18358

OFFICIAL REPORT

OF THE DEBATES

OF THE

HOUSE OF COMMONS

OF THE

DOMINION OF CANADA

FOURTH SESSION—NINTH PARLIAMENT

---

4 EDWARD VII., 1904

VOL. LXVII

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE SIXTH DAY OF JULY TO THE TWENTY-NINTH DAY OF JULY, INCLUSIVE

OTTAWA
PRINTED BY S. E. DAWSON, PRINTER TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY
1904

House of Commons Debates

FOURTH SESSION—NINTH PARLIAMENT

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, July 6, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

TREADGOLD CONCESSION.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). With the indulgence of the House, as I have to be away in a minute or two, I would like to call the attention of the House to a matter in regard to which my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) asked for information yesterday, that is in regard to the report of the Treadgold commission. The House was advised some time ago that the concessionaries had withdrawn and asked to be relieved of their contract and that the application had been granted by the government. Thereupon my colleague, the Secretary of State, advised Mr. Justice Britton of the fact and intimated there was no necessity of a report. Mr. Scott acting without consulting Council, and when the matter was brought to the attention of Council his action was not approved of. Mr. Justice Britton was advised immediately to consider the letter of Mr. Scott as unwritten and withdrawn, and therefore we expect a report from Mr. Justice Britton on the matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the right hon. Prime Minister any information to give the House as to the date when we may expect the report ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Judge Britton is being communicated with at the present time, and I will perhaps be able to tell my hon. friend to-morrow.

RESIGNATION OF LT.-COL. GREGORY—INQUIRY FOR PAPERS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the day are called, I would like to know when we may expect to have brought down the papers relating to the resignation of Lt.-Col. Gregory ? These were spoken of in the debate which took place last week in the House and it was then announced by the hon. minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) that there was no objection to bringing the papers down, and that they would be brought down at once.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will call the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Militia to this matter and have the hon. gentleman's question answered to-morrow.

PREFERENTIAL TARIFF.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to know whether or not it is the intention of the government to introduce legislation founded upon the resolution of the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) which passed this House unanimously about ten days ago ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I will call the attention of the government to the hon. gentleman's question, and will be able to give an answer to-morrow.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But the hon. gentleman is the government. I expected an answer from him.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I am a very humble member of the government.

SUPPLY—LETTER OF MR. W. T. R. PRESTON RE LORD DUNDONALD'S DISMISSAL.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair I would like to bring to the attention of the government a communication which appears in the London 'Times' of June 18, over the signature of Mr. W. T. R. Preston. I presume the gentleman is the Canadian Emigration agent at London. I would like to get some information from the government respecting this communication, whether the government approve of it, if their attention has been called to it, or whether they disapprove of it, and whether they think Mr. Preston is in the line of his duty as emigration agent of this country in the old country in addressing an ex parte, inaccurate, and therefore misleading statement to the English people through the columns of the London 'Times' respecting a matter upon which there is a wide divergence of opinion in this country. Mr. Preston is the servant of the people of Canada, and I would like to ascertain if the government think it is consistent with the discharge of his duty to the people of this country that he should be permitted to rush into print when he feels disposed to do so, and to make statements that are not in accordance with the facts as we understand them on this side of the House, and that will, in the light that this is the case, mislead the public as to the situation. Mr. Preston has made a statement respecting the differences between the government and Lord Dundonald, late General Officer Commanding, and in order that the House may be apprised of the nature of the communication I will read it with permission. It is found at page 8 of the London 'Times,' of Saturday, June 18, and is as follows :

IMPERIAL OFFICERS AND THE CANADIAN MILITIA.

To the Editor of the Times.

Sir,—So long as the discussion upon the recent difficulty between Lord Dundonald and the Canadian government was confined simply to newspaper editorials however unfair they may have been—

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Minister of the Interior). Will my hon. friend say what paper he is reading from.

Mr. CLARKE. The London 'Times,' of Saturday, June 18. I will send it over to the hon. gentleman.

IMPERIAL OFFICERS AND THE CANADIAN MILITIA.

Is the heading.

To the Editor of the Times.

Sir,—So long as the discussion upon the recent difficulty between Lord Dundonald and the Canadian government was confined simply to newspaper editorials, however unfair they may have been, I do not know that the circumstances altogether called for a reply.

But when I find correspondents in the columns of your journal, of a recent date, accepting as absolutely true various inferences which have been drawn by the public press respecting the administration of the Canadian militia, it occurred to me that a few lines from a Canadian might not be out of place.

I do not propose discussing at length the Dundonald affair, but desire to point out that the charges which are being made as to politics entering into the militia administration in Canada are based upon the refusal of the acting minister to accept Lord Dundonald's recommendation in one particular. And it now transpires that the gentleman whom Lord Dundonald recommended as major of the force was not even connected with the Canadian Militia. I am not going to suggest reasons which might have actuated Lord Dundonald in making this recommendation. Anything of that kind would be uncalled for. But in dealing with the facts of the case that circumstance stands out clear and distinct. I wonder how long the War Office in this country would hesitate about striking the name of a civilian off the list of recommendations by one of its officials under similar circumstances. I think I am safe in saying that it would be done in less time than it was done at Ottawa, and that writers to the press here would have waited for all the circumstances to be made known before charging the minister of the day with being actuated by political reasons.

However, that is outside of the case to which I desire to reply, i.e., Mr. Herbert's allegations in a letter to the 'Times' of the 17th inst., where he bewails with much grief the presence of political prejudice in connection with Canadian militia appointments. As a Canadian I have much pleasure in assuring him that his grief is expended upon a myth. He first builds up a case to suit himself and then proceeds to demolish it without first finding a case established and then arguing from that standpoint. The absolute truth is that the militia is one of the phases of life in Canada which both political parties have kept free from either political partiality or political prejudice. The administration of the militia forces in Canada by both political parties proves from time immemorial the truth of my statement. The discussions in parliament the criticisms which naturally take place under responsible government from time to time all go to prove that both political parties have refrained from introducing politics into the militia. The order of promotions is provided for by legislation and by regulations accepted by parliament, so that politics cannot fairly enter. And if further evidence was wanted of the general non-political character of the Canadian militia it is found in the fact that both political parties are represented in every phase of the citizen military life of Canada.

But the seriousness of the charge which is now made is that the present government are the principal sinners in this particular. To prove how unfair this allegation is one has only to refer to distribution of responsibilities in connection with the late war in South Africa and the Coronation ceremonies two years ago. The principal positions upon both of these occasions were in point of fact given by the government to political opponents. Apart from these particular cases instances without number can be given of a purely provincial or local aspect proving that the opponents of the government of the day have been the recipients of official preferment to as marked degree as government supporters.

But because government opponents in Canada choose to make charges at the present juncture of a broad general character, as is done also in this country, therefore the British public are asked to believe, without hearing the other side of the case, that these charges are absolutely true.

Your correspondent fears that this trouble between an imperial officer and the Canadian government is going to prove detrimental to the entire military system of Canada and that, because Lord Dundonald has taken a course which could only result in his dismissal, therefore the citizen militia of Canada is going to become utterly demoralized. Mr. Bron. Herbert may as well dispel his fears first as last. Canadians have a strong sense of the need of an efficient militia, and they will undoubtedly be able to bring the citizen soldiery of Canada to a high state of efficiency even if there is no imperial officer to give the government of the day the benefit of his experience.

The people of Canada upon this, as upon other subjects of federal jurisdiction, can safely be left to solve their own difficulties and it will be found that the genius of government has not altogether departed from the country. And it will also be revealed to ultra-loyal pessimists of the character of your correspondent that the British interests have not been imperilled, and that this incident has not dissolved a valuable link between the two countries. All Canadians ask is that Mr. Bron. Herbert, and those like him, will be fair to the statesmen of the Dominion, and not allow the ex parte statements of political opponents or allegations founded upon imperfect knowledge of the circumstances to prejudice their interest.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd) W. T. R. PRESTON.

11 and 12 Charing Cross, S.W., June 17.

I take it that there can be no doubt at all that the writer of this communication is the Canadian emigration agent at London. I would like to ascertain if the government think that this gentleman is in the line of his duty in sending communications of this kind to the public press ? Has any remonstrance been sent to Mr. Preston regarding this communication ? I would also like to know, Mr. Speaker, if Canada has a high commissioner in London, whether it would not be more in accord with the fitness of things —if any injustice has been done to any interest in Canada by the publication of imperfect reports in the English newspapers— that it should devolve on the High Commissioner, rather than on the Canadian emigration agent, to set the English public right. I recognize Mr. Preston's right to entertain opinions on all these subjects; but in view of all circumstances I challenge his right as a servant of the people of Canada to rush into print with a statement of this kind. Mr. Preston was probably not more fully informed when he wrote this communication than was the gentleman whose communication he took exception to. We should have some declaration from the government as to the policy it intends to pursue respecting matters of this kind. Is it within the line of Mr. Preston's duty to write such communications and have them published? Do the government approve of his action? If they do not approve of it, have they disapproved of it; and what means have they taken to express their disapproval ? Has any communication passed between the government and Lord Strathcona about this matter ? These are questions which the government may fairly be required to answer. We ought to know what their policy is. If an official in the employment of the government writes anything to the public press derogatory to the policy of the government, his official head is immediately taken off. Are we to understand that officials, paid servants of the people, have immunity from official frowns if they fawn upon the government, their masters or paymasters for the time being ? Are they at liberty to address communications to the press here or in the old land eulogizing the action of the government, and are other officials debarred from expressing opinions contrary to those entertained by the government ? I do not desire to take up the time of the House, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to have an expression of opinion from the government as to what they think of Mr. Preston's communication and what they intend to do about it ?

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Minister of the Interior). I was not aware until yesterday that the official in question had written a letter to the London 'Times,' and I only became aware of it then through a reference which I noticed in one of the Ottawa papers. I gave instructions to one of my officials to look up the authentic report of the letter and to bring it to me yesterday, but I did not have time to examine it, and have not had time to examine it yet. Therefore, neither myself nor any member of the government has any definite knowledge of the contents of the letter, except such as we received this morning through hearing the hon. gentleman read it. All I can say is : that subject is one that we will have to give our consideration to, and at the present time I am not prepared to express any opinion about it or to say anything further. So soon as the government has been able to give the subject consideration we will be able to announce the conclusion at which we have arrived.

Mr. CLARKE. Under the circumstances, I presume I will be at liberty to bring this matter again before the attention of the government within the next two or three days ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria). I presume that this matter is in the Department of the Minister of the Interior, and in order that it may be still further considered by him and by the government, I may state that it is a well known fact that not only Mr. Preston but others of the officers of this government in the old country are in the habit of writing articles to the English press condemning the policy of the opposition here, and tooting and palavering the policy and the members of the administration. This country voted the sum of $15,000 last year to help what was termed the Canadian Associated Press Bureau, or some such institution. Then these same gentlemen had these manufactured toots of their own chiefs for the time being telegraphed all over the world as the expressions of the British public, quoting from some remote north of England, or Scotch or Welsh journal the opinion of the editor upon the magnificence and grandeur of some of these gentlemen. I shall give you a sample of it.

Mr. SIFTON. Will my hon. friend permit me ? Is he referring to anything written by an official of the government, or is he referring to the reports prepared by the agents of the Associated Press ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am referring first to the editorials or comments published in the English papers as coming from the English editors themselves, but in reality written for them by these tooters. I am going to give the House a sample of these editorials. These comments, so-called original editorial comments, in the papers are telegraphed back to Canada and all over this country as the opinions of the great English public. Perhaps the hon. minister (Mr. Sifton) does not know how the thing is run and is a stranger to the way the thing is managed. We will give him details of it, and perhaps, if he will consult the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), he will get a pointer or two.

Now, Sir, I have here one of this class of articles undoubtedly written by an official of this government. I am not saying that he does it during his office hours, or he has not a perfect right to express his views if he can get paid for it, and there may be no great harm in that. This editorial is undoubtedly written by one of the agents of the Minister of Agriculture and published all over as the opinion of the great British public, of that hon. gentleman. Here it is. I may say that it is headed 'The World's Greatest Farmer.'

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. He might have added 'The New Minister of Militia.' The editorial reads :

Canada confidently looks forward to being at no distant date the granary of the empire, and even now the man who is her Minister of Agriculture may be described with scarcely any exaggeration as the greatest farmer of the world.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. Did I understand the hon. gentleman——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was going to ask hon. gentleman if he said the greatest farmer or the greatest failure ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am not expressing my own views, I am simply reading from the extract.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Do not work off these minstrel jokes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES—(reading) :

This is especially the case with regard to the present Minister of Agriculture, the Hon. Sydney Fisher, whose name is prominently before the public in connection with Lord Dundonald and the Dominion militia.

Mr. BENNETT. The best advertisement he ever had.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES—(reading) :

He is a practical farmer himself.

I do not see my hon. friend from Compton (Mr. Pope) here, or he would query that assertion.

On a considerable scale, his fine property, Alva Farm, which is situated in the eastern townships of the province of Quebec, being one of the best in the Dominion.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It is a little early in the morning for the hon. gentlemen to be so filled with enthusiasm.

Mr. GALLIHER. We cannot help it, you are so nice and genial.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If it occurred at the usual hour in the evening, we would not be surprised. But at this early hour of the morning——

Mr. MACPHERSON. You would be able to make your speech.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Note how well posted these English editors are on this great genius who occupies the position of Minister of Agriculture for the Dominion of Canada. They even know of his most beautiful farm 'Alva,' in the eastern townships.

But as Minister of Agriculture he has a unique opportunity. The government maintains in several parts of Canada large experimental farms for the purpose of exploiting the latest ideas with respect to agriculture. New methods and theories, ranging over the whole area of farming operations are carefully considered, tried and adopted, if successful, while the results arrived at are given the widest publicity. How important all this is to a nation of farmers like the Canadians is easily understood.

It is a fortunate thing for Canada, now developing enormously on her agricultural side in Manitoba and the Northwest, that Mr. Fisher is not only a thoroughly competent farmer himself, but also that he brings to his work a highly-trained intelligence and an inspiring enthusiasm.

And this is the gentleman who opposed the establishment of experimental farms in this country with all his might and main for many a long year until he happened, through the influence of his paper and his position, to again become a member of this House, when this aggregation came into power, and, forsooth, they had to put him in some place, and the place where he could do the least damage was in the portfolio of Minister of Agriculture.

Though he is an excellent farmer, it will not do to think of him as a 'horny-handed son of the soil.' He is a man who has been educated at McGill University, Montreal, and Trinity College, Cambridge. His father, a Scotchman, was a well known Montreal physician.

Note, Sir, how accurately this poor, deluded British editor is posted on this great genius from Canada.

His superb——

Listen ; hold your breath, please.

His superb mental equipment and decided ability led him to take large, statesmanlike views.

I presume especially in the establishment of new regiments of militia along the boundary.

His vigorous policy has brought about something like a revolution in Canadian agriculture, chiefly by the extension of the principle of co-operative farming, the great success of which is notably shown in dairy farming.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And, Sir, it is told of him that on one occasion he went out to interview his foreman, and, going over to the bull pen, he asked him which was the Jersey that gave the best cream.

He has also travelled far and wide with a view to the opening up of new markets, or the development of those already existing.

Especially in regard to the Geisha girls in Japan.

He has founded several flourishing organizations for the furtherance of agriculture.

He is in the prime of life. His political career began in 1880, and in the famous electoral campaign of 1896, which resulted in the overthrow of the Conservative party——

Remark that it does not say in the triumph of the Liberal party.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I notice that all the gentlemen who are slated for offices are leading vigorously in the applause.

Mr. WADE. Russell is not here.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Otherwise he would have been at the top of the list, if the hon. gentlemen would be good enough to take the lead right along from our good friend.

Mr. Fisher took a very prominent part, and in the Laurier cabinet was included as Minister of Agriculture, with the unanimous approval of all Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The unanimous approval of all Canada—a plebiscite.

The Canadian Department of Agriculture includes in its range some matters not exactly of an agricultural nature, such as public health, patents, copyright, and census statistics, and Mr. Fisher has introduced several beneficial changes with regard to these subjects.

Now Sir, there is an important addition here. Under the new Orders in Council we find that this gentleman is charged with the administration of militia affairs also. The Minister of Militia, being thoroughly incompetent to attend to his business, the cabinet appointed the Minister of Agriculture to deal with militia matters in this special district. Would the Minister of the Interior or the Minister of Agriculture or the minister of whatever department this was sent from, be good enough to have that corrected ?

One of the things he has done is to amend the copyright law of Canada with a view to the protection of English authors.

Yet the general view taken in this country is that he endeavoured to amend the Copyright Law in order to shut out English authors.

He is a strong temperance worker.

Mr. BENNETT. What about the dozen bottles of whisky ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Let us draw a mantle over that.

He carried in 1896 a government measure providing for a popular vote on the question of total prohibition.

The writer might have added that he carried around with him on his trip to England several bottles of good Canadian rye whisky.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Shame.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I was not referring to these hon. gentlemen. There was no danger of their carrying whisky around in their cases. It would have been carried elsewhere by them.

Mr. SIFTON. What paper is this published in ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It is published in the London 'Daily Mail.' I do not know how much it cost a line.

Mr. SIFTON. Who is the writer ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There is no name, but undoubtedly it was inspired by the Minister of Agriculture. Of course he would not have his own name signed to it.

Mr. SIFTON. Would the hon. gentleman give the reference so that we may look it up ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I will give you the extract.

Mr. SIFTON. What date ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Thursday, June 16th, 1904.

An hon. MEMBER. Did he surrender ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. These hon. gentlemen seem to forget the fix they were in the other evening, or they would not say anything about surrendering. But I want to tell them that when I get hold of anybody who surrenders, he never escapes.

Som hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This sort of thing is rampant throughout the English press. We find extracts from obscure country papers in England cabled out here at the expense of Canada, tooting gentlemen of no greater capacity than the hon. Minister of Agriculture and others of his colleagues. Emboldened by impurity, we find these paid servants of the Dominion, not content with anonymous contributions, not content with misinforming the editors of English newspapers, as they have been doing a long time, under cover of anonymity, are coming out brazenly, writing over their own signatures, and deliberately falsifying the record. It is about time that these people were brought to a sense of their duty and this sort of thing stopped.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE. I just wish to refer for a moment to the fact that this practice, to which my hon. friend who has just spoken has alluded, was indulged in to a considerable extent some years ago by the immigration officer we then had in Ireland. We had him not only dealing with matters which were not by any means relevant to the duties he had to perform, but actually improperly and insolently discussing the acts of members of parliament. One instance after another of this was brought to the attention of the government and we had the assurance of the Minister of the Interior that it would be stopped. The following year however we had a repetition of the offence.

Mr. SIFTON. Does the hon. gentleman say I did not stop it ?

Mr. SPROULE. What I said was that when it was brought to the hon. minister's attention he said it would be stopped, but the next year we had a repetition of it.

Mr. SIFTON. It was stopped.

Mr. SPROULE. It was afterwards, but only after it had gone on two or three years. Forbearance ceases to be a virtue when the servants of the people are allowed to abuse it as they have been doing. Our immigration agent in Ireland left of his own accord the service of the government, but just as soon as he dropped out, another started in on the same lines. There is no doubt that this article on the Minister of Agriculture was inspired from Ottawa and written no doubt by some one who was expecting promotion or perhaps by some member of the government. I venture to say that there is not one of a thousand readers in Canada who will not reach the same conclusion. It is highly improper that an employee of this government should be allowed to indulge in that kind of work. Whether that employee be W. T. R. Preston or any other notorious character, makes no difference.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I understand that my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, inquired about certain papers having reference to the extension of time of Lieutenant Colonel Gregory's command and the refusal to further extend it. I have given an order to have these papers prepared. They are somewhat voluminous, but will be ready in a day or two.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the hon. minister also bring down his orders and regulations regarding the new examinations ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Certainly.

Mr. CLANCY. Would the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce have the papers which I asked him about yesterday brought down ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. All the papers in the hands of my department were sent to the Secretary of State, but there was some information from the Department of Justice which is being put in shape and will be furnished this afternoon or to-morrow.

Mr. BELL. The Postmaster General promised me some information regarding the mail contract on the River John. I was to have got it in the course of a day or two.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. During that debate on the estimates, I promised to bring down the following day information asked for by a number of gentlemen, and I told my deputy to bring me everything promised. If my hon. friend had put his question during that discussion, I would have been in a position then to give him the information, and therefore I am not in default. I shall have great pleasure however in bringing it down.

Mr. BELL. I understood the hon. minister was going to send me a memo.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I am sure that my deputy had the information and it would have been given had my hon. friend asked for it. I am not finding fault, and will see that my hon. friend's wishes are complied with.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Railways and Canals—chargeable to collection of revenue—Intercolonial Railway—working expenses, $6,500,000.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). This is the usual vote.

Mr. CLARKE. When the minister was making his statement the other day, he alluded to increased expenditures in the operation of the Intercolonial caused by increased wages paid to employees, and he promised to bring down a statement of the number of employees on the Intercolonial in 1896 and in 1903, the years for which his comparison was made. Has he that information now under his hand ? I would ask also for a return showing the train mileage served by the employees of the different grades—engineer, fireman, brakeman, conductor and so on. If the hon. gentleman proposes to make comparisons, he must supply the House with information to enable members to judge of the correctness of those comparisons. He has promised to bring down this information, but he has not yet done so. I would like him to implement that promise now.

Mr. EMMERSON. I telegraphed the general superintendent at Moncton and asked him to prepare such a return and send it at once. But the return has not yet reached me. I shall have the information, however, before the consideration of the railway estimates by the committee is finished.

Mr. CLARKE. But how could the hon. minister have made a comparison unless he had this information ?

Mr. EMMERSON. As to the number of men ? I based that upon the actual figures.

Mr. CLARKE. But where are those figures ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I want not only the actual number of men but the number of days. I made the statement generally, and now I propose to verify it. I propose to show, not merely the increase in the sum total, but the increase per diem paid to the several employees. That information will be forthcoming—my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) need not be at all alarmed. The information is accessible, and I will have it here so as to demonstrate to a mathematical certainty the correctness of my general statement.

Mr. CLARKE. But where is the material upon which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) based his statement in the committee the other day. Has he not that now under his hand ?

Mr. EMMERSON. My statement was a statement of totals, and I showed, from the actual expenditures on these items in the different years, what increase had taken place. My hon. friend asked me at that time for a statement for the number of men and the actual wage per diem ?

Mr. CLARKE. And as to the duties performed by these men.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is the same duty performed year by year. The enginemen, for instance, perform the same duties as before.

Mr. CLARKE. But how about the train mileage they run ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Even as to that a schedule will be furnished.

Mr. INGRAM. Do I understand that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) will bring down a statement of the mileage in 1903 and 1904 ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is contained in the report.

Mr. INGRAM. That can hardly be, because we have not the report for 1904.

Mr. EMMERSON. I understand my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) to mean for the year 1903. I understand that he means for that year and for the ten months of 1904 for which we have returns.

Mr. INGRAM. Yes.

Mr. EMMERSON. I will get that.

Mr. DANIEL. Who is the master car builder now ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Samuel King.

Mr. DANIEL. What position does Mr. King's predecessor, Mr. David White, occupy now ?

Mr. EMMERSON. He is chief car inspector.

Mr. DANIEL. What is his present salary?

Mr. EMMERSON. The general manager informs me that it is $100 a month.

Mr. DANIEL. Is Mr. King a Canadian or an alien ?

Mr. EMMERSON. A Canadian.

Mr. DANIEL. What salary is Mr. King receiving ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am informed it is $150 a month.

Mr. BELL. I would call the attention of the minister (Mr. Emmerson) to the fact that it is reported that some of his staff have been taking an active part in politics. I am informed that Alphonse T. Leblanc, canvassing agent for the Intercolonial, with salary and allowances of $1,531.28, took active charge of the government campaign in a portion of the county of Guysborough in a recent election. Has the minister any information as to that, and was it with his consent that this official engaged in that work ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not had the matter called to my attention. But, within a few days, I have heard some joking about it.

Mr. BELL. Has the minister made any inquiry ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, the matter was not brought to my attention. I was not aware that Mr. Leblanc at any time, had any connection with an election.

Mr. BELL. In what way has the information reached the minister ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I heard some joking about it among the members. But I have not had any complaint with respect to the matter.

I wish to correct the statement that I made a moment ago with respect to the pay of Mr. King, master car builder. He gets $200 a month. Mr. White gets $100 a month.

Mr. INGRAM. Where was Mr. King previously employed ?

Mr. EMMERSON. On the Grand Trunk?

Mr. INGRAM. Whereabouts ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The general manager tells me he thinks it was at London.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. He used to be in Montreal.

Mr. EMMERSON. He was for a long time in the employ of the Grand Trunk.

Mr. DANIEL. Is it true that the present master car builder receives the assistance in his duties of the gentleman who previously held that position, Mr. White ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Mr. White's employment is very largely outside of the works at Moncton. He is engaged in inspecting the cars that are built at the different points in the Dominion for the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. DANIEL. Would the hon. gentleman tell us what are the duties of Mr. White, who was formerly the master car builder ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Mr. White's duties are largely outside the works at Moncton. He is engaged in inspecting the cars that are built at different points in the Dominion for the Intercolonial.

Mr. DANIEL. What salary did Mr. White get as master car builder ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The general manager tells me he received $125 or $150 a month.

Mr. DANIEL. Does not this gentleman come into the class of those whose salaries have been increased ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not know whether my hon. friend wants to enter into a discussion as to the merits or demerits of that matter. I can give him the facts. In the position which Mr. White now holds he gets a salary of $100. When he held the position of master car builder he commanded a salary of either $125 or $150. The master car builder's position now commands a salary of $200. It is some years since Mr. White occupied the position.

Mr. DANIEL. How long ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Speaking from personal recollection, four or five years.

Mr. INGRAM. We understand that Mr. White occupied the position of master car builder up to some four or five years ago, and for some reason he has been displaced and a Mr. King has been put in that position. Now, it appears that the department has employed another man and gives him an advance in wages of $50 per month over that received by Mr. White. The hon. gentleman does not state whether Mr. White was competent for the position of master car builder. What is the reason for the change ? Why should this country pay $50 additional to Mr. King if Mr. White has given satisfaction and is a thoroughly competent man ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) apparently desires to go into that question. When a mechanical superintendent was secured for the Intercolonial some five years ago, Mr. White was master car builder, and the mechanical superintendent reported that in his judgment Mr. White was not satisfactory for the position.

Mr. INGRAM. Why ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Well, there was a question of competency and fitness. The superintendent made a report and requested a man of more experience, and Mr. White was placed in a position of car inspector and the services of Mr. King were secured. This was some four or five years ago.

Mr. INGRAM. How long has Mr. White filled the position of master car builder ?

Mr. EMMERSON. About ten years, I am told.

Mr. INGRAM. And this government employed for ten years a man who was incompetent to be a master car builder, and it took the government ten years to find it out. I doubt whether he was incompetent.

Mr. EMMERSON. I did not say that in my opinion he was incompetent, I only gave that as the reason assigned by the mechanical superintendent. I have no personal knowledge as to his fitness or competency. I am only giving the reason assigned by the mechanical superintendent for desiring to change the official.

Mr. INGRAM. That is the reason why I doubt the statement that has been given that he was incompetent.

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. gentleman does not doubt my statement ?

Mr. INGRAM. I do not doubt that the hon. gentleman was told so, but I question the statement itself being accurate. The idea of the Intercolonial having a master car builder for ten years, and only then they discovered that he was incompetent. On the very face of it that statement does not appear to be true. Then you make an incompetent man a car inspector. That is very inconsistent, I am sure. Is that the system the general manager is following ? I think probably there is some other reason that has not been stated for this change. I think the reason was probably a political reason.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am only giving the reason assigned. We might speculate on a whole lot of other reasons, but this is not a matter for speculation. I do not know who is more competent to determine as to the fitness of a man for the position of master car builder than the mechanical superintendent of the railway.

An hon. MEMBER. Who was he ?

Mr. EMMERSON. At that time it was Mr. Joughins, and he is still the mechanical superintendent.

Mr. INGRAM. And after seven years he discovered that this man is incompetent, though he is considered competent for the important position of inspector.

Mr. EMMERSON. When the mechanical superintendent came upon the road, he made a number of changes in the men employed on the Intercolonial and one of them was with respect to Mr. White. A man may be very competent in one department and not in another. Mr. White may be a very competent inspector of cars, but he might not have that executive ability which would qualify him to control a large number of men.

Mr. INGRAM. Is that the reason ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think that is one of the reasons assigned.

Mr. INGRAM. And Mr. White was in charge over these men for ten years and only then it was discovered that he was incompetent.

Mr. EMMERSON. And during that period we got a new man, Mr. Joughins, as mechanical superintendent. He was the best judge of the requirements of the situation, and he made a number of other changes in the personnel of the mechanical department. Certainly he was the most competent to judge of the fitness of the men employed in his department, neither the general manager nor the Minister of Railways were in a position to exercise a proper judgment in the matter.

Mr. INGRAM. We will leave the hon. gentleman's explanation at that.

Mr. SPROULE. If they had not got that man they would never have found out that he was incompetent.

Mr. BELL. I will ask the hon. gentleman's attention to some facts in reference to the manner in which this staff have been conducting themselves in political campaigns.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is very interesting.

Mr. BELL. I observe my hon. friend is very much disposed to treat this matter as a joke.

Mr. EMMERSON. Not at all. My hon. friend must not think that because I am smiling I regard this as a mere matter of joke. It is only my good nature.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It does not mean anything.

Mr. BELL. I do not think I misunderstood the hon. member a few moments ago when he said he heard of this thing as a joke and that he did not think it necessary to make any further inquiries.

Mr. EMMERSON. No, I said that I had heard it from a number of members who were joking amongst themselves. I said that I had had no complaint made to me, that the matter had never been brought to my notice in any form and that therefore I know nothing of it.

Mr. BELL. Officially ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Officially or personally.

Mr. BELL. I am going to have the pleasure of bringing the matter to the hon. gentleman's notice very definitely. In the first place a gentleman who occupies the place of canvassing agent on the Intercolonial Railway with a salary of $1,531, with allowances had actually charge, according to my information, of the campaign in the interest of the government in a very important district of Guysborough county called Larry's river and in other French districts, spoke at public meetings and took an active part in the elections. That is supported by declarations. My information is that at public meetings he addressed the electors in the interest of the government candidate. Not only that officer, whose name is Mr. Alphonse T. LeBlanc, but others as well, were active in the interest of the government candidate. Mr. Pushie, a conductor on the Intercolonial Railway, is another. I had his name given me as having taken an active part in this contest. I know Mr. Pushie to be a gentleman of very strong political leanings. He actively canvassed in Mulgrave and on the trains between Mulgrave and Truro. Mr. George W. Peeples, engine cleaner at Mulgrave, was an active canvasser and on election day drove his own team to carry voters to the poll. Mr. Harry A. Peeples, locomotive fireman, canvassed in Milford district in that county for the government candidate and I am told that he was so far recreant to the Presbyterian ideas of the province of Nova Scotia generally that he occupied part of Sunday in that work. For the government, that may not be so bad because possibly it may be said that on Sunday he was not in the employ of the government. John McDonald, mate on the government ferry 'Scotia,' at Mulgrave canvassed in Melford district for the government candidate and he also used up part of his Sabbath Day's rest for that purpose.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Was this in the Guysborough election ?

Mr. BELL. In the election which occurred quite recently.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That was the election that was a redeeming feature in the maritime provinces.

Mr. BELL. The election which occurred quite recently in Guysborough and which has given a new member to the House of Commons.

Mr. EMMERSON. And a good deal of trouble to hon. gentlemen of the opposition.

Mr. BELL. I would like to send a little of that trouble in the way of the government and possibly a little of that trouble in the way of these officials who have undertaken to do this work. Then, Lewis Maguire, baggage master at Mulgrave, and William Maguire, fuelman at Mulgrave, brothers, spent several days canvassing in the Milford district for the government candidate. They were apparently allowed to go away from their positions and to occupy themselves in working for the government. Alexander Reeves, fuelman at Mulgrave, also devoted some time to canvassing Melford district for the government candidate. John P. Meagher, deck hand on government steamer 'Scotia' at Mulgrave, was an active worker in the interest of the government. On election day he was busily engaged with his team carrying voters to the polls. Chas. Crittenden, deck hand on the 'Scotia' was an active worker in the government ranks. John M. Grant, Intercolonial Railway policeman at Mulgrave, is a very active party man and always has been a hard worker. He is warden of Guysborough municipality. In the recent by-election he declaimed with noisy demonstration against weak-kneed Grits who have to be prevailed upon by money and other like means to vote for the party candidate and who himself scorned such sordid, corrupt things. This patriot has taken unto himself since the by-election the office of Intercolonial Railway policeman at Mulgrave with its emoluments, said to be $60 per month. Some ten or twelve officials of the Intercolonial Railway were actively engaged in the by-election carrying on the work of canvassers during that by-election and that such a thing could be done without the knowledge of the management is so improbable that it is quite beyond any reasonable person's belief. The probability is that instructions were issued by some person in authority that justified this action on the part of these officials because they would not have employed themselves in this way unless they had had information to the effect that their action would not be looked upon with disapproval by the government What was the attitude assumed by the present government in reference to Conservatives ? It was laid down by the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and other members of the government that while an official of the government might exercise his right to vote he might do so, but that if he went further and took any active part in a political fight he would be allowed to devote his whole attention to politics, which practically meant that he would be dismissed from the service. That has been the law which has been applied to Conservatives everywhere. In my own county a postmaster was dismissed for the reason that at a public meeting he had asked a question of a gentleman who was speaking in the interest of the government. That was an offence and he was dismissed promptly. The law laid down by the right hon. Prime Minister and acted upon by members of his government has been carried out, and that is that if a man who is not content simply with exercising his right to vote takes an active part as a canvasser or takes any active part in any other way in carrying on political warfare he takes his political life in his hand and will be dismissed. I ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to inquire into these facts and to appoint a commission and that if proof is brought to his knowledge that the statements made in reference to the acts of his officials in the matter are correct he dismiss them and that he apply to them the rule which has been applied to Conservatives throughout Canada and which has been laid down as the policy of his party. Now, the hon. minister can no longer say that this matter has not been brought to his notice. I have brought it to his notice very definitely and I am satisfied that if he appoints a commission to make an inquiry into these statements they will be proved absolutely and to the hilt. In the recent campaign in Guysborough the government turned into that county not only one but many of their officials. The gentleman who occupies the very honourable position of warden of Dorchester penitentiary went all the way from New Brunswick to Nova Scotia and spent the whole day at the Forks polling place. His name is Mr. John A. Kirk, the noisiest and most demonstrative gentleman who ever occupied a position on this side of the House.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Does the hon. gentleman say that Mr. Kirk canvassed in the election ?

Mr. BELL. I make the statement that he spent the whole day at the polling place.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I want to know if the hon. gentleman charges Mr. Kirk with canvassing ?

Mr. BELL. I make the statement that he went to the Forks with a gentleman named Mr. Robert Kirk of Antigonish who was supposed to take certain supplies to the polling place and that he remained the whole day at the Forks polling place. What was he doing there ? I would like my hon. friend (Mr. Sinclair) to account for his presence. Mr. Kirk has not taken the trouble to tell me what he was doing, but if we get the commission which we suggest we will make it interesting for him. I make the statement that this gentleman spent the whole day at the poll. It being a winter day he did not stay there for pleasure.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I suppose the hon. gentleman is aware of the fact that the Forks polling district is Mr. Kirk's native place.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BELL. I am quite aware of it.

Mr. SINCLAIR. And that it is not an extraordinary thing for Mr. Kirk to spend one day in his native place, which as a matter of fact he frequently visists.

Mr. BELL. I am perfectly aware that Mr. Kirk had his residence in the Forks and was a very influential man in that section, and that is the reason he was there.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I wish to know if the hon. gentleman is going to make a definite charge. If he has a definite charge to make against Mr. Kirk let it be made.

Mr. BELL. I make the statement that he was there in company with Mr. Robert Kirk, of Antigonish, who I believe had no vote there and had not ostensible reason for being there. He was there and spent the whole day in the vicinity of the polling place. I see the premier is in his seat now, and I may recall to his recollection the language which he used in this House with reference to officials who are not satisfied with voting, but who take an active part in political work either in canvassing or in any other way. In 1897 the Prime Minister laid down the principle, that when an official went outside his duties to take any part in political work, he would be allowed to devote his whole attention to politics ; meaning that such an official would be dismissed from the service. That is the principle which has been acted upon pretty thoroughly by this administration.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. As against Conservatives.

Mr. BELL. Yes, of course. If that be the policy of the government, it should be applied to officials of both political parties. I assert that the Minister of Railways should make inquiry into this matter, and if it can be shown that these men have done more than simply deposited their ballot, then I ask in the interests of fair-play and good government, that these officials should be dismissed in accordance with the rule which the minister has laid down. The Minister of Railways can no longer say that he takes this matter merely as a rumour or a joke. The conduct of Mr. LeBlanc was notorious ; he was delighted with the position he occupied ; he boasted about it on the train ; he grew exhilarated about it and on his way out of the county on the Intercolonial Railway train after the election, he was inclined to take a great deal of credit to himself for the result. A man who flaunts his insubordination in the face of the government should not go unpunished ; a man who deliberately boasts that he has defied the rule laid down by the Prime Minister in such matters, ought not be able to rely for security on the fact that he belongs to the same political party as the government in power. The same measure of justice should be meted out to all.

Mr. EMMERSON. I can now say that the matter has been definitely brought to my notice with respect to certain officials of the Intercolonial Railway. I do not understand my hon. friend (Mr. Bell) to read any sworn declaration, but would rather gather that he is indulging in rumour.

Mr. BELL. I have declarations with respect to LeBlanc's conduct.

Mr. EMMERSON. And with respect to all the others ?

Mr. BELL. No.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think my hon. friend will admit that around election times there are always a good many rumours about men indulging in political partisanship, and especially are these rumours rife among those who have been unfortunate enough to lose the election.

Mr. BENNETT. In St. John.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, I was about to refer to the election in St. John. Just after that election and since that time I have had not merely rumours but stated charges against gentlemen in the railway service, that they took a very active part in the election against the government candidate. Only this morning I received a letter making a distinct charge against one of the officials, and indeed against a number of officials in the railway service in Moncton, who are charged with writing political editorials against the government and against the management of the Intercolonial Railway. I will say to my hon. friend that I shall go into all these matters, I trust in a judicial way, and consider not merely what he has said, but also what my correspondents have stated with respect to others in the employ of the Intercolonial Railway. After the session is over I hope to have an opportunity of inquiring into what is alleged with respect to the St. John election as well as the Guysborough election, and I trust that I may be able to reach a conclusion that will be satisfactory all around. Let me say a word with respect to a fellow townsman of mine, Mr. Kirk, the warden of the Dorchester penitentiary. When it was intimated that he had gone to Guysborough to take part in the election, he wrote a letter to the press in which he stated distinctly that he went to Guysborough, but that he took part in no way in that election, nor did he canvass a single man. He unqualifiedly denies that he took any part in that election, and he challenges any one in the maritime provinces to prove the contrary. I have known Mr. Kirk since he came to Dorchester and from my knowledge of the gentleman I cannot believe that he is in any sense a political partisan. Mr. Kirk is a very high minded man, and a man who is true to his convictions. I am prepared to accept his statement, and until something more than mere rumour is brought to contradict him I shall rely on what Mr. Kirk says.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does he say what he went to Guysborough for ?

Mr. EMMERSON. He says he voted ; do hon. gentleman opposite say that he had not the right to exercise the franchise ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. BENNETT. The friends of the Minister of Railways held that Ontario Conservatives who voted in 1896 should be sacked.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. BENNETT. Yes, I can give you the names.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am obliged to accept the statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) but from my knowledge of the Liberal party, I believe they have in no sense dealt with officials for such a thing as exercising their franchise. However, the matter will be investigated.

Mr. DANIEL. Now that the Minister of Railways has referred to the St. John election, I may recall to his mind that shortly after the opening of parliament I put a question on the order paper with regard to the dismissal of two employees of the Intercolonial Railway, and the only answer given by the government was that they were considered to be undesirable employees. It was stated at the time in the public press that one of these persons was dismissed because he was unable to be present on election day, being away attending the funeral of a near relative. What truth there may be in that, of course I do not know. I would like the minister to give a little more definite information if he has it as to the reason why these two parties were dismissed at that time.

Mr. EMMERSON. I remember the question which my hon. friend asked shortly after the opening of parliament. I might say that these two men are not included in the list of employees whom I have in my mind as having been charged. I informed him at that time that they were not considered desirable employees. I have not seen the references in the press to these cases, but if there was any statement in the press that one of the men was dismissed because he was absent from the city and did not take part in the election, that statement was certainly absolutely untrue, because such a circumstance was not brought to my notice nor was my attention called to the subsequent report of it in the newspapers. The men whose action I have promised the House will be investigated, are not the employees mentioned by my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel). There were very substantial reasons why these men should not be continued in the employ of the Intercolonial Railway. The position taken by the management of the Intercolonial Railway with respect to the engagement and dismissal of men is that when it is necessary in the interest of the service that we should relieve ourselves of a man's services we do not feel that it should be either a matter of investigation in individual cases or that the management should be called upon to give in individual cases the reasons for their action.

Mr. DANIEL. I might remind the minister that one of these men has been in the service of the Intercolonial Railway for a great many years. What his political affiliations were I do not know, but I have always understood that he belonged to the same political party as the hon. gentleman. Although this man had been in the service of the Intercolonial for between twenty and thirty years he was dismissed without notice. It was a sudden and summary dismissal for which no reason was given. Treatment of that kind towards any official, no matter how humble, is nothing less than cruel. People in that position of life have not the chance to accumulate money, they do not get such salaries as, for instance, the minister himself enjoys. They receive simply a wage of a dollar or a dollar and a half a day, and it is hard that these two men should be summarily dismissed and thrown on the charity of the public in the middle of winter or early spring, at a time when they are very unlikely to get employment elsewhere. A large private employer of labour or a corporation, in case the necessity arose of dispensing with the services of an employee, would certainly find some more charitable and kindly way of doing so than has been adopted in this case. Every member will consider that treatment of that kind except in the most extreme cases is unwarranted and cruel, and I cannot conceive why this course should be adopted unless it was intended by the hon. gentleman to give a black eye to government ownership. It will certainly render a great service to those who are opposed to government ownership.

Mr. EMMERSON. These men must have received the usual notice because I received a telegram asking me to stay their dismissal which was to take place at a date some time after I received the telegram.

Mr. DANIEL. What length of notice ?

Mr. EMMERSON. A fortnight, I think.

Mr. DANIEL. These men received no notice.

Mr. EMMERSON. They must have received notice or I could not have received that telegram. My hon. friend intimated that these dismissals arose out of the St. John election and were political in their character, but in his next utterance he says that one of these men had been long in the service and was a political friend of the party to which I owe allegiance. That surely would prove that the dismissal was not for political reasons.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The man might have seen fit to support the late Minister of Railways, but could not screw himself up to supporting the minister.

Mr. EMMERSON. As I understand he was absent from the city and could not have taken part in the election, and the mere absence of a man would certainly not show that he was taking part in an election. The other man, it was represented to me, was appointed two or three years ago by the party in power. These were not matters for consideration in determining the advisability of retaining a man in a certain position. The Intercolonial Railway officials are beseiged by a great many applicants for employment in different sections and many of these men finally succeed in getting employment as opportunity presents itself. If the management were to undertake in the case of each individual man all over the 1,500 miles of railway to investigate or if we were to say that the management cannot remove men from their positions without investigation it would lead to endless trouble. That rule is not applied in private corporations, it is not applied in the industrial corporations of this country. They reserve the right to employ and to dismiss as they please, and it seems to me that it is in the interests of the railway that there should be given to the management the right to continue to follow that practice.

Mr. DANIEL. Neither of these men has had any communication with me either directly or indirectly, by themselves or their friends. All I know about the case is what I have seen in the press and certainly the general impression among the people is that the government through the Minister of Railways has excercised its power in an arbitrary and cruel manner in this case. No reasons have yet been given why these men were dismissed. Even yet the minister has not told us why these parties were considered undesirable employees, so that evidently he takes the position that having the power he shall exercise it and refuse to give any reason why. Having arbitrary power, he intends to use it in an arbitrary manner, but I do not think that such conduct will conduce to his reputation as a fair man, to say the least of it. This thing is a matter of common discussion among people of the same walk of life and they certainly are not sparing in their criticisms of the minister.

Mr. EMMERSON. We are dispensing with the services of employees every week, and the management do not see that they should be called upon to give reasons. The usual course has been not to give reasons. My hon. friend has sought to leave the impression that these men were unjustly dismissed on political grounds. Well, the case on behalf of these two men was put to the government by the strongest government supporters in the city of St. John, one of whom had taken an active part against my hon. friend ; but I felt that, while I would have been very glad to accede to their request, I could not allow my personal opinions to interfere.

Mr. PUTTEE. When a man is discharged from the Intercolonial and applies for a discharge sheet, is he not given one, stating the cause of dismissal ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That has never been done.

Mr. PUTTEE. In what position then would that man be on applying for employment on another railway ? He would be asked for his discharge sheet. The hon. minister has given us the impression that when a man is discharged from the Intercolonial no reason is given, and that on other roads and in other industrial establishments the same course is pursued. The hon. gentleman is wrong. On all railways, except the Intercolonial, when a man is discharged, he is given a discharge sheet setting forth the reasons. That is the invariable practice in the case of an employee of any length of service. Any industrial establishment, which treats its employees as people having some interest in their employment, will give a discharged employee the reasons for his dismissal, and I am surprised to hear the Minister of Railways say that that practice is not followed on the government road. I was not aware until this spring that the Intercolonial was run differently from other roads as regards its employees. Suppose a man in the telegraph service or an engineer is discharged, is he not given the reasons if he applies for them ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There is a special agreement with the Telegrapher's Union covering their case. We deal with the body and not with the individual. In the case of an employee whose services are not required, the management do not consider it necessary to give the reasons for his dismissal. Of course it would be very easy to do it.

Mr. PUTTEE. The only ground on which the government would discharge an employee would be for good and sufficient reasons. If so, why should not those reasons be stated? If they are damaging to the man discharged, he will keep the information to himself. If it be a question of unjust discrimination, the organization will see that justice is done him. If he belongs to no organization, he can only appeal to men's sense of fairness and justice. The minister has said that in the case of telegraphers who are discharged, the reasons are given, but in the case of men who do not belong to any organization, they are discharged without any reason being given. Well, a man who gets $1.50 a day is just as much interested in keeping his place as a man who gets $3.50 a day. And after a man has been a number of years on the Intercolonial, his usefulness is gone for other labour. No man who has been in continual service should be discharged except for good and sufficient reasons, and there can be no honest objection to telling him what those good and sufficient reasons are. The hon. member has brought up the case of two men. I am referring to two other men whose cases have been brought up before the House. They were employed at Moncton and were discharged at the beginning of this year—Fabien Leger and F. B. Wood. Now it is said by these men and by others on their behalf that they were discharged really for activity in connection with unions.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend (Mr. Puttee) knows that that was denied. The hon. gentleman himself had an interview with me with respect to that matter, and it is fair for him to state that fact, I think.

Mr. PUTTEE. I was going on to say, Mr. Chairman, in the very next sentence, that this was denied by the minister. But with this denial should be given information as to what was the reason for their dismissal. One of these men had been for twenty-three years on the Intercolonial. As a matter of fact, he has been active recently in trades union matters. It must be remembered that, as we have seen this morning, the fact that the trades union is strong and some of its members are employed under the department leads to this—that if one of those men is discharged it becomes necessary, under the agreement under which he was employed, that the reason for his discharge shall be given. One of these two men I have referred to, I believe, was the correspondent of the government's 'Labour Gazette' and was soliciting subscriptions among the employees of the Intercolonial Railway for that publication. Not only on his representation, but on the representation of his fellow-workers and fellow-townsmen, the impression has been given and certainly exists that activity in trades union matters was disagreeable to some prominent men in the city of Moncton and dismissal followed. At page 3437 of 'Hansard' there is a long series of questions put by the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Ralph Smith) and answered by the Minister of Railways. It seems from what the minister says that the men are absolutely denied the advantage of having put before them reasons for their dismissal other than simply that it is 'for the benefit of the service.' On behalf of every labour organization I want to say that that is no satisfactory answer to any man who has been discharged after being employed in any service for a number of years. The reason given should be a specific reason. It is stated—and on this I would refer to the hon. member for Vancouver—that the dismissal was ordered from Ottawa, that it did not come from these men's superior officers nor from any one actively engaged in the operation of the railway. I believe that men thus employed should be given, not only in this case but in every case reason, for their dismissal. That is a point that is always put forward by trades unions and it is always conceded in each case. And surely the weak man, the man who has not the support of his coworkers is entitled to the same treatment.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it is almost a pity that this incident was brought up, for it has, in a sense, the effect of drawing a red herring across the trail, and preventing us from getting information which we desire with respect to political partisanship on the part of officials. I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) that it is a great injustice that men should be dismissed without reason given. It might be that if a man knew the reason, he might set the matter right and so avoid dismissal. It may be a case of double injustice. A man may be dismissed upon allegations which, if examined into would be found to be incorrect; and, as the hon. member for Winnipeg says, when he applies for employment elsewhere and is asked the reason for leaving his former employment, he is unable to give any reason, and so must rest under suspicion that he is not worthy. But it appears from what the minister says that if he belongs to the telegraphers' union reason must be given if he is dismissed. And why? Because there is a force behind him——

Mr. EMMERSON. It is a subject of agreement.

Mr. SPROULE. The man who is unable to bring any force to fight his battles cannot claim such treatment, but may be dismissed without any reason given.

Mr. EMMERSON. In the one case the man is employed without any such understanding, but in the case of the telegrapher there is a written agreement that this shall be one of the conditions of employment.

Mr. SPROULE. But why is that done in one case and not in another ? We have a Minister of Labour to see to it that every employee gets fair-play. Was he invited to interfere in these cases or make any inquiries ? Not at all, so far as any information has been given to the House. We are told that reason is given in the case of dismissal of a member of the telegraphers' union, but not in the case of one who has not such a powerful union at his back. Does not that of itself indicate that where a man has power behind him he can get his rights, but where he has none but himself to fight his battles his rights will not be recognized ? It seems to me that that is the meaning that is to be taken from what the minister has told us. But the question which started this discussion was the question of employees taking part in elections—was that principle right or was it wrong ? We have it on the authority of a number of hon. gentlemen opposite, including ministers, that it was an improper thing for employees in the public service to take an undue part in an election, and that any who did so would be dismissed. As a matter of fact a number of men have been dismissed on this plea. We are told that we must not accept these cases on mere rumour, and my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) was asked if he had affidavits to establish the facts he alleged. I would ask in return where were the affidavits to establish the charges against any members of the Conservative party who were dismissed in 1896 ? Did it require affidavits for the dismissal of these men ? Not at all. The government were quite ready to act on mere rumour ; on the mere charge being brought to the department the men were ruthlessly and barbarously dismissed, with no opportunity given them to disprove the allegation made against them. On the other hand, the hon. member for Pictou mentioned nine or ten different cases of officials of the Intercolonial taking an active part in one by-election in support of the government candidate. But nothing is done to these men. If this kind of thing were confined to the Intercolonial it might not be so bad. But I have information here that men in the Department of Marine and Fisheries took an active part in that Guysborough election, men who were servants of the country, and servants not of one political party but the people of all political parties. But they are in the service of the party in power for the time being. They did not take their political lives in their hands because they knew they would be shielded, therefore they come from the Fisheries Department to take part in that election. I have here two cases : Mr. John Davis, fishery overseer, goes down and takes part in that election ; Mr. Havelock Torrey, another fishery officer, takes part in that election.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to say what he is reading from ?

Mr. SPROULE. I am reading information given to me with regard to certain parties who took part in that election.

Mr. SINCLAIR. By whom is that statement signed ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It being one o'clock I now leave the chair.

Mr. SPROULE. I respectfully submit that when a member is on his feet it is hardly courteous, either to the committee or to the member, for the chairman abruptly to close the debate.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is always the rule for the speaker or the chairman to leave the chair when the hour arrives for adjournment. But if the hon. gentlemen wishes to finish his statement he can do so. If that is the sense of the committee, then the chairman will take his seat and give an opportunity to the hon. member to finish his statement. But it is not the business of the hon. gentleman to censure the chairman.

Mr. SPROULE. It is my business to draw attention to any irregularity in his conduct, and I refuse to abandon my right.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will please sit down. The irregularity is not on the part of the chairman, the irregularity is on the part of the gentleman holding the floor after the hour has arrived for adjournment. It being one o'clock I now leave the chair.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. SPROULE. At one o'clock I was treating the question of the interference of civil servants in elections. I wish now to continue, by saying that in this particular instance, the election at Guysborough the offence, if offence it is, and we have the authority of hon. members of the government to say it is an offence—was widespread and not confined to one branch of the service, because we have instances brought to our notice from several branches. We have first the warden of the penitentiary who belongs to the Justice Department. Now it is rather a strange coincidence that penitentiary officials are so frequently put in constituencies where there is an election going on. Some of them, I think, ought to be inside the walls instead of outside, but they happen for the time being to have their liberty, and they make use of it in doing very improper work. I have noticed up in Ontario over and over again that the inspector of prisons, whenever there is a local election going on, is always sure to be there, and if you ask him : Why do you happen to be here ? It is a strange coincidence that he just accidently happens to be in that riding.

Mr. COWAN. He went there to see how many Conservatives ought to be in jail.

Mr. SPROULE. If he would attend to his own crowd first and put a few of them behind the bars, they would not be so troublesome at these particular times—I mean those who ought to be there, and whom the hon. gentleman who has just interrupted me (Mr. Cowan) has so frequently defended. It is a strange coincidence that the official always happens to be there at the time of an election, and according to his own statement, it is the merest accident in the world. So we are told it was in this particular case, Mr. Kirk, the warden of the penitentiary happened to be there because it was his old home. Now that may be an excuse and it may not be. I think if the honest and real reason was given we would find out that he went there for the purpose of assisting and voting in that election. Now I would not object to his voting, if he had a vote in that particular place, because I regard that as a right which every man should exercise. But if the Ontario law prevailed there he could not vote there because he does not reside there ; as an elector can only vote in the polling subdivision in which he resides, and therefore this man could not possibly have voted there legally. I do not know what the law of that province is, or whether he was voting illegally or not ; but if the same franchise law exists there as we have in Ontario, if he voted at all he voted illegally, and we are told that he did vote.

But the circumstances which strikes me is the fact that these officials always happen to be there when there is an election going on, and the excuse given is that it was a mere coincidence. I say it is very improper, and condign punishment should be meted out to any civil servant who is found taking a part in an election. Now the government have dealt with such cases, they have dealt with officials who have taken part in elections, dealt with them summarily, not upon affidavits, as the minister requires to-day, but upon the mere statement of a member of this House. I think it was the hon. the Postmaster General (Sir Wiliam Mulock) who stated that when any member of this House gets up and says that a person took part in an election, that he acted as an offensive partisan, he, the minister, would regard that as sufficient evidence and would ask nothing more. Why does not the Minister of Railways and Canals make the same rule apply to his side of the House that he applies to members on this side ? It is because they apply one rule to this side and another to their own side that we complain. It is because he metes out punishment to his opponents that he does not mete out to his own friends that we have a right to complain. Now, as I said before, this offence is not confined to one particular branch of the service, nor was it an isolated offence. We find that there were some nine or ten names read over of employees of the Intercolonial, employees of the government, who went down to Guysborough and took part in that eleciton. I have no doubt that many of them were offensive partisans and took an improper part in that election, and yet the Minister of Railways says : Oh, I have heard my friends laughing and joking about it. It was rather an amusing matter in his view, because he got the benefit of the joke and his candidate got the benefit of the votes.

Did the hon. Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock), did the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) treat it as a joke ?—not by any means. They treated it as a serious reality and meted out punishment to the parties who were the guilty offenders. Then I say the same rule should be applied to both sides of politics. We had two employees from the Fisheries Department, one, Havelock Torrey, fishery officer, who is getting a salary from the country and another, John Davis, a fishery overseer, who is getting a salary from the country as well. These men and others, some getting large salaries, some moderate ones, but it does not matter whether their salaries be large or small, were employees of the country and had not any right to take part in the election. Then, we had another party named Geo. N. Grant, who was said to be chief constructor of cold storage plants. I suppose he is under the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). He appears to be capable of running more branches than one and I suppose he had this election on his hands as well. I have cited these cases to show that there was evidently an understanding in the various departments that it was not only the right but the duty of civil servants to go down and help in the Guysborough election. There is the agricultural branch, the Marine and Fisheries branch and the railway branch and if we were aware of all the facts I have no doubt that there would be found to be several others as well so that it would be quite clear that there were a number of sinners in the election. Yet, we are told that this is only a joke, the hon. minister says : I heard some joking about it ; I did not pay any attention to it. Is that the way they treated the Conservatives when they found them doing the same thing ? Why do they not treat the Reformers the same as Conservatives ? If the rule is good for one side it is good for the other and if they think it worth while to mete out punishment to one side let them mete out punishment to both sides impartially. If they mete out the same punishment to the members of their own party as they do to members of the Conservative party we will have no ground for complaint whatever. As long as it is the case that these offences are winked at, if they occur on the part of their own friends, and severe punishment is meted out to the friends of the Conservative party we will hold it to be an improper course and we will have the right to adversely criticise any minister of the Crown who evidently allows it and does not bring the parties to book for it and mete out to them the punishment which they justly deserve. The day is past when we should have such discrimination as this. We have had it all over the province of Ontario in a most disgraceful and scandalous way. It has been going on for over thirty years and yet there is no effort being made to stop it. We have penitentiary birds, we have every class and character of the worst type that the country affords and because they are useful at elections we find supporters of the government shielding these men and manipulating the course until it has become a public and notorious fact to-day that you cannot get one of those criminals before a magistrate appointed by the government of Ontario and secure a conviction. It is utterly impossible to do it because in one way or another the case is put over or hushed up or the indictment is quashed on a technicality, or something is done to shield the criminal. We hope that this is not coming down into this parliament. We have always had reason to hope that we would have a better code of morals in this House than in Ontario in regard to political offences, but I am afraid they are apt scholars down here and the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals seems to be as apt as any of them because he seems disposed to treat this as a joke so long as the benefits accrue to his own friends.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am perfectly fair.

Mr. SPROULE. Perfectly fair, the hon. gentleman says. I will not criticise his sense of fairness or the spirit he displays in saying so, but I may be permitted to say that so long as this is done the government are bound to take notice of it according to the rule they laid down in the House and if they do not do so there can only be one construction put upon their conduct and it it that they are not willing to mete out the same punishment to their friends as they mete out to their opponents.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. minister has already promised to investigate the charges preferred against these men by my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell). Taking that view of it I assume the hon. gentleman is not in favour of employees taking part in elections. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. EMMERSON. If anybody went into an election in a county and showed himself to be a violent partisan I do not think it would be correct or proper.

Mr. INGRAM. So there are certain degrees of partisanship?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think the mere fact of a man going into a county, being there and exercising his franchise is not a reprehensible act.

Mr. INGRAM. But if he takes any part in the election by speaking or canvassing then he is a partisan? That is what I take the position of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to mean. We would like to get a proper definition of what partisanship is.

Mr. EMMERSON. What is an act of partisanship—is that what the hon. gentleman wants to know?

Mr. INGRAM. Yes.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think if a man went into a county and acted as the agent of a candidate and put himself in that position it would be a very partisan act.

Mr. INGRAM. I quite agree with the hon. minister in that and I think it is a very fair definition of what partisanship is. What steps is the hon. minister taking to prevent employees of the Intercolonial Railway taking such a part in elections?

Mr. EMMERSON. The employees of the Intercolonial Railway at Moncton, throughout the county of Westmoreland, throughout New Brunswick, and as far as I know throughout the several provinces are at liberty to exercise the franchise as they please. There are no restrictions upon them in that regard. They have been told that in every election that I am aware of since this government came into power. They have been told that distinctly by the late Minister of Railways and Canals and I shall follow in the footsteps of my predecessor (Mr. Blair) and the acting minister in that respect.

Mr. INGRAM. Would the hon. minister be good enough to tell us in what way that was communicated to the employees?

Mr. EMMERSON. Publicly.

Mr. INGRAM. In what way?

Mr. EMMERSON. On the public platform. I have heard the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals convey that on more than one occasion and in more than one election.

Mr. INGRAM. So that is really the only way in which it has been communicated to them?

Mr. EMMERSON. What more do you want?

Mr. INGRAM. Did it ever occur to the management of the Intercolonial Railway to issue a notice and have it posted up in the shops ?

Mr. EMMERSON. We have changed all that.

Mr. INGRAM. You have changed all that ?

Mr. EMMERSON. In former days men who were suspected of any leanings against the government of that day were sent out on trains so that they could not exercise their franchise. That has all been changed. If men who wish to exercise their franchise will, by going out on their regular runs, be deprived of that privilege they have always been notified that if they wish it arrangements will be made whereby they will have the privilege of voting regardless of whether they are Liberal or Conservative.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman makes a pretty bold statement as to what the state of affairs was before he and his friends were in power.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. By whose authority does he make any such statement ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I will answer the hon. gentleman.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like to know because when I was in power——

Mr. EMMERSON. This was when you were in power.

Mr. HAGGART. When I managed the affairs of the Intercolonial Railway as minister, if the officials did anything of that kind, they did it without my authority.

An hon. MEMBER. They did it all the same.

Mr. HAGGART. If it were done they had no hint or direction from me to do it. The hon. Minister of Railways tells us that there is a change ; that there is purity of administration on the Intercolonial Railway now, and that there is no coercion on the employees. It is refreshing to hear these gentlemen opposite talk about purity of administration after the experience we have had of their tactics in every province of this Dominion. It reminds me of the statement of a friend of mine, once a member of this House, that the chances were that those persons who are always talking of purity are themselves the most corrupt, and that one should beware of them. The present officials managing the Intercolonial Railway were managing the Intercolonial Railway when I was in power, and I defy the minister to obtain from them any instructions that I ever gave which would tend to interfere with the exercise of the franchise by any of these employees.

Mr. EMMERSON.

Mr. INGRAM. The Minister of Railways has told us that when he goes to Moncton in a political campaign, he tells the employees of the Intercolonial Railway that they have a perfect right to do as they please in the election. If the hon. gentleman desired to conduct the government railways from a purely non-partisan standpoint, he would take a leaf out of the book of some of the railway companies who post up a notice stating that no foreman, or other petty officer of the company, shall be allowed to interfere, and that every employee is at perfect liberty to cast his ballot as he sees proper. That is the non-partisan method of conducting a railway. The Minister of Railways says that he proposes to investigate these matters, but he has not told us how he will investigate them. If he wants to conduct his investigation in a non-partisan manner he will issue instructions to his general manager to delegate the proper officer, who very likely is the superintendent, to find out whether any of these employees have taken a partisan part in the elections. Let him instruct his general manager that it will be a reason for dismissal whether the employee took an active part on the Liberal or Conservative side, and if the minister does that he will have a non-partisan administration in the Railway Department. The minister has spoken of the applications for positions on the government railways which come in from all quarters. If the general manager of the government railways were sitting in the House now, I would tell him that on account of the interference of members and supporters of the government, he is not allowed to conduct the government railways on business lines, but, by reason of the influence brought to bear on him by government supporters he is forced to employ men who are unnecessary and who are unsuited for the positions they occupy. That is the great fault with the administration of the Intercolonial Railway to-day ; that has been the fault with the Intercolonial Railway since I have been a member of this House, and I care not what party be in power. The trouble is that you have a partisan head ; that you are administering your railway from a partisan standpoint and that you have done ever since I have been in the House. I make that statement boldly. When political partisans try to use their influence in the administration of the affairs of that railway, no general manager can conduct it on purely business lines. If a politician wants to have a friend employed on the government railways, let him submit his name to the general manager if he chooses, just as any other private citizen would, and if the candidate be competent to fill a vacant and necessary position, let him be appointed upon his merit. Until the day comes that this is done on the government railways, the government railways will never be a success. I shall not discuss the question of government railway ownership now ; but I do say that it is idle folly for the Minister of Railways to state in this House that he is administering the Intercolonial Railway in a non-partisan way. He has not taken the primary step to do so, and judging from his conduct to-day he has no idea of doing so.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that the case of Geo. N. Grant, chief inspector of cold storage, who draws salary and expenses amounting to $2,167 a year, is a most glaring flagrant case of political partisanship. This man who took an active part in the Guysborough election is not only an active partisan, but he is actually the president of the Reform Association in Guysborough and he evidently regards that position as not inconsistent with his position as a civil servant. Is that fair or proper ?

Mr. SINCLAIR. What evidence has the hon. gentleman that Mr. Grant took an active part in the election ?

Mr. SPROULE. I have been telling the House what evidence I have. The hon. gentleman is better at asking than at answering questions. I am not here to be cross-questioned.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPROULE. Not even by an eminent lawyer on that side of the House who seems always to interrupt for the sake of interrupting more than for the sake of information.

Is that statement correct ? Is George N. Grant not the president of the Reform Association in Guysborough ? Does not the president of an association take an active part in elections ? Generally the most active and influential politicians in constituencies are made presidents of these associations and the very fact that Mr. Grant is a president and at the same time an employee of the country should be sufficient evidence to the minister that he was not doing his duty. He could not properly serve the country and hold that position because he was acting the part of a partisan.

Mr. BLAIN. I am sure the members will be surprised at the statement made by the Minister of Railways and Canals and the flippant manner in which he passes over the serious charge brought to his attention by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell). The hon. member for Pictou pointed out that no less than 10 or 12 of the officials of the railway, receiving large salaries from the government of this country, had taken an active part in a certain election. The minister pays no attention to it but says the matter was brought to his attention by some supporters on his own side who were laughing about it at some former time. My hon. friend was not sufficiently interested to inquire whether it was correct or not. But he dismisses Conservatives in the employ of this government without the shadow of investigation. This was also done by his predecessor. This matter was discussed in the House in 1897. This is not the first time that the opposition has charged the present government with having acted in a partisan way in the dismissal of officials since they came into power. In 1897 this question was asked by Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper :

(a). Have the following, or any of them, and which of them, if any, been dismissed from the service of the Intercolonial :

1. Alexander Stewart, section foreman at Linwood, Antigonish ?

2. John Chisholm, section man at Heatherton, Antigonish ?

3. Finlay Chisholm, section foreman, James River, Antigonish ?

(b). If dismissed, was any investigation made prior to dismissal, and what was its nature ?

(c). How long were these men in the service of the government, and what was the record of each for efficiency and conduct ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The services of Alexander Stewart, section foreman at Linwood, Antigonish, were dispensed with on the 7th of January last. (b.) No investigation was considered necessary as it was explicitly and positively affirmed by Mr. McIsaac, M.P., that Alex. Stewart had infringed the rule laid down in respect to government employees. (c.) He had been in the service since September, 1880. Nothing recorded against him.

2. The services of John Chisholm, section man at Heatherton, Antigonish, were dispensed with on the 12th of November last on the personal statement and representation of Mr. McIsaac, M.P., that Chisholm had been guilty of active and offensive partisanship in the last general elections. There was no investigation. He had been in the service since August, 1884. Nothing recorded against him. 3. The services of Finlay Chisholm, section foreman at James River, Antigonish, were dispensed with on the 18th November last, on the statement and representation of Mr. McIsaac, M.P., that he had been guilty of active and offensive partisanship in the last general elections. There was no investigation. He had been in the service since June, 1879.

The hon. gentleman who was then Minister of Railways regarded it as sufficient evidence when a supporter in the House stood up in his place and charged a government official with having taken an active part in politics. The minister then thought that was sufficient evidence and dismissed Conservatives without any investigation whatever. Now, when an hon. gentleman on this side of the House brings to the attention of the government the case of a government employee having taken an active part in politics the minister laughs at the idea. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) not only made the statement in the House but made the further statement that he had an affidavit that a certain government employee named LeBlanc, holding a very important position on the Intercolonial Railway, that of travelling agent, and receiving a large salary, had not only taken an active part in politics but had arranged for and spoken at political meetings, and was an active partisan while holding this important position.

My hon. friend (Mr. Bell) said he was prepared to support that by evidence, and yet the hon. the minister laughs at the idea and does not seem to think it is worthy of any investigation whatever.

In 1897 Mr. Ganong asked this question :

1. Is it true that Michael Behan, storeman on Lachine Canal at Montreal, was dismissed on 30th April without any previous notice ?
2. Was he so dismissed by order of the Minister of Railways and Canals ?
3. On whose recommendation was he so dismissed ?
4. Why was he so dismissed ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. 1. The services of Michael Behan, storeman on the Lachine Canal, were dispensed with on the 30th of April last. 2. Yes. 3. At the request and upon the representation of the members of parliament for Montreal districts. 4. No written complaint was lodged in the department.

On the statement of members of parliament that this gentleman had taken an active part in politics, a statement unsupported by an affidavit, the Minister of Railways dismissed this Conservative employee, and I am sure the present minister will not think it strange that members of the opposition should bring to his attention cases of this kind. I have here pages of matters of this kind but I shall not weary the committee with them. It seems that the government have one set of rules which they apply to Liberal-Conservative civil servants and another set of rules which they apply to Reform civil servants. I am surprised that the hon. minister who has newly come into office, a gentleman from whom we expected better things, a gentleman who had made great pretensions in his own province of purity and morality, a gentleman who held himself up as a moralist and who we expected would discharge his duties without fear or favour, on these things being brought to his attention should laugh at them, making no answer to the question and not even going so far as to show what the policy of his department is with respect to the officials of that department who take part in politics. Sir, it is no wonder that the civil service in this country is going down.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). No ; it is going up.

Mr. BLAIN. I am sure my hon. friend is good authority because he is superannuated from the civil service himself and receives almost as much from his superannuation as he does from this House.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). There have been increases of salary all around, you know.

Mr. BLAIN. I am surprised and the people of this country will be surprised when they hear the hon. gentleman deal with this matter in this way. It is the right of every man in this country holding a civil service position to go to the polls and vote, but when the government makes a bold statement that their policy is that an official who enters into partisanship and takes part in political meetings shall be dismissed then I think the government officials of this country, whether Liberal-Conservatives or not, have a right to expect that the rules laid down for officials belonging to one party shall be applied to those who belong to the other party.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The rule laid down by the hon. minister's leader in 1897, as I recollect—and it is a rule upon which action was taken in a great many cases—was this : There was no objection to any public servant exercising the right of the franchise, but when any public servant went beyond that and took an active open part in any election, the policy of the government would be that that public servant would be relieved from his public duties so that he might devote the whole of his time to the political affairs in which he took so much interest.

A great many men were dismissed by this government on that account, many without investigation. One man in my own constituency was dismissed simply because he asked a civil question of a Liberal candidate at a public meeting, and he was dismissed without investigation or inquiry whatever. I have under my hand a list of about twenty officers of this government, with salaries ranging from $2,000 down, who took an open and active part in this election. Not only did they take an open and active part, but one of them at least boasted, after the election was over, of the corrupt acts to which he had been a party. Evidence of that can be given. Under these circumstances, I do not think it will do for the Minister of Railways and Canals to dismiss this matter with a mere shrug of the shoulders, unless he is prepared to announce a new policy for his party and absolutely depart from that proclaimed by the Prime Minister only four or five years ago.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is not necessary, I presume, to get into a discussion of all these matters. My hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) has been answered very fully by the statement of my hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) as to the management of the railway during his regime.

Mr. INGRAM. And you, too.

Mr. EMMERSON. I, of course, understand that my hon. friend included me. The hon. member for South Lanark referred to what transpired during his administration. Of course, I do not know whether the particular matter I am about to refer to came within his knowledge at the moment, but I am sure he has heard that just previous to the elections of 1896 there was a list made out of the train hands of the Intercolonial who go out of Moncton. That list was put in the hands of the train despatchers, with the letter 'O' marked opposite the names of those in favour of the opposition and the letter 'X' opposite the names of those who favoured the government. And the men who favoured the Liberal party then in opposition were sent out of the city on new runs so as to prevent their voting, while those favourable to the late government were kept at home. That list was a matter of public record, produced as evidence in an investigation at Moncton. The evidence is there, the list is there in the records of the court.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As the minister has spoken of this list, he had better lay it on the table of the House.

Mr. EMMERSON. I say it was produced in court.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It was a public document produced on investigation.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not know that it is in the records of the department. I have not seen it there.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If it is in Moncton, the minister can easily get hold of it.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am speaking of a document which was produced before an investigation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman said it is a matter of public record. If it is, we should have it.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is not in the department to my knowledge.

Mr. SPROULE. Was it an investigation by a commission ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It was an investigation held at Moncton in connection with some railway employee.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It was an investigation taken under the authority of the government ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then the government has control of the document ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not know that it has. I have seen the record, but not in the department, and I am not aware that it is filed in the department. The investigation was held before Judge Wilson of the county court of New Brunswick. It is a matter of public notoriety. Every one in the maritime provinces is familiar with the facts.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Every one is not, because the gentleman more particularly interested absolutely contradicted the statement to me personally, and told me further that the evidence was given behind his back and he had no opportunity to cross-examine the witness who made the statement. I have heard a good deal of that document. It is acknowledged to be a public document, and the minister should place it on the table.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think the statement I make can be borne out by the facts. I know that the document was in existence and was marked as I have described it. We know that it has been referred to time and time again in this parliament, and this is the first time the statement of facts has been challenged at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not challenging the statement of facts, but asking for the document which the minister quotes.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have the right to refer to a document which was used in court. If it were a document in my hands or in the department, I could not quote from it without producing it. There is no use bringing its existence into question, because it did exist and its contents have been stated over and over again. Every one in Moncton is familiar with the fact that these men were deprived of their right to vote, if there was any suspicion as to the way in which they would vote. That was publicly stated in the city of St. John. It has been stated elsewhere in the province. Now the men have enjoyed that right, and they will continue to enjoy that right if I have anything to say with respect to the matter.

Mr. SPROULE. They have enjoyed a good deal more than that right.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, they have enjoyed the advantage of drawing more pay.

Mr. SPROULE. And of taking an active part in the elections on the government side.

Mr. EMMERSON. The statement has been made by my hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) that the management of the Intercolonial was much embarrassed by the appointment of men who were not wanted. I wish to take issue with my hon. friend on that point. I am sure he is not familiar with the facts.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. minister will find that out in a few minutes.

Mr. EMMERSON. If the hon. gentleman has the evidence, let him produce it. As to men who are not wanted being employed on the Intercolonial, I desire to say that there is not a man appointed to-day on the Intercolonial except on the request from the management for such a man.

Mr. INGRAM. Has that been so from the time this government came into power up to this moment ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I speak of it under the present administration. And the ex-minister is making a statement with respect to his administration. I cannot speak personally with respect to the past—I would not be expected to do so. But this complaint is made against the Intercolonial to-day, and if it were a matter of importance, I could show evidence directly to the contrary of what my hon. friend states. The rule laid down by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) with respect to the conduct of officials is one that I do not feel called upon to take exception to. I have told the committee that the cases to which reference has been made by my hon. friend from Pictou, (Mr. Bell) and the other cases concerning which complaint has arisen, will be inquired into. I will satisfy myself as to their correctness and I will deal with them. Now the question is raised whether the declaration of a member should be accepted. We must take such declarations as correct when made in this House. But I think I am not uncharitable when I say that these matters brought to the attention of the House by my hon. friend from Pictou are brought forward not with a view so much to correcting the conduct of employees of the Intercolonial as with a view to making political capital against the administration. And I think there is a great point of distinction there. I believe that in the management of the Intercolonial the minister should be surrounded by men in whom he has confidence. The employees all along the line should be men who, at least, are not disposed to put obstructions in the way of proper management of the railway. But I have known cases on the Intercolonial Railway—I speak, now, be it remembered from personal knowledge—I have known cases, for instance, of despatchers who have delayed trains and have boasted afterwards that they did it with a view to showing that the administration of the Intercolonial under this government was a failure in that the trains did not run on time. Now, that is not the kind of men we want. I am perfectly willing that the employees of the Intercolonial shall vote as they please. But I do not wish them to be animated by the desire to make the administration of the railway under the present regime a failure. If they attend to their duties without regard to politics, if they do not allow their feelings to interfere with their work in connection with the railway, then, so far as I am concerned, they shall be retained as employees of the Intercolonial. But if they are animated with a desire to make unsatisfactory the management of the road, to cause the people to be dissatisfied with that management, then, if I find evidence of that, I care not what the consequences to myself politically or otherwise, I will strike the official head off every such man.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. INGRAM. If hon. gentlemen opposite are cheering the sentiment that, if a despatcher takes advantage of his position to delay trains in order to bring discredit on the management he should be discharged, I fully agree with them. There is no man on this side of the House who will take exception to that. It would be a remarkable state of affairs indeed if such an employee were to find any man who would endorse his acts.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is a condition of things that existed on the Intercolonial within three years.

Mr. INGRAM. I have only to say that if the minister discovered such an employee and could prove it, he should not lose a moment's time in discharging him. Now, I want to refer to statements I have made in this House from time to time as to men being employed on the Intercolonial on the recommendation of supporters of the government. I say that has been the rule for years and it is the rule now. And I wish to point out, as I have often pointed out before, that, instead of that being an advantage to a government supporter, it is often an embarrassment to him, and that the sooner it is stopped the better it will be for the government railway, for the members of this House and for the people of this country. My hon. friend (Mr. Emmerson) said that I had proved a great deal against the administration of government railways previous to 1896. Am I to understand that the former Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) instructed his officers at Moncton to allow only Conservatives to go out and vote while Liberals were prevented from voting ? We have heard the denial of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart). If the management is guilty of such an interference with electors, or if any superintendent under the management is guilty of it, the matter should be attended to. The same officers are managing the road to-day that managed it in those days, and I suppose they are easy to get at with a view to finding out the facts. Whoever is guilty of such a thing should be punished for it. Now, with respect to men being employed on the Intercolonial that were not necessary, I will bring proof that will be satisfactory I am sure to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson). Here is what the hon. gentleman himself said on April 25, 1902 :

> And while the Minister of Railways and Canals has stated before this House that he has given the utmost freedom to the employees of that road in respect to their voting, I want to tell him that his officers, and that his bosses, and that his foremen have not been so generous. I want to tell the minister that in many instances there have been good Liberal votes sacrificed, not in the interest of that fairness of which he has been an apostle, but of which his officials and his foreman have not always been apostles by any means. I have not seen eye to eye with the minister. I have felt on occasions that there had been men placed in the employ of the Intercolonial Railway who should not be there, and I have so told the minister.

Mr. EMMERSON. Hear, hear.

Mr. INGRAM. I bring forward the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) as a witness. Does he dispute his own statement ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I did not say that no one should be there. The point I was making was that these men should not be there, conveying the idea that other men should be in their places.

Mr. INGRAM. And that the wrong men were there, and too many of them were there, and that is what the hon. gentleman was objecting to. And the right class of men, I fancy, were not there.

Mr. EMMERSON. There should be men there who were not traitors to the minister. My point was that the minister was surrounded at that time by men who were traitors to him and traitors to the railway. They are not there now.

Mr. INGRAM. My hon. friend is getting on to dangerous ground. I think he took a trip once to Moncton himself, and that was not the act of a loyal man.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What does the minister mean by traitor ?

Mr. INGRAM. What the hon. gentleman means by a traitor is a man who leaves the city of Ottawa and goes down to Moncton and induces another man to steal a memorandum which he gives to the hon. gentleman. So the hon. gentleman can come back to Ottawa and pretend to be in sympathy with the Minister of Railways and yet be able to hold a club over his head in the shape of this memorandun. Is that the class of men he wants to surround the Minister of Railways and Canals ? Then there was the question of the ties. It is a well known fact that the hon. gentleman cannot take credit to himself for being overloyal to the late Minister of Railways. I am simply giving that instance. Knowing what it is to be disloyal himself, he is now taking particular care that he will not be surrounded himself by disloyal railway employees. I fully agree with the hon. gentleman, and so long as he confines himself to taking off the heads of the disloyal employees I am willing to support him. If he find any employee of the Intercolonial who will use his position in order to make it difficult for the management of that road to conduct it in the public interest, I for one will support the hon. gentleman in cutting off his head. But if he means that because a man entertains different political views from himself he will cut his head off, I will oppose him in that contention. It is for that reason we complain. The hon. gentleman from Pictou (Mr. Bell), who was in the county of Guysborough at the time of that by-election, has made a statement in this House with regard to certain government employees taking part in that election. When he mentions certain names such as Mr. Kirk, we find the member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) very much exercised, and he rises up and disputes it. But the member for Guysborough has not said a single word about these other nine men. What has he got to say about Mr. Leblanc ? What about these two men by the name of Peoples ? What about Crittenden, what about the two McGuires, Reeves, Marr and Grant ? Does the member for Guysborough deny that these men did not take part in that election ? The hon. gentleman dare not deny it, he dare not put himself on record in this House as denying it. But when he thinks there is a good chance of making a denial in some particular case he is ready to do so. The hon. gentleman has put himself in an awkward position. He has not given the Minister of Railways an opportunity of knowing whether there is anything in his statement or not ; therefore we have a right to assume that these nine men, government employees did take part in the Guysborough election.

Mr. BELL. That is only one department.

Mr. INGRAM. This government is getting into a peculiar strait. We first find the Department of Agriculture trying to administer the Department of Militia. Then we find the Minister of Railways in nearly the same difficulty. Instead of trusting his manager, issuing circulars from the head office to his management in Moncton and allowing his manager to act unfettered and freely, to administer the goverment railways without any partisan interference, and holding him responsible for their management, he himself is putting every obstacle in the way of their management by allowing political interference, placing his manager in a false light. That is the position of the manager to-day, and that will be the position of the manager, I care not how capable a man he may be. You may take the ablest railway manager in America, place Mr. Hays of the Grand Trunk at the head of the government railways of this country, and what will be the result ? The result will be exactly what it is to-day, a large deficit on the government railways. The only way you can avoid that is by giving the manager of the railroad a free hand and holding him responsible for its proper administration. When you do that, instead of having a deficit you will have a surplus, and that is what the people will appreciate. I make this statement boldly to-day, that it is owing to the political administration of that road that we have these deficits from year to year. It is not owing so much to incompetent management, but it is owing to the fact that the manager's hands are tied so that he cannot administer the road as it ought to be administered. I am sorry that any official should be placed in that awkward position. The officials of that road are interfered with from one end of it to the other, they are subjected to political interference, they have not a free hand.

Mr. KENDALL. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Ingram) says that the Intercolonial is interfered with from end to end on political grounds. Now I represent rather an important end of that railway. For forty miles that road runs through my constituency. I think we have at least 150 men employed on the Intercolonial living within the bounds of my constituency—my colleague says 250. Now I want the House to accept this statement: Since 1896 my colleague and myself together have had the right of recommendation to employment, the right of patronage on that road, and up to this moment I am unaware that a single man has been foisted upon that road, that a single recommendation made by my colleague or myself to the management for employment, has been accepted unless the man was required, and I challenge contradiction of that statement. Now I wish to make another statement. In 1896 the manager of that road called up a number of men and said: You, you, you, are in the black books of the Conservative party; go to Mr. So-and-so, or to Mr. So-and-so, and place yourselves right with the Conservative party.

Mr. HAGGART. What was the name of the manager of the road who did that?

Mr. KENDALL. His head was taken off. It was Mr. McLennan, station agent, who had charge of the employment of labour at that point. The former Conservative member for Richmond was returned by a small majority made up mostly by Intercolonial Railway employees who had a right to vote only in Sydney but who, after voting there, went on and voted in Inverness, and after voting there, went on and voted in Richmond county. We might have dealt severely with these men, but my colleague and I——

Mr. INGRAM. 'We'? I understood the hon. gentleman to say that they did not interfere with the management of this road.

Mr. KENDALL. I will answer that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why had they not a right to vote in Richmond county?

Mr. KENDALL. Their names were on the list, but they were not paid in Richmond county. Their names were wrongfully on the list, they were also wrongfully on the list in Inverness county and they voted not only in two counties but in three counties on the same day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That was perfectly legal.

Mr. KENDALL. It may have been legal, but it was evidence of partisanship. I may say that these very persons admitted that it was not their desire to so act but they said they were compelled to do so by the management of the road. We might have dealt with these men severely but we did not do so. We recognized that they were almost compelled to act as they did and those who remained still enjoy their positions on the road and many of them have been promoted under the present administration. When the 1900 election came on no such undue political pressure was brought to bear. I took it upon myself, and I think my colleague did the same, to have it published to the men on the Intercolonial Railway that they were at liberty to vote as they wished and some voted for us and some against us. Some of those who have voted against us have been preferred in their lines. I wish further to accentuate what I said to the hon. member for East Elgin when he challenged contradiction of the statement that the Cape Breton end of the Intercolonial Railway was overmanned by political interference.

Mr. INGRAM. If I were making such a statement as that which the hon. gentleman has made, I could not prove my case more conclusively. I live alongside of several railways. Imagine my going to the management and saying: You must put this man on, or this man must be dismissed. It should be no part of the patronage of a government member living alongside of a government railway to recommend and force the employment of any men on the line.

Mr. EMMERSON. How long have you held that view?

Mr. INGRAM. Always.

Mr. EMMERSON. And your friends alongside of you?

Mr. INGRAM. Yes, Sir; and I also held that view when I was on that side of the House. I am one of those who entertained that view on that side of the House as well as on this side of the House, and I had the courage of my convictions.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think you were very much in the minority then.

Mr. INGRAM. I am in a happy minority now, but I am glad to know I am right, and I have proved out of the mouth of hon. gentlemen opposite, by means of the statements they have been making this afternoon, that it should be no part of the patronage of government members to say who shall be on the railway and who shall not be on the railway. That should not constitute a part of the patronage of the government, but the management of the government railway should have a free hand. If hon. gentlemen opposite do not like that, let them create a commission and hand in their recommendations to that commission, and if the commission think they require the services of any of these applicants let them employ them. Then you will have a better system than you have to-day. But so long as you have the system that you have to-day, you will have the same interference that my hon. friend has spoken of, namely, political interference. The very moment that men come forward with applications to hon. gentlemen opposite what do they do? They say: We are Liberals; we will support you, and we want employment on the government road. Of course, if you get these men's votes you are willing to support their applications, and you do your best to get them employment on the road. You do not consider whether the road requires them or not, you are interested in getting the men employment on the road, because by getting them employment you get their support. I know what government supporters do; I have been there. I have been on the government side of the House, and I know that government members did the same thing as you are doing now in that regard. I found fault with it there, and I find fault with it here. I am willing to go so far as to say that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals does not know all these little things. Some of them he no doubt does know, but he knows what the system is, and the system is that which I am condemning, because it is wrong.

Mr. EMMERSON. Did the hon. gentleman ever bring to the notice of the House that his friends were exercising undue influence, or did he express the ideas which he now holds and favours? I call his attention also to the fact that the hon. member for South Lanark said that the system which he has been depicting now did not prevail under his regime, although my hon. friend says that it did prevail then in the same way as it does to-day.

Mr. INGRAM. I said that government patronage was exercised then on the same lines as it is to-day.

Mr. EMMERSON. Did you move a resolution to have it changed?

Mr. INGRAM. No, Sir; I got up in the House and condemned it, and I propose to do so as long as I am a member of this House, because in doing that I am doing my duty. It is not necessary to move a resolution. If the hon. gentleman will read 'Hansard' for several years back, he will find my views recorded against that system, and if the people understood to what extent the government railways are administered in that way, they would rise up in their might and condemn it.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I thought the object of our meeting here to-day was to pass these supplementary estimates for the Department of Railways and Canals, and it is time that all this trash and nonsense were dispensed with.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend from Victoria, Nova Scotia (Mr. Ross) is always correcting the House upon these small questions. I would like to read to the hon. gentleman a letter, and to ask him whether he holds the same views now that he did in 1874, when he was Minister of Militia in Mr. Mackenzie's government?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) that that letter was a forgery, and that I never wrote it.

Mr. BLAIN. Here is the letter:

Balls Creek,
February 5, 1874.

Mr. Dennis Egan,
North Sydney.

Dear Sir,—I must inform you that the government expects every man in its employ to vote for its supporters. This being the case I wish you to proceed to Sydney mines and poll your vote for Mr. M. Mackay.

Yours, &c.,
(Sgd.) WM. ROSS,
Minister of Militia.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). Mr. Chairman, I was returned by acclamation at the general election in 1874, I was returned by acclamation in the general election in 1872, I was returned in the general election in 1867, a record that no man who was ever in this House has had before.

Mr. COCHRANE. That has nothing to do with this letter.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). Just excuse me. After I won my election I went to the county of Cape Breton to assist Newton M. McKay, now deceased, in his election, and I stayed at Ball's Creek. A sleigh drove up, and I was asked to write a letter to Dennis Egan. I said that in my election in my own county officials of the government were allowed to vote against me, and that I would not do there what I was asked to do. The sleigh drove back, and a man from North Sydney, W. Exmore, now dead, wrote that letter and signed my name to it—forged that letter.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. Certainly, it is a matter of history.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). It is a matter of history. When that letter was brought up at the time I was Minister of Militia and Defence, I asked to have it produced and placed on the table of the House, but it was never done. They dared not produce it, and I say, before my Maker in heaven, that I never wrote that letter. I have said that publicly many times before this, and it is most disgraceful to bring that trash up now in this House. If there is any trash to be brought up in this House, that hon. gentleman is capable of doing it. It is scandalous.

Mr. BLAIN. It is quite evident that the hon. gentleman was pretty close when the letter was written.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I was not within five miles of where the letter was written.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No; he will not take it back.

Mr. BLAIN. I am reading from the report of session 1874.

Mr. McDonald (Cape Breton) said that when they made the charge a few evenings ago, the gentleman did not give the statement a denial, and therefore he considered he stood convicted of the charge. He might say in reference to the letter, that he attained possession of it the second day after the election. He knew the handwriting of the hon. Minister of Militia, and was satisfied that it was written by him. He had since shown the letter to several gentlemen who also said it was written by the Minister of Militia. He handed the letter to the right hon. member for Kingson and had not seen it since.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I asked at that time that the letter should be produced and laid on the table of the House, and if it had been written by me I should have acknowledged it before the whole House. What was the reply? The reply was that it was in the possession of Doctor Tupper, then in Montreal; and they dared not bring it before the House, because they knew I never wrote it.

Mr. SPROULE. Why did'nt the hon. member deny it then?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. member (Mr. Ross) did not deny it then and he has never prosecuted any one for being charged with writing it.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I never had an opportunity to prosecute.

Mr. INGRAM. He waited until the gentleman was dead and now he gets brave. I am surprised at my canny friend (Hon. Mr. Ross) getting angry.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). Does my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) mean to say that I wrote that letter? I deny it before this House and before my Father in Heaven.

Mr. INGRAM. I have not missed my hon. friend on his long journey.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. Cowardly.

Mr. INGRAM. Cowardly! The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross) did not deny it then, and he never prosecuted the man——

Some hon. MEMBERS. He denies it now.

Mr. EMMERSON. He never had the letter on which to prosecute.

Mr. INGRAM. My hon. friend said——

Mr. GALLIHER. Why don't you apologize frankly when you are wrong?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I will make another explanation. The editor of the North Sydney 'Herald' who at that time was as prominent a partisan and supporter of the Conservative party as there existed in Cape Breton, denied it in an editorial at that time and I have that editorial in my possession among my private papers. The editor of that paper said that he could see the man who wrote that letter every day. I found out afterwards who wrote it, and I challenged the government and the man who made the charge against me to prove it. It was not a man from the province of Nova Scotia, but they got a man from the province of New Brunswick to do it. I challenged them to produce the letter and put it on the table of the House and it was never done. They knew better.

Mr. INGRAM. I understand that the man who made the charge is alive to-day, and if the hon. gentleman wants to prosecute him; I suppose he can.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). That man knew better than to make the charge, but he gave it to a man in New Brunswick who is not living, and who was afterwards elevated to be a judge of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross) has denied writing the letter himself; he has not said that he had not any knowledge of it.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I had no knowledge of it at all until I heard it was produced in this House.

Mr. GALLIHER. Oh, take it back.

Mr. INGRAM. Take what back? Better save your time because I don't have to take it back.

Mr. GALLIHER. Don't you think it would be a manly thing to take it back?

Mr. INGRAM. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Galliher) is addressing his remarks to me, I can tell him that I have nothing to take back. It is for the man who made the statement to take it back.

Mr. BUREAU. And you are endorsing that statement.

Mr. INGRAM. It is a matter of record.

Mr. BUREAU. False record.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. It does appear to me that after the statement of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Ross) it is not fair; it is not worthy the position of any member of this House to suggest that such a fraud has taken place. Out of respect to the dignity of parliament it is not proper to suggest that what my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Ross) has said, is not true. The hon. gentleman has given this a most unqualified denial. Surely there is something due from one gentleman to another in this House, especially when you consider that my hon. friend (Mr. Ross) is a veteran of this House ; one of the oldest parliamentarians in Canada ; a gentleman approaching four score years. I do think that something is due to the occasion, and to a respected and venerable member of this House.

Mr. INGRAM. I have nothing to take back.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Ross) states to the House that he did not write the letter or authorize it, we are bound to accept his statement. Pehaps it was a little unfortunate that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross) undertook to lecture the House about the manner of conducting business. We are entitled to our own opinions as to the criticism which we are disposed to offer. While there is not one of us who has not the utmost respect and esteem for the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Ross) still, possibly his remarks just now were a little uncalled for and they very likely led to the incident which has just taken place. In view of his denial that he wrote or authorized the letter, I think we should at once accept his statement, and I would ask my hon. friends on this side of the House to let the incident drop.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. INGRAM. I was discussing the question under debate in this House——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You were perfectly right.

Mr. INGRAM. And I shall further discuss that question notwithstanding the hon. member from Victoria (Mr. Ross). Personally I have nothing to retract, and I don't propose to retract. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross) thinks that we are discussing rot in connection with this item, let me draw his attention to what the item is, and probably he may change his mind. We are discussing a vote of $6,500,000 for working expenses on the Intercolonial Railway. If that is rot to the member for Victoria, it is not rot to me. In this vote is included the employment of unnecessary men on the Intercolonial Railway and in this vote is included a lot of money which will be wasted on political friends and political management. I am perfectly within my rights when I am discussing that, and I do not propose to take any lectures from the member for Victoria (Mr. Ross).

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). You have been discussing the Guysborough election for the better part of the day.

Mr. INGRAM. Yes, and that is perfectly in order. No body has heard my friend (Hon. Mr. Ross) find fault with the government, and if we waited until he rose in his place and discussed this and other items, there would be very little discussion and a very short session indeed.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. So much the better.

Mr. INGRAM. Here is another fresh one who has just come in.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Better be too fresh than too rusty.

Mr. INGRAM. When my young friend is a few years in the House he will learn to hang his hat on a peg. He will know less in the next five or six years than he thinks he knows to-day. Let me give him a piece of advice : don't be quite so fresh my young friend and you will get along better. I have no desire to prolong the discussion on this item ; I have said all I want to say on it, and what I have said, I believe to be correct.

Mr. HAGGART. I wish to get the information which the minister promised with reference to the expenditure on capital account on the Intercolonial Railway and the Prince Edward Island railways.

Mr. EMMERSON. I will get the information. The general manager has retired.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Not permanently retired.

Mr. EMMERSON. No ; voluntarily retired for the moment.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I do not intend to prolong the discussion, but I suppose it will be expected that something should be heard from me as the question of the Guysborough election has been so long under discussion this afternoon. I think, Sir, it is unfortunate that we should have to waste the time of the House at this late hour of the session in fighting over our petty election contests, but there does not seem to be anything too petty to engage the attention of some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. For a number of weeks I have noticed a great deal of anonymous correspondence in the Conservative press throughout the country, with reference to the Guysborough election.

In this correspondence all sorts of crimes and misdemeanours are charged against the good people of the county which I have the honour to represent. Not only has there been anonymous correspondence of this character, but there have been similar editorials in some of these journals. These charges have been reiterated so often that it appeared to me that an attempt was being made to repeat these false statements so often that some credulous persons would accept them. I have made it a rule in the short time I have been in public life to take very little notice of the statements made by anonymous correspondents in newspapers, and I think I might apply the same rule to the editorial attacks of some of those journals. At the same time I do not wish it to be understood by hon. gentlemen opposite or by any one that I would like to avoid discussion in regard to the Guysborough election. I am quite willing that every transaction, so far as I know them, in regard to the Guysborough election should have the fullest and the widest publicity throughout the Dominion of Canada. The Liberals of Guysborough on that occasion fought a clean and an honest fight and won a very signal victory in the face of the most determined and persistent campaign of slander and misrepresentation and open and flagrant bribery on the part of the Conservative party. In this election we had some new experiences, such as we have never before had in the province of Nova Scotia. For the first time in the history of political warfare in Nova Scotia we had men introduced into the county from outside whom I shall describe as professional bribers, men whose faces we had never seen before, and whose names, post office addresses or places of residence, we could not discover. Two of these suspicious characters operated in the polling booth where I happened to be on election day. They did not belong to the polling district of Whitehead. They did not belong to the county of Guysborough and I feel confident that they did not belong to the province of Nova Scotia. They dropped down there at that polling booth at eight o'clock on the morning of election day and at five o'clock they disappeared ; they folded their tents like the Arabs and as silently stole away.

The question arises : Where did they come from, and who supplied the funds they were paying out so lavishly on election day.

Mr. EMMERSON. The Montreal 'Star.'

Mr. SINCLAIR. In that particular booth where I was, I saw these men. I did not see them carrying on their operations, I did not see them pay out money, but I know they occupied a room close to the polling booth, and also carried on their operations in an adjoining shed, from which the fumes of whisky—bad whisky, I was told—emanated. The question arises who sent them there and who supplied the funds they were spending on that occasion. They could not have been sent by my opponent, Mr. Giffin, because he is a very pious and respectable gentleman, who would have nothing to do with anything of the kind. The organizer of the Conservative party, Charles E. Tanner, of Pictou, was in the county for a few days ; he seemed to be taking a very active interest in the campaign although I believe he only addressed one meeting. But Mr. Tanner could not have had anything to do with these outside people because he has always condemned anything of that kind. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) was also in the county for ten or twelve days during the election. I understood that he was in charge of the campaign in the western end of the county, not in the district where I was myself. I presume he does not know anything about where these men came from or what they were doing in the constituency. The agent of the Montreal 'Star' was in the province at the time and appeared to be directing the campaign.

Mr. KENDALL. Surely that must be a mistake, because I can assure the hon. gentleman that I saw the representative of the Montreal 'Star' during the famous Tupper-Murray campaign in 1896, and he seemed to be rather favouring the Liberals in Cape Breton county.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I do not want to hint that the Montreal 'Star' had anything to do with this, because every one knows that the Montreal 'Star' is an independent journal. I do not know that any one can say where they came from or who sent them or who supplied the money so lavishly. They may have come of their own accord and may have been using their own money for anything I know.

After all the abuse that has been heaped on our devoted heads by the Conservative papers during the last three months about this Guysborough election and about the part taken in it by Dominion officials, it seems to have come down to one case. I take very little account of the names read here, by hon. gentlemen opposite. They have secured the names of certain men in the public service in Guysborough and have said that they were told by some one that these men took an active part in the election. I do not know that they took an active part. Some gentlemen in discussing this question wanted me to deny that they did. I am not aware that those gentlemen did take an active part and there is not the slightest proof that they did. It appears that it comes down to the name of one man, a Mr. LeBlanc, and that they have secured some evidence that that man took some part in that election. They scoured Guysborough from end to end, for evidence in respect to this matter and we are told by the Truro 'Sun' an organ of the Conservative party in Nova Scotia that a representative of the Montreal 'Star' came to the province for that special purpose and spent about a week in the province looking up information, and yet they have only been able to discover one man against whom they can make a definite charge. Counting all the Dominon officials there, postmasters, and fishery officers and custom house officers and railway employees, I suppose there are between two hundred and three hundred men in that constituency alone, and if they are only able to find one who has actually overstepped the bounds and done something that he should not have done in this election, I think that is not a very bad showing for the Liberal party. In the case of this solitary official I am told that he was not then in the employ of the Intercolonial Railway; that he obtained three months leave of absence owing to some accident that had happened to him and was not fitted for work. It was during his vacation that he took his little trip down to Guysborough. I am informed that is a fact and I believe it to be true. Do you imagine, if the position was reversed and hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, that we would only have to complain of the interference of one official in Guysborough? Under the system that prevailed prior to 1896 nearly every single official was an election agent of the Conservative party and they were expected to be election agents. The bounty cheques, for example, were used as a sort of campaign fund in Guysborough in those days and I am informed that the time for the distribution of these cheques was arranged so that they were handed out to the fishermen at the time that the Conservative candidate was making his canvass along the shore. Another scheme was to levy fines against the fishermen for political purposes, fines that were never attempted to be collected. A fisherman was selected and was charged with having small lobsters in his possession or some such offence and a fine of $15 or $20 was entered against him but no attempt was made to collect the fine. Then, when an election came on, we would have a list of the names of these fishermen along the shore of that county—and I believe of every county in Nova Scotia—that were popularly known as lobster votes. We used to mark opposite them that they were lobster votes and we could not expect to get any of them to support the Liberal party. The heelers of the Conservative party came to these men and said: If you vote for the Conservative candidate, this fine will not be collected; but if you vote for the Liberal candidate, a distress warrant will be issued to-morrow morning. In this way they used to hold the fines over these people and secure their votes from election to election. These were some of the methods adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite when in power. That was only eight short years ago, but since they have got into opposition they have grown very pure and go into hysterics over the case of one official who took an active part in an election.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the hon. gentleman give us the name of one fisherman who was dealt with in that way?

Mr. SINCLAIR. They will be found in a return which was brought down to the House in the year 1891, and they will also probably be found in 'Hansard,' because this matter was then discussed in the House. Hon. gentlemen opposite take the ground that no man who is an official of the government should have anything to do with an election, but they surely do not forget that when they were in office we had some 200 revising barristers, many of whom were active and offensive partisans. They were the men who made the lists and decided who should and who should not vote. The discussion we are having to-day seems to have been deliberately planned by our hon. friends opposite. It is nearly two months since the Truro 'Sun' made the following announcement:—

> During the recent by-election in Guysborough, Mr. B. A. Macnab, a Montreal newspaper man, well known in the commercial metropolis, journeyed to New Glasgow. There he remained a week. His presence in that place drew from the local Grit paper a perfect tirade of abuse. The visitor was accused of being a corruptionist; he was styled a second edition of 'Cap.' Sullivan. A more flagrant series of prima facie libels could not well be conceived.
>
> Mr. Mcnab made no sign. He left New Glasgow when his work was over. What that work was is now becoming apparent. The revelations of corrupt methods employed in the Guysborough campaign are alleged to be due to his initiative. It would appear that during the campaign he had arranged a plan to bring to light the devious methods of the Liberals. And now, day by day, some new phase of crooked work is being brought out. The climax will, it is said, be reached when the matter is brought up in the House of Commons in connection with the passage of salaries, in the estimates, of some of the government employees who took an active part in the fight. The affidavits in these particular cases are said to be very interesting.

We did have one affidavit mentioned by the hon. member for Pictou, but I do not think he told us the name of the man who made it, nor did he give us the whole affidavit. He read some remarks from a paper which he said was an affidavit, and said that Mr. LeBlanc had taken an active part in this election. The Truro 'Sun' is one of the leading organs of the Conservative party in Nova Scotia. The editor of that paper is said to be high up in the ranks of that party and ought to know what he is talking about. He tells us that Mr. McNab came to Glasgow and remained there a week without making any sign. He is evidently a mysterious character is Mr. McNab. He was to old a campaigner to make any sign by which his real mission to Nova Scotia might be understood. The 'Sun' goes on to say that he was the author of all these revelations which we have been having in the Conservative papers with regard to that county. In other words, that he was the instigator of all these slanders and falsehoods scattered throughout Canada in the Conservative press regarding the people of Guysborough. The statements of the 'Sun' may or may not be true, but I have it on good evidence that the room which this hon. gentleman occupied at the Norfolk House at New Glasgow seemed to be the headquarters of the Conservative party and was the place where the Conservative agents and heelers got their instructions before starting out on their various routes for the county of Guysborough. I am not charging Mr. McNab with having done anything out of the way because personally I have no knowledge and have no charge to make against him. He may have been distributing religious tracts or prayer books, for aught I know.

Mr. COWAN. It is not likely.

Mr. SINCLAIR. But I find the explanation of the 'Sun' rather peculiar that he remained there a whole week getting up imaginary revelations, and revelations which were not given to the public for something like six weeks after the election was over and therefore could have no part in the result. That, however, was the explanation given by the 'Sun.' We were told that the climax would be reached when this matter would be brought up in the House of Commons. I suppose it is the climax we are having to-day. There is certainly a great deal of noise over a very small matter, but that is becoming characteristic of hon. gentlemen opposite. To quote the language indulged in by the great D. V. Johnson's ghost in the 'Rejected Addresses,' it is not the first time this session, Mr. Speaker, that the parturient mountain to your left has been in labour and has brought forth a muscipular abortion. These hon. gentlemen opposite attacked the Prime Minister over the non-production of the memorandum of the Grand Trunk Pacific and later on attacked the Minister of Railways because he would not make a speech, but when he did, there was not a single man on that side who undertook to answer it. Their recent attack on the Minister of Agriculture also was another evidence of a great deal of ado about nothing, and to-day it seems we are reaching the climax. I do not wish to be understood as advocating a policy of employing Dominion officials to do campaign work, but when one is discovered doing work of this kind, he ought to have the sympathy of hon. gentlemen opposite. They themselves furnished us with an illustrious example in the case of Sir Charles Tupper. It will be remembered that in 1891 or 1892, when Sir Charles Tupper, Bart., was High Commissioner of Canada, drawing a large salary from the people, he came across the Atlantic, and while his salary was still running, stumped Nova Scotia in the interests of the Conservative party. The Liberals in this House then protested. They said it was not fair that a man at the very head of the civil service, drawing a very large salary, should be allowed to conduct himself in that way, but I have yet to hear that any hon. gentleman opposite ever protested against his conduct.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. member say that Sir Charles Tupper was drawing his salary while he was here in Canada ?

Mr. SINCLAIR. He was still in office and High Commissioner and I presume he was.

Mr. SPROULE. My recollection is that he made the statement that he was not.

Mr. SINCLAIR. If the hon. gentleman would say that Sir Charles Tupper did not draw his salary during the month or two he was stumping Nova Scotia, I will take his word.

Mr. SPROULE. Sir Charles Tupper himself denied that. Surely his denial ought to be accepted.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Would it be considered proper for a civil servant, by simply refusing to accept his salary for the time he was transgressing, to act in the manner referred to ?

Mr. SPROULE. That has nothing to do with it. It is a question of fact.

Mr. SINCLAIR. If that happens to be the case, it is like the case of the men we have been discussing. Mr. LeBlanc who was off duty for a few month on furlough. If that is an excuse for Sir Charles, a similar excuse should not be denied to Mr. LeBlanc. It is only a few weeks ago that the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) brought to the attention of the House a very glaring case that happened prior to 1896, that of a Mr. McKay who drew $20 a day from the treasury during a certain period while he was engaged in stumping and organizing the west in the interest of the Conservative party. Now, under the system that was carried on during that period nearly every official was an election agent of the Conservative party. I do not say that was right, but I say as I said before, that when an official now is discovered in an indiscretion of this kind he should have the sincere sympathy of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. Reference has been made during this debate to my friend Mr. John A. Kirk, of Dorchester. For many years Mr. Kirk occupied a prominent and honourable position in this House. I have no doubt that his word will be taken by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, and that when he makes a statement that he did not take an active part in the election, he will be believed. I am certain he will be believed by the people who know him best in the county he formerly represented. It will be remembered that a few weeks ago reference was made to a visit made by Mr. Kirk to St. Mary's, by the Halifax 'Herald'; and Mr. Kirk wrote a letter to the 'Herald' which I will take the liberty to read :

To the editor of the Halifax 'Herald.'

Sir,—I am sure you will be fair enough to permit me to correct a statement you were induced to make by some one who 'told you,' as you say in your comment, on the extract taken from the Sydney 'Post' in the 'Herald' of the 26th inst., under the heading of 'Officials,' to the effect that I was 'ordered by the government to take part in the campaign' on the occasion of the election recently held in Guysborough. I beg to say that I was not ordered or even asked by the government, or by any member of it, or by any one in anyway connected with it, or for that matter, by any one else to take part in the Guysborough election campaign held on the 16th March last, nor did I take any part in that campaign further than to deposit my ballot at Glenelg, an act which I am sure you will not characterize as offensive, or say that I have no right to do. I made no attempt to influence any elector in the exercise of his franchise, the threats of affidavits to the contrary notwithstanding.

I am pleased to say that I met many old friends of both parties with whom I had very pleasant chats during the three or four hours I remained at the Forks, my old home, on the 16th March.

(Sgd.) J. A. KIRK.

Dorchester, N.B., May 27, 1904.

I think that ought to clear up the record with regard to Mr. Kirk. He went to St. Mary's, his old home ; he went there for the purpose of voting for the Liberal candidate —I have no doubt that that is what he went for—he deposited his ballot and no more. He did not canvass any of the electors, or attempt to influence the vote of any elector, or take any part in the election. Why should his name be bandied about in the newspapers or hints be thrown out on the floor of this House that he had done something that he should not have done ? I feel that hon. members should exonerate Mr. Kirk, and I believe that such statements will not be repeated, because, I have not the slightest doubt that every word that Mr. Kirk has written in regard to this incident is true.

I was a little surprised that the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) should make reference to corrupt practices on the part of the Liberal party in the Guysborough election. I do not know that it is a good thing to wash our dirty linen here, but, if the hon. gentleman wants to discuss the question of corruption in connection with the Guysborough election, I am quite ready. If he wishes to compare the conduct of the Liberal party with that of the Conservative party in that election, I am prepared to discuss that question. I am ready to show the hon. gentleman certain facts that he would not care to bear the responsibility of or to have proven against his party. I have some proof under my hand that will be very interesting to the House, but may not be so interesting to hon. gentlemen on the other side. It involves the names of a number of gentlemen and I am quite willing, if it is thought necessary by the hon. gentlemen on the other side to go on——

Mr. BELL. Go on.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sinclair) can take his own course so far as I am concerned. I stated, as I am prepared to state again, that one of these men had made very important declarations as to the part he had taken in the election, statements that indicated that he had not very much regard for the election law. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether it is or is not the fact that Mr. George N. Grant, inspector of cold storage plants, with a salary and allowances of $2,167, is president of the Liberal Association of Guysborough ?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I think that is true.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did he take no part in the election ?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I do not know whether he took any active part.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sinclair) know that Mr. Grant did not take an active part ?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I am not aware that he took an active part. The president of the Liberal association is very often a figure head. I have been asked by hon. gentlemen on the other side to discuss this question of corrupt practices in the Guysborough election. That is my excuse for trespassing any longer on the time of the House. A great many charges have been made in the public press regarding corrupt practices by the Liberals, but I notice that there is an utter absence of detail. Our opponents have had an opportunity to protest that election, but they let that opportunity go by. It was an election that certainly aroused a great deal of interest in the eastern part of Nova Scotia, as well as in other parts of Canada, and, if there was anything done by the Liberal party on that occasion that they ought not to have done there is not the slightest doubt they would have taken the occasion to protest that election. On that occasion I had the assistance for a few days of Mr. E. M. MacDonald, M.P.P., of Pictou. I do not need to tell hon. members of this House who Mr. MacDonald is. He is one of the rising young men of Nova Scotia, and I am looking forward to the time after the next general election when he will take his seat in this House as a supporter of the government and representative of the once Conservative but now Liberal county of Pictou. I asked Mr. MacDonald, who was present at one of the polling booths at that election to give me a statement of the facts that came under his personal knowledge. I was aware that certain things were done in the polling booth at which I was, as I have already told the committee, and was aware that similar things were being done in other polling booths in the county. Mr. MacDonald wrote :

With reference to matters in Guysborough, I beg to state to you some things that occurred during my stay in the county. I may say I arrived there the evening before nomination day and spoke in Guysborough nomination night, in Port Mulgrave on Thursday night, and returned to Guysborough with Premier Murray on Friday afternoon. I left Guysborough on Saturday with the premier and drove to Canso, spoke there that night, and Monday morning I drove to Port Felix where I addressed a meeting that night, and on Tuesday afternoon I spoke at Charlos Cove, and Tuesday evening at Larry's River, remaining there until election evening when I drove to Guysborough. On nomination day there appeared at Guysborough a man whom I afterwards discovered to be Mr. Prieur, of Montreal, who was closeted that evening in Grant's Hotel with Messrs. Chas. E. Tanner and E. C. Gregory.

Charles E. Tanner is the leader of the Conservative party in the local legislature of Nova Scotia ; he is the Conservative organizer in that province and the leader of such opposition as we have there :

On arriving at Charlos Cove I found that he had been there at the house of Charles Richard since the previous Thursday and that he was accompanied by a man whom the people in that locality called 'Twiger,' which was evidently an assumed name. I found that he had not had any meetings but had been sending for people in that vicinity and interviewing them privately during the week he had been there, and that his conduct had been exceedingly mysterious and wholly different from that of a man who was looking for votes on the ground of principle. On Tuesday afternoon I called at the house where he was but he declined to see me in response to a message I sent to his room inviting him to come to my meeting, the answer was that he was no speaker and did not take any part in meetings. The next day he appeared at Larry's River poll and had his headquarters in the house of a man named Michael Pelrine. His companion 'Twiger' appeared as the agent of Giffin under the name of 'Switzer.' Giffin, the Conservative candidate, was also in and about the house during the day, and from which drunken men emanated throughout the day. That Prieur was not engaged in discussing politics with the electors was evident, and one man, William Petipas, told me he had received money from him to vote for Giffin and that he had taken an oath to vote that way. Before leaving Port Felix on Tuesday morning I discovered that two men whose names were not known, and who I think did not belong to Nova Scotia, were there working in the interests of the Conservative party. In addition to these two men and Prieur and Switzer, the following men were in the county who did not address meetings :—John Baillie, Pictou ; H. V. Jennison, New Glasgow ; Mr. Simson, Halifax, who worked in Queensport district ; Mr. Parsons, Halifax ; Joseph A. Gillies, Sydney. Tanner spoke at only one meeting while he was there for a week, and other persons whose names I do not know.

Now, Sir, on that occasion in addition to the parties named by Mr. MacDonald the county was overrun by Conservative heelers of all sorts. We found their tracks in the snowbanks, everywhere over the county. There was another gentleman by the name of Francois LeMarchand who figured in that election. I am told he was one of the secret agents of the Conservative party. He made no speeches, took no part in public meetings, but when the elections was over he became garrulous. He visited the town of Guysborough and made certain statements to a gentleman by the name of Floyd, who has sent me an account of the statements made by Le Marchand. Mr. Floyd is a young barrister of that town, and he makes this declaration :

Dominion of Canada,
Province of Nova Scotia,
County of Guysborough.
To wit :

I, D. P. Floyd, of Guysborough, in the county of Guysborough, barrister, do solemnly declare that :

1. I board at Grant's Hotel at Guysborough, Nova Scotia.

2. Between the 24th and 31st day of April, 1904, while in the smoking room or office of said hotel at Guysborough aforesaid, a young man, who had been pointed out to me previously as François Le Marchand, entered and engaged me in conversation.

3. He represented himself as the agent for the Halifax 'Herald' and 'Mail,' and announced his intention of getting the said 'Mail' into as many homes as possible in Guysborough county. He asked me to subscribe and I, not stating to what party I belonged, refused on the ground that the editorials were of a very low order of merit and intimated that I regretted this very much. In this view he concurred.

4. Growing confidential he stated that he not only had the 'Mail' to use for election purposes, but that he had nineteen thousand dollars to spend in the county of Gyusborough, or as he expressed it, 'to place' in the county before the next election, and that it must be placed to proper advantage. I then remarked 'You must have spent considerable at the recent election. In view of the fact that it did not do the work intended, it is strange that you are going to expend more.' He replied, 'The trouble was that the money did not get into the proper hands. Certain men got it and used it injudiciously. Look at the result at White Head ? Had I control of the funds in other districts I could accomplish the same results.' I said, 'There must have been a great deal of money used in purchasing votes at the recent election.' 'How much do you suppose,' he asked. I replied 'about fifteen thousand.' 'More than that,' he said, 'there was twenty-seven thousand dollars spent by the Conservatives in the late election in this county. I do not know where it came from, but there was lots of the stuff. I got a bonus of $750 from the 'Mail' for my work.' This was what he said in substance.

5. The said François Le Marchand remained about a week in Guysborough and, as I am advised and believe, got very few subscribers for the 'Herald' or 'Mail.'

6. I am advised and believe, that the said François Le Marchand spent some time in White Head working for the Conservative candidate, S. R. Giffin, prior to the recent election, and visited other districts in the county previous to said election.

7. The said François Le Marchand, at the above-mentioned interview, stated that he was preparing an article from Guysborough county for the 'Herald' and 'Mail,' but did not say that he was writing over the pen name 'Oculus.'

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of 'The Canada Evidence Act, 1893.'

Declared before me at Guysborough, in the county of Guysborough, this 6th day of June, A.D. 1904.

D. P. FLOYD.

JOHN W. DAVIS,
A Justice of the Peace in and for the county of Guysborough.

Mr. BELL. Who signed that?

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. D. P. Floyd, barrister of Guysborough. Now, I think perhaps hon. gentlemen opposite have had enough of these details.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I have mountains of information here. Our friends opposite are losing interest in this discussion, but I will give them one more sample brick. The Conservative newspapers have been charging the Liberals of Guysborough with having used intoxicating liquors to corrupt the electorate on that occasion. I may explain that the reason why these declarations have been sent to me is no doubt the fact that the Conservative newspapers in Nova Scotia have been stating that solemn declarations were going to be produced in the House relating to the acts of corruption on behalf of the government in the Guysborough election. These statements got abroad, and a great many people have sent me declarations of the facts that occurred, out of which I have selected a few. Mr. Aikens, of Mulgrave, makes the following solemn declaration:—

Canada.
Province of Nova Scotia,
County of Guysborough, N.S.

I, E. E. Aikins, of Mulgrave, in the county of Guysborough, merchant, do solemnly declare:

1. That I am an elector of the county of Guysborough, and reside at said Mulgrave.

2. That I know Robert Peeples, also an elector of the said county, and a resident of the polling section of Mulgrave, and had a conversation with him a few days prior to the by-election held in the county of Guysborough on the 16th day of March last.

3. The said Robert Peeples is an active Conservative in the said district of Mulgrave; and I am informed and believe was a member of the committee of that party at that election.

4. I say that the said Robert Peeples on the occasion of the conversation referred to above, informed me that the said Conservtive party had a barrel of whisky which they intended to use for the purpose of influencing electors to vote for the Conservative party and asked me if I would deal it out in their interest; which I refused to do.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously, believing the same to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath, and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

Declared and signed this 9th day of June, 1904, before me.

E. E. AIKINS.

WM. S. WYLDE, J.P.

Now, Sir, I am informed, although I do not know anything personally about this, that it takes about 100 flasks of whisky to fill a barrel. Mr. Giffin on that occasion got 65 votes at Mulgrave. The Conservative party must have given to each voter about one and a half flasks of whisky if that calculation is correct. The Conservative candidate got over 1,600 votes in that election and if they treated them all with the same liberality with which they treated the people of Mulgrave they must have supplied about 2,500 flasks of whisky on that occasion. Still the editor of the Truro 'Sun' turns up the whites of his eyes and talks about the Grits getting votes by the whisky method.

There was another charge made against certain people in Guysborough in reference to decimating the electoral lists to which I think I may be permitted to refer for a few moments as it has become current throughout Canada in the Conservative papers. I will not refer to it if hon. gentlemen opposite object to me doing so. I did intend on a former occasion to take the opportunity of saying something about that question which has been very persistently discussed throughout the Conservative press and by the Liberal press too. As far as I can discover, the charges are without foundation. The charges were made by an anonymous correspondent in the Halifax 'Herald' signing himself 'Oculus.' He gave what appeared to be a great number of facts regarding a number of names which he said had been struck from the electoral list of the district of St. Mary's. This was published also with black headlines in the Montreal 'Star,' and a great many editorials have been written in regard to it. The charge was also published in the Toronto 'Mail.' While I do not wish to weary the House by reading the letter of 'Oculus,' I may be permitted to read to the committee an abstract of it taken from the Toronto 'Mail.' The 'Mail' says:

Some startling disclosures have been made by an examination of the methods employed to keep Guysborough, N.S., in the list of Liberal constituencies. The riding consists of two municipalities, one of which is known as St. Mary's. In the recent by-election St. Mary's increased its Liberal majority by 77, although a smaller vote was polled. This led to inquiry. It appears that just previous to the election the names of 83 Conservatives had been deliberately and surreptitiously struck off the voters' list.

I want hon. gentlemen to note that. The statement is that just previous to the election the names of Conservative voters were struck off the lists surreptitiously. I am going to explain that it is impossible that this thing could be done and that it was not done.

It seems remarkable that this is possible in spite of the legal safeguards. Yet the scheme to defraud these electors was carefully planned. For federal elections we now accept the provincial lists which are compiled from the municipal records. The Liberals in St. Mary's, therefore, got control of the municipal machinery. Then they excluded all Conservatives from the assessors and the board of revisers, who have to do with the preparation of the municipal lists. Without notice to the parties concerned, and without even posting the preliminary lists, as required by law, the revisers struck off the names of 83 Conservatives whose qualifications for voting are undoubted. The thing was done so quietly that the by-election was on before the imposition was discovered. Then it was too late to enforce a remedy by legal means. That the plot was deliberately laid can hardly be denied since only Conservatives were made to suffer, and the whole business was done in the dark. The proceedings are so scandalous and so contrary to fairness that the exposure ought to be sufficient to effect punishment and redress.

This is a specimen of the editorials which are appearing in the leading Conservative newspapers in regard to this matter. The first statement is that the Liberals obtained a majority of 77 in the district of St. Mary's in excess of the majority they obtained in 1900, and the reason given by this newspaper is that the names of 83 Conservatives were struck from the lists thus enabling the Liberals to get a majority in that section. The municipality of St. Mary's consists of seven polling divisions and four of these divisions along the Atlantic seaboard comprise electoral district No. 1, and it is in the following districts that it is said the lists were tampered with : Mary Joseph, Liscomb, Sherbrooke and Port Hillford. Now as a matter of fact there was practically no increase in the vote polled for the Liberal candidate in Revisal District No 1. The increase was made in the remaining sections of St. Mary's where no question whatever arose about the lists. The editor says that :

Without notice to the parties concerned, and without even posting the preliminary lists, as required by law, the revisers struck off the names of 83 Conservatives.

I have a statement under oath from the reviser, Mr. Ross, who appears to have acted as chairman of the Board, that the facts were altogether exaggerated, that instead of 83 Conservatives being struck off, there were only 21 names altogether consisting of both Liberals and Conservatives struck off, in this revision that took place one year prior to the election held on the 16th March and that out of these 21 names there was not a single one of them that should not have been struck off, except half a dozen, and those were struck off in an error made in copying the list. Three of the six were Conservatives and three Liberals so that there could not have been anything political in connection with that, and it could have had no result whatever on the election. These are the facts as set forth in the declaration of Mr. Ross. It is said in the editorial that we have here that this was not discovered until it was too late. We begin the revision of the lists in Nova Scotia on the 20th January in each year. That revision is closed on the 18th March and the lists on which this election was run were completed and closed on the 18th March, 1903. The election did not take place until the 16th March, 1904, and there could be no change whatever in the lists between these dates. When they are completed the lists are deposited with the county clerk and any person has the right to get a copy. The county clerk sends them to the King's Printer and these lists on which this election was run were printed early in the summer of 1903, at the time that this House was in session. They were circulated amongst Conservatives as well as Liberals. I have no doubt that Mr. Gregory in the autumn of 1903, got his 21 copies of the lists for the election held on the 16th March, 1904, and that he was in possession of these for seven or eight months prior to the election. We heard no complaint. The municipal councils appoint these revisers. The municipal council at St. Mary's held two meetings during the period between the time these lists were made and the time that the election was run and there was no complaint made before the municipal council in regard to the conduct of the revisers or that of their officers. The local legislature of Nova Scotia held one session between these dates and the Conservative organizer, Mr. Tanner, who is the leader of the opposition in the local house, made no complaint in regard to the lists in Guysborough. We had six weeks of public discussion in that county. There was scarcely a schoolhouse or a hall in that county during the election in which there were not orators on both sides addressing the people and I never heard of any complaint being made in regard to the lists in Guysborough until six weeks after the election was over and the letter of 'Oculus' was first printed. If the names of a large number of Conservatives were surreptitiously struck from the lists a few days before the election would not the changes have been rung at every meeting in every schoolhouse during the election upon that fact ?

Mr. BELL. Did any one ever make the statement that these names were struck from the lists a few days before the election ?

Mr. SINCLAIR. Yes, I have read it.

Mr. BELL. This is not in the letter of 'Oculus.' That is only a summary the hon. gentleman has read. It is not the original.

Mr. SINCLAIR. It was said persistently by every Conservative newspaper. It may not be in the letter of 'Oculus.' I am not certain as I have not the letter here.

Mr. BELL. I do not think it was.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Then it is admitted that it was not a few days before the election ?

Mr. BELL. No one ever said it was.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Oh, yes; it is persistently stated by the Conservative papers that it was a few days before the election when it must have been at least a year before. I simply want to correct that statement, because it would be simply impossible for that to be done. The list was revised a whole year prior to the election and the Conservatives had the same opportunity of placing their names on the list as the Liberals had.

Mr. BELL. Not quite as good.

Mr. SINCLAIR. They had the same chance exactly. I wish also to draw attention to the fact that there was not a single appeal. We provide an appeal court in the province of Nova Scotia so that gentlemen who are not satisfied with the decision of the local reviser can appeal to the sheriff of the constituency. The sheriff holds his court in the main part of the constituency the eastern district, and the chief deputy sheriff Mr. Davis, holds the court in the west. I asked the deputy sheriff to give me a report as to whether there was any complaint as regards the revision of the lists upon which this election was held and this is what Mr. Davis says :

Guysborough, N.S., May 14, 1904.

J. H. Sinclair, M.P.,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—In reply to your inquiry of the 10th inst., about the number of appeals from the decision of the local revisers of electoral lists for the district of St. Mary's that came before me. I have attended at the office of the municipal clerk for the district of St. Mary's in accordance with Franchise Act, revised statutes, sixth series, for the years 1902-3-4, and I beg to inform you that no appeals were made to me.

Yours respectfully,
(Sgd.) JOSEPH M. DAVIS,
Chief deputy sheriff for the county of Guysborough.

It appears, therefore, that there was not a single one dissatisfied with the decisions of the local revisers at the time the revision was made ; or else, they took so little interest in it that they did not go to see whether their names were on the list or not.

There was no difficulty in the way of their ascertaining if their names were on the lists. The municipal clerk lives in the town where these things were said to have been done ; his office is there ; the list of electors is deposited in his office, and any man in the constituency has the right to walk in to his office and demand an inspection of the lists. If any injustice were done to them, they had the privilege of appealing to the sheriff, which privilege they did not take advantage of. To put the whole question beyond dispute, Mr. Ross, the chairman of the Board of Revisers made a solemn declaration in which he says :

Canada.
Province of Nova Scotia,
County of Guysborough.

I, George W. Ross, of Sherbrooke, in the county of Guysborough, magistrate, do solemnly declare :

That I am one of the revisers of electoral list for revisal, section No. 1, in the municipality of St. Mary's, Guysborough county. That I have been such reviser for a number of years, A.D. 1901-2-3-4. That no appeal, in any of these years, has ever been taken by the Conservatives or any one else, from any decision of the revisers of this section to the sheriff's court. During all these years no application to register the name of a voter, or would be voter, has been improperly or illegally refused or rejected by the revisers in this section. That from A.D. 1900 to the date of this declaration, the Conservatives have never made a single application to the revisers to strike a name or names from the electoral lists of this revisal section. That I posted the electoral lists for Sonora and Sherbrooke polling districts in each and every of the above-mentioned years in every respect as required by law. That I have been assured by the other two revisers of this section that they posted the electoral lists in the remaining polling districts of this revisal section, in a similar manner and from other information as well as I believe they did so. That I have carefully read the charges made in a certain letter signed 'Oculus,' which appeared in the Halifax 'Herald' newspaper bearing date May 4th, 1904. That these said charges are absolutely false and without a shadow of foundation in fact. That the lists 'Oculus' gives in the above-mentioned letter (purporting to represent the names of seventy-seven illegally disfranchised Conservatives) include names of men without property who have not been in the province of Nova Scotia for years, of men who have been dead for years, of insane men without property or income, of Liberals who never voted Conservative, of manufactured men (no men answering to such names having ever been in this revisal section), of aliens, of men whose names were not on the electoral lists in the first place and including also an escaped criminal without property or income qualification. That one of the names in these lists, that of George Kaiser, sr., is that of a man not only insane but also a pauper, an inmate of the poor house for the last three years. That as a matter of fact only twenty-one out of eighty-two names given by 'Oculus' were struck off at the revision in A.D. 1903, which was the revision of electoral lists just prior to the by-election of March 16th, 1904, and that not all of the owners of the names then struck off were alive when the names were removed. That three Conservatives and three Liberals all voting on property were unintentionally omitted by a clerical error in copying the final lists in 1903. That this to the best of my knowledge and belief is the full extent of the injury caused either of the parties by errors or partisanship of the revisers. That as to income voters more Liberals have been omitted from the lists than Conservatives, but that I believe the decision in each and every such case was right and would be upheld in any court of law. That in the case of property holders above referred to when the revisers discovered the error, these six names were restored by them without solicitation, at the next revision and are now upon the lists. That at the revision of electoral lists March 5th, A.D. 1904, there were present the revisers, C. W. Pye representing the Liberals and Newman H. McDonald and H. F. Harding in support of other applications. That out of the lists of eighty-two names cited by 'Oculus' as disfranchised and referred to above, only fourteen applications to add to the electoral lists for A.D. 1904, were made by the Conservatives, the owners of thirty-nine of those names are alive and in this county, without the Conservatives making any effort to secure them the franchise. That as touching the pronounced Conservative leanings of those on the lists cited by 'Oculus' in the Halifax 'Herald' as before referred to, in the polling districts of Sherbrooke and Sonora, the Liberals added sixteen names from those lists of, 'Oculus,' the Conservatives only four, their total applications being six, and two they were unable to qualify. That as far as my knowledge goes, intentional wrong by the revisers in this revisal section No. 1 was never intended or committed. I have the fullest confidence in the integrity of my associate revisers, Messrs. Pye and Reid, and I firmly believe that did not their absence from the county, preclude them from making a careful review of the necessary document, they would be pleased to join with me in every part of this declaration, or to make independent declarations of the same tenor, covering their term of office.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously, believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

Declared before me at the town of Sherbrooke, in the county of Guysborough, this 26th day of May, A.D. 1904.

G. W. ROSS.

W. D. R. CAMERON,
A commissioner,
For taking affidavits in the Supreme Court for county of Guysborough.

The complaint was made that names were left on the list that should have been taken off, but the reviser declares that there was not a single application to strike names off. You will notice that the Conservatives complain that the name of Geo. Keiser was not found on the list of electors, and they charge the reviser with the criminal offence of striking it off improperly, but it turns out that Mr. Geo. Keiser is an insane man who was supported at the expense of the district. It will be noted also that there were twenty-one names struck off in these four polling districts, and that is not a very large average of men to become disqualified during the year. This declaration of Mr. Ross was published in the Halifax 'Chronicle,' the 'Eastern Chronicle,' New Glasgow, the Montreal 'Witness,' the Montreal 'Herald,' and no one has ventured to question what Mr. Ross has stated. I have already said that no complaint was made to the municipal council or to the local legislature or to any source, until several weeks after the election was over.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Pardon me. Did not 'Oculus' write a letter in answer to that?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I think he did.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then it is hardly right to say that no one has questioned it. As the hon. gentleman has read the affidavit or letter or whatever it is; instead of saying that it had never been questioned, he should have read the answer as well, if he desired to present a fair case to the House.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I would be quite willing to read that letter of 'Oculus,' if I had it. However, I do not think the answer has any bearing upon the matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The rest of us might like to form a conclusion.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I would be very pleased to put the answer on record if it is the only answer the Conservatives can make. But let me say that in the first place it is an anonymous answer, and no person has had the courage to make a statement at all over his own signature in regard to this. Now Sir, the only person who did attempt to make any change in the electoral lists in the constituency on that occasion, was Chas. E. Tanner the Conservative organizer in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Tanner approached the returning officer, who is a layman, not a lawyer, and made an application for the addition of certain Conservative names to the electoral list a few days before the election and he attempted to insist on these names being added, saying that there was legal authority for doing so. He got the returning officer into a good deal of confusion but the returning officer refused and very properly refused to add any name to the official list sent him on which the election was to be conducted. This was the only attempt made to tamper with the list in the county of Guysborough during that election. It was a bold and impudent attempt to tamper with the lists and was prevented by the refusal of the returning officer to do what was asked by Mr. Tanner. On the strength of these so called revelations, which are not signed by anybody and for whom no person will become responsible, we have been read a great many lectures by the Conservative papers in Canada in which we are told that it is of the first importance that there should be no interference with the lists. I wish to place myself on record as agreeing with that principle, that it is of the utmost importance to the people of this country that no man should be allowed to tamper with the ballots and that there should be a fair revision of the lists on every occasion. I can assure hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House who do not belong to Nova Scotia and who may have read some of these articles in the Conservative papers throughout Canada in regard to the manner in which the lists are revised in that province, that we have a fair and just revision of the lists and that there is no real reason to complain. I know that we have men on both sides who will try to take advantage of their oppenents and to get their own men on the list and keep the others off. But we have every safeguard around the franchise in Nova Scotia and no man need complain who takes interest enough in his own affairs to see that his name is recorded. I know of only one case in the history of this country when this right, which every Canadian holds dear was in danger and that was the occasion of the introduction by the predecessors of hon. gentlemen opposite of that precious piece of legislation known as the Dominion Franchise Act. That Act threw the whole question of revising the lists into the hands of partisan revising barristers. These were the only people who had the right to decide whether a man should vote or not vote. That system was created and maintained for the purpose of loading the dice; it was one of the greatest outrages ever perpetrated on a free people and the political party which is responsible for the Dominion Franchise Act and for the Act by which the counties of Ontario were gerrymandered should not find any fault with the Franchise Act of Nova Scotia.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does my hon. friend say that all the revising officers in Nova Scotia were Conservative partisans ? I understood him to make that statement.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Most of them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think he said all of them. Was not Judge Morse of Amherst county, county judge, was not Judge Savary of Annapolis one, and was not Judge Blanchard of Kentville another of those revising officers ? I think I could name others.

Mr. SINCLAIR. That is three out of two hundred. I did not mean to say all. I think I guarded that statement. I did not mean that they were all partisans but I quite understand that in localities where there was a resident county judge, we had the benefit of his decisions in this respect, but in other counties, where there was not a resident judge, we had to take the decisions of partisan revising barristers. That was the position of affairs during that period. I know that hon. gentlemen opposite have said over and over again that they are not responsible for what their predecessors did and I do not hold them responsible in the same sense, that I hold them responsible for the things which they do themselves. At the same time they are constantly reminding us of the achievements of their party in the past and it is only right and fair that they should be kept in a humble, lowly and penitent state of mind by being occasionally reminded of the depths of depravity to which their party sank during the period in which they had the power to control the franchise of the people of Canada.

Mr. BELL. I shall not detain the House very long in replying to the remarks of my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair). I have no doubt that he has had this upon his stomach, so to speak, for some time, and it is therefore only fair that the House should have patience and allow him to get rid of it. I was careful in introducing the subject to the committee to make as little reference as possible to the Guysborough election, because I do not approve of discussing provincial matters in the House. I therefore introduced the subject at the proper time, during the criticism of the estimates of the Minister of Railways and called attention to the action of some officials with the least possible reference to the Guysborough election. Without any reference at all to reports and rumours, I based what I had to say on what I believed to be authentic information and invited the minister to give us the opportunity, by the appointment of a commissioner, to prove the truth of what I have stated. My hon. friend has gone very far afield. He has developed to a large extent the party view of the recent election in Guysborough and he has filled me with pride in the opposition by informing us that that party had at its control in this election large sums of money. I knew that we had virtue. I knew that we had industry and a good cause, but I did not know that we had the money. If my hon. friend had devoted his time to telling what he knew, instead of what he did not know, he could have given us some very valuable information indeed. He could have told us the course of certain cheques that were cashed at banking agencies in Halifax just about that time and which possibly found their way in the course of time to Guysborough.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I could not, Mr. Chairman. I am not aware that any cheques at all were cashed on that occasion relating to my election.

Mr. BELL. I accept the hon. gentleman's statement. I presume my hon. friend was prudent enough to take care not to know much about it. Possibly, however, some other people know a little more. The hon. gentleman has entertained the House with his revelations as to the crimes and the crookedness of the Conservative party during that election ; and if I ever heard anything absolutely farcical it was the unfolding of his evidence on that point. Anything more grotesque and absolutely ridiculous, was never given in the hearing of this House. It was absolutely 'vox, et praeterea nihil.' There is nothing to it, just rumours and suspicions. He has spoken of certain men named Switzer and Twiger. A man must have a name and there has been no evidence to show that the men did not give their own names.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Prime Minister has justified that on another occasion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Justified what?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Going under an anonymous name. The instance he cited was the Prince of Wales. He said that the Prince of Wales travelled anonymously and why should not an officer of this government travel anonymously ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is a good example.

Mr. BELL. I do not know how far these assertions that these gentlemen were travelling under incorrect names are true. I recall, however, one matter which was ventilated in this House in which case no less a gentleman than the father of the Solicitor General of this parliament was proved to have made his appearance, during an election in the Magdalen Islands and there to have represented his distinguished son under an assumed name. He was Mr. Lemieux when he went to the Magdalen Islands, but in the stimulating air of that district his name grew to Lamirande in the course of a night. Why should not other people have the privilege also of travelling incognito?

The funniest thing of all was that the hon. gentleman has succeeded—and I regret to say in connection with my own country—in disinterring the gentleman who must forever pass as the chiefest of all the suckers in this world of ours, who met a gentleman called by my hon. friend François Le Marchand, who informed this gullible gentleman that he had $27,000 to spend on the last election. I regret very much that Mr. Floyd's habitat has been established in Nova Scotia, for I would like the people to believe that we are not altogether simpletons in that county down by the sea. No man has ever taken the trouble to prove by affidavit that he has been made a fool of to such an extent as our friend Mr. Floyd. Then we had a long statement from Mr. E. M. Macdonald, which contains absolutely nothing whatever. If he does not prove himself better at running elections than at drawing affidavits, it will take him some time to get hold of the county of Pictou ; and if he does not know more about running elections in the county of Pictou than he has shown he does in the county of Guysborough, he cannot be very dangerous, and I need not feel much alarmed. But why did the hon. gentleman not give the names of those who found their way into the county of Guysborough in his own interests ? He mentioned three or four who had gone there to represent the Conservative party, and said that the snow banks were covered with their tracks. But a gentleman who was recently his legal partner in New Glasgow was there, and there was no mark of his tracks on any of the snow banks. He had a much more comfortable means of conveyance. He was driven through the county by the gentleman who was deputy returning officer. The deputy returning officer drove my hon. friend's late law partner, and he carried a very suggestive looking little satchel, of which he took great care. I did not hear that Mr. Patterson addressed any public meeting, but he and his friend the sheriff did drive from house to house, and never parted company with that precious little satchel. I am willing to assume that my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) did not know anything about money in this election. I am willing to assume that it was a perfectly purely conducted election, although there were some surprising turns over in the vote. But when he undertakes to read the Conservative party a lecture on the use of liquor, I think he must have braced himself up with some kind of a bracer—possibly something of the kind that was used plentifully in that campaign. It is not possible that he was altogether ignorant of the fact that a good deal of spirit was thrown into the operation of the Liberal party on that occasion by the old custom of putting spirits down to keep their spirits up. There was a good deal of that sort of thing done, and I am much pleased to find that he regrets that that ancient and time-honoured custom was ever followed. The hon. gentleman made some comments reflecting on a gentleman named Mr. McNab, of Montreal. I am glad, however, that he showed more caution in his strictures than was displayed by the writers of certain articles in the Nova Scotia press. Mr. McNab is a clever and estimable gentleman, who has been undeservedly treated with a great deal of undeserved ignominy by the press of hon. gentlemen opposite. The articles written concerning him were not signed for most excellent reasons, but I regret very much for the fair fame of our province that a gentleman could not go into the neighbourhood of the county of Guysborough, when an election was about to take place, without being treated with such foul abuse as was heaped on Mr. McNab. As an instance of the extremes to which the partisans of hon. gentlemen opposite went, I might mention that one of them in my own county expressed the great regret he felt that Mr. McNab had not broken his wretched neck on his way home. I might say that Mr. McNab was never in Guysborough. He was in the town of New Glasgow, where I saw him, and certainly there was nothing improper in his conduct in that town. He was there acting as any gentleman might whose business had brought him to that place. Why does the hon. gentleman single out this gentleman and not mention any of the other estimable men who were in the county at that time? Why did he not mention Mr. Kirk, who left the Dorchester penitentiary and went all the way to Guysborough, and spent there a long winter day, from eight in the morning until five o'clock in the evening, in the vicinity of the polls? Why did he not mention also my friend Mr. Dickie, who was there in the interests of the party opposite, and who had not even a vote in that county, as far as I know, or any particular business apart from politics?

Mr. SINCLAIR. Perhaps the hon. gentleman did not notice that Mr. Kirk said he was only there three or four hours.

Mr. BELL. I have credible information to the effect that he was there all day, and I am not disposed to quarrel with my information, which comes from two or three different sources. He did spend many hours in an open sleigh in the immediate vicinity of the polling place. Was he there acting as guard over some of the whisky which was used there in the interests of my hon. friend? Then, again, the premier of Nova Scotia was there, and also Mr. Macdonald, of the county of Pictou, and Mr. Patterson and a host of others. Why were they not singled out by the hon. gentleman for comment? But I would ask what is there to prevent anybody from going into that county if he should take an active interest in any election there? No one would question on this side the right of any citizen to take part in an election, who is free to do so. Why, then, should my hon. friend spend so much of our valuable time in telling us that certain gentlemen had gone into that county to take part in an election? Surely that is the most natural thing to do. Not long ago I had the pleasure of meeting my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) in a county in which he does not live, and I expect to meet him again in several counties in Nova Scotia during the next campaign. It is a part of the duty of public men to take part in an election campaign. If our hon. friend had taken up our valuable time in telling us what he does know, we might derive some benefit from his remarks, but all he did was discuss things of which he has not any personal knowledge. All he did was to indulge in a mass of surmises which were absurd on their face, and he demonstrated their absurdity by this affidavit of Mr. Floyd. If anything would show that the hon. gentleman was not fit to represent a constituency in that province, it is the fact that he seriously discussed such an absurd affidavit, and indulged in such ridiculous surmises. My hon. friend went into the question of the electoral lists, but why deal with that question here? That question has been thoroughly discussed in the public press. I was in the county myself, and I know that in the St. Mary's district, where I was working, some eighty names were not on the list which should have been there, and this was due to the fact that in that municipality the lists are prepared by revisers appointed by the county council, and that county council is composed of some five or six Liberals and not one Conservative. And in that district there has not yet been appointed one reviser or assessor within the memory of man who is not a partisan of hon. gentlemen opposite. Although these men have to perform judicial duties, they are, without exception, selected from the ranks of the party opposite. Every member of the council is a Grit, and every appointment made, if it has attached to it a salary of 25 cents, is made from the ranks of the Grit party.

Every electoral list prepared in that county is prepared by these men, and my hon. friend knows as well as I do that some of them are not over-scrupulous. He read an affidavit from a gentleman named Ross, who says, for the purpose of misleading the public outside the county of Guysborough, that one of the men left off the list was an escaped criminal. What are the facts?

John Biard did not leave Sherbrooke until after the 1903 revision. He had been on, and there was no change in his circumstances, yet he was struck off. In the spring of 1903, after the revision, he was convicted under the Scott Act of having paid for and passed over to another man one bottle of liquor. That is the criminal warrant. A conviction under the Scott Act is known to be no disqualification under the Scott Act.

Here is a man whose affidavit is read in this House, a man who puts what is practically a lie in his affidavit in order to mislead persons in other portions of Canada who do not know the facts. I need not, after that sample, pursue my inquiries on the character of the Ross affidavit. In the neighbourhood in which he has lived there is no occasion to do so for he is too well known. I could deal with other points in this affidavit, but it is not necessary. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sinclair) could not close without a fling at the Dominion Franchise Act. And yet the government which he supports and on whose behalf he pounds his desk so vigourously themselves proposed to pass a Franchise Act with regard to one province because they have lost temporarily control of the government of that province. But they were compelled to drop the bone they thought to carry away. They may hope, in a short time to recover control, but they could not afford to wait. They were quite willing to fly in the face of the principle which they themselves had so often declared for by taking the control of the lists out of provincial hands. The moment a province gets out of their control they are ready to enact for it the law that they denounced so generally and so loudly. The hon. gentleman was not over ingenuous in what he said about the Franchise Act. He said that it was passed to enable the former government to appoint partisan revising officers. He spoke of this as being for the whole of Canada—he mentioned two hundred counties, and, though he was not quite right as to the number, it is evident that he had the whole of Canada in mind. He said that the late Conservative government had imposed upon Canada electoral lists made up by partisan barristers. His reputation for strict adherence to facts will not rise very rapidly in this House if he continues to make such statements. He was compelled to acknowledge his error. Being a practising barrister in his own province he could hardly have failed to know that in many of the counties in Nova Scotia, the revising officers were the judges, and in Ontario, it was almost the rule to have the county court judges perform this function. To my mind it would have been better if the hon. gentleman had not made his speech. He will not add much to his reputation for judgment and sincerity by such speeches, and he has not added much to the esteem in which the people of his county will be held when he produces and reads such absurd affidavits as those to which he has treated the House to-day. He read the statement of Mr. MacDonald which, I think, the House will agree was a ridiculous statement. He might have done better if that hon. gentleman—I do not know that I should say 'honourable' for it seems a misuse of the term to use it in that connection had prepared his list of voters, Mr. MacDonald was on trial before the grand jury of my county for presenting to the sheriff, who was revising officer, affidavits which had been forged and falsified, and he very narrowly escaped spending a portion of his years in a public institution where his keep would not have been at all costly to him.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Will the hon. gentleman tell the House the result of that trial ?

Mr. BELL. The result was that the grand jury did not bring in a Bill. There was a friendly judge on the bench and Mr. MacDonald was allowed to go before the grand jury and succeeded in begging off. But there was no question about the facts and he never denied them. If he had brought his talent to bear the hon. gentleman would have had even a better list than that on which he ran and which was a very good one for him, because, to my knowledge, some eighty names were left off the list, and of these almost all were Conservatives. They were not quite all Conservatives—and this will serve to show how nicely this Grit machine works. There were a few Liberals left off, and why ? Because, in a previous municipal election they had ventured to vote for certain men for municipal office who were not acceptable to the Grit machine. That machine cuts off the heads not only of those whom it is not able to control for Dominion elections, but even those who will not obey its behests in municipal elections. Altogether my hon. friend (Mr. Sinclair) might better have left this matter where it should have been left to be discussed—in Guysborough and in Nova Scotia. It is not proper to introduce such subjects in this House. In beginning the few remarks I thought fit to offer I took care to make no reference to my hon. friend. I simply called attention of the Minister of Railways to the fact that certain of his officials were alleged to have taken an active part in elections. My hon. friend has admitted that one government official is president of the Liberal Association of Guysborough. All I wanted to do was to call the attention of the Minister of Railways to the facts and to ask him whether he proposed to apply in these cases the principle laid down by his leader in 1897. When we challenge the conduct of the government in dismissing men for alleged partisanship, the principle was laid down by the right hon. leader of the government that a public official was free to vote as he chose, but was not allowed to take a more active part in political contests. I will watch—and so will others along the line of the Intercolonial—to see whether the Minister of Railways is going to live up to the lofty principle enunciated by his leader. I cannot say I expect very much from him. We can hardly fail to recollect that, when our friends on the other side of the House talk about purity in elections, when they proclaim their love and their devotion, their adoration even, for purity and high principle, it is the same as when certain people talk about honesty—time to button your pockets. We know—it is no matter of hearsay ; it has been proven to a demonstration and is set out broad and clear upon the pages of Canadian history, so that even the most casual reader cannot but note it—that the very things that these gentlemen profess to admire and revere as lofty and pure are the very things that, in practice, they sedulously avoid. They have preached every political virtue and have declared each to be dear to their hearts, but in the practice of these virtues they have been sad failures indeed. If ever a party was branded and stigmatized as being made up of hypocrites, of men wanting in sincerity, that party is the Liberal party of Canada.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

PRIVATE BILLS.

WEST CANADIAN COLLIERIES, LIMITED.

House in committee on Bill (No. 80) respecting the West Canadian Collieries, Limited.—Mr. Oliver.

On the preamble.

Mr. HENDERSON. This is a Bill of considerable importance, and I do not think it is properly understood. I hope the promoter will be able to make a satisfactory explanation of the Bill, and that before it goes through we shall have the assurance of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) or the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) that the matter has been investigated, and that the Bill may be passed.

Mr. OLIVER. The Bill was up for consideration the week before last, and on the joint suggestion of the leader of the opposition and the Minister of Justice, it was held over for consideration by the Justice Department. That consideration has been given. The legal gentlemen acting for the company discussed the Bill with the Department of Justice and made such alterations in it as the officials of the Justice Department suggested. The Bill in that form went before the Private Bills Committee the second time and was agreed to unanimously, and now it comes before the House in Committee for final approval. I am not in a position to discuss the very intricate question that was raised by the leader of the opposition when the Bill was before the House before, but I think it will be agreed that having been dealt with in this way we may fairly consider it as having been put in a satasfactory shape and proper to be accepted by the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not think that explanation is quite sufficient to warrant us in passing this Bill. To my mind it is an extraordinary Bill, it seems to ask for powers to do anything and everything. Though I do not doubt the statement of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) that the Minister of Justice has looked into this Bill, still I think the Minister of Justice should be here and give an assurance to the committee that he regards the Bill as one that ought to receive the sanction of this House. But so far as I am concerned I do not think it should.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As for the preamble I think it is in a very much better shape now than it was before. It reads now as follows :

Whereas the West Canadian Collieries, Limited, hereinafter called the company, has by its petition represented that it was incorporated under 'The Companies Act,' 1862 to 1900, of Great Britain, and has been licensed under 61 Vic., chap. 49 (Dominion) to carry on mining operations in the Yukon and Northwest Territories by license dated the 6th October, 1903.

I assume that all that has been proved to the satisfaction of the committee to which the Bill was referred. Then the preamble proceeds as follows :

Whereas the company has filed a duly certified copy of the company's memorandum and articles of association in the office of the Secretary of State of Canada.

The memorandum and articles of the association correspond to the charter of the company as contained in an Act of parliament, and set forth the powers of the company and the purpose for which it was incorporated. The preamble proceeds as follows :

And whereas the company has, by its petition, prayed that it be enacted as hereinafter set forth, and it is expedient to grant the prayer of the said petition.

Of course we have to consider that in connection with what follows, we are on the preamble now. I do not see any objection to the preamble in its present form.

Mr. SPROULE. The trouble with it is that it is an incorporated company under the Joint Stock Companies Act of England from 1862 to 1900, the Act as amended during that time. It comes over here and receives a license under the Land Act, empowering it to carry on mining, or grazing, or timber business. That license is an entirely different thing from an incorporation. Then we unite that license with the letters of incorporation and embody it in an Act of parliament here, leaving in it all the provisions which the original corporation contained. We do not know what the provisions of the Joint Stock Companies Act were, what powers they have under it, but whatever they are or whatever they were they are renewed here. It seems to me doubtful whether we should pass this Bill. The Minister of Justice above all others ought to be the one to examine it and guide us, otherwise we are practically going it blind.

Mr. OLIVER. I can assure the committee that the Minister of Justice coincided to a great degree with the remarks of the leader of the opposition, and took the responsibility of reviewing the Bill so as to bring it into line with the laws of Canada. I think the committee will remember that I asked him particularly : Do you take the responsibility of doing this, and he said he did. Now he has discharged that responsibility, the Department of Justice has reviewed the Bill, and some changes have been made in it at the request of the Justice Department. The Bill has gone through the Private Bills Committee and so far as the promoters of the Bill are concerned every requirement has been complied with in order to bring it within the rules of the House and within the general procedure in such cases provided.

On section 1,

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Section 1 is struck out and the following inserted :

The company shall be and is hereby recognized throughout the Dominion of Canada as a body corporate and politic by and under the name of the 'West Canadian Collieries, Limited,' but such recognition shall not deprive the company of the power to make such variations in its constitution as it may lawfully make in virtue of the Companies Act, 1862 to 1900, and under the statutes of the Imperial parliament in amendment thereof or substitution therefor ; and such recognition shall not be deemed to authorize or empower the company to exercise in the Dominion of Canada any power or to do any act for the lawful exercise or doing of which an Act of the parliament of Canada would otherwise have been necessary.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would be inclined to think this clause is fairly well guarded now. It has been pointed out that there might be possibly an objection to it. Really there is no very great object in enacting it at all. It practically does not differ from what the law would otherwise be because a company incorporated in a foreign country can in Canada, by virtue of what is known as the comity of nations, carry on its business and is recognized as a corporation internationally by the comity of courtesy of international law. Of course Great Britain has a different legislature from ours although it belongs to the same empire. The same treatment would be given to a company incorporated in a foreign country like the United States, or Germany, or France, so that this section does effect very much change. The section as drafted goes on to make this provision :

—and such recognition shall not be deemed to authorize or empower the company to exercise in the Dominion of Canada any power or to do any act for the lawful exercise or doing of which an Act of the parliament of Canada would otherwise have been necessary.

Therefore, the section does not really seem to me to add very much to what the company might otherwise do, and I suppose it is inserted for the reason that as powers are given further on, it is advisable in the first instance to recognize the company formally by statute, although that recognition does not seem to me as a matter of law to carry the company beyond the position in which it would have found itself under the law apart from this statute altogether. It is quite true that power is reserved to the company to make changes under the English Companies Act, 1862-1900 and to carry on its business in Canada, but it had the right to do that anyway. That is to say that a company incorporated in Great Britain which has a different legislature from our own or incorporated in any foreign country can come to Canada and carry on business, and carrying on business in Canada, it can by virtue of the legislature of this country or under the authority of the legislature of its own country make changes in its constitution or powers and after that, of course, as respects the powers of the company, they are limited by these changes. I do not think there is in the first section anything to which we might reasonably object. There may be a clause further on where very extensive powers are given the company to which some valid objection might be made, but as far as this section is concerned, I do not think there is any objection to be made.

Mr. SPROULE. What position would we be in suppose we wanted to wind up the company ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That depends on a careful examination of the Winding Up Act, but I imagine the company would have to be wound up in Great Britain where its head office is. The courts in Canada would be auxiliary to the courts of Great Britain for that purpose, and we would have the right in this country to see that the assets were so applied that no injustice would be done to Canadian creditors.

Mr. SPROULE. I have had little experience in dealing with a foreign company, and that very troublesome question came up. How should the company be wound up ? You have in the Winding Up Act a provision which sets out how the assets of the company shall be used for the liquidation of its liabilities, but there may be obligations resting upon the company in a foreign country and the question arose as to how the assets should be used. There was a conflict of jurisdiction. What authority would we have to deal with a foreign corporation and use the assets to satisfy the Canadian creditors, while the English creditors, or in the case that I have referred to, the American creditors, would not be satisfied ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. A difficult and important question arises in regard to that. I am not prepared to say that the company might not be wound up in this country. I will not say anything about that at the present moment without investigating the statutes. In cases where companies incorporated in Great Britain have become insolvent while carrying on business in this country the question has sometimes arisen—it has arisen in my own province—whether liens obtained under the law of the province should prevail against the title of the trustee in Great Britain. In my own province we have held that liens granted under the law of our own province should take precedence of the title of the trustee. I do not know whether the same would apply to other provinces. At all events the Canadian creditors would stand in the same position as the creditors in Great Britain. Their rights would be respected, they could file their claims and participate in the assets just in the same same way as the English creditors would. Of course, as far as the winding up of the company is concerned, there would be exactly the same difficulty if this company were not coming to this parliament for its Act of incorporation at all. The company might carry on business in this country without coming to this parliament under the doctrine that I have already mentioned, it might become insolvent and if it had to be wound up, the same difficulties to which my hon. friend has referred would arise in that case.

On section 4, subsection (n).

Mr. HENDERSON. I think it is hardly worth while striking out any of these words because I think that nearly every power that could be given to the company is given. I hardly think it worth while striking out a few words. I think we ought to have some members of the administration here to say that this is a proper Bill, that it has been investigated and examined and that the government is prepared to say that it has the approval of the departmental officers under whose notice it should come, because, to my mind, it is one of those sweeping, blanket charters that covers almost everything, and it will be a very strange matter indeed if it does not come in contact with private interests that we cannot detect from a cursory reading of the Bill.

Mr. OLIVER. I am very sorry that the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) should take the position which he does. I beg to assure him that the Department of Justice has reviewed the Bill, that the amendments contained are amendments suggested by the department and agreed to by the parties promoting the Bill. There cannot be anything more evident than that, by the very fact that the amendments which have been read have conformed to the suggestions then made by the leader of the opposition, and agreed to at that time, measurably at any rate, by the Minister of Justice. The whole of the amendments and the whole of the procedure has been in the last degree regular, and I would think it is hardly fair for the hon. member to practically say that my word in this matter is not good. I beg to assure the House that it is.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have stated that I was quite prepared to take the hon. gentleman's word, but it may be within the recollection of us all that not very long ago he read a very severe lecture to members on this side of the House for being absent when business came before the House. I objected to this Bill when it was last called simply because the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) was absent, and I thought as he was so extremely particular that every hon. member on this side of the House should be in his place, that it was just as well that his Bill should stand over. I notice that neither the Minister of Justice nor the Minister of the Interior is present to-night, and surely one of these ministers should be here to vouch for the propriety of this Bill. Considering the strong position which the promoter of this Bill has taken with regard to members not being in their places when matters of this kind came up, I am disposed to follow his example and to insist that the proper minister be here to vouch for this legislation. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) chooses to read lectures to this side of the House, then when an opportunity occurs we have a perfect right to read a lecture back to him.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are the powers enumerated in section 4 in conformity with those contained in the memorandum or articles of association of the company. I would presume they are, but it is important that we should have some assurance as to that. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) know ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not in a position to answer the question. I repeat that the Private Bills Committee considered the Bill and reported unanimously in favour of it in its present shape. That is the only assurance I can give the committee on the subject.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In England there is practically no restriction to the powers they give to these companies and possibly the provisions of section 4 have simply been copied from the memorandum or article of association of the company as it is now constituted in which case there might be no very great objection to it.

Section agreed to on division.

On section 5,

Mr. HENDERSON. Section 5 seems to give this company extraordinary power. Could it come into the county which I have the honour to represent and erect telegraph and telephone poles through the villages without any restriction whatever. Surely the hon. member (Mr. Oliver) should imagine that the people of this country have some rights. I take no exception because this is an English company ; I am very glad indeed that they are investing capital here to develop the country, but I think there should be some restriction so that we can actually say that we have a little claim upon our own property and some right to go out and in. If it were a Canadian company these restrictions would be placed around it. I can hardly believe for one moment that the Minister of Justice has assented to this Bill, and I must protest against its proceeding tonight until we have some further assurance. I move that the committee rise, report progresss, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. FIELDING. The practice is that all these Bills are dealt with by committees representing the House, and I presume that the committee has inquired into this Bill and given it due consideration. I am not a member of the committee, but I accept the statement of the hon. member (Mr. Oliver) that the Minister of Justice has advised on this Bill, and if so, I presume that he has passsed on this section because there is some provision in the general Act which will protect the municipalities with regard to telephone and telegraph poles. I do not imagine that the Minister of Justice would permit a Bill to go through for the purpose of allowing a company to take possession of the streets of any municipality, and I am bound to believe that there must be some governing provision in the general Act. I am not familiar with the Bill and I cannot say that the Minister of Justice has given attention to all these things but I think it is a fair presumption. If there is any grave objection to the Bill I have no desire to see it pressed to-night.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There may be something in the statement of the minister, but I think further there is no provision in the Bill enabling it to enter upon public highways. As to constructing conduits : that is made subject to the consent of the municipalities. The power to construct telegraph and telegraph lines would not imply power to enter upon the streets.

Mr. FIELDING. Nor on private land without compensation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think there would be much danger so far as that is concerned, but as to conduits I think the limitations in clause 4 are not quite adequate. There are districts in the Northwest Territories which have no municipal government and the provision as to municipal control would not have very much application. I should think it would be in the interests of the constituents of my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) that there should be some further restriction in the Bill as to that.

Mr. OLIVER. If I were understood as saying that the Minister of Justice had personally overlooked this Bill, I did not wish to say so. I say that the officers of his department did.

Mr. FIELDING. That is what I understood.

Mr. OLIVER. And so, I suppose the Minister of Justice would be practically responsible for the amendments that have been made. I think that the point which the leader of the opposition has suggested is well taken. Where there are no municipalities that difficulty, however, could be cured very easily by providing that in such cases the government of the Northwest Territories, who really control all highways, should have the power.

Mr. FIELDING. We might insert the words 'or other authority.'

Mr. OLIVER. I think it would be proper to put in such words as are necessary to make the amendment.

Mr. HYMAN. I may say that this Bill has not been before the Railway Committee at all. I find that under this particular clause the company are taking power to > Construct, operate and dispose of telegraph and telephone lines for the purpose of its undertakings only.

Of course, the words giving the company power to do this for its own purposes form just the usual clause which is put in all Bills, but I think before a matter of this kind is passed in this committee it should be referred to the Railway Committee, which is accustomed to dealing with questions of this kind and which imposes certain safeguards. I also notice in clause 6 :

> The company may, for the purpose of any of its undertakings or for the promotion thereof, construct and operate all such railway sidings, tramways, switches or spur lines, not exceeding ten miles in length, as are necessary to connect the works and properties of the company with each other or with the line of any railway company incorporated by or under the control of parliament.

That is a matter which seems to me to be directly under the power of the Railway Committee. My attention has just been called to these provisions in the Bill, and I think that under the circumstances it should be referred back to the Railway Committee.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I supposed it had gone to the Railway Committee.

Mr. HYMAN. I am explaining that it has not gone to the Railway Committee ; it went to the Private Bills Committee.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I should think it ought to have gone to the Railway Committee.

Mr. HYMAN. I would move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again. In the meantime the Bill should be referred to the Railway Committee.

Mr. COWAN. This matter was fully considered by the Private Bills Committee. This company was an English company incorporated under the laws of England. We in Canada were simply trying to give them the powers which they already had under their English charter, so far as they were consistent with Canadian law. No power of expropriation, as I remember, is granted. They would only have the power to construct a line not to exceed ten miles in length, a spur line for the purposes of their own business, and the telegraph and telephone lines were on the same basis.

Mr. LANCASTER. If they are given the powers suggested by the hon. gentleman, then, under the General Railway Act, they will be able to construct their road upon a public highway if they get the consent of the Railway Commission. It is not the policy of the Railway Committee to allow railways to run on highways without the consent of the municipalities, and that is another reason why it should go to the Railway Committee. I have no doubt that is what was in the mind of the chairman of the Railway Committee (Mr. Hyman) when he asked to have this referred to the Railway Committee.

Mr. COWAN. We do not apply the Railway Act, and there can be no power to enter on highways under this Bill.

Mr. HYMAN. I do not desire to enter upon the merits but certainly clauses 5 and 6 refer to telephones and railways, and that being the case, the Bill ought to be considered by the Railway Committee before it is submitted to the House. That is my only reason for making this motion.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to point out to the committee that the question raised by the acting Minister of Public Works and Chairman of the Railway Committee (Mr. Hyman) was thoroughly considered by the parties who are promoting the Bill ; and as their enterprise is entirely a private one, and as they ask for no powers of a public character, they did not consider that it came under the jurisdiction of the Railway Committee.

Mr. SPROULE. How does the hon. gentleman think that they could obtain the power to build ten miles of railway to connect their works with any line of railway incorporated by this parliament without coming before the Railway Committee ?

Mr. OLIVER. I suppose they would connect just as any other railway would connect or just as any crossing would be made over any other railway, and that would be by obtaining the consent of the Railway Commission. This Bill does not ask for authority to construct a telegraph or telephone or railway line as a public enterprise, but only to construct such for the purposes of operating their coal mines and coak ovens.

Mr. COCHRANE. What is the difference?

Mr. OLIVER. There is all the difference in the world.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Why should they not have that power ?

Mr. OLIVER. Why not ? These people are operating coal mines on a very large scale and also coke ovens. Is this parliament going to say to them : you shall not put up a telephone line between your two sets of coke ovens or coal mines. Or you shall not connect them by a railway ? They are a coal mining company, and they happen to be located some five or six miles distant from the Crow's Nest Pass branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and in order to get their output to market, they must reach that railway by a railway line. They have a railway line from their present coal mines to the Crow's Nest branch under a railway charter, which comes under the Railway Act, and is a public enterprise. They have also other coal mines in other places which are not yet developed, but to which they are prepared to build other railway lines, also secured under charter from this parliament. Where they are building a railway line as a public enterprise, they come under the provisions of the Railway Act, but where they want to lay down a pair of rails for the transport of their own output, they are not asking to be put under the Railway Act.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is that mentioned in their charter ?

Mr. OLIVER. Half the railway charters that come before the Railway Committee contain a list of powers given by the committee which are not connected with railroading at all. This company is asking to be empowered to do certain things but not to be empowered to do them over the heads of other people. That is the difference between the two conditions.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman would admit that if this company asks for power to do a certain thing, we have the right to say on what terms and conditions to sanction the doing of certain things, and this parliament has the right to determine on what conditions they shall be done, and as this is a matter concerning telegraphs, telephones and railway lines, the acting minister is perfectly right in saying that it should come before the Railway Committee.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This discussion is now out of order. The only motion before the Chair is that the committee rise and report.

Mr. HYMAN. That is in connection with the end of clause 5.

Mr. OLIVER. I am trying very hard to show that the motion should not be agreed to. I submit that the question is a general one and must receive a general answer. In reply to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster), the difference is between asking for a privilege and a power.

Mr. LANCASTER. Will the hon. gentleman seriously argue that when the company asks a privilege this House should not say on what terms that privilege would be granted ?

Mr. OLIVER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. LANCASTER. Then if it is a question of a railway, surely he will see that it is the Railway Committee which should deal with it. And the very fact that the hon. member promoting the Bill wants to avoid the Railway Committee may cause members to think that this charter is one that should be scrutinized by that committee. I think he had better accept the suggestion of the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) and have the matter discussed on its merits in that committee.

Mr. OLIVER. I would be the last man in this House to deny the authority of the House to do as it pleases. Parliament is supreme ; it can take away to-day rights that it gave yesterday. I am not arguing against this Bill going before the Railway Committee, but I am arguing against the idea that those who promoted the Bill did not know what they were doing or that they tried to avoid going before the Railway Committee.

Mr. HYMAN. It is not the promoter of the Bill who sends it to the Railway Committee. The promoter comes before the House and asks for certain privileges, and the House refers the matter to the committee that it thinks has jurisdiction.

Mr. OLIVER. But the point I wish to make is that this Bill, according to good legal authority does not need, under the rules of the House, to go to the Railway Committee, inasmuch as it deals with a private and not with a public enterprise. At the same time, if the House says that it must go before the Railway Committee, certainly there is no objection whatever. But there is every objection to the idea being put forward, as was suggested by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) a few moments ago, and as was the logical outcome of the suggestion of the acting Minister of Public Works, that, in the nature of things, it should have gone to the Railway Committee, for we say that in the nature of the case it should not have gone to the Railway Committee.

Mr. BARKER. It seems to me that the proposition of the acting Minister of Public Works is the proper one, if the Bill stands in the form in which it was printed. Section 13 expressly provides that section 195 of the Railway Act, 1903, shall apply to the powers given to the company by paragraph (M) of section 4 of the Bill. Paragraph (M) of the Bill deals with electric powers. And, turning to section 195 you will find many provisions there about municipalities and other matters that ought to be considered by the committee that deals with Railways and Telegraphs.

Mr. HAGGART. In reference to section 6, I think the contention of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) is correct. This only empowers the company to construct and operate such railway sidings, tramways, switches or spur lines not exceeding ten miles in length, as are necessary to connect the works and properties of the company with each other or with any line of railway. I doubt if it gives them power to pass over even a municipal road without the authority of the municipality or of the local legislature of the territories.

Mr. BARKER. But section 195 of the Railway Act expressly applies to lines and wires on the highway, and that section is the one that is applied by section 13 of the Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Further than that, though this Bill may apply only to a railway on the company's own land, there are some provisions of the Railway Act which it might be necessary to call into operation in connection with the work, as, for example, the provisions with regard to the safety of employees and with regard to the safety of the public, especially in the prevention of fires.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no objection.

Progress reported.

Mr. HYMAN. With the consent of the House, I beg to move that Bill (No. 80) respecting the West Canadian Collieries, Limited, be referred to the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) asked for certain information with respect to the capital expenditure on the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways during the past fiscal year. We have not the returns for the month of June—of course, my hon. friend knows that it is impossible to have them at this date. But I can give the figures down to the end of May. On the Intercolonial, the capital expenditure to the end of May was $1,507,975.86 ; and on the Prince Edward Island Railway the capital expenditure for the same period was $364,924.66.

Mr. HAGGART. And what was the expenditure on revenue account ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have given that.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister has given it for the Intercolonial, but not for the Prince Edward Island Railway.

Mr. EMMERSON. The revenue for the Prince Edward Island Railway to the end of April—we have not got the figures later than the end of April—was $189,894.67, and the expenditure was $255,166.41.

Mr. HAGGART. That is for ten months?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is to the end of April.

Mr. SPROULE. Before we dispose of that item, I want to refer to one statement that was made by the member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair). It is proper that I should do so, because of what I call his wholesale slander of the judges, especially those of Ontario. He stated that over 200 partisan revising barristers dealt with the old Franchise Act, and it was desired to do away with them. Now, there are 213 constituencies in Canada, and if there was a revising barrister for each one there would be 213 of them. In Ontario there are 92 constituencies, and if there were one revising barrister for each there would be 92 of them. In these 92 I am within the mark in saying that there were not 16 revising barristers in the province of Ontario outside the judges; most of the ordinary judges are doing that work to-day. That is an attack upon the judges that was unwarrantable, unjustifiable, and which comes with bad grace from a prominent lawyer. It seems to be only a bit of the parrot-like talk that has been indulged in by his friends without any proper justification. I wish to resent on behalf of the judiciary of the country this slander on men who are doing the same work they did for many years. In my riding there are three constituencies and only two judges, and you are obliged to appoint one revising barrister besides these two judges. The law required that the party appointed must be a barrister of five years' standing, because only a barrister of five years' standing was eligible to be appointed a judge. The barrister who did that work for years is now the judge of the county and has been for many years. All over the country the provincial lists where they are used to-day are revised by the very same men. They were judges of the county court then and they are judges to-day; and I have not yet heard, in my part of the country at least, any insinuation by Conservative or Reformer that when they went before these judges or revising barristers they did not get fair-play or were not satisfied.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would also like to say a few words with regard to the observations of the member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair). He took occasion to refer to some gentlemen in the province of Nova Scotia whom I know very well, and characterized them as heelers. The gentlemen whom he named were Mr. Ernest Gregory, with whom I am very well acquainted, Mr. Charles E. Tanner and Mr. Simpson. I do not recollect any other names. I understood him to designate these gentlemen as heelers, if I understood him correctly. I can only say to my hon. friend and to the House that these are very respectable men in the province of Nova Scotia, and I think they will bear comparison with my hon. friend in point of reputation and ability.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I do not think I used that word with regard to these gentlemen who are named. I did have occasion to speak of certain Conservatives, but I did not have these gentlemen in my mind at the time I used that expression. I do not think that what I said would bear the meaning the leader of the opposition seems to have put upon it. At all events, I did not intend that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am very glad my hon. friend did not intend it. I do not see that his words could bear any other construction, because these were the gentlemen he named as having been in the county, and afterwards he referred to Conservative heelers in the county. He referred to some one else, but he did not name the other gentlemen to whom he referred. So far as these gentlemen are concerned, all of them whom I have named—I do not know what Mr. Simpson he refers to, but I do know Mr. Tanner and I know Mr. Gregory—they are accustomed to take an important part in the public life of the province. This was not the first occasion on which they have gone into counties where elections were in progress, and I suppose it is not the first occasion on which my hon. friend has gone into counties where he was not resident when elections were proceeding.

I would also suppose that if my hon. friend desired to make a fair presentation of the irrelevant matter he brought to the attention of the committee, he would not only have read the answer but the letter to which the answer was given, and the reply which was made to that answer. He characterized that answer as absolutely unworthy of notice, and yet one single paragraph of it, read by my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell), absolutely disposed of a very important part of the charge contained in the letter or affidavit of Mr. Ross. In any event, I suppose it would be a fairer course to submit the whole matter to the judgment of the House than to read one side of it.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Will my hon. friend allow me to interrupt him? I would like the hon. gentleman to inform the House who made that answer. I have not yet been able to discover that any reputable person made any reply to Mr. Ross's affidavit, and if the leader of the opposition is able to tell us who it was, I would like very well to have his name.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have no more knowledge of the name than my hon. friend. All I am suggesting is that if the statements of the writer were worthy of being dealt with to the extent of an hour's speech this afternoon, in a carefully prepared effort, with even the impromptu quotations carefully written out, one would suppose that the words to which the answer was given might also have been given to the House in all fairness. Either the observations of this writer were worthy of attention or they were not; my hon. friend seemed to regard them as worthy of attention, and he read the answer to them, but he did not read the response made to that answer. As a matter of fact, he was entirely out of order in bringing the question up on that item. The subject was discussed on this side from a proper standpoint, it was discussed with regard to the action of officers whose salaries were then being voted. The discussion was perfectly in order until my hon. friend took the floor, and then, instead of dealing with the matter which was before the House, he entered into a long disquisition, from carefully prepared notes, upon a certain matter which was not in order at all, for some object best known to himself. The question of the Guysborough election was not before the House; the question before the committee was the action of officers whose salaries are paid by this country. That was the subject we were discussing, the subject which my hon. friend did not discuss except for about five minutes at the commencement of his remarks. I think he would have been of more assistance to the committee in forming a conclusion as to what should be done, if he had devoted his attention to the nine gentlemen—I have the names of twenty here under my hand—whose conduct was being dealt with by hon. gentlemen in this House. That was a proper subject to be discussed, and not the absolutely irrelevant question as to whether or not one party or the other had been guilty of illegal acts in this election. I made no reference, nor did any one on this side of the House, to the conduct of any person except officers of this government. My hon. friend, for some reason which I cannot understand, saw fit to drag in the names of gentlemen who were not officers of this country, whose salaries we were not discussing, and who had just as much right to go into that county and take part in that campaign as had my hon. friend himself. Under these circumstances, I do not think it worth while to deal further with the remarks of my hon. friend, except to say that I think the gentlemen whom I have named can well afford to treat with disdain any animadversions made by my hon. friend on their conduct during that election. I venture to say that any one of them has as honourable a record behind him, and has as good a reputation in the community to which he belongs, as my hon. friend himself, and in saying that I am not intending to make the slightest reflection upon him.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Before the item is passed I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals as the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall) is not in his seat, a question. The hon. member for Cape Breton made the statement this afternoon that: We might have dealt severely with the men who voted against the government. Do I understand from that that the patronage all along the line of the Intercolonial is taken from the members who represent the constituencies along that railway? The Intercolonial Railway is a national road and I think the members in Ontario have as good a right to have a say as to who should be placed in that railway as the members along the line, and I am sure there is not one of us who is anxious that it should be a political line but the best way to bring that about is to allow the members to dictate to the management as to who should be employed upon the road.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is impossible for me to explain to my hon. friend what he is to understand from the remarks made by any other gentleman. If I make a remark and he asks me what he shall understand from it I shall be very happy to tell him. It is refreshing to hear him speak in the way he does. He is certainly a very new member of the House when he ignores the manner of disposing of government patronage either in regard to government railways or in regard to any department of the government.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. You approve of disposing of the patronage?

Mr. EMMERSON. I do. I am not going to be hypocritical about it.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a good deal of force in the contention that there should be no control over appointments on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is a pity we did not commence that twenty years ago.

Mr. SPROULE. It is never too late to begin a good thing. This hon. gentleman pretends to fall back upon the old argument: You did the same as if that were all that was necessary. If it were wrong when done by his opponents it is equally wrong when done by himself. His friends declared that it was wrong during the time they were in opposition, that it was an improper principle, an unsound one and that the railway could not be properly managed as long as it prevailed. Now, when he and his friends get into power why do they not show their faith in their own contentions by adopting a sound principle? Is it too late to do that now? The attention of the country is drawn to it.

Mr. EMMERSON. Constitutional usage would not permit now.

Mr. SPROULE. Has a Minister of the Crown not sufficient backbone in him to say that because a thing is wrong I will not allow it? If he has not, he should not be there. He is unfit for the position and his government are unfit for the position. As a minister of the Crown he ought to have some moral courage to father his principles and his policy whatever it is. If he cannot take that responsibility he is not fit to be a minister of the Crown. I say the attention of the country has been drawn to this subject in such a way that public sentiment would back him up in the course which I suggest. The government railway under his control should be managed upon the same solid business principles that prevail in the management of other railways and when that is done we may hope to see the Intercolonial Railway have something to the good instead of deficits year after year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not understand the position of the Minister of Railways and Canals. I understood him this afternoon to state that all appointments were made only on the recommendation of the executive management of the road.

Mr. EMMERSON. If my hon. friend so understood me he misunderstood me.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What does the hon. gentleman say ?

Mr. EMMERSON. What I said was that there were not forced upon the management of the Intercolonial Railway any men who were not required to be employed on the road.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It would not seem to be going very much further to require that the men be subject to the approval of the executive management of the road. I do not think there is very much of an extension of principle there. If there is any thing in the principle which has been suggested by my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) it certainly means that. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals seems to go half way towards that principle but beyond that he will not go. If the principle is good in one case why not in another ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It would be a most vicious principle if by political influence men were forced on the railway who were not required. But where they do not require men I will say that as long as we have control of the government in Canada and as long as we have a government operated road, the government being responsible for its management, will ask for recommendations from its friends and not for those who are opposed to it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is not the question.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is the question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well then my hon. friend is utterly incapable of understanding the English language.

Mr. EMMERSON. Possibly. That is a nice way of getting out of it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is not a nice way of getting out of it. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals did state that he would act upon the recommendation and opinion of the management as I understood it in respect to the qualification of the men to be employed on the road.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is another question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is not his principle.

Mr. EMMERSON. I never said that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is his principle ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I said that recommendations should be made to the management and that it was for the management to determine as to the fitness of the men recommended, and that we wanted to select these men.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We have the situation defined to a certain extent. As far as the number of men to be employed is concerned the government is to act upon the recommendation of the executive management of the road.

Mr. EMMERSON. As to special fitness ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As to special fitness. Would my hon. friend state in so far as that is concerned if he is to act upon the recommendation of political friends ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He is not ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In what way do the recommendations from political friends come in ? When you come to the question of special fitness, are you to go to the executive management of the road or to the political friends of the government for the time being ? We are discussing not the management of this administration but the management of any administration in Canada. What is the principle ? Are you in the ultimate resort to be governed by the opinion of the executive management of the road, and is that to override the recommendation of the party friends or is the contrary principle to prevail ? Is the recommendation of party friends to override the objections of the executive management which may desire that the position should be otherwise filled ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think the matter is very clear that the recommendations are made by the management. It is for them to determine as to the qualifications and fitness and for them to select those who are qualified. These recommendations are not merely made by one individual. There may be twenty recommended. From any number recommended the ones best fitted for the positions are selected, that being determined by the management. It is a question as to qualifications and fitness.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. From the remarks of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals we can readily see how it is that we have a very large deficit, and when the people realize that the Intercolonial Railway is a political machine practically from one end to the other they certainly will feel that there should be some change made in its management. The hon. member for Cape Breton made the statement this afternoon that: We might have dealt severely with the men who are on that road. He certainly must have connected with himself in that statement the members of the Reform party along the line of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. HAGGART. There is a new doctrine introduced in regard to the appointment of parties to the Intercolonial Railway which was begun under the administration of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and his predecessors. When I was managing the Intercolonial Railway I never interfered with the selection of men for any positions unless perhaps an inspector or a chief officer. The officers of the road had no directions then to take the recommendations of friends of the government. I understand that instructions are now given that a political supporter is to be employed in all cases. That is new doctrine on the Intercolonial Railway introduced by the present government. Just fancy the idea of a government interfering to say who shall be a trackman, or who shall dig a ditch on the Intercolonial Railway.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Did the hon. gentleman adopt a similar policy with regard to appointments on the Welland canal?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not remember that there was any other policy. I do not know that I ever interfered with any appointment on the Welland canal; I may have, but certainly I never interfered with appointments on the government railways. I never gave the officials to understand that they were to employ supporters of the government.

Some hon. MEMBERS. But they always did.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I do not know what the practice of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) was with regard to appointments on the Intercolonial Railway, but certainly on the Welland canal which was under his jurisdiction, it was notorious throughout the province of Ontario, that lockmen and other workingmen on the canal were appointed upon the recommendation of the Tory member for the constituency.

Mr. FIELDING. And I beg to say that it was quite right that the appointments should be so made. I do not endorse the idea that it was wrong to make these appointments on the recommendation of the member for the constituency. The first consideration must be fitness for the work, and there is a fair presumption that you could get men in either political party fit to discharge most of these duties. When the friends of the government of the day are beyond question fit to do the work, why should not the preference be given to them? What the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) says about appointments on the Intercolonial Railway under the Conservative government, will be looked upon as a supreme joke along the whole length of that road. The idea that appointments were made to the staff of the Intercolonial Railway by the Conservative government, irrespective of politics, cannot be taken seriously. It was looked upon as legitimate patronage, and so long as capable and honest men were appointed there is no fault to find. If, on the Welland canal, or on the Intercolonial Railway, my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) appointed persons of capacity and character on the recommendation of the member representing the constituency through which the canal or railway ran, then he has nothing to apologize for. It was perfectly legitimate and fair, always provided that the persons so appointed were of good character and capable to discharge their duties.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Finance says that my statement may be looked upon as a joke. He has the manager of the Intercolonial Railway beside him, and let him ask if I ever gave instructions that the appointments be made from those recommended by the member supporting the government in that section of the country. I never did.

Mr. FIELDING. I would ask my hon. friend what difference would it make whether he gave the instructions or simply winked at the thing, when it was done for eighteen years? Everybody knows that you could not appoint a man to the smallest petty office on the Intercolonial Railway in the constituency of Cape Breton unless you had the recommendation of Mr. Hector Macdougall the member for the county, and it was the same everywhere. It is utterly preposterous for my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) to pretend anything else. Whether or not he gave instructions is a minor question; the main question is whether the appointments were made from the ranks of the government supporters. We all know they were, and there is no cause for complaint if the men appointed were honest and capable.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the minister not see the distinction between giving instructions to the officers of the Intercolonial Railway to appoint none but party friends, and giving them no instructions of the kind? Such petty things as that never entered into the management of the Intercolonial Railway in my day.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. How many Liberals were appointed?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know that there was one. But I do say that there were no instructions to the officers that a man employed to dig a ditch or to make small repairs should be recommended by a supporter of the government.

Mr. EMMERSON. In September, 1878, the Conservative party came into power and before the first day of November about 400 employees of the Intercolonial Railway in the city of Moncton were turned out for no other reason than that they had voted for Sir Albert Smith. From that day down to 1896 not a single man or boy was employed on the Intercolonial Railway who was in any way allied to the Liberal party. I challenge contradiction of that statement.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Minister of Railways has flatly contradicted his own statement made in the House this afternoon. In replying to the leader of the opposition about the production of a certain document which he referred to, he said that under the Conservative government the employees of the Intercolonial Railway who where Conservatives were marked one way, and those who were Liberals were marked another way and that he had seen a document to prove it. In view of that statement he now challenges any one to show that there was a single Liberal employed on the Intercolonial Railway. If his statement this afternoon was true ; if he was not drawing on his imagination ; then his statement to-night is absolutely absurd. His statement this afternoon meant that there were a number of employees on the Intercolonial Railway who were supposed to be Liberals and that they were prevented from voting for the so called Reform party. Let him put one statement against the other and see where he finds himself.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is a very easy matter. While they dismissed some 178 there were a few who escaped ; and more than that—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend, I am sure, will be satisfied with my statement.

Mr. LANCASTER. No, I am afraid not.

Mr. EMMERSON. During the long series of years of mis-rule, a good many who were Conservatives in 1878 and who were appointed as such, became so thoroughly disgusted with the party in power, that they changed their allegiance.

Mr. LANCASTER. Well, then they became Liberals and now, perhaps, the Postmaster General, who has brought in the Welland canal in this matter, would tell us what the government has done since 1896 ; will he venture to say that this government has appointed any one to any position on the Welland canal since 1896 who was not then and has since remained a very violent partisan of the Reform party ? Does he want the House to think that the present government are not doing the very thing which he wrongfully accused the Conservative party of doing. I live right where the Welland canal is, and the Conservative party have been criticised there, the hon. gentleman who represented the district until 1891 as a supporter of the Conservative government, was found fault with, because Conservatives were not always appointed to positions on the Welland canal. I want to know where the government stand on this question and I say that they have not appointed any but those claiming to be violent partisans of the Reform party whether they were or not.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. As I understand it the party system prevails in Canada and it is the practice of the government of to-day to remember their supporters in distributing public patronage. That practice has obtained in days gone by and I hope it is in full force to-day. I should greatly deplore it if the Liberal party, in the exercise of its patronage on the Welland canal or elsewhere, is neglectful of its friends and its own supporters. In my opinion appointments to-day are largely political, and I therefore trust that the Liberal party is living up to that principle in administering patronage on the Welland canal.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the Postmaster General know that of all the outside scrutineers and agents and the active partisans in the elections in Lincoln, several are lock and bridge tenders appointed by him since 1896 ; that that is what they are doing instead of resting between night shifts on election day, that they go without sleep to attend the committee meetings and other matters of violent partisanship in connection with elections and does he contemplate dismissing them for taking that active part in politics ? Is he going to mete out to them the same sort of treatment as he metes out, for instance, to the postmasters who are directly under his eye and whom he dismisses for attending political meetings or doing some act that he thinks is going further than simply voting ? Will he dismiss these appointments of his on the Welland canal if it is proved to him that they are acting as partisans in elections ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I would be glad to answer the series of questions that constitute the hon. gentleman s speech, but I would have to deal with them in a group for his speech seems to be made up of a series of questions regarding alleged violent partisans on the Welland canal, and seemed to think active partisanship was proved by their, as he said, acting as deputy returning officers.

Mr. LANCASTER. I said scrutineers, bringing in the votes.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. A scrutineer is one thing and bringing in votes is another, and acting as deputy returning officer still another. The hon. gentleman jumbles up all these alleged characters of men in the same sentence and asks if we are going to inflict punishment upon people who may be guilty, one of one transaction and one of another.

Mr. LANCASTER. I did not mention deputy returning officers at all. I said scrutineers and agents.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I may have misunderstood the hon. gentleman, but I understood him to indicate that some of them had taken part in the very legitimate work provided by law. I would ask him whether it is fair for him to characterize the number of employees that this government has appointed to the Welland canal in that wholesale way as partisans. Many men who were appointed to the service will probably have in the past taken an active part in politics. There are others who have not taken so active a part. I do not think that their being appointed to office warrants the hon. gentleman in making such an assault upon the class as a whole who have been appointed on the Welland canal. I believe that the men employed on the Welland canal and appointed by this administration are doing their duty well by the country. They are men in humble walks of life, but they are giving value for the pay they receive and they are good loyal citizens of Canada and good public servants. I think the hon. gentleman might be more generous to those in the humble walks of life in which these men are, and not stand up in the House to-night when they are not present to defend themselves and make an assault upon them insinuating that they are conducting themselves in such a way that they should all be dismissed from the Welland canal. I shall not proceed to defend them. They will have an opportunity in the future of defending themselves from the hon. gentleman. It will be sufficient, I suppose, to call their attention to the hon. gentleman's observations and they will be able to pass judgment upon his views, understanding just how generous he would be to them if by any unfortunate circumstance the Tory party should at any time have it in their power to dismiss them from office. I understand the hon. gentleman has now given notice before the House that these men are all to be cleaned out without a moment's hesitation should the opportunity be afforded to him to exercise that political power. May it be the good fortune of Canada to ward off until a long distant date the said day which the hon. gentleman says is coming.

Mr. LANCASTER. If the minister thinks it necessary to say what he has said in order to set these Welland canal employees against me I may tell him that he is not making much headway, because—I was going to say his friend Captain Sullivan, but I shall not say that as it might not be correct—Captain John Sullivan goes into Lincoln and tells them what the Postmaster General wants them to do. They sometimes do it and sometimes do not. I do not say that every employee on the Welland canal is a violent partisan. If I should prove to him that some of them were, would he chop off their heads as he does the heads of postmasters in this country for a good deal less than I could prove against several of the employees of the Welland canal in whom he takes so much interest.

The Postmaster General has brought up the subject. He could not allow the estimates of the Minister of Railways to go through without bringing in the Welland canal on an item connected with the Intercolonial Railway which, by the way hon. gentlemen opposite have seemed anxious to prevent going through. I do not know what the real reason may be for the conduct of hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not know whether the administration of the Intercolonial by the new minister is quite satisfactory to them or not, but we do know that nine-tenths of this day has been wasted by hon. gentlemen, supposed to be supporting the government, in obstructing these estimates by speaking about everything under the sun except the item before the chair. In that line of conduct they apparently have the approval of the hon. Postmaster General, who, finding that the Guysborough election was a worn-out subject, brought the Welland canal into the discussion and criticised the administration of that canal by the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) before 1896. The hon. gentleman tried to make out that I had used the term 'returning officer' instead of 'scrutineers'. Well, I think that I am generally sufficiently clear in any remarks I make to this House, and I am sure that not even the Postmaster General could have misunderstood what I really did say. I never used the term returning officer. I did not accuse all the Welland canal employees of being active partisans, but I said that several who have been appointed since 1896 have shown themselves very active at election time. I do not say that they were all appointed because of their activity in elections, but they seem to be under the impression that if they desire to retain their positions they must do partisan service in obtaining votes for the present government. Does the hon. the Postmaster General think that these employees will make better lockmasters or bridge masters because they take an active part in politics outside of working hours? Evidently some of them seem to be convinced that that is his opinion. In any event we do not find any of them exercising their activity in securing votes for the Conservative party. Later on, when we come to the proper item, I shall point out that the Postmaster General has not shown himself as good a friend as I am of the employees on the Welland canal. I had to make an appeal last year to have their wages increased, but I am not aware that in that appeal I received any support from the hon. gentleman. As far as I am concerned, I care not whether a public employee be a political opponent of mine or not, he should receive the wages to which his work entitles him as long as he is kept in the service and whatever I can do to enable him to obtain justice, I shall always cheerfully do irrespective of his politics. We did succeed in having a statute passed which recognized the claims of these men, but they have not since got that increase of wages to which they are entitled, and I hope that the Postmaster General will help me this session in endeavouring to have their just claims granted.

Mr. SPROULE. It is somewhat refreshing to have the frank admission from the Postmaster General that positions under the government are to be filled only by political partisans. He has laid down the principle that the government is bound to look after its own friends and would show themselves ungrateful if they did not do so, and that consequently all positions under the Crown shall be filled on that principle.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Not all, but speaking generally.

Mr. SPROULE. By speaking generally, no doubt the hon. gentleman intended to include all. Is he prepared to say that when the government are about to appoint a judge, an essential qualification must be that he is a political partisan ? That is practically what it amounts to. Well, let me tell the hon. gentleman that one of the best men Canada ever produced, the late Sir John Macdonald, declared over and over again that he would select good men for the bench irrespective of political party, and he gave evidence of his sincerity in many appointments. Is the bench going to be prostituted by the carrying out of the opposite principle ? If it is, all I can say is that it is not to the credit of the Postmaster General or the government to which he belongs.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend's statement of the abstract determination of Sir John Macdonald in the matter of the appointment of judges may be perfectly correct ; but speaking within my limited sphere of observation, I can tell him that in the province of Nova Scotia the Conservatives never appointed a judge who was not of their party, and I can say the same with regard to all the maritime provinces.

Mr. SPROULE. I can give the hon. gentleman instances which he must know himself.

An hon. MEMBER. Sit down.

Mr. SPROULE. Who has the insolence to say ' shut up and sit down ? ' If he were outside, I would slap his mouth. I am within my rights and intend to exercise them. I want to draw the attention of the hon. minister to the appointment of Mr. Blake. Was he a Conservative or Reformer ?

Mr. FIELDING. I spoke only of the maritime provinces.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood him to say that he believed the same principle was acted on in all the provinces.

Mr. FIELDING. I said that I only spoke within the sphere of my own observation in the maritime provinces.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, I have given the hon. gentleman one instance and could give him several others. Mr. Justice Maclennan was another, and I believe that Chancellor Boyd was another, but do not remember. I could mention several others if I had a moment to think of the names. That principle was carried out throughout the whole life of the late Sir John Macdonald, and it was never objected to by the Conservative party.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I think it can be said that whereas the late government occasionally appointed a Liberal to the bench, their prevailing practice was to select their own friends for such appointments. As regards the present administration, I might remind my hon. friend that we have appointed a member of his own party to one of the highest positions in this country. I refer to the appointment of Mr. Justice Nesbitt to the Supreme Court. When we took office there were very few judges belonging to the Liberal party. During the eighteen years the Liberal party was in opposition, all the appointments to the Superior Court bench were made, with a few exceptions, from the Conservatives ranks, and when this party came into power there were very few Liberals on that bench in Ontario. As regards the county courts, I should be very much surprised if it could be shown that one out of twenty of the numerous appointments to the county court bench during the eighteen years the Conservative party were in power, was a Liberal. I believe that the hon. gentleman could scarcely name a single Liberal appointed to the county court bench among the many appointed from 1878 to 1896. It has always been customary for the Conservative party to claim that they were equally generous regarding appointments to the Senate. They have always tried to prove that claim by pointing to the appointment to the Senate from the Liberal ranks of the Hon. John. Macdonald. Well, the Conservative party was in a majority in the Senate in 1878 when they took office, and when we came into office in 1896, the Conservative party had so entirely abandoned the idea of making appointments to the Senate from both sides that the number of Liberals in that body was nine as against seventy-two Conservatives, and we would not have had a man in the Senate even to be elected to the position of Speaker, had the Conservatives remained in office much longer.

Mr. FIELDING. I would like to qualify an observation I made with regard to the bench. I had in mind the Supreme Court bench. I have been reminded that in that case of one county court judge in the maritime provinces, he had been chosen by the Liberal government, and I wish to qualify my statement to that extent.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Whatever may be the sins of either party in the appointment of their party friends to office, I think it is a disgraceful, degrading doctrine that the Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson) has laid down in this House to-night. The standard of our politics and our public life must be getting pretty low when a government can placard one of the great public utilities of this country with the words 'No Conservative need apply.' Simply because a man differs from the party administering the affairs of this country, he cannot get work on one of the great national services of the country of which he is joint owner. Talk about prostituting the electorate and offering bribes to the voters. I think that of all the bribes that have been shown up this afternoon in connection with the Guysborough election and all the other elections in Canada fade into insignificance when compared with the enunciation of such a doctrine as that put forward by the Minister of Railways this afternoon. And I think that the fair-minded people of this country will not take kindly to the doctrine put forward by the Minister of Railways and endorsed by the Finance Minister and the Postmaster General. I can only stigmatize it as a rotten degrading condition of affairs when such a doctrine can be put forward on the floor of this House.

Mr. LOGAN. I am sorry my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Lefurgey) is shocked to such a degree that he can only express his feelings by stigmatizing the condition of our public affairs as rotten and degrading. You would scarcely imagine, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. gentleman's godfather, Sir Charles Tupper, in 1882 laid down such a principle as he did as governing the Intercolonial Railway and its officials. There was an election in 1882, and during that time a boy named Ryan, seventeen years of age, working in a minor position in the offices in Moncton was dismissed. On the 17th of November, 1882, his father, desirous of knowing for what reason he had been dismissed wrote to Sir Charles Tupper then Minister of Railways asking the question. He received no answer up to the following February when he wrote again. Not until April did he receive a reply from the then Minister of Railways. I will read a part of that reply of Sir Charles Tupper, and will commend it to the attention of my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Lefurgey) who is so shocked at what he calls the present rotten and degrading condition of affairs :

> The reason for his dismissal was that he took a very active part in opposition to the government at the last election.

This was a seventeen year old boy.

> This, as you will readily understand, no government officer can be permitted to do, and your son's action was so conspicuous that it could not be passed over.

What does the hon. member (Mr. Lefurgey) think of this for a degrading condition of affairs ? This boy could not even vote, yet he was dismissed because he took part in an election in opposition to the government of the day. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has referred to the statement of the former Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) as a joke. It is a comedy, a farce, a comedy of farces, to hear the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals state that, prior to 1896, men were appointed on the Intercolonial irrespective of their politics. Why, Mr. Chairman, you might as well try to find an angel in the lower regions, as to try to find a Grit appointed on the Intercolonial by the Tory government prior to 1896. The hon. gentleman knows it—must know it. He says he did not write instructions to his officials to employ only Conservatives. Certainly not. His predecessor, the man whose shoes he was standing in, had written the letter which I have quoted laying down the conditions with reference to the employment and dismissal of officials. The former Minister of Railways and Canals might as well have written to his officials instructing them to answer letters he wrote them as to tell them to employ only political friends of the government. It was a well understood principle. And while the discussion here this afternoon and this evening, may be entertaining to members of this House and to people in this part of the country, it will seem ridiculous to people living along the Intercolonial Railway for any man to say that men had been appointed to positions on the Intercolonial Railway irrespective of their politics and irrespective to whether they gave fealty to the government in power. Such a thing must seem ridiculous to the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) himself.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) talks about comedy but it seems to me if he will look into a large sized mirror he will see a comedy. He is undertaking to defend the Minister of Railways and Canals who refuses to take action against officers of his department who have taken an active part in politics, and to support and improve his case he quotes a letter from Sir Charles Tupper who did the very thing we are arguing the Minister of Railways and Canals ought to do. That letter of Sir Charles Tupper enunciates the principle that a public officer—and his age does not matter ; it is not a question of voting, because the man referred to was not old enough to vote—must not play the part of an active partisan in elections. The hon. gentleman seems to think that by quoting Sir Charles Tupper's action in dismissing a man for active partisanship he is justifying the minister who refuses to do this very thing in any of eight or ten cases that have been laid before him, and he talks about comedies.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not care to discuss with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) the question of looking into mirrors. But I may be permitted to tell him that he has entirely misunderstood the quotation I have made from Sir Charles Tupper's letter. In that letter it is stated that the young man is dismissed because he took an active part in an election against the government of the day.

Mr. LANCASTER. The young man actively interferred in an election. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Logan) mean to say that the Minister of Railways should commend a man for taking an active part in support of the government and condemn him for taking an active part against them ? I will take back what I said to the hon. gentleman about seeing a comedy if he will look into a mirror ; it is not good enough acting for a comedy ; it is a farce, a poor farce that he will see. He seems to think that it is justifiable to dismiss a man who even votes against the government, but not justifiable to dismiss a man who takes an active part in favour of the government—in fact his doctrine is that it depends altogether on whose ox is gored.

Mr. LOGAN. I have quoted to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) the doctrine of his former leader. It is the doctrine of the Conservative party that we are discussing to-day, and not the doctrine of a humble member of the Liberal party.

Mr. LANCASTER. It turned out that this young man had taken an active part against the government.

Mr. LOGAN. How does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) know ? There was no investigation.

Mr. LANCASTER. Surely, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Logan) will not object to my accepting the very statement that he makes and wanted me to undestand. Does he mean that I am to understand something different from what he has stated simply because I am on one side of the Speaker and he on the the other ? He wished me to understand that Sir Charles Tupper dismissed this man because he took an active part against the government. But against whom is merely incidental. Surely, the hon. gentleman understands that the dismissal was because the young man was an active partisan. That is the doctrine. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that a man should be dismissed if he takes an active part against the government, but should not be dismissed if he takes an equally active part in favour of the government ?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. The hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) seems to have a very short memory. I would advise him to go back as far as the election of 1891. I do not know who was the Minister of Railways at that time. But I have this statement of fact to make, that after the election of 1891 several employees on the Prince Edward Island Railway who did not take an active part in favour of the government, were dismissed—not for being neutral in that election but because they had not taken an active part. The employees of the Prince Edward Island Railway were looked upon as supporters of the government as a matter of course. They were terrorized and expected to take an active part in favour of the government. I think it was the late Senator Howlan who ran the election in Prince county at that time and was defeated. He had resigned his position of senator and had gone down there to run the election, and having been defeated, he came back and was reappointed senator. At that time some employees on the Prince Edward Island Railway were dismissed because they had been neutral in the election. Now I would commend that chapter in political history to my hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) whose memory is so short and who pretends to be so shocked to-day.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the policy to-day ?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. It has been explained to-night, it is certainly not so partisan as that of the old government.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman states something which he alleges to have occurred in 1891. It is curious that at that time none of these things were known to any one in the House. One of the charges made at that time was against the Hon. Sir Charles Tupper. What was the charge ? Not that he had dismissed any officials because they did not take an active part in suporting the government, no such charge or insinuation was made at the time. But now, 13 years afterwards, that charge is made by the hon. member for King's, P.E.I. (Mr. J. J. Hughes). The reason given at that time for the dismissal of one of the officers was that he took a very active part in opposition to the government. There was not a single member in the House, whether Conservative or Liberal, who did not agree that the party deserved dismissal on all the facts that were disclosed. The only question upon which a debate arose was this : How do you know that he took an active part in opposition to the government of the day ? Was there an inquiry ? Was there any evidence offered ? Sir Charles Tupper stated in the House at that time that if he was mistaken, if the information he had received was incorrect, he would restore the man to his position. He acted on information which he thought was correct. But according to hon. gentlemen opposite he did not need to act upon it, according to them it is sufficient that a member of parliament should get up and state that a man has been an active partisan, and then without an inquiry at all that man is dismissed. All that a member of parliament need do is to state to the minister in whose department the man is employed that such employee has been an active partisan, and his statement is enough. The Conservative government at that time backed up Sir Charles Tupper. Every member of the House thought it right that no employee of the government should take an active part in opposition to the government, and if he does, he takes his political life in his hands and is liable to dismissal. The only charge made against Sir Charles Tupper was that he took his information perhaps from a member of the House supporting him and his government, and acted upon it. Sir Charles Tupper said the information he had received he thought was correct. The hon. member for Cumberland says that Sir Charles Tupper promised an inquiry into the case to see whether he had been an active partisan in the election. But what has that to do with the question? What answer is that to the charges made by us at this moment ? What we are considering is the bold statement made by the Minister of Railways that the patronage on the Intercolonial is to be exercised in a political manner, and instructions are to be given to the officers who have charge of the railroad down there that they must make their appointments from political supporters of the government. The only defence that the government can make is that the government that preceded them dismissed a person for alleged partisan conduct in an election. No more absurd argument was ever used in the House. The fact that Sir Charles Tupper in 1891 dismissed a person who was alleged to be an active partisan, is a justification for the present Minister of Railways giving instructions to his employees on the Intercolonial to choose none but political supporters. He may choose political supporters of the government, but let him not make the bold, open announcement to the country that no poor man who is anxious to work upon the railway for $1, or $1.10 or $1.20 a day need apply if he happens to be a supporter of the Conservative opposition. You may follow that policy, but do not boldly avow it to the people of this country as the minister has done on the present occasion.

Mr. INGRAM. I think it is pretty well understood now what the position of the political parties is on the question of patronage and on the question of public servants taking part in elections. The Conservative party, when in power, did not allow government employees to take an offensive part in elections. In 1897 we had the platform laid down by the leaders of the present government to the effect that every employee has a perfect right to vote as he pleases, but if he takes an offensive part in an election he is liable to be dismissed—after an investigation perhaps in some cases. It is well understood among the public servants of Canada that if they take an offensive stand in elections, should the government change hands, the same justice that was meted out to our friends in 1897 and 1898 will be meted out to them. Therefore, it is well understood, and they know what their position is exactly. But I want to draw the attention of the committee to this further fact. That is all very well as far as the two political parties are concerned; the Conservative party and the Liberal party, but there is a class of people in this country who are not very strong party men, who care very little about politics, but the question they are concerned in is that if the political parties abuse the power they have by employing a large number of unnecessary men, they are compelled to put their hands in their pockets and pay taxes in order to meet this unnecessary expense. Under these circumstances, they have a right to complain. I hold that in connection with one of the greatest public works that we have in the Dominion of Canada, namely, 1,500 or 1,600 miles of government railway, it should be no part of any political party's duty to select the men because they are either Grits or Tories who are to be employed on that railway. We have on the floor of this House the manager of the government railway, and if that gentleman were a member of this House at this moment and were permitted to get up and say whether or not he has been interfered with as general manager of that railway by partisans who are pressing upon him and his officers the employment of unnecessary help, I go so far as to say that he would confirm my statement in that regard. Two years ago, when Mr. Blair was Minister of Railways, I asked him the question if his officers were not interfered with by partisans anxious to have men employed upon the road who were not necessary at all. Mr. Blair's action on that occasion completely bore out the statement I made then, and showed that it was a perfectly true statement. It is all very well for the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to sit and smile in his place. It is a matter of very little importance to him. He draws his salary for the least possible service imaginable, and he can sit there and smile with content, thinking he is carrying out his duties faithfully and well when he says that he is going to take recommendations from his political friends, that they are to have all the employment that is to be had on that railway, and that his officers are to select those who are specially qualified to fill the positions. He goes so far as to say that there will not be any man employed on the railway who is not required. I will leave it to the common sense of any man in Canada, I care not whether he is a Liberal or a Conservative, to say whether, so long as you have partisan recommendations in connection with a large public work of that character, the general manager can act in accordance with his own idea as to the character of help that is necessary on the railway. In consequence of that condition, the people are taxed to the extent that they are, and we have a showing this year of a deficit of no less than $500,000 and odd, largely brought about by bad management. I am not going to accuse the general manager of being a bad manager, but I am going to accuse the system of being the reason why that manager cannot make the road meet its running expenses. Just as soon as this partisan administration of the government railway is abandoned, just so soon will the people have the pleasure of knowing that they have no deficits in the management of the government railway. We are going to have this question fully discussed during the coming election. We are going to discuss the Transcontinental Railway, which involves the question of government ownership, and which is an issue between the opposition and the government policy, and in that case what will be the argument of hon. gentlemen on that side of the House? There will be a change in their argument from that which they presented in former years. Mr. Blair has taken credit to himself for the administration of the government railway. He has been backed up by gentlemen representing the maritime provinces as being the best administrator of the government railway that this country has had for many years; in fact, the best we ever had. Now, hon. gentlemen opposite are going to change their tune; they are going to point to the government owned railway as being a failure, and in consequence of that failure they are going to say to the people: You are foolish to support the opposition policy of government ownership, because you see the results of government control and operation of railways in this country. But they will neglect and forget to say that the reason why the revenue from the government railway is not meeting the expenses is the partisan interference that is permitted in the management of the road. I am glad to know that there are many people outside of this House who believe in government ownership, and I will tell the government that so long as the people put up with partisan management of government railways, just so long will they have that interference. I would like to ask the manager of the road whether it makes any difference to him whether a man is a Conservative or a Liberal. Not one iota. If he wants to succeed in the management of the road, what has he to consider? If he wants a first-class engineer, he wants to get a man who is competent, and he does not care whether he is a Grit or Tory. If he wants a first-class conductor, or brakeman, or superintendent, or trackman, he does not care what his politics are, he wants a qualified man, and if he is allowed to get him he will be in a position to show something on the right side of the account at the end of the year. To-day and for years past this present system is and has been going on, and that is the reason why the management is not able to put forth a good showing. While hon. gentlemen opposite talk about their recommendations, what do they know about the qualifications of a first-class railway man? They do not know the first thing about it. But yet they will recommend and insist upon this man being employed, although they know nothing about his qualifications, if he is a political friend I think that when the general election takes place, and when the hon. leader of the opposition comes back to power——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

An hon. MEMBER. Now you are joking.

Mr. INGRAM. Well, I will tell you how I am joking. In 1897 and 1898 we heard these hon. gentlemen pounding their desks and saying: We are going to be here for the next twenty years.

An hon. MEMBER. So we are.

Mr. INGRAM. We do not hear that any more.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, yes.

Mr. INGRAM. They play the old game that the Conservative party played previously to 1896. In the midst of their strength they were in their weakness, and when they had a hopeless case they came into the House and pounded their desks. But the Conservative party went out and the Liberal party came in, and I can see the handwriting on the wall. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals will never pretend to assist his party in any way. No one will pretend to say that he will ever be of any particular service to them—a man who came in to administer the Department of Railways and Canals, and who was afraid to open his mouth when the great transcontinental railway question was brought up in this House. But finally he did open his mouth. He got orders to do it; he was bound to do it, and after he did it, I do not think his friends took very much credit to themselves because of his effort.

Mr. SPROULE. He put his foot in it.

Mr. INGRAM. He always does put his foot in it. But circumstances have changed. Where are those provincial leaders of the government? Where are all those strong men who came in with the government in 1896? They have all gone, and they have taken in Henry the Silent, who dare not open his mouth on an important question. The same thing has occurred all along the line. The people recognize that, and when they get an opportunity of declaring themselves at the next election, we will find that the majority of the votes cast in this country will be for a good Conservative government and a good Conservative party, a party which are not afraid to stand by their principles. No matter whether their principles are appreciated or not, wherever they are they will stand up and say: These are our principles. The Conservatives had a leader who was protectionist from start to finish, and he proclaimed it everywhere. The Liberals have a leader who has been in favour of commercial union, free trade as they have it in England, a revenue tariff, and in Montreal the other day he proclaimed that he was neither a protectionist nor a free trader. Now the Liberals are playing the fiddle to both free traders and protectionists. Will some of these gentlemen over there tell us what their principles are on any question?

Mr. COCHRANE. To keep in power.

Mr. INGRAM. That seems to be their only object. They are not free traders, they are not protectionists, and they are not economists it is sure, because they spend $70,000,000 a year and faster and faster goes the money in their hands. At last we have a government railway that is going to be a political machine. This afternoon these gentlemen scouted the idea that government railways were being administered on partisan lines, but to-night they have proclaimed that they are running the Intercolonial Railway as a huge party machine. At every station on the Intercolonial Railway there will in future be a big placard inscribed: no Tories need apply. This afternoon at three o'clock they were running the Intercolonial free of party lines, and whatever occurred in the meantime, the minister comes in at eight o'clock and tells us that none but Liberals are to be employed on the Intercolonial Railway. I suppose he got his orders in the meantime, and being a docile gentleman he had to obey.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) told us that we were discussing the policy of the Liberal-Conservative party.

Mr. TUCKER. Louder.

Mr. BLAIN. What is that voice from behind the Speaker's chair? It is the first thing the hon. gentleman has said since he came to parliament. Perhaps he would be good enough to sit down until we get through. Lest the hon. gentleman from Cumberland should forget the policy of the Liberal party I will read from 'Hansard' of 1897, a few dismissals that have been made.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Give us the page?

Mr. BLAIN. Give my hon. friend a cigarette; some one has said he has softening of the brain now and perhaps he will get it a little more. It is page 2564.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Is there anything about tea-pots in it?

Mr. BLAIN. I am very sorry that I cannot supply him with tea in the chamber but let him wait until the House adjourns. At page 2564 of the 'Hansard' of 1897 I find the following:

Mr. QUINN asked:

1. Is it true that Michael Enright, an employee at Montreal on Lachine canal, was dismissed on 3rd April last without notice?

2. Was he so dismissed by order of the Minister of Railways and Canals?

3. On whose recommendation was he so dismissed?

4. Why was he so dismissed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. The services of Michael Enright, employed at Montreal on the Lachine canal, were dispensed with. 2. Yes. 3. At the request and upon the representation of the members of parliament for Montreal district. 4. No written complaint was lodged in the department.

Mr. GANONG asked:

1. Is it true that Michael Behan, storeman on Lachine canal, at Montreal, was dismissed on 30th April without any previous notice?

2. Was he so dismissed by order of the Minister of Railways and Canals?

3. On whose recommendation was he so dismissed?

4. Why was he so dismissed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. 1. The services of Michael Behan, storeman on the Lachine canal, were dispensed with on the 30th of April last. 2. Yes. 3. At the request and upon the representation of members of parliament for Montreal districts. 4. No written complaint was lodged in the department.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked:

(a.) Have the following, or any of them, and which of them, if any, been dismissed from the service of the Intercolonial Railway?

1. Alexander Stewart, section foreman at Linwood, Antigonish ?
2. John Chisholm, section foreman, Heatherton, Antigonish ?
3. Finlay Chisholm, section foreman, James River, Antigonish ?

(b.) If dismissed, was any investigation made prior to dismissal, and what was its nature ?

(c.) How long were these men in the service of the government and what was the record of each for efficiency and conduct ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The services of Alexander Stewart were dispensed with on the 7th of January last. (b.) No investiagtion was considered necessary, as it was explicitely and positively affirmed by Mr. McIsaac, M.P., that Mr. Stewart had infringed the rule laid down in respect to government employees. (c.) He had been in the service since September, 1880. Nothing recorded against him. 2. The services of John Chisholm, section foreman at Heatherton, Antigonish, were dispensed with on the 12th of November last on the personal statement and representation of Mr. McIsaac, M.P., that Chisholm had been guilty of active and offensive partisanship in the last general elections. There was no investigation. He had been in the service since August, 1884. Nothing recorded against him. 3. The services of Finlay Chisholm, section foreman at James River, Antigonish, were dispensed with on the 18th of November last, on the statement and representation of Mr. McIsaac, M.P., that he had been guilty of active and of offensive partisanship in the last general elections. There was no investigation. He had been in the service since June, 1879.

One of these men had been in the government since 1880 and no charge or complaint had ever been laid against him, yet he was dismissed on the suggestion of Mr. McIsaac stating that he had taken an active part in politics. These men were dismissed for active political partisanship without any investigation or any charge being laid against them. On this one page of 'Hansard' we find twelve men dismissed by the Liberal government on the recommendation of the Liberal members of parliament. And yet the member for Cumberland and his friends glory in that. We were not much surprised that such a policy should be upheld by some gentlemen on the other side. but when prominent men like the Minister of Finance, and the Postmaster General and the Minister of Railways join in it, it is a thing to be deplored. All these gentlemen stand up to say to the world ; the policy of the Reform government is that when a man wants an office the salary attached to which is paid out of the public treasury, one important qualification the man requires is that he is a supporter of the Reform party.

Mr. FIELDING. Does the hon. gentleman attribute these remarks to me ? Does he seriously tell the House that I said that the first and only qualification is, that a man should belong to the Reform party ?

Mr. BLAIN. I did not say that these were the hon. gentleman's words.

Mr. FIELDING. Does the hon. gentleman say that these were the ideas I expressed or anything like them ? The hon. gentleman, if he heard me, must have known that I said distinctly that the first qualification must be character and capacity, and if character and capacity were given, then preference should be given to members of the Reform party.

Mr. BLAIN. The Minister of Finance will not say that there has been a case in the history of his government where two men equal in qualification made application for an office or where the Liberal-Conservative had better qualifications than the other applicant in which he selected the Conservative.

Mr. FIELDING. I say that I know of no case in which a man has been appointed to office who was not qualified and capable for the work. If there was a case in which a man was appointed who was not qualified and capable that would be a subject for discussion, but I say, given the qualifications of character and capacity for the work, the practice has been ever since Canada had a history as a Dominion to give a preference to the friends of the government of the day, and that practice, I hope, will be continued.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend is enunciating the policy of his party.

Mr. GALLIHER. And I would not think much of him if he did not ; you bet I would not.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend (Mr. Galliher) says that he would not think much of the minister if he would not.

Mr. GALLIHER. And I repeat it.

Mr. BLAIN. And I repeat it. I am quite sure the House understands my hon. friend very well. That is a policy that seems to receive the approval and support of all the hon. gentlemen.

Mr. GALLIHER. They would not be supporters if they did not.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose that will apply to judges ?

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend wants an answer to that I will give him one. I see no reason why a man who is a Liberal should be disqualified from sitting on the bench. If the hon. gentleman can show a case where a Liberal was appointed who did not possess the qualification of character and capacity for the position that would be a proper subject for discussion, but I do not see, because a man is a Liberal, that he should be disqualified from a seat on the bench.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not go so far as to say that no Liberal is entitled to an office in the gift of this government. What I say is that when the Liberal-Conservatives were in power a charge was made against them that they were appointing political partisans to different offices in this country. Hon. gentlemen opposite when in opposition condemned that policy ; they pointed out that it was demoralizing the Intercolonial Railway, and said that because my hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart)—they made the charge against him, I do not say whether it was well founded or not—adopted the policy of appointing friends to public offices, the Intercolonial Railway went down in the estimation of the people of Canada and was not well conducted. That is the charge that these gentlemen then made and the people of Canada would expect that when the Reform party came into office a different policy would be initiated by that party, who were trying to teach the Conservative party a better system of government. Yet to-day we find the Minister of Finance, one of their leaders, saying that the policy of this government is that their friends must be appointed to office and must receive the spoils of office.

An hon. MEMBER. That is right.

Mr. BLAIN. We are not condemning so much the principle that their friends should be looked after, but we are pointing out the hypocrisy of this government.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend is laughing ; I suppose he is only waiting until the House dissolves to see whether he will get some reward for his services.

Mr. GALLIHER. I am not looking for anything, I am very humble.

Mr. BLAIN. I am glad there is one man on the other side not looking for office. He is an exception, of course, and we shall keep our eye on him for the next few years. I would ask the Minister of Railways if the policy of the government in respect of dismissals on the Intercolonial Railway is the policy that has been pursued by his predecessors, that when the member representing a county makes a charge against an official on the Intercolonial Railway, then without any investigation whatever, simply upon the word and statement of the gentleman representing the county the hon. minister will dismiss the official whether he is a Reformer or a Conservative.

Mr. EMMERSON. No cases have arisen since I have been in office.

Mr. BLAIN. We want to know the policy.

Mr. EMMERSON. If my hon. friend will wait, I said that no such cases have arisen since I took office. I shall consider what I should do when the matter is brought to my attention.

Mr. BLAIN. Is that as far as my hon. friend would go ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is as far as I would wish to go.

Mr. LANCASTER. If the management of this railway is injured by an official taking an active part against this government surely it is wrong to have an official taking an active part in favour of this government. He is then not only taking an active part in politics, but he is increasing the deficit on the Intercolonial Railway, making it cost the people of this country more than it would cost if its management was in the hands of a more competent set of men who would doubtless make it pay a profit. Surely we are entitled to know if the minister will apply the same rule to those who take an active part in favour of his own party as he will apply to those who take an active part against him. We are entitled to know that so that no person will waste time in proving these charges until we know whether we have a loaded jury or not and whether the same rules are to be applied on both sides.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have already answered the question which the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) asked me. I said the matter has not been determined by me and that as cases arise I shall deal with them fairly and do no injustice. While I am on my feet I want to say to the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) that I think he failed to understand fully what I said with respect to the recommendation. I said that a condition precedent in all cases of recommendations would be the question of qualification and fitness. I think that my hon. friend misquoted me when he said it was simply a question of politics.

Mr. BLAIN. I did not so understand the hon. gentleman.

Mr. GANONG. The hon. Minister of Railways has made so many contradictory statements that it is difficult to know really what he intended saying. Up to six o'clock he was posing as the very personification of justice, although he did go to sleep during that elaborate dissertation of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), which went so far afield of the item we are trying to carry.

Mr. EMMERSON. Surely my hon. friend does not mean to say that I went to sleep.

Mr. COCHRANE. You looked very much like it.

Mr. GANONG. Well, the hon. gentleman may have been posing as the personification of justice who is popularly supposed to be blind, but his eyes were so steadily closed and his features wore so placid an expression that I really thought he had gone to sleep.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am sure the hon. gentleman has no desire to mislead the House, and I think he should withdraw the statement.

Mr. GANONG. Of course, if he says he was not asleep, I must accept his word, and besides when he makes a request in a manner so childlike and bland it is difficult to refuse. There are just two things that occur to me in connection with this discussion. Either the Minister of Railways has given to us one of the greatest examples of conversion of a political sinner in history since the time of St. Paul or one of the most striking examples of colossal gall ever exhibted in this House. But there are some little matters which occurred to my mind when the hon. gentleman was telling us in his pleasant way of the belief which actuates him regarding the right to vote. Perhaps hon. members do not know the hon. minister as well as we know him in New Brunswick. He has a record, and what I am about to state, he will not dispute, or if he should, it is very easy to verify any statements I may make. He was at one time the leader of the government in New Brunswick and he was also at another time a member of the government in that province, though not its leader. We then had elections held under the New Brunswick election law ; and in that little pocket borough which he almost owned, as well as the one he represented in New Brunswick, the county of Westmoreland, the government of which he was a member had its employees put in carts and carted to the polls where they were called on to deposit special ballot papers which had been given them. Not only that, but they brought such influence to bear on the proprietors of the cotton mill in that county, that they forced the overseer to use his influence——

Mr. EMMERSON. Does the hon. gentleman say that I took voters in a cart to the polls ?

Mr. GANONG. I say that he was a member of the government that ordered this thing to be done.

Mr. EMMERSON. Does he say that the government did it ? I would like to understand his statement.

Mr. GANONG. I say that during the local elections these things were carried on by the government of which he was a member. The voters who were working for the cotton mills were taken in a van and driven to the polls in charge of partisans of the government who saw that they voted properly. They were provided with ballots and taken into the polls where they cast those ballots and were then carried back to their work. They were not allowed to go to the polls of their own accord and cast their ballots without being under any supervision. He also succeeded in educating another member of the government to go to the polls in Victoria Ward of St. John City and watch every labouring man who went to vote. Every railway or government employee down there had a special ballot paper put into his hand, and this member of the government stood at the polls to see that he deposited this special paper, and the voter knew that if he did not his head would be cut off. The hon. minister has since received his reward from the people of St. John, who the other day elected our hon. friend, Mr. Daniel, against the nominee of the government. I think therefore that we are warranted in receiving with suspicion the professions of the hon. minister and his sudden conversion. I took down the words of the hon. gentleman this afternoon. He said : 'Railway employees have the right to their feelings so long as they do not give effect to those feelings.' That means that they can feel politically as they like but they must vote Grit. That is the doctrine he puts forward to-day. It makes no difference how you feel, you must vote Grit or you will lose your job. It would be very interesting if we could have a picture of the hon. gentleman slaying recalcitrant civil servants before he was converted and then a picture of him a little later, when he became so honest and good that he would not care to slay any civil servant unless he were a Tory. I think, without being offensive at all, that we may say of this new convert, this Saint Henry of the House, that for ways that are dark and tricks that are vain, our newly fledged saint is indeed very peculiar. The hon. minister has also told us that the Intercolonial is not overmanned. I should like to have that statement confirmed by some of his officials. Why, down in the town of Moncton, the employees are tumbling over each other. This government boasts of surpluses aggregating $55,000,000 during the past few years, with one miserable small million of a reduction in the public debt. Well, it is easy to tell where the surpluses have gone.

They have robbed the people of $55,000,000. They have not accomplished any great work in Canada, but they have peddled out yearly $500,000 at least to useless officials—Grit officials according to the statement of the minister. That is the way a large portion of the money of which they have robbed the people has gone. The minister said something with regard to the dismissals in St. John, and I wish to ask him one question in that connection. You would suppose, from the way he spoke that he had pleaded for the lives of these poor men. He states that gentlemen of his own political party had written him letters to try and get him to reinstate them. Will he lay these letters on the table ? It would be most edifying to the people of Canada, and especially to the people of St. John, to have these letters which were written to the minister to reinstate these gentlemen made public. I hope that before the session is through the minister will give us that information. We had two gentlemen decapitated without reason, except that they did not appear to be quite as active in the interest of Mr. McEwen as they might have been. It is a remarkable coincidence that they lost their jobs just after the election. And I am sure anything that the minister can do to allay the feeling in the city of St. John would help him when he next goes to find a candidate there—and he had difficulty in finding one in the last election—and it might help in that direction if these letters were laid on the table. I am sure we will use them to the best advantage to try to clear the minister's skirts, if possible, of the charge which seems to be positively made that interference from the minister's office resulted in the dismissal of these gentlemen from their positions on the railway.

Mr. EMMERSON. The very dignified way in which I have been addressed, being called by my Christian name with the prefix of "Saint' naturally calls for a return of the courtesy extended by my hon. friend from Charlotte (Mr. Ganong). The hon. gentleman has been kind enough to refer to my record in connection with the government in the province of New Brunswick and speaks incidentally of the election of 1899. I have some recollection of an election held in that province in that year. I appealed as premier of the province, and, out of forty-six members to be elected, the people were good enough to send forty-one to support me. I know that my hon. friend remembers keenly, very keenly indeed, that election of 1899. In the summer of 1898, he paid a visit to the city of Moncton, and there, with a boastfulness which, perhaps, did not do him very great credit, and which was very unfortunate for himself, stated that he was going back to the county of Charlotte, there, by his efforts, to elect four Conservatives to oppose the government led by me. He went back to the county of Charlotte and tried his utmost to carry out his promise. I am not going to refer to the means used in that election. But my hon. friend had the misfortune to find four good men and true, Liberals, elected in spite of his strongest efforts. He has referred to the campaign in Westmoreland in that election. I did not happen to be a candidate in the county of Westmorelad, but ran in the adjoining county of Albert. He speaks of the cotton mill in the county of Westmoreland. He must know that the cotton mill is controlled and operated by Conservatives. The hon. gentleman has not got his facts quite correct. These men who were carted up from the cotton mill to vote were carted there by the opposition machine to vote against the government. My hon. friend lives far away from the county of Westmoreland; he lives in a remote part of the province; and so he seems not to be familiar with the conditions prevailing in the county of Westmoreland. Despite the tactics of their opponents the Liberals carried three in the county of Westmoreland. It is true that in the whole province the friends of the hon. gentleman elected four men on that occasion, but they were men who were elected by accident. Now, I made the statement this afternoon that I cared not what the political animus or feelings of the employees of the Intercolonial Railway were, if they did not show their feeling or give effect to that animus in a partisan way. I would not complain. And I made the statement very distinctly—and I adhere to it and will repeat it elsewhere—that, as long as I have the honour to preside over the Intercolonial Railway, I will say to the employees that they shall have every liberty to vote as they please but that they must not show themselves to be partisans.

Mr. INGRAM. They are all Liberals.

Mr. EMMERSON. If my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) were to make that statement in Moncton, or anywhere in New Brunswick, or even in Quebec, say at Rivière du Loup, the people would laugh at him. He would blush for having made such a statement——

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, I think he is quite capable of blushing. But I think we understand fully the policies that have been laid down. The policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, as enunciated by the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) when boiled down is simply this—the policy of the Conservative party when in power is to employ only Conservatives, but do not, for the world declare it; carry out the policy, but do it as hypocrites, and do not let the country know it. I made a statement as to the policy that I individually would pursue. I said that each political party is in favour of distributing its patronage among its friends. That was the policy of the Conservative party when in power, and I hope it will be the policy of the Liberal party now that it is in power. But I have this limitation to this policy—that capacity, qualification and fitness must be the first consideration. And, as an individual member of the Liberal party, and as connected with the government of the country, that is the policy which shall govern me.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. I think it is about time that this committee got back to the question before the chair. We started at three o'clock not to discuss the question before the committee but to discuss party politics. And I think we have had to-day a fair illustration of the curse of party politics. We washed all the dirty linen of the county of Guysborough this afternoon and now we are engaged in washing the dirty linen of the Intercolonial Railway for the past seven years. I think it is about time that we passed those estimates if we have discussed them enough, but let us not discuss everything else but the estimates.

Mr. EMMERSON. Now, that we have got rid of the bile.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. They are trying to get rid of you, and unless you behave yourself I hope they will. I hope that you will announce to the people on the Intercolonial, not from the pulpit, but put up a placard in every office and public building belonging to that road, that every man who works for the government, if he discharges his duty faithfully, need have nothing to fear, but if he does not, if he becomes an active politician, he will be discharged. Don't meddle with him merely because he votes Grit or Tory, let him have an opportunity in every election of voting for whom he pleases. If you will put up that in your offices, then the name of Henry Emmerson will be honoured. That is what we want you to do to-day. We want you to set an example of what you prayed for and squealed for so loudly when you were in opposition. Take your own medicine, and give to people their rights instead of telling them that if they don't vote so and so they will be discharged. Why, Sir, I am surprised at the condition of things down there. I am not surprised at Nova Scotia and New Brunswick losing so many of their inhabitants, at those provinces not being so thickly populated as they were ; I would not stay in a province where they acted like that, where, if a man does not vote as he is expected to vote, his head is chopped off. Just listen to those people talking about heads falling into the basket ! What will people say of us fifty years from now ? They will say that the people of our day were savages, that they used to cut the heads off the railway employees if they voted wrong. Let us treat men as they should be treated. I don't want to make a long speech. I want to cut it short. If these estimates are correct, let us pass them and not inquire about what this man's politics is or what that man's politics is, what this party did ten years ago and what the other party did ten years ago. Does that help the country? Are the people interested in that ? Indeed they are not. What they want is good government, and they expect it from hon. gentlemen opposite. I am not a partisan, but I want to say this, that the country is disgusted with partisanship, and when you give the people another chance to vote they will sit down on the whole gang of you—on both sides.

Mr. GANONG. The Minister of Railways has referred particularly to me, so I propose to refute him. I never made any such statement at Moncton as the hon. gentleman attributes to me. The first I ever heard of it in my constituency was from the hon. gentleman himself and Mr. Tweedie, in the town of Milltown. But although the statement was frequently refuted, the hon. gentleman carried it through their campaign, and perhaps it helped them. But there is one thing so far as the county of Charlotte is concerned that I want to say. It was not the mellifious tones of the minister that convinced the people of that county, it was chiefly a question of sympathy. The late premier had come from our county, and was a good Conservative, and the sympathy racket was played for all it was worth in the county in order to draw Conservative votes, and possibly that gained the election. But during the last week they got frightened, and then it was cash in uncut two dollar Dominion notes. The hon. gentleman can tell how much that election in Charlotte cost him. Directly across from the polling booth they had their headquarters in a tailor shop, with two pair of shears, and all day long they were dividing up $2 Dominion notes for use in the election. Where paid out they ran in serial numbers in a number of instances. The hon. gentleman knows, and it is currently reported that one of the souvenirs of that election to-day is a pair of gilded shears hanging up in the parlour of the hon. the Minister of Railways.

Mr. R. JOHNSTON. I have been listening to this debate attentively and I do not yet understand the position of the Minister of Railways. When they were in opposition hon. gentlemen opposite condemned the system of appointing Conservatives to office on the Intercolonial, and announced that if they were elected they would do the thing fairly, that there were two parties in this country, and if there was to be a deficit on the Intercolonial the two parties should pay for it. Their promise was that if they got into power they would divide the thing up so that both parties would be responsible for deficits on that railway. Now, I understand the Minister of Railways to say that if a Conservative employee on the Intercolonial takes an active part in an election he will be discharged. Am I right in that understanding ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I said that if a man became an active partisan in an election he would be discharged. I said he could vote if he pleased.

Mr. R. JOHNSTON. Now, then if a Liberal employee on the Intercolonial takes an active part in an election in favour of the Liberal candidate in the county where he may be working, will he be discharged or will he be kept on? I would like to have that question answered.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have already answered all those questions.

Mr. R. JOHNSTON. He has answered one side of the question, he has said that if a Conservative takes an active part against the government——

Mr. EMMERSON. The statement I made this afternoon that I was going to make inquiries, that I had had complaints on both sides, and I was going to inquire into those complaints, without regard to the politics of the persons complained of. I said I would first see whether they had transgressed, and then I would decide what should be done with them.

Mr. R. JOHNSTON. The minister has said that if a Conservative takes an active part in an election he will be dismissed; but what about the Liberal who takes an active part?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have explained my position.

Mr. R. JOHNSTON. I am just as far ahead as I was before. If it is a Conservative that takes an active part in an election it is dead sure that his head will be cut off, he is judged now. Now, if the same proof that would disqualify a Conservative from being an employee on the Intercolonial, is offered to the minister in the case of a Reformer employed on the Intercolonial, will he be dismissed too?

Mr. BLAIN. Could the minister give us a statement of the number of employees on that railway at present, and the number in 1896?

Mr. EMMERSON. I cannot now.

Mr. BLAIN. I think this is a question that the hon. gentleman should be prepared to answer. We are discussing the item of the Intercolonial Railway working expenses.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have sent to Moncton for that information.

Mr. DANIEL. We have had quite a long debate so far. Perhaps the debate will not be without interest and probably some instruction to the country, and I think if it does nothing else it certainly makes very plain indeeed the cause of the enormous deficit we have had during the past year on the railway. However, I do not wish to prolong that part of the discussion but if the Minister of Railways and Canals would give me his attention I would like to ask him a question. I notice in the remarks which the hon. minister made yesterday that he referred among other things to the increased amount of expenditure which would be required to make repairs to engines, passenger, postal, express and baggage cars which is very largely increased over the expenditure of the previous year. I think it was on the 1st July that quite a serious accident took place on the Intercolonial Railway not far from Truro. I do not know what the cause of the accident was but in the newspaper account that I read it was assigned to the spreading of the rails. The hon. minister has stated several times yesterday and to-day that the road bed of the Intercolonial Railway was in a most magnificent condition. It certainly ought to be because no expense whatever has been spared and in so far as the expenditure of money is concerned it should be in no other condition than in first-class condition. It is a fortunate thing that in that accident no lives were lost, but at the same time the damage to rolling stock was very considerable. This particular accident took place after the 30th June—on the 1st July and of course is not in fiscal year we are considering. In the extended remarks which the hon. minister has given to us in regard to the Intercolonial he made no reference whatever to the accidents on that road. I think, to have made his statement complete, he should have given us a record of the accidents on the Intercolonial Railway during the year. I am not prepared to say now, speaking from memory that there were any other accidents, but I do not think the statement in regard to the Intercolonial Railway is complete unless that very important matter is dealt with in regard to it. I understand that much of the increased expenditure on account of repairs to engines, passenger cars, postal cars, baggage cars and express cars is due to accidents and not to ordinary wear and tear. Would the hon. minister give us some idea as to the cause of the last accident on the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. EMMERSON. The cars that are damaged by reason of accidents are repaired in the shops at Moncton and are paid out of the current revenue account. Unfortunately there are accidents. The hon. gentleman says that the accident of the 1st July was attributable to the spreading of the rails. That is a mere conjecture. As to the cause, that is being inquired into by the inspector of the Railway Commission. We had another accident within a few months. I refer to the one at Milford between Halifax and Truro. That was caused by the Canadian Pacific Railway train. The train became derailed and turned over and there was a serious loss of cars. That loss fell on the Intercolonial Railway. The cars were Canadian Pacific Railway cars, but they were being hauled by an Intercolonial Railway engine. The loss will be paid out of current revenue.

Mr. INGRAM. What brought about the accident?

Mr. EMMERSON. It was inquired into by Mr. Duval, the inspector of the Railway Commission, whose report has not yet been laid before the department. I am expecting it every day. To what he attributes the accident I do not know at this moment, but it was a somewhat serious accident. The loss of the cars was not a loss of very serious moment. It will amount to perhaps $25,000 or $30,000, but there was an unfortunate loss of life. These things will occur. I may say that I have a telegram from a gentleman who came over the Intercolonial Railway in the new Ocean Limited from Halifax as an ordinary passenger. He is a gentleman I do not know, but I have learned that he was a very prominent broker in the city of Montreal and he took occasion to telegraph to the department to commend very highly not only the new Ocean Limited train, cars, cuisine and equipment, but he spoke especially of the very excellent roadbed of the Intercolonial extending from Halifax to Montreal. That is a general expression of opinion by passengers. I met to-day on the street car a gentleman who had come up over the road on the Ocean Limited and he took occasion to congratulate me for the department upon such an excellent train service and such an excellent road. The high standard of the roadbed is being kept up, and I trust we will be in a position to keep up the very high standard in respect to the train service. This train, starting on the 3rd July, has kept to the time table to the very second all along the line and comes in sharp on time at every station.

Mr. INGRAM. Was the accident due to carelessness ?

Mr. EMMERSON. In so far as I have any information you cannot attribute it to the carelessness of any particular one. I have no information as to that.

Mr. INGRAM. Does not the department have investigations as to how accidents occur and who is to blame ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The department did not have an investigation at Milford because that was handed over to the Railway Commission. There is a feeling throughout the country that the officials of the road or those associated with the management of the road are interested and that they are not the proper ones to hold the inquiry. I am expressing the opinion of the people who are interested in these matters. I felt in the Milford case that in justice to this expression of opinion, it was proper to get some person entirely outside the management of the road to make the inquiry, so that there might not be any suspicion that it was not disinterested. While the inquiries held by the officials are thorough and disinterested, yet it is a serious matter when these accidents result in loss of life, and in the Milford case I thought it well to take this course.

Mr. INGRAM. It is the duty of the officials of the railway to investigate these accidents in order to ascertain what employees, if any, are responsible. That is the only way to maintain discipline on a railway. The hon. gentleman has spoken about the good road-bed, but his explanation about the rails spreading would not indicate a good road-bed.

Mr. EMMERSON. I said nothing about the rails spreading. I referred to the hon. gentleman's statement on that point.

Mr. INGRAM. It would be a very serious thing to have it go abroad that such was the case if it were true.

Mr. EMMERSON. The officials are responsible for the condition of the roadbed and the efficiency of the service, and they might naturally be supposed to being interested in shielding the management from a charge of negligence. It has been usual for the management to hold this investigation, but in the Milford case we thought it well to adopt this method. With regard to the recent accident, a request has been made to the railway commissioners to send their inspector to investigate.

Mr. INGRAM. Am I to understand that the department did not investigate this accident themselves ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. That is very remarkable, and I am sure the management of the road does not approve of it. Other railway companies suspend an employee when there is an accident ; investigate the circumstances immediately and punish the employee, if he is to blame. It is only by strict discipline of that kind that you can lessen the chance of accident.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What was the report as to the Milford accident ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Mr. Duval, the inspector of the Railway Commission has not yet made his report.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When was the investigation held ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I cannot give the date exactly, but I think it was the first investigation Mr. Duval held after his appointment as inspector : it may have been some time in June.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think that an immediate investigation should have been held. I happened to be interested because I narrowly escaped taking that train myself, and I came over the line a few hours afterwards and saw the cars lying there reduced to match wood. The train went off the track while coming round a curve and ran down a steep bank, the wonder being that more lives were not lost. It would seem to me that the cause might have been ascertained by making an immediate investigation. I would like to ask, in reference to an accident which took place on the Intercolonial Railway near Windsor Junction about a year ago, and in which several lives were lost. I am speaking altogether from memory, but I think it was shown that some of the train hands had gone out with a train, while under the influence of liquor, and especially one man who was injured but afterwards recovered. I think proceedings were taken against him, but that he was allowed to leave the country and go to the United States, or at all events he did go. There was some criticisms at the time upon the act that precautions were not taken to have that man stand his trial. Does the minister remember the occurrence and could he give the committee any information with regard to it ?

Mr. EMMERSON. After the report was received the matter was placed in the hands of the Justice Department, and I do not think my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) is correct in stating that the man was allowed to depart. Proceedings were taken, but before the Justice Department, had the man served or arrested he had escaped. All the others connected with that matter were dismissed from the employ. With respect to the Milford accident, I may say that there was an inspection by the locomotive men, the trackmen and other officers of the Intercolonial, who went there at once. The track was examined by the experts of the department and a number of the officials that very day. With respect to the recent accident, the officers of the department made a thorough examination as to the condition of the track. I am advised that it was found in very excellent condition.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was there any report of the officers who made the investigation of the track and reported the circumstances ?

Mr. EMMERSON. They made several visits and reported from time to time. They also gave their evidence at the sworn inquest.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did they come to any conclusion as to the cause ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, they were not able to tell the cause. It was plain that on the one hand the cars of the Canadian Pacific Railway were defective, but there was no evidence to show that was the case, and no evidence, so far as I am informed, that would in any way indicate that the track was not in good condition. It was one of those unaccountable things.

Mr. INGRAM. Had the track been recently repaired, or was there anything of that kind at the place where the accident occurred ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No ; it was on a part of the line which had recently been laid with new 80-pound rails, and which had received the ordinary inspection and care given by the sectionmen in charge.

Mr. INGRAM. If the proper elevation was not given to the outer rail on the curve, the train would run off the track.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The engineer was held to be principally at fault for the very disastrous accident at Windsor junction, which resulted in loss of life.

Mr. EMMERSON. His name was Copeland.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It would hardly seem possible that he could have gone away if immediate action had been taken, for my recollection is that he was confined to the hospital for some time before he was able to go out, and there was ample time to have secured his arrest if it was desired to do so, and if instructions had been given at the proper time. That is my recollection of the facts, and therefore cannot understand why this man got away if there was any real desire to secure his arrest and trial. There may be some explanation of which I am not aware, and what I say is subject to any explanation that may be given, but I do not think the government are quite justified in this matter. Two or three lives were lost ; and if the press accounts are correct, this man was very much in fault, and undoubtedly rendered himself criminally liable, because I believe he absolutely disobeyed a regulation of the road having the force of law and was sound asleep at his post, permitting his train to run past a signal which would have warned him to place his train upon a siding. The result was that the man who had committed the fault, while he received severe injuries, escaped with his life, whereas two or three men who were not guilty of any negligence lost their lives. It is a very serious condition of affairs, and would have justified every possible effort by the government to place the man on trial before a jury.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think the man was taken to the hospital and the commissioner was sent down. As soon as they could get the evidence of that man and all the other evidence, they promptly made a report. The man was out of the hospital before that report was received at the Department of Railways, and when it was received and the facts were known the Minister of Railways instructed the general manager to dismiss these men and to have proceedings taken. The general manager sent the chief police officer of the railway to Halifax to arrest the men. This officer secured the assistance of the Halifax police, but before the man could be secured he had gone.

Mr. DANIEL. The minister has given me some information which I did not ask for, but has not given me the information for which I did ask. I asked him if he could give us an idea of how much of this cost of repairs to engines, passenger cars, postal, express and baggage cars, freight cars and so on was due to accidents and not by wear and tear. That was the question I asked the hon. minister because the expense last year for those purposes was very much greater than the year before. We ought to have some idea of the loss accruing to the country through accidents and in that way get a better idea of the management than we could in any other. The minister talks of gentlemen referring to the good roadbed and good service on the Intercolonial. I may say that the last time I came from St. John, I came around by the Intercolonial and have great pleasure in testifying that I think the carriages ran very smoothly and the road appeared to be very good. But I thought that we ought to be able to travel a little faster. I think that twenty-three hours from St. John to Montreal is altogether too long. When you go by the Canadian Pacific Railway, you take not half that time.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is only half the distance.

Mr. DANIEL. I was glad to find that a new train was put on which is called the Ocean Express, which is said to do the run in a shorter time. How much shorter ?

Mr. EMMERSON. About three hours.

Mr. DANIEL. It seems to me that this change should have been put in the time table.

Mr. EMMERSON. The train did not start until Sunday and it is in the new time table, which is out.

Mr. DANIEL. The train started before the time table was out. Would the minister give us a statement of the accidents which have happened on the Intercolonial and the increased expenditure they entailed ? I did not see in any statement of the minister where he procured the money to pay for the accident that happend to the Canadian Pacific Railway train. Where was that appropriation taken from ? It does not come in under 'Repairs to passenger cars.'

Mr. EMMERSON. The cars were taken to the shops and repaired.

Mr. DANIEL. What about those which were smashed beyond repair ?

Mr. EMMERSON. They were sent to the Canadian Pacific Railway and were paid for by the Intercolonial. That would appear in the general repairs.

Mr. DANIEL. Is that included in the statement you gave us yesterday ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That would appear in the general statement of the whole year.

Mr. DANIEL. Then the statement announced yesterday does not give the full deficit, because it does not include those cars.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not know what the full deficit will be until I get the full returns for June. I am only speaking of the actual payments up to the 31st of May.

Mr. DANIEL. The payments have already been made for the train belonging to the Canadian Pacific Railway ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The general manager says he does not know whether they were paid for or not.

Mr. DANIEL. The item would be quite considerable.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think I have said it would be from $25,000 to $35,000.

Mr. DANIEL. The minister does not know whether that is included in the statement he made ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, I have not the returns of the Canadian Pacific Railway. We sent the cars to the Canadian Pacific Railway. They make the repairs and the Intercolonial is responsible to the Canadian Pacific Railway for the cost.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not think that the public will feel reassured by the statement of the minister with regard to the great length of time which has been allowed to elapse between the accident and the investigation into it. It will be rather depressing to the public to find that an accident can happen and no attempt at an investigation be made until a month later. I certainly would not look upon that as an evidence of good management. I would like to have an assurance from the minister that some sort of investigation has been made into the last accident which occurred three or four days ago.

Mr. EMMERSON. An investigation has been held by the officers of the Intercolonial and a further investigation will be held by the inspector, who will take evidence under oath. Parties will be heard under oath before him. The public will be invited to appear and give evidence and the railway officials will also be called upon to testify. Now, as to keeping any account of the cost of cars injured by accident as contradistinguished from the cost of cars that have been worn by use, I may explain that we do not keep a separate account. The only way by which we can get an idea of what accidents cost is through the estimate made at the time of each accident. We know that the accident at Milford will cost at least $30,000 in loss of cars, and there are other expenses besides.

Mr. HAGGART. Before the item passes, would the hon. minister inform me if in the statement of receipts and expenditure on the Intercolonial for the eleven months the $140,000 due for rent on the Grand Trunk Railway is included ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is paid monthly and is included in the statement up to that month.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken up to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. The order for supply will be called, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) will be the first minister whose estimates will be taken up. If his estimates are disposed of early, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) will probably follow. If not then the Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson).

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understood from the Prime Minister privately that some Bills would be taken up in the forenoon of this week, between the time when he spoke to me and Friday. That has been departed from.

Mr. FIELDING. The programme will be as I have stated.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) be kind enough to bring down the papers in connection with the overrulings in the matter of Corry & Laverdure ? I wrote to the minister some time ago on the subject.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12 o'clock midnight.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, July 7, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

THOROLD AND LAKE ERIE RY.

Mr. W. M. GERMAN moved :

That all rules and orders be suspended in relation to a Bill to amend the Act of the present session intituled 'An Act to incorporate the Thorold and Lake Erie Railway Company.'

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Explain.

Mr. GERMAN. Unfortunately clerical errors occurred in the Bill. The names of three of the incorporators : Mr. Norcross, Mr. Taschereau, and Mr. Bigman were typewritten incorrectly, and section 10 of the Bill allowed this railway company to make traffic arrangements with the great lakes and St. Lawrence Navigation Company ; when it should have been 'transportation company' instead of 'navigation company.'

It is simply sought to amend clerical errors. There is a precedent for this procedure. In the journals of the House of Commons of 1887, in the motion of Mr. Kirkpatrick seconded by Mr. Hesson, a similar motion was made with regard to the Kincardine and Teeswater Railway Company. The Bill was presented to the House, received and read the first time ; a resolution was passed authorizing the second and third readings, and it was then ordered that the clerk should carry the Bill to the Senate and desire their concurrence.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I suppose my hon. friend is entitled to have the Bill read the first time, but I do not think the rules of the House should be suspended to a greater extent than that. I presume the facts are just as stated, and that this is simply to correct clerical errors, but as it is a private Bill and there may be interested parties, I think it would be unwise to suspend all rules at once and to say that the Bill should be carried through without further investigation. I would suggest that the Bill should be read the first time, and referred to the Committee on Standing Orders where it can be examined.

Motion agreed to, and Bill introduced and read the first time.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Bill was referred to the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

QUESTIONS.

INLAND REVENUE ACTS.

Mr. CLANCY—by Mr. Ingram—asked :

1. Has 53 Victoria, Chapter 23, section 4, which repeals 154 of the Inland Revenue Act, and substitutes the following :—'Every distiller who exports any spirits in the production whereof any malt is used, upon which any duty of excise has been paid, shall upon the production of due proof of such use and payment of duty, be entitled to a drawback equal to the excise duty paid on the malt used in the production of the spirits so exported ; and the amount of such drawback shall be determined in such manner as is directed by any Departmental Regulation in that behalf,' been repealed or amended ?

2. If so, when ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Inland Revenue) :

1. Not repealed or amended.
2. Not repealed or amended.

NAPANEE RIVER BUOYS.

Mr. WILSON asked :

1. Have the buoys in the Napanee river been painted ? If so, when, under whose instructions, by whom and what is to be paid for this work ?

2. Have the said buoys been placed in position ? If so, by whom, when, by whose instructions, under whose supervision, and what is to be paid for placing them in position ?

3. Have tenders for this service been asked for ? If so, when, and what is the last day for receiving tenders mentioned in the advertisement calling for tenders ?

4. What pay is to be given to the person superintending the above services ?

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Yes. Under instructions of the department. Painting included in cost of painting and placing.

2. Yes. Placed by R. B. Shipman under instruction from the department. Twenty dollars to be paid for painting and placing.

3. Yes. Posters sent out 24th June last. The last day for receiving tenders is the 7th July.

4. No arrangement has been made for paying any person for superintending the service.

MONTREAL AND ATLANTIC RAILWAY.

Mr. MIGNAULT—by Mr. Proulx—asked :

1. Is the government aware that the section of the Montreal and Atlantic Railway between Yamaska and St. Guillaume is no longer being operated ?

2. Is it the intention of the goverment to take the necessary means to oblige the company to open that railway to traffic ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. The government have no official information that this section of railway is not being operated, beyond the fact that it does not appear in the sworn statistics of the Montreal and Atlantic Railway made to the department by the company.

2. The matter having only now been brought to the attention of the department, is being considered.

TRENTON HARBOUR DREDGING.

Mr. PORTER—by Mr. Sproule—asked :

1. Has any person been appointed to keep account, on behalf of the government, of the quantities of dredging now being done in Trenton Harbour, Ontario ?

2. If so, when was such appointment made, and by whom was it made ?

2. What is the name of the person so appointed ?

4. Was he appointed upon the recommendation of any person or persons ? If so, whom?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Inland Revenue) :

1. Yes.

2. Appointed on June 17, 1904, by order of acting minister.

3. Mr. Josiah P. Shurie.

4. Appointed by order of acting minister.

RAILWAY ON THE BANKS OF THE LACHINE CANAL.

Mr. F. D. MONK. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, I wish to inquire from the government whether they have authorized the use of one side of the Lachine canal by the trains of any railway company ; in other words, whether they have given leave to build on the banks of the Lachine canal a track enabling a railway to enter the city of Montreal by this road. I have received a great many inquiries from interested parties in my county who are very anxious to know if that has been granted, and this is the reason why I put this question.

The Rt. Hon. Sir W. LAURIER. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I think this permission has been granted a good many years ago. I could not say if some recent order has been added to that permission. I will give a definite answer to my hon. friend in a few days.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Summary report of the Geological Survey for the year 1903.—Hon. Clifford Sifton (Minister of the Interior.)

CORNWALL CANAL CONTRACT.

Mr. S. BARKER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the right hon. the Prime Minister, whether he will have laid upon the table, the two Orders in Council referred to at page 6 of the Auditor General's report, dated the 18th of February, 1896, and the 12th of June, 1896. These are the two Orders in Council with respect to the original contract for light and power on the Cornwall canal. They will be needed in the discussion on the estimates.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand these orders have been laid on the table already ; however, I will see about it.

Mr. BARKER. Those of 1900 have been, but not those of 1896.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Civil Government—Department of Trade and Commerce—salaries, including the accountant at $1,800, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $18,200.

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT (Minister of Trade and Commerce). The House will observe that there is an additional vote asked for of $4,000. This is principally by reason of the appointment of an accountant, who is a new officer, at $1,800. Two officers were transferred from the ordinary charge for clerical assistance and put on the permanent list, making $1,000. The remainder is for statutory increases. The appointment of an accountant was rendered necessary by the fact that very large sums are now being disbursed through the department for bounties and other purposes.

Mr. CLARKE. Who has been appointed accountant ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. J. Code. He was formerly assistant in the Customs Department, and has been transferred to mine.

Mr. BLAIN. How long has Mr. Code been in the employ of the government ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. About twenty years.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the hon. gentleman mention in what cases the statutory increases occur?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A chief clerk, $50; a first-class clerk, $50; a second-class clerk, $50 ; five junior second-class clerks, $50 each; three third-class clerks and two messengers.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. minister explain to the committee that well-known phrase which we see so frequently now in the estimates: 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act ?'

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That refers to the case of the accountant. He was in the service of the Customs Department as assistant accountant at $1,600. On being transferred to this department, where the service required from him is more responsible and more important, his salary has been raised to $1,800.

Mr. CLARKE. Have all the clerks in the hon. gentleman's department who were entitled to the statutory increase received that increase?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. I would like the hon. gentleman to inform the committee whether in the reorganization of the department the hon. gentleman has pursued the course laid down in the statute. I would also call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact of there being now two messengers instead of one.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There have always been two messengers, only one has heretofore been paid out of the contingencies instead of out of the main vote.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman has not stated whether the statute has been complied with in the re-organization of the department. It is somewhat surprising to find an increase in this department of even $4,000, in view of the record of the right hon. gentleman at the head of that department as a public man, and in view of his explicit statement made on several occasions that it was a useless department on which the expenditure of public money could not be justified.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The major item is the increase for the accountant. That is due to the very large expenditures now paid through the department on bounties and mail subsidies. The $1,000 increase in the mail clerks has been caused by a transfer. It was formerly paid from contingencies and is now paid directly. The rest are all statutory increases. Touching the work of the department, it may interest the hon. gentleman to know that, if the correspondence is any guide, it has increased just 600 per cent within the last six or seven years. There is a great deal more done than in 1896. There are six times as many letters and almost six times as much work in other ways.

Mr. SPROULE. You have fifteen clerks instead of ten.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Three are mere transfers. The only new appointment is the accountant.

Mr. LENNOX. The right hon. gentleman has not answered my question as to the manner in which this alteration is made in the department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The chief alteration was the appointment of a new accountant. The only other material alteration was in handing over the commercial agencies to the assistant Deputy Minister for special control. The rest is as before.

Mr. SPROULE. We have this fact established at any rate. The right hon. gentleman was wanting to say that this was a useless department and the money spent on it was wasted. Yet we are now asked to vote $31,800 on that department, including the salary of the minister. That is a large amount for the country to have to pay for a department which the right hon. gentleman has often declared is absolutely unnecessary and useless.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But there is an alteration between 1896 and 1904.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, there is another occupant of the position.

Mr. LENNOX. The Civil Service Act stipulates that in order to effect a change in the organization of a department, such as is asked for here, certain steps have to be taken. There must be a recommendation from the deputy head to the head of the department, that recommendation must be concurred in by the head of the department, and then laid before the Council. That procedure has, however, been neglected by the various departments.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In all cases where there has been any new creation, a report of the deputy head has always been obtained. I have here a memo. from Mr. McGee, showing the practice prior to 1896. In several cases the reports of the deputy heads were presented to parliament and in almost all the others the appointments were made after parliament prorogued. I shall send my hon. friend the memorandum.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not think that the practice in the past should be pleaded as an excuse for any remissness in the present. Take the right hon. gentleman's own political career. If he be right to-day, he must have been singularly wrong in the past. Section 2 of the Act provides :

First-class clerks shall only be created by Order in Council passed on the report of the deputy head, concurred in by the head of the department, setting forth the reasons for creating the office, and asking that the salary be voted by Parliament.

What I want to know is whether that course has been followed in this case or not. We have a first-class clerkship created at a salary of $1,800, and we should know whether the procedure, as laid down by the statute, has been complied with ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to Mr. Code, he was a first-class clerk in the Department of Customs. With respect to the other, the recommendation was made in due course by myself on the report of my deputy head. I do not want to enter into a legal discussion such as we had the other day, but I may say that the course which has been pursued is the one I have always known to be followed. The minister submits the estimates to Council under his signature, and after they have passed Council they are submitted to parliament. Then they appear before Council a third time and are finally settled. I am aware of the point my hon. friend has taken. He may or may not be legally correct. There was considerable discussion as to the meaning of the clause some time ago, during which the Minister of Justice took one view and some of my hon. friends another. But my hon. friend will find that the custom is as I have described it and has been followed ever since 1866.

Mr. LENNOX. The question is not the qualifications of an official, but the creation of the office, so that the fact that the accountant was in another department is not material. The statute provides, wisely or otherwise, that before this is done a certain course shall be pursued and among other things that the promotions or introduction of a new clerkship shall be upon the recommendation of the deputy head setting forth in writing the reasons why he makes the suggestion or recommendation. I am not arguing the question in the legal sense, but am speaking of it only as a matter of propriety in carrying out the provisions of the statute.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As a matter of course an Order in Council was passed authorizing this appointment.

Mr. LENNOX. What I object to is that there has not been a recommendation in writing by the head of the department as an initial step in the proceedings.

Civil government, contingencies, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $6,600.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a reduction here of about $400 in all. In 1903 the vote for clerical and other assistance was $2,500. That is now reduced to 1,500. Two sections were made of this, part of it being transferred to the main estimates. Under printing and stationery we ask $2,000 in 1903-4 and $2,300 now. My deputy informs me that the increase is on account of the various bounties required. There is a saving in the case of sundries which were $2,500 and are now $2,300. The total asked in 1903 was $7,000, the total asked now is $6,600.

Ocean and mail service between Great Britain and Canada, $260,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hon. gentlemen will observe here that an increase of $85,000 is asked for under the new contract which has been made with the Messrs. Allan for this service. The Messrs. Allan have agreed to build two new steamers on the turbine principle for which they will receive at the rate of £2,000 sterling per round trip. They will besides these steamers employ the 'Bavarian' and 'Tunisian,' for which they will receive at the rate of £1,000 per round trip.

Mr. CLARKE. What do they now receive for the 'Bavarian' and 'Tunisian ?'

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They were receiving about the same for the winter service and £750 for the summer service.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the subsidy been raised by £250 for each round trip ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is an increase for part of the year of £250. The other vessels receive from £500 to £750 as a rule if the service is performed. It is especially stipulated that the service shall be performed by the new steamers and the 'Bavarian' and 'Tunisian.'

Mr. CLARKE. What is to be the speed of the new steamers ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They are to have an effectual actual speed of 17 knots.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the speed of the 'Tunisian ' and 'Bavarian ?'

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is supposed to be about 14½ to 15 knots. They seem to have kept that speed this year and a good deal better than in former times. Of late they have been doing a good deal better than last year.

Mr. CLARKE. For what reason was the increased subsidy given ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I cut down their demands in the matter of the new steamers very considerably, and allowed them a little more in the case of the 'Bavarian' and 'Tunisian.' It was a kind of lumping business for the whole service. They complained that they lost money on the trips. Whether that is so or not I cannot say, but I made large reductions from the amounts they demanded for the new steamers and gave a slight increase for the 'Bavarian' and 'Tunisian.'

Mr. CLARKE. It means that we are giving an increase of £250 sterling per round trip to the 'Bavarian' and the 'Tunisian.'

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Provided always they live up to their contract. There is a special clause under which, if they fail, they are fined one per cent for each hour.

Mr. CLARKE. Has that fine ever been collected ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I cannot enforce it in their case because the steamers have not yet been put on the service.

Mr. CLARKE. Has it been collected in any case ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Oh, yes, I have several times imposed fines for failure to live up to the time stipulated in the contract.

Mr. CLARKE. Where will I find the particulars ? Does the hon. gentleman remember how much the deductions have amounted to ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My deputy informs me that £10,000 were deducted last year. My hon. friend can see in the Auditor General's Report that the amounts paid were so much less than the subsidies voted. It was owing to their being fined for failure, to comply with the terms of the contract. Of course in each individual case there were different circumstances ; we examined into these circumstances and made what appeared to be a reasonable deduction for the failure to comply with the time stipulation in the contract.

Mr. CLARKE. For failing to make the time ? What was the average time made for the last twelve months and how does it compare with the time made during the previous twelve months.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. During the summer of 1903 they appear to have made 30 trips at an average time of 7 days 12 hours and 47 minutes, that is fron Moville to Rimouski.

Mr. CLARKE. What does that mean in knots per hour ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. All depends on whether they went south or through the Belle Isle passage.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman must have the figures before him. I would like to know what is the average speed per hour, and the hon. gentleman says that depends on whether they took one passage or the other. Of course, he has the distances by both routes before him ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. From Rimouski to Moville, via Belle Isle, 2,287 knots ; and from Rimouski to Moville by Cape Race, the shortest possible route, 2,445 knots. That amounts to 7 days 12 hours and 47 minutes. With respect to Cape Race, that is probably shorter than the true time, because they are compelled to go further south in passing by Cape Race.

Mr. BELL. What is the tonnage of these steamers ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. 8,000 to 10,000 tons.

Mr. DANIEL. Would the minister state what arrangements have been made under this contract during the winter months for the St. Lawrence navigation ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In the winter months they sail from St. John and Halifax, and a little longer time is allowed in winter—I think 12 hours additional time for the same steamers. The contract stipulates that in each case of these new steamers, the 'Bavarian' and the 'Tunisian,' ten full round trips must be made. The hon. gentleman will understand that all these steamers have to be taken off for a certain time for ordinary repair, and this is done during the winter.

Mr. DANIEL. The old Beaver Line is not under contract now ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No ; our only contract for this service is with the Allans. This contract is expected to run two years.

Mr. SPROULE. In making a new contract like that it is a great pity that some arrangements have not been made for a faster service. I understood the minister to say that the new steamers would make about 17 knots an hour. That appears to be very slow compared with the speed that steamers make between New York and Europe. We appear to be either wasting our time in some way, or to be unequal to the occasion in failing to provide a better service than we have. I think the country will conclude that there is something wrong when we cannot succeed in getting a faster service than the 17 knots an hour that the new steamers are to make. Surely we could provide a greater speed than that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend will note that there are two serious questions to consider. One is the enormously increased expense that an additional speed would entail. The other arises from the fact that fast steamers can carry only a small amount of freight. The amount, I believe, that is carried on a fast steamer is something like 1,400 or 1,500 tons in vessels of 10,000 tonnage or more; whereas, as he knows, other vessels carry a very heavy freight. I think I have mentioned to the House that we tried to ascertain what could be done for a faster service, but the only tenders submitted to us called for $1,000,000 in one case, and $1,250,000 in the other, for a 20-knot service, and they appended to it divers conditions which it was not in the power of the government to comply with.

Mr. CLARKE. As a matter of fact, taking the mean speed of last year, we have been paying these subsidies for a mean speed of 13 knots per hour. That is the best we have been able to do yet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. If I have made the calculation rightly, for the longer passage of 2,455 miles, with a mean time of 7 days and 12 hours, the rate would be 13·6 knots per hour and for the shorter passage of 2,287 miles, 12·7 knots per hour. The average speed, taking both routes into consideration, during the past year, has been 13 knots per hour for the carriage of our mails. Surely we should be able to accelerate that speed in the near future.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The question is one which has engaged a good deal of attention. I would just point out to my hon. friend that by the terms of the contract which I have made with the Allans, if they are complied with, we will have a service from Moville to Rimouski almost identical in point of time with the New York service. It will take six days with 17-knot steamers. With the exception of one or two of the 'greyhounds,' the time to New York is about six days. Now, it is a matter for serious consideration whether it is worth going to an increased expenditure, varying from three-quarters of a million to a million and a quarter, for the sake of shortening the time by 14 or 15 hours. I leave my hon. friend to consider that question. But I want to point out to him that the difference between 17 knots and 20 knots, taking into account the shorter passage that we have, amounts to almost nothing as between the New York passage and the passage from Moville to Rimouski. I may also point out that the average speed is a good deal reduced by the fact that if vessels like the 'Parisian' and 'Pretorian' were employed as subsidiary boats, as well as the 'Bavarian' and 'Tunisian,' we would attain a much better average speed than we are attaining with the 'Bavarian' and the 'Tunisian' as the principal boats. Now, I find that the 'Tunisian' for the most part did the service in about six and a half days. In July the average was 6 days 21 hours; August, 6 days 8 hours; the next time, 6 days 9 hours. And in the fall, of course, when they had more difficulty with fog and sometimes with ice, the time was done to 7 days 8 hours. But, for the most part, the 'Bavarian' and 'Tunisian' did the passage in considerably under 7 days. The distances I gave the hon. gentleman are the shortest possible distances. But in passing along Newfoundland they frequently have to diverge considerably to the south, which lengthens the passage. I may mention also that I have felt rather doubtful whether I ought to insist too rigorously on the terms of the contract where they pleaded that they had to stop on account of fog. If you insist too much upon it, you may tempt these people to run at an increased rate of speed under circumstances which may imperil the safety of the passengers. Therefore, where they have been detained by fog and ice, I have dealt rather leniently with loss of time.

Mr. MONK. What is the intended tonnage of these two new turbine steamers, and is it intended that they are to come up to Montreal? And I may say to my right hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) that our friends about me here have suggested that he should not give himself the trouble to rise to answer each question that is put to him.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am much obliged for the hon. gentleman's consideration, and, if I find myself tired, I will retain my seat. With respect to the points mentioned by the hon. gentleman, I may say that I believe that the tonnage of these vessels is to be from 8,000 to 10,000 tons. My deputy thinks they will be 10,000 tons. They are the turbines, which, as hon. gentlemen are aware, is a form now coming into considerable favour.

Mr. SPROULE. Does not the contract provide what tonnage they shall be?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not specifically as to tonnage, but it provides for their effective speed, and that is about the least tonnage they can have to give that speed.

Mr. MONK. I did not understand the right hon. gentleman to say whether it is intended that they should come up to Montreal.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, so I understood from the Messrs. Allan.

Mr. MONK. Does the right hon. gentleman know whether there is any provision for cold storage accommodation ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, that is expressly provided for.

Mr. CLARKE. If I have taken the right hon. gentleman's figures correctly, the average speed of the 'Bavarian' and 'Tunisian' last year was not more than fourteen knots ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, I do not think it was.

Mr. CLARKE. That is the rate, making the most liberal allowance. Now, we are to have two 14-knot and two 17-knot boats. The average speed will be a little over 15 knots. And we are paying £2,250 sterling for the round trip of each of the 17-knot boats, and £750 for each round trip of the 13-knot boats. It does seem to me that, in view of the large subsidies being paid, we have the right to expect an acceleration of the speed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have tried every possible means but I cannot induce the steamship owners to tender on better terms.

Mr. CLARKE. The situation will be this, as the right hon. gentleman knows is the case, unhappily, at the present time—that, while we are subsidizing vessels to carry the Canadian mails, the overwhelming bulk of our mails is being taken to New York and sent thence in British or foreign bottoms.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) will note that there is a steamer going out of New York every day. Under these circumstances it is impossible for us to provide for more than a fraction of our own correspondence. Moreover, from points west of Kingston, the mails would naturally go by New York as being the shorter route. From Kingston eastward our correspondence, including the correspondence of Montreal and the maritime provinces, will go by the Canadian route.

Mr. CLARKE. There have been, as the right hon. gentleman knows, repeated memorials addressed to the government favouring the establishment of what may be fairly called a fast Atlantic line.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is true, and as the hon. gentleman knows we have advertised and tried in every way to obtain terms for such a service. But the figures have been extremely high.

Mr. CLARKE. We went so far on one occasion as to secure the model of a new style of ship which, it was supposed, would revolutionize Atlantic travel. But that result does not seem to have been attained. But the right hon. gentleman will not say that 15 knots an hour is what is desired by the commercial bodies of this country, and he knows that our passenger traffic is being disintegrated because we have no vessels comparing in luxury and comfort with many of the steamships sailing from New York.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) will tell the hon. gentleman that the 'Bavarian' and 'Tunisian' are great favourites with the travelling public.

Mr. CLARKE. With the people of Montreal—they have to go by that route.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, they could go by New York. But in the summer these boats are well filled. As to the speed, I have made many inquiries, and I find that there are only a very small number of persons who are willing to pay considerably for the increased speed of 20 knots as against 17 knots. The hon. gentleman knows that all you gain by a 20-knot vessel would be fifteen hours in the transit between Moville and Rimouski. He can satisfy himself by making the calculation. It is a serious question whether it is worth while for the people of Canada to pay three-quarters of a million or a million more than we are paying now in order to shorten the passage by fifteen hours, particularly when we shall have to use vessels that will carry extremely little freight.

Mr. CLARKE. There is an increase of $85,000 in the vote, yet the mails will go practically as they have been going.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is true, but we get a very much better service than before. If we get these vessels to make the passage in six days between Moville and Rimouski on the average it will go far to give us the service the hon. gentleman desires. We find, on examination, that the vessels running from New York at the rate of 17 knots are very extensively patronized in comparison with the 'Lucania' and vessels of that class. The latter vessels, such as the 'Cedric,' I believe, are designed for 17 knots and not for an excessive speed. The cost of increased speed is enormous. Perhaps the hon. gentleman has not examined that point, but if he has examined it he will know that every additional knot involves huge increased expenses.

Mr. CLARKE. To have a six-day passage from Rimouski to Moville, it would be necessary to obtain 16 knots on the average. It is not contemplated by the right hon. gentleman, however, that this service is to give much more than 14 knots.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) is a little underrating the speed of the 'Bavarian' and the 'Tunisian.'

Mr. CLARKE. If we had the record of the passages of the last few months we could get at it exactly.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I can send it over to my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) if he wishes to examine it. He was asking the average time from Moville to Rimouski. I have here the figures of the time of thirty trips from Rimouski to Moville, and I find the average is seven days five hours.

Mr. CLARKE. Of all the mail boats ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, of all the mail boats.

Mr. CLARKE. What boats are in the mail service ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The 'Bavarian,' 'Tunisian,' Parisian,' Pretorian' (occasionally), and the 'Ionian.'

Mr. CLARKE. What was the average speed of the 'Parisian' and the 'Ionian' ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The average of the 'Parisian' is nearly as fast as the 'Tunisian' and the 'Bavarian.' The 'Ionian' has made fair passages, but she is not quite as fast. I had a little memorandum made for my own information as to the relative cost of the various grades of steamers. The proportions are somewhat as follows: 15 knots would represent 34; 17 knot would represent 49; 20 knots would represent 80, and 22 knots would represent 106. It is worth noting that the cost of 20 knots is very nearly double the cost of 17 knots. It is hoped the turbine system will enable us to get a greater speed at a less cost.

Mr. CLARKE. We are practically adding 50 per cent to get one knot, or one knot and a half increased speed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. About two knots. We propose that the 17 knot boats must do the service in six days and the others in six and a half days. The argument is that during the summer the two 17 knot steamers must make the passage in six days under penalties, and the 'Tunisian' and 'Bavarian' must not exceed seven days.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the minister expect that a larger proportion of the mail matter will go by the new steamers ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I doubt. While New York is sending out one steamer per day, I think the bulk of our mail matter will go that way.

Mr. BLAIN. The figures given last session show that only one-seventh of our mail matter went by the Canadian route and the balance by New York.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think it is increasing by the Canadian route. I will have to apply to the Post Office for details, but I am certain there has been no material change.

Mr. BLAIN. You don't expect any material change from the increased cost ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think so. I cannot venture to promise the House that there will be any alteration in that respect. We hope that with thoroughly comfortable and first-class boats there will be a considerable increase in the traffic, but I do not expect any increase in the mail matter and I think the Post Office has come to that conclusion too. Heretofore the passage has ranged from seven to ten days, and it will be a very material improvement if we can establish on ocean ferry not exceeding six days.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that for all time to come a very large proportion of Canadian mail matter will go via New York ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is not in my department precisely, but I am afraid that a very large proportion will always go by New York. They have a steamer per day and they are rather likely to increase than to diminish, and under these circumstances we must make up our minds that a large proportion of our mail matter will go by that route.

Mr. MONK. A great object in having fast steamers between Canada and England is for the despatch of the mails. Whatever the reason for the change in public sentiment of recent years, the tendency of passengers going to Europe is to seek steamers which afford great comfort and accommodation, such as the 'Celtic' and 'Cedric,' rather than great speed. If we only have a weekly steamer of very fast speed it does not help us very much with reference to the mails. That is why it occurs to many people, that until we can have an extremely fast service between Canadian ports and European ports, we will not have very much use for a fast Atlantic service. If we had a three or four day service between Newfoundland and the coast of Ireland there is no doubt that it would have a material effect on the carrying of the mails by such a route, and I should think passengers too. The 'Tunisian' and 'Bavarian' now afford improved accommodation, and the securing of a large number of passengers through Canadian ports is a matter of some importance. I would like to ask the minister if he has made ample provision in the new contract in connection with these two turbine steamers, for really superior passenger accommodation ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes. The Messrs. Allan have submitted the plans to me and they have apparently made ample provision for the comfort and convenience of a very large number of passengers on these steamers.

Mr. BELL. What would be the time of these boats between Halifax and Moville ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is a winter trip, and twelve hours longer are allowed than to Rimouski.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). The danger is that in coming to the banks of Newfoundland in thick foggy weather, when the banks are dotted with fishing schooners, these steamers have to reduce their speed for the safety of themselves and the other craft in these waters. Sometimes the fog continues until you get into the St. Lawrence, and I am not so certain that the speed of steamers on that route can be very largely increased over the present rate.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Do I understand that the subsidies are given only to these four steamers—the two new ones and the 'Bavarian' and the 'Tunisian ?' Or would any of the old steamers be included ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They would be included at the reduced rates—from £500 to £700 as the case may be.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. All boats of the Allan Line ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. All boats that are permitted to go ; but a special provision has been inserted that forty out of fifty-two trips must be performed by the new steamers or the 'Bavarian' or the 'Tunisian.'

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Does the new contract cover all these vessels ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It covers the two new steamers, with the 'Bavarian' and 'Tunisian,' and as substitutes on occasion the 'Ionian' and 'Parisian.'

Mr. MONK. What is the time fixed for the first sailing of the turbine steamers ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. One is to start during the month of August next, and the second one on or before the opening of navigation in the St. Lawrence river in the spring.

Mr. MONK. Is there any penalty attached for their failure to keep the dates ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They are to receive a much larger subsidy, and the Messrs. Allan, I believe, have been pushing the construction of these vessels with all expedition. They have had some trouble from strikes, and I do not know that we can depend on the vessel being delivered in the month of August. I am in correspondence with them on that subject now.

Mr. MONK. Are the vessels begun ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Oh, yes. They are all but ready for delivery. My hon. friend is very incredulous.

Mr. MONK. We have been waiting a long time for that service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before the contract was signed we had notice that they were under way.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). They are not like the dredges for Nova Scotia which have been under construction for the last three or four years, but are not finished yet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is the 'W. S. Fielding' that my hon. friend is referring to ?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). Yes.

Mr. BELL. I suppose the hon. minister realizes that the people of Halifax, Sydney, St. John and other ports in the maritime provinces take a very great interest in this subject, and I would not like the impression to go abroad that the government have abandoned the idea of obtaining a really fast service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Oh, no.

Mr. BELL. I rather judge, from what the hon. minister has said, that he looks upon a modern, up-to-date, first-class service, as good as they have in New York, as something beyond the means of this government to provide. Last year, when this matter was up, the premier, I think, said that a thoroughly up-to-date service of twenty-two or twenty-three knots would cost us $1,500,000 a year, which he seemed to think was an outlay beyond the ability of this country. In the maritime provinces, at any rate, I am sure there would not be a ready acquiescence in that view. The people there believe that with the establishment of a service which would be equal in speed, efficiency and quality to that which runs to the port of New York, a large part of the passenger travel and a full supply of express freight would be carried through our ports in the maritime provinces. Therefore the people of Halifax and of those other ports regard it as a matter of great importance to them locally that such a service should be established. A great many take a larger view, however, and look upon it as a matter of national pride and interest. They believe it would have the effect of advertising Canada extensively, placing it on the line of through travel between Europe and Asia, diverting a large part of the passenger travel of the world through Canadian territory, improving our position as a nation, placing us practically on the front street of the world's travel. That is a position which we might hope to attain on account of our geographical position between the two great masses of the world's population, that is, the European and the eastern Asiatic. Such a service would attract a large portion of the travel which is in a hurry. While it must be admitted that a great many men are choosing the larger, steadier and more comfortable steamers when they wish to travel, there are always a large number of business men and others to whom every moment of time is of great value, and who will therefore always take the line that will give them the assurance of saving a few hours or days. The figures given by the minister show that the most he hopes to attain is an average speed of 14¾ knots.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is putting it rather on the inside. In summer I hope to attain a great deal more.

Mr. BELL. Take the figures given by the hon. minister, that is what they average.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend will note that the average is very materially reduced by any single vessel making a long passage. The 'Tunisian' and 'Bavarian' as a rule make the passage in six days and from ten to fifteen hours, which gives a decent average speed.

Mr. BELL. Suppose the minister gets an average of 15 knots. That is not a speed which will attract any travel. At that speed the vessels will not take our own mails if there is a change of sending them by a faster route. It may provide an express service, but it will not have the effect which we had hoped for, of giving us a service which will attract any large proportion of the world's passenger travel. It seems to me that the government of Canada should be perfectly willing to spend annually $1,500,000 to secure a really fast service. The large disbursements which would be made by these steamers in this country and by tourists making their way across Canada would largely reimburse the country for the expenditure necessary to provide the service. I hope the minister will give us the assurance that the government had not made up their mind that such a service is hopeless. At the time Mr. Dobell announced to this House that he had made up his mind that not more than 18 knots could be looked for, even such a statement was very disappointing to the House and the country; but now the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce assures us that the best this government can do after eight years is to provide a service of 15 knots, which is a liberal estimate of its speed. It really seems as if, instead of making progress, the government in those eight years have been going back. It is perfectly proper that we should recognize the difficulties in the way. They are enormous, and I suppose they are aggravated to a certain extent by the class of steamers to be employed. The introduction of the turbine steamers will to a certain extent involve delay. There are of course reasons why ship owners should hesitate to put themselves to great expenditure, while this matter is still in the experimental stage, it is after all a disappointment to the people to find that instead of being able to realize the 20-knot service as promised in 1896, all that the minister can promise us, with an increased subsidy of $85,000, making $360,000 in all, is a 15-knot service. There is 50 per cent increase in the subsidy and no improvement in the service. It looks as if the matter were one the government are inclined to pooh-pooh, but I hope the minister will make every effort to give the country the service we require.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It was partly in view of these considerations that I refused to extend the contract beyond two years, so that we might have time to do something in the direction the hon. gentleman proposes.

Mr. CLARKE. In what season of the year are the trips to be made by these faster vessels?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Chiefly during the summer months and the earlier part of the winter.

Mr. CLARKE. Then the slow boats will do winter service?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A portion of the time. It is not proposed that these vessels will all be laid off at the same time.

Mr. CLARKE. What will these slow boats receive per round trip?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. £500 during the summer and £750 during the winter.

Mr. CLARKE. But those slow boats will not be on during the summer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They might in the event of the others breaking down. If employed in the summer, they will get £500 per round trip.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the hon. gentleman expect the passage will be made in six days from Rimouski to Moville?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, six days from the 1st of June to the 1st of November in each year covered by the agreement.

Mr. CLARKE. Does it require a 16-knot service to do that during the year?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It would require a 17-knot service.

Mr. WADE. I do not feel like agreeing with my hon. friend from Pictou that this is no improvement in the service. I think it is a very great improvement, because of these two new boats, one will have an average speed of 17 knots and the other will be somewhat faster. I understand that the second boat, which is being built, is likely to be a little speedier, but at any rate we are getting two boats with an average speed of 17 knots. They will be very superior boats. I have had the opportunity of looking at the specifications and diagrams and I consider they will be a great improvement to the service. While it is most desirable we should have the speediest service we can get, there is a good deal in what has been said by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), and that is that the travelling public to-day are looking more for comfort than for great speed. The favourite and most comfortable boats now running out of New York are the 'Cedric' and 'Arabic', and those large comfortable boats have not a speed of over 17 knots. Considering the condition of Canada and her population, if we are able to make from year to year, or every two years, a substantial advance towards securing these very fast steamers, we are accomplishing a great deal. It is a question whether a service of 17 or 18 knots would not be a service quite commensurate with the best interests of Canada. Of course if we could afford to have a daily ferry such as they have in New York, we would be in a position to attract a large proportion of the travel of the United states as well as of Canada, but we cannot hope to do that yet and it will be some time before we can.

Mr. BELL. How long ?

Mr. WADE. That will depend on the rapidity with which the country is opened up and advances. The trouble at Halifax was this, that the company could not secure freight for the larger steamers. The 'Tunisian' and the 'Bavarian' had to sail out of Halifax several times with very little cargo. Besides the loss of running the ship, there is the danger of navigating a light ship in winter, and the company were forced to put on smaller and inferior vessels. The 'Tunisian' and 'Bavarian' are good boats, well fitted up, and with twin screws, and the 'Parisian,' while older and smaller, has always been one of the favourite boats on the Atlantic route. I think we may congratulate ourselves that we have the improvements which are manifest in this contract. When we are able to ship our products of the west from our maritime ports, we will be in a position to secure the very fast and continuous service we are hoping for, and we are confident that will be realized in the near future.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon gentleman's logic is defective. The minister says that these fast boats are not good freight carriers, but the hon. gentleman says that when we are able to secure the freight from the west we will have the fast boats. Which is right ?

Mr. WADE. I think I can make the hon. gentleman understand.

Mr. SPROULE. He was trying to put in a bar for the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Mr. WADE. Not necessarily. I will make my hon. friend understand by telling him that all big steamship companies run their very fast boats at a loss and make up the loss on their other business with their other boats. Not one of these ocean greyhounds, which run out of New York, is run at a profit, but the profit on the company's other business compensates for the loss on the swift boats.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. member (Mr. Wade) to say that we have a number of slower vessels, making less than 17 knots an hour. The minister told us that the vessels were running at an average of 14½ knots an hour last year. That ought to be slow enough for anything. We have enough of these slow boats to carry all the freight offering, according to the information before us, and it is not detracting from their earnings if we get boats to make a high rate of speed, and induce the travelling public to use them and also have them to carry our mails. It seems to me that the position of Canada in this matter is humiliating. We have a shorter route than the Americans, and yet they have a faster passage than we have. Canadians in every other line of life have proven themselves the equals of their rivals in the rest of the world, but in this important particular we are not successful competitors with our neighbours to the south of us. We have to acknowledge their superiority or our want of enterprise. There is an important matter that is lost sight of in considering the need of a fast line and it is this : While it is said, and probably will be admitted, that the bulk of the travelling public crossing the Atlantic to-day take the vessels that give them the greatest comfort there is yet a large percentage who travel on business and with whom time is a matter of great importance. The man travelling on business wishes to make his trip in the shortest time he can ; a few hours may make the difference between a great gain and a great loss. It is not to be wondered at that those who are travelling for pleasure should consider comfort mainly ; they can easily afford to sacrifice time if comfort can thereby be gained. But the great interest of the country is its business, not its pleasure ; the important question is how rapidly its business can be done, how rapidly its business men can travel, and how rapidly its mails can be carried, for the majority of letters deal with business matters. So long as those going by the American route can make the best time in the trip across the Atlantic, so long will the man travelling on business choose the route by way of New York in order to save time. And, for the same reason, business, men will send their letters by that route. Is it to be said that we cannot provide for sending our own mails by our own country when we have the shorter route as compared with New York ? It is a humiliation to Canadians that our men are not equal to the occasion and that we cannot provide that which other countries have provided that have not such great advantages as we have. It is said also that these boats do not carry much freight. Now the original contract made for the fast line of steamers provided that they should carry a stipulated quantity of freight with cold storage accommodation. Yet. though they would carry freight, they were to make a much higher rate of speed than those under the contract which has been signed or is about to be signed. Why could we not have done as well as was done under that contract ? Though that contract was made, the government refused to carry it out. It was said afterwards that the contract would not have been carried out by the steamship company. Well, at least the preliminary agreement was made and we had every reason to believe that the company with which it was made was able to carry it out had the government been ready to go on with the bargain. The minister tells us that we are making a substantial advance over what we have had in the past. What advance have we made in the last seven years in the rate of speed ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Speaking from recollection, I think the average passage is two or three days less.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the right hon. gentleman to say that the average passage to-day was eight or ten days.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, I said that the average rate in summer was seven days.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the minister to say that these new steamers would be so much in advance of the ordinary rate to-day that the difference would be practically the difference between ten days and seven days.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I was referring to the old times.

Mr. SPROULE. But he was speaking of the work done by the steamers in use to-day, the 'Bavarian' and 'Tunisian.'

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They have not taken ten days or anything like it.

Mr. SPROULE. He told us that the average speed was 14½ knots an hour. That was the very best he could say, and, after carefully revising his calculation, he said it would be 14¼ knots, or, perhaps it would be safe to say 14 knots. That does not seem to me to be much in advance of what it was.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman will find that the average rate is considerably in advance of what it was seven years ago.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the right hon. gentleman give us some data showing on what he bases that statement ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A few years ago the passages were made in eleven, twelve or thirteen days—eleven was rather exceptional.

Mr. CLARKE. What ships made that rate ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The ships of the various lines. We changed the service once or twice. Some of the Allan liners, some of the Dominion and some of the Beaver liners were employed. But they certainly were very inferior in point of speed to the average of the present day.

Mr. CLARKE. Of course, the right hon. gentleman has the data on which that statement is made or he would not make it ? Will he be kind enough to bring the data before the committee ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Let us have it at three o'clock.

Mr. SPROULE. Another element in the situation that we ought not to overlook is this : Under the present system people coming to Canada from across the Atlantic generally land in New York—in a foreign country. They pass through the great state of New York, and sometimes a great many other states, before they reach Canada. Many of these are intending investors, and, seeing the advantages of the United States and the attractions for investment there, they are apt to be induced to invest their money in the United States instead of in Canada. Why should we land our passengers in a foreign country ? If they landed in Canada and went four thousand miles across our country before reaching the Pacific, they could not but be impressed with the advantages offered by Canada for investment of capital. It seems to me that it would be of incalculable advantage to us to have passengers coming to Canada land in Canada direct.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How can you compel people to land in Canada ?

Mr. SPROULE. You cannot compel them, but if you will bring them quicker into Canada directly than via New York they will come in by the faster line. If I start from Toronto to come to Ottawa to do business, and there are three trains a day and one goes a little faster than the other, I will of course take the fastest one. So it is with a business man. We are living in a fast age, in an age of speed, and we will take the fastest trains and the fastest line of steamers.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But people who cross the Atlantic ocean generally do it for pleasure, and they prefer to go through a foreign port.

Mr. SPROULE. I said there was a percentage who travelled for pleasure, and in that case I presume they would look rather for comfort than speed. But the great enterprising business class of men, which is of value to us because they make their investments here, are the people that we should invite to land upon our shores instead of landing in New York before they reach Canada. These are considerations of immense value to the Canadian people, and we are not equal to the occasion if we allow this state of things to go on from year to year that has been going the last seven years, without any substantial improvement except what we are offered to-day in the shape of these two new steamers that are to be built, and even these I understand are only an experiment.

Mr. WADE. I do not wish the hon. gentleman to misquote me before the committee. I did not say that the 'Bavarian' and the 'Tunisian' were fast enough, I said they were satisfactory to us.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. member to say that the service had proved satisfactory to the public.

Mr. WADE. I said nothing of the kind, I said these two boats, the 'Tunisian' and the 'Bavarian,' were satisfactory to the people, and the 'Parisian' was an old favourite, these two boats as compared with the others would be a distinct improvement in the service and one that would be pleasing to the people. The hon. gentleman also said we had slow boats enough for carrying grain and freight. That is all very well, we have slow boats enough for carrying freight, but where is the freight to put in them? The freight was not there last winter, and as a consequence they could not run these large boats, the 'Bavarian' and the 'Tunisian,' and they had to put on the 'Laurentian,' the 'Pretorian' and boats of that kind. Now if we can get freight to these ocean ports which will fill the slower boats, it will build up the business of the country and the company can afford to run swifter boats. Now with regard to the pretention of the hon. gentleman that the people want to travel by swift boats, he is entirely mistaken.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not make any such statement. I said no doubt those who travel for pleasure would look for comfort rather than speed, but I said that the great enterprising business class of men desired to go by the fastest boats.

Mr. WADE. I think I know something about the desires of people who travel across the Atlantic on pleasure bent. The hon. gentleman is quite wrong. There is a certain class of business men who need to travel in great haste and will take the fastest line, but the great mass of the travelling public I am speaking about are looking principally for comfortable boats, which are not what we style ocean greyhounds. Now if we can secure two of these boats for this service running to Canada, it is going to be a great benefit, and a great advantage in other directions, it is going to improve the service. This contract expires at the end of two years, after which we may be able to make still more progress than we are making now. As I said before, if we are able to carry our products to the ocean ports for shipment there so that we can give these boats business and trade, there is no doubt but that we will get in due time the fast service that we are all so anxious to secure.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member evidently misunderstood me, at least he misrepresents me. I had not a word of complaint with regard to the proposed new steamers, because I think they are certainly a great improvement on the old ones, they are faster. But what I complain of is that we have made so little headway during the last seven years, and that the best that is offered us to-day are two more boats that will make but little better speed than the old ones.

Mr. CLARKE. As far as the item under consideration is concerned it doesn't make much difference as to whether people prefer to travel by a slow boat or a fast boat. We are asked to add fifty per cent to the sum that has been voted for mail subsidies, and we are only getting an accelerated speed of a knot and a half in the hour. The question is what will be the result so far as the mail service is concerned from this increased expenditure of $85,000? It will result in increasing the average speed by a knot or a knot and a half an hour, and that is all. What is the advantage to be gained by the people from this $85,000 of additional expenditure? This subsidy, as I understand, is given for the carriage of the mails; but if the mails continue to pass through the New York post office for the purpose of being transmitted to the old country by a faster line than we can offer, what advantage are we going to get? That is what we want to get at. The question is not whether the people prefer to travel by a slow boat or a fast one; we want to know what advantage we are going to derive from this fifty per cent additional expenditure so far as the carriage of the mails in concerned? If the mails are to be sent via New York what advantage are we to obtain from this increased subsidy? Before the item passes, I would like the hon. gentleman to bring us the particulars of the acceleration of speed which has been accomplished during the past eight years. We have, I think, a record of the average speed for the year before last; we want to see wherein the average time of crossing has been reduced during the past eight years. The hon. gentleman must have these particulars in his office, and when the committee resumes at three o'clock I hope he will be able to give them to us.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will see what we have.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The subject before the committee is the further consideration of resolution 153, ocean and mail service between Great Britain and Canada.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Before we proceed with the discussion of this item, might I ask the minister whether it is true that an official of the department has been sent up to Sarnia, to the Standard Oil Refinery, to look after the interests of the producers?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. An official was sent up to report on the best method of distributing the bounty, if that is what my hon. friend refers to.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Then I understand that instead of going to the producing district, the agent was sent to the Standard refinery to find out the best way of distributing the bounty.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understand he went all over.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What might I understand from 'all over'?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He went to both parties, the refiners and the producers, and examined the mode of production in the district generally.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Did he go to Petrolea?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The information I have is very different.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I can only give the information that I have received from the department that he was there.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the minister been able to procure a statement as to the average time and average speed of the vessels during the last six or eight years? The right hon. gentleman said that the time had been cut down by two or three days.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I was referring more particularly to the time made in 1895 and 1897.

Mr. CLARKE. Will we be able to get a return for the average time in 1895 and 1897 and the names of the ships?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have not the names of the ships. But from Moville to Halifax in 1895 they took ten days and ten hours on the average, in 1897 ten days and 22 hours.

Mr. CLARKE. That was an improvement in favour of 1895 as against 1897. Has the hon. gentleman the times for the years since 1897?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No. I have not the time for the whole period.

Mr. CLARKE. In view of that statement that the time has been reduced by two or three days from what it was in 1896 it would be well to have it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I shall get that but it may take some little time to procure it.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the minister a reasonable assurance that as the result of this new contract with the Allans and the increase of the subsidies by $85,000 a year, the Canadian mails will go by these ships from Canadian ports?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A certain proportion but not more.

Mr. CLARKE. If the right hon gentleman has not a reasonable assurance that as a result of this increased subsidy of $85,000 a year the Canadian mails will go by Canadian ships what particular advantage is there?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course it is open to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) to move to return to the old condition if he likes. The advantage is that we get a much better service than ever before for passengers and freight and incidentally for the mails. The hon. gentleman knows very well that we do not profess or pretend that this will bring us any large additional proportion of the mails; I do not think that it is to be looked for. So long as there is a daily service from New York, as I have explained again and again, the vast proportion of the mails will go by New York and not by Canadian lines.

Mr. CLARKE. The fact is the mail subsidy is put on one side in this matter and that it is in order to have these steamers come to the St. Lawrence that we are paying £2,000 sterling a round trip to each vessel.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. For these vessels running 17 knots.

Mr. CLARKE. The two turbines?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. To induce the Allans to put on these two ships on the St. Lawrence route between British and Canadian ports we have to subsidize each of them to the extent of £2,000 each trip.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is so.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. The right hon. minister says that fresh contracts have been made within the last year. Has he made any provision to protect the shippers in regard to freight rates? Are the freight rates to be in the future as in the past season very much higher out of Montreal than on boats from New York, even although we subsidize these boats to the extent of $10,000 for each trip of the new boats?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a provision under which control can be exercised over them, but I cannot pretend to say that we will be able to obtain as low rates from Montreal as from New York. At the present time, as the hon. gentleman probably knows, the rates from Montreal are very low indeed, lower than from New York.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. There is very little freight going now and when there is little freight offered the boats always lower the rates. It is when a large cargo is going over that it is of the utmost importance to the producers that the rates should be as low as possible, but that is the time the steamboats raised the rates, when they could really afford to carry cheaper. The hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) complains that these boats get light cargoes from Halifax and St. John. That was not the case from Montreal last year; they went out fully loaded, but the rates were 20 per cent higher than out of Boston and New York, and I would submit that in making these contracts where large subsidies are given, the government might protect the producers in that by stipulating as has been done in some cases that they should not charge a higher rate than is charged by vessels of similar speed from Boston, New York or Portland, and I submit that unless that has been done in this case, a very great injustice has been done to the producer. The minister stated also that cold storage was to be provided on these two new boats.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. I believe there is already cold storage on the other boats. Is there any provision in the contracts with regard to the temperature in these cold storage chambers?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister of Agriculture defines proper cold storage.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. The Minister of Agriculture states that it is impossible for him to control the temperature of these cold storage chambers after the original contract expired. There was an opportunity when these contracts were made to obtain absolute control by the Minister of Agriculture of the temperature of these chambers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The stipulation is for cold storage, but there is no particular provision as to temperature.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. That is the essential feature of cold storage. Cold storage is of very little use, indeed, unless the temperature is absolutely as required for the various commodities that are shipped. In fact it is not cold storage at all in the proper sense unless it is almost perfect and kept at the mark required by the various commodities that go forward. The producers and shippers complain that although large sums have been spent by the government in assisting steamships to provide cold storage still there is no control whatever over the chambers. On some vessels and on some voyages the temperature is absolutely correct. The stuff is carried over under proper conditions but on others again it is a long way from being perfect, and the Minister of Agriculture complains that he has no control and no power. It seems to me that if he has no power, if these contracts have expired, there was an opportunity in the making of these contracts to secure proper control.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So far as the Allan Line was concerned, no complaints were made to us as to cold storage. I am not prepared to speak as to the other vessels that had cold storage accommodation.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. I may say that they are a long way from being perfect. Some are very good, but many are far, far from perfect or what they ought to be, and the only way we can be assured that the temperature will be properly kept is for the government to have an absolute control over the cold storage. If the government have control over one line and can assure the shippers that they will get proper accommodation on one line, then of course the other lines which do not get subsidies will have to do the same thing or they would not get the trade. When the government is giving this subsidy to the one line and making this contract they have an opportunity to absolutely control the situation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In case the cold storage is imperfect I have power to reduce the subsidy under the terms of the contract.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Perhaps a more important matter than the cold storage is the ventilation of these ships. Almost all our cheese, which is one of our chief articles of export, and our apples go over, not in cold storage and not in what we call cool air storage, but in the ordinary holds of the vessels, which ought to be ventilated. It is a very small matter to secure that ventilation and it appears to me that the government have no power over the steamships in this matter. All that has been done apparently is that the Minister of Agriculture has sent a letter asking the steamship companies to properly ventilate the holds. Some have done this and others have not. There was an opportunity when these contracts were being made to provide for ventilation of the holds. I would like to ask the minister if that has been done.

Mr. WADE. With regard to this particular line of steamships the apple shippers of Nova Scotia are not so much concerned; they do not carry very many of the apples from Nova Scotia, inasmuch as their destination is Liverpool, while our market is London. With regard to New Brunswick, I have heard of no complaint except in one case, that of a steamship which was in distress and put in at the Azores, with the result that her cargo was landed in bad condition. The Canadian Pacific Railway boats and other lines that carry fruit have landed their cargoes in good condition, and no complaint has been made about them. I would like to see the government retain a control over the rates charged by the steamship lines. I do not know anything about the rates on grain, but I think the government should have some control over the freight rates on fruit. I take exception to the statement made by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke), that this vote is for a mail subsidy alone. It is a subsidy for a mail and a steamship service, and I think the freight service which we are able to obtain is very important, and should be well looked after. So far as my province is concerned, I must say that very good work has been done as regards the shipment of fruit. The stringency of the provisions of the contract which the government has exacted from the steamship people has compelled them to carry the fruit over in a very much better condition than formerly. Last year it gave absolute satisfaction, except in the case of one steamer, to which I have directed the ministers attention.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. How does the hon. gentleman know that fruit and apples and cheese are carried over in such perfect condition?

Mr. WADE. I did not speak of cheese; I referred to the apples shipped from the province of Nova Scotia and from New Brunswick.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. How does the hon. gentleman know?

Mr. WADE. I know it in the same way you would know anything; from information I have gathered. I have been at pains to inquire. I have been on the docks in London and have seen the fruit delivered from the steamers. I have been at the market, and have seen the fruit there. I have conversed with the leading shippers throughout the Annapolis valley, and from their testimony I am justified in forming my opinion.

Mr. CLARKE. Is this subsidy given for the shipping of apples, or is it a mail subsidy? What we want to know is what advantage the country will get from this additional mail subsidy of $85,000.

Mr. WADE. The steamship lines that carry the bulk of the fruit from Nova Scotia are the Furness-Withy and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and a subsidy has been granted to them. I do not say that they do not get any cargoes in St. John or Halifax. I said they did not get sufficient cargo, and that is a fact. I went over in the 'Pretorian' myself when she had only one-third of a cargo, and I speak feelingly on the matter, because the steamer rolled a good deal in consequence.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wade) seems to think that because he saw some apples landed in good condition on the other side, our shipments of apples have been carried over in perfect condition. The fact is that, although a good many apples may have been carried over in good condition, there also have been a good many carried over in bad condition.

Mr. WADE. From Nova Scotia?

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. WADE. What ship delivered her cargo in bad shape, and whose fruit did she carry?

Mr. E. D. SMITH. I could give the hon. gentleman the information with a little trouble. Some of these same steamers went from Montreal and the ventilation was not much changed in the meantime. It is a very easy matter to prove this by putting one thermograph where the fruit is carried and another thermograph on deck, so that the temperatures might be compared. The Minister of Agriculture told us that he had no power to control the ventilation on these vessels, but the time to get that power is when you are making these contracts. The contract has now been made for another two years, and there is no provision made that the Minister of Agriculture or his officers shall have power to board these vessels and see that the regulations are enforced. Again the government have let the opportunity slip by them.

Mr. LENNOX. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has announced that he is satisfied with an Atlantic service of about fourteen and a half knots, and he has also announced that we will have to content ourselves with the fact that possibly for all time to come the bulk of our mails will be carried by way of New York. I do not accept either of these propositions as being correct; and I do not think the people of Canada will calmly agree that we are not to have a fast Atlantic service, or that the bulk of the Canadian mail matter must be carried by New York. In 1896 both political parties had committed themselves to a fast Atlantic service, and the Conservative government before leaving office had made a contract for such a service by steamers of 20 knots or 21 knots an hour. That is confirmed by a statement made last session by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and which is reported in 'Hansard,' page 14161. When the Liberal government came to power, for reasons which have never been satisfactorily explained to the country, they saw fit to put an end to the proposed arrangement with the Allans, and they told us that they would secure faster vessels with better accommodation for passengers and freight. Accordingly, in 1897, the minister (Sir Richard Cartwright) brought down a resolution with reference to the Petersen contract.

At that time the present government thought that any service of less than twenty or twenty-one knots was too slow, and that it was an absolute necessity in the interest of the country that we should have a fast service. What did the hon. gentlemen then promise to the country? They promised to furnish steamships of 10,000 gross registered tons instead of 8,500 tons, and to maintain on the line from port to port across the Atlantic an average speed of 500 knots per day, or twenty-one knots per hour. They promised, in connection with such service and forming part thereof, to provide and maintain fast tenders of the torpedo-boat type, of a speed of not less than twenty-two knots per hour, to meet the steamers on their approach to Canada, to act as pilot boats, so as to ensure in the navigation of such ships both safety and speed, and that the said steamships should be constructed, fitted and maintained in all respects equal to the best Atlantic steamers now afloat. That contract was said to have been consummated, and it was represented on that occasion, not only by the right hon. gentleman who introduced it, but by those who followed him, that it was absolutely necessary in the interest of the country. To-day we not only have the right hon. gentleman intimating that we shall have to put up with having the mails of this country carried by American vessels, but that 14½ knots an hour is a respectable service for Canada; and we have other hon. gentlemen—for instance, the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade)—saying that it is a mistake for any government to think that a fast Atlantic service is desirable—that what the people want is slow and gentle travelling—not to go very rapidly, but to go with exceptional comfort. What the Petersen contract was said to secure was both exceptional comfort, high-class travelling, and a speed of twenty-one knots an hour. That we had secured that was announced by the right hon. gentleman who leads the House, in a speech which he made on the 6th of October, 1897, in the city of Toronto. With a considerable flourishing of trumpets he said that we were going to have an immediate end put to the Americans carrying the mails of Canada, and Canada was going to secure her own carrying trade and also the carrying trade of a great portion of the western states as well. This is what the right hon. gentleman said on that occasion:

> Sir Frank Smith's government had undertaken to give to that service a bonus, a subsidy, of $750,000 a year. We thought it was too much. We thought we could do it for less, and we succeeded in making a contract with a firm for a subsidy of $500,000, saving to the country therefore the sum of $250,000. We contracted with the firm of Petersen, Tate & Co., a Newcastle firm, a firm composed as we ascertained, of men of the highest honour, of the highest integrity, and the highest competency in their profession.

This is almost like the Transcontinental Railway question. When the right hon. gentleman speaks of any man with whom he makes contracts, he always refers to him as a man of the highest integrity, the highest honour, and the highest qualities of every kind. But in the case of the Transcontinental Railway it may turn out as did that of the fast Atlantic service, that he had not investigated as fully as he thought. The right hon. gentleman went on to say:

> Mr. Petersen and Mr. Tate have had a good many obstacles to overcome, as is always the case with men who launch a new idea into the world. Their idea was a new one, and therefore it met with objections and with discouragement from more than one class of people; and not later than a few few weeks ago, or a few days ago only, it was stated that the scheme of Mr. Petersen had fallen down, that it must be considered as absolutely a thing of the past. Mr. Petersen and Mr. Tate were at work. They work as men always work when they want to succeed. They said nothing; they answered no accusations; but to-day I have a telegram from my friend and colleague, Mr. Fielding, the Minister of Finance, to this effect: 'Petersen has made to-day the deposit required by the contract.' (Loud cheering and great enthusiasm.)

And yet these hon. gentlemen are prepared to tell the people now that they were all wrong on that occasion, that there is no necessity for a fast Atlantic service, and that we ought to be content with 14½ knots an hour and with seeing the bulk of our mails go by American boats. Further:

> It is with joy indeed that I welcome this explosion of satisfaction at the announcement that this scheme had not failed, but that it is to be carried through. I know that in some quarters this idea of having this passenger traffic amongst us was not popular; but, Sir, let me say to you that if there is a patriotic idea in the land it is the idea that we should not only carry the freight, but carry the passengers between America and Europe. (Hear, hear, and applause.) We can do it, we ought to do it, and now it is no longer in doubt.

Further on he said:

This line of steamers shall be completed probably within two years, certainly within three years. And when we have this class of steamers afloat on the ocean I have no hesitation, such is my confidence in the scheme—and it is a confidence which must be borne by every man who has looked into the subject—that we shall have the great bulk not only of Canadian traffic, but of American traffic as well. Sir, remember this, what I say is no idle boasting. Remember that the St. Lawrence route is the shortest of all routes. Now, as you know, all men have an aversion to the sea—I know I have—(laughter)—and my experience is not exceptional in this respect; all men have a terror of the sea; but when tourists know and are aware that upon the Canadian line, with a class of steamers having a speed of twenty knots an hour, equal in comfort to the best afloat on the ocean, there will be no more than four days between land and land—(applause)—the Canadian line will be patronized as no other. (Great cheering.) What will be the case when this line is in operation? The case will be this: that a passenger taking the steamer at Moville, say, if Moville is to be the Irish port, within less than four days will be in the strait of Belle Isle, and then within less than one day, or twenty-four hours, will be in the harbour of Quebec, and one day's sailing on the beautiful St. Lawrence with its magic scenery and free from all discomforts of the sea. (Applause.) When we have this line with us we shall not only have the entire Canadian traffic, but we must as a necessity have the larger proportion of the American traffic. This that I say may perhaps seem presumptuous. It is not. At all events, if it is, I have such an unbounded faith in my country that I believe every word that I say now and I am sure it will come out to be true also.

I am not finding any fault with the language of the right hon. gentleman in Toronto. It was intended as a campaign speech. He speaks a little wide of the mark, according to the contract his government had entered into, even if they had succeeded in consummating the bargain. What I am complaining of, and what will disappoint the country after so many years, is that it turns out to have been mere vain boasting, for we are not securing our own traffic or the carriage of our own mails, and we are about to spend enormous sums of money, not for securing the traffic of the Orient through this country, while the government are allowing the traffic of Canada to be diverted into other channels. Instead of making a retrograde movement, we ought to make a movement in advance. We had a better contract with the Allans in 1896. Even the Petersen contract was an improvement on the present one, as under it we were entitled to a 21-knot an hour service, and we should now be looking for something better than a weekly service. Having regard to the improvements that are being made in other countries and the keen competition that must always exist between this country and the United States, we should be taking a step in advance and demanding greater facilities for the export of our products than we contemplated securing in 1896. But instead we are advancing in the fashioin of the crab, backwards and I regret exceedingly that the minister has seen fit to express his perfect content with present conditions. I regret that he should contemplate so philosophically a service giving only an average of fourteen and a half knots per hour, owing to which our mails are still being carried to a large extent by steamers sailing from the United States. And in answer to the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain), the right hon. gentleman complacently assured us that as far as he could see we would have to look to a continuance of this state of things.

Mr. SPROULE. In view of past experience, it seems to me that this contract is very loosely drawn from the point of view of the interests of this country. We had very elaborate information given us by the Minister of Agriculture regarding the contracts he had made with steamship companies for the carriage of Canadian produce. But as regards that matter, I find this short clause in the contract:

It is understood and agreed that each steamer, while running under this contract, shall be fitted with adequate cold storage accommodation to the satisfaction of the minister.

There is no provision that the company shall keep the cold storage at any particular temperature suitable to the requirements of the class of produce sent or that they will provide any extensive plant of cold storage or to what extent. That is altogether optional with them. They do not say how many or how few tons they will provide to carry by cold storage. There is another very important omission, and that is what rates shall be charged those who use the cold storage. A few years ago we found that our shippers could not avail themselves of the cold storage plants because the rates charged were too high, and they fell back on the old system. Afterwards the Minister of Agriculture took credit for having provided against all these contingencies by a specific contract in which fixed rates were stipulated. But in this contract, we find no such safeguard. All that is provided is that these steamers when running under this contract shall be fitted with adequate cold storage accommodation to the satisfaction of the minister. Are the courts to determine what is adequate cold storage ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That will be determined by the department.

Mr. SPROULE. If the company provide cold storage, they will probably stand on their rights and say they have complied with the contract, no matter whether the cold storage they have supplied is suitable for the people or not. The hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) has told us that there was an admirable system of cold storage provided for the carrying of apples from Annapolis.

Mr. WADE. Not cold storage, but forced ventilation.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that he was talking cold storage.

Mr. WADE. Not at all.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, ventilated chambers if you will.

Mr. WADE. Not ventilated chambers, the whole ship is ventilated by forced ventilation.

Mr. SPROULE. They are all ventilated in any event.

Mr. WADE. No, they are not.

Mr. SPROULE. But whether that ventilation is suitable is another thing.

Mr. WADE. It is suitable to the shippers.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman has told us that he knows all about it, and when I asked him where he got his information, he told us he was standing on the dock and saw Canadian apples being landed in England.

Mr. WADE. I got my information from the shipper.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman's information does not agree with the Minister of Agriculture's Report, which says distinctly that a great deal of the fruit was spoiled.

Mr. WADE. That the fruit shipped from Nova Scotia was spoiled ?

Mr. SPROULE. From Nova Scotia and other parts of Canada I understood.

Mr. WADE. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. No fruit from Nova Scotia was spoiled last year except one cargo, and that was a case in which the ship broke down and had to put into another port.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman's denial of the minister's report, I do not accept as of any value. I am taking the report of the minister.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). The agents in London have been sending out circulars describing the splendid condition in which the apples of Nova Scotia arrived. They say that these apples were packed much better than the apples from Ontario.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, I can give my experience right from the county from which I come. A gentleman shipping apples both from Ontario and Annapolis is my authority for the statement I am about to make. He told me that he sold apples from the Georgian Bay district higher than the best apples from Nova Scotia. I will give that gentleman's name. He is a Mr. Carson, who has been several years engaged in the trade. He said that if we would provide suitable cold storage for the carriage of fruit, we would get much more remunerative prices. In this contract there is no provision for ventilating chambers or for anything except adequate cold storage, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce is to be the judge. But you require different temperatures for different kinds of freight. Professor Robertson told us a few years ago that when you ship butter, you must ship it in cold storage of about 35 degrees Fahrenheit. But if you ship apples you must have a different temperature. The temperature must not be too low or the fruit will be injured, and when brought to the air will deteriorate very rapidly and be all covered with moisture that spoils it. Grapes require a different cold storage, tomatoes require a different cold storage, and so with peaches ; and, if suitable cold storage or ventilation chambers are not provided, the shipment of fruit by this method will be a failure. It is because of this information coming from officers employed by the government who may be regarded as experts in this line that my attention is drawn to the fact that no adequate provision is made in this contract for the shipment of these various kinds of fruit. If provision is made for cold storage suitable for each kind of fruit, I cannot find it in the contract. I have already drawn attention also to the fact that no provision is made for rates. The vessel owners may charge any rates they like, even if they make them prohibitory. Unless a proper provision as to rates is made when the contract is entered into, no ordinary business astuteness is exercised in making the contract. Another thing is that this contract is to be for the carrying of the mails. The minister has told us more than once that he does not look for any great change in the carriage of the mails in the future, but that the bulk of our mails will continue to go by New York.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I spoke of the duration of this contract. I think I said it plainly enough to be understood.

Mr. LENNOX. I think there is a mistake. The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) asked the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce if we were to understand that for all time to come the mails would continue to be carried as now, and he said ' Yes.'

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I said nothing about all time to come. I was speaking of the duration of this contract.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the right hon. gentleman to say that the fact that a steamer left New York every day while we had only one leaving every week was sufficient reason why the mails should go by New York.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I was speaking of the present time and of the contract now under consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. The right hon. gentleman certainly put the question how we could not hope to carry the mails from Canada while we had only one steamer a week, while in New York they have a steamer every day. And he said that for that reason, if for no other, that route would certainly be taken.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SPROULE. Yet, this contract is to carry the mails. But if the vessels cannot carry the mails what is the use of our spending the money ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) move that the vote be struck out and take the sense of the House upon it.

Mr. SPROULE. But why should I do that ? The improvement, so far as there is an improvement, is one that I desire to see made. But I wish to ascertain whether the country is not paying too much.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My opinion is that the country is not called upon to pay too much, but if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is of a different opinion let him take the sense of the House on the question.

Mr. SPROULE. I am simply giving the reasons that lead me to believe that we are paying too much for what we are getting. But I also desire to bring out additional information, and am only making use of the information that the minister has given us with regard to the contract that he asks us to consent to by voting this money.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You are getting a contract under which, instead of 14½ knots, a speed of 17 knots is provided for during half the year and nearly as good during the remainder of the year for two vessels, and 15 knots for the other two vessels. And, in that you are getting a great advance on the present condition of affairs.

Mr. SPROULE. As I understand the contract, there is only one fast vessel to come on in August and the other to come on in the spring, so we do not get two vessels for half the year. If the new invention proves a success of course we shall have the higher speed for a portion of the year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) will note that the payments are strictly on their performance. They do not get the extra payment unless they give the extra service.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. The hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) seemed to think there was no foundation for the statement that goods are not carried in good condition. I would like to read an extract from a despatch to the Toronto 'Globe,' dated June 26th :

> According to a report received by the extension of markets division of the Department of Agriculture, a shipment of Canadian cheese was recently landed at London, Eng., in a heated condition, due to being carried across the ocean from Montreal in a poorly ventilated part of the ship.

Mr. WADE. Did I say anything about cheese ? Why attribute such statements to me ? Surely I repeated it twice showing that I had no reference to cheese but was speaking exclusively of apples shipped from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. But the conditions which would carry cheese over in bad condition would carry apples in bad condition. It is not a question of cheese or apples, but a question of the condition of the vessel, and whether proper advantage was taken of the opportunity afforded by the making of this contract to provide for such matters as this. This is a simple matter, but a matter of very great importance to the shippers of this country. The government had the opportunity to secure what the Minister of Agriculture says they have not now—control of the situation with regard to this matter. Failure to control the situation means an enormous loss to the producers of cheese and apples and other perishable products simply through these compartments not being properly ventilated. Some of them may be properly ventilated, but the vast majority of them are not so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It would be interesting to have this question settled. Perhaps the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) would tell us how many days he spent on the docks, how many visits he made to the markets, and what proportion of the shippers he consulted.

Mr. WM. ROSS. (Victoria). And how many apples he ate.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have not accused my hon. friend from Annapolis of having eaten a whole cargo. I am talking about his knowledge.

Mr. WADE. I will answer the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) if he wishes to be answered. I must say it is not a very brilliant way of asking questions even if it does come from the hon. gentleman. I suppose he is aware that I did not spend many days on the docks in London. But I did spend several hours there. I also made visits to the market at Covent Garden, and could give some testimony as to the superiority of the Nova Scotia fruit in the opinion of dealers there, for Nova Scotia fruit was bringing a higher price in the market than the Ontario fruit though the Nova Scotia barrel is considerably smaller. But most of my information I got from shippers and growers. I have talked to scores and hundreds of people in the Annapolis Valley, in the hon. gentleman's native county of King's as well as in my own native county of Annapolis. I have communications from many of these people expressing satisfaction with the way the service is performed, with the exception of this cargo of which I have spoken. I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) would believe that I would rise in the House and make a statement of that sort unless I had something to base it upon. It is a matter of vital importance to the people of the Annapolis Valley that their fruit should be transported in proper condition. They are constantly writing and talking to me on the subject, and they are grateful that the service has been improved and are satisfied with it. The fruit has gone forward in good condition and it is only proper that I should state that to the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. All this is beside the question. No one has disputed that a very large quantity of apples went over in good condition. But that is not the point, though it is the point to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wade) addressed himself. The statement he undertook to make was that all the fruit——

Mr. WADE. Not at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wade) will allow me—as I understood him, all the fruit went over in good condition, with the exception of one cargo from Nova Scotia. I say he has not shown any information which would justify him in making that statement. There may have been fifty cargoes, for anything he has said, that went over in bad condition. He will not undertake to say that he has investigated even seventy-five per cent of the cargoes that have gone across in any such way as would justify him in making such a statement——

Mr. WADE. I have examined them in such a way as to justify me in making that statement.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Seventy-five per cent ?

Mr. WADE. Yes, more than seventy-five per cent. I say the whole has gone over in good condition, with the exception of one cargo. I know where to get the information and I have taken the trouble to get it. There are officers of the government who are watching these shipments, and there are shippers who are interested in the results and who are constantly getting the returns from the other side. Surely these men know whether their fruit has reached the market in good condition or not. If any cargo did not turn out well would it not be known inside of a day ? Would there not be a cable message here telling the parties interested of the result ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If that is the kind of investigation the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wade) talks about——

Mr. WADE. I suppose the hon. gentleman wants me to pick over every apple——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not want the hon. gentleman to do anything of the kind. or anything at all except to confine himself in speaking to matters about which he knows something.

Mr. WADE. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) say that there was one cargo taken over in bad condition except the one to which I referred ? Will he make any statement in contradiction of what I have said ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I can name half a dozen shippers in one little district in the county of King's about the condition of whose shipments the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wade) has made no investigation and does not know the first thing. I have some personal knowledge myself as to some of these shipments and I venture to say the hon. gentleman does not know any thing at all about the condition in which these apples arrived in England. And when he ventures to stand in his place in parliament and state that he knows the condition of every cargo of apples that crossed the Atlantic from the province of Nova Scotia, he makes demands on my belief that I am really not able to satisfy. Now, I would like to ask what standard of cold storage the Department of Trade and Commerce has provided for. It is provided that the cold storage is to be to the satisfaction of the minister. That being so, I suppose the minister has his scheme provided and knows what he intends to demand, or, at all events that he proposes to take up that matter in the very near future. My right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) says he relies very much upon the words 'To the satisfaction of the minister.' That is what I gather. Without such words, of course, the provision would be simply illusory. The contract does not state definitely what cold storage is required, but simply gives a principle upon which a contract should be framed. The words of the contract are very good as a principle upon which to frame a contract, but they are almost useless, in fact meaningless, except for the words that he speaks of which have some value though, not, perhaps, as a matter of law, the value which the right hon.

gentleman thinks should be given to them. But if we are going to depend upon these altogether, we surely should have some statement as to what the minister proposes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. On that point I intended to confer with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) who has had that matter under his special charge and has been making very careful inquiries.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know to what extent the Minister of Agriculture will be of assistance to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Some of the opinions expressed in the House as to his efforts in regard to cold storage in the past would not seem to recommend him as an authority. Possibly the Minister of Trade and Commerce has weighed these matters and he may have——

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the Minister of Agriculture and his officers have a good deal of information and probably correct information.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Possibly. Even giving to these words the fullest possible meaning, the contract does not seem to have been very carefully drawn. 'To the satisfaction of the minister'—in what respect?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That the cold storage shall be adequate.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It does not say in all respects. I should suppose that a carefully drawn contract would have provided that the cold storage accommodation should be satisfactory to the minister in regard to the extent of it. Is the entire steamer to be fitted up with cold storage or is it only to be such portion as the minister requires?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The usual proportion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It does not say so. The provision is remarkably bald.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) is a good lawyer. I think he will admit, that, in drawing such a contract there is danger of falling into pitfalls if you attempt to draw the contract too closely. A discretionary power properly used especially where it is to the interest of the steamship company to provide good accommodation, will secure better results than by attempting to confine them too closely under the contract.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is some force in what the right hon. gentleman says. Still, I think that more than three lines of the contract might have been devoted to the subject if the department desires to be safe. It says :

It is understood and agreed that each steamer, while running under this contract, shall be fitted with adequate cold storage accommodation to the satisfaction of the minister.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I had it in mind that, in having the cold storage accommodation made to my satisfaction, I would consult the Minister of Agriculture who, as the hon. gentleman knows, has been fitting up a great many vessels with cold storage.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But, apparently, if my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. E. D. Smith) is to be regarded as possessing any information on the subject, with no very great results.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have not had any complaint of the adequacy of the cold storage so far.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But it would seem that the right hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) is going to an authority who has not produced the best results in the past.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) will have his own opinion. I cannot induce him, perhaps, to regard my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher) as right except on militia matters.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will be content to believe that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) knows as much about this as he does about militia matters, if that will be any satisfaction to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce might appeal to his colleague (Mr. Fisher) on these matters with just as much confidence and probability of securing good results as was found when that hon. gentleman was called in to administer the affairs of the Department of Militia. But the question is whether the country will be satisfied with these results, however much the Minister of Trade and Commerce may be satisfied with them. For instance, this cheese which went over so late as the 26th of June, has gone over in a bad and heated condition.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I don't think it went over in an Allan boat.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am talking about the results obtained by the Minister of Agriculture, results which have been detailed in an organ of the government, which I am sure the right hon. gentleman will not question, the Toronto 'Globe,' which is more to him than the Bible, and he more to it than a prophet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not so regard it, nor any other paper that ever was published.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The extremely intimate relation between the hon. gentleman and that organ would justify me in appealing to it, and that journal has shown that this cheese went over in a bad and heated condition. Yet the Minister of Trade and Commerce will go to the Minister of Agriculture in order that a line of steamships may be fitted up in precisely the same way. That does not seem to promise very good results. However, it is possible that even the Minister of Trade and Commerce may repent and seek some better source of information, and possibly he may be induced to obtain a modification of this contract so that definite and precise provisions may be included, perhaps by a supplementary agreement, and that there may be something substantial upon which we may call the contractors to account in case the results are not satisfactory.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I may say to my hon. friend that I had some conversation with some of his legal confreres in the Department of Justice on that point, and they rather intimated that it was inexpedient to go into minute details in the matter, for the reasons I have given, and which I think we must admit, always supposing I can secure an opinion from my colleagues, will have some force.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. I submit that the contract affords no protection whatever. The clause which the minister has pointed out as being a protecting clause is of no practical utility at all. We have facilities on every boat that has cold storage, the plant is there, the refrigerating plant is there the insulating chambers are there, the facilities are there, but they are not put into operation, and that is where the weakness of this contract comes in. The contract simply provides that the boats shall be fitted with adequate cold storage accommodation. Even if they are fitted with cold storage accommodation, we have no surety that we shall have any particular temperature. That is the point; the government should have control of the temperature. No matter how good the facilities are, how good the chamber is, or how good the refrigerating plant may be, if they do not provide you with a proper temperature they are of no earthly use, the goods may arrive in any sort of condition. That is the crux of the whole question. I say the government should have provided in this contract to retain control over the temperature, with power to insist that the temperature shall be so and so for the different products. Then it would be of some use. That clause simply provides that they shall put cold storage chambers on the boat, but we have no surety that they will be effective.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What system of cold storage is to be placed on these boats?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The same system that my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture introduced into the various vessels to which he has given contracts.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What system might that be?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not quite sure of the name; it is an English system, I believe.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. The minister has admitted that the facilities to be provided are similar to those that have been provided in the boats we already have in operation, and we know from experience that these are far from being effective. Many of these boats carry goods in an excellent condition, but many other boats do not. The trouble is that the government has no power to say what the temperature shall be, whether it shall be 10, 20 or 50 degrees. As a matter of fact, some of them do not maintain a temperature that will carry the stuff over in proper condition, yet the minister says the same facilities are provided in this new contract. Therefore, I think the minister has been derelict in his duty in making this contract, because he should have provided that the government shall have control of the temperature.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the minister understand that a part of this subsidy is to cover the expense of providing cold storage on these vessels, that is to say, that that was one of the considerations?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That was provided before, as I understand.

Mr. SPROULE. I find in the Auditor General's Report, page D—117, that we paid last year $9,432 for fitting up the steamer 'Tunisian' with cold storage, and we paid for the 'Bavarian' $8,900. Now, it seems we are paying double for this.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No; that was before the contract was made. This particular clause the hon. gentleman refers to has no reference to the two new steamships to be built.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood these were the steamships that had to do the work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The expenditure the hon. gentleman refers to was incurred and paid prior to the contract we now have under discussion.

Mr. SPROULE. But we are using the same steamships.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If they have got it already, they will not require any more.

Mr. SPROULE. We are giving them a consideration for fitting up and providing what we paid them for last year, and they are practically agreeing to do what they have already agreed to do and been paid for.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But we are not giving them any more.

Mr. SPROULE. But we are paying, without any consideration of this subsidy condition, for cold storage, a portion of which has been paid for already. Then there are two new boats provided for in this contract, two new 17-knot boats. The provision had more especial reference to these two boats, the 'Bavarian' and the 'Tunisian.'

Mr. SPROULE. Our information was that all of these boats had to provide cold storage for perishable products.

Mr. CLARKE. In answer to my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) the minister stated that these steamers were all running from Montreal ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it not optional with the contractors whether they should run from Montreal or not ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Oh, they would go to Montreal.

Mr. CLARKE. The contract distinctly says that it is at their option; the voyage may terminate at Quebec.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As a matter of fact there is not the slightest doubt that the steamers will go to Montreal. The Allans invariably start from there even although they are not able to get a full cargo there.

Mr. CLARKE. The contract provides that they may run from Montreal at the option of the contractors ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think that is the phrase, but as a matter of fact the hon. gentleman knows as well as I do that the Allans always run from Montreal.

Mr. CLARKE. But it is at the option of the contractors, whether they shall run from Montreal or not.

Then it is provided in clause 2 :

> It being understood and agreed that if from any cause it should be proven impossible for the steamers running the service to secure cargoes from St. John in the winter season, the minister in his discretion may relieve them from going to that port.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That has occasionally occurred, I do not think it will occur frequently.

Mr. CLARKE. It is not yet quite clear to me why this increased subsidy has been given to the two steamers already in the service, the 'Bavarian' and the 'Tunisian.'

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I explained that when this proposition was originally made a very considerable larger sum was asked for the 17-knot steamers. That I declined to give, but I agreed to give for the 'Bavarian' and the 'Tunisian' a little more, an amount not at all equal to the reduction I made from the sum demanded for the others.

Mr. CLARKE. As I understand, the subsidy to these two is increased by 33⅓ per cent ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not so much, I was paying £1,000 during the winter always.

Mr. CLARKE. And how much during the summer ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. £750 during the summer. It is during the summer only that the increase is made.

Mr. DANIEL. I understood the minister to say this morning that in the winter these steamers would run to St. John and Halifax.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. Not that it was optional with the department to allow them to finish the voyage at Halifax.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Under special circumstances they may be relived if it is not possible to obtain cargo at St. John.

Mr. DANIEL. As a matter of fact that was tried last winter. The Allans stated they could not get sufficient cargo at St. John and so went to Halifax for cargo. We have all heard the statement of the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) that these steamers could not get sufficient cargo at Halifax, and I am quite prepared to maintain that if the steamers cannot get a sufficient cargo at St. John they certainly will not get it at Halifax. The freight which is given to these steamers in the winter time comes very largely, as we all know, by the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway have their own line of steamers, to which I presume they will give the first choice of cargo. But so far as relieving the steamers from going to the port of St. John is concerned, I do not see how they are going to get cargo at Halifax if they cannot get it at St. John. Halifax is served by the Intercolonial Railway, and St. John is also served by the Intercolonial Railway and if that traffic is to be carried to Halifax by the Intercolonial Railway it certainly could be much more readily and more cheaply carried to St. John than to Halifax, because the haul would be so much shorter. No doubt there would be some local cargo from the province of Nova Scotia, but there would be this at St. John too. A great deal of the province of Nova Scotia which borders on the Bay of Fundy is served better and more cheaply by St. John than by Halifax, and I do not see why the steamers should be relieved from going to St. John. Of course we all know that pressure is sometimes brought to bear in these matters apart from business considerations. I did not know until I heard the hon. member (Mr. Wade) make the statement to-day that the Allan steamers were not able to get any cargo at all at Halifax.

Mr. WADE. No, I did not make the statement that they could not get any cargo at all, I said they could not get sufficient cargo.

Mr. DANIEL. For my part, I do not altogether approve of the change.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Unless there is cause shown they certainly will not be allowed to skip St. John.

Mr. BLAIN. What increase in the subsidy was necessitated by the providing of cold storage accommodation ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to these new boats, no special allowance was made.

Mr. BLAIN. No special allowance ? Then I have the right to assume they would have been fitted up with cold storage even had the government not entered into a contract with them ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister of Agriculture has been fitting up most of the vessels from Montreal with cold storage appliances. In this particular case I do not propose that he should pay any more.

Mr. BLAIN. I have to call attention to what the Minister of Agriculture said on that point. At 7612 of last year's 'Hansard' after discussing the question of cold storage and the amount of money the government were spending the hon. minister concluded his remarks by saying :

> The ship-owners themselves have put in a great many of these cold storage plants without any assistance and without entering into any contract with the government.

The hon. gentleman in the course of his remarks here was taking credit to the government for having spent a large amount of money with the steamship companies for cold storage and now they have reached the point that the vessel-owners will fit their vessels with cold storage without assistance from the government at all. I gather from my hon. friend's remarks that these vessel-owners would have fitted these vessels with cold storage without the assistance from the government at all.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not sure what they would have done with these particular vessels.

Mr. BLAIN. My right hon. friend will not say that because they were to fit them up with this so-called cold storage they had been given an increased subsidy.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, I would not say that.

Mr. BLAIN. Then the committee must assume that if these are up to date vessel owners, as I supppose they are, they would have fitted them without increased subsidy. As the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. E. D. Smith) has pointed out, this cold storage system is entirely out of date. I might make that statement because it is not to come up to any standard ; therefore, I do not think it is right to give any subsidy on that account.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The subsidy is paid for increased speed.

Mr. BLAIN. The increased speed is not very great and therefore the amount should not be very large.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Every increase of a knot over a certain rate means an enormous increase of expense.

Mr. SPROULE. Are we to understand that all this additional subsidy is on account of the new boats that are to be supplied ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A large part of it, practically all. They are paid double what any other craft are paid.

Mr. SPROULE. We will only have one of these boats from August to the end of the season.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If they make the trips they are to be paid double what the 'Tunisian' or 'Bavarian' are paid.

Mr. CLARKE. If it is possible to conceive that these new turbine boats will cost £500,000 sterling, then for 10 trips a year the government of Canada proposes to pay four per cent on the cost of these vessels.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The extra running will cost quite as much as the subsidy.

Mr. CLARKE. They are only bound to make ten round trips and for that service they get £20,000 sterling, which is four per cent on the cost of the vessels. Is there any provision in the contract that there shall not be discriminating rates against Canadian products and in favour of American products which may be shipped on these steamers ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think there is any provision of that kind.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there any undertaking that when these vessels deliver the mails at Halifax or St. John they shall not proceed to Portland ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They are not permitted to go to Portland.

Mr. CLARKE. What provision in the contract prevents them ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a clause in the contract to prevent them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Clause 14 of the contract reads :

> The steamers employed in carrying out the provisions of this contract shall not on any voyages either outwards or inwards, call at any foreign port not specified in this contract.

Mr. CLARKE. Is that all the prohibition there is ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would be quite sufficient to prevent them going to Portland. As a matter of fact it would be practically impossible for them to do so and carry out the terms of the contract.

Mr. CLARKE. As a matter of fact the Allan liners now go to Portland as their final port of destination.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is not the case. I believe the Allans do run ships to Portland, but not these ships.

Mr. CLARKE. What provision is made by the government to provide these vessels with cargo at St. John ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The government do not undertake to supply them with cargoes ; they must do that for themselves.

Mr. CLARKE. They are not bound to go to St. John if they cannot get sufficient cargo there ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They may be excused. Of course they will desire to obtain cargo at St. John if they possibly can.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They might desire much more to obtain it somewhere else.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then they could only obtain it in Halifax.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes ; the contract provides that they must go either to Halifax or St. John, and the government can only excuse them from going to one place or the other.

Mr. DANIEL. As I understand the contract these steamers must call at Halifax in winter under any circumstance, and at the discretion of the minister they may be required to go to St. John.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would put it the other way ; they must go to St. John and Halifax, but they may be excused under certain conditions from going to St. John.

Mr. DANIEL. Under what circumstances would the minister excuse the steamers from calling at St. John ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would excuse them only when it became perfectly evident that they could not obtain cargo at St. John. The Canadian Pacific Railway have a line of their own at St. John to which most probably they will give the preference. It has happened, perhaps owing to snowdrifts or other causes, that there has been absolutely no cargo at St. John in one or two cases ; I hope that will not often happen, but it would be only in an extreme case that this clause of the contract would be invoked.

Mr. CLARKE. The minister told us that it would be practically impossible for these vessels to carry out their contract and go to Portland. I do not think that statement can be sustained. It is more than likely that the 'Bavarian' or the 'Tunisian' would alternate with one of the turbine boats, which would give each of these vessels two weeks to cross the Atlantic, and as they are bound to make the voyage from Moville to St. John or Halifax in seven and a half days they would have no difficulty in proceeding from one of these Canadian ports to Portland.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They would have to stay a certain time at St. John or Halifax, and I do not think they could carry out their contract if they called at Portland. Even if the hon. gentleman were correct in his contention, I hold that the contract prevents them from going to Portland at all.

Mr. CLARKE. Then the minister is satisfied that the contract binds them not to go to Portland.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think there is the slightest intention on their part to go to Portland and I certainly would call them to task if they did.

Mr. CLARKE. There has been nothing done to prevent Canadian shippers being discriminated against by these contractors in the matter of rates.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have not had any complaints of discrimination in the case of the Allan Line.

Mr. CLARKE. When the hon. gentleman's estimates were under consideration last year, we made some statements as to discrimination in rates, and, if my memory serves me, the hon. gentleman sent some of his officers to Boston and other points in the eastern states to ascertain if it was a fact that discrimination was used against Canadian shippers and in favour of foreign shippers. Has the hon. gentleman the report of his officers who made that inquiry, and if so, what did they find ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know that the inquiry was made.

Mr. CLARKE. I think the railway officials in Boston in fact admitted that there was discrimination.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the hon. gentleman is in error on that point.

Mr. SPROULE. There was another reason why it seemed probable. When we were discussing the question of cold storage with the Minister of Agriculture and desired to know the rates that would be charged to those who might avail themselves of the cold storage, he gave us rates on certain lines, and he said the space was to be held for Canadians for a certain length of time, but that if the whole cargo was not obtained within that time, the vessel was to receive freight from wherever it could get it. Then the question was asked whether freight was to be taken from Americans or others who were not paying any share of the cost of fitting up these steamers with cold storage, at the same rates as Canadians ? The hon. gentleman's answer was : What can we do ? The vessel requires a cargo, and if it cannot get a full cargo from Canadians, it should be allowed to get the balance from other quarters, and to carry it at the same rate as it charges Canadians.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am afraid it is almost impossible to avoid that.

Mr. CLARKE. Did the hon. gentleman make any inquiry as to whether or not it was a fact that discrimination existed against Canadian shippers on freight going either by Atlantic ports or by the Pacific?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, we caused some inquiry to be made, and we found that in general there was no discrimination. I am not prepared to say that there might not have been some in two or there isolated cases.

Mr. CLARKE. The statement I made in the House last year was based on information which was obtained from shippers and published from time to time in the newspapers. In one of the Toronto papers, I think the 'News,' there appeared a special despatch of the 23rd of February last, from its correspondent in Montreal, in which it was stated :

> Mr. W. R. MacInnes, freight traffic manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway, was asked yesterday whether it were true that the Canadian Pacific Railway were giving shippers in United States manufacturing centres a better rate to Vancouver than was given to shippers in Montreal and Toronto. He replied that the rate on such American shipments would be a slight advance on the rate from the same American port to Seattle, the exact advance depending on the classification. It might in some instances be lower than the rate from Montreal to Vancouver. Anyhow, the situation was just the same now as it always had been. If any discrimination existed, they had existed before the American roads raised their tariffs, and were followed by the Canadian Pacific Railway. The increase in rates by the Americans had been uniform, and applied to all routes between Chicago and points east of Chicago), and the Pacific coast.
>
> The contention has been made that discrimination also exists with regard to east bound freight—that better rates are given to shippers from Chicago by the railroads and the steamships than are given from points in Ontario.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not on the steamships. The railroads in their desire to compete, may give better rates, but I do not think the steamships do.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. With reference to the cold storage machinery, are tenders asked for ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In the case of the old steamers, the machinery was provided under the direction of the Department of Agriculture. In the case of the new steamers the matter has been left in the hands of the Messrs. Allan.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Did the Department of Agriculture ask for tenders ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That I could not say.

Mr. BLAIN. Before one o'clock I asked the hon. minister in regard to the prospect of more Canadian mail matter being carried through Canadian ports. I understood him to say that there was no prospect of an improvement in that direction. Since the recess he has qualified that to a certain extent, and I would now ask him what is the prospect of an increased proportion of our mail service going by Canadian routes instead of such a large proportion going by United States routes ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The department despatches mails to England by the quickest route. There are not vessels leaving Canada every day, and if the despatching of letters via American ports will result in their reaching their destination sooner than if detained for Canadian vessels, they will be sent through the American ports. I suppose the same rule is adopted by foreign post offices in despatching mails to Canada. The greater the improvement in our own service, the more mail matter will be sent by our own route. I understand that the Allans are building a turbine steamer which will have a speed of 17 knots per hour. That will be a considerable advance in speed over any of our present steamers and will cause a good deal of the mails, destined for eastern Canada at least, to come by our route instead of via New York. As to the mails for points west of Montreal, it would be rather difficult by any improvement in our own steamship service to get them into Ontario more quickly by Canada than by New York. There will always be a good deal of mail matter go by New York simply because you do not have steamers leaving on the Canadian route every day.

Mr. BLAIN. What will be the difference in time in the case of a letter leaving Montreal by the Canadian route and one leaving New York ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. It would depend upon what steamships were sailing.

Mr. BLAIN. Assuming the average mail service from New York and Canada.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Take the Allan Line, which sails from Montreal on Friday. The mails are put on board at Rimouski, which is 130 miles east of Quebec and 250 east of Montreal. That steamer which takes those mails Saturday morning will reach perhaps Moville in about a week from that day or on Sunday morning, and the mails will not be in London before Monday morning. If they were sent by New York and happened to catch the 'Campania' or 'Lucania,' of the Cunard Line, they might reach London Saturday morning. Sometimes those two steamers reach Queenstown on Friday night. If they do, it is sometimes the practice of the English post office, which controls the handling of the mails, to have special trains waiting at Queenstown. The mails are put on shore there and sent from Ireland across by the fast packet, and they will reach London on Saturday morning. That, however, is a comparatively rare occurrence. The mails usually remain on board and only reach London on Saturday afternoon at the earliest. If on the other hand those letters were sent from New York by the steamers 'Umbria' and 'Etruria,' they would not reach London any quicker than by the Canadian route.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that speaking generally there is an advantage of about forty-eight hours in favour of New York ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. It is not possible to speak about averages when you have vessels of entirely different speed and there are other disturbing circumstances. On the whole the mails that leave Canada by the Allan Line and those that go via New York reach London pretty much the same time. There are chances of the mails from New York reaching London on Saturday, but they are not always realized, and we prefer to give the public the benefit of those chances.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that it is only by chance that the mails leaving New York reach London quicker than by a Canadian port ? If that be true, it is difficult to understand why such a large portion is sent by New York.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. It takes longer for a letter to go from Toronto to Rimouski than from Toronto to New York. You can post a letter in Toronto on Friday and it may catch the outgoing steamers on Saturday morning at New York, but if you wanted that letter to catch the steamer at Rimouski, it would have to be posted at Toronto much earlier.

Mr. CLARKE. The policy is to send the mails by the route which will bring them quickest to their destination ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Of course.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there any increase in the proportion sent during the past year by the Canadian route as compared with previous years ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I have not got the figures but can get them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have a memo. here of the amount of mail matter that was sent by our own steamers this past year :

	Lbs.
Letters and post cards..	9,986
Newspapers..	74,336
Parcel mails..	62,649

Mr. CLARKE. Has the hon. gentleman a memorandum showing the weight of letters, cards and newspapers that went by New-York, the total weight despatched during the year ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT : 147,171 pounds.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What will be the total amount of subsidy payable under this contract to these two vessels ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. About £60,000 sterling when they are all at work, and provided they carry out the stipulations of the contract.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So it is within $170,000 of what the government propose to pay for a fast Atlantic service five or six years ago.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. To Petersen, what Petersen offered to do it for.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is amusing to hear the hon. gentleman talking about the failure of Petersen ; it would be more correct to regard it as the failure of the government. We were then told that the $750,-000 annual subsidy which had been proposed by the late Conservative administration, was absolutely absurd and unnecessary, that the proposal could not be carried out, and that this government could accomplish it at once at a saving to the country each year, for twenty years, of $250,000, or $5,000,000 altogether. That was the contract paraded to us in the House and all over the country ; and now we are engaged in the project of giving a subsidy of $330,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Quite a difference.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, and quite a difference in speed and accommodation.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. And in the cost.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The cost is about two-thirds, $330,000 as against $500,000.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I think the estimated cost of the old project was $750,-000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of which $250,000 was furnished by the government of Great Britain. The original proposal was $750,000 of an annual subsidy for 20 years by this government, which was to be supplemented by one-half that amount for the same period of time as an annual grant by the imperial government, making altogether $1,125,000 per annum of a subsidy. Well, this government said that was too much, they would not entertain that proposal, they would not go on with it, although the contract was with the very company was then ready, subject to a short delay to enable them to make their arrangements, to carry out that proposal. The proposal was deemed an extravagant one, $500,000 a year was considered ample, and we were treated to the bottle-necked vessels proposal, which was announced as an accomplished fact by the Prime Minister in Toronto after he had received a conveniently timed telegram from the Minister of Finance. Now some six years after, after the fast Atlantic service has been dropped by the government—because that was the effect of the statement of the Postmaster General last year—we are coming back to a proposal for a subsidy of $330,000 a year for a service of 17 knots for two steamers in the summer, and something less in the winter, and a service of 14 knots for the other steamers. I do not know whether my right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce feels inclined to congratulate himself upon this magnificent result of eight years effort by a businesslike government. I am inclined to think that if he were disposed to congratulate himself upon this result, he would not find very much company among the people of Canada. I think it is a very pitiable result of all the efforts of this government for eight years, that we are now paying two-thirds of the amount which they said was amply sufficient for a fast service, and they are paying it for what would be regarded in New York as no better than a third-class service so far as speed is concerned. There may be some consideration present to our minds which should make us realize the importance of what one might call a fast freight service as well as a fast passenger service. But it has been the policy of the government as I understand, until within the last two years at least, to establish a fast Atlantic service, regarding it of so much importance that the Prime Minister himself was selected to heard the consummation of that project to the city of Toronto and the country. Now, either they have changed their minds or they have made a bad mess of it. I can appeal with confidence to the Minister of Trade and Commerce to join with me in that regret, because I know his own mind with regard to it. It is a pity I think that the government was so hasty when, on coming into power, they rejected what had been carefully thought out by their predecessors. If they had had a little more modesty, a little better comprehension of their own ability to deal with matters of this kind, they probably would not have taken the course which they did. If they had not taken that course, but had adopted a contract which might have been carried out, the country would have been enjoying a fast Atlantic service during the past five or six years, instead of being, as it is to-day, obliged to pay two-thirds of the amount which the former government proposed, and getting after all a third-class service. Have the government an idea of the average length of the passage twenty years ago, as compared with that which has prevailed, say during the past two or three years ? A writer in the public press of Halifax who professed to be familiar with this subject and who gave illustrations, citing the names of vessels, told us two or three years ago that the average rate of passage from Halifax to the mother country was practically the same to-day as it was 35 years ago, in 1867. I do not know whether his statement is correct. I think I brought the same statement to the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce last year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I can give the hon. gentleman a memo. of the time occupied in 1895 and 1897 from Moville to Halifax. It was ten days and ten hours on the average in 1895 and ten days and twenty-two hours in 1897.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And during the last year for instance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In 1892-93 it was ten days and four hours.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. A slight improvement on the other record. I think it was not more than that thirty years ago.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I may remark to my hon. friend that from Moville to Halifax, from November to January the memo. I have here shows an average of eight days and six hours, that is in present seasons. That was on a voyage in 1903.

Mr. CLARKE. In the fall of 1903 ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In the fall of 1903, yes. Then from Halifax to Moville it was much the same, 8 days and 6 hours. There has been an improvement in the present year.

Mr. DANIEL. I think that as far back as 1866 or 1867 the Cunard Line of steamers running from Halifax made the voyage in 8 days, occasionally 9, while 10 days would be an exceptionally long voyage.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That may be.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was very much surprised at the comparison when it was made. It dated as far back as 1866, and I think possibly a little beyond that, and showed practically that the length of passage at present is the same as it was thirty-five or forty years ago.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I dare say I should not be surprised in the case of the Cunard liners.

Mr. CLARKE. Am I to understand that the minister had an investigation made by the officers of his department with respect to discrimination in freight rates ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Has he received a report from those officers ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I had inquiries made ; I am not sure whether there is a report in form.

Mr. CLARKE. If the officers were sent out to make an investigation, they surely must have made some report.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They reported generally upon the subject, but I do not think I have a formal report in detail.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there any information which you could give about that report ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The information as to discrimination was what I gave the hon. gentleman ; that in a general way, so far as the steamships were concerned, they did not discriminate against Canadian shippers at all.

Mr. CLARKE. Am I to understand that the minister, having sent officers to make inquiries, the only report received was a verbal report ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think there was any formal report.

Mr. CLARKE. No letter or communication, nothing of which we can get a copy, available in the department to show what kind of an investigation was made, and whether it was a fact or not that American shippers, either in the New England states or Chicago, can get better rates by rail and steamship for their products than are given to the Canadians, who are subsidizing these vessels ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There may have been some isolated cases in which, for various reasons, the Americans obtained a preference, but, as a rule, there was no discrimination.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to lay on the table a copy of the report, or letter, or memorandum, or communication, that was received by him ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will cause inquiry to be made about the letter.

Mr. CLARKE. There must be some written statement.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not sure that there was, but I shall make inquiries. An inquiry was made, that I know.

Mr. HACKETT. Will the proposed turbine steamer of the Allan Line be able to make 17 knots an hour.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps she may make over 17 knots, but that is all that is stipulated for.

Mr. HACKETT. Is she intended for carrying the mails across the Atlantic ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. She will carry the mails, of course.

Mr. HACKETT. And freight ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And freight.

Mr. HACKETT. Are the lines from New York that carry Canadian mails subsidized for doing so ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, but certain payments are made by the Post Office Department for the carrying of Canadian mails.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. We are obliged to pay rates according to the schedule of the Universal Postal Union, which are payable by one country to another. When our mails are sent via New York, from the time they enter the United States they are incorporated with the United States mails, and we have afterwards to account to the United States, they in the first instance paying the cost of transportation across the sea. That is the way it would work out.

Mr. COCHRANE. It seems to me a remarkable position for a business government to be in, that after subsidizing a line of steamers from Canada for a large amount the greater proportion of our mail goes via New York, and we are paying for carrying it from that port across the Atlantic. I think it is a humiliating position. Why do you not get some go on, and have a fast line of steamers ?

An hon. MEMBER. Now you are getting it.

Mr. COCHRANE. Yes ; you sit there and grin, and you go it blind and slap your hands, and say it is a business government, and swallow it holus-bolus, but you do not know a thing about what you are doing. Out in the country they would call the position of the government lying. I cannot use the term, because it would not be parliamentary, but I would like to know what word would express it.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. COCHRANE. Hear, hear. There is another silly. He is exercising all the judgment the Almighty gave him, and he is making a fool of himself. I ask the Postmaster General if he does not feel humiliated to think that as Postmaster, Sir William Mulock, he has subsidized a Canadian company to carry the mails across the Atlantic, and yet the greater portion go by the United States? Why is it? We are told we do not want a fast Atlantic service, it is comfort the people want, they do not take into consideration the speed so long as they have comfort. A business man in Great Britain or the United States is not going across the Atlantic for comfort. People are not willing to loll along at 16 or 17 knots an hour when they can go from their own country at 20 or 21 knots, and they will not take a slow passage because it is comfortable. I think that the hon. gentleman who is filling the position that he used to call the fifth wheel of a coach—and the fifth wheel is taking a great deal of oil to run it, and it does not amount to much—must be humiliated to think that he must pay the amount that he does when he used to be so very fond of preaching economy and telling how the farmers were bled white for a useless government. He says all things are changed. There has been no change for the better since he ridiculed the position. As a Canadian, I am willing to pay more money for an efficient service, which will take us out of this humiliating position described by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Postmaster General. I have no sympathy with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, because he talked so much formerly and has accomplished so little—he doesn't seem to care whether he does anything or not, so long as he gets his salary—but I sympathize with the Postmaster General, because the ambition created in his breast by being Sir William Mulock, to bring the name of Canada into world-wide respect, must be sadly disappointed.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there anything in the new contract to prevent the shipping companies discriminating against Canadian shippers?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No.

Mr. BLAIN. Last year when this matter was being discussed the following discussion took place:

Mr. CLARKE. Is there any contract made with this company which prevents them discriminating in freight rates?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is some regulation of that kind.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there any provision made by which the exporters of Chicago shall not get better rates than those of Toronto, Montreal or Hamilton?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a provision that they shall not discriminate against Canadian shippers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It was another contract with reference to which these statements were made.

Mr. BLAIN. Yes, but the principle is the same. Why is it necessary to insert such a provision in one contract and not in another?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No complaint has been made with respect to any discrimination on the Allan Line.

Mr. BLAIN. I think it is rather a serious matter that such a provision should be omitted from this contract.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think there has been any alteration made in these contracts with the Allans for a considerable space of time. There are clauses in several of the other contracts bearing upon that point.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why should they be omitted from this contract?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. At the present moment there is very great difficulty in obtaining freight and the service is being carried on at rates which the ship-owners represent to be utterly unremunerative. There would be great difficulty in interfering too much with the filling up of these vessels with cargoes. All the information I have leads me to believe that there is no discrimination against the Canadian shipper on the part of the steamship lines, but I am not prepared to say how far that may be the case with respect to the railroads. I do not think the steamship lines do discriminate at all to the detriment of Canadians. If my hon. friend will look at the previous contracts, he will, I think, see that they are just the same as this.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would not the officer of the department be able to give us an absolute assurance as to that?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He informs me that there is no difference in the Allan contract.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If it is necessary to have such a provision in the Furness-Withy contract, would it not be equally necessary with respect to steamers which during a portion of the year sail from the same port?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There had been complaints of discrimination with respect to the Furness-Withy, and one or two others, and we put in a clause to guard against it. We have had no complaints with regard to the Allans, and I do not think there has been any discrimination.

Mr. CLARKE. In the event of the ships proceeding to Portland to receive and discharge cargo, will the minister cancel the contract?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not believe that any of these ships have ever gone to Portland.

Mr. CLARKE. But in the event of their doing so?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should regard it as being a violation of the clause contained in the contract.

Mr. CLARKE. And the contract would be probably cancelled if the minister considered it a serious breach?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. The minister seems to be satisfied that these vessels will not proceed to Portland ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am. I do not think there is the slightest risk of their doing so.

Mr. CLARKE. It does not make the slightest difference whether the discrimination is by the railway companies or the steamship companies so long as Canadian exporters are placed at a disadvantage. The people who contribute to pay these subsidies should not be discriminated against by either railways or steamships.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The steamship rates have been extremely low for the last year or two.

Mr. CLARKE. The minister will appreciate the point that when the people of Canada pay these subsidies they should not be placed at a disadvantage by a discrimination which would give the advantage to their American competitors in the English market.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does my hon. friend wish to exclude American products from Canadian railroads and Canadian steamships ? Does he think that would be in the interests of the people of Canada ?

Mr. CLARKE. I am certainly most desirous to see the volume of trade increase on our Canadian railroads and on our Canadian ships, and I care not whether that trade comes from the Orient or from the United States through Canada. I think it is a reasonable proposition to suggest to the hon. minister that if we have to make special arrangements to establish this steamship service and have to increase the subvention by fifty per cent this year over what we paid last year, our people should not be discriminated against in rates—that they should not be placed at a disadvantage by either railways or steamships.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That sounds very reasonable and fair, no doubt ; but the hon. gentleman has to consider this point, that trade starting from Chicago has the choice of going by the Canadian Pacific Railway, or direct to New York to ship there. In that case you cannot get more for the freight than the rate offered by the New York steamships.

Mr. CLARKE. The contract made last year with Furness-Withy & Co., contained a clause that the contractors shall, at least three weeks prior to the first sailing under this contract, furnish to the minister a schedule of the freight rates proposed on both east and westbound trips, which schedule shall be approved by the minister and, after being approved by him, shall not be changed without his consent. It also provides that the minister may at any time, if he deems it advisable, fix the maximum rates to be charged to passengers and on any article or class of goods, and the contractor shall carry, on all steamers under this contract, passengers and freights at rates which shall not be in excess of such maximum rates fixed by the minister ; and in no case shall any discrimination be made as regards rates or otherwise, directly or indirectly, against Canadian merchants or shippers, who shall always have precedence for their goods over all other merchants and shippers. It seems a pity that a similar clause is not inserted in this contract and that the ships are not prohibited from going to Portland.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. All I can tell the hon. gentleman is that they shall not go to Portland.

Mr. HACKETT. In regard to the shipment of goods from Canada to Great Britain, it is of the greatest importance, especially to the people of Prince Edward Island, that their cheese and butter and farm produce generally shall be shipped across the ocean and landed in London or Liverpool in good condition. Now, I find in the Toronto 'Globe' an item which is very important :

> According to a report received by the extension of markets division of the Department of Agriculture, a shipment of Canadian cheese was recently landed at London, Eng., in a heated condition, due to being carried across the ocean from Montreal in a poorly ventilated part of the ship.

I would like to ask the hon. minister what ship that cheese was carried in ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not know anything about it. No complaint has been made to my department about any such cargo. I do not think that occurred in connection with the Allan Line. There are other steamers carrying cheese, as probably the hon. gentleman knows.

Mr. HACKETT. I think it is very deplorable. The government have been boasting of what they have been doing in supplying cold storage in steamships ; yet there is not a member of this government able to tell us on what steamship or by what line of steamships this shipment of cheese was landed in London in that condition.

Steam service between Halifax, St. John's, Newfoundland, and Liverpool, from July 1, 1904, to June 30, 1905, $20,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is the usual vote for this service. It is carried on by the Furness-Withy Company. The steamships employed are the 'Ulunda,' 'Damara,' 'Peruvian' and 'Rhenania.' The trips are made every seventeen days.

Mr. CLARKE. Do they carry mails ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the Post Office Department chooses to send them, but the mails sent in such a case are very few.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Have these boats cold storage chambers ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They have not, but they are ventilated.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. What system of ventilation ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Each vessel has steam-driven fans, I am told.

Mr. DANIEL. These steamers are rather small, are they not ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. One is 1,000 tons, another 1,145, another 2,022 and the fourth 1,156, net register.

Mr. DANIEL. They make about twenty trips in the year ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. So that the subsidy is about $1,000 a voyage ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Roughly.

Mr. LENNOX. When was this service established ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Eight or nine years ago. There was no service prior to that time, I think. This, I believe, was established before we came into office.

Mr. J. D. REID. If this line is not used for carrying the mails, and if it has no cold storage facilities, I cannot see the advantage of subsidizing it at all. Probably the minister can explain what advantage we are getting from these boats.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know of none except the promotion of trade between the province of Nova Scotia via Halifax and Newfoundland.

Mr. J. D. REID. Has it increased the trade ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a fair amount done but not a very large amount.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is the increase sufficient to warrant the continuance of the subsidy ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is for the House to decide.

Mr. J. D. REID. If the House is to decide according to the statement of the minister, it will come to the conclusion that it is not necessary.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman is of that opinion and it is shared by the hon. member for Halifax, I dare say the government will take it into consideration.

Mr. J. D. REID. We are supposed to act on information we get from the minister.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The subsidy has been applied for by the Board of Trade of Halifax several times. That body has pressed upon us the desirability of continuing the service. There is a certain amount of trade done but not very much.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not see any reason for raising any objection, but would be glad to have the opinion of the minister.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Newfoundland is a place which consumes a very fair proportion of our goods considering its population. The trade of Newfoundland is a very desirable trade. The population is not large but they do consume a very considerable amount of our produce. I think the total trade averages something like $2,000,000 a year, and a very considerable part of it is done through the medium of this line.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think this is the line by which a great deal of the apples are shipped from Nova Scotia to Great Britain. Although the trade is not rapidly increasing it is perhaps a little larger than the minister suggests it is. I think there is a gradual growth.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The trade last year in our produce amounted to $2,380,000 out of a total of two and a half million dollars.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The port of Halifax and the other maritime ports have not specially good service with the mother country during the summer months. During the winter months, when the Allan boats run they have a somewhat better service. But during the summer, the service is not very high class via St. John, Newfoundland and Halifax.

Mr. FIELDING. Just now it is not desirable that we should withdraw any subsidies we have granted to promote trade with Newfoundland. In our trade relations with that colony, it is much better that we should err on the side of liberality than in the other direction.

Mr. LENNOX. That is the view I take and I only asked whether there was an increase of trade.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There has been some but not a large increase.

Mr. LENNOX. We desire to promote the most cordial relations with the colony of Newfoundland in the hope that some day these will lead to a closer connection.

Mr. DANIEL. In making the statement that the trade amounted to two and a half million dollars, what does the minister mean ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I mean that our export trade to Newfoundland amounted to two and a half million dollars.

Mr. DANIEL. That is just the trade between Canada and Newfoundland.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. That does not take into consideration the trade by the same vessels to Liverpool ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No. I think that what they take from Newfoundland consists chiefly of lumber.

Mr. DANIEL. I am heartily in accord with the remarks that fell from the Minister of Finance. I believe that the trade with Newfoundland is one which we should encourage by every means and that we should make sure, not only of the present business, but if possible of a great deal of increased future business.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The total volume of trade amounted to about $3,000,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This trade is regarded as so desirable from a Nova Scotia point of view that it was established by a local company, and after a time one of the great English companies came and took it off their hands, and consolidated it with their own enterprise. It was originally established by a Halifax company in 1896.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not think that any one in this House wishes to do anything that would not tend to increase trade between Canada and Newfoundland. All I desired was to obtain some information. I had no desire to have the item struck out, but I considered, from the way the minister spoke, that he was not giving us the information we are entitled to. As far as this subsidy is concerned or any other that would tend to increase our trade, I have no hesitation in supporting it.

Steam service between St. John and Glasgow, $15,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This was formerly a fortnightly service and is now weekly. We pay the Donaldson line $750 per trip.

Mr. J. D. REID. That is $3,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not the whole year, only the winter.

Mr. BLAIN. This item was increased last year to $15,000. Is it the same this year ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes. They used to give a fortnightly service at $750 per trip and are now giving a weekly service at the same rate.

Mr. BLAIN. Originally it was a monthly service, then a fortnightly and now a weekly.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Originally a fortnightly service, I think—certainly in my time.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the trade in this direction increasing ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, the trade at these various points, Glasgow, Dublin, and the others, show a fair increase. Trade varies from year to year according to the stuff that we have to export, but on the whole, it is increasing fairly well.

Mr. BLAIN. What kind of goods do these vessels carry and what is their return cargo ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They take a mixed cargo, partly timber, and partly grain and other agricultural products.

Mr. BLAIN. No manufactured goods ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A portion of the trade is in manufactured goods, but it is chiefly in timber and agricultural products. I do not think they have much as a rule. They claim that there is a great difficulty in obtaining a return cargo and that is one of the grounds on which they ask a subsidy. The return cargo is small.

Mr. BLAIN. What is it composed of, small as it is ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There used to be a considerable amount of iron, but I think that of late that has been rather going the other way. The return cargo is made up of merchandise, dry goods and so on.

Mr. BLAIN. Do these vessels carry the mail ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the Post Office chooses to send it.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the Post Office send any that way ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Very little.

Mr. FIELDING. These are slow vessels and would hardly do for the mail.

Steam service between St. John, N.B., Dublin and Belfast, during the winter of 1904-5, $7,500.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is with the Ulster Steamship Company, Limited, known as the Head Line. There is no difference in the amounts as compared with last year. It is a fortnightly service with a subsidy of $750 a trip.

Mr. LENNOX. Could this and the service we have just been discussing be combined to advantage?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I hardly think so.

Mr. LENNOX. I thought that by having one line a better class of vessels could be had to make the round trip. Of course, I do not know whether it could be done or not.

Mr. DANIEL. I think the present system is better than the one suggested. It is better to have direct lines, where you can, rather than to have steamers callling at a number of ports.

A line or lines of steamers to run during the summer months between St. John, Halifax and London, and during the winter months between St. John and London direct, and Halifax and London direct, $40,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I wish to change the phraseology of that. This is divided into two, the Furness-Withy do part of the service and the Canadian Pacific Railway the other part.

Mr. SPROULE. How much is allowed to each ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Furness-Withy get $25,000 and the Canadian Pacific Railway $15,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Do they supply an equal number of vessels?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Furness-Withy supply a little the larger portion.

Mr. DANIEL. Can the minister give the details of the arrangement?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Canadian Pacific Railway steamers are the 'Mount Temple,' the 'Montcalm,' the 'Montrose,' and the 'Lake Michigan.' I desire to strike out the words of this vote so as to leave it read, 'for a line or lines of steamers to run between St. John, Halifax and London.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. As these boats will carry apples, I would like to ask the minister if they are mechanically ventilated, and if so, how ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. These steamers are to be suitably provided with cold storage accommodation.

Mr. DANIEL. How frequently do the steamers of the two lines run ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Furness-Withy at intervals of not more than fifteen days, and the Canadian Pacific Railway at intervals of not more than seventeen days. As a matter of fact, I believe, the Furness-Withy go every ten days. The clause of the contract with effect to the cold storage provides that the steamers shall be fitted with suitable accommodation for carrying perishable cargo, such as apples or other fruit, dairy products and other provisions without deterioration by means of a forced circulation of air by electric or steam fans which will maintain a uniform temperature.

Mr. DANIEL. Would the hon. minister allow me to look at the contract ? and, if there is no objection while I consult it, the minister might call up another item.

Mr. DANIEL.

Item allowed to stand.

Steam communication between St. John and Digby, from July 1, 1904, to June 30th, 1905 $12,500.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is done by the 'Prince Rupert' as heretofore—two round trips daily during June July, August, September and October.

A line or lines of steamers to run between St. John and Halifax, or either, and the West Indies and South America, $80,700.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is the Pickford and Black Line, a steamer of 1,780 tons net.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the trade over this route increasing ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is increasing, but not very fast. It is only a regular service. This route is to Kingston, in the Island of Jamaica.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think this service does not extend to South America at the present time, or beyond Demerara.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They go to Trinidad, and then they go on to Demerara. This service is carried on under a joint agreement with the British government. We supply $65,700 and they supply an equal amount. We have to call, under the agreement with them, at a great number of the West Indian Islands.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It has been a valuable service, I think.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Fairly so. If the British government had not been so exigent in making us call at so many places, the service would not be so long as it is.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Representations have been made to me from several quarters in my constituency as to the great importance of extending this service if possible to South America, both to Brazil and Uruguay.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a great deal to be said for that, but I am doubtful whether we can manage that with the imperial government.

Mr. FIELDING. The extension of this service to Brazil would make the route so long that it would be unsatisfactory. It might be desirable to open arrangements with Brazil, but I am inclined to think that an almost independent service would be necessary. The difficulty we have already with those distant ports, such as Trinidad and Demerara is that the stoppages on the way makes the voyage a long one and prevents that quickness of communication which is so desirable in the transportation of our products. I agree that it is desirable to open up trade with Brazil, but I doubt whether we can do it as an extension of the existing line. I almost think it would need an independent service.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I said an extension of this steamship service. I notice some articles in a trade journal published in Halifax, and I have also had some communication from others, all leading to the same conclusion, if their arguments are correct, that a profitable trade might be done between Canada and South America. They say that a considerable trade is done at the present time, but the difficulty is that the goods have to be reshipped either from England or from the United States, and this handicaps the efforts of exporters to a great extent. They point out some results which have ensued from the establishment of steamship lines between South America and other countries. It is a pretty large proposition, no doubt, and one that should not be hastily entered upon. I merely mention it now, because these representations have been made to me, possibly they may have been made also to the government, and perhaps the government have them under consideration.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. More particularly with respect to the Argentine Republic. With respect to Brazil, I am not quite sure. The chief exports from there would be articles that we do not use much in Canada. The Argentine Republic would be worth considerable.

Mr. LENNOX. Could the minister mention about the rate of speed attained by these vessels ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it is ten knots.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will read a few lines from one communication which has been addressed to me :

At the present time considerable quantities of Canadian and Newfoundland goods find their way into the South American markets, but as they are obliged to take circuitous routes by United States and English ports through the hands of middlemen who get their commissions and brokerage, the trade is necessarily of a fluctuating and uncertain character, must be conducted at a minimum of profit, and in a practical sense can hardly be said to exist. All of such goods, moreover, are invariably reshipped from the United States or England as products of those ccuntries, and the benefit to Canada in the way of advertisement and the creating of a vogue for Canadian products is of course entirely lost. It will be seen that if direct transportation were obtained between Canada and those countries, not only could the lines of goods now sent there be sold at greater profits, but many other lines of Canadian manufacture which we learn are peculiarly adaptable to the trade, could find a permanent and lucrative market in that direction. We have also ascertained that there are many commodities exported from the South American ports, and especially from those on the eastern coast, which could be taken in exchange by the Canadian consumer and manufacturer, and should an attempt be made to establish closer trade relations, the feeling of the South American people and the conditions that would govern the trade would at the present time be specially conducive to success. It is moreover not amiss perhaps to remember that the Canadian ports of the maritime provinces are nearer to the ports of Brazil, Uruguay and Argentina than are any of the shipping points of the United States, while the ports of eastern South America, lying as they do in almost a straight line southward from Halifax and St. John, are by far the largest and richest of any on the southern continent, constituting as they do the distributing points for some thirty-five millions of purchasing people.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The matter is well worth looking into.

Mr. DANIEL. Referring to item 157, where there is a divided service, I see it refers to the contract for steamers calling at Halifax and St. John. Is that the case with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway contract as well ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the Canadian Pacific Railway contract is to St. John, the terminal point of the Canadian Pacific Railway is at St. John. They call on their east bound trips at Halifax, and on their west bound trips at Antwerp.

Mr. SPROULE. I have been requested by my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he would be good enough to bring down the return that was made last year with regard to the discrimination against Canadian freight, on these subsidized steamers, in favour of the United States.

Mr. FIELDING. It is now six o'clock, and I may say that the Minister of Trade and Commerce will not resume his estimates this evening, but probably the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will do so, or probably the Minister of Railways and Canals.

At six o'clock, Committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Intercolonial Railway, Windsor branch, $30,000.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). This is cost of maintenance. This branch is rented to the Dominion Atlantic Railway, and is a portion of the railway between Windsor and Windsor Junction. The Dominion Atlantic operate it for a rental and the government maintains it. It is part of the Dominion Atlantic system between Halifax and Yarmouth.

Mr. SPROULE. What rental do they pay for it ?

Mr. EMMERSON. One-third of the gross earnings.

Mr. SPROULE. What was that last year?

Mr. EMMERSON. Last year we received as our proportion $42,560.81.

Mr. BARKER. I understand there has always been some profit on that line for some years back.

Mr. SPROULE. Did we spend more than $30,000 to keep it in repair ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The maintenance of way cost $17,843.39, leaving a balance of $24,717.62.

Mr. BLAIN. What has been the profit for the last three or four years ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Our proportion of the gross earnings was $49,604.59, and it cost us $16,152.55.

Mr. SPROULE. That would seem to show that when a part of the Intercolonial is taken by a private company it will pay.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is operated by politics, if any part of it is, I suppose ?

Mr. SPROULE. No; it is operated by a company.

Mr. EMMERSON. We keep it up and pay all the expenditure on the track.

Mr. SPROULE. But some one else employs the hands.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is a very lucrative section of the Intercolonial Railway. It is at the entrance to the famous Annapolis valley, and is closely connected with Yarmouth. There are thickly settled communities in the district, and it is a very prosperous section. There are large mining and lumber interests in that section, and the earnings are large. In some of the other parts of the Intercolonial, especially in the northern section, we travel over great spaces that are very sparsely settled and where there is no local traffic.

Mr. LENNOX. Is there not the further difficulty on the Intercolonial that very low rates are charged for passengers and freight as compared with other companies ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The passenger rates are practically the same on that line as on the Intercolonial. I cannot speak of the freight rates.

Mr. LENNOX. What are the average passenger rates on the Intercolonial Rail way ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Three cents for first-class, two cents for second class, and one cent for Indians and clergymen.

Mr. LENNOX. That does not bring us to the point I referred to at all. It is the average rate per mile that I am anxious to find out. The other railways of Canada say that their average rate is not two cents a mile.

Mr. EMMERSON. The average passenger earnings on the Intercolonial Railway are about $1.70, that is including the Indians and clergymen.

Prince Edward Island Railway, working expenses, $330,000.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would like to ask the reason for this additional amount of $30,000 for the Prince Edward Island Railway ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The wages have been very largely increased, and it is expected that the Murray Harbour branch will be opened before the end of this fiscal year, and, of course, that will require more operating expenses.

Mr. SPROULE. How many men have you employed on the Prince Edward Island Railway ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is included in the additional operating expenses that will be necessitated by the opening of this new branch. This increase is not confined to labourers; the wages of the sectionmen, conductors and trainmen on the Prince Edward Island Railway have been made equal to those on the Intercolonial.

Mr. SPROULE. What wages are being paid ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The maximum pay for yard section foreman is $2.25 per day; regular section men from $1.40 to $1.50; section foremen from $1.85 to $2; foremen of extra gangs, $2.75; foremen of track carpenters, $2.50; track carpenters and skilled mechanics, $2; ordinary rough carpenters from $1.50 to $1.70. For some years prior to 1904 the maximum to section foremen was $1.85, whereas it is now $2.25. In 1896 the maximum to section foremen was $1.30. In 1896 the wages paid section men was $1.15 and it has since been increased to $1.40 and $1.50.

Mr. HACKETT. Why was Mr. Robert McLean, section foreman at Alberton dismissed in 1896 ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That seems ages ago. I do not suppose my hon. friend would expect me to know, but if he wishes I will get the information later.

Mr. HACKETT. The minister will remember that in 1896 a change of government took place.

Mr. EMMERSON. I remember that distinctly.

Mr. HACKETT. And the best employees on the Prince Edward Island Railway were dismissed. Why was Peter L. Chasson, section foreman, of Tignish dismissed in 1896 ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Even the memory of the general manager is not equal to remembering such an important detail as that. I cannot give the information now.

Mr. HACKETT. I regret that very much.

Mr. EMMERSON. The regret is mutual for I would like to give it to my hon. friend if I knew.

Mr. HACKETT. Does the hon. minister intend continuing that second train a day between Summerside and Tignish which has been in operation about a year ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I know of no reason why it should not continue.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I am pleased to know that the wages of the workingmen on the Prince Edward Island Railway have been increased. I wish to call attention to something which took place before the by-election in Queen's county last fall.

Mr. EMMERSON. We heard something about that the other day.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I am going to tell you more about it. A number of men were employed filling in a hole for no other apparent reason than that their votes were wanted in the election. This particular piece of land had been vacant for thirty years ; there was no necessity for filling it in, because the location for the station has not been decided on yet, but in order to secure votes they started the men to work there. The government paid the poor labouring men the pittance of $1 a day, while private individuals in all parts of the island have to pay $1.25, $1.35 and $1.50. This munificent government paid the labourers only a dollar a day.

Mr. EMMERSON. That would not get us many votes.

Mr. LEFURGEY. That was the intention all the same. The government came in and cut down the price of labour.

Mr. EMMERSON. In order to get their votes ; remember that.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Never mind that ; there was no other idea than to keep these men on the string until the election was over and as happened on many other occasions, the work was stopped immediately after the election.

Mr. EMMERSON. The work was finished.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Your man was elected, but the work is not finished yet. I wish to call the attention of the minister to the fact that some three years ago there was a scheme on foot for pensioning the employees on the Intercolonial Railway and the Prince Edward Island Railway. Has this scheme been dropped or what has been done about it ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The Prime Minister stated the other day that in all probability a Bill relating to a pension scheme for the employees of the government railways would be brought to the attention of parliament during the present session and I hope to be able to carry out that idea. The only reason why I have not done so is because of the delay in securing information with respect to the Prince Edward Island Railway. The actuaries who are perfecting the scheme have been unable thus far to get the information. When I assumed the duties of my present position, I took hold of this matter and have been working very assiduously, with the assistance of the officers of the department, towards having the scheme perfected. It is one of importance which requires great study of detail, and we have not quite completed the work. I hope, however, to bring to the notice of parliament such a scheme as will be in the interests of the country and the employees and will meet with the approval of parliament. With respect to this other matter, I explained the other day that, if we have any foresight with respect to the station at Charlottetown, that hole had to be filled up. To do this it was necesssary to have brush, and it could be obtained cheaper by having it hauled across the harbour when the ice was firm. The men employed were paid by the load. The work was done during the short days of winter, and the other men, of whom there were very few, who were employed in placing the brush, could only work during certain hours and were paid proportionately. I think the sum paid for the short hours they did work was $1 per day. The men were satisfied and that seemed to be the ruling rate. But the permanent employees and the extra men employed from time to time are paid very much higher rates than those that were paid in 1896.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Are they paid the same scale as on the Intercolonial ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Precisely the same. I want to say with respect to this pension scheme, that I have received from time to time during the session, since the work began, very pressing petitions from the Liberal members asking that it be brought to an early conclusion. I have been endeavouring to meet their wishes, and I hope that my hon. friends opposite will show the same interest in having it brought to completion. The employees on the Intercolonial are very much interested and very anxious, and in the Intercolonial I include the Prince Edward Island Railway. The members from that island have spoken to me repeatedly with regard to the scheme. I may add that a very unfair method of prejudicing the minds of the people against the Intercolonial is being pursued by my hon. friends opposite. I am sure that my hon. friend who has just spoken, the member for East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane), would not be a party to any such tactics. There has come to my notice within the last twenty-four hours a little circular which has been circulated, I believe, by hon. gentlemen opposite, with respect to the wages paid on the government railway. This circular is marked No. 8. It says :

Starvation wages paid by the Liberal government.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I have just given one instance.

Mr. EMMERSON (reading)——

Workingmen, the Liberal government tells you it is giving you growing times and an era of prosperity. How does this prosperity square with the wages which the government has been paying the labouring men in its employ ? Turn up the last Auditor General's Report, and you will find (page W—161) that on the government railway such wages have been paid as these : Labourers, $1 per day ; freight porters, $1 per day ; trackmen, $1.10 per day ; cleaners, $1.15 per day ; firemen, $1.20 per day. These men must have been getting fat on the government's prosperity, must they not. If they had been railway grafters instead of mere railway labourers, they might have done better.

Mr. COCHRANE. Hear, hear.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend applauds this statement.

The government is going to spend over $200,000,000 of your money on the Grand Trunk Pacific grafter scheme, because Cox cannot wait, but the labouring man has got to wait, because Cox cannot.

This reads like a dime novel.

And this is the government that says the workingman should be grateful to it because it is paying the Minister of Labour $8,000 a year. Is it not time for a change ? Put the Conservatives in power and get a living wage for the labouring man. The Conservatives paid for their errors in 1896.

This is a litttle admission—a sort of confession of faith.

The Liberals must expect punishment for their vastly greater sins, and the government that succeeds theirs must be dealt with on its merits. In other words, turn out one government after another until the mandate can go to the world that the conscience of Canada is awakened.

This is a remarkable document. In the first place, there are in it one or two very glaring untruths, and it resolves itself down to one magnificent and colossal untruth. It says : 'Turn up the last Auditor General's Report,' Now this document is being circulated to-day in several constituencies in Canada.

Mr. COWAN. What is the number ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Circular No 8.

Mr. COWAN. What are the other seven like ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No doubt they are fit companions for this one. It says : 'Turn up the last Auditor General's Report, page W—161. That would be the Auditor General's Report for 1903. And it adds, 'you will find that on the government railways such wages have been paid as these'— enumerating the wages I have just given.

Mr. BELL. Did the minister turn up the report ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I did, and strange to say, I cannot find on page W—161 of the last Auditor General's Report the slightest reference to any wages paid on government railways to anybody, much less to the labouring men. I do not know whether that would be called lie No. 1, or whatever might be the number of the lie, but it is circular No. 8.

Mr. LENNOX. What is the date ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It has no date. It has not even the signature of my hon. friend. It is anonymous. Whoever wrote it was ashamed of it. He was ashamed to date it and ashamed to sign it.

Mr. COCHRANE. A very nice way to get your estimates through.

Mr. EMMERSON. Reference is made to the wages paid by the government on the government railways, and then the circular says :

And this is the government that says the workingmen should be grateful to it because it is paying the Minister of Labour $8,000 a year.

Is that true ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is his salary ? I do not know.

Mr. EMMERSON. The Postmaster General receives $7,000 a year, I think.

Mr. COCHRANE. $8,500.

Mr. EMMERSON. No ; $7,000 as salary, and I believe he attends to the duties of the Department of Labour without pay. Hon. gentlemen opposite would, of course, have the people of the country believe that we are paying the Minister of Labour $8,000 a year in addition to the Postmaster General. I am simply showing the error in this circular. I do not wish the people of the country to have any misapprehension with respect to that matter. Now, I want to call the attention of the committee and of the country to the actual wages that are being paid, not merely on the Intercolonial proper, but also on the Prince Edward Island Railway. Section foremen in 1896 received $1.60 per day, in 1902 the rate was increased to $1.65, and in 1904 to $1.85. Section men received in 1896 $1.15, in 1902 $1.20, and in 1904 $1.40 and $1.50.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. May I ask the minister a question while I have it in mind ? I think it would be advisable if he would kindly state to the House the details of the excursion to Peterborough on Saturday morning to see the opening of the lift-lock.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is more interesting to my hon. friend, I know, than what I am now stating. I think it is unfair that the government system of railways should be prejudiced in that way, and I wish to call the attention of the House and the country to the actual conditions as against this fiction which is being circulated throughout the country with a view to damaging the railway, and, I suppose, incidentally doing some injury to the government.

Mr. BELL. When were these wages raised ?

Mr. EMMERSON. They were raised last November.

Mr. BELL. I presume that was about the time the circular was issued. No doubt it had a stimulating effect on the government.

Mr. EMMERSON. This circular has been sent broadcast within the last month. The gentleman who received this one received it, I am informed, within a few weeks from some hon. gentleman opposite.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That is a serious reflection on the Postmaster General. That is the literature he held up last year.

Mr. EMMERSON. No ; that was very bulky literature. This is apparently a very harmless little document that goes so stealthily that the attention of the Postmaster General would not called to it.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it was all posted last year, and the Postmaster General is responsible for its not getting to its destination.

Mr. EMMERSON. Do not let us get away from the main point, that this is being issued by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. This rubbish is in the hall, and is going out now. It is being posted by hon. gentlemen opposite from their rooms.

Mr. EMMERSON. If it had been sent out last year, it would not be true of that year. If you look at the Auditor General's Report for 1902, at page W—161, you will not find any items corresponding with this. It would not be true, because at that time the government was not paying any wage on the Intercolonial as low as that. The wages of the section men were increased in 1902 to $1.20, and afterwards, if I mistake not, to $1.30.

Mr. SPROULE. Did not the hon. minister admit the other day, in answer to a question, that he was paying a dollar a day in Prince Edward Island ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I stated that several men who were employed simply for a few hours were paid $1 each—not for a full day, it was not a full day. If those men had been paid, as was insinuated, for the purposes of an election, I am sure the government would have been generous enough to have given them more handsome pay. If the government were paying them less than private corporations or individuals on the island, it would not secure many votes, because it would be looked upon as niggardly treatment.

Mr. LOGAN. I would like to ask the minister, is it not a fact that the wages of the Intercolonial trackmen have been raised on three different occasions since 1896—I think first in 1898 to $1.20, then in 1900 to $1.30, and in 1903 or 1904 to $1.40 and $1.50 ; and not, as the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) says, only once, and that in last November ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The wages were raised on three different occasions. The gem of this circular is in this sentence :

> Put the Conservatives in power, and get a living wage for the workingman.

Put back the Conservatives, who were paying $1 and $1.05, and never more than $1.15, in place of the government, who are paying $1.40 and $1.50. Yes, the Conservatives paid 90 cents a day, and then they paid 99 cents ; they would not even pay a dollar ; they kept the odd cent off.

Mr. LEFURGEY. The minister should remember that during the time this government has been in power the cost of living has increased fifty per cent and, in some cases, one hundred per cent. So, they can well afford to increase the wages of the labouring man fifty or seventy-five per cent.

Mr. EMMERSON. I did not yield the floor to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lefurgey), but thought he wished to ask me a question. I think that if the request to put the Conservatives back into office were yielded to by the people, the new government would probably put the wages back to the old figure, and the country would certainly be put back very much more.

Mr. LEFURGEY. The minister is simply occupying time in which he should be attending to the business of the country by dealing with the estimates, but his conduct will be very much his own funeral. I rose to get information, but have not gained any. The minister spoke of this pension business but has no information from the actuaries in Prince Edward Island. The matter was brought up three years ago. What has he been doing all this time ? It is in this as in everything else they have taken hold of, from the fast line service on—mere delay and vacillation. As to their paying $1 a day to labourers in Prince Edward Island, that is an absolute fact while the winter wages at ordinary employment were from $1.25 to $1.50 regardless of the hours—the men worked as long as they could. Not only is this kind of injustice done to the workingmen of Prince Edward Island, but in the government's big project of the Grand Trunk Pacific foreigners are brought from across the line to take the leading positions.

An hon. MEMBER. No, no.

Mr. LEFURGEY. That is the evidence given before the commission appointed by the government—that positions are given to foreigners while our own engineers, who are perfectly competent for the work, are refused employment. I have received a communication from the railway employees of the Prince Edward Island and Intercolonial Railways at Moncton. It is addressed to me and reads as follows :

Moncton, N.B., March 15th, 1904.

Dear Sir,—At a strongly representative meeting of all classes of employees of the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways, held at Moncton on Tuesday, the 8th instant, it was decided to call your attention to the following matter, and the chairman and secretary of the meeting were by unanimous vote authorized to sign this communication :

About three years ago the Minister of Railways and Canals had a scheme prepared for the pensioning of employees on the government railways, something similar to that in operation on the different American and Canadian roads, but it was not brought up in parliament. The different brotherhoods and orders, as well as the employees generally, have now taken the matter up, and are pressing it through the present Minister of Railways and Canals, the Hon. H. R. Emmerson.

The orders are as follows :—

Order of Railway Conductors,
Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen,
Order of Railway Telegraphers,
Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.
Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen,
Brotherhood of Railway Trackmen,
Order of Railway Clerks,
Union of Blacksmiths and Blacksmiths' helpers,
International Association of Machinists.

The western orders of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the Grand Trunk Railway, are assisting those on the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways.

In connection with the above we may say that the railway employees are not in the civil service, and cannot participate in the civil service superannuation.

All the other railways have pension schemes for ther employees, with the exception of the Grand Trunk scheme, are wholly supported by the companies without contributions from the men. The Grand Trunk employees contribute to the scheme, and the company also contributes very liberally. All the employees on the government railways wish to contribute to the proposed scheme in order that the benefits may be more material, and ask the government to contribute and assist them.

We trust that when this matter is brought up in parliament you will give it your careful consideration, and, if possible, your hearty support. You will observe by the number of orders represented that should the scheme be put through this coming session, it will be very popular with all classes of railway employees ; and your help will be much appreciated by all concerned.

Yours sincerely,

J. J. WALLACE,
Chairman.

I trust that the minister will have a comprehensive scheme brought forward that will do justice to the men employed on the government railways. As to the conduct of the Prince Edward Island Railway, the vote for which is now before us, we are not at all satisfied with the management in many respects. I had occasion to wait upon the minister at one time myself and bring to his attention a case of gross inattention to the interests of farmers and working men of an important part of Prince Edward Island as well as of failure to properly manage the affairs of the road. I refer to the distribution of cars for the haulage of mussel mud and wood, two large industries carried on in the western part of Prince Edward Island. I gave the minister at that time some statistics in regard to the carriage of these products. The mussel mud is used as a manure by the farmers, and is a very necessary element to keep their land in condition. It is very extensively used along the whole length of the line. There are quite a number of truckmen and labourers engaged in digging this mud and hauling it to the railway. During the greater part of last winter, when they should have had twenty-seven cars per day, they had twenty-seven cars per week to carry this material. And this occurred in spite of the protests made. I myself wrote on several occasions to the superintendent, but got no relief for the men. It was not until I came up to interview the minister and when the winter was practically over and the wages of these men had been lost for the season that some relief was promised. Not only was this the case in mussel mud, but it was the case in the haulage of cord wood. In many cases people on the western end of the line had to put their cord wood in box cars to get it to the selling point. Now, this is, possibly, a matter of small import to the Minister of Railways and Canals and to this government, but it affects very materially the class of labourers and others who are dependent on this industry for their livelihood. I understand that there were ample cars on the road if proper foresight had been used in sending them where they were needed.

I understand the cars were on the Murray Harbour branch, and early in the season the superintendent promised to have these cars brought over and put into this service, but they were never brought over. The excuse given at the end of the winter was that there was a snow blockade, but even if there had been, it was not heavy enough to prevent a business management from operating the cars and putting them at the disposal of those men. This is a state of affairs that I trust the present Minister of Railways will look into more carefully than he had occasion to at the time. The people are not at all satisfied with the explanation given by the superintendent of the Prince Edward Island Railway, nor do I myself believe that it was a legitimate excuse for the shortage of cars in that locality during the whole winter. There is another matter I wish to bring to the attention of the Minister of Railways, and that is the fact that the service from Boston and western Canada down to Prince Edward Island via Point du Chêne—the largest part of the tourist traffic and the largest part of the summer travel goes to Prince Edward Island by this route—has been for years past disgraceful. It is not certainly up to the equipment on any other branch of the Intercolonial, and is not fit for the growing travel to Prince Edward Island at the present time. The cars which run from Point du Chêne down, are not certainly of a class to induce the better class of tourists to patronize that line. They are usually the oldest cars on the line. There are no parlour cars that western travellers can take. I have a communication from the Charlottetown Development and Tourist Association, dated July 5th, asking that this matter be brought to the attention of the minister, and with the permission of the House I will read the letter and the resolution :

Sir,—At a meeting of the executive of this association held last evening, the inclosed resolution was passed, and copies thereof ordered to be forwarded to the Minister of Railways, to the members of parliament for this province, and to D. Pottinger, Esq., general manager Canadian government railways. I have been instructed to respectfully state that the resolution was moved because of several complaints reaching members of our executive with refereence to (1) the lack of accommodation obtainable in first-class coaches between St. John and Point du Chêne.

Mr. EMMERSON. To whom is that addressed ?

Mr. LEFURGEY. This letter is addressed to me.

Mr. EMMERSON. The resolution ?

Mr. LEFURGEY. The resolution was sent to the Minister of Railways.

Mr. EMMERSON. Who sent it, and when ?

Mr. LEFURGEY. The letter is dated July 5th, and the resolution was passed and copies were forwarded, as I understand to the Minister of Railways, to the general manager of the Canadian government railways and to members of parliament.

(2) the necessity of providing a parlour car upon the road between these points.

This is a very necessary step, because people travel in parlour cars from the United States and from the western provinces, they have parlour cars nearly all the way down except over that strip of line. As the minister knows, the strength of a chain is its weakest link, and there is a weak link in this road running down from St. John and Painsec to Point du Chêne.

(3) because of the difficulty some travellers have experienced in obtaining information regarding the departure of trains from St. John to Point du Chêne. This resolution is therefore respectfully submitted in the hope that you will do what you can to have the matter arranged in a manner more beneficial to the interests of this province.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
A. C. IRWIN, Secretary.

Now it is a fact that this state of things has been protested against for years but apparently the difficulty has not been removed. This not only occurs in winter but in the summer time.

The resolution reads as follows :

Resolved, that in the opinion of the Charlettetown Development and Tourist Association, it is desirable to have a parlour car run through from Boston to Point du Chêne each day during the continuance of the through train, the present service being wholly inadequate and detrimental to summer travel to Prince Edward Island.

I bring this forward with due respect to the minister and the general manager, in the hope that they will look into these matters. I think the minister will realize that the travel coming there now, and which is increasing, requires more attention than has been afforded it over that portion of the line. I had occasion last year to speak of the extension of the railway along the water front in Charlottetown. I understand that nothing definite has been arrived at by the government in this respect. The last two years I have been bringing this to the attention of the government, and the people of Charlottetown, the board of trade, and the city council are a unit on the necessity for this work. The merchants throughout the whole island who have to use the Charlottetown wharfs for the transhipment of their goods to different points on the island, are put to an expense that is not fair to them, they are inconvenienced in the transhipment of their goods along the Prince Edward Island Railway, and they have been working for this extension for a number of years. I submit that this is a matter that cannot wait, we cannot wait five or six years more for these improvements that the people demand at once. Also in respect to the railway station the minister said the hole was being filled up for a railway station. I understood he stated in the House the other day they had not decided on a location for the railway station ; then why are they filling in this hole before the location is decided upon. A great majority of the better class of the people of Charlottetown, the board of trade and the town council, have petitioned and sent resolutions and deputations to the minister, asking that the station be located at the intersection of Great George and Water streets, where the land is much higher and more available in the interests of Charlottetown than where the station is at present located. I understand that various offers have been made to the government of land, and that the prices are not unreasonable. But there are some political interests at work to have the railway down near the old station where it is at the present time, and the government are trying to keep the political strings dangling as long as possible before they decide where the depot shall be. Now I think there is only one possible place that will suit the people of Charlottetown and that will at the same time be advantageous to the interests of the Prince Edward Island Railway.

I think the minister should not hesitate to have the station built at this point. There has been some talk of engineering difficulties but I have found the consensus of opinion among engineers of repute who understand the situation thoroughly to be that there are no engineering difficulties in the way. Besides that the railway would have to be brought to this point in being extended along the water front and part of the increased cost of putting the station at George and Water streets would necessarily go to the extension of the line along the water front. Then too the Marine Department has purchased a wharf there for the improvement of the government property and of the facilities at this wharf it would be advisable to extend the line that far. From the estimates I find that the minister has added an amount for Kinkora station. I pressed this on the minister for a number of years and I was very glad to have him look into the matter with me last year in a very reasonable way and insert the item and I am glad to see that he has included an item for establishing a station at this point. I pressed on the minister at that time the necessity for having a booking station there. I trust that the additional $150 which I see in the estimates this year is for the establishment of a booking station at that point. Is that correct ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There is $150 in the supplementaries for a station at Kinkora. The lowest tenders exceeded the estimate of the department and the appropriation so that we had to increase the amount. The question of a booking station at that point has been under the consideration of the department, but the business at that station as shown by the returns would hardly justify making it a booking station. When the trade and prospects of the place would justify it the department would hope to establish a booking station there.

Mr. LEFURGEY.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I went fully into this question with the minister several months ago and I stated to him exactly the situation there. I think he was visibly impressed with the necessity of having a booking station at that point. The inconvenience to shippers at this point is so great that they are practically unable to carry on their commercial intercourse with the rest of the island unless they secure a booking station.

Mr. EMMERSON. When my hon. friend brought that matter to my attention and it was also pressed on me by other hon. members from the island I referred the matter to the officials of the government railways and their report was to the effect which I have just stated. I do not know anything about the matter personally ; I know that my hon. friend said that in his judgment there should be a booking station, but there are always these differences of opinion between outsiders and the officials. I must be guided in these matters by the judgment of the officials who are the ones who should know something about them.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I must contend that it is not fair for the management to take into consideration only the monetary returns from a station in a case of this kind. They should take into account the inconvenience that is caused to the people by the lack of accommodation. I must insist that the case has not been fairly represented to the minister by the officers of his department or he would more favourably consider the claims of Kinkora to a booking station. I stated last year that these men have to go to Emerald to receive their goods and have to drive 12 or 15 miles or else waste a day on the train. Then these trains often arrive at midnight. A booking station would not cost the government much as they have to keep a man there now. At the same time I might just as well urge the necessity of having two trains daily on that branch. There is only one train a day now and for the convenience of the travelling public and of the commercial people down there. there should be two trains. I am glad to find that the minister has decided to grant a station at Kensington and an extension to their siding. Fredericton, Breadalbane and Alberton are also to have new stations. I understand that the Alberton station is to be a fine brick station according to the minister's statement last year. I would ask whether it is proposed to abolish the nuisance of the 'Y' that is used in order to get into Alberton station. This is a very inconvenient way of getting into the town, and for a reasonable expenditure it could be remedied. The abolition of the 'Y' is just as important to the operation of the railway as is the straightening of a good many of the curves.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have given that matter considerable study personally ; I have also conferred with the officials, and I may say that this work would mean an expenditure of probably $25,000. There is a similar 'Y' on the Canadian Pacific Railway at Ottawa and they seem to get along very well notwithstanding. In my judgment, and in the judgment of the officials, the conditions prevailing at Alberton would not justify such a large expenditure simply to avoid some little inconvenience in backing the trains.

Mr. INGRAM. What is the distance ?

Mr. EMMERSON. About 3,000 feet. This matter has been pressed upon me by a great many friends but I could not concur in their conclusion. I hope to have the pleasure of visiting the island in the near future.

Mr. LEFURGEY. If the minister would come over and see the place I have no doubt he would change his mind.

Mr. EMMERSON. Sherbrooke and Ottawa are in exactly the same position as respects the 'Y.'

Mr. LEFURGEY. That may be, but if Sherbrooke and Ottawa are content to remain in the slough, that is no reason why Prince Edward Island should not make progress. If the minister carried out these improvements on the island it would make him more popular.

Mr. EMMERSON. Then you would feel bad.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Not at all. I am afraid that the people of Alberton have very little to hope for from the minister. The minister talks about an expenditure of $25,000, but that is a paltry sum to this government with their surpluses rolling in. If the Minister of Railways would whisper to the Finance Minister, he would tell him to go ahead, that it was only a drop in the bucket.

Mr. EMMERSON. Then you would complain of the expenditure.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I am told by my colleague (Mr. Hackett) that the new stations at Northam and Richmond are going to be erected at once and I now remark that it is about time they should be. I again call the attention of the minister to the fact that the station accommodation at Summerside is badly in need of improvement. The station is located just at the head of the railway wharf ; there is a considerable amount of traffic there every day, and serious accidents have occurred while others have been narrowly averted. This matter has been pressed upon the minister by the people of Summerside and by resolution of the Maritime Board of Trade, and I trust the hon. gentleman will give his attention to this matter immediately. I have many times brought to the attention of the House the construction of branch lines in Prince Edward Island, and I trust now to have the assistance of my hon. friend from King's (Mr. J. J. Hughes) and my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Haszard) in urging on the minister the necessity for railway extension. In Prince Edward Island there is only room for one system of railway, so that unfortunately we are debarred from the benefits which railway competition would give us. That being so the government should endeavour to meet the deficiency by affording adequate railway accommodation to the people. These branch lines have been promised to us more than once and it is high time these promises were carried into effect. While the government has built the Murray Harbour branch for the people of that district, there are other localities on the island which are even more badly in need of railway communication. There is a branch badly needed from Westpoint to the main line. The facilities for shipping by water at West Point are not of the best, nor is it probable that a suitable harbour could be constructed there. The people have now no means of getting in their coal, and other supplies, or sending their products to the market. I hope the minister will see his way to construct this branch line immediately. I have also brought to the attention of the House on many occasions the necessity of a branch line between Crapaud and North Wiltshire, and while I do not wish to elaborate on the arguments I have advanced on other occasions in favour of this undertaking ; I nevertheless earnestly press it upon the favourable consideration of the minister. During the by-election in Queen's, which resulted in the return of Mr. Haszard, there were strong resolutions passed in favour of a branch line from New London to a point on the main line of the Prince Edward Island Railway.

The necessity of a branch railway in that section of the island was very strongly urged, and I understand that the hon. member for West Queen's (Mr. Haszard) gave his promise that if he were returned to parliament that branch would certainly be constructed. I hope the minister will give us his assurance to-night that that will be done. In order to fully round out the Prince Edward Island Railway and to put it in closer touch with the main line of the Intercolonial Railway, I would urge on the government the necessity of taking over the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island Railway, and making it the connecting link between the Prince Edward Island Railway and the Intercolonial. I believe the hon. Minister of Railways will see eye to eye with me as to the advantage this would be to both systems, and the added convenience it would be to the government in carrying out the terms of confederation with Prince Edward Island by providing a suitable service both winter and summer. I will not enter into any argument on this question to-night, but I submit it to the hon. Minister of Railways and his colleagues for careful consideration, and I believe it will meet with their approval. Another matter connected with the railways, and allied very closely to them, is that of express accommodation between the western provinces and the eastern provinces. I understand that the Canadian Express Company has almost exclusive rights to a great many points on the Intercolonial Railway, while the Dominion Express Company is debarred from having access to those points. I know that the fruit growers of the west and the shippers of perishable products such as fish and meats in the maritime provinces, especially down about Canso, Halifax and other points not touched by the Dominion Express Company, are under a very serious disadvantage in getting their products to market. In many cases it is not possible to do so without the payment of a double expressage. I have in my hand a letter from one of the shippers, which points out that resolutions were passed and forwarded to the Minister of Railways on this subject, and I would like to know from him later on in this debate what conclusion he has come to with regard to giving relief to the shippers in this matter. The following resolution was passed by the Board of Trade of Canso :

Whereas, the fish trade of Canso demands the very best transportation facilities possible, and whereas, the delays in the delivery of express shipments at present is one of the most serious obstacles to the building up of the business ; and whereas, wherever competition in express service exists a much better service is given ; therefore resolved, that we request the Minister of Railways to grant to the Dominion Express Company equal facilities and equal rights with the Canadian Express Company over all lines of the Intercolonial Railway.

This is a very serious matter, especially with regard to the shipment of fresh fish from the maritime provinces to western Canada ; and speaking from my own experience, I think every facility should be given to the people of the maritime provinces to put a good article on the market, because there are no fish up here worth eating. The Council of the Halifax Board of Trade also passed a very strong resolution to the following effect and forwarded it to the Minister of Railways :

Whereas, the Dominion Express Company operates an express service on Intercolonial trains between St. John and Halifax affording competition to stations between these points ; and whereas, between Halifax and Sydney, and Truro and Sydney, the express service is confined to the Canadian Express Company, affording no competition to and from points reached by the Dominion Express Company on other lines of railway without two express charges being enacted ; and whereas, it is understood that the Dominion Express Company are willing to extend their service on all passenger trains of the Intercolonial Railway on same terms as are now granted to the Canadian Express Company ; therefore resolved, that in the interest of importers and shippers the council of the Halifax Board of Trade urges upon the Minister of Railways the advisability of granting the same terms to the Dominion Express Company as granted by the government to the Canadian Express Company ; and further resolved, that copies of this resolution be sent to the Minister of Railways, Finance and to the members for city and county of Halifax at Ottawa.

I would like to know from the minister that this matter has received his attention, and that he has some definite line of policy to announce to the House in regard to it.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Have you anything from Manitoba ?

Mr. LEFURGEY. The hon. gentleman is not possibly so much concerned for the interests of the maritime provinces as he might be. If we heard his voice a little oftener upon certain subjects, for instance, the Elmira branch and some other matters, which he was loudly advocating when looking for votes in King's county, he would be much more appreciated. As I told him on one occasion, I am not here simply to represent my own constituency ; I consider myself as representing the Dominion of Canada at large ; and while the hon. gentleman does not see fit to look after his own constituency, I will have to point out on the floor of this House certain needed improvements in that district. Coming back to the express companies, Prince Edward Island suffers from an added grievance in the fact that during the winter season all our express matter stops at Charlottetown, and we have to pay an extra amount to the Prince Edward Island Railway for its shipment to different parts of the island. That is certainly a great inconvenience to shippers.

Arrangements with the railway could readily be made to give Georgetown, Souris, Summerside, Tignish, and Alberton express accommodation, and I would strongly urge on the minister the necessity of giving this increased accommodation to the importers in Prince Edward Island. Without trenching upon the matter of the conduct of the mails from the mainland, on which I shall have something to say on another occasion, I believe that there were twenty-eight days on which the mails came over, that Summerside did not receive its foreign mail, and there were eighteen days on which these mails could have been forwarded to Summerside had the Department of Railways given the people a special train for their distribution, so that while the mails reached Charlottetown for distribution, they were held over there for many hours before they were forwarded to Summerside and points west, and on the other ten days the mails coming into the capes were sent to Charlottetown and brought back the following day. I have pointed out a great many of the grievances under which the people of Prince Edward Island are suffering in the matter of railway and transportation facilities and also some on the mainland, and I think that if the hon. minister will take these seriously into his consideration, he will give better accommodation to the people of the different localities and the shippers and travelling public and wipe out a substantial part of the deficit which has been rolling up on the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island railways during the past season.

Mr. HASZARD. It is not my intention to follow the hon. gentleman from East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) in the long and somewhat rambling speech he has just delivered. The only conclusion I can draw from it is that he has abandoned the county of Prince and intends seeking election in Queen's county.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I have been offered the nomination down there.

Mr. HASZARD. No doubt he will find a few friends to encourage him, but if he accepts he will experience the same trouble there that he found himself in during the by-election as the electors did not pay much attention to him. The interests of the mussel mud diggers of his county are important, but had he stayed at home, when that industry was being carried on, in February last, and attended to the interests of his constituents, he might have met with more success. Instead of that he followed me through the riding of West Queen's and no doubt discovered that his chances for re-election in that part of the county were so slim that he is now looking for a nomination in Charlottetown. I do not believe in taking up the time of this House in airing our grievances and calling the attention of hon. gentlemen to them, who cannot be expected to be interested in these local matters. I appreciate the fact that much better and more effective work can be done by interviewing the proper ministers at the proper time, and I have no doubt that when the supplementary estimates are brought down I shall be able to convince the people of my riding that I have not been idle in attending to their requirements. The hon. gentleman also made some reference to the necessity of having a new station at Charlottetown—a question which has already been pretty fully threshed out. But his statement to-night does not agree at all with that of the hon. member for Lincoln, who only a night or two ago said that the people of Charlottetown had no right to have anything to say regarding where that station should be built. I claim that the people should be consulted, and the question I think is now being dealt with in the only way that will be satisfactory to them. I shall not take up further time in following the hon. gentleman, but simply want him to understand that the people of Charlottetown and West Queen's have placed their confidence and trust in me, and if the hon. gentleman has no grievance to urge on behalf of Prince county, that speaks very well for the government. They must certainly have been doing a good deal for that part of the island, since the hon. gentleman has confined his remarks almost altogether to the riding I have the honour to represent. No doubt, however, the speech which the hon. gentleman has delivered will be circulated broadcast throughout Canada, and possibly adorned by his photograph, as was the speech he made the other day.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken has failed to appreciate the ideas advanced by this side. The proposition advanced by this side is not that the people of the locality shall not have a voice in determining where a station shall be located, but that the matter shall not be made a political engine by which to win votes. What we contend is that the administration ought to take the responsibility of coming to a decision and not leave these items in the estimates dangling before the public from year to year for election purposes. I want to ask the hon. minister whether there has been anything done with reference to the purchase of the Canada Eastern Railway. That was discussed a good deal some time ago in the press. It was said that the government were negotiating for its purchase, and at the time when the minister was considerably engaged outside the House, it was supposed that he was engaged in these negotiations. It would be interesting to the public to know how far that matter has advanced.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think what is of more interest at this moment is the item before the House. My hon. friend heard the announcement of the Prime Minister with respect to that matter, and if he will only possess his soul in patience he may learn something more about it.

Mr. LENNOX.. I did not happen to hear the Prime Minister and I do not think it would be out of place for the hon. gentleman to inform the committee in what position that matter is now.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think that my hon. friend is travelling outside the record. We are not dealing with the Canada Eastern but with the Prince Edward Island Railway. But as my hon. friend says he did not hear the Prime Minister, I shall be very happy to tell him what the Prime Minister said. The Prime Minister said that there would probably be legislation introduced in this parliament having reference to the Canada Eastern Railway.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the government purchased the Canada Eastern ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That my hon. friend will probably learn in time.

Mr. SPROULE. This would be a good time to give the information.

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) seems to have silently stolen away, but he made a number of statements and suggestions which call for some attention on my part. The first was as to the non-furnishing of sufficient cars on the Prince Edward Island Railway for the hauling of mussel mud. It was well known that the storms of last winter were very severe and impeded railway traffic in all parts of Canada. Prince Edward Island was no exception. For a time the railway was unable to carry on its traffic, and the shippers of mussel mud were not able to get cars as fast as they wished them or as fast as the railway would have liked to furnish them. But the difficulty was soon cleared away and the cars were supplied. He read a communication from the employees with reference to the pension scheme on the government railways. He received that communication in March last, and I am sorry he did not make it known to me. Almost all the members on this side received similar communications and they made the matter known to me, and we have conferred with respect to it. Complaint is made with regard to the Boston travel. My hon. friend must know that during the past two seasons a special train has run between Point du Chêne and Boston, connecting with the train on the Boston and Maine. Cars come through from Boston to Point du Chêne, many of them cars of the Boston and Maine line. They are the same cars that are used on that line and on the Maine Central system, and are quite up to the standard of that system. It seems to me they should be fairly capable of meeting the requirements of the Intercolonial. This is a special train, and makes very quick time between Point du Chêne and St. John and, in fact, right through to Boston.

Mr. INGRAM. Is it a mixed train ?

Mr. EMMERSON. An express train. It connects with the Prince Edward Island Steam Navigation Company's steamer on her arrival and departure. The hon. gentleman also spoke of the line of railway along the harbour front in Charlottetown, and complained of the delays on the part of this government and of the Intercolonial management. There is one very significant fact that he withheld from this committee. When he criticised this government and the present management of the Intercolonial on this point, he was certainly presenting a very severe indictment against my hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart). When my hon. friend from South Lanark was Minister of Railways in 1888, if he was minister at that time——

Mr. HAGGART. No.

Mr. EMMERSON. Then his predecessor in the Conservative government, which certainly was in power at that time—Mr. P. S. Archibald, then engineer of the Intercolonial, was sent to Charlottetown and made a survey for a railway along the harbour front of that city. The year 1888 passed, and 1889, and so on up to and including 1896, during all of which time hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, and yet nothing was done. I do not know that my hon. friend (Mr. Lefurgey) made any complaints against the government of that day with respect to their delay. This matter has received the attention of this government, and progress has been made. The proper connections are being made, and in due time the terminals at Charlottetown will be completed. Provision has been made in the estimates in connection with the station and the yards, and that is certainly more than the previous government did, though they led the people to believe that it would be done when they made that survey. The booking station to which the hon. gentleman refers would be at a place where the total freight earnings in the yard would not be enough to pay the expenses of maintaining the station. It would cost $700 a year to conduct, and the general manager advises me that there would not be that much of freight receipts in a year. It will be seen, therefore, that the officials on the Intercolonial are justified in reporting against it. But if circumstances later on justify it, we will establish it as a booking station. One of the hon. members on the other side—I think it was my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster)—stated last night that we should rely upon the judgment of the officials of the road and not consult the wishes of the people. I had stated that the people of Charlottetown could not agree on a site for the station, and the hon. gentleman condemned me for consulting the people. That seems to be the new doctrine of hon. gentlemen opposite—or it may be their old doctrine. We are endeavouring to consult the wishes of the people and to meet their requirements in every possible way.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) was good enough to answer me with regard to the Canada Eastern. It would facilitate matters if he would state whether there is any foundation for the statement made in the newspapers the other day that the government was about to purchase the Canada Atlantic. Probably it would save time, and certainly would be more satisfactory to the committee in dealing with these estimates, if the hon. gentleman would tell us if that statement is well founded.

Mr. EMMERSON. I was asked that question by one of the reporters last night, and I gave the answer. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) will look at the Toronto 'Globe' of this morning——

Mr. INGRAM. Never read it.

Mr. EMMERSON. I feared that. My hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) will remain in a benighted condition as long as he does not read the Toronto 'Globe.' I made the statement last night, and I do not propose to enter into a discussion of that matter now. It would be entirely out of order. But I wish to be courteous to my hon. friend, and I will tell him where he can find the information.

Mr. LENNOX. Then the statement in the 'Globe' is correct ?

Mr. HACKETT. Does the minister intend to take action this session with regard to a pension to the railway employees on the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railway ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Perhaps my hon. friend did not hear me say that I hoped before the session was through to be able to introduce such a Bill. The premier stated from his place in the House the other day that such a Bill would probably be brought before parliament.

Mr. HACKETT. The hon. member for West Queen's (Mr. Haszard) stated that the supplementary estimates were going to show something good for Prince Edward Island.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have no doubt they will.

Mr. HACKETT. Would the minister state now what these supplementary estimates will contain ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have no idea what is in the mind of my hon. friend who made that statement, therefore I cannot answer for him.

Mr. HACKETT. Well it is difficult to get information on these matters respecting Prince Edward Island. There are two of us here, my hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) and myself, and we stand up for the rights of Prince Edward Island on every possible occasion where we think we can advance the interests of her people. Now the hon. member for King's, P.E.I. (Mr. Hughes) this evening made what I consider a very unkind and very ungrateful remark. When my hon. friend from East Prince was speaking on matters affecting Prince Edward Island, the hon. member for King's interrupted him with the remark, What about Manitoba ? Are you going to advocate matters in connection with Manitoba ? Sir, it is too small. We are here representing Prince Edward Island, we are advocating the rights of Prince Edward Island, and when one of her representatives stands up here and advocates the rights of Prince Edward Island, he is told that he should also advocate matters in connection with Manitoba. I say it is unkind and ungrateful on the part of that hon. gentleman. Sir, the opportunity has arrived for the people of Prince Edward Island to be represented in matters affecting their interest, we wish to see justice done to our people in connection with railway stations and branch lines. Now the minister said that the Murray Harbour branch would be opened shortly. How is that progressing ? Is it intended to open it shortly ? How is the Hillsboro bridge getting along ? Will the Murray Harbour branch be open before the Hillsboro bridge is built ?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I want to say one word to my hon. friend who has referred to me. He says that I interrupted the hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) with a very unkind remark. That is not quite correct. The hon. member for East Prince was wandering in his speech all over the Dominion of Canada ; he was referring to Sydney, to Halifax and pretending that he had received communications from those cities, that he had to discuss matters in relation to them. Certainly he was not then advocating the interests of Prince Edward Island, in fact, in my judgment, he was making himself—well, he was trying to spread out, and instead of advocating the interests of Prince Edward Island he was looking after other parts of Canada, and it was then that I interposed with the remark and asked if he had any communication from Manitoba.

Mr. HACKETT. After hearing the hon. member's explanation I repeat again that his interjection was unkind and ungrateful to the people of Prince Edward Island. My hon. friend from East Prince was advocating a better system on the Intercolonial, he was perfectly within his right in advocating an improvement of that system from Moncton to Halifax, he was justified in advocating that better accommodation should be given to the tourist travel over the main line of the Prince Edward Island Railway during the summer season. He complained that a change had been made at Painsec Junction, and that passengers travelling over the line had to change cars, and to go out of what might be called a fairly good palace car into an old dilapidated car that had been used for twenty years. The Minister of Railways said that was not so. I travelled myself over that line a little more than a month ago. There is one car that goes to St. John, a Canadian Pacific Railway car I think it is.

Mr. EMMERSON. No, it can't be that.

Mr. HACKETT. Then it must be a Boston and Maine car. There is only one car that goes through, and the passenger who has not been able to get a seat in that car must go out and hunt up another car to go down to Point du Chêne.

Mr. EMMERSON. When one car is filled up he has to get into another. Is that it ?

Mr. HACKETT. Yes. Now would you imagine in an up-to-date railway that all the travellers going down from Painsec Junction to Point du Chêne have to change cars ?

Mr. EMMERSON. They don't change at Painsec, the train goes right through.

Mr. HACKETT. Only one car goes through.

Mr. EMMERSON. But this season, during the summer travel, or the tourist travel as it is called, there is a special train known as the Boston train that goes right through from Boston to Point du Chêne to connect with the island steamers, and it returns from Point du Chêne right through to Boston. Some of the cars are Boston and Maine cars, others are Intercolonial cars. My hon. friend is certainly not well informed with respect to that matter, or he would not say that they have to change at Painsec. It is a through train, and is known as a special schedule train, it is on the time table of the Intercolonial and is known on the time table as the Boston train.

Mr. HACKETT. That change must have taken place very recently.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is only during the summer season when the tourist traffic is on.

Mr. HACKETT. I had to change cars on May 15th.

Mr. EMMERSON. Summer had not come then nor had the tourists.

Mr. HACKETT. It ought to be along on May 15th if we are to have any at all.

Mr. EMMERSON. Last year there was the same improvement during the tourist season.

Mr. HACKETT. I want to resent the insult cast upon my hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) when he was advocating something in the interests of Prince Edward Island by the hon. member for King's (Mr. J. J. Hughes). The people of Prince Edward Island are all interested in having a large tourist travel and we want to have the best accommodation possible from Painsec Junction to Point du Chêne, because we have as good boats between Point du Chêne and Summerside as can be found in Canada or anywhere else, and therefore in order that we may keep up a good system of travel between the continent of America and Prince Edward Island it is necessary that we should have fairly good accommodation between Point du Chêne and Painsec Junction. In regard to the station at Kinkora, which is a good old Irish name, I may say that accommodation is required there for the factories, manufacturing all kinds of agricultural implements, and for the people of the surrounding district, which is one of the best farming portions of our island, inhabited by a thrifty, hardy, intelligent people. Does the minister not think it necessary to build a station there which would provide the accommodation of a booking station ? I would appeal to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) who was in that province during a by-election some few years ago and who promised these people great things. He said : We are going to build a station ; you will have a booking station and all the facilities you require ; we will place you on the same footing as other parts of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. EMMERSON. Hold him to it.

Mr. HACKETT. Will you do it now, may I ask the hon. Minister of Finance ?

Mr. FIELDING. All the promises I made, if I made any, to the people of Prince Edward Island have been fulfilled long ago. I do not wait until this time to fulfil them.

Mr. HACKETT. What about the station?

Mr. FIELDING. Never, never, never; it is a dream of my hon. friend (Mr. Hackett).

Mr. HACKETT. It is a dream now, it is a dream of the past. You have forgotten all about what you promised to the people of Emerald and Kinkora in this connection. I met the minister at some of those meetings and he promised everything a minister could promise to obtain votes to elect his candidate.

Mr. FIELDING. He got them, too.

Mr. LENNOX. As we are dealing with the total working expenses of the government railway system, it is perfectly right that the committee should be informed distinctly and explicitly as to whether the government proposes to purchase this Canada Eastern Railway, and the terms upon which the purchase is to be made. It would be only right and fair if he gave us full information in regard to the purchase of this railway, which I believe is owned by a gentleman in the House, a supporter of the present administration.

Mr. LOGAN. The statement was made by the Prime Minister that this purchase was under consideration, and that the probabilities were that legislation to that effect would be brought down this session. I do not think it is fair to press the minister any further, in reference to this matter. For my own part, I only hope it is true that we are going to buy the Canada Eastern and I hope that this is only the commencement of the policy of purchasing all the feeders of the Intercolonial in the maritime provinces. I am convinced that if the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway owned the Intercolonial, it would not be many months before they would acquire not only the Canada Eastern, but the other small railways, such as the Havelock Railway, the New Brunswick Railway previously spoken of, the Cumberland Railway and Coal Company, the lines of the Canada Coals and Railway Company and the other feeders to the Intercolonial Railway in the maritime provinces. I believe that this wise policy will be adopted in the future in reference to these small railways in those provinces. Many of these railways are so conducted that the road-bed is not in proper shape, and many of the roads—although I do not now refer to the Cumberland Railway and Coal Company's lines—are not maintained in safe condition and accidents have happened which would not have happened if the government owned the railways and kept them up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway.

I am firmly convinced that this is the proper policy to adopt in reference to these feeders to the Intercolonial Railway. I did not intend to speak in the committee, but there seems to be a plan amongst hon. gentlemen on the other side to obstruct business, and I do not see why I should not have something to say as well as these gentlemen. We have had to-night a sample of the varied views of the opposition upon the question of railway operation. The hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) had the floor for more than an hour while he called upon the Minister of Railways to build in his district of Prince Edward Island, stations and sidings by the score, to make improvements without number, to run more trains, to build branch lines, and last but not least, to purchase the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island Railway. I tried to figure what would be the probable cost of carrying out his requests, and I find that it would amount to between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000. My hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) on the other hand, has referred to a large expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway as most reprehensible.

Mr. LENNOX. I have done nothing of the kind.

Mr. LOGAN. Well, it does not make much difference anyway what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) said in reference to the matter.

Mr. LENNOX. It makes some difference that the hon. gentleman should misrepresent me.

Mr. LOGAN. I will not hesitate for a moment to take the hon. gentleman's word, but I shall quote even a higher authority than he is on that question. I shall quote the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) who I have no doubt will be the Minister of Railways in the next Conservative government, whenever the time comes that a Conservative government is in power.

Mr. J. D. REID. Next election.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am sorry to think that my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) will not live that long.

Mr. LOGAN. I regret that my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) whom we all respect so much and whose genial manner we appreciate is not a younger man; because gray as his hair is now, it will be whiter than the driven snow before he has a chance to be Minister of Railways again. However, he was Minister of Railways once upon a time, and a few evenings ago in discussing the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway, with tears in his eyes almost, and with a tremor in his voice, he proclaimed:

> Has the Minister of Railways no pity for the poor ratepayers of Canada ? . . . . Is the House going to submit to this ? . . . . Is the country going to submit to it ? . . . . The building of deep water termini and such thongs are interminable and are not justified at all . . . . The Intercolonial Railway is a sink hole.

The hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) denounced the building of sidings on the Intercolonial Railway, but now the member for East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) demands sidings and improvements on the Prince Edward Island Railway which would cost millions of dollars. How can the people of Canada take the opposition seriously ? They are as much divided on this question as they are on the question of government ownership. I have no doubt that the speech of my hon. friend (Mr. Lefurgey) was not intended for this House but for his constituents, and I am convinced that that speech in pamphlet form will supply interesting reading by the firesides of East Prince in the cold winter evenings. Now, as to the request with reference to the express companies; I believe it is the general desire of the people living along the Intercolonial Railway that the Dominion Express Company should have the same privileges on that railway as are enjoyed by the Canadian Express Company. A number of us on this side of the House have recently waited upon the Minister of Railways in reference to this matter, and he has promised a sympathetic consideration, and expressed the hope that he will be able to look into the question within the next few weeks. I have no doubt the minister will come to the conclusion that the request of the Dominion Express Company should be granted. The hon. gentleman from East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) complained that there was a lack of cars on the Prince Edward Island Railway. I am sorry to say that there is also a lack of cars on the Intercolonial Railway, as I know from experience because I have just been endeavouring to secure cars for certain excursions which would not be objected to by my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) or my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule). There is undoubtedly a lack of rolling stock on the government railways, but how are we going to remedy that deficiency if attention is paid to the argument of the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) who says that the Intercolonial Railway is a sink hole, and that such expenditure is unjustifiable ? We need rolling stock, and a good deal of it, and I hope the Minister of Railways will make provision to supply such rolling stock as is required. We have on the Intercolonial Railway some magnificent trains ; we have the best road-bed in the Dominion of Canada, but we have not sufficient passenger or freight cars. There is complaint from the shippers of the maritime provinces that they cannot secure facilities for the shipment of lumber and hay and other products. My hon. friend (Mr. Lefurgey) has referred to the tremendous crowds of people coming from Boston to Prince Edward Island. I am glad to know that the exodus from Prince Edward Island has ceased and that the people are returning to that fertile province in such prosperous circumstances that they can afford to travel in parlour cars. But what has the hon. member for East Prince to complain of ? During the ten months of the last fiscal year ending on the 1st of May, this government has spent the sum of $364,924.66 chargeable to capital account on the Prince Edward Island Railway. What more does my hon. friend want? This government has spent on the Prince Edward Island road within the last few years over $2,000,000 on capital account. It would seem to me as if the government was doing its duty to the Prince Edward Island Railway in this regard. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lefurgey) will only be patient, he will find that the present government will amply supply the wants of the people of Prince Edward Island in the matter of railway accommodation.

Mr. J. D. REID. Whenever the Minister of Railways is asked an important question I notice that some of his supporters pop up and endeavour to evade the issue raised. The Minister of Railways apparently has not the confidence of his supporters to such an extent that they will allow him to answer a question.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. You were not present to hear the minister answer the question.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have been here all day trying to hear him answer.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. Where were you yesterday and the day before ?

Mr. J. D. REID. I have been in this House as much as you have, and taken a greater part in the debates.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. I can say that that statement is absolutely and unqualifiedly a false statement.

Mr. J. D. REID. If the hon. gentleman had the manners of any decent man he would not make that statement. It is only a man of his reputation who would do so. There was a question asked from the Minister of Railways about the purchase of the Canada Eastern Railway, and he has not answered it. There is a vote before this House for $7,000,000, and we are entitled to an answer as to the policy of the government on that matter before we pass this item.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. It is indeed refreshing to hear the voice of the hon. gentleman in this chamber once more. There is one thing about him, that when he does come in, which is a rare occurrence, he tries to make himself heard, and I congratulate him upon giving us his views on matters pertaining to the administration of the Intercolonial Railway. I desire, however, to point out that certain anomalies crop up from time to time in these discussions on the Intercolonial. I had intended to reply to certain matters brought up by the hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey), who addressed the House at great length this evening ; but the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) having replied, it is not necessary for me to do so again. It was my intention to remind him that a communication was received by him in March last in regard to a matter of extreme importance to the employees of the Intercolonial Railway and the Prince Edward Island Railway. I intended to ask him before he concluded his observations what action he had taken in regard to that communication. Several members on this side of the House have received the same communication ; but they have not treated it as did the hon. member, who tonight professed such great anxiety for the interests of those people. They went to the minister in regard to the representations there made, they were received favourably by him, and I hope the impression they made on the minister will bear fruit that will be appreciated by the employees of the Intercolonial Railway and Prince Edward Island Railway. If they had desired to use this matter for political purposes, it is probable that they would have kept these letters and resolutions in their pockets and waited three or four months to bring them up in the House and parade them before the people of this country to show that they were interested in those railway employees. They did not do that. They preferred to go about this matter in a businesslike way, and I have no doubt the employees of the Intercolonial Railway and the Prince Edward Island Railway will reap the benefits of the efforts those members on this side of the House have made in their interests. It is important that the people who have communicated with the hon. gentleman should know that the communication which they sent him in March last has remained in his pocket, and that he has not brought it to the attention of either the minister or the country until after the lapse of four months. They will hardly thank him for his conduct in this matter. They will realize that it is not so much the interests of the people employed on the Intercolonial Railway or the Prince Edward Island Railway that he desires to promote as it is his own interests.

Mr. HACKETT. Might I ask the hon. gentleman how long it is since he waited on the minister with regard to the railway employees ?

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. I want to say to my hon. friend and the committee that before this year, before that communication had been received, before the present Minister of Railways had assumed his present office, hon. members on this side of the House, together with myself, moved for a measure of this character, which I hope the Minister of Railways will submit to this House before the present session closes.

Mr. HACKETT. That is very unsatisfactory. My hon. friend from East Prince read a document here, signed in March last. Has the hon. gentleman waited on the hon. minister since ; and, if so, what effect has he had on the minister ?

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. I certainly have. Immediately on receipt of that communication I brought its subject matter to the attention of the minister, not for the first time, and again urged upon him the desirability of passing such a measure in the interest of those people.

Mr. HACKETT. My hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey), from purely patriotic motives, in the interest of the employees of the railway, brought this matter before the attention of this committee this evening. Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Alex. Johnston) desires to reflect upon my hon. friend from East Prince, and to take the credit to himself. He said he had been working for a year or for two years. What success has he yet achieved in those two years ? The hon. member for East Prince had the manliness to come forward and present to this committee this document, signed by the different associations down there.

Mr. EMMERSON. Where has the document been in the meantime ?

Mr. HACKETT. The original was before the minister. This is a copy that was sent to the hon. member for East Prince, and the hon. minister must also have had it before him. Why did the hon. gentleman not bring this matter before this parliament before ? Why did he wait for two years to have it brought up ? While my hon. friend from East Prince has been working in the interest of the railway employees, the hon. gentleman has remained as dumb as an oyster. I want to say one word in reply to the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan), who has also made an attack on the hon. member for East Prince. He says we require millions of dollars. We require no millions of dollars. This government undertook to build a branch line from Southport to Murray Harbour, which has cost $1,000,000 or $2,000,000. They also undertook to build a bridge. The accommodation required on the main line of the railway does not require millions. It would only take a few thousand dollars to grant this accommodation to the people. I made the remark a few minutes ago that when the Minister of Finance was down there he made great promises to the people of Prince Edward Island with regard to providing accommodation of this kind, but he has failed to carry out those promises. To come down to a later date, I find that the hon. gentleman last year made promises in parliament which he has not carried out. On an item for increased accommodation at Charlottetown, $87,000, we had the following discussion :

Mr. LEFURGEY. What work does this vote contemplate ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We are proposing to have a new station with covered platform, additional freight shed accommodation, additional land required for the purpose, re-arrangement of the yard, additional siding room, additional wharf accommodation, with dredging, and the usual allowance for engineering, inspection and advertising. The largest item is the new station and platform, $55,000 ; the next, the rearrangement of the yard, $11,000.

I ask the Minister of Finance, who was then administering the Railway Department, what has he done with regard to that Charlottetown station. Has he carried out that promise made last year ?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend has spoken of some promise. I do not know of any. We took an appropriation to provide Charlottetown with a new station and we mean to do it. It could not very well have been done after parliament prorogued last October. My hon. friend can make his mind easy, Charlottetown will have a new station.

Mr. HACKETT. The people of Charlottetown are supposed to wait until doomsday for the accomplishment of these promises. Year after year a certain amount has been appearing in the estimates for the purpose of building a railway station, and nothing is done. And the same statement which the Finance Minister made a moment ago is made every year. He was down there last autumn when it was supposed the elections were approaching. That was before the Grand Trunk Pacific difficulty. He must have looked over the site, and certainly can now whisper into the ear of his colleague that something should be done in connection with the building of this station.

Mr. FIELDING. I will whisper.

Mr. LENNOX. Is the minister going to answer the question I put regarding the purchase of the Canada Eastern Railway ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I did not think my hon. friend was serious. He knows that I am not privileged to declare the policy of the government. The Prime Minister is the one to make announcements of that kind. When the matter is in a condition to be brought before parliament, it will come up in the regular way.

Mr. LENNOX. I am not gifted with the power of humour which the hon. minister possesses.

Mr. EMMERSON. No one would charge you with humour.

Mr. LENNOX. But in all seriousness I consider that parliament has a right to the information I have asked. We have got two rival policies before us. We have the policy propounded by the government of building the Grand Trunk Pacific and crippling the Intercolonial. On the other hand, we have the proposition involved in the question of whether this additional feeder shall be purchased to increase the usefulness of the Intercolonial. The question before us now is whether we shall or not devote a matter of some $7,000,000 to the maintainance of these roads.

Mr. EMMERSON. $6,500,000, and we have passed that item. We are now over on the island and the Canada Eastern is not on the island.

Mr. LENNOX. We have not yet passed vote No. 250, which is one of $7,000,000, we are considering its various subdivisions. In considering the question whether we shall vote this money or not, we have the right to insist on being informed of the policy of the government. We have the right to know whether, notwithstanding the policy of building a transcontinental railway, which will necessarily cripple the Intercolonial, we shall adopt as a rival policy the extension of the principle of government ownership, by purchasing the Canada Eastern as a feeder for the Intercolonial. It is all important that we should know exactly where the government stand in this regard. We have the announcement of the First Minister that the principle of government ownership is to be extended by the purchase of this railway, because he informed us that there probably would be legislation brought down this year having reference to it. That could mean nothing else except legislation for the purpose of acquiring this road. Therefore the committee is entitled beyond question to this information at this time. We have to determine not only whether we shall devote $7,000,000 to the ordinary expenditure of the Intercolonial and the other road for the year ending 1905, but also that other question which is involved in it, and that is whether we shall connect the Intercolonial with this Canada Eastern, which it is said the government contemplate purchasing. The two things go together, and it is time the House knew exactly what the government propose doing.

Mr. INGRAM. Has the Prince Edward branch sufficient rolling stock to meet its requirements ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am informed by the general manager that it would be very desirable to have some more.

Mr. INGRAM. There is not much satisfaction in that answer. What class of cars is required ? What is the rolling stock that is deficient ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There has been enough to meet the requirements. Business is increasing and as it increases we shall need more.

Mr. INGRAM. What is the number of cars ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The total number is 446.

Mr. INGRAM. And the number of box cars is 213 ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. What portion of these are in active service ?

Mr. EMMERSON. All of them, except about five per cent that are usually undergoing repairs.

Mr. INGRAM. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the failure in the train service on the Prince Edward Island Railway last winter was due to the snow blockade ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is what I was informed at the time, and I so informed my hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey). On receiving the complaint, I communicated with the officials, and that is the answer I got.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. gentleman look over the train mileage of the road and tell us what was the mileage for August ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It was 25,429.

Mr. INGRAM. And the snow blockade, I suppose, took place about January or February ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think it was during March.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. gentleman tell us what is the train mileage for March ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It was 21,936.

Mr. INGRAM. Then, if business was the same, the falling off due to the snow blockade would be about as 25,000 to 21,000. Now, my hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) stated that there was an insufficiency in the train service all winter.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am informed by the general manager that the road has a larger number of trains in summer than in winter.

Mr. INGRAM. Then, that explanation makes the position of my hon. friend from East Prince all the stronger. It would show that the snow blockade affected the train mileage very little or not at all. The minister has not thought this out. The excuse he makes is not in accordance with the figures he has given.

Mr. EMMERSON. The statement I made was that the management reported to me, in answer to the complaint put in, that it was because of the snow blockade they could not furnish the cars, and I gave that answer at the time. The delay was only for a short time as I understand it. Soon after he made the complaint my hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) said that the matter was all right.

Mr. INGRAM. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) made the statement that it was owing to the snow blockade.

Mr. EMMERSON. Because my officials told me so.

Mr. INGRAM. But the hon. gentleman is responsible for what his officials tell him

Mr. EMMERSON. Certainly; I am taking the responsibility.

Mr. INGRAM. But surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) will see the point. My hon. friend from East Prince said that the necessary train accommodation had not been furnished during the winter. The minister puts forward the excuse of the snow blockade. Any gentleman looking over the railways and canals report can satisfy himself that there was more snow in 1903 than in 1902, because in 1902 the snow ploughs were used for 2,330 miles, while in 1903 they were used for 14,026 miles. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) will see that this additional mileage was in March. If that be true——

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend (Mr. Ingram can save himself a great deal of energy if he will recall the fact that this was during the month of March, 1904, and he is quoting the month of March, 1903. My hon. friend is quoting figures from the month of March, 1903. He is only a year out of the way.

Mr. INGRAM. The minister may be perfectly right, I have no doubt he is.

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. gentleman might save himself a good deal of fury.

Mr. INGRAM. How did it come to pass that the snow blockade in 1902 prevented the cars from being used in Prince Edward Island ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I was speaking of the snow blockade this last winter. The complaint was made with respect to cars during March and February of this past year. But my hon. friend is quoting figures and returns for the year previous.

Mr. INGRAM. Now the hon. gentleman's snow blockade took place in the month of March. He could only say that in the month of March a snow blockade interfered with the cars and the trains. Now he explains that it was in January, February and April.

Mr. EMMERSON. No, I did not say there was a snow blockade only in the month of March. We know that in Ontario and New Brunswick, and other points there were snow blockades in February and January, and there may well have been in Prince Edward Island also.

Mr. INGRAM. If the snow blockade during the whole of the winter months prevented the train accommodation in Prince Edward Island being what the people required and desired——

Mr. EMMERSON. There was no complaint about the train accommodation of the island, or if there was a complaint, it came from a certain class of men who were hauling mussle mud to their farms. This last year they were a little late because of the deep snow, and they complained. But the general train service of the Island has not been complained of, that I have heard.

Mr. INGRAM. One of the representatives of Prince Edward Island has taken up nearly an hour in complaining of insufficient train service, and the hon. gentleman said that it was owing to the snow blockade.

Mr. EMMERSON. No. As I understood the complaint of the hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey), and as it was presented to me in communications which I received, and about which I telegraphed in March last to the officials, it was merely from the mussel mud men who could not get enough cars. They wanted twenty-seven a day, I think it was, and they did not get that number in a week. The reason they did not get them in that week was the snow blockade, at least that is the reason assigned by the officials, they could not furnish the cars. I telegraphed to them, and immediately after that blockade was removed these men got all the cars they wanted.

Mr. INGRAM. My hon. friends were complaining about insufficient cars, the member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) also made a similar complaint. Let me mention that the revenue from the Prince Edward Island Railway for ten months was $189,894, and the expenditure during the same period was $255,056. The expenditure was more than $65,000 over the revenue. Now we find complaints about the insufficiency of cars, those who desired to ship could not secure cars in order to increase the revenue of that road. I tried to find out from the hon. gentleman if they had sufficient rolling stock to meet the requirements, and he has not explained to this House satisfactorily whether they have or not. He says they could put up with more. Surely if the road is losing $65,000 in ten months owing to a shortage of cars, then it is necessary to have more cars to meet the requirements of trade. The hon. gentleman has not given us a satisfactory explanation with respect to that. Now the hon. member for Cumberland rose to answer some questions, and so did the hon. member for Cape Breton. I understand that some of these gentlemen, and this is not the first time, have interfered with that road. I understand some of these gentlemen go so far as to say that they must have trains to meet their convenience, and they simply give orders to the station agents : You must hold these trains till I am ready to go. I understand that has been done, and when one of the station agents refused to interfere with the progress of the trains, he was removed.

Mr. EMMERSON. Will the hon. gentleman give the names ?

Mr. INGRAM. Yes, I will give the hon. gentleman a name privately, it is a member of this House.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would like my hon. friend to be kind enough to give the name now.

Mr. INGRAM. I will give it privately.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is not fair to hon. members of this House for the hon. gentleman to make that statement without giving names. The statement is made publicly, and it is but fair to give the name of the offender and of the official who was dismissed. I think it is due to the management that their names should be reported. I am sure that the hon. gentleman has been misinformed.

Mr. INGRAM. I hope so.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am satisfied that he has been, and I will make this statement, challenging successful contradiction, that there never has been an official dismissed from the railway because he refused to detain a train at the request of a member of parliament or of anybody else.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. gentleman go so far as to say that a station agent was not removed for refusing to comply with the request of a member of parliament ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I will go so far as to deny that, if any request to detain a train was made by a member of parliament, the station agent was dismissed because he refused to detain the train. Now it is due to the department——

Mr. INGRAM. I did not say that, you are not going to put words down my throat.

Mr. EMMERSON. If my hon. friend wishes to withdraw——

Mr. INGRAM. I withdraw nothing, I am not here to withdraw anything I have said. What I did say was that it was reported to me that a certain member of this House went to a station agent and asked him to detain a train to suit his convenience. The train was not detained by the agent and by reason of the train not being detained. the agent was removed from that station.

Mr. EMMERSON. I give that a most unqualified contradiction.

Mr. INGRAM. Very well ; I am very glad to hear that.

Mr. EMMERSON. Nothing of the kind ever occurred. I think my hon. friend should in fairness to the hon. members from the maritime provinces give the name of his informant, the name of the member, the name of the station agent and the particular station. I think that information is due in all fairness.

Mr. INGRAM. I told the hon. gentleman that I would give him the name privately.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). We want it publicly.

Mr. INGRAM. I will do as I like about that.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think that in fairness the name should be given. A stigma is placed on some one member of this House. That member should be known and if the charge is not true he should have an opportunity of giving it a contradiction, otherwise all the members from the maritime provinces are under that stigma.

Mr. INGRAM. The member whose name I have is a good respectable member of this House, and I have no desire to do him injury. I will tell the minister the name privately, and if I do him any injury by this statement I am man enough to stand up in the House and say it is not true. Is that fair ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think that in all fairness he should give the name.

Mr. INGRAM. I am the best judge of what I should do in this matter. I give you the complaint and if the complaint is not correct I will be as glad to hear it as the hon. minister, but if it is correct the sooner a matter of that kind is investigated and stopped the better.

Mr. EMMERSON. If the hon. gentleman will give the name an investigation will be held and the true facts elicited. I wish to say that no station agent has ever been dismissed on the Intercolonial Railway because——

Mr. COCHRANE. He did not say dismissed at all.

Mr. EMMERSON. Removed.

Mr. COCHRANE. That is from one station to another.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is charged that he was removed because he refused to detain the train at the request of a member of parliament.

Mr. INGRAM. Does my hon. friend grasp the difference between removal from one station to another and dismissal ?—That is what I meant, and that is what I said.

Mr. FIELDING. It seems to be a rumour which we can get no one to father, and that is a poor rumour.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the minister approve of naming a member.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not approve of a gentleman taking an idle rumour of that character and flinging it before parliament when he has no authority and no one to back it up.

Mr. INGRAM. I have as good reason to state that as the hon. minister has to state what he said.

Mr. FIELDING. I have not stated anything.

Mr. INGRAM. It would be more becoming the hon. gentleman not to say anything. What are we here for ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. That is a question.

Mr. INGRAM. That is a question.

Mr. COCHRANE. To vote blindly.

Mr. INGRAM. If there is any statement in the public press of this country in connection with the management of any government institution and that comes under the eye of a member, parliament is the place where that member is supposed to state it, and if it is not correct it is neither belittling nor unbecoming to a minister to give an answer. The minister has given that answer, I have accepted his answer as correct. He has asked me the name and I have said I am willing to give the name privately. What more do you want ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Am I to understand then he declines to give the name of the one member ?

Mr. INGRAM. No you are not.

Mr. EMMERSON. Only in private.

Mr. INGRAM. I will give it in private.

Mr. EMMERSON. And may I make it public.

Mr. INGRAM. I do not care what you do then, you can father it. I will give it to the hon. gentleman, if he wishes to use it he can.

Mr. EMMERSON. Will he give the name of the informant privately ?

Mr. INGRAM. No, I shall not.

Mr. FIELDING. It has no father at all.

Mr. EMMERSON. An idle rumour which has been set afloat which the hon. gentleman cannot connect with anybody.

Mr. LANCASTER. Hon. gentlemen opposite, on the eve of a possible election, evidently do not want information as to the affairs of the country to be given to the people in answer to the questions which the people can only get through the opposition who are particularly charged with asking for information as to the administration of the country. I can quite understand that. They do not desire to have any clear announcement. The hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) has pointed out very calmly and earnestly in the discharge of his duty the importance of knowing whether the Canada Eastern, running from Fredericton to Chatham, is to be acquired by the government and made part of the Intercolonial. We are asked to pass an estimate of $7,000,000 for the maintenance of this railway, and surely we are entitled to ask as to the acquisition of this Canada Eastern. The Minister of Railways perhaps does not know or care. He may be satisfied to get his estimates voted blindly, without giving any information on the subject whatever, and then use the estimate as he pleases—as he did with $4,000 which was voted for the acquisition of a station site. I understand that the Minister of Railways does not want to give us the information but we are obliged to tell him that we are entitled to it and that we must insist on having it.

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. gentleman is not justified in saying that I want to withhold the information. The question had reference to the policy of the government, and I said that the Prime Minister was the proper person to speak with regard to that. I do not feel that I would be at liberty to state what may be transpiring before council with respect to this or any other matter until it has reached a stage that it can be announced to parliament. The Prime Minister is the person to do that, or to delegate it especially to some of his colleagues. That is my position in the matter.

Mr. LANCASTER. Did it occur to the Minister of Railways that the Prime Minister should tell him not to try to get these estimates through until he was ready to give us information.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The only connection that question would have with the item under discussion is that should the government acquire this branch railway, it would involve further expenditure.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is not the only one.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. If it should happen before the session closes that the government would ask parliament to acquire the Canada Eastern, the government would also have to ask parliament to vote money to maintain the Canada Eastern, and then would be the proper time to discuss the matter, and the committee would have ample opportunity for discussion. No one desires to be discourteous to the opposition, but it is unreasonable to take the attitude that no estimate will be voted until the committee is informed as to the policy of the government regarding the Canada Eastern.

Mr. LANCASTER. I did not say that.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. That seems to me to be the attitude taken.

Mr. LENNOX. That is not my attitude.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Is it reasonable for the opposition to dwell further upon the refusal of the Minister of Railways to anticipate the Prime Minister's announcement, should the government decide that an announcement may be made with regard to this matter ? If the opposition were curtailed in their rights in any way I would be the first to resent it ; but they are not in the slightest degree prejudiced by postponing the discussion on a matter which is not before the House, and which may never occur ; it may and it may not occur.

Mr. MONK. Suppose the House was not disposed to vote this money for the Intercolonial Railway unless the Canada Eastern were acquired, would we not be entitled to get an answer from the minister ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. If the opposition choose to say that they are not going to allow these estimates to pass until the policy of the government respecting the Canada Eastern is announced, we come to a deadlock, and it becomes a question of physical endurance. Is that a desirable state of affairs ? It is quite as competent for the government to enter into a battle of that kind as it is for the opposition. I have been many years here and I have taken part in such contests, but I must say that I fail to discover wherein the public interest was advanced by any such method. I am sure that all will agree that nothing is to be gained to-night by the opposition adhering to the view that no progress will be made.

Mr. LENNOX. No one has suggested that.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I gathered that from the language of my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster). Is it fair to create an impasse because the Minister of Railways will not make an announcement that he is not at liberty to make ? If any announcement is to be made it will be made by the head of the government, or by some person properly authorized. There is no person authorized to make such an announcement to-night ; yet hon. gentlemen opposite, in anticipation of something that may or may not happen, make that a cause for obstructing the passage of these estimates. I do not think that is reasonable.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Weeks ago it was announced in the government press that this railway is to be purchased and made a part of the Intercolonial Railway. The question was asked of the Minister of Railways an hour ago, who saw fit to treat it in a somewhat supercilious manner.

Mr. EMMERSON. Oh, no.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We have our own opinion about that.

Mr. EMMERSON. I did not intend to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then the hon. gentleman's manner is unfortunate The government could have done one of three things when the question was put ; they could say: No, it is not to be purchased ; or, yes, it is to be purchased ; or they could say that the matter is under consideration. Any of these three answers might be given without any detriment to any public interest, and any one of these answers would be absolutely satisfactory.

Mr. EMMERSON. If that is the question I can answer it at once.

Mr. LENNOX. That is practically the question.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The question before the committee is a vote for the Prince Edward Island Railway, and a question entirely foreign to that is being discussed. Information is asked of the minister with regard to another railway which is not now under discussion. That is out of order, and I would not allow the minister to answer the question if he proposed to do so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN—I move that the committee rise, and I ask whether or not there are any proposals under consideration, and whether or not the Canada Eastern Railway is to be purchased by the government ? I may say that I do not agree with the ruling of the chairman, but it is not worth while wasting time over that.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. When a motion is made that the committee rise the discussion must be confined to giving reasons why the committee should rise.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The question that is to be considered on a motion that the committee rise is that which is introduced by the person who makes the motion——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Not at all.

Mr. HAGGART. Surely you should let the hon. gentleman make his statement without rising up in the middle to interrupt him.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I want to put myself right. The hon. gentleman has taken exception to my ruling, and it is my business to sustain my ruling. A motion that the committee rise is equivalent to a motion for the adjournment of the House. If such a motion is made during the discussion of a question, then the discussion must be confined to the question. But if a motion of adjournment is made in the House between the Orders of the Day, you can introduce any question you wish to discuss. The discussion on this motion must be confined to the question before the committee.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to say to the Minister of Railways, after this luminous exposition by the Chairman that I do not regard it as sufficient for him to say that the Prime Minister is not here. We know that he must necessarily be absent sometimes during the sittings of the House, and we are ready to make every reasonable allowance ; but that is no reason why an item should be passed in his absence. The proper course would be to postpone the consideration of the item until the Prime Minister finds it convenient to be present. If questions arise as to which he only can speak during the discussion of an item, then he should appoint some one to speak for him in his absence, or the consideration of the item should be postponed until he has an oportunity to be present. However, I understood the Minister of Railways to say that there is no difficulty in answering the question.

Mr. EMMERSON. The question first put to me was a comprehensive question, on which I was to give all the transaction, all that has transpired. If the question is as put by my hon. friend, whether the purchase of the Canada Eastern is under the consideration of the government, I would at once say yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That was not just the way I put it. I said that a question had been put to which I thought there could be one of three proper answers which ought to be satisfactory to the opposition. Has the Canada Eastern been purchased or is it about to be purchased by the government ? I thought the government might very well say that it has been purchased, or that it is about to be purchased, or that it is not to be acquired, or that the matter is under consideration. Either of these answers would be fair.

Mr. EMMERSON. The matter is under consideration.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is to say it has not been decided.

Mr. LENNOX. As the minister says, the question. was somewhat comprehensive The first question I asked was : Has the railway been purchased ? I also asked : Is the government about to purchase it ? If so, we would like to have the particulars. The minister could have answered the question by saying that they had not purchased it, but that the matter was under consideration. I understand the minister to say that they are about to purchase it and that the matter is under consideration.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is that the answer of the hon. minister ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Does it not follow that when the minister says the matter is under consideration, it may be that negotiations with the idea of purchase have been undertaken ; but you could not say that the matter had been completed, that a bargain had been agreed to, unless the details had been agreed upon. When you say it is under consideration, that is I think as liberal a statement as an opposition might reasonably expect.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think we all understand the situation. The hon. Postmaster General is hedging a little for the benefit of the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. J. D. REID. The answer, I understand, is that the railway has actually been purchased, but the Minister of Railways and Canals does not choose to make that declaration.

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose that on your ruling, if the Minister of Railways had stated that the railway had been purchased, the question could not be considered at all under the item ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. No, he would not be at all in order in answering. It has nothing to do with the question under discussion.

Mr. HAGGART. I wish to ask a few questions of the minister. According to his statement for the ten months ending the 30th of June last, there has been a deficit of about $65,000 in receipts as compared with the expenditure and working expenses. Is there any anticipation that that deficit will cease ? The expenditure on capital account for the same period he states to be $346,000 ; yet the hon. minister retains $650,000 to his credit. Does he expect to use up during the unexpired two months the difference between those two amounts ?

Mr. EMMERSON. About $300,000 of that would be expended during the two months.

Mr. HAGGART. About $300,000 more than the $343,000. That would be $643,000 on capital account ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That would mean for the whole twelve months.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the amount contemplated to be expended on capital account, after the vote of this year, on the Prince Edward Island Railway ?

Mr. EMMERSON. On the Murray Harbour branch ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, and the other improvements. Does the vote of this year cover the whole expenditure contemplated on that branch ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, I gave the explanation and the information will be found in 'Hansard.' I move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. BARKER. I understand that the hon. minister will have in the supplementary estimates an item for the completion of work on the double track between Windsor Junction and Halifax. Last year the Minister of Finance, as acting Minister of Railways, took an appropriation of $118,000, telling us at the time that that would not complete the work, and I understand that the minister will have to ask a further amount in the supplementaries. I presume that is so.

Mr. EMMERSON. It will be necessary to have a further vote.

Mr. BARKER. My object in asking that question now is this. When that item comes up on the supplementary estimates, I desire that the minister shall be ready to furnish us with all particulars about the work—the plans, profiles, specifications and contracts entered into, if any, and the tenders and everything concerning the work, so that we may be able to discuss it without asking further adjournment.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 11.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, July 8, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

THE ALASKAN BOUNDARY—CORRESPONDENCE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I beg to lay on the table correspondence respecting the Alaskan boundary.

PAPERS RE COLONEL GREGORY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The papers relating to the extension of Colonel Gregory's term of command have not, I think, been brought down. The Minister of Militia stated that they would be here shortly.

SUPPLY—THE 12th OF JULY.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, before that matter is taken up, I take the liberty of drawing the Prime Minister's attention to the fact that next Tuesday will be the 12th of July, which is a day honoured by a great many people of the Dominion of Canada, and a day on which a great many members of the House would like to get away to different parts of the country. I would, therefore, ask the Prime Minister if he would be good enough to take it into his consideration, and let the House have a holiday on the 12th of July ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no doubt that my hon. friend feels divided between his duties outside and his duties inside ; but there is no precedent in that respect that I know of.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The right hon. leader of the government can easily create a precedent. That is no trouble to him.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Intercolonial Railway, to strengthen bridges, $385,000.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). I was asked to give a statement as to the bridges that were to be strengthened after the appropriation of $385,000 is exhausted. This is exclusive of the Oxford and New Glasgow and Cape Breton railways. The bridges and estimates are : East River, $75,000 ; Shubenacadie, $24,000 ; Stewiacke, $16,000 ; Elmsdale, $25,000 ; Enfield, $14,500 ; Hall's Creek, $3,000 ; Hammond River, $32,000; Bic, $14,500; Isle Verte, $25,000; St. Henri, $46,000; Harris' mill stream, $4,000. There are also a number of small bridges on which it is estimated that we shall require plate girders to the amount of $11,500, and rolled beams to the amount of $18,000. The whole, after making an allowance for estimated credits, will amount to $280,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There was a great deal more information promised by the hon. gentleman on some of these items.

Mr. EMMERSON. Not on this item.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Some of the information required is set forth on page 6123 and following pages of the unrevised 'Hansard.'

Mr. EMMERSON. I propose to give that information in connection with each item.

To exchange drawbars of freight cars on Intercolonial Railway, $45,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. I was asked to furnish some information respecting the protection to Grand Narrows Bridge. I find that I was a little in error in giving the prices of timber. For two inch creosote sheathing the lowest tender, that of Wyckoff Creosote Co. of Stamford, Conn., at $45 per thousand feet board measure, was accepted. For ballast poles, A. Mackenzie, of River John, was the successful tenderer at one and three-quarter cents per lineal foot. Hemlock logs, ten inches, was given to D. McLean, Orangedale, at six cents per lineal foot for a portion and another portion was let to R. McGregor & Sons, of New Glasgow, at seven and a half cents. Hemlock logs, twelve inches, was given to R. McGregor & Sons of New Glasgow at nine and three-quarter cents per lineal foot. Square timber was given the same firm at $10.50 per thousand feet board measure. I was asked by my hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) for the name of the party who got the contract for car couplers. It was given to Geo. McAvity, of St. John, and the Monarch Coupler Co., of Detroit. The price to McAvity is $17.50 delivered in Montreal, and to the Monarch Coupler Co. $17 delivered in Detroit. What page of 'Hansard' did my hon. friend refer to a few moments ago ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. 6121 and the following. On 6121 there is a reference to a bridge. The hon. member for Hamilton said he wanted some information, and perhaps that is what the hon. minister has just given. The minister said then :

I will give a list of forty bridges for which the Dominion Bridge Company has a contract. I can give the names of the bridges but not the exact amount required for each bridge. I could probably furnish that later.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have given that just now. On page 6124 I find that the hon. member for Hamilton asked me how many new freight cars have been furnished with the brake equipment, and also how many cars out of service have been rebuilt and equipped. In reply I would say that 207 new freight cars were purchased, equipped with Master Car Builders drawbars, and 388 have been rebuilt and equipped.

Mr. BARKER. In both cases have they been equipped with the drawbar and the air brakes ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There were 207 new freight cars purchased with air brake equipment, and 388 cars have been rebuilt and equipped with air brakes.

Mr. BARKER. I understand the minister to say that both the cars which have been purchased new and those that have been built in the shops have been equipped with the air brakes and the special draw bars.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, that is my information.

To strengthen bridges, Intercolonial Railway, $385,000.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman did not give us the other day the amount he was appropriating for each bridge. He mentioned the names of the bridges he proposed to strengthen, but did not say what amount he would spend on each.

Mr. EMMERSON. I gave the names of the bridges : Chisholm's Bridge, $629.64 ; Riversdale, $3,169.42 ; Bible Hill, $723.49 ; McManus, Mill, $1,505.84 ; North River, $1,416.52 ; South Cocaigne, $723.81 ; Buctouche, River, $685.34; South Coal Branch, $3,084.54; Red Pine, $465.82; Little Elm Tree, $1,201.26; Fournier's, $616.31 ; Martin's Mill Race, $706.78 ; Charles River, South crossing, $2,971.42 ; Charles River, North crossing, $4,427.34 ; Gordon, $1,229.01; St. Alexis, $722.69; Tobogote, $690.99 ; West Tobogote, $488.11 ; Cedar Hall, $713.76 ; St. Moise, $461.74 ; St. Moise Tank, $1,068.71 ; Ste. Flavie, No. 1, $474.67; Ste. Flavie, No. 2, $469.96 ; St. Luce No. 1, $588.66 ; St. Luce, No. 2, $459.26 ; St. Luce, No. 3, $672.13; St. Anaclet, $440.01; Bic, $467.14 ; St. Fabien, No. 1, $369.01 ; St. Fabien, No. 2, $376.89 ; Trois Pistoles, $234.15 ; Isle Verte, $356.14 ; Halifax street crossing, $8,725.96 ; Beaver River, $905.73 ; Canal Bridge, $804.29 ; McDermid's, $272.14 ; Hildon Station, $375.29 ; Lydia Brook, $429.27 ; Torryburn, $1,589.35 ; Brookville, $2,800.12.

Mr. BARKER. I wish to state to the minister my reason for asking for these details. For two or three sessions I have complained of the manner in which the railway estimates are brought down. We find large items such as this $385,000 in a bulk appropriation covering a large number of works. There is no other department of the public service that treats the House in this way. If the minister will turn to pages 50 and 51 of the estimates he will find the appropriations of the Public Works Department. In these there are ten items of between $500 and $900 each. This form of estimate enables the Auditor General to carry on his work properly. But he cannot properly audit such an item as this of $350,000 covering thirty or forty works. The Auditor General has before him only an appropriation of $385,000 for strengthening bridges, and, so long as the department keep within the amount, they may expend the whole sum on only half the bridges and leave the other half to come up again next year, when another similar appropriation may be asked for. I am quite sure the officers of the railway understand that that is not the proper way to bring in appropriations. It is not the way the bridge department of a railway submit estimates to the general manager. In fact, as we have seen, the general manager of this railway submits to the minister, very properly, the details showing exactly, even down to a single cent, as the hon. gentleman has read, just what he proposes to do on each particular work. The very information the minister needed to enable him to deal with this subject is needed by the Auditor General as the work goes on to check the purposes to which the money is applied. I am glad to have in 'Hansard' the list of items the minister has given. But such a list should be in the estimates. It would be much less expensive, for it would save the time of the House, and it would enable us to get the information more satisfactorily. We should be saved a great many questions which now must be asked. If the sum was divided into items as it should be, many of those items could be passed without any consideration to detail. I would suggest to the minister, therefore, that next year he should give the estimates in such detail that we may not be obliged to take the time of the House in making these inquiries.

Mr. EMMERSON. The course pursued this year is the same as that pursued for many years past—so I am informed by the general manager. But I will take a note of what my hon. friend (Mr. Barker) says of course, the change will mean very voluminous estimates where so many particulars are to be given. That, I think, would be the only objection. I think there is a great deal of force in what my hon. friend says.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman will see that last year we had votes of three and three quarter millions in a bare half page of the estimates. As I said before, there is not another department that gives so few items as the Department of Railways and Canals.

Mr. EMMERSON. It seems to have been the custom.

Mr. BARKER. But that, perhaps, is the very best reason why it should not be done. I have called attention to the matter more than once, and I am glad that the hon. gentleman now says that he will give attention to it next year. No attention has been paid to the matter hitherto.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) is not correct in saying that the same system is pursued this year as last year. For, last year the hon. member for Hamilton urged upon the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) who then had charge of the railway estimates, what he has urged to-day and the Minister of Finance absolutely refused to give us certain information which was then asked for and which has been given this year. In that respect the Minister of Railways is to be congratulated upon having adopted a part of a system that was advocated by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) last year. Last year the hon. member for Hamilton insisted that when a certain sum was asked to pay for sidings along the line, a bulk sum of $100,000 or so, the committee should be told the particular places where this expenditure was proposed, with the amounts in each case. The Minister of Finance absolutely refused to give the amount of expenditure in each case, but he did in the end give the names of the places where the expenditure was proposed. He said it was not proper to give the amount. This year on the other hand we have the Minister of Railways giving us not only the proposed expenditure for sidings and increased accommodation along the line, but he is giving us in each case, at the request of the committee, the amount proposed to be expended in each case. Now, I think the minister, having started out so well, ought to consider, in case this administration should have another opportunity of presenting the estimates next year, which we hardly think they will have—the minister should consider the advisability of placing upon the estimates each sum and the place where it is proposed to expend it, along with the necessary particulars. That would greatly expedite the work of the committee.

Mr. EMMERSON. I find that I did not give the information I should have given with respect to the other amounts, that together make this total $385,000. For instance, there is the conveyance or the transfer of these bridges, that is estimated to cost $8,000. To erect and double up certain bridges, $46,000. I can give the names of the bridges that it is proposed to double up. New Glasgow, Canal, Christie's brook, Beaver river, North Cocaigne, North Coal brook, Richibucto river, Nelson's, Dickie's, Benjamin river, Otterbrooke, Indian brook, One-half mile west of Sayabec, two miles west of Sayabec, one-half mile west of St. Anaclet, one-half mile west of Trois Pistoles, twenty-five or twenty-six bridges at these places.

Mr. BARKER. Can the hon. gentleman give the cost as he is reading off the names ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There is one and a-half mile west of Trois Pistoles, three bridges at Benjamin river, three at Richibuctou river, three at North Coal Branch, two at Beaver river, two at canal, three at Indian brook ; these require to be doubled up, that is, to have two spans. The doubling up is estimated to cost $46,000. Then at Sackville we require $66,000 to replace a bridge. That is in Westmoreland county, New Brunswick. Then there is the Sackville bridge, $66,000 ; Laplanche, $11,000 ; Sutherland river, $25,000 ; Salmon river, $19,400. Then Nicolet river, bridge No. 1, $110,000 ; and bridge No. 2, $85,000. The whole of these items will total more than the $385,000, but a portion was paid out of last year's appropriation, and $385,000 will be sufficient to complete the work.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman sees that under cover of this item he has sums of $85,000 and $110,000 for instance. He must see that it is not treating the committee properly to lump all these together. Surely the committee is entitled to discuss separately an appropriation of $100,000 for any work. Then I would ask the hon. gentleman what he means by the carriage of the material. Is that included in the charges for carriage upon the Intercolonial?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, these bridges are built at points beyond the Intercolonial, and this is for freight. The contracts are made for delivery of the work, and this is for the freight.

Mr. BARKER. Is it only for freight off the Intercolonial, or do you include any freight on the Intercolonial ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Freights delivered at the bridge on the Intercolonial, and a portion of the freight would therefore be payable to the Intercolonial itself.

Mr. BARKER. So he is doing business for the country on revenue account, and charging for hauling the material upon this railway.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is proper, it is capital expenditure.

Mr. BELL. I observe the New Glasgow bridge is mentioned as being doubled up. My impression is that that bridge was doubled in some way a few years ago. Is it proposed to repeat the operation, or what is meant by doubling up ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Doubling up is putting two girders together. The work that was done a few years ago was simply to strengthen it a little.

Mr. BELL. This does not mean putting two spans side by side, each of them to be used for going one way ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is doubling up and strengthening. Instead of having the strength of one girder you have the united strength of two girders.

Mr. BELL. Will there be new work, or are the spans taken from some other points?

Mr. EMMERSON. That means taking up some of these. This is new work.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister has given us a statement of the total amount to be spent on bridges. He has also stated that he could not give us the specific amount for each bridge. May I ask how he makes up the sum total ? Are we to understand that the engineer in charge of that work gives a general estimate of the total amount to be expended on the different bridges, or does he not give the department a specific amount or an estimate of the amounts required on each bridge ? If he does not, how is it possible to make up the sum total without just simply guessing at it ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have given to the committee the information in respect to the individual bridges, but there is an item of $46,000 for doubling up certain small bridges. I have given the names——

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman misunderstands my question.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have given the names of these twenty-five bridges that it is proposed to double up and I have stated that we have not the specific items in respect to each one of the number. But, the engineers have made an estimate as to the total cost of them and their estimate is $46,000. That is included in the $385,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the engineers estimate not be for each separate bridge rather than for the total amount ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The amount is not given for each separate bridge.

Mr. BLAIN. It makes it rather difficult for the committee to understand where this amount is to be expended and it gives a great deal of liberty to the minister in the expenditure of it. Would it not be better, when the engineer inspects a bridge and finds that a certain improvement has to be made upon it, that he should report to the department that it will cost a certain specific amount? It would be better that he should report the amount required for each specific bridge and then we could tell if the money was expended for the purpose for which it had been voted.

Mr. EMMERSON. The twenty-five bridges which I have named are to be doubled up and that $46,000 can only be applied to these twenty-five.

Mr. BLAIN. Could it not be expended on five instead of twenty-five?

Mr. EMMERSON. No. This is for paying for the whole work. We say that we are going to do that work. We must necessarily do it, and we say that $46,000 is all that we require for that purpose.

Mr. BLAIN. How are we to hold down the minister to the expenditure which he tells us he is going to make ? He says that it will take $46,000 to do the work. Now the hon. minister could expend that $46,000 on half the number of bridges proposed to be strengthened and he could still be within the vote. My hon. friend shakes his head; I cannot understand it in any other way. If the hon. gentleman will say that he is asking for $3,000 to be expended on a specific bridge when he brings in his report showing how the money has been expended we can tell whether the money has been expended for the purpose for which it was voted.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not see it in that light. If the engineer reported to me that twenty-five bridges which he named required to be doubled up and that it was going to cost $46,000, and if he was only able with the $46,000 to dispose of half of them, it would strike me very forcibly that he should be condemned and I think he would place the minister and the department in a very false position. We state that we propose to apply that $46,000 to the doubling up of all these bridges. If we were to come back next year and say that we used the $46,000 and that only half a dozen or fifteen of that number were dealt with and there still remained ten more it would be a matter which might be very severely criticised.

Mr. BARKER. I think it would too.

Mr. LANCASTER. In one case the opposition and the country would have to content themselves with criticism and in the other case they would have the prevention. Prevention is a good deal better than criticism with this government. In the one case they would not be able to spend the money improperly, because the Auditor General would say, you cannot do this because you announced when you submitted your estimate to parliament that you were going to expend so much on each bridge, and that is the statute. The government might, in the other cases, if they chose strengthen one or two of the bridges, say that they were not going to do any of the rest and still be within the item. Then, the hon. minister says that we may criticise them. What good would that do the people of this country after the money had been spent in an improper way? Suppose the hon. minister gets the item through upon the understanding that he is going to make this expenditure on twenty bridges and he only spends the money on two bridges and does not spend anything on the eighteen remaining ones, and suppose the Auditor General under the item has not the power of preventing the expenditure, you will have to be satisfied with simply finding fault. The country has had some experience in that regard with this government. The people are rather tired of finding fault with the government for not doing what they say they will do. It is better to have the purpose of the vote stated in the statute so that the Auditor General will be able to say, if the money is diverted to any other purpose, that this is not a proper expenditure and that the money must be expended under the terms of the vote. The hon. minister says that this amount is required for the strengthening of so many bridges. Let us take the hon. minister at his word and at the same time put it in the statute. In my opininon, the criticisim of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) is quite right.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals is asking to do something that no minister has previously asked. Last year we had the same nature of discussion up and the item under discussion which evoked a reference to this matter was an item of $63.500 for additional sidings along the line of the Intercolonial Railway. What the hon. minister (Mr. Fielding) then claimed was that it was right enough to have these bulk items where no large expenditure was proposed in reference to any one item. He said that if the total expenditure on any one item was a matter of $2,000 or $3,000 or $4,000 each, the government need not bring each specific item and need not tie themselves to the same extent as if it were a large expenditure, the declaration that the hon. minister made being to the effect that if he proposed a number of these expenditures it gave the same safeguard which would ordinarily attach to a specific item, with a specific sum of money attached to it. It is impossible for the committee or this House afterwards to trace the expenditures of the administration if this system is pursued. Here we have exceedingly large amounts proposed to be spent upon a group of bridges with no particular amount attached to any one of them. The hon. minister of Finance pointed out at that time that the expenditure on sidings as contemplated under the item was $63,500 in all, being made up of small sums of money and that it would be unreasonable to tie the government down to a specific expenditure in reference to each of them. He said:

> The engineer's estimates for sidings vary from $2,000 up to $3,000, $4,000 or $5,000; there is one estimate of $10,000 for a siding at Campbellton; but with that exception all the sums are comparatively small, none of them more than about $6,000.

Then he gives a list of the places at which these expenditures are to be made and he says further in illustration of what he means:

> The vote for the double track which my hon. friend refers to can only be applied to that purpose. I can give the names of the places where we contemplate building sidings; but I do not think it would be wise to confine us to a particular amount for a particular siding. Suppose, for instance, that one siding is estimated to cost $2,000 and another $3,000, and suppose it is found that they cost about $2,500 each; I do not think it would be wrong to apply the $5,000 for the two sidings in that way.

And so it is that last year the Minister of Finance, having claimed the right to simply give us the names of the different places at which the expenditure was to be made, aggregating in all $63,500, a sum of comparative insignificance as compared with the $385,000 proposed to be expended in this way this year, pointed out that the only latitude he required was in the case of small expenditures running from $2,000 to $6,000, but now the minister insists on having this large discretion and says that we can criticise the expenditure next year. I submit that is not a fair method of dealing with the matter.

Mr. BARKER. Do I understand that this $385,000 will complete the works for which it is voted or is this expenditure on account of new works?

Mr. EMMERSON. That will complete the work. That is the estimated cost.

Mr. BARKER. Are any of these bridge items renewals, replacing worn-out bridges by new bridges simply ?

Mr. EMMERSON. None whatever.

Mr. BARKER. Are you proposing to replace any old bridges with new ones at the expense of capital this year ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, that is not proposed.

Mr. BARKER. You are not replacing one bridge at the cost of revenue ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, there are none in contemplation now.

Mr. BARKER. Did you last year ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The engineer says not.

Mr. BARKER. Not one last year, not one in the current year. Everything is done at the expense of capital.

Mr. EMMERSON. Does my hon. friend ask whether some of those charged against capital account have been renewed ?

Mr. BARKER. You are charging now $385,000 to capital. I asked you what you are doing as to the bridges that have become worn out in the ordinary course of their lives and have to be replaced without regard to strengthening. Are you renewing any one bridge or did you renew one last year ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Wherever that is done, it is done out of revenue not out of capital expenditure.

Mr. BARKER. Were there any ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The engineer says he cannot recall that there were.

Mr. BARKER. Supposing the minister did not increase the strength of one of these bridges, but had to renew the bridge. What branch would bear the cost, revenue or capital ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am not prepared to answer that question. I think that the repairs to bridges, where a bridge is worn out, would probably be a revenue item.

Mr. BARKER. Are not these new bridges replacing old or partly worn out bridges ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, these bridges would all be suitable for the traffic of the Intercolonial Railway had we not increased the size of the engines.

Mr. BARKER. Does the hon. minister mean to assert that all his bridges are brand new bridges, and that he is not making money for revenue by charging the whole of this to capital ? Are not some of these bridges, if not wholly, at least partly worn out ? Why should revenue get the benefit of a new bridge erected at the cost of capital ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I presume they are all somewhat worn, but I do not think any of them are worn out.

Mr. BARKER. Has the hon. gentleman charged anything to revenue, in these cases against the liabilities which it ought to bear ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. BARKER. Does the hon. gentleman not think he ought to do so. How can he show a truthful statement of his net revenue if he does not charge maintenance with its fair share of the cost of replacing every bridge whether it is only in the fifth year of its life or in its fiftieth year.

Mr. EMMERSON. I question the position taken by my hon. friend.

Mr. BARKER. I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman's explanation.

Mr. EMMERSON. I certainly would not be willing to go to the extent my hon. friend does.

Mr. BARKER. I can only tell my hon. friend it is always done. Any corporate company would take care that the maintenance account was charged with a fair proportion of the cost of replacing a bridge so that capital would not be unnecessarily burdened. The hon. gentleman is never going to charge anything to maintenance as long as he can get the country to provide sufficient capital for him.

Mr. COCHRANE. I have often wondered how we can get a clear and distinct idea of how much this railway is making which we cannot do now owing to the way in which the books are kept. Of course you can have a surplus, or a deficit, according to the way you keep the books. It appears to me that if a railway company like the Grand Trunk or the Canadian Pacific Railway, that was making their road pay and that did not have the people of Canada at its back were doing work of this kind, it would not charge all this to capital account.

Mr. EMMERSON. We might of course do as the Canadian Pacific Railway do, issue debenture bonds, come to parliament and get power to do that.

Mr. COCHRANE. Do they do that ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, they came last year.

Mr. COCHRANE. It is no use of the hon. minister saying they do certain things unless they do them. I quite understand that the Grand Trunk when they want to double track their line would issue bonds, but if I understand rightly, on the Intercolonial they build bridges out of capital over the same rivers or ravines that bridges are now built over. It appears to me that when revenue account has benefited by the use of these bridges in the past, it should bear the cost of their renewal.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister said the large expenditure was on the extension of sidings and the strengthening of bridges in order to accommodate heavier and longer trains. How much has been expended up to date and how much more is estimated to be required to put the road into the requisite condition ?

Mr. EMMERSON. We have asked for votes to carry out all that is contemplated at present. Whether there shall arise in the future conditions which will necessitate future expenditures we at present do not know. The sidings for which we are providing it is thought will be sufficient for some time to come. It may be that there will be such a growth of business in connection with the construction of the new transcontinental line as to warrant the Intercolonial being placed in a very much better condition even than it is. We expect to get a large traffic over the Intercolonial in connection with the construction of that line.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister must have had an estimate of the amount required for the purpose of improving the gradients, strengthening the bridges and lengthening the sidings, in order to accomplish the object in view.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have given that in respect to the bridges.

Mr. HAGGART. Then, I understand that all that is required to accomplish that is being voted this year ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, exclusive of the Oxford and New Glasgow and Cape Breton railways. I stated that after the appropriation of $385,000 was exhausted, the amount necessary to strengthen the bridges was estimated at $280,000.

Mr. HAGGART. I know, notwithstanding the statement made by the Minister of Finance last year that the amount voted then would virtually finish the work. But what I want to get at is this. The minister must have had an estimate from the department as to the total amount required for repairs, easing of gradients, extensions of sidings, strengthening of bridges, and all other work necessary to the object in view. What is the total amount, exclusive of the New Glasgow and Cape Breton roads ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I understand that we shall not require under present conditions to strengthen the bridges on the Oxford and New Glasgow and Cape Breton sections. We have not gone into that, and have no estimate of the cost, because at present the larger engines are not required there. There has been no estimate made as to the improvement of the curves and gradients of the road, but I have given the information with respect to the bridges, and all other information, I am sure, that would enable my hon. friend to form his own judgment.

Mr. HAGGART. Then I am to understand that for the gradients and curvatures and strengthening of the bridges, except on the New Glasgow and Cape Breton sections —concerning which he has no estimate at present as he is not using heavy engines on those sections and there is no necessity for an estimate—we have the whole amount required to be voted this year on capital account, which he requires for strengthening the bridges. That of course does not include the $280,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not want to be misunderstood. There has been no total estimate of the amount required, but there are two or three items under consideration now and the finality will be reached with respect to them very shortly. These items have to do with lengthening some curves that may be necessary on the main line of the Intercolonial, especially on the Drummond County portion.

Mr. HAGGART. Would the minister tell us where they are ? Surely he can get from his engineers an estimate of the probable cost. I do not want a close estimate.

Mr. EMMERSON. Until the department has determined what shall be done, I could not very well bring it now to the notice of the committee. At St. Cyril and Carmel and St. Leonard Junction, there are three very unfortunate curves.

Mr. HAGGART. On what road is that ?

Mr. EMMERSON. On the Drummond end of the Intercolonial.

Mr. HAGGART. Why, we were told that was a perfect road when we purchased it.

Mr. GOURLEY. Is the bridge at Folleigh river to be strengthened, and to what extent ? The people believe it to be dangerous.

Mr. EMMERSON. It was doubled up about two years ago.

Mr. GOURLEY. What do you mean by doubling up ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Putting in double girders. That would be two girders on each side.

Mr. LOGAN. Last evening while I happened to be in room 16 for a few moments, I find that in my absence the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) made reference to a certain member as having had an agent removed from office because he had refused to interfere with the progress of the trains. On being asked to give the name, he declined to do so on the ground that he had no desire to do the gentleman in question, who was a good respectable member of this House, an injury, and he went on to say :

I will tell the minister the name privately, and if I do him any injury by this statement, I am man enough to stand up in the House and say it is not true.

I beg to thank the hon. gentleman for those words. I took the first opportunity of asking him to whom he referred, and on ascertaining that he referred to myself, I gave the rumour then, as I do now, my most unqualified denial. There has been no agent in the county of Cumberland removed or interfered with by me because he refused to interfere with the progress of the trains, and I cannot understand how the rumour could have arisen. There have been only two agents in that county removed, and they were removed for cause, after a most thorough investigation, and that was away back in 1896. Since then I cannot remember of any agent being removed. I am certain that none has been at my request or because he refused to interfere with the progress of the trains.

Mr. BLAIN. What are the names of those who were removed ?

Mr. LOGAN. Jos. McKeown, of Oxford Junction, and Jos. Clarke, of Pugwash.

Mr. SPROULE. The member for East Grey never referred to any such rumour at all.

Mr. LOGAN. I meant to say the member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram). This is only another case of how a man may use one word for another and say 'foreigner' instead of 'stranger.'

Mr. INGRAM. I am glad the hon. gentleman has made this statement for he it is to whom the rumour referred. I said last night that I would be very glad if he denied it, and as he has done so I am glad to hear his denial. I have nothing to withdraw because I simply stated a rumour, and now that that rumour has been contradicted, I am very much pleased to learn that the charge was not true.

Mr. LOGAN. It is absolutely untrue and I beg to thank the hon. gentleman for withdrawing the statement.

Mr. BLAIN. How much will it take to complete the strengthening of the bridges which it is contemplated to strengthen or double up ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have repeated that about ten times, but do not object to repeating it again. $188,000 is the estimate for this year. I have given the names of the bridges and the amounts required for each. This is of course exclusive of the Cape Breton line and the New Oxford and New Glasgow short line.

Mr. BLAIN. There is just the difficulty. When this question of strengthening bridges was up a year ago, the item was $165,000, as will be seen on reference to page 8269 of 'Hansard.' The hon. member for South Lanark asked for the details and the hon. Minister of Finance replied :

I understand the hon. gentleman wished to have a statement in detail as to the bridges to be strengthened. Of this sum $77,000 is a revote standing over from last year.

Then Mr. Haggart asked :

What is the total amount expended up to date and the probable amount required to finish this work of strengthening ?

Now, there is a perfectly honest question asked by my hon. friend from Lanark and to that question the Finance Minister replies :

My deputy informs me that he thinks this will finish the work of strengthening these bridges.

There was a straight statement from the Minister of Finance, who was acting Minister of Railways. And now my hon. friend (Mr. Emmerson) comes forward and says a still larger amount will be required. And the committee are asking, year after year, when the hon. gentleman names a certain number of bridges to be improved, that he shall set opposite each name the amount he intends to spend, so that we may know where the money goes. I would be glad if the minister would make a definite statement of how much it will cost to complete the strengthening and doubling up of these bridges. I further wish to draw his attention to the fact that the Minister of Finance differs from him as to what doubling up bridges is. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) says it it is putting two girders together. But the Minister of Finance says :

Doubling up, of course, means the taking of two bridges and putting them together.

It is not for me to say which of these is the proper definition. However, I cannot understand how it is possible for the hon. minister to bring down a statement of the total amount required to strengthen a number of bridges unless the department has given him specifically the amount required for each bridge. I cannot understand how, without these details, the hon. gentleman can make up a sum total.

Mr. EMMERSON. It seems to me that my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) has this same complaint with regard to every item—that he cannot understand. Now, it seems to me this item was quite clear.

Mr. BLAIN. Well, if the minister will explain I will make a desperate effort to understand it.

Mr. EMMERSON. If I can find my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) actuated by a desire to understand I shall be well satisfied. There is a statement in 'Hansard' of last year, made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) as acting Minister of Railways, referring to certain bridges, concerning which he says that the deputy informs him that he thinks the amount then asked for will finish the work of strengthening these bridges;—not all the bridges on the Intercolonial but only those that then required strengthening. If it was supposed that the hon. gentleman referred to all the bridges, there must certainly have been some misunderstanding, as shown by the fact that $385,000 is asked for the same purpose this year.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) speaks in another place of this completing the work of strengthening.

Mr. EMMERSON. Not for the work in the future, and not for all the bridges on the Intercolonial, but only for a certain number. There was a list of bridges to be improved then, just as there is a list to be improved now. However, it is hardly worth while for us to have these post mortem examinations of what was understood in the committee last year. I have made a statement as to the bridges for which expenditures are required now, and the question is whether that statement is satisfactory.

Mr. LENNOX. Surely the hon. minister, in speaking of post mortem examinations, does not mean to suggest that we are not to look back and see what promises were made last year. The committee's investigation and the statements of the minister become merely idle if we are not to look back and see how the statements of last year have been lived up to. The hon. minister has taken a very wide departure——

Mr. EMMERSON. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) allow me to explain? What I said was that there must have been a misunderstanding if it was supposed that the minister last year in referring to an item of $87,000 said that this would complete all the bridges on the Intercolonial. He could not have had that in mind, because $385,000 is asked for this year.

Mr. HAGGART. If the hon. minister (Mr. Emmerson) will look further on in the debate he will see that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) spoke of all the bridges.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is, all the bridges in the list.

Mr. HAGGART. All that required repair.

Mr. BLAIN. May I have the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals while I read a part of the debate of last year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The list I have read only refers to the bridges which it is expected to deal with during the present season and the money has not been expended yet.

Mr. EMMERSON.

Mr. FOWLER. Is there any estimate as to the probable cost?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not in the case of each separate bridge. The estimate is general.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is a total amount required for strengthening these bridges of over $600,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. $451,000 up to the end of January.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. And $165,000.

If there is a misunderstanding—I am sure there is not on this side of the House—the responsibility rests either with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) or his predecessor. The hon. gentleman says he has been making this matter quite plain, but I regret to say it does not seem very plain to me. I would like it very much if he would make a statement of the amount spent in strengthening bridges, and also what it will cost to compete the work of strengthening the bridges on the Intercolonial.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have given that.

Mr. BLAIN. Then, what is the amount?

Mr. EMMERSON. There is $385,000 this year for the bridges I have named, and the amount required hereafter for strengthening the bridges I have named about $280,000.

Mr. BLAIN. We understand that this will double up or strengthen every bridge that it is necessary to double up or strengthen on the Intercolonial?

Mr. EMMERSON. This $280,000 together with the $385,000 voted this year. I have given the names of the bridges, and have stated that these are all that require to be strengthened according to the judgment of the engineers of the department.

Mr. BLAIN. For how long?

Mr. EMMERSON. That will mean that every bridge on the Intercolonial requiring to be strengthened will be strengthened. How long they will last, when strengthened, I cannot say. When this work is done, we shall have improved all the bridges except on the Cape Breton Railway and on the line between Oxford and New Glasgow.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman's statement, then is that $665,000 will meet this proposed expenditure. Will he state to us how he has arrived at that in view of the fact that he has made the statement that he has not set down the specific amount required for each bridge?

Mr. EMMERSON. I read off the expenditure for each bridge included in the $385,000, with the expenditure on 25 small bridges where the girders are to be doubled up, totalling $46,000. My hon. friend remembers my making that statement, and therefore, without giving the detailed items with respect to these 25 bridges the engineers give a total of $46,000, and these 25 bridges can be doubled up for that sum of money.

Mr. HAGGART. Would the minister give us the total estimate of his engineer for strengthening this work, from beginning to end.

Mr. EMMERSON. $1,759,000.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister should realize how necessary it is to have accurate information. A while ago I was particular to inquire from the Minister of Finance, not only in reference to this, but the total amount required for strengthening the bridges altogether, according to his engineer's estimate. Here is the statement he made to me in last year's 'Hansard,' at page 8279 :

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I would like to know the total amount expended for the strength ening of bridges and putting in new bridges on account of these new locomotives. Th total amounts expended on the Restigouche and the Miramichi bridges are two independent items. Add the two together, and the amount expended on the other, and I think it must be over $1,000,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have not the figures to the close of the fiscal year. Leaving out the bridges at Miramichi and at Restigouche, the amount is $461,680.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is what the hon. gentleman said before. Then there is the vote of $165,000 to be added to that, and the hon. gentleman says that will complete the repairs on those bridges.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I stated that this appropriation for the year will probably finish the work, but the general manager says it will take another year. There will be something further to be done.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You do not know what the amount is ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE I have not the estimates at hand.

Mr. INGRAM. For the total repairs of the bridges ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. For strengthening the bridges.

Mr. INGRAM. I have always understood that the department makes an estimate of the probable cost of strengthening bridges on the Intercolonial Railway. Will the hon. gentleman tell us what is the estimate cost of strengthening these bridges ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was an estimate made by the general manager, and the recollection of my deputy is that it was about a million and a quarter dollars.

He was only $500,000 astray.

Mr. INGRAM. Surely there must be some mistake. That includes the bridges at Restigouche and Miramichi.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The estimate is substantially correct—over a million dollars, including the large bridges as well as the process of doubling up. It would be subject to some deception if bridges were sold off the road, but that has not yet been done, most of them being used in doubling up.

So you see that last year we had this estimate as a million and a quarter, and to-day it amounts to $1,700,000. While I am on my feet—to what account are these bridges credited ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I notice that on page 8279 of 'Hansard' the Finance Minister in giving the total of about a million dollars excluded the Restigouche and the Miramichi bridges. Later on, exclusive of these bridges, the amount appears to have been stated at a million and a quarter dollars. Now either these bridges were excluded, or the minister meant to say a million and three quarters as a total estimate. One can well understand how an error of that kind would occur, because the estimate given by the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) shows that he had in his mind over a million dollars exclusive of the Restigouche and the Miramichi bridges. There is no objection taken to the statement of a million dollars by the Minister of Finance, that sum being exclusive of the Miramichi and Restigouche. Then if you add those, the total would be upwards of a million and three quarters. The error must have occurred in some way like that, because these figures I am sure would not have been deliberately stated erroneously, it would be folly for a minister to make such a statement. The facts are all there.

Mr. HAGGART. It does seem to be folly. But if the minister will look further on in the discussion he will find that the minister fully understood the facts. How was it then that the minister stated last year that the total expenditure would be only about $600,000 ? Three years ago it was $600,000, last year it was $1,250,000, and now it amounts to $1,750,000. That is the kind of information we get from the Department of the Minister of Railways. Something is wrong. The minister should have accurate information in reference to the cost of these improvements, and it is impossible, with such mistakes and blunders as have been made from year to year by the minister, to ascertain the cost of these works. The engineering department that would furnish information that certain repairs required for the purpose of bringing up the standard of this road in the form of strengthening the bridges would only cost $600,000, then comes to the minister next year and says that it will cost $1,250,000 and then this year informs the minister that $1,750,000 will be required, ought not to be kept a day in the employ of any institution, government or anything else.

Mr. EMMERSON. Evidently the reference to the $650,000 is to the Restigouche and Miramichi bridges. My hon. friend (Mr. Haggart), at page 8276 of 'Hansard,' gives the whole case away. He says :

The expenditure for the purpose of strengthening and renewing the bridges on the Intercolonial Railway within the last few years has been over $1,000,000, besides an expenditure for repairs on the different bridges of nearly $700,000.

Now, there is $1,700,000, and he must have got his information from my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. That $1,700,000 conforms to the statement made by the general manager last year, that the total expenditure is $1,750,000. Surely we are making a mountain out of a molehill in endeavouring to show there is some discrepancy in the statement. When this committee is considering these questions, and when interjections are being made by hon. members, the reporters cannot always get the exact figures, and no minister is able to go over the report and correct his proof. The figure as it appears must go on record as it is stated, or as it is understood to be stated, and it is very possible for hon. members to misunderstand. Somebody will say a million and three-quarters across the floor and it will be understood as a million and a quarter. These things will occur, but that there was no misunderstanding in this case is clearly proved by the fact that my hon. friend from South Lanark, at page 8276 of 'Hansard,' last year referred to $1,700,000 as being expended and required to be expended for repairs on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. minister not know the distinction between his statement and the statement I made? I was speaking of the $1,000,000 which was required for strengthening and renewing bridges.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is the same thing.

Mr. HAGGART. Besides that there was expended for repairs $700,000. That $700,000 does not come into consideration at all. They are two distinct and separate items. We were dealing with the question of the strengthening and renewal of bridges on the Intercolonial Railway. The question of repairs does not come into it at all.

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to draw the hon. minister's attention to the statement made by his predecessor (Mr. Blair). At page 3809 of 'Hansard,' 1902, appears the following:

Strengthening bridges, $175,000.

Mr. BARKER. Will the minister explain what this is for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The extreme pressure under which the bridge companies were working last year made it impossible for them to supply what we required within the fiscal year, and so $75,000 of this has to be revoted. We started out with the idea that by spending $100,000 a year, we would in five or six years sufficiently strengthen our bridges to bear the heavy locomotives.

What would the hon. minister think from that?

Mr. EMMERSON.

Mr. BARKER. Is this taking the place of old work?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. The bridges that were built on the Intercolonial Railway were nearly all built after one pattern, and if they were not called upon to carry heavier trains than prior to 1898, they would last for many years to come. We have been obliged to increase their carrying capacity, and what we do is to take one span out and add it to the existing span of another bridge, then replacing the one which we have removed by a new span.

Mr. MONK. Is the work progressing from Montreal to Halifax or from Halifax to Montreal?

Then passing on:

Mr. MONK. Is there an estimate of what the total cost of this work will be?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have only expended $225,000 out of the $600,000 which it was originally estimated we would require.

Mr. HAGGART. Exactly. That was what was stated.

Mr. BLAIN. That seems to be plain. That shows the lack of information afforded by the hon. gentleman and his predecessor to the committee from year to year. I think that if the hon. gentleman would state the number of bridges on the Intercolonial Railway, and if his engineer would bring in a report showing that so much money would be required to repair and strengthen each of these bridges and that the total sum would be a certain amount, the committee would readily understand it; but, as my hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) has pointed out, his estimate was $600,000 in plain Anglo-Saxon words. That was the total amount required to strengthen these bridges, and now it has been brought up to the enormous sum of $1,750,000. Surely the hon. gentleman sees that there is something misleading in that. It cannot be the fault of members of the opposition, because they are not in possession of the information required. It must be the fault of the department. I have no censure to pass upon any official of the department. I know nothing about it, but I cannot understand it, and I do not think any hon. member of this House can understand how it is possible for my hon. friend now to state the total amount required until he makes an estimate of how much is required for each bridge along the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. INGRAM. The total now is $1,759,000. That will include the $385,000 that the hon. gentleman is asking for now. Am I correct in that?

Mr. EMMERSON. And the $280,000 which is contemplated later on.

Mr. INGRAM. That includes the $280,000?

Mr. EMMERSON. That includes the $385,000 which is now being voted, and, as I understand it, the $280,000 which I gave as necessary for the year 1894-5.

Mr. INGRAM. So that we have it now that the total cost is actually to be $1,759,000, which includes the item which you or somebody else expect to ask for next year of $280,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. $1,759,000.

Mr. INGRAM. That is to be the total actual cost of strengthening the bridges on the Intercolonial Railway ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Exclusive of the Oxford and New Glasgow and Cape Breton railways.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. gentleman tell us what the bridges on these two railways will cost in addition to the figures he has already given ?

Mr. EMMERSON. In respect to these two railways I have stated that we have no estimate for them. The strengthening of the bridges on these lines does not seem to be necessary, and it has not been estimated. The larger classes of engine will not probably for a long time to come be used on those lines. We have not had an estimate made, because the bridges are quite strong enough for the present traffic and rolling stock.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Additional sidings along line, $118,000.

Mr. HAGGART. I wish this item to stand.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend will have an opportunity to discuss the whole matter later on.

Mr. HAGGART. I want an opportunity on Monday.

Mr. EMMERSON. On Monday, unfortunately, I shall be obliged to be absent.

Mr. HAGGART. All I want is an item left for the purpose of discussing the whole matter.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is an item of $70,000 lower down which will stand.

Mr. LENNOX. My hon. friend the minister might give us the particulars as to the expenditure of this $63,500 last year.

Mr. EMMERSON. The amounts expended up to May 31st were :

Iona siding	$2,402 52
Belledune	535 17
Clark's Brook	2,272 92
Cedar Hall	967 41
Chatham Junction	4,170 28
Between Beaver Brook and Bartibogue	4,667 51
Between Red Pine and Bartibogue	4,627 59
St. Moise	845 40
Jacquet River	59 40
Between Assametquaghan and Mill Stream	$5,700 08
Ste. Anne	1,086 57
Milford	778 31
Windsor Junction	661 42
Pomquette	67 10
Campbellton	533 91
Engineering, &c.	100 80
	$29,476 39

Mr. LENNOX. Did the minister mention Mill Stream ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. Then at Campbellton it is contemplated to spend $10,000 on that ?

Mr. EMMERSON. $533.91 of additional expenditure. The arrangement is to pay $8,000 for the Richard land, and $2,700 for the Duncan land. We will require a supplemental vote to complete the whole expenditure. Expropriation proceedings were commenced to acquire these lands, but instead of taking the matter to the Exchequer Court we put two valuators on the property and an arrangement was made with the parties by which we agreed to pay them so much.

Mr. LENNOX. Expenditure seems to have been made at all of the places where the minister said it was intended to expend additional money on sidings.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes. Of course this does not include them all, because this was only the expenditure up to May 31st ; some of the others may have been attended to in June.

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose the minister has no idea of the amount of the capital revenue and expenditure for June ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to have some information about the Cleveland patent cylinder which has been applied to some of the Intercolonial locomotives and which has been in operation there for some two or three years. I understand that this is a device to decrease the consumption of fuel. Perhaps at the same time the minister could tell us whether the Chapman ball-bearings are to be applied to any other cars.

Mr. EMMERSON. My impression is that they have not used the Chapman ball-bearings. I think there was some talk of it but the matter has not come under my observation since I have been in the department. Several engines have the Cleveland cylinder. There is quite a difference of opinion among experts as to the value of that cylinder. Some engineers are very strongly in favour of it and others are opposed to it. I know of two or three engines myself which have that appliance and from what I could gather they have been quite successful, but the Cleveland patent is not now being used on any additional engines.

Mr. GOURLEY. In making these sidings does the minister keep in view the double-tracking of the Intercolonial Railway from Moncton to Halifax? There is a strong and growing feeling in Nova Scotia, in favour of having the Intercolonial Railway double-tracked within a year from Moncton to Halifax. I have received a letter to-day from a lumberman complaining that he is being charged large demurrage at Halifax owing to the great press of business on the Intercolonial Railway. He does not blame the minister, but simply the fact that the business is greater than the railway, with its present equipment, can handle. It is felt in Nova Scotia that the Intercolonial Railway must be double tracked both for safety and to properly handle the business of the country. The lumbering industry in that province, has grown to enormous proportions, and will undoubtedly increase, owing to the fact that the forests in Nova Scotia reproduce themselves every ten or twelve years. I am instructed by the lumbermen of my county to ask two things, that the Intercolonial Railway shall be double-tracked and that far more sidings shall be constructed.

At Brookfield, which is growing into a large community, which is eight miles nearer to Halifax than Truro, people are kept for days loading their lumber, because the short sidings will not permit more than one firm to load at a time. The result is, that the whole profit of the winter's transactions is eaten up by the delays. These are crying evils in Nova Scotia which I am sure the good people of Ontario know nothing about. In Ontario they have been provided with railway facilities in every direction, and they deserve them; they have been bold enough to ask for them. We in Nova Scotia have been timidly standing on the brink, not daring to ask what we are entitled to, while our friends in Ontario have been bold in asking for and getting everything that is good in Canada. I want to say with regard to the lumbermen, that though they are divided in politics, they are all united in this, that they want longer sidings. I am bound to say that a great deal has been accomplished in the last two or three years in that direction, but a great deal more remains to be done. I want the manager of the Intercolonial to be impressed with the fact that the desire of the whole country is that the government should assist the business interests of the country by giving them increased railway facilities. I will support the government in double tracking the Intercolonial at once from Moncton to Halifax, and in providing miles of sidings instead of the short sidings which we have now.

Mr. EMMERSON.

Mr. EMMERSON. There seems to be a difference amongst the leaders on that side of the House.

Mr. GOURLEY. Not a bit of difference. We represent the progressive side of politics. There is no need of discussing that, because it was settled years ago.

Mr. EMMERSON. You will have to square that with the hon. member for South Lanark.

Mr. GOURLEY. I do not wish to have any party bickering on this matter. This is for the development of the country. While hon. gentlemen opposite have opposed all development in the past, they can make amends for their past by doing better in the future. I have it also in charge from the great lumber interests of Colchester county to ask the hon. minister to take steps at once to have the lumber cars equipped with some kind of stake. There is the Miller stake, which is well known in various parts of the country. It is an excellent patent, and can be applied to any car at a cost of about $2.50; and when the car is not used for lumber it can be used for any other purpose. At present the Intercolonial Railway hires to a lumberman a car at a high rate; but before he can use it, he has to spend $2 or $3 in staking it. One of two things should prevail—either a very low rate for lumber, or the cars should be equipped for the purpose for which the lumbermen hire them. Mr. Alfred Dickie, of the firm of Alfred Dickie & Co., is determined to have fair-play; there is also a lumbermen's association formed in Nova Scotia, and if you do not do something for them, the good Liberals will no longer vote for you. Mr. Dickie's firm is a most enterprising firm. He started twenty years ago with scarcely a dollar, and to-day is worth $1,000,000 or $1,500,000. His only drawback is that he is a Liberal; but I am bound to say that if you do not stake these cars for him, he will not be a Liberal much longer.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. How did the late government treat Alfred Dickie?

Mr. GOURLEY. I do not think the late government did right. I am told that they did not equip the Intercolonial Railway thoroughly because in front of them sat an opposition, that was reviling the Intercolonial, from morning till night, until the government supporters were absolutely frightened to do justice to the railway; and Sir Richard Cartwright was one of the chiefest sinners. To-day we have this difficulty, that numbers of gentlemen from the province of Ontario believe that we have plenty of railways in Nova Scotia, while we have none at all. We have just a skeleton system of railways. When I place the map of Nova Scotia beside that of Ontario, the members from Ontario feel ashamed to see that we have no railways in Nova Scotia. Sir Richard Cartwright and the Hon. Edward Blake went through the province of Ontario reviling the Conservative party and Sir Charles Tupper for building railways in Nova Scotia. I can admire the clear, incisive, strong language of the hon. member for South Oxford, even when he advocates errors. If he ever undertook to advocate the truth, he would be supreme and masterly. That hon. gentleman, assisted by the Hon. Edward Blake, a man infinitely inferior to himself intellectually but still a man of some parts, went through Ontario trying to convince the people that Sir Charles Tupper had built many railways in the province of Nova Scotia, whereas as a matter of fact, we have no railways, and to-day we want 2,000 miles of railway before we can be said to be properly civilized; because the railway, to-day, is the great civilizer of the world. Now, I ask the Minister of Railways if he is prepared to adopt the Miller stake or some other stake to help the lumber trade of Nova Scotia? The lumbermen have to split up a lot of their marketable deals in order to stake the trains at a cost of from $1.50 to $3 a car. It is a shame for the government, or for any other common carrier, to hold out that they supply cars for the carriage of lumber, when they are not fittted for the purpose, and the person who hires them has afterwards to equip them at his own expense. The lumber business is a great and splendid industry, which is going to be permanent in this country. Some people, a few years ago, thought that our forests would soon be destroyed; but we find that after the trees have been cut down to eight inches, the forest will recover in twelve years. The maritime provinces have been regarded as inferior in financial standing since our shipbuilding has gone to pieces; yet I can assure you that the great fishing industry, for which my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) has done so much, and the great lumber industry, are only beginning to develop in the maritime provinces that immense wealth which we hope in a few years will put us in such a position that we shall not ask for government favours, because we shall be able to provide everything we want at our own expense.

Mr. EMMERSON. That matter has already been looked into.

Mr. BELL. A day or two ago I asked about the proposed extension of the railway yards at New Glasgow. I understood the hon. minister to say—though perhaps not very definitely—that some provision was to be made for that in this year's estimates.

Mr. EMMERSON. That matter is having attention.

Mr. BELL. Will there be any provision made for it in the estimates this year?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am not in a position to make a definite promise.

Mr. BELL. The impression I got was that there was to be some provision in this year's estimates.

Mr. EMMERSON. Not in the regular estimates. I was going to suggest that we pass resolution 89 and leave 92 for consideration.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, I think that would be convenient, and on that item it is understood we can continue the discussion on the general subject of the Intercolonial.

Mr. EMMERSON. Very well.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. minister has said that the department have been looking into the question of the Miller stake. Perhaps he could tell us what prospect there is of that or some other stake being adopted.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am waiting a report from the mechanical department as to the value of that plan, and I cannot say more at present. We are anxious to have the cars equipped with modern equipment and appliances, but every change is not an advantage, and this may not prove to be one.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. member for Truro would not ask that it be adopted if it is of no advantage.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am sure he would not if he did not think it would be an advantage.

Mr. GOURLEY. I am not wedded to any particular stake, but the lumbermen are anxious that a stake of some kind should be provided.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. member for Colchester wanted some information as to the possibility of getting the Intercolonial double-tracked from Moncton to Halifax. I am afraid the hon. minister is trying to sidetrack that question.

Mr. EMMERSON. Parliament has made provision for double-tracking a portion of the road between Windsor Junction and Halifax and the work is under construction.

Mr. GOURLEY. Only thirteen miles.

Mr. EMMERSON. Everything must have the first thirteen miles.

Mr. GOURLEY. Are we to understand that the policy of the government is to extend that double track up to Moncton?

Mr. EMMERSON. I could not answer that question. I can only call attention to the fact that contracts have been entered into for double-tracking a portion of the Intercolonial. The future will have to develop itself.

National Transcontinental Railway, surveys and other expenses, $500,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is simply a revote.

Mr. CLARKE. We want elaborate particulars. We want to know what has been done, what the policy is, how many parties are to be sent out, and whether they are to be composed of aliens or British subjects ?

Mr. SPROULE. By the way these estimates are got up, it is impossible to tell when there is a revote or not.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have had occasion to complain of that already. That mistake has occurred in a number of instances. It is not the fault of the department, because it appears in the original here.

Mr. LENNOX. We have revotes marked down at three-quarters of a million, but as a matter of fact they are more than one and a half million.

Mr. SPROULE. With regard to the minister's contention that it is not the fault of the department——

Mr. EMMERSON. If it is any satisfaction to the hon. gentleman, I will take the blame.

Mr. SPROULE. The department ought to have some person to read the proofs after the items are printed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would be the duty of the Department of Finance.

Mr. WILSON. How could any other department check the items, unless it had the original documents ? It seems to me that it is the business of each department to see that its own estimates are properly printed. It is rather curious that any department should allow its estimates to go to the Printing Bureau and then see no more of them until they are presented to the House.

Mr. EMMERSON. If this item is going to take up time in its discussion, I would suggest that we pass on to some other item.

Mr. CLARKE. May I ask if the hon. minister will have the evidence taken by Judge Winchester up to the present time printed and distributed ? Some of it is most extraordinary in its character, and we are entitled before voting this $500,000, to get the fullest information as to the discoveries which Judge Winchester has made. We desire to know also what surveys have been completed and the facts concerning them ?

Mr. LENNOX. Last session the Minister of Finance told us that, with the money then voted, and as soon as the session was over, surveying parties would be put in the field and the work of those already in the field under instructions from the Grand Trunk Pacific, so far as it was valuable, would be taken over, they would be settled and we would have whatever information they had collected. We want to know not only what surveys have been made by these parties, but how the people have been settled with and what they have been paid, if anything. We would like to know also if surveying parties have been put in the field as promised last session by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. CLARKE. In the meantime, the item should stand.

Mr. EMMERSON. If the matter is to be gone into at length, it is better to let the item stand.

Mr. CLARKE. And, of course, the hon. gentleman will have the information we ask for before he brings the item up again. That is only reasonable.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before we leave this item, I would call the attention of the government to some evidence given by Mr. Charles M. Hays before Judge Winchester. The report is as follows :

> Mr. Charles M. Hays, second vice-president and general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway system, examined by Mr. Mowat, testified that on June 16, 1903, he wrote to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, informing him that the Grand Trunk Pacific had nine surveying parties in the field, and of nine locating engineers, four were Canadians, three Americans, one was a German and one an Englishman.

I do not know whether there is any mistake in the date—16th June, 1903. I have not observed that that letter has been brought down. Further he says :

> When witness, in reply to a communication from Hon. Mr. Fielding, Minister of Finance, wrote that of the thirteen engineers employed on the work, but three were Americans, the other being British subjects, he relied upon Mr. Stephens for the information.

Possibly that letter may have been brought down. I have sent for a copy of the correspondence, which I have not yet had an opportunity of examining very carefully. There is no date given, and one would have to look over the entire correspondence to see if this letter is included. But if these letters or any others relating to the matter have not been brought down, I think they should be brought down a once.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) give me the dates ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, and I will also give the reference to the report. The date given by Mr. Hays for the letter he wrote to the Prime Minister is 16th June, 1903. The date of the letter to Mr. Fielding is not given. The report from which I quote is that contained in the Montreal 'Gazette' of July 5th.

Mr. BOYD. There is another matter in connection with these surveys. I would like, as far as possible, to have what information the government may have in regard to the grades and curvatures on the surveys that have already been made. The House will remember that last session a gentleman very close to the government made the statement to the House that the surveys between Winnipeg and Lake Nipigon had shown that they were able to get grades and curvatures such as they stated would be essential for the road as they propose to build it—grades of some twenty feet to the mile and curvatures of some three or four degrees. I would be glad if the minister would prepare to tell us something in regard to that matter, because it is very important to the people of the district from which I come.

Railways and canals—chargeable to capital —canals—Cornwall canal, enlargement, $26,500.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is to continue certain work that was commenced in 1902. Of this amount $8,450 is a revote. The amounts to be expended are as follows:—Repairs and enlargement of regulating weir at old lock 17, $15,500——

Mr. HAGGART. Is that at the head of the canal ?

Mr. EMMERSON. At the lower end of the canal. Protection to north bank, $3,000; Sheik's Island dam, final estimate, $8,000, total, $26,500. The total expenditure on this work up to the 1st May, 1904, was $7,016,328.33.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is upon this item that we propose to have the discussion of the so-called Davis contract and the report of the Auditor General. I was informed by the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) privately on Wednesday last that he did not desire us to take up this matter in the absence of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick). If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) is prepared to go on, of course it does not make any difference to us.

Mr. EMMERSON. If this is the particular item on which the discussion is to take place and the discussion has been arranged for. It was understood on this side that the discussion would take place next Wednesday.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then, I suppose it would be better to let the item stand.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, if this is the item to which that matter relates.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is. But there is no objection to going into the item so far as other matters are concerned, so long as we have an understanding that the other discussion will not be closed out.

Mr. EMMERSON. I understand that the arrangement was made that the discussion of that subject will take place next Wednesday.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is as I understood it, but I wanted to let the hon. minister know that we were ready to go on if the arrangement is varied.

Mr. HAGGART. I understood the hon. minister (Mr. Emmerson) to say that on Wednesday next we would take up the Intercolonial.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is for Wednesday afternoon, but this other question will come up on Wednesday morning.

Mr. HAGGART. You cannot get through in a morning.

Mr. EMMERSON. We will try. Perhaps we can, if the hon. gentlemen do not make very long speeches.

Mr. HAGGART. There may be half a dozen who will want to make long speeches.

Mr. EMMERSON. Then we will have to adjourn the debate.

Mr. HAGGART. Perhaps you had better make no arrangement about the Intercolonial. If you are going to take the M. P. Davis matter up on Wednesday for lighting the Cornwall canal, that will likely take most of the day.

Mr. EMMERSON. I said Wednesday, because I expect to be away on Tuesday evening.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Justice is here, perhaps he could take up the Davis matter now.

Mr. EMMERSON. No. Some hon. gentlemen on the other side came to me yesterday and wanted a day fixed after Tuesday. The Minister of Justice says he is ready to go on, but some hon. gentlemen opposite who wanted to go away, asked that the matter be not taken up during their absence.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is all right.

Galops canal—enlargement, $204,300.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will the minister kindly explain the item ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This estimate is made up as follows : Under contract : the Iroquois section, $6,300 ; Cornwall section, $88,000 ; Upper entrance, $100,000 ; Iroquois section at Presqu'Ile, $10,000. The above amounts will complete the three sections. For construction purposes, the canal was divided into four sections.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is there any new work going on now or is this work merely to settle up the whole matter ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There is a little work going one, but this is the final estimate for that section.

Mr. J. D. REID. I understood last year that the work was all completed, and that only the final estimates remained to be made up. Since that time there has been no appearance of much work going on. What are they doing now ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There is very little work going on, and there is but little work to be done. This amount is to meet the final estimates. The engineers are preparing the final estimates, and this is to pay the contractors.

Mr. J. D. REID. How many employees are there now on the engineering staff ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Four or five.

Mr. J. D. REID. The work was done a year ago, and the minister says there is no work going on now.

Mr. EMMERSON. They are engaged in making up the final estimates.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like to know the number of men that are employed on the engineering staff. They have been doing nothing for the last year, but merely drawing their pay.

Mr. EMMERSON. If my hon. friend wants that information, I will send over to the department and get it.

Mr. J. D. REID. Exactly, and we will know who the men are, because, as I understand, they are there, and there is nothing whatever for them to do. Moreover, during the whole of the winter months these men are kept on the pay-list, while in years gone by, when winter came on and work closed on these contracts, all these men that were employed at that work were let go. But since the hon. gentleman has been carrying on this work these men have been kept on during the whole winter, not only during the whole winter but since the work has been completed. I would like to know how much longer they are going to be kept there.

Mr. EMMERSON. During the winter months, as I understand from the deputy, they were all off excepting the engineers, and subsequently two men were employed doing certain work with the engineers.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then they were off during the winter. I find in the Auditor General's Report, one man, Wm. Matthews, timber inspector, 12 months, $960.

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. gentleman is referring to 1903 is he not ?

Mr. J. D. REID. I know this man was on part of this last winter at all events.

Mr. EMMERSON. I said a part of the winter.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like to know the names of the men that are on now, and in the meantime we could let the item stand till we get that information.

Mr. EMMERSON. I will get the information, but I do not think that we should let the item stand.

Mr. J. D. REID. It has been understood that the work has been completed for over a year. You have the staff there permanently the whole year round. The inspector of masonry is now on the work drawing his salary notwithstanding the fact that the work has been done for two years.

Mr. EMMERSON. The amount expended on the Cardinal section since the 1st of July last year and up to the first of May of the present year is $19,060.

Mr. J. D. REID. If the hon. gentleman could give the names of the men who are employed, I would be able to judge what it is costing to keep these men there when there is no work going on.

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. gentleman states there is no work going on. The deputy tells me there has been work going on. The work has been continued. There is still some work to do and in so far as the engineers are concerned they are still at work in connection with the final estimate.

Mr. J. D. REID. There is no question about the engineers being employed as yet. There should be work for them to do in getting up the final estimate, but the masonry has been done for two years and I understand the inspector of masonry Mr. Connley, who is down in the Auditor General's Report for his pay for 12 months up to the 1st July last year is still on. After the work has been completed why is it this inspector is being kept on ? A few days after I brought this matter up last year they let these men go, but a meeting was held and it was decided to put them all on again after the House had risen. They were immediately put on and they are still on. I would like to know what they are doing ?

Mr. LENNOX. You are asking for $204,300. Does that complete the work ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, that completes the three sections.

Mr. LENNOX. These are not the same sections for which this $25,000 was voted last year ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, these are the same sections.

Mr. LENNOX. In 1903-4 we had in the estimates $253,000. That was for a specific section. In the same column this year we are asked for $204,300. I would assume that $204,300 is for the same work that we voted the $253,000 for last year ? Is that right ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The $204,300 is to cover three sections, the Iroquois, Cardinal and upper entrance and some new work on the Iroquois section consisting of cribwork at Presqu'Ile. That $253,000 voted last year was very largely for the upper entrance.

Mr. LENNOX. As far as I can make out the $253,000 voted last year was to complete the whole work. Now we are asked for $204,300 for the Galops canal enlargement. Last year the vote was :

Galops canal—enlargement, $125,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is to pay the final estimate of Messrs. Larkin & Sangster on their contract for the Iroquois section. The work is completed.

Mr. REID (Grenville). How much has been voted this session for this canal ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was in the main estimates for the Galops canal an item of $128,000.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Does that include the Iroquois canal ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. That item we have now is for the Iroquois canal.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There have been items voted for the Cardinal section. Does this finish the whole work ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, I am advised that the estimates of the current year are expected to cover the whole expense.

I am not very familiar with the matter but it appears to me that that covers the whole work we are discussing now.

Mr. J. D. REID. When I asked that question last year the minister then in charge informed the committee that the work was completed, that that was the final estimate and that the item of $128,000 was for the whole work on the Cardinal section. Notwithstanding that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals says that there is $88,000 in this estimate which is now before the committee for this same work.

Mr. EMMERSON. In settling up the final estimate it was found that this $88,000 is necessary to meet the cost of construction.

Mr. J. D. REID. But, the hon. minister will see the question of last year. I will read it again.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There have been items voted for the Cardinal section. Does this finish the whole work ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, I am advised that the estimates of the current year are expected to cover the whole expense.

So that you will see that that was the final estimate. That was the amount that was put into the estimates prepared by the department and which was intended to wind up the whole work. Now the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals brings down an estimate for $88,000 and makes the same statement that this is expected to complete the work. This is a part I cannot understand and one in regard to which I would like to have a little further information.

Mr. EMMERSON. It was estimated last year that the sum asked for would pay the whole cost, but the work exceeded the estimate and it has been determined by the final estimate that $88,000 more will be required.

Mr. J. D. REID. But the work was all completed then.

Mr. EMMERSON. It was not finally settled. It is of course carried out upon schedule rates. There was a difference as to the quantities and it turns out that $88,000 is still required to settle up what was finally determined as the amount.

Mr. J. D. REID. The estimates are made up monthly.

Mr. EMMERSON. The progress estimates are but the final settlement of the matter is not.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then the minister says that a mistake of $88,000 was made by the engineers in preparing the estimate last year.

Mr. EMMERSON. No, I did not state that. I stated that they found they still required the $88,000. At that time they were not in a position to definitely settle upon the amount and since that they have engaged in the work of making up these final estimates and have reached that view with respect to them.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister does not seem to realize the situation. Surely when there is a mistake of $88,000 there is at least the duty upon the minister and the department to inform parliament of the state of things at the earliest possible moment and too explicitly call the attention of parliament to the mistake. That is not the attitude the minister has taken and he would have allowed this item to go through without giving any information. We should have all the information that was before the department last year and all the information that was collected since then in reference to this matter in order that we may have an opportunity of criticising this carefully to see that there has been no unlawful leakage and no improper diversion of money. We have had it stated by a member who knows the situation that there does appear to have been a substantial leakage by the engagement of men who should not have been engaged and the retention of men whose services should not have been retained. He should allow this item to stand in order that he may bring a full statement in writing of the basis upon which the estimate was made last year, and the data collected since then showing how it is and where it is that this discrepancy of $88,000 has arisen.

Mr. EMMERSON. It would be very difficult to get the evidence of the gentleman who made the estimate. These estimates are furnished in this way. The resident engineer, the superintending engineer, sends in to the department his estimate. That gentleman was Mr. Rubidge.

Mr. J. D. REID. It was not Mr. Rubidge who made up the estimate ; it was the engineer in charge of the work at Cardinal.

Mr. EMMERSON. He was the superintending engineer of all these works and it was he who sent to the department as his own estimate the progress estimates of the contractors at the different points.

Mr. J. D. REID. These estimates have been prepared for some time; they have been before this House for some months. The minister knows well of course that the late Mr. Rubidge only died about two weeks ago and up to within a week before his death he was as active as he ever was. He therefore sent in his estimate and you have all the papers of Mr. Rubidge in connection with this.

Mr. EMMERSON. We have all his estimates; we have the estimate wherein it was shown that $128,000 or whatever was asked last year was sufficient to complete the work. We also have the further estimate from Mr. Rubidge which appears in these estimates stating that it would require $88,000 more. That was received before March last because at that time these estimates were made out.

Mr. J. D. REID. The work is practically done; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. EMMERSON. I can neither deny nor confirm that statement, but the deputy of the department tells me that the work is not done. The trimming up work of the canal is not yet done.

Mr. J. D. REID. The trimming up work?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is a very important feature.

Mr. J. D. REID. When does the minister expect the work will be finally completed?

Mr. EMMERSON. The deputy is hurrying up the officials in every possible way, urging them to have the work completed. The department is doing their very best in that direction and are anxious to have the final estimates as to the work.

Mr. J. D. REID. It was reported to me a few days ago that there had been another slide of the stone work with which the banks of the canal are faced. What is the position in relation to that?

Mr. EMMERSON. Nothing of that kind has been reported to the department.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have not been there for the last few days. Last year there were three large slides. I would ask the minister if this damage has been repaired and I would also ask if the government did it at their expensive or were the contractors compelled to do that at their own expense?

Mr. EMMERSON. The contractors did it; they are supposed to do it at their own expense.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is there anything in this $88,000 for that or will they be paid for that?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, the deputy says that is not included in this.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the minister tell us when he got the final estimate for this work?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not the final estimate.

Mr. HAGGART. I mean of the contractors work for the completion of this canal. Have they not the final estimates yet?

Mr. EMMERSON. Of the Iroquois section they have not.

Mr. J. D. REID. I understood that the final estimate was included in this $88,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. We have not the final estimate but the deputy says that this amount will certainly cover the item.

Mr. J. D. REID. The whole work.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is what the deputy assures me.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then you are giving me the same answer as I received last year which was:

> Yes, I am advised the estimates of the current year are expected to cover the whole expenditure.

And this is the same answer this year. What will the answer be next year? What is the total amount that has been expended on this up to date.

Mr. EMMERSON. The total expended on section 1, that is from Iroquois to Presqu'Isle, up to the 30th of June, 1902, was $1,277,770; from the 30th June, 1902 to the 30th of June, 1903, $12,418.20; total expended up to the 30th of June, 1903, $1,290,188.20; total expended up to the 1st of May, 1904, $1,366,856.40. Larkin & Sangster are the contractors. On section No. 2, from Presqu'Isle to Gates Point, known as the Cardinal section, on which William Davis & Sons had the contract, the total amount expended to May 1st was $4,108,920. On section 3, from Gates Point to Upper Entrance, known as the Upper Entrance section, on which the contractors are Murray & Cleveland, the total expenditure to the 1st of May was $1,866,998.15. Section 4, outside Upper Entrance, W. A. Allan, contractor, was completed some years ago. The total expenditure to the 1st of May, 1904, was $5,439,238.24.

Mr. HAGGART. Was the payment to Mr. Allan on account of the Galops canal?

Mr. EMMERSON. He had section 4 of the Galops canal.

Mr. J. D. REID. Has the minister done anything about arranging to have the bridge at Cardinal swung by some other means than hand power?

Mr. EMMERSON. That matter is receiving the attention of the department now.

Mr. J. D. REID. It was receiving it a year ago.

Mr. EMMERSON. I had the papers under consideration this morning, and some instructions were given with a view to having that work done at once, so that the bridge will be swung by electric power.

Mr. J. D. REID. If you put on electric power, will the same staff be kept on, or will the number be decreased ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think we shall probably not require more than one man in the day and one at night.

Mr. HAGGART. This work was finished a couple of years ago. How is it you have not a final estimate, but that you are keeping on a staff of engineers, who have nothing to do but prepare a final estimate ? It is a most extraordinary state of affairs.

Mr. EMMERSON. The real fact is that such details are required by the Auditor General with respect to the matter that it is impossible to get all these gathered. I presume the late superintending engineer was in the confidence of my hon. friend, and he would not say that he was purposely delaying the work. He was in his lifetime urged to have the work completed, and the department is very anxious indeed to have it completed ; but it has seemed to be impossible to get it done.

Mr. HAGGART. Then I am to understand from the hon. gentleman that the staff of the Galops canal is kept on for two years after the work is done for the purpose of furnishing details to the Auditor General ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. gentleman must not understand that, because that is not what I said.

Mr. HAGGART. Those were the exact words the hon. gentleman used.

Mr. EMMERSON. Excuse me, I did not. My hon. friend said the work was completed two years ago. I stated, on the authority of the deputy minister, that the work is not yet finally completed.

Mr. J. D. REID. The hon. minister knows that the contractors have left, they have taken their dredges and tugs away, sold their steam shovels, and taken all their plant.

Mr. EMMERSON. Perhaps the hon. gentleman is speaking from personal knowledge.

Mr. J. D. REID. I know that their plant is all gone. When the minister says the work is not yet completed, I cannot understand what these people are working at. For instance, why do you require an inspector of masonry, drawing $1,200 a year, when there is not a solitary mason working on the premises ? Surely there must be something wrong in this.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend must surely be labouring under some mistake. I understand he is speaking of the Iroquois section ?

Mr. J. D. REID. No, the Cardinal section.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is some work going on there, the engineer states. There are five men employed, namely, two chainmen, the engineer, the assistant engineer, and the masonry inspector ; but on the Iroquois section there are only the clerks, the engineer and the assistant clerk.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am speaking particularly of the Cardinal section. Will the hon. gentleman tell me why chainmen are required there when there is no engineer to do the work other than make up the final estimates ?

Mr. EMMERSON. But there is some work on the Cardinal section which the deputy says is going on. My hon. friend says it is not, and of course I could not act as arbitrator between the two.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is there any masonry going on ?

Mr. EMMERSON. My deputy says that work must be going on or the services of the men would not be required.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is there anything going on in the winter time ?

Mr. EMMERSON. We employ by the year. It is often cheaper to do that than employ a man only a few months. We want a man to commence as inspector and continue the work, and do not want to be changing every month.

Mr. J. D. REID. If there is any work going on.

Mr. EMMERSON. I shall go down there myself and make sure.

Mr. J. D. REID. I wish the hon. minister would. I am quite satisfied that there are two or three men there who have nothing to do but draw their pay. I would like to know the names of the men of whom the hon. minister has a list, who are employed on the Cardinal section.

Mr. EMMERSON. They are C. D. Sargent, F. B. Patterson, M. L. O'Connell, E. Cook and A. Cameron.

Mr. J. D. REID. The last two are the chainmen and the inspector of masonry, who certainly have nothing to do.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister said a while ago that the contracts were not finished. Will he be kind enough to inform me what amount he has paid to either of the contractors, W. Davis & Co. or Larkin, to the end of July, 1904.

Mr. EMMERSON. There was expended from the 30th of June 1903 to the 1st of May, 1904, $170,000, of which $19,000 was spent on the Cardinal section up to the 1st of May, 1904.

Mr. HAGGART. To whom was that paid ?

Mr. EMMERSON. To W. Davis & Son.

Mr. HAGGART. Was that for work done during the year ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to draw the minister's attention to what was said two years ago by the then Minister of Railways with respect to this work. When the item for the Galops canal enlargement $293,000, of which $55,000 was a revote, was up, the then Minister of Railways said :

> I do not propose to ask parliament for any money beyond this, part of which is needed to pay the drawbacks. There is an amount of drawbacks which we have to pay out of that $50,000. I do not propose to ask parliament for any more money.

Then he said :

> There is nothing in the estimate inserted with any intention of continuing the expenditure on this work. I have concluded not to go on with the work any further.

It must have been a surprise to the minister himself, in view of this statement, to find that large amounts have been expended since then, and the committee will expect that the hon. gentleman will now be able to say when the work will be completed and how much more money will have to be voted for its completion.

Mr. LENNOX. I think that the hon. minister hardly understood what I referred to a little while ago. I do not want this item to stand over if that possibly can be avoided, but I hope he will see the justice of placing before the committee later on the estimates upon which the amount of $250,000 last year was based and the supplementary estimates that have since come in. Although the minister says that there is some work still being done, neither he nor his deputy can tell the committee actually what is being done, and the conclusion is irresistible that whether there may be something in the nature of trimming still going on, the contractors are not any longer engaged on the work and that substantially the work was completed more than a year ago. I would call the minister's attention to the undesirability of having this kind of thing prevail. In one aspect of the case it occurs very frequently, and that is, whenever a delay occurs, from whatever cause, it seems to me, looking over the public accounts, the public treasury has to bear the interest for the time of the delay. And if it takes nearly two years to complete these final estimates, the result will be that the contractors will be paid not only the amount of the original estimates, but, probably interest as well. That is not fair to the country. I ask the minister particularly to say that he will, at all events, place the papers before the committee at some future time.

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. gentleman, if I understand him, asks for the reports from the chief engineer with respect to these payments——

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, on which they base their estimates. I ask that these be laid on the table. Am I to undestand that that will be done ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, we will furnish that.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister stated that $19,000 had been paid to W. Davis on the contract for the year ending 30th June, 1904. Was any portion of that paid for the three slides that took place on their work, or was it independent of that ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is on their contract, not on the slides.

Mr. HAGGART. I understand that the hon. minister is assured by his department that none of the money paid was paid on the slides that occurred on his work ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is what the deputy informs me—that it is simply paid on the work done under contract.

Mr. HAGGART. That is not an exact answer. I want to know whether any of the money was paid on the slide, and was that included in the contract—was that considered part of the contract ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have told my hon. friend distinctly that nothing was paid on the slides ; it was paid on account of the work under the contract, and the slides did not form part of the contract.

Mr. HAGGART. I understand the minister now distinctly.

Mr. SPROULE. There is the strangest kind of work in connection with this whole matter. I have listened to explanations of ministers for three years in succession. Practically the minister said three years ago : Give me so much money and we will finish the work, we will discharge the hands and the expenditure will stop. And when we came back two years ago he asked an additional amount. What for ? To finish the same work which he had declared the other vote would finish. And still the same men are kept on the work, though, apparently, they have nothing to do except draw their salaries. The minister tells us : My engineer tells me this ; or : My engineer tells me that. The only conclusion that one can come to is either that the minister, the engineer, and all the rest of them, are in league to take the money from the country, or else that they do not know what they are doing. Though we have been assured so often that the work would be paid for and completed, here again we have $204,300 asked for the same purpose, of which $88,000 is for the contract. What work is being done ? Who is the contractor ? Is the work going on now ? Has there been a new contract since last year ? These are things we ought to know. We are voting money belonging to the people, and we ought to have information that will be reliable, that we may judge when we reach finality in this affair.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). Carried.

Mr. SPROULE. It is not carried by any means. We want information from the minister.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is the same old contract, anyhow. The work has been done under the original contract by the contractors, whose names I have given.

Mr. SPROULE. When was the contract given ?

Mr. EMMERSON. In 1897.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). Carried.

Mr. SPROULE. It is not carried, Mr. Chairman ; and you need not be in such a hurry. It will not be carried until we get the information we ask for.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) need not lose his temper.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not losing my temper over the minister, but over the chairman calling 'carried' even when the minister is on his feet and speaking.

Mr. EMMERSON. I hope the hon. gentleman will not allow himself to be disturbed even by you, Mr. Chairman. We do so much better when we are all amiable and good-natured.

Mr. SPROULE. This is too much of a farce to be good-natured over.

Mr. EMMERSON. Now I am sorry I spoke ; I am afraid I make my hon. friend angry. I am anxious to give all the information possible.

Mr. SPROULE. Then I ask the hon. minister if he will be good enough to give us the information we ask for : Who is the contractor ? Has any new contract been let since last year ? What is the nature of the work being done ? When is it expected that it will be finished ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Wm. Davis & Sons have the contract for the Cardinal section of this work. Of course, there are several sections.

Mr. SPROULE. We are speaking of the Cardinal section.

Mr. EMMERSON. The contract was entered into in 1897. There has been no new contract, and all payments from 1897 down to the present time in connection with the work were paid under that contract ; and the Auditor General, in his approval of the payments, calculated with regard to the original contract.

Mr. SPROULE. What work is being done at the present time ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am informed that the trimming up work is being done.

Mr. SPROULE. What does the hon. minister mean by 'trimming up' ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is a technical term with which I am not familiar.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman will become familiar with it.

Mr. EMMERSON. I suppose I shall. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) seems disposed to trim me, and I suppose I shall have to get used to it. The chief engineer and deputy minister tell me that the work now being done on the Cardinal section is the final work, that of trimming up the canal—in other words, putting on the finishing touches.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman has the engineer at his side, cannot he ask him what 'trimming up' means ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It means trimming up the slopes and giving the canal the finishing touches.

Mr. J. D. REID. I may say that was done a year ago. The work was nicely levelled off and sodded, and the sides of the bank are covered with stonework. The minister says now that $88,000 is not sufficient, and that there will be more money asked for next year because the final estimates have not been made up.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not think I said that. I said this work is practically completed except some finishing work, which is not a serious matter. But the final estimate has not been made up. After consulting with my deputy, I am getting new light. One of these reports which I will bring down will show that in addition to this $88,000, the judgment of the late engineer was that we would require $30,000 more to pay final estimates.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then I must tell the people there that in addition to this $88,000, at least $30,000 will be required before this matter is finally settled up.

Mr. EMMERSON. With sorrow I admit it.

Mr. SPROULE. Was this contract let on schedule prices, or was it a lump sum?

Mr. EMMERSON. Schedule prices.

Mr. SPROULE. Then are there any extras being allowed on this contract ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose this is an extra. How many years will it be before we may expect these extras will be completed ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is always a question as to what is extras. By the term extras, I do not understand those items that are within the bounds of the contract. A man does certain work, and more than was contemplated, but which is provided for under the contract. While it adds to the first estimate of the work, it is not essentially an extra.

Mr. LENNOX. Are the contractors doing this trimming ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, Davis and Sons, on the Cardinal section.

Mr. J. D. REID. There is another matter I wish to bring up. The effect of placing the canal where the government placed it was virtually to make an island of the village of Cardinal. A bridge had to be put across to allow the people to get into the village, and the effect on the whole, was to injure the property of a great many people in the village on account of the main road being cut off. One of these gentlemen was the Rev. George McArthur, whose property was seriously damaged. This gentleman appealed to the government to pay him damages, or to appoint valuators to examine his property and award him some damages. The government refused to send their valuator, and he then employed counsel and asked permission to go before the Exchequer Court. The government granted him that privilege. The case came before the Exchequer Court, and I think it was tried by Mr. Justice Burbidge, who awarded Mr. McArthur $1,200 damages. The government refused to pay, and appealed to the Supreme Court, and I am told by Mr. McArthur's solicitor that the Supreme Court decided against Mr. McArthur, merely on a technical point, but on account of the injury that was done him they believed that morally his case was good. Still they had to decide against him merely on this technical point, and so this gentleman finds himself without redress. The Supreme Court felt that he was entitled to some redress because they decided that the government should pay all the costs that he had incurred up to and including the Supreme Court. I do not know whether the government have decided to pay the costs. At the same time, there are some other persons whose property has been seriously injured in consequence of the canal being placed where it is. I think the government should settle this claim with the Rev. Mr. McArthur and also with others who may apper before the Exchequer Court. I now appeal to the government to settle this claim and give others a chance to appear before the Exchequer Court, who consider that they have been injured. Therefore I would like to ask the hon. minister what his opinion is in so far as this case in concerned ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I had the circumstances of this case brought recently to my notice. While it excites my sympathy and personal inclination I do not see any reason or any justification for my recommending that the reverend gentleman should be paid. His case does excite my political sympathy, because he is a supporter of a party with which I have been for a lifetime allied, and I would liked to have seen him paid.

Mr. SPROULE. You are not as liberal with him as you are with many others.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, if my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) were in a situation like that I would like to see him paid and that desire would be intensified if his politics were right. The facts of this case, however, are that in the construction of the canal that gentleman and some others were put to some inconvenience. Their lands were not taken from them, their property was not invaded but they were put to some inconvenience, a very remote injury, too remote in the judgment of the Supreme Court to warrant them in having a legal claim. I am afraid my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule), who is a very watch dog of the treasury, would become indignant, if not cross, if we were to pay any claims of that kind. If you pay one you open the door for all similar claims. Any one who thinks he has been injured or put to an inconvenience by a great public work would have a similar claim. The construction of the canal in that place must have been an advantage to the people of that section.

Mr. J. D. REID. It was a great disadvantage to place the canal where they did in so far as the inhabitants of that village were concerned.

Mr. EMMERSON. But they would rather have it there than not have the canal.

Mr. J. D. REID. No, they had the canal before. It ran around the front end of the village where it did not injure the village at all.

Mr. EMMERSON. It would be a greater advantage to them to have it larger.

Mr. J. D. REID. Yes, but it has injured this gentleman's property.

Mr. EMMERSON. It has not injured his property. It may be a little inconvenient for him and he may have to drive around a little farther. We are all subject to some inconvenience in respect to public utilities. There is hardly a man in Canada but can figure up to some degree an inconvenience that he could value in dollars and cents, but it is more or less remote. In this case it was very remote.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the hon. minister what the judge of the Exchequer Court thought of it when he gave judgment in favour of this gentleman.

Mr. EMMERSON. Other judges seemed to think the judgment of the Exchequer Court was not correct. It is one man against many.

Mr. SPROULE. There is another question I would like to ask my hon. friend. He says the reverend gentleman has his sympathy. I would like to know how long he considers he can live on sympathy.

Mr. EMMERSON. If you will let me have your's for a little while I will tell you how long I can live on it.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he will agree to this ? The clergyman whose property has been injured or who has gone through with this case is certainly not in a position financially to appeal it. His property has been very seriously injured. He could not get to-day one-half for it what he could have obtained had the canal been left where it was originally and as his property is encumbered he is not able to appeal the case. The first court decided that he was right, the next that he was wrong. There is yet one final court of appeal and that is the Privy Council in England or parliament here. If parliament will settle the case by giving him a grant, of course that will end it. But if they intend to refuse, now that the Supreme Court have recommended the government to pay the expenses so far, will the government agree to allow this appeal to go to the Privy Council and pay the expenses that may be connected with it ? In case the decision is not in favour of the Reverend Geo. McArthur I am sure he will be satisfied that he probably is not entitled to anything and will abide by the consequences as of course he will be obliged to do.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have enough difficulty in connection with my own department without invading the jurisdiction of another. When the case went to the Supreme Court it was placed under the control of the Department of Justice. I would not wish to interfere as to that and could not answer my hon. friend's question.

Mr. J. D. REID. We have the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) here. It is really a very great hardship for this gentleman and the amount of expense incurred by the appeal would be very small. I ask the Prime Minister as a favour to this particular gentleman that he will give him this right to have this case go to the Privy Council and that the government shall assume the expense in connection with it. I venture to say there is not one hon. gentleman on this side of the House who will object to the cost that may be incurred in taking that case to the Privy Council, and I believe that every hon. gentleman on the other side of the House will take the same view of it. I will not ask that this shall be a precedent in connection with any other claims which shall be brought up. In case there are other claims tried the claimants will have to assume the responsibility of going to the Privy Council themselves, but in this case I ask the right hon. Prime Minister to grant the request.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not giving an opinion in regard to this case but if we are not to adopt the judgment I would rather give it to the reverend clergyman than to the lawyers. It would be less expensive, I am sure.

Mr. J. D. REID. The right hon. Prime Minister has power to grant that request. If the Prime Minister will stand up and say he will allow it to go he will only be doing justice to this gentleman.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will ask my colleague the Minister of Justice to look at the claim. Perhaps there may be a moral foundation to the claim, but apparently there is no legal foundation.

Mr. J. D. REID. The hon. Minister of Justice is here and understands the case thoroughly. I think he can explain anything necessary in connection with it so that this matter can be settled now and this claim can be allowed to go to the Supreme Court.

Mr. GOURLEY. The hon. Minister of Justice ought to take the view of the Prime Minister that he is entitled to benefit of clergy.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend (Mr. Gourley), although a lawyer, is not aware that benefit of clergy was abolished centuries ago. This case is one of harship undoubtedly but I cannot understand on what principle the government should settle with this reverend gentleman unless we are disposed to settle a multitude of other cases which arise under similar circumstances. This gentleman's property with the property of about twenty others was affected as the result of the construction of this canal. I think it was the right of access to these properties that was injured as a result of the construction of this work. He acted for himself and others.

Mr. J. D. REID. For himself only.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not sure about that. I have not the facts quite clear in my mind but I think that others were connected with the suit. However, that is not important. A man I think named Kief was also connected with this case. It was decided that if the suppliants succeeded in this case the government would pay all parties interested, and if they failed the result in this case would apply to all. The claim was made against the Railways and Canals Department, it was referred to my department, and I thought it my duty to advise that there was no legal claim. It occurred to me that the case was not one in which there was property damage within the meaning of the Act, and I had to advise the department that I did not think they could entertain the claim. Then the matter came up by way of petition of right. The reverend gentleman applied for a petition of right to have his position settled by judgment of the court. I immediately acquiesced in that and a petition of right was granted. The judgment of the Exchequer Court was in his favour. The judge of the Exchequer Court held that the man's property had been injuriously affected and its value decreased and that as a result the government should pay for the damage. He fixed the amount at $1,200. I remained still of the opinion—being perhaps obdurate in this matter—that the judgment of the Exchequer Court was wrong and I advised an appeal to the Supreme Court. When the case came before the Supreme Court they concurred in my view, namely, that while the right of access had been interfered with, the man's property had not been injuriously affected so as to give him a claim for damages. I have no recollection of having seen any recommendation in the judgment that we should pay the costs of the appeal to the Supreme Court. If my hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Reid) is satisfied from his own personal knowledge that this recommendation is contained in the judgment I shall have it looked up and certainly such a recommendation as that should receive and would receive the sympathetic consideration of the government. If they recommend that in this case the suppliant should have his costs paid, I do not think the government would hesitate a moment to adopt such a suggestion. My hon. friend says that, the Supreme Court having decided that this gentleman is not entitled to consideration, in the way of remuneration for the damage he has suffered, that we should appeal that question to the Privy Council. My hon. friend knows perfectly well that we cannot take the appeal.

Mr. J. D. REID. He will take it if you pay the costs.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If he takes the appeal we will give him every possible facility. He cannot appeal except on application for leave. If he applies for leave I shall agree that leave be granted, but when he comes and asks us that we should assume the burden of taking an appeal and assume all the costs the question arises what principle we are to lay down. The hon. gentleman says that he will not consider it a precedent but while he does not and will not, other gentlemen in the same position may do so, and may come to us and say : Treat us in the same way ; appeal to the Privy Council at your expense and for our benefit. I do not see what answer we could make in such a case, nor do I see how the government could justify any suggestion to take the case to the Privy Council by way of paying the costs. There is no principle at stake ; it is one of those cases that come before the court every day, a question of whether the damage to a man's property is such as would entitle him to recover damages. I do not see why we should distinguish between this minister's case and other cases. I can understand my hon. friend's sympathy for his constituent, and I quite appreciate his desire to secure relief for him. He says that this case is one of hardship. I admit that it is a hard case but so far as I am concerned I can only apply the law. I could not pay damages in such a case nor could I advise the government to do so. My hon. friend says that there is a recommendation in the judgment as to costs. I repeat that if there is such a recommendation as to costs I shall consider it and have it complied with. Of course I have not looked at the judgment recently.

Mr. J. D. REID. At the time the judgment was given I just noticed a paragraph that appeared in the newspaper, probably three or four lines, in the way they generally report these cases, and I should judge from the wording of that paragraph that the judgment contained some recommendation that the government should pay the costs. I am only speaking of what I saw in the newspaper.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Of course I am now speaking only from my impression. It is some weeks since I read the judgment. My impression was that the court held that the suppliant would not be obliged to pay the costs of the Crown on the appeal, that each party would have to pay his own costs.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am not sure, but, on rendering it, I came to the conclusion that the court suggested that the government should pay the costs. The minister has just stated that on this case several others depended, and that others were pushing this case through. I may say to the minister that there was no one connected with this gentleman at all ; he has paid his own costs and I do not think there is a single solitary person who has put up one dollar for him. He has had to pay all his costs in connection with the case so far, but is unable to proceed as he has not the means to do so, and therefore he has to suffer this hardship. I venture to say that I can say for the whole village—and at all events I would do so before I would ask the government to allow the case to go to appeal—that they would pledge themselves that they would not regard this as a precedent. But of course if judgment were given in favour of the reverend gentleman, then they could have their own cases tried and if necessary could take them to the Privy Council. Of course there is no question that there are quite a few others who would be in a similar position, and there is no doubt that there would be others who would have to be paid if the government settled this one claim. This gentleman, in the eyes of the public in the locality, is entitled to damages, and in view of the fact that he got judgment from the court that is supposed to settle these cases and that it was only on a technical point that the Supreme Court decided against him, I feel now that the least the government could do would be to make a grant of a few hundred dollars in order that justice might be done this gentleman and others. There is no question about it in my own opinion—and I believe in the opinion of the public in that locality,—that this gentleman has been most unfairly dealt with in so far as his property is concerned. That is the reason that I make this appeal, which I suppose is the last appeal I can make. I have appealed to the Minister of Railways, and the Minister of Justice. I appeal to the Prime Minister, and I am very sorry they cannot grant that request and allow this reverend gentleman to get the amount to which he is entitled. I believe the least they could do would be to pay him the $1,200 to which he is entitled, without making it a precedent. The government could buy his property for a few hundred dollars more than the damages, and could use it for some of the lockmen or for some other purpose. There is a way of getting over it I am sure. It would be as easy to get over that as to get over the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill. I think it would not be much trouble and I am now making this last appeal to the Prime Minister, to the Minister of Justice and to the Minister of Railways to see if they cannot find some means of doing something by which he will get the justice to which I believe he is entitled.

Mr. SPROULE. I suggest that they take for this purpose a portion of the money they are paying out for trimmings, that do not require to be done. I would ask the minister if he can tell us how much of this money which we are voting is to be used for paying what is already earned, by work having been done and how much is yet to be earned and the kind of work that is to be done to earn it.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is practically all earned.

Mr. SPROULE. If that be so then the work must be completed.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have explained to my hon. friend that we are just doing the finishing up work. When I say it is practically all earned I do not mean to say that every dollar is earned.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that it will take about $15,000 more to complete this ?

Mr. EMMERSON. About $30,000, according to the last report we have from the engineer, who has died since. That was made out about three weeks ago.

Mr. SPROULE. Then I suppose the whole staff of engineers will be kept on until that is spent.

Mr. EMMERSON. As soon as the work is through, the staff will be reduced.

Mr. SPROULE. I would suggest that as soon as the elections come on this man should put in his claim, provided the others do the same.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does the hon. Minister of Justice remember if the Supreme Court were unanimous in that case?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not remember. I will look into the case, because it is important to know whether there was such a recommendation as has been suggested by my hon. friend.

North channel—forming channel and dam, $150,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This amount is to continue and complete the forming of a channel above the Galops canal. This channel is 2½ miles long, 300 feet wide and 16 feet deep. It is also for the building of a dam between Galops and Adams Islands. By building this dam a dangerous bar is removed, making the navigation more safe. To complete the work under contract, including the dam, requires $150,000. The total amount expended on the work to the 1st of May, 1904, is $1,314,000.42.

Mr. HAGGART. What was the estimated cost of it, and what will be the total amount expended when it is completed ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The total cost will be $1,464,000.

Mr. HAGGART. What was the estimated cost of the channel and the dam separately by the department when the first vote was taken ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The original estimate of making a 200 foot channel was three quarters of a million dollars. The estimated cost of the dam was in the vicinity of $60,000. But the channel was increased to 300 feet in width, and therefore the cost has been very largely increased.

Mr. SPROULE. Was that after the contract was let ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, but the work was at schedule prices.

Mr. SPROULE. Who had the contract ?

Mr. EMMERSON. M. A. Cleveland.

Mr. SPROULE. You spent last year $85,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. It was paid to the contractors on account of the contract.

Mr. J. D. REID. If the dam is now completed, what has it cost ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is not finally completed.

Mr. J. D. REID. How much has been spent on the dam ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not the information as to the dam separately. The deputy thinks the estimate has been exceeded.

Mr. J. D. REID. And yet the work is not finished. I think this item should not pass until we get that information. I am not objecting to the building of this dam. It was built last year.

Mr. EMMERSON. There are 300 feet of it in which the cribs have not yet been sunk. The progress estimates as they are received are in one amount for both the channel and the dam.

Mr. HAGGART. You do not separate the estimates between the channel and the dam.

Mr. EMMERSON. No, because it is all one contract.

Mr. HAGGART. They are a mile apart.

Mr. EMMERSON. They might be two miles apart. They are all one contract at schedule prices, and the progress estimates are sent in on the work without regard to whether it is the dam or the channel.

Mr. HAGGART. If it is on progress estimates and the minister took an amount last year to complete the whole, why is he coming now and asking for $150,000 ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This is to complete the work under the contract.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does the hon. minister tell us that this dam is part of the original contract ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Surely not. It was not contemplated then.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am bound by the information which I get from my officials.

Mr. J. D. REID. This contract was let some seven or eight years ago. Are we to understand that at that time this dam was contemplated and made part of this contract ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes; there has been no other contract.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. HAGGART. This is done on American soil. Have you got the consent of the Americans to the building of it ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. I may say to the hon. minister that so far as this dam is concerned, I never heard of it and it was not talked of nor contemplated when this contract was let.

Mr. EMMERSON. It might have been contemplated without the hon. gentleman hearing of it.

Mr. J. D. REID. In the contract there is nothing specified about building a dam. If there was to be a dam, would it not be specified in the contract? The contract is very plain, and it only provides for dredging and some piering at the west end of the channel. I know the contractor well, and you could not get a better one. I am not finding fault with this contractor or his work. The only question I have asked is how much has been spent on this dam. The minister tells us that the prices allowed the contractor are just the same as on the other dredging work. I suppose that means the cribwork is so much per foot and the dredging or filling in so much per yard, the same as the original contract.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, under the original contract.

Mr. J. D. REID. I mean that for the work done at the head of the channel, the same prices are paid as across this dam ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is what my deputy tells me.

Mr. J. D. REID. And the two are not kept separate ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No ; the vote is asked for the channel and the dam. It was that way last year.

Mr. J. D. REID. This was all done last fall. The Auditor General's Report could not show whether they were separate or not, because all this work has been done since July 1st of last year as far as this dam is concerned. That is why we are entitled to some information now.

Mr. EMMERSON. My deputy tells me that he could get the information by figuring it out.

Mr. J. D. REID. When we are on the supplementaries, will the minister be in a position to state how much has been paid on the dam so far and how much he expects it will cost to complete ? I may say that I believe this dam across the island has had the effect of turning the water back and throwing it around the head of the island, by which I believe it will do some good in so far as the entrance into the head of the canal is concerned. It has increased the water so that boats can enter the head of the canal more easily. I know it was a difficult work, and the contractor has done it well. Still I think we are entitled to know exactly what it cost.

Mr. HAGGART. Have there been any complaints from overflow from this dam ?

Mr. EMMERSON. None.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister did not answer my question. Last year there was a vote of $60,000. He says that the dam and the north channel were both included in the contract. $60,000 was voted last year.

Mr. EMMERSON. It was $100,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Any way, it was to finish the work. How is it that $100,000 more is asked this year ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Nearly $150,000 more. There must be some mistake if such a statement was made.

Mr. HAGGART. Here it is in 'Hansard' :

To complete the north channel (revote), $20,000.

You say that that was part and parcel of the whole contract, that the dam was made a portion of it. Then the discussion went on :

Mr. REID (Grenville). Does that complete the work ?
The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. I wish to amend that item by adding the words 'and dam between Galops and Adam's island.'
Mr. REID (Grenville). Will this complete the Cleveland work on the north channel ?
The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, that is the report of the engineers.
Mr. REID (Grenville). And the dam, too ?
The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, we are so advised.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is pretty explicit.

Mr. HAGGART. What has the department to say ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I will have to take back what was said last year.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. minister not see that if we cannot secure exact information about these things it is a perfect farce our asking for information ?

Mr. J. D. REID. The Finance Minister was acting Minister of Railways last year. Let me read again the question asked him :

To complete north channel (revote), $20,000.
Mr. REID (GRENVILLE). Does that complete the work ?
The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. I wish to amend that item by adding the words 'and dam between Galops and Adam's island.'
Mr. REID (Grenville). Will this complete the Cleveland work on the north channel ?
The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, that is the report of the engineers.
Mr. REID (Grenville). And the dam, too ?
The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, we are so advised.

Yet now we are asked to vote another $150,000, and the Minister of Railways says that the work on the dam is not half through, and that the work on the channel is likely to continue for some time yet. What has the Minister of Finance to say regarding that statement which he made last year ?

Mr. FIELDING. I can only say that at that time, as the information the hon. gentleman has read shows, I stated that we were so advised by the engineer, and I am quite sure that I had the engineer's opinion to that effect or I would not have made the statement. I am told by the Minister of Railways that Mr. Rubidge did make such a recommendation at that time.

Some hon. MEMBERS. He's dead.

Mr. FIELDING. Well, we cannot extend the lives even of worthy men for ever. I take it for granted that the minister to-day is asking for this sum on the report of the engineer.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. minister bring down that report ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I will.

Mr. J. D. REID. Only $20,000 was asked a year ago to complete this work, and now $150,000 is asked to complete it. Perhaps we could get an estimate of what it will really take to complete the work.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is a growing time.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the minister had a special engineer's report on this work—any engineer other than one in his own department?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, it was under the control of Mr. Rubidge, who was the superintending engineer——

Mr. HAGGART. That is no answer to give to the committee. The department is answerable for the expenditure so long as they retain the parties on whose advice they act.

Mr. EMMERSON. Certainly—no one man denies that. But I was asked whether any special engineer was asked to make a report on the matter, and I am endeavouring to enlighten my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) on that particular point. I was endeavouring to say that there was no special engineer, that the only engineer who made a report was Mr. Rubidge, the chief superintending engineer.

Mr. BLAIN. I would draw the hon. minister's attention to this statement at page 4034 of 'Hansard' of 1902. This was in the discussion on the item 'North channel, forming dam $56,250.' My hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) made the statement that this was useless expenditure.

Mr. HAGGART. So it is—altogether.

Mr. BLAIN. And my hon. friend the former Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) repeats that statement.

Mr. EMMERSON. I understand my hon. friend from Grenville to have changed his opinion with respect to it and to say now that it is a work of value.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have not changed my mind on anything. I am under the impression that my hon friend (Mr. Blain) is referring to a matter that comes up on the next item relating to Galops Rapids. So far as this channel is concerned, I believe it is absolutely necessary and that it is a good work. Mr. M. A. Cleveland, who has been working on it, I believe is a first-class contractor and has done his work well. I do not believe there is a better contractor on the canal than Mr. Cleveland. But I recall the fact that, last year, when the question was asked if the $20,000 then voted would finish up the work, we were told that it would. Yet, this year the minister comes down and asks for $150,000, and this we are asked to vote without any explanation whatever, except a statement by the Minister of Railways and Canals which virtually means that there will be more money required. That is the position we are in to-day. The minister cannot tell us whether this ends the contract, or whether the work will finish this year, next year or five years hence. Personally, I feel that we have not received the information that would justify even a lot of school boys in approving this expenditure, much less the House of Commons of Canada which has the interest of the whole people in its charge.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Reid) says that this is an excellent work and that the contractor has done good work. My hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) says that the expenditure upon it is a waste of money.

Mr. J. D. REID. He is referring to the Galops Rapids.

Mr. HAGGART. No, I am referring to the north channel. I stated it before in the House, and I feel justified in repeating it, for the work came under my observation.

Mr. EMMERSON. Well, which is right—my hon. friend from South Lanark or my hon. friend from Grenville? How can I tell?

Mr. J. D. REID. I may say that the hon. member for South Lanark will explain that. From the head of the canal at Cardinal to Prescott, according to the old channel where the boats have run for the last thirty or forty years there were spots in it where there was only eight or nine feet of water, and the question was whether it was better to make a new channel where it is now or dredge the old channel to the necessary depth. My opinion of the matter as expressed, was that the work as now done when completed was a work of actual necessity, or else the old channel had to be dredged. There may be difference of opinion as to which was the best route to take. I am not discussing that point and I do not know whether I could form an opinion upon it. But deeper water was necessary in order to accommodate the boats drawing 16 or 17 feet of water coming from Montreal. And, that depth having been secured I say the work is a good work so far as the interest of navigation is concerned.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose I too must keep myself right in this matter. I made the statement a moment ago that my hon. friend from Grenville condemned the expenditure, and I suppose I must give the evidence. At page 4034 of 'Hansard' of 1902, in the course of the discussion on the item 'North Channel, forming dam, $56,250; the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. D. Reid) said:

> It is simply throwing this away. Better throw the money into the canal than throw a dam across there.

I understand the hon. gentleman now to say that he was directing attention to another matter, and so I will not debate that.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is a difference between the hon. gentlemen themselves and I am quite willing to let them settle it.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Reid) has explained that his remarks referred to something else, and of course, I accept his statement, as the minister is bound also to do. A little while ago I asked if any engineer outside of the department had made a report on this work and his answer was in the negative. I wish to draw his attention to what his predecessor, Hon. Mr. Blair says. Speaking in answer to a question as to the expenditure, he said:

> I will tell the hon. gentleman what I will do. I will undertake that the money will not be expended until I have the subject thoroughly investigated, and until I have had the opinion of other engineers. Not being an engineer myself, I cannot form a judgment upon a question of this kind. I can, however, probably decide not to spend, and I will not do so until I ascertain from independent engineers that it would be a proper expenditure to make.

There is a clear and distinct statement by Mr. Blair when he was asking for this vote of $56,250. It was questioned by this side of the House, and the minister pledged his word to the committee that not one cent of increased expenditure would be made until he had consulted another and outside independent engineer. The committee accepted his word and let the item go through. The money was expended, and now my hon. friend comes forward and asks us for $150,000. He also makes the further statement that that sum will not complete the work.

Mr. EMMERSON. No, I stated that I was advised that this $150,000 will complete the work.

Mr. BLAIN. The dam as well as the channel ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Both.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister stated that a short while ago.

Mr. EMMERSON. I said that it would take $30,000 to complete the previous work.

Mr. BLAIN. Upon that statement in 1902 by the minister who had charge of the department, the money was voted and expended. Now coming to last year, in addition to what the member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) has read, on the same item 'North channel—forming channel and dam,' the Minister of Finance said that the total cost of that work when completed would be $1,354,410 including the dam. Now we have already expended $110,000 more than that. Then the Minister of Finance went on to say that there was a further appropriation of $18,000, and that these two items would complete the work. These are the promises that we get. This thing is of a daily and hourly occurrence in this House. The government come forward with an estimate, the minister stands behind the engineer and pledges his word that the sum asked for will complete the work. I do not think any member on this side of the House would expect that an engineer could make an exact estimate of what a work of that kind would cost, I do not think that is possible. But when the government come forward and state that an estimate is based upon an engineer's opinion, one whose duty it is to make a report upon that work, and then, year after year, they come before this committee and ask for increased amounts with the statement that the sum previously voted will not complete the work, then I say that the committee have a right to complain of the government. The difficulty rests somewhere with the government. On this side of the House we have nothing to do with the officers of the government ; the people and the opposition have no one to hold responsible except the ministers. It is time the ministers became more careful in the statements they make. It is the wish of the opposition to deal fairly with the government. I must say that we expect the Minister of the Department of Railways, who is new in his department, to do better than his predecessor. I am sorry to see, however, that he is not starting in very well. I would ask him to be more careful in the statements and promises he makes to the committee.

Mr. J. D. REID. In addition to what the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) has read from the statements of the minister in 1902, I will read what I said in 1903 :

Before the committee rises, I wish to say that I shall have some remarks to make on items No. 91 and No. 92, referring to the forming of a dam in the north channel on the Galops rapids. The minister is aware that I took exception to the building of the dam, because it was part and parcel of that new channel. In discussing the matter with the marine men since, they state that they believe that the building of that dam will overcome the great damage that has been done to the water-way by the deepening of that channel, thus causing the lowering of the water above the island. They think that this wrong which I claim has been done for a great many years, would be really overcome by the building of this dam. I do not intend now to object to the building of that dam. I believe it will probably raise the water again to its normal level as it was previous to this work being done.

That shows that I did make these remarks in 1902, and in 1903 I corrected them. So there is no dispute.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at Eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 146) respecting the Northern Bank.—Mr. Scott.

Bill (No. 40) respecting the Canada Southern Railway Company.—Mr. Ingram.

NEW BRUNSWICK SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 143) respecting the New Brunswick Southern Railway Company.—Mr. Gibson.

On section 3,

Mr. HAGGART. Might I ask the Chairman of the Railway Committee (Mr. Hyman) whether this confirms any powers granted in the charter of the New Brunswick legislature which are inconsistent with the ordinary Acts which we grant to railway companies?

Mr. HYMAN. By this clause we do not confirm any of the powers. As the clause now reads it is :

The Railway Act, 1903, shall hereafter apply to the works instead of the New Brunswick Railway Act and to the exclusion of any provisions of the Acts mentioned in the preamble inconsistent with the Railway Act, 1903 ; but nothing herein shall affect or invalidate any action heretofore taken by the company pursuant to powers contained in the Acts mentioned in the preamble.

It simply confirms anything they may have done under the local Acts, but it makes the Railway Act of 1903 take precedence for the future.

Mr. HAGGART. Does this clause give to this corporation the ordinary powers granted under the Railway Act ?

Mr. HYMAN. I so understand, Mr. Chairman.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. At six o'clock we were discussing item 95, $150,000 for the north channel.

Mr. HAGGART. As was stated in the House when this item was under discussion there was an item of $20,000 in the supplementaries last year in addition to $80,000 in the main estimates, making $100,000 in all. The Minister of Finance stated that this $20,000 would complete the whole work on that north channel. He justified himself by having an estimate from the chief engineer on that particular work. This chief engineer subsequently sent a report to the department in which he stated that it would require $150,000 additional. As I understand from the minister now this $150,000 is intended to complete the whole of that north channel and that dam, and the report of the department is to that effect. The department obtained a certificate from the chief engineer or the engineer who was directly in charge of that work—and this was communicated to this House by the minister in charge of the estimates—that this would complete the work ; the engineer subsequently gave a certificate that it would require $150,000 more. The minister made some criticism of my statement that the north channel was an entirely useless one and compared it with the statement of the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid). When that item was first brought up it was brought before me as Minister of Railways and I refused absolutely to support the contention of the engineer as to the necessity of that work. I say that it is an absolutely useless expenditure of money. My contention at the time was that by deepening what is called Pier Island shoal you could have got a proper entrance into the Galops canal, for one half of the amount that is being expended now for an entrance. The objection taken by the minister at that time was that we would have to use the American channel. The American channel from the Pier Island shoal up to Prescott has a depth of thirty feet. Past Pier Island shoal, there was no necessity of deepening the river at all. He said you would be getting into American waters. My answer was that under the Treaty of Washington, we have as much right to utilize and navigate the American portion of the St. Lawrence as the Americans have themselves, and they have an equal right to utilize and navigate our portion. My contention was that there was no need at all of the expenditure, which is in the neighbourhood of $1,400,000 ; and now it is proposed to expend $150,000 more, a total expenditure of about $1,600,000 to do what I contend could have been accomplished by an expenditure at the utmost of $100,000. From that time to the present I have never changed my opinion that this expenditure for the purpose of building the north channel is entirely useless. It was contended that perhaps the water passing over the Galops rapids would prevent barges or ships coming down from making the entrance to the Galops canals. But you must remember that you have erected a dam between two islands, where I suggested that the shoal should be deepened, and the canal, which did away altogether with that danger. But what I want to draw the minister's particular attention to is the former part of my statement. After having a certificate from the engineer in charge of the work that $20,000 would complete it, he receives a subsequent one that it will require $150.000 more. Have the officers of the department communicated with the engineer in charge of the work and got from him a reason for his change of opinion ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The late engineer, Mr. Rubidge, in his lifetime was asked that question by the department. His explanation was not in writing, and my attention was not called to it. I cannot give any personal explanation ; but I will take the earliest opportunity to examine the situation and learn exactly where the difficulty lies and where the fault is if there has been fault. That is the only thing that I can do at this time, and I shall endeavour to get that information from sources that will not be considered as in any way prejudiced.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not say the minister ought to have done it, but the department ought to have done it. The department had a report from Mr. Rubidge that $20,000 would finish the work and it put that statement in the mouth of the minister in charge of the department at that time. Then a subsequent report came in that $150,000 more would be required. The minister's attention ought to have been called to that. The department ought to have got the information without the minister inquiring into the matter at all.

Mr. J. D. REID. When the hon. member for South Lanark was Minister of Railways and Canals, if my memory serves me rightly, the government of that day were asking for tenders for enlarging the Cardinal canal and also for a channel from the head of the canal to Prescott. The intention of the minister was to have the rock excavated at Pier Island shoal and at the same time to run the canal through the village of Cardinal much further south than where it is and where it would not have injured the village and would have been a straight canal. The intention was to run the canal straight from what is known as the upper lock almost to Iroquois. If that had been done, the canal would have been straight, and it would have cost only about one-half of what it has cost as located. But just at that time the government changed, and the Hon. Mr. Blair became Minister of Railways and Canals. Without ever appearing on the scene he changed the route of the canal and located it where it now is. I was informed at the time that the late Mr. Rubidge strongly urged the southern route. If the minister asks the deputy minister, I believe he will agree with me that the canal where it passes through the village of Cardinal, and where it was intended to be made straight, is about as crooked as the old original canal. If the minister visits it he will see that the canal there has a large curve; but it has been made much wider and deeper, so that boats can navigate it more easily than they could the old canal. But, as the hon. member for South Lanark states, west of the canal there was only a small shoal to be removed to make a channel twenty or thirty feet in depth from the head of the canal to Prescott, and the work could have been done for perhaps $100,000 or $150,000.

But, of course, in doing this the vessel would have had to go some 500 or 600 feet in American waters. None of the excavating work, however, would have had to be done in American waters. That canal had been used for forty years, and a vessel could have entered it easily, because it could have got around this island half a mile above the entrance and have plenty of opportunity to go into the canal. But for the same reason, this route was changed and was made to cut right through the island. They had to remove half the island. The water was only five or six feet deep in most of the channel, and as this channel had to be dredged, there is no question but that it could not be done without an enormous expenditure, as has been proved by the expenditure from that time to this. Of course, either one route or the other had to be made. The government were compelled to either remove the shoal near the island or do what they have done now. What has been done makes a splendid channel, but in doing this the government have squandered at least a million dollars, which it would not have been necessary to spend had they gone through the old channel and allowed the vessels to navigate its waters as they had been doing for so many years. Therefore, the ex-Minister of Railways is perfectly right in what he says regarding this expenditure. Another matter I wish to mention is this. These canals are now completed. At any rate, they are all in working order. Take the Cardinal canal. In that there is one lock less, and as it is just new and complete, it should be operated for much less than during the Conservative regime or up to the time the present government took power in 1896. Well, what do we find? I find that previous to the year 1896 it cost to manage those canals as follows: Take the Williamsburg canal, it cost for the permanent staff, $9,567.09; and for the actual repairs to keep it in working order, $7,123.97. That included Farran's Point, Morrisburg and Cardinal canals. In 1903, although the canals were new, just handed over by the contractor and in splendid working order, and when it might be supposed that they could not require repairs to anything like the amount they did in 1896, I find that the expenditure of the staff increased from $9,567 in 1895 to $15,246.91. And for the repairs to those canals it cost $7,123.97 to keep them in repair in 1895, and in 1903 it cost $20,092.79. From the first day the Liberals came into office the expenditure on those canals has increased, so that there is not one year which does not show an increase over the previous year. Take the Cornwall canal, in 1896 it cost $15,114.56 for what is known as the staff, but last year it cost $70,129.29, or an increase from $15,000 per annum to $70,000. Of course, in that latter amount is included lighting, $48,000, which I am not going to discuss now, because that will come up on a special item later, but in the year 1895 that was also included in the $15,400. Compare that with last year, and you will find that, leaving the lighting out of last year's expenditure, the cost of operating the canal was $22,129.29, as compared with $15,400 in 1895, and that latter amount included the lighting. The repairs on these new canals cost $19,235 last year, while in 1895 they only cost $13,053.53. Then take the Lachine canal, which, in 1895, was an old canal. In that year the staff cost $56,185.44, whereas in 1903 it cost $69,534.56. And for the repairs on this old canal, in 1895 it cost $24,924.89, whereas in 1903, on the new canal, the repairs cost $53,054.20, or more than double. Take the Sault Ste. Marie canal. In 1895 that canal cost $3,432.03 for staff. It is only a short canal with one lock, yet in 1903 it cost for the staff to manage that lock $16,017.22. And for the repairs on that little piece of canal it cost in 1903 $10,855.70, so that in 1903 it took $27,000 to run one lock on the Sault canal, while in 1895 the extravagant Conservative government managed to run it for $3,432. Take the Welland canal. In 1895 the staff of that canal cost $89,065.27, while in 1903 it cost $90,290.65. And the repairs on the whole length of the Welland canal in 1895 cost $40,270.94, as compared with $72,004.59 in 1903. You can take every canal throughout this Dominion and you will find that the cost of management and repairs has increased almost twofold under the present government. Take the canal that I know well, the one in my own county ; I cannot see any necessity for employing more men to keep it in repair at present than under the late government. Why, on the contrary, there should be only one-half of the repairs required to-day, and yet the minister, if he will take up his pay-list, will find that he has three times as many employees looking after the repairs, and if the Auditor General's Report were ready we would find that there are men employed on that canal the whole year who, I believe, did not work one day.

And I see item after item charged to these canals representing expenditure for which I can see no justification whatever. Take this Cardinal canal from Iroquois to the head of the rapids, it had only been handed over by the contractor and not a dollar had to be spent, so far as I can see for repairs. There should have been no charge for repairs for three years, because the contractors had full charge of the banks and were emptying upon them the material that they excavated. I cannot see why there should be such a great expense in managing this canal as in former years. If you go over the expenditure on these canals for thirty years, whether the Liberals were in power or whether the Conservatives were in power, you will find that it remained about the same year after year—only a few hundred dollars difference either way. But on this canal it is increasing year by year the same on the Weland canal, the same on the Lachine canal, the same on the Cornwall canal and the Soulanges and Beauharnois canals as well. Is this increase to go on every year ? Every time the Liberal committee meets in Iroquois or Cardinal and sends a recommendation for two more men or four more men to be put on the canal, or for certain supplies to be bought from certain men, must the minister load this expenditure upon the country regardless of the public interest ? These men are put there and they cannot be dismissed, and the government will take no action in the matter. We had an example this afternoon when the minister admitted to me that he had men employed on the engineering staff that, to my knowledge, have had nothing to do but draw their salaries. Then there is the collector of canal tolls at Cardinal. Not a dollar of canal tolls was collected last year, yet the collector was paid for a full twelve months $1,000. Not only that, but he was paid $1 per day for driving from the village up to the locks to his office, where he had not anything to do. And in addition to that, he was paid office rent down at his own house. In addition to that, he was paid for fuel. And, in addition to all, he was paid 20 cents an hour for extra work on Sundays, though the canal was closed from twelve o'clock on Saturday night to twelve o'clock on Sunday night. The Auditor General's Report shows this, and it seems all the more noteworthy because the collectors on the other canals have not received anything for extra work. Will the minister explain why this extravagance exists, why these officials are kept, why horse-hire is paid, and rent and fuel and all these other things? And, so far as this collector of whom I have spoken is concerned, he has just one thing to do in connection with his position and that is to go to the post office at the end of the month and get his cheque.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have heard my hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Reid) deliver this speech more than once. It seems to grow in intensity as the figures increase year by year. I fancy that after a while, he will begin to think there really is something in it. He forgets, of course, that, in the days of progress in Canada, when trade is, figuratively speaking, doubling year by year, necessarily the canals get a share of the increased traffic, and this, of course, involves additional expense in operation. These canals have been enlarged. He refers to a section of the Cornwall canal and says that the expense is nearly double what it was. I am informed that, in the meantime the number of locks has been doubled, and, of course, that involves greater expense.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like to know who gave that information to the hon. minister. I do not think any officer of the department will say that the number of locks has been increased.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am informed by the deputy minister that the number has been doubled.

Mr. J. D. REID. On what canal ?

Mr. EMMERSON. On the Cornwall canal, the one to which my hon. friend refers. Turning to the records, I find that, at page 12 of the report of the Department of Railways and Canals of last year, that the cost of staff on the Cornwall canal for 1895, was $15,414.56, and for repairs, $13,000 odd, while, for 1902—that is previous to the lighting, which is another question—the cost for staff was only $17,896.58, a very small increase over 1895, while for repairs only $15,000, again a very small increase, especially when you take into consideration the enlargement of the canal.

Mr. J. D. REID. Compare the Williamsburg canal. The Cornwall canal happens to be one of the smallest increased.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am taking one that the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. D. Reid) started with.

Mr. J. D. REID. No. I started with the Williamsburg.

Mr. EMMERSON. But the hon. gentleman made reference to the Cornwall canal.

Mr. J. D. REID. The hon. minister states that there are more locks on the Cornwall canal with the new canal than with the old canal in 1896. I challenge that statement.

Mr. EMMERSON. The statement I made was that there were a great many more now than before the enlargement was made. The enlargement was only completed two or three years ago. My hon. friend has called attention to the Williamsburg canal and has shown that there is an increase. But taking into consideration the large increase of business, the enlargement of the canal and the increased cost of management, also taking into consideration that the present government pay living wages, whereas under the former regime people received starvation wages—I say that taking all these things into consideration, the additional work that is being done, the increased traffic that is attended to, we must expect an increase in the cost of operation. My hon. friend went on to speak about the locks in the canal. I was a little shocked at his contending that it would be in the interest of Canada to have a canal in American territory. If that proposition were to come from this side of the House it would be denounced as traitorous, as disloyal, and I am a little surprised at my hon. friend even making that suggestion. If it came from any other quarter he would be horrified, but in order to make a point against the government he now advocates that we should have a portion of this canal in American territory instead of having it all upon Canadian soil. Personally I know nothing of the locality, and am not in a position to form a judgment upon it, except from the facts recited by my hon. friend. From what I can gather from the member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) the differences between the hon. gentlemen have been adjusted.

Mr. HAGGART. Did I state that a part of it was on American soil ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Some of the boats going through there would have to go through American territory as I understand it. But I did not charge the hon. member for South Lanark with saying that.

Mr. J. D. REID. I said a boat coming from the head of the canal would have to go through American waters. If the minister is so loyal, how is it that a vessel cannot go between Prescott and Kingston without going through American waters ?

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend should not be so impetuous. I am pointing out that evidently since recess the little differences that existed between my hon. friends have been amicably adjusted, and they seem to harmonize once more regarding the Cornwall canal.

Mr. HAGGART. Remember Shakespeare's motto about brevity. For goodness' sake, be short.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am perhaps imitating my hon. friends.

Mr. CLARKE. A good dinner is supposed to lubricate business.

Mr. EMMERSON. I should take occasion to inquire into the figures presented by my hon. friend and may have occasion to refer to them.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister says that he would be accused of disloyalty if he advocated the proposition of the ex-Minister of Railways. I drew the attention of this government year after year to the fact that if they went on with the work at the Galops Rapids, it would have to be all done in American territory. Notwithstanding that fact, they are now paying money for dredging that is all done in American territory. The next item that follows this asks for money to be spent in dredging a channel through American territory. Any boat that ever entered that channel must necessarily go through American territory, either going down or coming up the river. In this case his loyalty is not so great as it is in the other, where the expenditure has already been made. Now the minister says that the increased cost of operation is owing to the increase of business and the employment of a larger staff. I make this statement, that there are no more locks on the Cardinal canal or on the Williamsburg canal than there were in 1895. On the Farran's Point canal there was one lock in 1896, and there is only one to-day, the only difference is that it has been enlarged.

Mr. EMMERSON. There are two locks on the Farran's Point canal, the old one and the new one.

Mr. J. D. REID. The old one was taken away, no boat goes through that.

Mr. EMMERSON. Then it is a question of veracity between my hon. friend and the superintendent of the canal and the deputy minister. I assume that my hon. friend is labouring under some misapprehension.

Mr. J. D. REID. That is news to me. I have gone up and down the canal very often. Then there were two locks on the Williamsburg canal in 1896 and there are two locks to-day. Is that right ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is right. You have struck it for once.

Mr. J. D. REID. On the Cardinal canal there were three locks in 1896, and there are two now. Am I right in that ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Three on the Galops.

Mr. J. D. REID. When the Cardinal canal was built there was only one lock at Iroquois, one at Cardinal and one at the head of the canal. The new lock at Iroquois was built much higher so that they could do away with the lock at Cardinal and there was this new lock built at the head of the canal. The level between Iroquois and the head of the canal is now the same and there is one lock less. The old lock around by the other way has been abandoned, there is no reason why an official of any kind should be employed on that lock, so that when the hon. minister speaks of that as one lock, he refers to a lock at which there is not one dollar expended and at which there is not an official. I would like to know where the other lock is on the Iroquois canal if there are three.

Mr. EMMERSON. In the chief engineer's report the mileage of the Galops canal is given as 7½ miles and the number of locks as three. That does not include this old lock to which my hon. friend refers. There is one at Iroquois, the large lock which is mentioned, and at the head, or the entrance, there are two locks.

Mr. J. D. REID. There are two locks together but the same crew manage them.

Mr. EMMERSON. That makes three locks.

Mr. J. D. REID. Well, there are two together.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is not a question as to the number of men. I was speaking as to the number of locks.

Mr. J. D. REID. That is another lock on the outside. I did not get that far.

Mr. EMMERSON. You were right before but you seem to have missed that one.

Mr. J. D. REID. I said there were two locks at the head of the canal going west. There are only two there, one less than there was before. Then, there is another lock going down on the outside of the river. That makes three.

Mr. EMMERSON. Then there is the old lock.

Mr. J. D. REID. The old lock is not used, so that there are no more locks on the Williamsburg canal. It is true there are two on the Farran's Point canal. If there are two there that will make one lock more. With practically the same number of locks or with just one more why should it cost the department $15,246 to run them when they were formerly operated for $9,567? The hon. minister states that the reason is that there is more traffic. In 1896 I venture to say that the number of boats, and that means traffic for the employees, passing up and down these old canals was three times more than it was last year. The reason of that is that the canals were so much smaller that a boat drawing eight or nine feet was all that could go through them. A boat carrying 20,000 bushels was all that could go up or down these canals while to-day the boats that go up and down these canals carry from 60,000 to 70,000 bushels and the result is that one large boat handles as much traffic now as three smaller ones did in 1896. On the St. Lawrence to-day there does not appear to be nearly as many boats and I am sure that there are not so many boats passing up and down as in 1896. At that time there were a great many barges going up and down the river but to-day there are hardly any barges whatever. The result is that the actual work on these canals involved in the opening and shutting of locks is not half as much as it was in 1896. Therefore, there is no reason why the increase should take place in the operating expenses of these canals which we find at the present time. I claim that it is merely extravagance on the part of the government to increase the staff in the way that is has been increased from 1896 to the present time. I want the hon. minister to state whether it is his intention to keep in his position the collector of canal tolls at Cardinal when no canal tolls are collected. Not one dollar did the collector at Cardinal collect, but he received last year twelve months salary amounting to $699.99. He received for Sundays 24 hours at 15 cents and 429 hours at 20 cents, postage, and post office orders $5.96, rent of post office box 50 cents, office cleaning, $2.90, coal, $13.50, horse-hire, travel, &c., $2.15; sundries $1.24, making a total of $1,028.49. At Port Colborne we do not see any Sunday labour; at Port Dalhousie they have a little Sunday work, and at Cornwall, the collector has no Sunday work. The canals are closed up on Sunday and how is it that this officer has Sunday work? He has no tolls to collect, but his salary is paid.

Mr. EMMERSON. In the first place it is necessary to continue the collectors at these points in order that a record may be kept.

Mr. J. D. REID. Of what?

Mr. EMMERSON. The making of the canals free to the people for a period of years is an experiment so that it may be tested. In the meantime it is necessary to have a record and these men are employed. They have to give their time in the same way even though the government do not collect tolls. I think an answer to all that has been said by my hon. friend can be found in the report of the Department of Railways and Canals for 1903, part II, page 25. The hon. gentleman refers to the Sault Ste. Marie canal. I find that in 1895 there was a payment of $3,432.73 for staff. The canal had only been opened for a month or so during the year so that that is not for a year's operation. In 1896 it cost $16,074.70 for staff. In 1903 at the same place it cost $16,077.22 for staff. There is an increase of $2.30.

Mr. J. D. REID. You have struck it right this time.

Mr. EMMERSON. I strike it right every time when it comes to figures.

Mr. J. D. REID. No, you do not.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend knows that under the system in vogue along the canals the operators get an increased wage over that paid by the former government and they also get a free house or house rental allowed. These increased wages must necessarily be taken into consideration.

Mr. J. D. REID. Did they not get house rent before ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am informed not.

Mr. J. D. REID. They always got a government house on the other canals free before.

Mr. EMMERSON. Only a very few.

Mr. J. D. REID. On the Williamsburg canal they always have had government houses free of rent.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am informed that some of them received that, but that it was not general. Since this government came into power it has been made general, and therefore the cost to the country has increased. The cost of material for repairs has been increased. Wherever lumber has to be used the expense is much greater. Generally labour for repairs is much more expensive now than it was, so that there is very little in what my hon. friend has said.

Mr. J. D. REID. I know for a fact that prior to 1896 every lockmaster and lock labourer on the Williamsburg canal either had a free house or was allowed, I think, $50 per annum to pay for a rented house. That was the case all along the Williamsburg canal.

Mr. EMMERSON. I said there were some instances, but that that system did not prevail on the canals generally. My hon. friend was making a charge as to the increased expense all along the canal system.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like the minister to make his statement definite, in order that I may make inquiries so that we can discuss it next session.

Mr. EMMERSON. I shall have a complete list prepared.

Mr. J. D. REID. The hon. gentleman has stated that there has been an increased traffic on these canals. Would he give us a statement of the number of vessels that passed through during the season of navigation of 1903 and the season of 1896 ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I was rather assuming that the traffic would be greater in these years than before. I do not think that that argument is very material when I come to reflect on it, because the men have to be there, night and day, whether one vessel or twenty pass through the canal during the twenty-four hours. It may be that while the number of boats has not increased, owing to the fact that larger boats are used, a great deal more freight is carried through the canals, as one boat now will carry as much as half a dozen would in years gone by. The canals have been deepened in many instances, and therefore can accommodate a larger class of boats ; but, after all, so far as the staff is concerned, the number of boats is not material.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like the minister to bring down with the other statement a list showing the number of boats passing through the canals in 1896 and 1903.

Mr. EMMERSON. I will get one for all of the seasons ; it would be an interesting record.

Mr. J. D. REID. I understand that the government have arranged to open and close the gates on the Cornwall canal by electricity.

Mr. EMMERSON. They propose to.

Mr. J. D. REID. Are they doing it now ? Yet the staff has been increased ; there are more men on the locks than in 1896, when they had to open the gates by hand power.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not think that is the case, but I will get the statistics for my own satisfaction. I think they are taking into consideration the question of the advisability of reducing the number of hands in view of the use of electrical power.

Mr. J. D. REID. In 1896 on the Cornwall canal they had a lockmaster and four men on account of boats running both ways up and down. Now they have the electrical power, and, as I understand, one man is supposed to manage the whole affair, because there is nothing to do, and yet there are more men on each lock than there were in 1896 when the men had to open the locks with a windlass. I understand that the number of employees has been increased.

Mr. EMMERSON. I shall obtain that information.

Mr. J. D. REID. It is apparent that the government have increased the cost of opening and shutting the gates in the Cornwall canal very materially since 1896. I would ask the minister when the supplementaries come up for discussion to bring down these statements for which we have asked, so that we can go into this matter again.

Galops rapids—to complete channel, $40,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is a revote of $40,000, the unexpended portion of $75,000 which was appropriated last year. This is to complete the formation of the channel in the Galops rapids. A large amount of drilling and blasting has been done, but the material has not been excavated. The work is being done by the Gilbert Company. The channel is 3,000 feet long, 200 feet wide and 17 feet deep. The amount expended up to the 1st of May, 1904, was, $878,441.85. The estimated cost of completing the channel, including this $40,000, is $75,000, that is, assuming that an estimate made in February last that $35,000 of the $75,000 would be expended before the 30th of June, 1904, turns out to have been correct.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have been in this House now some thirteen years, and each and every year the minister gets up and makes the same statement, that it will take some $40,000 or $50,000 to complete this channel, and that it will be completed within the next year, when the fact is that this is just being carried on in the interest of the contractors. Does the minister know when this work was started ? It was started by the Mackenzie government in 1878, to make a new channel to allow large vessels to go through, and it is not ready yet. If we are to wait until these contractors will have it ready, the minister can make up his mind to wait for another quarter of a century.

Mr. EMMERSON. Was the contract entered into in 1878 ?

Mr. J. D. REID. I think that was the year in which it was started, and they have been working at it ever since with the exception of two or three years. I would like to ask the minister what arrangement has been made with the contractors for carrying on the work. The original contract specified that they were to be paid so much per yard for excavating the rock.

Mr. EMMERSON. They get $8.40 per yard for excavating and removing the rock.

Mr. J. D. REID. I thought the channel had been completed, and that they were simply removing the loose rock.

Mr. EMMERSON. They are paid $8.40 a yard, which includes blasting, lifting and carrying away the rock.

Mr. J. D. REID. If the hon. minister looks up the records he will see that their original contract was to make that channel 14 feet deep. They were paid some $170,000 for going below grade in order to make it 14 feet deep. They have been paid in full for that ; but during the past two or three years the government have claimed that owing to the swift water running down between the islands, the loose rock would be carried into this channel, and that it was this loose rock which this firm were dredging. But no loose rock can be carried in there, because the dam has been built above and there is still water at that point, so that there is nothing to wash down. If it was worth $8.40 a yard to blast and excavate the rock, why is it worth $8.40 a yard to take out the loose rock ? I doubt if there is any. Last year the government had a very nice deal with this firm to pay them $425 per day for the use of the dredge ; but if they are getting $8.40 a yard for removing loose rock, they are doing still better. I venture to say that the Minister of Railways and Canals dare not leave that contract open to competition. If he does, he will get that loose rock excavated for less than $2 a yard. What did the government pay for blasting and dredging rock under the contract of W. A. Allan ? $4.25 a yard. The dam has been placed across the islands, so that there is no current there now.

Mr. EMMERSON. The dam is not completed.

Mr. J. D. REID. It is completed. It was completed last year, so far as not allowing that water to go through is concerned. I walked across that dam last year from one side to the other, and I venture to say that the deputy minister will not say that there is any swift water there. Surely the minister will not offer that as an excuse for paying $8.40 a yard now. If these gentlemen were paid in full for blasting and dredging this out to 17 feet, why are they paid again for the same work ? Why is that necessary ? Their engineer certified to it and they got paid in cash for it.

Mr. EMMERSON. When were they paid?

Mr. J. D. REID. They were paid year after year for any work they did of this kind. The certificates of the department show it.

Mr. EMMERSON. During all the years since 1878 ?

Mr. J. D. REID. Yes, and I will tell you what happened. When the Cornwall canal enlargement came on, these same men took a contract on the canal and got a certificate from the engineers in charge that this channel was perfect, and the government took it off their hands and notified steamboat men that boats drawing 14 feet of water could go safely through, but it turned out that they had not dredged it all out. There were spots where there was only ten feet of water, but they knew the channel would never be used for the reason that years ago the ex-Minister of Railways decided to have this outside lock, of which we were speaking a few minutes ago, put right at the rapids, so that vessels could lock there and avoid these dangerous rapids. Therefore this dangerous canal was never used. Steamboat men and insurance men knew that this canal was useless and that they could not use it, even if there were seventeen feet of water in it. But they offered, if the government would experiment by running a steamboat down the channel, drawing fourteen feet of water, and drawing a tow, to run vessels down. But the government would not assume the responsibility. After my explaining the matter in the House, I remember well when the steam barge 'Niagara' went down loaded with lumber, and was turned in the channel and went down backwards, and from that day to this there has never been a steamboat run down that channel except some small propeller drawing only a few feet of water. After I showed the House that there was only ten feet of water in the channel and demanded an investigation, the government appointed Mr. Kennedy, engineer of Montreal harbour, to investigate, and he proved that the statement I made in this House was exactly true. He proved that there was only ten feet of water in the channel and in quite a number of spots only nine feet and ten feet, although the contractors had been paid in full for dredging it out to fourteen feet. So we are today paying these contractors for excavating in what is practically still water $8.40 a yard, and we are paying them that price for blasting and excavating work which had already been paid for. Is it the present minister who made this agreement, because I cannot believe that any sane man would ever make such a contract, and surely there must be something wrong if he ever did make an agreement of that kind? Did he really make that agreement himself?

Mr. EMMERSON. The work had been going on under agreement before I took charge of the department. Of course I am not shirking any responsibility, but simply answering the question of my hon. friend. The work has been carried on under an agreement made and acted upon during the years he has spoken of.

Mr. HAGGART. When was the agreement made?

Mr. EMMERSON. It was a new agreement made in 1899 or about that time.

Mr. J. D. REID. It has been made since last session. They were not at work last year.

Mr. EMMERSON. They did not work last year, but that did not cancel the agreement.

Mr. J. D. REID. That agreement of $8.40 per yard was completed, and they were working at $425 a day two years ago. Now they have got back to the old agreement of $8.40 per yard.

Mr. EMMERSON. The only time $425 per day was paid was when they were surveying.

Mr. J. D. REID. I can prove by the Auditor General's Report that they were paid $425 per day for two or three seasons, and they did not get $425 per day when surveying. I can prove that if necessary. That is a statement reflecting on the ex-Minister of Railways, namely, that they got $425 per day when they were surveying. That is not the fact. They were paid something like $60 or $70 a day. The ex-Minister of Railways and Canals knows that.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is not the Kennedy matter, as I am informed by my deputy.

Mr. J. D. REID. Do you mean to say that they received $425 per day for surveying?

Mr. EMMERSON. And for removing some loose materials.

Mr. J. D. REID. Season after season they were paid $425 per day.

Mr. EMMERSON. The arrangement now is $8.40 per yard. That would be a reasonable price. I know that after competition very recently in Halifax, we awarded a contract at over $9 in that harbour.

Mr. J. D. REID. What depth of water—about forty or fifty feet?

Mr. EMMERSON. About 25 feet.

Mr. J. D. REID. And this is about ten or eleven feet.

Mr. EMMERSON. The price was $9 right in the harbour of Halifax where they could have no current and not very much tide, and whatever tide they would have would be an advantage.

Mr. J. D. REID. There must have been an estimate made of the quantity of rock to be excavated before this was let at $8.40 per yard.

Mr. HAGGART. There was no rock to be excavated. The work was done and paid for.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like to know what the estimate was based on. There must have been some estimate before this work was ready. What was there to be excavated and how many yards?

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister states that this is for blasting and excavating. But long ago that contract was performed. The prism quantities were paid for, and the contractor was paid for taking out this excavation and an extra foot paid for besides. Sometimes he necessarily had to go two or three feet below the prism, but he was paid in full for all the quantities that were in the prism and outside of it. What is it he is excavating now that he is being paid for?

Mr. EMMERSON. This is the actual excavation to bring it to a proper depth. The work is carried on, as I am advised, under the strict supervision of the officers of the department. Measurements are accurately taken and the payments are made on those measurements at $8.40. It strikes me that $8.40 is reasonable enough. The whole trend of discussion on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite has been to demonstrate that this work has been unnecessary.

Mr. HAGGART. It has nothing to do with the necessity of it, but it is a question of work actually done.

Mr. EMMERSON. But that is the trend of the argument—that it is unnecessary. Here is a work that was determined upon away back about the seventies, or before that, for all I know, and, for year after year, under succeeding governments, it has been carried on to the stage where $75,000 will complete the excavation. It is a question whether it will be advisable to complete the work or whether you will throw away $878,000, which Canada has spent upon it, and not attempt to use the channel. It seems to me the part of wisdom to expend the sum I have named to complete the work and utilize the channel.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister avoids the question I have put to him. Here is a contract entered into for the purpose of deepening the canal to 14 feet with a certain width. The government paid the full amount for that contract. It was extended to a further depth of one foot. The government paid the full amount for that. Has the depth or the width been increased, and has a new contract been made ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is 300 feet wide.

Mr. HAGGART. What was the original width ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It was originally 200 feet wide.

Mr. HAGGART. And it was made deeper. But has not that all been paid for according to the quantities long before this ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. HAGGART. When was the new contract entered into ?

Mr. EMMERSON. As near as I can discover, it was in 1899 that it was determined to widen it, and the contract was renewed with that view.

Mr. HAGGART. Notwithstanding the statement of the hon. minister's predecessor in the House, that he would do nothing of the kind—that he would not enter into any new contracts and that he would see to it that expenditure ceased altogether on this work ?

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend is assuming——

Mr. HAGGART. No, I heard the statement, and I will quote it from 'Hansard.'

Mr. SPROULE. The question arose as to the 14-foot channel, and the minister said they had the depth and the width that was required. I read the item from the paper showing that some one disputed that, and he asserted most emphatically that the measurements had been carried out and all they were doing was sweeping the bottom of the channel so as to take away the pieces of rock or other material that had been carried down by the current in the spring. He said that the width and depth had been gained, and he announced to the world that any vessel not drawing more than 14 feet could pass through that channel.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister will find the passage at page 4301 of 'Hansard' of 1902 :

> Mr. SPROULE. Somebody must have done it. Surely it was done under the instructions of the engineer.
>
> The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. I want to be understood explicitely by the committee. I stated at the last meeting of the committee when this item was referred to, that the contractor was notified that we were not going to continue the work.

Mr. EMMERSON. This vote last year was secured with a view to going on. It was a vote of $75,000, $35,000 of which was estimated to have been expended up to June 30th. To complete the work, as I am informed, clean up the channel and remove all possible obstructions will cost the $40,000 which we are asking for now and $35,000 additional.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. minister confine himself to the question I asked ? When was the contract entered into for the purpose of widening this channel ?

Mr. EMMERSON. As I am advised, the original contract was entered into years ago, and under that contract work has been done year by year, and when the work was not performed, of course, the contract was not in operation, but it was not cancelled. Then, when the work was authorized by a vote of parliament last session, the department went on under that original contract.

Mr. HAGGART. Then there was no new contract ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. HAGGART. Then the minister was misinformed ?

Mr. J. D. REID. Is it not a fact that for a couple of seasons after the contract had been taken off the hands of the government, after the work had been completed and the $8.40 a yard contract was finished, the government made another contract with these gentlemen to clear out this channel and paid them by the day ? Instead of paying them $8.40 per yard, they paid them $425 a day, and in that way they paid them $70,000, $80,000 or $100,000 for work of this kind.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would not like to say what was done. I can furnish a copy of the contract. My hon. friend is asking me whether there was such a contract. I will get that information. I do not want to make statements that are not in accordance with the very letter of the contract. Therefore, instead of answering my hon.

friend, I will furnish a copy of the contract before the supplementaries are considered.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not believe that the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals would ever make that contract on his own responsibility. It may be all right for the minister to put it on the deputy minister.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not put it on the deputy. My hon. friend should not make that statement. I have no such thought in my mind. The deputy is not in a position to give me information definitely, and therefore I do not care to make any statements that are not in accord with the very letter of the contract.

Mr. J. D. REID. This original contract for $8.40 a yard was not made by the deputy minister, it was made by the late Mr. Page.

Mr. EMMERSON. No contract can be made by the minister without the authority of Council, and the deputy minister would have no power to make one.

Mr. J. D. REID. I assume that. I do not believe the deputy minister would ever recommend either the $8.40 or the $425 arrangement. If he has done it, it was to satisfy the minister; because in my opinion this matter is not continued from year to year unless there is some deal in the matter. It is very strange that this was allowed to stand for a couple of years, until last fall when an election was supposed to be coming on, and then this old contract springs up again, and is continued, and will be continued I suppose, until this country does something to stop it.

Mr. EMMERSON. I suppose my hon. friend's suspicions arise from his familiarity with the Conservative regime during all these years that his friends were in power.

Mr. J. D. REID. This contract was originally let by the Mackenzie government.

Mr. EMMERSON. But it was continued by the succeeding government.

Mr. J. D. REID. It was carried on through the Conservative regime because there had to be a channel cut through those rapids, or else some other means would have had to be adopted by which vessels could pass through. I have asked the minister what is the estimated quantity of excavation for this work under the contract, and what the total cost is to be, and unless we get that information, I shall ask the minister to allow this item to stand until we do get it, otherwise we will have to discuss the matter until he consents to produce it.

Mr. SPROULE. Two years ago the minister said this contract was closed and that they would notify the contractor to that effect. I assume that was done. Now if that was all settled, how could it be opend up again at the pleasure of one side or the other? The contract was closed. Anything done after that must have been done by some new agreement.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister says this is going on under a contract made in 1878, that this is an extension of the contract for the widening of the prism. But he must remember that the contract was virtually terminated by myself. A commissioner, Mr. Kennedy, was appointed for the purpose of finding out whether the contractor had performed the terms of the contract, and he found that the proper quantities had not been taken out. Then the contractor went on and took out the proper quantities. After that contract was finished, the contractor went on for a couple of seasons, not under the original contract at all, but was paid at so much a day for the work that was done. Then the minister comes in and says: I will inquire whether the facts you state are correct or not. Finally he tells the House: I will tell the contractor that his contract is finished and that he will get no more money upon it. In face of that statement the contract is renewed, the old contract of 1878, without tenders, after its expiry. We do not know what the new contract is. The minister says it is an extension of the contract of 1878, but we do not know how the prism is enlarged, or its depth. We want the actual quantities. He comes here without any information and asks the House for a vote of money for a wholly useless undertaking. The money that is spent upon this job is uselessly spent. The utility of it was done away with when I put a lock into the rapids for the purpose of enabling vessels to go in and pass the rapids. They use the lock entirely and yet this expenditure goes on from day to day. These men are paid the enormous sum of nearly $500 per day and then they get a contract at $8.60 per yard. Does the hon. minister say upon the advice of the deputy minister that the contract is enlarged? I understood him to say that the prism is being widened or deepened. If it is so let us get at the exact facts. How much is the prism widened or deepened and what is the new contract? We should know this before a dollar of the vote goes through.

Mr. EMMERSON. The information which is asked for is such as I have stated, I did not anticipate it would be required. I have stated the price and the quantities I will give to my hon. friend again.

Mr. HAGGART. Go on to another item if you cannot give us this information. We want this information before this item passes.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not think my hon. friends will be unreasonable.

Mr. SPROULE. This is getting to be pretty much of a burlesque on parliament.

Mr. EMMERSON. This contract was entered into many years ago.

Mr. SPROULE. And closed many years ago.

Mr. EMMERSON. Apparently it was not closed. It was not a contract of which time appeared to be the essence.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman's predecessor said it was closed two years ago.

Mr. EMMERSON. No, as read by the hon. member who read it from the record of the House, the Minister of Railways and Canals of that day did not make that statement. I did not understand that to be the meaning.

Mr. SPROULE. Did he not make the statement that he would notify the contractor that the contract was closed, and that he would spend no more money on it? Was not that the statement that was read here? That is the statement, as I understood it.

Mr. HAGGART. Here is the statement, and I will read it again for the hon. minister:

> No, I want to be understood explicitly by the committee. I stated at the last meeting of the committee when this item was referred to, that the contractor was notified that we were not going to continue the work.

Mr. INGRAM. What date is that?

Mr. HAGGART. May 6, 1902.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is estimated that there are about 9,000 cubic yards of material to be removed from there, and that under the contract under which they are operating we have paid out during the fiscal year ending 30th June the sum of $35,000.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask the hon. minister if that has been paid out on the basis of the old contract or of the new?

Mr. EMMERSON. I stated that the estimated payment up to June 30th is $35,000. The work has been going on during the month of June and parliament has provided the money for it. I do not want items to be forced through this committee. I want to furnish all possible information, but I think we should make some progress, and I think I can furnish my hon. friend with copies of the contract itself. When I can tell the committee what the contract is, what the arrangement is under which they are working and for which the department is liable, and for which purpose we are voting the money, it seems to me that I am meeting all the expectations that can be formed of a minister placed in a like situation. I have endeavoured to give that information fully. To me it seems to resolve itself down to this point, that it is a question whether the successive governments of this country, having paid out the sum of money which they have for this work, shall halt when they are within $75,000 of the goal, or whether they shall throw entirely away all that has been expended because they feel that the expenditure of $75,000 was not expedient.

Mr. SPROULE. When we were at the goal two years ago?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am informed that we were not.

Mr. SPROULE. There must have been some strange fabrication then or there must be now.

Mr. EMMERSON. I certainly think, from the statements given to me, that we have not reached the goal, and that it will be necessary to have this money expended in order to finish the work.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. minister made the statement that a certain amount of money was paid out during the last fiscal year. I asked him if it was paid out under the contract made with the Mackenzie government in 1878 or under the new contract at so many dollars per day.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, it was paid out under precisely the same terms as contained in the contract entered into originally with the Mackenzie government.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that the original contract provided for the payment of so many hundred dollars per day?

Mr. EMMERSON. No; it provided for the payment of $8.40 per cubic yard. Those are the terms upon which the money has been paid out during the last fiscal year.

Mr. BLAIN. When the matter was up for discussion in 1902, and when Mr. Blair referred to the item, the statement was made in committee then that there was a new contract, and that the contract was for $425 per day. My hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. Reid) says that we paid for 298 days in that very year, not under the original contract, as my hon. friend has stated, but under the new contract at $425 per day. What I want to know is when the original contract ceased, when the new contract was entered into, and whether the money expended last year was paid under the new contract?

Mr. EMMERSON. The money paid during the last fiscal year was paid according to the terms of the original contract entered into in 1878. That is that for the work performed of drilling, blasting and excavation, we paid at the price of $8.40 per cubic yard, and it is upon that basis that the work will be carried on during this year if the vote of $40,000 is provided.

Mr. HAGGART. I will ask the hon. minister just to listen to this. He says that he continued the payment under the contract made in 1878. As my hon. friend has drawn attention to it, here are the payments on the Galops canal, one in 1900-1, 298 days at $425 per day, or $126,654.

Mr. EMMERSON. My statement had reference to the current year. I have been answering my hon. friend in respect to the year ending 30th June, 1904.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister says that he is doing this under the contract made in 1878, and leads the House to believe that that contract is still continuing. The Minister of Railways stated in answer to Mr. Sproule :

He was notified before the 1st of July, 1901; and he had no authority whatever, expressed or implied, for continuing the work after that date.

Then this question was asked by Mr. Sproule.

Why should the hon. gentleman now ask for a sum to pay him if he had no authority ?

To which the minister replied :

I must be lacking in the faculty of explaining myself if the hon. gentleman has not understood me. I say that I am not asking for anything more than sufficient to pay the drawback that was due and retained in the department, as is usual in all contracts, for work prior to the 1st of July, 1901.

Then I said :

I understand what the hon. minister says perfectly well. Does he mean to say that the work done in 1901 amounted to $300,000? It was a daily contract, so much per day, and there could be no drawback in paying for anything before 1901, and there was a drawback for work done to the extent of $500,000 in 1902.

What I want to draw the attention of the minister to is the fact that the contract was virtually finished under my regime; I ended the contract. The contractor was not re-employed under the contract of 1878, but he continued the work under an agreement with the department at so much per day. He received his payment per day for a couple of years. Then the minister assured the House that not one cent would be paid this man in 1901. If the contract continued while he was doing the day work surely it was finished when the notice was given by the department of the termination of the contract in 1901. The justification that the department now attempts to make for this payment was that it was under a contract of 1878 which has continued up to the present day.

Mr. SPROULE. And the ten per cent had been paid back on the completion of all transactions.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister must see that he must give the fullest information to the House especially in reference to the renewal or extension of the contract which he says he made under the contract of 1878. This money must have been expended for an extension of the prism either in width or depth, and he should tell us to what extent that has been made.

Mr. EMMERSON. Is it because my hon. friend wishes for a copy of that contract of 1878 that he desires this to stand ?

Mr. REID. That was furnished seven or eight years ago. What I want is a copy of the agreement under which they are paid $425 per day.

Mr. EMMERSON. Do you wish a copy of the extension of 1899.

Mr. J. D. REID. As I understand and have been informed by the minister's predecessor, the old contract was cancelled and a new contract was entered into for this work at $425 per day. The Auditor General's Report shows a contract :

For the use of all plant required in testing and surveying the bottom of the existing 'new channel' and the removal of all loose material therefrom, which may be found above or within the original contract grade or limits (exclusive of 'rock in situ' above said original contract grade, provision being made in this contract for the removal thereof at the expense of the contractors) (days of 12 hours) days, $126,654.25.

There were 298 days in that one season. That was every day of the season at $425 per day amounting to $126,654.25.

Providing, fitting up and maintaining the levelling and testing machinery, as specified. Allowance on bulk sum of $1,000, $500.

Now, then, listen to this :

Rock excavation by drilling, blasting and dredging in deepening and widening on the south side of existing channel, through upper bar, by the removal of a part of the 'Eddy Reef' to ensure a 14-foot navigation at low water, $86,520.

It was only when we saw the Auditor General's Report that we knew that a new contract had been made and now we find on inquiry to-night that there has been another contract made because the original contract was cancelled and a new contract entered into at $425 a day. That contract has not been cancelled because we are now paying this amount.

Mr. EMMERSON. If my hon. friend objects to going on with this vote without a copy of this contract I think he is quite entitled to it and I am perfectly willing that the vote should stand. I shall bring down everything that is involved in this.

Mr. INGRAM. I would ask why it is that after the statement made by Mr. Blair when Minister of Railways and Canals that all that was asked for in the estimates was the drawback, there was no appropriation in the estimates for this work at all in 1902-3. If that be true what is the reason that the department has again taken it up.

Mr. EMMERSON. I assume this was taken up last year. There was a vote last year with respect to it. The proposed vote this year is for $40,000. The reason I have taken it up this year is that I think the work should be completed when it will only require $75,000 to do it. I am so advised by the chief engineer of the department.

Mr. INGRAM. My hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Reid), who seems to understand this canal pretty well, has stated that this is a useless expenditure. He has stated that the department took the work up again last fall because they thought the general election was coming on.

Mr. EMMERSON. He was only joking when he said that.

Mr. INGRAM. I am putting the different things together and sizing them up in my own way.

Mr. EMMERSON. You are taking it seriously.

Mr. INGRAM. Very. It looks serious. In 1902-3 there was no appropriation because there was no election in sight; but there was an election expected last fall, and an appropriation was put in for this useless work. There was no election last fall, but there is expected to be one this fall, and the idea is to expend $75,000 more on this useless work, all for political effect. That is the whole thing in a nutshell. This is a game of politics. You are spending the people's money for the sole purpose of getting votes.

Mr. EMMERSON. I suppose that has been done right along—that is the reason all this money was expended in 1878 to 1896, and from 1896 down to the present time—by a parity of reasoning.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is that serious ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I want to carry the joke as far as it will go.

Item allowed to stand.

St. Lawrence rivers and canals—reducing shoals west of Cornwall canal, $25,500.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is a revote. This amount is to be expended in reducing shoals or obstructions and doing some necessary excavation. The total expenditure in connection with that up to the 1st of May, 1904, was $457,686.69.

Mr. HAGGART. How much will it take to finish the work ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There is supposed to be about 37,000 cubic yards yet to be done, at an estimated cost of 70 cents.

Mr. INGRAM.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have been asked by several marine men if it would not be possible to have what is called Mud Island Shoal at the foot of Carlton Island, near Kingston, excavated. I think it is composed of mud or loose earth which could easily be removed. I know that one steamer, the 'John C. Howard,' worth $150,000, with a cargo worth $50,000, grounded on this shoal and suffered serious damage. All the large vessels when they go to Kingston have to cross this shoal from the main channel, which is on the American side. This is the first opportunity I have had of bringing the matter before the House. It is a very small matter and perhaps the minister could inquire into it and provide for it in the supplementary estimates. From what I have been informed, I judge that the work will not cost more than a couple of thousand dollars. The Americans are putting their channel in splendid shape, and I think the minister might very well provide for this small item, which is really important to make our channel safe.

Mr. EMMERSON. I will call the attention of the Public Works Department to the matter. The dredging or reduction of shoals in the Department of Railways and Canals is incidental to the canal expenditure. All dredging not connected with the canals is under the supervision and control of the Department of Public Works. However, I will confer with that department on the subject.

Electric light power plant, Welland canal, $100,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. The total estimated cost of this plant is $250,000. $100,000 was appropriated last year, and the total expenditure up to the 1st of May was $10,766.88. It was estimated that the balance would be paid before the 1st of July, but it will require $100,000 more. The Welland Canal will be illuminated this season by about 250 arc lights of 2,000 candle power, distributed between Port Dalhousie and Port Colborne, a distance of twenty-seven miles. At each of the twenty-five locks there will be electric arc lights, while along the banks of the canal there will be a light every 400 feet. In addition there will be special equipment of arc lights to the piers at the head and foot of the canal. It is expected that the new lighting system will be in operation by July 1st.

Mr. HAGGART. Where is your plant located ?

Mr. EMMERSON. At Decew Falls.

Mr. HAGGART. What do you pay for your horse-power ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The supply of electric energy will be obtained from the Lincoln Light and Power Company, of St. Catharines, the power being generated at Decew Falls by the Hamilton Cataract Company. The price is $14 per horse-power.

Mr. HAGGART. You do all the connections and put in all the motors and plant ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, tenders were asked for all that material.

Mr. LANCASTER. How long has the contract to run ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Ten years, if I remember correctly ?

Mr. INGRAM. The lighting ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The power.

Mr. HAGGART. They do the lighting themselves.

Mr. LANCASTER. Ten years from when?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is supposed to take effect the 1st of July this year, when we have the material all completed.

Mr. LANCASTER. How much do they get a year for it ?

Mr. EMMERSON. $14 per horse-power. I am giving this information from memory and it will be subject to correction. We simply get the horse-power and all the rest is done by the department.

Mr. SPROULE. You can calculate what the cost will be.

Mr. EMMERSON. 25 cents a light is the estimate.

Mr. LANCASTER. Who looks after the repairing of the lights ?

Mr. EMMERSON. We will need a man to supervise—an electrical man—it may be possible that this can be done by the superintending engineer.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is that the intention ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The matter has been discussed. I thought possibly it might be advisable to employ an electrician to have sole charge. Then the other view occurred that possibly it could be in charge of the superintending engineer.

Mr. LANCASTER. Who is in charge now ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The works are being put in under the supervision of Mr. Parks, electrician, of Toronto. He is the consulting expert. The construction is under the direction of the superintending engineer. Mr. Parks is the expert upon whose advice the work is being done.

Mr. LANCASTER. Are there not several expert electricians living in St. Catharines, right where the work is being done ?

Mr. EMMERSON. As Mr. Parks is the regular electrician of the department all through this section of Canada, I did not think it was necessary to employ an outside man.

Mr. LANCASTER. I suppose there are several officers assisting him ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. LANCASTER. Who is it intended shall do the work after this plant is installed ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have no one appointed and have no intention other than that somebody will be employed to attend to that work.

Mr. LANCASTER. Then it is not intended that the workmen on the canal shall do it ?

Mr. EMMERSON. If the workmen on the canal can do it and at the same time do their other duties, they will do it.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the intention of the government ? Is it intended that they shall or shall not do it ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The matter has not yet been determined.

Mr. HAGGART. Do you intend to use the power for opening and shutting gates and moving bridges ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the estimated horse-power that will be required for the whole ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not the information. That was given last year, and the officer who has the matter in hand did not think it necessary to be here.

Mr. HAGGART. You are sure you can do it for $250,000 ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is Mr. Parks's estimate.

Mr. HAGGART. You have only voted $200,000—$100,000 this year and $100,000 last year.

Mr. EMMERSON. An unprovided balance to complete—it will take $50,000.

Mr. HAGGART. If it is to be finished by 1st of July, why does not the hon. gentleman take enough to pay for it ?

Mr. EMMERSON. When these estimates were made up the work had not proceeded far enough to warrant us in asking for an exact vote. A supplementary vote will be necessary.

Mr. HAGGART. How many lights do you require ?

Mr. EMMERSON. At each of the twenty-five locks there will be six electric arc lights, and along the banks of the canal there will be a light for every 400 feet. In addition there will be a special equipment of arc lights for the head and foot of the canal.

Mr. LANCASTER. How does this expense compare with what the government have been paying for lighting by gas ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It will cost much more.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would like a more definite statement. There has been very good lighting by gas lamps—four lamps at each lock, two at either end.

Mr. EMMERSON. By gas it has cost $10,000, but those who patronized the canal were constantly complaining. The modern method of lighting canals is by electricity, and if we are to have an up to date system we must have the canals lighted in this way. The cost will be more—there is no use in pretending the contrary. But the demands of the trade must be recognized. Those having occasion to use the canal seemed to think that the government should light the canal in this modern fashion.

Mr. LANCASTER. But the hon. minister has not yet told us what the difference is.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have given $10,000 as the cost of lighting by gas. The cost of electricity will be not less than $15,000, as estimated by the officials.

Mr. LANCASTER. Besides the capital expenditure ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the hon. gentleman say that complaints have been made by the shipping interests that the locks have not been properly lighted ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The better lighting enables them to save time in the operation of the gates. While the lighting of the gates by gas was fairly good, it certainly did not meet the requirements of the traffic, and I am informed that the shipping interests almost unanimously demanded the electric light.

Mr. LANCASTER. I live right there, and I never heard that the locks were not properly lighted, with the four gas lamps at each lock distributed so as to give the best light for opening and closing the gates. I have to come to Ottawa to hear the suggestion that there was any delay or trouble caused by the lighting. I can understand that it may be fashionable to have electric light and, as it is fashionable, it is easy to find some people to say that they want it. Here is a large expenditure of money for the installation of a system and a large annual expenditure to follow. And it replaces a system under which the local gas company, so far as I ever heard, has been giving a satisfactory service. I go along the canal and drive up and down every season, and I have never known one of these gas lamps to be out—wherever you see one you see the four.

Mr. EMMERSON. It was not lighted along the canal, but only at the locks.

Mr. LANCASTER. The locks are all along the canal.

Mr. EMMERSON. There may be quite a distance between them, and vessels had to travel long distances that were not lighted. The fact that these people wanted these lights and were dissatisfied with the old ones is quite consistent with the fact that they did not stop off at St. Catharines and ask my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) to hear their complaints. He says he has to come to Ottawa to find this out. But, the shipping interests would naturally come to Ottawa and make their grievance known to the Department of Railways and Canals. And they were very insistent in their expression of opinion as to not merely the convenience but the necessity of having this light.

Mr. LANCASTER. Where there are no locks ?

Mr. EMMERSON. They want a light almost as much where there are no locks as where there are. They have bridges all along the canal. The speed of a vessel along the canal is governed very much by the facility with which it can get through these bridges. With electric power for the bridges the vessel can make very much better time.

Mr. INGRAM. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that 550 lights is the total, distributing as he has described ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This season about 550 lights of 2,000 candle power, distributed between Port Dalhousie and Port Colborne, a distance of twenty-seven miles.

Mr. INGRAM. The cost with gas is about $10,000, and the cost of electricity for 550 lights at 25 cents per light per night would be between $25,000 and $30,000 ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That includes the power to swing the bridges and gates.

Mr. INGRAM. I am not finding fault with this system of lighting, but trying to get at the difference between the two systems. The minister will pay about $30,000 per annum for electric light, and, besides, he is to pay $14 per horse-power to work the locks. And he has entered into a contract for ten years from 1st July. These statements, I understand, are correct. The hon. gentleman has entered into a ten years contract. I do not know whether the government have a right to cancel that contract. If they have put in such a provision it would be a step in the right direction, because it is well known that the cost per horse-power for electric energy, in view of the great improvement at Niagara Falls, is certain to be very materially reduced, and it would be unwise for the government to enter into a long contract for ten years without introducing a provision for cancelling the contract if they so desired. Is there such a provision in the contract ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. INGRAM. Then the government has been very negligent. You cannot find a municipality in Ontario that will enter into a ten years contract for the supply of electric power in face of the wonderful development of electric energy and the rapid decrease of the cost of such development.

Mr. CAMPBELL. $14 per horse-power is a very low price.

Mr. INGRAM. I am not disputing that. But my hon. friend must remember that the development of electric power at this moment, especially in that neighbourhood, is going on very fast, and the cost is being rapidly reduced, and will be reduced much faster.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I doubt if you could get it much lower.

Mr. INGRAM. We must judge the future by the immediate past. Electric power companies of Niagara Falls to-day are going around among the different municipalities in western Ontario trying to get them to enter into a contract for a long period of time, because they know that the cost of furnishing electrical power is certain to be rapidly reduced. It is only the transmission of this power for long distances that seems to be the great difficulty to overcome at this moment.

Mr. LANCASTER. I can confirm what my hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) has said in regard to the development of electrical energy at Niagara Falls, and I think the government has been negligent of its duty in failing to put in the contract such a clause as he has referred to. I am astonished to find that it has not been done. I understand that in the neighbourhood of St. Catharines, corporations and municipalities, in making their contracts with this very company, say to them : We won't give you this contract unless we have in it a clause by which we can terminate it. But it appears that the government have not asked the company to consent to such a clause being put in. You will not find any village or town or city, or any municipality in the Niagara district, who will make a contract for more than five years without such a clause in it. Everybody in the neighbourhood knows that electrical energy is going to get cheaper all the time, because the cost of the development of that energy is getting cheaper all the time. It is only in its infancy. It seems to me that the government have been remiss in their duty to the people in failing to put in such a clause providing for cancellation of the contract. I venture to say if the government had such a clause in this contract, in five years from now they would be able to get better terms, they would be able to get their electricity 33 per cent cheaper, perhaps 50 per cent cheaper, than they do now. The company would not have objected to putting such a clause in the contract if it had been insisted on.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Lancaster) seems to have changed his base. His first objection was to the use of electricity at all.

Mr. LANCASTER. I never objected to using electricity if it was a good bargain.

Mr. EMMERSON. But when the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) gives him another idea then he goes on to elaborate it. Now I venture to make this assertion, that you could not possibly get any electrical company in Canada to furnish this power as cheaply as we are getting it now unless you gave them a term of years. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen to get up and make such statements, they are very easily made. But, to seriously consider this as a business proposition ; I know something about these matters and I know that twenty-one years is more likely to be the term asked for before companies will go in and place themselves in a position to furnish power. The ten years we have arranged for is a reasonable period. The price charged is very moderate, and I venture to make the statement that there is not anywhere in Canada a more provident contract entered into in regard to electric light.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. minister allow me to tell him that in the present time in the village of Flesherton there is a contract running at $8 per horse-power for five years.

Mr. EMMERSON. That would be for a very small quantity.

Mr. INGRAM. Then a larger quantity ought to be cheaper. I will say to the hon. minister that if he will look into this matter carefully in the next few days I will guarantee him that he will not repeat the statements he made before taking his seat. I am quite willing that the statement which I have made to the committee shall be compared with the minister's statement and I will leave the people of the country to draw their own conclusions.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that this item is to put in the plant ? Is any of it for power, and do I understand the hon. minister to say that the plant will cost a total of about $200,000 ?

Mr. EMMERSON. $250,000.

Mr. BLAIN. The plant will cost $250,000 to light the whole Welland canal ?

Mr. EMMERSON. $250,000 will equip the whole Welland canal with electrical plant.

Mr. BLAIN. I want to draw the hon. minister's attention to the statement that was made when this matter was introduced into the House last year. I want the hon. gentleman's attention.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am trying to give the hon. gentleman my attention. I do not wish to show any discourtesy to my hon. friend.

Mr. BLAIN. This was introduced last year for the first time and the reference to it will be found at page 12,900 of 'Hansard' as follows :

Welland canal, to provide electric light plant, $44,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is this being done by contract and has the contract been let ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It will be done but the work is not yet commenced. We propose to take in this item $55,000 but we have asked in the supplementary estimates a further sum of $45,000, making the estimated cost of the whole undertaking $100,000, which we believe will furnish a complete electric light plant for the whole canal. This estimate is made on the report of an electrical engineer. We expect the work will be done by contract.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, that is all right ; that is for the electric lighting part of it, but there is another part, the power to operate the gates and machinery all along the canal. There is $100,000 for electric lighting and $150,000 for all of the other.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. gentleman say how much the electric light plant will cost ?

Mr. EMMERSON. $250,000 will be required for the electric lighting and power plant. The power plant represents $150,000 and the electric lighting plant represents $100,000, the two representing $250,000.

Mr. INGRAM. May I ask the hon. minister when he expects to complete this power and electric lighting plant ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It was hoped to have it completed by the 1st of July this year, but on account of some delays on the part of the contractors and of disappointment in getting material from some of the manufacturers, delay has occurred. We are urging the work forward as fast as possible.

Mr. INGRAM. I am afraid I have not understood the hon. gentleman. I understood the hon. gentleman entered into a contract for ten years at $14 per horse power. Will he again explain that ? If the lighting is to cost $100,000 and the government is to pay $150,000 for the power plant, where does this contract come in for ten years at $14 per horse-power ?

Mr. EMMERSON. For the power we get to operate this electric lighting and power plant. We are getting the power from the Lincoln Electric Light Company. We provide all the machinery and plant and we simply take the power from them.

Mr. INGRAM. Now, we have it perfectly plain. It is $100,000 for lighting, $150,000 for installing the power plant and you have entered into a contract for furnishing power at $14 per horse-power for ten years.

Mr. EMMERSON. I stated that the contract was to commence on the 1st July. What I meant was that it was to commence when we require the power.

Mr. INGRAM. As soon as you have the plant finished ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, from the time we take the power.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. minister has given an explanation that seems to be satisfactory. He has made a distinction between the power for working the gates and the lighting.

Mr. EMMERSON. That distinction was made in the remarks of last year. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance then explained that he would require $100,000 for the electric lighting plant. This year we ask for electric lighting and power plant $200,000 and then there will be $50,000 which we will have to provide for in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. BLAIN. That is a further explanation.

Mr. EMMERSON. I made that explanation some time ago.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend has stated that last year the hon. Minister of Finance made it quite plain that there would be an electric lighting plant and that the electric lighting plant would cost $100,000 which money was voted. Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to tell us why he puts into this item the electric lighting plant ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Why not put it in ?

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. Minister of Finance last year said that to provide the electric light plant for the Welland canal there would be required $100,000. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals now says that that will complete the electric lighting plant. The $100,000 was voted. Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to tell us why he is now including in this item a sum of money for the electric light plant when it was stated that the $100,000 voted last year would equip the lighting plant ? The item we have before us reads:

Welland electric lighting and power plant, $100,000.

If the hon. Minister of Finance was correct in his statement last year, and if the money voted last year was put into this plant, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals should strike out the words 'electric lighting plant,' and say 'power plant, $150,000.'

Mr. EMMERSON. No; the sums merge together. They are interwoven. It is all connected with the Welland canal. Surely we are not going to split hairs at this time of the night.

Mr. BLAIN. We are not splitting hairs. It is my hon. friend who is splitting hairs.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am not splitting hairs; I am only splitting up the electric lighting from the power.

Mr. BLAIN. That statement was made last year, that this estimate was made on the report of an electrical engineer. Are we to understand that when the electrical engineer was instructed to examine the Welland canal preparatory to the installation of an electric lighting plant there was nothing considered about a power plant at all? I would ask the minister if he would be good enough to give us the two reports of the electrical engineer, the one for the plant for the electric lighting of the canal and the other for the power plant?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think these reports were furnished to the House last year when the matter was discussed, but I shall be very happy to furnish them again.

Mr. BLAIN. There will be no mistake about it? The minister will furnish the two reports to which I have referred?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think they are both included in one.

Mr. BLAIN. And the estimates given by the electrical engineer for the separate works?

Mr. EMMERSON. I will give the whole thing.

Mr. LANCASTER. The minister a few moments ago stated that the old system of lighting was insufficient. Has any accident ever occurred from defective lighting on the Welland canal during the long period it has been in operation?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am not aware of any.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. minister says that complaints were made; people may complain against a thing that is perfectly safe, but their complaints may not be well-founded.

Mr. EMMERSON. Horse cars would have done us, I suppose; we need not have had electric tramways. They got along at one time with tallow candles.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does my hon. friend seriously say that at one time there were horse cars running on the Welland canal? The people of Canada want to have the expenditure of their money treated seriously. They do not want a burlesque in this House.

Mr. EMMERSON. I did not say anything about having horse cars on the Welland canal.

Mr. BLAIN. We were talking about the Welland canal.

Mr. EMMERSON. I was endeavouring to illustrate to my hon. friend the fact that we could get along with gas.

Mr. LANCASTER. We have got a lot from the minister to-night.

Mr. EMMERSON. It was better to have the electric light, and the same rule would apply on all the canals. They are using electric lights on canals everywhere.

Mr. LANCASTER. The only reason which the hon. minister gives for incurring the large increase of expense necessitated by the use of electric lighting on the canal is that the demands of the shipping interests required that there should be electric light; yet the minister confirms the information I had, that there never has been an accident upon the canal because of defective lighting. Bearing that in mind, I would ask the minister if there is any other reason for placing this much larger burden on the people of Canada than the one which he gave?

Mr. SPROULE. What number of horse-power have you contracted for?

Mr. EMMERSON. I cannot recall the number.

Mr. SPROULE. What portion of the year do you require to keep the electric lights going?

Mr. EMMERSON. During the season of navigation only, at the termini and at the bridges.

Mr. SPROULE. What number of months is navigation usually open?

Mr. EMMERSON. From about the 15th of April to about the middle of December, I think.

Item allowed to stand.

Welland canal—to remove obstructions and make other improvements, $225,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is a revote of $30,000 out of the vote last year of $217,000. The works include the: Deepening of the rock cut at Ramey's Bend: Total estimated cost, $100,000; voted for 1903-4, $75,000; required for 1904-5, $30,000 revote plus $25,000, in all $55,000. That will finish these works. There is also the removal of the centre piers of three bridges: Allanburg bridge—estimated cost, $50,000; Marlatt's bridge, $50,000; bridge 11, the Grand Trunk Railway, Thorold, $70,000; in all, $170,000. The total expenditure for removing obstructions up to the 30th of June, 1903, was $94,122.98; expended from the 30th of June, 1903, to the 1st of May, 1904, $97,375.55 ; total amount expended up to the 1st of May, 1904, $191,498.53. The deepening of the rock cut at Ramey's Bend is made necessary by the fact that Lake Erie has been gradually lowering for some years.

Mr. HAGGART. It is rising now, isn't it ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is just now ; but it has been gradually lowering for some years.

Mr. HAGGART. How much lower is it at the present time than the standard level on which the entrance to Port Colborne was based ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The rock cut is being deepened two feet, giving 17 feet of water at ordinary level of Lake Erie and 15 feet at low water. The work is being done by contract. The contractors are Waddell, Battle & Manley ; the rate per yard is $2.90. The lowest tender was accepted. The water level has dropped as low as 4 feet below what was known as low level.

Mr. HAGGART. This excavation is still needed a couple of feet lower ?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, and that is an extreme drop. The averag drop has not been so great. At any stage under these conditions there will be fourteen feet of navigation.

Mr. HAGGART. With the present mitre sills in the locks, if the water is lower by 4 feet than was contemplated when the canal was built, then the deepening you propose to do is only 2 feet.

Mr. EMMERSON. The engineer says that with the rock cut deepened 2 feet there will be 17 feet at ordinary water and 15 feet at low water. Five old centre pier bridges have been removed in the past two years at Humberstone, the Junction, Welland, Quaker bridge and Port Robinson ; the Allanburg and Marlatt's bridge are the only ones remaining on the summit level, to be removed by the departement. Bridge 11 is a bridge built by the department in 1880 for the Grand Trunk Railway, and is operated by the department. It is very badly located and interferes with navigation, more than any other bridge on the canal.

Mr. HAGGART. Does that finish the removal of all the obstructions ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, it does not. There is the Niagara street bridge in St. Catharines and several others that have to come under my notice. We are doing the work gradually. It is necessary to remove these centre piers in order to give more freedom to the boats.

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose when you allow a railroad to build a bridge over a canal and you choose afterwards to have it altered, you do it at your own expense ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There is a case like that with the Grand Trunk Railway Company at present. We are calling upon them to do that work. We do it with respect to this bridge because the Grand Trunk was there before the canal, that is, the new canal.

Mr. SPROULE. In connection with these bridges, are they to be given by contract ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, altogether.

Mr. SPROULE. And the work now being done is being done by contract ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

To deepen portions of summit level between Port Colborne and Thorold, $100,000.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the total amount required, and the depth ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The deepening of this portion of the canal is rendered necessary, in order to maintain 14 feet navigation, by the gradual lowering of Lake Erie. Two feet is being excavated from the bottom of the canal, giving 17 feet of water at normal level of Lake Erie and 15 at low water. McGann & Finn are the contractors ; rate, 38½ cents per cubic yard. The estimated cost is as follows :

Amount expended to 30th June, 1903	$125,330
Voted for 1903-1904	100,000
Required for 1903-1904	100,000
Unprovided balance to complete	124,670
Total	$450,000

Mr. HAGGART. So that that portion of the canal, Lake Erie level, is lower than the depth of water on the mitre sill ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, it got filled in.

Mr. HAGGART. If it was lower than that, you would have to lower the mitre sill also.

Mr. EMMERSON. They did lower the mitre sill four feet the year before last.

Mr. INGRAM. Was there not some talk of doing something at the Niagara river with a view of deepening the water at Buffalo, and would not that have the effect of lowering the water in the Welland canal ? The press of Buffalo is agitating for some action with the view of preventing the lowering of Lake Erie.

Mr. EMMERSON. The Americans are talking that way.

Mr. INGRAM. Would not the deepening of the water at Buffalo have some effect in keeping the same depth of water we have now at the Welland canal ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not given the matter very much study, and the opinion I might express might not be of value to the committee.

Mr. HAGGART. You deepen the mitre sill at the lake entrance four feet. Does this improvement take effect on the reaches at the entrance below the mitre sill ?

Mr. EMMERSON. They are not a foot lower than the mitre sill. That was lowered.

Mr. HAGGART. When do the reaches get to the level of the mitre sill that was lowered ?

Mr. EMMERSON. When they are two feet below the old mitre sill.

Mr. HAGGART. Then the mitre sill of the lock coming into these reaches will be two feet lower than the reaches. What is the object of that ?

Mr. EMMERSON. When they had to water out, they put it down to that level.

Mr. HAGGART. For the purposes of navigation there ought to be an average in the reaches of at least two feet more depth than the mitre sill of the lock. You have lowered the mitre sill of the lock four feet. I want to know what you have deepened the reaches. I understand you have deepened them two feet.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Have you lowered the lock at the other end of the reach to the depth to which you have lowered it at the entrance ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is being lowered now.

Mr. HAGGART. Then you contemplate to lower the whole of these reaches to at least one foot lower than the mitre sill of the lock at some time or other, and the new lock that is lowered you lower to the level of the mitre sill coming out at Lake Erie ?

Mr. J. D. REID. What is the policy of the government in so far as the deepening of the Welland canal is concerned ? There has been an agitation to have it deepened to 17 feet. At present the government have deepened the entrance at Port Colborne so that a vessel drawing 17 feet of water can come into the entrance of the Welland canal. A vessel, therefore, if the Welland canal had 17 feet navigation, could go through that canal and carry about 100,000 bushels ; but as the depth is only 14 feet, she can only load 60,000 or 65,000 bushels of grain. If you had the extra depth, the vessels could load at Duluth or Port Arthur and proceed to Kingston where they could lighten. The freight rates are higher, of course, on account of the smaller cargoes, and I would like to know if the government have formed any policy in so far as this is concerned ? The public are anxious to know this, more especially as the Americans are contemplating enlarging the canal from Buffalo to New York. Another matter which I have brought to the attention of the government from year to year is this. Even though they should undertake to deepen the Welland canal, as I have suggested, it would take five or six years to complete that work, and during all that time we would not enjoy the advantage of the additional depth, in so far as getting trade through the St. Lawrence route instead of its going by Buffalo is concerned. I suggested that if the government would take over that small line of railway from Port Colborne to Port Dalhousie and operate it and lighten the vessels at Port Colborne and give them the grain again at Port Dalhousie, they could make it part of the canal system.

The expense of operating this railway would not be very large—not even as great as the interest on the money needed to enlarge the canal. And, by the adoption of my suggestion we would be able to immediately notify the trade that we were prepared virtually to give them the 17-foot navigation throughout the canal by lightering at Port Colborne and taking on again at Port Dalhousie. Of course, this was done years ago, and it is done now if the freights are sufficiently large for the vessel to be able to afford it. But, during the greater part of the season of navigation, freight from Port Arthur to Montreal is about three cents a bushel, and, as this railway charges from 1½ cents to 2 cents for lightering, it does not pay the vessel to take that extra quantity of grain off, because they do not make anything out of it. I do not know whether the hon. minister has ever considered this idea. I have brought it up year after year. It may be he can give us some information as to whether there is a chance of the government taking it up, or he may tell us what the policy of the government is in deepening the canal. As the hon. minister knows even the smallest trifle will have its effect in deciding the routing of grain. Even one-sixteenth of a cent per bushel will decide the route. Taking off the canal tolls appeared a small concession, and yet the result was seen in the great increase in the quantity of grain that passed through the Welland and St. Lawrence canals. The suggestion that I make, if carried into effect, I believe, would double the tonnage coming by the St. Lawrence route.

Mr. EMMERSON. Naturally, I have not had much opportunity to study these questions. But the whole question is under consideration in connection with the proposed improvemets at Port Colborne. Of course, I cannot give my hon. friend any idea of what the ultimate result will be.

Mr. BLAIN. Have we at present a 14-foot navigation on the Welland canal ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, 14 feet on the mitre sills.

Mr. HAGGART. One of the locks, by mistake, was put above the level and there is not the 14-foot navigation on the long stretch from Lake Erie. The minister is deepening it to give the 14-foot depth.

Mr. LENNOX. In connection with what the minister said about considering the question—no doubt this matter will be dealt with by the Transportation Commission. Can the minister tell us when we may expect a report from that Commission ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The Commission is now visiting different points. They have made an interim report with respect to one section of the country, and it is expected that there will be one covering the Port Colborne section, as they recently went there and made a thorough investigation.

Mr. LENNOX. Which section have they reported on ?

Mr. EMMERSON. They have made an interim report with respect to the port of St. John. They started by going to St. John and Halifax.

Mr. BLAIN. Was the lowering of the mitre still done by contract or by day labour ?

Mr. EMMERSON. By day labour.

Mr. BLAIN. What was the total cost ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Between $11,000 and $12,000.

Welland canal—improvements at Port Colborne entrance, $300,000.

Mr. HAGGART. This it an item on which there will be a discussion. We want a full explanation of the scheme.

Mr. EMMERSON. Then, I think we have gone as far as we can.

Mr. LENNOX. Before the committee rises I would ask the minister if he would kindly leave one item on the Trent Valley canal for discussion until Wednesday. I am obliged to be absent on Monday and Tuesday.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the minister be good enough to tell us what business will be taken up on Monday ?

Mr. FIELDING. I have not seen the Prime Minister, but I understood that the intention was to take up Bills on Monday. If there is any change I will see to it that notice is sent to the leader of the opposition. I think several ministers will be absent, and the Minister of Railways will be unable to continue on his estimates. So, the intention is to take up some Bills.

Mr. HAGGART. Any Bill in particular.

Mr. FIELDING. The most important is the Militia Bill.

Mr. HAGGART. I see that that is to be dropped ?

Mr. FIELDING. Is that dropped ? My hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) may know, but I have not been informed to that effect.

Mr. HAGGART. Then, the Militia Bill may come up ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think it likely. All Bills on the Order Paper will be open.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.58 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, July 11th, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903—AMENDMENT.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice) moved :—

That item No. 40, House in committee on Bill (No. 73) to amend the Railway Act of 1903 (Mr. Lennox) be transferred from Public Bills and Orders to Government Orders.

Motion agreed to.

SEED GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce (Bill No. 151) respecting the Incorporation of Seed-Growers' Association.

Mr. INGRAM. What is the purpose of the Bill?

Mr. FISHER. It is simply to give statutory authority for the incorporation of Seed-Growers' Associations. In consequence of the investigations that have been made by my department into the seed business of the country, certain people have expressed a wish to form themselves into an association for growing seed grain and other agricultural seeds. At present, there is no law under which these people can be incorporated and do their work legally as a corporate body. Some years ago parliament passed a statute for the incorporation of live stock associations, and this Bill is very much in the same form, as applied to seed growers.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

COLLECTORSHIP OF CUSTOMS, VICTORIA, B.C.

Mr. EARLE asked :

1. Is there a vacancy in the collectorship of customs at Victoria, B.C. ?

2. How long has the collectorship been vacant ?

3. Who is performing the duties of collector at present ?

4. How long has he been performing such duties ?

5. When is it proposed to fill the vacancy ?

6. Has the position been offered to Mr. R. L. Drury, M.P.P., or to any other person?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The collectorship of customs at Victoria, B.C., has been vacant, I believe, since February or March last ;—I have not the exact date. The duties of the office are performed by the sub-collector. As to the fifth question, 'When is it proposed to fill the vacancy ?' The Minister is not in his seat, and I cannot answer. The position has not been offered to Mr. Drury or to any other person.

DAMAGES BY FLOODS, CHAMBLY CANAL.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. Ingram—asked :

1. Who are the parties entitled to receive an indemnity for the damages caused by flooding, and referred to in item 31 of the further supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1904 ?

2. By what means have these parties established their claim ?

3. Are there any other claimants, and if so, what are their names ?

Right Hon. SIR WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The explanation with regard to this vote will be given when the estimates come up for discussion.

THE MILITIA ACT.

House again went into committee on Bill (No. 5) respecting the Militia of Canada—Sir Frederick Borden.

Hon. SIR FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia). When the second reading of this Bill was under discussion, my hon. friend from South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) who preceded me in the department of Militia, asked for some papers with reference to the communications which led up to my attendance at the meeting of the Defence Committee in London. I told the hon. gentleman that I would endeavour to bring these papers down. I have them here. They consist of only two or three cablegrams which I will read. The first was from Mr. Chamberlain to Lord Minto :—

London, April 20, 1903.

With regard to important amendment contemplated in Militia Act, His Majesty's government earnestly hopes that your responsible advisers will defer action until matter has been fully discussed by Minister of Militia with Secretary of State for War and Commander in Chief. After close of Dominion session of parliament would suggest that Sir Frederick Borden should come to England.

(Sgd.) CHAMBERLAIN.

Ottawa, Nov. 12, 1903.

Referring to Mr. Chamberlain's cypher telegram dated 20th April, Minister of Militia anxious to sail for England about Nov. 28th, so that he may discuss new Militia Act with Secretary of State for War and Commander in Chief, and return to Canada before Christmas. Hope that this arrangement may be a convenient one. Consider mutual discussion important.

(Sgd.) MINTO.

Lord Minto telegraphed later on :—

Ottawa, 23rd Nov., 1903.

Am anxious for reply to my telegram of Nov. 12th, as Minister of Militia wishes to make his plans accordingly.

(Sgd.) MINTO.

The answer from Mr. Littleton was as follows :—

London, 24th Nov., 1903.

Referring to your cable of yesterday's date. Date suggested for visit of minister will be quite convenient.

(Sgd.) LYTTLETON.

I have already stated to the House the substance of what took place at that meeting of the Defence Committee. I only wish to add that my understanding of the object of my being invited to attend that meeting was simply and solely to expedite business. The Defence Committee is no longer, as it used to be, a sub-committee of Council, but is now an independent and advisory committee which has been created by the Prime Minister of England for the purpose of advising the Council, and its functions go no further than those of advisers. It is a business committee, and the object of inviting me to attend that committee, was simply to bring about, in the shortest possible manner the best results. As a result of my attending that committee, we were able to arrange in a short time—in an hour and a half or so—business that could not have been done in less than weeks, or possibly months, by correspondence.

Since the committee last sat, a number of notices of proposed amendments have been given. I have collected all of these amendments, with the exception of one or two, for the convenience of hon. gentlemen who are interested in this discussion, and I shall send two copies of this memorandum to hon. gentlemen opposite. The further amendments will be explained later on. Since the Bill was prepared I have, as already indicated to the House, had an opportunity of studying the new system which has been adopted by the War Office, as the result of the report of the committee known as the Esher Committee, which was appointed by Mr. Balfour for the purpose of investigating and reporting on all matters connected with the organization of the War Office, and making a report. The report is known as the Report of the War Office (Reconstitution) Committee, and is an exceedingly interesting, able and elaborate document. This report has been adopted by the British government, and the details of it are now being worked out. Like any new system it will, of course, take time to work out all the details, but the main principles have been adopted and, I have been informed, are working very well. In view of the course which has been pursued by the War Office, a course which I may say has resulted from difficulties which were found to exist in working out the complicated system which has obtained in England, and which, to some extent, has been in existence in this country, I have thought it advisable to provide, in the Bill now before parliament, the machinery by which the government of this country may follow the example of the Imperial Government. Without troubling this committee by going into details, I think I may say, without fear of contradiction, that it is quite obvious that the system which has been in existence in this country ever since confederation has not worked well. I am not going to animadvert upon or criticise any officers who have been sent out here to assist us in administering the militia of this country. I do not propose to do that, but I think that every one will agree that the system has not worked well, and I am prepared to blame the system much more than the individuals who have attempted to work it. I believe it is an impossible system. I believe it is absolutely and entirely impossible to get on with the system which we have attempted to work in this country since confederation. We have had abundant examples, not confined to the administrations of the Liberal party alone, but under previous administrations as well, when it was found unworkable. There are many difficulties which I think act against the public interest in the endeavour to work out this system, difficulties which will be overcome entirely or very largely by the new system. One of these difficulties is that there has been absolute want of continuity under the existing system. Each new General Officer Commanding who comes to this country seems to be possessed with the idea that it is his duty to overturn and change everything done by his predecessor. There are no records to show in detail the reasons for the conclusions which the different General Officers Commanding have reached. Under the new system, there will be a Militia Council corresponding to what is in England called the Army Council. That council will be composed of the Minister of Militia, as chairman of the council, with four military men and two additional civilians. Everything that is done at that council will be made a matter of record, or at any rate every conclusion of importance which is reached by that council will be made a matter of record, so that if there be a change of ministers or a change of officers the record will remain there for the guidance of those who may come afterwards, and when changes are suggested, means will be found to compare new proposals with old proposals.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are those means not available now ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am not aware of that being the case ; they were not found available in the British War Office, and they are very much less likely to be available here.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. You are describing the British system now ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes. That is the system which I propose to inaugurate in this country. Of course, the conditions being changed, it was necessary to change some of the provisions with reference to the formation and working out of the system. The Militia Council, as I say, will be composed of seven members, as is the Army Council—four military, three civil. The Minister for the time being will be the chairman ; the principal military officer will be known as the Chief of the General Staff. Then there will be the Adjutant General, the Quartermaster-General and the Master-General of Ordnance. The two additional civilians would be the Deputy Minister and, probably, the Chief Accountant of the Department.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why not have the Finance Minister of Canada ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My hon. friend will have an opportunity of criticising these proposals later on.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Or the Auditor General ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That might add to the harmony of things. The minister in this way will have the advantage of being surrounded by his officers, by all the leading men representing the leading departments of the militia service. He will be in constant touch with his officers, and will, for the first time, have an opportunity of knowing exactly what is going on. He will have an opportunity of hearing and exchanging opinions with the technical men, which—if he happens to be an inexperienced man when he comes into office, as he is very likely to be—will be a very great advantage to him.

Mr. FOWLER. As I understand this advisory council, it is to consist of men in the service of the department.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Are you not in the position to call on them now ? Would it not be better to have men from the outside ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am discussing a change which involves dispensing altogether with the services of the General Officer Commanding, and the council will be largely in substitution of that office. With reference to the question which my hon. friend has just put, I might answer it by pointing to the experience which I have had, and the correspondence in connection with which I read to this House three or four years ago, over a controversy with the General Officer Commanding. I was under the impression that I had the right to consult any officer in my department, and I was doing so when I discovered that an order had been sent out by the General Officer Commanding to each one of these gentlemen not to come to my office without his permission, and after they had come with his permission and discussed matters with me, they were immediately to go back to him and tell him every word that had taken place.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the minister kindly name the general ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think my hon. friend knows who it was. It was General Hutton.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. You have heard of him.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I may say in addition that I blame the system. These men come here with the idea that they are to command, and that every officer in the Dominion is absolutely under them and them alone, and they are jealous of any interference even by the minister. They object apparently to the minister, who is responsible to parliament and the people, having any direct communication with the officers under him. That is one of the difficulties of the system. It is a difficulty which was found to prevail in England and rendered the system there unworkable. The same difficulty exists here to a very much greater degree. I do not know that I need go further into the Bill just now, because I think the better way is to discuss the section as it comes up. In the discussion we had, many suggestions of importance were made, and I have endeavoured in the new sections to meet these as far as possible. When I introduced the Bill I said we would drop the word 'Defence,' from the old title of 'Militia and Defence.' I have ascertained from the officers of my department that this change is undesirable, because it would render useless large quantities of forms.

Mr. FOWLER. Would not there eventually be a saving in the amount of printing by the omission of this useless word ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We have a great many forms printed now. I move, therefore, that the title of the Bill be made to read 'An Act respecting the Department of Militia and Defence.'

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does that mean that we have given up the idea of a navy ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Or has it been handed over to the Minister of Agriculture ?

The hon. minister has just told us that these men come over here with the idea that they are to command, and objects to the minister interfering with the officers under him. Will he give some instances to illustrate that other than General Hutton ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am afraid my hon. friend will have to take my statement, which is the result of my experience.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I think that these gentlemen's reputations are of as much value to them as the minister's is to him. If they have been unfair or unreasonable, we should know, but it is hardly fair to General O'Grady-Haly or Lord Dundonald or any of the others, that a general reflection such as this should be made which might apply to any one of them.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. What I said was that I blamed the system and not the individual, and when I mentioned General Hutton in reply to the question put by my hon. friend, I had no intention of being drawn into any personal controversy with reference to any of these General Officers Commanding. I knew that the hon. member for Victoria does not object in the slightest degree to any unpleasant or unfavourable remarks regarding General Hutton, and as the matter affecting that general had come before the House, and was on record, I referred to the correspondence. I have said that the system is unworkable, but that implies no reflection on the officers themselves. They were sent out, as they supposed, to command. Every officer in Canada is under them, every officer of the Headquarters Staff is under them, but under the new system there will be no question of rank affecting this Military Council. That is carefully left out. The men who come in will come in on an equal footing and their position will be altogether different from that of the General Officer Commanding.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. minister has made a statement in regard to myself that I cannot allow to pass. He said that he knew that his hon. friend, meaning myself, would take no objection to anything unpleasant which he might say regarding General Hutton. I have been fair to General Hutton throughout the length and breadth of the British empire, and what I would object to in General Hutton I would object to in Lord Dundonald. I do object to any commanding officer coming to this country and seeking to arrogate to himself functions that belong to the people of Canada, but we must be just as careful that the minister in charge of the department does not arrogate to himself functions that do not belong to him. I have been absolutely fair to General Hutton, and I do not think the hon. minister has any right to make the statement that I have been unfair to him.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I did not say that.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. He was urging that General Hutton would be objectionable to me. The hon. minister knows that I have been fair to General Hutton.

While saying that he is not going to enter into personal matters he says that after eight years of experience he finds that these officers come here with the idea of command. The public records show that Lord Dundonald and General O'Grady Haly have both lived up to the law of the Dominion of Canada, that they have stayed well within their duties as General Officers Commanding and so far as the friends of these gentlemen are concerned we do not want to see these statements going broadcast over the country or cabled backwards and forwards by a hireling cable service that these men come here with this idea of command, that they do not confine themselves to their duties and that they object to the minister who is responsible to the people and to parliament having any communication with the officers under them. I have yet to learn that Lord Dundonald or General O'Grady Haly has objected in the slightest degree to the minister having had communication with the officers under them. I think it is hardly fair on the part of the hon. minister to make a statement of that kind and send it broadcast over the country.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. What I say is that this is part of the system. The system is to blame. I do not blame any one in particular, but under the system, as it now exists, the commanding officer commands every officer in Canada and nobody knows better than my hon. friend what that means in the matter of discipline. It is a very difficult position to place an officer in to expect him to be entirely satisfied that officers acting in a subordinate capacity under him shall come to the minister as often as they choose, or as often as he may wish to see them, to consult about matters about which he thinks they ought to be consulted. I am not finding any fault. I am sorry if I have been unable to make myself understood. I am not blaming any officer in particular; I am blaming the system and it is the system we propose to change.

Mr. FOWLER. Would the hon. minister kindly state again the officers who are to form a council ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will mention them when we get to that clause.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. minister tells us that he proposes to change the system and adopt that which is recommended in England. Would not the conditions in connection with the militia of England be so different from what they are in Canada that we could hardly apply the same system ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No doubt the conditions would be different, but not so very different. I am not speaking without the book. I have taken the pains to consult some of the most eminent military authorities in England as well as in this country, and they agree that while there may be some difficulties and that while some alterations may have to be made in applying the system, it can be applied here equally as well as in England.

Mr. INGRAM. In having read the document the hon. gentleman has referred to, it is a very extensive document and it refers particularly to the system in England. It occurred to me at the time I read it that the conditions were so very different here from those which exist in England as to make it difficult to apply the same system.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think that so far as the reconstitution of the Headquarters Staff is concerned the conditions are similar to those of the War Office in England, and I cannot see any difficulty at all on that score. All my hon. friends who have written me on the subject and some of the most eminent military authorities agree that there will be no difficulty whatever in applying the system so far as the War Office is concerned. When it comes to the question of decentralization it may be that we shall not be able to go as far in this country as they have gone in England. I do not think that policy can be carried out in connection with the militia force as easily as in connection with the regular army.

Mr. INGRAM. Under the proposed amendment of the Militia Act which has been brought down by the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence, it is optional whether we have a commanding officer from England or not. I judge from the tone of the hon. gentleman's language to-day that it is not intended to have a Major General from England in the future. Coupling the change in the system which it is proposed to adopt with the language the hon. gentleman has used are we correct in assuming that we are not in the future to have a General Officer Commanding ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Under the system there will be no General Officer Commanding. There is no Commander in Chief in England to-day and there will be no General Officer Commanding here. There would be a first military officer known as the Chief of the General Staff, the most important military officer in the country as he is to-day the most important military officer in England, except some of the generals commanding in chief in some of the large districts. Under the new system we would have more important commands than we have to-day. Decentralization would be carried out to some extent, perhaps not to the same extent as in England, so that officers commanding districts would have much greater powers than they have at the present moment, and properly so, because these men, if they are ever to be fit to comamnd, must have experience in times of peace which will enable them to perform the duties which may be required of them in times of war.

Mr. INGRAM. Is not that one of the very reasons why we require an experienced man in this country The officers of Canada have not had experience in handling large bodies of men, and for that reason it seems to me that we should have an English officer of experience in this country. You will have four or five of these officers and if so are there in that number any who are capable of handling large bodies of men ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I believe there are. I believe, however, that if we never make the attempt we never will learn. Our officers must have experience. I believe they can learn if given an opportunity. They have not been given an opportunity. We think that under this system we shall be able to develop our men, especially as we have been able to make an arrangement with the War Office by which two places are to be given each year to Canadian officers to enable them to learn their duties in the Staff College in England. We shall, after this, I hope, always have two of our men at the Staff College in England learning the staff duties.

On section 2, paragraph (f),

'General Orders' means orders and instructions issued to the militia by the General Officer Commanding, with the approval of the Minister of Militia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I move to strike out the words 'by the General Officer Commanding.'

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does that mean that the minister will issue orders ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They will be issued by the Council.

Mr. FOWLER. This clause gives power to the minister to issue orders. Suppose the Minister of Agriculture was acting Minister of Militia again ; he got the country into one mess already, and under this he could issue any orders he likes ; perhaps to take the heads of these officers down to Sweetsburg.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My hon. friend is facetious.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It is bad enough to have the Minister of Militia given this authority without military advice, but suppose we have another episode similar to the little conspiracy we exposed the other day where will we land ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. As a matter of fact the Minister of Militia must approve.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. But suppose the minister choses to act without the consent of his Council he has power under this clause, and we will have a little dictatorship. I admit the minister must endorse the views of the Council but the Council has not the power to interfere with the views of the minister.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We will let that paragraph stand.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Under section 123, the Governor in Council makes the regulations.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not quite understand the effect of the word 'emergency' here. In view of the powers given the government under section 77 ; powers by the way which I very strongly object to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Who do you object to ?

Mr. FOWLER. I object to the word 'emergency' here because of the wide powers given the government in section 77 where the Governor in Council has power to send the militia out of Canada.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. But only for the defence of Canada.

Mr. FOWLER. You can call almost anything the defence of Canada—you could call sending the militia to any part of the British empire doing it for the defence of Canada. The Governor General in Council should not have power to do that ; that power should remain in the hands of parliament alone.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We have had that power for a long time.

Mr. FOWLER. That makes no difference, we are now discussing this Bill which makes changes in many directions and the existing law can be changed as well in this respect. I do not believe in this centralization of power in the Governor in Council. It would seem that every Act passed in this parliament now inclines to give more power to the government of the day. Parliament has no right to divest itself of its inherent powers; we are here as the representatives of the people and we should hold this power in our own hands. Whether for the defence of Canada or not, the militia of Canada should not be sent out of Canada without the authority of parliament. There can be no 'emergency' arise under which parliament cannot be called together ; war does not spring up in a day or a night. ' If the country were in danger of war it would be an easy matter to call parliament and then parliament could decide if it is necessary to send our militia outside of Canada. It is a different matter altogether about permitting volunteers to serve in any portion of the empire.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Under the law in Great Britain, parliament must be called within a certain time after the militia are embodied; ten days I think. Why not insert a similar provision in this Bill. I think the Governor in Council should have authority to call out the militia, but parliament should be assembled within a reasonable time afterwards. I do not want to be too captious with my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) with whom I agree in almost everything, but I cannot endorse him when he speaks about 'permitting' Canadians to serve the empire as volunteers.

I maintain that no man requires any permission from any authority in the Dominion of Canada to volunteer to serve the empire in any part of the world. He requires no commission, direct or indirect, from the Governor, the Prime Minister, the Govenor in Council or the parliament of Canada, and the imperial authorities have an absolute right to put their recruiting sergeant in the city of Ottawa to-day, and recruit men without let or hindrance of any authority in Canada, to serve the empire in any part of the world.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would like to point out to the hon. member for King's N.B. (Mr. Fowler) that the law now in existence gives wider power than the section of this Bill to which he takes exception. Under the present law,

> His Majesty may call out the militia or any part thereof for active service, either within or without Canada, at any time when it appears advisable to do so, by reason of war, invasion or insurrection, or danger of any of them.

Under the proposed law :

> The Governor in Council may place the militia, or any part thereof, on active service anywhere in Canada and also beyond Canada for the defence thereof.

This is a decided limitation as compared with the existing law. While I agree with my hon. friend that matters of such importance should be at once submitted to parliament, and parliament should be called, and would be called, nevertheless an emergency might occur when it would be absolutely necessary on the frontier to take advantage of military tactics for the complete defence of Canada. The matter might have to be decided in an hour or a minute.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does not the minister think it would be well to have a clause inserted in this Act similar to that in the English law, providing that parliament should be called say within ten days ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That might be, but my hon. friend will see that while in England there is a standing army of 200,000 or 300,000 men, our militia is the only defence we have.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. We have a standing army just as large proportionately.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Oh, no.

Mr. FOWLER. What the minister says in regard to the present law is a matter of common knowledge. But we are changing that, and now is the time to make the thing right. The power should be entirely in the hands of parliament. According to this Act, even if parliament were sitting, the Governor in Council has power to legislate without consulting parliament at all. It seems to me that that is wrong.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. At the present moment we are simply defining what is an emergency, and I do not think my hon. friend will take exception to the definition. By section 77, to which my hon. friend has alluded, the Governor in Council is given certain powers in case of emergency. Perhaps those powers are too great or are not great enough. That is a question to be discussed when we reach section 77 ; but it seems to me that no exception can be taken by my hon. friend to the definition of emergency, which is the only thing before us at present.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not quite understand subsection (f) and there is some information which I shall require when we come to consider it again. When I mentioned my objection, I was referred to section 123, which deals, not with general orders, but with regulations ; and they seem to be two distinct things. Section 123 is relevant to subsection (h) but not to subsection (f). When we come to discuss (f) again, I would like a more definite answer to the question I asked a moment ago.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I asked that (f) be allowed to stand, for this reason, because it is understood, according to the views of my hon. friend, that we are to dispense with the services of the General Officer Commanding. The duties now performed by him are to be largely performed by an advisory commission. At present, a general order means an order issued to the militia by the General Officer Commanding, with the approval of the Minister of Militia. That is to say, there are two authorities, the commanding officer and the minister. I presume it is the intention of the minister to substitute somebody for the General Officer Commanding, because the regulations ought to be approved by somebody else before they are sanctioned by the minister himself. That is the reason I asked that this clause stand.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They should be made by somebody and approved by the minister. I would like some further information as to just what the minister means by the proposed change of system. I understood him to say that under the present system the minister does not communicate with the subordinate officers directly; but some change is to be made in that regard. Is it to be a general change ? As I understand the present system, if the General Officer wants to communicate orders to the battalion or to subordinate officers, he does so through some person who is near in command to himself.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Through the adjutant-general.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And the adjutant-general communicates with the district officer commanding, who in turn communicates with the commanding officer of the regiment. Is that the system which it is intended to change ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, that system will not be changed ; but instead of the General Officer Commanding, the proposed Militia Board will fix the policy, issue orders, and deal with all questions connected with the administration of the militia.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understood that there were to be some omissions in the means by which the orders were to be communicated. Is it meant that the proposed council is to communicate, for example, directly with the commanding officer of a regiment ? I am not very clear as to what the change is, and I would like to understand it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I think the hon. leader of the opposition does not understand the situation referred to by the Minister of Militia. He did not refer to conditions such as those which have recently been before us, in which the Minister of Agriculture arrogated to himself, either of his own right or as acting Minister of Militia, to meddle with the formation of a regiment. I think the minister himself, if allowed to speak the truth would condemn that. But what the minister referred to was what, according to rumour, happened when General Hutton was here. The minister chose to speak to one of his departmental officers, but General Hutton refused to allow the officer to approach the minister except through him. I think the minister was justified in the course he took ; but I think it is also courteous for him to notify the General Officer Commanding of any action he takes. I do not think the hon. leader of the opposition understood that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think I understood it, but I want to know what the system is to be—whether you are to keep up the old form of giving out instructions through a series of officers, or whether you are to have a different system ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The Minister of Militia will keep the same relative control that he does at this moment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, what change is to be made with regard to communicating instructions ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The chief of the General Staff, who is the new officer, will have charge of what are called field operations—charge of preparing an army for the field. The Adjutant-General will have charge of certain branches, many of them the same as now—education, mobilization, &c. The Quartermaster-General will have charge of very much the same things as now—transportation and so on. And the Master-General of Ordnance will have charge of the ordnance, guns and so on. Each one of these men will be supreme in his own department, subject of course to the decisions of the Militia Council, and these are the men who would compose the Militia Council.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. minister does not understand what the leader of the opposition wants to know. Under the new system will it be possible for the Minister of Militia or the Minister of Agriculture, as acting in his place, to have officers appointed, the recommendations of whom does not come through the regular channel ? Will it be possible for the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Militia to interfere directly in the appointment of officers ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. As regards appointments, under the new system there will be a new method. According to the English system, which I am very much inclined to approve of, that work is all done absolutely independent of headquarters, except that finally, I suppose, the Minister of Militia will have to approve. We cannot very well get around that. This Bill cannot go into force until proper regulations are carefully made, and I could not say at the moment what system will be adopted, but in a general way, greater powers will be given the districts than they have now.

Mr. INGRAM. Who is to be the recognized General Officer Commanding ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The Militia Council.

Mr. INGRAM. In that case the order passed in October last applying to General Officers Commanding will be entirely wiped out ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. Who will sign these appointments ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The Militia Council will act very largely in the sphere within which the Commander in Chief now acts in England. The signing of the appointments is a matter of detail.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. I think it is a matter of very great importance. If the chief staff officer is a man of any military qualification, he should assume responsibility from the military point of view.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. As a non-combatant, may I offer a suggestion. We have to determine what will be the character of the body which is to replace the General Officer Commanding. Would it not be well to allow this matter to remain in abeyance until we have threshed out that question and determined what will take the place of the General Officer or what body will assume his duties.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That body will be civil as well as military, but there should be a special committee to deal with the question of recommendations for commissions on the force from a purely military standpoint, as it is now dealt with by the General Officer Commanding.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Would it not be wiser to discuss all that when we are discussing the organization of the body ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am bringing it up now so that the minister may have it in his mind.

All the paragraphs agreed to accept paragraph (f.)

On section 4,

The commander in chief of the militia is vested in the King, and shall be exercised and administered by His Majesty or by the Governor General as his representative

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In what does this differ from the old clause ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The word 'personally' is left out.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would suggest that this whole section would be dropped. It is absolutely unnecessary and in any event would have to be altered. Section 15 of the British North America Act provides :

The command in chief of the land and naval militia, and of all naval and military forces, of and in Canada, is hereby declared to continue to be vested in the Queen.

That does away with the necessity for this section.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Let the section stand.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If it is to stand, I would suggest this modification. Instead of reading, 'The command in chief of the militia is vested in the King,' it should read, as in the words of the British North America Act, 'is hereby declared to continue and be vested in the King.' Because we are not conferring upon His Majesty authority over the army. That authority is conferred by the constitution.

Mr. BOURASSA. I beg to make a suggestion to the minister. Clause 4 of the present Bill, which corresponds to clause 3 of the existing Act, declares that the command in chief of the militia belongs to the King, and as the Minister of Justice has properly said, we have no power to give any right or power to the King ; section 15 of the British North American Act defines the power of the King, so far as the militia is concerned. But clause 4 of this Bill defines not only the power of the King, but the power of the Governor General. Though the sovereign power, the sovereign command of the militia of any British colony, belongs as does the command of the army of England, to the King, yet the exercise of the command, the organization of the army, belongs exclusively and solely to the parliament of England, as the organization of the militia in any of the self-governing colonies belongs exclusively and solely to the parliament of the colony. And, in the case of a self-governing colony, as in the case of England, parliament delegates such power as it pleases to the government. This section should not only be a declaration of the sovereign right of the King, which everybody agrees to, but it should declare clearly so that it may be understood that the Canadian parliament is as supreme in the governing of militia matters as in others, and therefore, I think it should contain a provision similar to the present clause of the old Act, but clearer. I would suggest the wording :

The command in chief of the militia is hereby declared to continue and be vested in the King, and shall be administered and exercised by the Governor General in Council.

That will very clearly and properly define the power of the King and leave it untouched, but it will make equally clear that the exercise of the King's command of the militia belongs to the Governor General in Council according to the powers granted by this parliament under this Bill. In fact, throughout this Bill in every clause where under the existing Act power is given to the King, or to His Majesty or to the Governor General, it is changed, and the words that appear are : 'Governor General in Council.' In fact, in about twenty clauses of the Bill now before us the principle of self-government is asserted in this way. Therefore, it seems to me, in defining the powers which are to be exercised by those to whom the exercise of these powers is to be committed, it seems to me that the same form should be used so as to make it clear that the exercise of the sovereign power over the militia belongs to the Governor General in Council, under authority conferred by this parliament.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am sure the hon. member (Mr. Bourassa) has thrown no new light upon the question. Every one knows that 'Governor General' means 'Governor General in Council.' So far as the control of the army in England is concerned, the King has no authority direct or indirect. And the same is true of Canada. 'The King can do no wrong,' because the King acts upon the advice of his responsible ministers.

Mr. BOURASSA. Of course, there is no dispute as to that. But if the Minister of Militia and the government think fit to replace the words 'His Majesty,' and 'Governor General' with the words, 'Governor General in Council,' in other parts of the Bill, it seems to me only reasonable to make this section in harmony with the rest of the Bill not only in spirit but in wording. I admit that it is more a question of wording than a question of policy, but, at the same time, it seems quite proper that the wording should be clear and consistent. I admit that, if all classes of the people of the country, and all of parliament, were imbued with strong principles of national self-government, there would be no necessity to put in these words. But as we have heard strange constitutional doctrine in this parliament as well as outside of it, doctrine that, if carried out, would limit or ignore the self-governing powers of this country, this parliament, and this government in militia matters, I think it is only proper that the principle should be laid down clearly in the early clauses of the Bill as is done throughout the rest of it. What I ask is simply to put the clause now under consideration in harmony with the principles and the wording of the rest of the measure. There is nothing new in what I propose and I certainly am not suggesting anything revolutionary.

Mr. GOURLEY. I differ from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) who wants to drive a wedge—that is the meaning of it—between Canada and the mother country. Why is he not square and honest? Everybody knows the constitutional principles that govern this country. The King is Commander in Chief here as in England, and here we exercise the prerogative as parliament exercises it in England. He has only to give us under our constitution the right to exercise that prerogative in this parliament the same as exercised in England. The King's prerogative in the government of the militia of this country devolves upon this parliament, and any attempt to carry that prerogative further than it is carried now would be an attempt to drive a wedge between the old country and this country. And I am surprised that the hon. gentleman on all these occasions should exhibit a disposition to tear this country away in every way by legislation from the old country. I do not wish to be offensive to any hon. gentleman in this House, and I will not; but I am bound to be honest and square; and, in that spirit I say that I am sorry that the hon. member from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) always seems to me to exhibit a desire to establish something in this country hostile to the interests of Canada as a part of the empire. His attempt is simply to set up the prerogative in Canada in opposition to the prerogative of the King.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This seems to be a wordy warfare. I rather agree with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) that there is no necessity for the clause. I think we might allow it to stand in the meantime.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 5,

5. There shall be a Minister of Militia, who shall be charged with and be responsible for the administration of militia affairs and of the fortifications, ordnance, ammunition, arms, armouries, stores, munitions and habiliments of war belongng to Canada, including the initiative in all matters involving the expenditure of money.

2. The Governor in Council may, from time to time, make such orders as are necessary respecting the duties to be performed by the Minister of Militia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I move that the words 'and Defence' be added after 'Minister of Militia.'

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. GOURLEY. How does this section correspond with the present section?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is practically the same.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It substitutes the word 'may' for the word 'shall.' This is a mere improvement in the drafting.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would not draw attention to this section but for the peculiar doctrine given to the Dominion of Canada by an Order in Council of this government which establishes as a precedent the right of any minister, in his own district, to have official authority. Does not the Prime Minister agree that that is the meaning of the Order in Council? The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), for instance, has the right to step in and override this in his own district?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) states that the Order in Council lays down the doctrine that a minister has absolute authority in his own district. The Order in Council says nothing of that kind. It says—and I think it will not be questioned by the hon. gentleman himself—that every minister is supposed to look after the interests of his own section.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In all departments?

Mr. INGRAM. Is this to apply in all senses?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In all senses.

Mr. INGRAM. Well, let us apply that and see where it will end. It is a recognized fact that every minister of the Crown is a political head, and he will naturally do that which he thinks will advance the interests of the political party to which he belongs. Hon. gentlemen opposite have always laid down the principle that there should not be any party politics in connection with military matters in this country. I want to know from the Minister of Militia or the Prime Minister how you are going to have military discipline that is to be purely non-political, to have no partisan conduct or action in connection with the militia of this country, if you are going to allow any political head to have anything to do with the internal administration of the militia? I can quite understand that rule applying in any minister's district where anything was involved that might fairly be viewed as a partisan matter or something to be done in the interest of the government from a partisan standpoint, but militia matters should be kept entirely aloof from considerations of this kind. Why? Because if you want to have discipline in the militia of this country you must certainly not have any interference from the outside. If the minister wants to reorganize a militia battalion he will give his instructions through the proper channels and will receive his information from the usual channel and that channel is not a partisan channel. That is if the statement of the hon. gentleman is a correct statement, namely, that he is not administering his department in the interest of party. Is it not a fact that even the corporal is jealous of his rights in the matter of discipline? If you go over a corporal's head in order to give directions to his military inferiors, he at once becomes jealous. You are interfering with the discipline. If you go over the lieutenant to the captain you create a feeling of jealousy. The only way to administer the militia is to administer it through the proper channels. What would be the situation of a lieutenant-colonel of any battalion if he were to communicate direct to the minister instead of communicating through the usual military channel? Imagine the Minister of Agriculture giving his instructions, imagine his interference in the matter of this kind. And then imagine any hon. gentleman saying that we have no partisanship in the affairs of the militia of this country. I say that it is simply impossible and what I fear to-day and fear in the future, the words: 'General Officer Commanding' being struck out, is that instead of having non-partisan feeling throughout the militia of this country as we have had for many years, we are opening the door wide for the introduction of partisan feeling into the administration of the militia. I regret very much indeed that the hon. minister's language has been changed to-day from what it was at the introduction of this Bill. As it was at first, if Canada felt disposed to have an English officer as General Officer Commanding she could have one, and if a Canadian happened to be available for the position, a Canadian could be appointed. The minister has closed the door absolutely to-day against the employment of an English officer. By the argument he has used, this situation is brought about although the Bill does not say so. I, for one protest against the understanding conveyed by the Prime Minister to-day, that any minister of the Crown will have the right to interfere with the appointments made in our militia. I, for one, am a strong believer in the principle that the Minister of Militia and his deputy and the officers connected with his department should have absolute control of matters of this kind.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My hon. fried (Mr. Ingram) will not persist, I think, in that statement in regard to our giving up entirely the utilization of imperial officers, as the scheme is amplified. I have already referred to the fact that under the British system, which we are adopting, a most important officer, perhaps the most important officer, is the Inspector General. Probably it would be considered wise and desirable that an imperial officer should be chosen for this position. A most important position will be that of Chief of the General Staff. It might be considered desirable that an imperial officer, for a time, at least, should occupy that important position. All we want is to have the greatest efficiency possible; we want to get the best men, whether in Canada or in the imperial army. With reference to what my hon. friend said about political interference, he is confounding two things. I agree with him absolutely in what he says as to promotions, and I challenge him to show that any interference of a political character has taken place in the militia with regard to promotions. I do not believe there has been any such interference worth mentioning; at any rate I am not aware of it. But when the hon. gentleman comes to the consideration of the organization of a new corps, that is an entirely different thing. When you are organizing a corps de novo, from new material—

Mr. FOWLER. Why?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Why? If the hon. gentleman would allow me to complete what I was saying, perhaps he would have an opportunity of answering later on. I say it is an entirely different thing in the case of an already organized military corps, every man in that corps has his rights, from the corporal up, and no man should be placed over his head without a sufficient reason; certainly no man should be placed over his head for a political reason. I absolutely approve of that proposition and propose standing by it, but when it comes to organizing a new corps de novo, from such material as may be found throughout the country, taking absolutely new men and new officers, that is an entirely different proposition. In England, as I stated the other day, the course pursued is that an important political official in each county, in the case of the organization of a new corps of militia or volunteers——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does the minister mean to say that the lord-lieutenant of a county is a party, political officer ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He is appointed by the government.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And holds his seat with the government.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He is the man who selects the officers. Why ? Because he is a prominent man, because he is a well known man, and would my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) say that he himself, as the member for Elgin, if a new corps were to be organized in his county, should not be consulted.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not think he would say that.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes, he would.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not think there is a man in the House would say that. On the contrary, that has always been the custom in this country. When the militia of this country was organized in 1868 members of parliament in my own county and in every county in Nova Scotia, so far as I know, were utilized to organize the militia at that time, and it was done in this way all through the country. That system has resulted well, no objection has been taken to it as far as I have ever heard.

What I rose to say was that when my friend talks about interference with promotions, he is taking a postion with which we will all agree, but when he talks about its being absolutely improper for a prominent man to assist or to take part in the organizing of a new militia corps, I say he is taking an altogether improper view.

Mr. FOWLER. In the first place my hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) did not make such a statement as the hon. minister attributes to him. My hon. friend from East Elgin did not say that it was wrong to call in politicians to take an interest in the organization of any militia corps. But what my hon. friend from East Elgin did say was that it was absolutely wrong for any politician to introduce partisan politics into the organization of any corps. I take issue at once with the hon. minister in respect to there being any difference between promotion and the organization of a corps de novo. Why should there be any distinction between the two ? I shall wait for the hon. minister to give some reason why there should be any distinction between the two. Surely, if a Conservative is worthy of being promoted, a Conservative is worthy of being appointed in the first place. Does the hon. minister propose to lay down the doctrine that when a new corps is to be organized, none but Liberals need apply ? That would be the case if it happened to be in the district presided over by that very broad-minded politician, the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). None but Liberals need apply ! It would not make a bit of difference whether they were fit for the places or not ; the only qualification necessary would be to subscribe to the Liberal creed, the Liberal doctrine. I am very glad to know that at least this government have thrown off the mask and I wish to congratulate them upon it. They have been publicly pretending before the people of this country that there was no such thing as politics in the administration of the militia and today the right hon. Prime Minister admits that it is quite a proper thing and stands by the Order in Council which he has made to that effect. I know from my own experience that ever since these hon. gentlemen obtained power, they have been grossly partisan in the administration of the militia. I want to say to my hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence that in the letting of contracts for the supplies of the militia camps, because in the town in which I live a militia camp is situated, these contracts have been given in every case to Liberals not because they were the lowest tenderers and given to them in many cases without any tender whatever.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I wish to contradict my hon. friend immediately and promptly. There have been no contracts made without being open to public tender, and in every case they have been let to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. FOWLER. Knowing what I am speaking of I do not propose to take the contradiction of the hon. minister or any other person on the subject.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The rule is——

Mr. FOWLER. I make this statement and the hon. minister must accept it.

An hon. MEMBER. Nobody believes it.

Mr. FOWLER. I would not want any such character——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order ; sit down.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. When an hon. member denies a statement it is the duty of the member making the statement to accept the denial.

Mr. FOWLER. If any hon. member makes a statement about a matter which is absolutely within his own knowledge he is not obliged to accept a contradiction from any other member. Let me tell you that, Mr. Chairman, and I am not the kind of man to take back water.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would ask the hon. gentleman to give names and dates.

Mr. FOWLER. I will give names and dates.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Were the contracts for the Ottawa camp given by tender ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am asking the question with the permission of the Speaker.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is clear there cannot be two members on the floor at once.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I ask the hon. minister whether the contracts for supplying the camp at Ottawa were made by public tender ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Well, I cannot dispute the statement of the hon. minister.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. And I will prove it.

Mr. FOWLER. Were these tenders to which I refer publicly advertised for ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. The manner in which the hon. gentleman lets these contracts by public tender is by sending to a number of gentleman a list. I can tell the hon. minister of a case where a certain work was to be done, where a certain building was to be erected——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. But the hon. gentleman is talking about militia camps. The hon. gentleman has made the statement that contracts for supplies for militia camps have been given to political friends without tender and without advertisement. I contradict that absolutely and I demand the names and dates.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, I will give both names and dates. I say that they have been given to political friends notwithstanding that others submitted lower tenders.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I say that is untrue.

Mr. FOWLER. Very well, I will prove it; that ought to be sufficient.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Give us the names and dates.

Mr. FOWLER. I will give the names and dates.

An hon. MEMBER. Now.

Mr. FOWLER. Do not worry ; I will just choose my own time. I am glad my hon. friend is so amused. I will give the names and dates but I will choose my own time. I say that this thing is being done not only in regard to supplies for the camps but that buildings are being erected by the hon. minister——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The Department of Public Works do that.

Mr. FOWLER. This is not a case of the Department of Public Works. This is only a small matter involving a couple of hundred dollars. These are small things.

Mr. HOLMES. So are you.

Mr. FOWLER. I am just about as big as any one on the other side of the House, and I want hon. gentlemen opposite to understand that I can maintain my position as well as they can either in the House or out of it. Do not make any mistake about that. I propose to take that position.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The only case I can remember where a building was constructed at a camp without tender was the case of the Lieutenant-Colonel of the 8th Hussars. Lieutenant-Colonel Campbell, a political supporter of the hon. gentleman, constructed stables at Sussex, and the Department of Militia and Defence paid for the building. That is the only case I can recall.

Mr. FOWLER. It is not a usual thing for the Department of Militia and Defence to pay for stables constructed by the 8th Hussars. They have always had to pay for them themselves. I am glad that the hon. gentleman has made a new departure in that respect. In this case the tender was not sent to a builder but to a grocer and this occurred in the city of St. John. This gentleman was asked to put in a tender ? I will get the name and give it to the hon. minister.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Very well.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Carried.

Mr. INGRAM. No, it is not carried yet. I want to have a little better explanation than I have had so far from the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence as to what he states about the militia being free from partisan influence. I do not know whether what he says is true or not. He simply made the statement and we can judge of that statement for ourselves. But, we will take an instance that has created a commotion in this country recently and that is the one which has occurred in the eastern townships. Is it not a fact that the department instructed their officers to reorganize a battalion down there and that the officers carried out their instructions by recommending certain parties to the department ? During all that time, according to the statement made by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, he was writing to citizens asking them to accept certain positions and he thught he was doing his duty by endeavouring to get them to accept these positions. Was it on account of their military knowledge ? I will not say that it was on account of their partisanship. I do not want to mix party feelings with this question. That is not the question before us. But what I want to point out is that neither the hon. Minister of Agriculture nor any other member of this House who is not delegated with the authority to do so should interfere in a matter in which he has no right to interfere. The persons who were delegated to reorganize that battalion made certain selections and they reported their selection to the district officer commanding. By him these selections were recommended to the department. That was perfectly proper. It is in the interests of the militia of this country that these selections shall be made without regard to the politics of those who are selected. I care not what their politics are. I care not whether they are Conservatives or Reformers.

If your officers are incompetent and are partisans, and will tolerate partisan Tories or Grits solely because they are partisans, then remove your officers. But if your officers are doing what they believe to be in the interests of the Militia, then no member of this House and no minister outside the Minister of Militia has a right to change the names of officers on the list, on account of politics. If we are to understand that members of parliament and ministers of the Crown have the right to do these things, then I differ from the Minister of Militia and I say that under such circumstances you are bound to have a partisan militia and you cannot help it. How on earth can you prevent it, if the foundation of the militia force is based on party lines ? We had the reorganization of a militia battalion in my own city, and I can say that during the time I had the patronage of that county I never interfered in militia matter no more than the man in Halifax. I have always held that it was the duty of the officers to select fit men for the battalions, and if the department is not satisfied, then they should remove the officers. I am zealous for the success of the battalion in my city, and I am zealous for the welfare of our militia force generally, trusting that they will be a credit to Canada, but you can never have that result if you introduce partisanship. I thought the Minister of Militia was, notwithstanding all that had occurred, still in favour of a non-partisan force, but the statement made by him this morning leaves room for little hope.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I can say, in endorsation of the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram), that in my capacity as a member of parliament I have never in the most remote way interferd with the militia in my county, because I know my place better than to do anything of the kind. I also endorse the words uttered by the leader of the opposition the other day when he said that politics in connection with the militia was unknown in the province of Nova Scotia. The District Officer Commanding commanding in that province is a prominent Conservative, but I never knew that he allowed his politics to interfere with his duties as commanding the militia in Nova Scotia. Only the other day, I saw that a young officer in the city of Halifax, a young gentleman with whom I am intimately acquainted and who is a prominent Conservative, was promoted. Militia officers should be kept in their positions and promoted, because of their qualifications alone, and if in their positions they begin to interfere with politics, then it is the duty of the government to take notice of it. But, in the formation of a new regiment, the question is not whether a man is a Liberal or Conservative, but whether he is the best and the most efficient man in that district to organize that regiment.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Hear, hear.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I should be very sorry to think, and I should regret it very much if there were the least indication that politics would be introduced into the militia. I think my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach), who knows more about the militia of late years than I do, will say that it is his experience when he was in command of the battalion in his own county, that there were no politics in the militia.

Mr. FOWLER. I heard the Minister of Militia say 'Hear, hear,' when the hon. member (Mr. Ross) gave utterance to sentiments with which we agree on this side of the House, but which were utterly divergent from the sentiments uttered by the minister, who said that the case of the formation of a new regiment was entirely different from the question of promotions. The hon. member (Mr. Ross) laid down the same rule both for promotions and for the formation of a new regiment. It is singular that the Minister of Militia cannot understand the plain English used by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Ross) who said, that politics should not be introduced into the formation of a new regiment, and that the only question which should arise was that of the military qualifications of the men appointed as officers. The Minister of Militia said it was entirely different in the case of a new regiment, but he failed to give any reason except that old woman's reason : 'Because.' Well, we all understand what 'because' means.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I may say that when the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Ross was Minister of Militia in the Mackenzie government, there was an attempt made to bring influence on Hon. Alexander Mackenzie to introduce politics into the formation of a certain regiment, and Alexander Mackenzie's answer was that there must be no political interference with the militia. I am sorry that rule has not been rigidly adhered to. I believe that my hon. friend (Mr. Ross) when he was Minister of Militia took the ground that there was to be no political interference, and the same rule was laid down by Sir John Macdonald. As it is now one o'clock and there are a number of gentlemen who wish to speak on this question, I think the committee should rise.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

House recumed at Three o'clock.

Mr. DANIEL. I understand that before the recess some remarks were being made with regard to political interference with the militia. I understand that the hon. minister made the statement that when a new regiment was being formed political interference was considered legitimate.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I made no such statement.

Mr. DANIEL. Then I was misinformed, and I understand that the hon. minister considers that there should not be political interference at any time with regard to the militia. I am very glad indeed to hear him make that statement, because I think it is a course which if pursued will be acceptable to the people of this country, more especially to the militia. But I would like to bring to the hon. minister's notice the fact that that has not been the case in the past. In my own town, when work has been put up to tender, it has been put up only among those people who are on the patronage list. Now, I hold in my hand a patronage list of the Department of Militia and Defence for the city of St. John, for the year 1902, and I will read it: T. McAvity & Sons, hardware; A. B. McLean, paints, oils, &c.; C. McDonald, paints, oils, &c.; Mooney & Sons, mason; Wm. Melliday, carpenter; Haley Bros. & Co., carpenter; G. S. Fisher & Sons, roofing; John Johnston, painter; Driscoll Bros., lumber; P. Campbell & Co., plumber; Jas. Boyle, tinsmith; C. P. Clarke, drugs; Canadian Drug Co., drugs; R. B. Travis, drugs; R. Leonard, sailmaker; Godsoe Bros., washing; O'Brien & Co., stationery; A. W. Adams, rope; C. E. Harding & Son, small lumber; A. W. Andrews, repairs, tents, &c.; King & Noble, wood and wood work; I. E. Smith, wood work and gun platforms; J. & A. McMillan, stationer. I would like to call the attention of the House to the fact that I. E. Smith, who is put down here for wood work and gun platforms, is a retail grocer in the city of St. John, and not a carpenter at all. I know him very well; he was for some years an alderman of the city. He obtained the contract for doing repairs on the drill shed on the west side of the city of St. John.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Might I make a suggestion to my hon. friend? I really do not see what bearing this has on the Militia Bill. All my estimates are yet to go through, and my hon. friend will have all the opportunity he wants to discuss this matter. It seems to me that we might now deal with the Militia Bill.

Mr. DANIEL. My remarks will not be prolonged, and I will not inflict very much pain on the hon. minister.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not mind hearing it, but I think it is out of place, that is all.

Mr. DANIEL. The amount of this contract to which I refer was a small one, amounting to only $185. But the point I wish to bring out is this, that this work was not put up for tender in the ordinary way, but was put up just among a certain few, and there is no doubt that was done by authority. The officer commanding the district sent down an order to the commanding officer of the regiment to call for tenders among those who were on the patronage list. The list was sent down, and that was done. If that is not bringing politics into the militia, I for one cannot understand what is meant by the term. I might refer to another case. All of us in this House know the gallant colonel who represents the city and county of St. John. At one time he commanded the 62nd regiment in that city, and at the close of his services there was a request from the regiment that he be made honorary colonel of that corps. That was done. I have no objection to that. I do not think any of us have, but shortly after the officer commanding the 3rd. Regiment of Canadian Artillery completed his term of service, and the officers and members of his corps applied to have Lieutenant-Colonel J. R. Armstrong made an honorary colonel of his corps on retirement; but it was not done. If the hon. minister has any reason that he could give to this House for not considering that request favourably, other than the political reason, I would like to hear it. I may say that Colonel J. R. Armstrong is a Conservative, and a man well known in military matters. He commanded the Shoeburyness team, and I think that was the only time that team brought back anything in the shape of rewards. More than that, he has a son who was so imbued with loyal feelings towards this Dominion and the empire, that after making application for a commission in one of the corps that went to South Africa, and finding that he could not obtain one, he resigned his rank and enlisted as a private trooper, and went to serve in the mounted corps. Fortunately he did not lose his life, but was invalided and lost a limb. This gentleman was well thought of in our town. The corps which Col. Armstrong commanded were very much in favour of his being appointed honorary colonel when he retired from the command, and they were very much disappointed when that was not done. If these things do not show a tendency to run the militia on political lines, I would be very glad indeed to hear from the hon. minister that there was some other reason for not acceding to the request that was made.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. At this stage I would appeal to the committee, in order that we may make some progress, to confine themselves to the clause under discussion.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This clause is very germane to the question at issue. I will just read the clause :

There shall be a Minister of Militia, who shall be charged with and be responsible for the administration of militia affairs.

Now, we want to know whether the Minister of Militia is going to continue in charge of that department or whether some subordinate person is to come in. The minister has said that there is no difference whatever, in regard to the introduction of politics, between the formation of a new corps and promotion in an old corps. I am certain the House misunderstood the minister this morning.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. What I said was this, that there was a great difference between a corps already established and the composition of a new corps. I said nothing about the introduction of politics into anything. I said that in the case of a corps already existing, every man in it, from the corporal up, had certain rights which must be respected—rights of promotion, if his behaviour was good ; but in the case of a corps not yet in existence, but to be organized, the conditions were entirely different. Selections had to be made. I see no reason why the best and most influential people—and you have to take these people from both sides of politics—should not be consulted to assist in getting the best men to join it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Then the hon. minister condemns the recent interference of the Minister of Agriculture ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I did not say that.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. We may take it for granted that he does, as he says he will not allow any more meddling on the part of that inferior individual in the affairs of the militia.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Relatively inferior.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have heard the Minister of Militia say to-day on two occasions that after a regiment has been organized promotion shall be made regularly from one rank to another. Listening to the hon. minister one might be led to understand that no violation of that principle has taken place, and I do not wish any such impression to go forth to the country, because, while possibly he may act generally on that principle, we cannot forget that there is one notable exception.

Mr. DANIEL. I would like to have a reply from the minister as to whether it is really the policy of this government to ask the general public to tender for supplies required by the Militia Department. I should like also to have a reply as to why the request that Colonel Armstrong be made an honorary colonel was refused.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. As regards the first question, it is entirely out of place in this discussion. However, I have no objection to informing the hon. gentleman that in the case of supplies to the amount of a few hundred dollars it is to-day, and always has been, the custom of the Militia Department, as of all other departments—a custom which I found in existence when I took charge—to invite tenders from a limited number of people. In the case of the camps, it is the invariable rule to offer to public tender all the supplies for all the camps in Canada. With regard to Colonel Armstrong, I endorse everything the hon. gentleman has said about that officer. I have the pleasure of knowing him, and I can assure my hon. friend that, as far as I know, politics had nothing whatever to do with the fact that he was not made an honorary colonel.

Mr. ALCORN. I understood the hon. Minister of Militia to state pointedly that he always had been, and was still, in favour of what we all believe should be the rule in the administration of the militia affairs, namely, that partisan politics should be rigidly excluded. I understood him to give that principle his most complete assent except in the case of the formation of a new militia corps. He said that exception in such case must be made.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No. I do not know how many times I shall have to correct my hon. friend. I said nothing of the kind. I made no statement that politics should be allowed to influence this government in the formation of a new corps. What I said was that the formation of a new corps is altogether different from promotions in an established corps, and that, in the formation of a new corps, it was proper to consult men of influence, irrespective of politics, and get their assistance.

Mr. ALCORN. Where is the difference ? If it be the general rule that politics are to be excluded, why should that rule be departed from in the formation of a new corps ? Are we to allow the formation of a new corps to be based on politics—and that must be the result if the cabinet minister from the district or members of parliament supporting the government from the district are to dictate what appointments are to be made—I would like the hon. gentleman to explain why, in the formation of a new corps, he should depart from the principle applicable to existing corps? I should also like to know whether the government has, since this Order in Council was issued, received any information of concurrence or dissent from the imperial government on the subject. I should like to know whether the imperial government are of the opinion that the interests of the country as a whole and the interests of the militia will be well guarded by the issuance of the Order in Council, and how the hon. gentleman thinks matters will work out, if, in all matters, including militia, the minister from the district interested is to have a say. What will be the result to the militia if such a course be followed ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The Right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) both seem unwilling to answer although the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) put to them plain and fair questions in a respectful manner.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not understand my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) to ask any information from me. I thought he was putting his case in the form of an argument rather than anything else. But, if he puts it in the from of a question I have no objection to tell him that in my opinion there is much wilful confusion in this matter. There is no constitutional principle underlying this—none whatever. In England, they do not follow the same method as we do in the organization of their cabinet. In this country, under our federative principle, it is admitted, all parts of the Dominion must be represented ; and, for reasons of common sense if nothing else, whenever a recommendation comes to the Council it is to be presumed and believed that all members of the Council have a right to their opinion, and that, as a matter of fact and, I think as every one will agree as a matter of common sense, the members of the Council will defer to the judgment of the man who represents the district affected by the recommendation. He knows more of the local conditions than anybody else in the Council. That is all that is implied in this doctrine. In regard to the question whether we have received any intimation from the imperial authorities on that point, I would say that we have received none at all.

Mr. INGRAM. I do not know that there is any difference of opinion as to the rights of a cabinet minister. If, for instance, there were before the Council two applications for a contract in connection with military stores in the eastern townships, and the minister representing that district were asked which of two applicants he would recommend, one would suppose that he would naturally recommend the one who was his friend and a supporter of the government. We do not object to that or to the recognition of such a principle in matters of patronage of that character. Also he has a right, as a member of the cabinet, while discussing, say a military list, to express his opinion. Nobody questions that right. But when officers of the Department of Militia to whom duties have been delegated make a recommendation, and a member of parliament or a minister of the Crown undertakes, by correspondence, to interfere with the selection of men recommended by that officer, then we say that that member of parliament or that minister is going outside the line of his duty and is doing that which we say is inimical to the interest of the country. As I said before, the moment you lay a political foundation in your militia force you do that which makes an efficient militia impossible, because this spirit of party domination of the militia will extend—you cannot prevent it. We must be practical, and when you regard this matter from a practical standpoint you see that this is the necessary result of allowing interference by party politicians in the affairs of the militia. The Prime Minister speaks of wilful confusion in this matter. I desire to tell him that I have no wish to introduce any wilful confusion in the discussion of any public matter. The difficulty in the case before us was that a minister of the Crown was interfering with the acts of an officer to whom certain powers had been delegated—the minister went out of his way as a member of the cabinet, to interfere and that interference was for a political purpose. And I care not whether the interference is on behalf of Grit or Tory I say that the logical and necessary result of that interference is to make impossible a non-partisan militia force, I have not, during the time I have been in this House, spoken one word from a partisan standpoint in connection with the Militia Department. Nor have I any wish to do so. There are issues outside of the militia upon which we can fight this government, and, in party warfare, I am willing that those should be the only issues. A Conservative can fight as well as a Grit and I am willing to admit that a Grit can fight as well as a Tory. There is no necessity for the introduction of partisanship into the consideration of our militia, and all we object to is that hon. gentlemen opposite do not show the same willingness to leave partisanship aside when dealing with militia matters.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The Minister of Militia has stated that political considerations have not entered in the promotions or retirements in the militia. I do not vouch for the accuracy of the statements I am about to give to the House, but I am satisfied that they will be found absolutely correct. It may be only a series of coincidences, but it is a rather striking series. Take, for the present, the province of the Minister of Militia himself with the facts concerning which he is familiar. I will not touch the others in the meantime. Take the First Canadian Artillery, Halifax, N.S. ;—Lieutenant-Colonel Oxley had to retire, his five years of service having expired. He retired and another officer was appointed ; Lieutenant-Colonel Oxley was a Conservative.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He went out.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That is what I say—he was not granted an extension.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. His tenure of office ended by the effluxion of time.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. But the minister knows that he was eligible for the three year's extension.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. But that is only granted under special conditions.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. But I am showing that these special conditions do not seem to exist in the case of the Conservative. In the case of the 63rd Battalion, Halifax, Lieutenant-Colonel Crane was retired and was given no extension—no special consideration. 66th Regiment, Halifax, Lieutenant-Colonel Weston, Conservative, retired and no extension was allowed in his case. This convenient clause was not allowed to operate in favour of these gentlemen. In the 68th Regiment, King's county, Lieutenant-Colonel Chipman got one year's extension when his time was up. I understand—though I do not say I speak with authority—that Lieutenant-Colonel Chipman, though a Conservative, is a supporter of the Minister of Militia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He is not. I manage to get on without him.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are not the minister and Lieutenant-Colonel Chipman on the best of terms ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In my county we are able to be political opponents and still be on good terms.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And so it is, let me tell the hon. minister in every county in Canada where we meet with gentlemen—just as in this House. The 69th Regiment, Annapolis county, Lieutenant-Colonel Shaffner, a Liberal-Conservative, was given no extension. The 78th Royal Regiment, Colchester county, Lieutenant-Colonel Lawrence, who retired on 21st May, 1903, was given a year's extension. That year expired last May, and Lieutenant-Colonel Lawrence still remains in command though the senior major has been qualified and ready for promotion ever since. I need not say that Lieutenant-Colonel Lawrence happens to be a staunch Liberal, and I believe that the major who would succeed to the command is a Liberal-Conservative. The former commander of the 75th Regiment, Lunenburg, was Lieutenant-Colonel Kaulbach. When the question arises in this House whether he is a Liberal or Conservative, his name would indicate the answer. When his time was up he was retired. I think we in this House are safe in concluding that he is a Conservative. The 93rd Regiment, Lieutenant-Colonel Oxley was retired as was his predecessor Lieutenant-Colonel Harrison both Liberal-Conservatives—not an hour's extension given in either case. No extension was given except in the case of Lieutenant-Colonel Chipman and Lieutenant-Colonel Lawrence, the latter being a strong Liberal, the former a warm friend of the Minister.

Mr. LOGAN. I may tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) that the successor to Lieutenant-Colonel Oxley is also a Conservative—so there is no politics there.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am glad to hear it. That is the regiment of which my hon. friend (Mr. Logan) is a member. I am glad to know that it is an efficient regiment. The 94th Cape Breton regiment, Lieutenant-Colonel Bethune was given a year's extension when his time expired. He is, and was, at the time of the extension, a Liberal, though formerly a Conservative.

Mr. INGRAM. He is a non-partisan ; he is on both sides.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have nothing to do with it myself. This statement is sent up here from Nova Scotia by a gentleman who should know the state of affairs in that province. The minister can hardly, I think, give a satisfactory explanation of why some one or other of all these retiring colonels is refused a year's extension. It is not charged that the officers retired had been long in command ; some of them had only been in command five years ; nor is it alleged that the new officers who were to succeed them were men of long standing in the force or of great prominence. I would not have introduced this subject, but the minister made this statement that politics have never been allowed to enter into the militia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will give the hon. gentleman a very much better authority than his correspondent as to whether or not politics have entered into the administration of the militia in Nova Scotia; I quote to him the statement of his leader, who, a few days ago, said that so far as he knew or had heard, he knew nothing of politics entering into the militia of Nova Scotia. I presume that statement is up-to-date, so that the gentleman who is communicating with my hon. friend must have passed over the gentleman with whom he would naturally have communicated, the leader of the Conservative party in Nova Scotia, to do as some other people have done—without the very greatest amount of success—select the hon. gentleman as a champion. I may say two or three words with reference to this statement. In the first place, I criticise it as absolutely unfair; and I say that any insinuation that there has been any politics whatever in any one of the cases mentioned is absolutely untrue, so far as the 63rd battalion is concerned. If he will ask his leader, that gentleman will give him some information. As to the 66th, I think he can get information from the same quarter. So far as my own regiment, the 68th, is concerned, Lieutenant-Colonel Chipman had been a colonel for over thirty years. Next to him was a Conservative almost sixty years of age, who wanted an opportunity to get a reward for his twenty or thirty years' of service, and Colonel Chipman went out and a Tory colonel went in as usual—no very great injury to the Tory party in that case. As to the 69th, the same thing happened. The hon. gentleman might have gone back to the time of Colonel Starratt, whose time, I think, may have been extended one year, but a further extension was refused. The next senior officer was a Conservative, and when Colonel Shaffner's time was up it was not extended. Colonel Shaffner wished his time extended, but could not get it, in order that a good Tory senior major might have an opportunity to be colonel of that regiment. So I might go through all the regiments in Nova Scotia. I believe that my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach), who commanded the 75th, was not granted an extension of time. I do not know that he wanted it extended but at any rate the command fell into the hands of a good Conservative. The same thing was done in the case of the 93rd and so far as I know, in the case of the 94th. The regulation provides that the term of command of an officer shall be five years. Automatically his command ceases at the end of five years unless something intervenes. What? In the event of a report being made by the district officer commanding that there is a strong reason, in the interests of the corps and the militia, that there should be an extension of command, an extension may be granted, and nobody knows that better than my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes). I wish to say at once that I am opposed to those extensions of command. I do not believe in them, and I believe we should change the regulations and extinguish the possible three years' further extension of command. If I remain in the position of Minister of Militia this will be one of the first things I shall do.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would heartily agree with the minister——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES—in not granting this extension. I may say that when my own time of command was up—I do not know whether the district officer commanding had authority or not, but I presume he had—I was offered an extension of three years. I declined to take an hour of it. I thought the officers next under me should have the right. I had done my duty. The minister loses his temper once in a while.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Possibly it would be as well to keep that business out of this matter. Too many gauntlets had better not be thrown down lest some of them might be picked up before this matter is put through. The minister has referred in rather sarcastic terms to certain matters being entrusted to me. I think he must feel hurt, because the success of the different matters entrusted to me has placed him in a very unenviable light in the Dominion of Canada, and has placed his junior in the War Department, the Minister of Agriculture, in a much more undesirable light than the Minister of Militia. When I undertake to take hold of the Minister of Militia, I think he will find that it is a little more than the reading of a statement sent me by friends in Nova Scotia. The minister has not disputed the authenticity of one word of what I read. He has not given a very satisfactory convincing explanation of why extensions were granted in some cases and not in others. He has referred to the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). The military experience of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, as he stated the other day, was confined to serving his country in the 63rd long years ago. I know the commanding officers in nearly all the regiments to which I referred, and I am not finding fault. I was very careful in the statement to ask the minister for an explanation. He was asking credit for giving an extension in certain cases. I do not think he has satisfied the House. Colonel Chipman was granted a year's extension, although he had been in command for thirty years. I have no objection to Colonel Chipman. I believe his family are loyal, honest citizens, but it strikes me as peculiar that extensions are granted in some cases and not in others. I do not want to introduce politics into the discussion of the militia. I have avoided that ever since the Liberal party came into power and long years before. When we have had an opportunity to criticise the minister rather adversely on some occasions, we have chosen the broad, fair line of appealing to his reason, and trying to get him to realize the proper position which he, as minister, occupies, and we have tried to keep politics out of it. If he had rigidly adhered to the line which I believe he tried to adhere to for a long time, and had, at all events, sat upon the Minister of Agriculture, in regard to the establishment of the 13th Light Dragoons in the eastern townships, if he had brushed that gentleman aside and maintained the line he had long maintained, it would have been better for the House and for the country, and some unfortunate incidents that have arisen would not have arisen.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This is the clause that opens up the whole business ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would it be out of place for the hon. minister to give an explanation in detail of the proposal ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I shall be very glad.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I received two letters this morning, one from Colonel Ward of East Durham, who is just closing up his camp, and another asking that this important clause may be held over until they are here to-morrow.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No objection.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I see the hon. gentleman is leaving out any reference to the appointment of General Officer Commanding.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. You are retaining that ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Section allowed to stand.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We might go back now to section 2, paragraph (f). The hon. leader of the opposition and other hon. gentlemen took exception to the striking out of the words 'General Officer Commanding' and suggested that either these words should be left in or that other words should be substituted. Under the new system it may be that there will not always be a General Officer Commanding so I propose to return to the system which actually now exists under the present law and put in the words :

'General orders' means orders and instructions issued to the militia by or through the adjutant-general, with the approval of the Minister of Militia.

That is practically the condition now. I therefore beg to move that the section be amended by substituting for the words 'the General Officer Commanding' the words 'or through the adjutant general' and that after the words 'Minister of Militia' there shall be added the words 'and Defence.'

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In what section of the present Act is that provision found ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 119.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is as follows :

All general orders of militia or other militia orders issued through or by the adjutant-general, shall be held sufficiently notified to all persons whom they concern, by their insertion in the 'Canada Gazette.'

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. As a matter of fact they are all issued by the adjutant-general and have always been.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That will cover it.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 4 reconsidered.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I consulted with my hon. friend the leader of the opposition and he thought that in view of the amendment suggested by the hon. Minister of Justice it would be well that the matter should stand. The statement of the hon. Minister of Justice was satisfactory to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition as to the qualification that should be embodied in the clause.

Mr. BOURASSA. Do I understand that you want to carry section 4 simply in the form of a repetition of section 15 of the British North America Act ? I think it is most ridiculous that we should in the law simply repeat the disposition of the British North America Act. The British north America Act is very proper as it exists. It would be simply repeating the law to insert that clause in the Bill. If we retain that clause in the Bill it is to define the powers of the Canadian government and not to define the power of the King. The power of the King is defined by the British North America Act which is an imperial Act of parliament and which we have no right to interpret in any way. Here is the clause in the British North America Act :

The commander in chief of the land and naval militia, and of all naval and military forces, of and in Canada, is hereby declared to continue and be vested in the Queen.

That declaration of the power of the Queen, or at the present time, of the King is the same as the declaration of the power of the sovereign over the executive government. Compare that clause with clause 9 of the British North America Act.

9. The executive government and authority of and over Canada is hereby declared to continue and be vested in the Queen.

Why do you not in any Bill in which you define some of the executive powers of the Canadian government or of a department of the Canadian government repeat clause 9 that the excutive power of Canada continues to be vested in the King ? That clause 4 has no value whatever in this Bill unless it is to define the powers of the Canadian government. Therefore I claim that if it is thought proper to repeat the declaration of the sovereign power of the King, which nobody disputes, it should at the same time contain a declaration of the executive power of the Canadian government. It is for that reason that I suggest that the clause should read as follows :

The commander in chief of the militia is hereby declared to continue and be vested in the King and shall be exercised and administered by the Governor General in Council.

If we have no right to make use of these words then we had no right to pass the present law. The present law says :

> The commander in chief of the land and naval militia, and of all military and naval forces, of and in Canada, is vested in the Queen, and shall be exercised and administered by Her Majesty personally or by the Governor General as her representative.

In fact, I think that clause is absurd because it is a declaration that the command is thereby vested in the Queen as if we were granting to Her Majesty the command of our forces. Then it is said that the command shall be exercised by Her Majesty personally or by the Governor General. The whole thing is certainly ridiculous. I think if the clause has any value whatever it is to define the executive power of the Canadian government, and while recognizing the undoubted and indisputable principle that the command of the Canadian militia as well as the defensive forces of all parts of the British empire belongs to the King, it must be remembered that the execution of that power as far as the Dominion of Canada is concerned belongs to the Canadian government, and therefore if we do not assert in this clause the principle of self-government we must drop the whole thing. It is most ridiculous that we should, in a law of our own, repeat entirely the clause of the British North America Act. Only the British parliament has power to amend that Act, and so, I do not see that we should pass legislation here that would simply hold us up to ridicule. If there is any value in that clause it should contain both the principle of the sovereign power of the King, and of the executive power of the Canadian government. I move in amendment that the clause should read :

> The command in chief of the militia is hereby declared to continue and be vested in the King, and shall be exercised and administered by the Governor General in Council.

Mr. ALCORN. The hon. gentleman says it is nonsensical that the phraseology of this section should follow the British North America Act——

Mr. BOURASSA. The present law says that the authority shall be exercised and administered by Her Majesty personally, which would mean that in case of an emergency the sovereign would have to come across the ocean and take up personal command of the army, or, it could be done by the Governor General as representative of the sovereign. I think the old clause was absurd, and the Minister of Justice said this morning either we should drop the whole thing, which I think would be better, or, that we should repeat the language of the British North America Act. With all due respect to the minister, I think he himself will admit that it would be absurd on our part to repeat the clause of the British North America Act. If there is anything to be added to the clause of the British North America Act, it should be a declaration of the power of the Canadian government, without any infringement upon the right of the King.

Mr. ALCORN. I always understood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) to stand very strongly for responsible government in this country.

Mr. BOURASSA. Hear, hear.

Mr. ALCORN. Therefore I am surprised that he should now advocate placing the militia under the control of the government, which is but a committee of parliament, rather than under the control of parliament itself. It is highly proper to my mind that the clause should remain practically as suggested by the Minister of Justice. I submit that the clause was very properly construed by the Minister of Justice this morning and that it should stand as he advocates. It is parliament to whom the nation should look ; there is no reason for placing the power in the hands of the government. It seems to me that the object of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) is to get control of the militia.

Mr. BOURASSA. On the contrary, I want the condition to remain exactly as it is now, only I want the law to define an actual condition and not an imaginary one. The position now is that the sovereign authority over our militia, is in the King. I never disputed that.

Mr. ALCORN. Then why do you object to put it in ?

Mr. BOURASSA. I am in favour of the principle and as long as we are a British colony we cannot be in favour of any other principle, but I say the execution of that power belongs to the Canadian government which is responsible to the Canadian people. My hon. friend (Mr. Alcorn) wants to make a distinction between the Canadian government and the Canadian parliament.

Mr. ALCORN. You are doing that.

Mr. BOURASSA. The executive power of the government will be limited by this law, just as the power of the minister of another department is limited by other legislation. There is no infringement of the right of parliament in giving the power to the Governor General in Council, because parliament has control and can amend the law whenever it likes.

Mr. ALCORN. The hon. gentleman is endeavouring to becloud the issue.

Mr. BOURASSA. Not at all.

Mr. ALCORN. So far as I can gather from his remarks, his real object is to take the control of the militia out of the hands of parliament and invest it altogether in the government. We are not satisfied to do anything of the kind. If that had been done at the time of the South African war the course pursued by Canada would probably be vastly different from what it was. The hon. gentleman says we are merely repeating a provision of the British North America Act. That is an imperial Act which we cannot affect, and we cannot too often affirm a basic principle or a good proposition of law. Therefore, I think it is highly proper that we should repeat, even word for word the provision of that imperial Act, and declare our assent to the principle that the sovereign is the head of the militia of Canada. I say that we should leave the matter in the hands of parliament, and that being my opinion, I dissent from the proposition of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa).

Mr. GOURLEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa), states a very curious position. He is opposed to us repeating what is practically the grant of power under which we are legislating, but he goes further and says we should repeat the constitutional principle which is the basis of the government of Canada as well as the government of the empire. The constitutional grant of military powers to this country is in the King; and the hon. gentleman's amendment would only say that that grant of power should be carried out constitutionally in Canada; that is upon the advice of his ministers and parliament. The amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) would be absolutely a redundancy, because it only states what is the constitution of the country. The British North America Act gives us a grant of parliamentary and executive power in this country on all fours with the executive and parliamentary power of England. Therefore it is nothing more than courtesy when we are attempting to frame a militia Bill, to refer to the grant of power under which the militia of this country is organized, and then, from that statement develop our Bill. But it would be absolutely unnecessary; and therefore I cannot understand the logical sequence that is said to be in the mind of the hon. member for Labelle, when he would object to a very proper restatement of the constitutional law as laid down in the British North America Act. But he would do that which is absolutely absurd—he would say that we should have in this country parliamentary and constitutional law, which is given us in every line of the British North America Act. Therefore I would oppose the amendment as being utterly illogical from beginning to end, and would maintain the keeping in this clause, which is simply a repetition of the basis of power on which we propose to amplify our Bill. I was told this morning that the fourth section of the new Bill was a copy of the original section. I find in the old Act that the command of the naval militia and naval forces of Canada are given to the Governor General, but I find no reference to those forces in this Bill. I want to know why this Bill is confined to the militia, while the old Bill embraced the military and naval defences of Canada?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Because there will be another Bill introduced this session covering the naval defence.

Mr. GOURLEY. You propose to deal with the two systems separately?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Before voting upon this amendment, I would like to understand what the hon. mover has in view. As I understand it, the only change he proposes is to add the words 'in Council' after 'the Governor General.'

Mr. BOURASSA. And to strike out the words 'His Majesty' in the second part.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like the Minister of Justice to explain the difference between the Governor General and the Governor General in Council, because, as I understand it, 'Governor General' means 'Governor General in Council.'

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The constitutional principle which governs the raising and control of the militia is of course the same in this country as it is in England. There can be no departure with respect to His Majesty's forces in this country from the principle that obtains in England. The principle in England I will state briefly from the books, is that the sovereign has not constitutionally any power to raise a military force without the consent of parliament but when a force is raised with that consent, he can, subject to any enactment, regulate it in any manner that appears good. Parliament controls the levying of the force, its equipment, maintenance, distribution, payment and all that; but the control of the force when raised is in the sovereign as head of the executive. The same constitutional rule applies to the colony; but in the case of the colonial forces, the consent is given by the colonial legislature instead of by the imperial parliament; so that our position in that respect is the same as that of the imperial parliament. My view with respect to the old Bill, with all due deference to the draughtsman, is that there was an oversight. Some one drew that Bill who had not a proper regard for the true constitutional doctrine that controls the militia. The section in the old Bill reads:

The command in chief of the land and naval militia, and of all military and naval forces, of and in Canada, is vested in the Queen, and shall be exercised and administered by Her Majesty personally or by the Governor General as her representative.

It is quite apparent that that section was merely intended to be declaratory of the law; because we had no power to depart from the constitutional principle laid down in section 15 of the British North America Act. Therefore a proper form to have adopted would have been: 'The command in chief shall continue to be vested;' because we had no power to vest anything in the sovereign, and the doctrine laid down in section 15 of the British North America Act is the old law established after the restoration in a statute of Charles the Second, that the control of the army is vested in the King. That is my first criticism of that section. My next critism is as to the words added. My hon. friend and I differ in this respect. I hold that no word should be put into a statute that can be avoided. If you can avoid the use of unnecessary words, you will confer a blessing on humanity. Words are intended, as a Frenchman once said, to conceal our thoughts rather than to make them clear, which my experience has proved to be true. In this section, after the words, 'vested in the Queen,' where it ought to stop, it says, 'and shall be exercised and administered by Her Majesty personally.' The use of these words is a constitutional heresy. Her Majesty or His Majesty personally has no control over the army.

Mr. GOURLEY. But in reading the words one would subordinate them to their constitutionality.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would prefer not to have to go through the mental act of subordination. I would rather eliminate the words. Then we have these other words: 'or by the Governor General as Her representative.' I should like to say that the Governor General means the Governor General in Council, but I cannot, because I have before me the Interpretation Act staring me in the face, and I find that paragraph 7 of section 7 defines the expressison 'Governor General' to mean 'the Governor General for the time being of Canada, or other the chief executive officer or administrator for the time being carrying on the government of Canada on behalf and in the name of the Queen, by whatever title he is designated;' and the next paragraph, paragraph 8 of section 7, defines the Governor General in Council as meaning the Governor General of Canada, or person administering the government of Canada for the time being, acting by and with the advice of, or by and with the advice and consent of, or in conjunction with, the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.' So that if you are going to add the words, 'and shall be exercised and administered by His Majesty or by the Governor General in Council,' you are adding words that are of no value, because His Majesty means necessarily His Majesty acting under the advice of his ministers. 'His Majesty' has no other meaning under our constitution. There is always of course the personal prerogative of the sovereign with respect to the control of the army, but it is one of those which has been encroached upon to such an extent by modern parliaments that now practically it is never exercised, except under the control of parliament. Otherwise the doctrine the King can do no wrong would not prevail. If Her Majesty had been personally responsible for the conduct of the Boer war, criticism would have been directed against her, but it is always the impersonal person known as Her Majesty who acts through the council.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And in the case of the abolition of purchase in the army.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, I could give a lot of details but shall not weary the House. We might leave the clause merely as a declaration or reaffirmation of the principle which we have in the British North America Act, but the minister has control of the Bill, and to preserve the continuity of legislation, wants to import into it the words in the section of the old law with respect to the Governor General. There is no harm in that except the harm that every useless word may have, and the use of the words 'His Excellency the Governor General' seems to be unnecessary, especially in view of the fact that in the letters patent which are issued to the Governor General, there is contained this clause. This is from the King:

> We do hereby require and command all our officers and ministers, civil and military, and all other inhabitants of the said Dominion to aid and assist our said Governor General.

So that under these instructions, it would appear as if the representative of the Sovereign had control, but this control is only to be exercised after parliament has determined within what limits it shall be exercised. Parliament is the supreme arbiter. Parliament controls everything connected with the militia, in so far as its organization and creation are concerned; but after it is brought into existence, it is controlled by the Sovereign, acting through his executive, and we come back to the old difference between legislative and executive jurisdiction. We exercise the legislative power over the militia and the Sovereign exercises the executive power; and our views ought to be to maintain, in so far as our militia is concerned, absolutely the same principle as they have in England. In fact we could not do otherwise even if we wanted to. On the whole I would be content with the clause in the form in which it is in the British North America Act, but I can see no harm in allowing these extra words to be added.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the minister read the clause as he suggests ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would suggest that it read as in the British North America Act :

The command in chief of the militia is hereby declared to continue and be vested in the King.

To this my hon. colleague adds the following words : 'and shall be exercised and administered by the Governor General as his representative.'

Mr. BOURASSA. I think that the opinion just given by the Minister of Justice confirms what I have said. He has pointed out the absurdity of the clause in the old Bill. At the same time he pointed out the danger of putting useless words into any legislation. The danger is that they may be used for other purposes than what they were intended for. I may remind the House that although we may have no doubts as to the powers of the Governor General, although we may have no doubt that he cannot exercise them except upon the advice of his cabinet, at the same time I do not see why we should not take the precaution of asserting that principle, if we are to have a clause of the kind proposed at all. I have no doubt that my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) will uphold me in this view because only a moment ago he was very jealous of the rights of parliament. As the Minister of Justice has shown, when the term 'Governor General' stands alone, that does not mean Governor General in Council, but His Excellency personally. This reminds me that at the time of the Boer war, a celebration took place in Montreal at which an address was presented to His Excellency, and in making the presentation, a lawyer, who has a high position in the Canadian bar, Mr. McMaster, gave utterance to the opinion that the Governor General had the power, under our law, to take hold of the militia, without consulting his advisers or parliament, and send them anywhere in Canada or outside. My hon. friend from King's (Mr. Fowler) was very anxious that the Canadian government, which is responsible to parliament, should not be given the power to send the militia out of Canada. Well, what would he think of confiding that power to the Governor General ? And according to a leading light of the Montreal bar the Governor General has that power in his hands without control by anybody. And His Excellency accepted the speech and thanked Mr. McMaster for his good advice.

Mr. GOURLEY. Did the hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) say that he would have a clause in this Bill to prevent the militia of Canada from being sent abroad?

Mr. BOURASSA. Certainly he did, and I was rather scandalized at that exhibition of little Canadianism. While I agree with the hon. member for King's on the general principle, I do not think we should frame a law so narrow that the Canadian government should not be free to send our militia beyond the borders of Canada for the defence of Canada. But if the hon. member for King's is afraid to leave in the hands of the Canadian government the power to do what they like with the Canadian militia, he should all the more object to a clause which, though in practice it may be inoperative, lays down the doctrine that the Governor General personally shall have control of our militia—the same doctrine as was expounded to His Excellency by Mr. McMaster, and which His Excellency evidently accepted. If the Minister of Justice were free to act, he would either leave this clause out altogether or frame it so that it assert the principle of self-government in Canada as regards our militia.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is there.

Mr. BOURASSA. No, it is not. He has destroyed that argument by reading the clause in the Interpretation Act, which shows that when the term 'Governor General' is used, that means the Governor General himself personally, and that when we want to make a difference we use the words 'Governor General in Council.' The clause itself is not necessary. As the Minister of Justice has properly said, we cannot change the powers of the King or the law that determines the relations between the British government and this country. That is all settled in the British North America Act, and there is no need to repeat it in any clause of this Bill. But if you want to repeat clause 15 of the British North America Act and add anything to it, we cannot add anything else than a declaration of the self-government of Canada in militia matters as well as in others. But to put in a clause in an Act respecting the militia of Canada declaring that the command of our militia is in the hands of the Governor General personally, would show lack of dignity on our part.

Of course it may be said that it was contained in the old Act. But, as the hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) has very properly said—and I agree with him—we are making a new legislation, and we are trying to improve upon the old. Therefore we ought to consider any section that is proposed to the committee upon its own merits. And surely if my hon. friend from King's, or my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) would express their own opinions they would agree with me. Perhaps the hon. member for King's would be embarrassed, on account of his friendship and neighbourship with some of the hon. gentlemen on the other side by admitting that he agreed with me, and even though he agrees with me would not like to say so before parliament or elsewhere. But that is not the question. The question before this committee is not whether the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) proposes an amendment or not, but the question is whether we are going to declare that the executive power in Canada, so far as the militia is concerned, belongs to the Governor General personally or to the Canadian government. There is no way out of it. Of course, you may get out of it by a side argument or by a vote, but that does not affect the truth of my position. I stand by the amendment and surely, when the question is put squarely before the people of Canada, they will say that they want the militia to be dealt with by the Canadian parliament. I hope that the sentiment of self-government, the pride in our institutions, those institutions that have been granted to us by the British people, will cause us to maintain our rights without diminution. I admit that, in practice, it may make no change. But I think it would be improper, even though it may be ineffective, for this parliament to declare in the text of a statute that we are ashamed of our right of self-government and do not wish to proclaim. I repeat there is only one of two things to be done—either to drop this altogether and leave it as it was, or make it a declaration of self-government on our part.

Mr. ALCORN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) says that the object of his remarks is to preserve the principle of self-government in Canada. Let me draw his attention to the phraseology of this section, and I think he will agree with me that that is exactly what we are doing. This section declares that this power is to be exercised and administered by His Majesty or by the Governor General as his representative. 'As His representative.' That is as the representative of the King. That means that the command of the militia in this country shall be exercised by His Majesty's representative as that power is exercised by His Majesty where he is his own representative. In other words, we are preserving self-government in Canada by providing that the Governor General is to act in regard to the militia as the King acts in regard to the army.

Mr. BOURASSA. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Alcorn) prepared to state before the parliament of Canada that what he desires for Canada is the exercise of executive powers by the Governor General without the advice of his cabinet ?

Mr. ALCORN. That is not contained in this section.

Mr. BOURASSA. That is just what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) states —that where the words 'Governor General' appear it means the Governor General personally, but where the Governor General with his cabinet is meant, the words used, are 'Governor General in Council.'

Mr. GOURLEY. I do not so understand the Minister of Justice. I think his argument is clear and fair. I do not think the hon. minister would say that the use of the closing words of this section would mean that the Governor General could act independently of this parliament. The language is not exactly proper to the section, but, still, any lawyer, reading the section would hold that the words 'Governor General as his representative' would refer to, and be governed by the foregoing words. I agree with the Minister of Justice, therefore, that the latter words of this section are redundant. Under the general patent, by which the powers of the Governor General are conferred in this country, as of any other self-governing colony, it is set out plainly that the Governor General is the representative, in this country, of a constitutional government, as the King is the representative of a constitutional government in England. So, these words need not be there. I learn, from the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) that the hon. Minister of Justice has said, that the words were offensive. I would be sorry to know that the Minister of Justice has said anything of the kind. I think he would respect too much the men who made the constitution. This legislation, fixing the powers of this parliament, and governing the distribution of executive powers, is legislation of a very high class. And, if the draftsmen of that time used redundant words, there was more excuse for them than there would be for us. We have had thirty-seven years of the work of the courts in interpreting the meaning of these words, and the definition of the powers of the executive, and we ought to be able to express our laws in clearer words than did these men at the inception of confederation. And I can easily understand, that the words were put in there for greater caution. The power of the Governor General was given by special commission and instruction—our general patent was not settled for years after. Therefore, I can readily understand that these draughtsmen would say : We will not let instructions or commission interfere with the administration of the militia, but we will introduce words that will settle the matter. We have much more light than they had. I think that the suggestion of the Minister of Justice is a very proper one—that we should leave it out. I see that the words in this section 9 of the British North America Act are very clear and very terse. See the few words in which these men established constitutional government in this country :

> The executive government and authority of and over Canada is hereby declared to continue and be vested in the Queen.

We have always had constitutional government ; they wanted to say that this was to be continued, and this they have done. The latter words of this section are the very words suggested by the Minister of Justice. I do not know whether he borrowed them from this section, but I say they are very happy words, and we might well adopt them, in the case, declaring that the command of the militia is to continue and be vested in the King. These are very proper, and apt words. Now, with regard to the Governor General's name being mentioned, I do not think it is necessary, in any Act, to refer to the Governor General. He is the King, and there is no necessity to repeat it. The Governor General is not a separate entity,—he is King, and he is here for the purpose of administering the government for the King. If the King were here, he would exercise the power himself and the Governor General would disappear. I hope the hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) will make his position clear, as it would be most unfortunate for us who sit on this side of the House to have among us a gentleman entertaining opinions such as those ascribed to him. I hope it will be always clear that the militia of Canada will be ready to serve in the most distant part of the empire. If a contrary sentiment is to be heard anywhere, it should be heard only in the county of Labelle. In every other part of Canada I hope there will be a distinct repudiation of what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) has said. I wish to say to the hon. member for Labelle that, if he wishes to improve the feeling in this House—and I would like to esteem him highly, he should cease wounding the feelings of every Anglo-Saxon in Canada, as he has been constantly doing. I do not wish to say anything offensive, but it certainly does not promote amity in this House, or elsewhere, for us to have our most sacred feelings raked over by the hon. member for Labelle. I wish the hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) to rise and dissociate himself from that hon. gentleman.

I want to say here and I will undertake to give my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) this information that although he had a million tongues in Canada, whenever the militia and in fact every man in Canada is required in India or the farthest isles of the sea, we will be there ; we will spend every dollar of money of Canada for that purpose, and the sooner the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) finds that out the better. If there was a government in Canada hostile to that idea we would hang them in twenty-four hours.

Mr. FOWLER. I would refer the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) to 'Hansard' of to-morrow, for the remarks I made, and I am sure he will be perfectly satisfied when he reads these remarks. I would not like him to take his authority for them from the hon. member for Labelle. With respect to the proposed amendment I understood, as I said, that the British North America Act provides, exactly as the Minister of Justice has stated, that this authority is in the hands of the government. Therefore I fail to understand what good a declaration of it would be which would not be effective. Supposing we adopt the amendment of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) what advantage do we derive ?

Mr. BOURASSA. I told the committee very frankly that I did not see the use of any of these declarations, that it would be just as well to drop the whole thing out altogether. I may reply to my hon. friend's question by asking another. What is the advantage of declaring there that the supreme command belongs to the King when that declaration is already in the British North America Act ?

Mr. FOWLER. You are making a declaration according to law, but if you make the other declaration it is a declaration not according to law.

Mr. BOURASSA. If my hon. friend claims that it is against the law to state that the exercise of the command of the militia belongs to the Canadian parliament I am greatly surprised. I would not have it declared in this Canadian parliament that we have not that right.

Mr. GOURLEY. It is provided in the constitution, in Section VI of the British North America Act :

> It shall be lawful for the Queen by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada in relation to all matters not coming within the classes of subjects assigned exclusively to the legislature of the provinces.

And in the list of subjects reserved to the Dominion parliament we have :

> Militia, military and naval service and defence.

We have a constitutional grant of power to manage the militia in every respect.

Mr. BOURASSA. That is right.

Mr. FOWLER. And that power when the law is passed, is exercised as a constitutional right by the King, advised by this his Privy Council for Canada.

Mr. BOURASSA. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOWLER. I think it would disfigure an Act of parliament to put in a clause saying that the government of this country is to be administered by the King with the advice of his cabinet ?

Mr. BOURASSA. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOWLER. It would be an absurdity.

Mr. BOURASSA. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If my hon. friend will take the section as I understand it, we are all agreed that the section will read :

The command in chief of the militia is hereby declared to continue and be vested in the King.

We are all agreed up to that point. Then the only dispute is as respects the other words that are here. My view is that even stopping the paragraph at the word 'King,' that applies to the control which vests in the sovereign, acting on the advice of the Canadian government. The other words, it seems to me, ought to be struck out for good drafting, but if we mean to leave them in I take issue with my hon. friend for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) when he says that the clause will then mean that the parliament of Canada are willing to declare that the administration of the militia affairs will be in the hands of the Governor General personally. That is his point. I take issue with him on that point and while I say that the drafting might be very much improved, still, as it is, it means that this power shall be in the hands of the executive, because while the words 'Governor General' taken alone, mean the person who may fill the position of Governor General and the 'Governor General in Council' has a different meaning we must take all the words that are here.

The command in chief . . . . shall be exercised and administered by His Majesty.

Now, if you stop there, what would be the meaning? His Majesty, acting as the head of the executive of course. Now to what extent do the following words amplify that?

Or by the Governor General as his representative.

That would be 'or by the Governor General as the representative of His Majesty' acting as the head of the executive. That would be the result and as I said before, we are putting in a lot of words to no purpose.

Mr. GOURLEY. It is tautology.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not wish to criticise the minister who has had the responsibility of this Bill and all the trouble connected with its preparation, and who is much more familiar with it than I can be, but I must admit that if you put the word 'Governor in Council' there the result would be to make it more clear than it is now. But the effect would be the same. I cannot see that it would in law produce any different effect.

Mr. BOURASSA. I am not going to carry this discussion any further, but I will take the declaration the minister made now and the one that he made a little earlier. He told us that it was a bad thing to put in useless words. Now, he tells us that if we stop after these words:

The command in chief of the militia is vested in the King,

Then the exercise of that power shall come back to the Canadian government. He says also that if we leave the other words about the exercise of power by His Majesty, the position will not be changed; and even if we leave it to the Governor General, there is no change again. For one purpose we are here making three declarations. If ever there was an example of three lines needlessly used, it is in this case. Therefore I say that so far as the use of unnecessary words is concerned, this clause is a striking example.

I never said that by reason of the exercise of that power being vested in the Governor General, we were expressing the view that the Governor General could become the personal head of the army. I simply say that after the definition by the Minister of Justice of the Governor General personally and the Governor General in Council, it is an absurdity on the part of the Canadian government to declare that the exercise of this power is in the hands of the Governor General personally. I have said over and over again, agreeing with the hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) and the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick), that we cannot change the constitutional law of this country. At the same time I have said that it is not a proper thing to allow words in a law that can be interpreted falsely, especially in view of the interpretation that was taken up and accepted by the Governor General four years ago. I have at the time quoted to the House—and it cannot be contradicted—an article saying that on the 31st of October, 1899, at a concert in Montreal, Mr. Donald MacMaster told the Governor General personally, in the presence of a large meeting, that according to the constitution of Canada the Governor General had the power to take the whole militia of Canada and send them where he pleased without the consent of Council, and His Excellency did not contradict that statement.

An hon. MEMBER. Mr. McMaster was clearly wrong.

Mr. BOURASSA. Mr. McMaster was clearly wrong, but at the same time I say it is a dangerous thing when one Governor General would allow that to be said in his presence without correcting the statement, and explaining it. He permitted that to be said in his presence before a thousand people. It was published in all the newspapers in Canada that the Governor General could take hold of the militia of Canada and do with it as he pleased. I think it is only proper that we should make our law so clear that no future Governor could make that mistake. I think that we in Canada should make our constitution so clear that a Governor General could not make such a mistake and that no future governor should permit any such breaches of what we might call constitutional etiquette in their presence as the Governor General did some four years ago, because probably he did not know the real meaning of the law.

The text of the law allowed him to accept that interpretation and if we leave the text of the law as it is there in the future the Governor General may adopt that interpretation. As the hon. minister has made it perfectly clear that interpretation has not been contradicted and although he opposes my amendment now he is at the same time obliged to admit that the words 'Governor General' mean the Governor General personally, and that the words 'Governor General in Council' mean the Governor General assisted by his Council. If we admit that and everybody admits it, this clause must be interpreted as giving to the Governor the powers of execution that this parliament will give to him concerning our militia. I will agree with everybody that this clause is useless, but if it were left in would we have a word of truth in it? I say that it is the contrary of the truth. We put words into this Bill that will allow this or any Governor General in the future to adopt such a false interpretation of the law as was repeated in the presence of Lord Minto and accepted by him some four years ago.

Mr. GOURLEY. I have no doubt that Lord Minto did not accept it. There is one thing that an Englishman is trained in and that is in very good manners and it would not be very polite for Lord Minto to get up in a public meeting and contradict Mr. McMaster. It was simply a question of good manners on Lord Minto's part to allow the thing to go by.

Mr. BOURASSA. Undoubtedly His Excellency will be very thankful to the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) for having constituted himself his defender.

Mr. GOURLEY. I think it is very offensive for the hon. member for Labelle to attribute to the Governor General what would be clearly a usurpation of power in this country.

Mr. BOURASSA. I am attributing nothing to His Excellency. I am simply stating that in the presence of the Governor General a leading lawyer of Canada declared publicly that the Govenor General, under our present law—as far as that law is concerned it is not changed by this Bill—had the right to take hold of the militia and send them wherever he liked for whatever purpose he liked without overstepping his functions. That was stated publicly and not contradicted.

Mr. ALCORN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The only object which the hon. member for Labelle can have in making this statement and reiterating it several times as he has is to criticise His Excellency the Governor General and no member of parliament has a right to do so in this House.

Mr. BOURASSA. It is no part of my desire to criticise the action of the Governor General. If I desired to do so I would criticise the action of the government but I am simply stating a public fact repeated throughout the press of Canada to show what the result of a miswording of the law might be. I have no desire to show any lack of respect to His Excellency the Governor General. I do not think there has been anything in my words which expresses disrespect of the Governor General.

Mr. ALCORN. Whatever the hon. gentleman's intention is, certainly that is the effect of his words.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) to say that when His Excellency the Governor General was present on this occasion Mr. McMaster made a statement in regard to his interpretation of the law. I understand that what the hon. gentleman said was that on a certain occasion Mr. McMaster stated his interpretation of the Act as to the power of the Governor General to call out the militia and that His Excellency made no reply. There was no reflection on His Excellency in that.

Mr. GOURLEY. Yes there was.

Mr. INGRAM. The point is this: Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) in order or is he not?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This hon. gentleman is quite in order unless he has been guilty of the accusation made by the hon. member (Mr. Alcorn) who took the point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. Has he?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think he has. There is no reflection on the Governor General in that.

Mr. GOURLEY. Mr. Chairman, I——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The chairman has been called upon to give his decision and it is that in stating that the Governor General in the presence of Mr. McMaster did not express an opinion as to whether he had the power or not, the hon. member for Labelle was casting no reflection upon the Governor General and therefore the point or order of the hon. member for Prince Edward is not well taken.

Mr. ALCORN. The point of order I took was that under the rules of the House——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. BOURASSA. I do not want to be lacking in respect for my hon. friend (Mr. Alcorn) who is a gentleman, but the point of order has been settled.

Mr. ALCORN. I suppose I have the right to discuss it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The point of order has been settled.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No it has not.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The point of order raised by my hon. friend for Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) has been settled. If there is another point of order raised I will rule upon it.

Mr. BOURASSA. If hon. gentlemen opposite had not interrupted me at the time I would have shown them very clearly that I did not in my remarks show any disrespect to His Excellency. On the contrary I have stated and I repeat that on account of the respect we have for Governors General, for this one, for those who have come before and I hope for all those who will come in the future, we should make the law so clear that there can be no mistake on their part as to its interpretation. The point I was making was that at a public meeting to which the Governor General was invited a gentleman made the statement there, based upon the British North America Act and upon his interpretation of section 3 of the Militia Act, that the Governor General personally could do whatever he liked with the militia, that he could raise militia corps and send them inside or outside of Canada wherever he pleased without the advice of the government. The Governor General did not express any contradiction of that statement. My hon. friend (Mr. Gourley) upon that rose to make a plea in favour of the Governor General by suggesting that he did not do so upon the ground of etiquette. I am not discussing that point at all. I am not saying that the Governor General should have corrected Mr. McMaster's opinion or should not have corrected Mr. McMaster's opinion; I simply say that the Governor General was there and that he did not contradict the statement.

Mr. INGRAM. And you are finding fault because he did not.

Mr. BOURASSA. I am not finding fault from that point of view. On that occasion the Governor General was not present as the head of the government. He was received personally. The principle was settled in this House six or seven years ago by the speaker that when we speak of the Governor General's Act personally as apart from the government we have a right to consider his speeches and actions, and surely all Governors General if they express an opinion or assume an attitude that may lead the people to believe that they have functions to exercise as the representative of the British government outside of their functions as the head of the Canadian government we have a right to criticise them. In fact in the Empire of Germany, where I do not think there is more freedom than there is here, the speeches of the emperor are criticised in parliament. Whenever the emperor thinks it proper to make political speeches these speeches are criticised. The next day after that speech was made Mr. McMaster's opinion was printed in all the newspapers of Canada, it was accepted by several leading newspapers and the fact that the Governor General was present gave rise to a misinterpretation especially at a time of popular excitement that we should avoid in the future. I say therefore that if we take it from a purely legal point of view there should be no definition of powers because we have no right to define these powers. These powers are defined by the British North America Act. Then, if we take it from the point of view of propriety of policy, or of the interpretation of the law or of the powers which the Canadian government have, we should then make it clear that the Canadian government have the power of execution or we should declare nothing at all.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not think very much follows from this reference to Mr. McMaster's opinion.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, I had the floor before the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. As I am an older man, perhaps my hon. friend (Mr. Jabel Robinson) will give way to me. I do not think very much follows from the little incident that occurred in Montreal. His Excellency, being a layman, possibly did not like to contradict Mr. McMaster, who is a very eminent lawyer, and that His Excelency did not agree with Mr. McMaster is quite apparent, because he did not act on his advice. The word upon which Mr. McMaster relied to give his opinion was possibly the word 'personally' in the old law, That word is omitted from this Bill, and therefore the same difficulty cannot occur again, and we may pass on to something else.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Let us take the minister's suggestion.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. The question raised by the member for Labelle more than an hour ago is just a quibble on words, and if the Minister of Justice had expressed his opinion at the time he would not have discussed it further. The member for Labelle has been on his feet six times, and when I rose once I was put down, but I won't be put down now. The British North America Act is supreme in this country until the British government thinks proper to change it, and it would be ridiculous for us to seek to change it by legislation in this parliament. All this waste of time is not worth the money we are expending on it. I suppose the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) was in his right, but at all events every time he gets an opportunity he avails of it to pitch into the British government and the British North America Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. BOURASSA. Even though I should hurt the feelings of my hon. friend (Mr Jabel Robinson), I shall speak for the seventh time. In reply to the Minister of Justice, let me say that though it may not matter much legally speaking, yet it is in time of peace that we should make the law so clear that no difficulty shall arise about it in time of trouble. The Governor General seems to have accepted tacitly the argument of Mr. McMaster. Mr. McMaster's opinion was not based upon the word 'personally' as referring to the Sovereign, but it had reference to the personal powers of the Governor General that according to the law he could take hold of the militia. The word 'personally' in the old Act applied to the Queen, and Mr. McMaster did not suggest that the Queen should come over in person to command the militia. Mr. McMaster said that according to the law the Governor General personally had the right to do whatever he liked with the militia. The words referring to the Governor General, which Mr. McMaster based his opinion on, are left in the new Bill. That is what I object to. We should not leave words in the law that may give rise, in time of excitement, to misinterpretation, either by the government or by anybody else who would see fit to advise the Governor General outside of his legal advisers.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. Who is Mr. McMaster; is his opinion supreme ?

Mr. GOURLEY. He announced it late in the morning, I hear.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. We have the Supreme Court, which is a higher authority than Mr. McMaster. I do not know who he is ; I never heard of him before, but I have heard of the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), and I notice that he can discover all these little things that occur in connection with such questions. The member for Labelle may be right sometimes, but if so, he is generally right at the wrong time.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I may say that at the luncheon hour I took the liberty of suggesting to the leader of the opposition the proposition made by the Minister of Justice, and it met with his hearty approval.

Mr. INGRAM. This Bill omits any reference whatever to the naval militia and the naval forces of and in Canada. We were told recently by the First Minister that the government would bring down a naval Bill——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Of one clause only, and that clause was to continue in force the old law so far as it refers to the naval militia.

Mr. INGRAM. And not only does the Marine Department take away some of the powers of the Department of Public Works, but it is to take the naval forces out of the control of the Minister of Militia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Perhaps my hon. friend was not in the House when I stated that the Colonial Defence Committee and the naval authorities in England strongly urged that any work in the direction of organizing a naval militia in Canada should be placed under the control of the Marine and Fisheries Department, because there is already there the nucleus, in a small way, of course, of a naval militia.

Mr. INGRAM. The Minister of Marine refused to state to the House the policy of the government on this important question, and now that the naval force is to be taken out of the control of the Minister of Militia, to whom are we to look for information ? In the estimates the government has asked for a vote of $7,500 for this naval force. Is that all the government proposes to do in regard to it ? Let us have some understanding as to what the policy of the government is.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Within two or three days at most the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) will have a full explanation of the policy of the government on this subject.

Amendment (Mr. Bourassa) negatived.

On section 7—minister to have control of military buildings, &c.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is the old law.

Mr. FOWLER. Does that include the building of drill sheds ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, that is assigned to the Public Works Department.

Mr. INGRAM. Is it intended that the Militia Department shall take over the construction of armouries ? I understand that was recommended.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think it might be convenient to have an arrangement by which buildings up to a certain cost, say $10,000, should be placed in the hands of the Militia Department.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why should not the Minister of Militia have control of all the works in his department ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. When it comes to the construction of buildings costing half a milliion of dollars, the Public Works Department is better equipped for the work.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you not have your own architect who designs all these buildings ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Section agreed to.

On section 8—Certain works for defence declared public works.

Mr. BOURASSA. How are the powers of expropriation exercised ? Are they exercised directly by the department ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They are exercised through the Department of Justice and the proceedings take place in the Exchequer Court in the usual way.

Section agreed to.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN moved that sections 9, 10, 11 and 12 be struck out.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. These provisions are all covered by the Criminal Code ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Motion agreed to.

On section 13—conversion of property on emergency.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I propose to strike out the words 'General Officer Commanding,' and insert in their place, 'Officer Commanding the Militia,' in order to make the clause read in harmony with the rest of the Bill.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In case of the new proposition being carried out, would not the officer commanding the militia be the Inspector General ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In time of emergency there would be immediately a Commanding Officer appointed, it might be in a district, to exercise the powers under this clause.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I think some word as 'general' should be there ; otherwise, what officer would it mean ? It might mean half a dozen different officers in a locality.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not see any objection to the expression 'general officer commanding' even if you change the law.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would suggest the words, 'officer commanding the militia.'

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In time of war an imperial officer commands, and you could scarcely call him an Officer Commanding the Militia.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. He would be commanding the militia here. I think the intention is that every officer commanding a division should have this authority.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We might want to use this power instantly.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How would it do to say, 'the officer commanding the militia in the locality'?

Mr. ALCORN. How would it do to use these words : 'Whenever an emergency exists the officer commanding the militia of Canada or an officer commanding a unit of militia.' ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think that 'Officer Commanding the Militia' will answer the purpose, because he can delegate his power.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. But we have none under the new provision. In a case of war, of course we would have an officer commanding, but an emergency might mean a riot or insurrection, when there would be no officer commanding.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There would have to be somebody.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The Minister of Justice suggests the words 'in the locality.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, 'the officer commanding the militia in the locality' would do. I move that the clause be amended so that it will read :

But when an emergency exists, the officer commanding the militia in the locality, or any officer duly authorized, and so on.

Motion agreed to.

On section 13 (b.) compensation for land taken.

Mr. FOWLER. Should not the officer responsible give the party entitled to compensation some voucher ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. When this was up before I suggested that some clause should be put in, ordering the officer who commandeered anything, to give some receipt or acknowledgment.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That would be a matter of regulation.

On section 15,

The following persons only shall be exempt from liability to service in the militia, and such exemption shall terminate in the case of a 'levée en masse' —

Members of the King's Privy Council for Canada ;

Judges of all courts of justice ;

Members of the Senate and House of Commons ;

Members of the executive councils of provinces ;

Members of provincial legislatures ;

Deputy ministers of the federal and provincial governments ;

Clergy and ministers of all religious denominations ;

Telegraph clerks in actual employment ;

Officers and clerks regularly employed in the collection of the revenue ;

Wardens and keepers of all public prisons and lunatic asylums ;

Professors in colleges and universities, and teachers in religious orders ;

Persons disabled by bodily or mental infirmity ;

The only son of a widow, being her only support ;

Pilots and apprentice pilots during the season of navigation ;

Persons who, from the doctrines of their religion, are averse to bearing arms or rendering personal military service,—under such conditions as are prescribed.

2 Half-pay and retired officers of the regular forces shall not be required to serve in the forces in a lower grade than that of their rank in such forces.

3 No person shall be entitled to exemption unless he has, at least one month before he claims such exemption, filed with the commanding officer within the limits whereof he resides, his affidavit, made before some justice of the peace, of the facts on which he rests his claim.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN moved that the words 'and such exception shall terminate in case of a levee en masse' be struck out.

Motion agreed to.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN moved that in the section 'wardens and keepers of all public prisons and lunatic asylums' the word 'officers' be substituted for 'keepers.'

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FOWLER. Why do you exempt professors of colleges ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Because we do not think it wise to interrupt the education of the young, and in this we are following the old Act.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not see why the professors or teachers should be exempt any more than the business men.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They can volunteer.

Mr. FOWLER. But they should be under as much compulsion as any other.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is not desirable to break up a public institution. Such an institution is different from the store or office of a business man.

Mr. FOWLER. It is certainly a great hardship to have a man's business destroyed, quite as great as to have a man taken from his position as teacher.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But the hardship in the case of the teacher or professor would be not to the man himself, but to the pupils.

Mr. FOWLER. But it is not an injury that cannot be remedied. It only means an interruption, whereas the drafting of a business man means the destruction of his business. It seems to me, that the argument is all the other way so far as the teachers are concerned.

Mr. ALCORN. It would mean that in the case of a levée en masse, the pupils will be taken and the teachers will be left.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Hon. gentlemen will see, by referring to section 14, that there are two things involved. The section provides first, that all the male inhabitants of Canada of the age of eighteen years and upwards and under sixty, and not exempt or disqualified shall be liable to serve in the militia. That is one thing. But it also provides that the Governor General may require all male inhabitants of Canada, capable of bearing arms, to serve in the case of a levée en masse. In this latter case there is no exemption.

Mr. FOWLER. In the case of a levée en masse, would you call out the clergy ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Section 21 of the Act provides that certain persons shall be exempt from enrolment and from active service, and among these are the clergy. But under section 14 of this Bill in the case of a levée en masse there is no exemption.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. What is meant by a levée en massse ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It means that all the inhabitants able to bear arms must go to the front.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. Who is to take care of the women and children ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is a matter at the discretion of the executive. Perhaps the women and children might be brought along with the others.

Mr. GOURLEY. I want to move an amendment to section 15. As at present drafted, members of the Senate, and House of Commons, are exempted from service in the militia. I cannot imagine why this body which ought to set an example to the country, should desire exemption. I would take it as an insult to have such words appear in the statute. I would be in a very bad position in my country, to ask other people to rise and defend the country, if I were exempt myself.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. While the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gourley) is exempt, there is nothing to prevent his volunteering.

Mr. GOURLEY. No, this is invidious, very invidious. The members of the House of Commons should be like others under the law. Then, they will be able to go into the country, and exercise their influence, under proper conditions. It would be a most amazing thing, if the very leaders and directors of public opinion in Canada should be sulking while they asked the ordinary citizen to take up arms in the defence of the country. I regard this as a stigma. Why should we, sitting here as legislators, skulk behind a provision of the law ? We ought to make our position clear, and, I think the judges, who are also exempt under this section, should unite in protest against it. Why should a judge be exempt ? In the case of a conscription, the judiciary would not be very much affected—only three or four of them would be chosen in the whole of Canada. The wheels of justice would be but little interfered with by such a conscription, and, so far as the House of Commons in concerned, it would mean that only ten or fifteen of our members would be called. And, in order to avoid that, it is proposed that we should adopt this section, which would be not in accord with the highest feelings of the people. This is a serious matter. It seems to affect the morale of the country, that the Senate and the House of Commons having the power of legislation should exempt themselves. I really feel like calling upon the self-respect and dignity of the House to eliminate this section. I leave the Senate to look after their own dignity, but I would move that the section be amended so as to remove this exemption of the House of Commons. I find that this exemption is not in the old Act.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think it is.

Mr. GOURLEY. I have the old Act here and I cannot find it. The people of the time when this old Act was passed would not stultify themselves so far as to provide for such an exemption.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think we had better strike it out. It was not in the old Act.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Was it not?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No. Strike it out.

Mr. BOURASSA. If my hon. friend (Mr. Gourley) wants to make the thing complete and be sure that there will be no possible exemption of the House of Commons, I would suggest to him to strike out from the fifteenth line the words 'persons disabled by bodily or mental infirmity.'

Mr. GOURLEY. I do not pretend to be very strong mentally. I am only here as an honest citizen.

Mr. PUTTEE. I would like to know whether I understood the Minister of Justice correctly. Does he hold that as it stands now there are no exemptions in case of a levée en masse?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. PUTTEE. It seems to me that is hardly a proper way to have it. The country needs people to serve it in all branches.

Mr. GOURLEY. The Minister of Militia regulates that when he calls out the levée.

Mr. PUTTEE. Even if that is done I can hardly see that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) is a good one.

Mr. BOURASSA. I think my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) is right there. Of course I do not want to throw cold water on the patriotism of anybody, but we must have some common sense besides patriotism. Suppose that in the case of a levée en masse we keep no person to look after the jails.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. In that case the prisoners would go to the front too.

Mr. BOURASSA. But at the same time what will you do with the wardens and officers of lunatic asylumns?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That will be the responsibility of the executive.

Mr. BOURASSA. We must have common sense in these things. If the minister tells us that the Governor General may make some exemptions in a levée en masse all right, but if the law is to read as it is now according to clause 14, the Governor General cannot make any exemptions and every one in the country may be called out. It may create an awkward position.

Mr. FOWLER. If every one was called only a few would be selected. The Gospel says that 'many are called but few are chosen.' The Governor General in Council under this law has the right to call every one, but in the administration of that right the department would make such exceptions as might be necessary.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In case of national emergency you cannot have any exceptions; you have to trust to the good sense of the administration of the day.

Mr. BOURASSA. I would like to know, not by the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley), if the Governor General in Council or the Governor General will have any right to discriminate in case of a levée en masse.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It is done by a military officer not by the Governor General. In that connection——

Mr. BOURASSA. I am not speaking to my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes). If he will excuse me I have the floor and I am putting a question politely to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick).

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am going to ask a question, and I do not think that the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), with all his nerve, has the right to say when I shall or shall not speak. If he will be good enough to look after the disruptive elements of the empire it will keep him busy. Under the amendments no member of parliament can claim exemption. It should be clear that any militia man who is a member of this House should be free to use what language he chooses in conformity with the institutions of this House and of this country, and that no enactment here should possibly bring him under the control of any militia force which would prevent us having a free parliament.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My answer to the last difficult conundrum propounded by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) is that there is no exemption in favour of a member of parliament. He would be obliged, with every one else, when called upon, to take service, but a summons to parliament would supersede the call to arms and he would be entitled to answer his summons to parliament. I am not familiar with the subject of the levée en masse, except in so far as my general reading applies, and I take it that a levée en masse refers to cases of national peril, national danger, when the people of the country capable of bearing arms must go to the assistance of the country. Of course it would be a matter for the exercise of discretion to see to it that the national peril was not increased by allowing the lunatics and criminals to escape, and leaving the women and children unprovided for. That would be adding to the national burden and it will be assumed that those in charge will see that all these interests are provided for.

Mr. FOWLER. This same amendment should be made to apply to the provincial legislatures.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think that if one goes out the other should go out.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Provincial legislators go out.

Mr. BOURASSA. Do I understand that the amendment of the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) is accepted ?

Mr. GOURLEY. Yes.

Mr. BOURASSA. I do not think it is proper. It is simply giving way——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BOURASSA. Well, if the time should come when it would be necessary for any one to go to the front, I think I would be there before many people who talk war all the time in this House. But I think it is perfectly ridiculous to give way to an appeal to prejudice of that kind. I think it is necessary for parliament to keep itself going, just as necessary as the other public services, and therefore, if we are prepared to exempt the judges, the deputy ministers, the professors of colleges and universities, it would be just as proper to keep the members of parliament, both federal and provincial, in the list of exemptions. I think it is giving way to a small appeal to militarism which is not going to appeal to many sensible people outside of this House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Sir Frederick Borden moves to insert the following subclause :

Members of the naval militia, members of the police force and fire brigade in incorporated cities, towns and villages——

Mr. FOWLER. In many cases 'fire brigade' would cover the whole male population.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think not.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. FOWLER. I know that in my own town practically the whole male population belongs to the fire brigade. I think it is true of every small town.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We might say 'cities.'

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. How would it do to say 'permanently employed.'

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Very well, that was the idea I had.

Firemen permanently employed in incorporated cities, towns and villages.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. By the police force I meant the officers and men permanently employed in the police force.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. If you take every man away what is the use of leaving the police force at home ?

Mr. BOURASSA. I object to the amendment proposed. That proposed by the minister was all right, that the police forces and fire brigades should be exempted. If you make it read in that way it will give exemption only to the fire brigades and police forces of the large towns and cities where policemen and firemen are employed all the year round, and you will place policemen and firemen in the smaller villages in an awkward position. They have very small fire brigades and only three or four policemen in these small villages, and they have to do something else to earn their living. If you force them into the militia you impose a hardship upon them. I do not see why you should pass legislation for the large cities and not for the small villages. I understood that an amendment was proposed to cover, not only the large cities, but the small villages as well, but you strike out the small villages and towns from the benefit of that provision. I know that in my own province in many places the fire brigades and police forces are not permanently employed. They are supposed to give their services alternately. They have fire brigades in several of the towns and villages in Quebec in which one man will give his services for so many days in the month. They organize voluntary fire brigades of eight or ten men, who look after the safety of the village from fire, and at the same time earn their living.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is proposed to amend the clause by adding the following paragraph :

Members of the naval militia and members of police force and fire brigade permanently employed in incorporated cities, towns and villages.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. minister may remember that I gave him notice of a proposed amendment, that people who have religious objections to taking up arms shall be required to furnish a substitute or bear any expense in providing the substitute incurred by the government. I do not believe in interfering with peoples' religious doctrines or forcing them to fight, but I think that any person who enjoys the protection of the government and of the militia should be required to provide a substitute.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This is simply a re-enactment of the law as we have it. Paragraph 3 provides that persons of different forms of religious belief—

Shall be exempt from such service when balloted in time of peace or war, upon such conditions and under such regulations as the Governor in Council from time to time prescribes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Then you can make regulations to cover the case of a substitute.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The exemption shall be provided for by regulation.

Mr. BOYD. What is the necessity for putting this in at all? I do not see why you should publish it to the world that people having a certain religious belief may come here and be exempt. I think it is sufficient to deal with the emergency when it arises. We have thousands of people in Manitoba who will not take up arms, and I think this provision could be left out and the matter dealt with when the emergency arises.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They came into the country knowing that this provision was in our militia law, and I think it is only fair that we should continue the provision, which is to be under the control and subject to regulations to be issued by the Governor General in Council.

Mr. INGRAM. Apart from that, I understand that the Mennonites came in some years ago with the understanding that they would not be asked to take up arms.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Under the Militia Act every person bearing a certificate from the Society of Quakers, Mennonites or Tunkers, is exempt under such conditions and under such regulations as the Governor in Council prescribes.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. If you will look at section 2, you will see that 'prescribed' means prescribed by this Act or by regulations.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Well, then, you need not amend that?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is all right.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What I want to impress upon the hon. minister is that in his regulations provision shall be made for that point. These regulations, I presume, will be submitted to parliament.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes; under the law they are obliged to be submitted to parliament.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I hope that point will be covered.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The regulations will be made before the Act goes into force.

Mr. BOURASSA. Before this clause is carried, I would like to point out to the hon. minister that persons who claim exemption have, under paragraph 3 of section 15, to give their notice at least one month before they claim their exemption, and that by section 16 they have to give proof of the ground upon which they ask exemption. Does that mean that in case of the organization of a corps in any district persons who may be exempted or who may be called are, if they have not filed their exemption one month before, bound to serve for the time for which they are called, and that the exemption will only apply when they are called the second time?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The service is not compulsory.

Mr. BOURASSA. There is a clause in the Bill which allows the Governor in Council to call people up for enrolment in any district of the country in order to fill the ranks when there are not sufficient volunteers. Therefore, it is useless to say enrolment is voluntary. It is voluntary as long as there are people enough willing to engage. Suppose the Governor General in Council decides to organize a regiment in a district of the country in which the people do not come forward to enlist, you have all the powers here necessary to enforce them to come in within their classes. You call the first class, then the second class, then the third class and then the fourth class, and then they are enrolled by ballot. Suppose a man is called by ballot and is enrolled, should he have filed his claim for exemption at least one month before his enrolment? He has not filed his exemption because nobody thinks of filing this exemption and if he does not desire to serve voluntarily what would be his position? Will they be subject to the enrolment, and will their proof be useless if they have not given notice one month before they are called.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think so.

Mr. MONET. If that is the case, as I understand the Minister of Justice to say it is, it would be very hard indeed on certain persons. While the general principle prevails that every citizen is supposed to know the law, yet it would be rather an extreme view to take of it, that every citizen should know that the clauses of this Bill oblige him to give notice one month before even he may suppose that he may be called. I believe this provision should be stricken out of the Bill.

Mr. BOURASSA. Or else, there should be a provision that when a man is called upon to be enrolled by ballot, he should have a certain delay to prove exemption.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That would be covered by section 33 of the Bill which gives the Governor General in Council power to make regulations.

Mr. BOURASSA. But suppose they do not make regulations. This Bill will provide for one month's notice and you incorporate that in the Act, and do not leave it to regulations.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It may be necessary to enroll the militia at any time without thirty days' notice. There is something to be said on both sides, and I think this matter can be left to the regulations.

Mr. MONET. We ought to be informed that there is some great pressing necessity for such a clause as this.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This law has been on the statute-book for forty or fifty years and no hardship has ever resulted from it. The suggestion of the Minister of Justice is the correct one, namely, that this matter will be dealt with by regulation.

Section agreed to.

Section 17 agreed to.

Section 18 stricken out.

On section 19,

Cadets or cadet corps shall not be liable to service in the militia in any emergency save only in the case of a 'levée en masse.'

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN moved to strike out the words 'cadets or.'

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is there any definition of what a cadet corps is.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think so.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The reason I ask is that a great many public schools are wishing to form a cadet force corps.

Mr. FOWLER. Why should you strike out the word 'cadets ?'

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is unnecessary; 'cadets corps' covers the whole thing and later on the Act deals with the organization of the cadet corps.

Section as amended agreed to.

At Six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

On section 20—classes of militiamen.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is exactly the same as the present law.

Section agreed to.

On section 21—division of militia into active and reserve.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN—Practically no change.

Section agreed to.

On section 22—period of service.

Mr. MONET. Many young men who enlist for three years' service drop out after one year. It is perfectly useless for a young man to go to camp for only one year. I think the terms of the engagement should be strictly enforced.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I agree with my hon. friend that it is desirable that young men should continue in the service for the full term; but I do not agree with him that it does not do a young man good to go for only one year.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I think the increase in the pay will induce them to continue for the full term. You cannot force men out.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. If you force a young man to go to camp when he perhaps loses a good job for doing so, you will be unable to get another young man from the same neighbourhood to go to camp afterwards. I think the increased pay will have the desired effect.

Section agreed to.

On section 23—present corps continued.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Practically the same as the old law.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This is applicable to the permanent corps, I presume ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Section agreed to.

On section 24—compulsory and voluntary retirement.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There is nothing there about dismissing an officer.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is as wide as the old law, providing for six months' notice.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It is perfectly right to provide that a man be permitted to retire on giving his commanding officer six months' notice. Of course, the Governor in Council always has authority to dismiss a man for cause, and I do not know that it is necessary to provide for it in the law. Of course, it is understood that it is to be for cause ?

Sir FREDERICK. BORDEN. Yes.

Section agreed to.

On section 25—discharge on completion of service.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is new.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I would like to ask the minister exactly what that means. When the term of enlistment expires, is a man ipso facto discharged from the service, or must he make application for his discharge.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. He goes as a matter of course.

Section agreed to.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. At the present time he has to purchase his discharge. Under this clause he would require only to give six months' notice.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I move that this clause, paragraph 'a' shall not apply to the permanent corps.

Amendment agreed to.

On clause 26—military districts and subdivisions.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN moved to strike out this clause and insert the following in its stead :

The Governor in Council may direct that any portion of Canada shall be a military district for the purposes of this Act and may cause two or more districts to be grouped together for the purposes of command and administration, and may divide any military district into such sub-districts, brigade, regimental or company divisions as may appear expedient.

Motion agreed to.

On section 27—constitution of active militia.

Mr. BOURASSA. I beg to move that the following section be inserted between sections 27 and 28 :

That the total peace establishment of the active militia shall not exceed fifty thousand men.

Under the old Act there was no limit. There was no limitation provided. But in the clause providing for the training of men, clause 58, there was a limitation of the number to 45,000 active militia men. It limited the power of the government to order the training of more than 45,000. This clause is omitted in the present Bill, so that in the Bill which is before us there is no limit whatever to the number of corps that may be organized by the minister, and there is no limitation whatever to the peace or war establishment of the militia, no limitation to the number of men that may be drilled every year. I think it is about time that we should pause a little and reflect on the proposed increase of our militia, and the expenditure connected with it. I admit that we have been passing through a period of military enthusiasm, which has been kept up in this House by a few military gentlemen like the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes), and a few laymen like my hon. friend from Colchester (Mr. Gourley), who perhaps would not care to enroll themselves in the army, but who are still making a good deal of stir about army and militia matters. But the sensible people of this country, the business men and the farming community, are beginning to realize that we are going a little too far. Of course I am not going to touch the military question per se, I am not going to say what number of men we require to be trained in Canada, either for peace or for war. But I think I can agree with one statement that was made in the Toronto 'News,' which said that if we considered this question from one point of view we have altogether too small a force, and if we considered it from another point of view, we have altogether too large a force. If we mean to organize an army to resist the United States, which is the only country that we are likely to be at war with, there is no doubt that 30,000, or 100,000, or 200,000 would not be sufficient. It has been suggested that small countries like Belgium, Holland and Switzerland, have much larger armies than we have and that we should follow their example. Well, the Toronto 'Globe' has made a calculation on that basis, and concludes that if we followed exactly in the footsteps of those countries and were to support a military establishment proportionately as large as theirs, we should have an army of between 26,000,000 and 40,000,000 to do it. The establishment at present proposed, authorized by the Governor in Council on the 23rd of February last, provides for a peace establishment of 4,871 officers, and 41,162 privates, a total of 46,033 men. The present establishment is 3,406 officers, 39,241 privates, a total of 42,647. It will be noticed that the greatest increase is in the number of the officers. I presume the purpose is, though I do not pretend to be a judge of such matters, to have such a staff of officers on a peace footing as would be sufficient in case a war establishment were organized. In that case the total war establishment would be ; officers 4,885, privates 99,733, a total of 104,618. Therefore the amendment that I propose would merely place a limitation on a further increase. It does not decrease the figure proposed by the minister and approved by the government, on the contrary it would still leave a margin of about 4,000 officers and men on a peace footing. Therefore I do not see what objection the Minister of Militia can have to the amendment which I propose. I think it would contribute to reassure the public, to allay that feeling of uneasiness that is growing among the peaceful part of our community, which I pretend composes the majority of our people, who fear that we are launching into a large military organization and a large military expenditure. My amendment would still leave a force sufficient for the purpose which seems to be contemplated by the minister and the government, while at the same time it would show that we are not prepared to give a free hand to any minister or any government, at present or in the future, to organize an active militia of any number they please. I hope the minister will see his way to accept that amendment, which does not propose to reduce the number that has been approved by Governor in Council.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The statute now existing to which my hon. friend refers provides that 40,000 is the minimum number that should be trained ; it is not at all a limitation.

Mr. BOURASSA. That is what I said. I said there was no limitation at present except as regards the number to be trained.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I understood him to say there was a limitation to the number that could be trained. I have taken the trouble to look up the old debates, and to read a speech made by Sir Geo. Cartier in 1868 in introducing his Bill, which was modified in later years by Sir Adolphe Caron. I find that Sir Geo. Cartier made this remark :

> He expected under the provisions of this Bill to provide that the number of trained men within the Dominion should not be less than 40,000.

So he was providing for the compulsory training of 40,000 men. Sir Adolphe Caron, in introducing his amendments in 1883, said:

> I have taken the number of men as laid down in the original Bill.

He introduced a provision by which the number of 45,000 might be drilled by authority of Order in Council. Now it seems to me that a limitation of this section is undesirable. I think it is undesirable that any particular number of men should be named in the Bill as necessary to be drilled. That is a matter that should be left to parliament and to the government to regulate from time to time as the government may deem expedient. My hon. friend knows quite as well as I do that no training can be done, no drilling can be done, without the authority of parliament. That is an expensive operation, that requires money, and each year we have to come to parliament and make a statement of the number of men we propose to train and we ask for money for that purpose. We are absolutely tied up and limited to the amount of money which parliament sees fit to vote us. I think it is undesirable that any limitation of this kind should be placed in this Bill. In a clause which will come later, I have placed a limitation to the number of the active militia. The active militia, as my hon. friend has shown, at the present time, is somewhere about 45,000 officers and men, about the number named in the present Bill ; and I propose to give to the Governor in Council power, under a clause which we will come to later on, to call out the whole of the active militia, subject of course, as it always must be, to the vote of parliament.

Mr. GOURLEY. I am glad to concur in the view taken by the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden). I am glad that there are many subjects on which members of parliament can agree, affecting the general interests of the country. I concur in the proposition of the Minister of Militia and will go further. I see that a malicious effort is being made to persuade the people that because we desire to get into a state of preparation for defence we are introducing militarism. I do not know what militarism means ; I cannot give it an intellectual meaning as applied to this country. I know what it means in the old world, but in regard to many countries where they have been overridden by militarism I am bound to say, as a student, that I believe it has proved a benefit. I believe that the great and unprecedented advance that Germany has made in commercial progress in the past twenty-five or thirty years, has been due, in a large measure, to her system of conscription. And I would not be averse, while glorying in freedom, while believing that every man in this country should be free, to the establishment of some measure of conscription. I believe that the German government has given to that nation great power and virility given it great creative power, by taking young men at the age of fourteen, when perhaps they would be idle about the streets and putting them for four years in the army. In that way they are not only given military drill but are given a splendid mechanical education and after they leave the army they are ready to enter factories. Why has Germany become a great manufacturing country in twenty-five years ? Because these men are trained in the army to habits of industry and discipline and are given a good mechanical training so that when they leave the army they are fit, with very little training, to go into a factory and become producers. If Germany has risen in twenty-five years from a weak commercial state into a powerful commercial state that result is due to militarism.

Mr. MONET. What about the progress that has been made by the United States ?

Mr. GOURLEY. Some hon. gentlemen go about the country thinking evidently that the people of Canada are under-educated and under-bred. I tell the hon. gentlemen opposite that in the county which I have the honour to represent there is not one man who possesses less intelligence than any man in the House of Commons of Canada, and if I should undertake to indulge in clap-trap of that kind, in talk of militarism I would have a dozen men asking me : What do you mean by militarism ? I would ask these hon. gentlemen or any hon. gentleman in this House : What do you mean by militarism ?

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. Does the hon. gentleman want a definition ?

Mr. GOURLEY. I would not expect it.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I think I might suggest one.

Mr. GOURLEY. You cannot possibly understand what militarism means, but I would be most happy to hear your definition.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I think it is rather more than adequate military protection.

Mr. GOURLEY. That may be your meaning of it and I must say that I would attach to it a somewhat similar meaning. But that meaning is not the meaning attached to it by these gentlemen who use it for claptrap political purposes. I was surprised that Sir William Mulock, ordinarily an intelligent and a very sensible man should have gone to Toronto some months ago and made a speech in which he talked about militarism. It was done evidently to appeal to the vulgar passions of the people. He must have fancied that the people of Ontario were absolutely uneducated and untrained in mental processes. He should have been called down by one half his audience because it was clearly not an appeal to the intelligence of the country but to its prejudices. Sir William Mulock and the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) do not use the word militarism in the sense in which Colonel Thompson uses it. The meaning they attempt to convey by it is that if you vote any sums to the militia of this country you are going to be ground down by the heel of a military tyranny which you cannot control, you are going to be put under the control of an autocrat. This is militarism in the odious sense and it is in that sense that these gentlemen seek to have the word understood in this country. Where parliament controls the expenditure of the militia every year and can alter the militia laws every twenty-four hours, it is worse than idle to talk of militarism. I want to see every man in Canada prepared ; if war comes we wish to be on top. What was Japan fifteen or twenty years ago, before they became a military people ? Unheard of, almost, and despised when heard of. To-day, if they win out in this war, they will occupy the proudest position among the nations of the earth because they are a military people, a people trained in the defence of their country against all odds. I want Canada to be in a similar position. I do not want war, but if war is thrust upon us I want this country to win glory in the way that Japan is winning it in her fight with Russia. But, Sir, if men like the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) were to have their way we would be like the poor Chinese, the object of contempt the world over. They abhor militarism and the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and those gentlemen who think as he does would have us pursue a course which in a few years would reduce us to the state of the despised and despicable Chinese, and we would be properly despised as they are.

I want my boys as soon as they become old enough to go into the militia for physical training, for training in habits of discipline, because they will get it in the militia better than in any other way. I glory in the military institution of the country. It gives back-bone and discipline and education to the people, and I say that money, no matter how much, if wisely spent upon the militia of this country, is money spent in the education of the youth of this country, in training them for the high duties of citizenship. Good military training is next to good university training, and the two should go together. While the mind is trained the body should be trained also.

It should be made active and disciplined, ready to respond to the highest impulses of human life. Therefore, I support the minister in his proposal ; I hope the militia of this country will finally embrace every man in it, and I hope that the age of admission will be reduced from eighteen years to fourteen years so that a boy at the age when he is likely to be learning to smoke cigarettes and to be idle about the streets may be taken into camp and trained to habits of discipline. I venture to say that if that system prevails the people of Nova Scotia and of Canada when they leave the militia will be better able to discharge the duties of citizenship than in any other way. I hope the force will be enlarged until it embraces all the able-bodied men in the country.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) is not going to reply to the castigation he has received, I have a few imperfect remarks which I should like to make. I am at a loss to understand the tactics of that hon. gentleman. We all know that the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) has no thought of his own outside of some of his directors to pop up and express these peculiar sentiments from time to time. He has enunciated the policy here to-night that there should be 50,000 volunteer soldiers in Canada. I cannot understand what his meaning may be. The hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) not long since, in a public address in the city of Ottawa, advocated that the rifle should be placed in the hands of 1,000,000 men in Canada.

Mr. MONET. That is the very reason why we want to support the amendment of the hon. member for Labelle.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Well, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monet) will have the opportunity of taking his own liege lord, the right hon. Prime Minister, to task, because, upon a very recent date, when he was anxious to stand well before the public and make himself a little more loyal, more British and more patriotic than his actions were supposed to lead the public to believe him to be, he came out and stated that he wanted those militia companies in every city, town, village, hamlet and rural district in the Dominion of Canada. He endorsed the statement of the hon. Minister of the Interior. Then, we have two members of the government in favour of having from a million or a million and a quarter of trained men in the Dominion of Canada. I stand here to say I heartily endorse that proposition. Let every young lad of the age from 12 to 14 years receive his training in militia drill. It has the physical advantage of making young fellows keep their heads up, march well and understand how to control themselves and how to control others judiciously. These are all advantages from the view point of citizenship. Then, look at the ranks of criminals in Canada. To the credit of the militia force be it said that, although they are exposed in camps and in times of jubilation to go to extremes, the records of criminality in Canada show that members of the militia force of this country are conspicuous by their absence from the ranks of criminals. All these are arguments in favour of the militia force. Now, the hon. member for Labelle, with the bee in his bonnet, which has been buzzing there for a long time, is endeavouring to impress upon the people of the province of Quebec that there is danger of an inundation of militarism. He is preparing for the elections, so that he may be able to go around and tell the people how he has been anxious to keep down the military spirit which is being forced upon us by these military foreigners and by people from other provinces in the Dominion of Canada. The militia system is the antithesis of militarism. The policy of the Liberal party at one time—I do not know whether it was under the regime of my hon. friend from Victoria, Nova Scotia (Mr. Ross) or not—was to do away with the militia force of this country, and to establish instead a standing army of from 4,000 to 5,000 men. We know that a number of men who were in parliament at that time on the Liberal side advocated it very strongly. It even received serious consideration at the hands of the government, but the better element prevailed, and those who opposed it saw that a standing army in a young country like this was the beginning of a spirit of militarism, but a proper spirit triumphed and the militia system was continued. I am very glad to know that two members at least of the government within very recent times have expressed themselves as being in favour of placing from 1,000,000 to 1,250,000 militiamen on duty in the Dominion of Canada. It may involve a somewhat heavy bill. I do not know whether the right hon. Prime Minister figured it up. They talk of the suppressed report involving an expenditure of $12,000,000 or, as some say, $35,000,000; but, even though the policy of the right hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Minister of the Interior were to involve an expenditure of, say, even $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 for placing rifles in the hands of the volunteers, I maintain that it will be money well expended, provided our young men are trained to handle these rifles and understand manœuvring sufficiently well to make them a mobile force in the field.

Mr. BOURASSA. I am not able to accept all the explanations which have been given by the hon. Minister of Militia, to say nothing of the opinions which have been expressed by the two hon. gentlemen who have last spoken. But, as far as this amendment is concerned, it does not propose to interfere with the policy of the government. If I understand the policy of the government so far, it is that they want to induce a greater number of people to engage in target practice. I understand that the right hon. Prime Minister, at the reception that was given to him in the camp at Ottawa, wanted a greater number of young men in our villages and hamlets to know how to shoot. I am in favour of that idea. I am ready to support the clause which the hon. Minister of Militia is going to bring in to deal with rifle clubs; in fact, I do not think I am guilty of any breach of confidence in saying that some months ago when this Bill was introduced I told the hon. minister privately that I entirely approved of his idea of organizing rifle clubs, and that I would be happy to extend help to him, in so far as the province of Quebec was concerned, to induce young men to engage in shooting practice in their villages. But what I am opposed to is the government organizing a greater number of regiments of regular militia. I do not think 50,000 or 25,000 more men are of any use to this country from a defensive point of view. I think it is perfectly absurd to contend that we should organize this country on a war footing to resist an attack presently from the United States of America. I think it is perfectly absurd to say that we have that possible occurrence in view when we discuss our militia matters. What I think perfectly legitimate and proper is to keep up in our population a proper spirit as to their duties in regard to the defence of the country, and to endeavour to induce a greater number of our young men, without drawing them from their peaceful avocations, to take up rifle practice. I think that is the foundation principle of our defence. To go to a heavy military expenditure, to increase the number of our militiamen, to buy a larger number of cannon or rifles for the militia, I think is time and money lost. I admit that a greater number of militiamen could be organized under the present law and that the militia can show a great number of fine fellows, but there is no doubt that while the militia has among it a great number of fine people, there is also a great number of good-for-nothings and loafers. There is no doubt that a number of young men are drawn into the militia because of the uniform and the camp, and certainly some of these men are not useful to the country. I do not think it is a proper policy to try to instil the idea into the minds of young people that they are more useful to their country, that there is more glory to them, that they can despise the farming community, as the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) has been doing all this afternoon by insulting the hon. Minister of Agriculture, that they are going to improve their position, that they are going to render greater service to their country, that they are going to gather more glory for themselves by entering the militia, by putting a plume on their head, by carrying a sword and by going to camp at the country's expense for from twelve to thirty days. I think that is not sound doctrine. Of course, I will admit that there must be a certain number of militiamen, but I think there should be a limitation to that policy. When it comes to the organization of rifle clubs, I am ready to join hands with the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence and to try and organize them as rapidly as we can throughout the whole Dominion.

As far as the cadet corps is concerned, I am also of the same mind. Of course, I would have opposed strongly the clause of this Bill referring to cadet corps as it came forward in the first draft imposing an obligation to serve in the militia. But since the minister has withdrawn that provision, and the cadet organization is perfectly voluntary, I have no objection.

I differ from the Minister of Militia with regard to the control of parliament. Time and again for the eight years I have been here, I have heard members of this House declare that it was absurd to increase our expenditure on militia, but nevertheless, they voted for increased expenditure when the government proposed it. If I were in the English parliament I might rely upon the independence of the House to revolt against what might be proposed by a minister of the Crown, but that is not so under the conditions in Canada. Without flattery to the present Minister of Militia, I may say that I have reason to rely on his common sense and judgment. I believe that between two sessions of parliament he would not create a number of militia battalions, and then come back to parliament and ask for ratifications of his act. But, we are not passing legislation here for one minister or for one government; we are passing legislation for all ministers and all governments in time to come. If in years from now—years far off I hope for the peace and happiness of Canada—the Conservatives should come to power, and a great military man like the member for North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) should become Minister of Militia, what might be expected if the law placed such power in his hands? There is no limitation in the law, and if we had to rely only on the common sense of such a minister, it might be a dangerous thing for Canada. We should look to the future when we are passing such legislation as this. We have not always had sensible men as ministers, and no doubt if the opposition should come to power, the member for North Victoria would make a strenuous pull for the portfolio of Militia and Defence.

Mr. LOGAN. And the member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley).

Mr. BOURASSA. The member for Colchester would probably be his outside adviser or general inspector. If such a man were minister, he might under the authority of this Act, create ten or twenty new battalions during the recess of parliament, and then come here asking parliament to foot the bill. I do not think we can infer from past experience that the majority in parliament would reject the proposition of the minister and would force the government out of power rather than ratify the expenditure. I am not prepared to say that this great faithfulness of the majority to the government is wrong; I am not prepared to say that our party system is worse than the English system, but the conditions here being such as they are, it is not sufficient precaution to say that because parliament has to ratify an expenditure it provides a sufficient safeguard. I admit that when Sir George Cartier proposed the present militia law he did not impose any limitation on the total number of the militia, but in those days the spirit of the country was different. There was then no danger of a military craze in Canada. To-day there is no use denying that certain of our public men and certain of our newspapers, Conservative and Liberal, have for ten years been working up a military spirit in this country. The fact that only this afternoon the Minister of Militia allowed himself to be guided by the members for Victoria and Colchester, and accepted amendments from them is a proof that even a strong Liberal government is apt to give way to pressure from high Tory and strong military sources. We should, embody the necessary safeguards to the people in this law and not leave it to chance. It may be that the farming community or the business community of this country is an inferior class; it may be that the military men are the only independent, sensible, and patriotic citizens; but after all, the business people and the farmers have a right to be heard in this parliament. I am ready to give my vote and lend my influence in my country and my province to secure endorsation for any sensible proposition of the Minister of Militia towards maintaining the defences of this country, but when I hear that we should be prepared so that on declaration of war by the United States we can rush at once to the defence of the country the proposition is absurd. No sensible man in Canada will say that the parliament of Canada and the people of Canada should incur the expenditure necessary to place Canada on a war footing, so as to render her able to cope with the United States. What we have to do is to rely as long as we can on the good common sense of the Canadian people, the British people, and the American people. That is our strongest defence for the time being. We ought to vote as much money as we can afford for the purpose of increasing the population of this country and developing its resources, before we commence to spend money on rifles and cannons for a great miltary force. If we are to keep up the proper spirit amongst the people, let us teach our young men how to shoot, which I suppose is one of the first requisites of defence, but let us not bring our young men off their farms and from their useful occupations to enter military camps. It may be that military organizations will increase the standard of education as we are told, but from what I have heard and seen in this parliament—I will make exceptions to the general rule—it does not seem to me, that the fact that a man belongs to the militia necessarily shows that he is a man of superior judgment, great common sense, or even good education. We have militiamen in this House; some of them are sensible—some of them I shall not qualify. We have farmers and business men in this House and many of them are sensible and some of them are not. I am not going to classify myself. I might even be ready to accept the definition given by my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) as to my mental and patriotic qualifications, but as to that I will rely on the judgment of the good people who have sent me here, and they are no less sensible and no less patriotic than the electors who have returned the members of Victoria and Colchester to seats in this parliament. I will go further and I will say that there are a great many members of this House—well perhaps not a great many—but there are several members of this House, not French Canadians, but English; not from the province of Quebec but from Ontario and elsewhere, who at the bottom of their hearts know that it is a foolish military policy we have been indulging in for the past few years. Were it not for that peculiar sentiment of party allegiance and party fidelity which exists in this parliament, these members would say so frankly and sincerely and the time will come when they will be obliged to speak out because the more the people of Canada know of this question the wider their eyes are open to it. The entire Liberal party in the province of Quebec has been denouncing military expenditure. In the elections of 1896 one of the strongest war cries in the province of Quebec was that the Conservative party were betraying the interests of Canada because they wanted to buy one million dollars worth of rifles and cannons.

Mr. GOURLEY. It was a very false cry.

Mr. BOURASSA. I am not now dealing with my hon. friend (Mr. Gourley); I am dealing with my friends on this side of the House, and I say that the Liberal party in 1896, previously, not only in the province of Quebec but in other provinces, have stood as a party of peace, progress, and development. We have reproached the Conservative party for spending so much money upon armament. We have said it was a useless expenditure, and it was foolish for this nation to arm in the hope of contending against a neighbouring nation of 80,000,000 people. Therefore it is that I say we have no right to give way to a few noisy Conservatives who may stand up in this House and upbraid the Liberals with the cry of treason. We have successfully withstood such tactics for many years, and we can withstand them longer. These gentlemen tell us now of the great loyalty of Alexander Mackenzie, but the old Grits in this House must remember that time and again Alexander Mackenzie was charged with disloyalty and treason. But Alexander Mackenzie withstood it, and the Liberals have withstood it, and they can continue to withstand it. It is therefore a mistake on the part of the Liberal government and the Liberal party to go back on their footsteps, especially with regard to this question, and to be dictated to from Tory and jingo quarters as to what their policy should be.

I think it is not an exhibition of Liberal independence to accept amendments at the hands of the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) or the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley). Outside perhaps of those two counties, I do not think it would be considered a piece of great judgment on the part of the government to accept their military policy from those two gentlemen. In some small quarters of this country those hon. gentlemen may be considered to be great lights in parliament and the proper men to consult in regard to the military policy of this government; but as a general rule I think it will be considered that the Liberal party, by sticking to their principles and their pledges to the people, will do more to get the support not only of Liberals but of common-sense Canadians, than by taking the advice of the hon. member for Victoria and the hon. member for Colchester, and delighting the military party by adopting their jingo policy. As the years go by, I believe it will be acknowledged that I am no worse Canadian or British subject than any member of this House who talks more about his loyalty. It is as a Canadian and a true British subject that I oppose an increased military expenditure in this country. The worst service we can give to the Canadian people and to the British empire is to launch the country upon a policy of militarism that will lead the American people to reply. If we boast that we are going to organize more regiments and build a navy for this country—that we are going to organize ourselves so as to be able to stand a fight against the United States—can we be surprised if any of the border states of New York, Michigan, Minnesota or Dakota, shall wish to expend as much on naval and military organization as we do? Instead of rendering a service to Great Britain by launching on a policy of this kind, rather than pursuing a peaceful policy, we shall be sowing the germs of greater embarrassment for Great Britain and the British government. My hon. friends who talk so much about their loyalty made a good deal of noise last year at the time of the Alaskan boundary award. If the majority of this House or the majority of the people of this country had been of the mind of the hon. member for Colchester, it would not have taken a week to have launched the whole empire into a war with the United States. By being peaceful and dignified, by pursuing a Canadian policy in our military affairs as well as in other affairs, we shall certainly render a greater service to the British empire than we shall do by continually boasting about our loyalty, and trying to provoke animosity on the part of foreign nations, the United States especially. Therefore, without interfering at all with the plans of the hon. Minister of Militia, I think the amendment I now propose should commend itself to every sensible man in this House who wants to see a peaceful policy predominate in this country instead of that kind of warlike and noisy policy which we have been unfortunately following in the last few years.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. As I understand the law at present existing, it is that we are under obligation to train 40,000 militiamen in Canada every year. It was in the year 1868, some thirty-six years ago, that that was considered the least force upon which Canada could rely for the preservation of order within her boundaries and the protection of her territory from foreign invasion; and now the hon. member for Labelle, by the amendment he proposes, wishes to limit our forces to 50,000 men.

Mr. BOURASSA. On a peace establishment.

Mr. BOURASSA.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. That is what I am speaking of. As a matter of fact, we do not propose to re-enact the old law, compelling us to drill 40,000 men per year. If the law suggested by the Minister of Militia carries, we may drill very much fewer than 40,000. We may drill only 10,000 or 15,000 per year if we see fit, or we may drill more, if we see fit. To my mind this whole question is one of the power of the purse, and that is still under the control of the House of Commons. I know something of the militiamen of this country and their spirit; but I will say this, and it is no disgrace to them, that you will not find them turning out to drill in tens of thousands unless you pay them; so that we have the say whether they will turn out or not. I was surprised at the inconsistency of some of the statements of the hon. member for Labelle. I was delighted to hear him say that he was in favour of the establishment of rifle clubs far and near throughout Canada, and that in his own section of the country he would encourage the learning of the art of rifle shooting. But I was more than surprised to hear him say that he set his face against any further expenditure for the purchase of arms. I ask the hon. members what would it avail if we taught the young men how to shoot, and then sent them to do their shooting with pitchforks? That is what it would amount to if, after training them to the use of arms, we had only 40,000 stand of arms in Canada, which is our present supply. This Bill is not making very rapid progress, and it is not my intention to prolong the debate; but I thought it necessary to make these observations, and one more. I was disappointed when the hon. member for Labelle—I trust carried away by his own eloquence, and not appreciating the meaning of the words he used—said that we must admit that the militia draws to itself a great number of loafers. Sir, I resent that. For seventeen years I have been closely associated with the militia of Canada; I was for a number of years in a city regiment, and I have been for a number of years in a country regiment; I have never missed a camp of instruction in fourteen years; I have been in the Niagara camp many times; and I can say that that is a most unjust reflection on the militia of Canada. In so large a force there may be a few loafers some of the sheep may be black, or with a slight south-down tinge about them; but the assertion that it attracts a large number of loafers I deny emphatically, from that long experience and close attention which I have given to the subject.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. member for Labelle, like myself, is not a military man, and he finds fault with those on this side of the House who offer, as he says, Tory and jingo suggestions. Well, I have listened to military men on the government side of the House ; I have listened to the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat state that even after our expenditure of millions of money on the militia force of the country, we had only the shadow of a skeleton of a force. If any hon. gentleman on this side of the House has offered a suggestion, it is for the purpose of bettering the militia force of this country, and I believe we are all willing to incur a reasonable expenditure for that purpose. I have never heard any one on this side agitate for the establishment of an unreasonable army or to go into unreasonable expenditure for an extravagantly large force. But I have heard the policy advocated of having a number of men drilled, what you would call skeleton corps, who could be used for the purpose of instructing others who had not their advantage. Such a suggestion as that has been offered from this side. So far as the rifles are concerned, the hon. member for Labelle must admit that if we have not sufficient rifles to-day, we will have to spend money to buy more. If he is in favour of our young men being trained to shoot, he must admit that we shall have to purchase more rifles. On this side we are in favour of encouraging shooting among our young men and of developing the militia in every reasonable way, and I do not see that there is any jingoism in taking that stand. Before I take my seat, I wish to condemn the methods taken in 1896 of denouncing the late government for the expenditure of a certain sum on the purchase of rifles. If the hon. member for Labelle took part in that agitation, I do not think that he was acting in the interests of this country or that he was doing anything of which he ought to feel proud as a Canadian.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I shall not take up much time in discussing the subject which the hon. member for Labelle has brought before the House, because no one takes that hon. gentleman seriously. It must have been very galling to him this afternoon to find that the amendment which he proposed, and which he supported by a very eloquent speech, had no one to vote for it but himself. Not even our good friend from Napierville (Mr. Monet) would give my hon. friend his support. We can easily understand how ruffled must have been his feelings. He has endeavoured to show that it is the terrible Tory party which is responsible for all the ills the militia is heir to in connection with this Bill. It was the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) and myself who led the House this afternoon and licked the Minister of Justice into line as well as the gallant colonel from Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) the Minister of Militia, and even that little war lord, who has been dictating to the Militia Department so effectively of late. Our hon. friend from Labelle is deserted by his own party. They dare not take sides with him and there is not any respectable riding in Ontario or elsewhere in the Dominion which would listen with patience to the views he advocates. The hon. member has said that a good many men in the ranks of the Canadian militia are loafers. Well, probably the militiamen might have an equally unflattering opinion of the hon. gentleman. But I may tell the hon. gentleman that a Presbyterian clergymen, who objected to young men joining the regiment I had the honour to command, on the ground that he thought volunteering was not a good thing for our Canadian youth, experienced a radical change of view when he became better acquainted with the militia. I thought it would do him no harm to join the ranks and induced him to enter the regiment, and he became one of the best chaplains we ever had in the militia, and one of the most enthusiastic volunteers in the Dominion. I do not know whether my good friend from Labelle would care to sit on the soft side of a sand bank with his legs crossed and eat his meals off his knees like a Turk, but he might possibly join as provisional lieutenant or quartermaster-sergeant. If he would only come to a camp and associate with the boys, he would find that the militiamen of his own county are not the loafers he says they are and would have a better opinion of the lads who wear the jacket and are ready to give up their lives for the good of their country. I am glad that the right hon. the First Minister is here now, because I think I might appeal to him. Recently, when he was endeavouring to appeal to the patriotic sentiments of the people, he spoke in favour of having militia corps, not rifle corps, but volunteer corps, in every section of the Dominion. Well, the arming of those men and everything else would cost upwards of $50,000,000. I was proud to hear the First Minister use that language, and I trust that our Minister of Militia will be able to boast of still larger expenditures on the Department of Militia. There is no money expended in the Dominion which finds its way back so readily and so quickly to the cities and other distributing centres. There is no money which so quickly comes back to the people as the money spent on annual drill, and there is no money so widely distributed. We are training our people in the art of drilling themselves, in the art of being ready to defend their country, and money spent in that way finds its way back to the people more readily than money spent in Grand Trunk Pacific contracts and other extravagant schemes which do the people no good but drain them of their wealth.

Mr. OSLER. I had not the pleasure of hearing the first part of the speech of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), no doubt he spoke with his usual eloquence ; but I should hope sincerely that there are very few men from the Atlantic to the Pacific who would echo the sentiments which he expressed in the last part of his address. He said in effect that Canada cannot be defended, that it is not worth while defending it. Let us become the humble hewers of wood and drawers of water and take the kicks of any nation.

Mr. BOURASSA. Do I understand the hon. member to say that I made use of any such language ?

Mr. OSLER. I say you did in effect.

Mr. BOURASSA. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Mr. OSLER. The hon. gentleman said that we cannot defend ourselves, that if the United States should attack us, we would have to succumb, and therefore it was useless our trying to provoke them by spending money on military affairs.

Mr. BOURASSA. If the hon. gentleman will permit me, what I said is that to organize at present in Canada on a military footing with the idea of making a fight against the United States is a foolish policy. I never said that we should not make any defence whatever, but that the idea of organizing defence against the United States was a foolish one. The best defence we could have and the best way to organize ourselves is to increase our population as rapidly as possible.

Mr. OSLER. The hon. gentleman has affirmed what I stated, and I should be sorry to think that there was another man from the Atlantic to the Pacific who holds the views to which he has given expression. If this land is not worth fighting for——

Mr. BOURASSA. Absurd.

Mr. OSLER. The hon. gentleman stated that this land is not worth fighting for, that if the United States choose to attack us, we would have to lie down like whipped curs and take our medicine. He said we had no defence, but he omitted to say that we had England at our back.

Mr. BOURASSA. As in the Alaska business.

Mr. OSLER. But probably he does not intend that we shall have England to defend us long.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). What about Scotland and Ireland ?

Mr. OSLER. They will defend us as long as we stand by the old flag. They will defend us even if there are men in this country like the hon. member for Labelle.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). Then you should not speak about England alone.

Mr. OSLER. I apologize to the Scotch. I know that the men who come from the north think that they are the greater and include the less.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That is where you come from.

Mr. OSLER. No, I come from the south.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I thought you were a Scotchman.

Mr. OSLER. No, I come as far away from Scotland as it is possible in the sister isles. I come from Cornwall. I have no fear that if we get into trouble with any nation, England, Scotland and Ireland, or Scotland, Ireland and England—the latter will perhaps satisfy my hon. friend better—would come to our defence, but only on condition that we help ourselves, and I say that we cannot spend money better than by supplying our young men with rifles and teaching them how to shoot. I say again that I hope the hon. member for Labelle is alone in holding the sentiments he has expressed in this House.

Mr. PUTTEE. It is only right that we should judge this amendment by its own terms and not by the extravagant meanings that have been ascribed to it. It appears that the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) has got himself into this position, that if he found it necessary to read the Ten Commandments to this House, there are a number of hon. gentlemen here who would get up at once and denounce them as disloyal, traitorous and anti-British. Now, Mr. Chairman, clause 27 that we have just passed, in its first two lines, plainly gives the Governor General in Council power to organize as many regiments as he pleases. That means that when at any time the public mind is inflamed, whether in regard to internal or external politics, some Minister of Militia who may be holding that office might take it into his head to organize to a tremendous extent ; and every man knows that when a responsible minister has done a thing and afterwards comes to parliament and asks for its endorsement, the party supporting the government of which he is a minister will not turn him down. We know that in such a case the House of Commons would sanction an act of which it would have disapproved if it could have voluntarily pronounced upon it in the beginning. Now, the member for Labelle moves an amendment that the peace establishment of the active militia shall be limited to 50,000. At the present time we have not got 50,000 on the peace establishment ; therefore, he is not asking the minister to reduce the number, he is still leaving a margin up to which any minister may recruit before he is obliged to come to parliament. If then there is any necessity for it, parliament can increase the number beyond 50,000. I say, with all due respect to those who have put forward alarmist notions this afternoon, that the amendment of the hon. member for Labelle should only be considered on its own merits and not in view of the meanings that have been ascribed to it, merely because it comes from a certain source. Now, there is no doubt that the people are getting alarmed at the growth of our militia expenditure. I think we have seen this afternoon that it is almost impossible at the present time for some hon. gentlemen in this House to discuss militia matters in a sane and reasonable manner. It seems to me that an amendment of this kind, and perhaps other amendments limiting the power of the Minister of Militia during the recess of parliament, are right and proper, and should be adopted by this committee.

Amendment (Mr. Bourassa) negatived.

On section 28, with the form of oath as follows :

I.....swear that I will well and truly serve Our Sovereign Lord the King, his heirs and successors in the.....for the term of.....years or until lawfully discharged, dismissed or removed, and that I will resist His Majesty's enemies and cause His Majesty's peace to be kept and maintained, and that I will in all matters appertaining to my service faithfully discharge my duty according to law. So help me God.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I propose to strike that form of oath out, and insert the following in lieu thereof :

I, A B, do solemnly promise and swear (or solemnly declare) that I will be faithful and true, and bear true allegiance to His Majesty.

Mr. FOWLER. This is a very excellent change, and simplifies the oath. But the minister has left out the term of years in this section.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This is actually the old oath.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 29 :

The permanent force shall consist of such permanently embodied corps, not exceeding two thousand men, as are, from time to time, authorized by the Governor in Council

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I propose to strike out that clause and replace it by the following :

The permanent force shall consist of such permanently embodied corps, not exceeding 2,000 men, enrolled for continuous service, as are from time to time authorized by the Governor in Council.

This amendment is found necessary. We have added an Engineer Corps, an Ordinance Corps and an Army Service Corps ; and we are adding to depots, one to be located at Montreal, with probably 200 men, and one somewhere in the Northwest Territories, with probably 100 mounted men. Later on there will be a depot in British Columbia.

Mr. FOWLER. Is there a permanent corps in Nova Scotia ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No ; but we have a depot and permanent corps in New Brunswick, which answers every purpose. Once a year the artillery is brought to Halifax from the country districts for instruction with the regulars.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Where do the officers get their certificates for training ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. At Fredericton.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Will the permanent corps that is to be organized in the Northwest permit of the Mounted Police being moved further on ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, there will probably be a small detachment. As the country settles up, the militia will gradually supply the place of the Northwest Mounted Police, and the police will go further north to more remote districts.

Mr. FOWLER. These will be mounted ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It will be a cavalry corps or mounted infantry.

Mr. GOURLEY. How many constitute a corps for a district ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That depends on what arm it is. About 100. The mounted infantry is about 88 or 89 and the infantry from 100 to 125. There are 100 in a company.

Mr. GOURLEY. How many are there at London, for instance ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. One hundred.

Mr. GOURLEY. I think I will ask you to add a couple of hundred more. Two hundred at Truro would be a great education for us.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Two thousand, I think, will supply the number.

Sections 35 to 44 allowed to stand.

On section 45—appointment of district officers.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN moved that the following be inserted as subsection (a) :

The pay and allowances to officers of the General Staff, Head-Quarters Staff and District Staff, not provided for by this Act, shall be fixed by the Governor in Council.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the present salary of the General Officer Commanding ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. $6,000.

Mr. FOWLER. These will not exceed that amount ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, they will be less.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I do not know whether it is worth while bringing it up now but I think a great many officers throughout the country would like to know what the hon. minister's intention is in regard to officers. The pay of the men is fairly satisfactory. If the hon. minister is not ready to give an expression to-night I will not press it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I cannot to-night but I think before we get through with the estimates I may be able to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 46—commissioned, warranted, and non-commissioned officers.

Mr. BOURASSA. Why not use the term 'Governor in Council' instead of 'His Majesty'? It is only a matter of form. The change has been made in all the other clauses of the Bill.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There has always been some fiction of this kind in reference to His Majesty and we thought we would leave it.

Mr. MONET. Why not have the reality and say by the Governor in Council?

Mr. BOURASSA. The fiction has been left aside and the reality taken up by the hon. minister in sixteen other clauses. I do not see why the fiction should remain in this clause.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. It is sixteen to one.

Mr. BOURASSA. In clauses 45 and 44 you provide that the appointment shall be made by the Governor in Council.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Since we have done so well, perhaps my hon. friend will allow that to stand.

Mr. BOURASSA. Why? If there is a reason given I have no objection but it seems to me we might as well be logical. It is only a matter of form.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. gentleman has never seen a commission.

Mr. BOURASSA. I have seen a commission. I have seen the commission of my grandfather and of my great grandfather granted when they served in the militia.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am glad the hon. gentleman has ancestors who have served in the militia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Let this clause stand and I will make inquiries about it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The commissions are signed by the Governor General.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. And signed by the minister also. There is something in section 47 about the commission being signed by the Governor General.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The commissions are granted by the Governor General and you cannot change that.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That settles it then.

On section 47—Governor's signature to commissions.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I think this is the same as the old law and although it would have been a very great job to have these all signed I know the officers of the militia would think much more of their commissions if they were all signed.

On section 50—rank of officers in time of peace.

Mr. FOWLER. As soon as the brigadier-general is out of office will he go back to the rank of colonel?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is only temporary. That is the rule in England. He only takes the rank of Brigadier-General during the time he is in charge of the brigade camp.

On section 51—rank of officers when called out.

Mr. FOWLER. Will this be only temporary?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, I think not.

Mr. FOWLER. The term 'emergency' has a very broad range.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 51 applies to qualified officers. It would not apply to any one who was not a qualified officer.

Mr. FOWLER. Suppose there was a riot in Toronto or Montreal and an officer was sent down to deal with it. He might dispose of it in a couple of hours and he would be a major general.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We would have to take our chances on that.

Mr. FOWLER. Why not confine this to active service in time of war?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It would be done under regulation anyway.

On section 52—Honorary rank on retirement.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. Why confine that to officers of the Headquarters Staff? We know of some officers who have given their time throughout long and useful lives to the militia force, some in command of districts now whose names occur to me. I do not care to mention any. It seems to me that it should not be made to apply to the headquarters alone.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have no objection.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I drew the hon. minister's attention to that when it was up before.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes; I know.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It also contains the words 'or in the department.' What does that mean ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In the Militia Department, I suppose.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It provides that the civil servants in the Militia Department are eligible.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Why not leave it at the word 'appointments' and strike out all the rest except the words 'for valuable services rendered to the country.' I beg to move the words 'on the Headquarters Staff or in the Department' be struck out.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the minister interpret an executive officer to mean the District Officer Commanding ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No question about it. I move to insert the word 'staff' instead of the word 'executive.'

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I think it is better.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 53 stricken out.

Section 54 agreed to without discussion.

On section 55,

Officers of His Majesty's regular army serving in Canada may be granted a temporary commission in the militia of rank equivalent to their army rank and antedated to have the same date as that of their imperial commission.

Mr. FOWLER. That is a proper thing to do.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We have officers serving here temporarily and I think we should only give them the rank they have as imperial officers.

Mr. FOWLER. I am very strongly in favour of that. I do not believe in giving these regular army officers superior rank to our Canadian officers.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Hear, hear, you are a good Canadian.

Mr. FOWLER. I am a good Canadian and a good Britisher ; you're right I am.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This will not prevent giving them senior rank if you choose to.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 56—uniform and equipment of officers.

Officers of the militia shall provide their own uniform and equipment, with the exception of mounted corps, to whom saddlery may be issued as prescribed

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I move that the word 'officers' be substituted for the word 'corps.'

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FOWLER. Officers' uniforms are too expensive in this country and the result is that in many cases you cannot get first class men to take commissions.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No doubt.

Mr. FOWLER. For instance, it is perfectly absurd to have these Hussar uniforms in this country.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I agree with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOWLER. The best men to officer cavalry regiments are men brought up on the farm and used to riding horses. You must as a rule draw your rank and file from the country districts. If you officer a regiment from the rural districts with the sons of rich men from the city the result is not satisfactory. Many of these city officers put on so much side and style that the men do not like them. It is very important that the department should simplify the uniform and render it less expensive.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I agree with the hon. gentleman, and I hope the time will soon come when we will be able to adopt some sensible, simple and useful uniform, which will be of a Canadian type. I do not know why in the world we should stick to these old uniforms, which of course have a history in England, which they wish to preserve, but which so far as we are concerned are useless importations. I believe we should adopt a system of our own.

Mr. MONET. I endorse what has been said by the Minister of Militia. I have been to the Laprairie camp recently and it is absurd to see our soldiers exposed to the heat of the sun wearing small caps that did not cover the half of the head. A straw hat would not cost any more and would be much more serviceable. Let us have a good Canadian uniform which will be far better suited to our needs than these imported things from over the sea.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am in favour of a common sense Canadian uniform which will suit not only in Canada but anywhere in the world.

Mr. MONET. You need not go out of Canada to find common sense.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The men in charge of the Laprairie camp did not know their business, because if they had asked they could have had straw hats issued instead of the caps. Our corps have been using straw hats in camp for years.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. Or light helmets.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It was neglect on the part of the officers that the men did not have straw hats. I agree with my good friend (Mr. Fowler) with regard to officers' uniforms, and I think the government should meet the cost to a certain extent. In England, volunteer officers get an appropriation in lieu of uniform, and I am satisfied that every officer in Canada would prefer an allowance for uniform to the beggarly pittance he now receives. The minister has today seen the influence which the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) has in the House, and if he provides a common sense uniform to be supplied to the militia officers, he will be endorsed heartily by the people of Canada.

Mr. FOWLER. If the department provides that the officers' uniform shall be simple, useful and economical, the officers would purchase it themselves. It takes from $800 to $1,000 to fully equip an hussar officer with uniform and accoutrements, and that is perfectly absurd.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think so.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I do not know whether my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) knows anything about militia matters now or not, but we have it on the authority of the great minister of war who meddled in the eastern townships regiment, that the cost of a uniform, is $55, sword and all. I do not think an officer should be called upon to expend even $55 on his uniform. It is true, some officers in those swell corps go to an expenditure that is quite uncalled for. There is no regulation in force in Canada that requires any officer in a city or other corps to purchase an expensive uniform. That was settled in the House in favour of the less expensive uniform; so that no man now need get an expensive uniform unless he wants to become a dandy, and I think there are few of the officers foolish enough for that.

Mr. FOWLER. I have seen my hon. friend from North Victoria dressed out in full uniform, and will guarantee that it costs more than $55, and no man would wish to appear shabby in a regiment beside my hon. friend from Victoria. The cost of the uniform should be the same for all officers, so that there would not be any possibility of a man going beyond his means in order to provide himself with as good a uniform as that of his neighbour.

Mr. INGRAM. Have any complaints come from soldiers who have purchased their uniforms, and have had to wait for months to get their money from the department?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have not heard of any.

Mr. INGRAM. Take the staff sergeants, for instance. The government allows them $44, or something like that, for their clothing, and it costs them about $60, and I think they have had to wait for some time to get their money. Have there not been complaints of that kind?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have not heard of any, but I will inquire.

On section 57—importation of saddlery free of duty.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it not a new departure to supply saddles to the militia?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the minister give us an idea what it costs for saddlery?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. About $40, I think.

Mr. INGRAM. Do the men get the same as the officers?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think they do.

Mr. INGRAM. Who inspects the saddles?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. If my hon. friend will wait until we come to the estimates, I shall be very glad to give him all the information. It is a most extraordinary thing to mix militia stores up with the Militia Bill. The inspector of saddlery in this city is Lieutenant-Colonel Brown.

Mr. INGRAM. Is he a practical saddler?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I believe he is. At any rate, he is the commanding officer of the cavalry corps here. He has done the work for a long time, and done it satisfactorily. He did it for the imperial government for a year or two, while saddles were being shipped to the old country, and I believe he gave entire satisfaction. The inspector in Toronto is an old English sergeant of the name of Woodcock. Lieutenant-Colonel Graveley is in charge of the stores there. These are all I can remember at the present moment.

Section 57—Importation free of duty—struck out.

On section 58—responsibility for damages—

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. With regard to deficiency in equipment, I do not care how careful an officer commanding a regiment or company may be, there are bound to be some shortages, some losses, in every camp of instruction, after the articles have been in use for a few years ; and it has struck me as a hardship—and it has impressed the men in the force in the same way—that after some article has been in use for four of five years, and is perhaps more than half worn out, it should be charged up against the commanding officer at its first cost price. It seems to me some regulation might be made by which a certain reasonable life would be assigned to every article. For instance, in the old days it would be easy to ascertain the life of a haversack or a knapsack, and write off each year a certain amount ; so that when an article was lost, the officer would be charged with its value at the time of the loss. When the new rifles were given out in place of the old Sniders, some of the old rifles were lost, and the proposition was to charge them up at $25 each, the original cost of the rifle, when at that very time the same rifle was selling at Eaton's and Simpson's in Toronto as a curiosity at $1 and $1.25 each. I call the attention of the minister to this in the hope that something will be done in making a regulation along the line I have indicated.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. On the first draft of the Bill I drew the minister's attention to this very thing, and he promised to attend to it in the regulations.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is in the hands of the officers now.

Section agreed to.

Section 59 agreed to.

On section 60—when only men may appear in uniform——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This is an old law.

Mr. INGRAM. Some of the soldiers object to being compelled to wear uniform, when others are allowed to go in civilian clothing. I have a complaint on that subject which it may be worth while to read :

Formerly non-commissioned officers and men as above were occasionally allowed the privilege when on leave of wearing plain clothes, and it was much appreciated by those who had the good fortune to obtain such leave. Now, however, all is changed and militia order 225 (4) of 1903 was issued cancelling such privileges. Now, Sir, a recruit of about three months' service can get an employed job as a servant to an officer, do his chores, and blacken his boots, and empty the slops, result, he can walk out in plain clothes because he is an officer's servant. Also, he does no duty, does no guard or fatigues, just merely attends to his master alone. Is he of high born degree that such a most unfair regulation should be made in his case as allowing him to wear plain clothes ? The cook in the officer's mess and the assistant cook, grooms, and the pantry waiters in the officer's mess are all privileged to wear plain clothes when off duty to walk out in, but a well conducted soldier, or a non-commissioned officer of over fifteen years' service are refused this privilege. Why ?

Officers as a general rule only wear their uniform about four hours a day when one can run across them down town in 'mufti' almost daily. Why should not non-commissioned officers be allowed it ? Policemen are, postmen are, asylum employees are, jailkeepers are, but Tommy Atkins of the permanent force is the worst of all, and he, poor fellow, must wear the uniform night and day. To add to the discomfort the hottest days in summer he must tramp to church in a heavy cloth tunic flannel-lined, heavy leather waist belt tightly fastened around waist (if it is a little loose, you are reprimanded on parole for slovenliness) and a big helmet and everything imaginable to add to the discomfort of a soldier in July and August.

It is not necessary that I should go on with a lot of this stuff.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not at all necessary.

Mr. INGRAM. But if there are such privileges granted, they should be open to every well-conducted soldier. No one will pretend that on a day like this, a lined tunic, a big heavy helmet and a belt tied tightly around the waist, would add to a man's comfort.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am not aware of the circumstances, but will make inquiry.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This clause only covers the ordinary active militia, and not the permanent corps.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I suppose regulations will be made to cover the cases of the permanent corps.

On section 63—annual drill.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I move that the clause be amended so that it will read as follows :

The Governor in Council may order the active militia, or any portion thereof, to drill or train for a period of not more than thirty days in each year.

Mr. FOWLER. Why do you strike out the minimum ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We might want to drill a certain corps for only four or five days, and we do not want to be tied up.

Motion agreed to.

On section 64,

Officers, warrant officers and non-commissioned officers of the permanent force shall be entitled to daily pay and allowances at rates to be prescribed.

2. The Governor in Council may, from time to time, fix the sums to be paid to privates of the permanent force, regard being had to length of service, good conduct and efficiency ; but the ordinary pay shall not exceed the amounts following, that is to say :—

	Cents.
For privates per diem..	75
For buglers under 18 years of age, per diem..	40

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have explained before why that is done. Certain portions of the Permanent Force, who have been taken over from the Stores Branch, are in receipt of $1.25 to $1.50 per day, because they do not get their rations allowance, which the ordinary Permanent Force man gets.

Mr. GILMOUR. Is the pay of a private increased from 40 cents a day ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It will begin now at 50 cents and increase according to length of service and good conduct to 75 cents.

Mr. GILMOUR. You intend to increase the minimum figure under this clause ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the meaning of the word 'ordinary pay' ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is inserted because special corps, labourers, &c., are given special pay, not the ordinary pay.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are they not sworn in as members of the permanent corps ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They are.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would 'permanent corps' not be the correct words to use here ? A man in the stores department gets $1.25 a day, but he wears his uniform and is sworn in. Is he not a member of the permanent force ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He is not in barracks.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Where does the minister get authority to pay a man in the stores department $1.25 a day ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He gets it from a special vote for pay and allowances.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would not this clause keep him from getting it ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think that would be a matter of regulation.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. You cannot override an Act of parliament by a regulation. If the law says you shall not pay him more than 75 cents a day there may be difficulty in paying the man $1.25. I am only pointing it out for the safety of the men.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think the interpretation was that the expression 'ordinary pay' overcame that difficulty.

Mr. GILMOUR. Is it the intention to increase also the pay of the officers, warrant officers, and non-commissioned officers as well as of the privates ?

Sir F. W. BORDEN.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My hon. friend (Mr. Gilmour) will see that the pay of non-commissioned officers is based upon that of the privates ; it is so much more than that of the privates.

Mr. GILMOUR. How much ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. A sergeant-major gets $1.50, a warrant officer gets $1.25 and $1, but there will be an increase.

On section 65—pay of active militia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have an amendment to be substituted for section 65b. It was arranged in the Committee of the Whole some time ago. It is as follows :

For privates at the rate of 50 cents a day, which rate may be increased as may be prescribed, but not to exceed a maximum of $1 a day.

I have also an addition to be inserted as section 65c which is as follows :

An allowance of $1 per diem or such other rate as is prescribed shall be paid to each officer and man for every horse necessarily used by him on active service, during the period of active drill, or when otherwise on duty as aforesaid.

We omitted in the Bill to make any provision to pay for horses. This simply is restoring the clause which is in the present law.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This is not intended as a slap at the new war lord for hiring his horse ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. You must not be so vindictive.

Section as amended agreed to.

Progress reported.

On motion of Sir Frederick Borden, House adjourned at 10.40 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, July 12, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

RESIGNATION OF LT.-COL. GREGORY.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia) moved for :

Correspondence and papers respecting the extension of the command of Lieutenant-Colonel R. W. Gregory, commanding officer of the 2nd Dragoons, his subsequent resignation, &c.

He said : These papers were asked for by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). I have them here and, if the resolution is carried, will be ready to lay them on the table. I would like to say, in this connection, that, while I have brought all the papers relating to this matter, I hope this will not be considered as establishing a precedent, because some of the papers are of a confidential character, being reports by the commanding officer upon the efficiency, &c., of officers under him. It is not usual to lay such papers upon the table of the House. I think that in this case it is absolutely necessary that it should be done, but I should deprecate the suggestion, if it were made, that this should be done in every case.

Motion agreed to.

ARBITRATION WITH THE GRAND TRUNK.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 152) respecting an arbitration between His Majesty and the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada. He said: The object of this Bill is to confer upon the arbitrators appointed to inquire into certain troubles that have arisen between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the government certain powers mentioned in the Bill. These troubles arise under the contract respecting the acquisition by the Intercolonial of the old Grand Trunk from Rivière du Loup to Point Lévis, or, rather, to a station called Hadlow, and to other difficulties that have arisen out of the operation, under the agreement made in 1898, of the line between Ste. Rosalie Junction and Montreal. These questions have been referred to arbitrators to be determined by them; but it has been ascertaned that the arbitrators have not, under the deed of submission, the necessary power to examine witnesses under oath or to order the production of papers. In order to have a full and complete inquiry into the matters in dispute, it is necessary to have the powers mentioned in this Bill conferred upon the arbitrators.

Mr. KEMP. It is, to some extent, in regard to freight traffic—division of earnings?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The question of the division of earnings and diversion of traffic arises under the second contract that of 1898. the troubles that have arisen under the first contract, that of 1878, are as to the use of the portion of the line between Point Lévis and Chaudière Curve. I may say that that portion of the line is divided into two parts. Under the agreement, that portion between Point Lévis and Hadlow is the property of the Grand Trunk, while that portion between Hadlow and Chaudière Curve is the property of the government. It is provided under the agreement that each party has the right to use the line of the other. But difficulty has arisen concerning foreign freight cars carried over these lines. The government claim that the Grand Trunk had no right to charge them for foreign freight cars—cars belonging to other railways—carried over the Grand Trunk portion. But the Grand Trunk have made a charge of a fairly large amount on each car. The question is whether they had the right to do that, and whether they have the right to do it in the future.

Mr. GOURLEY. Is it provided that there may be an appeal from the finding of the arbitrators, or will that finding be final?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I cannot answer that question off hand, but when the Bill is under consideration in committee, I will be able to do so.

Mr. GOURLEY. I can understand how necessary it is, with reference to the charge of freight cars, that there should be an appeal to the courts, instead of leaving the matter to the final decision of the arbitrators.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The other matter is of even more importance—that arising under the contract of 1898 relating to the diversion of traffic. It was understood that the Grand Trunk was to hand over to the Intercolonial all the traffic intended for the maritime provinces. Instead of that, the traffic has been diverted and sent to other places.

Mr. KEMP. Sent to Portland.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And some of it to Sherbrooke; I do not know exactly how it has gone.

Mr. MACLEAN. Does not all this go to show that the Grand Trunk Corporation is a rather difficult one to deal with, that it is hard to compel them to live up to their obligations? We seem to be getting into a mass of litigation with this concern, and yet, it has been entrusted with the national transportation proposition. It does not wish to obey the Alien Labour law; it seeks to build up United States seaports; in every way a great deal of litigation seems necessary to compel them to carry out their obligations.

Mr. GOURLEY. All I wanted to know is whether in these important matters provision will be made for an appeal, if necessary, to the Supreme Court and ultimately to the Privy Council.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I cannot answer at the moment. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gourley) is aware that the usual course is to appeal from the arbitrators to the Exchequer Court, and from the Exchequer Court to the Supreme Court. I cannot say, at present, what provision has been made with regard to these proceedings.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. KEMP. I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if he has gone through the necessary formalities with respect to the production of the papers relating to the harbour dues of Montreal, referred to by the hon. member for St. Mary's, Montreal (Mr. Tarte).

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think I shall be able to bring it down at an early date.

Mr. LEFURGEY. An order of the House was passed on 30th May last for the production of certain papers in the department of the Minister of Agriculture. The papers are not yet down. It is to be hoped that the session will soon come to a close and so we would like to have these papers brought down as soon as possible.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). To what papers does the hon. member (Mr. Lefurgey) refer ?

Mr. LEFURGEY. Papers relating to the chicken-fattening stations.

Mr. FISHER. I will look it up. I thought the return had been laid on the table.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I inquired of the officials this morning and was told it was not down.

THE MILITIA ACT.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 5) respecting the Militia of Canada.—Sir Frederick W. Borden.

On section 68,

At or near as possible to, the headquarters of every regimental division, there may be provided a rifle range with suitable butts, targets and other necessary appliances ; and the Governor in Council may stop, at such time as is necessary during the target practice of the Militia, the traffic on any roads, not being mail roads, that cross the line of fire, and may make such other regulations for conducting target practice and registering the results thereof, and for the safety of the public, as are necessary, and may impose penalties for wilful damage to any such butts, targets and appliances ; and all such ranges shall be subject to inspection and approval before being used; and the owners of private property shall be compensated for any damage that accrues to their respective properties from the use of any such rifle range.

Mr. BOURASSA. I propose an amendment to this clause by striking out all the words after the word 'used' in the twenty-first line, and inserting the following in lieu thereof :—

His Majesty shall be liable to make compensation for the death of any person, or for any injury to the person caused by a bullet wound arising from the use of any rifle range for target practice, and for any injury to property arising from such use; provided that there shall be no claim to compensation where the death or personal injury was due to negligence on the part of the person killed or injured, or where such person, at the time the death or injury was sustained, was at the rifle range for the purpose of taking part in, or in some official or other capacity in connection with or as a spectator of the shooting, or in the case of injury to property, where such injury was due to negligence on the part of the owner of the property.

I may recall to the committee a very sad case that occurred some years ago in the county of Jacques Cartier, at the Côte St. Paul rifle range, I think it was, where a man named Larose was maimed for life. He sought compensation before the Exchequer Court, and I will read an extract of the judgment which shows a defect in the law in that respect. The judgment assimilated his case to a case of damage on government property, and was rendered under that subsection of clause of the Exchequer Court law.

Every claim against the Crown arising out of any death or injury to the person or to property on any public work resulting from the negligence of any officer or servant of the Crown, while acting within the scope of his duties or employment.

Naturally the judge of the Exchequer Court held that the rifle range could not be considered a public work under this definition, and moreover it could not be proved that the man was wounded by a bullet coming from a rifle made by a militiaman, as it might have come from some amateur practising there. As the judge remarked :

Parliament has made provision for compensating persons for damages accruing to their properties from the use of a rifle range ; but not for personal injuries, and it is not for the court to add to or to extend the remedies that parliament has provided.

The case was taken before the Supreme Court and the judgment of Judge Burbidge was upheld. The judgment of the Supreme Court was delivered by Sir Elzear Taschereau who, quoting the article of the Exchequer Court law which I have just read, added :

Moreover it is not proved who fired the shot that wounded the suppliant. It may have been fired by one of the amateurs or volunteers not on duty, who were there practising on that day, with the men having what is called in the case, government practice.

Therefore I propose to supplement the present law so that persons suffering damages received from target practice may be compensated. There is no doubt that a person who stands on a rifle range is in a better position to prove from whose rifle the bullet came that injured him ; but the peaceful man who may be ploughing his field a mile or two away may be hurt without knowing by whom he is hurt ; so there is no possibility of the latter being able to claim damages if injured. Therefore, while I think it is proper for the government, as I said yesterday, to organize these rifle ranges, at the same time I think parliament should see that persons who may be wounded while on their own property should not suffer without compensation being given.

Mr. MONK. The amendment suggested by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) seems to be a very wise one. He has recalled the case of Larose. It is a pity that this amendment cannot be made retroactive so as to give Larose the recourse from which he was debarred under the interpretation of the Exchequer Court judge and of the Supreme Court. As a matter of fact, Larose was maimed for life. He is living to-day, but it is impossible for him to attend to his farm work in any way. I never could understand myself exactly upon what ground the Exchequer Court judgment was rendered. I understood the judge to hold that there was insufficient proof of the bullet having come from the rifle range ; but in law it seems to me that if Larose had established that the bullet came from a man practicing on the rifle range, and I think he did so, I do not understand how he was deprived of compensation. The government, taking into consideration all the circumstances, gave him an indemnity of $1,000, I think after the decision rendered in the Supreme Court. But it must be evident that that indemnity could not possibly satisfy Larose for the injury which maimed him for life.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) Will my hon. friend allow me to interrupt him ? The department offered Larose $1,000 before he took his case into court at all, but he would not accept it. My hon. friend knows that, because he was in the House when that matter was discussed.

Mr. MONK. The Minister of Militia is right, Larose was offered $1,000, but he was advised by his lawyer, Mr. Charbonneau, I think, now Judge Charbonneau, as well as by others, that he had a recourse, and that $1,000 was entirely insufficient, and therefore he refused the proffered indemnity. I must say that after the case was decided he accepted the offer of $1,000, but that sum scarcely paid all the immediate damage that he suffered from the accident, there was no compensation made him for the life-long injury he sustained. It seems to me that he made sufficient proof to create a presumption that the bullet which hit him came from the rifle range, and that therefore it was incumbent upon the department to establish that upon the day when he was wounded and bullets were raining all around in front of the range, the accident was not attributable to the men practising on the rifle range. At any rate I think the subgestion of the amendment of my hon. friend is a good one and that it ought to be adopted.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would ask the hon. Minister of Justice or the hon. Minister of Militia if there is no remedy now ? I understand there is a remedy under the present law.

Mr. BOURASSA. No.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I was asking the legal authority.

Mr. BOURASSA. Mr. Justice Taschereau is a legal authority.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. He is not the legal authority of this House.

Mr. GOURLEY. I am very happy to be able to agree with my hon. friend from Labelle for the first time, and I seize this opportunity. It is clear there is no remedy against the Crown unless it is expressly conferred by statute and all the court had to do was to ascertain whether the statute covered that particular injury or not, and it held that it did not. My hon. friend from Labelle asks us to frame a clause that will cover that point in case of future accident ? I think it is a wise suggestion, I would support it with the greatest pleasure and I think his amendment covers the point entirely.

Mr. TISDALE. I think the hon. Minister of Justice should look carefully into the whole question and see that the amendment is framed properly to meet the case, provided there is no remedy at the present time. He should be careful that it goes on general principles. I do not like to commit myself to an amendment such as that which has been suggested.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We have no right here to assume that there is a remedy when the Supreme Court has decided there is none.

Mr. TISDALE. There surely ought to be a remedy of some sort provided where a proper case is made out. I presume there will be no disagreement in regard to that. But the amendment must be very carefully considered, and not be adopted in such a shape that anybody who happens to get hurt has a ground for asking to be paid. It will have to have reference to the nature of the injury and it will have to be carefully guarded so that the Crown will not be obliged to prove a negative. The adoption of a statute subjecting the Crown to damages is contrary to the first principle underlying most of our legislation. When we propose in any particular case to go outside of that principle as between the Crown and the subject there should be a special reason for it, because this is a line of legislation that I would not care to take the responsibility of pushing any farther than is necessary to cover a particular case. The law officers of the Crown ought to be responsible for seeing that the amendment is drafted in such shape as will cover this case, provided the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence is prepared to recommend that some provision should be made.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think that in so far as government-owned rifle ranges are concerned, some provision of this kind would be very proper, but the government is assisting rifle clubs all over the country by giving small sums of money to help them to put up targets on ground which they themselves own or control absolutely. It seems to me that it would not be right to make the government responsible for accidents occurring under these circumstances, and if the clause is so guarded as to meet that contingency, I have no objection to it.

Mr. GOURLEY. I have not read that amendment and it would be impossible to read it carefully at this time. I assume that the amendment will go to the Department of Justice to be recast and put in proper language.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The amendment was first drafted by my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) who then brought it over to the Justice Department, and it was referred to an official of the Justice Department, the Deputy Minister. I had nothing to do with the drafting of the amendment myself, but the amendment in its present form was drafted by the Deputy Minister. The amendment was first prepared by the hon. member for Labelle and submitted to the Deputy Minister and he sent it back in the form in which we now have it, but as to whether or not the amendment goes farther than my hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence thinks it ought to go, I am not prepared to say.

Mr. MACLEAN. Now you want the opinion of the Department of Militia and Defence on it ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, when drafting a Bill I want to know what the party who has introduced the Bill has in his mind. My functions are limited to giving effect to the intention of the person introducing the Bill.

Mr. TISDALE. As I understand the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence he is willing to assume the responsibility of having a proper clause inserted, whether this is such or not, in so far as rifle ranges which are under the supervision and control of the military authorities are concerned, but not in regard to private rifle ranges where individuals will surely be responsible for their negligence.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is it.

Mr. TISDALE. Will the hon. Minister of Justice agree with the proposition that private individuals who have these private rifle ranges are responsible under the general law for anything happening on account of what they have done ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is no question about that. The only object of this amendment must be to meet the special exception which exists in regard to government ranges. Private ranges come under the operation of the present law.

Sir F. W. BORDEN.

Mr. BOURASSA. I want to have the question made clear by the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence as to what he understands by government ranges ? We know very well that rifle clubs are organized under the militia law, that rifles are supplied to them by the government, that the rifle clubs form part of the militia and that in case of an emergency they are called to the front just the same as other regiments. Therefore, I say that the government is as much responsible for the practice by rifle clubs as they are responsible for practice by militia corps. The hon. minister is perfectly right when he states that rifle ranges established by private individuals are not under government control. I am not prepared to say that this should apply to all rifle ranges, but when I expressed my view to that effect to the legal authorities I supposed that the legal authorities when they worded this amendment thought that when they spoke of a rifle range it meant a rifle range under the control of the Minister of Militia. We cannot legislate as to rifle ranges belonging to private individuals. We have nothing at all to do with those rifle ranges. I would like a distinction made between rifle ranges that are controlled by private individuals and those that are under government control. If all rifle ranges organized under the authority of the hon. Minister of Militia shall not be subject to this provision what would be the result ? Suppose the government, instead of buying a rifle range at Fraserville, for instance, should rent it, and then supply rifles to a rifle club, is the rifle club not organized on just the some footing as the rifle clubs who will engage in rifle practice at the Montreal range or at the Ottawa range which are owned by the government ? In that case this legislation should apply to all these ranges alike. I think I am not stating too much when I say that we cannot apply this amendment to anything except rifle ranges which are under government control because we cannot legislate in regard to other rifle ranges.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If the committee will bear with me I will state what I think is the effect of this amendment. The clause as it now stands begins with these words :

> At or as near as possible to the headquarters of every regimental division there may be provided a rifle range with suitable butts, targets, and other necessary appliances.

If a rifle range is provided within the meaning of these words by the Minister of Militia, and an accident occurs, then the provisions of this amendment will be applicable to the accident that has occurred as a result of the providing of this rifle range. The range is to be provided by the government, and being provided by the government, it would be under government control and regulated, I presume, by departmental orders. In that event, the range being absolutely under the control of the government, this amendment will make the government liable for the damages.

Mr. TISDALE. It would practically apply to all rifle ranges.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. All that are provided by the government.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I wish further light on the proviso which reads :

> Provided that there shall be no claim to compensation where the death or personal injury was due to negligence on the part of the person killed or injured.

So far that is right.

> Or, where such person at the time of death or injury so sustained was at the rifle range for the purpose of taking part in the practice, &c.

It seems to me that if a person injured at a distance from the rifle range is to be compensated, very much more should a man be compensated who is taking part in that rifle practice, and who is performing his duty as a citizen in qualifying himself for the defence of his country. I do not think we would be opening the doors too wide if we were to include a provision which would enable the government to compensate any man injured while actually in practice, provided it be not due to his own carelessness.

Mr. TALBOT. As an illustration, I may mention that in the camp at Lévis last week, a man who was employed as a marker for my regiment was injured by a fragment of a bullet flying from a stone and cutting his wrist. In that case the injury was not serious, but had the fragment struck the man's eye he would have been deprived of his sight. In such a case, when a man is injured in the discharge of his duty, he should be sufficiently compensated.

Mr. MACLEAN. Is not that the risk of war ? If you followed that up you would have to make provision for every accident on the field of battle, and where is it to end ?

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. You pension those injured on the field of war.

Mr. DANIEL. Every military man who is wounded on active service is liable to compensation, and may I ask : Are men engaged on the rifle ranges considered as on active service ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He is provided for.

Mr. DANIEL. I would take it that when a military man is wounded under these circumstances, he would come under the law which provides compensation for those on active service.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Certainly.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I doubt if the term 'active service' is wide enough to cover rifle practice on ranges. These injuries may occur out of camp altogther when men are practicing at the ranges. If the minister will assure us that the term 'active service' is broad enough to cover these cases I am satisfied, but I am not satisfied that a man who is simply about his every day avocation should be compensated by the government, and another man who gives up his time to learn something for the defence of his country should not be compensated.

Mr. DANIEL. I quite agree in that.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think it is very likely that the Deputy Minister of Justice, in drafting this clause, was endeavouring to make the clause analogous to the general principle of the law, which embodies the doctrine of 'common employment.' The Deputy Minister of Justice, as a sound English lawyer, very likely had that in his mind when he was drafting this clause. But as the doctrine of common employment is a wholly irrational doctrine, and one which ought not be part of the law, we might very well adopt the suggestion of the hon. member (Mr. A. T. Thompson) and strike out the limitation, which does not seem to be fair or reasonable.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. We have rifle ranges which are absolutely owned by the government, ranges which are leased by the government and ranges which are used privately all over the country. The regular corps, the volunteer rifle companies and private individuals practice on these ranges. If these ranges were being used by citizens, unorganized and acting without authority, then if this amendment carried the government would be liable to give them compensation for injury. In my opinion, individuals who practice rifle shooting without being duly under military authority should not be entitled to compensation by the government. It is only in the case of rifle associations and the organized militia, acting under the direction and control of the government, that damages should be allowed.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. Men actually enrolled in the militia or rifle clubs.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes; and practicing under the rules laid down. The point raised by my hon. friend (Mr. A. T. Thompson) is a sound one, and I certainly think that a marker or a rifleman who is discharging his duty ought to be compensated, provided he has not been negligent.

Mr. GOURLEY. Under this Bill no spectator could seek redress ?

Mr. TISDALE. He ought not to ; he has no business to be there.

Mr. GOURLEY. A shooting match generally attracts a number of people. I was on the rifle butts here recently watching the practice, and if I were shot I could claim no redress under this Bill. That, I think, is an outrage. If citizens are permitted to go on the rifle ranges, it is very wrong that they should have no redress if they are injured.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If a spectator were injured by a man regularly enrolled I think he should be entitled to compensation, but if a spectator on a rifle range were injured by a person showing off a revolver on the back of the ground, he should have no claim for compensation.

Mr. GOURLEY. The injury I refer to is by one of the people engaged in practice at the target. In that case, it strikes me that if this Bill is to afford a remedy, it should afford a remedy to the innocent spectator. We are invited by the government to go and watch these public exhibitions, and if a remedy is to be provided for anybody, the innocent spectator who goes on the ground should be protected. Otherwise you are providing a remedy against an almost infinitesimal chance.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Speaking of the Montreal accident, the law requires that certain signals shall be set up, and that is supposed to indemnify the government for any accident that takes place.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Within the area.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I understand that that accident occurred within the line of the fire, not at one side.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understand that in some unaccountable way the bullet went to the side of the butts.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. On the plan laid down by the department, I think it was shown to be within the line of the fire. I will give an instance in my own experience. in our county we were firing, and the bullets glanced off to the lake. A fisherman came into town in the evening and reported that a number of the bullets had passed by his boat. I told him that it was absolutely impossible, because his boat was four miles away from the ranges. He assured me two of the bullets had struck his boat. The firing was done by a novice, who, instead of sighting over the lower bar had sighted over the upper bar. That man would have been justified in receiving some compensation in case of accident. The incident shows that one cannot be too careful in these matters.

Mr. GOURLEY. If the proposed amendment is to apply to accidents provided for in the previous part of section 68, the word 'any' should be made 'such'; otherwise the clause is ample enough to apply to any rifle range. I think the Minister of Justice will see at once the necessity of that change.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There are a few general principles to be borne in mind in connection with this matter. The first is that generally speaking the Crown is absolutely free from any claim or damages. The principle has been departed from by an amendment to the Exchequer Court Act, which provides, speaking from memory, that the Crown is liable with respect to injuries done on a public work. That section has been differently construed in the courts, with the result that when an injury has occurred to an individual not at the time on a public work, there is no liability. The intention here is to extend the liability of the Crown to injuries suffered by individuals who are not on the rifle range, but to whom injury is caused by reason of something done on the range; and in order to protect the interests of the Crown it is provided that that provision shall not apply to an injury which may happen to a person who is on the range. The case of such a person may or may not be provided for under the Act as we have it now; but there is no intention to provide for that case.

Mr. TISDALE. I would suggest that the provision be limited to a range provided or authorized by the department.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. When an expert draughtsman draws a clause like this, I must admit that I do not like to touch it without consulting him.

Mr. TISDALE. As the section reads now, I think it would be much wider than is intended. Suppose a club of private parties provide ranges for themselves and go shooting; if you do not qualify the clause, you take the responsibility of injuries from them and put it on the Crown. That is a case which I apprehend we do not intend to cover. Suppose men commence shooting on a range before it has been inspected and approved; the individual who has violated the law would be free, and the government would be made responsible.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think that it would be a very great straining to make the government responsible for anything that might happen at these unauthorized ranges. But we might easily avoid any difficulty by making this provision applicable only to the rifle ranges provided for by section 68 and which are under the control of the government.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If a government range is being used by men who are not regularly enrolled in the militia or members of any rifle association, acting under the statutes of Canada, and an accident happens, I do not think the government should be responsible.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Why not?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Because these men practicing on that range do not belong to the militia or to any government rifle association.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend has in mind strangers coming to a rifle range—

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Not foreigners.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would be quite right in using that word under certain circumstances.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Outsiders.

Mr. GOURLEY. That is better.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Do not use that word 'foreigner.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I could point out to my friend in the Patent Act and dozens of Acts passed in this House the application of the word 'foreigner' to British subjects. In fact, it is the correct grammatical expression to use in certain circumstances. My hon. friend has in view the contingency that men not connected with the militia might use a rifle range and cause an accident, and he says that in such case the government should not be held liable. But a rifle range under the control of the government has to be regulated and controlled in some way, so that every passerby cannot make use of it. If my hon. friend has a piece of property, he does not allow every Tom, Dick and Harry to go in and use it at his sweet will. He controls his own property, and it would be the business of the government to control that rifle range in such a way that no one could use it except under certain regulations. I think there are guardians to these ranges.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. But there are other ranges which are not the property of the government, but which are subsidized by the government.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Do these come within the meaning of the section ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. MONK. Would such a range come within the meaning of a rifle range as described in section 68 'at or near as possible to the headquarters of every regimental division, there may be provided a rifle range with suitable butts, targets and other necessary appliances.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That covers it exactly. Take the case in my county. The government gave us assistance to establish the butts, but ninety dollars out of every hundred came out of the pockets of the boys.

Mr. GOURLEY. Is your headquarters near the rifle range ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes. In rear of these ranges there is a line of fire, and that line gets wider the further back it goes. We have to rent land from the farmers and give them notice every time we are using the range. And immediately in rear of the butts, where a wagon road crosses the line of fire, we station a man who signals us whenever a team approaches. But supposing somebody, who does not know the rules should practice on that range and an accident happen, who would be responsible ? We cannot afford to keep a guardian on that range all the year round.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It would be easy to draw an amendment which would make the Act applicable to only one class of range.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. But I want it to apply to both classes whenever the range is being used by an official body. In such cases the government should be responsible.

Mr. TISDALE. There are lots of rifle clubs which are not headquarter clubs at all. There are four or five in my county that have nothing to do with the militia but are rifle clubs coming under the Militia Act. I have had complaints come to me concerning these clubs under the impression that the Militia Departmnt had control of them. These clubs do the best they can, but as a rule they can only get short ranges, and if the government wish to encourage these clubs, they should put them under some control. But if you were to make the government responsible for anything that might happen at any of these ranges, that might have the result of making those using them more careless.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I can only say I should hope not.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Not unless they are taken over by the department.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Because you can see at once what the result will be. If institutions mentioned by my hon. friend engage in rifle shooting on what may be called private ranges, they take every precaution to prevent injury to others. But if you make the government responsible, there will be much less care exercised ; there will be much greater danger to the people and much greater expense to the government.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think I see a way to meet the difficulty—by omitting the beginning of the paragraph and making this apply to rifle ranges of a certain description, as, 'Headquarters' ranges or other designation to be supplied by the Department of Militia.

Mr. TISDALE. The hon. minister however, must not overlook this danger—and this is a matter rather for the Minister of Militia than for the Minister of Justice—if you are going to protect one class of legalized clubs and not others, you will kill the others. As I said in the commencement, this is a matter that requires very careful consideration. If the Minister of Justice is to prepare a proper provision on this subject, he must be seized of the facts ; he must know what sort of clubs are in existence and what sort of clubs the Minister of Militia intends to form. I do not see how we are going to make a distinction between one kind and another unless we make it a general principle of law. I agree with the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) that his amendment is in the right direction, that his proviso must be embodied in the law. But we must not make it too extensive, and we must protect the Crown against the negligence of those for whose conduct it is not properly responsible.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It seems to me that certain words might be inserted which would make the section quite clear and ought to make it satisfactory. For instance, it might read :

His Majesty shall be liable to make compensation upon the death of any person, or for any injury to the person arising from the use of any rifle range for target practice carried on under the regulation of the department of Militia and Defence.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Hear, hear.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. By this, it seems to me, the public will be assured that no practice will go on unless it is in accordance with the regulations laid down. In the case of every one of these clubs, there is some one who is responsible for carrying on the practice, and so the public will be protected against injury through the careless carrying on of rifle shooting.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I think the minister has hit the mark. There is only one point and it is this—supposing a body were acting under the regulations of the department, that does not necessarily mean that the range would be accepted, though, I presume, that would be provided for. Troops should not be limited to one particular range, whether provided by the government or provided by an association so long as it is a range in accordance with the regulations of the government.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I must confess that, speaking off-hand, and, necessarily, without full consideration, I would not absolutely agree to that. After all, if the government own a property and permit improper use to be made of it, and, as a result of that improper use, an accident occurs, why should the government be relieved, any more than a private individual ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the minister keep a man on every range ? You get back to the difficulty with respect to the smaller ranges. Surely you are not going to make a law which will be against the interest of the people outside the large cities. If the people of a district, after going down deep into their pockets to pay for a swell range at Toronto or Ottawa wish to go deeper and provide a range for their own district, why should the government assume responsibility for one and not for the other ? Let all the ranges be treated in the same way, so long as they are in accordance with the government's regulations, whether they are built by the people of Canada as a whole or are provided by the contributions of the boys themselves. Of course, you have to observe the proper precautions,—fly your danger flag, see that all is clear beyond and so on. Why should not a man injured on one of our smaller ranges be just as eligible for damages to be paid by the government as one who is poking around one of the swell ranges near the big cities ?

Mr. TISDALE. I understand that the hon. minister is not objecting to the idea of the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) but that he wants to go a little further than that hon. gentleman. The Minister of Justice, I understand, suggested that the government should be responsible even if persons use the range without leave. He makes this suggestion as I understand, on the ground that the government should be, as an individual is, responsible. But, it seems to me, he is carrying the government's responsibility further than that of an individual is carried. I do not understand that an individual is responsible—unless the case is covered by a special statute—for what a person may do on his property without his consent. In this case, I understand, the minister is ready to make the government responsible, in relation to the ranges mentioned by the hon. member for Victoria, (Mr. Sam. Hughes) even for people who would be illegally and improperly upon them.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The great rifle ranges in Canada are under the charge of caretakers, and everything is under lock and key. They are administered in the most careful way, and under such conditions that it is not to be supposed that injury can result to any one. It is only in the case of the smaller ranges that that could arise, and I am afraid that this legislation would have a very wide application.

Mr. BOURASSA. It is important to consider the interest of the militia ; but it is important also to consider the men who work on their own property and who earn their living without expense to or protection from the government. Assistance is given to rifle ranges for the benefit of the militia——

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. For the benefit of Canada.

Mr. BOURASSA. I agree with the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) in saying that we should offer every regimental division the right and advantage of having a rifle range without being obliged to go to one of the great ranges near the large cities. I agree also that the protection given to the public and to the militiamen should apply to the small as well as to the large ranges. We should not be stopped by the idea that damages may be incurred by the Crown through the use of a small range any more than through the use of a large one. The farmers who live near a small range have the same right to the protection of their lives as those who live near the large ranges. We spend millions every year on the militia. It may be for the benefit of the country. Some people say it is not so much for the benefit of the country as we are apt to think, but that is a question entirely aside and need not be discussed here. The point I want to make is that as the government, or parliament, provides rifle ranges for the militia and the rifle clubs, it is clearly the duty of the government to take such precautions relating to these rifle ranges, whether small or great, whether near Montreal or near Woodstock or anywhere else, so that they may not be used by any people other than those for whose use they are designed, endangering the lives of persons in the vicinity.

Let the government authorize the organization of these rifle ranges, but take proper precautions to see that they are not used to the damage of people who live in the vicinity. Therefore I think the amendment should remain as it is. I cannot consent to any change that would have the effect of leaving people who are residing near those ranges liable to injury or death without the right of compensation. Of course my amendment only applies to those ranges that are under the control of the government, and for which the government ought to be responsible when they are used improperly. Whether these ranges are the property of the government or are authorized or controlled by the government, the government should be held morally responsible for their use. Of course I could not consent to strike out the clause of negligence. As the member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) has said, it would be absurd not to make any reservation on account of negligence. But as respects injury to spectators, spectators have no business to be there, they are not in the position of people who live in the neighbourhood on their own property, they are not in the position of militiamen who go there to practice and perform their duty. Therefore there should be no compensation to spectators except such compensation as they have a right to ask for under the common law from a party that injures them. I wish to remind the hon. member for South Norfolk that spectators are in a different position from the class of people I want to protect. These latter are far away from the rifle ranges and are at work on their own property. Larose was ploughing on his land, and was not in a position to know who hurt him.

Mr. TISDALE. Nobody is objecting to such persons being protected.

Mr. BOURASSA. The spectator has no business to be there, therefore he must run his own risk. Besides, he has means of making evidence as to who injured him. But I am not adverse to the suggestion of the hon. member for Haldimand that this amendment should apply to militiamen, that matter I leave to the minister to settle with his own friends. But in respect to wounds or deaths arising from the use of the rifle ranges, whether under regulation or not, I cannot make any concession, and if forced upon me, I must protest in the name of peaceful persons who have a right to protection.

Mr. TALBOT. I do not know as I quite understand the amendment of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). Suppose the case of a small range owned by a rifle club and an outsider goes there as a private individual, upon invitation it may be, and takes part in the practice. Does the member for Labelle mean to say that the government should be held responsible for the injury if it comes from a bullet fired by that private individual ?

Mr. BOURASSA. No. As the Minister of Justice explained, my amendment refers only to such rifle ranges as are organized under section 68, under which the government may provide a rifle range at the headquarters of every regimental division.

Mr. TALBOT. I am supposing the case of a private range such as was mentioned by the member for Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes).

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No. I had in mind a range accepted by the government, adopted and inspected by the government.

Mr. TALBOT. I assume it is under the control of the government. But suppose a case of negligence on the part of the department where the individual might go there of his own accord, a private individual who might go there as a marker, running his own risk. If he is injured or killed, does the member for Labelle mean to hold the government responsible ? I do not think that is right.

Mr. MONK. I think it is a question of control. I do not quite agree with the member for Labelle. What he intends, I presume, is to make applicable to the government the rules which apply to individuals, and from which the government are exempt under that judgment of the Supreme Court. If the government does not control a range, why should it be responsible for accidents that happen there ? If the government approves of a range and subsidizes it, but does not control it, is not in charge of it, if it is not government property, why should the government be liable for accidents happening on that range ? It seems to me the liability of the government should be restricted to those ranges which it controls, of which it is the proprietor, as it were. But to say that because the government has approved of a range and has even subsidized it, though the range is not under its immediate control, when the government has no keeper there and has no officers to supervise it, why should the government be responsible in that case ?

Mr. BOURASSA. The amendment which I move refers only to ranges that are under the control of the government, because the government has a right to stop the general traffic around them, to close roads, and so forth. This will apply only to such ranges, and I think even the member for Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) will agree with me that it should apply to everybody else, because if the government retains control over such ranges as are reached by my amendment——

Mr. MONK. Are these ranges referred to by the member for Victoria continually under the control of the government ?

Mr. BOURASSA. Certainly, there is no dispute about that.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I know if we kill a cow the government is liable if the shooting is done at a regularly organized rifle range, and when we shoot a man, why should not the government be held responsible likewise ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think I am beginning to understand the amendment of the hon. member for Labelle. I think he refers to the rifle ranges owned and controlled by the government, and that the liability of the government with respect to accidents arising from them would be the same as the liability of a private individual who owned and controlled a private property.

Mr. TISDALE. If we confined the effect of the amendment to that extent, very well, but unfortunately some of the suggestions made go a great deal further than that.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There is another matter respecting these rifle ranges which it is just as well to mention now. The county I have the honour to represent is a flat country, and it is absolutely impossible to get safe and satisfactory ranges there. Where you have a good big hill to fire into it is perfectly safe. But in a flat country where you have two or three miles of farm houses in the rear it is dangerous. I do not know more than two or three places in the whole county to which I refer where you will not have farm houses in line with the range fire. I am speaking of the vicinity of Lindsay, the headquarters of the regiment. I would suggest to the hon. minister, while I do not want to throw a damper on long range rifle shooting, the establishment at company headquarters of miniature rifle ranges where men could get all the necessary training in shooting. The men from Algoma at the Ottawa ranges, and the Parry Sound men at Niagara gave a perfectly marvellous performance in shooting. These men were accustomed to the sporting rifle and to shooting at 300 or 400 yards. At the long rifle ranges they carried everything before them. At company headquarters miniature rifle ranges of not less than 100 yards would give the men all the sport and training necessary to make them good shots. Every old rifle man knows that he learned his shooting in the olden days with the muzzle loading rifle using caps or candles. The main thing is to learn to sight the rifle and pull the trigger. You can learn that at the miniature range. You can take it into your back yard or into your barn and the boys can have lots of amusement. I suggest that the hon. minister should take this matter into his serious consideration.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I take it that this matter has been fairly well threshed out with the one exception of the point which I raised. This amendment reads as follows :

> His Majesty shall be liable to make compensation for the death of any person, or for any injury to the person caused by a bullet wound.

etc., and then it proceeds to give some exceptions to the cases in which His Majesty shall be obliged to make compensation. Among these exceptions we have the case of a man who goes upon the rifle range—

> For the purpose of taking part in, or in some official or other capacity in connection with the shooting.

Mr. TISDALE. Everybody agreed that that should be struck out.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I would suggest that we strike out of the proposed amendment these words : 'For the purpose of taking part in, or in some official or other capacity in connection with, or.' Then the amendment will read as follows :

> Provided that there shall be no claim to compensation where the death or personal injury was due to negligence on the part of the person killed or injured, or where such person, at the time the death or injury was sustained, was at the rifle range as a spectator of the shooting.

Mr. TISDALE. I understand the hon. minister is going to redraft the clause.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I understood we were going to pass this clause now. I do not want it passed as it is.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We will allow it to stand for the present.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 69—shooting privileges—

Mr. TISDALE. What is the particular meaning of that section ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is to enable the government to acquire privileges without actually buying.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The word 'only' belongs to the words 'shooting privileges ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

On section 71,

The Governor in Council may make regulations for the management of existing rifle associations and clubs, and those hereafter formed ; for prescribing the constitution, objects and duties of such associations and clubs, and the conducting of their business and rifle meetings, and for furnishing rifles and ammunition for the training and practice of persons, whether they are, or are not, members of the militia ; and, in case of officers, whenever exercising any of the powers, functions, command or privileges of their military rank, the commanding officer for the time being and also the adjutant or acting adjutant shall at all times be subject to military law.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN moved an amendment to strike out the last five lines of the section.

Mr. TISDALE. What is the object of striking out these words ? That is the old law is it not ?

Sir FREDRICK BORDEN. These words are not in the old law.

Mr. TISDALE. Are these five lines added ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, they are new but they were thought to be undesirable.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 72,

In case of emergency the members of rifle associations and clubs shall become members of the militia and shall be under the direction and instructions of the district officer commanding ; and so long as the emergency exists, and until lawfully discharged all members of such associations and clubs shall remain members of the militia, and shall be subject to drill, training and discipline to the same extent as other members thereof.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN moved:

That the word 'command' be substituted for the words 'direction and instructions' in the third line.

Mr. TISDALE. What is the object of that ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Members of the rifle associations are all under the obligation, at the time the associations are formed, that in a time of emergency they will be prepared to serve in the militia of this country, and we place them under the command of the District Officer of the District in order to utilize their services.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 74,

All cadet corps shall be subject to the authority and under the orders of the district officer commanding.

Mr. TISDALE. Does that mean that the General Officer Commanding could take them away from school ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He would have to act under the regulations which are carefully drawn in the public interest, and laid before parliament.

On section 77,

The Governor in Council may place the militia, or any part thereof, on active service anywhere in Canada and also beyond Canada, for the defence thereof at any time when it appears advisable so to do by reason of emergency.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I move that the section be amended by adding the following as a sub-clause :

In time of war when the militia is called out for active service to serve conjointly with His Majesty's regular forces, His Majesty may place in command thereof a senior general officer of His regular army.

Mr. BOURASSA. I regret that my hon. friend from King's (Mr. Fowler) is not here, because this is the clause under which he wished to restrict the power of the Canadian government. I may say that the clause in this Bill is a great improvement on the old one because it is more restrictive but at the same time it is not perfect. I agree with the minister that we should not restrict the power of the government in case of an emergency, but it seems to me that the control of parliament should come in at a certain period, so that the government cannot carry on war as long as they please without consulting parliament.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They cannot carry on war without money, and they would have to get money from parliament.

Mr. BOURASSA. Oh, we have seen the government carry on war for two months without money and without the authorization of parliament. There should be a provision that parliament would be called within a certain time limit.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The suggestion I made yesterday was that when the militia was embodied, parliament should be convened within ten days as is provided for in the English law.

Mr. BOURASSA. Before the section is carried I would like to know if the hon. minister is prepared to insert a clause providing that in case the government calls out the militia for war, parliament will be called ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would not undertake to do that without first consulting the Prime Minister.

Mr. BOURASSA. Would the minister, then, let this clause stand ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That question does not at all affect this clause.

Mr. BOURASSA. Parliament seems to be entirely disregarded in this matter. I am ready to give large powers to the government for the defence of Canada, provided parliament is to have a word to say with regard to footing the bill and approving or disapproving of the action of the government.

Mr. TISDALE. The only power given to the government is to put the militia on active service. They cannot get any supplies without the action of parliament. That has always been the law, and I do not think it is different in any country in the world. In cases of emergency the militia may have to be called out immediately, but you cannot get parliament together in five minutes. Parliament must be called to vote the supplies, and if the supplies are not voted, what is the use of having a militia ? The power of the government to call out the militia suddenly is one of the greatest advantages to the country. Suppose a tremendous riot or something of that kind occurs, the government can call them all out for active service at once. If the propriety of the government's action is disputed, parliament can deal with it and may refuse to vote the supplies. That has always been the law.

Mr. BOURASSA. The hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) is not replying to my argument at all. Yesterday I maintained that the power to call out the militia for active service in case of emergency without having to wait the necessary time to call parliament, should be left in the hands of the government. I agree with my hon. friend on that point ; but I say there should be a limitation to the arbitrary will of the government to wait for the sanction of parliament. When the hon. member for South Norfolk says that the government would not go on without parliamentary sanction, I reply that that was done five years ago. More than that, it was not even the active militia who were called out ; but a special military corps was organized, and money for the purpose was taken from the treasury of Canada without the consent of parliament. This went on for two months. In all the other British possessions where parliament was not in session, the governments refused to organize contingents without calling parliament. It was only in Canada that it was done. In England, where the sovereign has the right, on the advice of the government, to declare war, they immediately call parliament. They would not dare to spend a pound on armaments without calling parliament. I admit that an emergency might arise when the government should have the power to call out the militia immediately. I do not dispute that ; but suppose an occasion should arise on which Canada would be called upon to organize its militia and send a large portion of it outside of Canada, when in the judgment of a large number of the people and parliament of Canada it would be to the disadvantage of the country to have so large a number of troops sent out, parliament should be the final judge of that question, and the government should call parliament to deal with the matter. It might be that a weak government, not wishing to have public discussion on its action, would delay calling parliament together as long as possible, and would go on issuing money under warrants. It has been done for two months on one occasion, and why might it not be done for six months on another occasion ? A number of gentlemen who did not agree with me on the general principle of the Boer war, agreed with me that it was the duty of the government to summon parliament as early as possible after an emergency of this kind.

Mr. TISDALE. If the hon. gentleman will read the wording of the clause, he will see that the power of the government is very limited. They can only order the militia outside of Canada for the defence of Canada. They could not send it to a war like the Boer war. My hon. friend has a bogey that keeps him awake. He is so afraid that we shall become a military country that he is afraid to entrust the government, which he has never voted against, with this authority. If we are to have a militia force, we must have the means of putting it into the field in case of emergency.

Mr. BOURASSA. My hon. friend is putting in my mouth words which I never uttered. I said the very opposite.

Mr. TISDALE. I understood the hon. gentleman objected to giving the authority to the Governor in Council or to any one except parliament.

Mr. BOURASSA. Not at all. I said the opposite. I said I wanted the Governor in Council to keep that power ; but I wanted them to summon parliament as soon as possible to sanction their action. That is the suggestion made by the hon. member for North Victoria and by the hon. member for King's.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at Three o'clock.

Mr. BOURASSA. Before we proceed to another clause, I wish to say that if there is to be a new clause making it obligatory on the government to call parliament within a fixed delay, after having made use of the power granted under clause 77, then I shall not propose any amendment. But if there be no such new clause, I wish to have it understood that I shall be at liberty to move some amendment to clause 77.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is agreed to.

Mr. MACLEAN. Am I to understand that clause 77, as it now stands, limits the Canadian militia in their service outside of Canada to the defence of Canada ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. MACLEAN. Not for the defence of the empire ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. MACLEAN. Is this clause the same as the clause in the old Act ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not precisely.

Mr. MACLEAN. What was the clause under which the government sent out Canadian troops to South Africa ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They volunteered for service and were sent out as imperial troops under a special agreement with the imperial government, partly paid by the British and partly by this government, and the Militia Department organized those volunteers. They did not come under the Militia Act at all.

Mr. MACLEAN. Then the active militia of Canada, under this proposed Act, could not be sent outside this country by the government to take part in the defence of the empire, except under a special contract as in the case of the troops sent to South Africa.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I presume the hon. member for Labelle had no desire to be unfair to the hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) but he sought to leave the impression that the hon. member for King's objected to troops going outside of Canada or taking part in the defence of the empire. What my hon. friend from King's wanted was some limitation to be placed upon the power of the Governor in Council with regard to the sending out of troops. I am satisfied that my hon. friend is prepared to have the troops go anywhere within or outside the British empire for the defence of the empire, but before the militia would be called out in this country and placed at the disposal of the government, he wished parliament to be called together at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. BOURASSA. I do not wish to attribute anything to the hon. member for King's other than what he said. Here is what he said :

> Whether for the defence of Canada or not, the militia of Canada should not be sent out of Canada without the authority of parliament. There can be no emergency arise under which parliament cannot be called together ; war does not spring up in a day or night. If the country were in danger of war, it would be an easy matter to call parliament, and then parliament could decide if it is necessary to send our militia outside of Canada. It is a different matter altogether about permitting volunteers to serve in any portion of the empire.

That is the distinction which the minister has just made. Troops were enrolled specially to go and serve in South Africa, but what is meant by clause 77 is that our militia cannot be sent outside of Canada except for the defence of Canada. If, however, there should be an imperial war in which Canadians want to serve, there is nothing to prevent their enlisting into the imperial service.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. My hon. friend from King's did not raise that point. He is perfectly in accord with the idea that troops should go outside this country. There is nothing to hinder their going as volunteers outside to fight for the British empire, but if the militia of Canada should be called out by the Canadian government and the imperial authorities should choose to send out a call in this country for volunteers to put down these gentlemen, the allegiance of our militia would be to the British empire rather than to any power in Canada.

Mr. GOURLEY. There is a distinct change in the Act, whether for good reason or bad. It is not a change of form or words, but a distinct change of public policy in connection with the militia, and therefore we should have the full and particular reasons for such a change. Canada is a part of the British empire, and the militia of this country is a part of the defensive force of the British empire, and ought to be used, in the case of emergency, in India, Australia, or Africa or wherever the necessity may arise.

The defence of Canada might be required to be fought out in Africa, and, to keep the militia in Canada, would be simply a betrayal of the empire ; for the empire might be beaten in Africa, or India, and Canada fall with the empire, without a blow being struck upon the soil of this Dominion. Any limitation of the power to send the militia abroad by a provision that this is to be done only in the case of emergency, weakens our power of defending Canada ; and, at this stage of imperial thought, and development, to have a narrow, and petty doctrine like this, engrafted upon the militia legislation of this Canada, is a reversal of the course of our national progress. When the public man of twenty-five or thirty years ago could engraft on the militia system of this country a broader and more generous policy, it strikes me that we should stand by the position they took, if we cannot improve it. I have under my hand the section of the Act of 1878. Comparing it with the present section, we can see that this is no meaningless change but, that there must have been design in the drafting. It is a decided change of policy, and one of the most serious character. The section of the old Bill was in these terms :

> Her Majesty may call out the militia, or any part thereof, for active service, either within or without Canada, at any time when it appears advisable so to do by reason of war, invasion or insurrection, or danger of any of them.

So the militia could be called out wherever there was war, invasion or insurrection or danger of any of them—no matter where, the militia were bound to go. And, surely, that is wise. What is the use of putting the militia under the command of a general officer in time of war, unless he is able to order them to the point of danger, whether inside or outside of Canada. There is, a distinct change in this proposed section, which reads :

> 77. The Governor in Council may place the militia, or any part thereof, on active service anywhere in Canada and also beyond Canada, for the defence thereof, at any time when it appears advisable so to do by reason of emergency.

We do not want the troops sent outside of Canada for the defence of Canada only, but, if necessary, for the defence of the empire, which may, or may not be, directly, the defence of Canada. The defence of India or of South Africa may be, ex necessitate, the defence of Canada. I must draw the attention of our friends opposite, and of hon. gentlemen on this side, to the extraordinary change of policy indicated by these words, incorporating a narrow doctrine that the Canadian militia and troops are to be used only in Canada for the defence of Canada—let the empire go to smash, but keep our troops at home. This is simply closing our eyes to the fact that the empire may be broken, and go to pieces without making necessary any direct defence of Canada, and yet, in that ruin, our interests will be completely sacrificed. We want the old section to stand, as it has stood on the statute-book for thirty years, that the militia are to be used wherever the necessities of the empire demand, whether in Canada or out of it. This is the most vital section in this Act ; the rest are merely subsidiary.

Mr. MACLEAN. Canada either is, or is not a part of the British empire. If the pact between us and the empire is to mean that the Canadian militia is only to be used for the defence of Canada, are we to expect, the army of England will be used to assist in the defence of Canada only to the extent that our forces shall go to their assistance ? That is how the arrangement works out as proposed in this section. Now, that is not an equitable arrangement and it is a decided change in the policy that has been accepted up to this time. To my mind, this is the most important thing that has happened yet in connection with the imperial relation—that this change should take place without any justification being given for it. I would like the minister to explain why this change in policy has taken place and what the object of it is.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There has been no change in policy. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) will take the trouble to look at former Militia Acts and the discussion on Militia Bills he will find that the intention always has been, whether expressed or not—in some of the Acts it has been distinctly expressed and in far more stringent terms than in the Bill now before the committee—that the militia of Canada or of the old provinces before the Dominion existed, should be only called upon to serve within the territory of those provinces or of the Dominion. That is the intention. What is the fact as to Great Britain ? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) talks about the question of imperial defence. Is he aware that the British militia can only be called upon to serve on the soil of the British islands ? That is the law.

Mr. MACLEAN. But this provides also for our regular force.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is the idea in the organization of any militia force —it is a home force for home service. When the troops were sent from Canada to South Africa, as I have said, it was not considered that the Militia Act which is now in existence, and the important clause of which in this connection the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) has quoted, was sufficient to justify the organization of a militia force to be sent to South Africa ; consequently, volunteers were called for and the force was organized purely as a voluntary service, and one in no way whatever connected with the militia law.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That was an imperial force.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It was a volunteer force.

Mr. GOURLEY. With the hon. minister's permission, I would ask him a question. If there is no change of policy will he allow the old section to stand ? It is far better worded than this new one.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It seems to me that we have made clear in this section exactly what is understood as the object of a militia force in every country. In the mother country and in every province of this Dominion prior to confederation, this has been the rule. We are always able to meet times of stress and emergency. If it becomes necessary to send troops to assist the empire at distant points, we always have the means at hand of doing so. Parliament can be called and a special force organized, or the same thing can be repeated that was done before—volunteers can offer their services and those services can be availed of. I think it is very much better to leave the section as it is.

Mr. DANIEL. I think the matter is one, perhaps, of some importance. My own views rather coincide with those expressed by the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley). The Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) speaks of the English militia as a force whose services are confined to the British Islands. I think he must have forgotten that a number of militia regiments were sent out to South Africa as a part of the regular forces of Great Britain.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They volunteered for that service.

Mr. DANIEL. Possibly ; I will not say whether they did or not.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Well, I know.

Mr. DANIEL. They were sent, they went, anyway. Now, with regard to our militia force, it is the only military force we have, it is our regular army, we have no other army at all. In that respect the militia force of Canada occupies a position different from that of the old country, as distinguished from its regular standing army ; and in making regulations for our militia force, its command, where it should be sent, and so forth, I think we should remember that it is our regular army, part of it is a standing army. The permanent corps is the only force of militia which is on service constantly, and in that way it might be termed our standing force. But it is simply a militia and nothing else in the world ; and our other active militia is just as much a militia as that is, because, by order from the proper authority, any corps we have in Canada could be put on active and permanent service. I quite concur with the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) in regard to the wording of the section of the old Act and the wording of this ; and unless the minister gives us some stronger reasons for the change than he has given, I think it would be better to let the old section stand instead of adopting this new one.

Mr. GOURLEY. I want to emphasize the point made by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel). The English people have a regular army which may be sent all over the world for the defence of the empire In the absence of that army, the country is destitute of defence except by the militia, and the militia may be brought in as a home force, when the whole regular army could be sent abroad for the defence of the empire. Consequently, there is no parallel whatever with our own case. If this government will undertake to raise a regular army, two or three thousand men, and be prepared to send them abroad for the defence of the empire, I will waive my objection to the militia leaving this country. But, as the member for St. John has pointed out, it is the only militia force we have, and by this section we say we will not lend the only force we have in Canada to the service of the empire. It strikes me that at this time of day, when the empire is so vital to us, when we have infinitely more to expect from the empire than the empire has to expect from us—because to-day, if it were not for the opportunities of foreign trade which the empire offers to Canada, we would be desolate indeed—we need especially to foster a good feeling, a feeling of mutual help throughout the empire, and we cannot foster that better than by making our militia force subject to be used in every part of the empire. I urge this upon the minister, because I am persuaded the minister will ruin the militia if he permits this feeling to get abroad that we have changed our policy. I have no doubt that somebody has had a subtle influence in making this change. There has been a deliberate change of policy in changing the language of these two sections, there is no doubt about that. I am too much accustomed to scanning closely this language not to see the distinctions that are made. Consequently, the minister is going to create a strong feeling throughout the country, and I do not wish to see our militia made the subject of political feeling. Let us stand by the militia all over the country. But I must say that when that section is read and understood, it will arouse a most uncanny kind of feeling all over Canada. It is not a proper section to be introduced into a Canadian statute, or a statute of any country belonging to the British empire, to say that our poor contribution to the empire shall not be used except within the boundaries of Canada, and the empire outside can go to smash. I do not like that ; it is a provision that deserves reprobation at the hands of this House of Commons. The old section is a splendid section, and I say let it stand.

Mr. MACLEAN. I would ask the minister if it is not the case that under the old section of the law as it now stands the militia of Canada could be used for the defence of the empire and sent out of this country for that purpose ? But under the proposed law that is strictly prohibited.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No. I am advised, and was advised at the time of the South African trouble, for instance, that under the law we could not do that.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Could not do what ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That we could not send the militia to South Africa for service ; under the law we were not able to do so. The present law has been changed, as I say, in conformity with that view, and in sympathy with the idea which, as I said, controls the militia of the mother country and the militia of every one of the colonies of the empire, where you will find precisely the same clause.

Mr. GOURLEY. All I can say is that the advice given to the Minister of Militia does not comport with the law as it stood at that time. The Minister of Militia refers to the old debates that took place when the Militia Act was passed. I am not bound by those debates. At that time men may have had a hard time to get this section passed, and language may have been used, as the Minister of Justice said yesterday, to conceal the thoughts that were in the minds of the people who were carrying this Act through. I say that under this clause the militia could be sent abroad at any time and anywhere that the emergencies of the empire required, and that is as it should be. I can easily understand that the strong and broad men who drew this Act, for it was drawn in the year after confederation, when the fathers of confederation, the big men of Canada, were here—I can easily understand that at that time these men desired to engraft that policy in the Act, and perhaps they were surrounded by little people who were not in sympathy with the measure, and consequently they may have used words to conceal their thoughts, and they were wise enough to know that if they got that section passed the power was vested in the Crown and government of Canada to send the militia anywhere. Not only so, but I say with all deference to the person who advised the Minister of Militia, that it was not legal advice, and if it were, I would have thought that the Minister of Justice would have taken the other horn of the dilemma. At the time of the South African war there was a doubt with reference to the power of this country to send our militia abroad. Let us wipe away that doubt, and let the government have power to send the militia abroad. Let us clear up the doubt on the other side, and make it clear that the militia of this country, upon which we have spent millions of dollars, may be used in the defence of the empire. Now, I ask the minister, if he wants his militia force to stand well with the country, to allow that old section to stand; then if you have not the power, if the Minister of Justice advises you that you have not the power, no harm will be done. But Ministers of Justice change, as archbishops change, and archbishops very often have different policies in their dioceses, and a Minister of Justice could be given a different advice to that given to the present Minister of Justice.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask what the provisions of the English Act are with regard to the summoning of parliament when the militia are called out for active service? Some reference has been made to that.

Sir F. W. BORDEN.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. When they are 'embodied,' that is the official term.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It may be of use for us to have the provision submitted to the committee.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In anticipation of the suggestion coming from the hon. leader of the opposition I may say that during the adjournment, I, myself, in the few moments at my disposal, attempted to find the provision, but since that I have asked one of the officials in my department to look into this matter and get the clause so as to assist us in deciding what action we ought to take.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I think the clause is contained in this book. Just wait a moment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) has called my attention to a provision in the Militia Act, 1882, of the parliament of Great Britain and Ireland being chapter 49 of the statutes 45-46 Victoria sections 18, 19:

(1.) In case of imminent national danger or of great emergency it shall be lawful for Her Majesty in Council by proclamation (the occasion being first communicated to parliament, if parliament be then sitting, or declared in Council, and notified by the proclamation, if parliament be not sitting) to order the militia to be embodied.

I suppose that practically corresponds to calling out our entire militia force for active service.

(2.) It shall be lawful for Her Majesty by any such proclamation to order a Secretary of State from time to time to give, and when given to revoke or vary, such directions as may seem necessary or proper for embodying all or any part of the militia.

(3.) Every such proclamation and the directions given in pursuance thereof shall be obeyed as if enacted in this Act, and where such directions for the time being direct the embodiment of any part of the militia, every officer and man belonging to that part shall attend at the place and time fixed by those directions, and at and after that time shall be deemed to be embodied; and such officers and men are in this Act referred to as embodied, or as the embodied part or parts of the militia.

Then section 19 reads as follows:

Whenever Her Majesty orders the militia to be embodied, if parliament be then separated by such adjournment or prorogation as will not expire within ten days, a proclamation shall be issued for the meeting of parliament within ten days, and parliament shall accordingly meet and sit upon the day appointed by such proclamation, and shall continue to sit and act in like manner as if it had stood adjourned or prorogued for the same day.

Perhaps there are some considerations in connection with the section which we have been debating that might make it desirable for the government to allow it to stand so as to consider that provision. There seems to be the same reason for the provision as there is in Great Britain. Of course we have a separate system from theirs. They have a large standing army; we have practically no standing army. Speaking offhand and without much consideration of the subject, I would think that while possibly we may not require a provision of that kind in respect to calling out the militia in this country, it would be desirable to have it in respect of calling out the militia for service outside of Canada.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Or for war?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It could only be called out for service outside of Canada in case of war.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. At the moment when my hon friend the leader of the opposition rose, I received a memorandum which gives me the different statutes under which this summons to parliament is issued.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There may be a later statute than that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, that is the consolidation. I find that formerly the period was 14 days during which parliament had to be summoned and that by the Consolidation Act of 1882 it was reduced to ten days. I think I should have an opportunity to look through the different Acts and see how far it may be necessary to adapt the provisions of the Militia Act of Great Britain to the Militia Act of Canada. We may be required to introduce a new clause. I think there is no reason why this clause should not go through with the understanding that a general clause which may be found proper to meet the difficulty shall be introduced into the Bill before it is finally disposed of.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If this clause is proposed to be pressed at the present time, I desire to say I am not quite clear as to what the exact meaning of the proposed amendment is. It reads as follows:

> In time of war when the militia is called out for active service to serve conjointly with His Majesty's regular forces, His Majesty may place in command thereof a senior general officer of his regular army who shall be senior in rank to the General Officer Commanding the militia.

There may be some doubt as to what is meant by the words 'serving conjointly with His Majesty's forces.' Does that phrase mean serving conjointly in Canada or serving conjointly in a general sense in the performance of duties connected with the defence of the empire?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It means in Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would think that possibly even if they were not serving conjointly in the sense in which the hon. Minister of Militia speaks, there might be power given to His Majesty to put an experienced officer in command in time of war.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think the idea is simply this: Assuming for the sake of argument that Canada is assisting the mother country in a war somewhere else, outside of Canada, and not for the protection of Canada, when the Canadian troops would simply be going to assist the imperial army and there would be no question about the control of the commanding officer of the imperial army. But, a war might occur, an invasion might be attempted of Canada under which circumstances a large majority of the troops engaged would be Canadian troops. Still, there would be a certain proportion of imperial troops, and in view of the fact that imperial commanding officers have had greater experience it was thought proper that in a war in which Canada would be engaged and in which the imperial army would be assisting, the command should be placed in the hands of an imperial officer. That is the intention.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. All I am suggesting is that perhaps the power might be extended so as to apply to a case even where they are not serving conjointly. Suppose that we had in Canada 100 regular troops stationed at Halifax and that the Canadian militia was called out for active service to the extent of 10,000 or 15,000; according to the definition of the hon. minister it would be within the scope of this statute to appoint a general officer, but would not exactly the same reason prevail if you did not have any imperial troops in Canada?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We have another clause under which an imperial officer can be appointed at any time. We are not giving up the authority to appoint a general officer to command.

Mr. TISDALE. You did not change that clause?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. TISDALE. I thought you were going to strike that out and substitute a council.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This is one of the results of my attendance at the defence committee when that question was discussed and it was agreed that this special clause would be desirable.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If we have power outside of this clause, what is the object of this amendment?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The object is that in the event of the militia serving with imperial troops we shall be under the obligation to have an imperial officer commanding. Otherwise it would be open to the Canadian government to appoint an imperial officer, or a Canadian officer as they chose.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the militia of Canada should be engaged in the defence of this country without the assistance of any imperial troops, it would be quite possible to appoint a general officer of experience to command the militia although no regular troops would be associated with them.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Quite so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Apart from that there is the power conferred upon His Majesty when regular troops are engaged in this country conjointly with the Canadian militia, to appoint a general officer to command the whole force.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, from the imperial army.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does not the military council do away with the General Officer Commanding?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Oh, no. We could not do without the power to appoint a General Officer Commanding; that still remains in the Bill.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The organ of the new war lord says:

> It is a fair prediction that ere the Minister of Militia has completed his list of reforms in that department, the practice of bringing General Officers Commanding from the British army to command the Canadian militia will be as dead as the family compact.

It is evidently the intention of the military boss of the administration that there should be no imperial officers brought to Canada.

Mr. GOURLEY. It is quite clear that the old law contemplated that in case of war the militia of Canada should become imperial troops and be under imperial officers. The whole purpose of the old law seems to be to make the militia of Canada serviceable to the empire at any point wherever their services were required. The minister says that this Bill introduces no change of policy, and if that is so why not retain the old law so that we may be sure of it?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the relationship that now exists between the Canadian militia and the imperial troops in time of war, be in the slightest altered by the passage of this Act?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not in the slightest.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It is held by some good heads that there would be a difference in the relationship existing between the two.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. OSLER. What is the meaning of the words 'for the defence of Canada?'

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Suppose that Canada were invaded it might be the very best means of defence to immediately send an army into foreign territory.

Mr. OSLER. Quite so, but is not the existing law better and more definite; which says:

> Her Majesty may call out the militia, or any part thereof, for active service either within or without Canada, at any time that it appears advisable to do so, by reason of war, &c.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I think there is no question as to the right of the government to send troops anywhere for the defence of the empire. If Canada wished her troops to take part with the imperial troops anywhere else than in Canada for the immediate defence of the empire, that could be accomplished as was done in England during the South African war, when whole regiments of English militia enrolled only to serve in the British Isles, volunteered for service in South Africa.

Amendment agreed to.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 78—period of service in time of war—

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I wish to add the following words: 'provided however that the provisions of this section shall not apply to the Permanent Force.' When we were considering the Bill in committee some time ago, the hon. leader of the opposition called my attention to the fact that, as the Permanent Force is a part of the militia, there would likely be confusion in two or three clauses unless the Permanent Force were expressly referred to. This is one of the clauses.

Mr. DANIEL. The minister seems to take for granted that on all occasions on which the militia would require to be called out, they would finish their work in about eighteen months at the outside. It seems to me that the authorities should have a little longer hold on the soldiers.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This is the old law.

Mr. TISDALE. This is a fair provision, because it must be remembered that these men are volunteers. Under other provisions of the Act, in case men are needed, we can get as many as we want; but the idea is that those who volunteer first shall be compelled to serve only for one year, after which others may be substituted. It is all very well to talk about putting on regulations; but the great difficulty in this country, as in every other, is to get men to volunteer, and we have to be careful in that respect. This has been the law for a long time.

Amendment agreed to, and section as amended agreed to.

On section 79—Army Act, &c., to apply to active service—

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I propose to insert after the words 'United Kingdom' in the second line the words 'the King's regulations.' In the first draft of the Bill these words were omitted, but the officers in my department advised very strongly that we should continue to use the King's regulations, and I thought the reasons they gave were very strong. These regulations are the result of many years' experience.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I think this is not the same as the old Act. I object most emphatically to placing the officers or men of the militia force of this country under any disability as citizens. This clause makes every officer and man of the militia subject to this superior officer, 'while upon or within any rifle range or any armoury.' Do the words, 'while in the uniform of his corps,' apply to all these clauses, or do they not ? A man might happen to be on a rifle range or in an armoury on civilian business.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That means in uniform.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If it does, all right; but we have to teach the officers and politicians of the country that the officers and men of our militia are not to be subjected to the militarism of Europe or the United States. I believe the United States' regular army system is the most tyrannical in the world. We all know what the military systems of Germany, France and Russia are, with respect to the tyrrany of officers. In England it is bad enough, but England in that respect is free and liberal compared with any other nation in the world. We do not want to engraft on the Canadian militia a system that will put any officer or man under any disability as a citizen. Why should any officer commanding a regiment or a company, when off duty, want to have the slightest control over any man under him ? If he cannot command the respect of his men without having this law at his back, he ought to get out of the force. Of course if he should be on duty or in uniform, the case would be different.

Mr. TISDALE. It is very doubtful if this clause would not apply even while the man was not on duty. We should have it well understood that a man has a right to say anything he pleases to an officer, provided he is not under him or on duty at the time.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Once drill is over, the officer should not have any control over the men under military regulations. It is a disgrace that in Ottawa, Montreal and Toronto our militia officers are afraid to express an opinion. They will tell you, I am only a lieutenant in some tuppeny-ha'-penny regiment——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In the permanent corps of course men cannot express their opinion, but there are officers in our volunteer regiments in the cities and towns who dare not call their souls their own, who dare not express an opinion even on the Militia Act, because they happen to be only a lieutenant or a captain.

Mr. LOGAN. A provisional lieutenant.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No, the provisional fellows talk sometimes.

Mr. FOWLER. Why not strike out the word 'also' and substitute the word 'or' ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Better add a subsection. I know that this has been used by senior officers to make the juniors believe they have control over them. A man who can command respectable men in no other way than this should not wear the uniform.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Will my hon. friend draft a clause ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Under what discipline are the men of the militia while on active service ? For instance, in the case of mutiny, what Act would apply ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Our own regulations supplemented by the imperial regulations wherever ours are found wanting.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not speaking of regulations, but of the Act. In the case I have mentioned, would the English Mutiny Act apply ? That Act is re-enacted from year to year. It is brought into force by this section.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The Army Act is what it is called, and although it is re-enacted every year, that is only a form.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is a little more than a form, because parliament is at liberty not to re-enact it.

On section 83—provision for families of men killed, &c.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I move that this be amended by inserting the words 'On active service' after the word 'killed.'

Mr. DANIEL. Are troops engaged at the rifle range counted as being on active service, drill or training, or on duty ? If a man is wounded while engaged on a rifle range, is he counted as being wounded as being on duty, or not ? For this brings up the broad question we had before us in discussing section 68.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. If my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) will look at the interpretation clause—No. 2—he will find these expressions defined.

Mr. DANIEL. I infer that a man attending at a rifle range is not on duty ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. DANIEL. The interpretation clause defines 'on active service' as applying to those enrolled, enlisted, drafted or warned for service or duty during an emergency, or when he is on duty or when he has been warned for duty in aid of the civil power. That appears to me rather complicated.

Mr. FOWLER. Suppose that an officer is taking a course of equitation and he is killed, is he counted as having been killed on duty ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think not.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It has been ruled that he is not. An officer in Halifax was killed under these circumstances. I always claimed that that officer was killed while on duty.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He was not at the school, but was drilling at his own house.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That does not make any difference. Drilling should not be confined to the school, but if men will take an interest and perfect themselves in drill at their own places—however, we need not discuss the question now.

Mr. WILLIAM ROSS (Victoria). The case referred to is that of Major Maxwell. He was killed by being thrown from his horse. I always thought that something should have been done for his widow. It is well enough to say that the general regulations apply only thus or so, but the case was one in which something should have been done.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) brought up the case and my recollection is that we voted a gratuity.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think not.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I certainly did not notice any item of that kind in any estimates that were voted. I did not know the man or anything about him except what I learned of the circumstances of his death. As I understand the facts, he was attending the military school. Whether he was in barracks or not makes no difference ; he was under military law from the time he entered the school until he would have left it—until he did leave it, for he was in attendance at the time of his death. I have always felt that the claims of his family should have been recognized under the statute.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to me that 'drill or training or on duty' would cover such a case. It does not make any difference whether he gets his meals at barracks or at his own home. If he were on his way to the school his case would come within this section. Of course, if he were taking a ride for exercise that would be another matter. But if he were on his way to or from the school at the time the accident happened, I would think his representatives should have the benefit of this section,—just as a volunteer is held to be under orders from the time he starts for the annual drill until he returns to his home.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I looked into the case very carefully some years ago, but I am not certain whether I recall the facts accurately. I went into the case from a sympathetic point of view, because I was very anxious to take favourable action. My impression is that the report of the District Officer Commanding was that Major Maxwell did not come within the meaning of the section. He was mounting his horse to go for a ride but not to go to the school.

Mr. FOWLER. That is not the case I have in mind, but the case of one who was in attendance upon, including going to or returning from the school of equitation.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That would be different.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 84—provision for men permanently disabled, &c., penalty for false certificate.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN moved that the words 'drill or training or on duty' be inserted after the words 'active service.'

Mr. DANIEL. I notice that, in the interpretation clause, the expression 'on duty' is not interpreted. I take it that it is utterly impossible for one to understand this law without some interpretation of these words. Upon such an interpretation depends the meaning of several sections that we have discussed this afternoon.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is a well understood phrase in military parlance, and I am informed that in the King's regulations the explanation is given. I will look into it however, and if it is thought desirable we may add a phrase explaining it.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 86—Militia not to be quartered in convents.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would suggest that after the word 'females' we include 'and children.' You might come to a home where the man would be away on service, and it would be unfair to force soldiers on his house when his wife might be left at home with children.

Section agreed to.

On section 87—requisitions for transport.

Mr. FOWLER. This only requires persons to place these things at the disposal of the department; I think it ought to give the department the right to take possession of them.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The Crown has that right.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Some time ago I drew the minister's attention to the omission of the words 'horse and wagon' belonging to a farmer, as these things are likely to be called into requisition oftener than railways and steamships.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think section 88 would cover that.

Mr. FOWLER. My point is that the Governor in Council should have authority to take possession of all these things and use them and pay for them.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This part of the Act is copied from the Imperial Statute.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The difficulty seems to be that section 88 goes a little beyond section 87. Section 88 provides that if they are lawfully required and are not furnished, there shall be a penalty imposed; but they must be lawfully required. The two sections do not appear to work exactly on the same lines.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Section 13 goes a little further, it practically authorizes taking possession. The last words of the first paragraph say:

And may also impress any horses, mules, oxen or other animals required for military purposes.

Mr. DANIEL. Section 13 is the one which I suggested to the minister as needing to include the words 'carts and wagons,' and he said he would take it into consideration at the third reading.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Every one knows that wagons and horses are the things that are most frequently commandeered.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This does not seem to me to be exactly intended to meet the case provided for in section 13. Section 13 seems to give the government the right at once to take possession of articles without requiring them to be furnished; section 88 contemplates a requisition, and a failure to comply with the requisition. I hardly think section 13 is in the same line.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. One, I think, refers to a case of emergency, and the other does not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Very likely, but there is the same difficulty that has been pointed out already. Where no emergency exists and where you make a requisition, you are entitled to have that requisition complied with under a penalty upon the person refusing. But the reference to wagons and so forth is in that portion of the statute which provides a penalty; therefore probably section 88 would be inoperative in that regard, because 88 merely provides that any person lawfully required under this Act to do something and who does not do it, shall be subject to a penatly. Then you must look outside 88 for some provision in the statute requiring the person to whom the requisition is directed to provide wagons, carriages and so forth. I mean in so far as these are not enumerated in section 87 or in some other part of the Act as articles which may be lawfully requisitioned, you do not get very much benefit from section 88.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 88 might be required in the event of difficulty occurring as to transporting a company to the annual camp.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think the Minister of Militia understands me. Section 88 provides a penalty, but it says the articles must have been lawfully requisitioned. Therefore we must find in the Act some power lawfully to requisition them.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It would require to be amended to cover that.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN moved:

That the section be amended by inserting in the fourteenth line after the word 'vessel' the words 'wagon, carriage or pack animal.'

Mr. HAGGART. Are not all these things provided for under the English Army Act?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. You bring the English Army Act into effect and, if so why re-enact this?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This is not under the Army Act. It is under the imperial statute governing the army and that is an entirely different thing from the Army Act.

Mr. HAGGART. You only have power to billet under the Army Act.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

Section 93, stricken out.

Section 99—offences and penalties—claiming pay for drill not performed; returning men not duly enrolled; claiming for drill with another corps.

Mr. FOWLER. In the case of mounted corps it might happen that more horses would be claimed for than are really in camp. This section would not seem to include that offence.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think a regulation could be made to cover that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In view of the proposal to largely increase the cavalry corps, if you are making that provision with regard to officers and men, it might be well to include horses.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Surely if an officer made a return representing a man to be present who was not present and received pay for him, it would be a distinct case of false representation, and he would be amenable under the Criminal Code.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. It is not only the case of a man who is not there, but the case of a man who is there and who is enrolled in another corps.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. He cannot be present in two places at the same time unless he is an Irishman or a bird.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. But the regiments do not drill at the same time, and therefore he does not have to be an Irishman.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The Criminal Code would cover any misrepresentation as to the number of horses.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course, these suggestions might be very good arguments for striking out the words 'or claims pay for officers or men not present.' I do not think they are legitimate arguments for refusing to insert the word 'horses.' You should either depend on the criminal law, or if you do not depend on the criminal law, make a special provision here, which should be exhaustive. Is there in the Criminal Code any special punishment provided for false pretenses ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Oh, yes. But there seems to be a provision here for making a man guilty of an indictable offence, but without providing any penalty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I should imagine that these clauses were originally drafted before the Criminal Code was revised. It might be a useful thing to look over all the offences created by this Bill and see to what extent they are already covered by the Criminal Code. Otherwise, you may have confusion by making provision in this statute for matters already covered to a certain extent by the Crimianl Code or the English Army Act.

Section agreed to.

Sections from 100 to 107 agreed to.

On section 108—refusal to attend drill.

Mr. DANIEL. I have in my hand several suggestions sent me by an officer who has had a good deal of experience in the militia. He suggests that at the end of this section the following should be added :

> And the regimental orders of the corps properly issued and promulgated during the time of the annual drill or training shall be sufficient notice to such officers or men to attend.

There will be nothing otherwise in the Act to show what is sufficient notice.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes ; there is section 129, which says :

> Every order made by the commanding officer of any corps of the militia shall be held to be sufficiently notified to all persons whom it concerns, by insertion in some newspaper published in the regimental division in which such corps is situated, or, if there is no such newspaper, then by posting a copy thereof on the door of every place of public worship, or of some other public place, in each company division affected by such order.

Mr. DANIEL. It seems to me that is sufficient.

On section 112,

> Every person who unlawfully disposes of or removes any arms, accoutrements or other articles belonging to the Crown or corps, or who refuses to deliver them up when lawfully required, or has them in his possession, except for lawful cause, the proof of which shall lie upon him, shall incur a penalty of twenty dollars for each offence ; but nothing in this section shall prevent such offender from being indicted and punished for any greater offence, if the facts amount to such greater offence : and such offender may be arrested by order of the justice of the peace before whom the complaint is made, upon affidavit showing that there is reason to believe that such offender is about to leave Canada, carrying with him any such arms, accoutrements or articles.

Mr. DANIEL. My military friend suggests that at the end of that clause we should add the words :

> Or if he have neglected or refused to deliver or return such articles after being properly notified or required so to do.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The clause in the present Bill has been found to work admirably for some thirty or forty years.

Mr. DANIEL. The fact that these regulations have been in existence thirty or forty years without change is, I think, one of the reasons why my friend makes the suggestion he does.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I should be very glad if my hon. friend will send me a copy of the proposed amendment, as we might take it up, if necessary, on the third reading.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It is covered by section 112.

On section 113—refusal to aid the civil power.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In copying this clause some words were omitted, and I simply wish to restore them, making the clause read the same as the clause of the existing Act. I move to insert, after the word 'penalty,' the words 'in an officer, not exceeding one hundred dollars, and if a man.'

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I do not object to the amendment. I presume that the other section referring to the troops called out to aid the civil power will come up to-morrow. I would call the minister's attention to one point now, so that he may think it over. I think it would be in harmony with the spirit of the times and with the wish of the people that there should be a clause providing that when the militia are called out to aid the civil power, the pay of the men shall be at least equal to that which it would be necessary to pay to special constables. These towns, rather than go to the expense of hiring special constables, call out the militia—the poor soldier has to serve them at 50 cents a day.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I suppose we would have to fix the amount.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 116—procedure, recovery of penalties; imprisonment if not paid.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I know that this is the same section as in the existing Act, but, I would draw the attention of the minister to a point which I asked him once before to consider. Is it fair-play to convict a man before one justice of a peace and upon the testimony of one witness?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have not heard of any complaint. The whole thing is obsolete. I never heard of any of these sections being used, but, if it is to be in the law it should be in proper form. I am not a judge or a lawyer, but it seems to me that this section is not just.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The penalties are not very great, and, of course, in many cases of offences similar to this, one justice has jurisdiction. In some cases it requires two justices of the peace, or one judge having the jurisdiction of two justices. I do not see why these proceedings should not be taken before one justice.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And only one witness?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. One witness is as good as a thousand if he is the proper sort.

Mr. DANIEL. Why not require that a man should be taken before the stipendiary magistrate?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There may be none in the locality.

Mr. DANIEL. But, suppose it is in a city where there is a stipendiary magistrate? Can the party complaining take the man before any justice of the peace he comes across?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Speaking for the province of Quebec, a justice of the peace can be used to take bail. The court is presided over by a stipendiary magistrate and, in his absence by his substitute. The ordinary justices do not attend though they have jurisdiction.

Mr. DANIEL. But this would allow one of these soldiers to be taken before a justice of the peace even in a town where there was a stipendiary magistrate.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That would apply to any individual proceeded against under the law.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not know whether the justices of the peace rank the same all over the country, but in some cases I should think this would be rather too great a risk.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think it is sound in this case.

On section 119—procedure—where actions may be brought.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I drew the attention of the minister some months ago to the fact that he speaks of 'district' in Quebec and 'county' in the other provinces, but he pays no attention to the Northwest Territories where they have not counties. I think the term 'judicial district' would do.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would suggest that we add the words 'shall be held and tried in the judicial district where the Act complained of was done.' I will have this considered more fully, and if afterwards it is thought important to make any change we can have it amended.

On section 121—duty of jailor.

Mr. DANIEL. After the word 'commanding' in the fourth line my correspondent suggests that there should be added the words 'or the officer commanding the corps during annual drill or training or on active service. That is, in addition to the district officer commanding.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The words 'or any person authorized' cover that.

On section 126—general provisions—property of corps vested in commanding officer.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN moved:

That the words 'commanding officer of the corps' be stricken out and that the words 'His Majesty' be inserted in lieu thereof.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 129—general provisions—notifying other orders.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN moved:

That the section be amended by inserting after the word 'militia' the words 'other than the Permanent Force'; by striking out the words 'on the door of every place of public worship' and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'in every post office,' and by striking out the word 'of' before the word 'some' and inserting in lieu thereof the word 'in.'

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 132 and 134 stricken out.

On section 135—Acts repealed.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I understand that the present militia law is only to be repealed so far as the land force of the militia is concerned.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, I move to add these words:

In so far as the active and reserve militia—land force is concerned.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended, agreed to.

On section 79,—Active service—Army Act, &c., to apply to active service.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister was good enough to ask me to suggest some amendments to this section, and I have suggested them with the assistance of the leader of the opposition who put them in legal form. These amendments make the section more clear.

Amendments agreed to.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I beg to add as subclause 2:

Officers and men of the permanent force and members of the permanent staff of the militia shall be at all times subject to military law.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The members of the permanent force are subject to military law at all times. I do not like oppressive measures.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The staff of the militia is not.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes, but the minister does not want to try by court martial his deputy minister or his musketry instructor, or any other of the erratic members of his staff.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My hon. friend is afraid of this clause.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No, I am not under pay. It does not concern me personally at all.

Section as amended agreed to.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

On section 35—militia may be called out to suppress riot——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This is the same as the old law, is it not?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, exactly the same.

Section agreed to.

On section 36,

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN moved that the section be struck out and that the following be inserted in lieu thereof:

The district officer commanding, if he is present in the locality and able to act, or if he is not so present, or from sickness or other cause is unable to act, the senior officer of the active militia in any locality, shall call out the same or any portion thereof, as he considers necessary for the purpose of preventing or suppressing any such actual or anticipated riot or disturbance, when thereunto required in writing by the chairman or custos of the quarter sessions of the peace, or by any three justices of the peace, of whom the warden, mayor or other head or acting head of the municipality or county in which such riot or disturbance occurs or is anticipated as aforesaid, shall be one, unless he has declined or is unable to act, which fact shall in that case be set forth in the requisition, and shall not be open to dispute by the officer upon whom the requisition is made: provided always that the permanent force, if, in the opinion of the officer upon whom the requisition is made, a sufficient number of that force is available, is to be employed upon this duty, before resort is had to other militia corps.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This section was drafted by the Department of Justice, the officers of that department having carefully read the criticisms which were made here when this Bill was discussed in committee before.

Mr. DANIEL. I think this clause is a much better one than the old one. Wherever a permanent force is available, I think it should always be brought out, in case of riot or anticipated riot, in preference to the militia of the town. As we all know, the militia might be compelled to act against their own friends and companions. So that I think the provision is a very good one.

Mr. PUTTEE. When this question was discussed on a previous occasion, the general feeling seemed to be that some measures should be taken to prevent the militia being called out before the civil power was exhausted. Our experience in recent years has shown that the militia have been called out before the civil power has been taxed to its full extent. I would like to know whether the Minister of Militia thinks that there is in this clause sufficient safeguard against any such abuse. It was suggested that we should put upon the municipal authorities the duty of engaging special constables, and only calling on the militia when such precaution proved ineffective. Take the case down at Sydney, there is much dispute as to whether there was any necessity for bringing the militia to quell the labour troubles down there, and I believe the municipality has repudiated the action of the justices of the peace who sent the requisition for military aid.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I cannot see very well what greater obstacle you can provide against the unnecessary calling out of the troops than compelling the municipality interested to pay the cost. When the municipalities have to pay, they will be very careful about calling out the militia.

Mr. PUTTEE. Is it not a fact that they generally refuse to pay ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. There are two points that occur to me in connection with this section. In the first line I would suggest that we substitute the word 'district' for the word 'locality,' because no one could tell what 'locality' means in this section.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is the present law.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. But we are trying to amend it. However, if the committee thinks that the language is clear enough, I shall not make a motion. But there is something at the end : 'provided always, that the permanent force is not available and in sufficient numbers for the purpose.' This could be construed to mean that, if in the opinion of the district officer commanding, the permanent force is not available in sufficient numbers, then the non-permanent militia should be called out. To my mind, what is intended is that the non-permanent militia should be called out to supplement the permanent force in case the later is not sufficient in numbers. In the discussion we had on this clause the general opinion was that the permanent force should be resorted to whenever possible.

Mr. WARD. I think the objection of the hon. member for Haldimand is well taken. We should make it perfectly clear that the permanent force is to be called out to the extent to which it is available, and that only in the event of that force being insufficient should we call on the militia, and then only call on the militia to supplement the permanent force. That evidently is the intention, but we should see that it is clearly expressed.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It would be rather dangerous to make the law too stringent. It might be advisable, for instance, not to call out the Permanent Force, but to hold it in reserve for some other duty, and no one is in a better position to judge of the circumstances than the district or senior officer, who is on the spot. We must give him some discretion in the matter.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would suggest that we amend the clause by striking out the words 'in the opinion of the officer,' and substitute the words 'so far as it is available.' The clause would then read : 'Provided always, that the permanent force, so far as it is available, is to be employed upon this duty before calling on the militia.' My own opinion is that the militia should be called on first. I think that every locality should be taught to keep its own law and order. I believe in self-governing communities, and I do not believe in this system of calling in the militia from Quebec to go to Sydney or from Toronto to Sault Ste. Marie. That is one reason why I want the pay of the militia increased to that of special constables. That would teach the municipalities a lesson. I am told that the Sault disturbance could have been quelled by one good, sensible man acting in proper time, and nine out of ten of these disturbances, to quell which the troops are called out, could have been settled without having resort to that extreme measure.

Mr. PUTTEE. I would like to make a suggestion to the Minister of Militia and the Minister of Justice in connection with this clause. You will see that the district officer commanding, very properly, has no power to refuse a requisition that is made upon him. And the clause goes on to provide that the requisition shall be in writing by the chairman of the quarter sessions, or by any three justices of the peace, of whom the warden, mayor, or other head of the municipality shall be one ; and if the mayor, warden or other head refuses to act, then the requisition is to state such refusal, and one other justice of the peace has to take his place. You will see that the warden or mayor is the only one of these three who is responsible to the municipality as regards expenditure. It seems to me, therefore, it would be a proper thing to provide that, if the mayor refuses to sign this requisition the signature of two other justices of the peace—that is, four justices of the peace altogether—should be required. It would be necessary to make the section read something in this manner :

—or by any three justices of the peace of whom the warden, mayor or other head or acting head of the municipality or county in which such riot or disturbance occurs or is anticipated as aforesaid, shall be one, but, if he declines or is unable to act, then, by four justices of the peace.

It is pretty well understood that in many instances justices of the peace are too quick perhaps, to call upon the district officer commanding for assistance before the resources of the municipality are exhausted. That is the experience. Certainly, it was the experience in Valleyfield, I think it was the experience three years ago in British Columbia, and I doubt if it is not the experience in Sydney at the present time. This amendment gives a little more protection to the municipality which after all must foot the bill.

Section as amended, agreed to.

On section 36 A—form of requisition provided for in section 36.

Mr. DANIEL. I see that the subsection allows this form to be varied, but to what extent it may be varied does not appear.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. To any extent.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is the case with all blanks in statutes. They are intended for the purpose of guiding the magistrate, and then he must act within the spirit of the section.

Mr. DANIEL. This form says at the end :

> These are therefore to require you to call out the active militia present in or such portion thereof as you consider necessary for the purpose of suppressing (or preventing, or dealing with) such riot or disturbance.

The idea of the Bill is that the permanent force shall be called out in preference to the ordinary active militia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The permanent force is a part of the active militia.

Mr. DANIEL. I am aware of that, but the permanent force is to be called upon first, and that permanent force must necessarily be stationed in the locality where it is expected a riot may take place. I am thinking of course of my own constituency. There we have some active militia, a regiment of artillery and one of infantry, and we have no permanent force at all. There is a company of infantry at Fredericton, and it would be easy to have that company in the city of St. John in a couple of hours after the order was sent. But I cannot see that this requisition, unless it is changed a good deal, would be suitable for such a case as that. 'These are therefore to require you to call out the active militia at present in'—they are in the locality.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In the district.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The permanent force is a part of the active militia, and when requisition is made upon the district officer commanding he must consult the statute under which he is to act, and the statute says that the part of the militia which is first to be called upon is the permanent force. He has to read the statute in order to ascertain what his powers are, and he will find that the permanent force are first to be called upon, if they are available in sufficient number.

Mr. DANIEL. At all events, these words do not make any reference to the permanent force.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The permanent force is a part of the active militia, and the active militia includes the permanent force.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. At the present moment a Quebec permanent corps are in Sydney, Cape Breton, some hundreds of miles away.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it the intention that in case the permanent force are called out they are to be paid for by the government or by the municipality ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. By the municipality.

Mr. FOWLER. Why should their cost be a fine upon the municipality ? It may not be the fault of the municipality that this riot occurs, and I think they should be paid out of the general revenue of the country.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I think if that were so, every time a person got disorderly in the streets the permanent corps would be sent for.

Mr. WARD. Would it not be better to alter that requisition in this way :

> These are therefore to require you to call out the active militia in the district.

Instead of saying as at present in any particular place.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Then that would mean that we have no permanent corps.

Mr. WARD. If there are any permanent corps in the district, then they would be available in accordance with the terms of section 36.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But if there are not ?

Mr. WARD. The active militia covers both, it seems to me.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to me a serious matter that the town of Sydney should have to bear the expense of taking the permanent force from Quebec to Sydney.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They deposited the money in the bank before the force started, $10,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I saw somewhere that the town of Sydney had notified the militia authorities that they would not pay a cent of this.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They did not. Before we allowed the troops to start the money was put in the bank.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I think the government cannot be too emphatic in impressing upon these municipalities that they must preserve law and order in their own community. I object to the ratepayers of Victoria county being called upon to pay one dollar of the cost of sending the permanent force to suppress riots in any part of Canada.

Mr. GILMOUR. When the militia are called out by three magistrates, I do not see why the municipalities should have to pay the cost. I think whenever a riot occurs and it becomes necessary to call out the militia—and they can only be called out by three magistrates—the government ought to be in some measure responsible for their expense. The militia are a government force, and it is unfair to compel the municipality to pay the expenses of the militia so called out. The magistrates are responsible to the town, or perhaps responsible to the county, they are competent judges of the necessity of outside aid, and I do not think it is fair that a little municipality should be called upon to pay the entire expense.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Why should the Dominion treasury be made liable ?

Mr. GILMOUR. Because the militia are under the control of the Dominion government, under the control of the Minister of Militia as a member of the government, and if they are to go at all, they should go at the expense of the Dominion government.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Each province or subdivision of a province is responsible for maintaining law and order, and it is only in extraordinary occasions, cases of emergency, that this power should be exercised by the local authorities in calling upon the central power for aid. I agree with the hon. member from Victoria (Mr. Hughes) absolutely, that municipalities should be discouraged as far as possible from exercising a power which is only meant to be available in an emergency. We should not offer too many invitations or too many facilities for having recourse to that power. I may point out that at the present time, the militia are being used to perform police duty in suppressing a street row in the city of London. I object emphatically to any ratepayer of Victoria county, or of any other county in the Dominion of Canada, being called upon to pay police expenses, even though the Dominion troops are being used, or to pay one farthing of the expenses of suppressing a riot.

Mr. FOWLER. It is the law abiding citizens in all cases who have to pay the cost of suppressing disturbances on the part of the citizens who are not law abiding. It seems to me that if the people of this country pay taxes to support this permanent force, they have a right to their services to suppress serious local riots.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. Not as a police force.

Mr. FOWLER. To maintain law and order within the boundaries of Canada as well as to resist invasion. You have authority to call upon this force in case of emergency. Here is an emergency ; by this very Act you define an emergency to be a riot and insurrection beyond the power of the local police force to suppress. It does seem to me that in case the permanent force are called out the expenses should not be saddled upon the municipality.

Mr. GOURLEY. It is only when a local disturbance becomes a riot and the law of the country is set at defiance that the federal authority is called in. Therefore it is when the local police in the country break down that the militia come in. Under the general idea that the government must preserve law and order in the country when the authority of the local municipality breaks down this government should pay for the suppression of any disturbance. But unfortunately this was settled at a time when the province of Ontario was settling everything on a very narrow basis. If the province of Nova Scotia wanted a wharf they required that we should pay half the cost of it.

An hon. MEMBER. We pay all the cost now.

Mr. GOURLEY. I agree with my hon. friend from East Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour) because he struck the proper key and stated a sound principle both in morals and equity when he said that if the law makes it legal for the municipality, or some officials in the municipality, to call out the militia the charge should be upon the country as a whole, because the public law of the land is evoked and the local authority is in abeyance.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. When this matter was introduced first I took the ground that the militia force should not be called out for police purposes to put down a riot in a scrub town in which the municipality do not know how to preserve law and order.

Mr. GOURLEY. I object to my hon. friend referring in so disagreeable a manner to Lindsay.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. We are a law abiding people there and do not require to call out the militia to keep us in order. I repeat most emphatically that no militiaman ought to be called out to do police duty at 50 cents a day to be insulted and spat upon especially when he is not in a position to arrest a man for disorderly conduct. The law should be so amended that if these men are called out they should be called out as policemen, given $2.50 a day and have the power to step out of the ranks and arrest a man if he is disorderly. I want to convert my hon. friend here. Nine out of ten of these riots are caused through some action on the part of local people, nine out of ten of these riots are caused by the residents becoming disorderly, they are the people who encourage a riot and I say that no one outside of the municipality should be called upon to pay a farthing of the expense of putting down a riot in that municipality.

Mr. FOWLER. The difficulty is that under the law two or three magistrates who are not responsible to the municipality can put a large expense upon the municipality.

Mr. MACPHERSON. That is the municipality's own fault.

Mr. FOWLER. How is it the municipality's own fault? They have no control over the magistrates. My hon. friend says that it is the fault of the municipality. Not at all. If you give the power to the municipal council who are responsible to the people, then it might be all right to make the municipality pay for it, but you allow irresponsible persons, and magistrates are not always responsible persons, to perform this duty and saddle the municipality with the cost.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). The municipal council in Sydney is composed of as able men as those composing any municipal council in this Dominion. The citizens of Sydney are as orderly as those of any city in the Dominion. A company has been formed there and a foreign element has been brought into the place.

Mr. MACLEAN. Not Highland Scotch ?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). They are not Scotch. The Scotch know how to behave themselves in whatever part of the world they are placed. Even amongst savages they know how to behave themselves. But, that is outside of the question altogether. Here you have a body of regulars down at Quebec. They are doing nothing. They have nothing to do because the cities of Quebec are orderly in every respect, and these regulars are sent down to Sydney to preserve order there. If their travelling expenses in going down and coming home are paid that is as much as could be expected by the municipality of Sydney.

Mr. INGRAM. Those who are instrumental in the first instance in having the soldiers called out may have been the original cause of all the friction. A foreign element is brought in by parties who are engaged in carrying on a work. They are brought in to serve these parties own interests in the first instance and because these men object to their being handled to the liking of the company, friction arises, the militia are called out and the country has to pay for it. If the militia are called out let the municipality pay for them and when the municipality knows that they are responsible for the cost of bringing the militia in they will remove the cause of friction. I would be very sorry to support a proposition that the country as a whole should pay the expenses in connection with a matter of this kind. I think the hon. minister is quite right when he makes the law read as he proposes to do.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. The main object of the permanent force is defined in section 30 of this Bill when it says :

The permanent force shall furnish schools of instruction for the militia, and provide instructors therefor ;—

The hon. member for Victoria, Nova Scotia (Mr. Ross)——

Mr. FOWLER. Read the rest of it.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. It has other functions, but I said this was the main one.

—and it shall also be available, at all times, for general service.

The general service referred to there is something more serious than putting down riots. When any hon. member of this House says that this corps is idling all the time and that it might as well be employed for the suppression of rioting, I think he entirely overlooks the fact that it is doing important work in instructing the balance of the force, and that this is the principal reason for its existence. It does seem to me that if this force which has been established mainly for the instruction of the balance, or the larger part of the force is removed from its instructional duties, that balance of the force is therefore losing its teaching in consequence, and it is only right that the government should receive pay from the municipality. It does seem absurd, I think, to charge this to the whole of Canada.

Mr. WARD. It does not seem that the hon. minister has answered the objection of my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Daniel). I would like to have him state whether it is not possible to alter this requisition so as to make it more conformable with section 36. It seems to me that some slight change was made there. There seems to be a portion that cannot be very well altered, but if the hon. minister would alter that provision so as to refer to the active militia in the district, I think it would answer the objection of my hon. friend from St. John.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The language used is that which exists in the present law. It has been found to work very well and I suppose it was followed by the draftsman who prepared this clause. One hesitates to depart from a phrase or from language which has been used for many years and which is found to work well.

Mr. WARD. But the hon. minister must not forget that section 36 has been altered and it is only to make this requisition conform with the alteration that my hon. friend from St. John proposes the change.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If you insert the word 'district,' the permanent force could not go to the city of Halifax to suppress a riot, because there is no permanent force in Nova Scotia. It is better to allow these elastic words to be used ; you have to trust to the discretion and good judgment of somebody, and it is better to leave that to the discretion of the district officer commanding.

Mr. WARD. The whole Dominion is divided into military districts, and there is a permanent corps in each district.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not in Nova Scotia.

Mr. WARD. Even so, I do not see what objection there can be, because the words 'active militia' do not refer to the permanent corps if there is no permanent corps in that district. I am sure the Minister of Justice could suggest a wording of the clause that would meet the case.

Mr. DANIEL. The substitution of the word 'locality' does not make it any better. It would be preferable to alter the wording of that sentence entirely.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I cannot see any objection to that word 'district.'

Mr. FOWLER. Instead of allowing the militia to be called out by three magistrates, why not say that it shall be done by a majority of the municipal council ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That might take too long.

Mr. MACLEAN. They might refuse to make a quorum.

Mr. GOURLEY. When the original Act provided that three magistrates might call out the militia, we had no county or municipal councils in the greater part of the Dominion. At that time the magistrates were members of the sessions, and they had the authority that is now vested in municipal bodies. In moulding our Act to-day, we should give recognition to the representative institutions as we find them ; and, as the magistrates have ceased to have any civil authority, we should substitute for the three magistrates of the old law the mayor and two or three municipal councillors, who can just as readily be gotten at as three magistrates.

Mr. FOWLER. Apparently the sentiment of this committee is against the indiscriminate employment of the militia to aid the civil power ; and, that being so, it seems to me that it would be better to have the municipal council called together, or that a majority of the municipal council should sign the requisition to call out the militia. If you allow it to be done by three magistrates who are not responsible in any way to the people, the militia could very easily be called out when the occasion was not serious enough to demand it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. My own opinion is that the militia should not be called out for this purpose at all. Instead of ordering the boys out and paying them 50 cents a day, let the municipal authorities swear them in as special constables and pay them $1.50 or $2 a day. When the militiaman stands there with his uniform and his rifle, every pup in the town can spit on him and he dare not leave the ranks, whereas if he were a special constable he could take that fellow by the scruff of the neck and put him in the lock-up. The muncipal authorities ought to be taught the idea of providing for the peace and order of the municipalities, and pay for it.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Although I am not a militiaman, I will venture to say a word on this question. The suggestion has been made that the militia should only be called out by a majority of the municipal council, but I would point out that in many districts of the province of British Columbia there are no municipalities, and consequently the militia could not be called out at all under such a law. For instance, on the Skeena river, where a strike is feared, there are no municipalities, and so the justices of the peace must be the authority to take action in such a contingency. I quite agree with my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) that the machinery for calling out the militia should not be made too easily available, and further, that when the militia is called out in aid of the civil power, the municipalities should be made to understand that they must pay for it. If the government were to pay the militia every time they were called out for such duty, then the militia would be at the beck and call of every person in the country, but if the municipality is obliged to pay it is a very great safeguard. Let me say that I am very strongly opposed to the militia being called out to suppress riots in towns where the members of the militia force themselves reside, because sometimes they are called upon to act against their personal friends, and that is a condition that should be avoided if possible. I repeat that in the province of British Columbia, where there are no municipalities, the power to call out the militia must be in the hands of the justices of the peace.

Mr. GOURLEY. The more we discuss this matter the more apparent it becomes that the body representative of the people who pay the cost should have the authority to say when the militia shall be called out. In provinces where municipal councils are incorporated you could say that the mayor and three of the town council—I do not think a majority of the council is necessary—should have the power to call the militia out, and as these gentlemen know they have to pay the cost they will be rather chary about exercising the power except in case of great stress. I think that would solve the whole difficulty. If you leave it to three magistrates, a big company like the Steel Company at Sydney could easily pick up three magistrates and get them to call out the militia, whether it was right to do so or not. I am not speaking of magistrates as a whole, but a company like the Steel Company might have three or four magistrates in its employ; whereas if it had to go to the city or town council, which had to pay the bill, it would meet with a different order of things. I deprecate the calling out of the militia on all occasions, and I think that would be the better plan to adopt.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Let me say to my hon. friend that although this law has been in force for forty years, there has never been a case in my knowledge—and I have looked over the cases carefully—where it has been abused. The law has worked well for forty years, and I think before that in the old provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, and why not leave it alone? I might point out one case on the other side, the case of Valleyfield, where the mayor absolutely refused to act. Will any one say that it was not necessary on that occasion to take the action that was taken? I think not; and yet under the proposal of my hon. friend, it would be impossible to get the aid of the militia in similar conditions. The law has worked well; why not leave it alone?

Mr. E. D. SMITH. In the case of Valleyfield, could not the civil authorities have sworn in enough special constables to have preserved order without calling out the militia, if they had not found it easy to do so?

Mr. GILMOUR. What is the meaning of the word 'municipality' as used in this section? We have a county municipality, which embraces incorporated villages, townships and towns, each and every one of which is a municipality. Would you seek to recover pay from an incorporated village, or from the county? I am inclined to think it would be from the county as the language stands here.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It would be from the particular municipality directly charged with the maintenance of peace within the district where the riot occurs. These occurrences never take place in the country parts. This legislation is designed to meet actual cases that arise, not imaginary cases that have not arisen and are not likely to arise. Outside of the case at Valleyfield, no such emergency has arisen in the province of Quebec outside of a town or city, and I am sure the same thing would apply to Ontario.

Mr. GILMOUR. But in the event of your endeavouring to recover from the municipality the cost of the militia being called out, would it not be as well to define what is meant by the municipality—whether it is meant to be the county or one of the local municipalities, such as the village, town or township?

Mr. GOURLEY.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Has not a city, a town or a village a separate municipal existence from a county in Ontario?

Mr. GILMOUR. Not entirely. Cities have, towns may not have, villages and townships do not have. They have to pay their statute taxes to the counties, and they are controlled in that measure by the counties.

Mr. FOWLER. It strikes me that you are violating the principle of no taxation without representation when you allow these magistrates to call out the militia. I am surprised that the hon. member for Labelle, who is a stickler for constitutional liberty, has not seen this point, and come to the assistance of those who are fighting for constitutional principles.

Mr. BOURASSA. My hon. friend is doing it better than I could.

Mr. DANIEL. The hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Macpherson) stated that in the district which he represents it was necessary that the law should be retained as it is—why? Because there are no municipalities there. In that case, if the three magistrates called out the troops, who is to pay for them?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I like to proceed on the principle that it is a good thing to deal with one thing at a time. We shall be called on to deal with the question my hon. friend raises when he comes to sections 39 and 40.

Mr. DANIEL. In the case of the Valleyfield riots, has anybody paid for the militia other than the government?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The municipality has been sued, and we got a judgment against it.

Mr. PUTTEE. After the views which have been expressed by a number of members of the committee, I think they will see the reasonableness of the suggestion I made a few minutes ago. What we have done is to provide that a requisition to call out the militia must be signed by three persons, two justices of the peace and the mayor of the town; if the mayor refuses, his refusal is to be noted, and another justice of the peace may take his place. The mayor is the only one who represents the people who are to pay the cost, and if he refuses, the requisition should be signed by at least two more justices of the peace. It seems to me that this is a reasonable compromise proposition, and one that should be accepted. I remember the case at Valleyfield, to which I gave a great deal of attention at the time, and in my opinion that is one of the exceptions where the power was abused. The mayor of Valleyfield refused to sign the requisition, and three justices of the peace called out the militia over his head. The whole people were scandalized. There was a strike on at the time, and everybody connected with the strike decided that they would do no work until the militia were withdrawn, and they had to be withdrawn before a settlement could be effected. There was no fear of any disturbance which local constables could not control. Because a large company in a small district can control enough justices of the peace to secure a requisition if it is in its interest to do so, it seems to me that if the mayor refuses to sign, it should be necessary to have four justices of the peace, and not three.

Section agreed to.

Section 37 agreed to.

On section 38—duty of officers and men who shall be special constables.

Mr. FOWLER. Is there not in this a contradiction of terms ? You make the militia special constables and at the same time they are only to act as a military body under orders of their superior officer.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They will act as a military body, but shall have the jurisdiction of special constables.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That is the absurdity of the whole business. No man can step out of the ranks to arrest anybody. After the Riot Act is read, all these men can do is shoot or bayonet.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They can arrest.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In practice they never arrest. If the crowd do not disperse they charge with the bayonet or shoot.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I know of my own knowledge where a sergeant and two men were detailed to make an arrest, and they did it very well.

On section 39—aid of the civil power, payment by municipality, &c.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If this Bill is not going out of the committee to-night, this clause ought to be recast to provide for the difficulties suggested with respect to the unorganized parts of territories where there are no municipalities.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I would ask the Minister of Militia whether this dollar a day pay would apply to men on the permanent force as well as to those in the non-permanent force when acting on this duty?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It should.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. Decidedly it should. It is a most miserable duty to perform and ought to be paid for.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I think it should be distinctly understood that when the permanent corps are on this very offensive duty, this dollar a day should be paid, viz., the excess of the pay they get as soldiers up to a dollar a day.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 41,

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Section 41 as it appears in the Bill is to be struck out and the following inserted instead :

41. There may be appointed an officer who shall hold rank not below that of colonel in the militia or in His Majesty's regular army, who may be, subject to the regulations and under the direction of the minister, charged with the military command of the militia, and such officer shall have the rank of major-general in the militia and shall be paid at such rate, not exceeding $6,000 per annum, as may be prescribed.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Some time ago, I gave the Minister of Militia notice that I proposed asking him to agree to the amendment of this section. I propose to add this to the qualifications :

Who shall have the military education, training and experience of an imperial major-general.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. Who is to judge of the degree of training and experience ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. He has to pass an examination in the imperial service.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. You would require an imperial service commission ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Every Canadian officer to-day can get an imperial service commission if he chooses. A number of them already hold such commissions, and have passed examinations in the imperial service for lieutenant-colonel. There is nothing to prevent a Canadian militia officer going over and passing his examination.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think that is a matter that should be covered by the regulations. There is a good deal of force in what my hon. friend says, but I think the regulations would cover it. They would certainly demand a certain standard of education and experience for an officer holding that position; I should certainly require it. But that is an unusual thing to put in a statute. I do not think that it is to be found in any statute. I have read most of the militia laws of the colonies of the empire and the British militia law, and I have never seen a provision of that kind in any of them. The regulations have the force of law, and they have to be laid upon the table of the House. This law cannot come into force until there are regulations. I think if the hon. member for Victoria would consent to leave that to the government, he will find the regulations satisfactory ; if they are not, he will have his opportunity at a later date.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I want it distinctly understood that there shall be no separation between the imperial military policy and the colonial military policy ; in other words, that while we undoubtedly have Canadians who, if they had the proper training, are fit, not only to take command of the Canadian militia, but to take command of the imperial forces, still we must require men of experience and training, and we cannot get them unless we give our officers a chance to go over there or somewhere else and acquire practice. A number of our young officers have already the certificate of lieutenant-colonel, they have gone over and passed their examination, and passed very successfully, some of them, I believe. But I do not think that even a lieutenant-colonel's training would be sufficient to guarantee that a man should be placed in command of the militia of the Dominion of Canada. On the distinct assurance of the minister that he will give this his serious consideration, and that when the regulations are brought down, if they are not satisfactory, we will have the privilege of holding a field day over them, I will let this clause pass.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Referring to this same section 41, there is subsection 2 in the Bill, as originally brought down, which was overlooked in the amendment. Subsection 2 reads as follows :—

In the event of a vacancy in the office of General Officer Commanding, or in the absence of that officer from Canada, the command of the militia shall devolve upon the next senior combatant officer on the Head-Quarters Staff.

I propose to change that so that it shall read as follows :

In the event of no General Officer Commanding being appointed, or in the absence of that officer from Canada, the Governor General in Council may detail an officer of the Headquarter Staff to assume the command and military discipline of the militia.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That is rather a beautiful sentence to put in a statute. What does the Minister of Justice think of that sort of Bill drafting ?

Mr. GOURLEY. There is nothing wrong with that.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Perhaps this form would be preferable to the other. I beg to move that the following clause be inserted :

In the event of a vacancy in the office of General Officer Commanding or in the absence of that officer from Canada, the Governor General in Council may detail an officer of the Headquarters Staff who shall be charged with the military command of the militia.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I thought that the control of the militia under a section of this Bill rested with the Governor General alone.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Somebody must act under him. He will not go out and take care of the militia himself. He must appoint somebody to take his place.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I do not object to the amendment especially but I might as well discuss the point which I am about to mention here. I may illustrate what I mean by taking England as an example. I want to know if it is the intention of the hon. minister to bring about an interchange in the headquarters staff along these lines. At the present time the headquarters staff are fixtures.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, they only hold office for five years.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There never was a change in any of them.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There will be.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In England after a man spends a few years on the headquarters staff he is sent out to his regiment, or brigade, or division in order to get sharpened up in his duties in the service. In other words, being office men for a term of years, they get rusty in their work. Is it the hon. minister's intention to carry out that system ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, already we have passed a regulation limiting the term to five years. That was passed three years ago. I would be inclined to follow the English rule limiting it to four years, and before an officer could return to the headquarters staff again, make it necessary that he should serve a year in some of the districts or in England in the way of exchange. Not only that, but I propose in the regulations to require after a certain number of years that every officer on the Headquarters Staff shall have passed through the English Staff College. An arrangement has been made whereby two officers of the militia of Canada are permitted to attend the Staff College every year, and it is very obvious that at the end of four or five years we shall have a considerable number of officers, if advantage is taken of this opportunity, possessing the qualifications which are considered essential to the performance of staff duties of this kind.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is there any intention, having regard to the fact that there will be an interchange of officers, to bring about a gradual infusion of the two forces ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am glad of that.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is one of the things that was discussed at the meeting of the defence committee which I had the honour of attending, and it was agreed that so soon as Canadian officers were technically qualified by active service or by being graduates of the Staff College, an exchange would take place. It was agreed that if an imperial officer were required in this country, or if we saw fit to ask for an imperial officer for instance to take charge of the Royal Military College, we should get a quid pro quo, we should have the privilege of sending the same number of officers over to serve in the imperial army.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Of course the minister has the full authority of his government with that regard.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That being the case I shall not take up time drawing attention to some interesting pictures in the Montreal 'Herald.' There is an editorial in that paper which I am sorry to have to place on the records of the House, but it will show the absurdity of the minister of war. The organ of the Minister of Agriculture who is the minister of war at times, and superintendent general of the whole business says :

The Canadian militiaman is eager to learn something of actual use during his short time of learning, and in his search for that he is apt to neglect the niceties of military etiquette to such an extent that British officers are horrified at his lackness in saluting according to the regulations of the drill book.

We are told that the Minister of Agriculture is most punctilious in his own department. I do not know how low he makes the civil servants bow to him, but they certainly must approach him in fear and trembling. They require to stand some distance from him, especially if they happen to be bigger than he, and pay him all due homage. In one of these pictures the Minister of Militia is standing in front with his hat off showing that beautiful profile which we all admire so much, and a little to the right we find the Minister of Agriculture, or war, with his hat doffed returning a salute. In the next picture the Minister of Agriculture is standing in an easier position chatting with some officers. I shall not read the whole article as the minister has promised to carry out these interchanges with the imperial service. I assume that the Minister of Militia is taking up his position again, and that he has sent the Minister of Agriculture to look after the hens and the eggs. I am informed that it has appeared in the newspapers that amongst the officers this gentleman was instrumental in forcing on the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons, two of them are no credit to anybody. One of them came into the Laprairie camp with a pair of gaiters and a little spur screwed into the heel of the gaiter so that he could not ride, and he had two swords, one on his right and one on his left and one splendid black eye. He remained in camp long enough to make an exhibition of himself and then he was returned home. I may be wrong but I understand that these are the facts. Another of the Minister of Agriculture's officers for some offence was brought before the civil authorities and fined $20 or some other large sum for a breach of the civil law. These are two of the men that the Minister of Agriculture held up the Scottish Light Dragoons to appoint, and as a result of which we have lost the best General Officer Commanding that ever stood on Canadian soil. One of his officers came into camp with a sword on each side, a little spur fastened into a heel of a pair of gaiters and a black eye ; the other was not very long in camp before he was hauled up before the police court and fined $20.

On section 41.

There may be appointed an officer who shall hold rank not below that of colonel in the militia or in His Majesty's regular army, who may be, subject to the regulations and under the direction of the minister, charged with the military command of the militia. and such officer shall have the rank of major-general in the militia, and shall be paid at such rate, not exceeding $6,000 per annum, as may be prescribed.

Section agreed to.

On section 41 (a).

There may be appointed an officer who shall hold rank not below that of colonel in the militia or in His Majesty's regular army, who may be, subject to the regulations and under the direction of the minister, charged with the military inspection of the militia, and such officer shall be paid at such rate, not exceeding $6,000 per annum, as may be prescribed.

Section agreed to.

On section 41 (b).

41(b). The duties and authority of each of the officers respectively referred to in the two next preceding sections shall be defined by the Governor in Council.

Section agreed to.

Section 42—appointment of adjutant general.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I gave the Minister of Militia notice that these officers must be of the highest qualification.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, the very highest qualification.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And it is the minister's intention to retain an imperial officer.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I do not wish to seem extravagant but every military man knows that an officer occupying one of those positions in the permanent corps or at the headquarters staff is called upon to do a great deal of entertaining and that he has besides to provide a very expensive uniform. It is impossible for such an officer to get along without entertaining, and as it is now, he must do it out of his own pocket.

They have to entertain to a greater extent than other deputy ministers and in my opinion they are underpaid. There is not a day of their lives that these officers do not meet officers from other parts of the country whom they have to entertain. I do not think the minister need be a bit afraid to pay them higher salaries.

Section 43 agreed to.

On section 43a—appointment of master general of the ordnance.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This is the same office as is held now by the inspector general.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Section agreed to.

On section 44,

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN moved that the section be struck out, and the following be inserted in lieu thereof :

The Governor in Council may establish a General Staff, Headquarters Staff, and District Staff, and may appoint a chief of the General Staff and such officers to the respective staffs as may be deemed necessary, and shall define their duties and authority.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 6 (a).

The Governor in Council may appoint a Militia Council to advise the minister on all matters relating to the militia, which may be referred to the Council by the minister. The composition, procedure and powers of the council shall be as prescribed.

Mr. WARD. What does that mean ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is proposed to adopt the system which has been adopted in England, as a result of the report of the commission which is known as the Esher Commission, composed of Lord Esher, Admiral Sir John Fisher and General Clarke. The council, which is called the Army Council in England, we propose to call the Militia Council. In England the Secretary of State for War is the chairman.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Formerly the English militia were not under the Secretary of State for War, but were under the Secretary of State for Home Affairs.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. For the last ten years it has been under the Secretary of State for War. On the Army Council there are four military members called, respectively, the first military member, the second military member, the third military member and the fourth military member. The first military member has charge of military policy in all its branches, war staff duties, intelligence, mobilization, plans of operations, training, military history, war regulations ; he is chief of the general staff. The second military member will be the adjutant-general, and will have charge of recruiting, pay, discipline, awards and peace regulations. The third military member will be the quartermaster-general ; he will have charge of supplies, clothing, remounts and transports. The fourth military member will be the master general of ordnance, and will have charge of armaments and fortifications. Then there will be a civil member, the deputy minister, I presume, and another civil member, the financial secretary, the chief financial officer of the department.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Who is that officer in England ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The financial secretary is a permanent officer. The parliamentary Under Secretary is the first civil member.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That is not the permanent Under Secretary ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, the permanent Under Secretary is the secretary of the commission. In England there is no deputy minister, and the financial officer of the department corresponds to our deputy minister. We are not in a position to follow the English system exactly ; but the Minister of Militia as chairman, and the four military members will correspond exactly with the similar members on the English board. The chief staff officer——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There is no chief staff officer now.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, but we propose to have one, and I am taking a vote for that purpose.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the duties of our quartermaster-general correspond with those of the English quartermaster-general ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. To a large extent. It is difficult for me to explain, in as great detail as I would like to do, the scheme, because we have not yet been able to get the regulations. I do not know that they are yet completed. Sir Edward Ward, with whom I have been in correspondence, very kindly offered to send them to me as soon as they were published ; but in the meantime I can only give such information as I have been able to get from reports which I have read in the newspapers, and correspondence which I have had with some eminent military authorities there.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I understand that the chief staff officer will largely have control of the militia ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Operations, intelligence, and so on.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would he be interfered with by any of the civil officers ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No. Each man has his own department to himself. But they will discuss matters as a council, the Minister of Militia being in the chair, and having the advantage of these officers face to face in his presence discussing all important matters affecting the welfare of the militia. Perhaps I am too enthusiastic, but it seems to me that the adoption of this system will be the dawn of better days for the militia. I believe it must result in the different branches of the militia being in very much better touch with each other than ever before. It will result in the minister at least having the opportunity of becoming acquainted with every branch of his department, and it will result in continuity in the service which we have never had in this country. Each conclusion at which this council may arrive will be a matter of record, so that each minister will have the opportunity of seeing in writing the results of the conferences which took place previous to his coming, and the reasons underlying the different policies adopted from time to time.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In Britain I have every reason to believe that this committee or council will work well. The matter was agitated for a long time, and there was a series of very able articles in the London 'Times,' written by its editor, Mr. Amery, who wrote a history of the South African troubles. Mr. Amery educated the public along these lines very thoroughly, and I am satisfied that the scheme will work well there. I do not see any reason why a similar scheme should not work well here, provided the council be composed of men of independence of character. Of course, it will be said that men can be had in Canada equally as independent as you can find in England, but we must not shut our eyes to the fact that many of the officers occupying the highest positions in England are men of wealth and in a better position to talk straight to the government than would be the officers employed in the civil service here. One reason I have urged against any officer of a Dominion force being under the Army Act is that it prevents his giving that free expression to his views which we should encourage in our men. While I occupied the position of command in my regiment I always encouraged every officer under me to give expression to his views, even when they were critical of my own policy, but talk in confidence to members of the force and they will tell you that they dare not say a word. I say to the minister, wipe away all these restrictions, wipe away this Army Act in so far as it applies to our men, and let our officers approach him like men and give both him and the public the benefit of their views. I had a long letter sent me from Kingston the other day complaining of some officer in the military college for having expressed sympathy with Russia, and asking me to bring the matter up in the House. Why, I commend that officer. He was not talking to his cadets, but was on his holidays, and he had a perfect right to express his opinion on the Russian and Japanese war. And to say that because he happens to side with Russia we should drive him out of the position of professor in the military college is utterly absurd. So long as he does not talk this sort of thing to his cadets, no one can have anything to say to him. He has a perfect right to express his own opinions outside the college, just as any man should have connected with the militia. The minister need not be afraid to trust the officers of the permanent force. He will do the country a service if he will wipe out from the statute-book all these restrictive resolutions, and tell the officers of the permanent force that they are at liberty to express their views on any question. If he will only encourage the members of the council to be independent and fearless, he will benefit the service, but if they are to be only time-servers the service will suffer.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Under the King's regulations the utmost possible independence will be given each member of the council.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister has brought the headquarters staff under the Army Act. Go around and talk to these gentlemen, and they will tell you they dare not say a word. I would rather encourage them to come out like free men and do away with the dark-ages tyranny of Germany, France, the United States and other countries.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The question of military rank is to be allowed to remain in abeyance, and the members of the council will practically be in the position of Lords of the Admiralty, so that the highest possible freedom will be given them.

On section 68,

His Majesty shall be liable for compensation for injury to persons and for damage to property arising from the use of any rifle range under the control of the Department of Militia and Defence for target practice, carried on under regulations prescribed by this Act, provided that there shall be no claim for compensation for any injury due to negligence on the part of the person injured, or if such person, at the time the injury was sustained, was at the rifle range as a spectator of shooting, or in the case of injury to property where such injury was due to negligence on the part of the owner of the property.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The only criticism I would make upon this proposed section is with regard to the part referring to spectators. I do not see why a spectator injured by militiamen should not be compensated.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He would have his remedy under the civil law.

Mr. DANIEL. I would draw the minister's attention to the fact that the section does not provide for those who are using the range and receive injury.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, that is provided for.

Mr. BOURASSA. I have no objection to have any new draft made of my proposal, though, I must say, I do not think it exactly complimentary to the Department of Justice that the Department of Militia should re-draft a clause which was prepared under the direction of the Department of Justice, without consulting the legal officers of the government. I still maintain the point I made this morning. These rifle ranges are organized by the government for the benefit of the militia or for the benefit of the country, according to the point of view you may take. They are managed under government regulation. The government allows people to go there—not only militiamen, or members of rifle clubs, but others—and practise shooting as long and as often as they like; and the people who have properties alongside these ranges and who have certainly as much right to be on their own private property as these people have to be on the government property are liable to injury or death. Yet, because the people whose shooting causes the injury or death are not there under government regulation, the government will not hold itself responsible to give compensation. If the amendment is accepted as it has been re-drafted without the advice of the legal advisers of the government, the result will be that compensation will accrue only when injury is caused by shooting that is practised under government regulation. If, then, the government does not take the proper care to prevent people from being injured, there may be injuries for which there is no compensation. I have no objection to accept the amendment of the Minister of Militia, provided another clause is added which will make it imperative that the minister shall prevent shooting at the rifle ranges by others than those who shoot under the government regulation. Otherwise I cannot accept it. If my protest is not listened to, it will show what care the government have for those peaceful people who may be killed or injured on property alongside the rifle ranges. I think we pay enough for the militia that compensation should be provided for the case of people, possibly poor farmers, who are killed or injured as a result of this rifle practice. I am sorry to see that the militiamen seem to have adopted the habit of laughing at the farmers. Well, it may be that the farmers may resent their laughter as well as their bullets.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) takes that seriously. What is it that the hon. gentleman wants that is not already covered by the amendment that is proposed by the Minister of Militia? Is the government to put a caretaker on each range to prevent pigeon shooters——

Mr. BOURASSA. Yes, if necessary.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Not at all. It would be perfectly absurd for the government to attempt to keep a man on every rifle range. And, in any case, why should the government be responsible for shooting by persons who have no right to be on the ranges?

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. Mere trespassers.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes; why should the government be responsible for injury done by such men, any more than it should be responsible for the accidental shooting of a man while out deer hunting?

Mr. MONK. I do not see how this amendment of the minister covers such a case as that of Larose. I do not think it does cover it. In that case, I have reason to believe, the men were practising not under government regulation.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. MONK. I do not think so. It seems to me that the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) is right. We ought to give full protection, and this section does not give it. The ranges have been removed from my constituency, but I am as much interested in the constituency where they now are. I do not think this amendment covers the cases at all.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is a very important question, and I think that perhaps, the committee would do well to take time to consider the purport of the amendment proposed. I think, for my part, that there is something in the observation of my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). We have erected these ranges—very properly so. They are made use of by the militia—very properly so. But we know that the modern rifle is a very dangerous instrument, and that great precaution should govern the use of it. The spirit of the amendment is that if the militia are practising rifle shooting and any casualty arises or any damage to property is occasioned, the government should be responsible. That is one of the responsibilities, I think, that the government should assume. But I understand that there are parties who go to shoot on these ranges quite irrespective of the militia. There may be a few of such men who go there and practice, which is a desirable thing in itself. But one hon. gentleman says that in such cases the government will not be responsible. I agree with him. But I say it is too serious a matter, and human life is too valuable, for anybody to be allowed to go on these ranges to shoot except under government regulations. If five or six young men want to go on the rifle range and shoot, it is quite proper that they should do so ; but they should carry on their shooting under regulations of the government, and, if any casualty takes place, the government should be responsible.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is exactly the amendment.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand there is some difference of opinion as to whether the amendment which is proposed is sufficient to cover these contingencies. Under these circumstances, and as my hon. friend the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) has done a good day's work, I would suggest that he should move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again, and the Department of Justice should be asked to look into this matter.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. To draw an amendment, we must know what it is desired to effect by the amendment. If you create a rifle range and attract the public there for the purpose of practising rifle shooting, and the people do go there and use the rifle ranges in such a way as to cause injury to persons in the neighbourhood, I fail to see why there should not be responsibility upon the people who first established and who own the ranges. I do not see why we should stop half way. It seems to me it should be either one thing or the other—either do not allow the rifle ranges to exist, or, if you allow them to exist, control them so that the public cannot be injured as a result of the use made of them.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I do not know whether the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) knows the nature of these things. He possibly has in mind a range like that down here at Rockcliffe. But nine-tenths of the rifle ranges in the country are vastly different from that. Going upon them you would not know that you were on a rifle range, unless you saw the flag flying or came across a little mound that the people had prepared at their own expense, with government assistance. Ranges are established by people at their own expense, with a little government assistance, and when these are taken over by the government they are just as much government ranges as any of these fancy ranges down here. When a man is injured in rifle shooting in one of these ranges, should not he be just as well treated as when he is injured in one of these headquarter ranges ? The men who were shooting on the Montreal range were city volunteers ; they had their flag flying, and they were practising.

Mr. MONK. We do not know whether they were practising under the regulations.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. They had their flag flying, they had their markers there. They did not need to be in uniform at all, in fact they should not be in uniform. But this accident happened, and undoubtedly the man was entitled to consideration, and I am surprised he did not get it. The reason was that some lawyer in Montreal advised him not to take the offer.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The government was not responsible for it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I remember well where a regiment was out rifle shooting, and by accident they shot a cow which was peacefully grazing on the hills a mile or two in the rear, and the government had to pay for that cow.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Supreme Court said the government was not bound to pay in the Montreal case.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. On a technicality, the lawyers befuddled the case. There is a certain danger limit in the rear of all these rifle ranges, and if a man goes there knowing that he is in danger, he should run his own risk, and I do not think he is entitled to compensation if he gets hurt.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think we might change slightly the amendment moved this afternoon by the hon. member for Labelle, to section 68. Where it reads, 'arising from the use of any rifle range,' why not put in the words 'Under the control of the Department of Militia and Defence for target practice ?'

Mr. GOURLEY. In order to make that section of any value you must have a clause defining what is meant by a rifle range under the control of the government. You would simply defeat every man who brought his action, from the fact that this rifle range was not a rifle range in the meaning of the law.

Mr. DANIEL. It appears to me it will be necessary to make it a criminal offence for a person who is unauthorized to use one of these rifle ranges ; otherwise I do not see how you can deal in a just and equitable way. As I understand this amendment, it will make the government liable for compensation to any one who receives injury from a rifle shot fired from the rifle range, whether the range has been authorized by the government or not. But there is nothing to allow the government to inflict a penalty on any one who shoots over that range without permission or authority. I do not see that you can proceed against the person who uses that range without authority, and I presume there are regulations forbidding any one to use a rifle range except those who are authorized by the regulations to do so.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I think we had better adopt the suggestion of the Prime Minister and let this matter stand over. Some members are absent who would like to discuss it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I was anxious to get it settled.

Mr. GOURLEY. I sympathize with the Minister of Justice. I know that these gentlemen are after a remedy, and I sympathize with their object; but legally a remedy is no good unless you define it within strict terms; otherwise you will entrap the suitor to bring an action, and you will defeat it by a technical objection. The headquarters of the rifle ranges dealt with in this Act are the headquarters of rifle ranges only; you must have a section describing what a government range is, headquarters or no headquarters. That amendment as it stands now would not be worth a straw to anybody.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to ask the minister if rifle clubs have a right to use those ranges?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Rifle clubs organized under the Act.

Mr. INGRAM. There are a number now who receive free ammunition, I understand.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They get assistance towards the construction of ranges.

Mr. GOURLEY. Are injuries inflicted upon these rifle ranges, as well as injuries inflicted upon headquarters' rifle ranges provided for in this particular amendment?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They are included if the shooting goes on under the regulations.

Mr. INGRAM. Does section 75 still stand in the Bill, providing that the cadet corps should be furnished with arms, ammunition and equipment under the conditions prescribed?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, that is there.

Mr. INGRAM. Take our high school cadet corps for instance. They use what is called gallery ammunition and the department have been selling this ammunition to these cadet corps for $3 a thousand. I understand that recently an order has been issued cancelling that arrangement and that the department will not now sell it to them.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Unfortunately we do not have it to sell. The quantity of that ammunition is dependent on the number of empty shells which are returned to the factory and we are not able to get anything like one quarter of the quantity we require.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. minister will see that the department is charging these corps $3 a thousand.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It costs $5 a thousand.

Mr. INGRAM. I think a good many were under the impression that the department made a small profit even at that price.

Sir F. W. BORDEN.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, this ammunition costs $5 a thousand and we were selling it for $3.

Mr. INGRAM. The rifle clubs are composed of men of all ages, men who are getting certain advantages from the Department of Militia and who will never be called upon to serve their country in the militia force. They are getting certain privileges that the boys who will be men in the course of a very few years are debarred from now.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We are able under this law to give them ammunition if we choose.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. gentleman furnish the cadet corps that belong to the high schools with free ammunition?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I should think it would be a very desirable thing to do, but I would not like to state off-hand that it will be done.

Mr. INGRAM. We have some efficient cadet corps which are a credit to the districts to which they belong and I think the department should encourage them in this way. I think that in this appeal I will have the sympathy of the hon. member for Labelle who is strongly in favour of the boys becoming better shots.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. minister promised to take two or three little suggestions into his consideration to-day. I spoke of the drill and pay of the cadets corps.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will consider that although I think that to pay young men in schools and colleges might not be desirable.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I refer to those who are permitted to go to camp. Paragraph (c) of section 73 of the Bill reads:

> The minister may authorize senior cadet corps, or any portion thereof, to be attached to any portion of the active militia for the purposes of drill and training.

I presume that means training in the camps.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No it does not; it means that they may be attached to a regiment but not in camp.

Mr. INGRAM. I am advised that the cadet corps are looking forward with a great deal of pleasure to being permitted to attend the camp even for one day. The cadet corps even in my own district are looking forward, as other cadet corps are in No. 1 military district, to being able to attend the camp at London for at least one day.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY—ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, it is eleven o'clock.

Mr. INGRAM. We have a notice to appear at a committee at 9.30 to-morrow morning. Does the right hon. gentleman expect that we can come here at eleven o'clock in the morning, remain here performing our duties until eleven o'clock at night and be here again at 9.30 to-morrow morning ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That seems reasonable.

Motion withdrawn.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House adjourned at 11 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, July 13, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

POST OFFICE ACT—AMENDMENT.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General) moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 153) further to amend the Post Office Act. He said : This Bill covers a number of details that will be more thoroughly understood when it is printed and in the hands of members. Section 6, I may mention, extends the time for letter-carriers to avail themselves of the privilege granted by a previous Act to come in under the new system of payment instead of the old system. Another section 10, makes provision for an allowance to letter-carriers for transportation in cities. There are no radical changes introduced. The other provisions will be better understood when the Bill is before the House.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read a first time.

REVISED STATUTES—AMENDMENT.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 154) to amend chapter 61 of the Statutes of 1903 respecting the Revised Statutes of Canada. He said : The object of this Bill is to correct two clerical errors that occurred in the Act passed last session with respect to the revision of the Statutes. In sections 4 and 11 the revised roll is spoken of as the last amended roll, and as there is only one roll this is likely to lead to confusion. There can be only one roll as respecting the Statutes, and this is to avoid any possible confusion respecting the use of this word in the Statutes.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you mean by the change to say that it shall not be the last revised roll ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In the original statutes it is called the last roll ; in the amended statutes it is called the amended roll, and there cannot be an amended roll under the Revised Statutes.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read a first time.

QUESTIONS.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC—EMPLOYMENT OF ALIENS ON SURVEYS.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. What action, if any, has been taken by the Department of Labour or the Government to deport the aliens brought in under contract to work on the surveys of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway ?

2. What action, if any, has been taken to prosecute the officials of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway who have pleaded guilty or been proved guilty of violation of the Alien Labour law ?

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General.

1. The Department of Labour has from time to time received some communications from His Honour, Judge Winchester, reporting certain employees or officials in connection with the Grand Trunk Pacific as liable to deportation, and these reports have been tranmitted to the Department of Justice to be acted upon, and I think they have been acted upon.

Mr. CLARKE. What action has been taken on them ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The Minister of Justice will explain that. In answer to question 2, the law does not provide for the government prosecuting in such cases as are referred to in this question.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). So far as I am concerned, my action has consisted in signing warrants authoring the deportation of those persons reported upon by Judge Winchester.

Mr. MACLEAN. How many of these were issued ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I cannot say exactly, six or seven.

Mr. CLARKE. Were they minor officials ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They were persons holding important positions, I think divisional engineers and persons who were in charge of surveys. I do not remember exactly their positions, but they were all persons of importance.

Mr. CLARKE. They were brainy enough to get out before the warrants were served ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I was not very anxious to cause their arrest provided they were willing to leave the country.

SALE OF TIMBER BERTHS.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE asked :

1. What timber berths have been disposed of in the Duck Mountains, in townships 32 and 33, ranges 27, 28 and 29, during the past year ?
2. When were they put up for sale ; where advertised; and the amount received for same?
3. What are the names of the purchasers.

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Minister of the Interior) :

1. One timber berth only has been disposed of in the Duck Mountains in townships 32 and 33, ranges 27, 28 and 29 during the past year. During that period a large number of permits have been issued in favour of settlers to cut timber for their own use on their land, and a permit was issued in favour of the municipality of Swan River to cut a considerable quantity of timber for municipal purposes.

2. The advertisement inviting competition for the berth in question, which is No. 1148, was dated the 9th of February last, and a copy thereof was inserted in 'The Dauphin Press,' published at Dauphin, and a copy was sent to the postmaster at Dauphin, with a request that it be posted in a conspicuous place in his office. In addition to this a number of the printed copies were sent to the Crown Timber Agent at Winnipeg, for distribution among such persons as he might think were interested in timber matters. Printed copies of the advertisement were also sent to the several individuals and companies interested in timber matters, who have had their names placed upon the mailing list of the department. The amount of the bonus paid for this berth was $1,010.

3. The successful tenderer was Mr. Alexander Keiller, of Swan River, Manitoba.

THE DREDGE 'RICHELIEU.'

Mr. MONK asked :

1. How long has the dredge 'Richelieu' been lying at the wharf at Sabrevois ?
2. What is the cost of maintenance per day of the said dredge ?
3. What is the wage-bill per day of said dredge ?
4. How many men are employed aboard of the said dredge ?

Hon. CHARLES HYMAN (acting Minter of Public Works) :

1. The dredge 'Richelieu' was detained at Sabrevois during sixteen working days, in order to complete repairs and painting.
2. About $25 per day while working.
3. $13 per day.
4. Ten, including tugmen and scowmen.

PAYMENT TO THE C. ROSS CO., OTTAWA.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. For what materials or work was the sum of $2,300.24 paid to the C. Ross Company, of Ottawa, as described in the Auditor General's Report for the year ending June 30, 1903, on page V—105 ?
2. On what portion of the Parliament Buildings was the said amount expended, and by whose order was the expenditure made ?

Hon. CHARLES HYMAN (acting Minter of Public Works) :

1. For furniture, carpets, rugs, curtains, drapery, upholstering, linen, bedding, &c., &c.
2. Purchased for the House of Commons, mostly for the Speaker's apartments, by the authority of the Minister of Public Works.

WORKSHOPS ON CORNWALL AND WILLIAMSBURG CANALS.

Mr. LENNOX asked :

1. Has the government built the workshops for serving the Cornwall and Williamsburg canals, referred to in Mr. Schreiber's letter and statement on page 33 of Vol. 1 of the Auditor General's Report for the year ending June 30 last ?
2. If so, are the shops completed, and if so, when ?
3. How many men are employed, and are they employed the year round ?
4. Are these shops operated by electricity ? If so, to what extent, and when was it turned on ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). The workshops are not yet built, but tenders are being invited for the work.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC SURVEYS.

Mr. LENNOX asked :

1. Has the government placed surveying parties between Moncton and Winnipeg, to explore, survey and locate the line between these points ?
2. If so, when, how many parties, and how many men are engaged ?
3. If not, why not ?
4. Has the govenment taken the survey of the eastern division out of the hands of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company ?
5. If so, when ? If not, why not ?
6. Has the amount to be paid or allowed to the company, in respect of surveys, been settled or agreed upon ? If so, what is the amount ?
7. In any case, what is the amount claimed by this company?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. The government have not placed surveying parties between Moncton and Winnipeg to explore, survey and locate the line between these points.
2. Number one answers this question.

3. Because arrangements are not yet ripe for so doing.
4. No.
5. Number four answers this question.
6. No.
7. Not aware of any claim having been made.

THE CATTLE-GUARD COMMISSION.

Mr. LENNOX asked :

1. Has the government allowed Mr. F. W. Holt, Cattle-guard Commissioner, for his services anything by way of extra allowance ?
2. Has the government finally determined not to allow Mr. Holt anything by way of extra remuneration ?
3. In claiming extra remuneration, and in support of his claim, Mr. Holt, in a letter of January 7, 1904, to Collingwood Schreiber, Esq., says : ' When the tests were completed, we had not then found a thoroughly satisfactory guard, &c., &c. It then became my duty to find out the reason. The only way to do this was to study the structure of the animal, as a piece of mechanism. This has been done, as to his anatomy, by the veterinarian as a surgeon ; but I have been unable to find an idea expressed as to his capacity as a machine, other than in his ordinary walk, in emergency motions, as in passing a cattle-guard. And it was from this point of view that I have had to treat it. In making this search, I have found there is very little literature available to the general reader, &c.' Has the government, in considering the question of extra compensation referred to, taken into account the claims of Mr. Holt as an expert in the matter above set out ?
4. Did the services of George Robertson, Esq., as commissioner, from August 16, 1892, to February 13, 1903, 181 days, include a Sunday service as such commissioner ?
5. Was Mr. Robertson paid for his services for said 181 days at the rate of $5 per day and his expenses, Sundays included ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. Mr. Holt has been allowed the salary upon which he was engaged with reasonable travelling and living expenses when absent from home.
2. The government see no reason to grant him extra remuneration beyond the sum per day agreed upon when he was employed.
3. Mr. Holt was engineer and as such the rate of his salary was agreed with him when engaging him. Not aware that he was an expert in cattle-guard construction.
4. Mr. Robertson was paid $5 per day for days he actually worked, which did not include Sundays, and reasonable travelling and living expenses when absent from home.

FLOUR STANDARDS.

Mr. E. D. SMITH—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. When were the flour standards last set ?
2. Is it the intention of the department to have them set this year ?
3. If not, why not ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) :

1. On June 3rd, 1903.
2. There would seem to be no necessity for further standards until a new crop comes in.
3. Answered by No. 2.

SPEED OF MAIL STEAMSHIPS.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

What was the average speed per hour made during the year 1903 by steamships carrying British and Canadian mails from ports in the United Kingdom to Canadian ports ; and from Canadian ports to ports in the United Kingdom, respectively ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The average speed made during the year 1903 was as follows :

West bound—
Summer—Moville to Rimouski, 12·7 knots per hour.
Winter—Moville to Halifax, 9·9 knots per hour.
East bound—
Summer—Rimouski to Moville, 13·2 knots per hour.
Winter—Halifax to Moville, 11·6 knots per hour.

DUTY ON TOBACCO.

Mr. BELL asked :

1. What amount of duty, excise and customs, was paid on tobacco in the years ending June 30th, 1903 and 1904.
2. What part of these duties was due to the increased duty imposed by the tariff of 1897.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Inland Revenue) :

1. Excise duty, year ended June 30th, 1903, $4,883,552.59. The amount for 1904 cannot be given, as returns from outlying divisions are not yet all received at department.
2. From excise $1,513,968.28, made up as follows : From foreign raw leaf tobacco, $1,249,569.17 ; from additional duty on cigarettes made from foreign raw leaf, $264,399.11.

DEATH OF MR. JOHN McINTOSH, M.P.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The press has already informed the members of this House that it has been our misfortune to lose one of our colleagues, in the person of Mr. John McIntosh, member for the city of Sherbrooke. Mr. McIntosh has been carried away after a severe illness which had lasted for many years ; in fact, when Mr. McIntosh entered this House, some four years ago, he was already suffering from the illness which finally caused his death, and at that time, as I am personally aware, it was only his strong attachment to his party and his long and well-deserved popularity in the city of Sherbrooke, which induced him—nay, rather compelled him—to accept the candidature and become a member of this House. Under such circumstances, it was not possible for Mr. McIntosh, as a member of this House, to give us the full measure of his abilities or to enable us to judge what sort of man he was. I do not believe that even to his friends on the other side of the House the real man was fully known. Perhaps in this sense I was more privileged than many of his political friends, because for a great many years it was my personal privilege to know him—I will not say intimately—but, at all events, sufficiently, I think, to be counted as among Mr. McIntosh's friends. It will be eighteen years next fall since I first met Mr McIntosh. I then met him during a contest in the eastern townships, which was bitterly fought—if that expression is not too strong—between the two parties in the province of Quebec. I had then the privilege of meeting Mr. McIntosh many and many a time, and then and there I formed the highest possible estimate of his character. At that time, I may say without exaggeration, he was a perfect type of manhood, physical manhood, and manhood in every sense of the word. Nor am I at all exaggerating when I say that I do not think I ever met a more honourable man. It is with all my heart that I associate myself with the mourning of his friends and of his family.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thank the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) very much for the very appropriate and kindly words which he has uttered in regard to Mr. McIntosh. The lamented death of that gentleman has caused many regrets, not only on this side of the House, but, I am sure, on the other side as well. Mr. McIntosh had filled many important public positions in this country, and it is true, as the Prime Minister has said, that we have not seen him at his best in parliament, owing to the suffering which he continually endured from the fatal disease which eventually carried him off in the prime of life. His entry into this parliament was, I believe, induced by the most absolutely unselfish and patriotic motives. He came here against his will at a time when he felt that the interests of his country and of his party demanded that he should do so. Since his entry into parliament I have always found him a faithful colleague and a true and unselfish friend. I believe that the public life of Canada has not produced any better or higher type of public man than that which John McIntosh exemplified. He endured his illness with characteristic fortitude and with true Christian resignation. It is only a day or two since I received a letter from him, in which he spoke in the most calm and philosophical manner of the sufferings he was enduring and of the prospect of a release. I am sure that we can extend to his family and to his friends the sincere condolence and sympathy of every member of this House without exception.

Mr. T. C. CASGRAIN. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, as an old colleague of Mr. McIntosh in the Quebec government, I may be permitted to add my humble testimony to the eloquent tributes which have just been pronounced by my right hon. friend, the Prime Minister, and the hon. leader of the opposition, upon the passing of the hon. member for Sherbrooke, one of the most esteemed members of this House. His death, although not quite unexpected, still came as a shock, not only to his friends on this side of the House, but, I am sure, to the members on the other side as well.

Mr. McIntosh was first returned to the legislature of the province of Quebec in 1886. In 1890 he came back before his constituents, and owing to his popularity, victory did not desert him, although the Conservative party were then struggling under very trying circumstances. As a matter of fact, Mr. Mercier had so endeared himself to the hearts of the people that it was no easy task for his opponents to secure a favourable verdict. But as Mr. McIntosh had won the confidence and the esteem not only of the people of Sherbrooke, but of every class of the community in the eastern townships, he succeeded in overcoming those difficulties. In 1892, Mr. de Boucherville having been entrusted with the responsibility of forming a cabinet, Mr. McIntosh was invited to enter the administration; and later on, when the Taillon government succeeded that of Mr. de Boucherville, our late lamented colleague was again asked to become a member of the administration. In the various positions which he has filled, whether as a member of the Quebec legislature or as a member of the government of that province, it may truly be said that his never-tiring industry and his ideal devotion to the common weal never faltered. He was also chosen as a representative of our province at the great Chicago fair, and there also he discharged his duties in such a manner as to elicit universal praise. The many regrets caused by the lamented death of Mr. McIntosh are not circumscribed to the eastern townships, but I am warranted in saying that they are shared by the whole province of Quebec.

I join heartily in the kind words uttered by my right hon. friend, the Prime Minister and by the hon. leader of the opposition, and I voice the feelings of sorrow caused on both sides of the House by the death of so highly esteemed a colleague.

Mr. RUFUS H. POPE. May I be permitted to add a word to what has been so eloquently said by the leader of the government, and by the leader of the opposition, on this sad occasion. The late Mr. McIntosh entered public life as the representative of the county which I now have the honour to represent in this House. I knew him personally for many years, and I can say that he was an honest and noble-hearted man, who possessed to a remarkable degree the confidence of all nationalities and of all political parties in the eastern townships. Beloved by those who knew him most intimately and respected by all in that section of the country, his public and private life will long be remembered as worthy of emulation by those who follow him.

POST OFFICE MATTERS.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I wish to draw the attention of the Postmaster General to a letter I received this morning from the Frankville post office, in the county of Leeds, and a portion of which letter is as follows :—

> You told me not to stamp letters addressed to you in Ottawa. I must say that our postmaster refused to send them without stamps and offered to bet me any amount that there was no law to bear me out in any such thing. Please give me the plain facts.

I imagine this is a newly-appointed postmaster, and I would like to know from the Postmaster General whether postmasters are instructed not to receive unstamped communications addressed to members of parliament in Ottawa ? I understand the law to be, that all communications addressed to members while the House is in session are carried through the mails free of postage. This postmaster has absolutely refused to obey the law, and I wish to know from the Postmaster General what justification he has.

Sir WILLLIAM MULOCK. I do not know whether my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) questions me for the purpose of determining who should win this bet, or whether it is to know if that postmaster is discharging his duty.

Mr. TAYLOR. There was no bet ; the postmaster offered to bet, but my constituent very properly would not bet with him.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. There was no one to take the postmaster up. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) has correctly stated the law on the subject,—is that the envelope in your hand ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes ; addressed to 'Geo. Taylor, M.P., Ottawa' ; and he had to put a two-cent stamp on it.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Well, if my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) makes a requisition we will have the two cents refunded along with that small item for express charges referred to last year. I will see that the postmaster in question, if a new man, be instructed in his duties so that my hon. friend will not suffer any more.

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN. I received a post office order from Joilette, P.Q., yesterday and I notice that it is printed entirely in the English language. I have always seen these forms in both English and French, and of course in a county like Joliette as well as in other parts of Quebec it is a very serious inconvenience to the people who wish to send post office orders and who may not understand the English language. Has there been any change made, and if so, why are these forms not printed in the French language ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. This is the first I have heard of such a matter, and I think there can be no such change. It may be that there has been a mistake on the part of the postmaster in handing out an English form to a French-speaking citizen. I presume that in some of the offices where the patrons speak both languages it is necessary to supply the postmaster with forms printed in each language, and through inadvertence the postmaster likely issued the wrong form. My hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) may rest assured that the department has in no way authorized a departure from the proper procedure which would insure that an English form should be given to an English patron of the post office, and a French form to a French patron. I will attend to the matter.

SCHOOL OF MUSKETRY.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have received a communication to the effect that the young men who have come here to learn musketry are being taxed for the maintenance of clubs, for the maintenance of an extra mess, and for extra furnishings generally. I am also informed that privates are called upon to act as servants to officers, and that these young men who are brought from the farms to learn musketry are subjected to prison discipline. They cannot leave the camp grounds unless they get a pass and they must be in at a certain hour in the evening or they are disciplined. I am told that a number of officers and men were informed that they need not bring extra clothing or bedding, but that they had to purchase them here at considerable expense. I do not know whether or not the officer in charge of the musketry school is responsible for this. This officer goes on to say that he thinks the country pays the Cartwright family dearly enough without having the men who come to take the musketry course taxed by this extra expense. I do not think the people of this country want the young gentlemen, privates or officers who come here, to be subject to prison rule. I do not believe that a young man who comes here and chances to be a private, should give up one hour of his time to act as servant to any officer, nor do I think that the country should pay these men to act as officers' servants. I direct the attention of the minister to these grievances which I believe are founded on fact, and which should be stopped at once. I do not ask him to give any answer to-day, as I have not had time to give him notice that I would bring it up.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This school of musketry has been in operation for a couple of years, and this is the first time I have heard any complaint. I was not aware that the system in force this year differed from that of previous years. I am sorry that my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) saw fit to make the reference he did to the Cartwright family. I scarcely see what that has to do with it, and I am sure that my hon. friend himself would be the last man to say or to insinuate that any charges that may be imposed on officers attending the school could go into the pocket of as honourable a gentleman as Col. Robert Cartwright is known to be. I am sorry that he made that gratuitous slip. I am very glad, however, that he has called my attention to the fact, and I will make inquiry and be prepared to make a statement on the subject.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. My remarks did not directly or indirectly lead to the inference that one dollar or one farthing of this money went into the pocket of Col. Cartwright, and the minister must have known that. But if the Cartwright family have to be provided for at the public expense, it will have to be done without taxing the officers on the ranges. The minister must not run away with the notion that we are going to bow down to the Cartwright family or any other family in this country.

DISMISSAL OF LORD DUNDONALD—LETTER OF W. T. R. PRESTON.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to remind the right hon. First Minister that a week ago I brought to the atention of the House a communication which had been addressed to the London 'Times' by Mr. W. T. R. Preston, Canadian Immigration Agent in London. The Minister of the Interior said that his attention had only been drawn to the matter that morning. I said that I would take the liberty of bringing it up again for the purpose of asking for some information as to the policy of the government in regard to members of the civil service addressing communications to the public press. The questions I asked last week were :

Is it within the line of Mr. Preston's duty to write such communications and have them published ? Do the government approve of his action ? If they do not approve of it, have they disapproved of it ; and what means have they taken to express their disapproval ? Has any communication passed between the government and Lord Strathcona about this matter ?

I understood from the Minister of the Interior that it would be quite acceptable to him if I drew his attention to the matter at a subsequent date, and I take the liberty of doing so now.

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Minister of the Interior). The matter to which my hon. friend alludes has received the attention of the government, and as a result it has been determined to despatch a letter to Mr. Preston, which I expect will be sent to-day, intimating to him that in the view of the government the letter he has written is entirely contrary to his duty as an official of the government, and reprimanding him for having written the letter.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the hon. gentleman if he would lay a copy of the letter on the Table ?

Mr. SIFTON. Yes.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the day are called, I wish to bring to the attention of the House the use made of the press gallery by some journalists. In the 'Mail and Empire' of yesterday, containing a report sent from this gallery of the discussion on the Militia Bill, I find the following :—

House Discusses the Militia Bill—Mr. Bourassa in Evidence—Objects to Command being Declared Vested in the King—Displays Militarism Bogey.

Ottawa, July 11.—The Militia Bill was before the House of Commons to-day, and good progress was made in committee. There was a great deal of heated discussion as a result of Mr. Bourassa's opinions on various points proposed. He objected to the command-in-chief being declared to be vested in the King. Instead of this, he wanted an amendment declaring it vested in the Governor in Council. This amendment was forced to a vote, and no one supported Mr. Bourassa.

I never make much effort to gain, I will not say the eulogy, but even the fairness of the Tory press, especially in regard to anything I may say outside of the House ; but as a member of the House, I protest against the use which is made of the privilege granted to journalists who take reports of the debates in this House, in order to send out falsehoods as accurate reports. The House knows very well that this is the exact opposite of what I contended, and of that amendment which I brought before the House. The purpose of that amendment was, on the contrary, to insist on the principle that the command-in-chief of the militia is vested in the King, but that the exercise of that command belongs to the Canadian government. Most of the other newspapers of Canada reported it correctly, but the 'Mail and Empire' took occasion to make such an attack on the amendment and to report the discussion in such a way as to enable that newspaper and the Tory organization of Ontario, I suppose, to say that the member for Labelle wants to cut all ties which unite this country with the United Kingdom. I do not at all mind this accusation, but as a member of the House of Commons, when it is a question of the privilege belonging to the press by virtue of the goodwill of this House, I have not only a right, but I consider it a duty to protest against this kind of reporting being done in the press gallery of this House.

THE MILITIA AT SYDNEY.

Mr. A. S. KENDALL. I would like to ask the government if they will, with as little delay as possible, place on the Table of the House all correspondence relating to the recent placing of militia and regulars in the town of Sydney ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is no objection.

SUPPLY—THE AUDITOR GENERAL.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the motion is put, I would like to bring to the attention of the House some matters referred to in the Auditor General's report for the present year, more especially his suggestion that amendments submitted by him for the consideration of parliament some two or three years ago should be taken into consideration and dealt with without further delay. There is no doubt whatever that the powers and the position of the Auditor General are of great importance to the people of this country. He is the officer of parliament more especially, and it is for members of parliament on both sides of the House, irrespective of party, to consider fairly and impartially any suggestions made by him as to desirable amendments of the Audit Act, for the purpose of enabling him more thoroughly to safeguard the interests of the country and more effectively to protect the public treasury. Whatever opinion may be entertained as to Mr. McDougall's reasonableness or unreasonableness in regard to certain matters which have been before parliament in the past, I think every one will credit him with the desire and intention of performing his duty fearlessly and impartially. He was appointed by the government of Mr. Mackenzie in 1877 or 1878. When the succeeding administration of Sir John A. Macdonald came into power, he was of course retained in office, and I believe that so far as Sir John A. Macdonald as Prime Minister of this country had the power to support Mr. McDougall in the performance of his duties, he was always found ready to do so, and was always prompt to recognize his work, his courage and his fidelity as a public officer. Since the present administration came into power there seems to have been more friction between Mr. McDougall and the public departments than formerly prevailed. It is in the very nature of things that some friction should prevail between the Auditor and those departments of the government which he is called upon to check.

I do not at all place out of sight the fact that under preceding administrations Mr. McDougall was occasionally over-ruled and that a certain amount of friction may sometimes have been occasioned by his attitude with regard to certain public expenditure. I have not studied the history of the past so as to know to what extent that did prevail, but no doubt it did prevail to some extent. Since the present administration came into power, that friction seems to have increased, and it has reached its culmination at present, when the Auditor General has, after having given warning on more than one occasion tendered his resignation on the ground that his usefulness as a public officer is gone. He gives two reasons why his usefulness has gone. One is that he is very frequently overruled by the Treasury Board, and the next is that he does not consider the Consolidated Revenue Act in its present condition sufficient for the purposes of his department. The subject was brought up by him, I think in 1899, and in his report dated the 9th of March, 1904, he uses this language :

> The following rather lengthy correspondence is introduced in this place because it illustrates the practical importance of several amendments that this office has been asking for some years to have made to the Audit Act.
>
> The amendments to provide : 1st. That no contract with the government be made after the work is completed ; 2nd. That in contracts given without tenders, or where tenders have been called for and the lowest tender has not been accepted, the proper officer of the department be required to certify that the prices are fair and just ; 3rd. That in all cases the technical officer on whose expert knowledge the department relied when making the contract, be required to supply the fullest information to the Auditor General and all other government officials who have the duty of dealing with contracts.

Further on in the same report he says :—

> The magnitude and number of the transactions going through this office are now so increased that I feel parliament should seriously consider also the amendment of the Audit Act along the other lines suggested in a former report, to enable this office to cope with the expansion of the business of the country. I feel so strongly on this point that if parliament does not see its way to bring the matter up this session, I shall at the end of the session ask to be superannuated.

Mr. McDougall is an officer of parliament. We are obliged, I think, to look at his recommendations to parliament as those of an impartial officer who has no end to serve other than to perform his duty. Therefore, the Auditor General's suggestions should commend themselves to parliament for consideration and for such action as may seem wise along the lines suggested.

There was a motion earlier in the session by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), which pointed out the advisability of having the whole question referred to a committee of the House for inquiry and report. That motion was not acceded to by the government, and I now propose to make some suggestions as to certain matters which I think ought to be dealt with at once; and in making these suggestions, I shall conclude with a motion pointing out in general terms the necessity of making some amendments to the Act. And because my motion must necessarily be couched in general terms, I shall take occasion to indicate the matters in respect of which I think the Audit Act might profitably be amended.

In the first place, let me say that the Auditor General has dealt in his report with the so-called Davis contract for the lighting of the Cornwall canal. I do not propose at this moment to deal with that question as I shall deal with it later on when the House is in committee, and when there will be better opportunity of discussing it. But let me call attention to one or two sentences which the Auditor General has used with regard to that contract, In a letter of the 7th July, 1902, Mr. McDougall uses this language in addressing the Secretary of the Treasury Board:

> Then I may call your attention to the rather singular fact that there were two arrangements in connection with the matter. The first was made eleven days before the election of June 23, 1896, and the second twenty-nine days before that of November 7, 1900.

There is a suggestion in that which has been interpreted in a certain way by a portion of the public press, and I desire to point out that the Auditor General has not been quite so accurate in his dates as possibly he might have been expected to be. I am not saying this by way of reproach, but desire to call attention to the actual dates in order that any misapprehension which has been disseminated by the press should be removed. Let me say that in the documents brought down there is an agreement of the 25th of June, 1896, made between the government and Mr. Davis, in which reference is made to certain Orders in Council, dated respectively 18th of February, 1896, and 12th of June, 1896. In order that the true position may be laid before the country, I shall read those Orders in Council. I did not obtain them until yesterday, although I made application more than a week ago. But Mr. Schreiber informed me that on account of the pressing engagements of the clerical staff of the Railways and Canals Department, he could not possibly hand them to me until Monday morning. The first Order in Council is as follows:—

> On a memorandum dated 8th February, 1896, from the Minister of Railways and Canals, recommending that authority be given to lease to Mr. Michael P. Davis of Ottawa, Ontario, a certain lot of land belonging to the Cornwall canal containing by admeasurement 4·88 acres. be the same more or less, and more particularly described as follows:—
>
> All that piece or parcel of land being part of lot No. 1 at the lower end of Sheik's Island, in the township of Cornwall, in the county of Stormont and province of Ontario;
>
> Commencing at a point 123 feet in a southeasterly direction from the centre line of the entrance channel to the regulating weir and at right angles thereto and in line with the extreme lower end of the side walls of the weir; thence southeasterly on a prolongation of the last course 530 feet, more or less, to the water's edge of the River St. Lawrence; thence northerly following the water's edge to a line parallel to and seventy feet distant from the centre line of the roadway on the lower Sheik's Island Dam; thence westerly along said parallel line 240 feet more or less to its intersection with a line parallel to and 125 feet distant from the centre line of the entrance channel to the regulating weir; thence southerly along said parallel line 490 feet more or less to the post planted at the southwesterly angle of the land described; containing by admeasurement 4·88 acres, be the same more or less, and as shown on the sketch plan hereunto annexed, coloured red:—together with so much of the surplus water, if any on Lock No. 20 level, Cornwall canal, as the Minister of Railways and Canals may deem advisable, after navigation and existing mills and mill sites hereinafter to be leased are supplied, the lessee also to have the privilege of using at a weir to be hereafter constructed by him the water flowing into the said canal from Hoople's creek, the said lot of land and the said surplus water and flow of water from Hoople's Creek to be held for the erection of an electric plant and the operation of the machinery therein for the term of twenty one years from and after the first day of July, 1896, and ended on the 1st day of July, 1917, and thereafter for a term of twenty-one years renewable, at a rental of one thousand dollars per annum payable in advance upon the 2nd day of January and the 1st day of July in each year, dating from the first day of July, 1896, the rent for the first two years not being charged. The lessee to supply electric power for the working of all the locks on the Cornwall canal at sixty-three dollars per horse power per annum, and also electric direct current arc light of not less than 2,000 candle power at thirty cents per light per night, as set forth in the indenture of lease hereto, annexed—
>
> The minister further recommends that the said lease of land, surplus water and flow of water, be upon the terms and conditions set forth in the indenture of lease hereunto annexed, which is hereby submitted for approval, and that he, the minister be authorized to execute the same on behalf of Her Majesty.

The committee submit the above recommendations for Your Excellency's approval.

(Sgd.) JOHN J. McGEE,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

The next Order in Council is one bearing date of 12th of June, 1896, and is as follows:

On a memorandum dated 22nd May, 1896, from the Minister of Railways and Canals, representing that under date the 12th May inst., the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals has furnished an amended plan and description of the parcel of land, 4·88 acres in extent at the Lower Sheik's island dam on the Cornwall Canal Reserve, authority for the leasing of which to Mr. M. P. Davis was given by Order in Council of the 18th of February last, which also approved of the draft of the proposed lease.

The minister recommends that the plan and description hereto attached be substituted for the plan and description attached to or embodied in the said Order in Council, and that the draft of lease approved thereby be amended to the effect of such substitution.

The committee submit the same for your Excellency's approval.

(Sgd.) JOHN J. McGEE,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

What I desire to draw to the attention of the House and the country is this: If dates are of importance in considering this contract, it is especially of importance to note that the Order in Council upon which that agreement was made bears date of 18th February, and not of 12th June. The only effect of the additional Order in Council of June 12th is to provide a new plan and description of the lease which had been approved as far back as 22nd February; and it is further to be noted that the new Order in Council of 12th June was made upon a memorandum dated 22nd May, from the Minister of Railways and Canals. Therefore, the Order in Council upon which this agreement was made is of date 18th February, 1896, except in so far as the description was slightly amended upon a memorandum dated 22nd May, 1896, confirmed by Order in Council of 12th June, 1896.

Now, the one difficulty which the Auditor General has experienced, as he tells us, in dealing with matters touching public contracts and affecting the expenditure of public money, is that he has no power, where overruled by the Treasury Board to prevent the expenditure of money even though the circumstances attending the making or modification of the contract and the payment of the money are such as, in his opinion, should demand the fullest possible investigation. And the criticisms which have been made upon the report which he has presented to parliament and the country point to the possibility that the two political parties may be so concerned in a matter of public expenditure that neither the one nor the other would press for an investigation by parliament. Now, it is better, when suggestions of that kind are made, either impliedly by the Auditor General or openly in the public press, that some power should be given to the Auditor General or some other officer by means of which that investigation can certainly be instituted and carried on without regard to the interests that might be affected. It is for that reason that I am suggesting to the government to approve of a Bill, a copy of which I have already handed to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick). This Bill I suggest not as one which is to be followed ipsissimis verbis, but as one setting forth a principle, an idea, which, I think, might be safely acted upon by the government, and which would tend to produce in the minds of the people greater confidence in the powers of the Auditor General and in the safeguarding of the public treasury. I will read the draft Bill to which I have referred and make a few comments on it as I proceed:

An Act to amend the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, and the Acts in amendment thereof.

His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

1. The Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, chapter 29 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, as amended by 51 Victoria, chapter 7, 54-55 Victoria, chapter 16, and 57-58 Victoria, chapter 19, is hereby further amended, by adding thereto the following as section 58 (a) immediately after section 58.

58 (a) (1) In case any contract involving the expenditure of public money has been entered into or modified, or in case any public moneys are about to be paid or have been paid under the order of the Treasury Board after refusal by the Auditor General to certify to a cheque therefor, and in case the Auditor General is of opinion that the making or modification of such a contract, or the payment or proposed payment of such moneys was not, or is not in the public interest and that the circumstances attending the same require investigation, he may file with the registrar of the Exchequer Court of Canada a petition addressed to the judge of the said court praying that the making or modification of such contract, or the payment or proposed payment of such moneys and all circumstances relating to, connected with or attending the same may be investigated by the said judge who shall thereupon proceed to investigate the same with all convenient speed, first giving due notice of the time and place of such investigation to the Attorney General of Canada and to all other persons interested. Every person so notified shall be at liberty to attend and be heard upon such investigation. The Auditor General shall attend and may be represented by counsel upon such investigation. The said judge at the conclusion thereof shall file his report upon the matters aforesaid with the Auditor General and the same shall be included in the next annual report of the Auditor General and laid before the House of Commons for such action thereon as parliament may deem necessary.

That is a provision which should be acted upon by the Auditor General only under very grave circumstances. It is a very large power to give him, but it is a power which, perhaps, might be given him with safety. If he is of opinion that a public contract has been entered into, or—what is more important—has been modified in the interest altogether of the contracting parties, not in the interest of the public, or if he believes that the payment of public moneys has been made, or is about to be made, under such circumstances as demand careful investigation, then he is at liberty under such grave conditions to file his petition with the judge of the Exchequer Court and have that investigation which he deems necessary, irrespective altogether of the action which either political party or both parties may take in parliament with regard to the matter. The second subsection of this proposed section, is as follows :

(2) Upon the filing of such petition by the Auditor General notice thereof shall forthwith be given to the Minister of Finance by the registrar of the said court and except with the written consent and approval of the Auditor General no payment under any such contract so made or modified or under any such order of the Treasury Board shall thereafter be made until after the conclusion of such investigation and until thirty days after the report of the judge shall have been laid before Parliament.

Provided always that whenever it shall appear to the judge that the exigency of public interest requires that some part or the whole of such a payment shall be made before the conclusion of the investigation or before the expiration of the said period of thirty days, the judge may authorize such payment in whole or in part, and the same may be made accordingly.

That is a very important provision, and it should be acted upon of course by the Auditor General only under grave circumstances, and where he thought the facts were sufficiently serious to justify him in so doing. It would enable him to stay the payment under such contract or modified contract, or under any overruling of the Treasury Board, until the matter had been thoroughly investigated before a judge of the Exchequer Court, and until his report had been laid before parliament for action. It is a very important step, I admit, to pass legislation of that kind ; although I must call the attention of the House to the modification which has been embodied in the draft I submit. It is that the judge of the Exchequer Court shall always have power, under such conditions where in his opinion the exigency of the public service demands it, to permit the payments to proceed, even although the Auditor General still withholds his consent. Now I admit fully that we must look at this question from every standpoint, and while I think the principle which I am contending for in this clause is a correct one, I have an open mind as to the means by which and the limitations under which that principle shall be carried out. On the one hand, we have to consider the safe-guarding of the treasury and the protection of the public interest ; on the other hand, we are not to put arbitrary power into the hands of any one man, even an Auditor General, which will prevent men who enter into contracts with the government from receiving from banking and other financial institutions that credit which they have been receiving in the past, and which is absolutely necessary if there is to be that competition in the performance of public works which is eminently desirable in the public interest. There is an idea in that section which may require to be modified. but there is an idea which I think might safely be embodied in some such language as that which I have suggested. The third sub-paragraph is as follows :

3. No payment under an order of the Treasury Board authorizing the issue of a cheque which the Auditor General has refused to certify shall be made until ten days after such order has been made and a copy thereof, with the accompanying reasons, delivered to the Auditor General by the secretary of the said board.

The idea is that after the Treasury Board has overruled a refusal of the Auditor General to certify a cheque for expenditure out of the consolidated revenue fund, the Auditor General shall have a certain period within which he shall determine whether it is desirable for him to undertake such an investigation as that which has been provided for in the first subsection of section 1 which I have drafted. Then my draft Bill proceeds as follows :

4 The judge may examine any person on oath or affirmation on any matter pertinent to such investigation, and may cause a subpœna to be issued from the Exchequer Court commanding any person therein named to appear before him and to testify to all matters within his knowledge relative to the matter under investigation, and to bring with him and produce any document, paper or other thing which he has in his possession relative to the matter under investigation and reasonable travelling expenses shall be tendered to any witness so subpœnaed at the time of service.

5. If for any reason the judge deems it advisable he may issue a commission for the purposes of such investigation in like manner and with the like powers as are set forth in section 57 of the 'Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act,' with regard to examinations by the Auditor General, and the provisions of sections 57 and 58 of the said Act shall apply to such investigation and to the persons summoned for the purposes thereof.

6. The judge shall in all matters relating to such investigation have all the powers and authority of the Court of Exchequer with regard to matters within the jurisdiction of said court.

7. The procedure and rules of the Exchequer Court so far as applicable shall apply to such investigation and the judge of the said court may from time to time make, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, such further or other general rules with regard to such investigations as he may deem necessary.

8. The provisions of the preceding seven subsections of this section shall apply to all contracts, payments and matters referred to, or reported upon by the Auditor General in his report for the fiscal year ending 30th day of June, 1903.

I have inserted that special provision because of the suggestion of the Auditor General to which I have already referred, a suggestion to which I called the attention of the House. He is mistaken as to the dates. This contract was entered into, as he says, eleven days, but upon an Order in Council made some four months before the general election of 1896, and the auxiliary contract, if I may so term it, was entered into also shortly before the general election of 1900. There is a suggestion in that which, as I have already said, has been the subject of some criticism, and for that reason I propose to make the provisions to which I have already referred apply not only to the future but also to all matters which are reported upon or dealt with by the Auditor General in his report for the year 1903. That provision gives ample power to thoroughly investigate the Davis contract.

I will now read section 2 of the proposed Bill :

2. Section 32, subsection 1 of the said Act as amended by the Act 51 Victoria, chapter 7, section 5, is further amended by adding thereto the following as subclause (d) immediately after subclause (c) thereof :—

(d.) The members of the Treasury Board shall furnish reasons for their decision, which reasons shall form part of or be attached to the written order of the board.

I do not think that this is an unreasonable requirement on the part of the Auditor General ; indeed it is necessary for his guidance in the future. If he has so misconceived his powers or duties as auditor as to refuse the payment of public moneys under circumstances which call for the intervention of the Treasury Board, then it is right, not only for the information of the public, but also for his own guidance and his own consideration in the future, that the reasons which have impelled the Treasury Board to overrule him in that regard should be stated to him and reported by him to Parliament.

The third section of my draft Bill is as follows :

3. Section 48 of the said Act as amended by the Act 51 Victoria, chapter 7, section 10, is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor :—

(48.) In reporting as hereinbefore directed for the information of the House of Commons, the result of the examination of the appropriation accounts, the Auditor General shall call attention to every one in which cheques have been issued without his certificate—or in which a grant has been exceeded—or in which money received by a department from other sources than the grants for the year to which the account relates has not been applied or accounted for according to the directions of parliament—or in which a sum charged against a grant is not supported by proof of payment—or in which a payment so charged did not occur within the period of the account, or was for any other reason, not properly chargeable against the grant, or was in any way irregular,—

So far the statute proceeds exactly as it is at the present time. What I am reading further is new. My proposed amendment continues as follows :

—or in which a sum charged against a grant for capital account was expended wholly or in part for a purpose properly chargeable to revenue account, or in which by reason of the generality of the appropriation, or otherwise, he has been unable to properly check or control the expenditure, or to confine it to what he believes to have been the object of the House of Commons in making the grant.

It seems to me that these are matters in respect to which the Auditor General should report to parliament, because they are matters of importance, and it is well that parliament should be informed as to irregularities or defects of that kind.

The fourth section of the Bill which I have drafted is as follows :

Section 21 of the said Act as amended by 51 Victoria, chapter 7, section 1, is further amended by striking out the words 'four thousand' and substituting therefor the words.

I have left a blank here so as to suggest an increase in the salary of the Auditor General. His salary at the present time I believe is $4,000, and it has continued at that sum for a long period of time. As deputy ministers and others have had their salaries increased within recent years, and as the cost of living has undoubtedly increased during that period, and as the Auditor General is an old and a faithful public servant, it seems to me it would not be out of place at the present time to give him some further consideration in the way of a salary, and it is for that purpose I have drawn section 4 of the Bill in its present form, leaving of course for the consideration of the government and of parliament what should be the increase to his salary.

Before sitting down I would like to say a few words about the suggested Audit Act which was submitted to parliament with the report of the Auditor General some three or four years ago. In the first place the Auditor General suggests that his title should be changed to 'The Controller and Auditor General of Canada.' That is not a matter perhaps of very great importance and for my part I see no reason why the title should not be so changed; it is more of form than of substance.

The first important change that I observe in the suggested Audit Act proposed by the Auditor General is that in section 24 he suggests an omission which gives to him, uncontrolled by the Treasury Board, the power to make orders and rules for the conduct of the internal business of his office. For my own part I would regard that as a reasonable request. I think we might safely trust to the Auditor General the power to make rules for the internal business of his office.

The next matter of importance, if it is of importance, is his suggestion that the account to which all public moneys, from whatever source of revenue derived are paid in, should be called 'the Canadian Exchequer Account,' instead of the 'account of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General.' In regard to this the Auditor General expresses his views as follows :

> It is important that the public should understand clearly that the money is not in any way the money of the government until after it has been provided by parliament.

Therefore the Auditor General suggests that the account, instead of being called 'the account of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General,' should be called 'the Canadian Exchequer Account,' and in that change he says we will be following the example of the Imperial Audit Act. That however I do not regard as of so much importance as the amendment which he suggests with regard to section 30.

Section 30 is altered very much in the form which he has suggested. The most important amendment it seems to me which he has proposed is that he desires credits to be issued in favour of the deputy head, an accountant of a department, or to two officers, clerks or other persons, connected with the office or service charged. As I understand it the credit here referred to might be spoken of as the petty cash service of each department. Of course very large sums actually are paid out of that account but relatively speaking, it is, as it were, the petty cash service of each department. A credit is made at the request of the Auditor General, by the Minister of Finance and Receiver General in favour of each department and out of that credit moneys are paid for certain public services and in the end the moneys so paid out of that credit are audited and checked by the Auditor General. He suggests that these credits should be made to the deputy and the accountant of each department, or to at least two officers of the department and I think that would be a desirable amendment.

He makes a further suggestion which is also of importance. He suggests that :

> No such credit shall issue in favour of any officers or other persons in excess of (the) appropriations authorized (and assigned as above, or when, in using previous credits, the applicants have disobeyed an Act of parliament or other valid regulations).

He suggests also :

> These credits shall be used only for such class or classes of payments as the Controller and Auditor General may direct.

And further :

> If the Controller and Auditor General notify one of the persons in whose names a credit has been issued, that such credit is not to be used for any specified purpose, such credit shall not be used for such purpose, but for any payment to be made for such purpose a cheque on the Canada Exchequer Account shall be applied for.

I understand the reason for his proposal is this : Under the present Act where the Auditor General has made a credit which is available for the use of a public department, he may afterwards find that under some contract, or under some modified contract, a payment is proposed which he feels he could not sanction, and he may go to the officers of the department possessing that credit and express his views in that regard. But they are entirely at liberty to disregard his views ; they may continue to make payments of which he expressly disapproves out of these credits, leaving him only the opportunity of criticising after the payments have been made instead of objecting and withholding the payments, as he otherwise might do. I would be inclined to think that the two suggestions on this line are well worthy of consideration by this House, and I do not see that the administration of public affairs would be in any way hampered by complying with the desire of the Auditor General in this respect.

I frankly and fully admit that in dealing with the suggestions of the Auditor General we must have in mind always the fact that there is ministerial responsibility for public expenditure and we must also bear in mind the fact that we must not so hamper the administration of public affairs that it cannot be carried on efficiently; but, subject to those two qualifications, it seems to me that we ought to place in the hands of the Auditor General all possible safeguards for the protection of the public interest and the public money.

I may say very frankly that I would not be inclined to assent to some of the suggestions which the Auditor General has made as to section 33 without further explanation and a better understanding of how they could be fairly and properly carried out having regard to the considerations which I have mentioned, but there are two suggestions with regard to section 33 which I think might well be taken into consideration by the government. One of these suggestions is :

If an official of any department, dealing with a claim against the government, knows that the claimant is indebted to the government, whether the indebtedness is of record in the department or not, he shall take no part in the payment of the claim against the government, except to the extent that the amount due by the government exceeds that due to it.

The principle of this proposed amendment seems to be a very proper one, although possibly the language of the Auditor General might require modification in order to carry out his idea.

Another suggestion made by the Auditor General is in reference to section 37 :

The Controller and Auditor General may require the production of any public document connected with any expenditure which is before him for examination.

At present I do not see that there can possibly be any objection to his having that power ; in fact it would seem to me that in the public interest he ought to have that power. Some of these suggestions that he has made with regard to section 33 would seem to me to interfere with the theory of ministerial responsibility and with the efficiency of the public administration and would rather place the Auditor General in the position of a Court of Appeal from the administration in respect to matters which must be absolutely entrusted to them under our system of responsible government. Therefore, without more fully understanding what exactly is meant or required by the Auditor General in making these propositions, I would not be inclined to support him with regard to them.

Another suggestion which he has made which seems to be worthy of consideration is in reference to section 47. Section 47 is as follows :

If, during the progress of the examination by the Controller and Auditor General hereinbefore directed, any objection arises to any item to be introduced into the appropriation account of any grant, such objections shall, notwithstanding such account has not been rendered to him, be immediately communicated to the department concerned ; and if the objections are not answered to his satisfaction by such department——

The statute at present continues as follows :

—they shall be referred by him to the Treasury Board, and the Treasury Board shall determine in what manner the items in question shall be entered in the annual appropriation account.

The Auditor General's suggestion is that it should read as follows instead of the language which I have just read :

And if the objections are not answered to his satisfaction by such department he shall disallow the item, or make such change as appears to him proper.

I would be inclined to think that the suggestion of the Auditor General in this regard is a wise one and that there is no good reason in the public interest why that suggestion should not be acted upon.

I think these are all the suggestions of the Auditor General that I find necessary to call attention to at present. It seems to me that the subject is worthy the immediate consideration of the government. I regret that the government did not see fit, at an earlier stage of the session to submit the whole question to this House for the purpose of enabling us to give to it that consideration which we cannot give to it now, and which would probably have been productive of better results than we may hope for at this late period. For the purpose of bringing the matter before the House, and not in any way as a motion of want of confidence in the government, but in order that a discussion may arise on the whole subject, I beg to move :

That all the words after the word 'that' in the main motion be left out, and the following substituted therefor :—

In the opinion of this House the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act should be so extended as to confer upon the Auditor General powers ample in every respect to protect the public interest and to safeguard the public treasury.

That resolution must necessarily be general, because I cannot very well introduce the provisions of an Act of parliament into a resolution. I have submitted to the House my views in regard to the amendments which ought to be made, and whether they are made or not they are at least entitled to the earnest and careful consideration of this House before they should be disregarded.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). The leader of the opposition has moved an amendment which expresses an abstract opinion, and which perhaps would have had no very definite meaning, if my hon. friend had not in his remarks associated with his motion certain proposed amendments to the Audit Act. It is therefore our duty to deal with the amendment in which he proposes to express the opinion of the House ; that the consolidated Revenue and Audit Act should be so extended as to confer upon the Auditor General powers ample in every respect to protect the public interest and safeguard the public treasury. From my own point of view I am unable to vote for that motion inasmuch as it implies that the existing powers are not sufficient for the purpose. I differ entirely from the Auditor General, I differ entirely from my hon. friend if he agrees with the Auditor General, when he implies that the powers of the Audit Act are not at this moment ample and sufficient for the protection of the public treasury. The principles underlying the Audit Act were established long years ago under certain conditions, and the conditions existing now are precisely the same as they were then. The volume of business has increased, but that simply means that you have to give to the Auditor General a large staff to do his work. There are no new principles; no new difficulties, nothing has occurred in the administration of the Audit Act under the present government that has not occurred frequently under the administration of all other governments. Therefore, the suggestion that some need has arisen for a new provision in the Audit Act, is a proposition to which I am unable to give my assent. I do not quite understand what the leader of the opposition meant when he said that he regretted that the government had not seen fit at an earlier stage of the session to submit this whole matter to the House. In what manner could we have submitted this matter to the whole House?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I referred to the motion for a committee to investigate the whole question of the Audit Act.

Mr. FIELDING. That motion was made by my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) and the leader of the opposition regrets that it was not acceded to by the government. I think he might have added that that motion was not acceded to by the opposition, because I think I am correct in stating that when the time came to divide the House on that motion there were not a dozen members present on the opposition side, and several of these had remained for the purpose of voting against the motion. The motion was not even pressed to a division, so that when my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) complained that it was not acceded to by the government he hardly puts the case fairly. The motion to which he refers was practically condemned by both sides of the House as something, if not uncalled for, certainly as something that did not commend itself to the judgment of the House. There is no difficulty about the Auditor General having the most full and ample power to investigate. From the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) one might assume that there was some difficulty in regard to the Auditor General's power to make inquiry. There is absolutely none. Under the Audit Act at present, the Auditor General is properly vested with large powers; unlimited powers to investigate everything in connection with the public accounts. He has unlimited power to audit; he has even the power to obstruct, which was never the intention of the Audit Act at all. There is no lack of power to the Auditor General in the Audit Act, and if our friend the Auditor General wants more power, it is not that he may audit the public accounts, but that he may deal with matters which the Audit Act never contemplated as coming within the proper sphere of the Auditor General's duty. I join with my hon. friend the leader of the opposition in giving credit to the Auditor General for what he believes to be a faithful discharge of his duties. The nature of the Auditor General's business makes him critical; hypercritical, suspicious, sensitive. He is somewhat like a police officer in a court of law whose zeal for conviction is so strong that the judges look upon his evidence with a degree of doubt and always discount it a little. The Auditor General, by the very nature of his business falls into an atmosphere of suspicion, and he sometimes sees difficulties where none exist. I do not say that as against Mr. McDougall, but I say it as a condition which is likely to arise out of the very nature of his work; and so very often we have the Auditor General raising questions which are not questions of audit, but which are questions of public policy. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) has associated with his motion suggestions as to certain amendments to the Audit Act. I have never had the pleasure of seeing them or hearing them until they were read in the House to-day, and it would not be wise for anybody to reach conclusive opinions from a very hasty knowledge of a matter of such importance. I do not anticipate that at this stage of the session we would be able to give that subject the grave consideration which it ought to receive if we were to undertake to deal with it. My hon. friend has remarked that the Auditor General, is in a particular manner the servant of parliament. That is true, and that indicates that in a particular manner every member of parliament perhaps has a little larger responsibility in dealing with the affairs of the Auditor General, than in dealing with the affairs of the ordinary government official. The leader of the opposition has reminded us that as far back as 1899 the Auditor General began to make complaints as to the need of amendments to the Audit Act, and he has read from a more recent report several changes which the Auditor General desires. My hon. friends opposite have therefore had the Auditor General's views before them for three or four years, and I am bound to believe that if they thought there was any good ground for complaint and any real need of amendments to the Audit Act in the public interest, they would have brought them forward before this, and not waited until the last stages of this session to come forward with an abstract motion simply stating that we need larger powers for the Auditor General. I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) has established any case for a change, but certainly before we could undertake to make the change which he has suggested, the House would have to very carefully consider its position. Without following my hon. friend closely through the proposed amendments which he read, one fact comes out straight and clear, and that is that the control of the expenditure of public money is to be taken from the people's parliament and given to the judge of the Exchequer Court. That is the essence of the whole proceeding, that is the foundation of the proposed Bill.

It was Sir John Macdonald who on one occasion said that among the many rights which the parliament of Canada possessed was the right to do wrong, and it was better that parliament should exercise its right to do wrong than that other people should deny parliamentary rights. The principles of parliamentary government are such that we are bound to believe that the people through their representatives will deal with every grievance ; and the attempt to get behind the people's representatives, to create some other tribunal, to take the place of parliament, especially in matters of money, and to give that body power independent of the government and parliament to deal with these matters, is a step in the wrong direction ; and we on this side of the House are not prepared to take it. We have no reason to suppose that treasury boards and governments under either party are likely to be composed otherwise than of honourable men. It is not necessary for the purpose of our discussion to assume that on one side or on the other there would not be a desire to protect the public interest. We are bound to assume that men placed in the high position of ministers of the parliament of Canada, though they differ in their political stripe from men across the House, will in the main be honest and conscientious in their desire to protect the public interests ; and any assumption that on the part of the government or the Treasury Board, and still more by collusion and bargain with hon. gentlemen opposite, there is to be suppression of truth and justice and violation of the public interests, is something that we say this parliament could not assent to, but is something that hon. members on both sides should resent, whether it comes from the Auditor General or anybody else.

On the general questions involved I do not wish to say any more ; but I would like to say a word or two in regard to what is called the Davis contract, to which my hon. friend has referred in the course of his remarks. I will deal with it only generally, because I have not charged my mind with the details. There is a very erroneous impression conveyed to the public as to the action of the Auditor General on that subject. The claim of Mr. Davis arose out of a series of contracts, one beginning in 1896. Some point is made of a difference of a few days in dates in 1896. I do not suppose a few days are more important in 1896 than they are in 1900, and we need not dwell on that. A claim was made by Mr. Davis for moneys alleged to be due under his contract. That claim came before the department. The department reported that the money was due, and applied for a cheque. The Auditor General objected, and then the matter came before the Treasury Board. The Treasury Board inquired into it, and the view they took was this, that whether the contract to which that claim referred was or was not an improvident contract, the claim was one which probably had a foundation of law. We called upon our proper officers to advise us whether or not it was a lawful claim. We were advised that the money was due. Whether or not the contract was wisely made, whether the prices were high or low, whether the quantity of power to be taken was greater or less than it was prudent to take —all these were legitimate questions to debate at a certain stage, but not at that stage, because we were advised that the money was due. The Treasury Board therefore decided that they were bound, under the advice given them, to overrule the objection of the Auditor General, and that that account, up to the date to which it referred, if it was one which could be collected by process of law, was an account which we were bound to pay. But there was a clause in the original contract made by the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) in 1896, that the government might acquire possession of all these works of Mr. Davis. In that clause there was an opportunity for a remedy if the contract was found to be an improvident one ; and the Treasury Board took the view that though we would be obliged to pay Mr. Davis's claim up to the date to which he had rendered his account, whether we should continue to do so thereafter was a proper matter for inquiry. That was the position of the matter then. The Treasury Board were not called on to decide whether or not it was an improvident contract. What they were called on to consider was whether or not Mr. Davis's claim was legally and properly due ; and, after legal advice, the accuracy of which has never been questioned, we decided that the claim would have to be paid. Thereupon the Treasury Board passed a minute overruling the Auditor General and deciding to pay the claim. Before that minute came into effect, before any action was taken upon it, some conversation occurred between some of my colleagues and the Auditor General regarding that claim. Just from whom the suggestion first came I do not know, but the outcome of that conversation was that it was thought better to hold the matter open for a time, and enter into negotiations with Mr. Davis to see if another contract could be made which would be more satisfactory to the Auditor General ; and at the request of the Auditor General in writing, that minute of the Treasury Board was cancelled, and was to be treated as null and void and as no part of the public record. Why the Auditor General, after that minute of the Treasury Board was nullified by agreement made it a subject of discussion and comment in his report I have never been able to ascertain. After the cancellation, negotiations were entered into with Mr. Davis—perhaps he came to the conclusion that the government might obtain relief by buying out the works—and an amended contract was made. Not a dollar has ever been paid in any other way. The claim of Mr. Davis was, if I remember correctly, $40,000 or $50,000, and the Auditor General arranged that a payment should be made on account, and a considerable payment was made. The view of the Treasury Board was, not that that contract should stand for ever, but that so much money as was due should be paid ; but that the question of further proceedings under that contract was one that should be considered—that in some way or other a change might be brought about—that the question of an amendment to the contract should remain open for further negotiations. Subsequently an amended contract was made and approved, and agreed to by the Auditor General. I was at that time temporarily acting as Minister of Railways, and was called on to sign the contract.

Mr. HAGGART. Did the hon. gentleman say that it was agreed to by the Auditor General ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, assented to by the Auditor General ; I say that decidedly. The papers came before me as acting Minister of Railways, but in the light of what had happened, I said I would not sign the contract until I was aware that it was approved by the Auditor General. He did approve of it, and the contract was signed. As I have said, the Auditor General agreed that the minute of the Treasury Board should be cancelled and treated as null and void, and I have never been able to ascertain why, after having agreed to that, he dragged it into his report and made it the subject of comment. That is the whole history of the Davis contract so far as it has come under my observation .

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken referred to the attendance in this House when I moved to have this matter submitted to a committee. He said that there were then present not more than eight or ten members on this side. I am not aware that the hon. minister himself (Mr. Fielding) was in the House on the occasion referred to. I am informed he was not, but if he were, he certainly took no part in the discussion. One would have expected that in a matter so closely affecting his department, the hon. minister would have given us the benefit of his experience and have explained how it came to pass that he so frequently has had to come in conflict with the Auditor General. He however had nothing to say. He remained as silent as the sphinx ; and now that he has at last delivered himself, one is not surprised that he should have remained so long silent. Let me point out to him that he is not quite correct in his recollection of what took place. The motion I had the honour to move was declared lost upon division, as recorded in 'Hansard.'

Mr. FIELDING. There was no division.

Mr. LENNOX. And I do not at all agree with the hon. gentleman in his estimate of the number who were in the House. But what we all must recollect is that we had just closed what might be regarded as the railway session of this House. We had just concluded our labours on the Transcontinental Railway question and were wearied out with long sittings. And further we were on the eve of having submitted to us that important deliverance which the Finance Minister gives us once a year, the budget speech. So that it was not at all surprising that at half-past two o'clock in the morning the attendance in the House should have been rather slim. But if the hon. minister flatters himself that I have not the support of hon. members on this side, let me assure him that he is entirely mistaken, and allow me to assure the House that if it were practicable at this stage, this side of the House would favour the adoption of the motion I had the honour to introduce and have this whole matter referred to a select committee, as I suggested, to be chosen by the right hon. the leader of the government without regard to politics.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at Three o'clock.

Mr. LENNOX. When the House rose, Mr. Speaker, I was referring to some remarks made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). That hon. gentleman was concerned about the point that when I was speaking on this important question there was not a large representation on this side of the House. That, perhaps, having regard to the importance of the question then debated, was unfortunate. But I might point out that it was still more unfortunate that the Minister of Finance, who is particularly charged with responsibilities in these matters and who, above all other members of the cabinet, should be the one possessed of a competent and adequate knowledge of the working of the Audit Act, the gentleman to whom, above all others, we should look for the originating of ideas of importance in regard to this Act, was not present when the matter was formerly discussed. It is still more significant and important, it is still more remarkable, that that hon. gentleman has not found it possible to be present now when the House reassembles. As to the hon. gentleman's suggestion that this matter had been long delayed, if it affords a reason for reference to that matter at all, affords only the reason that it is much more important and much more the duty of the government now to take the matter in hand for the very reason that it is late and because already the delay has been too long. Justice delayed is equal to injustice ; and I venture to say, having full regard to my responsibility as a member of this House, that great injustice has been done to the people of this country by the fact that for so long the government has neglected its duty to introduce an amendment of the Audit Act upon some such lines, or to some such extent as that advocated by the Auditor General. The Auditor General has had more than a quarter of a century experience of such matters. Not only was he originally appointed by the friends of the present administration, but, for eighteen years while the Conservative party were in power, they never ceased to laud him, a position in strange contrast to the position of the Minister of Finance to-day, for he speaks of the Auditor General as a gentleman who necessarily brings to the duties of his position an attitude of suspicion—one would not wonder at that at all, it is natural enough, considering the facts and the circumstances,—and he finds it impossible to describe the Auditor General except by likening him to a detective. This may be very nice, and may seem quite appropriate to a gentleman like the Finance Minister, but I venture to say the people of the country will look upon his utterances and upon the attitude of the whole government with suspicion, when they reflect that for eighteen years the present administration and their friends in the House and upon the hustings could not find language sufficiently eulogistic in which to describe the Auditor General, but the moment that gentleman gets in their way, the moment he stands between them and the people, the moment he stands by the treasury of the country, and asserts the powers which parliament intended to clothe him with when the Act was introduced by a Liberal administration in 1878, the moment he takes the position of standing by the will of the people as against the will of the administration and they find they can go no further except by the removal of the Auditor General—that moment they begin to make it so inconvenient for him that he cannot stay ; he must get out. Nor is this an isolated instance. It is different in degree and different in some of its features from the position taken in reference to the hon. member for St. Mary's (Mr. Tarte), it is somewhat different from the position taken by the government in regard to the former Minister of Railways, (Mr. Blair) ; it differs in some features from the attitude of the government in regard to Lord Dundonald :—but they are all of the same general class, and indicate the same determination that when any public official or member of the cabinet stands in the way of these gentlemen, when they cannot march on at their own sweet will, that public official or the member of the cabinet who stands in their way must go. Now, the Minister of Finance ought to be here this afternoon. He ought to be here and take his medicine. Because when an hon. gentleman is charged with the duties which have been committed to him for so many years, and who has excelled only in one line, and that is in congratulating himself every year that he has done so exceedingly well, and when it comes down to business in dealing with this question of adequately safeguarding the people's interest, that hon. gentleman ought to be here. It is too much the habit of the administration, I think, to shift responsibility from one member of the cabinet to another. Too often do we see this farming out of responsibility, so that when we call one of the ministers to task, we find that somebody else acts as his sponsor. If it is the Minister of Railways, who is called to task, then it is the Minister of Justice who replies. I need not multiply instances, for we find it constantly occurring that when a department is under fire some one else must stand up and answer for the minister who is properly responsible for that department. So, I suppose some one other than the Finance Minister, some one who knows nothing about the matter in a practical sense, will be expected to answer the arguments advanced by the opposition this afternoon. If the government likes to take that position, of course, it must do so. It is not a strong example of the true workings of the principles of responsible government, though it is the only exemplification we have here. Though the hon. Minister of Finance has found it convenient to be away, I am glad that the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is in his place. I hope that the Finance Minister having argued this matter upon a different basis from that on which it was argued the other night, the rest of the cabinet will assume responsibility for the words of the Minister of Finance and take the same position as he did. But, at all events, we have heard the hon. gentlemen opposite applaud the Minister of Finance this morning and will see what they think of the statements of that hon. gentleman when they are critically examined. The minister of Finance tells us that he will vote against this resolution, and he gives his reasons. What are the reasons given by the hon. gentleman ? The first is that the adoption of such a resolution would imply a defect in the Act. Could folly further go? Why, this same hon. gentleman introduced an amendment to the Act last session, which, in the face of the country and in the face of the opposition he dare not put through. Now, that was either right or it was wrong. If it was right, the Act is defective to-day; if the Act is not defective, the Bill introduced by the Finance Minister last session had no justification. On one or other horn of the dilemma, the minister must ride, and so must those who support and applaud him. But the Minister of Finance was inconsistent even during his remarks. He said he would take the matter into consideration, but he would have to vote down the resolution. That little inconsistency, however, is hardly worth referring to. But the minister says the Act is satisfactory. And yet there is not one suggestion or objection of the Auditor General during the whole time these hon. gentlemen have been in power that has not been overridden. I am not going to be dragged into a discussion of the details of the Davis contract at this stage, because we are going to have that up in the right way. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) would like very much to let the government down easy by dealing in a general way with the Davis contract and diverting public attention from the matter which is at issue, namely whether we shall have an Act that will more adequately protect the public interest than the present Act: whether we shall have some amendments which time has shown are absolutely necessary in the public interest.

The hon. gentleman says that another reason for voting against these resolutions is that no new conditions have arisen. Well, he must have been sleeping for a quarter of a century. When this Act was introduced more than a quarter of century ago, the hon. gentleman who introduced it, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), pointed out that it was not required until then because the revenue and expenditure had been small, but that the expenditure had increased to about $40,000,000 a year, and therefore an Audit Act had become necessary. As time went on the expenditure increased, and these hon. gentlemen pointed out from year to year the vastly increased responsibilities of the Auditor General until now we come to an entirely new condition of things. Down to 1888 we had been enlarging the scope of the Auditor General's power, and in that year we had it announced by Sir Charles Tupper, and concurred in by members on both sides of the House, that what was originally intended had been reached, namely, that the Auditor General then had control of every branch of the public service, and of every branch of the financial affairs of the country. That was agreed to at that time as a proper condition of affairs.

What have we been doing since then? We have been gradually encroaching upon the domain of the Auditor General, and the Minister of Finance is among those who would have shorn him to a very large extent of those powers, which he fortunately possesses at the present time. Now we find that the government attempted last year to rob the Auditor General of some necessary powers that he possessed, even going to the extent by that Bill of allowing the librarian to overrule the Auditor General if occasion should arise. I say that we now find this condition of things, we find it denied that the Auditor General has any power over the expenditure of this House, that this is to be regulated by the Committee on Internal Economy; we find that the Auditor General, instead of having his powers what they were, is gradually, so far as the government can do it, having his powers circumscribed. And we are confronted by this important new condition of things,—and this is what is alarming the country at the present time, that the government has committed itself to an enormous expenditure which is to be controlled by the administration to a degree that no other large expenditure has been controlled by an administration in the history of Canada. We have the whole eastern section of the Transcontinental Railway controlled directly by the administration and placed in the hands of three or four nominees of the Crown. 'Nominees of the Crown' is a euphemism. It means that this whole expenditure is to be controlled by three or four men who have been political supporters and henchmen of the government, and who will be more emphatically henchmen of the government after they get their appointments. Then surely it is time that we had every safeguard applied which can be applied for the regulation of this very important branch of the public service.

Now, I referred to the Minister of Finance and to his suspicious attitude with regard to the Auditor General. I think it comes very badly indeed from the Minister of Finance to open out upon the Auditor General in the way he did to-day, to show the animus he did; pointing out, as he did, that in his view because the Auditor General has ventured to assert himself in opposition to the departments, he therefore cannot be tolerated any longer. That is the sum and substance of what the hon. gentleman said. Yet, in 1886, Sir Richard Cartwright was the first to move to increase the salary of the Auditor General, who was then watching over the acts of the Conservative administration; and in 1888, when Sir Charles Tupper introduced an Act to increase the salary of the Auditor General, every member of the present administration who was then in the House, and all the prominent men of the Liberal party at the time, Mr. Mills, Mr. Weldon, Mr. Edgar and the right hon. leader of the present government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), joined heartily with Sir Charles Tupper in his description of the merits of the Auditor General, and of the important duties that he was discharging. Now, I think it would be a dignified and manly attitude for the present government and the Minister of Finance in particular, to speak and act on the lines that Sir Charles Tupper adopted at that time. Let me therefore refer to the language Sir Charles Tupper then used :

> During the last year, as his office steadily progressed, the government have delegated to him the power of auditing the receipts of the Dominion. In fact, it may be said, that at this moment every cent received or paid out on account of the Dominion of Canada is subject to the review and audit of the Auditor General.

Then Sir Charles Tupper points out, in a very decided contrast to the attitude of the present Minister of Finance, that this official was keeping track of the Conservative government and was opposing them, and yet he was prepared in a generous and statesmanlike way to applaud the Auditor General.

> The accounts of the election held in 1887 were reviewed by him, and claims on that head reduced by some $26,000 ; similarly on the franchise accounts, claims have been reduced by some $61,000.

That, I guarantee, was applauded by the opposition of that day. And Cir Charles continues :

> It would be impossible for members on either side of this House to overrate the careful and painstaking ability of that officer or his conscientious devotion to the duties of the most important office which he discharges. He is in every sense of the word an officer of parliament. Although he has felt it occasionally to be his duty to differ with members of the administration, and with the conduct of the affairs of the public departments in carrying out the details of his office, I have no hesitation in saying that he has discharged his duties in such a way as to win the confidence and hearty approval of every member of the government, as I am sure he has earned it of every member of both sides of the House.

That is what I expect of statesmen ; that is the generous statement I would expect at all events from the men who selected the present Auditor General, who put him in office and who applauded him on every occasion, inside and outside of the House, for eighteen years and not—I was going to say contemptible, but that would not be parliamentary—and not the very doubtful position taken by the Minister of Finance today in regard to that official. Now the hon. gentleman complains of the attitude of the Auditor General ; he does not think it is what it ought to be. Well, the public, I venture to say, will think it is pretty nearly what it ought to be. Hon. gentlemen are fond of pointing out that upon legal questions the Auditor General is sometimes not correct. That may be so, but I venture to say that any one who reads the overruling cases in the Auditor General's Report and marks the language employed by the officials of the department which is attacked—and it is very often upon the Railway Department that the attack is made, and therefore I would particularly mention the language of the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals—the correspondence which passes between the Auditor General and the department—would be surprised at the moderate attitude maintained by the Auditor General throughout these discussions. Sneers and insults mark the progress of the correspondence almost from end to end, and it seems to be the rule that the moment the Auditor General raises a question, that moment he is confronted by every official in the department which is attacked. Talk of suspicion ! Why it is suspicion from end to end by the department with slurs intervening. I venture to say that when this whole matter is ventilated as it will be, I hope, during this session of parliament, the people will be amazed at the moderate attitude, at the self-denying attitude, adopted and maintained by the Auditor General in the face of the most enormous provocation from time to time.

An hon. MEMBER. Carried.

Mr. LENNOX. If it depended upon the hon. gentleman who has just spoken to carry anything it would not be carried very far. The hon. gentleman says it is too late to deal with this question. Well if it is too late whose fault is it that it is too late ? We asked at the earliest possible moment in the session to have this Audit Act taken up. We presented it without regard to politics. I made a distinct point in the motion I made and in urging that motion that it would not be regarded as in any way a political question. I am sure that I spoke in a line which gave the government every reason to take it that I was sincere in saying that I did not regard it as a political matter, and yet, although we can have commissions by the score, we can have no committee for this matter. Perhaps I made a mistake, perhaps I should have asked for a commission. A commission would have involved, perhaps, the appointment of political friends ; it would probably have involved the payment of money out of the public treasury. There might then have been good enough reasons for the appointment of a commission, but I asked for a committee of the House, unpaid, devoting their services to the country, men on both sides of politics. No committee could be granted, although we have the Chinese Commission, the British Columbia Labour Commission, the Miners' Yukon Commission, the Elevator Commission in Manitoba, the School Question Commission in Manitoba, the Cattle-Guards' Commission, the Railway Commission, the Transportation Commission, the Crow's Nest Pass Commission, the commission to inquire into the Garneau charges, the West Elgin Commission, the Treadgold Commission, and scores of other commissions. Yet when it comes to a question of the people's money, when it comes to a practical question, to a business question for a business government, then there is no time to go on with it. There is time enough for railways. We can have almost the whole of last session devoted to one railway company and a large portion of this session to the same company. I brought this matter up at the earliest possible moment after the railway business had been disposed of and yet we are told by the Minister of Finance to-day that there is not time to go on with the matter. Then the hon. gentleman has the bravery—we will call it that, because I do not want to call it any unpleasant word—he has the bravery to say: Oh, you gentlemen slept on your rights. He says that this proposal of the Auditor General was put in the form of a proposed Bill three or four sessions ago, and that the hon. gentlemen on this side have not brought it up until now. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that if it had not been that the House was engrossed last session with railway legislation, that the whole progress of the affairs of this country was blocked by reason of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, I would have introduced this matter last session. Probably a score of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House know that I had this same Bill before me last session and contemplated moving it if there had been any reasonable probability of getting the government to consider the ordinary every day wants of the people of Canada, instead of engrossing the attention of parliament with railway matters and affairs of that kind. Of course if the government want to take the attitude that they are going to act merely for the great corporations and that the time of parliament is to be reserved for that purpose, then the hon. gentleman is perfectly consistent in saying that it is too late to-day, when the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) introduces these proposed amendments to the Audit Act. Let me tell the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that while he touched only upon the fringe of the questions proposed to be dealt with by the leader of the opposition, he need not imagine that hon. gentlemen on this side of the House are going to be led away from the issue by his reference to the Davis contract. There will be time enough for them to face that matter within a very short time; we are coming to the discussion of that matter, I understand, as soon as we get into Committee of Supply, but for the present we do not propose that the Minister of Finance or other members of the government or their supporters shall evade the issue now presented to them, and that is why, having regard to the enormously increased expenditure which the government is contemplating, the new conditions that have arisen and the difficulties which time has shown to exist in the Act, we intend to force them to state whether they are prepared to deny the reasonable measures of justice which have been suggested by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) or whether they are prepared to take the matter into consideration and pass it through at this session of the House. I put no confidence in the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that we cannot dispose of this question at this session. Why, two or three hours, half a day at all events, carefully devoted to the consideration of this question will, if not make a perfect Act—I suppose we cannot expect that—at least improve the Act upon the lines suggested by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) or upon lines which would commend themselves to the consideration of the House. Let me tell the hon. gentleman, when he refers to the Davis contract that although we are not going to pursue it at present, although we will leave that for its proper time and not allow the government to fall easy by having it disposed of piecemeal, he is entirely away from the fact when he states that the Treasury Board always intended to modify that contract.

Any one who reads the correspondence sent between the department and the Auditor General will see that every line of it is a denial of there being any foundation for the charges made by the Auditor General, and that, far from intending to take this matter up at any future time the government absolutely denied there was the faintest grounds for an investigation of any kind. There is another emphatic reason why we should not allow the Minister of Finance to draw us away from a discussion of this amendment. The Davis contract is not by a score the only case of gross scandal which rises out of the action of the government in this matter of overruling the Auditor General. Although the Davis contract deals with larger figures —I am not going to let these gentlemen on the other side make so much noise, and I will name them if they do not keep order—although the Davis contract is the more recent, it is not by any means the most glaring case of injustice to the Auditor General, and, through the Auditor General, of injustice to the people of this country. The Corry & Laverdure contract was hedged about with the most emphatic statements that no extras would be allowed unless they were determined upon previously by a written requisition at stated prices by the chief engineer. And yet, by an overruling of the Auditor General which cannot be sustained by any reasonable intendment of the law, we have paid to these contractors $125,000 more than Mr. Schreiber, the chief engineer would certify for. The view taken by the Auditor

General in that case was that the duties of the chief engineer could not be delegated, and that under the statute the certificate of the engineer must be given. On both these points Mr. Newcombe, in the end, just as the matter was being closed up, decided that the Auditor General was absolutely right, but yet the Treasury Board overruled the Auditor General, with the result that there was paid out $96,000 more than the engineer would certify for. But that is not all. The Minister of Finance says that the Audit Act is perfect, and because we imply that it is not perfect, he says he will vote against the amendment. Let me call the attention of the committee to the fact that three days before the House closed last year the Minister of Finance was the instrument by which, after giving that $96,000 to Corry & Laverdure, more than they were entitled—if I were not in parliament I would properly describe it, but when I get to the hustings in Ontario I shall call it a clear steal.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, you can shout if you like. I say that notwithstanding the opinion of the Justice Department on the two points referred to, Corry & Laverdure got $96,000 more than they were entitled to, and at the close of last session, in apparently innocent and harmless words, the Minister of Finance told us that this firm was entitled to $28,901 more by way of interest, because of the delay in the payment of the principal amount. He did not suggest to the House that there was a dispute over this matter, nor that the chief engineer, whose judgment was to be taken on the contract, was unable to certify that one dollar of this money had been earned. Take the Faran's Point canal contract. This is another case which I suppose the Minister of Finance, if not the First Minister, will be prepared to sustain as a just and equitable overruling of the Auditor General by the Treasury Board. They made the Farren's Point canal contract one of the most cast-iron contracts that could be made, and naturally one would think that the government should be applauded for framing such a contract. But there is a wheel within a wheel. They made that cast-iron contract, because none but friends of the government could tender under it. There were to be no extras; the contractors did everything on their own risk, and independent contractors could not apply, but a favourite of the government puts in his oar and says: I will take the contract, and I will engineer the extras afterwards. Under the contract the government could stop the work whenever they liked; the government need not let the contractor work until they liked, but this mattered not to the contractor who was a friend of the government. That is the end of the hard and fast contract business so far as the country is concerned, but after that comes the hard and fast run by the contractor as to how much he shall make out of it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. LENNOX. Hon. gentlemen may say 'oh,' but they may talk until they are blue in the face, and they cannot convince the electors that there was not something wrong about this. Under the contract the contractor was not allowed to put in a claim for extras, but he did put in a claim for extras for steam shovels amounting to $5,000 or $6,000. And what happened? The government engineer and the government officials joined one and all in saying that that extra must be paid. To sum up, the result was that the government actually paid more for these steam shovels, which stood idle, than they would have paid if the steam shovels had been fully equipped and at work from day to day. And yet the employees of the government, the high officials of the government, the engineer of the government, the resident engineers of the government, vied with each other in saying that it was all right. Why? You ask me why; I don't know, you will have to find out. Another illustration. There was in all a claim for $70,000. It was said that the department did not know whether the foundation would be of wood, or stone or of cement, but they presumed it would be of cement. The contractor bought 2,000 barrels of cement. He did not use it. A wooden foundation was put in, and he was allowed profit on that. What else did the government allow him, for no reason that I can find out, but I suspect for some good and cogent reason, if you could get at the bottom of it. They allowed him on 2,000 barrels of cement $1 a barrel for the profit that he would have made if he had used it. That only made $2,000 of prospective profits, although the contract said there were to be no prospective profits. Then they allowed him $1.25 a barrel for the loss upon the cement, although it is certified in the engineer's report that he sold it to a neighbouring contractor for the price he paid for it. $2.25 a barrel extra was allowed on these 2,000 barrels of cement. That is not all. He was allowed for delay of the steam shovel; he was allowed for putting down tracts, for piers, and for unwatering. Let me sum all this up by saying that $70,000 was paid to this contractor for items just such as I have referred to. I think I shall not do any more than my duty if I bring all the details of this matter before this House before we go home. We are in a hurry to go home; we are in a hurry to have an election; we are in a hurry to beat these men, as I believe we shall beat them when we have an election; but I believe it is my duty to stay here and fight out this matter on these lines, if it should take all summer.

Let me refer to the question of responsible government raised by the Finance Minister. The Finance Minister rushes in, as some people do, where it is dangerous to rush in—you know the adage; and I have noticed that he is always ready to rush in on a constitutional question or a question of law. I do not dispute the great ability of the Finance Minister on matters which appertain to his own department; but I always do feel amused when he begins to deal with constitutional questions and questions of law. However, it does not do us as much harm as it does himself. Though he is concerned about the proposal of the hon. leader of the opposition, he only refers to one feature of that proposal. With all the varied knowledge that the Minister of Finance possesses by reason of his close association with this question, he can only pick out one point raised by the hon. leader of the opposition to suggest that there is any difficulty in the way. Let me assure the hon. gentleman that if any question involving an infringement of constitutional rights, or any diminution of the powers and responsibilities of responsibile government, were involved, the hon. gentleman might be assured, from the history of the past, that no men would be more alive or more astute in opposing the proposed change than the members of the opposition in this House. There is no such question involved. The leader of the opposition proposes that there shall be a safeguard for the people's money; in other words, that you shall not get the responsibility fixed only after the money has gone into the pocket of the contractor, and from the pocket of the contractor part of it has gone God knows where. What the aim of the leader of the opposition is, is this, that in a case of sufficient magnitude, and involving a question of very grave doubt as to the right of the department to take the position which they are taking, the Auditor General may apply to the Exchequer Court, not for a decision of the Exchequer Court controlling the exercise of power by the administration, but merely that if it appears to the court to be a case of sufficient importance and gravity, and where a sufficient prima facie case is made out, they shall stay the payment of the people's money to the contractor until the House assembles and has an opportunity to pronounce upon it. It may be, and probably will be, that the administration will still take the bit in their mouths, and put the matter through by the force of numbers; and that seems to be the idea of the Minister of Finance whenever he talks on this question. He thinks it a question of numbers; I think it a question of right. The leader of the opposition has proposed that in such cases there shall be that safeguard for the people's money—that the Auditor General shall not be compelled to pay it out until the matter has been investigated by the Exchequer Court and reported to the next session of parliament—but with a proviso. The leader of the opposition foresees that there might be instances in which a hardship might result; and therefore he provides that in cases of urgency, the will of the administration shall in the meantime prevail and whatever money is necessary to have paid out in the interest of the service shall be paid, even though in the end it might result in an unjustifiable loss to the country. The hon. Minister of Finance therefore need not be at all anxious about the question of responsible government. Parliament will retain control, and parliament will have something tangible to deal with, instead of being met by the difficulty that we have been met with in the past, of having it said when this matter comes forward that it is almost an idle question to deal with, because it has already been disposed of. Let me point out another evidence of the far-seeing wisdom of the Conservative party as contrasted with the somewhat limited vision of the Liberal party, by reading a few lines of what Sir Charles Tupper said on this very point in 1878, when this Act was introduced. He said:

> The difficulty that appears to present itself to my mind is this. You are professing to give the public an independent parliamentary officer, but who is to see, before the payment of the public money, that under the law it is entitled to be paid. If you leave the government power to override his decision and pay the money, what then is gained by the Bill?

Experience has shown that every word of that is written in wisdom, and it is absolutely necessary in the interest of the public that there should be, not a control of the administration by the Auditor, but control of both by parliament—and as I pointed out, when I spoke on this subject before, I do not advocate anything that would infringe in the slightest degree on the doctrine or the efficient working of our parliamentary system. What is proposed is that there shall be an effective check on the administration, and that when an important case arises, the matter shall be stayed until the attention of parliament has been called to it, and it has been dealt with by parliament. In that way we shall have an effective control, instead of an academic discussion of the matter after the money has been paid out. I was referring to the Minister of Finance in the early part of my remarks, and I want to point out the view taken by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) in 1878. His view was that the Minister of Finance least of all others should have control. This is what he stated:

> Although the Department of Finance was in no respect a spending department, being intended as a sort of check on the others, still the Minister of Finance for the time being must necessarily be in harmony with the other members of the government.

That is just where the difficulty is. If you leave this matter entirely to the uncontrolled decision of the Treasury Board, without compelling them to give reasons for their decisions, you will find the ministers necessarily standing in with each other, and you will find that the Minister of Finance, instead of being a check on the others, standing in with them, so that you will have the case tried by the very parties who are on trial. The main object of the Audit Act, as explained in 1878, was to inspire the public with confidence in the public accounts. If that inspiration was necessary in 1878, it is doubly necessary to-day. When we find that attacks are being made upon almost every public official, not only every public official, but every cabinet minister who stands for the public as opposed to the government—when we find the government prepared to get rid of all these men who stand in their way, we want something to inspire the public with confidence again. Let me read one more quotation from the debate in 1878, showing what was required, and then ask the government if they think this has been verified by time. In 1878, when the Act was introduced, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) said :

> What the House has got to consider is a matter of extreme importance in the interests of the public. It is necessary that we should have a perfect audit of the public accounts and that we should have our public accounts as much as possible, not only correct but above suspicion

That is what my hon. friend the leader of the opposition is aiming at in bringing this matter before the House. Public attention has been called to it in a very significant way. The Auditor General has at present a very precarious tenure of office. That he has the universal confidence of all classes is undoubted and that the circumstances call for an assertion of his independence and freedom of action is equally undoubted. Let me point to this one circumstance. I would like to know from the right hon. the First Minister as well as the Minister of Finance, who are so fond of talking about the principles of responsible government, how it comes that within the last few days they have been guilty of a most conspicuous disregard of those principles ? The Auditor General is a servant of both Houses of parliament and cannot be removed except on the joint address of both Houses. How comes it that when this servant of parliament is forced by stress of circumstances, by the fact that the administration has made his position intolerable, by the fact that he finds it impossible to act longer unless he is prepared to be mixed up in questions of doubtful honesty—how comes it that when this servant of parliament sent his resignation to the government and gave his reason for resigning, the government so far ignored the principles of responsible government that they simply filed that away in their vaults instead of transmitting it to the House at the earliest possible opportunity, and left the House to get the information from the public press ? Do the government realize that down to the moment when the leader of the opposition demanded on behalf of the people that that letter from the Auditor General should be laid upon the table, we had not a syllable from the government on the matter ? Do they realize that the Auditor General is a servant of this House, but cannot communicate directly with the House ? Do they realize that his only way to communicate with this House is through the administration, and that it is the duty of the administration, the moment they get a communication from the Auditor General, to put the House in possession of it ? Do the government understand that until the 1st of July had passed—the date fixed for resignation—they had made no announcement whatever to this House concerning the request of the Auditor General ? Yet those gentlemen talk about responsible government. Why, if they are allowed to go on at the same rate violating constitutional principles, as they have been doing in the last few years, it will not be five years before the last vestige of responsible government will have disappeared.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY. If there was anything wanting in the complete indifference with which the government treats this question to challenge the admiration of people outside who may admire that sort of thing, we have that supplied to-day. We have had a few brief remarks from the Minister of Finance, occupying but a very few minutes, and with these the right hon. leader of the government seems to be quite content. But despite the apparent indifference of the government, both sides view this question with considerable concern. Both sides realize its gravity. While both sides recognize that under our system the most complete freedom must be given to the government to administer the affairs of the country, while we all recognize that the King's government must go on, yet no one doubts that it must be subject to certain checks, and I would like to ask the right hon. the First Minister if he is prepared to say that parliament has not the right to provide its own checks. We have been told by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Justice time and again that the duties of the Auditor General are merely those of an accountant and a calculator.

He was to add up figures ; he was to see if there were vouchers for payments ; he was to see that there was a parliamentary appropriation ;—but anything going beyond that was an infringement of the rights of the ministry, and therefore he must be checked. We are told to-day by the Minister of Finance that there is no need for change, as there is no change in the conditions. The hon. gentleman knew, when he spoke those words, that the Auditor General's Report teems with correspondance with men who, through neglect or for some other reason have not given a proper account, yet have been given treasury warrants in spite of the protest of the Auditor General. What does that mean ? It means a growing disregard on the part of the present government of every wholesome rule designed to provide proper checks upon the public expenditure. But, while the hon. gentleman says that there are no new conditions, he is himself furnishing new conditions. Only last year he sought to take away the checks that already exist. He showed himself to be in accord with that drift of opinion which favours leaving the ministry entirely unchecked. He introduced a Bill to limit the already limited powers of the Auditor General. It is true that he was driven by the force of public opinion to withdraw that Bill. He backed down not because of any desire to have a better public service, but because he dared not face the electorate bearing the responsibility of having pressed such a measure through parliament. Still, there is a growing tendency in certain quarters to narrow the powers of the Auditor General. I defy the Minister of Finance to rise in his place and declare that it is not the policy of the government to-day to restrict the Auditor General's powers, to narrow the scope of his duties and to prevent him from enforcing the checks which parliament, when he was appointed, designed that he should enforce. One would have expected the Minister of Finance, when speaking on behalf of the government and dealing with the suggestions made by the leader of the opposition, to suggest that those changes would narrow the sphere of ministerial responsibility. But the hon. gentleman made no pretense of that kind. He simply waved the matter aside, declaring that no wrong existed and no remedy was needed. Well, perhaps I may be a little wrong in saying that he raised no objection. My attention is now directed to the fact that the hon. gentleman would not allow the intervention of a judge, would not even allow one of the judges of our courts to pass a judgment which would merely have the effect of a stay of proceedings ;—even such an interference with the ministers could not be thought of. It will be a surprise even to laymen in this House that the government is so jealous, not of its proper powers but of the slightest restraint, of anything that will prevent them from having a free hand to do just as they like. Every one in Canada who has had even a slight experience of public life knows the pressure often brought upon parties to force governments into position, that, I would hope their better judgments would rebel against. One would think that the government would seek to be safeguarded against such an influence, would be glad of better checks by the Auditor General in order that they might escape the pressure driving them in a direction which they know to be wrong.

Now, let me take the case the Minister of Finance spoke of—the Davis contract. I do not intend to discuss the Davis contract but to point out that we had a little new light on this subject from the Minister of Finance. He declared that he was not going to discuss the question whether that contract was prudent or imprudent. He told us that the Auditor General had done his best against payment under the contract. He said the government had made inquiry and had taken advice, and found that money was due. The Auditor General declared that the money was not due, because the service had not been performed. The only negotiations which took place were those under a provision, which had been inserted in the original contract in 1896, that the government might resume the whole work, taking it out of the hands of the contractor, if they thought proper to do so. Means were found under this to compel Mr. Davis to make a new contrat. This was not a vague suggestion, it was a clear declaration in plain English that they had changed the contract, that they had used a clause they had not put into the contract to coerce the contracts, right or wrong, to agree to new conditions. Suppose the Auditor General had been silent. Suppose he had merely made his protest and submitted his report to the House. Suppose he had not been persistent. What would have been the position ? Why, we should now be paying $22,000 or $23,000 a year for eighty-four years more than we are now paying. Has Mr. Davis been unfairly dealt with ? Was a contract made that should not have been made ? It is perfectly plain that the government found themselves in such a position that they were obliged to take what, I contend under other conditions, would have been a very unfair course.

I shall not detain the House long, but I merely wish for a few moments to refer to the Auditor General and his position. It is a regrettable thing that a gentleman of Mr. McDougall's position and standing, a man entirely in sympathy with the government of the day, an officer appointed by the Liberal party and one who has given long and valued service under three governments—appointed under the Mackenzie government, served for eighteen years under the Conservative government, and for the last seven years under the Liberal government (a government of the 'new Liberals')—I say it is a regrettable thing that such a man has now to choose between public duty and being the servant of the ministry of the day. It is an alarming state of affairs. It would have been an easy matter for Mr. McDougall to plead what he might have pleaded under ordinary conditions—his age. Finding his position irksome, finding that he had to play a false or double part or resign, had he been a less courageous or honourable man he might have pursued the easy course, pleaded his age and asked for superannuation and gone out quietly. He has thought fit to take a different course. He has intimated that he is prepared to resign—in fact he has resigned so far as his own act is concerned—and he makes no condition as to his superannuation. But his desire is to remain and serve the people, if he can be put in a position where he can serve them effectively. If that power is not given, then he chooses to walk out like an honourable man. This disregard of the Auditor General on the part of the government is a challenge to the people. I do not know of a bolder challenge given to the people than that which has been given by compelling a man occupying so responsible a position to retire. The position of the Auditor General is a most responsible one, there is none more so in connection with our government, except it be that of the Prime Minister himself. Now, I will place on 'Hansard' Mr. McDougall's reasons for resigning. He made those reasons perfectly plain some time ago. The government are in no sense taken by surprise, for they knew all about it. This is what Mr. McDougall has to say in transmitting his resignation to the government a short time ago.

Auditor General's Office, Canada,
Ottawa, 21st June, 1904.

Sir,—I beg to inclose herewith a communication, addressed to the Governor General in Council, applying for superannuation. I have to request that you will submit this application to His Excellency in Council at your earliest convenience, under the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, section 4, subsection 2, as amended by 54-55 Victoria, chapter 16.

Hon. W. S. Fielding,
Minister of Finance.

Now, those are the reasons contained in the Auditor General's resignation. I am sure they are such as will pay high tribute to the character of that gentleman, a gentleman who has served the country so many years, and who is now finding himself driven out of his position as the safeguard standing between a ministry and the people of this country in our enormous expenditure. He realizes, as every man in Canada must realize, that conditions have enormously changed. We have an immense expenditure, we have new complications, we have new services, and if we do not create corresponding safeguards, we should find ourselves in a position that will be a menace to the interests of the people of this country. No man can say that we are not living in new conditions. We are living in a period in the history of Canada when conditions are rapidly changing. Let us act according to the conditions under which we are living. Let us not look for precedents, precedents are not necessary. Let us learn from the teaching of experience; to use a happy phrase of the First Minister, let us learn from wisdom and profit by it. Now, here is what Mr. McDougall has to say in his communication dated June 21, 1904:

To His Excellency the Governor General in Council:

I have the honour to request the government to superannuate me, to take effect from the 1st of July next. This may be done by superannuating any time during this month. The superannuation, if the time is not named, counts from the 1st of the following month. This is in pursuance of the following sentences in the preliminary part of my report.

This I referred to a moment ago. It was published in the Auditor General's Report and was in the hands of the ministry for some months. This is what he said on that occasion, and he repeats it now, as a reason for his resignation:

The magnitude and number of the transactions going through this office are now so increased that I feel parliament should seriously consider also the amendment of the Audit Act along the other lines suggested in a former report, to enable this office to cope with the expansion of the business of the country. I feel so strongly on this point that if parliament does not see its way to bring the matter up this session, I shall at the end of the session ask to be superannuated.

He further goes on:

The session is not ended, but from the remarks of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice on Mr. Lennox's motion for a committee, it is plain that the Audit Act will not be amended this session, and therefore there is no purpose in delaying my superannuation.

My age is 65 years past, I having been born on the 6th of November, 1838. I entered the service on the 1st of August, 1878, and under ordinary circumstances would count for 52 per cent of my salary of $4,000, or for $2,080. It, however, appears to me that I am entitled to nine years additional service to be added to my service in this calculation, to make it thirty-five, the maximum, which would make my allowance $2,800. This claim of additional service I make under chapter 18, of 49 Victoria, section 4.

This is the Act to which he refers:

The Governor in Council, may in the case of any person who entered the civil service after the age of 30 years, as being possessed of some peculiar professional or other qualifications or attainments required for the office for which he was appointed, and not ordinarily to be acquired in the public service, add to the actual number of years service of such person, such further number of years not exceeding ten, as is considered equitable, for reasons stated in the Order in Council made in the case; and such additional number of years shall be taken as part of the term of service on which the superannuation allowance of such person shall be computed ; and the Order in Council in any such case shall be laid before parliament at its then current or next ensuing session.

I was gold medallist in mathematics in the University of Toronto in 1859 with special presentation report to convocation which, if any one has sufficient interest in it, may be found in the newspapers of the time. I was a member of the Dominion parliament for several years before appointment.

Please make the superannuation early, whether you can see your way to adding the additional time or not.

Respectfully submitted,
J. L. McDOUGALL,
Auditor General.

Mr. McDougall makes it perfectly plain that he is making superannuation the last consideration. His first consideration is that he be provided with such additional means as are necessary under the changed conditions, many of which the ministry have furnished by their own arbitrary action. He asks that these changes be made, and if they are not made he plainly intimates that only one course is left open to him, namely, to retire. Now, I am sorry to see in some very respectable quarters, in some sections of the press supporting the government of the day, some comments which I think are very unfair. I am sorry to see that they have taken their cue from the Minister of Finance, and they speak of the Auditor General as a gentleman to be looked upon with great suspicion, that he is a meddlesome person, that he would be dishonest himself if he had an opportunity. Let me read from a very respectable newspaper supporting the hon. gentlemen opposite some comments upon the conduct of the Auditor General since his resignation became public, and I will leave it to the hon. gentlemen opposite to judge whether this is an honest criticism, whether it is a criticism that they share in. If they do share in it, I am sure nobody will be disposed to dispute their sole possession of it. This is only one of the many extracts that I might quote from different newspapers. The Sarnia 'Observer,' a Liberal newspaper, had this to say in its issue of June 28, 1904. Its heading 'The watchdog is willing,' is very significant in view of the article which follows :

The 'watch dog of the treasury,' as the Auditor General is sometimes designated, shows in his application for superannuation that he is as ready to raid the treasury when he sees a chance as any one of those whom he has been taxing in his annual reports with making demands that were not justified by the services performed. He states in his application that he will accept superannuation if the government will add ten years to the length of his service. This is to be done so that he may receive a larger superannuation allowance than his real services entitle him to. He is asking the government to commit an illegal act so that he may draw out of the treasury for the balance of his life more money than is fairly and lawfully coming to him—the very thing that the Auditor General is specially charged to guard against. It would be a huge joke on the Auditor General if the government acceded to his request and his successor vetoed the payment of the extra pension money on the ground that it had not been earned, and payment of it would be illegal.

This comment is a very fair specimen of comments that are appearing in Liberal journals supporting this government, a Liberal government that is driving an officer of parliament from his position. I am told that there are some hon. gentlemen sitting in this House who are looking forward to filling the position of Auditor General. I would like to ask what is the position of any man, inside or outside of this House, who may accept that position following upon the course now contemplated by the government of absolutely refusing to do anything. The only disposition which the government has shown is to tie the hands of the chief officer of parliament and not to give him such facilities as he is entitled to and as the people of this country will demand should be afforded to him. The man who next fills that position will have a rule of conduct laid down in advance that he is to be the pliant creature of the government and if he is not such a creature he will not get the appointment. That is written in black and white, and if he does not obey that rule he will know what is to follow ; he is to be attacked and blackguarded by the Liberal journals of this country, to be told that because he is seeking what a man may seek under an Act of parliament, what men are obtaining every day although they have been servants in less important capacities than the Auditor General, that he is seeking to obtain illegally, money that does belong to him. I do not know whether it has been the rule of the government to starve a chief officer. This man, Mr. McDougall, received some advance in his salary some 16 years ago. There is no position in the service of the government, except that of the Prime Minister, in which a public servant earns so great a salary by services performed, as that of Auditor General. Here is a man receiving a salary which might ordinarily be called a fair salary, but which, by comparison with the salaries paid for other services, is a beggarly salary. Great responsibilities are attached to the position, and where there are great responsibilities you must get good men to fill the positions and must pay salaries commensurate with these responsibilities. If you do not you cannot expect to get the men. If hon. gentlemen lay down the rule that they are going to starve servants they will get men to work as cheaply or more cheaply, but they will be men who will be willing to comply with the rules which the government lay down rather than the rules that should be laid down for the guidance of an Auditor General. I know of no case since Mr. McDougall has been appointed where a man has been treated in this way, speaking not in a personal but in a broad official sense. This world can, of course, get along without any man, but we cannot get along without healthy principles for the guidance of men in all walks of life. It is not a matter of great personal concern whether the Auditor General goes out of office, but I repeat again, it is a serious question in a broad sense, and one which cannot be put aside with one wave of the hand, in what—I was going to call the undignified—manner adopted this afternoon by the Minister of Finance. I still do not despair that the government will not allow this session to go by without taking steps to put this matter right. I do not know the mind of the Auditor General, but he is a man who has those correct and stern ideas of public duty which would induce him to risk everything at his time of life, at a time when a man may not easily obtain other employment. He has, as I say, put everything aside in the interests of public duty. I am still unwilling to believe that the government will allow his resignation to take place, and I trust that while they may vote down this resolution they will deal with this matter during the present session.

Mr. C. B. HEYD. As an admirer of the Auditor General and as one who has a great deal of sympathy and personal friendship for him, I was, in common with a great many people in Canada, shocked at the statements that were made by him in connection with what is known as the Davis contract, which has given rise, I presume, to most of the discussion which has taken place in connection with his desire for a change in his status. I have read carefully the Auditor General's statement in connection with that matter. I did so with considerable interest after seeing in the 'Evening Journal,' in the Toronto 'News' and in 'Saturday Night' statements of which this is a fair sample :

> Credit the Auditor General with a half million saved. The way he butted in. How government contracts sometimes go, especially just before general elections. The story of the light and power agreement for Cornwall canal. Half a million dollars or more in one contract saved to the public treasury by the interference of the Dominion Auditor General. A bad contract made infinitely worse by a Liberal government ; partially redeeming action taken later by the Laurier administration, but the worse feature remaining.

And so on. Of course as a member of parliament and one interested in the good name of the government I was exceedingly anxious to see whether the statements contained in that paper were true and I therefore read with considerable care the various documents presented by the Auditor General, and I have come to the conclusion, after a careful reading of his letters and the statements that he has made, and the answers made by the government, that the Auditor General was wrong in his dates, wrong in his facts, wrong in his inferences, wrong in his conclusions. It appeared to me that if the Auditor General had been animated by a feeling of hostility to the past government and to the present government he could not possibly have adopted a course more calculated to give vent to such a feeling. What was there in the contract of 1896 to justify the construction placed upon it by the Auditor General ? The Auditor General unfortunately put himself in the position, not of an auditor, but of a critic, an adverse critic of the government, animated with the desire to do them all the harm he possibly could. After having shown the tremendous loss that the country was about to sustain in a letter addressed to the Treasury Board he says :

> Then I call your attention to the rather singular fact that there were two arrangements in connection with this matter. The first was made eleven days before the election of June 23rd, 1896, and the other twenty-nine days before that of November 5, 1900.

The inference naturally left upon the mind of a person not familiar with all the circumstances was that the late government and the present government had entered into a contract which was exceedingly valuable for the contractor in consequence of a liberal political subscription on his part. Is there anything to justify that ? I regard that statement made by the Auditor General as an insult to the Minister of Railways in 1896 and equally insulting to the members of the government of the present day. What was there in the contract of 1896 to justify the statement that it was inspired and completed eleven days before the election of 1896 whereby the Conservative party would get a liberal political subscription ? Is there anything in the contract to justify the statement ? Are the dates of the Auditor General correct ? He is wrong in both instances. He says here eleven days before the election, and yet to-day the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) said that the Order in Council was signed on February 18, or four months before the election took place, and the contract itself was signed on the 25th, or two days after the time the Auditor General says.

In a matter of such moment dates are of much importance. If this contract were finished up in the interests of the contractor, eleven days before the elections, there might be an inference that there was something crooked in it ; but all the Auditor General's statements in connection with that are wrong. The contract was not made eleven days before, but two days after the elections, and the Order in Council was passed four months before. Therefore, the imputation that the Auditor General throws upon the late government that in making this contract they were influenced in order to get an election subscription from the contractor, is false upon its face. It appears to me that the Auditor General suppresses a significant fact in connection with the late contract. In the light we now have, we may believe that the contract entered into in 1896 was probably improvident, but we have no right to assume that it was corrupt, because there is nothing to indicate a corrupt intention. The government were to pay for a certain number of horse-power at a certain rate, and also for a certain number of lights to be determined on thereafter, at so much per light. It may be that with the knowledge we had of electricity in these days, it was impossible for the government to tell whether the price was too dear or not, but anyhow they put in a clause, that by giving twelve months' notice they could take over this work from the contractor, and that very clause should prevent it from being regarded as a corrupt transaction. If in 1896 they were paying too much for horse-power or light, any subsequent parliament, by giving twelve month's notice, could take the matter out of the hands of the contractor, and under such circumstances I should think a contractor would not be willing to put up a very large sum in order to obtain a contract. The element of corruption is removed by this very clause. But, why did the Auditor General go on to say that the second contract was made twenty-nine days before the election, thus conveying the impression that the contractor was this time giving a liberal contribution to the funds of the Liberal party; that the Conservative party not then being in a position to advance his interests he flopped over and made it of interest to the present government to increase by 63 years the term of his contract, and to require a larger horse-power and a greater number of lights than were necessary. The contract itself does justify any such statement. We are told by no less a person than the lawyer of the Auditor General, a lawyer selected by himself, that that was not true; that the present government made no new contract, and that it was their duty to fix the number of lights and the amount of horse-power required according to the contract of 1896. That is all the present government has done. What was there in that transaction to justify the Auditor General pointing out significantly that this contract was entered into twenty-nine days before the election of 1900? What was there to justify him in conveying the impression that there was a corrupt intent? What was there to justify him in conveying the impression to the Liberal electors that the Conservative government was corrupt in 1896, and to the Conservative electors that the Liberal government was corrupt in 1900? The contract itself on its face shows that the statement of the Auditor General is incorrect, because he was wrong in his dates. It was not made before the election, but after the election, and the Order in Council went out four months before. If the present government did not make a new contract; if they did not increase the advantages to the contractor; if they simply carried out the terms of the contract of 1896, what justification have these newspapers for the statement that both governments are corrupt, and that the Auditor General butted in and saved $500,000 to the people of Canada? I believe it is the intention of the Auditor General to be honest and to look after the interest and welfare of the country, but like a great many others he leans over too much to one side. There have been a number of Liberal judges appointed in Ontario during the last few years, but instead of the Liberals being able to get any advantage from them, they lean over to the Conservative side, and in this particular instance the Auditor General being a well known Liberal, I presume he thought it his duty to be particularly careful of his treatment of the Liberal government, lest he might be accused of partiality, and so he has leaned over, and wherever there was an opportunity of conveying the impression that there was corruptness or crookedness, the Auditor General has given special significance to these things, and evidently concealed all the redeeming features in the contract. If the late government made a mistake, and if we are paying too high a price under this contract then on twelve months' notice the work can be taken out of the hands of the contractor at its actual value plus five per cent. Under such circumstances there is no necessity for scare headings being used in the newspapers, and it is unjust for them to attribute a corrupt intent to the government. I always had the opinion in days gone by, that contractors for the Conservative government managed things a good deal slicker than is apparently the case here. If there were a clause in every contract allowing the government to take over the work on twelve months' notice, I should think there would be no danger of anybody getting a rake off from contractors. In my opinion the powers given to the Auditor General at the present time are wide enough. I do not profess to be able to bring the knowledge of expert accountants to bear upon the subject, but I have here the opinion of Mr. Aylesworth, a lawyer of great judgment who was asked by the Auditor General to give his opinion, and Mr. Aylesworth gives it, not as a politician, but as one of the most eminent counsels in Canada, and he says:

> I cannot find from examining and considering the Audit Act any indication that parliament intended your office to be superior to, or to exercise any supervision over, the various departments of the government, in so far as questioning the validity of their contracts is concerned, but there appears clear provision in the statute for bringing all such questions to the notice of parliament itself.

The legislation seems to afford a very complete scheme by which your department may be an efficient check upon expenditure, and by which parliament may be at once informed if anything unusual or irregular takes place. You have the power (and no doubt the duty) under section 32 (c) of the Audit Act, to refuse your certificate if at any time convinced that a cheque is applied for where 'the money is not justly due.' You are by section 33 expressly precluded from authorizing any payment unless upon due voucher that the work has been performed or materials supplied. By section 10 of 51 Victoria, chapter 7 (1888), you are, in reporting to the House, to call attention to every case in which cheques have been issued without your certificate, or in which a payment was 'in any way irregular.' Your duty accordingly when not satisfied that money claimed is justly due is to refuse to certify, and thereupon the Treasury Board becomes 'the judge of the sufficiency of your protection.'

But the statute has carefully provided that in all such cases the matter must come before parliament upon full report, making it apparently, by section 49 of the Audit Act, your personal duty to present such report if the Minister of Finance does not do so within the time prescribed by the statute.

Responsibility is by this means removed from you and made to rest upon the proper shoulders. The Treasury Board is responsible to parliament, and if parliament considers that in this matter or in any other matter upon which you may take a similar course an improvident or improper contract has been entered into, the minister who is responsible, or the government, will be held to account.

He secured the opinion of Mr. Aylesworth, one of the most eminent lawyers in this country, who gave his opinion that the powers that the Auditor General ought to have are amply provided for in the present law. I am willing, on the present occasion, to take Mr. Aylesworth as my guide, as I have not the functions or the legal knowledge necessary for me to express an opinion. But I say that the Auditor General apparently was wrong in his dates, wrong in his facts, wrong in his conclusions and wrong in his deductions. He appears to have charged the late government, and the present government impliedly, with a corrupt intent, contrary to the very documents themselves; and, that being so, I am quite content to abide by the opinion of Mr. Aylesworth and the present government, that the Auditor General has at present quite enough power to enable him to efficiently discharge his duties as auditor.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker, it is rather refreshing to hear the specious arguments to which the hon. gentleman has just treated the House. He starts out by saying that the Auditor General is wrong in his dates, wrong in his facts, wrong in his interpretation, wrong in his conclusions and wrong in his deductions—according to the high authority of the member for Brant (Mr. Heyd), the one man who has been at the business for a quarter of a century, endeavouring by every means in his power to interpret the law according to his best judgment, and, when he found that his interpretation of the law did not meet with the approval of others, submitting it to the ablest lawyer he could find in the country, and following his advice as far as he believed it to be correct. If there was no other evidence to show that the Auditor General was an honest and conscientious man, it seems to me that very fact is sufficient. The hon. member went on to say that, notwithstanding the fact that the Auditor General had been appointed by the present government, he was found in opposition to them at almost every turn when money was being paid out. When the previous government was in power and the same Auditor General disagreed with them with regard to the payment of public money, his friends proclaimed that as an evidence of his fairness. The hon. gentleman is doing what he nearly always does; he makes his statement and then runs out, as if he were doing something sharp. It seems to me that a man who makes an argument and cannot listen to the reply is either wanting in moral courage or in courtesy. When the same Auditor General opposed the late government with reference to the payment of money the hon. gentleman's friends held that to be an evidence of his ability and fairness, and an evidence that the government of that day was doing something improper; but when the same man comes into contact with his friends and endeavours to guard the public treasury in the same way as he did in the time of their predecessors, he is declared to be a man wanting in judgment, wrong in his facts, wrong in his interpretation, wrong in his conclusions and wrong in his deductions; and, therefore, he can only do it for a malicious purpose against the very party who put him in office. Is that human nature? Is that likely? Will the great mass of the people believe that? I do not think they will. If there was one thing needed to justify the conclusion that the Auditor General is an honest and conscientious man, it is the very thing we are discussing to-day. This, I say, is complimentary to his fairness, to his impartiality, to his honesty of purpose. He is doing faithfully, no matter which party is in power, what he believes he was put there to do; that is, to guard the public treasury, and to see that no money is paid out unless it is authorized by parliament, and to see that payments are made in accordance with the provisions made by parliament. The hon. member defends the contract. After reading it and considering it, he comes to the conclusion that the contract for lighting the Cornwall canal and supplying power is a good one, that there is nothing wrong with it, that it is defensible, and he is willing to defend it; and he gives, not only the present government, but the late government, a certificate of purity and competency in making this contract. What did the Minister of Finance say before dinner? He said: After going over the contract, we agreed with the Auditor General that it ought to be revised and amended, and we submitted a draft to the Auditor General, so as to be satisfied that it would meet with his approval before we entered into it; it met with his approval, and we withdrew the Order in Council which we had previously passed. Was that not an admission that it was wrong before? If it was not wrong, was there any necessity to change it? Is not that the strongest argument that the Auditor General was right? Some very severe strictures were passed on the Auditor General, because, after the government withdrew the Order in Council and endeavoured to have it go into oblivion, he allowed it to see the light. The hon. member for Brant went on to say that the Auditor General is like some of the judges, too straight—so straight that he leans over the other way. That is a very fine compliment to the judges of the country. Coming from the source it does, it will not perhaps be regarded as of much account. To say that the judges of the country are not impartial, but that they show partiality by leaning too much the other way, is the stricture of one of the parties responsible for their appointment; and then he turns around and compares the Auditor General with them, saying that he has a similar nature, that he leans over too far the other way. I assume that the hon. gentleman must have meant that he leans towards the Conservative party. The hon. member says the Auditor General is trying to provide arguments to the Conservative party to enable them to put the government out of power. In that he is unfair. What is the resolution before us? It is a simple one, and one, in my judgment, justified by the facts which have been brought out from year to year. It is as follows:

That in the opinion of this House the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act should be so extended as to confer on the Auditor General powers ample in every respect to protect the public interest and to safeguard the public treasury.

That is all it is. If the law to-day does not enable the Auditor General to protect the public interest and safeguard the public treasury, as it was intended by its framers it should do, then we ought to supply what is necessary to make it effective. Every year we have had our attention drawn by the Auditor General to the fact that the Act does not provide sufficiently ample powers. As an evidence that his representations have a solid basis, I can point to the fact that several times the Act has been amended to meet his suggestions. That surely proves that he was right in the representations he made. Well, since the last extension of the Act, he has again and again drawn our attention to the fact that other amendments are necessary. Of course as time goes on we find defects in laws which were not anticipated when they were passed. The defects in the Audit Act, the Auditor General has pointed out to parliament, so that parliament may act. We are asked to-day why the Conservative party do not bring in any amendment. What would be the use? How many Bills have the Conservative party brought into this House, and how many days have they not spent in trying to get the House to pass these Bills, but all to no avail? Everybody knows that the very fact that these Bills received the support of the Conservative party was sufficient reason to hon. gentlemen opposite to vote them down. And the same fate would overtake any amendment to the Audit Act which we might propose from this side. The government would not allow any amendment proposed by the opposition to pass, because that would be a reflection on themselves. The Minister of Finance says that the Act gives the Auditor General ample powers in every respect. But if it does, how comes it that three or four years ago the Public Accounts Committee considered this question at great length and decided that the Act was not sufficiently ample? The ex-Minister of Finance, Mr. Foster, was on that committee and also the present Finance Minister, and that committee decided that it was necessary to give additional power to the Auditor General. Why then was that not done? It was not done because the session was short and coming to its close, and there was not time to consider what measure might be advised. At various times since the matter has been brought up in the Public Accounts Committee, but no remedy has been applied, and the Auditor General has gone on from time to time, drawing the attention of the government to the defects in the law. He has refused to pass accounts which, in his judgment, contravened some provision of the law. He has debated the point with the department responsible for the expenditure, and after being overruled has gone to the Treasury Board and debated the point with that board, and again and again has been overruled. We are bound to assume that the Auditor General is a conscientious official, anxious to do his duty faithfully. Again and again his decisions have been overruled, and he has continued to urge that money was paid out improperly. Let me draw attention to a case in point. We provided by a statute that when bridges were built which cost a certain amount, the government would contribute 15 per cent of their cost. The Auditor General deemed it his duty to ascertain whether the statement of cost was a cooked one. The government thought that in so doing he exceeded his duty, but he refused to accept that view and after some time he succeeded in having an investigation. What was the result ? It was found that the very account to which he objected was so made up as to show that the bridge cost a great deal more than it actually did, and had he passed the demand for payment, very many thousands of dollars would have been paid over to which they were not entitled. There is an evidence that the Auditor General is right in the stand he takes. The government contended that he had no business to inquire into the details ; and had the Auditor General submitted to that contention, the country would have been mulcted a considerable sum. Why should we not make the point clear by amending the Act so as to give him the right which he claims to have ? We are told by the Finance Minister that the Act contains ample powers. If that be the case, how is that year after year the Auditor General has disputes with almost every department over the payment of money, and almost invariably has been overruled and the money paid out ? Take the Davis contract, about which there is so much talk at present. What was the objection of the Auditor General in that matter ? In the first place he drew attention to what he regarded as a very unbusinesslike contract. He pointed to the fact that if he were to authorize the money to be paid, there would be thousands of dollars paid out in return for which the country got no service whatever.

Now, if that be a fair interpretation of the Act, if that might be done under the Act, would it yet be a proper thing to do ? When any one receives money, he receives it for consideration given, and when the country pays money it is supposed to receive something in return. But the fact was disclosed that there was no service rendered for that money. The contractor could not give the electric light because there was no connection with the power station—the power was there but it was not applied. Yet, an account was sent in of $19,000. Suppose that money had been paid out for nothing, would the country approve it ? Would the Finance Minister defend it ? And yet the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) stands up and reads the advice of Mr. Aylesworth that, according to the law, he does not see how the Auditor General can refuse, because the contract made with the Department of Railways and Canals said that the contractor should have so much money at a certain time ;—it failed to provide that a service should be rendered before the government incurred obligations. So, according to Mr. Aylesworth, the Auditor General had no power under the Audit Act to check this payment. Well, do not you think he ought to have that power ? Do not you think it would have been in the interest of the country to amend the Act so as to have given him that power ? I think so. And the country has long since reached the conclusion that the Audit Act should be amended so as to give the Auditor General ample power to protect the treasury. Now, when the Auditor General checks payment of money and the payment is still presisted in, the matter is referred to the Treasury Board. Here is the clause of the statute :

> If the Auditor General has refused to certify that a cheque of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General may issue, on the ground that the money is not justly due, or that it is, in excess of the authority granted by the council, or for any other reason than that there is no parliamentary authority, then upon a report of the case prepared by the Auditor General and the Deputy of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, the Treasury Board shall be the judge of the sufficiency of the Auditor General's objection and may sustain him or order the issue of the cheque in its discretion.

In this case they overruled him and ordered the money to be paid, we think, improperly. The Auditor General fell back upon two objections. He said, in the first place, the law provides, under section 11 of chapter 37 of the Consolidated Statutes, which relates to the Department of Railways and Canals, how a contract shall be made. This section is as follows :

> The minister shall invite tenders, by public advertisement, for the execution of all works, except in cases of pressing emergency.

Now, this was a case of lighting the Cornwall canal. It was clearly not a case of pressing emergency, for the lighting of the canal could go on under the system already in use when this contract was made. So the Auditor General contended that he had the right to refuse to allow the payment of that money unless other conditions were complied with. If the contract was not let by public tender, the deputy or the clerk in the department under whom the work is done or goods supplied, must certify that the work had been done or the goods received and that the values were reasonable. The Auditor General had no such certificate before him and he demanded the certificate. They refused to give it to him. So, the contract was not let by tender, and the work was not certified to as being good value. Therefore, the Auditor General conceived it to be his duty not to allow the public treasury to be raided and the money paid. Was he right or was he wrong ? Mr. Aylesworth said that, according to the Audit Act, the Auditor General could not check the payment of that money, the Treasury Board having overruled him. Why could he not check it ? Because the provisions of the Audit Act were not sufficiently strong. That is why we propose by this resolution that the Act should be amended and strengthened. We ask the government to take the matter up. We ask parliament to express its opinion. For it would be of no use for us to propose such a law ; we could not carry it through. The Minister of Finance asks why, if there is any defect in the Audit Act the opposition do not introduce a Bill to amend it. I have suggested the reason. It would be only a waste of time. We have not the power to put through such a measure. And, besides, it is the government and not we who are charged with responsibility of directing public affairs. We are here to see to it that any measures which they propose shall be as nearly perfect as we can get the majority to make them. The opposition would willingly support a Bill to strengthen the Auditor General—they would have done it last year, and they are willing to do it at any time. We hold that the Auditor General ought to have as wide powers as are necessary to enable him to effectively protect the public treasury. Alexander Mackenzie said at one time that he was like a soldier in the trenches, sleeping on his arms that he might be ready to protect the treasury against the incursions of those who desired to get that money of the public improperly. It was to provide relief for himself and those who might follow him that he asked parliament to pass an Act authorizing him to appoint an Auditor General. That Auditor General he appointed. He showed his desire to protect the public treasury so far as he thought the necessities of the situation demanded it. But experience has shown us ways in which that Act can be improved. My hon. friend says that the demand of the electors, after a quarter of a century's experience, is that this Act shall be improved. There is not a doubt that that is the feeling of the public. What is true of every other law is true of the Audit Act. Every year we place upon the statute-book, laws, which, in our judgment and to the best of our knowledge and of the experience we have, are sufficient. And yet further experience shows how those laws can be advantageously amended from time to time. Parliament, after careful inquiry exercises its judgment in voting money for public purposes, and then it is left to the Auditor General to see to it that the money is spent according to the intention of parliament. Now the Auditor General, I assume, never refused, from mere wilfulness, to give his certificate for the payment of money. I am sure every one will credit him with honesty. And it is to be supposed that he does not wilfully get into trouble or conflict with any department, or with the Treasury Board, or with the government. But, as an honest man he is bound to fight any or all of them if that is necessary in order to maintain the proper checks upon the expenditure of public money. And he has fought them for years, until he has become sick and tired of that job. And now he says: If you will not amend the Audit Act, if you will not place at my disposal proper provisions and assistance such as I require to safeguard the treasury, then, I want you to accept my resignation.

I, as an honest man, cannot hold the position unless I endeavour to do my duty and if the government makes it impossible for me to do my duty, if they will not put within my reach provisions that will enable me to do my duty, I want at least to show the country that I desire to do right, and when I cannot do it I want to get out—and he has sent in his resignation. I say that the country to-day regards with great suspicion that resignation of the Auditor General. I venture to say that, irrespective of politics, forty-nine out of fifty of the electorate to-day will tell you honestly, if you ask them, that they are desirous of keeping the Auditor General there, of strengthening his hands rather than weakening them. They desire to keep him there because he has shown his desire and his ability to protect the public treasury, he has shown his willingness and his honesty of purpose, he has shown that he is prepared to fight either party, his own party that put him in that position as well as the party that was opposed to him. He has shown honesty and a high sense of duty, and has endeavoured to do his duty. Will the country strengthen his hands, will the government strengthen his hands, or will they prevent him from doing his duty? We know that in many instances the Treasury Board has overruled him, and instead of strengthening his hands have been weakening him, instead of giving him moral support they have been discrediting the man, and his judgment, and his ways, killing the very means that were designed to protect the treasury of the country. Every obstacle it seems to me is being thrown in his way so as to make it impossible for him to do his duty as he conceives it should be done. Does the country want that? In my judgment it does not.

The Auditor General has given fair and ample notice to the government; Unless you amend this Act, unless you support my authority, I want to get out. Are they going to let him get out? If they do, the country will know the reason why. He has told us the reason why. We draw attention to it to-day so that the country may know, that parliament may understand. We do not desire to see the Auditor General get out, we desire him to remain there. But we desire also that the Act should be amended in any needful particular so as to make his powers, in the words of this resolution, ample to protect the public interest and safeguard the public treasury. He has appealed to parliament because the government has refused to support him. Is parliament going to be equal to the occasion? Will the representatievs of the people do their duty? We are endeavouring to do it on this side of the House. Who are we opposed by ? By the very men who are charged with the responsibility of protecting the public treasury. We are working in the interests of the country, we are opposed by the very men whose duty above everything else in the world is to protect the country and to look after its interests. If this government and parliament refuse, what will be the inevitable result ? What conclusion will the people reach ? They can come to but one conclusion, and that is that the government do not desire to protect the public treasury as they should, that the government do not desire to strengthen the hands of the Auditor General, the employee of parliament, not the employee of the government, but the servant of the country. They do not wish to give him that moral support, that constitutional support which they above all others ought to give him to enable him to do his duty. Then I say if they fail in this matter we will appeal to the great parliament of the nation, we will lay this subject as fully as we can before the electors of the country, and I have no doubt that when they know the whole story, when they know that the Auditor General has been refused support, when they know that he has been antagonized by the present government, when they know that thousands and tens of thousands of dollars, yes I am within the mark in saying hundreds of thousands of dollars of government money, has been improperly paid out, money paid out for which the country never got anything in return—when the people know that, they will be very likely to blame the present government. I think it will take from them thousands of votes. I shall have no objection whatever if it results in putting them out. But I would rather see them do their duty and remain in, than to be kicked out for not doing their duty. I have that much respect for the Prime Minister who leads them. I believe there are some good men on that side of the House and some very bad ones. But they remind me of Sir Oliver Mowat and his friends. A number of them were said to be very good men and a number were said to be bad. He always had one man in his cabinet called the wicked partner who would father all the bad transactions, and Sir Oliver himself was the redeeming feature of the cabinet. But in this case the worst of it is that it is the bad element that seems to predominate all the time, the government leans over that way, the bad men control the elections, and the country does not get the benefit of the good element in the cabinet.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If we do as well as Sir Oliver Mowat, I do not think Ontario will complain.

Mr. SPROULE. You mean by holding on to power. I can only say that the hon. gentleman and his friends are very apt followers, they seem to be falling into the same line very readily, especially in the work done by the wicked partner. The wicked partner seems to be on top here, and getting much more on top every day. That is why we want to set them right, or else give the country a chance to rectify the wrong. We intend to tell the country as plainly as we can, and if the government refuse to do their duty as they seem inclined to to-day, they will have to suffer the consequences. Now for these reasons I am in favour of this resolution. I think we cannot pass it a day too soon. The Minister of Finance says : Why did'nt you propose this law three years ago ? Why did'nt you propose it two years ago ? Why did'nt you propose it last year ? Is it ever too late to mend ? It is true that in the interests of the country it might well have been proposed three years ago, or two years ago or last year ; but because of our laches in that respect are we to go on in the same line for ever ? When we know that a wrong is being done is it not high time that we amended our ways ? Though it may appear late, even at the eleventh hour a repentant sinner may return. It is because of our desire to do right that we propose this resolution to-day ; and I can only reach the conclusion that it is because of the government's desire to do wrong that they oppose it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Before the hon. gentleman takes his seat : I understood him to say that as a result of some imperfection in the Audit Act tens of thousands of dollars had been paid out without consideration. Will my hon. friend be good enough to give us some specific cases ?

Mr. SPROULE. I mentioned one with regard to the Sorel bridge. I mentioned one with regard to this contract, where the Auditor General shows that an application was made for over $52,000 and for the most of which there was no return given to the country whatever. It may have been a defect in the contract.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend ought to be aware of the fact that in neither case was there a dollar paid.

Mr. SPROULE. The government certified the accounts and was willing to pay the money, and it was because of the obstinacy of the Auditor General that the money was not paid.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The request made to my hon. friend was that he should sustain his statement that tens of thousands of dollars had been paid out. That is what I wanted.

Mr. SPROULE. What I said was this, that the government had made their fiat, saying that the money must be paid.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But it was not paid.

Mr. SPROULE. The Auditor General prevented it being paid. Why was not that money paid on the Sorel bridge ? Was it the government who prevented it ? No, it was the Auditor General. Who prevented the money from beng paid out on the Davis contract ? Was it the government ? The department certified to it as all right, and it was the Auditor General who prevented the payment. Am I not correct ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. He had not the power to do it.

Mr. SPROULE. It was saved to the country.

Mr. BRODEUR. Then there is no necessity to amend the Act.

Mr. SPROULE. In the case of Corry & Laverdure, I am told that $125,000 was improperly paid out, although the Auditor General did his very best to save that to the country, but he could not do it. Take the Farran's Point canal, another case. Was I within the mark ? I was very much within the mark, I might have trebled the figure which I gave and I would still have been within the mark.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Might I ask my hon. friend a question ? We are now getting down to facts and I find that in so far as the Sorel contract, and the Davis contract are concerned, the Auditor Generad had power to stop the payment and did stop it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) now says that in the Corry & Laverdure contract, $125,000 was paid out improperly. Would my hon. friend state whether that was discussed before the Public Accounts Committee, or what evidence there is that that was done ?

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know that it was discussed before the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What evidence is there that it was done ?

Mr. SPROULE. Does the minister dispute it ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, certainly.

Mr. SPROULE. That any money was paid ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Improperly.

Mr. SPROULE. The word improperly is a very strange one ; a payment might be in accordance with the contract and yet be made improperly in the interests of the country. That is what the Auditor General complains of, that the payment was made improperly.

Mr. LENNOX. It was not in accordance with the contract either.

Mr. SPROULE. It was not in accordance with the contract. Because the Auditor General desires to prevent these improper payments we want to give him ample power to do it, and if in any of these cases the money was not paid out it was not paid out because the Auditor General prevented it ; the government gave certificates to pay it and were willing to pay it.

Mr. A. C. BELL. While there is not much disposition on the part of the government to treat this matter as one of sufficient importance to discuss it on this occasion, still there can be no doubt that in the opinion of the people of the country generally the Auditor General is the most useful official of the country. He is the gentleman who was spoken of as a very important official in the years when the Conservatives were in power, when this matter was discussed by leading and prominent members of the Liberal party, then in opposition. They said that he had an onerous duty to perform when he had the supervision of expenditure of probably $40,000,000. The importance of this proposition was emphasized by Liberal speakers at that time on account of the large amount of money in question. If that was a good argument previous to 1896, it is manifestly much stronger to-day because now the expenditure of the country is almost double that expenditure of $40,000,000, and while it is true that the members of the administration to-day are disposed not to treat this discussion very seriously, but simply to pass it over, following apparently the line taken by the Minister of Finance in connection with it, that party did treat it seriously during the years when they were in opposition. I find that in 1895 the Hon. David Mills devoted a large part of a day in parliament to a resolution moved on a motion to go into supply, to a discussion of this matter.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. On the same lines ?

Mr. BELL. Not on the same lines.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will my hon. friend read the resolution ?

Mr. BELL. It does not seem to be included in the discussion in 'Hansard.' The discussion occurs at page 2408 of the 'Hansard' of 1895. On that occasion, I am bound to say, a different phase of the subject was treated. The point at issue then was an application of the Auditor General to the government and to parliament for assistance and relief. On that occasion, as nearly as I can gather from the speeches, the Auditor General was rather pleading for increased remuneration for his officials and increased power of control over the officials of his department. Therefore the discussion on that occasion was not by any means on all fours with this, but still it is evident from Mr. Mills's speech that he regarded this official as being one of the most important appointed by the government of Canada. He presses particularly upon the attention of the House the fact referred to over and over again that the Auditor General is not at all an official of the government of Canada, but an official of the parliament and of the people of Canada. Mr. Mills in this discussion called attention to the fact that the duties of the Auditor General are twofold; first, that he conducts an administrative audit in the interests of the people. That is to say, not only does he see that the various appropriations are so expended and accounted for and justified by voucher as to protect the administration, but he also sees that the government of the day uses these appropriations for the purposes for which they are voted by parliament so that there can be no question at all that on that occasion the Liberal party, as represented by Mr. Mills, gave a great deal of prominence to this feature of the case, that the Auditor General is to a certain extent exercising a supervision and control over the administration and for that reason it is urged in the course of that speech and elsewhere that that official should receive the most thorough and unlimited support from the parliament of Canada. In so far as this matter has been treated by the government on this occasion they have apparently made up their minds not to consider it very fully at this time. They have urged in the first place through the Finance Minister, as a reason for not considering it, that the time is not opportune, that the matter is brought to the notice of the House at a time when parliament has practically reached the conclusion of its business for this year. To my mind that cannot possibly be the reason why the government has decided not to come to the assistance of the Auditor General in this matter. If it were, it would involve our assenting to the proposition that they had no knowledge of this application of the Auditor General until this matter was brought to their attention by the opposition. That, this House and the country know, is not the case. The Auditor General during every year, as is set forth at great length in the pages of his report, has been engaged in constant controversy with the government of the day, and so far as my reading has gone I must say, uniformly, in every case in which the Auditor General has felt it his duty to differ in opinion as to the appropriations made to the government, the government, relying on and using the authority of the Treasury Board, has overruled the Auditor General. I do not believe that any one in this House, particularly on this side of the House, is disposed to differ from the view laid down by the Finance Minister in so far as they will not consent for one moment to allow the Auditor General to assume the function of deciding the policy of this country. We are not disposed to part with one jot or title or particle of that system which we have inherited, adopted and developed in this country under which every portion of the expenditure made by Canada must be made upon the authority of the government of the day. We do not for one moment contemplate nor see how it would be possible, or how any reasonable man for a moment could consider, that the functions of the government of Canada should be devolved upon any official, Auditor General or any one else, and therefore we, I think, are entirely at one with the government in insisting that nothing should be done to deprive the government of the day of any of its constitutional rights or powers. We look upon the responsibility of ministers to parliament and through them to the people as the basis of the system which we have inherited, which we have worked under in the past and which we must continue to work under. We do not want any suggestions to come from the government side of the House that we are endeavouring in any way to interfere with constitutional practice. I do not think it would be possible for the minister to make it appear plain that the Auditor General, in the request he is making of the people of Canada—for he is appealing to the whole people of Canada—is asking them to give him the power of taking the government by the throat when he might see fit to do so, or to make him a final court of appeal to say when the government is doing right and when it is doing wrong. I do not think that the Auditor General has any such idea in his mind and if he had he would find no support for it on this side of the House.

I believe that the desire of the Auditor General would be to a large extent gratified by some such measure as that which has been outlined by the leader of the opposition today. The Auditor General thinks that under certain circumstances which come under his cognizance in a way to lead him to believe there has been an improvident bargain, he should be fortified to the extent that he could bring to his assistance a mode of investigation by which he could prepare himself to submit to the administration through the Minister of Finance, reasons which might induce the government to correct the defects in any contract. I do not think anything could be more appropriate for that purpose than a reference to the Exchequer Court or to some other court in which information of a conclusive character could be derived from the examination of witnesses. There is at present in our system no means by which, if the administration of the day is disposed to be careless or prejudiced in favour of a contract, the Auditor General can make such an inquisition as would be necessary to bring before the government such information as might induce them to change their minds. We know that the people of this country cannot have any first hand knowledge of such disputed questions, and that indeed it is hard for members of parliament to make discoveries in reference to such, because the report of the Auditor General is only in their hands twelve months or more after the transactions have been discovered. It seems to me that it would not at all be adverse to the principle of constitutional government and it would not be prejudicial to honest and economic administration in this country, if some provision were made by which the Auditor General might for a short time suspend the operation of a contract or the payment of an account until he could ascertain by some judicial process such information as would enable him to submit to the government a complete statement of his views, and of the grounds which might induce the administration to change their minds. While it may not have been intended, yet there is something disingenuous in the argument of the Minister of Finance, who does not consider the question at all, but who at once appeals to that strong sentiment in the House and in the country, which is opposed to any change which would deprive us of that system of ministerial responsibility upon which we rest, and must rest in this country. The Minister of Finance was simply begging the question. While I do not wish to pursue him into a detailed consideration of the Davis contract, out of the consideration of which probably this question has come to the surface, still, even in that case I would almost seem inclined to think that the Minister of Finance might find that there were some reasons which would make it advantageous to the administration to have the Auditor General, who stands between them and these persons to whom the money of the country is being paid, strengthened in his position. I should think that might be done not only in the public interest, but also for the comfort and convenience of the government itself. No harm could result by any extension of the powers of the Auditor General which stop short of confiding in him any authority superior to that of parliament, or of the ministry which parliament for the time being sustains in power. It would seem that the government would have done well if they had copied the example of preceding administrations which have over and over again amended the Audit Act, and which have shown a disposition to strengthen the hands of the Auditor General in every constitutional manner. I would advise that this matter be treated not too lightly, because it is absolutely important for this administration and for succeeding administrations, that the people of Canada should know that the administration desires to have as sweeping an investigation as possible into the public accounts which any properly authorized official like the Auditor General may institute. I was sorry to hear in the course of the discussion reference made to the suspicious character of the negotiations and contracts between Mr. Davis and succeeding governments in Canada. If such insinuations were made in the report of the Auditor General it was very unfortunate. It is most important that we should always extend to administrations in this country that generous treatment which we are disposed to extend even to criminals, and to believe them innocent until they are proven guilty.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is awfully kind.

Mr. BELL. I do not think there could be a more unfortunate feature in our public life than that there should develop a disposition on the part of public men, or on the part of public organs to attempt to force on the minds of the people of this country, a predisposition to believe that there was a dishonest purpose on the part of any administration. We ought to assume, and we must assume, that our goveruments are pure. It is such a cheap, such an easy and such an abominable practice, to go on insinuating corrupt motives and corrupt acts on the part of an opponent, that to my mind every man who wishes a healthy sentiment in the public life of Canada, ought to discourage it to every extent in his power. We ought be willing to believe that the government of the day are doing what they can in the interests of the people. So far as I am concerned I have no sympathy with this casting of suspicions, and I regret that this matter should be discussed here at all. I do not believe there was any such corrupt bargain in the case I have referred to. I do not believe anything of the kind was intended, and if the Auditor General has introduced such an insinuation into the report he has gone entirely outside of his duties and functions, and has made a grave mistake. But, while that is the case, there can be no doubt that among the party organs on both sides, and probably among public men on both sides, there is a constant tendency to cover up their own faults by insinuating evil doing or corruption on the part of their opponents. Therefore it is to my mind in the interests of every succeeding administration of this country, to conduct our public affairs in such fashion that the people of the country shall learn to have confidence in the fact that the purpose of every succeeding government is to have the fullest and freest inquiry into all matters, so that the people of the country may always rest in confidence that the business of the country for the time being is honestly transacted. While it may not be an opportune time for the administration to engage in this work now, and while it may be enough to observe that we are approaching the end of a long session, still I think it would be well for the administration to let it be understood that so far as they are concerned they have nothing to fear from any inquiry of any kind whatever which is conducted within proper constitutional limits by any official of the government or by anybody else. I am satisfied that this administration does not fear anything of the kind, and I believe it is in the interests not only of this government but of any government that may succeed, to make that point perfectly clear. If there is any weakness or any defect at all in the powers which the Auditor General has to discharge his duties, that defect should be repaired. So nearly as I can discover, the view which the Auditor General takes, and the view that all reasonable men take, is, that there may be a necessity to a certain extent, I do not know how far, to increase the powers of the Auditor General, to make inquiry under certain circumstances. If that be admitted there is a great justification for some change in the law which would enable the Auditor General to discharge his full functions under certain restrictions, which restrictions should be clearly stated and which should not be of such a nature as to admit of constant and unwarranted interference.

There should be some power granted to the officer whose duty it is to watch the expenditure, if he thinks a bargain has been made without sufficient knowledge of the circumstances, or that it is an improvident bargain, to suspend, for a certain time, action in the direction of payment, to enable him to institute such an inquiry as would satisfy him, and through him, the people of the country that everything was being done that could be done to secure economical expenditure. That is, to my mind, all that is asked for by my leader, both in the matter and in the manner in which he has introduced this question to parliament at this time. We know that the auditor was not always a feature of our politics, either in the mother country or in Canada. There was a time, not very long ago, when there was no such office as an audit office either in Great Britain or in this country; but no man to-day would, I think, suggest that we should go back to those days and dispense with the audit office, and leave it entirely in the hands of an administration to satisfy the people as to the nature of the public expenditure by simply appealing to the country on the ground of their fitness, their character, their standing and their respect for themselves as an administration. It does not imply that a man or an administration is dishonest because you ask them to submit to certain checks and guards on expenditure. It is, to my mind, merely a proper course to follow in reference to the multitudinous expenditures of this country, which no government can possibly supervise for itself, or in reference to the employment of the host of officials that we have in Canada. No administration can thoroughly supervise for itself all the enormous expenditures of this country; the people cannot supervise them for themselves; and the members of parliament have no opportunity of supervising them. We must retain the services of the Auditor General; and when he shows a reasonable ground for the contention that he requires to have his powers increased, we should be ready to increase his powers. I feel that this is not a matter which the opposition would be disposed to introduce as a contentious matter. It is too important; it is above that; it is a matter which the administration of the day should decide; but it is the duty of the opposition to bring it to the notice of the administration. There can be no question at all, I presume, that to-day, just as in the days when the Conservative party were in power, the Auditor General looks upon the opposition as his natural allies. It is his business to watch the administration so far as their appropriations are concerned, and to watch the officials in so far as all the expenditures are concerned; and it is only natural that he should regard the opposition of the day as his natural allies and assistants. In every case where the Auditor General thought the government were not giving him such support as he felt himself entitled to, but on the contrary regarded him as rather overmeddling, as too carping and critical, as a man with whom, in course of time, they might grow somewhat out of patience, and to whom they might not turn a ready ear, nothing would be more natural than that he should either appeal to the country as a whole or take the natural course, during the time parliament is in session, of appealing to that body of people who constitute the opposition of the day. But, after all, this is a matter which it is the duty of the administration to deal with. If the administration can show, as they have not on this occasion attempted to show, that the Audit Act is amply effective and that there are no grounds whatever for any request on the part of the Auditor General or the opposition to improve it, then they are perfectly justified; but I do not think the government of the day are altogether justified, when this matter is brought to their notice, in treating it as it has been treated by the administration on this occasion. It must be said that they have treated it with scant courtesy. The Finance Minister made a very short speech. He did not profess to exert himself, but disposed of the whole subject as one which might be lightly brushed aside. He treated it as an attack by the opposition, and did not deal with the question in its broad aspects. He made only a brief reference to the particular contract out of which this whole question may be said to have taken its rise; and, so far as that particular contract was concerned, it seems to me the effect of the speech of the Finance Minister was to justify the position of the Auditor General. The result would seem to go to show that by the intervention of the Auditor General the great purpose to which the people of the country are devoted —the economizing of the public funds—has been served. If that is true, it is a very powerful argument why some careful inquiries into this matter should be made.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. SAMUEL BARKER. I do not intend to occupy many minutes in the remarks that I propose to make on the subject now before the House. It is not, I think, necessary that I should do so. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition dealt fully with the outlines of the Bill which he suggested, and the reasons he gave for suggesting such a measure to the government, have not so far been answered. So far there has been no attempt whatever to reply to my hon. friend. It was a matter of surprise to me that the hon. the Minister of Finance should have avoided the substance of the question before the House, as he did, by referring to what he called the abstract motion of the leader of the opposition. The Minister of Finance knows perfectly well—no one knows better—why my hon. friend moved that abstract motion. He knew that the object of my hon. friend was to keep himself within the rules of the House. He knew that my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, made this abstract motion in order that he might lay before the government the draft or form of a Bill which could become law only if taken up by the government. There is nobody in this House who is not perfectly aware that if to-day a Bill of that character were introduced by anyone from this side, it would not have the slightest prospect of becoming law. There is no hon. member who does not know that the only chance such a Bill would have of getting upon the statute-books would be for the government of the day to take it up and put it through the House. It was for that reason that the leader of the opposition took the particular method he did, and laid before the House and the country a proposition that I think the government ought to have accepted. In the course of his remarks, the leader of the opposition said that he was not wedded to the particular wording of the Bill. He did not care exactly in what words the subject matter was expressed. All he proposed was to lay before the House what he thought was required as an improvement to the Audit Act and to leave to the government to adopt what phraseology they pleased, so long as they gave effect to what he considered was required. Therefore the Bill is before the House, to all intents and purposes, as fully as if it had been introduced in the ordinary course. Everybody knows how impossible it would be for this side to have such a measure adopted. The only possible way of its becoming law would be for hon. gentlemen opposite to take up the measure we suggest. That suggestion has been made, and we are waiting yet for some reply to the remarks which the hon. the leader of the opposition gave in support of the measure he outlined.

My hon. friend the Minister of Finance pleaded the right of parliament to do wrong if it chose and deprecated any limitation of its functions. Those are in effect the words he used. Well, we could not restrain or limit the powers of parliament even if we desired to do so. Nobody contends that it is possible for us to restrain or affect or limit parliamentary power. But I would like to ask this of the Finance Minister. Would he be good enough to state what sentence there is, from the beginning to the end of the proposition made by the leader of the opposition, which can be in any way construed as an attempt to interfere with the powers of parliament. Every passage of the Bill we propose, shows that there is not the slightest intention on the part of anybody to interfere with the fullest control by parliament. On the contrary what the leader of the opposition wants, is that parliament shall have the means of itself dealing with the subject. He does not want to give to any judge or auditor the power which parliament itself alone should exercise. In what possible manner can the proposed Bill interfere with the powers of parliament ? What is the proposition ? It is that in the event of the auditor appointed by this House and acting for this House, being of the opinion that the occasion called for such action on his part, he could petition the judge of the Exchequer Court to investigate certain matters that have come before him as auditor. The proposition is not that the judge shall deal with the question, not that he shall decide as between the government and the party claiming money, but that he shall investigate and report to parliament for the action of parliament. Surely in the face of such a proposition, the contention of the Finance Minister that we are endeavouring to get rid of the paramount authority of parliament is simply absurd. On the contrary we are endeavouring to increase the effective power of parliament. We are endeavouring to give parliament the means of dealing with matters which are now dealt with in the cabinet and secretly.

The Minister of Finance says that he cannot vote for the motion of the leader of the opposition, because it implies that the powers under the Audit Act are not now sufficient. In effect he contends that the Audit Act, passed many years ago under conditions very different indeed from those of to-day, cannot be improved to meet the circumstances in which we now live. Well, Sir, I have heard of Conservatism and Old Toryism, but for for such a proposition as this to come from a Liberal and a member of a Liberal government is certainly an extraordinary thing. Would it not be an improvement to provide that, when the Treasury Board overrule the Auditor General, the officer of parliament, they shall give reasons for that overruling ? That is one of the propositions of the hon. leader of the opposition. If that were adopted, the report of the Auditor General—and he is bound to report to parliament the overrulings of the Treasury Board —would give us not only the fact of the overruling but the reasons for it. Would anybody say that that would not be an improvement ? We read, session after session, Treasury Board decisions simply telling us that the Treasury Board do not approve the action of the Auditor General and overruling that action. That is all that is told us. These gentlemen may be right or they may be wrong, but, in their magnificence they are altogether above informing us why they take the particular view they do. Now the Auditor General, I say again is an officer of parliament, not an officer of the government; he is put there to overlook the expenditure of the government. He has before him in some particular case, the claim of a contractor or other person for a sum of money and the voucher and certificate of one of the ministers, the head of one of the departments of the government. Looking into the case he comes to the conclusion that there is something wrong—not necessarily something dishonest, we need not go into questions of dishonesty here, but something imprudent, informal, or, perhaps irregular—in the contracting of the debt. He refuses, acting for the public, to certify for the payment of the money. Well, what is done ? The Auditor General is overruled. By whom ? Why, by a committee or board of the gentlemen he is set to watch. by the Treasury Board, consisting of members of the cabinet. The public who trust the Auditor General are so particular about his independence that they will not allow the government to discharge him but provide that he is to be discharged only by parliament itself. But his decision is overruled by the colleagues of the head of the department who demands the money. So far, good, perhaps. I quite admit that in public affairs it would be impossible to leave it to any Auditor General or any other officer, no matter who he may be to have the last word in relation to expenditure of money. Nobody disputes the honesty of the Auditor General, but people may sometimes doubt his judgment. He is only human. Therefore, it would be wrong to make him a Czar and give him the right to say finally that moneys shall or shall not be paid. But, when he is overruled by an interested body, by the government of the day, who perhaps not dishonestly, but for reasons of their own, want the money paid, is that to be the end of it ? It would not be right, it would not be in the public interest that the Auditor General should be absolute; but is it in the public interest that the ministers should be absolute ? Is it to be for all time to come, with the growing importance of the transactions in this country, that a difference of opinion between the Auditor General and the minister is to be absolutly decided by the minister, through the minister's colleagues ! Surely, if that is to be the case, there is little essentially good in the auditorship. It is quite true the Auditor reports the overruling to parliament. But that overruling is reported to parliament after the transaction is closed, because the Treasury Board have the power to order the money to be paid and without giving reasons. We ask, therefore, on this branch of the Bill, that, when the Auditor General is overruled the reasons for the overruling shall be stated, in order that when the report is made to parliament, we shall know not only why the Auditor General has objected but why his objection has been set aside.

Then, we contend that some special remedy should be provided for extreme cases, and I will refer to that later on. Nobody pretends—the leader of the opposition would be the last to pretend—that this special remedy was to be used for every occasion. It is not probable, it is not even possible. that it will come in to frequent use. Because, the Auditor General is an officer of parliament and if he is found to bring up every petty question before parliament, parliament will very soon deal with an officious petty officer of that kind who cannot appreciate the significance or importance of particular transactions under his consideration.

Now. Sir, the requirement of the reasons for overruling is not the only amendment that has been suggested. Section 48 of the Audit Act was evidently framed for the purpose of enabling the Auditor General, from time to time, to make suggestions to parliament. It was, no doubt, foreseen that, however careful parliament might be in the framing of the Audit Act, many things would occur in the experience of an auditor which might well be reported to parliament for its consideration. Therefore, section 48 of the Act was inserted as a sort of safety valve, if I may so call it, and a very useful one it is in my opinion. Now, section 48 as it stands in the Act today, enables the Auditor General to make special reports to parliament. As the Act stands it reads thus :

In reporting as hereinbefore directed for the information of the House of Commons, the result of the examiniation of the appropriation accounts, the Auditor General shall call attention to every case in which cheques have been issued without his certificate——

That, of course, is not a matter of auditing, that is ignoring the Auditor, and he is expected to call the attention of parliament to it.

—or in which a grant has been exceeded—or in which money received by a department from other sources than the grants for the year to which the account relates has not been applied or accounted for according to the directions of parliament—or in which a sum charged against a grant is not supported by proof of payment—or in which a payment so charged did not occur within the period of the account, or was for any other reason, not properly chargeable against the grant, or was in any way irregular——

Then the leader of the opposition proposes to add two provisions, and I desire to call the attention of the First Minister particularly to them, because, in my judgment, they are of very great importance to the people of this country, especially in regard to one of the departments. The first is :

—or in which a sum charged against a grant for capital account was expended wholly or in part for a purpose properly chargeable to revenue account——

Now, upon that subject let me say a few words. We have again and again discussed in this House the proper application of expenditure for capital and for revenue. We find, in passing the estimates every year, that large sums are granted on capital account. It is impossible, when the estimates are before the House, however anxious gentlemen here may be to do their duty, to know whether the whole of that money is properly chargeable to capital or not. The government obtains a grant for, say, half a million of money applicable to a certain line of expenditure, and to be charged to capital. For example, in the railway grants a sum of three or four hundred thousand dollars may be applicable to expenditure upon bridges, and half a million in some years has been granted on capital account for steel rails. Now, no one in this House, when the estimates are passed, can undertake to say absolutely how much of that should be capital and how much revenue. But when the accounts come before the Auditor General after the expenditure has taken place, the Auditor General can tell that and can, by obtaining expert advice, know very closely indeed how much of that money should have been really charged to capital and how much to revenue. But as the statute has already been passed upon the estimates, making it all applicable to capital, he, as auditor, has nothing to do with it ; all he can say is that $500,000 has been expended upon rails and $350,000 upon bridges, and upon the Act which was passed by parliament he is directed to charge all to capital. Now, I say that the Auditor General, while carrying out strictly, according to his duty, what parliament has directed him to do, that is to charge that money up to capital, should be enabled and required to report to this House specially that it has come to his knowledge in the investigation of the accounts that a portion, perhaps all, of that which was so charged to capital ought really to have been charged to revenue account. Can anybody dispute that this is an important feature of auditing ? The Auditor General cannot help us as the Audit Act stands. The estimates have been passed, they have become an Act of parliament. He is directed to charge a certain expenditure to capital, and he must obey, though he finds in the course of the year that the government is renewing bridges with that capital appropriation. If he were to report the fact to parliament we could see that sometimes a half a million of money that has been charged to capital and added to the debt of the country has enabled the minister of the day to show a profit of several hundred thousand dollars on the operation of the railway ; and the result of the hon. gentleman showing such profit is that the apparent profit is used to justify expenditure in other directions. Why should we not know the truth ? Is there any business man throughout the length and breadth of this Dominion who, in his own affairs, would not say : I want to know precisely what we are doing, I want to see what is a capital charge and what is a revenue charge. It may all come out of my pocket, but I want to know exactly how the business is going on. And so will the people of this Dominion. It may not matter to us whether the debt is incurred on capital account or whether we have had a deficit in the earnings of the railway, it is all a debt. But we do want to know whether the railway is being worked at a profit or at a loss, and it is a proper thing for that purpose that such a report as this should come from the Auditor General to parliament when he finds that the estimates, as they have been granted by parliament, are cloaking the truth. Therefore, I say that this is a proper amendment to add to the old Act.

Then there is a second addition proposed :

—or in which by reason of the generality of the appropriation, or otherwise, he has been unable, to properly check or control the expenditure.

Now, that arises very largely in connection with the same department, but it does not apply solely to that department. Hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House will recollect that it has become a feature of the Railway Department that the whole of its estimates, involving from two to three or four million dollars, is summed up in about half a page. But take any other department of the government, and you will find greater detail of every expenditure. The result is this: We find three, or four, or five hundred thousand dollars asked, for a certain description of expenditure. Take one instance, $385,000 say for strengthening bridges. It is put in the estimates in that general and vague way. We get out from the minister here, and endeavour to put upon 'Hansard,' how many and what particular bridges he is going to strengthen, and how much he wants to expend upon each bridge. Now, it may be a question whether the Auditor General can go to 'Hansard' and say to the department later on: I shall not allow you to expend more on that particular bridge than you asked parliament to allow you to expend on it; I shall not allow you for any bridge more than you said you needed for that bridge; and if you do not expend the amount you asked for a particular bridge, the surplus that you did not require shall not go into your general expenditure, but shall lapse.

That is the way business is done. If an engineer upon a railway asked $20,000 to renew or strengthen a particular bridge and expended only $10,000 upon that bridge the other $10,000 would lapse; he could not put the balance in his general expenditure and use it as he pleased; yet the result of these general estimates that are placed upon the statutes of the country under the present system is that the railway department can do what it pleases with the money. It is obvious that if this system is continued as it has been going on for years past and as it may have always been going on for aught I know, the minister may ask $300,000 or $400,000 to strengthen bridges and he may expend the whole of that money on one-half of the bridges and leaves the other half to come up next year. Therefore, the Bill provides that the Auditor General shall be at liberty to report that under an estimate given in that general form he is unable to properly check the expenditure and prevent the department from using that money otherwise than as was intended. This Bill in this respect provides a needed check upon the departments which is lacking under the present Audit Act.

After all, however, the main question is the reference of certain matters to the judge of the Exchequer Court. Let us see how that comes about. A claim is made upon a department and is passed by that department so that it comes before the Auditor General for his consideration. The Minister of Finance says that the Auditor General has full power, that he can make any investigation he likes, can send for papers, and examine people under oath. That is all true, but, after the Auditor General has done all that, after he has called his witnesses, examined the papers, taken testimony upon oath and decided in his discretion that the money should not be paid, what happens? Why he is overridden by the Treasury Board, who will order the money to be paid, and that without giving a reason. Should it be left in that position? The colleagues of the minister at the head of the department whose accounts are being questioned by the auditor are the final judges. It is quite true that the Auditor General can report these facts to parliament, but it does appear to me—and I think this will commend itself to every gentleman in this House—that when there is a dispute between a department and the auditor or between the Treasury Board and the auditor, both parties to the dispute may become a little prejudiced. They are all human, ministers just as well as auditors, and the Treasury Board ministers are anxious to stand up for their colleagues and their colleague is anxious to stand up for what he calls his department. The auditor, on the other hand, is no doubt anxious to stand up for his decision and so when we get the papers before us as reported by the Auditor General, either one side or the other claims that there is prejudice. The ministers say: Oh, this auditor is trying to rule the country and the ministry. The Auditor General, no doubt, says: The ministry is trying to get things through because the department wishes to get them through. Neither of these is quite the functionary that an impartial jury would like to rely upon, and therefore it seems to me desirable that in important cases the judge of the Exchequer Court should be allowed to take evidence, report all the circumstances to parliament in order that parliament might take action. It may occur to some that that would interfere with the progress of business. Is that so? First of all the proposition is that after the Auditor General has been overruled he must, if he wants to appeal, file his petition within ten days. Now, I take it that the world is not going to come to an end, because there is a ten days delay in settling a question of that kind. I think most people would be delighted that the delay did not exceed ten days. What then? Within those ten days the Auditor General must file his objection in the court and give notice to the Treasury Board. The Treasury Board and the Auditor General can then fight it out if they please, but in order that the delay might not injure a contractor the judge before whom a matter comes up may order the money or a portion of it to be paid forthwith. How would that apply in such a case as has been mentioned here? Take the Davis case. There you have a contract running over many years. A claim for the year's service comes before the Auditor General; there is a dispute; he refuses to pass the account; the Treasury Board overrules him and he files his objection. Now, what would the judge probably do in a case like that? Any judge would say in his discretion: Well the country for this year has had that service; I will order that you pay at once whatever appears to be reasonable for this year's service, but I will go on and inquire into the whole of this contract and report to parliament so that when it comes before parliament next session they may deal with the case. Would that be unreasonable ? Would there be anything in that prejudicial to the contractor ? What happened in this case ? Owing to the protest of the Auditor General and perhaps to a little public comment upon the matter, the government, instead of waiting for parliament dealt with the matter themselves, and induced the contractor to modify the terms. The hon. gentlemen seem to think that that shows there was no necessity for the judge. To my mind it shows that in such a case we ought to have a judge. It is quite true that in this particular instance the government did find that the contract was a bad one for the people and did induce the contractor to modify its terms, but where would the country have been if the government had not arrived at that conclusion ? Supposing that the government had concluded : We are going to stand by the department and not alter the contract. What they admit by their conduct to have been an injury and outrage upon the public, would have stood for all time, because we would have had no means of getting at the true facts of the case.

The fact that the government themselves, under the protest of the Auditor General, have been obliged to alter and modify a contract is the strongest argument as to the importance of having means in other cases to ascertain whether modifications, or alterations, or cancellations should take place. I press that upon the First Minister. I have no doubt the right hon. gentleman has the utmost confidence in his own uprightness and probity and in his desire to do what is right in the public interest ; but there may not always be such a First Minister as he ; there may not always be ministers such as his colleagues, and we may not always have cabinets who would be so willing to admit that in 1900 they did wrong, and who in 1902 would coerce the contractor to abandon his legal rights and take a modified agreement. They might not even always have the power to compel the contractor to modify his terms. If this reference could be made to a judge who would send for that contractor and for the department and for the Auditor General and get all the facts and report to parliament, then that omnipotence about which the Minister of Finance is so anxious would come into play, and parliament could insist upon justice being done, and parliament could insist that the contract, outrageous as it might be, should—of course after making all due compensation—be cancelled as a matter of duty to the people. It is not right that it should be left to the mere discretion and whim of the government of the day, to say whether they will go to a contractor and point out to him that the contract entered into was a blunder. I am not making any charge of impropriety, but on the face of it, it is absolutely clear that there was a blunder in connection with this contract ; for Mr. Aylesworth points out that the contract made in 1900 actually does not follow the terms of the Order in Council authorizing it, and that possibly it would be found that a contract so entered into would not be enforcible. We may find other occasions in which the government, not wilfully but through the blunder of some person enters into a contract that is not in accordance with what they themselves intended. Why should not such things as this be brought out by an inquiry ? It is not necessary to impute fraud and wrong doing. There may be occasions among governments, as there are among business people where blunders are perpetrated, and why should they not be rectified ? Why should the rectification be left to a ministry, who perhaps at certain seasons cannot afford to admit that they have made a blunder ? Why should it be left to them to overrule the Auditor General, and then merely tell us their Treasury Board did not agree with him. Surely it is in the interests of the country that there should be such an inquiry as is proposed in the Bill in a proper case; and what is the harm? If this power were used by the Auditor General unnecessarily or unreasonably the remedy lies with ourselves. He is our officer and we can dismiss him. He will not dare do such a thing ; the law would be used but seldom. The best protection this country could have against improper conduct on the part of politicians of either party, would be the deterring effect of such a law on the statute-book. I am surprised that the Minister of Finance gave so little attention to the propositions that have been made. I cannot understand any government, I cannot understand this government, refusing what is really a protection to themselves. Its acceptance would advance them in the esteem of the people because it would show that they were willing to have a proper check on behalf of the public as against themselves and as against their departments.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). The leader of the opposition asked this House to declare : that the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act should be so extended as to confer upon the Auditor General powers ample in every respect to protect the public interests and to safeguard the public treasury, the inference being, that the provisions of that Act are not now in every respect sufficient to protect the public interest and to safeguard the public treasury. It will be proper for us to consider what are the present safeguards before we deal with suggested changes. Incidentally I may observe that the Audit Act has now been in force for about twenty-five years. Some of the best men on the other side of the House, have been endeavouring to point out the necessity for some changes in the Act, and I think without offence I may say, that they have brought to the discussion of this question not only the information they may have acquired during their experience in parliament, but as well, information which must have come to them through daily contact with the Auditor General for some time past. And, notwithstanding their personal experience, and notwithstanding the information they may have acquired as a result of their intercourse with the Auditor General, they have not been able to point out a single case which has occurred during these twenty-five years in which a dollar of public money has been paid out as a result of some defect in the Audit Act.

Mr. BARKER. Can the minister tell us on how many occasions the decision of the Auditor General has been overruled ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Evidently when they have been overruled they have been properly overruled, and if they have not been properly overruled how does it come to pass that parliament has not investigated the question and determined as to whether the Auditor General or the Treasury Board was right ? Is it to be assumed forsooth, that the Auditor General is to be right on all cases and that the Treasury Board, representative of all governments that have been in power in this country, has always been in the wrong ? Is it to be assumed, as was said this afternoon for instance, that the Auditor General always seeks the best legal advice that can be obtained, and that having obtained the best legal advice he invariably follows it—when it agrees with his own opinion.

So that I presume that when the Auditor General has decided one way, if the Treasury Board has overruled him, the Treasury Board, in the opinion of my hon. friend, must always be in the wrong. If that applies to the present government, my hon. friend from Hamilton must remember that it applies with equal force to those who have gone before. I may be permitted to observe that to the tone of those who have spoken on this subject no exception can be taken. I do not for a moment pretend that it has not been discussed in a proper spirit and tone by hon. gentlemen opposite. It is a serious question, and I agree that it ought to be the subject of investigation by parliament. But my hon. friend the leader of the opposition said that one of the reasons why there should be a change in the Audit Act—and he spoke as if it was in his judgment the paramount reason—were the frequent overrulings of the auditor by the Treasury Board. Have these been more frequent under this government than they were before ? The hon. leader of the opposition speaks with very great authority in this House, not only because of the position he occupies, but also because of his personal character ; but something, it seems to me is required to support that assertion. I have caused some inquiry to be made, though I have only had a few hours at my disposal for the purpose, and I think I may safely say that the overrulings in recent years have not exceeded those of the years preceeding 1896. So that if these overrulings form a reason for a change in the Audit Act, that reason existed prior to 1896.

Mr. SPROULE. May I remind the hon. gentleman that the Audit Act was amended twice to meet the views of the Auditor General?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And it was suggested that it should be amended very much oftener. I have only looked into the matter very cursorily, because, while the hon. leader of the opposition sent me a copy of this amendment, I had not an opportunity to look at it until I came into the House at 11 o'clock. In 1880 the Public Accounts Committee recommended that the Audit Act should be amended, but nothing was done.

Mr. SPROULE. I am quite sure it was amended.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If my hon. friend will look at Bourinot, under the Audit Act, he will find that amendments were recommended by the Public Accounts Committee in 1880, and that those amendments were not made.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Act was not amended in 1880, but it has been amended in some respects three times.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. At other times other amendments were suggested. My hon. friend is not aware of the fact that the Auditor General has had a standing grievance, not only against this government, but against other governments. He appears to play the role of the Ishmaelite, whose hand is raised against all men, and against whom all other men's hands are raised.

Mr. SPROULE. He must be an Irishman, because he is always 'agin' the government.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, he just missed being an Irishman. If he were an Irishman, he would have a keener sense of humour, and I am quite sure he would not have read his own reports which he has published each year and survived the effect. I have no quarrel with the Auditor General. He has been good enough to say, I notice, that as the result of some statements I am supposed to have made, he has come to the conclusion that the government are not going to amend the Audit Act, I have looked over all the statements which I have made this session—and I do not make so many that I am not able to review them—and I can find no evidence that I said at any time anything implying that the government did not intend to amend the Audit Act if an amendment appeared necessary. I venture to say that no gentleman in this House or in this country has a higher regard for the Auditor General's great personal character and work, and his honest and sincere desire to do his duty according to his lights than I have. I want, however, to recur to what I said a moment ago. During all these years that the Audit Act has been in force, a great many thousands and millions of dollars have been paid out by the Auditor General; and notwithstanding the enormous capacity for criticism which he undoubtedly possesses, and notwithstanding the ingenuity which my hon. friends on the other side of the House are undoubtedly endowed with, no one has been able to point to a single case in which one dollar of public money has ever been paid out because of any defect in the Audit Act. My hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) said—and I am sorry to say that the statement was repeated by my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule)—that tens of thousands of dollars have been paid out of the public treasury without any consideration having been received for them. Where is the evidence in support of that? Wild, rash statements of that sort are good enough perhaps in the byroads and the sideways of the country, but they are not good enough for the House of Commons. A statement of that sort ought not to be made without something being advanced in support of it. My hon. friend from East Grey as a rule is careful in the statements he makes, but I ask him if he can point to a single case in which, not tens of thousands, but a single dollar has been paid out without consideration having been received for it. My hon. friend named the case of Corry & Laverdure. If my hon. friend would make a statement of this sort in this House on his own personal knowledge, no person would accept his word more quickly than I would; but when he made that statement, he was obliged to say that he made it from information.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would like to know where the information is. I would like to know when the inquiry took place before the Public Accounts Committee when any such statement as that was proved. It seems to me that our friends on the other side of the House are far too anxious to perform the duties they owe to their constituents and to the country to allow a payment of even $100 to be made to any firm of contractors without consideration, by this government or any other government, and not have it investigated. They know what their duty is and how to perform it; and if such a scandalous transaction as that occurred, can any one pretend for a moment that there would not have been a gentleman to rise on the other side of the House and denounce it, and bring it before the Public Accounts Committee, and, as a result, have this government expelled from power, as they ought to be expelled if guilty of any such transaction?

Mr. SPROULE. It is hard to expel them when they have the votes. Is it not a fact that in the Davis case, if you can believe the letters that passed between the Auditor General and the Railway Department, that department certified to an account although nothing was received for it, and that the money was paid only because the Auditor General was overruled by the Treasury Board?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There again, I can scarcely believe it possible that my hon. friend, with his long parliamentary experience, would for a moment say that a money payment had been made, and that after the payment was made the Auditor General was overruled. That is impossible. The payment can only be made after the Auditor General is disposed of. It cannot be made in advance.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not say it was made in advance.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. You must not get away from the fact that Mr. Davis did not receive one farthing in respect of that contract.

Mr. SPROULE. I assume that he did.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend must not assume what is not true. He must assume what the fact is, that he did not receive a dollar.

Mr. SPROULE. For this reason, had I not a right to assume that? The Auditor General objected to the payment unless a certificate was given by the Railway Department to the effect that value had been received or that the contract had been let after tenders were invited, neither of which was the case. But he was overruled by the Treasury Board and still the claim was sustained. Beyond that I did not go, for I assumed that after that the money was paid.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It was not.

Mr. SPROULE. I am quite willing to be corrected and accept the correction. But if the money was not paid, was that not due to the fact that the Auditor General prevented payment?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I accept the hon. gentleman's argument and say it was due to the fact that the Auditor General had sufficient power under the Audit Act to prevent the payment, which proves that the machinery of the Act is all right. Let us get back to the facts. I am not going to follow the example of my hon. friend and indulge in surmises. That matter has to be dealt with in the Public Accounts Committee when we will have every opportunity of investigating it from beginning to end. The government have no fear concerning the result of any investigation to be held. But let me say to my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) that not one farthing was paid in connection with the Davis contract, except under the amended contract, which was prepared after I myself became Minister of Justice—I was not in the department when the original contract was made—and which contract was approved by the Auditor General. But we are not dealing with that matter. We are dealing with the matter of Corry & Laverdure. I may have misunderstood, but I understood before six o'clock the statement to have been made that in connection with that case $125,000 had been paid out without consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. That was my understanding.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I challenge that statement. I go further and say it is impossible it could be true—my hon. friend understands of course the sense in which I use the expressions—because if it were true, my hon. friends opposite would not have allowed twenty-four hours to pass by without demanding an investigation. And if they did not, they would be, as has been suggested, recreant in their duty. And I am quite certain they are not. But eliminating altogether the question of duty, I am quite sure they would not allow such an opportunity as that to pass by to criticise this government and discover the first scandal which can possibly be charged to it since 1896.

I am not disposed to say that some changes might not be made in the details of the Audit Act. And if changes are necessary in order to enable the Auditor General to more effectively perform the duties assigned to him—not the duties of Czar of Canada, not the duties of controller of the destinies of this country, but the duties of Auditor General—if anything be required to enable him more adequately to perform those duties, all he has to do is to point out in what respect the Audit Act is imperfect, and he will be met by this government with open arms. We have no desire whatever to do otherwise than give every facility to that gentleman, who was appointed by Mr. Mackenzie and whose office was created by the Liberal party, to adequately audit any claim made on this government. But before I proceed to deal with the suggested changes, will my hon. friends bear with me while I point out the safeguards that we now possess ? The estimates for the public service are prepared each year in each department by the officials of that department, and after these estimates have received the approval of the head of the department, they are brought down to parliament. When they come to parliament they are fully discussed. Every item is open to public discussion and must be justified. And we who have sat in this House the last few years know that the severe critics of the opposition will insist on almost every dollar of every item being justified before the item is allowed to pass. When that is done we have the appropriation, and when the Appropriation Act is passed, it is for the executive to deal with the money appropriated and to be expended. And you must bear in mind that not a dollar can be paid out by the executive except with the approval of the Auditor General. And if an account is sent to him for approval and he considers that it requires to be investigated, he exercises to the extreme limit his powers of investigation. Why, at the present time if I were asked to make a suggestion with respect to amendments to the Audit Act, my suggestions would be that his powers of investigation should be limited, at all events, with respect to time. That is to say, he should not have the right to keep before him for three, four, five and six months before reporting to the Treasury Board, as he can do now, an account sent to him to be audited. His powers of investigation are absolutely unlimited, and if anything were required to support that statement, I need only refer this House to the correspondence exchanged and the investigation held with respect to this very Davis contract. That matter was before the Auditor General for months at a time, and when the accounts came in he required not only a careful examination of the contract, but he employed, as one of my hon. friends said this afternoon, the best legal talent available to aid him in his investigation. He went further. He went down to the canal and made a personal investigation. And not content with that personal investigation, he summoned the engineer of the department, Mr. Munro, and instructed him to inquire. Not content with Mr. Munro, he sent for Mr. Hoffmeister, the gentleman who was connected with the Soulanges canal. Not content with that he summoned three engineers to his assistance —the engineer of the electric light company of this city, Mr. Parke, of Toronto, and a professor from McGill College, Montreal. So he had not only the benefit of the investigation by Messrs. Munro and Hoffmeister, but also by these three expert engineers I have just mentioned, and he kept the matter before him as long as he chose. And there is no provision that I know of which can limit the time during which he may hold an investigation or which can limit the powers conferred on him. What is there to prevent him taking all the time he chooses and making every investigation he pleases ? He has got these powers just as fully as they could be exercised by any judge of the Exchequer Court. After the matter comes before him and after he holds this investigation, after he examines all these witnesses and causes all these inquiries to be made, then forsooth when it suits his own good will, if he has a leisure moment, he decides one way or the other—either in favour of the payment or against it. And if he decides against it, then there is an appeal to the Treasury Board. The matter then comes before the Treasury Board, and if there is a question of law involved, it must be referred to the Department of Justice for an opinion. And when the matter comes before that department, it is disposed of by the deputy minister with the concurrence of the minister. The opinion of the Department of Justice decides the question of law, and it is only in the event of that department giving an opinion adverse to the Auditor General's contention that the Treasury Board acts. Now, it has been suggested incidentally that in one case the Treasury Board had overruled the Department of Justice. I should like to have a reference to that case. I do not believe it possible such a case exists, because it would be a practical violation of the Treasury Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Department of Justice only intervenes where the Auditor General decides on the ground that there is no parliamentary authority.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not understand that the amendments I suggest alter the law in that respect.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not referring to my hon. friend at all. I am referring to something said by my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) with reference to the case of Corry & Laverdure. It is only after all this has been done that the Treasury Board acts. And if the Treasury Board orders the issue of a cheque, then parliament requires that all the correspondance exchanged between the Auditor General and the Treasury Board should be submitted to parliament at the next session. Now, it is suggested that there ought to be an amendment to the Audit Act, so that the Treasury Board might be obliged, as I understood my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker), to give a reasoned opinion in support of its overruling. Of course, the Auditor General is obliged, in his reference to the Treasury Board, to give reasons for the position he takes. There may be something to be said in support of that, but see what there is on the other side. What would be the advantage in giving the reasons for the overruling, as my hon. friend from Hamilton argues ? It would be that members of parliament, when they are called upon to examine into the controversy between the Auditor General and the Treasury Board should be in a position to weigh the reasons on both sides, and so reach a conclusion whether the Auditor General or whether the Treasury Board is right. Technically, there may be something to be said——

Mr. BARKER. May I ask the minister (Mr. Fitzpatrick) why the report is sent at all ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I say that technically there may be something to be said in favour of that view. And when it comes to the refinement of a point, my hon. friend from Hamilton seldom goes wrong. But what is the advantage ? It is that parliament may be able to decide as between the Treasury Board and the Auditor General. Now, both the report of the Auditor General and the overruling of the Treasury Board comes to parliament. The gentlemen who overrule the Auditor General are here in parliament to give their reasons. Why cannot the reasons be given here ? Why state the reasons for an overruling when you can have the gentlemen here who made the overruling, and may catechize and cross-examine them on the subject ? Are you to have one set of reasons in the report on the overruling and another given here in parliament ? When you get the Treasury Board Report, the payment has been made by the Auditor General ; and, after the Auditor General has made this payment, the whole matter must be referred to parliament. It comes here for the consideration of parliament, and when it is before parliament the constitution provides proper machinery for any further investigation required. You have the Public Accounts Committee, before which you can go, and to which all these questions may be submitted. By that committee these matters can be fully investigated. That committee has greater powers than are possessed by any court in the country. Everybody knows that the Public Accounts Committee is not bound by rules of evidence or by rules of procedure ; its powers are inquisitorial ; you can inquire into any fact in any manner you please and bring in any evidence you choose, and this you cannot do before a court. If you bring the matter before the Exchequer Court you must proceed according to the well-known rules of law. And my objection—passing on rapidly from this, in order to relieve the House from the necessity of listening to me for an undue length of time—my objection to any reference to the court is that, as a lawyer, I object to any confounding and confusing of the legislative functions of parliament with the judicial functions of the court. We do not want a judge of the Exchequer Court to investigate our affairs. We do not want to share any of the functions we are called upon to perform with any judge or any court. I am not dealing with the personnel of the Exchequer Court, nor do I take into consideration the individual who happens to preside over the court at the present time; but I say it would be an abandonment of our duties as a parliament to confer upon any court the right to investigate any questions under our control. And let me add, in view of the experience, short though it may be, that I have had as minister of the Crown, and especially that in the Department of Justice, that one or two, or even half a dozen, judges of the Exchequer Court would not be enough to perform the duties that would arise under this proposed measure. If the Auditor General had the power to refer any question about which he had any doubt to the Exchequer Court, I think we should find the records of that court pile up with amazing rapidity.

Now, I do not want to deal with the question of the contract that has been raised, but I would like to echo, feebly it is true, but at least earnestly, the sentiments expressed by my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) just before the House rose at six o'clock. It seems to me that we in this country are too much given to imputing to our public men improper conduct and improper motives. So far as I am concerned, I am far from being willing to believe that all this profligacy and corruption exists in the public life of Canada. On the contrary, the lesson I learn from the experience I have acquired since I entered this House is that there are men in this House, on both sides of it, who, if they gave to their private affairs one tithe of the time, one tithe of the energy, one tithe of the industry, that they give to the public affairs of this country, they would be very much further advanced, so far as their personal affairs are concerned. And I take it that if there is any wrong-doing in connection with anything for which the government is responsible, the remedy is not to be found in making idle, vain charges. For, after all, we must bear in mind that slander and libel will travel miles while truth is getting its boots on. We must not overlook the fact that unfortunately there are those in this country who are too prone to believe everything wrong as concerning public men. There are those in this country—and I speak of both sides of politics—who are too prone to believe that every man who comes to this House comes for his own personal profit and his own personal advantage. And I say that that is not fair to the public men of Canada; it is not fair to the men who occupy positions in this House to proceed, by insinuation, to suggest wrong-doing. The proper course is to make a statement and, having made it, to abide by the consequences after a full and fair investigation.

Now, I have, perhaps, travelled further than I had intended to do and further than I ought to have done. But, briefly, the view I take is this, that so far as the Audit Act is concerned, that Act now contains all that is necessary to enable the Auditor General to carry on the duties which it was originally intended he should perform. If to enable him to more faithfully perform those duties amendments are required, the government would be, not only willing, but anxious to do anything necessary to facilitate his task. But I say it is not by substituting the courts for parliament that we can accomplish that object. And, so far as the Auditor General is concerned, I repeat what I said a moment ago: I have no quarrel with him personally, but he is too much of a man, I assume, and too vain of his own opinion, not to see that people who differ from him should not be afraid to declare their differences. And when I come to discuss the matter further, I shall have occasion to point out inaccuracies in connection with the statement in connection with the Davis contract far more serious and more important than the one pointed out by the leader of the opposition this morning.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. I am not about to discuss the legal phase of this question. I have listened attentively to the speeches made this afternoon and this evening. I was especially struck with the speech of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick). I do not wish to flatter him, but he has thrown more light on this subject, for me at least, than anybody else who has spoken.

I was pleased to hear him say that the government is willing and anxious to amend the Audit Act. If that is done I think that is all the present auditor will require. Now I think if an inquiry is made, I have no doubt it will satisfy the Auditor. I think he is not an unreasonable man, if he had been he would not have occupied that position for 26 years. He was appointed by Mr. Mackenzie when premier of this country, he was well known to the premier, he sat in this House, he was a useful member of this House, he was the best mathematician in this country, and would not have received the appointment if he had been an inferior man. His services were needed at that time. The country was being robbed right and left, according to what Mr. Mackenzie himself said. He said he had all he could do, he had to stand guard over the public chest to keep the thieves away. That is why he appointed a man of the stamp of Mr. McDougall. Then when the Conservatives came into power four or five years after, and during the 18 years they remained in power, they retained the services of Mr. McDougall, they held up both his hands, and I never heard they had any accusation against him. I never heard that the opposition of that day had very much against him either. So he must have been a pretty good man in that office. The Minister of Justice tells us this evening what an able officer he is, how he has gone down to the Cornwall canal, taking engineers with him, and made a thorough investigation as to the lighting of that canal by these lamps, and ascertaining whether the government were paying too much for them. 30 cents a night seems to me to be altogether too much. However, that is not my business except as a member of this House whose duty it is to see that we do not pay more than a thing is worth. The government should inquire into this matter, they should have inquired long ago whether the previous government had made a foolish bargain or not. It seems to me rather late in the day to make these inquiries. However, the Auditor tells us that they are paying too much, and if so, then I think the government ought to assist him with a view of paying only what is right. I think it is our duty to maintain the present Auditor in his office. It will cost us less. If you superannuate him—he is only 65 years of age and he is good for ten years more—if you superannuate him you will have to pay him almost as much money as the next Auditor will get, that is, you will have to pay two auditors and you only require one. He is quite able and competent to discharge those duties, so I think the government had better amend the law; he is asking nothing unreasonable and I think the government should do it. Now speaking of auditors, do not the farmers, does not everybody in this country know what auditing means and what it costs? Why, Sir, there is not a village, town, township or county, or a loan society, or any other business corporation but requires an auditor to look into its financial affairs. Some business corporations have lost hundreds of thousands of dollars by inefficient auditors. Now when you have a man whom the whole people of this country respect, in whom you have full confidence, try and keep him as long as you can. Why, Sir, it is to my own knowledge that one loan company in a town near where I live have lost thousands and thousands of dollars through an inefficient auditor. I am pretty sure that the government will take this matter up. I am speaking on their behalf, I sympathize with them; I do not want them to go to the country with this affair hanging over their heads, having to meet the charge that they have thrown out the most efficient auditor this country ever had for the purpose of putting some man in his place that is anxious for the job. That is what they will surely be charged with if they let him go.

House divided on amendment (Mr. R. L. Borden).

YEAS:

Messieurs

Alcorn,	Henderson,
Armstrong,	Hughes (Victoria),
Avery,	Ingram,
Barker,	Kaulbach,
Bell,	Kidd,
Bennett,	Lancaster,
Birkett,	LaRivière,
Blain,	Lefurgey,
Borden (Halifax),	Lennox,
Boyd,	Léonard,
Brock,	MacLaren (Perth),
Broder,	Maclean,
Bruce,	McGowan,
Carscallen,	Monk,
Casgrain,	Morin,
Clare,	Northrup,
Clarke,	Pringle,
Cochrane,	Richardson,
Culbert,	Robinson (Elgin),
Daniel,	Roche (Marquette),
Donnelly,	Rosamond,
Earle,	Smith (Wentworth),
Fowler,	Sproule,
Ganong,	Taylor,
Gilmour,	Vrooman,
Gourley,	Ward,
Hackett,	Wilmot,
Halliday,	Wilson.—56.

NAYS:

Messieurs

Angers,	Lang,
Archambault,	Lapointe,
Bazinet,	Laurier (Sir Wilfrid),
Beith,	Lavergne
Béland,	(Drummond & Artha.)
Bickerdike,	Law,
Blanchet,	LeBlanc,
Borden (Sir Frederick),	Logan,
Bourassa,	Loy,
Brodeur,	Macdonald,
Brown,	Mackie,
Bruneau,	MacKinnon,
Bureau,	Macpherson,
Calvert,	McColl,
Carbonneau,	McCool,
Champagne,	McGugan,
Christie,	McIsaac,
Costigan,	McLennan,
Cowan,	Marcil (Bagot),
Davis,	Marcil (Bonaventure),
Delisle,	Matheson,
Demers (Lévis),	Meigs,
Demers (St. John),	Mignault,
Desjardins,	Mulock (Sir William),
Emmerson,	Murray,
Erb,	Oliver,
Ethier,	Paterson,
Fielding,	Préfontaine,
Fisher,	Puttee,
Fitzpatrick,	Reid (Restigouche),
Gallery,	Riley,
Galliher,	Rivet,
Gauvreau,	Ross (Rimouski),
Gibson,	Ross (Victoria, N.S.),
Girard,	Ross (Yukon),
Gould,	Russell,
Grant,	Scott,
Guthrie,	Sifton,
Harwood,	Sinclair,
Haszard,	Smith (Vancouver),
Heyd,	Stephens,
Holmes,	Sutherland (Essex),
Hughes (King's, P.E.I.),	Talbot,
Hyman,	Tolmie,
Johnston (Cape Breton)	Tucker,
Johnston (Lambton),	Turgeon,
Kendall,	Wade,
	Wright.—94.

PAIRS :

Ministerials.	Opposition
Dyment,	McCormick,
Sutherland (Hon. J.),	Haggart,
McEwen,	Sherritt,
Wallace,	Tisdale,
Parmelee,	Pope,
Campbell,	Osler,
Ross (Ontario),	Clancy,
Gervais,	Kemp,
McCarthy,	Seagram,
Copp,	Hale,
Lewis,	Robinson (Northumberland),
Laurier (L'Assomption)	Johnson (Cardwell),
Cartwright,	Tupper,
Tobin,	Ball,
Harty,	Reid (Grenville),
Lovell,	Kendry,
Tarte,	Dugas,
Thompson (Haldimand),	Calvin,
MacLaren (Huntingdon),	Roddick,
Morrison,	Porter,
Douglas,	Thomson (Grey),
Proulx,	Lavell,
German.	Tolton.

Amendment (Mr. R. L. Borden) negatived.

PROCEDURE RE CONCURRENCE.

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Speaker, before we proceed in committee with the estimates which have already been under consideration, I have a suggestion to make as respects which I have had a conversation with my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), and in which I think I shall have his concurrence. Our session has now advanced into the new fiscal year and we have no supplies voted. From day to day claims will come in for the services of the current year, some of which may not be very urgent, but many of which are of a character that cannot conveniently be postponed. That would notably be the case in regard to the civil service and the payment of labour generally. In the case of larger claims, perhaps, no serious harm would come from a little delay, but it is very inconvenient to have claims of that character delayed even for a very short time. I have therefore to propose that the committee shall grant us what is called a 'vote on account' to the extent of one-fifth of the items that have not already been dealt with by the committee. We have dealt with a number of items which now stand on the order paper for concurrence. At the earliest possible moment I will ask the House to concur in these items and I would besides now ask the committee to favour us with this general vote of one-fifth of the items which have not yet been considered. I quite realize that in asking the committee to make this appropriation, it is necessary to have an understanding as to the effect of the committee granting this vote on account. Many of these items may possibly be the subject of consideration and debate. It is quite possible that some gentlemen may wish to object to some of them and therefore it should be perfectly understood that in voting for this one-fifth, as a matter of urgency, no hon. gentleman should be held as committing himself to the expenditure, but that every member should be absolutely free to discuss the matter as fully as if this vote had not been passed. It is a matter of urgency, it has been done on a number of occasions in past years and I hope I shall have the concurrence of hon. gentlemen opposite in meeting these urgent claims in the way I have suggested. I therefore beg to move that

A sum not exceeding the amount set forth below, be granted to His Majesty for the following services for the year ending the 30th June, 1905——

Then we set forth all the items not yet dealt with and take one-fifth in each case.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The same question arose last session and I then satisfied myself that it had been the practice, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has just stated, to concur in such a vote on account. It is thoroughly understood, as I thought it was thoroughly understood last year, that in assenting to this vote for reasons which are in the public interest, we are not in any way depriving ourselves of the right to object to any item or to discuss to the fullest possible extent any of the items, a vote on account of which is thus given. In order that there may be no possible misunderstanding on that subject, I now express my concurrence in what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has said. We are voting these items not because we have considered them, not because we are prepared to approve of them all, but because they are submitted by the government and no doubt will eventually be passed, and for public reasons it is necessary that many of them at least should be passed in this manner, in order that the public service might not suffer. In that view and only in that view, I assent to the proposal which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has just made.

Mr. BOYD. I wish once more to enter my protest against the causes which have made it necessary to have this vote on account taken. That necessity is brought about by the late date at which parliament is called together, and I enter my protest most strongly against the present practice as I did last session; at that time, I procured from 'Hansard' that the premier when in opposition held views expressed by myself on this matter. Coming as I do from one of the outlaying portions of this country, coming here at a great sacrifice, at a season when every man who has any business to attend to should be at home looking after it, coming here in the spring and staying here away into the summer and fall as we have been doing for the past few years, and as we seem likely to continue to do, I once more protest on behalf of the people I represent, on behalf of those members who have to stay here Sunday after Sunday, week after week, month after month, when other members who happen to live in constituencies close to Ottawa, can come and go and attend to their business, spending three or four days out of each week in Ottawa, devoting the rest of their time to their business at home. Gentlemen representing constituencies in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Manitoba and the Northwest Territories and British Columbia, have to stay here day in and day out, week after week, month after month, all to suit the convenience of the government of the day. This government is not the only offender; previous governments have been equally at fault in this respect. I say that this House should be called together not later than November and that members of the government should see that their officials have their reports ready so that the House may meet at some reasonable time and not have it sitting at such a late date to suit the whim of the government or of some official of the government as has been the case in the past. If I thought that by not acquiescing in this vote I would help to bring about that happy day, I would do everything I could to prevent the government securing this money. In this case, I shall allow it to pass, but if it is to occur again the Minister of Finance may make up his mind that I shall oppose it so far as I am able.

Mr. SPROULE. We have been repeatedly challenged across the floor of the House for allowing all votes to pass without objecting to them. It was said last year that we voted all the money that was voted without objecting to more than two or three of them. Now this vote is part of the main estimates, and it must not be understood that in assenting to this we are assenting to the use of every dollar of money that is voted or that we are depriving ourselves of the privilege of adversely criticising the expenditures involved in the supplies which we are voting to-night. That right we intend to enjoy to the fullest extent and we do not wish to have it thrown across the floor afterwards that we did not object.

Mr. FIELDING. I entirely concur in the view of my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) that in passing these items, no member is to feel that he is committing himself or in any way restricting his freedom of discussion.

Mr. MACLEAN. Would not the Minister of Finance make some reply to my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) in regard to the holding of the sessions? I am firmly of opinion that a great improvement can be made in the conduct of the business of this House and also in the time of year at which the House is called together. I heard the hon. member from the western province (Mr. Boyd) make the same protest last year; I have heard him make it again to-night, and I think that every man in this House is of opinion that some improvement can be made and the protest having been entered, I think we are entitled to some statement from the government that they will seriously consider this protest and endeavour to arrange the public business so that it can go through with greater facility. These prolonged sessions are getting to be a serious thing for the members of this House. I feel it, and a great many hon. members in this House feel it, and we are looking for some kind of relief. It would be well worth the consideration of perhaps a joint committee to try in some way to improve the present condition of affairs.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The relief which my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) seeks may probably be obtained before the next session of the House, because if the government ventures on a general election, it will be no longer in their power to fix the time for the calling of parliament.

Mr. LOGAN. You have another guess.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER. I wish to support the position taken by the member from Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) in calling for an earlier opening of the session of parliament, but I cannot support the attitude of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) or of the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes). As a specimen of cold blooded nerve, the appearance of these two gentlemen on the scene at this particular stage of the game, beats the record. I do not hold the government blameless for not having called the session earlier, but it is a matter of notoriety, it is a matter within the knowledge of every member of this House, that while the government has been to blame for not calling the session earlier, that has not been the sole reason for the undue lengthening of the session. It is not by any means the sole reason why we are here in mid-summer when we should be at home attending to our business. If the length of this session has been a burden to the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) and to the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes), surely these gentlemen can sympathize with us who have had to stay here day in and day out, week in and week out, month in and month out, while they were attending to their own business, or serving their own pleasure at home or anywhere else they may have been. If this House is in session to-day in the middle of summer, it is because from day to day and from week to week, if not from month to month, a handful of members on the other side of the House have deliberately, persistently, and purposely obstructed the business——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. OLIVER. The spectacle——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; take it back.

Mr. OLIVER. The spectacle; the disgrace to the country——

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order and ask your ruling, Mr. Chairman, if that language is to be allowed in this House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I was just about to remark that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) cannot say that hon. members purposely obstruct business.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Deliberately obstructed business.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Or 'deliberately' either.

Mr. OLIVER. I will amend that statement by saying——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. OLIVER. I will take it back unreservedly and say, that so far as I can see their obstruction was absolutely purposeless.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER. I want to state the fact so that it may go on record for the benefit of the electors of this country, that from day to day and from week to week, a handful of members of the opposition, numbering from ten to fifteen and perhaps not more than twenty, have held this House in session, not discussing questions of principle, not discussing questions of importance, but discussing trivialities, discussing quibbles, discussing anything that could delay the business of parliament. If the electors of this country knew the manner in which their business was conducted in parliament by certain of their representatives on the other side of the House, they would be ashamed of these representatives and ashamed of themselves.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. OLIVER. Because it is possible for members to live within a days ride of this House to transact their business at home and still put in an occasional appearance here, it is a fact that these gentlemen systematically do so, and those of us who are not in that happy position are compelled to suffer in consequence. We have suffered year in and year out, and so far we have suffered in silence. But, when men who pay very little attention to their parliamentary duties such as the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), get up to read lectures in this House, it is time for somebody to speak out and to tell the electors of this country how their business is being transacted by a portion, at any rate, of their representatives.

Mr. INGRAM. We have now heard from the independent member from Alberta (Mr. Oliver), and I have been recently reading what is perhaps the cause of the hon. gentleman's speech to-night. Probably it will be news to hon. gentlemen of this House to know, that my hon. friend has received some government patronage, and he is now paying back to the government a return for the patronage they have bestowed on him.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. INGRAM. Does any man deny it? My hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) has stated in this paper that he is an independent man, an independent supporter of the government, and yet to-night he finds fault with gentlemen on this side who in their judgment have criticised the estimates, and have given their attention to public business.

Mr. SCOTT. Might I ask a question of my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram)?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. SCOTT. If I have the hon. gentleman's permission I will ask him a question.

Mr. INGRAM. Speak louder.

Mr. SCOTT. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he is serious in stating that the hon. member for Alberta has received patronage from the government?

Mr. INGRAM. I made the statement and the hon. member for Alberta did not deny it. Is the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) a wet nurse for the member for Alberta?

Mr. OLIVER. To tell the truth I did not consider that any statement made by the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) was worthy of denial.

Mr. INGRAM. We can refer to the public press, and we can find from the hon. gentleman's own newspaper something about that transaction. Do I understand him to deny it?

Mr. OLIVER. Deny what; make your statement.

Mr. INGRAM. Has my hon. friend received any government patronage?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly not.

Mr. INGRAM. Then I will put it a little stronger. Has the hon. gentleman's newspaper office published any immigration literature for which the government paid?

Mr. OLIVER. Published immigration literature? Do you speak of advertisements in the newspaper?

Mr. INGRAM. Never mind getting down to particulars; just state whether it is so or not.

Mr. OLIVER. In the first place the hon. gentleman does not own a newspaper; in the next place the newspaper with which the hon. gentleman is connected has not published any government immigration literature.

Mr. INGRAM. We understand the hon. gentleman to deny——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. He does not deny it.

Mr. INGRAM. Am I correct in understanding the hon. gentleman to deny that the newspaper office with which he is connected received government patronage?

Mr. OLIVER. The newspaper with which the hon. gentleman is connected has certainly received government patronage.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. OLIVER. It has been receiving it ever since it has been a newspaper, both from the late government and from the present government. There has been no change in the conditions in regard to that matter.

Mr. INGRAM. My hon. friend did not think it worth his while to reply to the member for East Elgin, but he has been forced to do it, and he cannot show that he did not receive the government patronage. Now, I would like to say a few words with respect to the prolonging of this session. I want to tell my hon. friend from Alberta that if it were left to that hon. gentleman to criticise or find fault with any action of the government, we would find him minus his independent spirit, except of course when it suited himself. On this occasion it evidently suits him to rise in his place and defend the government and condemn hon. gentlemen on this side of the House for doing what they consider their duty. When the election takes place it is certain that hon. gentlemen opposite will find fault with the opposition for not criticising the public accounts. They will assert that we did not record our votes against the expenditure of this government. We are from day to day doing what we believe to be our duty in drawing the attention of the government to certain improper expenditures. So long as we are here we propose to continue in that course, and we do not propose to be lectured by the hon. member for Alberta. If that is the extent of his independence, we would ask him to kindly remain silent for the balance of the session, while we proceed with what we believe to be our duty. It is true, that the criticism on the estimates is confined to a comparatively few members on this side of the House; but I think we can claim the credit of having at least as many men capable of criticising the estimates as hon. gentlemen opposite had when they were in opposition. We can say this also with a great deal of pleasure, that our criticism has been carried on in a gentlemanly manner. We have not used the language which the hon. gentleman's friends used previous to 1896. We have used language that has been strictly parliamentary and that we are not ashamed of, and in criticising these estimates we propose to continue in the same tone of language. Hon. gentlemen blame the opposition for extending the session. I want to know from the government if they are assisting in shortening the session by retaining to this late date certain public measures which we find on the order paper—no less than seven measures? Are we to blame because these measures have not been brought down? Every hon. gentleman knows that in connection with constitutional government in this country or in any other, one of the weapons the opposition have in their hands is the estimates. Why do they reserve the right to criticise these estimates? First, to object to any unreasonable expenditure; and, secondly, as a means of hastening the government to bring down their measures in order that the opposition and the country may know what they propose to lay before parliament. All this is our right and duty, which we intend to exercise and we do not intend for one moment to tolerate any interference with our rights so long as we are exercising them in what we believe to be the best interests of the people of this country.

Mr. OLIVER. I just rise to say that I am very glad the hon. gentleman does not approve of the remarks I have made. They were not made with the view of securing his approval.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Cornwall canal, enlargement, $26,500.

Mr. FIELDING. It is to be noted that all these sums will now be reduced to four-fifths. That is merely clerical work which I shall have to ask the clerks of the House to attend to.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). There is a revote of $8,450. Last session, $136,000 was voted, all of which was expended but $8,450. The total expenditure on this canal in connection with these works up to the 1st of May, 1904, was $7,016,328.33. The amount asked for is to be expended as follows; section 1, repairs and enlargement of the regulating pier of old lock, No. 17—estimated amount, $15,500; protection to North Bank at Pitt Street, $3,000; Sheik's Island, final estimate, $8,000. These three sums total $26,500.

Mr. PRINGLE. Might I ask the minister if there is anything in this appropriation for building workshops?

Mr. EMMERSON. Not in this particular vote. It will come later.

Mr. PRINGLE. I would like to take this opportunity of calling the attention of the Minister to the very dilapidated state that the wharf at Cornwall is now in—not the canal wharf, but the lower wharf at which the Richelieu steamers land. This wharf is in wretchedly bad condition, and I would like to know if any steps have been taken to have it repaired or rebuilt ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That particular wharf, being on the river, is under the management and control of the Public Works Department and does not come under my department.

Mr. J. D. REID. I suppose this item includes the lighting and so on, and I may just as well bring that matter up now.

Mr. EMMERSON. It does not include the lighting, but I suppose my hon. friend might as well bring it up now as any other time. The link between this item and the subject to which my hon. friend refers is to be found in the fact that this vote has to do with the Cornwall canal.

Mr. J. D. REID. Perhaps the minister would explain the position of the government in so far as this contract is concerned ? Why did they extend the term of the original contract given in 1896 ? Why were changes made ? The minister should be able to give us a full statement of this whole matter, because it looks a very questionable one.

Mr. EMMERSON. I was sympathizing with the complaints made regarding the length of the session and therefore was not going to inflict on the committee any very lengthy details. But it seems to me that the whole matter has been explained, and the explanation has been repeated so often that it would be like imposing on good nature to inflict it again upon the committee.

Mr. CLARKE. I think we could stand it.

Mr. EMMERSON. I know how long suffering my hon. friend is, but it seems to me it is only a diseased mind which could suspect anything wrong in connection with this transaction. I think I have explained why the $26,500 are required, and it is for my hon. friends opposite to show why it should not be voted. Having shown that the money is absolutely necessary, there should be no question about passing the vote.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have asked the minister a reasonable question and he states that on account of the length of the session he does not feel like inflicting any further explanation on the House. In fact, he treats the whole matter as a joke. But let me tell him that in 1896 the government then in power entered into a contract for the lighting of the Cornwall canal for twenty-one years. In addition it was specified in that contract that the government were to pay 30 cents per light for the number of lights that would be required, a certain amount per horse-power for any horse-power required, and they were to have the right to expropriate the whole property at any time on paying five per cent over the original cost. Under that contract the government were not compelled to take the power or any of the lights unless they saw fit to do so. They might establish another water-power if they chose and run their own lights or in any other way take power to open or manage their gates themselves. They simply specified that if they wished to work under this contract, they might do so. However, nothing was acted upon under that contract until the year 1900, just before the elections. At that time an Order in Council was passed by the government stipulating that there must be 250 arc lights placed on that Cornwall canal at a cost of 30 cents per light per night for the whole 365 days of the year. Thus the total cost for simply lighting the Cornwall canal was $27,375 per year. In addition an Order in Council was passed stipulating that the government should take 400 horse-power per annum for operating the locks, gates and bridges, at a cost of $63 per horse-power or $25,200 per annum. The government were thus to pay $52,500 per annum for lighting and operating the lock gates on the Cornwall canal. That is the contract which was made by the government now in office. These 400 horse-power which the government were to use for operating the locks, gates and bridges would only be used nine months in the year. They could not be used during the winter months, as neither gates nor the bridges are then opened. So that the stipulations of $63 per annum per horse-power really meant $63 per nine months. When this government were thus changing the contract and making a contract different from that passed in 1896, why did they not contract only to pay for this horse-power during the time it was used ? Because in making the rate $63 per annum, when they were only to use the power during nine months, they were really paying at the rate of $80 per annum. But that was not the most serious point. In addition they also passed an Order in Council extending the duration of the contract from 21 years to 84 years, or until 1979. Was there any reason why this contract should be extended ? Surely if the contractor had a contract for 21 years, that was quite long enough. That time, I should think as a member of this House, was sufficient ; it was as much as any contractor could reasonably expect from the government or from a private concern.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend, of course, has read the contracts and does not want to misconstrue the position.

Mr. J. D. REID. Certainly not.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Then, he will be delighted to know that the original contract was for twenty-one years with the right to renew for three consecutive periods of twenty-one years each.

Mr. J. D. REID. At what page do we find that ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. At page 9 of the general terms and conditions which are referred to in the lease.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have the original contract.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No doubt, but the hon. gentleman has not the general terms and conditions that are referred to in the lease.

Mr. J. D. REID. Where are we to find them ? We go to the blue-book for information.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The hon. gentleman is going on the information that it has pleased the Auditor General to give the country, not on the facts.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does the hon. minister wish to state that the Auditor General has mis-stated the case.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Oh, yes, certainly.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister in his place in this House says that——

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, I say so. There is no hesitation, equivocation or doubt about it—I say it positively. And I appeal to the hon. gentleman who made the contract and who is now sitting in this House.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will the hon. minister read the clause ? Why have we not had this information before the House ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will read it. Take page 6 of the blue-book. It says——

> Witnesseth that the said lessor in consideration of the rents, covenants restrictions, provisos and conditions contained, described and expressed herein and in the annexed terms and conditions which are hereby adopted by the lessee and made part of this indenture——

And so on.

Now, a part of the information which is not in the blue-book but which should have been included in it and which was attached to the original contract, a copy of which I hold in my hand and which I lay on the table in order to make it a public document, is these annexed terms. On page 9, you will find the following as article 20 :

> Article 20.—The first day of July, A.D. 1895, and the first day of July of each twenty-first year thereafter following shall be dates from or up to which respectively the term of this lease of water-power shall be computed. The lessor covenants and agrees that if during the term of his lease the lessee do well and truly keep and perform all and singular the covenants, agreements and undertakings on the part of the lessee to be kept and performed as herein and in this particular lease contained, then the said lessor shall or will, at the expiration of the term of the lease, on the written request of the lessee made at least three months before such expiration, execute and deliver to the lessee, or to his legal representatives and recognized assigns, a removal of the said lease for a second term, which shall then be of twenty-one years, and also at the expiration of the aforesaid and of every subsequent period of twenty-one years, for eighty-four years from the said first day of July, A.D. 1895, and then to be completed and ended, with the same covenants and conditions as contained herein.

There is the original lease, and these are the terms of the original agreement. And I want now to state—because this is of some importance—that there is not a departure to the extent of one hair's breadth from the terms of the original lease with respect either to the price, the period the lease has to run, or the conditions of expropriation under the lease made in 1900 or at any time thereafter.

Mr. J. D. REID. I differ from the hon. minister. So far as the time is concerned—

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, settle one thing at a time.

Mr. HAGGART. Are the specifications attached to the lease ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Here is the lease, the hon. gentleman can read it.

Mr. SPROULE. Why were not these papers laid on the table long ago ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The hon. gentleman had better ask the Auditor General.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood they were asked for and promised some time ago.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, that document was never asked for.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) asked for papers which included that. I did not ask for this particular document because I did not know of its existence.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Then, I apologize, I was mistaken, I did not know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) had asked for it. However, I have given communication of this document before.

Mr. EMMERSON. Did the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) get the papers he asked for ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, but I did not know of the existence of this one.

Mr. HAGGART. I asked for the lease, the specifications, the Orders in Council, and also certificates of the chief engineer and the deputy head of the department showing the value. Have these been brought down ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. As to the values, I have the certificates of the three experts appointed by the Auditor General.

Mr. HAGGART. But has the hon. gentleman the values determined by the department ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is no question about the values.

Mr. CLARKE. May I ask if the hon. gentleman has laid on the table all the documents in existence bearing on this matter ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No. The documents in existence go back to 1894, and they make a pile a foot and a half high. But I undertake that any document the hon. gentleman wishes for he shall have it, so far as I can control them.

Mr. CLARKE. The statement has been made just now that one hon. gentleman who asked for information was not aware of the existence of this document, which, evidently, is a very important one, and which should have been presented to the House by some person, especially in view of the report of the Auditor General.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not now saying anything with respect to the members of the opposition, but any man reading that document compiled by the Auditor General could see that it is an incomplete document. It refers to the terms and conditions attached to the contract. These terms and conditions were never produced because they would belie the statement heralded throughout the country with respect to the terms——

Mr. CLARKE. If the Auditor General has made any statement the effect of which would be to mislead or deceive the members of this House, it was the bounden duty of the government to implement that statement and place parliament in possession of all the facts. I asked the hon. minister a moment ago if he had laid all the documents on the table. I understood him to say that the documents go back to the year 1894 and are very voluminous. We are entitled to get all the information that would enable us to come to a conclusion on this question.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) would indicate any document to which he wishes access, he can have it.

Mr. CLARKE. If the hon. minister will lay all the documents on the table we can examine them and see which are germane to the question before us.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It would take longer than to the end of the session to copy the whole file. But, let us proceed regularly. We are not, after all, interested in befogging the issue ; we are interested rather in clearing this transaction up. And the question is whether the contract was for twenty-one years, or for eighty-four years.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, one thing at a time. Let us settle each point as we go along.

Mr. CLARKE. But surely if the desire of the government is that the issue shall not be befogged it rested primarily with them to implement the information of the Auditor General.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We are doing that.

Mr. CLARKE. It is a long time since the statement of the Auditor General has been published. If there has been any misconception, surely the responsibility rests upon the minister or his colleagues for not bringing down the documents which would supply the missing links in the information already before us.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. A month ago I made a statement in the House correcting a statement made in connection with the time and nobody has undertaken to deny it.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. minister tells us that it would take longer than from now to the end of the session to copy these documents. But, surely, we cannot discuss this matter unless we are in possession of all the documents ? That statement must appeal with some force to the hon. minister. We get this information piecemeal. For instance, the document which the hon. gentleman has laid on the table is put before parliament for the first time, as I understand it, to-night. How can we be expected to grasp the meaning and effect of this document placed before us in the midst of a discussion at a quarter to eleven o'clock ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We are dealing with a contract not made by us, but made in 1896 by the government that preceded us. The hon. gentleman who made the contract is here, and he can be questioned.

Mr. CLARKE. An hon. gentleman has made the statement within five minutes that he has asked for information long ago that has not yet been brought down.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Justice will probably answer me this : Is the lease that is made latterly upon the same conditions as was embodied in the one I made ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Absolutely.

Mr. HAGGART. Then you have the power of fixing what rent you like for the lights?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Of course ; at the expiration of every period of twenty-one years. It is because men have been assuming all manner of things with respect to it that the present impression exists. The original contract, if I may be permitted to say so, was entered into in 1896, in the month of June; but the entering into that contract was only in pursuance of an agreement that had been made previous to the 8th of February, 1896, which was then embodied in an Order in Council at the time. That contract, which was made at that time with respect to the period which the contract was to run, with respect to the number of lights, has not been departed from to the extent of one hair's breadth. The only thing that has been done by the subsequent contract is to do what the original contract provided should be done, that is to say, that the government engineer should determine the number of lights to be used and the quantity of horse-power necessary to operate the canal. That is all that has been done, and in every other respect the contract remains as it originally was. The original contract provided that Mr. Davis should supply light at the prices mentioned there, for the period mentioned there, and should supply power at the price mentioned in the original contract in 1896, for the period mentioned there, but that the number of lights would have to be fixed when the Cornwall canal was finished, when the construction was ended, and that the number of lights should be fixed by the one man competent to fix them, that is to say, by the government engineer, and that the number of horse-power should be determined by the government engineer, he being the only man competent to do it. That is all that was done in 1900—to fix the number of lights and the number of horse-power. In all other respects the contract is the original contract.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is under a mistake. He deduces from the statement of the Minister of Justice that this contract for the prices and for the lights extended for a period of twenty-one years. The fact of the matter is that there is a statement in the original contract which allows the government to fix the price and to determine the period. That is one of the conditions that you can fix or reject. Is not that what is in the contract?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Certainly.

Mr. CLARKE. This presents a new phase of the subject to those of us who are desirous of ascertaining all the facts. The statement made by the Minister of Justice is certainly, coming from a gentleman in his position, a serious statement, so far as the bona fides of the Auditor General is concerned. In view of that fact, we ought to have these documents distributed amongst the members of the House at once.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will suggest further, that we should have the original documents, with the original signatures on them and the original specifications attached—all that laid on the table of the House.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. CLARKE. If these matters will lead to a fuller, fairer and more intelligent discussion of this question, the House is entitled to be put in possession of all of them. There are no two opinions about that. I think if the Auditor General has, as the Minister of Justice has suggested, deceived the members of this House and the people of the country in the statement he has presented to us in his report, that it was the bounden duty of the government, at the earliest possible moment, to remove any impression that might have been caused by the publication of the statement of the Auditor General, and by placing before us these documents, so that they may be read into the report.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If the hon. gentleman will look at the Auditor General's Report from beginning to end he will not find in that report anything to justify the statement that we have departed from the original contract with respect to the extension of time, except in so far as that may be a matter of inference, because in one letter the Auditor General says that the safeguards which surrounded the public interest in the original contract did not appear in the second contract. That is the extent to which he goes, but he does not in any part of his report say that the original contract was for a term of twenty-one years. On the contrary, if my hon. friends will read the opinion of Mr. Aylesworth, on page 21 of the Auditor General's Report, they will find this statement:

> There appears an Order in Council of October 9, 1900, authorizing the agreement of October 19, 1900, under which the claim to payment is now made, but it is to be observed that this agreement of October 19, 1900, in fact amounts to nothing more than a fixing of the quantity of electric horse-power and electric light the contractor is to supply.

That is all it amounts to, and that is all in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. CLARKE. Of course, we are bound to accept the statement of the hon. gentleman. The Auditor General is not here to make reply and answer the statements the Minister of Justice has made. In view of that fact, I repeat, and again urge upon the government, that we are entitled to have all the documents which have any bearing on the statements published by the Auditor General printed and circulated amongst the members of the House, in order that we may give an intelligent consideration to this whole matter.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not think there ought to be any time lost in correcting the false impression that exists with respect to this contract. I think myself that a great deal of misapprehension exists in the public mind with respect to this contract For instance, I saw in the Montreal 'Gazette,' about the 30th of June, probably one of the most respectable newspapers published in Canada, a statement to the effect that this original contract made for a period of twenty-one years was subsequently extended for a period of eighty years by this present government. That is absolutely incorrect; and when a paper of the authority of the Montreal 'Gazette' makes a statement of that kind, it is time that we should correct it.

Mr. CLARKE. I appeal to the hon. gentleman that if the public are being misled to any extent, if the members of the House are being misled to any extent by the publication of the Auditor General's Report, or by the article published in the Montreal 'Gazette,' it was the bounden duty of the government to place the House in possession of the facts that would remove the misapprehension that existed.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is what we are doing now.

Mr. CLARKE. You are doing it now; and in view of the fact that these documents are being presented to us now, I think they should be printed and circulated at once amongst all the members, in order that we may have an opportunity of becoming seized of all the facts.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I made this statement a month ago, and I think now the time has come to speak with absolute frankness and candour in connection with this matter. I think that two or three gentlemen on the opposition side and two or three on this side should get together and look at the papers and decide which of the papers belonging to this voluminous record shall be published. That is perfectly fair, and I am quite prepared to acquiesce that the whole record should be examined.

Mr. CLARKE. It seems to me that we ought certainly to have placed before us all the documents that have any bearing on this matter. I do not know whether the suggestion of the hon. gentleman could be improved or not. It seems to be a reasonable suggestion that some persons in whom we have confidence should examine these documents and select those that are pertinent, with a view of having them printed at once for the use of the members of the House. We want to get all the facts, and it is of the most vital importance to us that this House and the country should know whether the Auditor General, intentionally or unintentionally, has by anything that has been inserted in his report, or by anything that has been omitted from his report, misled the public as to the true intent and meaning of this new contract.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Of course there must not be any misrepresentation about this; I would be the last man in the world to charge the Auditor General with deliberately misleading the public. I want to state my facts and do not want to be responsible for inferences. The statement of fact which I make is that, attached to the original contract which is to be found at page 7 of the Auditor General's Report, there are terms and conditions in the schedule which are not produced by the Auditor General and which do not form part of the contract as he has printed it. That is the statement I make.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman said something further, that the omission of that portion to which he has referred has misled the public, and the Auditor General of course is responsible for that omission.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And I say now—and my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) must not speak for me, he is much more eloquent than I am but I like to make my own speeches if he does not mind. The statement that I made was that in those specifications and terms and conditions attached to the original contract there was a clause which provided for a renewal of this contract for eighty-four years. That is what I say and by that statement I will be bound.

Mr. COCHRANE. There was no compulsion; you need not have renewed it if you had not seen fit.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is another question. At the period of renewal at the end of each twenty-one years provision is made that the rent shall be changed by the lessor; at the expiration of each twenty-one years the government has the right to determine the amount of rent the lessee is to pay.

Mr. CLARKE. I submit that if there is any substantial difference in the two contracts, that is an additional reason why they should long ago have been laid before parliament. If the last contract made any great change from the original contract and the renewal we should have had all the contracts here before us before discussing them.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. You have them.

Mr. CLARKE. If the hon. gentleman had sat reading that report as late as I have he would see the difference.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Undoubtedly there is a reference to these terms and conditions by the Auditor General, perhaps he may have thought that it was sufficient to attract the attention of the public to these terms and conditions in that way. Therefore, I think we should not be hasty in attributing anything to the Auditor General. Article 20 of the General Terms and Conditions which would seem to provide for a lease of the water privileges is as follows:

> The first day of July, A.D., 1895, and the first day of July of each twenty-first year thereafter following shall be dates from or up to which respectively the term of this lease of water-power shall be computed. The lessor covenants and agrees that if during the term of his lease the lessee do well and truly keep and perform all and singular the covenants, agreements and undertakings on the part of the lessee to be kept and performed as herein and in his particular lease contained, then the said lessor shall or will, at the expiration of the term of the lease, on the written request of the lessee, made at least three months before such expiration, execute and deliver to the lessee, or to his legal representatives and recognized assigns, a renewal of the said lease for a second term, which shall then be of twenty-one years, and also at the expiration of the aforesaid and of every subsequent period of twenty-one years, for eighty-four years from the said first day of July, A.D., 1895, and then to be completed and ended, with the same covenants and conditions as contained herein, unless modified as provided for in article 24, and with the exception of the rent, which rent shall, at the end of each term of years, be determined by the lessor, and if not agreed to by the lessee, the said rent shall be determined by the Exchequer Court, whose decision, after hearing the evidence of engineers, experts or other parties, which either the lessor or lessee may wish to present, shall be binding as to the rent payable for the renewal term: Provided, that if the lessee fail to keep and perform all or any of the said covenants, he shall not be entitled to any such renewal of his lease. The foregoing provisions of this article shall in no way interfere with the provisions and stipulations of article 21.

Under the agreement of 1896, the terms under which electric light was to be provided are set forth, but it is well to read in this connection article 24 which also is referred to. Article 24 is as follows:—

As to leases granted under the present provisions, the lessor shall also have and hereby reserves the right to modify any of such provisions in any subsequent lease granting a renewal thereof, but without affecting, however, the mutual rights and obligations of the parties thereto in respect of the amount of water-power leased and of the right of the lessee to use the same for the purposes originally contemplated. Provided also, that the lessee shall not be entitled to any such renewal lease or further term of the land, water-power or premises, as provided in article 18 of these presents, unless the rents reserved in the then existing lease have been punctually paid and all the conditions therein set forth to be fulfilled by the lessee have been duly fulfilled.

Now I understand that it is the argument of the Minister of Justice and I have been following him as closely as I can, that there is a definite agreement, under the agreement of June 25th, 1896, as to the period during which electric power shall be supplied. Do I correctly understand the minister as meaning that the lessor is bound to accept electric power for a period of eighty-four years, being a period coterminous with the term of years for which the lease is granted?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is another question. The question now under consideration is whether or not there has been any departure from the terms of the original agreement with respect to the extension in any respect whatever. I say there has not been.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, oh.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Evidently imperfect knowledge is the trouble in connection with this whole matter.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Does my hon. friend say that there are no changes between the first contract passed in 1896, and the last contract passed in 1903?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is what I said.

Mr. CASGRAIN. As to the number of lights and horse-power?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The number of lights and horse-power was not provided in the first contract at all.

Mr. CASGRAIN. My hon. friend is wrong. I shall read it to the hon. gentleman at once. It is provided in the first agreement, which will be found at page 7:

That the lessee shall supply electric power to the satisfaction of the chief engineer of Railways and Canals for the working of all the locks on the Cornwall canal at sixty-three dollars per horse-power per annum.

That the lessee shall also supply and work electric direct current arc lights of not less than 2,000 candle power, in perfect working order, at such points and such number as shall, from time to time be deemed necessary by the chief engineer aforesaid, running all night.

And so on. Now therefore the number of lights and the number of horse-power was to be determined by the engineer. The second contract, which is to be found at page 11, contains this clause:

It is therefore agreed between the said parties hereto that the said Michael P. Davis shall under the said indenture furnish and supply to Her Majesty electric current for power purposes as aforesaid not less in any one year than four hundred electric horse-powers, and also supply and work electric direct current arc lights not less at any one time than two hundred and fifty lights, nor, without the consent of the lessor, more than two hundred and seventy lights.

A third contract which is at page 41, changes this again and it is said:

Now this indenture witnesseth that in pursuance of the aforesaid agreement, and in consideration of the premises, and of the considerations in the said indentures of the twenty-fifth day of June, 1896, and the nineteenth day of October, 1900, contained, the said parties hereto mutually agree, and it is hereby agreed and declared that at and from the 1st day of July, 1903, and thereafter during the continuance of the term granted and agreed on by and in the said two indentures, the said Michael Patrick Davis shall supply such electric power, not exceeding four hundred horse-power——

My hon. friend will notice the difference there.

—to the satisfaction of the chief engineer of railways and canals, as may by the said engineer be from time to time required in writing for the working of the locks and other purposes.

The same provision is repeated as to the electric light, but there again the contract says that the lights shall not exceed at any one time 250. You therefore have three distinct contracts as to the number of lights and horse-power, that are to be furnished. In the first contract it was to be determined by the chief engineer; by the second contract the government was to pay for not less within one year than 400 electric horse-power and 250 lights, and by the third contract it was changed again and the contractor was to supply horse-power not exceeding 400 and lights not exceeding 250. There are three differences here. The Minister of Justice cannot now say that there was no difference made in this respect between the first contract executed in 1896, and the last contract executed in 1903.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My answer to that is very simple. I will not travel over all the contracts, because this argument is made merely for the purpose of befogging the issue. The statement I made was that in the contract of 1900 there was no departure from the original contract except in respect to the number of lights and the number of horse-power, and I said there was no provision in the original contract with respect to lights and horse-power. I made that statement and 'Hansard' will bear me out in that. What my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) has done, is to read what has already been read as to the number of horse-power and lights to be determined by the chief engineer. All the second contract of 1900 did was to put into effect the original contract, and to do that which the original contract contemplated; that is to say, to fix the number of lights and the number of horse-power as recommended by the chief engineer. That was what was done and that is all that was done. When we come to deal with the other contract as to the change we can easily deal with that, but one thing at a time. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition asked me as to whether or not the original contract provided for the renewal of the right to supply horse-power for four consecutive periods amounting to 84 years, or whether or not the original contract had merely in contemplation the right to a lease of the power and of the land. The original contract had in contemplation lease of the power and of the land for 84 years; that is to say, the government parted with possession of the land and parted with possession of the power, and the original contract contemplated that Davis should supply electric light and should also supply electric power. The distinction my hon. friend has in his mind, is, that the obligation to take the power and to take the land was only for twenty-one years, whereas the lease of the power and the land continued to exist for 84 years. Here is the answer to that. On page 11 you will find the contract that we have made with Mr. Davis in 1900, and you will find in this contract that after having made provision for the number of lights and the number of horse-power, it is said:

Nothing herein shall be taken to vary, other than as above specified or provided, any of the provisions of the said indenture.

The original indenture remains absolutely the same with all its provisions, except that we determine the number of lights and the number of horse-power to be supplied.

Mr. SPROULE. Does it not make a change in regard to the payment?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I may say that I want to get at the meaning of the two contracts and the difference between them if any, and what I shall suggest now is for the purpose of having it answered by the Minister of Justice for my own information. The agreement of the 25th of June, 1896, granted the use of certain water to Mr. Davis for a period of 21 years for the purpose of creating power. By virtue of the general conditions which were attached and which became part of the agreement, that period could be increased to 84 years subject to the conditions, some of which I have read, and the conditions which I have read give power to the lessor to vary the rent at the conclusion of each period of 21 years, and in case of difference that rent was to be determined by the Exchequer Court. I may say in passing, that is one case in which the Exchequer Court has been called into action in connection with a government contract, although this afternoon the Minister of Justice did not seem to think that that was very good policy.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not think it is.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am glad to find that that general principle is recognized by the terms and the conditions with regard to leases of water-power, which I understand have been in force for many years. In addition to the general conditions, the lessee made certain covenants and his first covenant was that he would pay a rent of $1,000 yearly every year during the term, for the use of the land and the power which was granted to him. That yearly rental was to be paid in advance on the second of January and the first of July each year, except during the first two years when he was not to be charged because his plant for the purpose of developing power would then be in the course of construction. Then follows the provision:

That the lessee shall supply electric power to the satisfaction of the chief engineer of railways and canals for the working of all the locks on the Cornwall canal at sixty-three dollars per horse-power per annum ;

That the lessee shall also supply and work electric direct current arc lights of not less than 2,000 candle power, in perfect working order, at such points and such manner as shall, from time to time be deemed necessary by the chief engineer aforesaid, running all night whenever so required, along the canal, &c.

Then the lessee was obliged to place such poles as should be directed for the purpose of conveying this power to the lights and I suppose also for the purpose of conveying power to the stations at which it was to be received for the operation of the canal. Up to that point you have not very much more than this ; that the government have the right to name the number of lights and they have the right to fix a certain number of horse-power which are to be supplied by the lessee. But until the government fix the number of lights and horse-power which they require, the lessee has not very much comfort out of the contract so far as anything is concerned that he might receive out of it. Up to that time it is an option on the part of the government, with the qualification that when they do exercise that option, they shall pay for the light and the power supplied at certain fixed rates. Does that idea agree with the view of the Minister of Justice ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not know, so I could go quite that far.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman has bestowed more attention than I have on the contract, and when he comes to speak he will correct me if I am wrong. In directing my attention to the second contract dated October, 1900, the Minister of Justice has quoted this provision of the contract :

Nothing herein shall be taken to vary, other than as above specified or provided, any of the provisions of the said indenture.

That would be very well indeed if it stopped there ; but there is something very significant immediately after, and which seems to indicate that my view as to the term during which light and power should be supplied, viz., that it cannot in any event under the first contract exceed the time of twenty-one years, is the correct view ; because we find that to be the understanding of the parties as evidenced by the provision which immediately follows in the contract and which is :

This agreement shall extend for twenty-one years from the date of the said indenture No. 12336, and shall thereafter be further extended by successive renewals to the first day of July, 1979, thus making the term of this contract co-existent with the leasing portion of the said indenture, and shall be binding on Her Majesty, her successors and assigns, and upon the said Michael P. Davis, his executors, administrators and assigns.

That would seem to me to be a direct statement by the parties of their understanding of the first agreement, and to express that understanding in this way, that the terms of the first agreement, so far as light and power are concerned, do not extend beyond the period of twenty-one years. Then the contract of the 19th of October, 1900, proceeds to make the term during which this light and power shall be supplied to the government co-extensive with the term already existing for the leasing of the land and water-power. I do not see how it is possible, in view of the terms of the contract of 1896 and of this provision which I have just quoted, to contend that the contract of 1900 did not extend for the term of sixty-three years the term during which the light and power should be accepted from Mr. Davis. As pointed out by my hon. friend from South Simcoe, that is borne out by the terms of the Order in Council of the 18th of October, 1900, which is supplementary to the Order in Council of October 9, 1900, and which is as follows :—

On a memorandum dated October 15, 1900, from the Minister of Railways and Canals, recommending that the Order in Council of October 9, 1900, authorizing the entry into contract with Mr. M. P. Davis in respect of the lighting, &c., by electricity of the Cornwall canal, be amended to such effect that the terms of twenty-one years therein named as the term of the said lease may be extended by successive renewals to July 1, 1979, thereby bringing it into conformity with the lease of water-power granted to Mr. Davis mentioned in the said order.

That Order in Council, of course, makes it perfectly clear that in the opinion of the government at that time the term of the contract for supply of light and power was not co-extensive with the term of the lease of land and water ; and the object of the Order in Council was to give the necessary authority for the making of the contract dated October 19, 1900, under which the term is extended from twenty-one years to eighty-four years. It would therefore seem to me, subject to such correction as may be offered my honourable and learned friend the Minister of Justice, that there was in that very important respect a divergence in the contract of 1900 from the terms of the contract of 1896. I might summarize the difference between the two contracts. Under the contract of 1896 the Crown had an option, but was not effectively bound to accept any particular amount of power from Mr. Davis, although if it did accept power, it was bound to pay for it at a specific rate. Under the contract of 1900, the amount of power which must be paid for at that rate was definitely fixed. Under the contract of 1896 there was no agreement binding upon the Crown as to any number of lights which the Crown was bound to take at the rates specified, although if the Crown did agree to take any number of lights, they must be paid for at the rate specified, 30 cents per light for each night. Under the amended contract the Crown became bound to pay for a definite number of lights on the terms of the contract of 1896. Under the contract of 1896, however, the Crown did enter into an agreement to accept a certain number of lights and a certain quantity of power, to be afterwards defined, but only for the period of twenty-one years. That would seem to be in conformity with the general terms and conditions under which the Crown had the right to vary the rent at each particular period of twenty-one years; and therefore the Crown in making the bargain as to light and power, would naturally restrict itself to a term of twenty-one years in order that when that term expired it might vary the price, or say, we will not proceed further with this because the prices at which power and light can be furnished are materially different now from what they were when this contract was first entered into. But under the contract of 1900—I speak subject to correction by the Minister of Justice—that was absolutely departed from, and the terms as to price which were fixed by the contract of 1896 for a period of twenty-one years only, became then fixed for a period of 84 years. In these three important respects it seems to me as at present advised, that there were very important differences between the contract of 1896 and the contract of 1900.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think it will perhaps be advisable, in the interest of the House and of the country, to have the terms of the contract set out, so that we may understand exactly what they mean. The original contract of the 25th of June, 1896, contains the following paragraph:

To have and to hold, the said lot of land and the said surplus water and such increased flow of water into the said canal from the said creek through any works of the lessee, as appurtenant to the said lot of land for the erection of an electric plant and the operation of the machinery therein, and the privileges, rights and easements thereof for the term of twenty-one years from and after the first day of July, A.D., 1896, and ended on the first day of July, A.D. 1917, and thereafter for a term or period of twenty-one years, renewable as is provided and mentioned in the annexed general terms and conditions.

Here you must read in of the annexed general terms and conditions article 20:

The first day of July, A.D. 1895, and the first day of July of each twenty-first year thereafter following shall be dates from or up to which respectively the term of this lease of water-power shall be computed.

That is read into the original contract, which provides for the granting of this power for the erection of an electric light plant and the operation of the machinery; that is the object for which it is conferred.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will my hon. friend pardon me if I make a suggestion simply for the purpose of getting down to the real issue, if there is any, between us? I do not understand that the development of light and power by the lessee was solely for the purposes of the government?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not solely, but chiefly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That may or may not be; we cannot tell; but it is contemplated that he shall develop it for other purposes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, and that is important in connection with what I am quoting:

The lessor covenants and agrees that if during the term of his lease the lessee do well and truly keep and perform all and singular the covenants, agreements and undertakings on the part of the lessee to be kept and performed as herein and in his particular lease contained, then the said lessor shall or will, at the expiration of the term of the lease, on the written request of the lessee made at least three months before such expiration, execute and deliver to the lessee, or to his legal representatives and recognized assigns, a renewal of the said lease for a second term, which shall then be of twenty-one years, and also at the expiration of the aforesaid and of every subsequent period of twenty-one years, for eighty-four years from the said first day of July, A.D. 1895, and then to be completed and ended, with the same covenants and conditions as contained herein, unless modified as provided for in article 24, and with the exception of the rent.

It is not necessary for me to read further. So that you have the original lease containing the condition that it is to be renewed for four successive periods of twenty-one years and that the lease is granted to Mr. Davis, not only of a lot of land, but of the surplus power for the purpose of erecting electric plant.

Mr. HAGGART. These are the general specifications attached to all leases.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, every canal lease of water-power has the same provision and there is no exception in this case. It is the usual form attached to all leases:

And the said lessee covenants and agrees to pay Her Majesty the Queen, Her heirs and successors——

That is what the lessee obliges himself to do——

And the said lessee covenants and agrees to pay Her Majesty the Queen, Her heirs and successors, the rent or sum of one thousand dollars yearly and every year for the rent of the said lot of land and for the use of said surplus water and any increased flow of water into the said canal from the said creek through any works of the lessee; all such water to be drawn and conducted from and out of the Cornwall canal at the regulating weir, as shown on the plan hereunto annexed.

The said yearly rent shall be paid in advance on the second day of January, and the first day of July, in each year, dating from the first day of July, A.D., 1896, the rent for the first two years, in consideration of the erection of the necessary buildings, machinery and other works, not being charged.

Then follows this important clause :

That the lessee shall supply electric power to the satisfaction of the Chief Engineer of Railways and Canals for the working of all the locks on the Cornwall canal at $63 per horse-power per annum.

That is his obligation. He gets a lease of the power for the purpose of erecting plant and machinery for a period of eighty-four years, and he obliges himself to pay a rent and to supply the power. Where is the restriction there as to twenty-one years? His rent is to continue throughout all the term of the lease, which is for four successive periods of twenty-one years each, but at the expiration of each period the Crown has the right to increase the rent. His obligation is to supply the power and lighting and that continues throughout the entire term of the lease. The next paragraph provides :

That the lessee shall also supply and work electric direct current arc lights of not less than 2,000 candle power, in perfect working order, at such points and such number as shall, from time to time be deemed necessary by the chief engineer aforesaid, running all night whenever so required, along the canal, and maintain and keep the same in good order and condition and provide all electrical connections, labour, tools, plant, material and everything necessary for the regular operation of the plant at his own cost and expense at thirty cents per light per night.

My construction of that agreement is that it provides for the lease to Mr. Davis of the surplus water of the Cornwall canal, after the requirements of the canal have been provided for and after all leases then existing and all leases that might thereafter be made had been satisfied. He got the surplus and in addition he obtained the right to construct some works at the entrance of the canal so as to increase the flow of water. He obtained that for four successive periods of twenty-one years each and his obligation was to pay the rent and supply power. First look at the reasonableness of the conditions, for after all we have to look at this contract in the light of the conditions existing at that time. The government was parting with the possession of the only available means of lighting that canal by electricity and of providing the electric power necessary to operate it. The government was handing these over to Mr. Davis for eighty-four years. Is it not a reasonable construction to put on this agreement that when the government was parting with that power to Mr. Davis, it stipulated that Mr. Davis should provide what was necessary to operate and light the canal. And that obligation to supply the power and the lights will be coexistent with the terms of the lease under which he took possession of the means necessary to do that which the government wanted to have done. Let us go back to the original agreement and I can see no reason why there should be any dispute with respect to it. That original agreement was as good a one from a business standpoint, as it was possible to make. It provides for the price to be paid for the lights and the power, and the question is whether at the time the lease was made these prices were fair and reasonable. Can that be successfully disputed? I say it can not. I say that at the time this lease was made the prices stipulated were reasonable. The only possible criticism would be that the government did not provide that at the expiration of each definite period the prices might be reduced, because ordinary prudence would anticipate a reduction in the cost of electric power, and provision should have been made that at each recurring period new prices might be fixed. But the contract provides that at the expiration of each period of twenty-one years the government has the right to determine the rent which Mr. Davis is to pay. If the government continues to pay high prices for light and power, it may charge a proportionately high rent for the lease of the land. In this way it has the upper hand. I shall not weary the House any more with this contract except to this extent. We must bear in mind that it was not possible at that time to determine the number of lights that would be required and it was equally impossible to determine the number of horse-power. The canal was then in process of construction, and it was impossible to say, before it was completed, what number of lights would be required to light the canal and what number of horse-power would be required to operate the locks and gates. Consequently the government said : We will oblige you to supply the power and the lights and we will fix the price ; but in so far as the number of lights and horse-power is concerned, that will be fixed by the government engineer when the canal is ready to be put into operation. And in the year 1900, when the canal was completed, the government engineer, as appeared by the Order in Council, fixed the number of lights and the number of horse-power required. And what has been the result? The number of lights which he estimated has been found by three experts appointed to investigate, with the consent of the Auditor General, to be exactly the number required. That appears by the Auditor General's Report on page 47 :

The 250 lights appear to be no more than sufficient to light the canal, as the lamps which are placed 400 feet apart are not too close for proper illumination.

That is the conclusion of the experts, so that the number of lights fixed in anticipation by the Deputy Minister of Railways and the government engineer has been found to be exactly what was required. The government engineer also, under the terms of the original contract, was to fix the number of horse-power, and he made an estimate which will be found on page 33 of the Auditor General's Report. They fixed the number of horse-power at 417. The contract provided for 400. When we get down to detail, as we shall in a few minutes, I think, I can give the report prepared by the government engineer which shows that what he anticipated is borne out. It shows the exact number of locks, the number of gates, number of bridges, sluices, weirs and so on, and the exact horse-power for each and shows the quantity of power actually required for the purpose of the canal to be 451 horse-power.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did not the experts report 125 ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No. The experts went down and examined the canal with a view to the work to be done and the installation that it would be reasonable immediately to adopt, and recommended that a contract be entered into immediately and that was the exact number of horse-power is found in the Auditor General's Report at the foot of page 49. That horse-power is given there at 268. In advance of the experts the Auditor General, not satisfied with the position he took said : We will not take any estimate or average ; there is the canal and there are the appliances and we will pay for the number of horse-power actually supplied. And it was ascertained at the time that the horse-power actually supplied was 126. And he provides in the draft contract that the power required for all the appliances might amount to 400 horse-power, because the contract provides that Mr. Davis is to be paid up to 400 horse-power. The Auditor General knew that. The only trouble is, as I said in discussing the matter before, there is no use trying to get away from the issue—that this was entered into with Mr. Davis in 1900, and he was obligated to provide the power within a certain time—I think it was two years—and at the expiration of that period the government ought to have had the equipment necessary to utilize the power he was ready to supply. When he had made his bargain and completed his contract, he came to the government and said : Where are the appliances on which this power is to be used ? And the government was compelled to acknowledge that it was not ready. Experimenting had been going on and the work could not be finished. Mr. Davis said : According to the strict terms of the contract I am entitled to be paid for a certain horse-power because I am ready to supply it, and if you cannot use it that is your fault ; I have done all that I am obliged to do. Was not that a fair and reasonable position for Mr. Davis to take ? The difficulty arose through the government, in the course of experimenting with winches and so on required on the canal being prevented from getting ready in time. For instance, three different winches were experimented with. And, to show how this thing has gone, let me say that the experts who were dealing with the winches calculated that these appliances would require, to move them, ten horse-power each. It has been found now that it takes twenty horse-power to move each winch. There are six winches on the canal, so 120 horse-power is required for winches alone. It seems to me the matter is a simple one. Mr. Davis, having executed his part of the contract, was entitled to ask the government to pay him, whether they were ready with their part of the work or not. That was what it came back to. And the government, not being ready at the time found it convenient to take advantage of the section of the contract and say to Mr. Davis : We will have to modify the terms of your contract or else take over the whole thing under the expropriation clause. To suggest corruption under these circumstances seems a little far-fetched. If Mr. Davis had a corrupt bargain with either government or with anybody connected with either government and was in a position to enforce it he would not have taken the position he did. The best evidence of the honesty of all parties is that everybody has acted in good faith and that not a dollar has been paid out improperly or unreasonably. So far as I am personally concerned, I know Mr. Davis. He has been carrying on a large public contract in my own constituency. I know Mr. Davis's character sufficiently well to say that he would not be connected with any corrupt bargain with any government. If he has any political preferences, they do not cause him to lean to our side. He is an honest man, I am sure he is a good contractor, and would not want to do anything but what is fair and right, and, so far as this contract is concerned, he has not done anything but what is fair and right.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course, I had not got to the stage of criticising the terms of either one contract or the other. The subject with which I was dealing, and which the Minister of Justice left to the latter part of his remarks was the difference between the contract of 1896 and the contract of 1900. I will not go over the ground. I have already gone over. I have pointed out that under the agreement of 1896 there was, in fact an option in the government, because the government were not bound to take more than one light or one horse-power. To take that much would have satisfied the terms of the contract.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I agree with that. It was a question to be determined by the government engineer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I agree with that. We are not so far apart as to the construction of the agreement, except in one respect which I shall mention a little later. I admit the power of expropriation in the agreement of 1896 is a very important one and its usefulnesss was illustrated by what the Minister of Justice has said—that it was the means of inducing Mr. Davis to enter into a different agreement after the Auditor General had raised some objection to the proposed payments under the two agreements of 1896 and 1900.

The Minister of Justice did not deal, it seems to me, with one very important matter that was brought to his attention in my remarks. Under the agreement of 1896 the lighting and power were to be supplied only for twenty-one years. I directed the hon. gentleman's attention to the very plain and definite statement in the agreement of 1900. I do not see how there could be any answer to it. And I am sure the hon. minister does not see how there could be any answer becaues he has made no reference to it. It says :

This indenture shall extend for twenty-one years from the date of the said indenture No. 12336, and shall thereafter be further extended by successive renewals to the first day of July, 1979, thus making the term of this contract coexistent with the leasing portion of the said indenture, and shall be binding on Her Majesty, her successors and assigns, and upon the said Michael P. Davis, his executors, administrators and assigns.

Now with that clause of the agreement of 1900 staring us in the face, is it possible for us to say that the parties to the agreement of 1896 understood anything else ? They have placed under their hands and seals as distinctly as the English language can state it, their understanding that under the agreement of 1896 light and power were to be supplied only for a term of 21 years. How are they going back on that ? So far as the government is concerned, I have pointed out the Order in Council of October 16, 1896, which expressly states the same thing in so many words, speaking of course only for the government, because the Order in Council would not bind Mr. Davis. Further than that, even by the Order in Council of the 9th October, 1900, the same thing is stated, and it is in the latter part of that Order in Council :

It to be an express provision that, in the event of any difference of opinion arising between the contractor and the Department of Railways and Canals as to the number of horsepowers actually supplied, that quantity shall be determined by three arbitrators, one to be named by the Department of Railways and Canals, one by the contractor, and the third by the two so named ; or failing agreement, by judge of the Exchequer Court ; the said contract to be in force for a term of twenty-one years.

That is what the government themselves say, looking at the contract of 1896 : The agreement which we made was for a terme of twenty-one years. Even if my construction of the agreement of 1896 were not the true one, still it seems to me that the government had power to say exactly that which they did say in the Order in Council of 1896. They were not bound to take more than one horse-power or more than one electric light from Mr. Davis, and if they saw fit to take 250 lights and 400 horse-powers, they could accompany it by a stipulation which they inserted in the Order in Council of October, 1896, namely, that their contract to take more than that should be in force only for a term of 21 years. I do not see that there is any answer to that argument, which, I place with some confidence before the House and before the Minister of Justice, because the first matter we want to settle is whether the Auditor General is right in the position which he has taken that there was in that regard an extension of time for supplying light and power from 21 years to 84 years.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. With respect to the obligation, if the engineer of the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals decided that one light was sufficient to light the canal and that one horse-power was sufficient to operate it, Mr. Davis was bound by that conclusion of the engineer ; but if the engineer came to the conclusion that 250 lights would be required to light the canal and 400 horse-powers to operate it, and chose to take only one horse-power from Mr. Davis and the balance from somebody else, that he could not do. Whatever was required to do the lighting and operating had to be taken from Mr. Davis under this contract. If the engineer determined that there were to be so many lights and so many horse-powers, then Mr. Davis was entitled to supply all the lights and all the horse-powers. That is the first fact. Then as to the next, my hon. friend's argument is that under the term of paragraph 10 on page 11 : ' This agreement shall extend ' and so forth, the position is this : That formerly Mr. Davis was entitled to a lease of the power for 84 years, but there was no obligation on the part of the government to take light and power from him for any period beyond 21 years. That is the result of the insertion of this paragraph of the obligation to take light, and the obligation to take power is extended for the same period as the lease of the water-power and the lease of the land. That is my hon. friend's position.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is what the agreement says.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. From my standpoint that is not the agreement. I contend that the original agreement provided for the leasing to Mr. Davis of the surplus power and of the land for 84 years, and that the condition upon which that lease for that period is granted to him is that for that period of 84 years he shall pay $1,000 a year, subject to changes at each renewal, and that the obligation to pay the rent and the obligation to supply light and power are coexistent or coextensive with the condition of the lease, that is to say, that the one is for 84 years and the other is for 84 years also.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of Justice can take that position only by arguing that both parties under the terms of the agreement of 1900 to which I have referred, were under a misapprehension as to the true construction of the contract of 1896. If the Minister of Justice is right as to the meaning of the agreement of 1896, then you never would have found this clause to which I have drawn attention in the agreement of 1900, because it would have been absolutely absurd. You will observe that in the first part of it they say this :

> That nothing herein shall be taken to vary, other than above specified or provided, any of the provisions of said indenture.

Then they go on to make a provision that is absolutely inconsistent with the view which my hon. friend entertains of the meaning of the agreement of 1896, there cannot be any question about that. Both parties say distinctly in this agreement what the government has said in both Orders in Council, that under the agreement of 1896 the term during which the government were obliged to accept light and power was a term of 21 years, only not a term of 84 years. And we are always entitled, as the Minister of Justice knows, to construe one agreement, where its meaning is in any way doubtful or ambiguous, by other agreements made between the same parties ; and when we find any possible doubt as to the meaning of the agreement of 1896 we have a perfect right to go to the agreement of 1900 for the purpose of understanding anything which is in the slightest degree doubtful. Construing both agreements together, as we are bound to do, it necessarily follows that the agreement of 1896 did not mean a term of 84 years but meant a term of 21 years.

However, as the Minister of Justice has very fairly suggested that there should be some gentleman named on this side of the House to look at the voluminous file which relates to this matter, I shall be very happy if the gentleman whom I name will be willing to act. I would name the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) and the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) as three gentlemen on this side of the House who will be prepared I think to undertake that duty.

Mr. PRINGLE. Before this discussion closes, there are one or two things concerning which I would like a little light myself. I think it would be well that the Order in Council of the 8th February, 1896, should be brought down.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is down, that is a recommendation to Council, and the Order in Council is dated the 18th. I have not got the recommendation, I have got the Order.

Mr. PRINGLE. Well, probably this matter will come up for discussion again after the other documents are brought down.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like for my own sake to have one document produced. I acted in reference to the prices on the recommendation of the department and if I remember rightly there is a written report as to the value of the lights. I remember particularly the department inquiring into the cost of lighting in seven or eight places, and that the rate of $63 per horse-power as the value of the energy was arrived at. There was no such thing in the country then as electric light for sale, and I ordered the deputy to arrive at some reasonable rate. There is a report in reference to the lighting at 30 cents per night.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The experts appointed by the government with the consent of the Auditor General say in their report that the price charged for power is perfectly reasonable. That will be found in the report.

Mr. HAGGART. There is a doubt on that, a serious one, I suppose.

Mr. PRINGLE. May I ask if these are the correct figures as to payments under the existing contracts.

125 horse-power at $63..	$ 7,875
100 lights for 121 nights at 30 cents a night..	3,630
250 lights for 244 nights at 30 cents a light, in all..	18,300
A total of..	$29,805

My reason for asking is that I find in discussing this matter in the constituency in which I live that there is a very wrong impression as to the amount which is being paid. The impression abroad is that there is some $52,000 or $53,000 being paid under the existing contract and on looking at the contract I find that the maximum number of lights is 250 lights for 244 days, and 100 lights for 121 days, and the quantity of power in use 125 horse-power, which would make a gross revenue of $29,805. I also find, taking the operating expenses, &c., as estimated by the engineer to be about $20,000, a net revenue of $9,805 at the present time.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not know what the amount paid is but we ought to be able to ascertain that.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if the Auditor General has had an opportunity of seeing the papers which were laid on the table to-night. My information is that he did not see them or know of their existence.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The terms and conditions of the lease ?

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not know that he has seen them, but the lease which he publishes refers specially to them, so that in order to understand the lease —and I am sure he understood it perfectly well or otherwise he would not have reported on it—he must have read the conditions; he could not have understood the lease without it, and of course I assume he must have seen that document.

Mr. WARD. Early in the discussion I understood the Minister of Justice to say in reply to the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) that the Auditor General, in not publishing the terms and conditions of the lease of 1896, had concealed from the public the fact that the lease of 1896 was renewable.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If my hon. friend understood me to say that, I fear that these words must have escaped me. It does seem to me that it is impossible to understand the effect of the original lease without understanding the terms with respect to the revenue. If my hon. friend will look at page 7 he will see that it is there stated that it is renewable as is provided and mentioned in the annexed general terms and conditions.

Mr. WARD. My hon. friend will see that the insinuation against the Auditor General was that he had concealed from the public the fact that that lease was renewable at all. If my hon. friend will read that portion of the lease he will find that it says that it is :

To have and to hold . . . from the first day of July, 1896, and ended on the first day of July, A.D. 1917, and thereafter for a term or period of twenty-one years, renewable as is provided and mentioned in the annexed general terms and conditions.

I do not think my hon. friend would wish to do the Auditor General any injustice in this matter and I think he should withdraw what he said about the Auditor General with regard to there not being a clear statement in his report that that lease of 1896 was renewable.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am in the judgment of the House as to what I said and I will refer my hon. friend to 'Hansard.' I think he will find that I made the statement before as I make it now,that you could not find in the Auditor General's Report, if you looked at it from beginning to end, a paragraph, clause or line which says that this contract was not renewable. My trouble about it is that my hon. friends opposite, my hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) for instance said that this contract was only for 21 years and was not renewable. Everybody says that and it seems to me that somebody must have gathered that impression from somewhere outside and they have not read the agreement. Furthermore I will refer to the Montreal 'Gazette,' a paper of the greatest respectability. I do not always agree with the 'Gazette' but when the Montreal 'Gazette' made that statement I thought it was time to correct it. However, if I made any statement about the Auditor General wilfully suppressing anything I withdraw it. He may be guilty of all the crimes in the calendar but he certaily is not guilty of lack of courage.

Mr. LENNOX. There is another view of the matter that I think has been overlooked. I am looking at section 32 of the Audit Act, which is the only clause governing this matter. It provides that no cheque for public money shall issue except in certain cases and it provides among other things for the overruling of the Auditor General under certain circumstances. Now I think that not only must the Minister of Justice withdraw the implications that he cast upon the Auditor General, but he must also withdraw them as regards the Minister of Finance, if this is the only clause, and I think it is, that provides for the reporting of this matter to parliament in the Auditor General's Report. The concluding clause of clause 32, that is subsection 2, provides :

The Auditor General shall in all such cases——

That is in all cases where he has been overruled as I understand it.

—prepare a statement of all such legal opinions, reports of Council, special warrants and cheques issued without his certificate, and of all expenditures incurred in consequence thereof, which he shall deliver to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General to be by him presented to parliament not later than the third day of the session thereof then next ensuing.

It may be that the Minister of Justice will point out to me that this is not the provision under which this statement is prepared, but there seems to be no other provision of the Audit Act which covers the matter and the duty of reporting on this Davis transaction and all other cases of overruling rests not so much on the Auditor General, as upon the Finance Minister and Receiver General. If there has been any omission, and if the Minister of Justice was justified in raising any objection however shadowy against the Auditor General, I think it should rather be transferred to the Minister of Finance. I believe as a matter of fact that the Minister of Finance has always brought down the report.

Mr. J. D. REID. The original contract specifies for twenty-one years, subject to renewal upon conditions.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is right.

Mr. J. D. REID. I find that the government, by Order in Council on October 15th, 1900, extended it by successive renewals to 1979. That Order in Council makes it imperative on the government to continue the contract for eighty-four years, whereas the original contract was simply for twenty-one years.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Renewable.

Mr. J. D. REID. The original contract made it renewable subject to certain conditions, whereas this contract says it is to continue to 1979.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is in the original agreement.

Mr. J. D. REID. This original contract was made in June, 1896, immediately before the Conservative government went out of power. It was not necessary for this government to accept it if they did not wish to do so. If they had said one horse-power or one light, they would have carried out the original contract.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Of course, my hon. friend will understand that he and I differ on that point.

Mr. J. D. REID. If the Minister of Justice differs with me, I would like to hear his explanation.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Well, I do not think my hon. friend is quite fair to me. He and I get along very well together, and it is not treating me very handsomely to tell me, after I have been trying to explain this one point for an hour, that I have not given an explanation.

Mr. J. D. REID. The very day this government passed an Order in Council indicating 250 lights and 400 horse-power they assumed the responsibility of that contract.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No doubt.

Mr. J. D. REID. They assumed the responsibility of paying $52,000 a year for lighting the Cornwall canal. The Minister of Justice will acknowledge that I am right in that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am afraid I cannot.

Mr. EMMERSON. You do not mean lighting alone. There is the operation of the canal by electricity and many other things included.

Mr. J. D. REID. You pay $52,000 a year for lighting the Cornwall canal and for horse-power to move the gates.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. To move the gates and the bridges; and there are the workshops and quite a number of things.

Mr. J. D. REID. Well, put it all in.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, you might as well include it all.

Mr. J. D. REID. The government passed that Order in Council when they had before them the fact that for the Soulanges canal which is about the same length and has the same number of locks as the Cornwall canal——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Auditor General states that the Cornwall canal has seven locks and two bridges and the Soulanges canal six locks and seven bridges.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend would be amazed to hear that on the Cornwall canal there are eleven locks and on the Soulanges canal there are four locks, according to the certificate of the chief engineer of government railways, dated on the 2nd of July, 1904.

Mr. J. D. REID. Perhaps that may be right, but I quoted from the official record.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not from the official record; you are taking it from the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not know that the Auditor General is trying to mislead us.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Oh, I do not think so.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Cornwall canal is twelve miles and the Soulanges canal eleven and a half miles, and yet for lighting the Soulanges canal and operating the bridges and locks in the same way as the Cornwall canal, it only cost $9,800 per annum.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is not correct.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am taking it from the official records.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The official records show that the wages alone, with the cost of operating, is $11,131, to which you must add interest.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Minister of Justice says that it cost $11,044.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. $11,131; I want to be strictly correct.

Mr. J. D. REID. To which you add the interest of the cost, $160,000.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. You are again wrong; the cost is $218,175.

Mr. J. D. REID. That is $6,000, so that that makes $17,718 on the Soulanges canal.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What about your depreciation?

Mr. J. D. REID. Never mind that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Never mind anything.

Mr. J. D. REID. Well, I would take it $17,000, interest and all, on the Soulanges canal.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What about depreciation of plant ?

Mr. J. D. REID. That would not be 10 per cent.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. At 10 per cent it would be $21,000, and that would bring you to $38,000 on the Soulanges canal.

Mr. J. D. REID. In ten years you would renew the plant. The Minister of Justice makes a contract for $53,000.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. For double the work.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Minister of Justice knows that there is not a depreciation of 10 per cent.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. You gave the figures.

Mr. J. D. REID. Suppose there were, it would only amount to $30,000 on the St. Lawrence canals.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What would be the depreciation ?

Mr. J. D. REID. It would not amount to 2 per cent per annum.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If you look at the Auditor General's Report, at page 50, you will find that the average depreciation is 6 per cent. There would be $12,000 for depreciation.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does not the hon. Minister of Justice make a contract for $53,000 ? He estimated 250 lights.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, because I put double the work on.

Mr. J. D. REID. He puts double the lights.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend is wrong again. On the Soulanges canal the lights are 213 arc and 310 incandescent. If he figures out 13 incandescent to 1 arc light, he will get the exact number.

Mr. LENNOX. I suggest that we leave the matter until we get the information.

Item allowed to stand.

Mr. EMMERSON. I want to give some information with respect to item 98. Some hon. member asked for the number of the operating staff on the canals. I have that here. I was also asked to give the estimate of the cost of the electric lights on the Welland canal and also the estimated cost of the motive power for bridges and gates. In the one case it is $100,000 and in the other case $150,000, the two making $250,000 for the electric lighting plant and for the motive power plant on the Welland canal.

Mr. J D. REID.

Mr. BLAIN. Is that the contract ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have that.

Mr. HAGGART. How many horsepower for lighting ?

Mr. EMMERSON. 500.

Mr. HAGGART. I think we can wait for the rest of the information until to-morrow.

Progress reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the business for to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. If the clerks have the work ready, we shall ask the House to take concurrence, in accordance with the understanding this evening. After that the Minister of Justice will take up the Railway Bill, and if supply be reached, we shall take up the estimates of the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Motion agreed to, House adjourned at 12.25 a.m. Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, July 14, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION.

Mr. C. H. PARMELEE moved :

That the Select Standing Committee on Agriculture and Colonization have leave to sit during the sittings of this House.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE. That question was before the Committee on Agriculture, but it was held in abeyance. There was no recommendation from the committee. We did not recommend that such a thing should be done ; therefore, the House is not likely to consent to it.

Mr. PARMELEE. I am not aware that there is anything in the rules of the House which prevents us from making this motion directly to the House. It is the permission of the House that is required, and I do not understand that it requires an absolute recommendation from the committee. The necessity of it was recognized in the committee. There was more or less apparent obstruction in the committee this morning, the session is drawing to a close, there is a good deal of work to do yet, and from all appearances that work is going to take a good deal of time. It is simply to gain a day that this motion is made. It is perfectly reasonable and it is not in contravention of any rule or precedent of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. But the committee have not asked it, and precedent to the House granting that privilege there has always been a request from the committee. The House have never done it without a request from the committee. The committee have not requested it.

Mr. F. B. WADE. A resolution to this effect was moved in the committee this morning but before it could be put to the committee some one called out 'eleven o'clock,' and insisted that the committee rise, notwithstanding the earnest protest on the part of several members of the committee that the committee could sit until we heard the call-bell of the House. The committee rose and the chairman did not put the resolution. It is impossible to get through with the business of the Agriculture Committee in a short session from 9.30 to 11 o'clock, because any matter can be debated to such an extent that it will be impossible to arrive at any conclusion as happened this morning and as happened at the last meeting of the committee.

Mr. JAS. CLANCY. Mr. Speaker, I think that the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will conclude that it is the privilege of the committee to debate any question as they think proper. But, to come here when there is no recommendation from the committee which should be the judge whether we should extend the hours of sitting or not is quite unprecedented. The right hon. leader of the government knows well that it is always an awkward thing to have eleven o'clock sittings when there remains some unfinished work to be done by the committees. There is an hour and a half, if the chairman desires to call the committee earlier, in which the committee may sit. Until there is a recommendation from the committee itself that we should absent ourselves from the sitting of this House it seems to me an extraordinary proceeding that any hon. gentleman should propose to have the committee sit during the period that members are obliged to be in their places here. I will not reflect in the least upon the objects that hon. gentlemen have in view in this proceeding, but if I were to do so it would not be very complimentary. I hope the right hon. Prime Minister will not, for the purpose of serving any end on one side or the other, permit such an outrage as to compel, without the recommendation of the committee, members to absent themselves for one duty or another by the adoption of the proposed motion now before the House. I think it would be a perfect outrage to make a departure of that kind.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM. When the hon. gentleman moved his motion in the committee it was three minutes past eleven, and the committee had no opportunity of discussing whether it would be a proper thing or whether it is really necessary to extend the time of the Agriculture Committee. Personally I do not think it is really necessary to prolong the time of the committee. I think the committee have arrived at that stage in their work that they will be able to arrange their business within the time allotted. I have never before known that two members could come into this House and ask that a committee's time be prolonged in the absence of the decision of the committee upon the point.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say as seconder of this motion that, as was stated by my hon. friend from Annapolis (Mr. Wade), the committee had no opportunity of passing upon this question at all. The resolution was moved in the committee asking the House to grant power to the committee to sit while the House was in session. The resolution was presented at least a quarter of an hour before the House bell rang.

Mr. INGRAM. No, three minutes past.

Mr. DAVIS. When I came from the committee down here the Speaker had not yet arrived in the chamber, and it took me some time to come from the committee room to the chamber. We were not allowed to press that motion. My hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) thinks that the work of the committee can be got through without this resolution being passed. If that is the case the resolution will do no harm. If we can get the work through before eleven o'clock we will not have to sit after eleven, but if we cannot it is absolutely necessary that we should have this extended time in order that we may get through with the work. The chairman of the committee complained that a large amount of work had accumulated, he said that a report had to be made to the House, that it was getting late in the session and he appealed to the members to get through with the work. At the last sitting of the committee and at the sitting this forenoon we could get nothing done, and I submit if we do not get this resolution through and have the right to sit during the time the House is in session we will never be able to complete the work, and the House may adjourn without the committee having been able to bring in a report to the House. I do not see that this is an injury to any person. There are enough members who are not interested in the estimates and similar matters to conduct the meetings of the committee. This is not a new suggestion ; I have been in this House for eight years, and nearly every year a resolution of this kind has been passed by the House and committees have sat while the House was in session. The business of the country went on just the same, and in order to facilitate matters and to give an opportunity to complete the labours of that committee I think this resolution should pass.

Mr. J. M. DOUGLAS. As chairman of the committee, I wish to state to the House as I did to the committee this morning, that a very great deal of business remains to be done by the committee, and the question which at present engages the attention of the committee is one of great importance. The committee has not yet reached that condition of unanimity that would indicate that we shall reach an early conclusion. Personally, as chairman, I am exceedingly anxious that the business of the committee should be got into such shape that we could report to the House at as early a date as possible. This morning I received a motion in the committee, but it was five minutes past eleven, and I had no information from the House that they would not meet until a quarter past eleven, and never decided that I should not press the motion, and so we adjourned at five minutes past eleven. The consequence was that, owing to the obstruction that took place, I was prevented from securing the sanction of the committee in asking for leave to sit while the House was in session.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would not go so far as to say, as my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) has said, that it would be an outrage if such a motion as that which is now in your hands, Mr. Speaker, were adopted.

Mr. CLANCY. I said 'under the conditions.'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Even under the conditions I would not go so far as that, but I must say that, according to my recollection, motions of this kind have always been taken and adopted upon the recommendation of the committee interested. Of course, there may be exceptions to all rules; I do not say that this condition, that they should be privileged reports, should be a condition absolute; there may be reasons perhaps why such a motion should be entertained without the recommendation of the committee. At present I think I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Douglas) not to press his motion to-day, in view of what was said by the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) a moment ago that they expect that one more sitting would complete the business and settle the differences in the committee; and, under those circumstances, I think my hon. friend would be justified in withdrawing his motion, and perhaps to-morrow the committee can settle their difficulties. If they cannot, the House will see what they can do in order to bring peace and harmony up stairs as we have it here.

Hon. WM. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). If one, two or three members of the committee would curtail their long speeches somewhat——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am afraid that is too much to expect.

Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). The time of the committee is occupied to a great extent by hair-splitting speeches that have no sense or bearing upon the subject under discussion. A sub-committee made a report to the committee, and the whole question now before the committee is whether that report shall be adopted or rejected.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I might say, in addition to what the hon. member for Victoria, Nova Scotia, has said, that if two or three members who can only find time to come to that committee at certain periods when they want to have a little trouble, would refrain from coming to it, the committee would be better off. I belong to that committee, and have always taken a great deal of interest in its proceedings and have invariably attended its meetings. If some of these gentlemen who were so anxious to have the committee sit while the House is in session would contain themselves and confine themselves to the business that is in the interests of the committee and not in the interest of their own particular notions, we would be better off. I certainly object to sitting while the House is in session if we can avoid it. It seems to me that if the committee gets together at 9.30 and we have to meet in the House at 11 and sit until after midnight, we are worked quite hard enough, and I hope the Prime Minister will not consent to any sittings of the committee unless the cases are much stronger than the one we have had in the Agricultural Committee for some time. I certainly am quite opposed to anything of the kind, and, as I have said, if three or four gentlemen would stay away from the committee it would be better.

Motion withdrawn.

RELIEF OF ANNIE CHRISTMAN.

Mr. R. F. SUTHERLAND moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 155) for the relief of Annie Christman.

Mr. SPEAKER. Carried.

Mr. LAVERGNE. On division.

Mr. SPEAKER. Carried on division.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

REBATE ON INDIAN CORN.

Mr. CLANCY asked:

1. What rebate, if any, was paid to distillers in Canada for the fiscal year 1896, on Indian corn imported and used in the manufacture of spirits?

2. If so, under what authority was such rebate made?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). No rebate (or drawback) of customs duty was paid by the Customs Department to distillers in Canada for the fiscal year ended 30th June, 1896, on Indian corn imported and used in the manufacture of spirits.

Mr. CLANCY. There is another part of the question which the hon. gentleman has not answered, the second part.

Mr. PATERSON. As there was none, that is answered.

Mr. CLANCY. No authority.

ACETYLENE GAS IN LIGHTHOUSES.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

1. How many lighthouses on the waters between Montreal and Kingston have been changed from oil burners to acetylene gas ?
2. Have the services of the lightkeepers, where the change has been made, been dispensed with ?
3. If not all, how many have been notified that their services will not be required after two or three months' notice ?

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Fifteen, viz.:
   1. Range lights (2) leading through dredged cut into Lachine.
   2. Lachine lightship.
   3. Lake St. Louis lightship.
   4. Chateauguay.
   5. Hamilton's Island light.
   6. Stone House Point light.
   7. St. Francis Middle Ground light.
   8. Range lights (2), St. Regis dike.
   9. Windmill Point light.
   10. Lindoe Island light.
   11. Gananoque Narrows light.
   12. Jackstraw Beacon light.
   13. Spectacle Shoal light.
   14. Red Horse Rock light.
   15. Burnt Island light.
2. Yes.
3. This question is answered above.

THE MILITIA ACT.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the right hon. the premier to the fact that no order was given the other day for reprinting the Militia Bill before its third reading.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand that there were very few amendments to the Bill.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There were a great many.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will see about it ; and if it was the intention to have it reprinted, I shall see that it is done.

DISMISSAL OF LORD DUNDONALD--LETTER OF W. T. R. PRESTON.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE. The hon. Minister of the Interior promised to lay on the table of the House a copy of the communication transmitted to Mr. W. T. R. Preston with respect to his action in writing to the London press on the Dundonald matter. I would like to know if the hon. gentleman is prepared to lay that letter on the table this morning.

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON. I will give instructions to have a copy of the letter made, and shall probably be able to lay it on the table of the House this afernoon.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Murray Harbour Branch and Hillsboro' Bridge, $650,000.

Mr. LENNOX. With reference to the item in connection with the Hillsboro' bridge, I wish to call the attention of the committee to a letter which appears in the Auditor General's Report. I shall read this letter because not only is it important as regards the particular item, but as regards the position which the government has taken with reference to a great many contracts :

Audit Office, Ottawa, February 12, 1904.

Dear Sir,—My attention has been called recently to the many Orders in Council relieving public works contractors from the obligation of completing their contracts within the time limit.

From the wording of the orders it seems that those representing the government in the transactions consider that, while the contractors are accommodated, the government is saved from any loss, because there is not developed by the postponement of the date of completion a means of exacting a heightened charge from the government by the contractor. This seems a manifestly inaccurate conclusion.

When it was determined by the government to have a particular work done, it was concluded that the direct advantage, or the indirect one, or both together, would be at least as great as all the outlay and would, therefore, besides recouping the country for the salaries of the engineers and other servants engaged, reimburse eventually the money paid to contractors, and in the meantime the interest as it would periodically mature.

In the case of a wharf, a bridge, or a railway line, you may have entered into no obligation to provide at a particular time the accommodation to the neighbourhood which the work when completed will afford, but as trustees for the people you came to the conclusion that the completed work would provide to the public an advantage equal in value to the interest on the expenditure.

By the privilege given to the contractor, the country has been deprived of the use of the work for the length of the postponement, while the interest is accumulating each day.

The magnitude of the donations from public funds to contractors will be understood to some extent by considering one of the large works—for instance the Hillsboro' bridge. It was to have been completed on April 8, 1902. The time was first extended to November 30, 1902, later to December 31, 1903, and now to December 31, 1904. The following is a statement of the interest in this case :—

M. J. Haney, Hillsboro' Bridge.

Estimates 1-10 (inclusive) to April 21, 1902, paid..		$243,714 55
Interest on $243,714.55 from April 21, 1902, to Dec. 31, 1904, at 3½ p. c..	$22,995 95
Estimates 11-18 (inclusive) to Nov. 30, 1902, paid..		368,319 98
Interest on $368,319.98 from Nov. 30, 1902, to Dec. 31, 1904, at 3½ p. c..	26,877 26
Estimates 19-28 (inclusive) to Dec. 31, 1903, paid..		313,010 79
Interest on $313,010.79 from Dec. 31, 1903, to Dec. 31, 1904, at 3½ p. c.. ..	10,955 38
Total payments..		$925,045 32
Total interest as above.	$60,828 59

Respectfully yours,
J. L. McDOUGALL, A.G.

Hon. H. R. Emmerson,
Minister of Railways and Canals.

I call the attention of the government to the fact that on this item alone, by the extension of time to the contractor, without any concessions being made in return by him, we paid upwards of $60,000 for nothing. This is not an isolated case. It is one which occurs in many instances, and though the Auditor General called the attention of the government to it, no remedy was applied.

Mr. FIELDING. The House will agree that this is not the most convenient moment to enter into a discussion of the matter referred to, though the hon. gentleman is quite within his rights. It is very desirable we should proceed with the Supply Bill, and as there will be further opportunity of discussing the matter to which my hon. friend has referred, no doubt it will come up again.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not think that the hon. minister has any ground of complaint whatever.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not complaining.

Mr. LENNOX. Not only am I within my rights but this is a convenient time, considering the opportunities afforded us, to bring the matter up. We are now asked to concur in this item. I did not notice it when it came before the committee, or else I did not think it well to take the time then to discuss it. The House should be desirous to know what the government is doing and, for that purpose, it is well that attention should be called to the matter. I am of opinion that, that if there is anything that members of parliament on both sides have been conspicuously neglectful of it is in this, that they have not, in the past, given the attention to the various reports of the Auditor General that they should have given. As a young member of the House I have endeavoured to do my duty in this as in other matters. I have failed to do it to the extent that I should like to have done it. But, should this government, by any possibility, remain in power and the Auditor General, by some happy combination of circumstances be induced to remain in the position he occupies, I, for one, shall lose no opportunity to fulfil my duty in this regard.

Mr. SPROULE. I may remind the Minister of Finance that in this case we are voting the whole sum, and not only a proportion of it, and so, if the item is concurred in now there will not be an opportunity for discussion. We are within our rights and this is the proper time to bring the matter forward :

Railways and Canals—chargeable to collection of revenue—Railways—
Intercolonial, working expenses.. ..	$6,500,000
Rental to Grand Trunk Railway.. ..	140,000
Windsor branch....	30,000
Prince Edward Island Railway working expenses..	330,000

Mr. SPROULE. Certain papers were to have been laid on the table before concurrence in this item was asked. I have no remembrance of those papers having been brought down.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not aware that any papers asked for have not been brought down. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) knows of any, I will call the attention of the minister (Mr. Emmerson), who is not now in his place, to the matter. If it was agreed that the papers could be brought down before concurrence, I have no right to ask the House to concur in this item.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Deputy Speaker tells me that the item 'Rental to the Grand Trunk Railway, $140,000,' was left over to afford an opportunity for discussion on, if desired. But I find that item included in this vote. To concur in the vote would be to shut off discussion.

Mr. FIELDING. We might go on with the other items and reserve that for the moment.

Railways and Canals—chargeable to capital —canals—Galops canal—enlargement, $204,300.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not think that this item was carried in supply or it may be that the matter I have in mind can be brought up on item 98, Welland canal. It was understood that information would be given by the minister (Mr. Emmerson) and he was about to give it when we arose last night.

Mr. EMMERSON. I thought I brought down all the information that was asked for. The deputy Mr. Schreiber, told me that he had gone over 'Hansard' very carefully and had furnished all that had been asked for.

Mr. LENNOX. I agree with the minister (Mr. Emmerson) as to the papers being brought down. But I understood that last night the minister was about to read certain information to the House and to deal with the matters involved, but, at the request of some hon. members, and in accordance with what was evidently the feeling of the committee concurred in by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) we did not go on with it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I agree that it was something of that kind.

Mr. LENNOX. This item should not go through.

Mr. EMMERSON. I may explain that I laid some of the papers on the table without reading them, as suggested by some hon. member on the other side, I think it was the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). But there was one paper, containing a comparative statement of the employees along the canal which, perhaps, was not laid on the table. I started to read it. That is the only document that I know of—

Mr. LENNOX. I agree with what the minister says. But I understood the conclusion reached to be that the item was not finished last night, but there was to be further discussion and these papers were to be more fully dealt with. I think the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) will agree with my recollections of the matter. I undertsood him to intimate that he was of opinion that the item should not go through.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understood that the intention was to carry out the agreement that had been entered into with respect to the discussion of items relating to the Cornwall canal. It was the desire of the committee last night that we should not go on after we finished the discussion on the Davis contract. That was agreed upon and I think it was carried out.

Mr. LENNOX. I understood the committee to be unanimously of opinion that it was not advisable for the minister to take any other item after finishing the Davis matter.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It seems to me there was something of that sort.

Mr. LENNOX. I remember that the Minister of Justice joined in saying that the committee should rise. The hon. member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) intended to make further remarks upon the matter, and I would not like to have the vote concurred in at present. He mentioned the matter to me this morning.

Mr. EMMERSON. We were at item 98, relating to the Welland canal, all the subitems of item 98 having passed except one. I had furnished all the particulars, and proposed to pass the vote pro forma, as it had been very fully discussed at previous meetings of the committee. But there seems to be some objection to sitting any longer, and in deference to the wishes of the committee, I will not press the matter.

Mr. FIELDING. It had better be understood that if the hon. member wishes to bring the matter up later on an opportunity will be afforded, so that he will not suffer any disadvantage.

Mr. SPROULE. I would only suggest that if we desired to move that the item be struck out entirely for certain reasons, we would be precluded from doing so, because the item would have been already pasesd. I am not saying that is going to be the case; but we desire certain information so that we would be justified in passing it.

Mr. FIELDING. I quite realize that we are only carrying these items to-day so far as we can agree upon them without much discussion; and if hon. gentlemen desire that an item be not passed, we will not press the matter. We are only carrying through these things by general agreement.

Intercolonial, working expenses, $6,500,000.

Mr. FIELDING. I called the attention of the Minister of Railways to the remarks of the hon. gentleman, who expected some information. He is under the impression that everything is brought down.

Mr. SPROULE. I think we first objected to take the item of $140,000 for rental to Grand Trunk Railway, but that was agreed upon. On the item which was for the purpose, I think, of building the Governor General's car it was agreed that the discussion might take place on that.

Some resolutions concurred in.

Mr. FIELDING. I will ask the House at a later stage to facilitate the further advance of the Supply Bill. The clerical work has to be prepared; so for the present we will resume the ordinary business of the House.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903—AMENDMENT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 73) to amend the Railway Act of 1903.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). This Bill has been amended in committee by consent, and it is now understood that so far as the government at all events is concerned, the Bill in its present form is to be reported by the committee to the House. It deals with insurance.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903—AMENDMENT.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 132) to amend the Railway Act of 1903—Mr. Fitzpatrick.

On section 1,

Mr. MACLEAN. At the suggestion of the Minister of Justice I am going on first with my amendments in connection with this Bill. The amendments I propose have all been before the House and its committees in several ways. The first one is an amendment to the General Railway Act which will make the scope of that Act apply to express companies. When we were discussing this question the other day in another place, the statement was made by a lawyer representing the express companies that they were not owned by the railway companies, that in fact they were separate corporations. I knew that statement was a rather wide one, and I made it my business to look up the records of the companies. That gentleman said he was representing the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Grand Trunk Railway Company and all the other railways in this country, and all the express companies, and he asked the committee and the public of Canada to believe that these were separate organizations. Now we all know that the case is different. But that is a sample of the way in which the railway companies and the express companies meet our argument, when we propose to regulate them. Now what are the facts about the Dominion Express Company? I propose to read a line or two from the annual official statement of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, to be found at page 95 of the appendix to the 'Annual Financial Review' for February, 1904. Mind you these gentlemen representing the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Dominion Express Company said they were two corporations and that not necessarily were they allied. In this statement marked 'Exhibit B,' being a portion of the annual statement of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, we have the following:

Details of balance sheet item 'Miscellaneous securities and advances.'

Contained in the list of securities is the following:

Dominion Express Company stock, $113,750. (This company's express, the stock of which is all held in the treasury. Amount paid up represents cost of original equipment and organization.)

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Do you propose to move your amendments to the first clause?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This is by agreement.

Mr. MACLEAN. This is by agreement with the minister. There is the official statement of the Canadian Pacific Railway wherein they say that they own every share of the Dominion Express Company's stock; and yet they have the hardihood to come before a parliamentary committee and say that they had no interest in it or that they were two separate corporations. They may be two separate corporations, but as a matter of fact they are not. Turn up Poor's Manual of the American railways and you will find in the list of securities held by the New York Central shares in the American Express Company to the value of $3,000,000. The Grand Trunk Railway Company do own the Canadian Express Company, the Canadian Pacific Railway do own the Dominion Express Company, the Canadian Northern, the Mann & Mackenzie system, do own their own express company and they are part and parcel of the railway. They are doing business, they are carrying freight, they are common carriers in every sense of the term and ought to be under the control and jurisdiction of the Railway Commission. The gentlemen representing the express companies and representing the railway companies are on record as naming the Railway Commission as being a proper tribunal to regulate rates of all kinds, passenger and freight, and if that is so it also follows that they should have the power to regulate the rates charged by express companies. But, we have been told that the express companies do more than carry freight, that they collect freight and that they also make arrangements for carrying it by steamboat, water and wagon on the public highway and that therefore they should not come within the scope of the Railway Commission. As a matter of fact 95 per cent of the express business is done on the railways. It is a growing business, and the principal reason why express companies should be regulated in their charges and tolls by the railway company is that the express company without control can discriminate against and injure one man and build up the business of another. The merchants all over the country are recognizing this fact and the Board of Trade of the city of Toronto is on record as having declared themselves in the direction of the proposal which I now submit. I was told the other day that the Board of Trade of Toronto had rescinded the stand they had taken in that regard. All I know is that on Saturday last I was in a street car with the president and secretary of the Toronto Board of Trade and to both of them, Mr. Ellis and Mr. Morley, I put the question if they had rescinded their position in regard to express companies and they said that the statement to that effect was not a fact. These express companies can discriminate against one man and in favour of another. They can make charges fair to one man but unfair to his competitors and for that reason if for no other reason they ought to be brought within the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission. Their business is growing every year. They are handling enormous quantities of package freight and sending it all over the country, and I therefore see so reason why the charges of express companies should not be brought within the jurisdiction of the Railway Act. Therefore I beg to move that :

Section 3 of the Railway Act, 1903, is hereby amended by inserting after the word 'persons' in the first line the words 'and express companies.'

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The effect of this amendment will be to make section 3 of the Railway Act as we now have it read as follows :

This Act shall apply to all persons, and express companies and railways (other than government railways) within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, and shall be incorporated and construed, as one Act, with the Special Act, subject as herein provided.

Now if my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) will look at section 2 subsection (w) of the Railway Act, the interpretation clause, he will find that :

The expression 'Special Act' means any Act under which the company has authority to construct or operate a railway, or which is enacted with special reference to such railway, and include all such Acts.

So that this provision would be absolutely unworkable in the Act as we have it. My hon. friend is quite right when he says that this subject has been already considered. It was considered by the special committee that was appointed to look into the Railway Act when it was introduced into this House last session. At that time Boards of Trade, among others the Board of Trade of the city of Toronto, appeared before the committee and urged upon it the desirability of amending the Act so as to make it applicable to express companies.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not catch what my hon. friend said.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. When the Railway Bill was introduced last session Mr. Blair, then Minister of Railways and Canals, and myself were appointed a sub-committee to hear reports made by different public bodies in the country. At that time Boards of Trade, and among these Boards of Trade were members of the Toronto Board of Trade, appeared before the committee and urged upon us that we should include express companies in the Act as my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) suggests at the present time. The point was then argued out fully, as appears by the report of the proceedings, and the conclusion arrived at then was that in the first instance it was doubtful as to whether or not we had the power to regulate the charges of the express companies and that in any event if we had the power many of the provisions of this Act would require to be so amended as to make them applicable to express companies and that such an amendment would be necessary as would practically require the changing of a great number of the sections of the Act. The amendment in its present form would make the Act absolutely unworkable. When my hon. friend introduced his amendment in this House the Bill containing that amendment was by agreement referred to the Railway Committee of the House. The matter was there discussed and the conclusion arrived at by the Railway Committee was that this amendment could not be applied to the Railway Act as we now have it. It may be, and I can conceive that under certain conditions it would be, desirable that express companies should be regulated in some respects by the Railway Commission but it is a question—I will not say a settled question so far as I am concerned—whether we have the power to regulate the contracts made by the express companies. It is quite true that we have the power to incorporate these companies but as to regulating the contracts which they make in different parts of the country that is a question which has not been settled, so far as my knowledge goes, either by judicial determination or by any opinion expressed in any quarter, which I have been able to see.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask the minister to state briefly on what grounds he feels any difficulty, assuming that we have the right to incorporate ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We have the right to incorporate but I am expressing my present opinion, with some diffidence because I may say that I have not looked into the matter as fully as I would like to do.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have no opinion as I have not considered the matter.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have looked into the case of Parson and the Citizens' Insurance Company, and I would like to give to the committee the result of my reference to that case. The Citizens' Insurance Company was incorporated by the parliament of Canada exactly as the Dominion Express Company was incorporated here. I am not sure whether or not all the express companies were incorporated by us, but I am quite sure that the Dominion Express Company was. The Citizens' Insurance Company was incorporated by the Canadian parliament and the Ontario legislature passed a statute regulating the conditions of insurance contracts, that is the contracts made by insurance companies in Canada. In their reasons for judgment the Privy Council considered the question of the jurisdiction conferred by the section reserving jurisdiction over property and civil rights in the provinces. I shall now read a section from the judgment which can be found at page 113 :

Construing, therefore, the words 'regulation of trade and commerce' by the various aids to their interpretation above suggested, their Lordships would include political arrangements in regard to trade requiring the sanction of parliament, regulation of trade in matters of interprovincial concern, and it may be that they would include general regulation of trade affecting the whole Dominion. Their Lordships abstained on the present occasion from any attempt to define the limits of the authority of the Dominion parliament in this direction. It is enough for the decision of the present case to say that, in their view, its authority to legislate for the regulation of trade and commerce does not comprehend the power to regulate by legislation the contracts of a particular business or trade, such as the business of fire insurance in a single province, and therefore that its legislative authority does not in the present case conflict or compete with the power over property and civil rights assigned to the legislature of Ontario by No. 13 of section 92.

Then on the same page :

It was contended in the case of the Citizens' Insurance Company of Canada, that the company having been originally incorporated by the parliament of the late province of Canada—— .

That is the argument of my hon. friend from Grey :

—and having had its incorporation and corporate rights confirmed by the Dominion parliament, could not be affected by an Act of the Ontario legislature. But the latter Act does not assume to interfere with the constitution or status of corporations. It deals with all insurers alike, including corporations and companies, whatever may be their origin, whether incorporated by British authority, as in the case of the Queen Insurance Company, or by foreign or colonial authority, and without touching their status, requires that if they choose to make contracts of insurance in Ontario, relating to property in that province, such contracts shall be subject to certain conditions.

And further at page 117 :

It by no means follows (unless indeed the view of the learned judge is right as to the scope of the words 'the regulation of trade and commerce') that because the Dominion parliament has alone the right to create a corporation to carry on business throughout the Dominion that it alone has the right to regulate its contracts in each of the provinces.

Now I think that on the whole it would at all events be imprudent for us for two reasons, first because the Act is not so plain as to include provisions which would enable us to give effect to this amendment if it were adopted, and, secondly, because there exists sufficient doubt with respect to our rights to regulate contracts in a province to justify my asking the committee to reject the amendment.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if he can see any difficulty in this parliament granting to the Board of Railway Commissioners full power to regulate the rates upon all freight carried upon railway trains, whether passenger or freight trains and whether the people who are conducting the business called themselves an express company or by any other name. It is the freight that is carried upon a railway that is under the jurisdiction of this Dominion parliament with which we are dealing and it seems to me that no railway company, for example, could escape as to its freight the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners, by leasing some rights to a train to any other company, whether that be an express company or anything else.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It does appear to me that it is not the freight of a railway company that we are regulating ; it is the freight carried by the express company and whether that freight is carried by an express company on a railway train or by horse car or by steamer or vessel, the effect would be the same, and I cannot see how we are to discriminate between that express business which was done on railway trains and the express business done by the ordinary cartage system in the country, or on vessels. Have we any power to regulate the rates charged by the express companies, for instance, on the express business done in cities ?

Mr. BARKER. Is not the question whether we have power to regulate the charges for freight upon a railway ? Would it be possible for any Dominion Railway Company to take a particular train or particular class of train and say: We will let this out to some company, call it an express company or anything else you like, and then say : 'This is not our freight but the freight of an express company.' Is it to be conceded that an express company, being something else than a railway company, this parliament cannot control what they are contracting to carry upon a railway, the creature of and controlled by parliament ? It seems to me that the Dominion, having jurisdiction over a railway company and over its railway, can regulate all charges for everything that is carried upon that railway, and I do not see any difficulty in that respect whether the railway company is handling the stuff itself or has put up an intermediary between itself and the public.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it the contract between the express company and the railway company that we are asked to regulate or the contract between the express company and the private individual ? That is the distinction. It is with respect to that particular contract between the express company and the individual that I expressed my doubt as to the power to regulate. Would my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) permit me to draw attention to this fact, which I shall illustrate by an example ? Take express freight coming say from Port Arthur to Collingwood, by vessel, then from Collingwood to Toronto by rail and from the railway station in Toronto to the warehouse of the merchants by carts. What part of the express charge which is made upon the freight from Port Arthur to the merchants' warehouse in Toronto would we be able to regulate ? Can we regulate the express charge from Port Arthur to Collingwood by vessels ? Undoubtedly not. Can we regulate the charge for its conveyance in vehicles in the streets of Toronto ? Undoubtedly not. How can we regulate the matter ?

Mr. CLARKE. Where does the power to regulate these charges lie ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In the provincial legislature.

Mr. BARKER. Do we not find every day ordinary freight shipped from Port Arthur to Collingwood by water, thence by rail to Toronto and then delivered by cart in Toronto ? And yet we can regulate freight charges ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. When the freight is carried by a railway company, that is under our jurisdiction. We say to that company: The charge you make on that freight is determined by us ; you adopt any method you choose to deliver it. But why should a contract made between an express company and an individual be under different jurisdiction from a contract made by any other corporation under provincial jurisdiction ?

Mr. HAGGART. I will tell you the reason. When we give existence to a company, we can give it on any conditions we like. When we give a company the right to carry parcels by express or otherwise, we can say that it shall only charge for carrying those parcels what the commission says is a right charge. Surely that is within our power. If we have a right to give a company its corporate existence, we can give it that existence on any conditions we like. As to freight carried partly by water and partly by rail, we have taken power under the Railway Act to regulate that. The commission can consider what are the proper proportions of the charge to be apportioned to the water, to the railway, and to carrying by horses in a city. That is one of the conditions of our Railway Act. Whether we have the power or not, it was urged upon us by Mr. Blair, who introduced the Act, that that was an essential in the regulation of rates ; otherwise a railway company could apportion so large a proportion of the charge to the water carriage as to do away with all regulations in reference to carrying by rail.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I must say I have not given this question very much study or examination as yet, but I am inclined to support the Minister of Justice. This is a question as to the power of this parliament to regulate the rates of express companies. It seems to me, speaking off-hand, without having given the subject very much consideration, that it is a matter of regulating a contract within the province ; and I really cannot understand, unless there is some power given to us by the British North America Act, how we can regulate the rates of carriage by express companies any more than we can regulate the rate of carriage by individuals within the different provinces. It is not because this parliament has given existence to a company that it has a right to interfere in the contracts made by that company. My hon. friend who has just taken his seat says that we can impose as a condition of giving the charter the regulation of the rates which are to be charged by the corporation. I must distinguish here. I will not say that if, upon the application of certain parties for incorporation, the charter contained the condition that the rates are to be regulated by the charter itself, this would not be within the authority of the granting power ; but to make a general law applicable to all corporations which are to come into existence hereafter by charters of the Dominion parliament, and to say that this should apply to contracts made by them, is a broad statement which I am not at present ready to accept, and I cannot go as far as my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart). There is another argument put forward here, which is an argument ab inconvienti. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) says, if I understand him rightly, that we should have the power of regulating the rates charged by express companies, because we have the power of regulating rates upon railways. I do not think that is a conclusion to be necessarily arrived at. It may be inconvenient. It may be that the law or the constitution is not complete on that point. But the line is drawn. We are given by the constitution the power of regulating rates on railways. If a company not being a railway company is called into existence, and does a part of the work that generally falls to railway companies, that is not a reason for extending the powers given by the constitution to this House. It may be for the very reason that the power of regulating rates on railways is given to the parliament of Canada by the constitution, that express companies are created so that the rates may not be regulated ; but I do not see the force of the argument of my hon. friend. Now, this is a question of some importance, and it seems to me that a great deal of precaution should be exercised before we enact such a law. For my part, I have not heard of any great agitation in the country calling for such legislation. It may exist in some parts of the country, particularly in that part from which my hon. friend comes; but I do not think the general public has been suffering to such an extent from the rates charged by express companies that we should legislate in a hurry upon this important question.

Mr. MACLEAN. I might point out for the information of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken that the fruit-growers of Ontario feel very severely the charges of the express companies. The shipment of fresh fruit from Ontario to the west is a great and growing business, the people of the west wish to get the fresh fruit of Ontario, and the regulation of these express charges means getting or not getting the market. If what the hon. Minister of Justice and the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) say is true, it means that the railways can evade the whole Railway Act by turning all their freight business over to the express companies. But all these are merely legal quibbles ; they are dodges to help the express companies, and not to have them regulated. Suppose the argument of the Minister of Justice is true, a declaration of this parliament that the railway companies shall do their own express business would bring them under the Railway Act. That can be done in two lines. They can be prohibited from turning over their express business to other companies. It is all an evasion—an attempt to get away from what hon. gentlemen opposite promised the country. They promised a tribunal which would regulate all charges on freights in this country, which would protect the farmer and the fruit-grower, and would see that no unfair discrimination was practised in the matter of charges by these common carriers. If my proposal is unconstitutional, it can be made constitutional in one minute. But I do not believe it is unconstitutional. I agree with the opinion of the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) given here to-day. I believe these companies are quite within the jurisdiction of this parliament to-day.

Mr. CASGRAIN. My hon. friend might substantiate that statement. I have no doubt that his opinion upon a question of constitutional law is as valuable as a great many other opinions which he expresses in this House ; but I must say that his ipse dixit on this important question does not satisfy me. I would like him to show, by quoting the law, that this is the law of the land.

Mr. MACLEAN. My authority is the late Minister of Railways and Canals, and I have heard my hon. friend say that there is not a better authority in this country. Indeed, I have heard him called the chief justice of this country in regard to railway matters ; and I cite his opinion in regard to this Railway Act as a good opinion. It has not been controverted, and I would ask the hon. member for Montmorency to controvert it. The argument here is rather the argument of the express companies. I say that the express companies can be brought within the Act by two words, by saying to the railway companies, you shall not only be regulated in the matter of freight rates, but you shall not contract yourselves out of the jurisdiction of this parliament. It can be done as easy as rolling off a log, and the Minister of Justice could find a way of doing it if he wished to realize the intentions of this measure, which is to regulate all freight charges, and protect the farmers against discrimination. The fruit-growers of Ontario are an immense interest, the fish interests of the maritime provinces is another important industry. The further away these people can send their products, the larger will be their receipts ; but if too heavy express rates are imposed, their market is seriously contracted. Business can be increased among the various provinces if we will regulate these express charges. These express companies are making enormous profits. Why, therefore should they not be regulated ? Parliament regulates the charges on packages carried by parcel post.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Under the British North America Act.

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes, and under this Act we can regulate all these express rates. My hon. friend will not deny that.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I will.

Mr. MACLEAN. Do you say we cannot prevent the railways from taking themselves out of the jurisdiction of this country ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. No.

Mr. MACLEAN. Let the doctrine which the Minister of Justice sets up, namely, that the express companies are not within the jurisdiction of this parliament, be accepted, and all the freight of this country will be turned into the express business. I have seen trains leaving Toronto with four or five express cars made up and some trains made up altogether of express cars. If the railway companies could by this means escape the jurisdiction of this parliament, they would turn over the cream of their business to these express companies which they own. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company owns every share in the Dominion Express Company. Your company owns every share——

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Whom do you mean by 'your.'

Mr. MACLEAN. The board always addresses its shareholders as 'your company.' Your company owns all these shares. I am not a man of legal quibbles and the people of this country do not want legal quibbles. What they want is the regulation of our common carriers, and that they will get.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice whether it is his opinion that this parliament, which has the power to create a corporation, has not the power to regulate its business ? It appears to me common sense that if parliament can create a corporation, it must have power to regulate its rates. There is a great agitation in Ontario, which affect consumers as well as producers, in favour of having these rates regulated. In Eastern Ontario small villages are handicapped by the express charges. They cannot import by the carload and have to get their supplies in by express. People like to get the early fruit from the west and find the express charges very oppressive. The consumer has to pay and not the shipper, because there is no competition. If a man wants a basket of early fruit from the west, he will have to pay the extra freight because of the lack of competition, and it does not seem to me common sense to say that although we have the power to create we have not the power to control rates.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am certainly very firmly of the opinion that we do not get the power to regulate the contracts which a corporation may enter into merely because we create that corporation.

Mr. COCHRANE. How do you regulate the freight rates on railways ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not prepared to say that there may not be some power in parliament to regulate to some extent the rates of express companies, but up to the present I have not been able to find any, either in the shape of judical authority or express statutory enactment. My hon. friend from York (Mr. Maclean) has advanced many ideas which have taken root and grown. Let this idea which he has launched take root and grow, and probably next session we will be able to deal with it with greater knowledge of the conditions.

Mr. CLARKE. If you have not the authority now, how are you going to get it before next session ?

Mr. MACLEAN. It will grow.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend has evidently not paid the slightest attention to what I said. I always listen to everything he says and I think that he ought to reciprocate.

Mr. CLARKE. It does not seem to make any impression on you.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I did not say that there might not be some power in this parliament, but I said there was a great deal of doubt and in view of the cases I have quoted—Citizens and Parsons—my mind leaned against the view that we had authority. At the same time there may exist some power enabling us to deal with this matter. There are of course some people who can come to a conclusion immediately on the most abstruse questions, but for my part I like to have time to consider, and I would suggest that we should allow the matter to remain until we can consider it more carefully and be in a better position to come to a conclusion.

Mr. CLARKE. Then as a matter of policy the hon. gentleman thinks that my hon. friend from East York should not proceed with his motion now but leave it over twelve months ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think it would be more prudent to leave it over. I would like to add that if it were intended to insert this amendment, it would be necessary to redraft several clauses of the Railway Act so as to give it effect. There is no use putting in amendments to a statute which cannot be given effect to.

Mr. CLARKE. It is purely a matter for the hon. member for East York to determine whether he will adopt this suggestion or not.

I always give the greatest possible attention to every remark that falls from the lips of the Minister of Justice, but he is so deeply versed in the law that sometimes it is difficult to follow him. His utterances are so profound at times that I must confess my inability to grasp their full meaning, and probably it is because of that inability on my part that I appear to the hon. minister to be so obtuse. I certainly inferred from what the hon. gentleman said that he had very grave doubts whether this parliament had power to interfere in these contracts, and I ask him if we would be in a better position to deal with them twelve months from now if we have not the power to deal with them now. It seems to me there would be the same doubts.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What I suggested was that I should be in a better position twelve months hence to express an opinion than I am now, and, if doubts existed. I would be in a better position to suggest how they should be removed.

Mr. CLARKE. Then, I understand that, in effect, the minister says to me : I am not clear what the law is, and I desire time to consider the question. If that is the case. I certainly agree that he ought to give the matter consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. We take control of a provincial railway by declaring it to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. And, by that means, we get control over their freight rates which we had not before. Does not that suggest that, when we declare it vested in this parliament we give ourselves the power ? We are told that the reason why we take control of a railway in the province of Ontario for instance is that there may be but one law governing cases arising in any part of the Dominion in connection with our business with that road. For instance, freight is sent from Toronto and may be damaged by a railway wreck in Nova Scotia, and the question arises under what law the case for damages is to be prosecuted, the law of Nova Scotia or the law of Ontario ? If this applies to freight on railways why would it not apply as well to freight hauled on the same railways but under the control of the express companies, companies which, however, their name are really railway companies ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose that the distinction, if there is one, is that the railway is either originally or afterwards becomes subject to the exclusive authority of this parliament.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Under the section of the Railway Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Now, apart from that—looking at the suggestions that have been made as to what our jurisdiction is, it is, of course, perfectly true, as the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) has suggested, that the power to incorporate at all includes the power to incorporate subject to conditions or qualifications. It would be quite possible for this parliament to incorporate an express company and declare that it should make no charge at all. In the same way, in incorporating a company, parliament could declare that that company should not exceed certain charges named in its act of incorporation. That is one thing. But that seems to me to be a different thing from a general law by this parliament fixing the charges for all companies of a particular character. I do not think that it would necessarily follow that we had jurisdiction to pass a general enactment because we had power to grant a charter of incorporation under conditions. Of course a very obvious illustration is this : We pass every day in this House bills to incorporate loan and trust companies and commercial companies of various kinds. These companies must carry on business in the different provinces of Canada in accordance with the laws of those provinces relating to contracts. But as I say, in incorporating a particular company we can impose conditions, yet that does not give us jurisdiction over all contracts. So far as that particular feature is concerned, I should have doubt as to our jurisdiction. But I would not say we have not jurisdiction upon other considerations which I may mention a little later on.

I rose more particularly for the purpose of saying that, so far as the operations of these companies in the maritime provinces are concerned, the more immediate difficulty that has arisen there is in connection with the powers which the government is willing to permit them to exercise on the Intercolonial. The general Railway Act does not apply to the government railway, and, therefore, even if this statute passes, it would not give relief to that portion of the Dominion.

Mr. MACLEAN. It would give relief to the western portion of their trade.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But it would not give relief from the principal difficulty which is found in the maritime provinces in this connection at the present time. For example, I had it pressed upon my attention not very long ago that only one express company is authorized to carry on business on the line between Halifax and Sydney—the Canadian Express Company, I think. I had communicated to me a resolution of the Board of Trade of Halifax urging upon the government the necessity of allowing not only that company but other companies as well to carry on business and thus create competition. The Intercolonial Railway is different from most others in that it has no express company of its own. It is thought desirable, therefore, that, upon that railway, not only the Canadian Express Company, but other companies as well should be allowed to carry on business in order that there may be competition. I bring this matter to the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson). I might have brought it up on the estimates, but it is as well that I should take this opportunity to mention it. I have no doubt he has received a copy of the resolution to which I have referred. I trust that the considerations placed before him by that resolution will not escape his attention and that he will deal with them in the early future.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. MACLEAN. I do not wish to take up a great deal of time on this amendment, as there are others to come on. But I wish to point out to the Minister of Justice that I think his constitutional contention is merely a legal quibble. I believe ways can be found to bring the express companies within the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission. I have suggested one way, namely, that every company be compelled to do an express business, and be not allowed to contract itself out of its obligations in that matter. That avoids the entire question of law, and all the question of constitutional interpretation raised by the Minister of Justice. But there is another way—and I am glad to see the Postmaster General is in his place at this time. The other way to regulate express charges in this country is by the government taking over the express business and extending the postal and parcel post system. We on this continent are away behind the continent of Europe in the development of the express business. Let me tell you what they do in Germany. I am reading now an extract from the 'Cosmopolitan Magazine :'

While we (the United States) absolutely refuse to accept a package greater than four pounds in weight, Germany has found it good business to extend the limit to 110 pounds. These 110 pounds will be sent by the German government from one end of Germany to the other for 30 cents, or about one-fourth of a cent per pound.

But even that is not all. When it arrives at its destination, the 110 pound package is delivered at the home.

And that is not all. For from two to six cents extra, the government insures the package and guarantees its safe delivery.

And again, even this much is not all. If, instead of to Germany, a merchant in a city of North Germany wishes to ship a package of one hundred and ten pounds to a city in the southernmost part of Austria, he may do even this for thirty cents, about one-fourth of a cent a pound—that is, the merchants of Rochester pay six thousand per cent more to the United States government for sending parcels from Rochester to Buffalo, than do the Germans even to the extreme limits of a foreign country.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Who writes that ?

Mr. MACLEAN. John Brisben Walker, editor of the 'Cosmopolitan Magazine,' who has made a great study of this question. The reason, as Mr. Walker points out, why this parcel post system has not been expanded in the United States is because of the domination and supremacy of the express companies, and I will give my authority for that, namely, Mr. John Wanamaker, recently Postmaster General of the United States. When Mr. Wanamaker was asked why the express system in the United States had not been improved, how it was that the postal department had not been brought up to date with England, with Germany and all these other countries, his reply was as follows :

There are four reasons why we have not a parcel post system like they have in Germany. The first of these is the Adams Express Company ; the second is the American Express Company ; the third, the Wells-Fargo Express Company ; and the fourth, the Southern Express Company.

Now what I charge here is that not only do the express companies seek, and so far successfully, to avoid a control of their rates by some public body, but they are equally powerful in this country as they are in the United States, and to-day they prevent and hinder the expansion of our parcel post system into a system such as they have in England and in Germany. And yet they have been out and out opponents of the parcel post system in the United States, as I believe they are here to-day. At any rate, they are to-day on evidence in our Railway Committee as objecting to a public regulation of their charges. Now my amendment proposes to bring these companies within the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission. The Minister of Justice says : Wait till next year. I say, No, don't wait till next year, do it now, put it in the Act now, and let us test the Act. I guarantee that I will bring suit myself ; if the hon. gentleman will give me a chance to show where the power lies, I will undertake an action, I can get the Board of Trade of Toronto to undertake an action. But the way to approach the matter is not to put it off until we find out what the law is, the way is to put it on the statute-book now and in that way find out what the law may be. I am not afraid of the result, nor am I afraid of the complications that may ensue in this country by the adoption of this measure at the present time. This is not the first time this question has been raised in the House. The hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp), myself, and some others, last session when the Bill first went through, fought this matter out, and suggested then that the express companies come within the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission. Now I leave the case to the House and to the country. You can do what you like with me in this matter. I may be successful in committee, and I may not be. At least, I shall be able to divide the House later on on the third reading. I leave the case with you, but it won't end here. The hon. gentleman says the question is growing. So it is growing, and I am going out to the country to grow with it. There is no better question on which to test the country than this one. When I speak of the Post Office Department taking over the express business, I do so because I believe in public ownership, and a man who believes in public ownership must also believe in public control of all these companies that exercise great franchises. At present all I ask is for the public control of a corporation that controls a great franchise, and if that public control cannot be obtained in one way it can in another. If hon. gentlemen cannot find out a way to attain this object, I can, and that is to appeal to the people on this issue, and ask for their endorsation, ask for some kind support that will ensure these gentlemen in parliament finding out a way to bring these companies within the jurisdiction of some public body.

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to say that I am in favour of the amendment moved by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean). I think it is only fair to the public that the Railway Commission that has been constituted at a great cost to the people should have a right to investigate and control the express charges all over Canada. In considering this question, the committee must bear in mind that a much larger proportion of goods that Canadian people now consume are sent by express than was the case some year ago. It will be remembered that in Canada at this moment there is a centralization of business. Manufacturers are centralizing their business, merchants are uniting their small businesses into larger ones, and thus trading places are getting further away from the consumer than they were years ago.

Thus I think it is only fair that some effort should be made by the parliament of Canada to enable the consumers to get cheaper express rates than they have at this moment. You will bear in mind that the farmers of Canada, particularly the farmers of the older provinces, are engaged almost entirely in a different occupation from that in which they were engaged some years ago. There are many farmers in the province of Ontario and in the province of Quebec—I speak particularly for the province of Ontario—who send their total output of butter, eggs and poultry to market by express. You will remember also that the creamery industry is largely carried on, and that almost every gallon of cream that is sent to the leading centres is sent by express. I repeat what I said before, that the farmers of the country should get cheaper express rates than they do at the present time. Then the manufacturers are particularly interested in the cheapening of express rates, for the reason that in the summer time, when the farmers are busily engaged with their farming operation, they send a great many of their products, such as binder twine and other manufactured articles to meet the necessities of the farmers, by express. Therefore, the consumers all over Canada are interested in the reduction of express rates. The government have thought it to be their duty to appoint a Railway Commission at a very large expense to the people. This expense the people are not condemning, but they are awaiting the results of the work of this commission, and when the commission are investigating the rates charged for sending freight at a slow rate of speed through this country by the different lines of railway, I cannot understand why the government should not be willing, if it is possible, and I think it is possible, to make such changes in the law as will enable the Railway Commission to regulate express rates and give the consumers cheaper rates than those which they have to pay at the present time. I do not wish to go into a detailed statement of the question. That is unnecessary, as my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) has pointed out the facts at some length, not only this session, but last year as well. The government have had at least one year's notice. I do not complain against the hon. Minister of Justice in saying that another year should pass before this question is dealt with, but if another year passes by and we are no closer to the result than we are this year, after having given notice a year ago, I do not think the case is very strong to show that we should wait for another year. I am of the opinion that at this session we should make such a change in the law, either by the adoption of the amendment of my hon. friend from East York, or by the adoption of such a modified amendment as will place the regulation of all express charges on the different lines of railways altogether under the control of the Railway Commission.

Mr. BLAIN.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Mr. Speaker, as I am unable to support the amendment moved by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean), and as I do not care to give a silent vote on it, because it seems to me that there are several amply sufficient reasons why at the present time the amendment should not be carried, I venture to trespass upon the attention of the House for a few moments. I admit that when my hon. friend was speaking on his amendment he gave us some very interesting information and pointed out some things that my hon. friend the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) and my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) might do, but after all the suggestions were something like the flowers that bloom in the spring—they had nothing to do with the case. I understand that the question before the House is whether or not a certain clause in the Railway Act is to be amended by giving power to the Railway Commission to deal with express companies. Whether or not the hon. Postmaster General should take over this branch of the service is another question altogether, and can be considered at another time. But, in the meantime, if, as business men, we apply ourselves to the question before the House, it seems to me there are ample reasons to justify us in declining to support the amendment. Only a year has elapsed since the Railway Act was threshed out to a great extent in this House. In the province of Ontario we have been complaining that there is too much legislation, that a statute is put on the statute-book, and that before the people or the lawyers have had time to understand what has been enacted changes are introduced. I venture to believe that a strong case of necessity should be made out before, the very first year after we have passed an Act to amend the Railway Act and while its provisions are being tried, we should endeavour to change it again. But there is another point. I think it is only fair to remember that in the passing of Bills through this House the Minister of Justice occupies a peculiar position. In one sense he is responsible for all the legislation that passes. If a measure, no matter from what side of the House it may come, is passed by this House and not opposed by the Minister of Justice, who is the head of the legal department in the House, and if afterwards that legislation is held to be ultra vires, it is, to a certain extent, a reflection on the Minister of Justice. It does seem to me that, when an amendment such as this is introduced, when the hon. Minister of Justice says that in his judgment it is very doubtful if we have the power to pass such an amendment, and when, I venture to say, there is not one lawyer in the House who would stake his reputation and say with certainty that there are no grounds for the position which the hon. Minister of Justice takes, a very great responsibility would be thrown upon us if we were to pass legislation merely for the purpose of promoting litigation in which somebody is very apt to be hurt. It has been said, with perfect sincerity and great plausibility, by an hon. gentleman, and it illustrates the difficulty there is in coming to a reasonable conclusion in these matters, that if this House has the power to incorporate a company, surely it has the power to control that company. That is true if it were to apply to the conditions which should be imposed upon a company when it is applying for incorporation. We have had case after case before the courts which amply proves that we may have full jurisdiction to incorporate a company, and that yet the local authorities may have equally full jurisdiction to deal with the manner in which the company carries on its business. Take the case of insurance policies mentioned by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice as a case in point. We can incorporate an insurance company in this House, we can give it power to do business in every province in the Dominion, and yet each province can interfere and impose the terms upon which that business is to be carried on. We can incorporate banks in this House, we can give a bank power to carry on its business in all parts of Canada. The bank is supposed to lend its money and, so far as any legislation we pass is concerned, the bank can lend its money and recover it after the lapse of a hundred years, but in many of the provinces they have passed legislation limiting the power of the bank to collect moneys that have been loaned by it. It is not, therefore, an answer to say that if we have power to incorporate we must necessarily have power to control. That is only true to a certain extent. As long as the matter is doubtful, it does seem to me that it would be unwise on the part of this House to pass legislation that could only end in litigation.

Mr. MACLEAN. It would be a good thing for the lawyers.

Mr. NORTHRUP. If I were as selfish as some people that might appeal to me, but I am speaking as a representative of the people, not as a lawyer or the representative of lawyers, and I think my hon. friend will give me credit at all events for sincerity in occupying that position. It has been said that if this matter is allowed to stand for a year the law will not be changed, it will be the same as it is now at the end of the year, and we will not be any better off. But in the course of a year this matter may be considered. In the course of a year decisions may be given by the courts which will place beyond controversy the question whether we have or have not the power to pass such an amendment as this. In any event, every member of this House will admit, from what we have already seen in the transaction of business by the Railway Commission, that there is ample business, urgent, pressing business, to keep the commission busy during this year, and it will not be necessary that they should remain idle merely because we decline to throw on them this additional amount of business. The passage of such an amendment as that now proposed would compel the commission to leave undone business which is as important and pressing as that which would thus be put upon them.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I correct in the understanding that my hon. friend says that because it is not settled that we have the power, we therefore should not assume that we have the power? I would ask if that was the usual course followed by Sir Oliver Mowat in his provincial legislation? Did he not claim, on the other hand, that the proper thing to do was, where there was a semblance of right, to assume that we had the power, then to legislate on these lines and allow the courts to decide if we had or had not the power.

Mr. NORTHRUP. My hon. friend is confusing two things. It is one thing to assume a power, and another thing, when a piece of legislation is before the House, if the legislature is inclined to think we have not the power, to hold our hands, as we well might do. If the House thought that there was little doubt that we had the power, it would be different.

Mr. SPROULE. Does my hon. friend remember that when the McCarthy Act was passed in this House with regard to taking the licenses from the control of the provinces, very eminent legal authorities, including I think Hon. Edward Blake, held that we had not the power. But Sir John Macdonald, after obtaining the opinions of very eminent lawyers, including Mr. Bethune of Toronto, said that we had the power, and the House proceeded accordingly.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. It cost a quarter of a million dollars to find that out.

Mr. NORTHRUP. It was an unfortunate thing for this country that this was done.

Mr. SPROULE. It is the principle, not the Act that I am speaking of.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am not without sympathy for the hon. gentleman who has moved this amendment. Certainly the proposition is worthy of very serious consideration, and, from a selfish standpoint, any one occupying the position of head of the Department of Railways and Canals would rejoice at the passage of such an amendment as is proposed. It would, however, be a very serious matter indeed if we were to enact this as the law of the land and be met with the difficulties suggested by the Minister of Justice. I think that on general principles it is unwise to tinker with the Railway Act, except in so far as it is absolutely necessary until such time as that Act, especially in connection with the Railway Commission, has been fairly tried.

Reference has been made by the hon. member for Halifax to the question of express privileges on the Intercolonial Railway. He states that he has receivd resolutions from the Halifax Board of Trade. I may say that I have received resolutions, not only from that Board of Trade but from many other Boards of Trade in the maritime provinces and petitions by the score have been submitted to me with a view to having the Intercolonial Railway opened to the Dominion Express Company in regard to all trains. At present the Dominion Express Company have express privileges on certain trains of the Intercolonial Railway. The proposition now made is that we should give them privileges co-extensive with the privileges enjoyed by the Canadian Express Company. This is a matter of serious moment to the Intercolonial Railway. I sympathize with the desire of many towns and villages along the line of the Intercolonial Railway, whose merchants would wish to have a certain amount of competition, but it seems to me that such competition would not bring to them the advantages which they now anticipate. Those places which have that competition have not enjoyed as fully as they anticipated the advantages of the competition which they have secured and I apprehend that those who are now looking towards the accomplishment of the prayer of the petition would perhaps be quite as much disappointed as the others have been. It involves to the Intercolonial Railway serious consequences both as regards its earnings and also as regards the cost of furnishing privileges for all express companies. I think that the Intercolonial Railway is to-day realizing something above $100,000 annually as their share of the profits of the express privileges from the Canadian Express Company. That is on the basis of the Intercolonial Railway securing over its whole line from Moncton to Montreal a percentage of the express rates. Now if a change is made and the Dominion Express Company, a part and parcel, as my hon. friend says, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, are granted the privileges of the Intercolonial Railway they can go in and secure their trade without any very great advantage to the people, without any lessening of rates, as I understand it, and they can take that express to St. John and thence over their line to western points. In going the other way, they would take it all to St. John, the Intercolonial Railway would get their quota east of St. John. Under the present arrangement the Intercolonial Railway gets its proportion of the whole rate to Montreal because the Intercolonial Railways goes to Montreal. This amendment would therefore affect very materially the earnings of the Intercolonial Railway in connection with express freight. On the other hand the Intercolonial Railway would necessarily have to provide additional car privileges at greater expense. The probabilities are that they would have to run an additional express car on each express train, and therefore, from the standpoint of dollars and cents, the matter has to be viewed by the Railway Department. I have listened to a number of delegations during the present session who have appeared before me with a view to emphasize the desire of the fruit-growers and fish dealers to have these additional express privileges along the line of the Intercolonial Railway. The matter is under consideration. I appreciate the arguments that have been put forward in favour of the idea but I must not be unmindful of the conditions prevailing on the Intercolonial. I would like to see all the railways in Canada, including the Intercolonial Railway, open to all the express companies, and if this were made general, if the Canadian, the American, the Dominion and all the express companies had equal privileges on all the lines throughout the Dominion, there would be many advantages. But if one company reserves to itself the right to monopolize all the express privileges in one section, they should not have the right to enter other sections and share with others that which they themselves are not willing to grant in their district.

Mr. MACLEAN. Might I ask my hon. friend how long the contract now existing between the government and the Canadian Express Company has to run?

Mr. EMMERSON. It expired in December.

Mr. MACLEAN. Well, I hope the Minister of Railways will never surrender to the express companies. I trust that when that contract expires in December, he will establish the Canadian express company belonging to the people of Canada, a national express which he will control. Is it not absurd and the height of impudence for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to come to the Canadian government and say, we want you to let us on your line in competition with other companies, and we refuse to let them on our line? The Dominion Express Company will not allow any other express company to share the cars with them.

Mr. EMMERSON. Will my hon. friend pardon me? I neglected to say that on the Prince Edward Island Railway, which is part of the government system of railways, the railway carries on its own express business.

Mr. MACLEAN. And so I would like to see it over the whole of the Intercolonial. As I said before, the Grand Trunk is on record as having refused to allow a competitive express company to have the use of its cars, and it defeated the other company some years ago, although the other company acted on the advice of the late Dalton McCarthy. The Grand Trunk is so strong that it prevented that competition, and the Canadian Pacific Railway is so strong that it can prevent any other company getting on is lines. It was not the business men of the maritime provinces who asked for this express business from the Intercolonial so much as it was the secret agents of the Dominion Express Company, who went through all these towns and drafted the resolutions which were put into the hands of the boards of trade.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. MACLEAN. These companies are trying to get their fangs on the people's railway. These legal arguments may be made by the Minister of Justice and the hon. member for Essex. They say there will be litigation. Let there be litigation. There is not a public wrong for which there is not a legal remedy ; that is a good maxim in law, I believe. If there is some legal objection in the way, let it be removed. What is needed is not men to get up here and erect men of straw, and say there is this in the way and that in the way. All these objections can be cleared out of the way if it is the intention of parliament to regulate these companies ; and when you find them contracting themselves out of their obligations and out of the jurisdiction of this House, it is high time that we compelled the express companies to come within the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission. In Ontario this express business is something enormous, and it means everything to the farmers and fruit-growers. In the city of Toronto nearly all the milk and fruit that comes in every day in carloads comes by express. The price of milk to the farmers is altogether regulated by the express charges. I know of twenty teams in my own constituency which are every day bringing milk to the city of Toronto for distances of twenty or thirty miles under a broiling sun, with great loss to the milk, because the express companies force it on the roads. In the district of Niagara there was built some years ago a powerful electric line which handled a great deal of fruit; and by reason of a connection between it and the Canadian Pacific Railway, the fruit of the Niagara district was put into the city of Ottawa and the city of Montreal, and even further east. It got to be a great business, and the Canadian Pacific Railway was good enough to accommodate it and give it reduced rates. But the moment the Grand Trunk saw this, its agents went out. They captured the Hamilton and Beamsville trolley line which they hold to-day, and the fruit-growers are at the mercy of the Grand Trunk. It has cut out the Canadian Pacific Railway, and when the proper time comes it will jump up the express rates and have control of this trade. If there is any legal obstruction in the way of this parliament controlling these express companies, it can easily be removed. Parliament can by its vote to-day put these companies under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission, and by next year, by testing the matter in the courts, we shall know whether they are under the jurisdiction of this parliament or not.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would say to my hon. friend that in view of the fact that the relation of the express companies to the Intercolonial will have to be determined by the Governor in Council before next session, they might very well at the same time consider the larger question relating to the express companies throughout Canada. There are in my judgment very strong arguments to be advanced in favour of the contention of my hon. friend. I am quite prepared to admit that ; but I do not think it is opportune at this moment to incorporate his amendment into the Railway Act. We might fairly have it stand over until next year, and the whole question could very properly be determined in connection with the proposition relating to the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. minister explain to the committee what success has followed the management of the express business of the government road in Prince Edward Island ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not had an opportunity of personally going into the question ; but from what I gather from the general manager, there are difficulties in connection with that, because the jurisdiction of the railway ends at Charlottetown or Summerside, as the case may be, and when the express companies on the mainland send articles over to the island an additional express rate has to be paid on the island. It is like a double freight rate, and it is a pretty large sum for the recipient or the shipper of the article. It is simply adding the charge of one company to the charge of another. From that standpoint it is very objectionable to the people of Prince Edward Island, and it is not completely satisfactory to the managers of the railway.

Mr. HACKETT. I would like to ask the hon. minister whether there is a system of express under the government administration of the railway in Prince Edward Island ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have stated that there is a system of express freight on the Prince Edward Island Railway, controlled by the railway management.

Mr. HACKETT. The hon. minister says the matter is controlled by the railway management. With respect to parcels going in there, has not the Dominion Company as good a right as the Canadian Express? Do you pretend to say that you take complete control of this express company on the Prince Edward Island Railway?

Mr. EMMERSON. There are no express companies which have privileges on the Prince Edward Island Railway.

Mr. HACKETT. I understand then that there are no express companies having special privileges on that railway, and that the railway takes full charge of all express business on the island.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is correct as I understand it.

Mr. MACLEAN. Here is another instance where the public get the lean end. The public get the express business in Prince Edward Island, but where that business is profitable it is controlled by private companies. The government has never yet had anything like a fair show. Let the minister take over the whole express business. Let him compel the express companies to give his company as good treatment as they give to each other and there will be a great improvement in the express system in the maritime provinces. We will then have the fish of the maritime provinces sent to the west and the fruit of the west taken down to the sea, and there will be a larger building up of trade between the provinces.

Mr. LOGAN. In my opinion the express companies should be under the control the Railway Commission, which is the only body we have in Canada capable of dealing with their rates and regulations. But while I am in favour of the principle of the motion of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean), I think we should hesitate, in view of the doubts expressed by the hon. Minister of Justice, undertaking the serious obligation which my hon. friend wants us to assume. As the Minister of Justice has pointed out, the adoption of this motion would lead to a revision of the whole Railway Act, and this period of the session, when we are nearing its end, does not seem to me the proper time to take up so important a matter. But in the meantime I would ask the Minister of Justice to refer a case to the Supreme Court so that we might get the opinion of that court as to whether the legislation proposed is ultra vires or within our jurisdiction. The importance of this matter demands that some such reference should be made. I do not agree with some gentlemen who have spoken this afternoon, that because certain legislation might be within our jurisdiction, we ought to pass it and then let those who challenge our jurisdiction make good their claim. That, it seems to me, would be an unwise policy. A mistake on our part might involve the country in serious damages. We have had already to pay hundreds of thousands of dollars in consequence of legislating beyond our jurisdiction. Before we pass legislation, let us be sure that we have the right to do so, and not force private individuals to contest our right and perhaps be subjected to a defeat in the courts with all the consequences of a defeat of that nature. Just one word with reference to the express business of the Intercolonial. I cannot agree with my hon. friend the Minister of Railways that because the Dominion Express Company has a monopoly in some parts of Canada, we should not allow it to break the monopoly on the Intercolonial. Between certain points of the Intercolonial, for instance between Lévis and Moncton, the Canadian Express Company has a monopoly. Between Truro and Sydney in the eastern part of Nova Scotia, on the island of Cape Breton, the Canadian Express Company also enjoys a monopoly. and it has likewise a monopoly on the short line between Oxford and Pictou. In view of the demands made by the people for better regulations and rates, it seems to me the Minister of Railways should seriously consider the giving to the Dominion Express Company equal rights on the government railways with the Canadian Express Company. As regards the question of government ownership of express companies, it is one which we should take considerable time to consider. There are difficulties that at once suggest themselves. It would necessitate the government becoming the owner of horses, carriages, harness and the general equipment of an express company.

Mr. MACLEAN. How does the government handle the mails?

Mr. LOGAN. By tender and contract, and you could not very well handle the express business in that way. However, I have not given the question sufficient study and consideration to be in a position to express a decided opinion, but considering the facts, I can see no objection to granting to the Dominion Express Company, equal privileges on the government roads with the Canadian Express Company, especially as that would be nothing more than fair to the people of the maritime provinces. In the meantime I trust my hon. friend the Minister of Justice will see his way clear to have the question of jurisdiction referred to the Supreme Court for an opinion.

Mr. WRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman any documentary evidence to show that we are nearing the end of the session? If so, will he kindly lay it on the table?

Mr. GOURLEY. I want to say to the hon. Minister of Railways that I believe public opinion in the maritime provinces is in favour of free trade in express companies. The legal difficulty I know nothing about at present, but there should be some way of getting around it. We want active competition in express companies on the Intercolonial, and there is a feeling among the people that they are unjustly treated by having one company given vested rights in the government railway to the exclusion of others. The people of course have to suffer the consequences of want of competition. I would support my hon. friend the Minister of Railways in any fair measure in which he would give free trade to express companies.

Amendment (Mr. Maclean) negatived on division.

Mr. MACLEAN moved to amend the Bill by adding a section which will read as follows :

Section 10 of the said Act is amended by striking out the words 'and his opinion on any question which, in the opinion of the commissioners, is a question of law, shall prevail.

He said : This is to remove a difficulty which has arisen in connection with the Railway Commission and which came to the front not long ago. The towns of Port Arthur and Fort William have a municipal telephone service. After a great deal of trouble a year ago we got a clause put in the Railway Act to the effect that every railway company is bound, on the order of the Railway Commission, to give access to any municipal or incorporated telephone system that seeks admission to the stations of any railway company. I secured that amendment by repeated argument last session and pointing out that the Canadian Pacific Railway had refused access to its station to independent companies on the plea that it had made a contract—this old plea of a contract—with the Bell Telephone Company allowing that company and no other telephone company to have connection with their station. Parliament was good enough after a severe fight to put a clause in the Act to this effect :

Whenever any municipality or corporation has authority to construct, operate and maintain a telephonic system in any district, and is desirous of obtaining telephonic connection or communication with or within any station or premises of the company, in such district and cannot agree with the company with respect thereto, such municipality or corporation may apply to the board for leave therefor, and the board may order the company to provide for such connection or communication upon such terms as to compensation as the board deems just and expedient, and may order and direct how, when, where, by whom and upon what terms and conditions such telephonic connection or communication shall be constructed, operated and maintained.

Hon. Mr. Blair, who was then Minister of Railways and Canals and who piloted this Bill through parliament, told the House that this Bill is to meet the emergency which I have stated and to remove the grievances of the people who own independent telephone lines, the grievances of Locust Hill, Port Arthur, Fort William, and other places. With that understanding I accepted that amendment. Time passed and the commission was organized. Hon. Mr. Blair became chairman of the commission. These people of Port Arthur and Fort William, Locust Hill and other places appeared before the commission and asked that the railway should be compelled to allow them telephonic access to the station. The case was argued and the permission given. The majority of the commission of three members —Hon. Mr. Blair, ex-Minister of Railways ; Hon. Mr. Bernier, ex-Minister of Inland Revenue, and Professor Mills, who had been selected on account of his business capacity, I believe—ruled that under this clause these local telephone companies had the right of access to these stations under the provisions of the Act. But the chairman of the commission, Mr. Blair, said : You may be in favour of giving these telephone companies access to the station, but there is another clause in the Act which makes this a legal issue and so brings it wholly and solely within my jurisdiction.

Mr. EMMERSON. Section 10.

Mr. MACLEAN. That is section 10, which reads as follows :

Not less than two commissioners shall attend at the hearing of every case, and the chief commissioner, when present, shall preside, and his opinion upon any question, which in the opinion of the commissioners is a question of law, shall prevail.

Now, if there was any justification for the Bill passed last session establishing a railway commission it was that the people of Canada were at last to have a tribunal that would control these railway companies and regulate their charges, and this would be done by business men in a business way, without the long-drawn-out system of the courts. It is on that ground that hon. gentlemen opposite are justifying the Railway Act before the public. They make it their boast that at last they have established a tribunal that will deal with these questions speedily. But, instead of having such a tribunal it now turns out that it is to all intents and purposes a court of law, and that the chief justice of that court is supreme and can override his two colleagues. And to show that I do not go outside the record, let me read a few lines from what Mr. Blair said. This is in a despatch dated Ottawa, March 22nd, and gives an account of the speech made by Mr. Blair at the opening of the Railway Commission :

I think I can say for the board—I certainly say it for myself as being responsible for the legal conclusions that may be arrived at.

So, he has the right to say what is the legal issue and to tell his colleagues to sit aside. Never was such a lecture delivered in any legal tribunal before as that given by Mr. Blair to his colleagues. In effect he said: Now, you two get off the bench; I will occupy it myself; this is a question of law and I will decide it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. From what section of the law is that quoted?

Mr. MACLEAN. That is the substance of what Mr. Blair told these good little boys who had been sent to accompany him. He told them to sit down and he would interpret the law. And his interpretation is to the effect that the people of Port Arthur and Fort William, and the farmers of Locust Hill, and the local companies in Quebec and the Northwest, who want telephonic connection with these stations, can only have it by paying enormous damages to the Bell Telephone Company. That is the sum and substance of his decision. That is the barren verdict given the people by the chairman of the Railway Commission. But we propose that this Samson shall be shorn of his locks, that he shall be made only co-equal with his colleagues and that all three members of the commission shall be judges of the law as they are judges of the facts. I do not believe in putting the great commercial interests of this country absolutely in the hands of a lawyer. In many cases under our law we summon a jury and the jury becomes the judge of both law and fact. That is the system that should be followed in this case. The business men and farmers of this country do not want to be left at the mercy of a lawyer at the head of this court.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is the right to appeal, is there not?

Mr. MACLEAN. He says there is the right to appeal to the Privy Council and the Supreme Court, and these people have been sent there. They came down the other day to make some motion in regard to it and they were told that the commission was going west and it would take a long while to get into the Supreme Court. And the chairman of the commission is on record as saying in effect: You had better not go to the Privy Council. He warned them not to go.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. GOURLEY. Mr. Blair is a good lawyer, and——

Mr. MACLEAN. This is what he said:

> I think that an appeal to the Governor in Council would not be desirable in that case. It is a question of law purely and simply so far as it now stands. And—I say it with all respect—the Governor in Council is not a tribunal to determine questions of law.

Mr. GOURLEY. When the hon. gentleman speaks of the Privy Council he does not refer to the judicial committee of the Privy Council?

Mr. MACLEAN. No. This is the position taken by this new Czar. He says, in effect: My colleagues' opinion does not count when it is a matter of law, and I do not think that you litigants should go to the Privy Council, though you have a right to go. The people of this country do not want law, they want service, they want the simple, common right to put their telephone lines into the station of these great railway corporations that they have created. And, as I said before, who are the people who ask for this accommodation—it can be called accommodation—for the railways? They are the clients of the railway companies. All that they want access to the railway station for is to be able to ask if their freight has arrived, if the train is on time, when they should send goods to the station for shipment, and so on. They are all anxious to do business with these railways and they find that this Bell Telephone Company, by a contract, has got between them and the railways and they cannot get into these railway stations.

It is the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada to whom we are giving $150,000,000 to build a transcontinental railway that we propose to empower to enslave the people; it is the Canadian Pacific Railway to whom we have given millions and millions of dollars, and to whom we propose further to give power to enslave the people by preventing them from having telephone access to railway stations. I believe that the contract by which this railway company contracted to keep rival companies out of their stations is bad in law, I believe it is against the public interest, and would so be declared by the courts if appealed to. Therefore under these circumstances I come here with this little amendment asking parliament to change the law so that the supreme jurisdiction now vested in the Chairman of the Railway Commission may be taken away, and that the questions which come before him may be tried, both as questions of business and as questions of law, by some other men, by two lawyers if you will. You may not have two, but don't make monkeys of the colleagues of the chairman. Both of these men were seized of this case, both of them gave excellent judgments. I have asked the Minister of Justice to read the judgments that were given by the Hon. Mr. Bernier and Professor Mills. They are both sound, practical judgments that appeal to every one. They said: These people are entitled to go into these railway stations under this Act, and we make the order forthwith. But the Czar stands up and says: You shall not do so, this is a question of law, and I take it out of your hands. So the people are denied this privilege of going into railway stations.

Mr. WADE. The commissioners must agree that it is a question of law, then the chairman has power to decide.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not find the word 'Czar' defined in the Act.

Mr. MACLEAN. No, but here is what he does find. In a statement given out by the Chairman of the Committee on March 22 last, Mr. Blair, the Chairman, said : 'I certainly say it as being responsible for the legal conclusions that may be arrived at.'

Mr. WADE. But we have section 10 of the statute and here is what it says :

> Not less than two commissioners shall attend at the hearing of every case, and the chief commissioner, when present, shall preside, and his opinion upon any question, which in the opinion of the commissioners is a question of law, shall prevail.

Mr. MACLEAN. I know that is the case, and it was on the strength of this that he immediately acts without these two men. But of course they should have stood out and asserted themselves. The defence that will be offered here to-day will probably be that there should be no such clause as that in the Act. Take that out and let us make these two men co-equal. Do that, and I believe that the business men, the farmers of this country will have some confidence in these men who will proceed to grant relief in many cases.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not a fact that about seven-tenths of all the cases that come before that commission involve questions of law ? A man's right is generally determined by his legal right. It is true that he may have a moral right, but if a man has a legal right and one that can be fairly defended in law, it gives him a different status from that he would otherwise occupy. In nearly all these cases there is a question of law involved, and if questions of law can be decided by the chairman, surely the other two commissioners might as well stay at home. We know that when the Railway Commission was contemplated at first, it was contended strongly that it should consist of three men, one a lawyer, one a railway expert, and one a man who should be a man of common sense, a man who would be versed generally in matters of trade and commerce. It was set forth that it was essentially requisite to have a commission composed in that way so that they might bring their varied intelligences to bear on the different questions that would come before them. It was never contended that the legal mind on that commission should control the others on any question, whether of law or of fact.

Mr. GALLIHER. I think the position is this : This commission must necessarily have a lawyer among its members. Whatever government appoints these commissioners will endeavour to get the best men obtainable. The salaries paid them are probably based on that principle. I do not think any one will dispute the ability of the present Chairman of the Commission, as a lawyer. It was to be expected that we should find such a section as section 10 in this Act. Necessarily, as my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has pointed out, questions of law enter into nearly every dispute that will come before the commission. Now a layman, be he ever so clever, be he ever so good a business man, be he ever so well versed in railway matters, is not as competent to judge of the legal effect of an argument, or of an existing condition, as is a trained legal mind. Therefore, it is only reasonable to expect that when the commission has to decide upon a question where a legal point is involved, the decision on that legal point belongs and should be vested in that member of the commission who is a legal gentleman, in the present case in the chairman. Now they have got to agree, and it is by virtue of section 10 that they have first to agree that there is a legal point involved. Then which of the members of that commission, the trained legal mind on the one hand, or the member who may have no legal knowledge whatever, is the better judge of the question of law, or the better able to decide what law should apply to the point in dispute ? That is altogether outside the numerous questions or circumstances that may arise that are not of a legal character.

Mr. MACLEAN. Will the hon. gentleman pardon me a moment ? Are not these colleagues of the chairman who are constantly engaged in construing the various clauses in the Act, by that fact qualified to engage in the business of interpreting the law ?

Mr. GALLIHER. That does not affect my argument at all ; they may or may not be so. The other two commissioners, no matter how able they may be in every respect from a business point of view, in their commercial knowledge, in their technical railway knowledge, or in their general intelligence, are not as capable of construing a legal point as is a trained legal mind. But we do not rest there. There is an appeal. The Hon. Mr. Blair, Chairman of the Commission, in the case mentioned, says there is an appeal, if I remember correctly, even to the Privy Council. These parties have their right of appeal, first it is to the government. Then there is a section which specially provides that either party to a dispute may, on his own motion, and upon giving such security as directed by statute, ask for the opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada upon any question which, in the opinion of the board, is a question of law. A reference can be made at the request of the Governor in Council. Either party may do so, or the board may do so. Surely that is all the protection any one wants. You may say that the board won't do it because they won't stultify themselves. Then it is open to you, the privilege is granted to you. But at all events, I think that meets one of the objections raised by my hon. friend. It is not as if the Chairman of the Railway Commission was the Czar in the matter, and his decision was final in all cases, because it is not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As far as all matters which do not involve some question of law are concerned, the majority of the board must determine them. As far as questions of law are concerned, they will eventually have to be decided by some person. If the board should proceed without regard to the statute under which it is acting, and by which it is controlled, of course there would be a remedy outside, because its acts would be beyond its jurisdiction and inoperative, and would be so declared by the courts. If the chairman of the Railway Commission could himself decide that a particular matter is a question of law, and therefore arrogate to himself everything that came before the board, there would be good ground for making some alteration in the law, but the point that has been more particularly urged by my hon. friend from East York is that the other two members of the board were rather weak in yielding when they should not have yielded. That is not due to a defect in the law, but it is due to a defect in the constitution of the board.

Mr. MACLEAN. No; it is due to the bulldosing of the chief, who says: I am responsible for the legal conclusion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In the ultimate view it would be due to the weakness of the gentlemen who did not assert themselves as members of the commission in the way they were entitled to do under the law. I think this court ought to be a speedy court, but at the same time when the court has to consider legal questions, it must have regard to legal principles, and it must be bound by the terms of the statute which it has to consider and by the law under which it is acting. Under these circumstances, it would appear to me to be a little dangerous to remove this provision from the statute until we have had a little more experience and until we have found some real injustice resulting from it, because the injustice which is said to have resulted does not seem to be due to anything in the Act, but rather to the fault of the two junior members of the board, who did not take the position which they should have taken.

Mr. MACLEAN. I would like to ask my hon. friend the leader of the opposition and also my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals whether they know of any other court in the world so constituted?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. MACLEAN. What court?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In the ordinary courts of the country, where the jury determines questions of fact, the judge always determines questions of law. The jury are the absolute judges of the facts. They can determine the question of fact against the charge of the judge, but when it comes to a question of law, the judge must determine that, subject to the same appeal as that which is created by this statute.

Mr. MACLEAN. The case is not apposite. What I want to know is where you will find a court in which the chairman of the court says to his colleagues: This is a question for me to determine, not you. Take the case of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the United States, which is dealing with similar matters, and which was appointed for the very same purpose; do you mean to tell me that the chairman of that commission has any more power than his colleagues have? We all know about the judge and jury, and I admitted that some time ago, but here is a commission appointed by parliament at the request of the people of this country, of the merchants and the farmers, to deal with these questions and to deal with them speedily. Now we are told that these questions are practically all questions of law, and the Chairman arrogates to himself the decision of these questions of law. We are getting back to the old thing. Everybody who is a lawyer in this House is getting up and saying that there is a legal obstruction in the way. It is always a case of contract. Somebody must interpret contracts, and now we have the railway companies contracting themselves out in connection with express companies, we have the railway companies contracting themselves out in connection with the telephone companies, and when the people come here for relief we find the lawyers one after another getting up and saying: This is a question of law, it has to be taken into the courts and there has to be litigation.

Mr. SCOTT. Would passenger rates be a question of law?

Mr. MACLEAN. No; of justice.

Mr. SCOTT. But you have no confidence in the commission now.

Mr. MACLEAN. I will come to that. I want to tell my hon. friend that there are a good many people in the Northwest Territories who want to have telephone communication with the railway stations there. The farmers want to have it, and the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), if he were in his place, as he ought to be, to back up what he said the other day, would be helping me to fight this battle against this frightful monopoly of the Bell Telephone Company and that great railway company out there, who are trying to perpetrate an injustice upon the people. The people of the Northwest are pretty tired of the present conditions, they want telephone communication with the railway stations in the west, and, while, they are anxious to secure it, the Bell Telephone Company are busy every day building lines, getting into possession and placing themselves in a position to prevent any independent company from gaining access to the railway stations. Down in the province of Quebec, according to the statement of a gentleman who came to see me the other evening, they are building hundreds of miles of independent lines. but the one thing that blocks them is the contract between the Bell Telephone Company and the railway companies, and the one thing that justifies this contract is the clause in the Railway Act which allows the chairman of the commission to take the position he is taking, when he claims that this is a matter of law and that his colleagues are not judges of the law. After his colleagues had considered this case and had said that these independent telephone companies were entitled to enter these stations, they turned around, for what reason I do not know, and allowed the chairman of the commission to arrogate to himself the decision of the case. If there had been a genuine farmer on the commission, as the right hon. Prime Minister promised there would be, he would not have consented to have had it interpreted as a question of law. But the chairman of the commission said that it was a question of law, and there it remains. It is now in the courts ; go there ; go to this court ; go to some other court ; make it a legal question ; talk about contracts ; talk about the constitution, but all the time humbug the people and give no relief ! It is relief that is wanted. This commission is one that should afford relief. If there is a grievance, and this country has a fair grievance in this matter, there should be a tribunal to remedy that grievance, and in the old days the public men found a remedy for public grievances. They had that remedy in the voting of supplies, but in some way things have changed now, all kinds of public grievances are permitted, and the duty devolves upon two or three men to make the fight in this parliament for public rights. Sometimes I have to carry it on, sometimes other men have to carry it on, and it is carried on as well as it can be, but it has come to this that supplies are voted while these public grievances continue. Hon. gentlemen in this House pledged themselves on the platform all over the country that, as Liberals, they were the friends of the people, and that they believed in constitutional progress, but they forget that constitutional progress in Canada has consisted in the remedy of the grievances of the people. I am sorry to say there is no effort being made now to remedy these grievances in connection with the voting of supplies. We are voting supplies, we are paying salaries to this commission, $10,000 to one and $8,000 to two others, with a company of clerks and servitors of one kind and another added, and they are doing nothing to remedy these grievances but giving the public a lawsuit. Go to another court ! We did not create this court, we did not put this country to this great expense, we did not find these places for public servants, to be told, when we bring a grievance before it, that it is a matter of law, and that we must go from one court to another. If that is to be the answer, all well and good ; the public have to be met, and the public have to be met by hon. gentlemen who sit in this House. The public will be seized of this question, they are being seized of it, and they expect different answers from legal quibbles and contentions to the effect that you must go from court to court, and that no remedy is to be given.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) is not quite consistent in the argument which he makes. If I understand his amendment rightly, it is only an amendment to section 10 of the Railway Act, which says that when, in the opinion of the chairman of the commission, it is a question of law, the decision of that question must be left to the chairman of the commission.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. 'When in the opinion of the board.'

Mr. CASGRAIN. Of the commissioners, yes. My hon. friend says that you should not force people who go before this court to go before another court, but his amendment does not go far enough to secure that end. What does he want ? He wants this commission to decide on questions of law, he wants this commission, which is composed of one lawyer and as the case is now, one notary public, and another gentleman of no legal attainments to decide between railway companies and persons who go before this commission, sometimes in cases involving questions of liability and enormous amounts of money without any appeal to a higher court. I would put this question to any reasonable man and would be willing to discuss it before an assembly of reasonable men and ask them if they would submit to the danger of being judged in the last resort by this commission.

Mr. MACLEAN. I do not propose to refuse an appeal.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If my hon. friend does not propose to abolish the appeal granted in section 43, his amendment falls short of the argument he has just given. The whole argument of my hon. friend was that you must give the people of this country a tribunal of last resort before which they can go and not send litigants from one court to the other. His amendment then falls short of this argument ; he does not propose to amend section 43 which gives the right of appeal. Now, I ask, what will be the ultimate result of the amendment which he proposes ? Supposing that the majority of the commissioners decide a question of law. Does my hon. friend think that even if two commissioners were of the opinion that they should reverse the opinion of the chief commissioner on a question of law that the railway company interested or the other party litigating, if it was an important case, would not go further and take an appeal ? Does my hon. friend think that for a moment ?

Mr. MACLEAN. No.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Then I say his amendment does not go far enough if he is really sincere in his desire to attain this object. He should go a step further but if he goes that step further he is trying to legislate not only against the interests of the railway companies who have to go before the Railway Commission, but also against the interests of any litigant whose case comes before the gentlemen for adjudication. It is no use making speeches to the effect that this is a cheap tribunal before which the people can go, a tribunal which would decide in the last resort so that they would not have to go from court to court. Unless he proposes also to abrogate section 43 of the Railway Act, which gives the right of appeal. I again repeat that even if two commissioners were of a different opinion on a question of law from the chief commissioner, an appeal would still be taken, and the public would not have the cheap court of which my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) speaks.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. To supplement what my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) has said I would like to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman who moved the amendment, (Mr. Maclean) to the fact that the system we have here is the same as that which prevails in England. My hon. friend is aware that in England there are five railway commissioners, two appointed and three ex officio. There is one ex officio member for England one for Ireland and one for Scotland. Three commissioners constitute a quorum of the five, but one ex officio commissioner must always sit and he must always be a judge appointed by the Chancellor in England or the Chief Justice in Ireland, or the Chief Legal Authority in Scotland and the chairman we have here is, as in England, always a judge.

Mr. MACLEAN. In the definition of his jurisdiction is it set forth that he is the judge of the law ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That goes as a mere matter of common sense. There you have three commissioners two of whom are laymen and one a judge. Invariably in a commission of that kind the judge's opinion would prevail on a question of law.

Mr. MACLEAN. Not necessarily.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend is too good a logician not to see that it would be absurd that on a question of law two laymen would decide as against a trained legal gentleman put there practically to decide legal questions. My hon. friend sees how absurd that would be.

Mr. MACLEAN. No he does not ; he sees the quibble.

Mr. GOURLEY. This discussion is valuable as giving to us some idea of the Railway Act. The difficulty which I think my learned friend——

Mr. MACLEAN. Pardon me, I do not want the honour.

Mr. GOURLEY—that the hon. member for East York has is with these two farmer members of the commission. He asks that we should have at least three farmers but the difficulty is that with the two farmers they would first have to agree that it was a question of law before the legal man has any right to say a word. Therefore it shows me that farmers are very poor men to put upon a court.

Mr. MACLEAN. But there is no farmer on it.

Mr. GOURLEY. You are speaking of farmers' decisions and I assume that these two gentlemen who are not lawyers would give farmers' decisions. The remedy for my hon. friend's difficulty is to have two other lawyers, and I would suggest that he move that the two farmers be struck off and two more lawyers be put on.

Mr. MACLEAN. I do not agree there.

Mr. GOURLEY. And then you would get justice.

Mr. COCHRANE. You would get plenty of law.

Mr. GOURLEY. I am bound to say after considerable experience, and the committee will agree with me that I do not promote the interests of my trade very much, that three lawyers on a commission would give more justice in half an hour, than a dozen farmers would in a thousand years.

Mr. MACLEAN. I do not object, provided the three are co-equal.

Mr. GOURLEY. A lawyer goes at a thing right ; he looks at it from all sides, he sums up and does justice. I am surprised that we have not three trained men on this commission, because the commissioners are constantly dealing, under this Act, with vested interests, with rights of property, and I cannot imagine how a man would protect these rights of property unless he had legal training.

Mr. HEYD. Do you think that with more than one legal gentleman on the board they would ever agree ?

Mr. GOURLEY. They would never disagree. They might start to disagree in the morning but they would agree at noon, or if they did not agree at noon, they would agree at night. A good lawyer has no pride of opinion. I may have a strong opinion now, but I may change it at once and within the next hour I may change it again. The only thing about which a lawyer is anxious is that the sun shall not go down upon him having a wrong opinion. He may change his opinion a thousand times a day, but will never let the sun go down upon him holding a wrong opinion if he can help it. A layman on the other hand may have a wrong opinion in the morning but through pride, conceit and personal bullheadedness will hold to that opinion be he right or wrong.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. He does not care about the sun going down.

Mr. GOURLEY. He does not care about the sun going down upon his wrong opinion. With regard to Mr. Blair I may say that when I first entered this House I was rather prejudiced against him, coming from the maritime provinces, being a Tory and not having personal acquaintance with him; but after being here for two or three years I learned to have for him a great admiration. He was strong and clear, always understood the facts and had a firm grip of the whole circumstances of any case under consideration. If there is any man in Canada who should have the right of settling these matters and should have the confidence of the people in doing so, he is that man. I have a kind of sympathy for my hon. friend here (Mr. Maclean). There should be three farmers on this commission, or three lawyers. The great thing is not to mix up good material like a lawyer with alloy like farmers. You will always have a base metal when you mix gold with bronze; you will always have difficulties with a mixed tribunal. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) should amend his Bill so as to have either three lawyers or three farmers.

Mr. WILLIAM ROSS (Victoria). I am sorry that the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) has such a poor opinion of laymen generally.

Mr. GOURLEY. No, I have a very high opinion.

Mr. WILLIAM ROSS (Victoria). Of farmers. It is not long since I heard him saying that every elector in Colchester was equal, if not superior to everybody in this House.

Mr. GOURLEY. More than equal, I say.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I did not altogther agree with him at that time, and I do not agree with him now. I think there are plenty of farmers in the country who are quite as capable of judging the merits of a case if it does not become a question of law as any lawyer in this House. I do not want to discredit the ability of lawyers in their profession, and it is almost charming to see how they agree in this instance, because the Act gives them greater power than they had before. They always want to climb up and get more influence by Act of parliament than they had before. That is generally the aim of lawyers. I have expressed my opinion in this House of the chairman of that committee before, and I have not changed it since. I am not going to repeat it now; but I would not withdraw to-day a single word that I said about that gentleman at the time he tendered his resignation:

Mr. PUTTEE. I am sorry to see that the weight of legal argument this afternoon is so strongly against the hon. member for East York, because behind all this there is this fact, that the intention of parliament as expressed last year has been absolutely frustrated, in connection with giving rights to independent telephone companies to connect with railway stations. When the Bill was up here last year, and even before, the towns of Fort William and Port Arthur were very prominently before the members of the House and the country with their grievance against the Bell Telephone Company. They had a municipal system of telephones, which was refused connection with the railway stations in those two towns. While we were discussing the matter, the mayor and councils of those two towns came down here and put their position before the Railway Committee. The Minister of Railways was altogether opposed to the Bell Telephone Company being interfered with in their monopoly in the railway stations of the country. After the matter had been thoroughly discussed both here and in the Railway Committee, the minister became aware that the opinion on both sides of the House was overwhelmingly against him, and he finally brought in an amendment to meet their wishes. The amendment was thought by the minister himself and the members of the House to give independent companies the right to put their instruments in the stations of the railway companies, and the clause passed in that way. We did not know then that the Minister of Railways of last session was to be the chairman of the Railway Commission this year; but so it happened, and this very clause was the first important one to come before the commission. The result, whether right or wrong, was to completely frustrate the intention of the majority of the members of this House last year. Now, something should be done to put us in the position which we thought we occupied. Perhaps the hon. member for East York is wrong in proposing to strike out this part of this section. Perhaps he ought to have taken another section. At all events, some proposition should be brought forward under this Bill to put us in the position which we thought we were in with respect to independent telephones last year.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. Just a word. I understood that this Railway Commission was to decide all questions between the railway companies, the farmers, the travelling public, and every one concerned. I had no idea that we were to have a one-man power on that commission; but it seems that is what it is down to. Then we might as well save the expense of the other two, and allow the one-man, if he must have a legally trained mind, to decide all questions. The other two men might as well be dispensed with. The first thing we want to know in regard to this matter is, what is law? I always understood law was common sense. Some of the greatest minds in Britain that the world ever saw knew nothing about law; they were not trained in law. Men may have great minds and never study law. I do not think we are obliged to fall back on a man who has been to college and studied and learned to quibble on words—because that is what lawyers generally do. What we want are facts—whatever is true and right. Whom do we find getting up and defending the Czar of the commission? Every lawyer in the House, while the farmers are ignored. If the amendment of the hon. member for East York is not made, we shall have trouble of this kind every year. We had better settle it now for all time, that whatever that committee decides to do shall be the law in this matter.

Mr. MACLEAN. I regret that there has been only a farmer on this side of the House to take the side of the farmers in this issue. The farmers all over this country are asking for this relief. They are simply asking that these railway companies, who are enjoying immense subsidies of the people's money, shall allow the people's telephone lines, which are struggling against a great monopoly, to have access to these railway stations to do business with them. I believe that under the common law of this country, that contract is against the public interest of this country, and is illegal; I believe these railway companies could be compelled, irrespective of the railway commission to give that access; but as it is they are denying it. The farmers are refused this relief, and there is not a farmer on the other side of the House to get up and say a word for them. The Postmaster General, who used to make my own province ring with the complaint that in this matter the farmers were being bled white, is not in his place; hon. gentlemen who represent the farmers have not a word to say in their interest; and the men from the Northwest who are threatened with this Bell monopoly, have not a word to say, although if a decision were given in the Port Arthur case, the matter would be settled in all parts of the country.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him whether any appeal was taken from the decision of the Chief Commissioner? When was the decision given?

Mr. MACLEAN. The decision was given on March 22. Representatives of the town of Port Arthur came to Toronto. I had an interview with the mayor and several representatives of the two towns. They said they were on their way to Ottawa, and they had incurred great expense to have the case argued, but they did not want more litigation. They wanted relief first of all. If we cannot get it in this way, I have another amendment to meet the case which may command the support of my hon. friend from Montmorency. They sent an agent here the other day to get an appointment for them, and they were told the old story, that the commissioners were going to the coast, that they would be back some time in September, and that they would then make a reference to the Supreme Court.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Between the month of March and now there must have been time for them to have lodged an appeal. If the decision was really not right and there was an injustice done, they surely would have had time to put in an appeal and have it decided.

Mr. MACLEAN. And the matter would have gone to the Supreme Court. The chairman of the commission was good enough to say he would make a reference to the Supreme Court. That court would probably construe it to be a question of law, and these farmers would have had to pay enormous damages to the Bell Telephone Company in order to have this telephone connection.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Supposing section 10 did not exist at all and the chief commissioner would not have the decision on a question of law, and suppose the three commissioners decided against the telephone company, does the hon. gentleman not think that, under section 43, there would have been an appeal by the company against that decision?

Mr. MACLEAN. I grant that.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Then your amendment does not meet the case.

Mr. MACLEAN. It is a bastard court which gives one man more power than his colleagues.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MACLEAN. That is a good English word.

Mr. BLANCHET. But not used in good English society.

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes, I am not using it in any wrong sense. It is a very fitting word to describe a court in which one judge decides everything and tells the others to sit down. The jurisdiction should be co-equal. I am willing to accept the suggestion made that the three judges should be lawyers, but at any rate they should have equal powers. The questions that come before them are almost altogether questions of fact. They are such questions as ordinary business men can decide just as we decide them in this House. Why must the judge of necessity be a lawyer if the man who makes the law is not a lawyer ?

Mr. GOURLEY. That makes the necessity greater.

Mr. MACLEAN. An ordinary man has the right to assist in making the law, but once it is made, we are told that it must be interpreted by legal men. I object to that. The ordinary business men of the country could very well decide these questions. Such men to decide them across the line, where they have an Interstate Commission, and where substantial relief is given the public by the decisions of that commission.

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to express myself in favour of some change in the law so that the different telephone companies in Canada shall have the right to connect with the larger corporations. I had a conversation with a leading business man of the town of Port Arthur the other day, and he told me that the telephone system between Port Arthur and Fort William was a perfect success. The business men of both places were well satisfied with the local service, but they had a strong complaint that they were unable to get outside connections with the Bell Telephone. I do not think that parliament should pass any legislation which would interfere with the rights of the Bell Telephone Company. That company has done very much for the people. It has done good service in many cases.

Mr. COCHRANE. They make you pay for it.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not think this constitutes any very great grievance, but I do not think it is in the interests of the people that one or more than one very large corporation should have the monopoly of sending messages to different parts of Canada. If a local company is established in any locality, it should have the right to connect with the long distance telephone service, so long as it is willing to pay. I am in favour of legislation which will allow the different local companies to connect with the larger telephone companies and thus have the privilege of sending messages to different parts of Canada. We must bear in mind that the telephone is an increasing business. Men who years ago never went near a telephone office are now its daily visitors, and a considerable portion of the business of the country is transacted by telephone. This is the case, not only with banking and commercial institutions, but with farmers. Parliament should therefore provide such legislation as will give local telephone companies access to the long distance service, provided they are willing to pay a reasonable rate.

Mr. SPROULE. I have always held the view that when we incorporate a railway company we bring it under the Railway Act, and that the Act contemplates that every part of the public should have equal rights in doing business with the railways.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is right.

Mr. SPROULE. In this case a patron of the Bell Telephone Company has the advantage of enjoying conveniences which are denied other men who want to do business with it. That is not equal rights to all. It is discrimination in favour of one as against another, and the law does not contemplate any such discrimination. We are told over and over again that when we give railway corporations the right to build railways, they become common carriers and must treat all alike, but the Bell Telephone Company are doing just the opposite and we are supporting them. It should be the duty of parliament to break down that injustice and put all on an equal footing. If a railway company is to be allowed to give the Bell Telephone Company a monopoly in its stations, all those who are not patrons of that company are discriminated against. It may be that the law as it stands would justify the Bell Company, but that certainly never was the intention of parliament. Parliament has declared over and over again that its intention was that railway corporations shall treat all alike ; and if the law enables them to avoid that obligation, this parliament should amend it, and if parliament fails to do its duty, the people will have a just complaint against the government of the day and those members who refused to secure to the public equal rights. If this be allowed, you can take any part of the country you like, and for one who will enjoy the privilege you will find fifteen or twenty denied it. That is not meting out equal treatment to all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Lest I should be misunderstood in anything I have said, I desire to explain that the amendment I was considering was simply this—to strike out from this section the words 'and his opinion on any question which, in the opinion of the commissioners, is a question of law, should prevail.' The point which has been discussed by the last two hon. gentlemen who have spoken is one which arises more particularly on the next amendment. I was expressing no opinion on that. The only thing I desire to point out is that the question of law must be decided by a tribunal of some kind which is supposed to possess the knowledge requisite for the construing of statutes. My hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) argues that the chief commissioner should not have that power, being a lawyer. Of course, I am disposed to give every possible weight to everything the hon. gentleman urges in that regard. But the case that has been brought forward as an illustration is one which, whatever might be done with this amendment, would, in the end, be decided by the Supreme Court, it seems to me. Under the law as it stands, the chief commissioner has decided a point of law. An appeal lies to the Supreme Court. If it were otherwise, if the two gentlemen not members of the legal profession had decided this case in the opposite way and had overruled the opinion of the legal member of the board, undoubtedly the board as a whole would permit an appeal to the Supreme Court. So, in the end the Supreme Court would decide the question of law. That is altogether apart from the merits of the question whether or not the decision of the chief commissioner was right. If it was right the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) proposes to so alter the law that the decisions hereafter shall be otherwise. In that connection we must consider the justice of the decision pronounced by the chief commissioner. Upon this amendment, I am not expressing any opinion upon the desirability of altering that law in that regard. When we come to consider that amendment I shall be prepared to express an opinion. I desire to make it clear that I have not said anything that can be construed as opposed to the amendment which we shall be called upon to discuss in a little while.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. When we do come to the discussion of the next amendment of which my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) has given notice, I shall have an opportunity to show that the statement made as to the effect of the judgment rendered in the Port Arthur case is incorrect. Because, one commissioner did not overrule two. The hon. gentleman will see, if he considers the effect of the judgment, that the chief commissioner and Hon. Mr. Bernier are, in effect agreed, and that the dissent is on the part of Mr. Mills. However, we will deal with that on the next question.

Mr. MACLEAN. My position is that when a court is established its members should have equal jurisdiction, power and weight; that one ought not to be superior to the others. And I still stick to that. I propose to do away with all distinctions in the court in this respect. All I want is a court constituted of men of authority in deciding all matters that come before them. I think that is a good rule and it has never been departed from in any case that I know of. Certainly no instance put forward here to-days shows a tribunal composed of men of unequal power, one being given the authority to overrule the others.

Amendment negatived on division.

Mr. MACLEAN moved:

Section 193 of the said Act is amended by adding the following words:—'And such compensation shall be limited to the direct and immediate local damages actually suffered by reason of such construction, operation and maintenance by the railway company at such station or premises, and not from any cause, matter or business extending beyond the same.'

He said: This amendment is to meet the case of Port Arthur and Fort William. The object is to provide that independent telephone companies shall have the right of access to these stations and that the only damage they shall pay is the actual damage incurred by the intrusion—that they shall not pay any damage that the Bell Telephone Company or the railway company may plead that they have sustained under any contract. The clause was drawn by some legal gentlemen who are interested in the Port Arthur decision. If the point were made clear, as I believe it will be by this amendment, there could be no such decision——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) has the decision, would he be good enough to explain it for the benefit of some of us who are not as familiar with the case as he is?

Mr. MACLEAN. I am sorry to say that I have mislaid the decision. But the substance of it, as I understand it, was that these independent companies would have to go to court to have it decided whether they should not pay large damages to both the telephone and the railway company. The Canadian Pacific Railway and Bell Telephone Company pleaded before the Railway Commission that this right of access meant hundreds of thousands of dollars of damage to them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How could they plead that?

Mr. MACLEAN. The contract between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Bell Telephone Company provides that, in consideration of the Bell Telephone Company being granted a monopoly in the Canadian Pacific Railway stations, the Canadian Pacific Railway shall be supplied free with all the telephone instruments needed in connection with their business. I have read the contract in this House, and it is on record in 'Hansard.' The Grand Trunk has a similar contract with the Bell Telephone Company. Hon. gentlemen ought to read the equipment called for even in the city of Montreal in the way of free telephones. There can be no doubt that, if independent telephone companies were allowed access to the railway stations, the loss to these other concerns would be very considerable. But to avoid that being counted as damages against the independent companies, this amendment has been drawn. Under it these companies can plead only the actual damages incurred by the intrusion of the wires into the railway station.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It might be of some use to the committee for me to state the circumstances of the reference to the Railway Commissioners arising out of the Port Arthur and Fort William case. These two municipalities, the town of Port Arthur and the town of Fort William, owned and operated a telephone system within the limits of the two towns. They applied to the board of Railway Commissioners, under section 193 of the Railway Act, for an order as follows :

> Directing the railway company to allow the installation of telephone instruments in the railway stations of the Canadian Pacific Railway and for leave to connect the same with their telephone system.

That is to say, for leave to connect the station with the telephone system with the town of Port Arthur with the telephone system of the company. Now prior to the enactment of this section 193——

Mr. GOURLEY. Has the Canadian Pacific a telephone system in connection with their railway ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. A telephone system in the station.

Mr. MACLEAN. But it is only to connect with that system, it is only to get access to the station.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Prior to the enactment of section 193, in May, 1902, an agreement was made between the railway and the Bell Telephone whereby the latter company for valuable consideration, had granted for a period of ten years, the exclusive privilege of placing telephone instruments, apparatus and wires in the several stations, offices and premises of the railway in Canada where the telephone company had, or might during the continuation of the agreement, establish telephone exchanges. That agreement was then in existence, under which the Bell Telephone Company had an exclusive right to the Canadian Pacific Railway stations, limiting it to these particular stations. When application was made to the Railway Commission, the Railway Commissioners, that is to say Mr. Blair, held that they were entitled to access. The only question in dispute was as to whether this exclusive contract was a valid contract, that is to say, the exclusive contract between the telephone company and the railway company ; and whether or not, it being an exclusive contract,—the compensation provided for by this section had to be considered from the standpoint of that exclusive contract—whether or not they were obliged to pay compensation for damages that might result to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company as a result of the violation of that exclusive contract. Now, Mr. Blair held that that contract was not a contract in restraint of trade, that it was a good contract, and that if the municipalities of Port Arthur and Fort William desired to get access, in estimating the compensation, the damage resulting from the violation of that contract would have to be taken into account. The right of access was not denied, the only dispute was as to the question of compensation.

Mr. MACLEAN. In the light of this clause.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In the light of that clause. Now it might be well to quote the words of the judgments of the commissioners. Mr. Blair held :

> That the said agreement was valid and not void or voidable as being in restraint of trade or against public policy, and that an order made under section 193 should provide for payment of compensation upon just terms for all lawful rights and interests injuriously affected thereby.

Mr. Bernier held :

> While the agreement is valid, and compensation should therefore be allowed, the question of compensation should be reserved for future consideration, and determined after hearing any case that might be presented by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or any other railway company in support of damages.

'After hearing any case.' Mr. Bernier and Mr. Blair decided the railway had a right of access. As to the right of access there is no dispute. But they both held that this exclusive contract is to be taken into account in estimating the damage. Mr. Mills held :

> That the agreement is in restraint of trade and against public policy, and that compensation should be awarded only for the use of the premises occupied by the applicants' telephones and the expense of operating them.

So you see what the result of this judgment is, merely that two commissioners held this agreement good and an other held it bad. and that the two commissioners who held the agreement good and as not being in restraint of trade, say that that agreement must be taken into account in estimating the damages. That is all that is decided in that case, and nothing more.

Mr. MACLEAN. Then will the Minister of Justice say whether he will accept my amendment ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I cannot accept the amendment, I do not see why I should. I do not think my hon. friend's amendments, if accepted, would carry him very much further. If the object he has in view is, as I presume it is, to enable the telephone company to obtain access to the railway station in violation of an existing agreement and without compensation. I am opposed to such legislation as that. If there is a legal contract that is to be violated as a result of the enforcement of section 193 in regard to these rights, any damage that may result in violation of that contract must be admitted. If that is what he has in view I am opposed to it.

Mr. MACLEAN. Cannot this House declare what is in restraint of trade ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think that would be rather a dangerous thing to do, in view of the fact that our courts have been engaged for the past twenty-five or thirty years in construing contracts made in restraint of trade.

Mr. GOURLEY. Surely the telephone company did not want access without paying damages.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is what my hon. friend from East York wants.

Mr. GOURLEY. But the telephone company itself would not want that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It wanted access on agreeing to pay compensation for locating their telephone system, but without regard to the violation of this contract.

Mr. GOURLEY. I think there must be some misunderstanding.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Let the hon. gentleman read the judgments.

Mr. GOURLEY. I am sure they would make an offer to pay damages.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No.

Mr. GOURLEY. Could not the commission have made an order allowing access upon the payment of damages ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The order has gone, the question of compensation being left open to be determined.

Mr. GOURLEY. What is the telephone company complaining about ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I don't know.

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot agree with the argument that this agreement between the railway company and the telephone company is a good agreement, that it should be respected, that it should be considered, in view of this condition, which is a general condition—general at least in my part of the country—that the Bell Company has no telephone in the railway station, but that it has a right under that agreement to have a telephone there and to prevent anybody else from having a telephone there. The argument means that when a local telephone company wishes to connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway stations this local company would have to pay damages because of the violation of an agreement between the railway company and the Bell Telephone Company, when the Bell Telephone Company had not done anything under that agreement and had suffered no injury whatever.

Mr. GOURLEY. If there was no injury there would be no damage.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Exactly.

Mr. GOURLEY. And if it were not installed I can see the damages would be merely nominal.

Mr. OLIVER. I maintain there should be no admission of any damages in such a case, and if the argument is that there are damages in such a case, then I for one say that the law should be amended, and that no such a thing should be permitted ; that where the public interest or the public use requires the entry of the telephone system which is established in that part of the country, into the railway station, no agreement between the telephone company and the railway company should be held good which would prevent that free access.

Mr. GOURLEY. You would not want us to steal your property would you ? Neither must you ask us to steal other people's property.

Mr. OLIVER. Whose property is being stolen ?

Mr. GOURLEY. By the Bell Telephone ?

Mr. OLIVER. Not at all, they have no property. If the argument is that the railway company's property is being stolen or being taken or used without their consent, I can understand it, but that is not the claim. The telephone company is prepared to pay for the use of the railway company's property, or for any inconvenience to which the railway company may be put. The question is as to the Bell Telephone Company's property, and I say that the telephone company has no property in such a case, even though they have an agreement, or if that agreement is good in law, the law should be changed so that it shall not be good.

Mr. MACLEAN. And the hon. Minister of Justice by a single amendment could introduce into this House a declaration that a railway company enfranchised by this parliament, given all these powers and subsidies shall not discriminate against any of its patrons or the public in the use of its stations for the furtherance of the trade and commerce of this country. We could pass that law in two seconds here, we could reach that grievance, we could declare that these railway companies shall not do that, but instead of that we allow them to do anything they like, we allow them to entrench themselves behind these contracts and when an effort is made to get some kind of remedy for the people these contracts made by companies enfranchised by this parliament against the public interest are pleaded. We have given enormous subsidies to these companies, we have given them land and money and for every one million dollars represented a third of it came out of the pockets of the people, not to mention the lands ; yet these companies have the effrontery to make this agreement and when the public ask under the law to have telephonic communication with the stations they say to them : You must do your business through the Bell Telephone Company, another monopoly allied with us in keeping our yoke upon the necks of the people. This is an infamous contract. It should never be allowed in any country and the people ask that it be rescinded. The Liberal party should rise up and declare that any contract that is against the public interest, is against the advancement of trade, is against the welfare of the people but instead of that it is pleaded : Contract, contract, go to the courts ; no remedy can be had here. If we have any vestige of regard for the duty for which we have been sent here, let us approach this problem earnestly. We are not here to get through with our duties so that we may get away on our holidays ; we are here to try and cure this grievance and I appeal to the government, if they have no remedy to suggest. Will they not say to these creatures that we have created, to these railway companies : You must treat the people fairly ? if you let one section of the community into your railway station you must let them all in. You must give the same privilege to all these telephone companies and you must give an interchange of traffic with the Bell Telephone Company provided they pay you a reasonable compensation. A year or two ago the hon Minister of Justice promised the people that he would bring down a general law dealing with all these telephone companies. The telephone is the greatest public convenience to-day. The people want to use it. We want to extend its use to every one, to increase the comfort of all by extending this line to every man, to every farmer ; but, while this should be our desire, the use of the telephone is almost prohibited by reason of the infamous and unfair agreement which is at present existing between these great railway corporations and the Bell Telephone Company. The Grand Trunk Railway to which we have given a credit to the value of $150,000,000 are parties to this agreement. If we had had any of the instinct in us of the men who have fought the people's battles in former days we would have said to this Grand Trunk Railway Company : Not one dollar of public money shall be given you, not one piece of legislation shall we give to you until you cancel that infamous agreement. Sir Thos. Shaughnessy, president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, has practically confessed in public that if he were forced to do it he would withdraw this agreement. If the right hon. Prime Minister would sit down in his private cabinet and say : My dear Shaughnessy, the contract which exists between you and the Bell Telephone Company is against the public interest, it is a tyranny, it is a matter of slavery as far as the people are concerned and if you do not cancel it we will have to introduce legislation declaring it to be against the public interest. The remedy would be found. But, nothing of that kind is being done. No remedy is granted. It is the old story of pleading contracts, pleading vested rights, and telling the people to go to the courts. They have created this court at an enormous expense, they have provided situations for all these men, the farmers and the people generally are taxed to pay the salaries of these men and I would call the attention of my hon. friend the Postmaster General to the fact —I do not want him to turn away from me now—that the people are paying these taxes are providing these salaries, are granting these subsidies, are giving these railway companies franchises, are giving them lands, are giving them money and are giving them further powers to borrow money, making them greater and stronger than they are to-day, allowing them to pay immense dividends as the Bell Telephone Company is, while we have not the courage to tell these corporations that they must treat the people fairly, and that they must deal out equal justice to all. What does my hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Heyd) say about it ? The people of Brantford have decided on a municipal telephone system of their own. Brantford is a great city. It is one of the finest cities in Canada, a city the export trade of which is next to and almost exceeds the export trade of the city of Toronto. It is a city composed of enterprising men, factories are built, fine houses are being erected, great business houses are being put up and all that the men of Brantford say is : Let us have access to the railway station for our municipal telephone system. The answer to that is : You cannot put your municipal telephone system into the Grand Trunk office ; you cannot put it into the Canadian Pacific Railway office. It is a regrettable fact that the late Minister of Railways and Canals, having given his solemn pledge to this House that the clause now under discussion would practically meet the grievance that I have raised, when he came to interpret it as the judge in the case, should place upon it an interpretation differing from that which he led me and others to think would be the result of the amendment. But, I appeal to hon. gentlemen opposite. I appeal to this House. I do not want to make an issue of politics out of it, but I do appeal to this House to sit down and see if we cannot find a remedy for this grievance by which we can compel these companies not to do anything wrong, not to lose any money, but to treat the people fairly and to give them justice. These companies are our creatures.

They are not greater than parliament, and above all things they are just as much committed to treat the public justly as any one else. We want justice for all—fair treatment, no discrimination. We want this section so changed as to permit access to the railway station by every section of the community. If one telephone company can get in, all telephone companies should be permitted to get in. We have passed a law providing that every railway company shall grant equal express facilities to all companies. Why is this provision not extended to telephone companies? I leave my case there. I put it before the House. Personally, it is a very small consideration to me, but it is a very great consideration to the hon. Postmaster General who proposes shortly to appeal to the voters of Markham whom I have the honour to represent and it does mean something to my hon. friend from Brantford.

Mr. HEYD. You asked me what I say. I say that the agreement between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Bell Telephone Company is in restraint of trade.

Mr. MACLEAN. Hear, hear. I am very glad to hear the hon. gentleman say that and probably some good is coming out of this discussion. I believe it is in restraint of trade and I believe it is the duty of the House forthwith to declare that the agreement is in the restraint of trade. It is not our duty to send it to the courts. Why send everything to the courts? What is this parliament for? Is a parliament not for the remedy of grievances? I have said in this House before and I say it again, that the whole history of British constitutional progress is made up of the rectification of all kinds of grievances by parliament, not through courts so much as by the acts of parliament, a change in the law, a violation of contracts that may have been entered into and an interference with vested rights. The men who had the monopolies in the time of Queen Bess all claimed that they had these monopolies under their franchises but the public interest was declared to override these rights and one after the other the monopolies were removed. This was the course of British constitutional progress. But we in this parliament say now that there must be an end in the way of legislation; it must be a question for the courts to interpret, and any such thing as special relief must not be afforded. Let us stop that. We have the facts, these towns have the grievances. It is the old case of the citizens, the burgesses, coming to parliament for relief, asking in this case simply that their own municipal system, which they bought with their own money, shall be allowed to have access to the Canadian Pacific Railway station. Is the Grand Trunk Railway, which we are creating, to turn against the people of Canada too? Is Mr. Hays's new Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, the Canadian National Transportation system which is to be built with $150,000,000 of the credit of the people of this country to close its stations to any kind of access to municipal telephone systems? What would happen to-morrow if the Postmaster General decided to nationalize the telegraph and telephone systems of this country? Would he for one moment allow that contract of the Grand Trunk Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway to stand?

Mr. GOURLEY. He could not help himself.

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes he could help himself, he could declare that contract at an end, taking the line that it was against the public interest and he would force these roads to let him into their stations. They could not bar him out, and the whole people of Canada would support him. I say it is a matter of negotiation. We have these companies at our mercy. The Bell Telephone Company are here every day seeking legislation and we could say to them: You must abandon this iniquitous contract and must treat every one fairly, equitably and without discrimination. There are a dozen ways of getting at that; what is wanted is the determination to do it, to rectify the grievance. I leave my case as I have tried to present it. Perhaps I have presented it with some heat but I have tried to present it in the interests of the public and without doing any injustice to these companies. I do not propose to do any injustice to them. They are making money and they can afford to treat the people that created them, fairly, equitably and without discriminating against one in favour of the other. No harm is done by making them play fair.

Fair play is bonnie play.

You can do it by legislation or in a dozen other ways, but in some way immediate relief ought to be granted.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I quite agree with my hon. friend who has just taken his seat that fair play is bonnie play, but fair play means fair play to all parties.

Mr. MACLEAN. Hear, hear.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not that the strong man should take the weaker man by the throat. But let us see now what my hon. friend wants. What he calls fair play is for parliament to authorize a railway company, the Canadian Pacific Railway—to deal with the specific case under discussion—to violate its contract and to violate it with impunity, in spite of the fact that that contract has been declared by this court, the Board of Railway Commissioners, a valid and legal contract. He wants us to do that and calls it fair play.

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is no fair play in giving authority to one party to a contract to violate it. That is not legislation which this House would sanction; no body of men would sanction such legislation. My suggestion is this: It is important first of all to see to it that all telephone companies in this country have equal facilities on equal terms with respect to access to all railway stations. That is important undoubtedly. Now the Canadian Pacific Railway have an exclusive contract with the Bell Telephone Company by virtue of which the Bell Telephone Company have arrangements with this company which practically gives them a monopoly, and as a result other telephone companies are excluded from the Canadian Pacific Railway stations. If the judgment of the Railway Commission is a good judgment, that is the present condition of affairs. As I said before when this question was up that judgment, as I understood, was being appealed from to the Supreme Court. Some doubts have been expressed on that point and having made inquiries I find that it is not at all certain that steps have been taken to that end. I would advise, subject of course to conference with my colleagues, that the question should first be settled, whether or not, under the existing agreement of the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway with the Bell Telephone Company, that company have an exclusive right to the use of these railway stations. They have not that exclusive right if that exclusive contract is not a good contract, and if it is so declared by the Supreme Court the matter ends, because the legislation we now have is quite sufficient to give all the facilities required to any telephone company. If, on the contrary, the Supreme Court decides that the contract is a good contract, that a violation of that contract would mean that one of the parties to it would be placed in the invidious position of having the right by statute to violate its contract, I say that we should take pains to carefully take what steps are necessary. I admit that that would be serious, but not so serious or intricate that this parliament could not deal with it. We could find a remedy for such a condition, but let us find out first where we stand. Let us find out if it be true that this Bell Company have an exclusive monopoly of access to these stations. If the municipality has not taken an appeal from the judgment of the Board of Railway Commissioners let the government undertake to do it, and have the question settled once and for all. After all there is not very much out of the way in this course because this is the only contract of the sort in existence in this country, and it is of importance, I admit, that at this present time equal facilities should be given to all telephone companies, to all express companies, in fact to the whole general public in the use of our great means of transportation. All of our railway facilities must be put at the disposal of all persons and corporations on the same terms. That is a correct principle and to that extent I go with my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean). There is no necessity in the assertion of a correct principle to do an injustice, and it would be doing an injustice to give one party to a contract, a statutory right to violate that contract to the detriment of the other party and to such legislation as that I cannot give my consent.

Mr. MACLEAN. It has been done; bad contracts have been declared bad contracts.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Let this contract be declared a bad contract, but not by parliament. My hon. friend will not get any thinking man in this House to sanction any undertaking to substitute parliament for the courts in the construction of contracts.

Mr. MACLEAN. But this parliament will declare that it is a wrong contract.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is a vicious principle.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think that the Minister of Justice has not quite given my hon. friend from York (Mr. Maclean) credit for the way in which he approaches this subject. I do not think that my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) desires to interfere with the sanctity of contracts. I do not understand his position to be exactly that. I understand his position to be neither this, that these two companies, which may be said to exercise to a certain extent monopolies, with regard to transportation of passengers and freight on the one hand, and with regard to the transmission of intelligence on the other hand, should not be allowed to make a contract between themselves so as to impose an undue restriction, virtually a tax, upon access to the station of the railway company. That is a position which commends itself to some of us in the House. We must respect the sanctity of contracts; but with regard to these virtual monopolies, we interfere so far with their unrestricted rights to make contracts that we do not allow a railway company to charge more than a certain amount, and, so far as telephone companies are concerned, we require their tariffs of tolls to be approved by the Governor in Council. While we must respect the sanctity of contracts, we at the same time say that no arrangement ought to be made between two corporations possessing these monopolies by which the people through independent companies are restricted from that means of communication with the railway stations throughout the country which is so desirable in the public interest. For my part, I am very sorry that the towns of Port Arthur and Fort William did not go on and have the Railway Commission determine what compensation is really payable. It strikes me that if I were sitting on that commission, I should not fix the amount of compensation at any very large figure. I have looked over the report which the Minister of Justice has been good enough to hand me, and I find the following claims put in by the counsel of one of the companies :

The results to the benefit of Canadian Pacific Railway :
Passes and franks over Bell Company's long distance lines, valued at..	$18,297 00
Exchange service, 774 instruments free to railway company, valued at..	22,652 00
	$40,859 00

On the other side of the account we have:

To the benefit of the Bell Company :
Trips, annual and periodical passes over Canadian Pacific Railway, valued at..	$22,258 00
Refunds..	200 00
	$22,458 00

It seems to be on such a statement as this that the idea of large compensation was based before the commission. I do not myself see how access by the two municipal corporations to that railway station would interfere very much with the condition of things that prevailed between these two companies, and I would be inclined to think that if the railway commission came to fix the amount of damages, it would have to be merely nominal. I agree with the idea put forward by my hon. friend from Toronto and with what has been said by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice as well. I agree absolutely that we must abide by the sanctity of contracts; but when we come to deal with great corporations exercising what are virtually monopolies, we must at the same time in the public interest restrain these corporations from making contracts which are not in the public interest. On the one hand, they get very great privileges from parliament, and on the other hand, they must be content to have those privileges so controlled as to give the public its full rights in every respect.

Mr. OLIVER. Those of us who are not learned in the law are at a very great disadvantage in discussing this question, now that it has become a legal question. But at the risk of getting into deep water, I will say that it appears to me that possibly as much injustice is done in the name of law as is done against the law ; and it seems to me that in this particular case, when the question is between the sanctity of contracts and the jurisdiction of parliament, there is a parliamentary view of the case which may be taken as well as the legal view. It is a possibility, and a reasonable possibility, that a contract may be so palpably improper as not to require any reference to a court in order to have it ignored by parliament. If parliament is to abdicate its authority to such an extent that whenever a question of any intricacy comes up, no matter what injustice a certain view of the case may do to the people, a decision upon that question may be postponed, and postponed practically indefinitely by reference to the courts, then parliament is aiding and abetting injustice, instead of preventing injustice. Now, I submit that this agreement between the Bell Telephone Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, if interpreted in the light of the judgment of the Railway Commission, is so far beyond and outside of anything that is reasonable, is so absolutely and utterly unreasonable, is so greatly in restraint of the liberty of action by the people and the liberty of legislation by this parliament, that parliament would be more than justified in absolutely ignoring it. Take the case as it stands. The judgment of the Railway Commission says that the towns of Port Arthur and Fort William may have access to the railway stations on payment of the costs of installation, the costs of operation, and damages to the Bell Telephone Company for the breaking of their contract with the railway company. The Bill of damages presented by the Bell Telephone Company, which, if their side of the case is to prevail, the towns of Port Arthur and Fort William must pay, amounts to the value of the transportation which that company has secured in times past from the Canadian Pacific Railway—many thousands of dollars ; because that is really what the breaking of the agreement means. That means simply that the towns of Port Arthur and Fort William cannot have that access to the railway stations by their municipal telephone system to which they are entitled. It simply debars the possibility of justice in the matter. If the interpretation of the railway commission is correct, that agreement between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Bell Telephone Company is such a trespass on the rights of the people that parliament would be doing less than its duty if it did not take measures to ignore it and to secure the people in their rights. This question appeals to me very strongly. The Calgary and Edmonton Railway runs lengthwise of my constituency, three hundred miles, and the town of Cardston is forty miles south of its southern terminus. There is a string of towns along that railway each large enough to have a telephone system of their own, some fourteen or fifteen in number and in every one of them access to the railway stations is the essential feature of a useful local telephone system. If the local system cannot have access to the railway stations, it is practically useless. When the question was up before, I drew attention to these facts. Since then the Bell Telephone Company have strung a wire from Cardston to Edmonton along that 300 miles of railway, and I presume are in a position of entrenched monopoly in every railway station. If those fourteen towns now existing and fourteen more rapidly growing wish to have a local telephone system, they will find themselves in this difficulty, that they will be debarred from access to the railway stations. The question thus comes closely home to the people. We are simply in the hands of the Bell Telephone Company, and that company has the monopoly in the district of Alberta from end to end. There is no doubt that the people there could establish a local service which would give very much cheaper rates than can any company which looks to a profit; and to prevent their getting access to the railway stations is to prevent their spending their own money in providing their own telephone accommodation. It is evident, therefore, that the agreement between the Bell Telephone and the railway companies is a trespass on the rights of the people, and this parliament will be doing less than its duty if it does not take measures to relieve the people from that injustice.

As regards precedents, let me call attention to the fact that not many years ago the whole grain trade of the Northwest was in the hands of a ring of elevator owners because of an agreement between them and the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Canadian Pacific Railway refused to handle any grain except through these elevators. They refused to give sites at railway stations except to elevators of a certain capacity, and the result was that the people were robbed of hundreds of thousands of dollars every year. When that question was brought up in this House I remember that those of us who demanded the free right of shipping grain were denounced as socialists; but to-day there is a law on the statute-book which enables every farmer to obtain shipping of his grain at any railway station in his turn.

Mr. MACLEAN. And that was brought about by an Act of parliament, and not by a decision of the courts.

Mr. OLIVER. There was no decision of the courts annulling the agreement between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the elevators. There was no change in the conditions, but parliament, in its wisdom, decided that that agreement was a trespass on the rights of the people and annulled it.

Mr. HEYD. I desire to say a word or two, as I did not have the opportunity of fully explaining my position. I have said that in my opinion the agreement between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Bell Telephone Company is an agreement in restraint of trade. I am quite willing to take my law from the Minister of Justice; but when it comes to determining what is right as between man and man, I propose to exercise my own intelligence. The Canadian Pacific Railway and the Bell Telephone Company have the legal power to make the agreement they have entered into, and there is nothing to prevent the Bell Telephone Company making just such an agreement with every other railway in the country. But if that is legally right, it is morally wrong; and if anything else of the kind be attempted, I shall vote against it; and if any proposition be made to declare that this agreement, no matter what the law may be, is in restraint of trade and injurious to the general public, I shall certainly support it.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. If the contention put forth by some hon. members be correct, then there is no use of parliament meeting at all. If these contracts entered into by different corporations are sacred and cannot be touched, no matter how much they may conflict with the interests of the people, then there is no use in parliament sitting and we had better disband at once. But I contend that parliament is not helpless in this matter. When the people are suffering from an injustice, parliament has a perfect right to apply the remedy. Here is a grievance brought before us by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean). It is a grievance of which we all have knowledge. Yet we are told that the courts are the only one to decide, and that parliament is helpless. If that be the case, what is the use of bringing the representatives of the people together every year?

Mr. GOURLEY. I want to put myself right. I sympathize thoroughly with my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) in his zeal, and likewise with the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Robinson) and the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Heyd). If there is a wrong, we must endeavour to correct it, and correct it in the proper way. It would be very strange indeed if in the attempt to remedy one wrong we should commit another and a greater one. The hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) need not think that this discussion has not been useful. It has been of value, because it has brought before the members the facts

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. I did not say the discussion was of no use.

Mr. GOURLEY. My hon. friend seemed to think that because we all did not agree on a solution of the difficulty therefore our discussion was of no value. But I think that although we do not all agree on the remedy proposed by the hon. member for East York, it is well that the facts should be brought before us, because in my opinion there is sufficient ability in the House to arrive at a conclusion within the four corners of the law which will do justice to everybody. The Minister of Justice, I think, appealed to the sound sense of every man when he said that parliament should not be asked to violate contracts. I agree with the hon. minister in this : Parliament, Sir, should be the preserver of contracts. We must set an example to the whole of Canada by preserving contracts and doing the right. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) said that he was willing to compensate the Canadian Pacific Railway. But, the trouble is, that the Canadian Pacific Railway have assigned their rights to the Bell Telephone Company, as I understand the matter, and so, compensation must be made to the Bell Company. I will meet the difficulties as I come to them but I am free to say this that it would be an awful thing if we had no control over these corporations. We have control over them, and we will master them, every one of them ; but we must do it according to the principles of right and justice.

Mr. COCHRANE. How ?

Mr. GOURLEY. The thing is as clear as daylight. But we must go at it intelligently. To ask parliament to strike down contracts is revolutionary. We ought not to be permitted to sit for twenty-four hours, if we do that. Recollect, the Bell Telephone Company have acquired property from the Canadian Pacific Railway, and for that property they have given value. Are we to steal that property ? Why, I would as soon break into a bank to-night, as agree to a proposition of that kind. If I were to agree to such a proposition, I would be a public thief—neither more or less. But there is a way to do it, and that way has been pointed out. I admire the zeal of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean).

Mr. MACLEAN. But you say I am a pirate.

Mr. GOURLEY. No, I will restrain my hon. friend from being a pirate. He is too good a man to be a pirate.

Mr. COCHRANE. Tell us how to control the corporations.

Mr. GOURLEY. I will. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) has pointed out the way. It is perfectly simple. The court has decided that this is a legal contract. My hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Heyd) says it is not. Well, let them appeal the decision. If the court decides that this is a contract in restraint of trade, then, it will be void and the whole thing will be settled at once. But, if the courts say that this is a valid and legal contract, would you propose to steal the property of the Bell Telephone Company ? For, that is what you would be doing, just as much as if I were to ask parliament to take away my hon. friend's (Mr. Maclean's) property in 'The World' newspaper and give it to me, and parliament were to do so.

Mr. SPROULE. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gourley) one question ? If a man were to steal a horse and sell it to another, would the sanctity of contract allow the purchaser to hold the property ?

Mr. GOURLEY. That will not do ; give me a parallel case.

Mr. SPROULE. It is a parallel case to this. The Canadian Pacific Railway have stolen the rights of others and sold them to the Bell Telephone Company.

Mr. GOURLEY. If that is so, the Supreme Court of Canada will decide, at once, that this contract is against public policy, and, therefore, void. If the hon. gentleman is right in his facts the court is the place for him.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. GOURLEY. Before dinner I was endeavouring to show why we ought not to adopt the remedy that is proposed here, and as I was closing some of my friends on this side asked me. Well, what is the remedy ? I think it is very simple. Here is a judgment, declaring that the Bell Telephone Company have a vested interest in this contract. Then how do you deal with vested interests ? The case is not different from that of a man owning land by title deed ; he is not in a better position than if he owned property under contract. Supposing this judgment stands, you must face the position that this company holds property under a contract. If you want the property and must pay compensation, and the compensation is too heavy for the private corporations, of the towns of Port Arthur and Fort William to bear, then you come to parliament and say : Here is a case arising under a contract under which the damages have become so heavy that it is improper to ask a private corporation to bear them. Declare that these contracts are void, but declare them void in the same manner as you would if you wanted land of any other property for the public use ; say that while you rescind that contract it must be done upon compensation, the same as if you were taking any other man's property. That is one way. If you do not appeal from this judgment you must take that position. But I think the member for Halifax hit the mark pretty well when he said : Why did not these gentlemen have the damages assessed ? It is true that the telephone company put in an extravagant bill before the commission for damages. But you know how these things are trumped up. If these damages had to be assessed, the commission might have introduced a measure of damages that would in the end make the amount very small, they might have given the telephone company very small damages for an abridgment of their rights under that contract. Therefore I think what the company should have done, what the town should have done, would have been to go before the Railway Commission and have the damages assessed. Then the company would have been in a very good position, and small damages would have been paid them. But if the damages were large and onerous, or if it were likely that this same principle or measure of damage would extend to all the towns in the community, then you would have an excellent ground upon which to come to parliament and say: Owing to the legislation of this parliament, owing to the fact that you have created companies in this country and given them rights which interfere with the public weal, therefore this parliament must deal with them, and this parliament must rescind those contracts, but do it by giving them compensation.

That would be one position to take, and my hon. friend would be right in taking it. But I am sorry to differ with him, because he is so anxious for the public welfare, and on this occasion he made a strong appeal to my sympathy and I would be glad to support him in almost any scheme. But I could not support him in a scheme that would lead to a breach of all that was right and proper. Now then if you appealed, I think that would be a proper course to pursue. Some hon. gentlemen have alleged that it would be too onerous to compel these towns to carry on heavy lawsuits. That will be a good ground for asking the Minister of Justice in a case of this kind to assume the work of settlement, and have the appeal borne by the Crown. I think the Minister of Justice would accede to that if he thought it would be too onerous for these towns to carry on these appeals. Let the minister appeal and have the principle settled whether that contract is sound, whether it confers rights or whether, as one hon. member has said, it is against public policy and should be forfeited. If it is settled that the contract is void, then all our difficulties are over. If on the other hand it is settled that the contract confers rights of property, we would have to deal with it again, and these people would have to come to parliament. If the appeal is taken, they should first go before the commission in order to get the damages settled so that both the question of damages and the principle should be settled on the appeal. Then if the damages were held to be of a serious character, and I understand this difficulty extends over the whole country, that would be an excellent ground on which to come to parliament and say: As a result of your legislation private rights are being sacrificed, and no private individual should be called upon to suffer loss, therefore, come to our aid with a Bill of indemnity. But if, as I have said, the case were appealed and the expense borne by the Crown, we would know what the measure of damages were and whether the contract was a good one. If the contract was void, there would be an end of the matter. If the damages were trifling, the town could pay them. If the court sustained a measure of damages that was likely to lead to serious consequences that would be a ground upon which gentlemen could come to parliament and say: Owing to the legislation of this parliament, private corporations have thrown upon towns in this country, a burden too onerous for them to bear. In that case I would gladly vote with my hon friend to take such a course as the wisdom of parliament would seem just to the town as well as to the corporations.

Mr. SPROULE. We hear a good deal in this House about vested rights and very little about vested wrongs. It does not matter what wrong is perpetrated on the public by a corporation. As soon as they acquire a foothold then vested rights begin. Now if a man goes and squats on your property, what will you do? You will eject him at the earliest opportunity. If a corporation does the same thing, and acquires or becomes improperly vested in what belongs to you, have you not a right to resort to the same remedy? Is there any justifiable reason why you should pay money for a right that has been improperly acquired? You might as well tell me that if a man steals your horse and goes and sells it to another man, you have no right to go and demand it back. It would be as reasonable to say that you must pay for that horse as to say that the Bell Telephone Company must be paid for the rights which they improperly secured and which, according to the policy and intention of parliament, it was never intended they should have. The clear policy and intention of parliament has always been, so far as I have understood, that a corporation such as a railway corporation, must give equal rights and equal facilities to all doing business with that corporation. We give it a franchise, we give it great power, we give it a subsidy and many other valuable considerations for the purpose of enabling it to serve the public. But it must serve them all alike, and each one is entitled to the same consideration in doing their business with that corporation. These railway companies become common carriers, and every member of the community who does any business with them has a right to equal treatment. All who travel over their railway or who send freight over it, have a right to be dealt with in the same manner. We have over and over again provided by law, and by amendments to laws, that there shall be no discrimination in favour of one as against another, in favour of one locality as against another locality. That principle is so well understood in parliament that it is almost waste of time to talk about it. It has been adopted over and over again by both parties. To-day, we are dealing with a railway company that is not giving every individual in the community the same chances to do their business over that line. That railway corporation we create, and according to our policy, and according to the intention of parliament, that railway corporation is required to deal equitably with all and extend the same rights and the same privileges to all.

They have sold rights belonging to one portion of the community to another portion of the community for consideration. Then you ask those who have been precluded from the enjoyment of these rights to buy out the individual to whom the railway company have improperly sold them. These are the vested rights which they claim and these are the damages which the railway company must be paid. To whom ? Not to the railway company for the privilege of putting the telephone line into their station but to the Bell Telephone Company which have improperly become possessed of rights that belong to every other member of the community. Suppose there were one hundred people living along the line of the Bell Telephone Company. Every one of these individuals enjoys the advantage of being able to communicate with the railway station for the purpose of doing business, inquiring about the trains, inquiring about trade and inquiring about many other things, but there are hundreds who have not the advantage of being on that line. The other line upon which they are located runs right to the railway station, but they are deprived of putting the telephone into the station because this other corporation have been sold the sole right to do it. Those who use the new line are deprived of the privilege that parliament intended they should enjoy, they are deliberately discriminated against and then to add insult to injury they are asked before they shall be allowed to put their telephone into the station to pay damages ? To whom? Not to the railway company who might be expected to grant some consideration but to the other corporation who have taken away the rights that properly belongs to them. Is that fair or reasonable ? Was that what this parliament gave that charter to this and other railway companies for ? Was that what parliament intended when it gave the right to the Bell Telephone Company to plant lines all over the country ? It was not. Parliament reserved to itself the right to control their rates for fear that they might be unreasonable. They have a limit up to which they may go, but they cannot go beyond that. So it is with the railway company. We control both of them, but now we are asked, when they have stolen rights belonging to the community, to turn around and pay for the goods which have been stolen from us. Is parliament prepared to sanction or support that ? I do not think so. As I said before if our efforts were as much directed towards the redress of vested wrongs as they are towards the protection of what are called vested rights, but which are in reality vested wrongs we would be more appropriately doing our duty to the great mass of people. The Bell Telephone Company have become a very great monopoly to-day and a very onerous one. They have been acting of late years as if there were no authority in the land to control them and almost—I was going to say—in an insolent way as if they felt that they were masters of the situation. They are strengthening themselves in every direction, and if they continue in the future for a reasonable length of time at the same rate that they have been progressing in the past in the direction of infringing upon the rights of the people, they will soon be an uncontrollable monopoly which will respect no person's rights or interests in the country. To give an idea of what they are aiming at, I wish to draw the attention of the committee for a short time to an item which appears in to-day's papers. I have the Toronto 'World' before me, and it contains the following :—

Independent Companies warned they must sell out or be driven to the wall.

The threat is thrown out.

Chicago, July 13.—A gigantic $20,000,000 telephone trust is being organized by the Bell Telephone Company to control lines in the states of Illinois, Indiana, Michigan and Ohio.

And I presume elsewhere because they are not going to stop at these states.

Independent telephone companies operating within the district will be bought up or driven to the wall.

They have their opinion as to which alternative to accept.

The Indiana Independent Telephone Company at Laporte, representing the telephone systems in operation in Indiana and Michigan, received a private report to-day apprising the officers of the plans for the formation of the trust and warning them that the blow is directed against that and all other companies.

It is said on good authority that the sum of $20,000,000 has been placed at the disposal of the men interested in forming the trust and that more can be secured by them if necessary.

The Bell Telephone Company, it is alleged, is determined to drive out of existence in one way or another every competing company in the states that interferes with its monopoly.

What they are doing in the United States to-day, they are doing in Canada as well. Their plans are being laid. They are operating along the same lines ; they are throwing out their lines in every direction. They are becoming possessed of one right here and another right there, and the greater the value of the rights which they become possessed of the more difficult it will be to dislodge them in the future. Will parliament now be equal to the occasion when the rights of the citizens are invaded by this gigantic monopoly and stop them when they are on the threshold of their operations? This is the time to do it. If we do not do it now it will be found that delays are dangerous. We are told to take this matter to this court or to that court, to take to the Supreme Court and if the Supreme Court does not decide according to our wish, to to take it to the Privy Council. That is just what they want. Delay from month to month suits their purpose. If it passed over for another year they have secured the advantages to be gained in that time. They are strengthening their hands in the meantime, they are making more difficult the task that we have to perform at some time. My hon. friend from Colchester (Mr. Gourley) said: They should be compensated. We want the damages assessed. What damages? Damages for that which they stole from the people, damages for stolen rights? That is what they want. These rights belong to all of the people. The Canadian Pacific Railway have no right to dispose of the privileges which parliament said all the people should enjoy, not a portion of the people but the whole people, not the parties enjoying the advantages of the Bell Telephone Company's service, but every one who utilizes the services of the railway company. Then, we shall assess the damages in the interest of whom? In the interest of the parties who are in possession of the stolen property to-day? We must pay them for that which they have got from us. It is a strange principle to advocate. It is not a view that will commend itself to the common sense of the people of this country. I say that we have no reason to respect these rights. This measure is not a confiscation, it does not interfere or take away any private vested right because there are no vested rights that they should enjoy or be paid for. It is said that if you take away a man's land in the work of building a railway you have to pay him for it. Yes, but that man got his land honestly when he bought it from the Crown or from some one else. He bought it in a proper and legitimate way, he gave value for it and he has the right that the state concedes to him in any part of the country. But this is a corporation right of an entirely different character. This corporation have become possessed of rights that belong to other members of the community and that parliament has declared to belong to other members of the community. Yet we are asked to buy them back. Why should we buy them back? I say the country cannot understand that. As long as we tamper with it, as long as we allow this corporation to feloniously take possession of our rights, so long will we be held as slaves in the matter. There is a growing feeling against corporations in this country because of their infringements upon the rights of individuals and of the impossibility of getting any redress. It is said that there are the courts in the country, but the individual is too weak to fight them. It is impossible for him to carry this fight from court to court. He cannot employ lawyers that charge large fees and he has to suffer under the wrong inflicted upon him if the state will not come to his assistance.

The state has the right to come to his assistance. It is for that purpose that parliament is convened; that is one of the duties of parliament and if parliament fails to do its duty then the great tribunal of the country must be appealed and the education of the people will go on until such a sentiment is reached in the country that no parliament can withstand it, or if they attempt to go they will be driven out so quickly that they will not know what has happened to them. I hold that when the Act was passed we did an improper thing in inserting that clause which gave that colourable right which they enjoy to-day and which prevented that commission from taking away that right. Now we are told that under that clause of the Act we have not the right to interfere. The country thought that we were to enjoy that right under that Act. Parliament said that we were to enjoy that right yet we find now by the interpretation of lawyers and of the courts that we do not enjoy it. Then I say it is our duty to amend the Act so as to give to the people of the country the enjoyment of that right which parliament intended they should enjoy and this I submit ought to be the policy of both parties in this House at all times.

Mr. MACLEAN. During recess, I went to the library to see if I could find an authority in regard to the jurisdiction of parliament in this matter. I found this most excellent authority which I shall read to the House:

> The principles of parliamentary government are such that we are bound to believe that the people through their representatives will deal with every grievance; and the attempt to get behind the people's representatives, to create some other tribunal, to take the place of parliament, especially in matters of money, and to give that body power independent of the government and parliament, to deal with these matters, is a step in the wrong direction; and we on this side of the House are not prepared to take it.

That is excellent doctrine; that doctrine was declared in this House yesterday and it is the doctrine of the Minister of Finance. Yesterday this House was told that parliament was the instrument to remedy the grievances of the people, that we did not want these grievances sent to Exchequer courts but that they were to be settled in this House. Only yesterday was that doctrine laid down here; it is good doctrine and I adhere to it.

Mr. FIELDING. Did you vote for it yesterday ?

Mr. MACLEAN. I accept it as a general principle ; it was the application to a particular case that I disagreed with but the principle is sound and I stand for it to-night. We have heard a great deal about the sanctity of contracts ; there is also another of public rights and the sanctuary where they are protected ought to be in parliament. We have heard a great deal about this agreement of the company and I am going to read the agreement. We have heard of preserving the sanctity of contract. Is it not a fact that every raid on the public rights has been made by a corporation ? Every corporation has tried to sanctify its monopoly by an agreement and the consequence is that every monopoly in this country first organizes and incorporates itself and then entrenches itself behind an agreement. Having got the agreement, if any one proposes to interfere he is at once charged with interfering with the sanctity of contracts. The consequence is that the Standard Oil Company, for instance, is entrenched behind sacred agreements and yet they have inaugurated a law in the United States against these trusts and are trying to enforce it to-day. We, in this parliament, have adopted in the interests of the public—and the Minister of Finance still preserves it on the statute-book a law against combines. If combines are found to be against the public interest the Minister of Finance is charged with the duty of imposing upon them the penalty which the Act provides. Yet these combines have so-called sacred agreements with themselves. The members of these combines make contracts one with another and these are good contracts but because they are against public interest the parliament and government of this country have charged the Minister of Finance with the duty of imposing a penalty. So it is all over the world, these combines, these conspiracies against the public, are within the jurisdiction of parliament here, are within the jurisdiction of congress in the United States and the only way to cure them is by legislation not by sending them to the courts. The contract is as follows :

This agreement executed in duplicate at the city of Montreal, in the province of Quebec, the first day of May, 1902 : By and between the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, Limited, a body corporate having its principal offices in the said city, hereinafter called the Telephone Company, and

The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, a body corporate having its principal office in the said city, hereinafter called the Railway Company, Witnesseth :

That the said parties have covenanted and agreed as follows :—

1. The Telephone Company will furnish to the Railway Company, at all points in the Dominion, and where it may now or hereafter have exchanges, telephone connections between the offices and stations of the Railway Company and the exchanges of the Telephone Company free of charge. It will also issue to the officials of the Railway Company annual passes of franks good over the long distance lines of the Telephone Company and free telephone exchange connection and maintain during the term of this contract a local exchange in the head office of the railway at Windsor street station, Montreal, affording communication with the different offices, as well as with the said local exchanges of the Telephone Company in the city of Montreal.

2. The Railway Company will furnish annual passes to the officials of the Telephone Company over its own railway and telephone lines, and lines leased or controlled by said Railway Company, and will also furnish free transportation to the employees of the Telephone Company over said railway lines in Canada.

3. The Telephone Company shall have the exclusive right of placing telephone instruments, apparatus and wires in the several stations, offices and premises of the Railway Company throughout the Dominion of Canada, where the Telephone Company has or may during the life of this contract established telephone exchanges, it being understood in connection with new exchanges being established that the Railway Company will be given a fair service, sufficient for its business.

4. And each company, so far as it may properly do so, without prejudice to its own business, grants to the other company facilities for carrying its wires and lines through or over the poles, subways, bridges and other premises, on equitable terms, to be agreed upon. And the Railway Company will not grant similar facilities to any other telephone company.

5. The number of annual passes or franks, free telephone connections, and extent of free transportation shall be determined from time to time by the president of the Railway Company and the president of the Telephone Company, as the expansion of both companies may require, and such passes, franks and telephone connections shall only be issued on written application of an officer of either party, as designated by the president of each company.

6. The terms and conditions of this contract, as applying to the Canadian Pacific Railway, shall also apply to the Canadian Pacific Railway Telegraph Company, and it is further understood and agreed that where telephone connection with local exchanges is required for an office of either of the above, the agent for which carries on any other business, or acts as agent for another company, he shall pay one-half the regular exchange rates, and the company or companies represented herein by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shall pay nothing for their services.

7. This agreement shall remain in force for a period of eight years from the date hereof.

In witness whereof——

And so on. There is the agreement and the substance of it is that the Bell Telephone Company give certain services to the railway company in return for certain services. Now if we declare, as we ought to declare, that that contract is against public interest, no harm will be done. We will be interfering only with two companies which we have created. We will be doing nothing prejudicial to the public; we simply say to these two creatures of parliament: In the exercise of the powers which we gave you, you have done something contrary to the public interest and we declare that what you have done in that connection is illegal and is null and void. No damage is done to the companies; instead of exchanging services they give money to one another. The cheques cancel one another and no injustice is done. That is a reasonable proposition. But instead of that, we have all this lecturing about sacred rights and the sanctity of contracts, and men who stand up for the public rights are charged with being pirates and robbers. When hon. gentlemen talk about the sanctity of contracts, I ask them, what about the sanctity of public rights, which is above the sanctity of contracts any day. There is another way out of the difficulty, and that is by negotiation. These two railway companies and this telephone company are suppliants for legislation of some kind or another at every session of this parliament. The Grand Trunk is a petitioner here to-day; the Canadian Pacific Railway is here every session as a suitor, and so is the Bell Telephone Company. They are all getting something, and the government can do with them what it did in the case of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company came and asked for a franchise and a subsidy, and the government said to them: When we give you these, you must abandon a certain right in regard to your rates which you claim to have to-day; we will give you the franchise and the subsidy on that condition. And the Canadian Pacific Railway Company did it at once. The government is in a position to say to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the Bell Telephone Company: You must abandon that contract; and there is a saving clause in it by which they can effect a settlement and remedy the grievance. As the Minister of Finance said last night: Parliament is the place to remedy the grievances of the people, and not the Exchequer Court or any other court. What is happening in Toronto to-day? There is a company there with a charter which the Attorney General considers is doing something against the public interest, and he is moving to cancel that charter. The company is pleading vested rights, and a judge of the High Court of Ontario gave judgment yesterday that the Crown as represented by the Attorney General had a perfect right to cancel a charter which it had given to a company because that company was doing something against the public interest. And the Crown, as represented by the Minister of Justice, could send for Sir Thomas Shaughnessy of the Canadian Pacific Railway and Senator McKay of the Bell Telephone Company, and say to them: Gentlemen, you are doing something against the public interest, and if you do not rescind those contracts, I shall have to cancel your charter; and he would be well within his right if he did so. If we only cancelled one of these charters in this country, you would see a much more humble attitude assumed by the companies than they assume to-day. They would realize that the people are more their masters than they thought they were. Now, I am through with the discussion, and what is to be done must be left to the judgment of the committee. I must tell my hon. friends that later on, when we come to the third reading, I shall have to divide the House on the issue.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not think we are advancing our cause by abusing the Bell Telephone Company, accusing them of exercising stolen rights, and all that. We ought to look at this question from a business standpoint. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Bell Telephone Company have both been chartered by this parliament, and I think parliament is able to control them. If they do what is wrong, or exceed their powers, this parliament will be able to take care of itself, and will see that that is done. As for the fear that they are going to spread out and control all the other telephone companies throughout the country, I do not think there is any danger of that. This question has arisen quite recently, and I think there is a good deal in the contention of the hon. member for East York that there is a grievance. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Bell Telephone Company have entered into an arrangement that is mutually satisfactory to themselves. They both concede rights to each other. The arangement has also been of great advantage to the public by enabling them to have the use of telephones in the railway stations all over the land. The Bell Telephone Company has done a great deal of good for the people of this country. If it were wiped out of existence to-morrow, we would find ourselves in a very bad mess indeed. But within the last year or two new conditions have arisen. New companies have started up, controlled largely by municipalities and private citizens, who have invested their money in them, and they desire access to the railway stations. Under these circumstances, it is for us to consider what is best to be done. In my opinion, so far as the agreement between the Bell Telephone Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is concerned, it is nothing to us, so long as it does not interfere with the rights and privileges of the people. But the interests of the great public must be paramount over all others; and this parliament is here, above everything else, to protect and guard and defend the rights of the people as a whole. These new companies are branching out in all directions; they are becoming quite numerous. They are serving people who have not been served by the other telephone companies, and it is in the interest of the public that they should have access to the stations not only of the Grand Trunk but of the Canadian Pacific Railway. This agreement stands in the way. Under the arrangement made between the two companies, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company cannot give these new companies access to its stations. Now, let us look at the facts. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have made this agreement, which I think runs for six or seven years yet. Suppose it is renewed at the end of that time for eight or ten years longer. The vested rights of these companies continue; and so it goes on, and the people are prevented from exercising their privileges and from getting the benefits they ought to have. I think therefore that the time has come when we should declare that this agreement is not in the public interest. The hon member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) suggested as a remedy that we should appeal this case to the Supreme Court for a decision. That would perhaps be the best course to pursue just now; but I do not see that that is going to end the difficulty. Suppose the Supreme Court upheld the decision of the Railway Commission. If so, we would be just where we are to-day, and legislation would have to take effect after that. It seems to me that we might as well face the difficulty now as to wait for one or two or three years longer. There is no question but that the public will demand that this parliament grant these concessions which the public interest requires; and it seems to me that instead of referring this matter to the Supreme Court the government should take immediate action and amend the law so as to enable all telephone companies to have the right of access to railway stations.

Mr. BLANCHET. If I understood well what has been said this afternoon on both sides, the whole discussion may be summed up in a few words. We all admit that if this contract is legal, the Act must be amended. As my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) says, the contract is legal or it is not. But my hon. friend asks this House to decide that it is legal and take immediate action. Why, he asks, should we wait the decision of the Supreme Court? Why not amend the Act at once? That is a very practical way of putting the question. It is the way employed by the Yankees when they hang a man without giving him the benefit of a trial. But the Minister of Justice says that the proper means to take to decide whether the contract is legal or not is to refer the question to the Supreme Court. And he asks us to wait the decision of the Supreme Court before acting. That seems to be perfectly reasonable. Should the Supreme Court decide that the contract is not legal, then there will be no need to amend the law, because the law is sufficient as it is. Should that court decide that the contract is legal, then we can proceed to amend the Act. And, as I have always stood by the law, as I have always had that respect for the law which every good citizen, and particularly every member of the legal profession, should have, I propose to stand by it now, and wait for the decision of the Supreme Court. Therefore, I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot at all agree with the position taken by so many legal men of this House, that the case as between parliament and these companies is the same as it would be if between a private individual and these companies. Parliament, I submit, occupies an entirely different position. If there is a dispute between a private individual and these companies, if the towns of Port Arthur and Fort William have a grievance against the Bell Telephone and the Canadian Pacific Railway companies, they must go to the courts. They did go to the Railway Commission and got judgment, from which judgment I presume they are entitled to appeal. But that has nothing whatever to do with our action, nor should it govern our action in any degree. We are responsible for the law under which that decision was rendered and under which the decision in appeal will be rendered. And if that law, for which we are responsible, does not give justice, the time and place to deal with the question is here and now. Plenty of evidence has been placed before this parliament to-day to show that injustice has been and is being done and may be continued interminably. As to the charge that all those who desire to see justice done the public are law-breakers, or wish in any way to contravene the law, or infringe in any degree on the rights of any one, that charge is utterly unfounded. I am not a lawyer, but I will venture to state a first principle of law which will not be denied by any legal gentleman in this House, and which entirely covers this case. It is this, that a contract between any two parties entered into against the interests of a third party cannot be binding on that third party. I would like any of the legal gentlemen to say whether that is a correct statement of a correct principle or not. In this case these two parties have entered into a contract which is subversive of the interests of a third party, namely, the public. I say that no such contract is good in law; and when we demand that it shall not be recognized, we are not infringing in any degree on the legal or moral rights of any one. There is no necessity for a reference to any court for a decision on such a point. There are cases of right and wrong which are so plain that the duty of parliament is clear, no matter whether by one quibble of law or another it be possible to carry the case to the courts. This parliament is here to make the law, to establish courts and, above all, to see that justice is done.

Mr. SPROULE. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice says the law is on the statute and the proper thing to do, is not to question it, but let the courts determine whether it is legal or not. But is it not very common for us to say that the law is and always has been so and so, and that that is what the law was intended to be? When we have made a law and we find that, in the carrying out of that law, an interpretation is put upon it which is not according to the intention of parliament, parliament very often steps in and explains that Act, and says that the law was intended to be so and so, and is so and so. That is what we could do without doing any injustice to the people, or parliament, or vested rights.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) has drawn attention to something that may be called a grievance with respect to the telephone question. But the remedy for that grievance will not be found in the usurpation by parliament of functions which do not belong to it. There are some gentlemen in this House who, when they discuss a question of this sort, call it legal quibbling to speak about the sanctity of contracts. Well, my hon. friends may call it what they like, so far as I am concerned—and I believe so far as the great majority of thinking people are concerned—one of the fundamental principles of parliamentary government is that we must hold sacred by our covenants and see that other people do likewise. I think that a scheme may be devised, before this Bill is disposed of, by which we may arrange that, with respect to the future, no contract such as the one now at issue between the municipalities of Port Arthur and Fort William and the Canadian Pacific Railway and Bell Telephone companies can be made which will be binding on the outside public. But with respect to the contract already in existence, I will be no party to the violation of that contract or to the protection of any party who desires to break his engagements.

Mr. MACLEAN. But the Minister of Finance said last night that parliament was the proper place.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If we can avoid further discussion, I will withdraw what I have said.

Amendment (Mr. Maclean) negatived on division.

Mr. MACLEAN moved the following amendment:

4. Section 264 of the said Act is amended by adding thereto the following subsections:—'The tolls charged in any standard passenger tariff shall not exceed the following, namely:—for all companies the gross earnings of whose passenger trains, as reported to the Minister of Railways, under the provisions of section 304 of this Act, equalled or exceeded the sum of $3,000 for each mile of road operated by the said company, two (2) cents per mile; and for all companies, the earnings of whose passenger trains, reported as aforesaid, were over $2,000 and less than $3,000 per mile of the road operated by the said company, two and one-half (2½) cents per mile; and for all companies whose earnings, reported as aforesaid, were less than $2,000 per mile of road operated by the said company, three (3) cents per mile.'

He said: I do not wish to delay the committee on this matter. It also will come up on the third reading, and there will be opportunities for further discussion then. At the beginning of the few words I wish to say on the subject now, I would direct attention to section 264 of the Railway Act of last session, which reads as follows:

A standard passenger tariff shall be filed, approved and published in the same manner as required by this Act in the case of a freight standard tariff.

We have, here, provided for a standard passenger tariff; my amendment is to define that tariff. I have considered the subject for a number of years, I have read a great deal about it, I have listened to a great many objections to the proposals I have submitted, and it seems to me that the remedy most opposite to the situation is the one I submit here—a graded passenger rate on the same basis as that of the state of Michigan. Under that system, a road that earns over $3,000 per mile may charge not more than two cents per mile; a road that earns more than $2,000 per mile may charge not more than two and a half cents per mile; and a road that earns less than $2,000 per mile may charge not more than three cents per mile. That system has proven highly successful in Michigan. It is true that representatives of the railways doing business in Michigan came before the Committee on Railways and Canals and opposed my amendment there. They evaded the issue. They said that the system applied to only a small mileage in Michigan. As a matter of fact 90 per cent of the passenger traffic in the state of Michigan is done on the basis of two cents per mile. And 90 per cent of the passenger traffic of the state of New York is done on the same basis. Ohio, Illinois and, I believe, other states have recognized the two-cent rate by compelling the railways to sell a 1,000-mile ticket for $20. The travel between New York and Boston is all on the basis of two cents per mile. Wherever the reduction of passenger rates has taken place it has been as the result of legislation. The legislature of the state of New York imposed a two-cent rate on the New York Central, and the result is that they have two-cent travel throughout the state. The same result has followed in Michigan. If Canada adopted the Michigan law, the New York Central, which owns the Michigan Central—the old Canadian Southern—would have to give the people the two-cent rate. Under this amendment, the Grand Trunk Railway would have to give a rate of two and a half cents per mile; and, in a very few years, judging by the increase of its traffic, it would have to come down to a two-cent rate. Those portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway that are outside of the original agreement between the syndicate and the government would have to give the public the same rate by reason of the law of competition. The supreme reason I give for this amendment is this: That all these roads, the Grand Trunk, the Canadian Pacific and the Michigan Central, are to-day carrying all the traffic that originates in the United States and passes over their lines, whether east or west, at a rate of two cents per mile or less, and yet they charge Canadians riding in the same cars three cents per mile and over. I say this is most iniquitous conduct on the part of these great railroads that have been so heavily subsidized by the Canadian people. I have already laid all these considerations before parliament. The House is seized of the facts. So also are the public, who, I believe will insist on this reform being carried out.

Furthermore, it has been proven—and the facts can easily be given—that wherever there has been a reduction of railway rates the earnings of the railways have been increased. No company in the United States that has passed under the regulations of these laws governing rates can show that it has suffered in the least; on the contrary the facts all go to prove what the experts, especially those connected with the Interstate Commerce Commission, declare, that the results are favourable to the railway. The same principle has been established in connection with the post office; it has been established in connection with the telegraph system of various countries, it has been established above all, in connection with the railway systems of Europe—that if you reduce the cost, the public use the service so extensively that the earnings are actually increased. It is clear, therefore, that parliament would be doing no injustice by compelling these roads to reduce their passenger rates. As I have said, all I ask is to define the standard passenger tariff for which provision has already been made in the statute. If the government think well to make a four-cent rate for the roads that earn very little money, I shall have no objection. This law will have the effect of reducing the rates upon those great roads that have plenty of traffic. If there is any company doing a good business in this country, the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific are doing a good business in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Their trains are crowded, and they are constantly increasing the number of their trains. They did an immense business when they reduced the rates some time ago by reason of competition, and the same result will follow if the rates are reduced by statute. We have already carried out this system in connection with the Intercolonial. To-day the people's railway gives the people a two-cent rate. And, in the province of Manitoba the people have a three-cent rate. Yet, in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec the Grand Trunk is actually charging from three and a quarter cents to three and a half cents per mile for a considerable proportion of the travel. The Canadian Pacific Railway is charging four cents per mile between here and the St. Lawrence on one of its branches. Surely the time has come when the standard passenger rate should be fixed. I have produced a great deal of evidence before the House and before the Committee on Railways and Canals in support of this amendment. I have not, so far, met with anything that seems to me to justify a change in the opinion I hold on the subject. It seems clear to me that no injustice would be done to the railways if we compelled them to reduce their passenger rates. I therefore submit this amendment in the hope that parliament will adopt it and that the Minister of Railways will assist me in defining the maximum passenger rate of this country.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) is entitled to a great deal of credit for having brought this question before parliament so persistently, both in this and previous sessions. I think it must be generally agreed that if passengers can be carried profitably at a two-cent rate under similar conditions in the states, it is a fair proposition that they might be carried at the same rate in Canada. There is no doubt that in Canada we are entitled to all the benefits that come from the operation of railroads which exist very largely by reason of public moneys paid them by the people of the country. At the same time I think it would be fair to consider that last year parliament established a Railway Commission empowered to deal with the question of railway passenger rates, and given almost unlimited powers in this matter. I think it would be well to wait and see what the Railway Commission will do in this matter before parliament takes action directly. While I have no doubt that the hon. member for East York has gone very carefully into this subject of railway rates and is probably satisfied in his own mind of the correctness of his contention, a large majority of us have not done so. At any rate, it must be admitted that the members of the Railway Commission are in a position, and it is part of their duty, to inform themselves on this subject, while many in this House have not been able so to inform themselves; and I am prepared to say that if the Railway Commission does not in good time take action on this question it will be necessary then for the House to take action. Certainly circumstances look in that direction. At the same time, the danger of taking drastic action without due consideration is evidenced in some degree by the results on the Intercolonial. We have a two-cent rate on the Intercolonial, and we have a deficit of half a million dollars on the Intercolonial. Therefore I think the rate on the Intercolonial is rather an argument against the proposition of the hon. gentleman than in favour of it.

Another point worthy of consideration is that there are different classes of rates, there is the first-class rate and the second-class rate. I do not know how the reduction of the first-class rate to two cents might affect the second-class rate. At the present time people who can afford it pay the high rate, those who cannot afford to pay the high rate pay a lower rate. I do not think it would be right that those who could afford the higher rate should be permitted to travel at the lower rate, and those who get the benefit of the still lower rate at the present time be compelled to pay a higher rate than they do now. That is, however, a question that could be dealt with by the commission, and it is one that I do not consider myself in a position at the present time to deal with to the extent of endorsing the hon. gentleman's proposition. Another thing that inspires me with doubt in regard to this matter was the remark made by the hon. member that if proportionate reductions were made on roads of heavy travel he would not object to a corresponding increase of the rates on roads where the travel was proportionately light. Representing a part of the country where settlement is sparse and where the travel on newly constructed roads is likely to be light for a few years, I am afraid I could hardly follow him in that proposition.

Mr. MACLEAN. Don't you pay four cents there now ?

Mr. OLIVER. We used to pay five cents, but it is reduced to four, and in Manitoba it is three cents. At the same time, if the rate is fixed according to traffic, it is perfectly clear that a new road through a lightly settled country would possibly have to charge a much higher price.

Mr. MACLEAN. Not if it is owned by the same corporation.

Mr. OLIVER. I am afraid that the basis is perhaps hardly fair when you work it out to a conclusion and apply it under all conditions all over the country. Therefore, I cannot for the present take the responsibility of voting for the amendment of the hon. member, although I think he is entitled to a great deal of credit in his effort ; and if a remedy is not found by the Railway Commission in due time it will be necessary for parliament to take even the direct action he has suggested, even perhaps without as full information as is desirable. But we must all agree, in line with the discussion we have had, that a public grievance requires a public remedy.

Mr. SPROULE. When the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) introduced this subject some time ago and proposed to make a general two-cent rate all over the country, I refused to support him on the ground that in my judgment the railways in sparsely settled parts of the country where the earnings are small, could scarcely be expected to give a two-cent rate. At that time the suggestion was made that provided the railroads east of Port Arthur gave a two-cent rate, west of that, which was a new country, where the traffic was comparatively light, they might charge whatever rates the law allowed them to charge. But I was always of the opinion that it would be an injustice to the railways to make them carry passengers for two cents a mile when the earnings were small and the passenger traffic was light. The experience of railways in the United States, and the experience of the American people in compelling railways, especially in Michigan and the west, a country similar to Canada, to carry passengers at two cents a mile when their earnings were $3,000 a mile or over, has been fairly successful, and it has wrought no great injustice to the railways and has been a concession to the people. When this subject was discussed in the Railway Committee some time ago, we had representatives of the railway companies before us, and I did not understand from any of them that they seriously complained because the roads were compelled to carry passengers at two cents a mile where they were earning $3,000 a mile. But their contention was that the member for East York had misrepresented the facts that really existed in the eastern states, or in the state of Michigan, because he had said that all the railways there carried passengers for two cents a mile. They contended that that was not the case, and they gave us a list of those railways that did carry passengers at two cents a mile and those that did not. The railways that did carry passengers at that rate were compelled to do so by virtue of the Michigan law, but they did not contend that the law was doing a great injustice to the railways. Now, if the experience in Michigan, a country similar to eastern Canada, is that passengers can be carried at two cents a mile when the earnings reach $3,000 a mile, it can be no great injustice or hardship to ask railway companies to do the same here, because, we have given a great deal more money to assist in building railways than the Michigan people have done. We tax them lighter in ordinary municipal taxation, and we give them many concessions that the American people do not. Now, the hon. member for East York proposes a graded tariff, and I think no great injustice would be done to the railways provided parliament adopted that proposition.

The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) says that the Intercolonial Railway gives a two cent rate per mile, and as a consequence it has a deficit of nearly half a million dollars last year. If I could reach the conclusion that the deficit was due to carrying passengers at two cents a mile it would be to me an argument, but there are many elements in the situation that effect it, and which help to make a deficit of half a million other than the carrying of passengers at two cents a mile. In my judgment it is other elements in the situation that have brought about this deficit in the earnings of the road and not the carrying passengers at two cents a mile. I do not think that seriously affects it in any sense. But then we are asked to wait for the action of the Railway Commission. The Railway Commission have extensive powers. I assume that the Railway Commission are not likely to ask the railway companies to carry passengers at a very much lower rate than that which they are charging to-day. It may be said that it is generally conceded that three cents a mile is a fair charge and that they are not likely to ask them to carry passengers for very much less than that. I do not think we would be doing very much injustice to the Railway Commission, or that we would be curtailing their powers in any way or interfering with their functions if we laid down the salutary principle which has been found fairly satisfactory in Michigan and asked the railway companies, when their earnings reached a maximum of $3,000 a mile as the case may be, to carry passengers at a graded rate in proportion to their earnings. If we did that I think we would be doing them no injustice and therefore I am inclined to support the amendment of my hon. friend from East York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. As this matter has been very fully discussed both in this House and in the Railway Committee I do not think the time of the committee can be very usefully taken up with a lengthy discussion of the subject. But I would like to direct attention to section 264 of the Railway Act which says that the Railway Commissioners shall adopt a standard passenger tariff for the whole of Canada. No passenger rates can be collected by any railway company in Canada which comes under the operation of this Act except under the standard passenger tariff which has been fixed by the Railway Commission. Let us give the Railway Commission that was established under the statute passed last session, time to do something under the provisions of that Act before we proceed here to determine what they are to do. It seems to me that having created this Railway Commission for the purpose of regulating this question we should give them an opoprtunity to do it. I think it is not only important to draw attention to that feature of the law as we have it to-day, but it is also important to disabuse the public mind of the impression that exists that a two cent rate is now in force in the state of Michigan and in the state of New York. That is not correct. I will state the law as it is in Michigan and as it is in New York and I will show that the law in the state of Michigan does not apply to more than one-third of the railways in Michigan.

Mr. MACLEAN. And to how much of the traffic ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Allow me. On the Michigan Central a two cent rate applies only to the main line between Detroit and the Indiana state line, a distance of 221 miles, on the Toledo division between Toledo and the Ohio state line, a distance of 46 miles and on the Grand Rapids division between Jackson and Grand Rapids a distance of 95 miles, or altogether a total of 362 miles out of 1,137 miles in the state. My hon. friend knows perfectly well that under the terms of the statute which I read to him when this matter was before the Railway Committee the law is only applicable to those railways which are within the limits of the southern portion of the state of Michigan. It does not apply to the railways in the northern part of the state of Michigan. The railways there operate to a large extent under the same conditions as those which exist in Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. Why does it not apply to Alpena or the Peninsula ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I cannot say why, because it is for the legislature that passed the law to say and not for me. They have found it proper not to apply the law to the northern part of the state.

Mr. SPROULE. The representative of the railway company said before the committee that it was because their earnings did not come up to $3,000 a mile.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not know what was said before the Railway Committee. I am stating what the law is in the state of Michigan. That law applies simply to the railways in the southern part of the state, which I have mentioned. In respect to the state of New York there is no general statute fixing the two cent rate but a two cent maximum rate was fixed on that portion of the road between Albany and Buffalo and that rate was fixed forty years ago for the purpose of impeding the construction of the New York Central which at that time was competing for business with the Erie canal, the Erie Canal being owned by the state. As a mattter of fact the general rate in force in the New York state is 3 cents a mile.

Mr. MACLEAN. Does the hon. gentleman state that?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. MACLEAN. I say he is misinformed.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I endeavour as far as posible not to make reckless statements here. I say now to my hon. friend that the two cent rate was fixed by the statute forty years ago, that statute can be found in the consolidation statutes of the state of New York, and I repeat that that rate is only applicable to the line between Albany and Buffalo.

Mr. MACLEAN. Hear, hear.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is only applicable to the line between Albany and Buffalo. There is no general rate of two cents a mile in the state of New York.

Mr. MACLEAN. Not under the law but in the practice of the companies.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am talking of something we are sure of, something we can control. We cannot control statements as to what the practice is in reference to these roads. I do not wish to say that my hon. friend would lead us astray, but we have to take the statements of those who are interested in the management of the traffic on these roads and as these statements are not at all times accurate my hon. friend may be under a wrong impression. In respect to the state of New York, there is no law fixing a two cent rate except that which I have mentioned and it is only applicable to the portion of the line between Albany and Buffalo. I heard it suggested this afternoon by some one that we were obstructing our own legislation on this side of the House and to avoid following the bad example that has been given I will not say anything further.

Mr. MACLEAN. I am only going to say two or three words in answer to the hon. Minister of Justice. I repeated to-day and I repeat again now that under the legislation that exists in the state of Michigan ninety per cent of the passenger traffic is carried for two cents and less than two cents, a mile and that the result of the legislation in New York state is that more than ninety per cent of the traffic in New York state not only on the New York Central but on the Erie, the Lehigh Valley and a portion of the Pennsylvania system is carried at two cents a mile. My contention is that the Grand Trunk Railway Company, when they give to the people of Michigan a rate of two cents a mile, ought to do the same thing in Canada because we have here a country of a similar character. The New York Central Railway Company are carrying people in Michigan for two cents a mile and I contend that they ought to carry them in Ontario for two cents a mile. In the province of Manitoba they have a three cent rate over the whole of that province. Why? Because the Canadian Northern have to give that rate by reason of a little agreement that they have with the government of Manitoba. Then, we are asked to wait until we see what this commission do. What are the facts? Until I put a question on the order paper the other day asking what railways had complied with this law which ordered them to file their standard passenger tariffs, not one road had done it, and to-day not one road has done it and they have had to go to the commission, by reason of the agitation that I have carried on, and to ask an extension of time until November to enable them to file their passenger tariffs. That is what we will get if we leave it to the Railway Commission. There will be no standard passenger tariffs filed, the commission will say that they are too busily engaged with other things and nothing at all will be done. I accept what the hon. Minister of Justice has said and I close the discussion as far as I am concerned, but on Tuesday next I propose to divide the House on this very issue of a regulated and reduced passenger rate.

Mr. HENDERSON. It has been asserted, as an argument in favour of a two-cent rate, that with a rate of two cents a mile for passenger traffic the railways would earn a great deal more money than with a three-cent rate. It is a surprise to me that men like Sir Rivers-Wilson, C. M. Hays, Sir Thomas Shaughnessy and other great railway men never discovered that fact. I think if they really believed that this was the case, they would no doubt at once offer the people of this country a lower rate for passenger traffic. My position is this. I have voted for a two-cent rate in this House perhaps almost before the hon. member for East York came into parliament, at any rate, before he became as prominent in railway legislation as he is now, so that this is not a new question to me. My desire is to see the people of this country get the cheapest possible railway travel, and I desire to proceed along that line which will secure a reduction in railway rates at the earliest possible date. Whichever plan is likely to succeed the better and to bring about a modification in the direction of cheaper rates at the earlier date I am prepared to adopt. If the hon. member for East York can show me that the plan proposed by his amendment is likely to give us better rates in the near future than we can possibly get through the Railway Commission, to whom this matter is to be submitted, then I would fall in line with the suggestion made by him; but if I realized that through the Railway Commission a reduction in rates could be secured at an earlier date than under the system proposed by this amendment, then I would be willing to wait and see what the Railway Commission would do.

I find that the Canadian Pacific Railway, in 1896, earned only $766 per mile by passenger traffic on their entire system. In 1903 their earnings from this source amounted to $1,460, an increase in round numbers of $700 in seven years, or at the rate of $100 per year. At the same rate of increase it would still require fifteen years for the Canadian Pacific Railway to reach the $3,000 per mile mark. That is a long time to wait for a good many of us. If the Canadian Pacific Railway earnings do not increase more rapidly during the next period of seven years, or the two next succeeding periods of seven years, than they have been increasing in the past, then we cannot at all expect that we will arrive at the goal of $3,000 per mile inside of fifteen years. Have we any reason to anticipate that the Canadian Pacific Railway earnings for passenger travel will increase more rapidly in the next fifteen years, or in the next seven years, than they have done in the past seven years? We have had seven years of what the Finance Minister calls unprecedented prosperity in this country. We have had a prosperous seven years. Is it likely that the same condition will continue during the next seven years? Periods of prosperity and adversity usually come in cycles. Some years ago the Finance Minister told us that we were on the crest of the wave and that we must prepare for adversity. All the arguments we have heard in speeches from various sources would lead us to assume that we must not expect a continuance of the same prosperity in this country during the next fifteen years as we have had during the past seven years. We have often been reminded that in the United States, whilst a wave of prosperity has been felt over the whole world, a period of adversity has even now set in there, so that the United States railways would not reasonably expect, under conditions of that kind, to earn as much money, because they share in the prosperity or adversity of the country; they make more money during prosperous times than during times that are not prosperous. The same thing would apply to Canadian railways. During prosperous times people would travel more and the earnings of our railways would be greater than in times of hardship. Therefore, I say we have no reason whatever to hope that the earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway will be greater per annum during the next seven years than they have been in the past seven years, and at the rate of increase that they have had during the last seven years, it would take fifteen years to reach the goal of $3,000 per mile.

So much then for the Canadian Pacific Railway; let us take the other great railway system in Canada, the Grand Trunk Railway. In 1896 their earnings were $1,600 per mile. In 1903, after a period of seven years of prosperity in Canada, when, no doubt, the Grand Trunk Railway earned every additional dollar that the prosperous times would bring to them, their earnings were $2,200 per mile, an increase of $600, not as large an increase as that of the Canadian Pacific Railway, an increase of only about $85 per year. Now, the railway would have to continue to increase its passenger earnings until it reached the goal of $3,000 per mile before the general public would have the convenience of a two-cent rate, and at the same rate of increase it would take about nine years to reach the $3,000 per mile so as to give the public the two-cent rate. Even nine years is a considerable time to wait, but we have to consider the fact that we have had seven years of prosperous times, with the possibility that the next seven years, or the next nine years will not be so productive of results as the past seven years have been. Therefore, instead of being nine years it might possibly be ten or twelve years. We have no guarantee that it will be brought about in nine years. Now, let us look at the two positions. Shall we legislate along the lines indicated by the hon. member for East York, or along some other line that would compel the railways to give transportation at a reduced rate, and fix that rate if we thought fit to do so? Having committed the whole of this matter within the past twelve months to a Railway Commission, who would have power to deal with the matter, to look into all the circumstances and decide as to whether the railways were entitled to give cheaper transportation or not, should we leave it to that commission? Two plans are before us, and it is for us now to decide which of these two plans is the more likely to bring about the result we desire at the earlier day. I have no hesitation in saying to-night that I think we have reason to expect that through the Railway Commission we will get relief at an earlier date than we would by adopting a measure that would postpone the reduction to a period so very remote. That is my impression, and I would be very sorry to place on the statute-books of this country a law which would establish a rate that could not come into operation for ten or fifteen years, when I have hopes that through the Railway Commission better results would be obtained in a much shorter period of time. Nothing is to be lost by allowing the Railway Commission to deal with the matter during the next year or two, and see how they can work out this whole matter. The proposition of the hon. member for East York—and he has put his case forcibly and intelligently before the public—cannot come into operation for from ten to fifteen years.

Mr. MACLEAN. It would come into operation to-morrow in connection with the Michigan Central and the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. HENDERSON. Not with regard to the two-cent rate.

Mr. MACLEAN. The two and a half cent rate is my proposition.

Mr. HENDERSON. There is no great hardship at present on that account, because any man can travel on the Grand Trunk or the Canadian Pacific Railway for two and a half cents a mile by purchasing a return ticket. It may be said that that compels a man to return by the same route. Well, I have no doubt that ninety per cent of the people who go from home on a journey come back again. So that there is not so much to be gained by the hon. gentleman's proposition for a two and a half cent rate as perhaps the general public might think without looking fairly into the matter. If a man has a great deal of travel to do as a commercial traveller, he can do so at two and a quarter cents a mile ; or any man or woman who has considerable travelling to do in this country can travel at two and a half cents a mile on the Canadian Pacific Railway and I think on the Grand Trunk Railway by purchasing a thousand-mile ticket for twenty-five dollars. It would not take very much travelling to use that up, perhaps only from Toronto to Quebec and return. But suppose a man were travelling around the country on some business that necessitated his going one way and returning another, he could travel at two and a half cents a mile by purchasing a thousand-mile ticket for twenty-five dollars, and he is allowed twelve months in which to use it up. In all probability he would use it up in that time, and perhaps a good deal more. Even in the state of Michigan, I understand that for a short distance, even where the rate is fixed at two cents a mile, the actual rate is three cents. However, that is not a matter of very great importance. I trust I have made myself plain to the House. I am prepared to adopt whatever plan is most likely to bring about the desired result at the earliest period. If I did not believe that through the Railway Commission we could realize the goal of two cents a mile or a reduced rate at an earlier date than we could by placing this amendment on the statute-book. I would fall into line readily with some such plan as that suggested by the hon. member for East York. But I realize that we can lose nothing by waiting for a year or two for the result of the Railway Commission's investigation, before we take action of this kind; because, even if we passed a Bill this week fixing a rate of two cents a mile on railways earning $3,000 a mile, it would not come into operation on the great railways of this country for a considerable number of years. I have an impression that under the Railway Act the Railway Commision have power to give a reduced rate in certain parts of the country where railway passenger traffic is very much greater, while not reducing it in other sections of the country where the pasenger traffic is more moderate.

Mr. MACLEAN. Under what clause is that ?

Mr. HENDERSON. Under clause 263. I would like to have the opinion of the Minister of Justice on that clause read in connection with clause 264. It does seem to me that the words are broad enough to give the Railway Commission power to take all the circumstances into consideration, and in a thickly settled portion of the province to give a reduced rate, while allowing the rate to remain as it is, or fixing a higher rate, in other and more sparsely settled portions of the province. Knowing that through the county I have the honour to represent there is about as much passenger travel as through any other county in Ontario, I would be sorry to fix the lower rate at a figure that would not come into operation for ten or fifteen years. I have hopes that the Railway Commission inside of a year or two will give us relief that we could not obtain in the other way except by waiting a very long time. These are the views I hold. The hon. member says he will divide the House on the question. I hope to be here when the House is divided upon it. It is a question which I have no fear to meet, and I am going to vote upon it in accordance with the views which I have expressed and for what seems to me to afford a most reasonable hope of securing a lower rate, and securing it at the earliest possible time.

Mr. HEYD. My views on this question are so well known that it will not be necessary for me to repeat them. But I desire to draw the attention of the House to the unsound business principle that underlies the resolution. This reduction of the railway rate to two cents a mile is supposed to apply to railways earning $3,000 a mile. The only railway in the country that is earning $3,000 a mile is the railway that is the least able to reduce its passenger rate. On an invested capital of $35,000,000 in the Canadian Southern Railway, the actual net earnings last year amounted to $111,000 or less than one-third of one per cent.

The presumption that where a railway is earning $3,000 per mile, it is in a position to reduce its rates, is entirely fallacious. It does not follow that because a railway company is earning $3,000 or $2,500 a mile, it is more able to reduce its rates than a company which is earning less than one-half that amount. The largest earner in the country per mile is the Canada Southern, yet the actual amount of its net earnings was $111,000 or less than one-third of one per cent. Take the Grand Trunk Railway, the only one to which the two and a half per cent would apply, and we find that on an invested capital of $335,000,000, the actual net earnings are $8,000,000 or less than three per cent. Although apparently a wealthy railway company, it is not able to reduce its passenger rates, because its net earnings give less than three per cent on the capital invested. It does not follow that because railways are large money earners, they are better able to reduce their passenger rates to two cents per mile than other railways which earn less. Therefore the very foundation of the hon. member's resolution disappears because the railways to which it would apply are those least able to stand a reduction.

Amendment (Mr. Maclean) negatived.

On section 1,

Notwithstanding anything contained in the Railway Act, 1903, the Governor in Council shall have, and shall be deemed to have had since the date upon which the said Act came into force, power, authority and jurisdiction to sanction, confirm, rescind, change or vary, or to take other action upon, any report, order or decision of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council made before the said date under the Railway Act of 1888, or any Act in amendment thereof, in as full and ample a manner as if the Railway Act, 1903, had not been passed, or had not come into force, and as if the said Railway Act of 1888 and the said Acts in amendment thereof had not been repealed; and any order or decision so sanctioned or confirmed shall have the same validity, force and effect as if the said order or decision had been so sanctioned or confirmed prior to the issue thereof.

Mr. SPROULE. Are we not proposing to do what very eminent authorities on that side have said we should not do, and that is attempt to say what the law was intended to be and what it is?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Nothing of the sort.

Mr. BARKER. I want to draw the attention to the fifth line. I understand that the object of the section is to enable certain orders of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to be confirmed. Owing to the change made by the Act last year, there are some orders of the old Privy Council Committee which have not been confirmed and which the Governor General in Council cannot now confirm without a new Act. But I do not see why the minister should take power to the Governor General in Council not only to sanction and confirm these orders, but should continue in him the right for all time hereafter to rescind, change, vary or take other action upon them. I would submit that the proper way would be to take power to sanction and confirm them, when confirmed that they should be under the same provisions as if they had been enacted by the Board of Railway Commissioners.

I would suggest therefore that you strike out the words 'rescind, change or vary or take other action upon' from the fifth line, and after the word 'effect' in the third line from the bottom of the clause insert the words 'and be subject to the provisions of the Railway Act of 1903' and strike out the words 'issue thereof' at the end of the clause and insert instead 'passing of the last mentioned Act.'

I have given the minister the section altered as I propose. I think that would answer his purpose. It would enable the Governor General in Council to make valid all the orders and regulations that have not yet been confirmed, and after they are confirmed they would then come under the ordinary jurisdiction.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) has very correctly stated the object of this legislation. But I would like to draw his attention to this point. The attention of the government is to restore the powers of the Governor General in Council with respect to orders made by the Railway Committee so that these powers may be the same as they were previous to the repeal of the old Act. At present there is but one order of the Railway Committee to deal with, the order with respect to the Yonge street crossing at Toronto. That is the order we have in our mind, and I think it is important we should restore to the Governor General in Council all the powers he had previous to the new Act which repealed the old Railway Act of 1888. These powers are all conferred not only by section 187 of the Railway Act, but also by section 21—I am speaking now of the old Railway Act. If my hon. friend will look at section 21 and read that in connection with section 187, he will see that the Governor in Council had the authority to sanction, confirm, rescind or vary. It might be important that the order should be changed to a slight extent to meet altered circumstances, and in that view we desire to have the old jurisdiction restored. With respect to the other words 'to take other action upon' it might be found desirable to refer the matter again for further consideration to the Railway Commission. That is the reason these words are in the section. With respect to my hon. friend's amendment, its last part is, I think, an improvement on the terms we use.

Mr. BARKER. Have the parties to the particular order to which the hon. gentleman refers approved of this?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes. The only party that has been consulted is the city of Toronto. The amendment was submitted to them and they approved of it. They approved of the concluding words, but I take the responsibility of making the change because I think it is an improvement without altering the sense.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister of Justice contradicted the statement I made that the object of this was to declare what the Act was intended to mean. It seems to me the words mean nothing if my interpretation is not correct. What else can these words mean—' notwithstanding anything contained in the Railway Act, 1903, the Governor in Council shall have and shall be deemed to have had since that date '—and so on, if they do not mean to interpret the law and declare what it is.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Section 187 of the Railway Act of 1888 provided that the Railway Committee, if it appeared to them expedient or necessary for the public safety was empowered, from time to time, with the sanction of the Governor in Council, to authorize or require a company owning a railway constructed upon, along or across any street or other public highway at rail level or otherwise, to carry such street or highway over or under the said railway by means of a bridge or arch, instead of crossing at rail level, or to divert such street highway either temporarily or permanently, or to execute such other work and take such other measures, as, under the circumstances of the case, appeared to the Railway Committee best adapted to remove or diminish the danger arising from the then position of the railway. It will be observed that an order made under that section required the approval of the Governor in Council to have validity and effect. The Railway Act of 1903, abolishes the Railway Committee. And section 310 of the Railway Act of 1903 repeals the Railway Act of 1888. So that, while the committee has passed the order, the order had no validity and effect because the Governor in Council was without power to deal with the matter. This is, therefore, not to interpret, to construe, but it is to restore the power of the Governor in Council with regard to these orders to what it would have been if there had been no repeal.

Mr. HAGGART. It is intended to apply to something that has not been completed. What is it ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The Yonge street crossing in Toronto, in which the city of Toronto, the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway are all interested. The Railway Committee of the Privy Council made an order authorizing the construction of an overhead bridge or some other form of crossing and determined the share which each of the parties interested should contribute toward the construction and maintenance. And, of course, that order of the Railway Committee has no validity because the Governor in Council has no power to deal with it.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 2,

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Briefly, this section is intended to apply to railways that are situated entirely within the limits of one province and that would be under the exclusive jurisdiction of that province were it not for the fact that they have been declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada and to provide that they shall be subject to the Sunday legislation of the province in which they are.

Mr. HAGGART. As I understand it, this is to place them under the control of the legislature in reference to Sunday observance alone.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Exclusively. And, in order to make that absolutely clear, I propose the following amendment :

This section shall not apply to any railway or part of a railway which forms part of a continuous route or system operated between two or more provinces or between any province and a foreign country or to any railway or part of a railway between any of the ports on the great lakes and such continuous route or system, nor shall it apply to any part of a railway which the Governor in Council may by proclamation declare to be exempt from the provisions of this section.

The intention is to exempt from the operation of the law the Canadian Southern which forms part of the through system of the Michigan Central with respect to its traffic and also part of the Canadian Pacific which, I understand, operates between a port on the great lakes—Owen Sound, I believe—and the city of Toronto, and other railways that are part of through continuous systems and which are not, properly speaking, local enterprises at all and which we think, should not have this law applied to them.

Mr. BARKER. I would ask the minister how far this section will apply to many of these short lines now forming part of the Grand Trunk corporation, but which were originally local railways and declared works for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is a difficulty that I mean to meet by this amendment.

Mr. SPROULE. There are several such lines in Ontario.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to call the attention of the minister to subsection 2. It seems to be very unusual and extraordinary legislation. It reads :

The Governor in Council may at any time and from time to time by proclamation confirm, for the purposes of this section any Act of the legislature of any province passed after the passing of this Act for the prohibition or regulation of work, business or labour upon the first day of the week.

That looks like giving a power of attorney to the ministers to get the local legislatures to pass Acts which the ministers will make into law. A local legislature may hereafter pass laws upon this subject and we authorize the Governor in Council to make them valid.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will point out our difficulties. Under the first paragraph we approve of the Sunday legislation now in existence. We know the legislation, and knowing it we declare it unobjectionable and we approve of it. Now, with respect to future legislation that may be passed—because after all these laws affecting Sunday may be changed by the local legislatures at any time—with respect to them, it seems to me it would not be wise for this parliament to say that we approve in advance of any legislation which may be passed by any province. The only other alternative is to give to the Governor in Council authority by proclamation to declare that any Act respecting the observance of Sunday passed by a local legislature should be confirmed and ratified, so far as that Act may be within the limits and powers conferred upon the province. We have either one or the other thing to do, either to confirm in advance legislation of the character of which we must necessarily be in ignorance, or else to give to the Governor in Council authority and power to ratify and confirm that legislation when it has passed.

Mr. HAGGART. Can we delegate that power to the Governor in Council ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No. We could not delegate it, but we give the Governor in Council power to adopt. It is not a delegation, it is an adoption of the legislation of the province and making it our own.

Mr. HAGGART. Surely it is delegating power to the Governor in Council to confirm an Act which we do not know the effect of.

On section 3,

Mr. BARKER. I have given to the Minister of Justice a copy of an amendment that I propose to suggest on this section. I propose to add some words after the words 'An Act to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act' in the fifth line. The section as it is now printed is limited to the purpose of ascertaining the true net earnings of the eastern division of the leased portion of the Transcontinental Railway. But in drawing the section it seems to me the fact was overlooked that so long as the government is guarantor of the bonds upon the western division, it is equally interested in seeing that the Grand Trunk Pacific should receive a proper portion of the through earnings as regards the whole of its system. It is just as much interested in seeing that the Grand Trunk Company gives the Grand Trunk Pacific a fair proportion of the through rate for the whole of the railway as it is interested in seeing that we shall get a fair portion as regards the leased or eastern division. So I propose to add these words :

Mr. BARKER.

And in order to the ascertainment of the true net earnings of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company upon its system of railways at all times while the principal or interest of any bonds made by the said company and guaranteed by the government of Canada shall be unpaid by the said company.

Then I propose further on to add at the end of line 19, the words :

Or as guarantor of any such principal or interest.

Then at the end of that first section I propose to add further words. The clause provides for a fair apportionment of the rates, but before the question of determining can arise, the rates will have been divided, and the Grand Trunk Company, or the other carriers who are interested in through rates, will have received their share, and the clause does not provide for the payment or repayment to the Grand Trunk Pacific of what it has been short of in the division. I propose that the Grand Trunk Railway Company shall make that good, whatever the shortage is, because the Grand Trunk Railway Company is given absolute control over the Grand Trunk Pacific, and if it allows them to receive too little of the through rate, the Grand Trunk itself should make good what the Grand Trunk Pacific may lose. I therefore propose to add that :

The Grand Trunk Railway Company shall pay to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company such sum and sums of money as, by the said board, from time to time may be ascertained to be necessary to make good the true net earnings upon the basis aforesaid of the said eastern division, and of the said Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company's system of railways.

Provided always that either party to any such question may appeal from any such determination to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. When the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Act was up for consideration it was pointed out that under the Railway Act as we have it now there was no power vested in the Railway Commission to determine the question of a joint tariff between the two companies, that the two companies were free to make such a joint tariff as might suit their own convenience and that as a result of the powers so vested in these two companies the Grand Trunk Railway Company might be in a position to practically divert all the traffic down by North Bay, make a through-rate and send the whole of the traffic to Portland as at the present time. In order to prevent that I promised to introduce legislation which would enable the Railway Commission to deal with this question of a joint tariff. That has been done and accomplished by the amendment as I now introduce it. My hon. friend (Mr. Barker) is anxious to go somewhat farther and to give the Railway Commission power to make an investigation in respect to the ascertainment of the true net earnings of the western division so that the government may know in respect to its obligation as guarantor what the true obligations are. I argued at the time the question was up before that these powers were already vested in the Railway Commission under sections 45 and 309 of the Railway Act and that it was not necessary to have that amendment, but, I think, to be strictly logical, having advanced the contention that these powers were already vested in the Railway Commissioners and as there will be no objection to our reaffirmation of it in this legislation in respect to the amendment of my hon. friend to that section I accept it, but in respect to the last part of the amendment imposing an obligation on the company to pay over so much I think that would be a departure from the original contract and I cannot accept it.

Mr. BARKER. The reason I ask it is this: The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company will not be in existence in the operation of the road. It will be a mere name. The Grand Trunk Railway Company itself will make the rates, collect the rates and divide the rates. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company will never be heard of in the practical operation of the road. The Grand Trunk Railway Company can give itself for its own line more than is fair or reasonable and it may have an object in view in making, as to the eastern division, the line not pay its interest in which case it would not have to pay the rent. It might have an object in making the whole line, including the western division, not paying because it might be interested at some time in putting the bonds that this government has guaranteed in default. It may be no injustice to the Grand Trunk Railway proper which has the whole control and which makes the unfair apportionment of the rate to compel it to make it good so that the company which the government has guaranteed may receive its due share of the through-rate. I will add that it means more than what the hon. Minister of Justice has said as to a diversion of the traffic to North Bay. It is equally important that there should be a fair apportionment if the traffic that goes to Quebec and thence to some point on the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, that is quite right. I had not thought of that.

Mr. BARKER. There is no question about that. I may say again that the general Railway Act cannot apply practically because these sections in the general Railway Act are intended to apply where there are two companies with an opposing interest and one complains that it was not getting a fair share, but nobody ever supposes that there will be any complaint between the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Railway Company when they get into operation. It is only one company and the section of the general Railway Act will never be brought into play at all. There will be no complaint. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company will never appear before the Board of Railway Commissioners to complain that its parent, the Grand Trunk Railway Company, is not doing it justice. You will never hear from the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway at all. Therefore, these sections in the general Railway Act cannot apply and it is for that reason that the greatest care has to be taken in the interest of the government that it should have the power to see that the rates may be fairly apportioned and that the Grand Trunk Railway Company shall make good to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company the loss occasioned by an unfair apportionment.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have faithfully lived up to the pledge I gave at the time the National Transcontinental Railway Act was under consideration by the introduction of the Bill in its original form. The suggested amendment of my hon. friend in respect to an investigation into the accounts of the western division I accept because it is practically putting to the test my good faith, when I submit that it is already covered by the Railway Act, but I do not think my hon. friend could ask me to go farther.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). Mr. Barker moves to add the following words in the eighth line after the word 'Act':

And in order to the ascertainment of the true net earnings of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company upon its system of railways at all times while the principal or interest of any bonds made by the said company and guaranteed by the government of Canada shall be unpaid by the said company.

Amendment agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). Then, again at the 19th line after the word 'railway,' Mr. Barker proposes to add the following words:

Or as guarantor of any such principal or interest.

Amendment (Mr. Barker) agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). Mr. Barker moves to add at the end of the clause the following:

The Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada shall pay to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company such sum anl sums of money as, by the said board from time to time may be ascertained to be necessary to make good the true net earnings upon the basis aforesaid of the said eastern division, and of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company's system of railways.

Provided always that either party to any such question may appeal from any such determination to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Lost.

Mr. HAGGART. Before the amendment is considered I would ask the hon. Minister of Justice whether the initiation of any proceedings for the purpose of ascertaining the due apportionment between the Grand Trunk and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Companies may be made without the consent of either of the parties?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, by the amendment.

Mr. BARKER. It can be done at the request of the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This last amendment is lost.

Amendment (Mr. Barker) negatived.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I beg to move to amend that clause 3 by adding the following words :

Provided always that either party to any such question may appeal from any such determination to the Supreme Court of Canada.

On section 4,

Mr. BARKER. When this section was before the committee on a former occasion, it was suggested, I do not know whether by myself or by some other hon. gentleman on this side of the House, that this clause should read :

The majority of the directors and of the executive committee of any company, &c.

I would suggest that that should be added.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I must confess that in so far as I am personally concerned, I have absolutely no sympathy with legislation of this description. I think that if foreigners choose to come into this country and invest their money in our railways they are entitled to have some control over the railway system which is created by their capital. It seemed to me that the sense of the House then was in favour of a change in the law along these lines, and I have as a consequence introduced an amendment which will require that all railway companies, aided by the parliament of Canada, shall have a majority of their directors British subjects. With respect to the executive committee, it would appear to me that we would be pushing the matter very far if we insisted upon the executive committee coming under the same rule. These executive committees are usually composed of five members ; I think I know of one case in which the committee is composed of only three members, with the president as an ex-officio member. If we should require that a majority of this small committee shall be British subjects, it seems to me that the result would be that we would have dummies placed upon this board by the people who control the stock of the company, because, after all, the men who control the stock control the board, and the men who control the board control the executive committee. If the House would allow me to have the Bill go through in its present form, I would put my view before my colleagues, and when the Bill comes up for third reading, if it is found desirable to make an amendment we can do so.

Mr. HAGGART. Is anything known as an executive committee recognized by the law ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In several special Acts provision is made for an executive committee. That is the case in the special Acts of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Canadian Northern and two or three Acts passed last session. In fact, in the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill there is provision for such a committee. However, I do not want to commit the government on the subject, and I would like to have an opportunity to discuss the matter with my colleagues.

Bill, as amended, reported ; amendments read first and second time.

INTERIM SUPPLY BILL.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Mr. Speaker, I would be glad if the House would again facilitate the passage of the urgency Supply Bill, as to which some explanations were given both yesterday and to-day. We have been waiting until the various items were collected and put in proper form. I now move :

That the House resolve itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

Motion, agreed to, and House went into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. FIELDING. The items with which the Committee of Supply has dealt in detail in the estimates for the new fiscal year amounted to $21,585,073.78. Then, in addition to that, we have taken one-fifth of the remaining items, the amount of that one-fifth being $4,288,332.69, making the total of the sums for this coming fiscal year which have been dealt with by the committee $25,873,406.47. Accordingly I move:

Resolved, That towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending the 30th of June, 1905, the sum of $25,873,406.47 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course, I have not verified the clerical work ; I am taking the hon. gentleman's statement and the word of his officers for it.

Mr. FIELDING. I may say that I also have to rely on the officers of the House who have done this work, and I have no reason to doubt that it is correct.

Resolution reported; read the first and second time, and agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 156) for granting to His Majecty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 30th of June, 1905.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FIELDING. I think it is rather late for us to resume the consideration of the estimates in Committee of Supply, and I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the business for to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. Some of the Bills on the order paper will be taken first, and if we reach supply, the estimates of the Minister of Railways will be taken up.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, July 15, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

MONTREAL TERMINAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT. I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Marcil, of Bonaventure:

That Bill (No. 120) respecting the Montreal Terminal Railway Company be referred back to the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines for further consideration.

He said: In respectfully asking the House permission to refer this Bill back to the Railway Committee, I hope I will be allowed to give a few words of explanation. When this Bill was printed the name of Mr. Demers, of Iberville, was by error put on the back of it. I was asked by the promoters of the Bill to take charge of it. When I left Ottawa for camp, it was agreed and understood that this Bill would not come up in the Railway Committee before Thursday, July 14. I returned from camp on Monday, was called down to Montreal by telegram on Tuesday, and much to my surprise when I returned Wednesday afternoon I was told that the Bill had been thrown out on Wednesday morning by the Railway Committee. I was not present in the Railway Committee, but I have heard that strong objection had been taken to the Bill on account of the further and extensive powers asked by the company, and that if the promoters had been satisfied with asking an extension of time to enable them to go on with their work and carry out the powers already granted them by parliament there would have been no objection. I have had an opportunity of seeing several members who voted against the Bill in the committee, and they have told me that they are now prepared to support any motion for further consideration, provided clauses 1, 2 and 3 are dropped, and that the only clause submitted for consideration will be that referring to the extension of time. I have every reason to believe that if the House is good enough to grant this motion, it will meet with general approval.

Mr. T. C. CASGRAIN. I took part in the discussion of this Bill in the Railway Committee, and I may say that I have since met several of the gentlemen who are interested both for and against the Bill. I believe that an understanding has been arrived at by which this Bill is to be referred back to the Railway Committee with the distinct understanding that the only clause to be taken into consideration is the fourth clause, extending the time for carrying on the work.

Mr. TALBOT. That is the understanding.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That is the agreement between the parties?

Mr. TALBOT. Yes.

Motion agreed to, and Bill referred back to the committee.

RELIEF OF ANNIE CHRISTMAN.

Mr. W. S. CALVERT. In the absence of the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. R. F. Sutherland) I beg to move:

That Bill (No. 155) for the relief of Annie Christman be placed on the orders of the day for second reading on Monday next.

Motion agreed to.

THOROLD AND LAKE ERIE RAILWAY.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. I beg to move:

That in accordance with the recommendation contained in the 22nd report of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders, all rules respecting private Bills be suspended in reference to Bill No. 150 to amend the Act passed during the present session to incorporate the Thorold and Lake Erie Railway Company; and that the said Bill be placed on the order paper this day among private Bills for consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to know from the government when we shall have all government legislation and all government estimates before the House ? I brought the matter to the attention of the Prime Minister three of four weeks ago, and I was then informed that a statement would be made. I believe that statement was made some time afterwards, but I am not quite sure it has been actually adhered to, and possibly there are other government measures which were not contemplated at that time, although I do not think any should be brought down which were not then announced. However, no doubt the Prime Minister is able to make a complete and accurate statement to us now. It is certainly time that all government measures were brought before the House ; it is certainly time all railway subsidies, if any, were brought before the House ; and it is certainly time that government estimates, whether for the ensuing year or the present year, were before the House—that is, if we propose to finish the session at any reasonable date. It is for that reason that I now bring the matter to the attention of the Prime Minister.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. When my hon. friend called my attention to this matter some time ago, I stated that it was not the intention of the government to bring any more legislation this session, except perhaps a few matters of purely departmental character. I may say to my hon. friend that it is not contemplated by the government to introduce any more legislation of any kind whatever, except what is to-day on the order paper, with this exception: that as I have already stated, it is the intention of the government to bring some legislation with regard to the acquisition of the Canada Eastern Railway. That has not yet been given notice of, but everything else contemplated by the government has been given notice of. The Bills which are contemplated to be introduced have all been given notice of and stand on the order paper for first reading, which I expect will be given them either on Monday or Tuesday. With regard to railway subsidies, as at present advised and I think I can safely say, it is not the intention of the government to bring any railway subsidies this year ; perhaps some legislation may be introduced with regard to existing subsidies, but no new subsidies at all. With regard to the estimates, my hon friend is quite right in saying that it is time we should have them, and I hope to have them probably on Tuesday next without committing myself absolutely ; certainly Tuesday or the day after.

Mr. SPROULE. The order paper instead of growing smaller appears to be growing larger. There are five Bills to be introduced by the government and five resolutions, which mean five Bills more to be founded upon them. One of the most important Bills of the whole session will be, I have no doubt, the Canada Eastern Railway Bill. In my judgment a Bill of that importance should not be brought into the House at the tail end of the session, because it makes it utterly impossible for members of parliament to institute such inquiry as they ought to, in order to enable them to deal with it intelligently. They have not time to do it because it is rushed through in a few days. This is too important a measure to be allowed to pass this House in this way, and I respectfully submit that if it is the intention of the government to deal with that question it should have been brought down at an earlier date. It is an injustice to the House and to the country as well, that we are called upon to deal with a Bill of that importance, at a time it is utterly impossible to do so with the care that we ought to exercise in the interests of all.

NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERIES.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH. I desire to bring to the notice of the government a matter in connection with Newfoundland. It is rumoured that the British and Newfoundland governments have reached an agreement regarding the Fisheries Regulations, under the provisions of the Anglo-French Colonial Treaty, and that a compromise has been made by Newfoundland. Will the government kindly inform the House if it has any knowledge of such an agreement, and if so, as to what is the nature of it. My disposition is to ascertain to what extent it will affect the fishermen of the maritime provinces visiting Newfoundland in the prosecution of their industry.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I may say to my hon. friend that I am not aware that we have received any communication on this subject, but I shall make further inquiries. If we have received any communication I see no reason why it should not be brought down.

WITHDRAWAL OF MILITIA AT SYDNEY.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE. Might I ask the Prime Minister if he can give to the House any information as to the causes which led to the withdrawal of the militia forces from Sydney and the substitution of the regular military forces of Canada in their place ? Would he also inform the House if there has been any concerted action by the government and the naval authorities in sending a man of war from Halifax to Sydney ? Reports to this effect have appeared in the newspapers during the past week.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think the reports are not exactly accurate, but I would not venture to make any statement now. I shall ask the Minister of Militia and give the information later on.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I inquire whether I correctly understood the Prime Minister in regard to the legislation of this session ? Am I to understand that everything that will be introduced in the way of legislation now appears upon the order paper either in the form of notice of motion or under the item of introduction of Bills, and, further, that so far as railway subsidies or aid to railways is concerned, the only measure proposed is one for the purpose of continuing subsidies which have already been granted in the past ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) that it is not the purpose of the government to grant any new subsidies this year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Or aid ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Or aid. The legislation which is already on the order paper or announced is all that is contemplated except perhaps a Bill of which my hon. friend the Minister of Finance will give the particulars.

Mr. FIELDING. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister informs me that he omitted to mention a possible amendment to the Banking Act. It is a matter of a technical character arising out of the fact that one of our banks is operating in the West Indies. The Bill is a purely formal one and if it is introduced I am sure it will not be a matter of contention.

DELAY AT PRINTING BUREAU.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA. Might I call the attention of the right hon. the Prime Minister to the delay in the work at the Printing Bureau. The lists for my county were brought down in the month of December, and I was promised by the King's Printer that I would receive them at the end of January. We are now nearly at the end of July and I have not heard of them yet. Some time ago I called at the Bureau to inquire and saw Mr. Smith who has charge of the printing. Mr. Smith seems to be an efficient officer but he explained to me that it was impossible during the session to look after the lists with the facilities at their disposal. If we are to have six or eight month sessions and if during that time the printing of the lists will be delayed, a great deal of inconvenience will be caused, and it seems to me that if the government cannot have the work done at the Printing Bureau they should see that the lists are printed outside.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It has, I think, been found that it is preferable that the lists should be printed at the Printing Bureau. I am sorry to say that the capacity of the Bureau is not adequate to the requirements of the business. I think that the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) has the intention to ask parliament for an appropriation for extending the space available at the Bureau, and with the increased space it may be possible to give satisfaction to my hon. friend who is not by any means the only complainant.

Mr. SPROULE. Wait until the new building is up and you will get them all right.

TEMISCOUATA RAILWAY.

Bill (No. 144) to amend the Act of the present session respecting the Temiscouata Railway Company—Mr. Fitzpatrick—was read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought that Bill was to be sent to the Railway Committee.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is a Bill simply to correct an error caused by an omission by the clerk of the Ralway Committee.

Mr. SPROULE. It establishes a precedent for doing the same thing with other Bills that might go further.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is perfectly immaterial to me but it seems to me that it would be an unnecessary waste of time for the House or the committee to discuss the Bill.

On section 1,

Mr. TISDALE. What is the nature of the amendment ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In the original Bill I introduced, provision was made that this company might dispose of the railway to a certain number of companies, and among the companies named in the original Bill was the Canadian Northern Railway. There were a great many others. When the Bill came before the Railway Committee and was reported to the House, the name Canadian Northern Railway was omitted by clerical error, and it is proposed now to insert it.

Mr. SPROULE. I draw attention to the rule of the House, which provides :

> Every private Bill, when read a second time, is referred to the standing committee charged with the consideration of such Bill.

I do not know whether the committee charged with the responsibility of looking into the question has passed on it or not. Does the minister say it did ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not know.

Mr. SPROULE. At any rate, it is not intended to allow the committee to get such information as is necessary to enable it to determine whether it is right or not to recommend the privilege asked for. That is one objection. The other is that we are departing from the rule we invariably follow, and when we break a rule our custom is to cite that action as a precedent. We should be jealous of our rules; and if in this instance the delay would not imperil the passing of the measure, it seems to me we ought to follow the rule.

