it seems that this government are not going to be bound by a statute although this is the only way in which we can bind the government to anything. This statute provided that these men on the various canals should receive an increase of 25 cents a day, yet, notwithstanding the fact that this statute has been passed, they are not getting the increase and they are told by the authorities that the statute does not apply to the Welland canal. On behalf of these men I urge their claim for a twofold reason. To begin with, on the merits of the case, they should have an increase. They are getting the same pay that they had twenty years ago and they so forcibly brought their claim to the attention of the government last year that this statute was passed. If the statute gave them 25 cents a day they ought to get it. I stand for the whole of Canada although I am speaking particularly about the men of the Welland canal because they are the men who are complaining to me about this matter. I say they should have the same rate of pay as men on the other canals. Men who do the same work on the Soulanges canal or on the Sault Ste. Marie canal should get the same pay. I do not say that a man should get higher pay simply because he is on the Welland canal. Not at all. I want to give every Canadian workman the same increased pay wherever he may happen to be in Canada. I think it is fair to suppose that the expenses of living has increased in the same proportion in all parts of Canada and I therefore say that all these men are entitled to an increase of 25 cents a day. Whether it has been paid on the other canals or not, I do not know, but I do say that if this increased rate of pay has been given on the other canals and not on the Welland canal the government are doing something which the statute does not authorize them to do. The statute, as I have said before, applied generally to all of the canals and this increase of 25 cents per day should be paid upon all of them. The case of these men is certainly meritorious and I believe that the government would be in a very difficult position if one of these men who had worked on this canal since last session proposed to sue the government for this increased pay. I do not know how he could get a stronger contract than the statute. I cannot understand why the benefit of this statute has been withheld from them. It may be that the government—I hope not in the face of the meritorious case which they were able to present—intended to make an exception of the Welland canal, because of the political stripe of the representative who comes here, but I do not think this government would punish these men in that way. These men do the work just the same. It is not their fault that a supporter of the Conservative party comes to this House and I do not believe until I receive better advice that such would be the reason for excepting the Welland canal. I do not know whether the government intended to except the Welland canal, but if they did they did not draw their statute properly. If they did not intend to pay the increase to the men on the Welland canal, and if they did intend to pay it on the other canals they should have made a different law, while, if they intended that all these men should be entitled to the benefit of the statute then the statute certainly carries out their intention. These men have a right to expect that the government meant what the statute says. Some of these men, when I got home last autumn —not my political supporters—told me that if they had not got that increase they would have resigned because the pay was altogether too small, and they could not support their wives and children upon it. I told them that they had the increase, that the statute said so. Was I correct in that statement? If the government intended to except the Welland canal they should have worded that statute differently. These men are not the drawers of the statute, they are not in parliament, they cannot discuss these things with the government; they can only go by the phrase that is in the statute and assume, that, this statute having been passed providing for an increase of pay generally, they would get their increase. I could not imagine any reason why the government should have not paid them. The failure of the government to pay them has resulted in my promising that when the House did meet and when we got the right item in the estimates I would question the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, or whoever happened to be in his place, and give them the answer that the government might make as to why this increase has been withheld from them and I shall await that answer with a great deal of curiosity.

Mr. EMMERSON. The explanation of that is that for twenty years, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) has said, or at least for a number of years, the employees on the Welland canal and on the Sault Ste. Marie have enjoyed the privilege of drawing $1.50 a day for their services. On the other canals they only received $1.25 a day.

Mr. LANCASTER. Those are the labourers. I am talking about the lockmasters, lockmen, &c.

Mr. EMMERSON. No, that is the class of men to which the hon. gentleman has been referring, so I am informed by the deputy minister. I get my information from him as to what occurred in the past. Provision was made in the estimates of last year to equalize to make uniform the payment to the classes of employees named in this item to which my hon. friend has made reference. I have a great deal of sympathy with all that my hon. friend has said as to the desirability of paying the employees on these canals the highest possible wage consistent with the compensation that men under similar circumstances are getting from private corporations. Of course it is difficult to make a comparison as between canals and other employments, because we have no precisely similar occupations. In the railway branch of the department the Intercolonial Railway can equalize the pay received by the men to that received under similar circumstances on other railways in Canada. That rule has been followed. This class of employees all over the canal systems in Canada receive the same pay. Whether that was right or wrong, that was made uniform and I am informed by the deputy that that was the object of the vote of last year. I am not just as familiar with the appointments of the men on the canals as I have been with regard to the railways, but I shall make it a point to look into the matter. I admit that the cost of living has increased not so much by the increase in the cost of material as by the fact that what were the luxuries of a few years ago have become the necessities of to-day. That applies to all classes and all conditions of men in Canada to-day. My hon. friend says the labourers are paid 2½ cents per hour more than the lockmasters. That is perhaps not making as fair an argument as my hon. friend wished to do. The labourers work nine hours per diem and get $1.50 per day. The others are on duty 12 hours it is true but they get $1.50 per day. I am not prepared to deny the contention of my hon. friend that men in that position should receive a higher wage than labourers employed elsewhere on the canal. It may be that they should ; that is a matter which I shall investigate personally, and I shall be only too glad to have a readjustment made so that the men will get what will be a fair compensation for their services. That is the principle adopted on the Intercolonial Railway and that course will be followed while I am in charge of the department in regard to the canals. When this matter was under discussion last session the Minister of Finance said :

> If they are now receiving less than $1.50 per day, they will be increased to $1.50. This applies to all the canals except the Welland and the Sault Ste. Marie canals, the men on which had previously received an advance.

Thus it was explained at the time that this $37,000 was required in order to bring the standard wage on the other canals up to the wages on the Sault Ste. Marie and the Welland canals. This explanation of it accords with the explanation given me by the deputy minister and chief engineer who is more familiar with the details than I am. However, while that entirely refutes the argument of my hon. friend that any unfair action was taken by the government against the men on the Welland canal the other contention of my hon. friend that these men are worthy of a higher wage will certainly have consideration. I had intended to do it ; I have had many applications along this line from the employees of the canal and I have promised myself an opportunity of personally scrutinizing the pay-lists of the several canals and looking thoroughly into the question.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am afraid the minister does not yet understand. He seems to think they are paid $1.50 a day. They are paid $45 a month.

Mr. EMMERSON. And they work 30 days.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is all right as an argument. They are paid $45 a month, and are paid by the month, that would be $1.50 a day if they worked 30 days. I was quite correct in what I said. Assuming that they work 26 days they get 14½ cents an hour. If they work 30 days, they would be getting a little less per hour and my argument would be all the stronger.

Mr. EMMERSON. I pointed out to my hon. friend that in that item the Welland and Soo canals were especially exempted.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is no answer at all. These locktenders make an application, and a statute is passed. Does the minister intend to tell this House and the country that he can explain away a statute by something said in this House. Does he think any judge will overrule a statute because of something which appears in 'Hansard ?' The minister is shirking the question ; there is a statute providing for an increase of 25 cents a day for a different set of people altogether from those with whom the minister is dealing. I thought I made it clear that I was not talking about labourers. They get the same wage all over the canal system. The minister wants to make this House believe, perhaps he himself believes that it is for the labourers I am making application. I think I said distinctly that it was for the lockmasters, the locktenders and the bridge keepers, those mentioned in the statutes that I was applying. No one disputes that the labourers on the Welland canal had their wages increased a few years ago, but the wages of the lockmasters, locktenders, and bridge tenders were not increased, and these men are now getting the same wages as they got on the very first day the new Welland canal was opened. They have never had an increase in that period of some 25 years. The labourers having obtained an increase a few years ago were getting a better rate of pay last year than on the other canals and that was equalized. But that is not the statute. This statute deals specifically with the very men on whose behalf I am applying. It deals with the lockmasters, bridge tenders and ferry men, not the labourers at all, unless under the general acceptation of the word that all men who work are labourers. These men get $45 a month as they have done ever since the new canal was opened.

That statute provides for an increase of 25 cents per day in the wages of lockmasters, lockmen, bridgemen and ferrymen on the canals of Canada generally. The minister has not told us how he gets round that statute. I do not care what 'Hansard' may show that anybody said as to what the intention was. Here is the statute which we have to go by, passed after the supplementary estimates were brought down, and it is worded exactly as the supplementary estimates were. I was satisfied that if the supplementary estimates went through as brought down, these men on the Welland canal would get what they wanted ; and the minister will not say that I was foolish enough, on behalf of these men, not to let well enough alone. The statute was passed, it became the law of the land, and the minister has not attempted to tell me yet how he can justify his failure to pay those men the increase mentioned in that statute. The statute applies to all the canals in Canada ; the Welland canal is one of those canals, and if the increase is not to be paid to the men on the Welland canal, there is no more authority for paying it on the Soulanges canal or the Lachine canal. The ordinary labourers on the Welland canal had their pay increased a few years ago. They are not included in the item of the statute, and they do not come within the description of the men on whose behalf I have been pleading for the increase for two years, and to whom the statute applies. I can assure the minister that his saying that it was never intended to be given to these men will not satisfy them. The statute has been passed to apply to them, and if it does not apply to them, to whom does it apply ? I suppose the increase of 25 cents a day amounting to $37,000 has been paid to somebody. I do not suppose it was appropriated by this parliament to be withheld. If it has been paid to anybody, I want to know, on behalf of these men on the Welland canal, why it has not been paid to them. If that money has been paid to other lockmen on other canals, the minister must give some better explanation than he has yet given as to why he has not paid the increase of 25 cents a day to the Welland canal employees, who, it seems to me are entitled as a matter of law to have that increase from this government by the terms of last year's statute.

Mr. MONK. Has the Minister of Railways done anything towards granting the request as to which I have had considerable correspondence with the department, in reference to the old canal bank at Lachine ? The citizens have requested the government to give them a lease of the bank in order that they may convert it into a pleasure ground. The government cannot lose anything by acceding to their request and I believe my hon. friend was favourable to granting it. Some time ago I mentioned the matter to him and he said it would be attended to in a few days. That was nearly a month ago and the summer is far advanced, and I hope he will see his way clear to granting this request. It is a small matter for the government, they do not stand to lose anything by it, and it will be a considerable advantage to the locality.

Mr. EMMERSON. The matter has been under consideration but is not one that can be settled off hand. There must of necessity be a lease, and that lease must be authorized by the Governor in Council, and there is such a congestion of work before that body that this item has been lost sight of. However, I hope to be able to state shortly, as representing the department, the position in which the department is placed as regards that matter.

Mr. J. D. REID. What are the lockmasters getting on the canal ?

Mr. EMMERSON. $45 per month.

Mr. J. D. REID. The other evening we had a dispute as to the number of locks on the Farran's Point canal. I wrote a gentleman at Farran's Point, and he replied that there was only one lock. I also inquired from a pilot who came through the canal the other day, and he gave the same information, but on page W—74 of the Auditor General's Report I find that on lock 22 there is a lockmaster and three men. I would like to know where that other lock is on that Farran's Point canal.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is a new lock, and right alongside of that is the old lock. Personally, I know nothing about it, but I am informed by the reports of the department and the officials and the chief engineer that there are two locks there. Some body is under a wrong impression, and I would be sorry to think it is the Chief Engineer of Railways and Canals.

Mr. PRINGLE. Does this item cover the salary of the ornamental gentleman who is supposed to be superintendent of these different canals ? I am referring to a gentleman named Stewart, who was a short time ago the Liberal organizer in the county of Glengarry.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is very much to his credit.

Mr. PRINGLE. It may be to his credit, but I do not know where he learned anything about canals when organizing the Liberal party in the county of Glengarry.

Mr. EMMERSON. He must have been watching the other side.

Mr. PRINGLE. Although he had no experience, he was put in a position over men who have had a lifelong experience in that work. What is he receiving now ? I would ask also whether the government have given him possession of the little steamer called the 'Alert,' formerly controlled by Mr. Rubidge, late engineer in chief of canals ? Mr Stewart is now moving about the river from canal to canal with this steamer. I think it has only a crew of half a dozen men, and probably does not add to the expenses of the country over $50 a day, but it does seem a little expensive for Mr. Stewart, who formerly could take a horse and carriage and go along the banks of the canals. Has this boat been handed over to him for his pleasure travel during the season of navigation, or is it to be retained for the engineer in chief ? Or for what purpose is this steamer to be used ? I have yet to see that it has ever served any useful purpose. Its only purpose seemed to be to give pleasure to a very worthy man, the late chief engineer.

Mr. EMMERSON. That matter was discussed very fully this afternoon, and had my hon. friend been present I would have been spared the necessity of repeating what I then said. The steamer 'Alert' has been under the superintending engineer, Mr. Rubidge. He used it in connection with his duties on the canals. Unfortunately, that gentleman passed away and, pending a final decision as to whether the steamer was necessary on the canal or not, it was placed superintendent of the Cornwall canal who also has charge of all the other plant and material in connection with the canals. If it was necessary for the engineers on those canals before the death of Mr. Rubidge, I assume it would be necessary for them to use it now. I have not had opportunity of personally finding out what is necessary there, but when I do have that opportunity I will determine whether it is necessary to continue the boat at all in connection with the canal. If the facts be as stated by my hon. friend, who probably has coloured them somewhat, it would not be wise to continue it. The superintendent has charge of the Cornwall and Williamsburgh canals, which are separated by quite a number of miles, and the engineers are still there. They will be required, probably, in connection with certain works not yet completed, to visit different points, and the steamer is at their disposal for that purpose.

Mr. PRINGLE. Why is it necessary to have half a dozen superintendents at present when these canals were formerly managed with a far less number? Take the Cornwall canal, which is one of the largest. In former years there was a superintendent receiving $1,400 a year. To-day we have a superintendent of the Cornwall canal who is called an overseer. Then we have an overseer of the Williamsburgh canal and an overseer of the Edwardsburg canal, and above them all is Mr. Stewart as superintendent. The expenses have practically trebled in the last few years. I would also like to put another question. We have another gentleman down there called O'Callaghan. I do not know just what his position is, but I know he is a farmer, and he spends all his time on his farm. He has a very nice little farm a short distance from the town, where he spends all his time except when he comes in to draw his salary from this government.

He is of no assistance whatever to the party whom he is supposed to assist, for he is never there. From early morning till late at night, I am informed, he is engaged attending to his farming duties, and only comes up to draw his pay. That is only one instance. I find signs there of an approaching election. When I go home I find men by the score employed on the banks of the canal. All a man has to do is go to the gentleman who has received the nomination as standard bearer of the Liberal party, and he gets employment. I do not know what these men do, but I am told that they are engaged in pulling weeds and drawing their salaries. I assume that they are supposed to vote right when the election comes on. But, seriously, I would draw attention to Mr. O'Callaghan's case. I am speaking from information given me by reliable parties.

Mr. EMMERSON. What position does he hold?

Mr. PRINGLE. I cannot just tell.

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. gentleman's information must be very inadequate.

Mr. PRINGLE. All I know is that he is engaged in farming and drawing his pay from the government. What particular position he is supposed to hold or what he is supposed to do, I have no means of knowing. I suppose the deputy minister could tell the hon. gentleman what he is supposed to do. For my part I never saw him do anything. Surely, the hon. minister might tell me——

Mr. EMMERSON. I did not wish to be discourteous and interrupt my hon. friend (Mr. Pringle).

Mr. PRINGLE. Very well, tell me what he is supposed to do.

Mr. EMMERSON. One man is employed there as collector for the day service. Mr. O'Callaghan is the night man, and the reason my hon. friend (Mr. Pringle) does not see him there is because the hon. gentleman is not there at night. I am afraid that my hon. friend's remarks are tinged with extravagance and not altogether free from bitterness, due to the fact that Mr. Stewart and the other gentleman were at one time identified with the Liberal party. He should not harbour resentment against them on that account. I think it is to their credit that they were Liberals and I do not think that they should be misrepresented in the House because of that fact.

Mr. PRINGLE. Perhaps the hon. minister will allow me to say that Mr. O'Callaghan was always supposed to be a Conservative.

Mr. EMMERSON. That shows how fair we are——

Mr. PRINGLE. It shows how fair I am. He was appointed at the instance of the late Dr. Bergin.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think it is an example of our fairness. Were we actuated by the bitterness shown by my hon. friend, if this man does nothing but draw his pay how quickly we could get rid of him. And surely my hon. friend does not wish the committee to understand that the men employed on the banks of the canal are employed in pulling weeds. Surely he knows—what is the fact—that these men are employed on the stone lining of the banks of the canal.

The hon. gentleman admits that his information is very inaccurate. It is shadowy, so to speak. He is depending entirely upon hearsay, and somebody has been telling him things that were not in accordance with the facts.

Mr. PRINGLE. Will the hon. minister tell me how many of these men are employed on the rip-rapping at the present time? The number has increased very largely during the last three weeks.

Mr. EMMERSON. The number of men varies. My officers cannot tell me the number of men.

Mr. PRINGLE. I suppose the number varies as the election approaches.

Mr. EMMERSON. If that were in mind, it would be better to 'bide a wee.'

Mr. J. D. REID. The hon. minister will see that there are others along the St. Lawrence canal who have noticed the fact of Mr. Stewart having taken possession of the steamer 'Alert.'

Mr. EMMERSON. He is the superintendent of these canals, and the steamer 'Alert' has been placed in his charge as has the rest of the plant. The hon. gentleman (Mr. J. D. Reid) says there are three overseers. As a matter of fact there are only two, one on the Williamsburgh canal and one on the Cornwall canal. These canals are ten or twelve miles apart, and it is necessary to have officials of this class at each canal.

Mr. J. D. REID. Now, let me tell the minister the position. In the old days there was a superintendent at Cornwall and one at Morrisburg.

Mr. EMMERSON. And the superintending engineer.

Mr. J. D. REID. And the superintending engineer, the late Mr. Rubidge. These superintendents made out their reports themselves and sent them to Ottawa. They had plenty of time to do it. They had only to drive up and down the canal, one day east and the next day west. Shortly after this government came into power they passed an Order in Council abolishing the position of superintendents of canals, so as to get rid of these men.

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. gentleman is imagining that.

Mr. J. D. REID. Not at all. One of them was Dr. Hickey, for many years a member of this House, and the other was Mr. Ross. The hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) can corroborate what I state. And shortly after the government decided to have overseers. And they not only have two overseers but they have another gentleman whom they call clerk to the overseer. I think the hon. member for Cornwall will say that there is an officer of that kind there.

Mr. EMMERSON.

At all events, we have one on the Williamsburgh canal. So, instead of having two men they have three and I think even four men on this canal, besides Mr. Stewart. Now, this boat has been given to Mr. Stewart to run up and down the canal. The minister states that she will be used by the engineers on the different works as heretofore. But is it not a fact that all these works are completed, and is it not also a fact that even if these works existed, the engineer on one of these works would have nothing to do with another? There is no way that they can use this boat. It is a well known fact that this boat is absolutely of no use, yet it involves an expenditure to this country of $8,000 or $10,000 per annum. But on account of Mr. Rubidge having been connected with the canals for thirty years or forty years, there was not the same general fault finding that there is now since it has been handed over to Mr. Stewart to be left in his charge without being used.

Mr. EMMERSON. Is there any jealousy in connection with it?

Mr. J. D. REID. No jealousy whatever; but the people of this country expect the Minister of Railways to manage their affairs as economically as they ought to be managed, having due regard to the country's interests.

Mr. COCHRANE. I do not think the Minister of Railways should talk of jealousy. It is public money that he has control of, and not his own. I want to tell the minister that the editor of the Brighton 'Ensign' announced that this government steamer was up at Twelve O'Clock Point in East Northumberland, and Mr. Stewart's family was on board the steamer. I suppose the country is paying the board of that gentleman and his family on board the steamer while they are on a pleasure trip to Twelve O'Clock Point, at the head of the Bay of Quinte. There was not any jealousy in the breast of the editor of the Brighton 'Ensign' when he announced that fact; neither is there any jealousy in my mind because I object to the government paying out the people's money for the board of this gentleman and his family on that steamer. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that it comes with bad grace for him to talk about jealousy in view of the fact that every man was turned off the Murray canal when his party got into power. I give as much credit to Liberals of the county of East Northumberland who represented that riding in past years, as I give to Conservatives, because up to the time this government came into power no government official was ever turned out of his position in that riding by Mr. Biggar, the Reform representative. Men died in their public positions who were appointed by Mr. Mackenzie's Liberal government. But when this so-called Liberal government came into power they were so low in their minds that they turned men off that canal because they were Conservatives. Every man who was a Conservative was turned off that canal. They turned men out of houses that they built themselves on the authority of the government, and this fact can be verified by the deputy minister who is now sitting by the hon. gentleman; and they put their Grit friends into their positions and into these houses that had been vacated, and gave them $6 a month, whereas they had only paid the men who owned the houses $3 a month. That is the way they conduct business in East Northumberland. What does the superintendent of that canal want with an inspector over him? The superintendent of that canal was a purchaser of cheese, and knows nothing about canal work. The minister is paying the superintendent a salary, and giving him $6 a month for a house, and $6 a month for office rent, and he is paying him $1.50 for each one of 255 trips to the Murray canal. That is the way they work it, Mr. Chairman, and I know your soul must be grieved in hearing of the extravagance of your party. Just think of the superintendent of the Murray canal living in Brighton in a house that the government pays rent for and an office that the government pays rent for, and then they give him $1.50 each for 255 trips to go down to the Murray canal to attend to his business. Then they give him $2 a trip to go down to Trenton at the eastern end of the Murray canal, and when he takes a jaunt into the country they pay him $2 or $3 a day for that. And the Minister of Railways talks about jealousy! I want to tell him that I am here to look after the people's money and the way it is expended, and that is the venom that was in their bosoms when they turned poor men off that canal and put in their own friends.

Mr. LANCASTER. Before that item is carried I want to draw the minister's attention to another matter that I think is a grievance, and that is in regard to the pension of these lock tenders and lockmasters upon the Welland canal. I think in common fairness the minister ought to revise the system of superannuation as it is applied to these men on the Welland canal. As the minister mentioned a few minutes ago, these men are employed sometimes on extra work on the canal; by virtue of their being lockmasters they are given the first preference when this extra work presents itself. Now they get that money just as much because they are lock tenders as they do their $45 a month salary; but they are not allowed to include that in the computation of their superannuation. It seems to me that their contention that they do not get the right amount of superannuation is a fair and just one. Take for example the case of Mr. Henry Hare, whose case I think his deputy is acquainted with. I have in my hand a letter from Mr. L. K. Jones, the secretary of the department, to Mr. Hare, written on the 29th of January last, and here is what Mr. Jones writes:

> I am directed to inform you, as desired, that your pay for the three fiscal years preceeding your superannuation, as returned in the pay sheets upon which you paid deduction was as follows: 1900, $350.10; 1901, $351.35; 1902, $353.07, making an avrage for three years of $351.50.

The minister will remember that I was quite within the mark in saying that the locktenders did not get more than $360 a year and there is the case of a man working all the time who only got an average of $351.50. Now Mr. Jones goes on to say:

> Your view that you are entitled to further superannuation allowance on the amount paid to you for certain services in regard of water level record during the winter, and the superannuation reduction should have been made from it, is a mistaken one.
> The department could, had it seen fit, have employed any parties outside of the ordinary canal staff to do this particular work, and you surely would not contend that such parties would be entitled to superannuation allowance on the pay given therefor.
> As a matter of convenience and advantage to the lock-tenders, they were allowed to look after this work of level taking, and were paid for it as any outsider might have been. It has nothing to do with their regular employment or regular pay, which last is a clearly defined monthly rate.

What I submit to the hon. minister is that it is because the men are lock tenders they have this extra work for a few weeks in the year. They are employed as any other persons might possibly have been but they are given the preference over an ontside party because they are lock tenders. I think it is a fair contention that if a lock tender got that amount of money which he would not have got unless he had been officially in the capacity of a lock tender the government should take that into consideration in making their computation as to his superannuation. These men would not have got that money but for the fact that they were lock tenders and they did get it because they were lock tenders. They are given the preference and I think it is reasonable to suppose that these men who for eight months in the year are in the employ of the government will do better work in level taking than an ordinary labourer casually picked up and who would not take as much interest in the government service. I think in striking the superannuation allowance, as Mr. Hare contended, the fact of his having received this money should be taken into consideration, because, although it is true that this money is not part of his lock tender's wage, he would not have received this extra money if he had not been a lock tender and it is therefore fair to take the three years added to his lock tender's wages in computing the amount of his superannuation allowance. He gets it from the government the same as he receives his wage as an employee on the Welland canal and he receives it because he is a canal employee. He would not have received it had he not been in a permanent position and I submit to the Minister of Railways and Canals that this fact should be taken into consideration in the future. The case which I am now instancing has been dealt with and I will not ask the hon. minister to overrule what has been decided. In this particular case it would do no good because Mr. Hare died since this session began. He died two or three months ago. His case is common to all of these men and I am using it as an illustration. I would like to ask the hon. minister whether it would not be reasonable to include in the amount that you strike for superannuation all that these men receive for the three years from the government whether it be their regular salary as lock tenders or any additional amount.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is a matter that is controlled by the treasury board and it is decided in accordance with the interpretation of the Act. It is the permanent pay which the men get which is taken into account. It is true that it has been deemed advisable to give these men extra pay. That perhaps is an Act of grace but it is not in connection with their permanent employment. However, this is not a matter for the department. It is a matter that is determined under the law by the Treasury Board.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would like an answer to the question that I brought the hon. minister's attention to. What is the hon. minister's idea about paying a man for 250 days to attend to his work at $1.50 a day when he gets a salary for doing that business ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The gentleman to whom my hon. friend refers is paid in the usual way for the travelling that he does in connection with his duties on the canals. I think perhaps my hon. friend is looking at the matter through a glass darkly.

Mr. COCHRANE. I think the hon. minister is looking through a glass darkly. Are we to understand that this government employs a man, bring him up from another part of the riding altogether and instead of insisting on him living where it is not out of the way at all, because there are beautiful residences all along the canal, residences that a good many of us would be very glad to have, pay for the rent of a house and office in the village of Brighton for the use of this official ? Are we to understand that the government are willing to pay out the people's money for this official if he wants to run down the canal to attend to his business ? If he wants to go to Trenton they give him $2 a day and if he wants to go out into the country on an excursion to the old village where he used to live they give him $2 a day of the people's money.

Mr. PRINGLE. I would like to say one word with regard to this ornamental gentleman—Mr. Stewart. I am a little surprised at the attitude which the hon. minister takes in standing up for Mr. Stewart in connection with the use of his pleasure yacht. I find in the accounts of last year many items charged by Mr. Stewart. They are only small items and I do not care about taking up the time of the committee by reading them all—$106 for travelling expenses and so forth. I find that last year he was in the habit of charging the government for tips, wines and hotel bills at the Place Viger. This is a purely ornamental official of no use at all, who knows no more about the canals than a mere schoolboy and who has simply been put over the heads of the men who have been employed for years upon the canals because he rendered good service to the Liberal Party. I would like to see this man treated generously, but I draw the line when he has a yacht placed at his disposal and has four or five men to take him up and down the river and who runs up hotel bills at the Place Viger and charges his wines and tips to the government. I think the line should be drawn and that Mr. Stewart should be called down and instructed to perform his duties if you sent him away a hundred miles from the canal it would be better for the canal and for the government. But, if you are going to keep him there let him conduct his services without imposing such an enormous expense upon the country. It is time to cut off the steam yacht and these extra expenses which we see here in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the hon. minister how it is that the pay of the men employed on the Lachine canal was delayed until the 18th July. My hon. friend cannot imagine what a very great inconvenience and hardship it is for these men to wait eighteen days for their pay. These men in the city of Montreal and along the whole length of the canal are poor men, they work hard and that they have to wait for eighteen days for their pay, seems to be a very great injustice if it cannot be absolutely explained. While the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) was giving us a tableau of Mr. Stewart living like a nabob, and this other gentleman Mr. O'Callaghan, leading the life of a gentleman farmer, issuing from his house only on pay day, it seems almost a sin that those who are really at work, who are not, to use my hon. friend's expression, ornemental political employees, the hard-working men employed in and near great cities, should have to wait eighteen days for their pay. I refrained from calling the minister's attention to this earlier, but I have since July 18th many complaints and I think it is only due to these men that my hon. friend should give some explanation of this delay.

Mr. PRINGLE. A number of men have been employed lately in connection with the Cornwall canal. Their pay is long overdue and some of them came to me in reference to their pay, asking when this government were likely to pay their wages. I told them it was impossible for me to say, that probably after the session was over they would find time to attend to the payment. These men can ill-afford to wait for months for their pay. There should be some means by which they would be paid at once.

Mr. EMMERSON. Before replying to these questions I wish to call attention to the way misstatements are made in this House and circulated. My hon. friend stated as a rumour that a certain gentleman worked in the daytime on his farm and drew his pay. I called his attention to the fact that that man was employed at night and that that duty required him to attend to the canal at night and that he was paid for that.

Mr. MONK. Collecting when there is nothing to collect.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is not the collection. His duties require him to attend at night. The daytime is free to him and he can be at his farm. That is the first misstatement I corrected, and my hon. friend repeated it as if it had not been corrected. There was a delay in paying the men on the Lachine canal during the month of June. The pay lists came up, they had to be checked over and had to be sent back to be corrected. They came back again and then they had to be checked over and then sent to the Auditor General who also had to check them over. By the time all of this wheel has revolved, it is generally the 15th of the month and that is the time these payments are usually made. With respect to the Lachine canal, there has been an extra delay for three days. That has been the procedure for a long, long time ; it is not peculiar to the present.

Mr. MONK. I do not agree with my hon. friend as to that. The delay on the Lachine canal could not have been as short as that or I would not have had these representations made to me. As to the collectorship, the minister said, in answer to the hon. member for Cornwall, that this singularly fortunate individual whose name is O'Callaghan, had night work as a collector, but we all know the collections on the canal have been abolished since last year—that is one of the boasts of the government—and if Mr. O'Callaghan is as busy collecting as the officials on the Lachine have been since the tolls were abolished, he must work at night to have such a defence as the minister has set up for him.

Mr. GANONG. The minister has not explained one item, the wines for Mr. Stewart. I am sure it will harrow the soul of that apostle of temperance, the minister of Agriculture the late general of the Canadian army, and I am sure the minister should state who the parties are who allowed Mr. Stewart to be furnished with wines and will prevent its being done in the future.

Mr. EMMERSON. I asked the deputy about this and he said there could not be any such charge, that it would not pass the department. I know nothing more of the circumstances than that.

Mr. PRINGLE. I did not make the charge in ignorance of what I was talking about. If the minister will take the accounts of the Place Viger Hotel as against Mr. Stewart at the different times Mr. Stewart has been attending to Cornwall canal business in the Place Viger in Montreal he will find that Mr. Stewart was charged for wines, that he paid for them and that the government recouped him for them.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am free to say that if such a payment was made it was improper and incorrect, and was not in accord with the wishes of the department. I have spoken to the deputy who said that it was not possible and if anything of the kind has been allowed, is was through the inadvertence of the accountants.

Mr. PRINGLE. It is a very, very small item and probably I should not have called attention to it, but the item goes with the man. Mr. Stewart has been putting in bills year after year including all the expenses he could have at the hotels, charging his tips, wines and everything, and the government have been paying them.

Mr. FIELDING. I have an understanding with my hon. friends opposite and I now desire that the committee would be good enough to suspend operations for a short time in order that I may bring down some important documents. With the understanding that the committee will return to its labours by consent in a few minutes, I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day.

Some resolutions reported.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL—SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) presented a message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER read the message as follows :

MINTO.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, further supplementary estimates of sums required for the services of the Dominion for the year ending 30th June, 1905, and in accordance with the provisions of 'The British North America Act, 1867' the Governor General recommends these estimates to the House of Commons.

Government House,
Ottawa, July 25, 1904.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved that the message of His Excellency together with the estimates be referred to the Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Canals—salaries and contingencies, collectors' offices, $35,835.

Mr. J. D. REID. There is an increase in this item over last year.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is a net increase of $110, which occurs in contingencies.

Mr. J. D. REID. How does the minister increase this expenditure when it has been stated that there are no collections on the canals ?

Mr. EMMERSON. We have to keep the officials just the same, in order to keep the record and pending the two years experiment.

Galops Rapids—to complete channel, $40,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. I brought down to the house last week copies of the contracts relating to the Galops rapids. The documents were placed by me on the table, and some of the hon. gentlemen opposite got them. I would like to ask if any hon. gentleman has them ? I thought they were obtained by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox.

Mr. J. D. REID. I may say that I have been trying all afternoon to find out where they are, and no member on this side of the House acknowledges having seen them, the clerk says he never saw them, and they are not upstairs, where papers of this kind are generally to be found. For that reason I think it would be most unfair to press this item until we have an opportunity of seeing the documents which my hon. friend promised.

Mr. EMMERSON. If we pass this item, it will finish the main estimates, and there is an item in the supplementary estimates for the Galops rapids on which the matter can be fully discussed, and I will have the information copied again and furnished to my hon. friend to-morrow morning.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. J. D. REID. Of course, I think it is unfair to ask that this item pass without my having an opportunity to see the papers. The minister may bring the supplementary estimates on at some moment when I am not here, and I may not have the opportunity of discussing this matter again.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend can rest assured that as long as I am in this House I will not take any course of that character with respect to the estimates under my control.

Mr. J. D. REID. If the hon. minister will state that there is an item in the supplementary estimates for the Galops rapids, and that it will not be pressed through without my having an opportunity to discuss it, I am quite willing to let this item go.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is in the supplementary estimates an item for the Galops rapids, and my hon. friend will have that opportunity, and I will put myself out to accommodate him as to the time when it will be discussed.

Building a spur line of railway from Intercolonial station at Rivière Ouelle to wharf on the St. Lawrence—balance, $6,300.

Mr. MORIN. How long is that ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Seven miles.

Mr. MORIN. Is that built specially for the use of the government road or some other purpose ? Has not somebody built a mill there, and does he not require that road to haul lumber ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No ; it is to connect the Rivière Ouelle wharf with the ferry at Murray Bay. It is built for the benefit of the Murray Bay traffic.

Intercolonial Railway—St. Charles Junction —bore hole for water supply, $4,750.

Mr. EMMERSON. We had to get water there. The Intercolonial was very much inconvenienced last year for want of water. This amount was expended because of the depth.

Intercolonial Railway — Campbellton—siding on wharf at, $1,250.

Mr. EMMERSON. It was necessary to put in a siding there. There is a large wharf at that place.

Intercolonial Railway—Sussex—platform extension at military siding, $950.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is where the militia drill. They have their permanent military establishment there, and the platform was furnished for the benefit of the military.

Intercolonial Railway—Spring Hill Junction— —bore hole for water supply, $2,800.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Could no water be got there without boring for it ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No; this was absolutely necessary.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are there not a number of hills there?

Mr. EMMERSON. There may be, but this boring for water was the last resort.

Intercolonial Railway—siding at Pictou Landing, $14,500.

Mr. EMMERSON. This work was given under contract after tender, and the lowest tender was taken.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is that the matter about which there was some discussion last year?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think not. This arises out of the shipment of coal. The wharf had been raised by the coal companies and there had to be a different grade, so that the grades go down one way and up the other. This siding became necessary on account of the grades.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. A sort of switchback?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is on the New Glasgow side, opposite the town of Pictou?

Mr. FIELDING. It is Pictou landing, where the coal is shipped from the Acadia mines.

Mr. MORIN. I would like to ask the minister if it is time now to talk about the question I asked this afternoon?

Mr. EMMERSON. Item 91 of the main estimates has been held over, so that my hon. friend will have an opportunity to discuss the question on that item. I did not press it, because the hon. member for West Toronto said that when it came up he wished to be present.

Lachine canal—electric generator, electric cables and shafting, $5,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is that a new machine?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is the balance on the work of the new gates put in on the Lachine canal.

Mr. J. D. REID. What is the total cost of all these?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not the figures just now.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister seems to be rather short of information.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have sent for the information, and I shall have it in a few minutes. Let the item stand in the meantime.

Item allowed to stand.

Railways and canals—chargeable to income—Lachine canal—repairs to old locks, 1 and 2, $25,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the minister please give us some explanation of this?

Mr. EMMERSON. We have had to repair the old locks 1 and 2 of the Lachine canal, and this $25,000 is required to meet the expenditure made for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1904.

Mr. J. D. REID. Was this work let by tender?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who had the contract?

Mr. EMMERSON. Quinlin & Robinson.

Mr. J. D. REID. By the yard?

Mr. EMMERSON. By schedule. The contract was let to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. J. D. REID. Was it publicly advertised.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, generally advertised.

Lachine canal—tail race, Cote St. Paul, $3,956.10.

Mr. J. D. REID. Was anything ever done about that basin near Montreal that the government own and that was used for a dry-dock?

Mr. EMMERSON. The Tate dry-dock. It is leased to Mr. L'Etand for $1,000 a year he making the ordinary repairs. But it is found necessary to rebuild that dry-dock, and there is an item in the supplementary estimates for that purpose.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is it understood that this gentleman will have the lease still at $1,000 per annum?

Mr. EMMERSON. If we continue the lease the terms will have to be arranged? It may be that the terms will have to be increased.

Mr. J. D. REID. What is the amount in the supplementary estimates?

Mr. EMMERSON. Speaking from memory the estimate of the total cost is $10,000. If we get $1,000, that will be 10 per cent on the investment.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not think there would be any trouble in leasing it for $1,000 a year now, and let the lessee put on the repairs. It is a nice dry-dock for vessels running on the Lachine canal.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is small.

Mr. J. D. REID. It takes in small canal boats and it is the only place at which they can be docked, unless they go to Quebec.

Mr. EMMERSON. We can discuss the matter when the item is before us.

Lachine canal—water service for protection against fire, $1,800.

Mr. J. D. REID. Where is that?

Mr. EMMERSON. This is to lay an eight inch pipe from the city water works main on Mill street to the north side of the dry-dock, 650 feet where a hydrant will be placed. The canal fleet is put in the dock each winter and there are a number of buildings and also a considerable quantity of material for lock gates &c, without protection against fire. The value of the fleet dredges, tugs, &c., is about $100,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. They are placed in the dry dock you have just leased ? I would like to know also if the government have to pay any charges for their vessels being taken out in the dry-dock, or if that point was reserved in the lease that was made ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, we do not pay anything.

Lachine canal—raising shed No. 1, St. Gabriel Basin, $10,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is done to meet the shipping requirements. The work was advertised and put up for tender.

Mr. MONK. Who got the contract ?

Mr. EMMERSON. A man named Quinlan. I would like to reduce that amount to $8,000, because we will not spend more than $8,000, and the balance is provided for in the supplementaries for the current year.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MONK. What is the amount of Quinlan's tender ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I cannot give the exact figure.

Mr. J. D. REID. How many tenders did you receive ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Three tenders and this was the lowest.

Mr. J. D. REID. In every other department when we ask for this information it is generally given. I think we should know the names of the tenderers and the amounts, because the public in that vicinity are curious to know these things, and to see whether the lowest tender was accepted.

Mr. EMMERSON. In other words, whether I was telling the truth or not.

Mr. J. D. REID. Not for that reason, but because they like to know the difference there was between the tenders.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would be sorry if, when I stated that a certain tender was the lowest, any doubt would still exist in the minds of the committee.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not wish the minister to take my request in that sense at all, I do not dispute his word. But I think it is fair that we should have this information. It has been shown in this House that the lowest tender has not always been accepted.

Mr. EMMERSON. I should be sorry if that were the case. If the lowest tender had not been accepted in this case, then I think it would be desirable for the minister to come prepared with a detailed statement showing why the lowest tender was not accepted. But I fail to see why it is necessary to bring forward voluminous information to show why the lowest tender was accepted. Tenders were publicly asked, a certain number were received, and the department accepted the lowest.

Mr. J. D. REID. In items of this kind it is generally expected that the minister will have the names of the tenderers and the amount. Here is a vote for $10,000, and the minister says he has no information whatever as to who the tenderers were and the amounts, and he asks us to vote it blind.

Mr. EMMERSON. If my hon. friend will allow the item to go through I will furnish him with a statement in the morning. I agree with him that the information should be furnished.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Sometimes these promises are not very well fulfilled after the item goes through. The hon. gentleman will be good enough to see that the information is produced. There is nothing to spur a minister's memory after the item has gone through.

Mr. EMMERSON. That has not occurred in connection with my estimates.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not speaking of the present minister, I am speaking of all ministers. They do not take so much interest in getting the information about an item once it has passed. Therefore, if this item is passed we will expect that full information to-morrow morning without fail.

Mr. EMMERSON. I will bring it to-morrow morning without fail.

Lachine canal—lock gates, $30,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This amount is required to build four new lock gates, they were to have been completed before the 30th of June, 1904. This is a supplementary vote. They are being built by employees of the department under the direction of the superintendent.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does this come under the head of repairs ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is for repairs, it is not a capital expenditure. These gates are for locks 1 and 2, which are being rebuilt.

Chambly canal—to complete waste weir at electric power house, $2,500.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is for a waste weir at the electric power house. The present weir is a wooden structure built twenty years ago. It is proposed to make one of concrete. Most of the materials are on hand having been purchased out of the appropriation voted last year for this work and another weir at Ste. Therese island. When the present one is completed it will only leave a couple of wooden weirs on the canal. It is the intention to build them of concrete entirely.

Mr. MONK. Has the government a power-house there ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. MONK. This is in connection with a government owned power-house and has no reference to any electrical power company there ?

Mr. EMMERSON. None whatever.

Chambly canal—damage by flooding, $1,736.

Mr. MONK. In connection with this item I would like to ask the hon. minister who are the parties to be indemnified and what is the amount to be given to each ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The award was made by Marcelin Robert. This was for damages caused by the overflowing of a culvert under the canal. The persons to whom damages have been awarded, and the amounts are as follows :

Francis Xavier Gervais	$100
C. W. Coupal	50
Joseph Dupois, père	200
Octave Poirier	200
Julien Audette	25
J. B. Many	300
Lewis Dupuis	350
Jean Baptiste Sapaline, dit Gaboriau	310
Leonie Chartier	40
Edward Chartier	400
Marcelin Robert (valuator)	61

Mr. MONK. Is this amount intended to cover all the damages caused by flooding ?

Mr. EMMERSON. All the damages caused by flooding from the culvert under the canal.

Mr. MONK. Has this sum any reference whatever to damages caused by flooding by the building of a dam there for the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No. Two items stood over in regard to which there will be no discussion but in regard to which some information was wanted and while I have it here possibly there will be no objection to them.

Mr. TAYLOR. Bring it down to-morrow.

Mr. EMMERSON. There are only these two items, and if there is to be any discussion I certainly will accede to the hon. gentleman's request.

Mr. TAYLOR. What are they ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There is item 27 :

Lachine canal—electric generator, electric cable and shafting, $5,000.

Mr TAYLOR. Carried.

Mr. EMMERSON. Then, there is the item :

Lachine canal—enlargement and improvement, $24,000.

I want to take that out of the estimates for 1903-4 because it will be found in the supplementary estimates for the current year. I therefore beg to move that the item be struck out.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. EMMERSON. The next item is :

Lachine canal—construction and equipment (revote), $62,000.

I beg to move to reduce that item from $62,000 to $57,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is it for ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This is to provide for the construction of workshops at Cascades Point. The work is under contract and was completed in June, 1904. It is also to pay the balance due on the final estimates of R. McDonald and of the Canadian General Electric Company under their contracts. The whole amount is $62,000 but as there are only $57,000 of it paid out of the 1903-4 appropriation we are asking for that sum to be voted and the balance of $5,000 will be provided for in the supplementary estimates for the current year.

Motion agreed to.

Soulanges canal—land and land damages, $650.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is to indemnify landowners for past damages for land taken at Bissonette's Gully. There are $3,000 in the main estimates for widening and deepening this gully and there will be no further damage by flooding.

Cornwall canal—strengthening and protecting north bank, &c., $5,600.

Mr. EMMERSON. I beg to move to reduce that item to $2,600.

Mr. LENNOX. That had better stand.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is by arrangement.

Mr. LENNOX. I understood that the Cornwall canal item in the main estimates stood. Is that correct ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No. It was rearranged that those items were to be passed through in order to expedite the business of the House, and that the discusssion would arise on the supplementary estimates.

Mr. LENNOX. I have been here most of the time, and I have heard nothing of the kind.

Mr. EMMERSON. It was this evening ; my hon. friend could not have been in the House.

Mr. LENNOX. With whom was the arrangement made ? There are certain members who have charge of that matter and it was very distinctly understood that the Cornwall canal item was to stand for discusion of the Davis contract.

Mr. EMMERSON. So it does.

Mr. LENNOX: It should not have been passed to-night.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is not passed.

Mr. LENNOX. There is confusion somewhere.

Mr. EMMERSON. The understanding was that there should be an opportunity for the discussion of that contract, and in the Supplementaries for this year there will be found a further amount and the discussion may be had upon it.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have been here all evening and I did not hear of any such bargain.

Mr. EMMERSON. I said that the two items, the Cornwall canal and the Galops Rapids, were to pass with the consent of hon. members and that the discussion which was desired in connection with the Davis contract and also upon the contracts in connection with the Galops Rapids should take place under the supplementary items referring to those two canals.

Mr. LENNOX. We can shorten this matter easily. It was distinctly understood the other day when the matter was partly discussed by the Minister of Justice that this item would stand in order to get certain papers and unless the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) or myself had made an arrangement it should not have been passed. We have charge of this matter and we do not propose that the main item for the Cornwall canal shall pass until after that item is discussed. We have our own reasons for not wishing it to depend on supplementaries and I would ask to have that item considered as standing over as arranged the other day.

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. leader of the opposition was in the House when the matter was talked over and I made the statement I am now making. Of course if there is any objection I want to be reasonable.

Mr. LENNOX. It was understood before the hon. the leader of the opposition left to-night that we had come to the end of the day's work and I think it is well to carry out our understanding of the matter. The item should certainly stand.

Mr. EMMERSON. This item of the Cornwall canal ?

Mr. LENNOX. This whole thing.

Mr. EMMERSON. The other was passed.

Mr. LENNOX. It should not have been passed.

Mr. EMMERSON. If an hon. member is out of the House he cannot come back and complain of what has been done. I do not think that is treating the House fairly.

Mr. LENNOX. I suppose my hon. friend understands that a member cannot always be in the House. In the absence of those who were known to have charge of this matter this item should not have been passed, and if it has been passed by mistake it should be reopened now.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister will remember that the hon. leader of the opposition was not in the House when the item passed. He came in just as we finished the discussion of the Galops, and the discussion was that if we allowed that item to go through we could discuss it on the supplementaries to-morrow.

Mr. EMMERSON. They were coupled together in my remarks. My hon. friend knows that all the papers he asked for were brought down. Very recently he made a request for some other papers and they are being prepared and will be ready for him in the morning.

Mr. LENNOX. Some papers which were not on the file but were referred to were asked for by us, and this morning when we came to look over them we found that certain papers were not included.

Mr. EMMERSON. Perhaps we might go to the next item.

Mr. WILSON. I think it is an open violation of the understanding reached the other day. It was well understood that this whole item should stand and that there should be a regular discussion.

Mr. EMMERSON. We cannot allow the one to stand that has passed already.

Mr. LENNOX. The one that has been passed accidentally should be re-opened.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friends' intention was to have a discussion might I suggest that we have an opportunity for that in the item of the later supplementaries touching the Cornwall canal. If the intention is to have a motion to strike out the item I realize that my suggestion would not meet his view.

Mr. LENNOX. It does not meet my view because in the discussion of the Davis contract we should be absolutely at large and at liberty to take whatever course we choose. Of course I am now speaking subject to whatever decision the leader of the opposition who I am glad to see has entered the chamber, may take and I shall be glad to concur in any suggestion he makes, but I myself think that we should be left absolutely at large in regard to that item and not confined to any particular course.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The item should not have been proposed at all until the papers were printed and furnished to the House. A great many demands were made to the House that the papers should be brought down.

Mr. EMMERSON. If there is any misunderstanding, I am perfectly willing that it should be left over.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister suggested that the file was an enormous file, that it would be a great expense and waste of time to print all the papers, and he asked me to name three gentlemen to look over them. I did so, and these gentlemen spent a good deal of time going over the papers, collecting at least a few of them to be printed. I suppose they are being printed now. I suppose that it was by inadvertence that the item was passed, and I think it should be re-opened.

Mr. EMMERSON. I knew it was the desire to have these papers; and, in order to expedite the business, I made the suggestion that these items of the main estimates be allowed to go through, and that the discussion would come up under the supplementary estimates of this year, which contain an item relating to the Cornwall canal. If there has been any misunderstanding, I am willing to let the item relating to the Cornwall canal stand.

Mr. J. D. REID. We might as well let the other stand also, because I intend to divide the House on the Galops Rapids item.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend will have an opportunity to divide the House on the other item.

Mr. J. D. REID. I will let the item go through, but I wish to point out that it is an item which the Minister of Railways and Canals is trying to press through without giving due justice to the House.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am sorry my hon. friend is so uncharitable. My suggestion was only with a view of expediting business, not with the view of cutting off any discussion, or to prevent my hon. friend from saying what he pleases with respect to it. I move that item 93 in the main estimates—Cornwall canal, enlargement, $26,000—be reconsidered.

Motion agreed to.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the business for to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of Justice will take up the Railway Bill, after which we will resume supply, with the estimates of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, July 26, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

TOBACCO INDUSTRY.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Mr. Speaker, I beg to move the motion of which I gave notice yesterday:

That the report of Judge McTavish on the tobacco industry and the evidence taken by him and all documents filed, be printed forthwith, and that rule 99 be suspended for that purpose.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no objection to this motion. I may inform my hon. friend that the order has been given to have the papers printed. My hon. friend refers to the documents filed, I understood that he wanted yesterday to have the evidence printed also.

Mr. MONK. The motion includes the evidence.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The evidence is very voluminous, and the printing will involve a good deal of expense. It would make quite a pile if placed on the table. At all events I have no objection to the motion.

Mr. MONK. I do not think it is possible to appreciate the report without the evidence.

Motion agreed to.

DUNDONALD FAREWELL.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker, might I ask the government if it is their intention when the House rises at six o'clock to-night to allow it to remain adjourned until nine o'clock. I understand that a very distinguished gentleman, who occupied a prominent position in the life of the empire is about to leave our country and I am sure that both sides of the House would like an opportunity to bid him farewell. I refer to Lord Dundonald.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We are now in the fifth month of the session and I think the best way for us to serve the country now is to attend to our business here.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—HON. WM. ROSS—DENNIS EAGAN LETTER.

Hon. WM. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I would ask the indulgence of the House while I make a personal explanation in connection with the charge that was made against me by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain). The hon. member read from the Journals of the House and he had my denial before him when he made the charge. I am not going to read the whole of that denial. I said that I was in a position to give the strongest and most emphatic denial the English language would enable me to do. I shall not, however, trouble the House with the whole of my personal denial which I made thirty years ago in this House. The hon. gentleman had my denial before him on the same page from which he read and we know what is thought of the man who conceals the truth. The same charge was made against me in a Tory paper in the year 1878 in the island of Cape Breton and I replied to it, also in a Conservative paper, as follows :

I did not think that out of some self respect, the old infamous charge that I wrote the 'Dennis Eagan letter' would be repeated, particularly as the most learned of the proprietors of the 'Advocate' stated, 'we know now that Mr. Ross did not write the Dennis Eagan letter.' A more dishonest and disgraceful accusation was never made by one man against another. I stated in my place in parliament, as I now repeat in the strongest and most emphatic language, that it is possible for me to use, that I never by pen, pencil, or by any act of mine wrote the said letter, and that I never saw it. I was promised that it should be placed in my hands, but that written promise was never fulfilled, but thinking it would, I had copies of it lithographed in pencil and ink as if written by me, so that they could be compared with the original, and I now send you the said copies and ask the editor of the 'Advocate' if he has any regard for honest and truthful inquiry to compare it with the real letter which he still unjustly repeats was written by me. Why was this letter never produced in parliament and shown to those who are familiar with my writing ? In Victoria Dominion officials wandered about canvassing against me, and though asked, I never would so far forget my position as to write or use anything against them, and it would be folly to imagine that I would have followed any other course in Cape Breton. When the statement was made in parliament that I wrote the said letter, I telegraphed to North Sydney for information, and received the following reply from John Vooght, Esq. : 'You are at liberty to state in your place in parliament that I can prove that you did not write the Dennis Eagan letter.' I therefore, hurl back this vile slander, to the source from which it emanated, as the most unfounded and false accusation that it was possible to be made against me. If the editor of the 'Advocate' could be moved to that sense of honour that should characterize noble minded men, instead of reiterating this slander, he will express his regret that he was entrapped and seduced to write what he must now know, was pure and unfounded.

The editor of the paper also then a warm Conservative, wrote the following :

In the spirit of fair-play that has always characterized our paper, we have published Hon. William Ross's letter knowing that many of his friends in Victoria are our friends and subscribers. It is also due to Mr. Ross that we state that we have full and ample proof that the 'Dennis Eagan' letter, of which such public use was made, was not written by him. A regard for truth and justice compels us to make this fact known to our readers, were it necessary we could here write the name of the author of said letter, having the pleasure of seeing him almost every day. Nothing can indeed be gained by this unfair abuse of one who has retired from public life, and who has left a record behind him in Victoria and Cape Breton, for honour, justice, and integrity in all his public career, which it would be well that others of greater sound and pretensions would follow and imitate.

Sir Charles Tupper made the same charge against me, and I wrote him giving an explanation. Sir Charles Tupper, acting as a man of honour and a gentleman, made this public announcement, which will be found on page 1077 of the 'Hansard' of 1887 :

I wish to make a very brief statement to the House before the orders of the day are called. The House will remember that, on a recent occasion, when the question arose of the policy of various governments in regard to the action of subordinate officers, I read a letter to the House which was handed to me by an hon. member who sits behind me, from a printed paper published at the time, which was some time ago, and which I had no idea was not authentic. It purports to be a letter written by Mr. Wm. Ross, then a member of this House, and at one time a member of the government ; and when I read that letter to the House I had entirely forgotten when it was originally produced, its authenticity was challenged. That statement was made by an hon. gentleman opposite, and I think it is right that I should say that I have received a letter from Mr. Ross calling my attention to the fact of his having denied the authenticity of the letter, and assuring me that the letter was a forgery. I take this opportunity of stating to the House that I accept that statement. I have not the slightest doubt of the accuracy of the statement made by this gentleman, who at this moment holds a very high and important office under the government. I have very great pleasure in making the fullest amend to the hon. gentleman, and in expressing my regret that I should have forgotten, what I now remember, that at the time the letter was produced, its authenticity was denied.

There is the statement of a gentleman. When I placed the matter before him, he gave a public denial of the charge he had read. I think that that is an example which should be followed by men who would like to be called gentlemen in this House, and who should regret having brought a false accusation against another hon. member. This false accusation was publicly denied by me thirty years ago and my denial was accepted, but to-day we find an hon. gentleman who would stoop to revive this old calumny. A more disgraceful accusation was never made in this House by one member against another. It was due to myself and my constituency, to my friends in Halifax and in this House—and I have friends on both sides ; so much so that gentlemen on the other side express to me their regret that this old disproved accusation should have been revived—it is due to all parties, I say, that I should take this occasion to again show up the falsity of this charge, and I trust we will hear no more of it.

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to say that as the hon. gentleman did not give me any notice that he would bring this matter up, I have nothing to say at present, but will answer him in the course of a few days if necessary.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). The hon. gentleman never gave me any notice when he brought that accusation against myself, and I am treating him just in the same way as he treated me.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903—AMENDMENT.

Hon. CHAS. FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice) moved third reading of Bill (No. 132) to amend the Railway Act of 1903.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I beg to move in amendment :

That the Bill be not now read the third time but be referred back to the committee of the whole House for the insertion of the following clause :—'Section 3 of the Railway Act is hereby amended by inserting after the word 'persons' in the first line, the words 'and express companies.''

I do not intend taking up the time of the House in going over this question again. What I would like now is to have a division, so that the public may ascertain what strength there is in the proposition I am making. This amendment will bring express companies under the jurisdiction of the Railway Act. These express companies are really owned by the railway companies and carry a large portion of freight. The freight they are carrying is increasing every day ; and, as the Railway Commission are given authority to prevent discrimination by railway companies, they should also be given authority to prevent discrimination by express companies. These companies have it in their power to discriminate and are doing it, and I wish to put them in the same position as the railways. This proposition has been endorsed by a considerable number of commercial bodies and a number of members of this House, and it is to test the matter that I make the amendment now in your hands. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, that if I only speak once, may I move other amendments, as I have other amendments to offer ?

Mr. SPEAKER. According as each amendment is disposed of other amendments may be moved.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Do I understand that it is the intention of my hon. friend to move several amendments to this Bill on the third reading ?

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes, but to different sections.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I doubt, Mr. Speaker, if he can move more than one amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman himself cannot move more than one amendment, but I understood him to ask whether other amendments could not be moved by other members.

Mr. MACLEAN. I have amendments dealing with different principles of the Bill, and should like to have them come before the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If one hon. member can move several amendments on the third reading, we went to a great deal of unnecessary trouble on the third reading of the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill. We had many amendments and had to distribute them among all the available members.

Mr. MACLEAN. Well, I will pass the amendments round.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) will appreciate the reason of the ruling that a member can speak only once on the same question. If he were allowed to move amendment after amendment there would be no end to some debates.

Mr. MACLEAN. I understand.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I quite agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) who has said that there is no good purpose to be served by prolonged discussion of these amendments as they come up. They were fully discussed last year when they were up in this House, and this session in the Railway Committee, to say nothing about the discussion in the committee of this House. So far as this particular amendment is concerned, I do not see why I should depart from the opinion I expressed before, when I said that it seemed to me there were doubts as to whether we had the power to deal with this amendment. My hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) will remember that when the question was up on a former occasion, the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) concurred with me in the opinion that there were these doubts. I believe that if we adopted this amendment. the Railway Act would have to be recast in many particulars to make it workable.

Mr. MACLEAN. Would the House object, Mr. Speaker, to the name of my hon. friend from Peel, (Mr. Blain) being substituted for mine as the mover of this amendment ?

Mr. SPEAKER. The amendment is in the hands of the House and the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Maclean's) name cannot be withdrawn except by unanimous consent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) was under a slight misapprehension as to the rules of the House, I think this concession ought to be made to him without question. Before the amendment is put, I desire to say that I agree absolutely with the view expressed by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) that it is proper that express companies should be controlled. The subject was discussed last year when the Railway Act went through. The express business, however, it must be noticed, is somewhat different from the ordinary railway business. The goods sent by express are collected sometimes from street to street or from house to house. The work involves cartage, and it also involves arrangements with steamship lines, stage lines and so on. It is a more complicated subject, so far as dealing with the rates is concerned, than the control over railway rates exercised by the Railway Commission. I have looked carefully over the Railway Act and I find that there is no provision of special importance with regard to express companies except section 278 which reads as follows :

> Every company which grants any facilities for the carriage of goods by express to any incorporated express company or person, shall grant equal facilities, on equal terms and conditions, to any other incorporated express company which demands the same.

That is designed, I suppose, for the purpose of preventing a monopoly by any company of the express business over any particular railway. It has been said in this House that that section has not fulfilled the purpose for which it was designed. I have been referred to litigation which was instituted for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this section before the present Railway Commission was established. So far as my opinion is concerned, I should think that that section is capable of being enforced. Our commission has power of enforcement of that section differing somewhat from the powers of similar tribunals in the United States of America. Of course, it would be some relief to establish competition, if competition be possible. I have heard it stated by those who have studied the matter somewhat that it is not very easy, upon a single line of railway to have competing express companies. If that be so, and if, as a matter of practice, the purpose of section 278 cannot be carried out, that affords all the more reason why there should be in Canada some effective control of the rates charged by express companies. I believe that the express rates in this country, in many departments of business at least, have been very materially reduced within the last eight or ten years. I have been so informed by those who are in a position to know, and I believe the statement is correct. The express companies are doing a very large and very important work. I was surprised, on making some investigations into the question to learn how large the amount of traffic carried by the express companies has become. But that is a further reason why there should be control of rates. On looking over the statute, I concur in the view expressed by the Minister of Justice that to merely insert the words 'express companies' as proposed by the amendment of my hon. friend, would not only result in uncertainty and confusion, but would probably render the Act absolutely ineffective so far as any attempt to control the express companies is concerned. Therefore, my position with regard to the matter is this : I believe in the control of rates of the express companies. I recognize the fact that control must come, and that it ought to come at the earliest possible date, but I do not believe that it can be attained by the insertion of two words in this Bill. While I sympathize with the motive of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) and am absolutely in favour of some control being exercised upon the rates of express companies, I do not think that purpose can be effected in this way. I will be prepared, however, to support a bill with proper conditions, which, I hope, will be brought in for the purpose of exercising over the rates of express companies a control similar to that which at present is exercised by the board of railway commissioners upon the rates of railway companies. It is for that reason, and that alone, that I could not support the amendment of my hon. friend. I think it will be ineffective and will only end in confusion. At the same time, as I say, I absolutely sympathize with the motive which actuates him in proposing this amendment and I will be prepared to carry it into effect in the proper way.

Mr. WM. ROSS (South Ontario). I am heartily in sympathy with the proposal to put express companies under the control of the Railway Commission. I do not see why an off-shoot from the railway companies such as express companies, doing a business probably, of $2,000,000, as near as I can find out from the report of the Minister of Railways, should not come under the control of the Railway Commissioners. But, while I am heartily in sympathy with this idea, the matter has come up in such a way that it seems impossible for us, if we are well advised by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick), and the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) to vote for the motion now standing in the name of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain). I shall have to vote against it, considering that I am legally advised that it will be of no use. But my opinion is not changed. I am still heartily in favour of the control of express companies by the Railway Commission, and I hope that the government at an early day will bring in a measure to effect that change.

Mr. RICHARD BLAIN. As my name has been substituted for that of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) as mover of this amendment. I wish to say a few words. When this question was before the Committee of the Whole House a few days ago, I expressed myself as in accord with the principle of the amendment. I have not since changed my opinion ; I am still in favour of the motion that I propose to ask the House to vote upon. I am of opinion that the people of this country believe that the express companies should be controlled by the Railway Commission as the freight rates of railways are controlled by this commission. Hon. members, of course, are aware that a considerable proportion of the goods now consumed by the Canadian people, especially in the older provinces, are carried by express. In the central part of the province of Ontario the farmers are devoting themselves to the cultivation of such products as must find their way to the market in large centres by means of express carriage. The farmers in the immediate vicinities of the larger cities are almost compelled, these times, to send their products by express to the consumers. Indeed there are many farmers in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec the larger portion of whose products are carried by express to market. The House must remember that the farmers are particularly interested in this matter ; and while it has been said by the Minister of Justice that possibly this motion will not cover all that is required, and will not place the express companies under the control of the Railway Commission, yet the House must bear in mind that the government had distinct notice of this proposition one year ago. One year ago my hon. friend from East York brought this matter before the House, and called the attention of the Minister of Railways to the fact that it was desired that the express companies should come under the operation of the Railway Commission. I am of the opinion that the government since last year has had ample notice, and I think the people of Canada will consider it to be the duty of the government at this session of parliament to introduce such legislation as will place the express companies under the control of the Railway Commission. I shall support this amendment. If it does not measure up to the requirements of the people on this question, then I think it is the duty of the government, who have power to legislate, to substitute for this amendment, if the House so expresses its will, such legislation at this session as will bring the express companies under the control of the Railway Commission.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER. I wish to give my reason why I think this amendment ought to prevail. The objection of the Minister of Justice, as I understand it, is that this amendment alone will not cure the evil and provide the remedy that is sought for by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean). Now I will point out to the Minister of Justice that if this amendment prevails and the House goes into committee on the Railway Bill for the purpose of carrying out this object, the Minister of Justice can move as many amendments as he likes in order to give full effect to the amendment of the hon. member for East York. I shall vote for the amendment.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Blain).

Amendment negatived.

Mr. MACLEAN. The division that has just taken place is rather portentous. It may mean a new era in this country and it shows that at the present time the people are beginning to see where they are in regard to this new and progressive question. I now beg to move the following amendment :

That the said Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to committee of the whole with instructions to amend the same by the insertion of the following clause :—

4. Section 264 of the said Act is amended by adding thereto the following subsections :—'The tolls charged in any standard passenger tariff shall not exceed the following namely :—for all companies the gross earnings of whose passenger trains, as reported to the Minister of Railways, under the provisions of section 304 of this Act, equalled or exceeded the sum of $3,000 for each mile of road operated by the said company, two (2) cents per mile ; and for all companies, the earnings of whose passenger trains, reported as aforesaid, were over $2,000 and less than $3,000 per mile of the road operated by the said company, two and one-half (2½) cents per mile ; and for all companies whose earnings, reported as aforesaid, were less than $2,000 per mile of road operated by the said company, three (3) cents per mile.'

I have spoken several times already in the House on this question. The substance of this amendment is to make the law that prevails in Michigan apply to the railroads of Canada; it is a graded regulation of the passenger rate. Our Railway Act says that the railroad companies must have a standard passenger rate. I have tried to fix it here, and to explain the standard passenger rate. Our Railway Act says the companies shall file yearly their passenger tariffs. They have not done so, they never will do so until they are compelled by parliament, and until parliament assumes and discharges the duty of saying what the passenger rate is. I have had hundreds of communications from all portions of the country in favour of this proposition ; I am not going to take up the time of the House further than to read one of them, and to say where some of the others are from. This is from the riding of South Brant :

Brantford, May 6, 1904.

W. F. Maclean, Esq., M.P.

Dear Sir,—At a meeting of the South Brant Farmers' Association held at Burford on May 4th, it was moved by myself and seconded by W. H. Preston, M.P.P.,—

That in view of the recent application by the Michigan Central for a renewal of its lease of the Canada Southern, and of your proposal to incorporate in the new lease a clause providing that the Michigan Central Railway shall not charge a higher passenger rate on its Canadian section than on its Michigan, we, the South Brant Farmers' Association, do heartily endorse your proposition ; and that we send official letters to yourself, to the Premier, and to our representative, stating our position.

This motion was carried unanimously, and I have much pleasure in communicating it to you.

Yours very truly,
W. C. GOOD,
Sec.-Treas.

I have a similar letter from the Farmers' Association of the county of Haldimand, from Algoma, from South Huron, from West Simcoe—all these name their members and trust they will support the motion ; from East Kent, from North Wentworth, from East Lambton, from South Wellington, from Lennox, another from Kent, from the Ratepayers' Association of Toronto and a number of others. They are all to this effect, that parliament is the only body that can regulate a standard passenger rate, that it ought to be defined, that it is in the interest of the public that it should be defined, and that wherever a passenger rate has been defined by parliament or by a legislature lower passenger rates have resulted. Notwithstanding all that has been said in this House about the smallness of the law in Michigan and about the smallness of the law in the state of New York, the great fact is that the majority of the travel—again I assert it in this House without fear of contradiction—the majority of the travel in the state of New York and the majority of the travel in the state of Michigan by reason of the legislation there, is for 2 cents, and less than 2 cents. I say this, that in a number of states where they have advertised a thousand mile ticket for $20, which is 2 cents a mile, good results have come from it, and that the time has arrived when we must have a standard passenger rate fixed in this country. I assume to fix it by this amendment, and fix it as fairly as can be under the circumstances.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the motion is put I desire to offer a few observations in regard to it. I thought that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) was going to speak. I yield to no one in appreciating the importance of reasonable passenger rates in this country but I think it is undesirable that we should pass any legislation which might result in the postponement for an indefinite period of what we would regard as reasonable passenger rates. The motion of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) provides that :

The tolls charged in any standard passenger tariff shall not exceed the following, namely :—for all companies the gross earnings of whose passenger trains, as reported to the Minister of Railways, under the provisions of section 304 of this Act, equalled or exceeded the sum of $3,000 for each mile of road operated by the said company, two (2) cents per mile ; and for all companies, the earnings of whose passenger trains, reported as aforesaid, were over $2,000 and less than $3,000 per mile of the road operated by the said company, two and one-half (2½) cents per mile ; and for all companies whose earnings, reported as aforesaid, were less than $2,000 per mile of road operated by the said company, three (3) cents per mile.

The basis of that legislation, as I understand it, is to be found in certain legislation of the state of Michigan which legislation, I am informed, does not apply to the whole state of Michigan. It applies to only a portion of the state of Michigan. In order that we should go to the state of Michigan for the purpose of establishing the basis of our railway legislation in Canada we must first be absolutely certain that the conditions in the state of Michigan and in Canada are precisely the same. I have not heard up to the present time anything which would convince me of that. The state of Michigan contains a little less than 7,000 miles of railway, while the Dominion of Canada, I suppose thirty times as large, contains something less than 19,000 miles of railway. The state of Michigan is populated very much more densely than the Dominion of Canada as a whole. Unless I am convinced by a better argument than that which I have heard that the conditions in the state of Michigan are exactly the same as they are in Canada, and I do not believe they are, I do not propose to go to the state of Michigan to find out what sort of legislation we should pass in regard to this subject. If we pass this statute the Railway Commission of Canada will properly consider it binding upon them and for that reason they will for all time to come govern themselves by it and thus they will be unable to give us a two-cent rate in many parts of the country where the conditions provided for by this amendment do not prevail and for many years are not likely to exist. It seems to me much more probable that this amendment will retard the establishment of reasonable railway rates in this country, as a whole, than that it will improve our opportunities in that regard.

I do not know whether those who promote this legislation have investigated all the conditions in the state of Michigan. Has any hon. member of this House, for example, investigated the remuneration of railways in Canada as compared with the remuneration of railways in the state of Michigan for the carriage of the mails ? I suppose that is a fairly important subject to consider. In the state of Michigan with less than 7,000 miles of railway more than $1,000,000 are paid every year for the carriage of the mails. In the Dominion of Canada with railways extending over an enormous area and totalling 19,000 miles, we pay only $400,000 more for the carriage of the mails, namely, $1,413,835. These are matters which are proper to be considered before we undertake to apply the Michigan legislation to the Dominion of Canada.

But, the most important objection I have to this amendment is that within six months after we have appointed a tribunal for the purpose of dealing with this very subject and before we have had the slightest experience of the public benefit which would result from the work of that tribunal we propose to take out of the hands of the tribunal the very work that parliament has entrusted to it.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. Infanticide.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes. I do not think that is good legislation. I should think that parliament, after having committed this whole subject to the Railway Commission by legislation, after having conferred upon that commission as large powers as were ever conferred on any similar body, should, within six months and before any opportunity has been given to ascertain the benefits to be derived from the commission, proceed to take from that commission the very work which was entrusted to it. If we propose to deal with passenger rates why not deal with freight rates in this way ? Freight rates are more important to the people of this country than passenger rates. Any farmer in this country who spends $20 in the course of the year in passenger rates will perhaps pay $200 in freight rates so that the all important question is rather freight rates than passenger rates. Besides, as has been pointed out in this House and I think in the committee, passenger rates are to a large extent ameliorated by the fact that we have excursions from time to time, cheap rates, which are taken advantage of by the people of the country, whereas there are no cheap excursion freight rates in this country. I think that if parliament were to proceed to deal with this question of passenger rates in this way it would be stultifying itself unless it proceeded at the same time to abolish the whole Railway Commission and to deal also with the subject of freight rates. If this motion means anything it means that the legislation which we passed last year was of no avail.

Now, what effect would this legislation have if applied in Canada at the present time ? The Canadian Northern Railway has earnings of $315 per mile. How long will it be before we get a passenger rate of two cents on the Canadian Northern ? The earnings of that railway must increase from $315 per mile to $3,000 per mile before we shall get a two-cent rate on the Canadian Northern.

Mr. MACLEAN. We have a three-cent rate on it now by the legislation of last year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The object is to get a two-cent rate upon it and this legislation will produce a two-cent rate on the Canadian Northern when the passenger earnings have increased ten times what they are at the present time.

Mr. MACLEAN. I grant you that ; but it will get you a two-cent passenger rate on the Grand Trunk Railway to-morrow.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Canada Atlantic Railway earns $670 per mile. We will get a two-cent rate on the Canada Atlantic when its earnings have increased to five times what they are at present. That does not seem to promise any very early relief on that railway. The Canadian Pacific Railway earns $1,460 per mile. We will get a two-cent rate by this legislation when the passenger earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway have something more than doubled. Is that very likely to occur within the next ten years ? It does not seem to me that the legislation suggested by my hon. friend, and I appreciate and sympathize with the motives which have led him to propose it, is likely to result in a very great amelioration of passenger rates in the early future.

Mr. MACLEAN. What about the Grand Trunk ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Grand Trunk earns $2,200 per mile and under that the Grand Trunk would be entitled to charge two and a half cents per mile.

Mr. MACLEAN. To-morrow.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. To-morrow, and we have legislation at the present time on the statute-book which obliges the Grand Trunk to charge only two cents per mile and I have heard my hon. friend argue that in this House.

Mr. MACLEAN. For third-class passengers.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, for third-class passengers, but inasmuch as third-class passenger traffic is abolished in this country, and that practically there is very little distinction between first-class and second-class, it would not seem that the legislation existing on the statute-book has had very much influence upon the Grand Trunk.

I can see what this legislation would result in if applied to a great railway system like the Grand Trunk. It would simply result in the Grand Trunk Railway putting under separate corporations a number of branches which are now included in its general system and it would impose on the people in remote and sparsely settled portions of the country a higher railway tariff than they are subjected to at the present time. That seems to be the propable result. At the present time you have a great system, you have eight or ten or twelve roads which were formerly operated by eight or ten or twelve companies, operated by one company, and under the management of one company—the Grand Trunk Railway system. But if legislation of this kind were put on the statute-books, the Grand Trunk Railway would naturally retain under the management of the parent company only those main lines whose earnings would bring them under the terms of this statute, and it no doubt would seek to place under separate corporate management the subsidiary companies running through sparsely settled portions of the country, because the earnings on these portions of the road would not come within the operation of this statute. It seems to me that this would be the result of legislation of this kind. Thus sparsely settled districts would pay higher railway rates.

But why should we seek in this parliament to deal with this matter in this way when we have in the Railway Commission of Canada the most ample powers that any tribunal ever possessed for dealing with it. Let us look at some of those powers and inquire if there is any reason why we should pass by the Railway Commission. Let me say that the Railway Commission of Canada differs in important respects from many similar tribunals. I supported the idea of a Railway Commission before a measure for its creation was ever submitted to parliament; I supported it for what I thought were good reasons. The Act we have passed confers on the Railway Commission power not only to fix rates, but to enforce them, and in that very important respect it differs from the Interstate Commerce Commission, and from other tribunals in the United States, very few of which have any power of enforcement. For instance, the question of rates is fought out before the Interstate Commerce Commission, but you have to go to the courts to enforce the decision and there the decision of the Interstate Commission is found not to be binding. A railway corporation is able to fight out the whole question again in the courts, and it is only by obtaining the judgment of the courts that eventually you obtain a declaration against the rates disallowed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. In section 251 of our Railway Act there is this provision :

> The company may from time to time prepare and issue tariffs of the tolls to be charged as hereinafter provided, for all traffic carried by the company upon the railway.

The word 'traffic' includes passengers as well as freight.

Section 251, clause 2 says :

> All such by-laws shall be submitted to and approved by the board.

These tariffs can thus have no effect whatever until approved of by the board. Section 252 says :

> Such tolls may be either for the whole or for any particular portions of the railway ; but all such tolls shall always under substantially similar circumstances and conditions be charged equally to all persons, and at the same rate.

Section 252, subsection 3 says :

> No tolls shall be charged which unjustly discriminate between different localities.

Section 257 says :

> The board may disallow any tariff, or any portion thereof which it considers to be unjust or unreasonable, or contrary to any of the provisions of this Act, and may require the company, within a prescribed time, to substitute a tariff satisfactory to the board in lieu thereof, or may prescribe other tolls in lieu of the tolls so disallowed, and may designate the date at which any tariff shall come into force.

Section 263 says :

The tariff of tolls which the company shall be authorized to issue under this Act for the carriage of passengers between points on the railway shall be divided into two cases, namely :

The maximum mileage tariff, herein referred to as standard passenger tariff ;

And reduced passenger tariffs, herein referred to as special passenger tariffs.

2. The standard passenger tariff shall specify the maximum mileage tolls to be charged for passengers for all distances covered by the company's railway ; such distances may be expressed in like manner as provided herein in respect of standard freight tariffs.

3. Special passenger tariffs shall specify the toll or tolls to be charged by the company for passengers in every case where such tolls are lower than the tolls specified in the company's standard passenger tariff.

Section 264 says :

A standard passenger tariff shall be filed, approved and published in the same manner as required by this Act in the case of a freight standard tariff.

Section 265 says :

All special passenger tariffs shall be filed by the company with the board, and published as required by section 274, three days before any such tariff is intended to take effect.

Section 274 provides that the company shall at each station deposit and keep on file at a convenient place for the inspection of the public its standard and special passenger tariffs and freight tariffs of both classes. It shall also, in some public place in its stations give notice as to where its tariffs can be inspected.

Therefore you have under this statute complete and ample provisions for dealing not only with freight rates, but with passenger rates. You have a commission appointed for that purpose. You have a commission which has powers of investigation which are not possessed by this parliament, and I cannot at the present time see any good reason why that duty which parliament in its wisdom has committed to the Railway Commission only last year, should be taken away from it, and that we should proceed to deal with a subject which certainly we cannot investigate as fully or as carefully as can that tribunal. If we are to accept this amendment, then it seems to me that it was very unwise to undertake an annual expenditure of $100,000 or $150,000 for the purpose of maintaining this commission. We have thought it wise to entrust to the commission these duties, and if now we are able to take them upon ourselves, this expenditure of public money would be useless. I say that if you pass legislation such as is suggested by my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) it would in the first place give the railway companies an opportunity of demanding higher rates on freight ; in the second place it would give them an excuse for abolishing all excursion rates, and it might eventually result in a poorer service in districts where there is no competition. Moreover, it adopts the principle that rates shall be graded according to earnings, and therefore it must result in higher rates for sparsely settled districts where the earnings are smaller. Further, it might cause them to carry on their branch lines under separate corporate entities, so as to avoid bringing these branch lines under the terms of the proposed statute.

I believe in giving the railway commission an opportunity to demonstrate its usefulness. If it does not justify its existence by establishing reasonable passenger and freight rates in this country, it is because the personnel of the commission is not suitable, or because the powers which have been conferred upon it are not sufficient. I am prepared to support the administration in dealing with either of these defects should they become apparent. I do not understand that any such difficulty has arisen up to this time. Let us therefore give the Railway Commission an opportunity to know what it can do, and if from either of these causes, of which I have spoken, it does not do the necessary work, then let us reorganize the commission or amend the legislation.

In conclusion, it seems to me that the legislation to which my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) has directed the attention of the House might eventually result in comparatively low fares in thickly settled portions of the country, and in much higher fares in remote districts. That would be the natural tendency, if the principle of this legislation were insisted upon. In saying what I do, I trust I do not fail to appreciate the efforts which my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) is making in the public interest. I sympathize in the objects which he has in view. The only difference between us is, that I think, considering the legislation of last year, his objects can be best accomplished by the Railway Commission which we have appointed for that purpose. He thinks on the contrary, that it is wise, within certain limitations to take that work out of the hands of the Railway Commission and to establish a standard according to earnings, which, in his opinion, would have excellent results, but which does not present itself to me in that view. For these reasons which I have very briefly stated, I cannot support the amendment of my hon. friend from York (Mr. Maclean).

Mr. T. S. SPROULE. I supported the principle of this amendment some years ago in this House. I have had discussions with the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) regarding it, and I reached an understanding with him as to what principle I would support, and this amendment being in harmony with that principle I believe it my duty to support it. I wish for a few moments to refer to an argument made by the leader of the opposition that it would result in higher freight rates. Of course it might, there is no question about that. If the railroads did not find it paying, they might charge higher freight rates, but I am told, although I am not prepared to vouch for the correctness of the statement, that in Southern Michigan where the law applies, it has not resulted in higher freight rates and therefore, I would assume that that is not likely to happen here.

Then it was said that if this law is passed we might not have excursions. I again turn to Michigan for an example. I find that excursions there are as numerous as in Canada and yet, this law applies to the Southern part of Michigan, so I do not think that any fear is to be apprehended from that.

It is also said that it might result in portions of the railway system being put under a different management. I think that is not at all likely to happen. Because this only applies to a company whose passenger earnings reach $3,000 a mile, and in the remote portions of the country this amount would not be reached so that the law could not apply to them and there would be no necessity for putting such a section under a new management.

The next argument was that we should not copy Michigan in this unless everything there is on all fours with the conditions in Canada. We who live in Ontario adjoin the state of Michigan, and are back and forth among Michigan people very frequently and know the state well, always regard Michigan as being the same type of country as Ontario. We do not see much difference when we cross the border between the pursuits of the people and the conditions of life. The railroad operations are much the same and therefore I could not see any serious objection to following the example of Michigan.

One objection raised was that this measure applied only to a certain locality. In my judgment this provision was made simply for this reason, that the southern portion of Michigan is thickly settled, while the northern portion is still a comparatively new country and not thickly settled. To make it apply to the northern peninsula, a new section of country, was deemed improper owing to the comparatively light travel on the railways there. But I think it might well be left to apply to the whole country because when the earnings reach $3,000 a mile, it would be regarded as fair that the company should reduce its passenger rate to 2 cents a mile.

A word with regard to the question of whether we should introduce this law in view of the fact that the Railway Act was passed last session. To my mind that is a very strong argument against it, the strongest we have heard advanced, because the clauses of the Act which the leader of the opposition has cited seem to very amply cover the ground, and our Railway Commission has the substantial advantage over the Railway Commissions in the United States that whereas they must depend on public sentiment to compel the legislature or federal authority to enforce the law, in our Act we have embodied the authority to enforce the law. There is one difficulty in connection with the administration of the new Railway Act and that is that it applies only to railways under federal authority. It does not for instance, apply to government or provincial railways, but only to those under federal control. It may be said that if we pass such a law here, we could only enforce it upon the railways under our control. That of course is true, but if we enforce the law on railways under federal control I feel satisfied that under the principle of competition we would at a very early date induce other railways to adopt the same rate, and therefore, the principle would soon be of general application. The fact that by this law the principle would apply to government as well as to other railways might be some justification for the introduction of this measure now, but perhaps the main aim was to have the passenger rate under a fixed and determined law——

Mr. MACLEAN. As they have in England.

Mr. SPROULE——so that it would operate almost by an automatic process. We would know what the principle was and all we would have to do would be to look up the government returns and see if the earnings of a railway justified the reducing of the rate and when the earnings reached that amount the railways would be compelled to reduce the rate and the people would clamour for such a reduction. What we rather fear is that the Railway Commission is another court for the purpose of determining and deciding disputes between railway companies and individuals, corporations, localities, and other railway companies, and that it would be slow in its operation and difficult to move to bring about what the people desire, that is a speedy relief from the grievances under which they are labouring.

Mr. NAT. BOYD. I may say, Sir, that in Manitoba, as is very well known to the members of this House, the provincial government have control of the freight and passenger rates of the Canadian Northern Railway Company. They have that control, subject to an arrangement that until the rates are reduced to a certain figure if there should be any loss in the operation of the railway the province is not to bear that loss but when the freight rates come down to, I think, 10 cents a hundred, then, if the company should lose on the operation of the road the province is to bear any such loss. The provincial government have control of the passenger and freight rates and if this measure which is proposed by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) was to pass it would take away that control which we believe is essential and which now gives to the province the power of regulating the rates and at the same time protecting the people from having to meet any deficiency. On the other hand if this resolution was to come into force and any loss should accrue in the operation of the Canadian Northern the people of the province would suffer. As the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has remarked, the matter of freight rates is of a great deal more importance, so far as the farmers in Manitoba are concerned, than are the passenger rates, because the farmers are not the people who travel a great deal. It is the other people of the country who do the travelling and pay out the greater portion of the passenger receipts of the railways. But the farmers of Manitoba pay possibly an average of $150 to $200 in freight rates, which is of a great deal more importance to them than the question of passenger rates. I think that the same would apply to the whole farming community of Canada. If the farmers would stop to think about it, they would find that the legislation proposed is not in their interests but rather in the interests of the people of the cities and the commercial people.

Mr. MACLEAN. I have fifty letters here from farmers in favour of it.

Mr. BOYD. The farmers at times are misled, and I do not know any one better qualified sometimes to lead them astray than my hon. friend. I represent a farming community and am always ready to discuss anything with them and prepared to show them why I take any line, and I would be quite prepared to discuss this question with them. I say that the passenger traffic is a great deal more important to the commercial interests, and this resolution would be of greater benefit to the commercial people than to the farming communities. If the hon. gentleman would introduce something which would lower the rates of freight on the 2,000 or 3,000 bushels of wheat which the average farmer raises in Manitoba, he would be doing something more beneficial to them than he could possibly do by this proposition, which I would call 'a catch vote' if introduced by some people. The Canadian Pacific Railway, I understand, have an average passenger rate to-day under two cents a mile, so that I do not see of what benefit my hon. friend's resolution, if adopted, could be to anybody. As shown by the leader of the opposition, it would not apply to the Canadian Northern, the Canada Atlantic, the Canadian Pacific or the Grand Trunk Railway. What then is the use of it?

Mr. MACLEAN. Does the hon. gentleman say it will not apply to the Grand Trunk Railway? It would give a two and a half cents per mile rate and on the Michigan Central would give a two-cent rate to-morrow.

Mr. BOYD. I am speaking of the roads I am more familiar with. As far as the people of Canada as a whole are concerned, this would not be of any particular benefit to them. I am in favour of low passenger rates. I believe that if the railway companies would consult their own interests, it might be better for them to charge a lower rate and increase their traffic, but they seem to understand that question and they so regulate their rates that on the Canadian Pacific Railway the average is under two cents a mile. The hon. gentleman's resolution, if adopted, would interfere with the arrangements which the Manitoba government have made with the Canadian Northern and impose a burden on the people of that province which we ought not to do, and I am going to vote against the amendment.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Maclean.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT. I move that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that Section 193 of the said Act is amended by adding the following words:—'And such compensation shall be limited to the direct and immediate local damages actually suffered by reason of such construction, operation and maintenance by the railway company at such station or premises, and not from any cause, matter or business extending beyond the same.'

Reference to the Act will show that it is rather vague as it is. It provides that the compensation shall be such as the board deems just and expedient. Now, the words added here to the so-called telephone clause would make this plain and distinct. So much has already been said on the subject that I need not speak at length upon it.

Mr. SPEAKER. Shall the amendment be adopted?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not yet heard what the amendment is about.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I might explain that this amendment deals with the telephone question. The Bell Telephone Company has made contracts with the Grand Trunk, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian Northern, whereby independent telephones or municipal telephones are prohibited from entering the railway station. The law was amended last session so as to provide, according to the solemn pledge of the Minister of Railways of that time, that these railway companies should be compelled to give access to their stations to independent telephones on payment of actual damage. The Railway Commission has since held that in considering the damages caused by the admission of these independent telephones the destruction of the monopoly must be considered. The sum and substance of this amendment is that an independent telephone company may have access to railway stations at the actual cost of the intrusion regardless of any damages that may be sustained by the breaking of a monopoly or anything of that kind. The amendment is simply to make clear what the government promised last session, and therefore the government are bound to accept the amendment and incorporate it in the Act.

Mr. BOYD.

Hon. CHAS. FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). Though I think I am not in order, the question having been put, perhaps I may be pardoned if I take the same chance that my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) did. I cannot do better than repeat the undertaking I gave when the matter was under consideration in Committee of the Whole. I said I thought the amendment was premature, because the question whether the exclusive contract said to exist between the railway companies and the Bell Telephone Company is void as being in restraint of trade has not been formally decided by the Railway Commission; and I think that, so far as they have decided it, perhaps the subject is one that requires further consideration by the Supreme Court. The government has decided that, so far as we are concerned, the matter must go before the Supreme Court in order to have a final decision, so that we may know whether this contract is binding or not. When this is decided we shall be in a better position to know what steps are to be taken in order to give what was undoubtedly the intention of parliament—equal facilities to telephone companies in the use of railway stations.

Mr. SPROULE. What means have the government taken to get that decision? They leave it to private parties.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I said the government would take that means.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, the government will take the responsibility of getting a decision on the subject?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Lost on the same division.

Mr. MONK. No, Mr. Speaker; I object to it being lost on the same division. I was in favour of the previous amendment, but I am not prepared to vote for the present one.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the required number of members demand the yeas and nays, the record will be made; otherwise, I will declare it lost.
