terrorists. In practice, I believe very few people will be convicted under the War Measures Act or any replacement measure; most will be convicted under the Criminal Code. But no suggestion has been made that we should strengthen the Code so as to keep abreast of present day situations. If the government can show it is necessary, I believe the Criminal Code, applicable to all Canada, should be strengthened in this regard.

In my opinion the government has taken a static position with respect to the situation in Quebec. Though it assisted and, one might say, directed the provincial government in connection with the request made for assistance, when it came to the administration of the legislation, Quebec was left to act on its own. In the past few days the government has been asked to accept changes in this bill, removing the retroactive clause and improving the measure without in any way limiting its effectiveness. I am surprised that none of the Quebec members across the way supported these efforts. After all, they are not provincial members, though they act like provincial members; if they are provincial members, then they are ones who are not able to make it in Quebec, so they came to Ottawa. If they are representatives on the federal scene they should obviously have been asking the federal government to make provision for a review board to look into abuses. Obviously, there will be abuses. Some of them might consider the story coming out of Montreal of a girl being taken to the local gaol, stripped, felt all over, required to discuss her sex life for three hours and then sent back home after being told that if it was to her advantage they would send a couple of policemen home with her and they would probably be able to take her mind off politics and keep her out of trouble. Some members may believe there is no need for a review board, but it seems to me there is.

Sitting on the government benches are many members from the Province of Quebec who are both capable and intelligent. I am concerned that they have not chosen to give others in this chamber the benefit of their advice so that we might solve some of the difficulties which underlie the present situation in the province. Much of the trouble lies within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand); it involves education, it involves the provision of work for the unemployed, it involves proper training for those about to enter the labour market, it involves making people in Quebec feel they have as good an opportunity on the Canadian scene as has any person in any other part of the country.

If there was any reason originally for passing this legislation, it has now disappeared. The situation is totally different now. Underlying it is the need for social and economic improvement, and again I regret that hon. members from Quebec did not take a position which would have supported the efforts put forward by others in this chamber who do have an understanding and a knowledge of the difficulties facing that province.

Some of these difficulties come to my attention from time to time. Last week 20 students from the Province of Quebec came to my office to make inquiries about obtaining assistance in securing from the Province of Quebec loans of the type the federal government is sponsoring in other provinces so that they could continue their education. They now attend a college in my riding, and Quebec does not provide them with the federally-guaranteed student loans, because they are outside the province. It is my contention that many of these questions fall within federal jurisdiction and I am therefore surprised that more members from Quebec did not take the opportunity to contribute to the discussions which have been before us. Apparently, their only intention is to take part in the vote, though this may well result in a decision to continue a kind of legislation which many of us feel will not solve any of the problems of the province, problems which are severe enough to warrant attention by the federal government. For these reasons I am opposed to this legislation, and will so vote.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, a little over a month ago, the government felt he had to proclaim the War Measures Act in order to cope with the increasingly alarming situation in Quebec. After this legislation was passed in Parliament, we supported its implementation without mental reservations in view of the serious situation in the province of Quebec.

At the same time, the government promised to introduce temporary legislation to protect the public against terrorists. The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) then addressed a personal letter to opposition party leaders, inviting them to submit suggestions concerning the introduction of a bill acceptable to Parliament as a whole.

Now, when reading Bill C-181, we see that the suggestions invited by the government were totally ignored, in other words, that a hypocritical tactic was used to introduce Bill C-181, an act for the preservation of public order.

Mr. Speaker, we do support a bill for the preservation of public order, but why did the government choose to invite our suggestions and then ignore them, thus letting the public believe that in the name of democracy suggestions from the opposition were invited.

Now, what suggestion from the opposition can we now see in Bill C-181?

• (4:30 p.m.)

I am sure that this bill was already drafted in its present form when the government asked us for suggestions.

For instance, we suggested the reinstatement of the death penalty. Some said: What primitive people they must be to ask for the reinstatement of the death penalty. However, almost everywhere in the world where capital punishment was abolished, now people ask for its reinstatement, and this even in Great Britain, the United States and France. As late as this morning, I heard news to the effect that reinstatement of capital punishment is being sought.

Here in Canada, people are shocked at the idea, including the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), also hon. member for Hochelaga. In his speech of November 5 in this House, the Secretary of State attacked the leader of the Ralliement créditiste. He congratulated him, and I quote:

> —for having seen the danger that was threatening the province of Quebec and Canada because of the present crisis; unfortunately my congratulations must stop here—

He added:

> I must also tell him, through you, Mr. Speaker, that I am not the only one who has been deeply troubled about some of the stands he took. When, for example, he suggested that, without trial,—

I draw your attention to the words "without trial"; the Secretary of State made that up. I shall now resume the quotation:

> —without trial, presumed members of the FLQ, already detained, should be placed before a firing squad—

I never spoke of presumed members of the FLQ that should be placed before a firing squad. The FLQ leaders were those involved. And then, the Secretary of State went on to say:

> —presumed members of the FLQ, already detained, should be placed before a firing squad and that ten of them should be executed for each one of the hostages held by the FLQ, I do not think that he was speaking in a responsible manner, nor in a manner worthy of a civilized nation.

Mr. Speaker, after the attacks carried out by members of the FLQ, acting on orders from their leaders, the Parliament in Ottawa and the National Assembly in Quebec City decided to protect public figures, including the Secretary of State, by posting policemen or soldiers at their doorstep.

Everybody knows that the Secretary of State is well protected and if anyone attempts to break into his home, the soldier or the provincial, federal or municipal policeman would have the right to fire point blank at the intruder. And no one would be shocked by the protection given to the Secretary of State. Even the Secretary of State would not object to a soldier or a policeman shooting at whoever would attempt to kill him or even to manhandle him.

The Secretary of State takes this protection for granted because he is the Secretary of State and a member of Parliament; therefore, would it not be logical to extend the same degree of protection to the people and the society of Canada!

The Secretary of State, among others, is responsible for the present situation in the province of Quebec. He may say that he is opposed to violence but the sort of violence we now witness in Quebec and elsewhere, even in Vancouver, was not born yesterday. I heard, two or three days ago, the leader of the parti québécois, René Lévesque, blaming it on everybody, calling everybody a manipulator, a slave of Ottawa, a slave of the "Canadians", and of the Anglo-Saxons.

Terrorism has not been invented by René Lévesque but, as I said last night in North Bay and as I repeat now, the Quebec terrorism was born thanks to Pierre Bourgault who, in 1961-1962, created a movement which was called Rassemblement pour l'indépendance nationale. At that time, the movement included people such as Pierre Bourgault, André D'Allemagne and a few others who started spreading terrorism throughout Quebec.

When the Queen came to visit Quebec City at the invitation of the Quebec Prime Minister, the hon. Jean Lesage, people had been warned months before that the Queen would not be welcome there. Then, steps were taken to prevent her from appearing in public in Quebec City. Pierre Bourgault, D'Allemagne and the members or leaders of the Rassemblement pour l'indépendance nationale took care of that.

The parti québécois was born following Jean Lesage's defeat and René Lévesque became its leader. This is when the RIN withdrew and immediately joined the parti québécois. This means that Lévesque, who protests that he is not violent, became the leader of Pierre Bourgault and other people of his kind that were members of the Rassemblement pour l'indépendance nationale.

Mr. Speaker, René Lévesque says that he is opposed to violence but it is the members of the Rassemblement pour l'indépendance nationale that probably worked hardest in favour of Lévesque who is now bursting with anger against anyone pretending that the terrorists now in jail have worked for the election of parti québécois members on the occasion of the elections of April 29 last.

Mr. Speaker, I have with me newspaper entitled "Deux mai" published in Quebec City by terrorists from the Limoilou CEGEP, young students who urge all the others to follow them. What do we find in this newspaper of April 23, 1970? Here is what it said:

The FLQ in Quebec City.

It was not yesterday, but in April, and I shall not mention a number of activities which these young people engaged in. Following the events connected with the visit of the Queen, we witnessed the Saint John the Baptist festivities in Montreal, which the right hon. Prime Minister had been warned, six months in advance, not to attend.

What did the Secretary of State do then? And, as I said before, for a whole year he did nothing to stop the terrorists from committing their offences in Quebec. He was afraid to clean up the CBC, as I have been asking him for the past two years. Yet, he is the one responsible for that government agency.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caouette: Every time a well-known communist showed his face in Canada, he was invited to address the people through the CBC, on the French as well as on the English network, and the Secretary of State never had the fortitude nor the common sense to complain to the CBC authorities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Caouette.]

The Secretary of State thinks that I speak violently, but one must do violence to one's feelings in front of people as irresponsible as our Secretary of State.

Mr. Speaker, in the article entitled "The FLQ in Quebec City" to which I referred earlier, what do we find? It says that Charles Gagnon, now in jail, professes to be a leader of the FLQ. When I said that the government knew who were the FLQ leaders, the Secretary of State said that it was a lie.

Mr. Speaker, Gagnon and Vallières said themselves: "We are the leaders of the FLQ". But they were freed because it was not too sure whether they were or not, even though they made no bones about it.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Charles Gagnon was in Quebec City on Thursday, April 9 last, at the Laval University Sciences auditorium. Were also present with him: Jacques-Larue-Langlois, journalist and head of the Vallières-Gagnon committe, Christian Lamontagne of the FLQ, Pierre Cloutier and Robert Lemieux,

—the same Robert Lemieux who is now in prison, the defender of FLQ supporters—

—two lawyers who champion political causes in Quebec.

Did the Secretary of State not know that in April? He did.

During that meeting which was attended by some two to three hundred persons, a demonstration called "Operation Vallières" was announced for the following May 12 in Montreal. That demonstration was intended to achieve three purposes:

First, the liberation of the political prisoners (11 nov.).

Eleven, at that time. Are those terms not the ones that were used in the FLQ communiqués?

They are asking for the liberation of political prisoners! Those so-called political prisoners are criminals. Was the hon. Secretary of State opposed to that? No! Glued to his seat by two inches of Lepage glue, he did not have the courage to protest against those people.

At noon, three Liberal members asked me to warm the Secretary of State's ears.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caouette: They said that on November 5, instead of talking about the war measures or the new bill, the Secretary of State kept on flinging abuse at the Ralliement Créditiste.

Three Liberal members came to see me at noon, in the Parliament restaurant and told me: Mr. Caouette, warm his ears! Well, that is exactly what we are going to do! and large hands will be necessary, because he has long ears.

However, we will manage to do so. I continue to quote:

Secondly, denunciation of the present legal system to which will be substituted a justice administered by the people.

Those are typical communist terms. The same thing was said in Russia 50 years ago and it is repeated in Canada today. The Secretary of State tells us: We are civilized people, we cannot do nor say anything about it.

The Secretary of State is as timid as a hare! Unfortunately he is not in the House.

Recently, when he spoke, he mentioned that the member for Témiscamingue was not in the House. I am here much more often than the Secretary of State! This afternoon, I would have liked him to remain seated after the question period, but unfortunately, he ran away.

I continue to quote:

Third, a demonstration by the Quebec people to show that they endorse the deeds performed by the political prisoners.

These are the main points of the manifesto that we have heard over television, the public radio network and that we have read in the newspapers. What they hope for in Canada is a demonstration by Quebec people to show that they endorse deeds performed by political prisoners such as kidnappings, assassinations, bombings, armed robberies and holdups. The hon. Secretary of State has never expressed his opposition to them, never! Was he giving the FLQ his blessing? I do not know.

Mr. Speaker, there is a limit to be taken in, as we now are by "guys" like the Secretary of State. I keep on reading this article.

The Operation will take place perhaps at the same time in Quebec, and at other times also in Vancouver, Regina and Toronto.

They do intend to undermine not only Quebec but the whole of Canada as well. This is why my colleagues objected yesterday and the day before to the fact that this legislation is aimed mainly at the province of Quebec instead of Canada as a whole.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) rose yesterday and told us, in order no doubt to reassure my colleagues that, to be more specific, this act will be applied everywhere in Canada, not only in the province of Quebec.

This legislation may be applied by the Attorney General of Ontario, by those of Quebec or of British Columbia, no matter which one. But it will have a national scope. We agree about that. However, we do not want any discrimination nor any special status for Quebec. We want all the provinces of Canada to be treated the same.

I go on with my quotation:

Gagnon also asked the people not to confuse the PQ with revolution.

This means Levesque's party and revolution.

This party's action is but the beginning of liberation.

Gagnon claims that the action undertaken by René Levesque's party is only——the beginning of liberation, that it wil be necessary to develop a revolutionary spirit.

It is not the leader of the Ralliement who says that, but Charles Gagnon, a friend of René Lévesque, who claims today to be against violence. However, all those who advocate violence are with Lévesque. It is quite paradoxical, but it is true.

I go on quoting:

Constitutional independence is such only on paper.

Let it be known to those who want to rewrite the constitution, to amend it or move subamendments.

Let it be known to the provincial premiers who meet every year in Ottawa with the Prime Minister of Canada to say that the constitution must be amended.

What will be amended? We don't know; nevertheless, we must amend it. What will we do? What amendments shall we move? Nobody knows, but task forces will be set up in British Columbia, Quebec and Ontario to consider what should be changed in the constitution, when it allows us to be what we are right now.

In my opinion, we should start out by respecting the present constitution before thinking of amending it, without knowing what is to be amended. Let us therefore start by respecting it.

We are quite free to say what we have to say without giving anyone a hard time.

Mr. Vital Barbeau wrote as follows, and I quote:

Constitutional independence is only such on paper and is meaningless if we remain subject to American capital.

That bears some resemblance to NDP theories. NDP members are against it, but their government in Manitoba is now constantly borrowing from the United States. About the Parti québécois, we can read the following:

Even if it is "full of people of good will",

And further on:

—it is sorry that they do not follow through a little more with their ideas. The fact is that the acceptance of the electoral process is the beginning of prostitution, an incurable ailment prevalent among our governments and their politicians.

Our Quebec comrade visited the same day the François-Xavier Garneau College, and later, the Limoilou College, on Thursday, April 16.

Who is our "Quebec comrade"? Charles Gagnon, a leader of the FLQ. That is not all. This little newspaper was distributed all over the Quebec City. I will say to René Levesque who gets in a rage against all those who do to share his views, that I am not the one who accuses him of being violent! I said that he gathered all the terrorists in the province of Quebec and I maintain my statement.

On the last page of the same newspaper, these students, who have the right to vote, state:

Even if the Parti québécois is not all you might want it to be, even if there are climbers and small time politicians in the Parti québécois, even if the independence proposed by the Parti québécois is only a very small step towards the liberation of the people of Quebec, even if we are sometimes disgusted by the Parti québécois—

—they even go as far as that!

—we will nevertheless vote for the Parti québécois.

I quote further:

Because in the Parti québécois, there are honest men and a good many more than in other parties, because the Parti québécois represents the first attempt at democratizing parties.

According to these people, destruction will settle the problem. We must then vote for the Parti québécois—

—because the Parti québécois at least allows the achievement of political independence for Quebec, a prerequisite to its total liberation. Because, as compared to the other dirty parties, the Parti québécois looks far cleaner. Because we must settle this real quick and get rid of the clique of dispensers of patronage of old-line parties.

This is written in a newspaper. And I am not the one who printed it? René Lévesque is aware of all this. Why is he picking on everybody? He is the one who acted, not us. Terrorism will spread throughout Canada if our government does not assume its responsibilities.

My colleagues have strongly emphasized the importance of economic reforms. The intentions of the Quebec and federal governments are not good enough. Canadians are not asking for intentions, they want results.

The people of Canada want to have the right to live in peace, to be treated in all fairness, to be free and secure. That is what we care for. Unless the people get what they want, we shall experience more trouble within the next few months.

There is talk about checking unemployment and, at the same time, the number of unemployed goes up. There is talk about giving some hope to our young people when there is no hope. There is talk about giving the family a normal status which would enable it to develop normaly in a normal society; nevertheless, in the province of Quebec at this moment, there are 175,000 jobless. Something like 140,000 families are living on social welfare allowances.

Students want to be allowed to earn a living after they finish school but they cannot find jobs. Last summer, at least 400,000 students could not find a job to enable them to go back to school. These students would be quite ready to integrate into our society, but unfortunately, they have no opportunity to do so. Should we wonder then when we see young people rebelling against this society into which they cannot integrate?

Let us reform what needs to be reformed. Surface reforms are not what the people need. I saw the honourable Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) make fun of Social Credit solutions. However, this morning I read in an editorial by Alain Guilbert published in a newspaper which is not in favour of Social Credit, namely, Sherbrooke's La Tribune:

For Quebec, the deterioration in the social climate will be all the more tragic as we know its potential effects, namely, the recurrence of terrorist movements such as the Front de Libération du Québec—The solution is not an easy one, but perhaps we should examine Social Credit proposals seriously.

Instead of deriding them, why not examine them? Is it jobs that people are asking for, or money to buy existing products? Let us distribute the money to Canadians and enable them to buy those products, and then the Canadian economy will become prosperous again.

[Mr. Caouette.]

• (4:50 p.m.)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg)—Consumer Affairs—farm machinery price increases proposed by White Motor Company; the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin)—Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—Appointment of Royal Commission on Attitude towards recent events in Quebec; the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale)—Agriculture—Alleged loss of Quotas by Western Canada Dairy Farmers.

The House will now proceed to consideration of Private members business as listed on the order paper, namely, Notices of Motions, Papers.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, are we to deal with Notice of Motion No. 51 in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)? I have not observed, Sir, whether we have already stood the motions which preceded that.

Mr. Speaker: Notice of Motion No. 34 in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Stand.

Mr. Speaker: Notice of Motion No. 60 in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Stand, Mr. Speaker, and the next several motions will all stand.

Mr. Speaker: I understand there are a considerable number of motions standing in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway subsequent to No. 60. Is it agreed that these stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

HEALTH AND WELFARE

WELFARE AND INCOME SECURITY—REPORT OF DR. J. W. WILLARD

The House resumed, from Thursday October 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of any reports or reviews with regard to social welfare legislation and income security prepared by or under the direction of Dr. J. W. Willard, Deputy Minister of Welfare for Canada, since June 25, 1968.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this motion having been considered previously and debated for some 50 minutes, the rules provide that the whole debate may extend for 90 minutes whereafter there can be a five minute resumé by the minister and a five minute closing by the proposer of the motion. Then, the bells would be rung for a vote. After discussion, it has been suggested that the most expeditious way to dispose of the matter now would be for the Parliamentary Secretary to the minister to speak for five minutes, followed by a five minute closing by the hon. member, and then the members would be called in for a vote.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish first to express to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) my admiration for the way he conducted the debate.

His perseverance in dealing with questions related to social welfare and income security is, of course, very commendable and I hardly need to point out that the questions he raises so frequently in the House are of the greatest interest for the government and particularly for the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro).

Mr. Speaker, the report prepared by Dr. Willard, Deputy Minister of Welfare, is only a working document which summarizes the long experience of this eminent civil servant in the field of social welfare and income security. His work is but an appraisal of social security in Canada covering several years and, I repeat, this is only a working document for the time being.

It has never been the practice of the government in the past—and I am convinced it will maintain this line—to table working documents prepared in whole or in part by its officers. I can only renew the request from the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to the effect that, having listened to these explanations, he might withdraw his motion.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in closing this debate may I point out that what we are asking for is the tabling of the Willard report. I can find no better words to describe this report than those just used by the Parliamentary Secretary. He said it is a working document. That is exactly the point. If it were a white paper, or a statement of government policy, and if the government wanted to change that policy, I could understand its reluctance to table such a document. The Willard Report is not a white paper and it is not a statement of government policy. It is a working document. If I may again use the words of the Parliamentary Secretary, it is an assessment of the social security situation in Canada.

A great deal of work has gone into the preparation of this report. I have no doubt it cost a good many dollars and the Canadian people have paid for it. Social security is a tremendously important issue in Canada, and I contend that this Parliament and the people of Canada have the right to see and know what is in this document, this working paper, the Willard Report.

I repeat my argument that if there is any honesty at all to the idea that there should be full disclosure of information, if there is any honesty at all to the desire to have participatory democracy, there is no excuse whatsoever for keeping this document secret. This is an offence to Parliament, it is an affront to the Canadian people, and I insist that this document be tabled in the House of Commons. Based on this document the government will be making its decisions in the field of social security. It will be deciding what it is going to do about pensions for retired people in Canada. Perhaps what is going to be done for veterans will also be based upon it.

The government talks about participatory democracy, about the people being involved, but members of this House are not permitted to see this important document. I say again, as I said in my opening remarks when I moved the motion on October 29, that most of us in this place know what an excellent civil servant Dr. Willard is and has been for many years. We are fully satisfied that this document is a valuable one. It is not the private preserve of the government; it belongs to the Parliament and the people of Canada, and I call for an affirmative vote on this motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the motion. All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Knowles, Winnipeg North Centre) which was negatived on the following division:

• (5:10 p.m.)

YEAS

Messrs:

Alexander	Broadbent
Alkenbrack	Burton
Barnett	Cadieu
Beaudoin	Caouette
Bell	Crouse
Benjamin	Danforth

Division

Messrs:

Dinsdale
Dionne
Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Downey
Fairweather
Fortin
Gilbert
Godin
Gundlock
Hales
Harding
Harkness
Horner
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)
Lambert (Bellechasse)
Lambert (Edmonton West)
Laprise
La Salle
Latulippe
Lewis
Lundrigan
MacDonald (Egmont)
MacEwan
MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond)
MacLean
Macquarrie
MacRae
McCleave
McGrath
McIntosh
McQuaid
Marshall
Mather
Mazankowski
Moore
Nielsen
Nystrom
Orlikow
Paproski
Peters
Ricard
Ritchie
Rodrigue
Rose
Rowland
Ryan
Saltsman
Simpson
Skoberg
Southam
Stewart (Marquette)
Thomas (Moncton)
Thompson (Red Deer)
Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley)
Valade
Woolliams
Yewchuk—70.

NAYS

Messrs:

Allmand
Anderson
Andras
Badanai
Barrett
Basford
Beer
Blouin
Borrie
Boulanger
Buchanan
Cafik
Chappell
Chrétien
Clermont
Cobbe
Comtois
Corbin
Côté (Richelieu)
Côté (Longueuil)
Crossman Cullen
Cyr
Danson
Deachman
Deakon
De Bané
Douglas (Assiniboia)
Drury
Dubé
Dupras
Éthier
Forest Forget
Foster
Francis
Gendron
Gibson
Gillespie
Gray
Greene
Guay (St. Boniface)
Guay (Lévis)
Guilbault
Hellyer Hogarth
Isabelle
Jerome
Lachance
Laing (Vancouver South)
Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt)
Langlois
Laniel
Leblanc (Laurier)
LeBlanc (Rimouski)
Lefebvre
Legault
Lessard (LaSalle)
Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Mackasey
McBride
McIlraith
Mahoney
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
Morison
Murphy
Noël
Olson
Orange
Osler
Otto
Ouellet
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Perrault
Portelance
Pringle
Prud'homme
Richard
Richardson
Rock
Roy (Laval)
Smerchanski
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stafford
Stanbury
Stewart (Cochrane)
Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay)
St. Pierre
Sullivan
Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Tolmie
Trudeau
Trudel
Turner (London East)
Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)
Walker
Watson
Weatherhead
Whelan
Whicher
Whiting—105.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Jerome: May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the House that the Chair now call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

[Translation]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PUBLIC ORDER (TEMPORARY MEASURES) ACT, 1970

PROVISION OF EMERGENCY POWERS FOR PRESERVATION OF PUBLIC ORDER

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-181, to provide temporary emergency powers for the preservation of public order in Canada, be read the third and do pass.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at five o'clock, I was pointing out that our people would not indefinitely put up with promises or superficial reform and that it is high time for the governments to act and provide the necessary reforms. I was quoting part of an editorial by Alain Guilbert in the Sherbrooke Tribune. Mr. Guilbert had this to say:

—As the situation is serious and urgent in Quebec, as well as in Canada, could not the Bank of Canada make available to Quebec interest-free loans that would enable the province to launch large projects such as the Trans-Quebec Highway, low-rent housing—

—Also the construction of roads and public buildings.

Such investments would mean decreasing unemployment, restoration of the social climate and promotion of private investments.

The situation appears urgent and severe enough not to dismiss lightly the solution proposed by the Ralliement des créditistes. It should at least be considered seriously—

Interest free loans for the construction of public buildings would help improve the situation but we could do better by distributing the affluence of our country amongst the Canadian people. That would be a true reform.

According to federal statistics, the production of goods and services in Canada this year will reach about $77 billion. Moreover, the Canadian people will earn a total income of about $55 billion. How can you buy goods for $77 billion with only $55 billion? It seems to me that the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, or any hon. member, is able to understand that with $55 billion you cannot buy for $77 billion worth. At the present time there is in Canada an undistributed production of $22 billion for lack of purchasing power to buy it.

This is when the Créditistes suggest the distribution to every Canadian citizen, including the Minister of Justice and every member, of a national dividend based on the surplus of production, the national revenue, which amounts to $55 billion. They find this suggestion ridiculous.

This government will spend this year $140 million to encourage western farmers not to grow wheat. Instead of paying western farmers not to grow wheat, why not distribute this money to the Canadian people so that they could buy bread and the wheat the farmers are able to produce? Of course not, the Créditiste solution is foolish.

The Quebec dairy producers are penalized because they produce too much milk and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) says, as well as the Prime Minister, that we must increase our productivity if we want to fight unemployment and create jobs, but they do exactly the opposite.

They advocate one thing but they do the opposite. Then we do our utmost to pass legislation such as the piece now, before us, in order to urge the people not to rebel.

Mr. Speaker, I was in western Canada not so long ago. I noticed that the farmers are angry at the government. In the East, farmers, workers and unemployed feel the same way. And the government says that for the sake of inflation, we must be patient. Today, we have some evidence that not all the people are ready to be patient for the sake of inflation.

Those who revolted in Montreal or elsewhere in Quebec, are not the 30-, 60- or 70-year olds, but the young of 16, 18 or 20 years of age. The great part of those who are now detained in jail are about 20, the same as our own children. Who can tell if our own children will not take their place, tomorrow, considering the situation that is prevailing? When our young people cannot integrate themselves in our society, it is obvious that they will blow it up. And this is what we have now.

It is hoped to prevent these revolts and soothe these feelings of discontent by passing a law such as we are now considering.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned earlier this afternoon that before he became a Liberal member of Parliament, the Secretary of State had always been against the government. He was a kind of revolutionary. He was a close friend of Vallières who is presently in jail in Montreal. He was even his boss and his editing collaborator for the magazine Cité Libre and the newspaper La Presse of Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, if the Secretary of State was not a Liberal member, he might be with the members of the FLQ who are now detained in Montreal.

Let us be logical. On November 23, my colleague from Bellechase (Mr. Lambert) asked the Minister of Justice what would happen if a similar situation should come up in a province other than Quebec. Would Bill C-181 apply throughout Canada or only to a particular territory?

The Minister of Justice replied that this legislation would apply to the whole of Canada and that the target would be the FLQ or any association which would succeed it.

To my mind, the minister contradicts himself. My colleague of Champlain (Mr. Matte) felt that the amendment to clause 3 was complex and prejudicial to Quebec citizens because it mentioned "the province of Quebec". As reported at page 1393 of Hansard, the minister of Justice answered as follows:

—agree with the hon. member that we should be against terrorism and crime. This bill does not deal with force or crime in general but with force used or crime used to overthrow a government in Quebec—

But why should this measure apply only to Quebec? If it were applied to Ontario, with regard to Canada, would it not be the same? We ask the minister to state in the legislation that this measure is to apply not only to Quebec but to any other province. It could just as well be British Columbia. In fact, the other day, a teacher declared himself in favour of the FLQ or "FLV" in Vancouver. The authorities did not hesitate one minute in bringing this teacher to heel and dismissing him, I think, from the University of British Columbia. They had no need for Bill C-181 to act there.

But in the present circumstances, what my colleagues wanted the minister to notice is that Bill C-181 mentions only the province of Quebec instead of the provinces as a whole.

A revolutionary movement could just as well start in Toronto, in Winnipeg or in Regina. The proof is that politicians from Regina have been known to say that they might free themselves one day from Canada to join the United-States.

The premier of Saskatchewan said that.

An hon. Member: Ross Thatcher?

Mr. Caouette: The Liberal premier, a former colleague of my friends of the New Democratic Party—

• (8:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: I shall have to listen to the translation of this.

An hon. Member: You'll never believe it.

Mr. Caouette: Ross Thatcher was a friend of mine though he was not a Social Crediter. He was a member of the CCF and I feel that he is still with the CCF, though he did give better leadership than the NDP has now.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the minister contradicts himself when he says:

> This bill does not deal with force used or crime used to overthrow a government in Quebec with respect to the rest of Canada, by the FLQ or another association that might succeed it.

I agree with the minister, but that bill is especially aimed at the FLQ.

The hon. member for Champlain stated the following:

> We all agree on that, there is no doubt about it. However, as to the second point, it is that we could eventually use it "as a means of accomplishing the same or substantially the same governmental change within Canada." The P.Q. could advocate "the same government change" as—

And here is what the Minister of Justice answered to that:

> Mr. Chairman, in reply to the question put by the hon. member, I should say that all the words have to be read as a whole. The bill is directed at the FLQ and any eventual successor group. The FLQ is defined as "any group of persons or associations that advocates the use of force or the commission of crime—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Go on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Caouette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am grateful to my colleagues and to the Minister of Justice for letting me finish my speech. I shall not abuse of the additional time given me.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to point out here that the minister contradicted himself when he said in one place:

> —force used or crime used to overthrow a government in Quebec—

—and further on—

> —force or the commission of crime as a means of accomplishing governmental change—

But the whole thing is no clearer than pipe juice. One the one hand, people are to be prevented from overthrowing the Canadian government and on the other hand we must protect the government of Quebec in its relationship to Canada.

It is that opposition between the province of Quebec and the rest of Canada we cannot approve. I have had the opportunity, as I said this afternoon, of travelling throughout Canada and everywhere I said I did not want a special status for Quebec. I am not asking for more.

As we are considering Bill-181 we all agree that we must adopt measures to prevent the overthrow of a government by violence. But that law should not apply only in Quebec but everywhere in Canada.

It is because we recognize the need to adopt measures to prevent terrorism that we have voted for the application of the War Measures Act. It was urgent to resort to it since rebellion was threatening in the province of Quebec and terrorist acts, kidnappings and murders were committed in Quebec.

But we maintain that the law must be the same for the ten provinces to prevent similar acts in the other provinces.

• (8:20 p.m.)

My colleagues have tried to call the attention of both the government and the Minister of Justice to that point.

The minister, in my opinion, should be more specific. There is not one member in this House who would want to pass a legislation applicable to Quebec only. Otherwise, it would amount to backing up our friend the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Douglas) whose campaign at the last general election centered around a special status for the province of Quebec. On the other hand, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) he was advocating the theory of two nations in Canada. Therefore, we pass one bill applicable to one nation residing in Quebec and another one for the other nation living elsewhere in Canada.

Parliament must be careful when passing a legislation, even if it will only be in force until the end of April next. Then, the government should introduce legislation of a permanent character which would respect individual liberties while protecting Canadian society as a whole, without favouring any special group.

Our position is simple: let us pass the legislation we want, but it is important to bring in reforms which will allow all Canadians to feel free and secure in this country.

Of course, to reach this goal, we must obviously and necessarily deal with the financial problem. This is where the trouble lies. It is so true that if a war should be declared, the government would not have to talk about inflation, but it would find a job for everyone now unemployed. Here is the proof: they sent the Canadian Armed Forces to Quebec. Neither the Minister of Justice nor the Prime Minister said that we did not have enough money to send soldiers there. Apparently, that was an urgent matter.

When people starve in Canada, that is an urgent matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caouette: If we want to avoid a repetition of the events we have just witnessed, the time has come to pass other laws than those which aim at jailing wrongdoers. Let us pass laws which will enable wrongdoers to behave better and then, society will be better organized.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Question, question!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The hon. member for Joliette has the floor.

Mr. La Salle: As was said so well yesterday by a member of the New Democratic Party, I think that the members from Quebec have not only the right to speak on this bill, but also a responsibility to express certain opinions. In view of the importance of the bill it is my responsibility to express my opinions and to give some explanations about the fact that we could be in favour of the adoption of the War Measures Act, without necessarily being in favour of the adoption of a special act.

On this point, a certain summary must be made. Let us refer to the circumstances which necessitated the application of the War Measures Act.

First, the War Measures Act was proclaimed and this move was supported by most hon. members.

Mr. Speaker, when the house is on fire, it is too late to discuss whether or not firemen should be called. In my view, no wavering would have been justified. In view of the abduction of these two men and of the psychological climate prevailing in these days, it was necessary to invoke such a drastic measure. Indeed, we had no choice, particularly if we consider that our criminal law leaves no place for us to take the necessary steps.

Since then, there has been quite a number of arrests, and it seems that several people have been arrested for the most futile motives. Searches and questionings have been carried out. The province of Quebec has been occupied by the armed forces and the government has made all sorts of statements in the House. But those statements have never been adequately explained and questions asked by members have not yet been answered satisfactorily.

The enforcement of the War Measures Act was urgently needed when the Act was proclaimed. But since then, thirty days have passed. Parliament, therefore, has had all the time it needed to introduce a law better suited to the present circumstances which are not—we must recognize it—as disquieting as they were thirty days ago.

There has been, for quite a long time a climate of dissatisfaction in Quebec which is due to many reasons. It might be believed that exceptional legislation would settle this problem and would give back confidence to the Quebec people and to the whole country but it would be a mistake to believe it.

In Quebec we went through, perhaps in a rather peculiar way even if some are afraid of the word "peculiar", years of frustration both linguistically and economically. At the same time, we have had a far too high unemployment rate, a per capita income much lower than that of the whole country and this situation does not seem to be improving. In Quebec, we now have 500,000 unemployed and this figure will reach 700,000 by springtime.

Those are so many factors which for several years have provoked discontentment in Quebec. A special law will not be sufficient to restore the population's confidence in Parliament nor will it improve the lot of the people of Quebec.

When this bill was introduced a few weeks ago it was understood that the opposition parties would have an opportunity to participate in the debate and to make useful contributions. After five weeks, it seems clear that the government will accept no amendment. Not one suggestion made by the opposition is deemed likely to improve the bill. It seems that only the government members are enlightened by the Holy Ghost when a bill is being drafted. According to them, we do not enjoy the same advantage.

The government has serious misgivings; I am sure that only through the enactment of social measures better adapted to present conditions can a proper climate of stability be restored in the province of Quebec as well as elsewhere in Canada.

I do not say that a special legislation was not necessary. I think that after the War Measures Act was enforced, we had enough time to draft a legislation more in keeping with present needs.

• (8:30 p.m.)

The retroactivity of the act can allow justice to go very far indeed. The act is vague in that it does not specify for how long it will be applied. The use of the expression "any identical association or almost identical association" can only lead to confusion.

Some other amendments are vague as well. In spite of that, the act is specific enough to warrant its being supported.

After studying the bill and having realized that the government refused to accept any amendment, I can say that, at the same time, the participation of the opposition parties, in short, the participation of Parliament, was turned down in the preparation of this bill. As members of Parliament, we were entitled to participate in it. To say the least, we were entitled to a better hearing on the part of the government.

Considering that the government rejected all the amendments we proposed and knowing all the weaknesses and inaccuracies of the legislation, I do not feel like supporting the bill. Some may think that I prefer the War Measures Act, but that is not the point. I voted for the War Measures Act because we had no other choice. A more acceptable measure could have been introduced, but it was not. Aware of the weaknesses and inaccuracies of the legislation, it might be said: Of two evils one must choose the lesser. I still think that even the lesser evil is much too great.

Mr. Speaker, the entire history of Canada shows that previous situations resulted in an atmosphere not only of discontent but revolution. This has very deep causes.

In Quebec especially, reference is made to poverty, insecurity, lack of confidence in public men, the failure of the constitutional review. We want, as Quebecers, to be first class citizens, but I think that all those frustrations after many years were liable to create a climate of dissatisfaction. For that reason I will take this opportunity to say once again that the passage of special legislation will not restore the confidence of the people or order in Quebec or elsewhere in Canada.

In connection with the failure of the constitutional review, I read the following this week in Le Devoir, and I quote:

> In his opening address to the federal-provincial conference held in Ottawa in February 1968, the late Daniel Johnson stated solemnly: "...we all know that the Canadian people is not homogeneous. Although the adamant few still refuse to admit it, we all know that Canada is made up of two nations. What purpose can be achieved by closing our eyes on this basic fact, which is supported by history, sociology and the collective will to live together?
>
> Perhaps it has become for some people a purely academic exercise to ponder whether the British North America Act is or not the result of a pact, but there is no room for doubt as far as the future is concerned: in order to be valid, a new Canadian constitution will have to be the product of an agreement between our two nations."

—which is the whole history of our country. With all due respect to my colleagues, in the end we will have to acknowledge the existence of the two founding nations in Canada. It is fundamental.

Statements made this week mentioned that it will be possible to keep Quebec in the Confederation through force if necessary. When people end up saying such things it is because they do not know Quebecers.

For over 100 years, millions of French Canadians have not only defended their traditions but also their mother tongue. They have hoped and are still hoping that their aspirations will be fulfilled.

So Quebec is different from the other provinces, with all due reference to the leader of the Ralliement créditiste (Mr. Caouette) who said earlier that he does not favour a special status for Quebec. Maybe he wanted to say that Canada wants to offer us a special status on the occasion of the introduction of the bill on war measures but it is the first time that Quebec is granted a special status and certainly the moment is not at all appropriate to do so.

This special status will have to be recognized in the Constitution that we have been asked to draft and no doubt this issue is most pressing. In fact, a committee on the constitution has at last set to work and is visiting every part of Canada. It should not, however, waste its time visiting the province of Quebec. It has merely to make a careful study of the briefs submitted to Parliament since 1960 by Messrs. Lesage, Johnson, Bertrand and Bourassa. The committee on the constitution has in its files briefs that reflect precisely the aspirations and the wishes of Quebecers. Regardless of the government that submitted them, these briefs make exactly the same requests and would enable the committee on the constitution to understand, once and for all, what Quebec wants and under what conditions Canada will be able to keep this province within Confederation. The committee on the constitution would learn much by reading Daniel Johnson's book entitled Egalité ou Indépendance (Equality or Independence).

Quebecers want to live in equality, they want to have the same opportunities as other Canadians have, and to take a full part in building of Canada.

The people of Quebec are well represented in the House. However, some government members from Quebec did not carry out their duty to inform our English-speaking colleagues of the deep aspirations of the population of Quebec. In order to abide by the policies of their party, they have always agreed to an acceptable compromise with provincial governments, provided they belonged to the same party as the federal government.

I am sorry to have to say those things, but I believe that is the crux of the problem, the loss of confidence of Quebecers in the federal representation. Each House member from Quebec has that duty to inform all Canadians of the needs of Quebec and of the conditions that will make it possible for that province to remain within Confederation.

For 10 years the provincial governments have tried to ensure by every possible means that Quebec be kept within the Confederation. Briefs have been submitted, many studies have been published and it seems that the federal government is not interested.

Mr. Guy LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Rimouski on a point of order.

Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be rather brief. It seems to me that my colleague is making an unforgivable digression. The debate should be on an amendment proposed by the Ralliement créditiste, but the hon. member is giving a lecture on the history of Canada and of the province of Quebec.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Lotbinière on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to say, on behalf of my party, that we have moved no amendment. If the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. LeBlanc) was more often in the House, he would know that we disposed of it yesterday.

We are anxious to hear the rest of the speech by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. First, the Chair wants to point out to the hon. member for Rimouski that he did not raise a question of privilege, but a point of order. However, I believe that, in view of the present confusion, the Chair should take the opportunity of reminding the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) to stick as much as possible to the motion on third reading of Bill C-181.

Hon. Members have been allowed up to now to stray temporarily from the subject, but to go back on the whole constitutional question in Canada is quite another matter. The hon. member should revert to Bill C-181 in the next few minutes.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Chairman, the member for Rimouski (Mr. LeBlanc) was not aware that we were on third reading of the bill, that amendments had been dealt with long ago and that they had not been accepted anyway.

As to whether I strayed from the subject, I did so in order to show the long standing shilly-shally attitude of the Federal government with regard to the powers which should be granted to Quebec and which are required for her emancipation as a French-Canadian nation, since her powers have often been trampled down. A climate of dissatisfaction has indeed appeared in the province of Quebec.

The hesitation of the federal government is responsible for the formation of a third party in Quebec, the Parti Québecois, that nevertheless got 23 per cent of the votes at the last April elections. It means that one French Canadian out of three voted for the independence of Quebec.

The prolonged hesitation of the federal government which turns a deaf ear to the claims of Quebec cannot give us economic stability and create the atmopshere of confidence we need and in which we would no longer have to pass special legislation.

That is the problem. We can look everywhere, but nothing will be solved if we do not recognize that the Constitution must be renewed to define clearly the powers Quebec needs and has been demanding for so long. For the information of my colleagues, not only those from Quebec—as they know it already although many of them do not dare say so—but for those from the other provinces, I say that the Constitution, has to be amended because it is the only way of enabling people to keep on believing in a strong Canada and the province of Quebec to believe that its future is within Canada. To refuse to listen to the claims made by the Quebec governments over the last ten years, is to close one's door to them and to hasten the independence of Quebec. It is to run the risk of being faced with more problems.

Such things must be said in this House. I did so for the guidance of all the members. I know that some people find it more difficult to say such things. As a Quebecer I believe in a rejuvenated constitution—we must hurry—it is, a matter of months—so that the province of Quebec may have the assurance that the emancipation of the French Canadian nation can be accomplished inside Quebec, in French, without any prejudice to the rest of this country. It is as two nations that we will be able to build a splendid Canada and not in doing as we have done for the last 100 years.

Unfortunate statements were made in this House during the debate on this legislation, including some about the possibility of a parallel government being set up. I thought that the arguments put forward on the day when we voted on the War Measures Act were sufficient to support these measures. Then there was the beginning of a rumour to the effect that a parallel government was to be set up in Quebec, and the government suggested that it was founded.

As a result of the questions which were asked during the following week, we realized that this parallel government never existed, but this persisting rumour gave certain people an opportunity to accuse men who have always stoutly defended the aspirations of the French-Canadian nation, and I do not approve of those who used this debate to tarnish the reputation of a man for which I have great consideration, namely, Mr. Claude Ryan. I say it in this House—

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. La Salle: I am aware that this does not sound pleasing for all the Quebec members since Mr. Claude Ryan, at a certain time, was not in agreement with the governments of the day. But I have for quite a long time believed in this journalist's integrity. No one found fault with Mr. Ryan when he supported the Liberal party before the elections of last April 29 and now, because he disapproves of the emergency measures legislation or of the way the government have lead the discussions, there has been an attempt at sullying the reputation of some people for no reasons whatsoever.

Everybody is wondering: who are those responsible for this situation? Definitely, some members of the FLQ whom I condemn without reservation, and I know that all members of this House agree with me. Now, whether they number 25, 200, 1,000 or 3,000 that is quite a different question. Some one has gone as far as suggesting that the government has been using a sledge hammer to crack a peanut. And I even wonder whether this peanut has now been effectively cracked.

Recently, I was reading a newspaper article by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who lived in times somewhat similar to our own. I shall read an excerpt from that article in this House, because it is signed by an authentic Liberal. At that time, in 1890, problems were being experienced with the Metis. Sir Wilfrid Laurier said, in his article, with regard to a certain rebellion, and I quote:

—what is destestable is not the rebels but the men who, having the advantages of power do not fulfil its duties; the men who, having the power to redress abuse, will not listen to the petitions they receive; the men who, when they are asked for bread, give stones.

If I understand correctly what Sir Wilfrid Laurier meant, I would dare say that those who have the advantage of power are really responsible for the present situation. Sir Wilfrid Laurier added, and I quote:

—if there were some criminals, it was not those who fought, who died, but the men in front of me on the government benches?

This was said by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and it is surely not a man who was always sympathetic to us. I merely wish to refer to that time to prove that the reasons which compel us to pass that special legislation today are perhaps not those you have in mind. It is the lack of appropriate social measures which has led to that climate of dissatisfaction and revolt among Quebecers and Canadians.

This bill is quite difficult to accept, since it can interfere with the freedom of the press. I do not approve all the criticisms against the press nor the charges laid against the C.B.C., making them responsible for the present problems.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, I admit it, has broadcasted a number of programs devoted to separatism in Quebec, but it was only the true reflection of the Quebec reality.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Here, in the House, a number of members have always refused to define the Quebec reality. Moreover, we have always considered this group of individuals as insignificant. However it was important that the members of the other provinces know exactly the number of separatists and the growing importance of that movement in Quebec.

Attempts were made to hoodwink the rest of the citizens by telling them that this movement was insignificant, that it was not dangerous and that its membership was small. But following the election we learned that one out of three French Canadians was favourable to independence. This is the truth, and it is this fact that hon. members from the other provinces need to know.

CBC had programs to which Mr. Levesque was allowed to participate just so that the Canadian people would know the Quebec fact. Whether we like it or not, this is freedom of the press and freedom of speech.

I have not been concerned personally as yet about the freedom of the press but I think it is unfortunate that a member who makes an incorrect statement gets a good write up from the press while another who does not make any incorrect statement is not even mentioned by the press. I should like to make a few remarks on another point, that is the inquiry, by a committee of the House, on the Company of Young Canadians, whose findings urged the government to guard against certain dangerous groups or movements. But nothing was done in this regard. This is why we have to discuss now the implementation of some special legislation.

We asked that a royal commission determine the reasons for the introduction of this special legislation, but we were turned down. A royal commission could actually throw light on every aspect of this question and distinguish between the truth and mere rumours, such as that of a provisional government. We have been denied this royal inquiry which would prove the government's good will.

What are the causes of the climate of dissatisfaction. No wonder Quebec is dissatisfied. I have only been in the House for only two years and already there is no hope of recovering the $250 million paid by Quebec for a service which was never provided. There was and is still some talk of cutting the subsidies to farmers. How can the farmers get along if subsidies are further reduced?

Some are wondering how this discontentment was created and I do not believe that this special legislation will restore confidence or stability in Quebec.

In my own conscience, Mr. Speaker, I will not be able to support such a bill because of its lack of accuracy, and its deficiencies.

At least, a review board should have been authorized to avert abuses in each province. After just one month we already have evidence of abuses and we would like to prevent them from occurring again.

An administrator could have carried on some supervision to check abuse, but we have chosen to abuse power and I am against that.

The words "unlawful association" and "the same or substantially the same" lack precision.

On seven or eight occasions, I believe, I also asked who would foot the bill for the army's stay in Quebec.

First, I was told that the province of Quebec would pay the bill. Another time, I was told that considering the special conditions prevailing, perhaps some agreement could be made with Quebec.

Last week, the negotiations seemed not to progress very fast. In the end, we might get the bill, and, if it happens to be settled like the health insurance plan, Quebec will have to pay once more for a service the expenses of which were met long ago, because the province has been contributing to national defence costs since the birth of Confederation.

We were entitled to explanations the government has refused to provide, and in the circumstances we are led to doubt the government's good faith and to refuse blind support for this legislation.

Many hon. members myself included, wish to re-establish a climate of confidence for the welfare of Canadians. Each citizen in Canada, and in Quebec in particular, must have a greater part of justice.

I presume that we will do more than tabling special legislation, and that we will consider seriously the adoption of social measures which are obviously needed for the re-establishment of a better social climate in Quebec. The formation of a committee on the Constitution is vital today in Canada. The Province of Quebec has been waiting quite a long time. It is miserably disappointed with the government's hesitancy on the matter. Quebec needs to know the provisions of a new constitution. It should not be thought—and time will prove me right—that a constitution that does not establish distinctions will make the ten provinces happy.

We hear about bilingualism throughout Canada. It is not true that integral bilinguism will exist in all 10 provinces. We shall stay with one French province and nine English ones. The provinces however will acquire a supplementary culture, English or French. But let us face it: Quebec wants to and must remain French, and the other provinces will remain English. Together, we can build Canada according to our culture.

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member forgets that New Brunswick is also a bilingual province.

Mr. La Salle: Well, yes, New Brunswick is bilingual—

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, so is the province of Ontario. We are not all turncoats.

Mr. La Salle: I do not deny the hon. member's point, and I do not say that all members are turncoats. But Quebec will not be abused or deceived by federal members from Quebec who do not tell the truth in this House to their English-speaking colleagues who need to know it. Now there are problems in Quebec because those members have failed to express as they should have the needs of the province of Quebec and to support the provincial governments who for well over a decade have been pondering over piles of briefs submitted to federal-provincial conferences. These members have always refused to analyse those documents and they have even laughed at them. In those papers are discussed the fundamentals not for national unity but for national harmony. There is the big difference.

I am not striving after national unity but after national harmony wherein the two founding nations, as acknowledged by history, may understand each other and cooperate in building up one country, Canada. If we fail to do this, Quebec will separate. My forecasts will come true if the government does not become more conscious of Quebec's needs and aspirations.

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, once again I am a trifle surprised by the attitude of some hon. members who seem to want to railroad bill C-181 entitled: An Act to provide temporary emergency powers for the preservation of public order in Canada.

In a speech delivered on the program "La Politique Fédérale" on the French TV network of the CBC on October 31, 1970, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated, and I quote:

> The nation must continue to remain calm and resist with the same lucidity to the confusion which some individuals would like to cause.

This is precisely the attitude I am trying to have toward the present situation, and I fail to see the exceptional urgency of railraoding a bill which, in my view, is confusing. We had evidence of that during the debate, in the House, and among the public, through newspapers and other news media.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Some weeks ago, when it was felt that there was an emergency, most hon. members approved the proclamation of the War Measures Act and have not changed their mind yet. Therefore nothing impedes the work of observation and search which rests with our armed forces. Absolutely nothing prevents our police forces from maintaining law and order and from keeping up their investigations to find the kidnappers. It rather seems to me that most of the people are eager to know what concrete results have been achieved through the extraordinary powers granted in peace time to the police forces so that they may track down the revolutionaries.

We will not achieve the results wished for by the people by approving hastily a new bill which, in my opinion, contains some elements of dissent.

Whereas a confused situation seems to last endlessly, people are anxiously awaiting new facts. And in the meantime, we try to pass special legislation, establishing emergency powers in order to maintain order in the province of Quebec.

We now have the proof that it is not the lack of powers which hinders the work of peace officers. What seems rather obvious is the absence of co-operation and the inefficiency of investigation procedures.

The editor of the newspaper Montreal-Matin concluded his editorial of November 24, 1970 by this logical remark, and I quote:

> If the handful of agitators were reduced to impotence, the whole of the Quebec people would not need special measures, since the unrest which justifies them would no longer exist.

Like Mr. Cross, we sometimes wonder what is going on. Many people shuddered when they listened to a TV announcer reading the communiqué of the Quebec Liberation Front. Yet, more than four months ago, on July 11, 1970, a Montreal newspaper published an explosive document, quite similar to the one released in October 1970. It dealt with an unsuccessful kidnapping attempt. This should have been a warning for the authorities. But no. People in office now anxious to do something had no reaction at all.

Another time, the Chairman of the Executive Committee of the city of Montreal, in a clear statement, asked for a Royal commission of inquiry on the behaviour of agitators who were spreading revolution in Canada. Did our legislators hasten to take the decisions the events required? Oh no! They were waiting.

I do not see any reason to multiply emergency or special laws. As I said at the beginning, the War Measures Act allows us to solve urgent problems, provided each and every one does his job. Let us take the time needed to prepare legislation really appropriate in the circumstances, without spreading discord in one area or the other of the country. As representatives of the people of Canada, it is our duty, when the circumstances so require, to pass laws that apply to all parts of Canada.

Remember the second volume of the Prévost report, issued in April 1969, which called for the establishment of a public system of judicial security designed to ensure to all citizens an easy access to the administration of justice.

Whether we agree in part or in whole with the procedures suggested by the Commission, we must recognize on the other hand that it is as much an urgent necessity as education, welfare and health.

The fact that in our country there are more and more citizens who, for financial reasons, cannot afford to have their day in court is evidence that the financial system we are denouncing needs to be reformed in our affluent society.

At least one-fifth of the Canadian people are denied at one time or another, the right to be heard in court; the situation is such that people have come to the conclusion that it is more advantageous to accept an out-of-court settlement than to resort to justice, because the parties often incur disproportionate expenses.

My colleague, the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin), summarized here in the House on Tuesday, November 24th, 1970, the difficulties he had had because of a deficient judicial system, and I know he is right.

Our lawyers should know that they helped to create the present atmosphere.

I have here at hand an article published in the Montreal La Presse on September 1st, 1970, the title of which is clear enough: Canadian Bar Association accused of abetting injustice, from which I shall quote a few excerpts.

The delegates to the Canadian Bar Association convention were on the hot seat yesterday; they were accused of encouraging injustice and having failed to reform our laws.

The case of the people versus the Canadian Bar Association was put to a large audience of some 650 delegates accompanied by their wives, by the discontented students of the Law School of the Dalhousie University in Halifax.

The claims of the students were received with rousing cheers.

The delegates had heard the same theme, the need for reform in the laws and the administration of justice, earlier in the day, from the retiring chairman, Arthur S. Pattillo from Toronto. His speech was less spectacular, but his mesage was no less urgent.

Calling our times the age of dissent, Mr. Pattillo said at the opening session of the convention that it is extremely important to act quickly and simultaneously in the fields of the reform of laws, justice administration, education of the profession regarding the public.

He said that court procedures are outmoded. Justice is often delayed by technicalities and inefficiency. Laws vary from one province to another and there is no government support for reform.

I have noted myself that our legal system often enables ambitious lawyers to use various means to win a case. Fortunately, a judge aware of his duties and responsibilities was on the bench that day. He delivered a not guilty verdict, although I had realized that a very experienced lawyer especially chosen for that case had used all the tricks of the trade, to such an extent that I attended a hearing where questionable testimonies were given many times in order to deviate the course of justice.

I am pointing out by way of digression that kind of injustice generated by the legal mechanism. Briefly, this is what happens. Charges are unfairly laid against a citizen. He decides to defend himself and proves that he is not guilty following lengthy and onerous procedures. As a result, he has nevertheless to pay the lawyer's fees and the witnesses' travelling expenses.

This kind of administration of justice is defective, even revolting for a citizen who is acquitted.

Nothing in Bill C-181 provides for compensation to people charged without evidence and yet this is a matter that has caused much comment, particularly since the events of October last.

I was reading in the July 11, 1969 issue of the newspaper Le Soleil an article by Mr. Paul Lachance entitled: Justice for the poor if not poor justice. After having outlined the situation, Mr. Lachance wrote as follows:

Money, the root of evil.

In a masterly study on legal aid entrusted to the Prévost Commission, Mr. Jean T. Loranger, assistant secretary of the legal aid office of the Montreal Bar, discloses certain figures that give cause for reflection on the degree of poverty among the Quebec population.

He shows that as early as 1964, a yearly income of $4,000, both in Quebec and in the United States, meant poverty for a normal family of four people, and of $2,000 for an unmarried person.

According to Mr. Loranger, that family and that unmarried person are every day deprived of the bare requisites in Quebec. They represent about 23 per cent of the Quebec population.

Statistics also show that 19 out of 1,000 people need legal aid, that is one poor out of 12.

The article contains undeniable truths and practical suggestions.

He adds in conclusion, and I quote:

There remains to wonder whether our government will soon have the nerve to proclaim, through concrete examples, that a state does not have to be rich to show respect towards its own justice.

For as long as it has not become as much the justice of the poor as that of the rich, it will be but a poor justice.

Real justice cannot be administered with a vengeful and penalizing instinct. A serious effort should be made in order to change this turn of mind often inherent in the judiciary administration.

The various correctional services should bring their effort to bear on prevention of crime rather than on excessive and brutal punishment.

I realize that in some individuals, there seem to be a total loss of the sense of responsibilities and that one has to resort to appropriate means in such cases. However, if we take the trouble of examining some particular cases, we have to conclude that some people are not born criminals.

Very often, through a combination of circumstances, they have been badly oriented and society did not favour them in such a way as to enable them to know how to conduct themselves. It is not by crushing them that we will help rehabilitate them.

Equality of opportunities to defend oneself legally must be both great enough not to allow injustices, and explicit enough to avoid abuses as much as possible.

The most complete inventories, the fairest recommendations, the most necessary orientations will remain a dead letter if those who are responsible do not act.

• (9:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, it will not take too many minutes for me to state why it will be a pleasure for me to vote against this incredible and unnecessary piece of legislation. Yesterday I listened to the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hogarth). The points he made further substantiate the fact that at this time in our history this legislation is completely unnecessary. The cockiness of some Liberal Members of Parliament stems from their belief that they cannot be defeated on the stand they are about to take. They are pleased with the stand they are about to take.

They will be denying civil liberties and supporting the principle of guilt by association. They have forgotten about the United Nations Charter of Human Rights regarding retroactivity of offences. They are supporting a situation wherein a husband and wife can be jailed for associating with each other if one is a sympathizer of the FLQ. They do not support the appointment of a legal appeal or review board. Instead, they suggest a voluntary type of body with no power whatsoever. Some hon. members seem quite pleased that people may become unemployed because they are accused, under false pretences, of being associated with the FLQ and the employer dismisses them. I know of situations where persons have lost their jobs because they have been accused of certain things. Their employers did not consider whether or not they were guilty. Any member of the House who supports this legislation is not being consistent or credible in his position.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has done many things to discredit Canada in the eyes of North Americans. I refer to an item which appeared in the Moose Jaw Times-Herald of Saturday, October 1, which reads in part as follows:

> Live in Canada?
>
> "No thanks," say four Glasgow, Montana, high school students. "Not with the War Measures Act in existence."
>
> "I wouldn't give up my United States constitutional rights no matter how enjoyable our stay in Moose Jaw has been," one student said.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Skoberg: As I listen to the laughter of hon. members opposite, I realize they are not concerned about the civil rights of anyone in this country. What has been said in this House since I have been here? The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) asked what contribution the majority of the Liberal Members of Parliament had made to this House of Commons. I suggest that the members from the province of Quebec have not really told us what the problem is in that province. Have they told us about the economic situation, the unemployment situation or anything else concerning the province of Quebec? Quips are all we have heard from them. They say, "If you knew the situation, you would not talk in this way." I suggest these members have known the situation for the last seven years. The hon. member for New Westminster went to great lengths to show how the situation has been documented since 1963.

The Members of Parliament from Quebec should be ashamed for not telling members from other parts of Canada about the real problems in Quebec. The hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané) has been quite forceful in this House in drawing attention to the situation in his area. This was why he moved his amendments. I understand that in his constituency the rate of unemployment is approximately 28.9 per cent. I am disappointed that the hon. member has now been brought back into line by the Liberal Party and will vote in their favour. Has he forgotten the grand words of wisdom that he has used recently?

All hon. members realize that violence is not the usual means adopted by peaceful people. It is used only when there is anxiety, confusion, fear and a gap between the populace and the authorities. These extraordinary powers are a direct result of the lack of activity and participation by Liberal Members of Parliament from Quebec. Surely the 57 Liberals Members of Parliament from Quebec, give or take one or two, cannot justify not letting us know the real reason for the emergency measures taken in that province. I say that the emergency measures were implemented as a direct result of the Liberal members from Quebec. It can be argued that we really do not know much about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Skoberg: I am glad that some members who have sat on their fannies for the last few weeks are now applauding. The article in the November 26 edition of the Globe and Mail, which was referred to by the hon. member for Timiskaming, bears repeating. It reads in part:

> Premier Robert Bourassa indirectly indicated agreement yesterday with a statement by his justice minister that Ottawa had exaggerated the strength of the Front de Libération du Québec.
>
> Justice Minister Jerome Choquette was quoted yesterday as describing as highly exaggerated an implication that there may have been 3,000 heavily armed revolutionaries ready to fight for Quebec independence—
>
> When pressed by reporters to say whether he considered 3,000 an exaggerated number for active FLQ members, he said: "Well, you saw the arrests, about 100 still held—you have your answer there."

We do not have to ask what is going on in the province of Quebec: it is well documented. I am sure many members from the province of Quebec are now beginning to wonder whether it is advisable to support the type of legislation now before us. This article also bears repeating because Mr. Bourassa said:

"The Conservatives and NDP know that this is a matter in Quebec's jurisdiction, yet they keep debating it. Are they pseudo-federalists, or are they federalists?"

If Mr. Bourassa wants that type of legislation, Mr. Speaker, it should be enacted by the province of Quebec. I see no good reason why we should be debating this legislation if the province of Quebec does not want it debated in this chamber. Why should we debate legislation that is not wanted by Mr. Bourassa? Why is it being forced down his throat by some members of this House?

• (9:20 p.m.)

I should like to refer briefly to an article written by Dr. Norman Alcock, head of the Canadian Peace Research Institute, under the heading, "The future: Simmering resentment, increasing polarization." One paragraph reads:

As things stand, Canada faces a future not unlike Northern Ireland today; a smouldering resentment and increasing polarization since the basic issue has not been resolved. The recent chain of events has increased, not decreased, the likelihood of our country hanging together, that is, the implementation of the War Measures Act has increased the probability of Quebec seceding from Canada.

I believe members of this House should pay considerable attention to the words of Dr. Alcock; they should mean something to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and to others in this chamber who are really concerned about civil liberties.

If legislation is needed to meet an unknown situation, let proposals go to a committee where they can be discussed in a calm and unemotional atmosphere. It has been amply shown that the War Measures Act was not necessary. It has been amply proven that the legislation before us now is not in the interest of the civil liberties of the people of this country. I am sure that if the RCMP were given the authority to go into Quebec or any other place in this country and use the Criminal Code as they know how to use it, we would not be faced with the situation which prevails in Quebec and there would be no need for the War Measures Act or for this legislation which is intended to take its place. If the Quebec government had given the RCMP authority to do something about this situation in 1963, we would not be facing this problem today.

It seems incredible that 7,000 police officers in Quebec cannot allay the anxiety that is evident in the province. It also seems incredible that those police officers should not be able to discover and put behind bars anyone who is involved in arson or sedition. This can lead only to one conclusion, that the police are not competent in the situation which faces them. It leads one to the conclusion that the desired effect has to be brought about by other means, because the police are not really in touch with the authorities in the province. It appears the elected representatives are not especially interested in social and economic affairs, in consequence of which the police are not particularly concerned with trying to catch those supposedly responsible.

There is no question that 98 per cent of the people of this country supported the invocation of the War Measures Act. Encouraged by this, the government has been as arrogant as could be in bringing in this type of bill. They have refused to accept any amendments designed to protect individuals who have been subjected to the kind of discrimination and recrimination which has been reported in the papers recently.

In Malawi recently, the president, Dr. Banda, said that idealism and realism could not ride in the same compartment: they might be in the same carriage, but they could not be in the same compartment. I suggest the government is being neither idealistic nor realistic enough to realize that we must do everything possible to preserve a democratic society in our country. Not many years ago a situation arose in British Columbia involving people who were known as the Sons of Freedom, composed of men and women who were against the authority of the government and critical of Canada as a nation. The province of British Columbia was quite able to deal with that situation with the help of the RCMP. There was no question of calling in the military to help handle the situation, though the numbers involved were far greater than those connected with what is happening in Montreal, where it seems that about 100 people are attempting to blackmail the government of Canada through terrorist action. I suggest hon. members should consider carefully what we are being asked to do in this House. If they feel obliged to accept legislation of the type the minister has put forward, they will be responsible for the consequences.

A vote against this bill, Mr. Speaker, is a vote for the return of sanity in Canada, a vote in support of a democratic society in Canada. If we want to return to law and order, we can do it under the existing legislation, the Criminal Code. We certainly do not need the type of legislation which the Minister of Justice has presented to us.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, we will find it rather difficult to support the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act, 1970, because it does not contain all we would like to see embodied in it, because it is restricted to Quebec instead of applying to all Canada.

I believe the social injustice we experience has generated the climate of barbarism we are facing. We are now seeking means to subdue rebellion in Quebec and in Canada.

The government has already admitted that the War Measures Act is too radical an instrument to be used against internal rebellions. It has therefore sought to use a more flexible, more precise, more adequate instrument, directed specifically against the F.L.Q., which has been declared an "unlawful association". We oppose barbarous acts, but we approve logical and just measures aimed at preventing that barbarity from spreading.

Shame and disgust felt by Canadians with regard to the acts of the FLQ followed a period of deep reflection shared by millions of citizens. We noticed then the deep affection of Canadians for Canada, their firm support for the federal government for invoking the War Measures Act aimed at crushing the "state of apprehended insurrection".

All of us want the Canadian government to find the means to protect the life of the citizens and the existence of democracy in Canada. Canadians know that a peaceful and prosperous Canada cannot be built by destruction. We stand among those who do not want to destroy social order because we abide by the laws of this country.

• (9:30 p.m.)

The federal government has taken action at the request of the Province of Quebec and the City of Montreal authorities. The Armed Forces have moved into Quebec at the request of the provincial authorities. Quebec is entitled to the protection of the Army when needed.

The three levels of government, federal, provincial and municipal, have taken joint action within the framework of a federal legislation and we have voted for those measures designed to halt the bloody revolution which is raging in Canada.

If this federal bill now before us was deemed today to be too harsh, and if we want to fit it better to the problem without resorting again to the War Measures Act, we have to improve it, taking into account its Canadian and federalist intent, and not making it applicable only to the province of Quebec and to one association, the FLQ.

There are members of the FLQ, not only in the province of Quebec, but in many other provinces.

Each time there is talk about a special status for Quebec, all other governments object.

We must not now give a special status to the province of Quebec on the basis of particular case. If the minister does not bring amendments to the legislation, it will be rather difficult for us to accept it. Although we want reforms and just social legislation we do not want it to apply only to one province because we live in a Confederation.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) stated that Pierre Laporte was not the first victim of the FLQ and that an innocent person, Mrs. Jeanne D'Arc Saint-Germain was killed when a bomb exploded here in Ottawa at the National Defence Headquarters. The FLQ accepted responsibility for this crime. Atrocities were not commited only in Quebec but very near Parliament. Therefore the legislation cannot apply only to the province of Quebec.

What concealed reason could urge the federal government in these circumstances to move a special legislation for the province of Quebec only?

Let the ministers be conscious of their role with regard to the whole country and not just the province of Quebec. Let this emergency legislation remain national in scope as is the case for the War Measures Act.

This is where the difficulty lies. It could be corrected immediately if everywhere in the bill, the word "Canada" were substituted for the word "Quebec".

Let us at least prove from time to time our good faith and especially in such favourable circumstances for Canadian unity, when it is a matter of protecting people's rights to live, to be free and secure.

Mr. Speaker, there is proof that Ontario, like Quebec, suffered from FLQ atrocities. There is also proof that England suffered from those atrocities through Mr. James Cross's kidnapping. Therefore this legislation should not apply only to the province of Quebec when it might prove useful to all the other provinces. This anomaly must be corrected or we must be given the reasons why this legislation is limited to Quebec only.

If the members who want a united Canada and a just society want to take advantage of such a situation to give Quebecers good reason for breaking away from confederation in order to obtain a justice which they cannot get from their federal government, it is their privilege. I wish this could be heard throughout Canada and not only by the 20 members now present here only to have a quorum!

According to the facts which have been brought to our attention, no logical reason can justify the application of this law to only one province, namely Quebec, which has already reason enough to question the unfair action taken deliberately or not by the federal authorities.

Having to put up with the unfair legislation already enacted, we should at least avoid enacting other legislation similarly designed to degrade or subjugate the French-speaking people of the province of Quebec. Long enough has the province of Quebec been used as a guinea-pig for the federal government's attempts at domination and constant encroachments upon fields of provincial jurisdiction. It is high time to put an end to this and to revert to strict recognizance of the equality of the provinces before the federal legislation, according to the solemn requirements of our present constitution as set out in the British North America Act.

A while ago, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) said that current events and the uncertainty prevailing in Canada, and particularly in Quebec, are ascribable to the deficiencies of the constitution. My reply is that it has nothing to do with the constitution, but with the stomach.

• (9:40 p.m.)

When everybody has enough to eat, we shall not need a constitution other than the one we already have and which says that all Canadians, whether they be of French or English descent, must be treated as equals. Therefore, we cannot make a better constitution than the one we already have. Therefore, our problem is not of a constitutional nature but rather of an economic one. Let us solve that problem, let us recognize, once and for all, that this economic problem can be settled, thus putting an end to all the social disturbances that we know.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Latulippe: Let us find a way to make this act applicable to Canada as a whole and not to Quebec alone.

We would thus give satisfaction to the people of Quebec and, at the same time, we would show a real sense of equity, thus ensuring harmony and justice. We will demonstrate our intent to reinforce Canadian unity not by speeches, as it has so often been the case, but by our actions. We cannot achieve Canadian unity by recriminating against each other at every opportunity.

What we say is plain enough for the government to understand our aims. The government enjoys an absolute majority in the House and it is thus in a position to give us what we are asking for. They cannot pass the responsibility of their refusal onto someone else. If the government, in its stubbornness, continues to restrict the scope of that legislation to the sole province of Quebec, their gesture will be assessed as it deserves by the coming generations for they will bear that mark forever. It is still time for them to change their line. If we have a Canadian government—or a government which pretends to be Canadian—let it pass legislation that will benefit all Canadians.

The government refused Quebec long enough the special status it has always asked. Now that we no longer want that special status because it is tainted with prejudice, this act is to be passed. Let the government beware of being deliberately stubborn and taking advantage of the absolute majority it owes the Canadian people and the province of Quebec. Precisely because it promised to achieve a just society, a united Canada, it should not now take advantage of its absolute majority to exercise it against the mandate the people gave it.

I trust the Minister of Justice is awake enough to understand what I am asking of him. Can he give me a specific answer on the problem I am explaining to him? If the government takes advantage of its absolute majority to turn a deaf ear, it will contribute further to feeding those elements of dissension amongst the people from which stems the very violence it wants to avoid through this act to provide emergency powers for the preservation of public order in Canada.

The government should understand that violence does not happen all at once. Violence can be cultivated and the means the government is using to fight it should not serve to give it new strength and new justifications. As far as we are concerned, we are serious and we claim only what we think is fair and reasonable under the circumstances. It is up to the government to decide.

We are facing at present two large ideologies, communism and capitalism. Communism, if pushed to excess, preaches the use of all means to dominate the universe one day. We do not want this system because the capitalist system is the best in the world. If we are unable, in our capitalist system, to find a solution to our problems, we will then fall under the yoke of an ideology which is complete opposite to ours.

If under the great communist ideology, three meals a day can be guaranteed to everybody, why can we not, under our capitalist system, guarantee the same thing, in freedom?

[Mr. Latulippe.]

Another very important reason justifies the application of this legislation to all of Canada, and not only to Quebec. This reason was given by the sponsor of the bill, the Minister of Justice.

On November 4, the minister made the following statement, as reported on page 883 of Hansard. I quote:

> Our criminal law was unprepared, both in substance and procedure, both operationally and philosophically, to deal with the kind of terrorist activity and violence which we have witnessed in recent weeks.
>
> It was not meant for a society wherein terror and violence suddenly became synchronized.
>
> The criminal law, as we have it now, assumes that a crime is primarily an individual act or is committed by a single individual. Our criminal law is not equipped fundamentally to deal with organized group violence or organized terrorism.

This quite sensible statement of the Minister of Justice proves that we need legislation to deal with organized violence and terrorism. But is it only in the province of Quebec that we must be ready to deal with them?

If acts of terrorism and violence are committed in other provinces, we will not be ready to take the necessary steps to deal with them. Is that what we want?

This bill should keep its national scope. Indeed, it would be logical to be ready to fight terrorism everywhere if it became necessary. Why should we be ready only in Quebec and not in the other provinces? The hon. Minister of Justice will answer me, if he feels like it.

He himself regrets certain deficiencies as regards the criminal law. The minister wants to correct them for the province of Quebec while leaving them for the other provinces. Why should it be so? Why this distinction and this discrimination?

The same deeds perpetrated in the province of Quebec will come under the special legislation and not under the Criminal Code.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Has anybody given it any real thought?

Is the position of Minister of Justice created only for the Province of Quebec or for the whole of Canada? That is the question. That is the problem that must be solved immediately, or at least, before the special legislation is passed.

We are not separatists. We don't want to become separatists. Don't force us to turn to separatism. If the minister does not want it, neither do we.

The hon. Minister of Justice is perhaps being stubborn, after having received ample warning of his responsibility to 22 million Canadians, and not merely to 6,400,000 Quebecers. It is still time to avoid a monumental blunder. Will he be wise enough to seize the opportunity offered? Sometimes there is more dignity for a man in turning back than in persisting obstinately on a road which has been recognized to be the wrong one, even after starting on it.

Opposition members and all the others are not here without a purpose. It is not to no avail that all members have the right to speak and advise in the Canadian Parliament. We are opposed to the acts of barbarism and violence which have taken place in Quebec. We want that the army and the police fight together to meet that situation.

At present we can count on part of the army and of the provincial police forces, but we are not sure that we can count on the whole army and all the police forces.

I am sure that there are at present within the army and our provincial police forces F.L.Q. members, people who are against the law. As long as we have the majority of our army and of our provincial police forces behind us, we will be able to maintain law and order, but the day will perhaps come soon where we will no longer be able to trust in them for maintaining law and order in Canada.

Fully conscious of all these facts, politicians, all the leading personalities of our country, and newspapermen all came to a standstill and meditated. But meditation still is not enough. Action is needed. Indeed, action is required against a system which is of no use to us and against the social wrongs of which we are all aware.

If we fail to do that, it will become impossible to improve the situation. The social disorders which we have now are caused by an unfair system.

What we need, Mr. Speaker, is to establish in every family, in every home, a climate of social life. We must ensure that everyone has a place to stay and three meals a day. This is how it should be in a country that abounds in resources; this is what we are struggling for, and we must get it before long, if we are to preserve our democratic institutions.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, we are now in the third reading stage of the bill to provide temporary emergency powers for the preservation of public order in Canada.

This measure is only but a temporary one since the government intends to adopt a permanent legislation later. That leads to believe that the government did not really mean to replace the War Measures Act that is outmoded and antiquated, by a modern legislative instrument, suitable to the new conditions and the new way of making war, namely terrorism.

The government misled us and introduced this legislation under false pretences, so today the Canadian people are rejecting it.

When the government, taking advantage of the unanimous consent of the House brought forward the War Measures Act for immediate approval it publicly undertook then to introduce in the near future a new and modern piece of legislation whose main characteristic would be that of being permanent. But to our deep disappointment, the government is not honouring its commitment but is putting it off indefinitely. Instead, it introduced this wretched provisional bill which, with a few exceptions, is not so different from the legislation proclaimed on October 16, except that it carries us back 100 years and puts Quebec in a straitjacket.

The government waited more than three weeks before introducing a provisional bill which is quite similar to the War Measures Act.

During the worst part of the crisis which shook the country in October, the government proclaimed the War Measures Act to fight against the illegal and murderous activities of the Front de Libération du Québec.

We then supported the government, because we recognized—as we still do—the danger which the FLQ represents for the future of democracy in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada.

There was some consensus that the War Measures Act was not adequate under the circumstances. The problem is not an easy one to solve.

Faced with dishonourable and pitiless men who go as far as kidnapping two persons and basely murdering one of them to achieve their political goals, the Canadian government and Parliament, as democratic institutions in the highest sense of the word, should always remain vigilant. Extraordinary circumstances call for extraordinary measures to protect our institutions, society and our innocent fellow-citizens.

That being said, one fact remains: laws designed to cure an evil must not create an even greater one.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. minister rising on a point of order?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

I wonder whether the House would agree to sit a little later tonight in order to close the debate.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Bell: We are willing to carry on.

[Translation]

An hon. Member: No, we still have six members who want to speak.

Mr. Speaker: I must ask for the unanimous consent of the House, and I am not sure of having heard "no".

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We agree, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I do not believe there is unanimous consent.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

I just heard "no", which means that we cannot go on with our business. The hon. member's consent came too late. Some of our colleagues have already indicated that they do not agree to have the debate continued after 10 o'clock.

* * *

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I think it is fairly important that we have an indication from some privileged soul on the other side concerning our business for tomorrow.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the Parliamentary Secretary to the House Leader already gave an indication of what the business would be for tomorrow.

Mr. Bell: May I ask whether we might be assured that this legislation will not come up tomorrow?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I do not know what we can be assured of tonight, but I understand it is to be the CNR financing bill tomorrow.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—FARM MACHINERY PRICE INCREASES PROPOSED BY WHITE MOTOR COMPANY

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, on November 16 I directed the following question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford):

In view of the fact that farm machinery prices of the White Motor Company, formerly known as Cockshutt, are, as indicated by that company, liable to be increased by 7 per cent on all sales made in 1971, will the minister indicate whether he will refer this to the Prices and Incomes Commission—

• (10:00 p.m.)

The following was a supplementary question to the minister:

Will the minister tell this House and the people of Canada whether he is prepared to take the initiative of inquiring into the profits of these farm machinery companies?

The minister replied to my original question that the company would be expected to comply with the pricing criteria agreed upon last February, but should they raise prices in the manner suggested by me, the Prices and Incomes Commission would examine it. In answer to my supplementary question, the minister said:

I do not understand the question, Mr. Speaker. The Prices and Incomes Commission made it very clear that companies which increase their prices above the pricing criteria agreed upon will be investigated.

[Mr. Speaker.]

The minister said he did not understand my question. I would like to assure him that the farmers understand the question that I asked. The farmers know why they are having this difficulty. They know who is really controlling farm machinery prices, and the Barber commission also knows what is going on. The Barber commission report on farm machinery prices dealt with the pricing mechanism; it said there is collusion and interference by multinational corporations, there is lack of consumer protection by the government and there are some things which are downright illegal. This is the opinion of the Barber Royal Commission on Farm Machinery Prices.

The minister said the company would be expected to comply with the pricing criteria agreed upon last February, but the Barber report noted that to an important degree these multinational corporations are independent of the national authority of individual countries. No authority exists which can exercise control over farm machinery companies; therefore, the words of assurance of the minister have a hollow ring.

Dr. Barber recommended that the government should ask the Combines Investigation Branch to review the commission's findings and discuss them with their counterparts in the United States, Britain and other countries with a view to possible action. Dr. Barber further recommended that if the companies are unco-operative, the government may wish to negotiate with some low-cost producers who are not now in the Canadian market. Surely the minister understands the phrase "consumer costs". Surely he realizes that if the White Motor Company, better known as Cockshutt, is contemplating a 7 per cent increase on 1971 farm machinery, now is the time to act.

I suggest that the minister should move today in regard to the Prices and Incomes Commission. He should instruct the commission to initiate, or perhaps the minister himself could initiate, an investigation under the Combines Investigation Act. We are all fully aware of the fact that another country tried to import tractors into this country and in too many instances met with a closed door. One such case is that of the tractors that the U.S.S.R. attempted to import into Canada. A short article in the newspaper suggested that Agriweek disputed findings of the royal commission on farm machinery. The article reads:

It reported last January that Canadian farmers are being forced by large international companies to pay too much for tractors and implements.

"Particularly peculiar" said Agriweek, "is the origin of the tractors which we offered as the solution to the farmer's plight.

We know that the farmers in this country are being policed by recognized international machinery companies. We also know that other tractors could be imported into Canada at a lower price than those now being offered for sale to the Canadian agricultural producer. I think the obligation rests upon the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to initiate an investigation into farm machinery prices, in order that the tractor buyer will be protected from this type of fleecing by international farm machinery companies. I do not think it is asking too much that this type of action be initiated in order to protect the Canadian consumer.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in replying on behalf of the minister I would say that pursuant to the minister's statement of November 16 in reply to the hon. member, the Prices and Incomes Commission has inquired into the situation. As hon. members may be aware, the first steps taken by the Prices and Incomes Commission when it receives a report of a proposed price increase is to check with the company to determine if the report is true. If the answer is in the affirmative, a preliminary investigation is initiated. If the preliminary report warrants it, a full-scale investigation is conducted, followed by a published report on the situation. Nothing more can usefully be said at this time. However, the hon. member is aware, of course, of the minister's determination to concern himself actively with allegations of this kind.

[Translation]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—ESTABLISHMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION TO STUDY ATTITUDE FOLLOWING RECENT EVENTS IN QUEBEC

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, on November 23 past, I asked the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) to appoint a royal commission to investigate the CBC French network with regard to the crisis which occurred recently in Quebec and terrorism in general.

At that time the Secretary of State did not give me a satisfactory answer. This is why I should like tonight to ask him the question again.

In my opinion, the French network of the CBC is a controlled agency which does not give an objective information to the extent that it becomes sometimes dishonest. It has become the voice of the revolution however it is a Crown corporation towards which every Canadian citizen pays taxes without having any control on it.

CBC totally ignores the positive side of our democracy, our institutions and our public men but gives the people a false image of the truth to serve its purpose. Besides, since the Canadian people pay taxes, they are entitled to more respect from the CBC.

Mr. Speaker, CBC has become an ivory tower. It is an untouchable organization and more over a national shame. We want a full enquiry and a complete reform of the CBC, and a real clean-up. We want CBC to serve all the Canadian people and not only the revolutionary forces. We demand a complete investigation on the activities and the operations of the CBC French network so that the French Canadians have the same good quality service as our English speaking friends.

We want to know how CBC spends so indiscriminately public money allowing for instance exorbitant expense accounts.

Mr. Speaker, this is a shameless waste of money at the service of violence and terrorism.

I think Quebecers and all Canadians have a right to full information. In view of the fact that the CBC is a Crown corporation and a public service we would like it to be a public service and not to be only at the service of certain private interests.

This is why we are doing our utmost to obtain the appointment of a Royal Commission that will allow Canadians to know what is going on in this ivory tower since the Secretary of State denies us any kind of information in this regard.

Mr. Hugh Faulkner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as we know, according to the Canadian Broadcasting Act the C.R.T.C. may sponsor research relating to any aspect of broadcasting.

Under another section of the act, the C.R.T.C. may inquire and hold a public hearing following a complaint by a person or a group of persons with respect to any matter within the powers of the commission.

I do not think that the C.R.T.C., up to now, has actually received any complaint concerning the matter with which the hon. member dealt. As the Secretary of State said in the House, the C.R.T.C. has asked some stations for the tapes or transcriptions pertaining to some programs, in conformity with section 4(5) of the C.R.T.C. regulations and with the provisions of the Broadcasting Act.

• (10:10 p.m.)

[English]

AGRICULTURE—ALLEGED LOSS OF QUOTAS BY WESTERN CANADA DAIRY FARMERS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, today I asked a question of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) concerning the declining dairy quotas. I asked the minister if he would intervene to reverse this situation before the dairy industry suffers irreparable loss. In his reply the minister referred to the question as "an erroneous preamble which makes it impossible to answer". He went on to say that no one in western Canada has lost a dairy quota unless he has given it up.

Mr. Speaker, from the hon. gentleman who is responsible for agriculture in this country I found the lack of reply and the manner in which it was delivered very disconcerting. I can understand why at the Liberal party conference at the weekend the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) made an impassioned plea to delegates to have greater concern for agriculture because the government was weak in agricultural policy. He was putting it mildly, in light of the situation to which I have referred.

I notice that at the same conference the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said he was humble about agriculture. I suppose the comment on that remark would be that he has much to be humble about. But he further said that the Minister of Agriculture keeps him fully informed, so I can understand the Prime Minister's difficulty in this respect in light of the answer I received today. Obviously, we have a real problem in agriculture and I am not just drawing this difficulty out of the air. The Department of Agriculture in Manitoba stated, as reported in the Manitoba Co-operator:

> —his department is concerned when a quota is not used by a producer who has gone out of the business. This means, essentially, that the quota has been lost to the province and, if too many quotas are lost, the dairy industry in Manitoba will suffer.

I paraphrased that statement almost in toto in the question I asked today. I refer, also, to the report issued by the Department of Agriculture on the congress taking place at the moment. The report, dated November 25, states:

> The National Dairy Council of Canada warned that a continuation of the present federal government policy "may be expected to result in further production declines and could lead to an over-all shortage of milk.

It states, further:

> The council says "it would seem prudent... to refrain from adoption of policies which would further diminish production and to press forward as rapidly as possible with new product development, sales promotion and educational programs, and pricing policies designed to encourage a maximum consumption of dairy foods."

I think that is a very responsible basis for the question I asked today. It may be true, as the minister implied, that there is no drastic drop at the moment and there is no drastic redistribution as between east and west, but when the policy was first introduced there was a drastic drop and a drastic transfer of quota allocation between east and west. This is another example of the failure of the government to take into consideration the regional differences that exist in this country, Mr. Speaker.

I refer, also, to the Financial Outlook Bulletin issued by the government, which points out that in 1967-68 there were 165,000 producers in the dairy business in Canada, and in 1969-70 the number of producers had dropped to 114,400. So there is a major problem. In the west it has meant that 10,000 farm families have been driven off the land.

There is a complete failure by the government to take into consideration the social and human aspects of the problem because of their desire to deal in an arbitrary manner with the supply-management problem. This is causing a decline in rural communities and it is creating problems in urban communities. This policy was reversed when it was found to be contributing to the decline in the rural situation. I urge the minister and the government to follow the recommendations of the Canadian Agricultural Congress and to establish a realistic policy for the dairy industry of Canada which is facing a real crisis.

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) is president of the Agricultural Congress. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) appears to imply that it has been the deliberate policy of the Canadian Dairy Commission to transfer subsidy eligibility quotas from western Canada to eastern Canada. This is not correct. Subsidy quotas have never been allocated on a regional basis. They are now, and always have been, allocated on the basis of individual farmers, and the rules and procedures are, and have been, the same in all parts of Canada.

To deal with the charge made by the hon. member it is necessary to go back over the history of subsidy quotas. These were first issued in 1967. At that point they were based on each producer's deliveries in the preceding year, with one important exception. The exception was that a shipper who had delivered less than 50,000 pounds of milk, or 1,750 pounds of butterfat, in 1966 was given a quota for 1,750 pounds of butterfat in 1967. Because of the large number of small shippers in the Prairie provinces, this resulted in the total of the quotas given to producers in those three provinces being very much greater than their deliveries in the previous year.

In 1966, manufacturing milk and cream shippers in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba had delivered 64.4 million pounds of butterfat. The total of the quotas given to those producers in 1967 was 126.8 million pounds of butterfat, almost twice as great, in total, as their deliveries in the previous year. In Ontario and Quebec the same class of producers had delivered 267.6 million pounds of butterfat and they were given quotas for 1967 for 299.6 million pounds. In brief, shippers in the Prairie provinces were given 1967 quotas 97 per cent greater, in total, than their total 1966 deliveries, while the 1967 quotas for Ontario and Quebec producers were only 12 per cent more than their 1966 deliveries.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Parliamentary Secretary, but his time expired at least a minute ago.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, November 27, 1970

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

WAYS AND MEANS

DESIGNATION OF ORDER OF THE DAY TO DEBATE WAYS AND MEANS MOTION

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 60(2) I should like to request the designation of an Order of the Day for the consideration of a ways and means motion so that I may make a budget presentation on Thursday next at eight p.m.

* * *

[Translation]

SHIPBUILDING

ANNOUNCEMENT OF EXTENSION PROGRAM

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce an extension of the government's national program for shipbuilding which will help shipbuilders throughout Canada to obtain export orders.

As hon. members are aware, shipbuilding activity in Canadian yards has been at a low level this year despite the support available for the construction of Canadian flag vessels for domestic use. Employment has seriously declined and will continue to do so.

At the same time the international market for ships has strengthened. Demand has more than doubled since 1965 and is now running at some $15 billion per year on the world basis. The extension of government assistance to the industry which I am announcing today is designed to help our yards share in this strong market.

To penetrate the international market it is important for Canadian shipbuilders to achieve lower unit costs. Multiple unit production is one of the ways to improve cost performance. To this end the government has decided on a temporary program of support for the building of ships for export.

The program will apply to firm export orders received by Canadian shipyards prior to June 30, 1972. Support will be granted to shipyards up to an amount of 17 per cent of the audited costs of a ship built for export and under 40,000 deadweight tons. For ships over 40,000 deadweight tons the support will amount to 14 per cent of audited costs. The rate of this temporary assistance will decline after September 30, 1971 by ½ of 1 per cent per quarter. In determining the base for support, profits will be excluded. Detailed information as to the various conditions of government assistance will be announced in regulations to be issued in the near future. The necessary approval of Parliament will be sought shortly.

I understand that as much as $300 million worth of export orders representing over 14,000 man years of employment for this mainly Canadian-owned and operated industry may be available to competitive Canadian shipyards which can offer early delivery.

[English]

I trust that the government's decision to give this special temporary support will help to maintain employment during the period until the domestic shipbuilding market strengthens. I hope that the activity generated will place our yards in a better position to bid for continuing export as well as domestic business. It is not intended that during the life of this program our industry should overexpand in relation to anticipated long-term demand.

I believe that the expected higher level of business will help our yards further to diversify their production and reduce vulnerability to fluctuations in the demand for vessels. It is significant that a number of our yards are already producing efficiently a wide variety of heavy equipment.

• (11:10 a.m.)

In recent years Canadian shipyards have improved their competitive competence and product capability and have increased their productivity and lowered their costs. This process has been facilitated by government policies directed toward the encouragement of a healthy and viable industry. The modernization of shipyards has been encouraged under the programs of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and support for such modernization and diversification will be continued.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to file a copy in both official languages of my statement and the press release on the shipbuilding expansion program.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, we of the Official Opposition welcome the statement the minister has made in the House today on this most important matter. I did not realize that the question I directed to him yesterday would get him going so quickly, but I thank him for doing so.

Shipbuilding subsidies were introduced by the former government under the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) as a program to assist the industry in this country to become competitive with foreign shipyards. As we all know, to the end of 1969 the subsidy amounted to 25 per cent but under the present plan will decline to 17 per cent by 1973.

I commend the minister for the step he is taking to assist our shipyards in getting into the export market. This is important, but it is only a stopgap measure and something of greater permanence must be brought forward. I commend to him, as I did yesterday, the recommendations of the Robertson Committee on Shipbuilding. As he pointed out, there are 21 recommendations in that report. Among them is a recommendation that subsidies on commercial shipbuilding remain at 23 per cent for deliveries prior to June 30, 1973.

Also of importance are the subsidies under the Department of Fisheries and Forestry in respect of fishing trawlers. These must also be maintained because of their importance.

I think the minister and the government should take cognizance of recommendation No. 1 of the Robertson Committee Report:

> That the government develop, formulate and state a maritime policy that will ensure fulfilment of Canada's maritime interests, and that it establish appropriate organizational arrangements for continuous implementation of that policy.

I always believe in starting at the beginning so I commend recommendation No. 1 to the minister. We welcome the assistance in respect of export markets and we look forward to a permanent maritime policy which will help the shipbuilding industry of this country. The measures taken are helpful but a permanent policy must be forthcoming at an early date to assist in solving the unemployment problem. As the minister has said, activity in Canadian shipbuilding yards has been at a low level this year. The only way it can be brought to a higher, permanent level is by the government coming forward with a permanent and complete maritime policy.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have no congratulations for the minister or the government today because, after all, what does one say to a government which after systematically running around for the last two years destroying the economy now comes forward with some measures to make up for the destruction it has caused? Over and over again we have pointed out the high cost of unemployment to this country and the inability of adjustments to take place as a result of the deliberate unemployment policies of the government.

The government panicked. The government created unemployment in a futile effort to control inflation. It has not been successful in controlling inflation and its unemployment policies have been absolutely damaging to the economy. Then the government comes to the House of Commons, yesterday with a shirt policy and today with this measure in respect of shipbuilding, and expects to be congratulated. Their actions remind me of their campaign teams during the last election. They had one team putting up signs and another team tearing them down. That is the kind of arrangement they have now. They have one group trying to regulate the economy and they have another group which is trying to put the sticks together—

[Mr. MacEwan.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has the floor for the purpose of commenting on the statement made to the House and not to make the kind of speech he is now making. If the hon. member will consult the Standing Orders he will know that he has no right to make this kind of speech.

Mr. Saltsman: Thank you for the advice, Mr. Speaker. I was merely attempting to put the statement before us in the proper context. Having made those remarks, I think it is necessary that we move in this direction but only because of the damage that has been caused to the economy and the need to repair some of it. If anything good can be said about this measure it is simply that it is much better to encourage the shipyards in this way than with another Bonaventure.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, the minister has just announced a program intended to attract international contracts estimated at up to $300 million, and representing 14,000 men-years of work during the next five years.

Mr. Speaker, some people take pleasure in playing on words, just as they do with our Canadian dollars when dealing with foreigners.

Although our coastline is nearly three times the circumference of the world, although we have the largest inland sea in the world and the most beautiful river, because of an irresponsible policy we have no Canadian clients.

To remedy the situation, the government is endeavouring to take over part of the market. It is setting out to conquer world markets, in an attempt to find companies or foreign countries willing to buy a few ships from Canada.

Finally, a few workers will be in a position to take advantage of the new jobs created under this program. Unfortunately, it is again a program aimed at creating jobs for water-carriers because we have neglected that sector of our economy and waited until there was a general paralysis. By putting that program into effect, the government will give with one hand and tax with the other.

The program will apply to firm orders received by Canadian shipyards before June 30, 1972. The shipyards will receive assistance which could reach up to 17 per cent of the controlled cost of a ship built for exportation purposes, etc.

Since Canada no longer owns too many ships, the population will have to pay to keep the few jobs still existing in the shipyards.

I am pleased as are the shipyards owners who will benefit from the program. The members of the Ralliement Créditiste rejoice with the workers who still have a job and those who will be hired under this program. Unfortunately, we must recognize that the program is very limited as compared with the possibilities existing in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I seize the opportunity to ask the minister to consider other programs so that the country could be equipped with a merchant marine similar to the one it had a hundred years ago.

* * *

[English]

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

On the order: Introduction of Bills:

November 24, 1970—Mr. Saltsman—Bill intituled: "An Act to establish a Canada Development Corporation".

Mr. Speaker: I think I should bring to the attention of the hon. member and the House that after a quick look at the bill proposed by the hon. member I have serious reservations about it and will not put the motion at this time. The hon. member may wish to give some thought to the possible financial implications of the bill. As he knows, of course, the measure proposed for the consideration of the House under the title "An Act to establish a Canada Development Corporation" is, perhaps by coincidence, substantially the same as the bill assented to on April 24, 1970 under the title "An Act to Establish the International Development Research Centre". As the hon. member is aware, that bill had been preceded by a royal recommendation and I am rather suspicious that this would be required in this instance, although an effort obviously has been made by the hon. member to eliminate the most obvious financial implications of the bill.

• (11:20 a.m.)

If the hon. member will look at some of the clauses, in particular clause 11 or at any rate the clause which provides for the appointment of officers and agents and employees, he will detect, as I do, a faint odour of money in this clause. I have some doubts regarding the opening of a bank account and the payment of sums out of such bank account. I doubt whether the hon. member has succeeded in his imaginative efforts to remove all financial implications from the bill.

I do not want to be unfair to the hon. member. I would like to have a serious look at the bill and, if possible, give the hon. member the benefit of the doubt. Perhaps on Monday next the hon. member might have an opportunity to explain to the House his point of view and indicate why he thinks I may be in error in suggesting that this bill has financial implications.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE BUDGET

FORM OF PRESENTATION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the rather welcome announcement on motions by the Minister of Finance, would he advise the House whether his budget will be in the usual form and contain the usual budget resolutions requiring lengthy legislative consideration by the House?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult for me to say what is going to be in the budget at this time. If resolutions are necessary, of course we will present them in the ordinary way.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Without trying to delve into the contents of the budget in detail, may I ask the minister to advise us whether the budget proposals will include any reference to the white paper on taxation and the subject matters and recommendations contained in that document?

CONSULTATIONS WITH PROVINCIAL OFFICIALS—BRIEFING OF PARTY REPRESENTATIVES PRIOR TO PRESENTATION

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): May I ask the Minister of Finance whether he has consulted with the provincial representatives in this matter and, if so, when he commenced his consultations with them?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): The officials of the provincial governments have been here for the last couple of days talking about the meeting of Ministers of Finance which is to take place in a couple of weeks. I believe my officials pointed out some of the problems in the economy and this sort of thing to them but did not refer to the specific matters in the budget.

Mr. Saltsman: Will the minister make arrangements for the respective party representatives and research staff to be briefed in confidence prior to the budget presentation, similar to the privilege given to the news media?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I will follow the same practice that was followed last time when we presented the white paper whereby one or two representatives of each party were briefed. I will try to arrange this. However, I do not think we can move to the stage where we have research staff and other people briefed as well. This would create an impossible situation. I think the question is, who is allowed into the so-called secret press briefing and who is not.

EFFECT OF POSSIBLE CHANGES ON UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): In view of the fact that the spin-off effects of whatever changes in economic policy are made now will not have an effect on unemployment levels this winter, is the government reconsidering its position with regard to the immediate raising of unemployment insurance payments?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): My hon. friend has arrived at an interesting conclusion without knowing what is in the budget. I could not arrive at the same conclusion.

[Translation]

ALLEGED ABOLITION OF SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance a supplementary question.

Since the government apparently intends to repeal the sales tax on building materials will this measure be retroactive?

Mr. Speaker: I draw the attention of the hon. member to the fact that his question is hypothetical.

[English]

POSSIBLE CONTROL OF BANK PROFITS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that three banks have now announced substantial increases in profits, is the Minister of Finance giving consideration to any control over bank profits in developing his policy statement for next week?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, according to long-standing custom of the House I really cannot say what I am going to include in my statement next week.

* * *

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—APPLICATION BY SOUTH AFRICA FOR MEMBERSHIP

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the hon. Minister of National Defence.

Can he tell us whether he is aware of a request from South Africa to become a member of NATO and which position Canada intends to take in the matter?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of such a request, but it seems evident that South Africa is not located within the North Atlantic region.

Mr. Laprise: I wish to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Can the minister tell us if there have been any talks between NATO and South Africa about the protection of the Cape route and the Indian Ocean against Soviet ships on the Indian Ocean?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there have been talks on this subjects and I doubt that there will be any.

* * *

[English]

AUDITOR GENERAL

SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OF BILL

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of the universal opposition, he will now agree to withdraw Bill C-190?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not know if the hon. member is seriously suggesting this, Mr. Speaker. As the House knows, the bill was drawn up by the government following the directions given to it by the committee chaired by a Conservative member and of which, I understand, the member asking the question was also a member. If it is the desire of the House to withdraw this bill, we will certainly give it most serious consideration, but it seems to me the opposition is in the curious position of reproaching the government for drawing a bill which follows exactly the instructions given to it by the committee.

Mr. Baldwin: Is the Prime Minister not aware that this party, irrespective of the views of the committee, was, is and still will be totally opposed to the principles of this bill? I would also like to ask the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Baldwin: I would also like to ask the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Baldwin: —if he will agree—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows the reservations which the Chair has about asking questions about a bill on the order paper, discussion of which has not yet been reached. That is clearly anticipating a government order. I allowed the hon. member to ask the question because I felt guilty about having disallowed his questions so often, but I suggest we should not enter into a debate at this point.

Mr. Trudeau: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Baldwin: On the point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Prime Minister rises on a question of privilege. I believe a question of privilege has precedence over the hon. member's point of order.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member put on the record that the government knows that the opposition are opposed to this bill. I do not know how we could know—

Mr. MacInnis: That is not privilege.

Mr. Horner: That is no point of privilege.

Mr. Trudeau: The privilege is that we are told we know something—

Mr. Diefenbaker: That's a mistake.

Mr. Trudeau: —and I say we cannot possibly know it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the only basis on which we could know the opposition's position is the way its members voted unanimously in the committee and recommended this bill.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, the point of order which Your Honour raised is quite correct, but I submit I am entitled to ask general questions without going into details of the bill. I ask the Prime Minister, is he now prepared to bring the bill forward for immediate discussion so that we can settle once and for all whether the autocratic tendencies to stifle criticism of the Prime Minister or the views of the taxpayers are prevail?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that the question as asked is not in order and should not be asked.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. member for Prince Albert.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

EXPRESSION OF APPRECIATION TO ARMED FORCES FOR MANNER IN WHICH PROMINENT PERSONS GUARDED

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I feel sure that the question I wish to direct to the Minister of National Defence will receive the support of all hon. members who have had members of the armed forces present at their homes during recent weeks. While yet unconvinced that the course was necessary I would ask the minister, on behalf of all who had members of the forces at their homes, to convey to the Canadian Armed Forces thanks and appreciation for the manner in which all ranks have discharged their responsibility beyond the actual call of duty and to let them know that their efficiency and courtesy during difficult days and under uncomfortable circumstances have done honour to them and to our country.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the right hon. gentleman having raised the question and I should like to say that I will be most happy to convey his commendation to the forces. Perhaps no compliment to our armed forces could be conveyed to them more felicitously than in the words of the right hon. gentleman and I shall be very pleased to pass it on.

ARMED FORCES—ANNOUNCEMENT OF PAY INCREASES—ENCOURAGEMENT OF RE-ENLISTMENT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. If you will permit me, I should like to thank him for the news with respect to pay raises for the armed forces which we heard this morning. While we welcome the raises, I should like to ask whether the minister could indicate to the House what special considerations were given in the structure of the pay increases to encourage a higher rate of re-enlistment?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to confirm that effective October 1, 1970, there will be an increase of 6.06 per cent in the salary of members of the armed forces of the rank of colonel and below. Some of the specific provisions will be with regard to those specialties in which there is a special need to keep competitive with the private area. I refer particularly to some aircrew and airborne staff, and also with regard to sea and air duty. There will be increases in the allowances available in those areas to assure that those particular specialties do not fall behind.

Mr. Forrestall: Because it is quite apparent that the minister has not addressed himself to the question of incentive bonuses, can the minister indicate to the House if this current series of pay increases is in any way designed to narrow the disparity that exists between pay increases to the armed forces over the last eight or ten years compared with pay increases to the Public Service over the same period?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the hon. member's conclusion. I would point out that particularly in the case of certain groups such as air crew and submariners and also other specialist tradesmen there has been a specific increase beyond the increases made available to the forces generally. With regard to the general position of the armed forces, the government has had under review for the period of the past year a series of proposals to try, in the first place, to bring the manner of remunerating the armed forces into close comparison both with the Public Service generally and with the private sector. We hope to have this review completed in time for the increases which might come into effect in the next calendar year. At that time efforts will be made to put them on a comparable basis.

* * *

AUDITOR GENERAL

REPORTED DISSATISFACTION OF STAFF MEMBERS WITH SALARIES

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. Is the minister aware of reports of dissatisfaction among the staff of the Auditor General which reportedly resulted in a meeting of members of the staff this week over their present wage and salary scales? If so, would he look into this matter which it seems to me may further handicap the work of the Auditor General?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the question of the administrative arrangements governing the staff of the Auditor General was quite extensively investigated last spring by the Public Accounts Committee and the record of their proceedings is quite clear. If there are additional items to which the hon. member refers, I should be glad to have the details and inquire into them.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

SHARING OF DECISIONS AFFECTING JOB CLASSIFICATIONS WITH EMPLOYEES—AMENDMENT OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, since the government has had a week to digest some of the decisions of the recent Liberal party conference, is the President of the Treasury Board considering the amendment of the Public Service Staff Relations Act to allow decisions affecting classifications and job descriptions, now the sole prerogative of the government, to be shared with its employees?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is quite correct. The government is now reviewing the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, this is welcome news, but in view of the fact that many CR positions in the government service are being reclassified and reduced at the present time, does the minister not feel that this procedure makes a farce of the whole collective bargaining process?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question is of a highly argumentative nature and cannot be accepted.

* * *

[Translation]

TRADE

PURCHASE BY JAPAN OF RAW MATERIALS OR FINISHED PRODUCTS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Recently, the minister announced that he will head the ministerial and industrial Canadian delegation to Japan. I would like to ask him if, in addition to promoting the sale of crude Canadian ore, he will also attempt to interest the Japanese representatives in buying our finished products, which would be more useful, I think, for the Canadian economy.

[English]

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the commission is to discuss all facets of mining relating to the relationship between the Japanese purchasing agencies, private and public, and in Canada, with respect to both the private and public sector. Certainly we will be considering finished products and raw materials as well as investment policies.

POST OFFICE

COMMEMORATIVE STAMP TO HONOUR WILLIAM HAMILTON MERRITT

Mr. H. Gordon Barrett (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I wish at this time to bring to the attention of hon. members that today, November 27, is the 141st anniversary of a date significant in the history of Canada—the passage of the first ship through the Welland Canal which had been built through pioneering—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask a question.

Mr. Barrett: The question is, Mr. Speaker, that in recent years the government has recognized outstanding Canadians by the issuance of commemorative postage stamps. I should like to ask the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Post Office if the name of Canada's father of transportation, Mr. William Hamilton Merritt—

An hon. Member: Merritt or Barrett?

Mr. Barrett: —would be considered as deserving of this honour in the future?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. The commemoration of this outstanding Canadian by means of a postage stamp will be given the most sympathetic consideration when a suitable anniversary occurs, which would be on a 50th anniversary or a multiple of that figure.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since Monday is St. Andrew's Day, will the minister give consideration to emulating the Soviet Union by bringing out a stamp to honour Robert Burns?

* * *

LABOUR RELATIONS

GENERAL MOTORS STRIKE, STE. THÉRÈSE—ACTION TO EXPEDITE SETTLEMENT

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour I should like to address a question to his Parliamentary Secretary. Has the minister offered the services of his department to assist in settling the General Motors strike in Ste. Thérèse, in light of the consequences for the future of a very serious national strike and its effect on language development in Canada?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): The hon. member is aware of course, Mr. Speaker, that this matter is under provincial jurisdiction. At the same time, I am sure he appreciates the deep concern of the minister with industrial unrest wherever it occurs in Canada, and I shall report the hon. member's question to the minister.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DESTROYER CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM—TREASURY BOARD APPROVAL

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. Did the Treasury Board approve a full go ahead on the destroyer escort program?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Treasury Board has in the past authorized such things as are necessary to be authorized to enable the destroyers to be constructed.

Mr. Bell: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, concerning the matter of extra defence costs. Is there any evidence that if the Minister of National Defence does not get his way in such matters he will disembowel himself as the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Spadina.

* * *

URBAN AFFAIRS

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR MASS TRANSIT SYSTEMS

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for urban affairs. Would the minister inform the House whether the government intends to set up a fund in order to help the cities to improve their mass transit systems?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, no such specific decision on such a specific program has been agreed upon yet. The whole question of assistance to the cities, in co-operation with provincial governments, is a matter that will be assigned to the new ministry that is to be created. This, among many other matters, will be discussed with our provincial counterparts.

Mr. Ryan: Has there been any decision to assist the city of Montreal with the extension of its subway system?

Mr. Andras: Not specifically to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—MEETING WITH PROVINCE RESPECTING NEW SITE—PROTECTION AGAINST LAND SPECULATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a related question to the minister. Some time ago, I believe last week, the Minister of Transport indicated that he intended meeting with Premier Robarts with regard to Toronto's second international airport. Considering the minister's interest in urban growth, may I ask him whether this meeting has taken place and has resulted in the necessary safeguards to prevent speculation? If so, when can we expect an announcement regarding the definite sites which are being considered?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, there is consultation between my colleague, the Minister of Transport, and myself on this matter. However, I think the question should properly be posed to him when he returns to the House.

* * *

PENSIONS

OLD AGE SECURITY—MEANING OF GOVERNOR GENERAL'S RECOMMENDATION ON NOTICE PAPER

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Government House Leader. Would the minister filling this role take a look at page iv of the notice paper attached to today's order paper and see whether there is a typographical error. There is a recommendation there that suggests that the basic old age pension is to be raised to $80 a month, which is only 42 cents more than the amount now being paid. Surely this must be an error.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—ALLEGED BEATING OF PERSONS ARRESTED

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Solicitor General. In light of the report that has been in the possession of the Quebec ombudsman regarding beatings of persons arrested under the War Measures Act, has the minister inquired of Quebec ministers whether the officer responsible has been arrested or suspended. If not, what action has the Solicitor General taken?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I assume the hon. member is referring to the press reports of part of the evidence before the coroner's court. If he is, he will recall that the Minister of Justice of Quebec indicated that he was having that allegation investigated. He made that indication almost immediately after the item was reported in the press.

Mr. Fairweather: Is the Solicitor General or is the Minister of Justice following this case on a daily basis, or is the minister relying on the results of the Quebec investigation?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the matter is within the responsibilities of the Quebec Attorney General and not of the federal authority. It is my understanding, as indicated in the House by the Minister of Justice, that that minister has been in communication with the Minister of Justice of Quebec over the matter. I am not in possession of the detailed information as to whether this continues daily, or how it is arranged.

Inquiries of the Ministry

WAR MEASURES ACT—ARRESTS, RELEASES, CONTINUING DETENTIONS AND CHARGES

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as the matter of arrests in Quebec is before the House may I give the House information on the latest statistics, which I think will be of interest. The total number arrested is 454. The total number released to date is 403. Of the remainder of 51, two have been sentenced by the courts, 48 have been charged with various offences and their cases are before the courts, and one person is being detained who has not yet been charged. That person was arrested earlier this week and the matter of whether to charge him or not was being considered last night. I do not know the result.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to ask as a result of the minister's supplementary information. Has he had the opportunity to check out the question that I asked first of the Minister of Justice and second of the Solicitor General about the number of people among the 403 who have been released who might have lost their jobs solely as the result of the original apprehension?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker, I have not been able to obtain that information yet.

WAR MEASURES ACT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON TREATMENT OF PERSONS HELD IN JAIL

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Solicitor General. Would he in the near future make a complete statement to the House on the treatment of persons being held in jails so that the public will be informed about these matters and about how these investigations have been conducted?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite clear as to just what the hon. member is referring to, in view of the work of the committee that has been reviewing these matters at the request of the Quebec Minister of Justice. I shall see if it is possible to gather together the information that already has been mostly given in this House on the point and add anything to it that can usefully be added.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Because of the responsibility of the federal government for bringing in the War Measures Act and because of the degree to which people are concerned about evidence that ill treatment is being handed out, does the minister receive reports from day to day from this committee appointed by the government of the province of Quebec dealing with specific cases?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman started his question by saying, "Because of the federal government having enacted the measure—"

Mr. Diefenbaker: No. It has not enacted it yet; not the new measure.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Mr. McIlraith: Well, he referred to action taken under an Act of the federal Parliament. The position of any person under that Act is exactly the same, of course, as that of any person arrested under the Criminal Code. It is a federal statute and the responsibility—and I wish to repeat this—the primary responsibility for its administration remains and must remain with the provincial authorities. The right hon. member spoke about information on a day to day basis. I do not think it is fair to say that it is given on a day to day basis. Nevertheless, we have a very close working relationship and do obtain information regularly throughout the period involved.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, now that the minister has admitted that the government does obtain information concerning the allegations being made, will he tell the House whether or not the allegations of cruelty and inhumane treatment in specific cases have been looked into and whether the government of Canada thinks there is no justification for so doing on the basis of the information which the government has received from or on behalf of the committee?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I was not sufficiently clear a moment ago. The allegation of inhumane treatment, or whatever term the right hon. gentleman used, was in evidence given in an open Quebec court. It was the evidence of one witness and was not, so far as I know, countered; nor was an opportunity given to deal with that evidence by way of rebuttal or otherwise. Consequently I am not in a position to say whether the allegations have any substance in them or not. The investigation of that matter is going on under the responsibility of and is being conducted by the proper authorities of the government of the province concerned.

Mr. Fairweather: But the minister is privy to that information.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I have no responsibility in relation to that investigation that is going on and do not have detailed information on it. I assume that we will be able to obtain what information can properly be given at the conclusion of the report dealing with what the investigation has disclosed.

Mr. Baldwin: The minister is washing his hands of the matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What does the minister mean by "give such information as may be properly furnished"? This government must be responsible particularly for any inhumanity and should certainly see to it that a full investigation takes place. Does the minister not agree with that?

Mr. McIlraith: No, the minister does not agree with the right hon. gentleman's constant attempts to place the federal government in the position of interfering in areas which are the responsibility of the provincial government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. There are only a few minutes of the question period left and hon. members should be given the opportunity to ask new questions.

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

PRINCE ALBERT—ESCAPE OF PRISONERS—REQUEST FOR COMMISSION

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): My question is also directed to the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister anything to report on the escape of prisoners from Prince Albert Penitentiary, and would he consider setting up a commission to investigate the conditions and problems of inmates at that penitentiary?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): As to the Prince Albert escape, on November 25 we were advised that the 11 inmates of that institution had escaped.

Mr. Baldwin: On their way to the Liberal convention.

Mr. McIlraith: Four are still at large, two having been returned to prison yesterday and the five having been recaptured almost immediately after the escape. As to setting up an inquiry, there is a board of inquiry within the penitentiary service already looking into the matter and until this inquiry has been completed I cannot deal with the question as to whether any further type of inquiry is warranted.

* * *

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FUTURE SITE OF ICAO HEAD OFFICE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary fo State for External Affairs.

I would like to know whether the minister has made representations to the board of directors of the International Civil Aviation Organization to have them establish their headquarters in the east end of Montreal.

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the federal government is most actively concerned with giving new life to the business section in east end Montreal and besides promoting the construction of Place Radio Canada in that section, it is doing the utmost to have Place Desjardins also located in that area.

However, may I remind the hon. member that it is up to the International Civil Aviation Organization to make decisions concerning the location of its headquarters. The government, however, is doing whatever it can to have this organization stay in Montreal, under terms which take into account the interests of the government and those of ICAO.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Champlain.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL SECURITY

EMERGENCY POWERS—DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND MR. BOURASSA

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Did he have talks, during the last two days, with his Quebec colleague about the emergency powers act?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Which act?

Mr. Matte: Did the Prime Minister have talks, during the last two days, with the Quebec premier about the emergency powers act?

Mr. Trudeau: Upon my word, Mr. Speaker, I do not think so. I spoke to the Quebec Premier a few days ago, I believe it was on Monday, and I reported about it to the House. But since then I have not had an opportunity to talk to him.

WAR MEASURES ACT—PAYMENT BY QUEBEC FOR SERVICES OF ARMED FORCES

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, questions have been asked for some time about who is going to support the cost of armed forces services in Quebec, and I should like to ask the Prime Minister to tell us today whether there has been any progress in negotiations on this matter, and who will support the cost of these services.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

[English]

INDUSTRY

GENERAL MOTORS—IMPORTATION OF CARS FROM UNITED STATES WHILE CANADIAN EMPLOYEES STILL ON STRIKE

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Mr. Speaker. Given the fact automotive workers for General Motors have returned to their jobs in the United States, can the minister assure the House that General Motors of Canada will not be allowed to import automobiles from south of the border as long as workers on this side of the border are on strike?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I will look into that, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

PROPOSED TRANSFER TO MANITOBA

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): My question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. Can the hon. gentleman report to the House on the progress he is making in his plan to transfer the Royal Canadian Mint to the province of Manitoba?

Hon. James A. Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): We are now at the stage of engineering and design studies; there has been no serious consideration of site location.

Mr. Dinsdale: In the quaint language used by the government, is it safe to say the matter is under active consideration?

* * *

GRAIN

WHEAT—REACHING OF FOUR-BUSHEL QUOTA

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I have a question to ask the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. In line with predictions which were made earlier, and because there seems to be some space at the terminals without a corresponding increase in quotas at country elevator points, is the minister still hopeful that a four-bushel quota will be reached by the end of this year?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I am not sure whether any very precise predictions were made as to when a specific quota would be reached. But there should be no doubt in anyone's mind that an eight-bushel quota will be achieved in the course of the crop year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROGRAM FAVOURING LIBERALIZATION OF ABORTION LAW—PROVISION OF EQUAL TIME FOR THOSE OPPOSED

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): My question is directed to the minister answering for the Secretary of State. In view of the bias displayed on a CBC program last Sunday night in favour of further liberalization of the law on abortion and, more particularly, in view of the CBC's announced intention to broadcast the results of a public opinion survey on this issue, may I ask whether those who oppose further liberalization of the law will be afforded equal prime viewing time on a Sunday, to express their views?

[Translation]

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): I take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

[English]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): In keeping with Grey Cup tradition, we on this side of the House wish the Prime Minister well as he kicks off tomorrow.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: I realize that the Prime Minister has hardly ever been wrong during his tenure of office—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I realize the hon. member is referring to an important occasion, but he cannot make a speech. He should ask a question.

Mr. Paproski: It is my understanding that the right hon. gentleman has picked his home-town team to win. I wager him one dollar that he will be wrong, and I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to book the bet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

STUDY OF UNION OF MARITIME PROVINCES—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL GOVERNMENT STATEMENT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): I have a question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Having regard to the fact that within half an hour the report on the study of maritime union will be tabled in Charlottetown in the presence of the three maritime premiers, would the Prime Minister or the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion make a statement later this day to the House on the basis that the federal government has participated in the preparation of this report and will of necessity have great responsibility with regard to its potential implications application?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): That would not be our intention. As the hon. member knows, the report is to the maritime governments. We shall expect them to study and analyse it and perhaps make their position known with regard to it. If the federal government is requested by them to assist in any way or to express its opinion in due course, we will certainly consider such a request favourably.

* * *

POWER

SKAGIT RIVER—POSSIBLE FLOODING OF VALLEY—DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): My question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I wish to ask him whether, in the recent talks between Canada and the United States at the ministerial level, any discussion took place which might lead to the abandonment on the United States side of the proposal to flood the Skagit Valley in Canada for the purpose of power development? In any event, can the minister indicate what position the Canadian government is taking in the negotiations with the United States in line with questions asked by some of my hon. friends as reported in Hansard at page 1311, which might be directed to the minister now since he is in his place.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): This matter was not an item on the agenda at the ministerial discussions. No application has been made to the federal government to date to the best of my knowledge by the Seattle Light Company for a permit under the International River Improvements Act, so there is nothing to report as far as my department is concerned.

* * *

TRADE

SUGGESTED VISIT TO CANADA OF REPRESENTATIVES OF CHINESE TOBACCO MONOPOLY

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. First of all, I should like to commend him on the efforts of his department in bringing the Japanese tobacco monopoly to Canada and showing them all the aspects of our industry. My question is: Will he make the same efforts in an endeavour to bring the Chinese tobacco monopoly to Canada? I ask this question because, prior to world war II—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member cannot explain why he asks the question; he can only ask the question.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly have this possibility explored, and if there are any sales to smoke out that will be done.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

KIDNAPPING OF JAMES CROSS—NEW INITIATIVES TO OBTAIN RELEASE

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General. In light of the fact that the government has apparently taken the position that Mr. Cross is still alive, has the Solicitor General any new initiatives to report to the House with regard to efforts to obtain the safe release of Mr. Cross from his abductors?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker, I have no new initiatives to report to the House. I must say I am sensitive to the fact that it is impossible, when an investigation is under way, to keep the House advised from day to day as to just what steps are being taken. To do so would be to impede the work of the investigators. I am aware of that difficulty and I thank the House for showing its appreciation of that difficulty.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With that observation of the hon. gentleman I am sure the House will be in agreement, but yesterday the minister of external affairs announced in London that as far as the government was concerned it still believed Mr. Cross was alive. Is that the view of the minister?

Canadian National Railways

Mr. McIlraith: I do not know, Mr. Speaker, that I should give my views on a matter of this kind. I have no reason to do other than to expect and to hope that he is alive, but I do not think my views are particularly relevant to this matter.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, in the interest of cooperating with Your Honour, and in view of the fact we are now beyond the time allotted to the question period, I will wait until next week to raise my questions.

• (12:00 noon)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES, GUARANTEEING OF SECURITIES

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-186, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1970, to the 30th day of June 1971, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

He said: Mr. Speaker, financing and guarantee bills, including the present one, have been introduced annually, with the exception of the 1963 bill which covered 1962 and 1963, and the 1966 bill which covered 1965 and 1966. The present bill has seven main objectives, most of which had a similar form in previous legislation.

First, the bill would authorize capital expenditures by Canadian National Railways, not exceeding $229 million, during the 1970 calendar year. This level of expenditures compares with $201,700,000 authorized for 1969. The bill also contains technical provisions authorizing Canadian National Railways to make expenditures not exceeding $80 million between January 1 and July 1, 1971 for obligations incurred prior to January 1, 1971 and to enter into contracts before July 1, 1971 for capital expenditures not exceeding $163 million for which payment will not come due until after 1970.

Second, the bill contains a provision authorizing Canadian National Railways to borrow $12 million for financing all branch line construction. This amount includes the financing of branch lines in excess of 20 miles authorized by special statute as well as the financing of those lines under 20 miles which do not require special legislation. By covering all branch lines, the provision in the bill is consistent with the intent of reflecting in the financing and guarantee bill all the financing authorities which Canadian National Railways require.

Third, the bill would provide for the continued purchase by the Minister of Finance of Canadian National Railways' 4 per cent preferred stock through to the end of the calendar year 1971. This continues the practice of previous financing and guarantee acts. The 1969 financing and guarantee act extended to December 31, 1970 the expiry date of the authority granted by Canadian National Railways Capital Revision Act of 1952 for the purchase of such stock equivalent to 3 per cent of the company's gross revenue.

Fourth, and for the same reasons, the bill would extend until the end of 1971 the moratorium on interest on the government loan of $100 million to the railway company authorized by the Capital Revision Act of 1952.

Fifth, as in previous years the bill would provide authority for the government to make temporary loans to Canadian National Railways and Air Canada to meet deficiencies in operating revenues up to June 30, 1971. Any such loan is repaid later from revenues of Canadian National Railways and Air Canada or, if these prove insufficient, the loans are cancelled through parliamentary appropriation.

Sixth, the bill contains an option similar to that contained in the 1969 Financing and Guarantee Act which would enable Air Canada to borrow $174 million prior to July 1, 1971 either directly from Her Majesty or by means of a guaranteed public issue. It also would provide authority for the Minister of Finance to guarantee debentures amounting to £13 million sterling to be issued in the period July 1, 1971 to December 31, 1974 by Air Canada in accordance with contractual obligations assumed by the airline prior to July 1, 1971.

Finally, the bill would provide for the appointment of the firm of Touche, Ross and Co. of the cities of Toronto and Montreal, chartered accountants, as auditors of Canadian National Railways for the calendar year 1971.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some comments on the bill under study. I will quote a few excerpts from the 1969 report of the Canadian National.

Bill C-186 is designed to grant funds to the CNR to provide for certain expenditures. The Bill is described as:

An Act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1970, to the 30th day of June, 1971, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada.

Once more, we are being asked to vote substantial funds required for the operation of those Crown Corporations, Canadian National and Air Canada.

Out of this quite astronomical figure—$229 million—some $10 million are to be used for new branch lines. I was expecting the minister to go into more detail on the new branch lines Canadian National Railways intend to build in 1971 or early in 1972.

Certain regions of the country are obviously rich in natural resources which could be developed but as they are increasingly remote from the United States border and larger centers, adequate transportation is necessary to bring them to consumer centres.

We heard a few days ago that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) would be going to Japan to try to interest Japanese industrialists in our ore. We know most of those resources are located on the west coast of Canada.

There are, in New Quebec, many ore bodies of all kinds that are about to be developed. Big companies are starting to develop them.

There are vast iron bodies near Whale River, and further north, deposits of nickel, copper and asbestos.

On March 19, 1970, Mr. Jean-Paul Drolet, federal deputy minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said as follows:

The extreme north of New Quebec, according to surveys made in 1969, is said to hold, among other deposits, huge reserves of several million tons of rich copper-nickel ore and asbestos deposits estimated at a total value of at least one billion dollars. It will very likely become one of the most important mining areas in the province, the deputy minister pointed out.

• (12:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that this is a small part of the natural resources which can be found in that huge territory of New Quebec.

Evidently those mentioned by the Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Ressources are rather remote, while others are much nearer and easier to develop. But we must find the necessary means to ship them to Hudson Bay and James Bay or to places such as Chibougamau or Matagami which have railways enabling them to ship their minerals southwards.

I think that the government should have undertaken the necessary studies for the construction of branch lines in order to ship those minerals to refining centres.

I expected the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to reveal government projects in that regard and I am sorry that he left the House.

The hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) is not in the House either at the moment to hear the speeches of hon. members, but I hope that at least he will take note of my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, the recommendation of His Excellency the Governor General regarding this bill, indicates the sums required for the administration of the Canadian National and Air Canada and specifies that if the need arises, the government will have access to supplementary funds to meet the deficits of both companies.

This led me to examine the 1969 report of the Canadian National.

The Canadian National debt is now about $1,898,801,-641. It is rather impressive for a Crown company. I admit that it must serve an immense territory—the whole of Canada—and maintain thousands of miles of tracks, the like of which is practically non existant in any other country.

Nevertheless, such a heavy debt for which exorbitant interests must be paid each year might only be attributed to the bad administration of public funds. For instance, we will have on January 16, 1971 to repay a $40 million loan on January 16, 1971 and in December 1971 another amount of $184,643,000.

In the bill under consideration we are being asked to vote moneys to meet such a debt. Where will the government take the necessary funds to provide them to the Canadian National?

It will have to resort to the sale of bonds on the public and American markets in order to meet its financial commitments.

It is like a gardener who wishes to fill a hole in his garden and digs another one to get the necessary earth.

So finally we end up facing another deficit. We are no better off. The situation as far as Canadian National Railways and Air Canada are concerned is exactly the same as that applying to the administration of the country.

When debts come due for reimbursement, we borrow. The situation worsens from year to year. I notice that the two payments Canadian National Railways will have to meet in 1971 cover loans obtained at interest rates of $2\frac{5}{8}$ per cent and $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent respectively.

To be sure, any loans the Canadian government will have to contract this year or in 1971 will be granted at rates of interest much higher than those which applied 12 or 21 years ago.

The situation is not improving and the government has not done anything about it so far. The Ralliement creditiste offers a solution. It is asking the government to finance the public sector and to use the Bank of Canada for this purpose. As a matter of fact, many Crown corporations have to be financed in his way.

What has happened over the last 25 years? In looking at a table contained in the report for the year 1969, we find that during the last 25 years, the CNR has paid in interests $1,265,721,000, which is almost the amount of its debt.

It is obvious that this $1.25 billion went to someone, somewhere. It is also obvious that Canadian taxpayers, workers, CN employees have had to pay the interest charged by financiers. One can thus understand why I ask that the Bank of Canada should finance, without interest, these public expenditures.

Looking at the same table, it is to be noticed that for the year 1969, the profit of Canadian National Railways amounted to $49,500,000.

One cannot say that the managers or the employees of this company are no good administrators since they managed to make a profit of $49,500,000. It goes without saying that we have nothing to hold against the management of Canadian National Railways.

However, we also find that interest charges during the same year, 1969, reached $74,205,000.

This is where the administration is faulty. This means that a profit of $49,500,000 was transformed into a deficit of $24,500,000 due to the interest on the debt. So the CNR has a deficit of $24,500,000 and today we are asked to vote the necessary credits to cover that deficit.

Mr. Speaker, it is certain that the Canadian government is not getting ahead by administering the public sector in this fashion. I do not blame the administrators of these Crown Corporations, but the government because it failed in its management to make a profit, at least as far as the CNR is concerned.

Mr. Speaker, before concluding my remarks, I should like to point out that a $49.5 million profit would have enabled the Canadian National to improve its passenger services, for instance, or its freight services. It could also have provided from its revenue for the developments needed by its transport industry, either by building branch lines or by improving its various telecommunication and hotel services. It should have given its employees better working conditions, for there is considerable room for improvement in this field.

This could have been possible if the government had tried to manage the Canadian National wisely.

• (12:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, while the minister was making his brief opening remarks on the introduction of this bill I happened to be called away to the telephone and therefore did not hear all his remarks. This is an annual bill. In assessing the finances of the CNR and Air Canada one really should ask one's self, are these finances examined as carefully as they should be or is this just an annual bill which is given a brief examination? Who audits the accounts of the CNR and Air Canada? No doubt it is done by auditors hired by Air Canada and the CNR. Yet, when we are considering the duties of the Auditor General this is one issue which certainly should be considered. The duty of the Auditor General is to closely scrutinize government spending. I think when we see the deficit of the CNR and the deficit which Air Canada is building up, it is high time the Auditor General was given the duty of carefully examining the accounts of Crown corporations as well as the accounts of departments of government.

The CNR continues to build up deficits, and to spend more and more money on enlarging its facilities, while passenger and freight services are declining. At the same time Air Canada is buying airplanes perhaps even ahead of the game. The jumbo jets are to go into service in 1971 with Air Canada and they will be very difficult to fill on international flights or on long domestic flights within Canada. When one examines this particular financing bill, one notes that of an amount of $229 million, $174 million is to go to Air Canada for expenditures between now and July, 1971. In this regard one must examine what Air Canada is doing. It is the seventh largest airline in the world. We must ask ourselves how we, as Canadians, operating an airline are making out in respect of competition in international passenger service to and from Canada. I should like to read from the annual report of the Air Transportation Association of Canada:

> International traffic entering and leaving Canada showed an increase of 10.9 per cent in the number of passengers and a 28 per cent increase in the amount of freight carried. However, Canadian carriers handled only 46 per cent of the passenger and 45.4 per cent of the freight traffic as compared with 48 per cent and 49 per cent respectively the previous year.

In other words, we have a little less than 50 per cent of the passenger and freight traffic, and it is declining. Why is this? Since a similar bill was submitted to this House a year ago, some negotiations have taken place in respect of the allotment of landing rights of foreign competitors and Air Canada. Certain cities have not been satisfied with this allotment. Calgary has not been satisfied with the landing rights allotted to planes arriving at that city and Toronto is not satisfied with the situation in which it does not have direct overseas flights to and from that city. The province of Alberta has had a long standing complaint concerning air service in and out of the international airport at Edmonton.

This financing bill must be given a much closer scrutiny. Perennially the CNR has had a deficit because of interest rates and so on. So far as operating revenues and expenses are concerned, it has operated in the black in the past. It is predicted there will be in the future a growing number of years in which Air Canada will be in a deficit position. The bloom is off the flower in respect of air passenger service. Airlines throughout the world are running into greater difficulties because of the high cost of capitalization. Members of the Transportation Committee were fortunate to have an inaugural flight on a 747 aircraft. We were told it could operate with one-third capacity and pay its way. But has this plane really lived up to that expectation. Figures indicate that the 747 has been losing money. Air Canada has ordered four 747's.

• (12:30 p.m.)

I suppose that part of the capitalization will go to the repayment of loans which will allow Air Canada perhaps to make initial payments on some of these orders. What has the government done? What leadership and advice has the minister given with regard to the purchasing of these planes and with regard to the arrangement of more suitable landing rights in and out of Canada? If we are to increase rather than decrease our percentage of the air traffic in and out of Canada, then we have to pay a stricter attention to landing rights. If we are to at least attempt to operate the 747's in the spring of 1971 in a profit making manner, we have to pay greater attention to landing rights in and out of Canada so as to obtain a greater share of the passenger and freight haul in and out of this country.

I cannot help but repeat that a year ago Canada had 48 per cent of the passenger traffic in and out of Canada and 49 per cent of the freight traffic. This year we are down to 45.4 per cent of the passenger traffic, which is a decrease of just under 4 per cent, a huge figure. The passenger capacity has increased and the percentage of haul has decreased, this is a discouraging fact. I regret that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) has not seen fit to spend more time in the House to listen to some of the criticism levelled at his department and at Air Canada. This is not done with any bitterness but in an attempt to communicate a sense of urgency with regard to making Air Canada a profitable business. We cannot continually run up deficits in the CNR and now start on a period of years in which deficits are projected for Air Canada as well. Airlines throughout the world are facing great difficulties and we must be on our toes to protect our interests in Canadian passenger and freight traffic as well as in the Canadian taxpayer's money.

There is some question as to whether Air Canada and CNR auditors are, in fact, objective in their reporting. They check over the books but do not make an actual check of the expenditures. We should give this financing bill a really careful scrutiny in the House because of that fact.

Another matter that has to be examined relates to freight rates and the Canadian Transportation Commission which was set up back in 1967. We all remember the long and extensive debate which took place at that time. The former minister of transport, having got the bill passed in the House, appointed himself chairman of the Canadian Transportation Commission. At that time, we were told that railroads should be freed from government control and that if this were done they could make money. Now, we see net losses continually. What have they done in an attempt to become profitable? I would like to put on the record some of the freight rate increases which have taken place since 1967.

The first increase took place on May 4, 1967. It was a 12 per cent increase in freight rates for short hauls and a 6 per cent increase in freight rates for long hauls. I might add that until the bill was passed the Freight Rates Reduction Act allotted a $20 million subsidy to the railways and froze the freight rates. After the bill was passed in 1967, freight rates were freed and the CNR said it could make its way and become profitable. We all know that if the price of commodities is increased too much, a point of no return is reached. I would not be surprised to learn that this is happening to CNR freight hauling. Another freight rate increase on competitive rates of 6 per cent for short hauls and 3 per cent for long hauls took place on September 5, 1967. On May 1, 1968 another increase took place which affected agreed charges. There were some exceptions but there was a 5 per cent increase for short hauls and a 3 per cent increase for long hauls.

On April 1, 1969, both with regard to competitive and general freight rates, there was an 8 per cent increase for short hauls and a 5 per cent increase for long hauls. There were certain exceptions and reductions were made on traffic moving between east and west. A 6 per cent increase was put on traffic moving between the east and the west but the increase for long hauls was 5 per cent. A flat increase of 25 cents a ton was put on coke and coal at that time.

Then, along came a surcharge of 4 per cent on normal rates and a 2 per cent increase on competitive rates in September of 1969. This surcharge was put on top of the total freight cost. In other words, this was not a per ton mile rate but a 4 per cent increase and a 2 per cent increase on the total charge. This was re-enacted on January 22, 1969. Then, on March 1 of 1969 there was a general freight rate increase of 8 per cent for short hauls and 4 per cent for long hauls. A charge of 6 per cent on primary commodities was imposed, in other words on commodities shipped by the ton. The total ton rate was increased by 6 per cent on March 1, 1969. Another full freight increase of 25 cents per ton was imposed.

On September 1, 1970 there was another freight rate increase of 5 per cent for short hauls and 3 per cent for long hauls. Also at that time there was a 3 per cent across the board increase on freight rates on coke and coal. I could go on and on. There were some exceptions and some unit charges of a flat 5 per cent on the total freight bill. On agreed charges, since 1967 there has been an increase of 22 per cent. I am totalling three general freight rate increases in the past three years. This gives you some idea of the freight rate increases.

Why should we be concerned about freight rate increases? Freight rate costs are directly related to the cost of commodities used in Canada. We must always bear in mind that it is the cost of producing the goods and getting them to markets which the consumer has to pay, plus the cost of marketing the goods once they arrive at their destination. Freight rates have played a very important part in the composition of our economy. The Canadian Transportation Commission has not done a very good job in accurately scrutinizing these freight rates. In the old days before the famous Bill C-237 was passed by the House, railroads had to come before the board of transport commissioners to prove they needed a freight increase. Anybody who objected to the proposed increase could appear before the transport commissioners to state their reasons, and why it would be detrimental to one or another region in Canada.

• (12:40 p.m.)

The process of securing a rate increase has become so simple that all the railroads have to do is phone the CTC and say, "We are introducing an increase on such a day on agreed charges, on general rates, or on competitive rates." If a shipper wants to object he has to be a captive shipper under the terms of section 16 of Bill C-237. There are two cases I know of presently before the CTC under clause 16, and it will take at least a year for them to be fully heard and examined. This gives some idea of the difficulty in opposing freight rate increases. Bill C-237, passed in 1967, completely removed the court in which objection could be raised against freight rate increases, so the shipper can no longer be heard on freight rate increases.

We were told that the whole purpose of freight rate increases was to take the CNR out of its deficit position. However, we still see it running up the same deficits year by year. Its annual deficit has now become so commonplace that it is considered a normal deficit, even though there have been a host of freight rate increases in recent years.

I now wish to deal with the passenger service offered by railroads. We are told that passenger service is costing a huge amount of money and that the railroads are making every effort to get out of passenger service. They have been discontinuing lines. But, Mr. Speaker, that is nothing new. They have been discontinuing lines for years, and lately they have stepped up this process.

Again, under the terms of Bill C-237 setting up the CTC, all that Commission has to do is hold hearings in a given area. If it is shown that the passenger service is losing money, then the government has to decide whether to subsidize the railroad for 80 per cent of its losses or whether the passenger service is no longer necessary. As I have pointed out on many occasions in this House, such a system encourages the railroads to discontinue passenger service, to deliberately downgrade that service so that passengers will not ride the trains. As a result, the railroads can present a financial story to the Canadian Transportation Commission indicating that service is running in the red and thus be subsidized for 80 per cent of the losses they say they incur. This amounts to quite a tidy sum of money.

This is a poor system because it encourages the provision of poor passenger service by the CNR and by Canadian Pacific. I believe the system must be changed. The public are finally becoming concerned about pollution caused by automobile traffic. Railways can provide good, clean, fast courteous passenger service if they wish. They could recapture some of their lost passenger traffic if they were encouraged to do so. But instead of that we have a bonus system which encourages them to downgrade passenger service. Our policy should be the direct opposite. We should have a bonus system to encourage them to upgrade passenger service with modern passenger cars.

I now wish to deal with the question of air passenger safety, but I shall not speak about the recent tragedy at Toronto. On November 13, 1969, a similar financing bill was before this House. The Air Transport Association of Canada had previously held its annual general meeting and expressed dissatisfaction with the attitude shown by the Department of Transport toward the continuous violation of safety regulations. As recorded at page 804 of Hansard for that date, I quoted from a report in the Globe and Mail on what took place at that meeting, as follows:

> The membership was told at that meeting the transport committee's general orders were considered unenforceable by the Transport Commission because of a Supreme Court of Canada decision last year that ruled that the Air Transport Committee did not have the power under the Aeronautic Act to issue orders.

That was a very important statement at the 34th annual meeting of the Air Transport Association. In the 34th report, the chairman of the association also said:

I would be remiss if I did not record the disappointment and frustration of this industry resulting from the confusion existing regarding government policy. Not only has there been no implementation of previously enunciated policy governing the mainline and regional carriers, but no extension of policy governing other segments of the industry has been developed. Virtually all Canadian air carriers are suffering under a tremendous handicap in the development of plans, acquisition of new aircraft, and the continued operation of their companies on a profitable basis as action is delayed in providing effective air policy.

One would assume that much progress had taken place since then. However, the Minister of Transport seems to be very capable with words but not so capable with actions. I have before me the 36th annual report of the Air Transport Association of Canada for the year ending September 30, 1970, and on page 5 I read:

It seems probable that the ultimate step that must be taken is an appropriate amendment to the Aeronautics Act. In a recent letter to the Minister we have again asked for confirmation that the Canadian Transport Commission is responsible for enforcement of the Aeronautics Act and will take the necessary steps to enforce it. We are now awaiting the Minister's reply.

This matter, Mr. Speaker, has been under discussion for three years. Last year I quoted from the 1968 annual report of the Air Transport Association. Now, I have quoted from the 1970 report. I hope I will not be able to read something similar from the 1971 report. If an amendment to the Aeronautics Act is required, I hope that the minister will act.

Whenever one asks the Minister of Transport a question in this House one gets a great deal of verbiage in reply. That is not good enough. When one reads into the record statements which indicate a complete distrust of the Department of Transport by the Air Transport Association extending over three years, and sees that no action has been taken, one becomes concerned. "We will judge your verbiage by your action" is what one should say to the Minister of Transport, and if he were in the House I would gladly say it to him.

There is another matter I have not dealt with in this debate. Generally, the financial statements and annual reports of Air Canada and the CNR are brought before the Standing Committee on Transport. Last year there was a great deal of confusion in the operation of Air Canada and the jobs of a number of people were in jeopardy. We were anxious to get representatives of Air Canada before the transportation committee but for some reason or other we were not able to do that. Before this bill passes, I hope we can get an undertaking from the minister that they will be asked to appear before the committee this year and that last year's Air Canada report will get a high priority.

• (12:50 p.m.)

We see Air Canada getting into difficulty and showing deficits because of the decrease in their percentage of the traffic in both passengers and freight to and from Canada. There also seems to be a lack of clear understanding of the guidelines laid down with regard to the purchase of planes. I should like to see Canada take a leading position in the world by saying that we really do not need supersonic jets for passenger traffic. Personally, I do not think they will be needed for perhaps another 20 years. The jumbo jets are fine and will probably be around for a long time before we can fill them to more than 60 per cent of their passenger capacity on both international and long haul domestic flights.

These are some of the questions that face us. Do we believe that the benefits these supersonic jets will bring to the airlines will be more than offset by the harm they do in the area of pollution. There is also the difficult question of the cost they will add to the provision of airport facilities, et cetera. Just to move a 747 around an airport by tractor into a loading position costs $150,000. These tractors just pull the aircraft around and several are needed in each airport. One has to be available whenever a 747 is going to land. You can imagine how the costs build up with the various changes of planes from the stretched DC-8 or Lockheed 710 to the 747, so what will happen with the supersonic jet? The airports will necessarily be a long way from communities and thus increase the distance that passengers must travel to get to the airport. The Chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission has stated that it is not the difficulty of moving people in the air but the difficulty of moving people on the ground to and from airports that is causing the biggest bottleneck in the movement of passengers from one city to another.

Another question that has been bothering me for some time, Mr. Speaker, is the transportation committee's recommendation with regard to CNR pensions. We brought in a unanimous report which recommended certain changes in the Canadian National pension plan. These changes would have benefited many people receiving pensions today as well as others who will be retiring in the near future. Over 32,000 people in Canada today are receiving CNR pensions in one form or another. There has been a huge rise in the cost of living over the past five or six years but no comparable increase in CNR pensions. The committee unanimously agreed that an increase was necessary, particularly for those people on the $25 a month pension of earlier times. The number of people on that particular pension is very small and they are in dire need of an increase. However, Mr. Speaker, we have not heard a word from the minister on the committee's study. Is the government going to recommend to the CNR that it take action? Here we have the CNR asking for financial assistance for the construction of branch lines and so on, but there is no mention of action with regard to the Canadian National pension plan which was studied so exhaustively by the committee.

These are some of the questions that have been in my mind for a number of months with regard to our Department of Transport. It is regrettable that this debate should take place with only one minister in the House. The Minister of Transport is not here nor is his Parliamentary Secretary.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Horner: In the light of the poor attendance of cabinet members, including the Minister of Transport, I should like this debate to continue for another day or two so that we can get answers to our questions and complaints with regard to the operation of the Department of Transport, the CNR and Air Canada. If we could carry on, we might be lucky enough to bombard the Minister of Transport for a minute or two while he happens to grace the House with his presence.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair. The House will resume sitting at two o'clock p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) pointed out, Bill C-186 is a routine piece of legislation. We have had bills like this one almost every year for quite a number of years, and there has been a tendency on our part to give these bills perfunctory treatment. Mind you, that attitude has changed in recent years. I suggest that on this occasion we, in this House, should take a good, hard look at what we are being asked for and a good, hard look at the position in which we are being placed.

We are being asked to approve a bill which authorizes the making, by Canadian National Railways and Air Canada its subsidiary, of very substantial loans. We are being asked to guarantee those loans and even to give the assurance that if there is a falling behind on the part of CNR or Air Canada, the loss will be made up out of the public treasury. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that because this is the position in which we are placed, we have both the right and the obligation, here in Parliament, to speak plainly to the Canadian National Railways. As I say, in former years there has been a tendency to regard bills of this kind as formal bills that are given routine treatment and passed. I think it would also be correct for me to say, almost by way of admission, that because we in this party favour public ownership, there has been a tendency on our part not to be unduly critical of the Canadian National Railways. Speaking for my colleagues, we think that we are coming to the end of that era. We are losing patience with some of the things that the CNR does and some of the things that the CNR has failed to do. We believe that the debate on the second reading of this bill is an occasion on which we ought to talk "turkey" to the Canadian National Railways.

I realize that it is frequently argued in this House that Crown corporations are independent bodies, and that once we have set them up we should not interfere in their day to day administration. That principle has been laid down with respect to Canadian National Railways, Air Canada, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and so on. In general terms this is, I believe, a good principle. But there are times when the line between day to day administration and broad policy is a bit grey. I would still contend that we should not interfere with day to day administration, but when a Crown corporation such as the Canadian National does things which in terms of broad policy, in terms of principle, are offensive to the views of Parliament, then I think we ought to say so, and we who strongly support public ownership are prepared to say so to the CNR. A number of my hon. friends will be dealing with subjects to which reference has already been made in this debate, such as the abandonment of railway lines and the deterioration of railway services. This very bill asks for moneys with which to build more branch lines, yet at the same time we have a railway system which is abandoning many of the services it is supposed to provide.

• (2:10 p.m.)

I realize that when we talk about railway services in Canada we cannot think in terms of one line only. We are thinking today about the CNR because the bill before us concerns that company. Nevertheless, we shall be keeping in mind the policies pursued by the private company, the CPR. I realize it is not our prerogative in connection with this bill to talk about the Canadian Pacific Railway, but there is something I should like to say, something which I believe Your Honour will agree I have the right to say: I do not mind the CN claiming to be a body independent of Parliament as far as day to day administration is concerned, but when we get the notion that this so-called independence becomes almost a readiness to do whatever the CPR wishes, it is time for us to step in. If anybody is going to run the CN, let it be Parliament, not the CPR. I believe that in far too many areas the CNR does what the CPR does, and what the CPR wants it to do. Maybe there are times when it resists, but the resistance does not last very long, and for reasons of this kind I feel we should just speak plainly to the CN through the medium of this debate on the second reading of the bill before us.

I know it will be said by some of those who speak for the government—in this instance I mean cabinet ministers, because I believe the backbenchers on the Liberal side feel as we do about this—that we should allow the bill to go to committee where CN officials could be asked to appear and give an account of what they are doing. Well, we have been through that a number of times, but no matter what we may say to the CN, unless we get some backing from the government it does not amount to very much. This is why I believe that during the course of the debate it will be necessary to obtain certain commitments from the government to the effect that the government will back us up in the demands we make in Parliament upon the railway company.

As I have said, there are many questions to be discussed—the abandonment of rail lines on the one hand, and deteriorating services on the other. There is the whole question of the poor, slowed-down railway express service we are getting these days. I realize we cannot expect to have all the things we enjoyed 10, 20 or 50 years ago but surely there is no reason in this day and age for a publicly-owned transportation company to be cutting down vital services in the transport and communications field.

There are also serious questions to be asked about the proposals of Air Canada in connection with purchase of huge new aircraft, the kind so large that Max Ferguson described one of them landing the other day somewhere between Toronto and Montreal; the passengers for Montreal got off at the front end, to find that the weather was cold, and snow was falling, while the passengers for Toronto got off at the back end, in bright, sunny weather. As I recall, he had to make a long distance call to talk to the stewardess to get her to make the appropriate announcement. Well, Max Ferguson has a way of getting the truth home to us in his humorous style and I think there is every reason to look carefully at the policy of going in for larger and larger aircraft. In particular, this development should be considered in the light of Parliament's concern about pollution; it is not enough for Air Canada simply to decide that it wants the largest and latest type of aircraft. These plans should be part of an over-all policy.

When this bill goes to the committee, as I hope it will after certain commitments have been made to us, the Canadian National and Air Canada will be required, through their officials appearing before the committee, to answer searching questions of the kind which have already been asked today and which will be added to in the course of the debate.

Last session, when a bill similar to this one was under discussion, we asked the leader of the House at that time, now the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald), for two commitments. I say to his credit, and it is always a pleasure to give credit to this minister when we can, that he met those two commitments. The first was that the question of the capital structure of the CN be referred to the committee on Transport and Communications for study. The second was that the question of Canadian National pensions be referred to that committee. As I say, those commitments were met and those two references were made. As hon. members are aware, the committee was not able to find the time to deal with the first of these references, at least, not in any depth, but spent most of its time on the pensions question. This means that the question of the capital structure of the CN is a left-over item and at some point in this session we want it to be referred again to the committee. Before the present debate is over we want a commitment from the government that such a reference will be made in order that the committee may continue its study of the capital structure of the CNR. I make the point that it is not necessary for this consideration to take place during the study of the particular bill before us, but it is necessary for us to obtain certain commitments before the occasion upon which we can do so has passed.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

• (2:20 p.m.)

Hon. members will not be surprised if what I have said up to this point is only preliminary to the main subject with which I wish to deal. This has to do with the question of Canadian National pensions, a matter which has been the subject of questions and discussions on the floor of this House for many years. From my own experience and knowledge, it goes back almost as long as the study of the pensions of retired civil servants. Indeed, the two matters have taken a parallel course and it has been said from one side, and admitted from the other, many times that the two issues more or less stand together. We recognized that we could not expect something to be done by a Crown corporation for its retired employees if something was not done by the government for its own retired employees. The other side of the coin is that we have reason to believe that if improvements were made in the pensions of retired public servants the same thing would have to be done, and would be done, for retired employees of the CNR.

As I say, the two questions have had a parallel history in this House. Every session's Hansard going back for a couple of decades or more contains questions and answers about the amount of pensions retired CNR workers are receiving, in addition to innumerable questions about when something was going to be done to correct the situation.

Finally, on December 19, 1969, almost one year ago, we had the welcome announcement by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) that legislation would be brought in to improve the pensions of retired civil servants. Within a few weeks, that announcement was implemented and Bill C-194 of last session was passed before the end of March 1970. On the very day that announcement was made, December 19, 1969, I publicly urged that the companion operation, namely an increase in the amount of CNR pensions, be carried out without delay. This was one of those occasions when we were making statements on motions and there was no opportunity for a reply from across the floor of the House. But I am sure it is not out of line for me to say that two or three cabinet ministers told me personally that day not to worry, that of course something would be done for CNR pensions commensurate with what had been done for retired civil servants.

Fortified by that and by the fact that the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) and those who preceded him over a number of years had assured me of their great interest in this matter, I continued to pursue it. I might point out that on September 24, 1968, the present Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Richardson), who was then Minister without Portfolio, when speaking on behalf of the Canadian National Railways, as reported on page 441 of Hansard for that date said:

> It is my understanding that pensioners in this category and also the pensions of all retired employees have been reviewed frequently by officials of the railway. I can assure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that the government will continue to consult with officials of the railways concerning the position of pensioners.

Though guarded, there nevertheless was the assurance that the government was interested in the position of retired employees of Canadian National Railways.

On June 19, 1969, as reported at page 10451 of Hansard for that date, the Minister of Transport was responding to a question of mine on the "late show" and was assuring me that something was going to be done for these retired employees. He referred, of course, to the fact that they also received the old age security pension; but if that is to be frozen and denied the escalation we have known for the past few years, then this makes the situation even more urgent. When the minister made a reference to the level of some of these pensions, Hansard records this interjection:

> Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is still poverty.

Then, the minister continued immediately:

> I cannot agree more with the hon. member that it is far from adequate. But I am sure he also realizes that while this group has had a good deal of attention in terms of increases in the old age pension, we do wish to do more; and I believe that we will do more.

Those are the words of the Minister of Transport speaking about Canadian National pensions in June of 1969, six months before the government announced an increase in the pensions of retired civil servants. That announcement, as I say, was made in December and it was acted upon in March of this year.

In January of this year some of us started to prod the Minister of Transport to get this question referred to the appropriate committee. The Minister of Transport told me, as reported at page 2385 of Hansard for January 14, 1970, that he would be glad to see that this matter was referred to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Transport and Communications as well as to officials of the CNR. Nine days later, nothing having happened, I asked the President of the Treasury Board about the matter and he assured me that it was going to be dealt with very soon. And so it went on.

As a result of all this, this question on the commitment of the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald), who was then government house leader, was referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, and in my view that committee did a thorough and excellent job. I think I am in a position to say that because, although I did not formally become a member of the committee, I took the privilege accorded to hon. members who do not belong to a committee and attended most of the sessions when the committee was dealing with the subject of Canadian National pensions. In particular, I attended very faithfully during the time when the committee was working out its report.

Hon. members are fully aware that when the committee made its report it went into this question very thoroughly. It gave the Canadian National Railways a clean bill of health in some respects. For example, there had been charges that perhaps the Canadian National was doing something with the pension funds that it should not be doing; it was cleared on that count. However, the committee said in the plainest of language that the time had come for crown corporations, particularly the Canadian National Railways, to do for their retired employees precisely what the Parliament of Canada had done for retired public servants.

That recommendation is spelt out in two paragraphs of the committee's report, one at the bottom of page 36:13 and one at the top of page 36:14 of the Minutes of the Committee for last session, No. 36. They read as follows:

> 4. At the outset, this Committee wishes to point out that the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan adopted the principle of adjusting pensions for cost of living increases. Furthermore, a second important principle has been adopted whereby Parliament in the name of all Canadians applied the cost of living adjustment on a current basis, but more important, retroactively to all public service pensions.
>
> The Committee strongly recommends that these principles be adopted on a broader basis and that other major employers, including Crown Corporations, recognize their obligations to follow the lead of Parliament in this regard.

Then, this sentence, which is the key sentence of the whole report:

> The Committee specifically recommends that the Canadian National Railways implement these principles forthwith.

The position could not be clearer, Mr. Speaker. The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications recommended that the CNR do for its employees precisely what the government of Canada, through action in Parliament, has done for its retired public servants. This report was unanimously adopted by the committee on September 9, 1970. The report was tabled in the House of Commons on Monday, October 5, 1970. Two days later, on October 7, 1970, a motion which had been placed on the Order Paper in the proper way by the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner), who was acting on that day for the chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Lasalle (Mr. Lessard), who happened to be absent, was unanimously adopted by this House. There was no debate and there was no dissension. In other words, the House of Commons unanimously, including all parties, including backbenchers and the government, said that they agreed with and supported this report which called upon the Canadian National Railways to implement forthwith the principle of pension increases that had been adopted in respect of retired public servants.

• (2:30 p.m.)

I will just take a brief moment to remind hon. members that what was done for retired public servants was in two parts. There was a retroactive provision that would pay increases up to about 42 per cent for people who had been out for 18 years or more, and there was a provision that from then on there would be an increase in pensions every year for retired public servants if the cost of living continued to rise. That is what was before us when we made this recommendation, and it is that which we are calling upon the Canadian National Railways to implement for its employees.

Hon. members were not surprised when a few days later some of us began asking questions. It was on Friday, October 9, 1970, as recorded in Hansard at page 20, that I reminded the Minister of Transport of this recommendation and the fact that the House had approved of it. I asked him if he was taking the matter up with the Canadian National Railways, and the reply of the Minister of Transport was in these words:

Mr. Speaker, I will undertake to do that formally, but the slight tremor noted in Montreal on Tuesday seems to be pretty clear evidence that the CNR already knows of the action taken by this House.

Some days later, on Friday, October 23, as recorded in Hansard at page 514, I asked the minister again about this, but on that occasion he tried to slough me off with the suggestion that this was a matter to be taken up in the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. We of this party will not stand for that kind of treatment. I think there are members of all parties, in fact I am sure there are members of the Liberal party, who will not stand for this sort of ploy.

An hon. Member: Who are they?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They will speak for themselves, I am sure of that. The government will find that there are Liberal members who feel as strongly about this as we do.

We have had officials from the CNR appear before the committee. We have gone through that routine, but since that point the committee has spoken and Parliament and this House of Commons have said, as we have said, we want action. For the Minister of Transport to act merely as a messenger boy to carry these recommendations from Parliament to the CNR and then simply say to us: Well, I have taken it up with the CNR but it does not want to act on this, is not good enough. To be told to let this bill pass second reading and go to the committee, there to be discussed with the CNR officials, is not satisfactory. They will come and tell us they cannot afford this. By the way, in our report we showed them how they could.

I am sure the officials of the CNR will come and tell us about some changes in the pension plan they are making of their own volition. They may tell us that their employees' associations have decided they want this matter to be the subject of collective bargaining and that we must not now discuss it. I do not accept that argument. The very fact that this is the kind of situation we would get into should indicate to the CNR that if it had any sense in this matter, it would act now. As a matter of fact in our report we have given the CNR a much happier solution to this problem than could be achieved by conflict, years of struggle, confrontation and collective bargaining. We in this House of Commons have the right to have this matter dealt with in this way.

On the two or three occasions we have raised this on the floor we have had a brush-off. We have been told we can deal with it in the committee. No, Mr. Speaker, that is not good enough and I am satisfied that it will not be good enough for members in any part of this House. What we need is a commitment now before this bill passes. We may be told that the officials of the CNR are not in this House and they cannot give a commitment. We do not want and we will not accept a government commitment that this will be discussed in the committee. The government can give us a commitment that it will tell the CNR it is expected to comply with the will of Parliament, and this is what we want.

I have gone along for many years with the suggestion that we must not interfere with the independence of the CNR. But I have said already that when the independence of the CNR becomes doing the will of the CPR, which does not want these things but wants the CNR to hold back, then if the CNR is not going to be independent it should at least do the will of Parliament. I contend that we have the right in Parliament to get a clear statement that the government will not just write letters to the CNR, not just provide a messenger service, but a commitment that the CNR will be told to accept the fact that Parliament has said to this company and that Parliament expects it to deal with this matter as it has recommended.

I remind the government that it is a party to this recommendation because it was passed unanimously by this House. The whole question of how the government will find the money is a problem which is, of course, beyond a private member's purview, except that we dealt with this in the report.

The point I want to make, and the point that makes this completely relevant to the debate, is that we are being asked right now to support a bill which provides money for the CNR. This bill provides money in several ways. It authorizes the CNR to make loans, guarantee those loans, guarantee other things, but if debts are not paid the idea is that Parliament will pick up the tab and pay them out of the general revenues of this country. If we are being asked to provide money in that way for the Canadian National Railways we have the absolute and moral right to say from the floor of this House of Commons that we want that company to do the right thing by its pensioners. What is the right thing is now quite clear. It must be nothing less than was done for the retired civil servants.

I am speaking not just for myself or my colleagues. I am speaking for every member of this House including every member of the Cabinet, because the motion for concurrence passed on October 7, 1970, was unanimous. That is the will of the House of Commons. The policy of the Canadian National Railways not to act on this issue is a case of affronting the will of Parliament itself. I think there will be an abundance of support on the part of members of all sides of this House for this position.

Therefore, to focus our attention on this phase of the matter I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg):

That Bill C-186 be not read a second time, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this House no consideration should be given to the making of any further financial guarantees or grants to the Canadian National Railways until the government has assured parliament that it will call on the Canadian National Railways to implement forthwith the improvements in pension arrangements recommended in the Report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, tabled in this House on October 5, 1970, and concurred in by the House of Commons on October 7, 1970, the said concurrence having been unanimous.

I point out that this is what is known as a reasoned amendment under the provisions of citation 382 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition. I also point out that it is both a reasoned and reasonable amendment in that it calls for the implementation of a policy already approved unanimously by this House of Commons.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Although the Chair does not wish at this time to pass judgment as to the receivability of this amendment it does feel that it should read it for the benefit of hon. members. If hon. members wish to comment on the substance of the reasoned amendment which is before the House the Chair will make a decision on it, but at this time the judgment is reserved.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, for a member from the east coast of Canada, participating in this debate is like talking about a ghost from the past because I believe most people vividly remember the debate of two years ago concerning the abandonment of the only rail passenger service in the province of Newfoundland. I suppose one could say we lost the debate because we lost the passenger service.

I should like to make a few remarks today concerning another kind of abandonment. Despite the fact that the members of the cabinet of the front benches are not present to hear my argument, and despite the fact that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson), who I understand is either in Europe or returning from Europe, is not here, I want to say that the ears of the Canadian National Railways which are present in the gallery—all four of them—should pay very close attention to this debate and the remarks I want to make because I expect a full response from the Canadian National.

Newfoundland is a province with half a million people and it is recognized that transportation is one of our major problems. Transportation is a difficult problem because of the geography, the fact that the province covers an area of 150 thousand square miles, and because of the distance from the major markets of Canada and the other nations. The sad story of the past two years is that Canadian National Railway have used the province of Newfoundland as the guinea pig for the proposal to downgrade rail services in Canada. It was used as a guinea pig by the President of the Canadian Transport Commission to conduct an experiment. I understand that three years ago, when the CTC was instituted, its main purpose was to reduce the cost factor and make the system pay. Where else but in this province could such a program be instituted? In view of our small population, there was less likelihood of a major outcry from the public. This is what happened. The Canadian National moved out. We raised this issue in the House of Commons day after day, and every member from this province spoke on it. I can see present today a number of members who supported our efforts, but we did not receive any support from government members.

I do not believe the feeling in our party was exactly unanimous because some members thought there was a specific reason for the abandonment of rail passenger services on the east coast and that consequently such abandonment would have little effect on the rest of Canada. Today I noticed that the Globe and Mail contained an editorial on the abandonment of certain lines in Ontario. This is now a major issue. I see the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) and I am pretty sure he will take part in this debate because I understand his riding will be affected. Many Ontario and western members will probably also take part in this debate because their controversy concerning the Canadian National in Canada has only begun. Unfortunately, we have lost the first round.

I had an opportunity recently to visit Bishop's Falls, one of the largest rail communities in my province. I spoke to a number of railway men in the last couple of weeks and have never seen the morale of any group take such a beating in such a short time as this group has. There is a tremendous uncertainty. They do not know where they are going. They do not have any assurance in respect of anything concerning their employment. The main reason for such uncertainty is that the Canadian National is moving in a most mysterious manner. There is a scheme on somebody's desk. I like to think that perhaps it is on the desk of the President of the Canadian Transport Commission. There is a planned phaseout of certain railway activities across this nation. This is not necessarily all wrong. I do not believe we can expect everything to remain the same for ever and ever amen. I believe there must be a fair amount of change, but I also firmly believe in the simple principle of management and administration of government that people must be informed of and involved in the decision making process. I make the charge now that the Canadian Transport Commission is hiding from the Canadian public its plan to downgrade rail service across Canada. There is a sneaking, conniving, surreptitious plan about which the public is uninformed. This is the reason for the uncertainty among railwaymen and the general public.

I shall draw attention to another plan. The Canadian Transport Commission has every intention not only to limit rail passenger service in Canada, as, has been proven in our province and in other areas, but—and I say this for Canadian National ears to hear—there is a plan to eliminate a good part of the freight distribution services in this nation. Last April I spoke to a good friend of mine in the Canadian National who is a very humane person and one who believes in trying to provide the best service to the people. He told me the Canadian National had on paper a plan to abandon all freight services east of Bishop's Falls in central Newfoundland. I remember thinking what approach one should take. I carefully analysed the plan. I was certain it was a fact that such a plan was on paper. I publicly exposed the plan and the Canadian National denied that there was any such plan. When the plan became public knowledge it was thrown in the wastepaper basket temporarily and that service continues today. In other words, the public had been made aware of it in time so that the weight of public opinion could be brought to bear on the decision.

I understand that the same plan is to be resurrected again. The manager of the Canadian National in the province has been transferred to a place a good deal further west. A new manager has been brought in and he, I imagine, now is looking at the over-all plan for the province. I want the Canadian National to give me a full reply to this question. Are there plans to eliminate the freight service east of Bishop's Falls? If so, these plans must be made public. There must be full public comment on them and a decision reached on the basis of the total and complete interest of the people of the province.

Again a few years ago under a different manager the wood trains were eliminated. A tremendous amount of pulpwood was hauled to two of the largest mills in Canada. Also the ballast trains were eliminated. They were used to service the lines. All these trains have been amalgamated into the one service which includes freight, wood and ballast. Consequently, this is the only service we have left in the whole province. As a result, there has been a tremendous downgrading of the activities connected with keeping the roadbed in order. I raised the issue through the Order Paper a few weeks ago because I was amazed at the almost uniform decrease in the amount of money spent on maintaining the roadbed and the uniform increase in the number of derailments. I cannot quote the figures but they are on the public record.

• (2:50 p.m.)

I wonder why we cannot have wood trains and ballast trains as well as an improvement in the freight service? The fact is that all kinds of complaints are made in my province regarding freight being delivered damaged, being delivered days after it was supposed to arrive, or being lost. Generally speaking, we must have the worst railroad system in North America. I have read about railroads in India and I would say that in many ways our railroad does not even compare favourably with Indian railroads. The situation is that we have lost our rail passenger service and now there is a tremendous downgrading of the freight service in my province. If we do not get some action on this problem, years from now the same thing will happen in other provinces of Canada because we are being used as guinea pigs. Many Newfoundlanders are not aware of this. Our people are relatively quiet people. We do not have liberation fronts as in Quebec or anything of this nature. Consequently, it is sometimes difficult for us to get our points of view across to the Canadian people so that we all understand what the problem is.

The railroad still exists in Newfoundland but we do not have a service, nor do we have an efficient bus service. However, I will not elaborate on the bus service. Two of my colleagues are present in the House right now and are quite capable of describing the bus service in Newfoundland. It embarrasses me to see all the advertisements on television describing the beautiful dayliner services and the beautiful dome cars in which you can drink your glass of ale while the sunlight streams through the dome. We have 39 passenger buses. My colleague, the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Peddle), was saying that these 39 passenger buses have only one lavatory. If the CNR has its way in Newfoundland it is likely to advertise that it has 40 passenger buses. The situation is serious and critical.

I could recount stories that you would not believe about the way in which the public is being treated by the CNR. It is unbelievable. We are full-fledge Canadians, people who have the same rights as anyone in Toronto, Vancouver or Montreal, and we have been treated like cattle by the CNR bus service. Every single member of the House representing Newfoundland has received numerous representations regarding overcrowding, bad scheduling, and so on. I have heard stories of people being dropped off at junctions with not even a shelter. Sometimes there was not even a telephone to enable them to communicate with their communities. Passengers' baggage is sometimes undelivered and the passengers, after having found their way to their community, have had to go back to pick up their baggage.

I heard of the case of a group of students from one community travelling on a CN bus who arrived at a particular location only to find that their seats had been taken. These students were thrown off the bus, baggage and all. This was a group of young Newfoundland students travelling to a conference in Corner Brook. There have been occasions when people have gone to lunch during a stopover of 20 minutes or half an hour only to find later that their bus was gone. These incidents have been reported to me. On another occasion the bus was actually filled with other passengers and the passengers who had gone for lunch were left behind. There are all kinds of such stories.

It is unbelievable that the people of our province should have been treated the way they were by Canadian National. Why could we not have upgraded our roadbed and provided a dayliner system? We could have several small systems operating between Bishop's Falls and St. John's, Bishop's Falls and Corner Brook and Corner Brook and west of there. This could be arranged. I do not think cost would be a major factor. We are being asked to approve an expenditure of $229 million by Canadian National. Members just accept this as a routine matter. We might get a response. I do not doubt that a month from now I will have to raise a question of privilege to receive a response to my request for an investigation into the operations of Canadian National in my province. This will be par for the course.

I say that I want a full investigation into the freight situation in Newfoundland. Are we going to see the elimination of the rail service altogether? Was the elimination of the rail passenger service just one step? We were guinea pigs once, are we to be guinea pigs a second time? Will there be an elimination of freight rail service altogether in my province? Are we going to have separate wood trains and separate ballast trains so that we can get a decent freight service at least? What plans does the CNR have to ensure prompt and efficient delivery of undamaged goods? These are the questions which I want to raise. What plans are there for an improved bus service which at present is totally inadequate? It is a disgrace to the Canadian public. Are there plans to replace it? I understand that the new manager is very sympathetic towards the proposal to eliminate the bus system altogether. Buses are overcrowded, uncomfortable and not properly maintained. They are cheap, inexpensive and dirty.

Do the CN people have plans to eliminate the bus service and to replace it with an efficient dayliner service? If they are not going to provide a dayliner service, will they provide a decent bus system across our province so that our public can travel in comfort? These are the questions I want to raise. I want to see a full and thorough investigation made into the situation at Bishop's Falls which is the big, central Newfoundland centre of rail activity. What plans do they have for providing branch systems, bus systems if necessary, down to Lewisporte and Twillingate Island where the system of transportation is inadequate? What plans do they have, for example, for freight distribution in central Newfoundland? Last year the matter of freight distribution was raised and I can tell a story on this.

I have had many discussions with the general manager of CN, Mr. MacMillan from Montreal. He is a very understanding person. I presented a case on behalf of the residents of Bishop's Falls. I told him that that community, which was the centre of rail activity in central Newfoundland, should be considered as the distribution centre for central Newfoundland because of the CN involvement over the years. I received a very sympathetic hearing. I presented the case on behalf of the people there, the town council, the chambers of commerce, the churches. Every individual in that part of the province presented his case to me and offered a suggestion for freight distribution. If there is going to be a centre of rail activity or freight distribution, Bishop's Falls is the logical place for it; it was the centre of railway activity down through the years.

• (3:00 p.m.)

We presented our case, and luckily for us we were told that the thing had not yet been finalized, but we understood that some moves had been made with respect to the purchase of property in another town. It is a disappointment that such moves have been made. As I say, the decision has not yet been finalized, but from remarks made in the community of Bishop's Falls we understand that plans have been very carefully and very subtly completed not to have the distribution of freight take place through the town of Bishop's Falls.

If this is a fact, it is a real tragedy because it has been a railway town since the beginning of rail service in that province. It had a population of approximately 5,000 at one time, almost totally dependent upon railways. It was hit a very critical economic blow by the abandonment of railway passenger service. Now, when it comes time for Canadian National to set up more modern types of equipment for the distribution of freight and goods through the province, that centre is not being considered. As I say, Mr. Speaker, it is a real tragedy.

I have talked with railway men there, and I have never seen their morale so low. I do not think Canadian National should be permitted by the government to carry on activity of this nature sneakily and surreptitiously, undermining our communities and making plans calculated to be carried out without full public involvement and awareness. This is a very serious situation.

Mr. Pepin: And a very serious statement, too.

Mr. Lundrigan: The minister says it is a very serious statement. Yes, Mr. Speaker, it has to be a serious statement when the situation is this serious. If all Canadians were of my mind, Canadian National would not get away with this kind of activity. If the government were interested in protecting the rights of citizens against Crown corporations which assume omnipotent power, the Canadian National would not get away with this.

The Canadian Transport Commission has assumed a role of total omnipotence. It seems that one dare not question the decision of the chairman of that commission. If one raises this matter with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) he will say it is sub judice or will use some other legal jargon. What is the phrase that means the Canadian Transport Commission is omnipotent? In any event, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Transport Commission has been given total power so that it may go ahead without the government having to assume the responsibility for the public outcry. The government shifted the responsibility, the commission assumed it and now the government says the commission can take the blame. In that way the Canadian government gets out from under; I think there is a legal term for that somewhere. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, there are all kinds of terms for it.

Mr. Baldwin: Just bad government.

Mr. Lundrigan: I now wish to deal with the matter of air transport. Air Canada has been moving toward the introduction of a regional carrier system in Canada. Before I get into that point I want to say that this is in no way a criticism of the new air service that has been introduced in Atlantic Canada. Eastern Provincial Airways provides a system of air travel in Atlantic Canada. I have never heard one Canadian who has anything but praise for the passenger service it provides in Atlantic Canada. But now we have a move toward the integration of Air Canada and Eastern Provincial Airways into a regional carrier system in the Atlantic provinces. I say it is the responsibility of the Minister of Transport to stand up in his place in this House and tell in some detail what are the plans and implications of this system, so that we can get public reaction to it.

I know there are many Air Canada employees today who are uncertain of their future. Hon. members will remember the many people in Air Canada who woke up one morning a couple of months ago and found themselves without a job. Some of them were men with 20 and 25 years' service and experience. They did not know what was happening. They did not know because this Crown corporation has designed its plans and had moved to implement them without public awareness and without public debate. This is causing a tremendous amount of job uncertainty. I am not saying that the move to bring in a regional carrier system is wrong. In many ways it is a great move, a tremendous move, but the people holding jobs must be informed and the public has to be made aware so that it will understand what is taking place. It is things like this which cause uncertainty among people.

Everybody with a grain of sense knows that if the morale of an organization is low, productivity will also be low. Hundreds of pieces of research have demonstrated this conclusively. That is what is happening in the CNR, and I am afraid the same attitude is permeating Air Canada. I do not wish to speak at this time about the air tragedy in Toronto. I have not received much response from the events of yesterday, including the release of the flight recorded conversations. This may well raise an issue later on.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I do not want the remarks I have made today to be taken as just a few remarks in the House of Commons made only to hear myself talk. That is not my intention. The Minister of Transport is not in the chamber. All the big guns in the cabinet are not here, with the exception of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald). I ask that they and the CN officials in the gallery take my questions to the general manager of CNR, and to the regional or district manager in the province, so that a full and total response may be made with respect to railway services in the province so far as freight is concerned, particularly eastbound freight out of Bishop's Falls, and new and better systems for wood hauling and ballast trains. We want further information on the bus and dayliner systems and on the whole question of transportation across the gulf between Newfoundland and the mainland, which service is seriously impeding the tourist trade in our province.

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make just a brief interjection in this debate. I would not like it to be thought that all hon. members shared the view of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) that the Canadian Transport Commission is acting in a sneaky manner in its attempts to evaluate rail service. The hon. member can correct me if I am wrong in the use of that word.

Mr. Lundrigan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say for the record that the hon. member has quoted me exactly and is right on target.

Mr. Anderson: That certainly takes care of any possible misunderstanding about what the hon. member said. I would like to indicate that the commission, in an area of the country that I come from, with respect to the Esquimalt-Nanaimo Railway, did carry out an extremely open and fair hearing into the conditions of passenger service between Esquimalt and points north on Vancouver Island. There was a tremendous opportunity for citizens to present briefs and participate in the hearing. The commission adopted a very openly critical policy, and indeed I might add that the hearings held on this tiny little railway, which carries about 30 people each way every day, were attended by about four times as many people as attended the House of Commons committee hearings held in Victoria to discuss the white paper on taxation.

• (3:10 p.m.)

My only reason for speaking in this debate is to indicate that I disagree with the hon. member with respect to the Canadian Transport Commission, which I feel is doing a very good job. In my area it made every effort to be fair and allow people to express their opinions on the question of discontinuing passenger service.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. member a question? Firstly, was the railroad in question retained? Secondly, could the hon. member for one second stretch his imagination to the point of understanding that we lost a rail passenger system for 500,000 people in the whole province of Newfoundland? Can he understand—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lundrigan: Can he understand it for a moment?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member wants to reply to the question, he may do so.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, it is probably easier for me to reply to the first question than the second. The rail service in this instance was retained. The commission pointed out that the CPR was acting in a deplorable manner in attempting to allow the rolling-stock to be run down. The CPR has one passenger train each way every day which managed to miss one of the CPR's own ships by 12 minutes. The commission was extremely critical of Canadian Pacific.

As far as Newfoundland is concerned and whether I can stretch my mind to understand the situation there, obviously it is difficult for anyone not from that province to understand everything about it. But I would not like the impression left with this House and with those who read Hansard that the Canadian Transport Commission, as far as the rest of us are concerned, is a body which is sneaky or underhanded. I think that is a most unfair criticism of people who are not here to defend themselves.

Mr. Lundrigan: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. With reference to the remarks of the hon. gentleman from the west coast of Canada, an area which I have had the opportunity of visiting and for which I developed a tremendous admiration whilst over there last year. I am sure that in the interest of his province, to which many of my Newfoundland colleagues have gone to make a living and whose people are reasonable and rational, he would want to withdraw his disparaging remarks about Newfoundland and leave on the record something in little better taste—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lundrigan: If that comment is not in order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that the rules of the House apply to him as well as to other hon. members. With respect, I think there is no point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to contribute to the debate on Bill C-186 which, in my view, is of considerable import since it aims at allotting several hundreds of millions of dollars to the upgrading of railway services across Canada.

The recommendation contains something which is quite fantastic, and I quote:

> —to authorize Her Majesty to make loans to the Canadian National Railway Company and Air Canada to meet deficiencies in operating revenues to June 30, 1971, any such loans to be repaid from revenues of the railway company and Air Canada or, if revenues prove insufficient, by subsequent deficit appropriation by Parliament.

It is quite fantastic that a Crown corporation can table on a new appropriation should its operating revenue show a deficit. Furthermore, when considering reports submitted by Canadian National Railways, it appears at first glance that this deficit recurs almost every year.

I think the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) pointed out in his speech that every year, and last year particularly, CNR operations showed a profit, taking into account the interest paid.

Now a bill is placed before the House in order to authorize capital expenditures for the year 1970 of about $229 million and of about $80 million for the year 1971. With regard to the purchase of equipment a vote for $163 million for the year 1971 is requested.

Towards the end of the bill, there is a provision aimed at avoiding deficits, if possible. In fact, it reads as follows:

> Where, at any time before the 1st day of July, 1971, the available revenues of the National System are not sufficient to pay all the operating and income charges of the National System as and when due, the Minister of Finance, upon application by the National Company approved by the Minister of Transport, may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, place at the disposal of the National Company such amounts as may be required to enable the National Company to meet all such charges.

It is the duty of hon. members to take all necessary means so that as much light as possible can be shed on CNR operations, services and plans for improvement to make sure that appropriations granted by Parliament will be really used in the interest of the Canadian people.

Earlier an NDP member presented a motion for the discussion of the case of the CNR pensioners. I remember that I raised the matter in February last and I even called the attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) to this extremely important problem. He made me that promise in a formal reply in Parliament and in a letter dated February 16 in which he told me:

> This matter is now under consideration and your comments in that respect of which I have taken due note, will be brought to the attention of those concerned.

I do hope that after more than six months, those people have given serious consideration to the problem of the CNR pensioners so that the pension plan can be improved and the pensioners, who have done a lot for their country, can be happier.

On December 31, 1968, the pension fund in trust according to the financial statement amounted to $1,414,-744,356. I believe that it would no doubt be possible to review such funds and the freezing of pensions in order to grant equitable payments to retired railwaymen. The increased cost of living should be taken into account so that they also can derive benefit from their pensions and enjoy a decent living.

No doubt the request for funds is justified but I should like to obtain satisfactory replies establishing that such appropriations are really needed.

In my constituency they intend to close many railway stations. The CNR authorities called a meeting in Armagh, in Bellechasse County, on June 22, 1970, to inform people about the proposed changes. They call it a service centre meeting.

The CN authorities provided detailed reasons justifying the proposed changes and the closing of the stations. However, something astonished me: even though they had invited the mayors and representatives of the various municipalities, they had forgotten to invite me. Possibly the postal service was responsible for the blunder.

I made an official remark on the matter at the meeting and one of the CN representatives assured me that he had sent an invitation to the hon. member for Bellechasse. I learned that the meeting would be held through a telegram addressed to me by the secretary of the municipality of Saint-Damien, municipality where there is a very important railway station and which takes strong exception to the closing of that station.

I attended the meeting, which was very interesting, and I learned there about the C.N.R.'s plans to relocate stations and change the present services.

In spite of that, I received numerous protests from the municipalities along the railway line. I naturally forwarded them to the responsible minister in order that he may peruse them and consider the situation more carefully.

It is sometimes said that railway stations are closed precisely because their operations show a deficit.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to intervene more particularly in connection with the Saint-Damien station in Bellechasse constituency. The figures show that the operations of that station are not showing a deficit. Indeed operations are increasing sensibly, since in 1968, the turnover was $15,000, in 1969, it was $18,000 and from January 1st to June 30, 1970, it was $21,600. That surely warrants a more elaborate study of the situation in order to meet the needs of Saint-Damien and of the neighbouring municipalities.

There is in fact, in Saint-Damien, a very important and growing plastic products industry which is developing at a tremendous rate and which requires improved public services if we want them to be able to meet more adequately the needs and the expansion of this industry and of other industries which could locate there. Therefore, I would like these recommendations to be considered before decisions are made which might be detrimental to the industrial development of this region, because we are far from having reached the degree of development of large centres. We want the industrial development to be even quicker in order to find a substitute for agricultural production which is deteriorating at a fast pace because the policy of the government does not match the needs of these small farms in the area.

Mr. Speaker, I would also ask that the necessary repairs be made to the Saint-Malachie station which has operated for years and which is left to deteriorate. This makes a poor impression on passers-by. That station has a certain importance since the Transport Commission found, only a year and a half ago, that it was worthwhile to keep it operative. Such improvements would help the station make a better impression on passers-by, especially on American tourists. I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Transport to the passenger train service between Quebec City and Ottawa.

From Quebec City to Ottawa, the morning service is adequate and satisfactory. However, from Ottawa to Quebec City, service is not as good ever since a certain number of trains between Montreal and Ottawa have been removed. Hence, let me tell you that I have received numerous complaints in this respect. Petitions were drawn, and handed to me for submission to the authorities concerned. Unfortunately, things have not yet changed for the better.

If actually we have to justify this request for appropriations, my thinking is that we should by the very same token insist on having improved services and thus be in a position to tell the people that Parliament has voted millions of dollars for improving the service, for bringing facilities up-to-date and for promoting the overall development of our country.

• (3:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I shall keep my remarks brief because I know other members wish to speak in this debate. I wish to register my feelings about the CNR and Air Canada generally and, specifically, about the conduct of the CNR and their relationship with its older pensioners. This matter was alluded to this afternoon when the amendment was introduced.

First, may I on behalf of my colleague say that in many circumstances, when someone says that something is impossible to understand, that remark may be taken as a great compliment. I think that a full-blooded member coming from a full-bodied and exciting piece of country such as the province of Newfoundland ought to take it as a compliment when someone intimates that he cannot understand something, in much the same way as when we say of a woman, "My God, you are impossible to understand"—we mean that she is mysterious, intriguing and desirable. I am sure that is what the hon. member from the other intriguing island on the other side of the continent meant when he was discussing Newfoundland. However, we will leave it at that for the moment.

Mr. Lundrigan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I accept, through you, the apology that the hon. member has given on behalf of his colleague. I am afraid, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Anderson: I rise on a point of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It is with great regret that I interrupt my hon. friend from Newfoundland. I did not dream anything derogatory about the province of Newfoundland, and if the hon. member were to examine his own remarks I think he would find that I more or less quoted them back to him. I was attempting to point out that perhaps there is one subject about which Newfoundlanders know more than those coming from the west coast of Canada. I think that if the hon. member examines Hansard he will realize that his criticism was a trifle unwarranted.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member please resume his seat. It seems to me that the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) and the hon. member for Esquimalt-Sannich (Mr. Anderson) have made their speeches. This has been an interesting interchange, but I think the House might benefit from hearing the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler).

Mr. Osler: Mr. Speaker, I should like to share your confidence and I hope the House will benefit from hearing the member for Winnipeg South Centre. Winnipeg is a place to which much freight is carried, where much freight is stored and from which must freight is moved. I am glad to learn that we have not forgotten that freight moves to Winnipeg from various directions. To a large extent rail is the industry that brings us our living, and that is how our association with the CNR becomes relevant. We have large yards in our city and a great many people are employed in those yards. Many are employed in looking after rolling-stock.

• (3:30 p.m.)

I am not one who believes in any way that a parliamentarian has even the right to suggest that a politician has the right to interfere with the day-to-day running of a Crown corporation. I am consistent in every way, even when it hurts, and sometimes when a Crown corporation embarrasses us. But I believe that whenever a Crown corporation comes to Parliament with its hat in hand for funds, a legitimate opportunity is provided to consider whether or not we should agree to vote hundreds of millions either in straight money or in loans to enable the corporation to carry on its business. We have a legitimate right to review the general functions of the Crown corporation concerned and to question its attitudes in relation to the attitudes we believe it would be appropriate for it to have.

I am beginning, reluctantly, to forgive Air Canada for the treatment it accorded my own city for a number of years, but this was an example of sneaky callousness in disregard of the wishes of Parliament. The treatment of pensioners is another example of sneaky callousness. Views on this have been expressed by Members of Parliament elected from a considerably more representative set of areas than, I suggest, the directors of Canadian National. Hon. members have said very forcibly that they do not approve the present treatment of some of these pensioners, and have recommended that the railway do something about it. Nevertheless, the company has failed to do anything about this issue. I see nothing wrong in saying that the CNR had better pull up its socks if it expects us to vote hundreds of millions of dollars in order that it may carry on its operations. If the company cannot look after its own people properly, then maybe it should not have $229 million to play with for capital investment to the end of this year or another $80 million to play with in the first six months of next year.

Air Canada, a subsidiary of Canadian National, wants £13 million for engines—I presume it is engines—or equipment of that sort. We do not know whether they have any competence to choose the right type of engines if they have no competence to deal properly with their own people. I am talking about Air Canada as a branch of Canadian National. The CNR has been cavalier in its lack of concern. This is a symptom of many of the troubles which beset us—this bigness which is exemplified by the CN. It is not really important whether a big concern is owned privately or publicly; it is just as frustrating when it is publicly-owned as when it is privately-owned. It is a case of bigness making people impervious to the feelings of the community.

If we are trying to move toward institutions which are less impervious to the wishes of people, one of the opportunities available to us is the occasion on which, once a year, these institutions come to Parliament for money. Now is the time to underline the fact that we are not pleased with the way in which the company is dealing with its pensioners, just as I hope that before very long we shall meet our own responsibilities to pensioners who are more directly the responsibility of this Parliament. I therefore commend to the House the amendment which has been placed before it.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in making my annual contribution on the CNR bill which authorizes the spending of vast sums of money under Bill C-186, I cannot help being reminded of the indiscriminate manner in which the Canadian Transport Commission discontinued rail passenger service in my own province. The events which followed make me shudder, particularly the way in which the interests of the people who required the service, and still require it, were completely disregarded.

These feelings, which are shared by my hon. friends from Newfoundland, is emphasized when I read the reams of paper which are produced, describing in flowery words the objectives of the department. These, at any rate, keep coming full steam ahead—operational objectives, regulatory objectives, development objectives. But the one which strikes hardest home is the sentence about regulatory objectives, which reads as follows:

> To balance economic, technical and social consequences resulting from changes in capability or use of transportation services and ensure that socially and economically viable standards of way, vehicle, terminal and operator performance are established and adequately maintained.

Well! The economic justification for discontinuing rail passenger service was that it cost $900,000 a year, which was supposed to be too expensive. Yet a very short time after the company "blew the whistle", the Canadian Transport Commission issued an order under date of September 23, 1969, specifying a minimum frequency of passenger services. With one quick sweep that must have been waiting to be read as soon as Newfoundland passenger service got the axe, the Transport Commission recommended the lifting of a restraint which for a decade had prevented the railway company implementing any reduction in services on which they had been losing money, thus enabling the commission to order a passenger service to be continued even if it was losing money, in return for a subsidy amounting to 80 per cent of the loss.

It is worth while mentioning that a replacement bus service was initiated—without much planning, it appears to me. I may be wrong, Mr. Speaker, but I believe this was the first time the CNR had gone into the bus business to any extent. I can tell everyone in this House that all their development experts notwithstanding, the company should not be too proud of the job it is doing in response to the ministry objective of meeting public need where it existed, and certainly not to the regulatory objective of ensuring that "socially and economically viable standards of way, vehicle, terminal and operator performance are established and maintained".

How any organization as big as the CNR could institute a bus service with so little thought to the service they were obliged to provide, is beyond all my powers of imagination, bearing in mind their supposed capacity for research into marketing, industrial development, and so on. In introducing a bus service to the people of Newfoundland, they took the attitude: Here it is; use it. If you don't like it, you can lump it. These words have come to the fore in utterances on some issues recently by persons in high places.

This bus service was put into operation without any regard for the people it was to serve. The company publishes statistics in the newspapers almost every day showing how many more people are using the buses. But after a year it does not even have bus shelters available for use by passengers. Adults and children alike are forced to stand for hours on main highways, regardless of weather conditions, waiting for buses which arrive at times determined by the condition of the road or the readiness of employees. Some of these people are sick, but no thought was given to proper comfort when the experts planned the service to replace what they called a nonpaying passenger service.

• (3:40 p.m.)

They brag about the time of the cross-province trip of 14 hours and some minutes, but there is not too much said about the lack of comfort, proper reservation systems, connecting services or many of the basic services which should be provided. There is also no consideration given to small bus companies which have provided a service for years and are now at the mercy of the CNR in regard to monopoly of service. While I realize that problems exist, I hope that the experts will pay a little more attention to studying and implementing a better service in regard to which the CNR have a monopoly in Newfoundland.

I would also like to mention the difficulty I have in understanding what happens to all these studies, particularly the study made of the problems of the CNR coastal service between the province of Newfoundland and Labrador. Hon. members raise these problems, a study is promised and that is the last we hear about it. I hope that whoever is responsible will produce the report in regard to the inferior service of the St. Barbe-Blanc Sablon ferry service and carry out the necessary action to overcome the dangerous transportation conditions which prevail between these two points before something serious happens. I am very disappointed in the lack of protection of seniority and job security promised to railway employees when the service changed. Many infractions have occurred in my district and no objections are raised, because employees fear losing their jobs altogether.

My colleague the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) emphasized very forcibly the downgrading of our rail lines, rail express and freight service. I understand from section men on Newfoundland rail lines that section orders are issued every day to downgrade speeds at road intersections. This is because there are not enough men to maintain these lines. We were promised that this sort of thing would not happen when rail passenger service in the province was cut. Therefore, how can we rely on statements about improvements being initiated when, instead, the service is downgraded?

I should also like to mention the uncertainty existing about the provision of air service to the west coast of Newfoundland. Again, all kinds of studies have been made in this connection but people are kept in the dark as to future intentions. In this regard I think there should be some dialogue with the people who are directly affected. Perhaps Information Canada will be able to lessen the concern of these people and say once and for all what is going to happen under regional air policy plans. I hope the minister will accept the many invitations he has received to visit the province and to state once and for all what the future holds for provincial air services in the province. I also hope that the officials of CNR will heed the words of my colleague from Gander-Twillingate and will give some assurance that the transportation problems in Newfoundland will be dealt with.

In conclusion, I wholeheartedly support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), which states that, in the opinion of this House, no consideration should be given to the making of any further financial guarantees or grants to the CNR until improvements in pension arrangements recommended in the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications are made.

Mr. Speaker: Before I call on the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), perhaps I should at this point refer to the proposed amendment suggested to the House earlier this afternoon by the hon member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The amendment was not put to the House because the Acting Speaker had serious reservations about the procedural aspect of the amendment.

In the meantime, while hon. members were diligently occupied in considering and debating this bill, I too was diligently occupied in trying to make up my mind whether or not this amendment should be received. Having looked at the authorities and precedents I would be pleased to hear from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre if he is prepared to indicate to the Chair why in his opinion the amendment ought to be received.

I am sure the hon. member, who has long experience in procedural matters, knows how difficult it is to introduce an amendment that is, in essence, a reasoned amendment. My impression is that this is not quite a reasoned amendment but it is a proposal which is substantially beyond the scope of the bill. This would be my thought. Even after looking into the precedents and citations I am tempted to reach that conclusion, but I would not want to do so until I had heard from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I hope you will not think I am making a professional effort if I try to protect you from temptation! It was my understanding that this procedural issue might not be dealt with until Monday, so I have not been doing any immediate homework on the issue. However, as Your Honour has said, this is a subject on which some of us have done some debating over a number of years.

Reasoned amendments have been in various forms. I dare to hope that Your Honour has no question about the form of this reasoned amendment. As a matter of fact, it goes back to what was the form for quite a few years, namely to the use of the words, "That the bill be not now read a second time but that it be resolved that"—something or other. I think this is preferable to amendments that have used the language, "That this House declines to proceed with the bill". Nevertheless, Your Honour has not raised the question of the form but rather of the substance. The principal citation on which I rely is citation 382 in Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, which reads as follows:

> It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill, to move as an amendment to the question, a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill, or expressing opinions as to any circumstances connected with its introduction, or prosecution; or otherwise opposed to its progress—

There is a little more to the citation, but I think it is not unfair to stop there for present purposes. I may say there is also another citation somewhere, as well as rulings, to the effect that one cannot have it both ways in a motion of this kind. In other words, such an amendment cannot be both for and against second reading at one and the same time. If one is going to move a reasoned amendment on second reading, it has to be one that calls for opposition to the bill as it is presented to the House. That is precisely the position I have taken in my amendment, namely, that unless we can get a declaration such as that suggested in the amendment we should not proceed with Bill C-186 in its present form.

Let me now pick out the qualifications or conditions that are stipulated in citation 382. It says that such an amendment must imply not agreeing to the second reading of a bill. My amendment certainly takes that position. Then it says that the resolution may declare some principle that is—> —adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provision of the bill, or expressing opinions as to any circumstances connected with its introduction, or prosecution; or otherwise opposed to its progress—

• (3:50 p.m.)

This is precisely my argument. Because of this situation, namely, that we are being asked to grant money to the CNR at a time when the CNR has done nothing about the request of this House in the field of pensions, we are taking the view that we should not proceed further and that we should not agree to further progress on this bill.

It may be suggested to me that there is some problem about the dollar angle, but I would argue that the question which applies is, after all, that the amendment calls upon the government to assure the House that it will call upon the CNR to implement a certain recommendation and it is not an amendment which in itself proposes the expenditure of money. As a matter of fact, even the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications which this House endorsed on October 7 does not involve the payment of additional money out of the federal treasury. That report showed the CNR how it could do it out of its own resources. So there is no liability against this amendment in terms of a private member not having the right to move things involving the expenditure of money. It does not do that; it calls upon the government to do it. Your Honour might ask whether there is relevance to the terms of the bill. I suggest there are many reasoned amendments which have relied upon citation 382, which have given the reasons why a mover of an amendment felt that we should not proceed with a certain bill.

As I said in my remarks just before I moved this amendment, there is a very close relationship between the CNR asking us for money, pleading its poverty, but refusing to agree to a request we have already made regarding the pensions of its employees. The money that is involved in this bill is money that goes into the coffers of the CNR generally. The whole question of the CNR administration of its affairs is also involved. I would say what the CNR does as far as finances are concerned is included therein. I submit it is a reasoned amendment in that it does couple opposition to the bill with the declaration of reasons why we think the bill should not be proceeded with further and because in its present form it does not contravene any of the inhibitions imposed upon private members.

Therefore, I hope I have managed to entice Your Honour away from your temptation to feel that this motion might in some inconceivable way be out of order. I submit that the House of Commons having passed a motion on the question of CNR pensions and now having before it a bill dealing with CNR financing, a private member has the right to move such an amendment. I hope Your Honour will consider it favourably.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could add to the citation referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) citations 388 and 393 (1) of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition. The basic principle on which I would argue is that while the hon. member has been artful in his presentation of this amendment, he has put himself in an illogical position. He is saying that the CNR should pay out more money for the benefit of its pensioners, but at the same time seems to imply that the CNR should have no more money. If he is suggesting that the CNR should not have any more money, he is in difficulty in saying that the CNR should carry out his request. Therefore, I suggest what he is really doing is putting on the record a statement along the lines of that referred to in citation 393 (1) which reads as follows:

> An amendment purporting to approve the principle of a bill and at the same time enunciating a declaration of policy cannot be moved to the second reading. It must oppose the principle of the bill.

What the hon. member is doing, in fact, is asking the House to make a declaration on a question that can only be effective and have meaning if the principle of the bill is not given effect to, that is, if passage of the bill is refused, thereby leaving the CNR impecunious. This, of course, would defeat not only the objective of the CNR but the objective of the hon. member.

Therefore, I suggest that while he has very skilfully attempted to bring his amendment within the wording of citation 382 of Beauchesne, what he is really doing is not opposing the carrying on of the business of the CNR but asking that the CNR carry on its business and carry it on in line with a certain declaration of principle by this House. I suggest that the precedent already referred to would, therefore, make this amendment inadmissible.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for their very learned advice. As I indicated in the House earlier this afternoon, I have given serious thought to the matter. I do not believe the amendment should be opposed from a procedural point of view only for the pleasure of opposing such an amendment and complicating the work of the House. I believe we should be very careful of the type of amendment which we allow either on second or third reading, especially when we are dealing with a so-called reasoned amendment. The question is whether we have before us what could properly be defined as a reasoned amendment. This is the source of my difficulty.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has referred to the form of the amendment he has proposed, and I see no difficulty in this regard. Certainly the form which he has used is preferable to the form which is sometimes accepted by the Chair. I would hope that this form might be followed as closely as possible.

In respect of a reasoned amendment in the form proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, it is suggested that it opposes the progress of the bill. I am in agreement with that. This is one of the tests proposed in citation 382 upon which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre rests his case. He has met that condition. There are other tests, one of which was mentioned by the Minister of National Defence. It is referred to in citation 393(1) and is to the effect that the amendment should oppose the principle of the bill. I doubt whether the hon. member intended to oppose the principle of the bill and I am not sure whether his amendment does so. In any event, this is an important consideration.

There is another point of view or approach which is perhaps even more important than the one mentioned in support of his case by the hon. member who proposed the amendment, or the Minister of National Defence in opposition to the amendment. I refer to the question of relevancy. This is a basic condition that must be met. An amendment must be within the four corners of a bill and must be relevant to the bill. When I say an amendment is irrelevant to a bill, I do not mean that in the pejorative sense but in the sense that it is beyond the scope of the bill. I am just wondering whether this is not a weakness in the amendment.

I suggest to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that the amendment should not import into the debate a question that is irrelevant to the purpose of the bill under consideration. I submit that the purport or substance of the bill is limited, as stated in clause 1, which is the short title, as follows:

> This act may be cited as the Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee Act, 1970.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

• (4:00 p.m.)

As I am sure the hon. member will agree, this is very limited. It may be that the hon. member may think pensions flow from a measure to capitalize or finance the operations of Canadian National Railways, but I suggest to him the recommendation of the Crown relates exclusively to capital expenditures and to the meeting of deficiencies of Canadian National Railways and Air Canada.

While the Chair appreciates the zeal and interest of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in the realm of pensions, which is of interest to all members of the House, I must say to him that his interest and concern in that regard is not relevant to the bill now before the House. I think they are different. I hesitate to say this, but it seems they are two different points and different questions.

While the hon. member's amendment, as I have stated, appears to be opposed to the progress of the bill, he is merely endeavouring to attach a condition which in my opinion is not within the scope of the bill or the motion for second reading threof. In that regard I must draw the attention of the hon. member to citation 388 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition which reads as follows:

> On the motion for the second reading of a bill respecting the Canadian National Railways and to provide for co-operation with the Canadian Pacific Railway system, and for other purposes, a member moved as an amendment "that the second reading of this bill be postponed until this House declared that nothing therein shall be taken to authorize any amalagamation of the Canadian National Railway with the Canadian Pacific Railway; or to divest Parliament of its rights; or to take from the House of Commons its primary duty to control expenditures of public moneys and the taxes required to meet the same; and that the provisions of this bill shall be read in the light of this declaration, and be construed so as to conform therewith, and that in so far as any of its provisions may be inconsistent therewith they shall be amended accordingly, and that the adoption of this amendment by this House shall constitute the declaration of its intention and purposes as set forth herein." The Speaker ruled this out for the reason that, instead of being a declaration of principle, it proposed a postponement of the second reading pending a definite declaration of the House; moreover, it did not purport to disagree with the principle of the bill but it dealt with its provisions and anticipated amendments which may be moved in committee. On an appeal to the House, the Speaker's decision was sustained by a vote of 88 to 35.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Where were all the rest of the members on that day?

Mr. Speaker: In essence, it does seem to me that the hon. member's amendment does not oppose the progress of the bill. What he is trying to do, I suggest, is attach a condition to the motion for second reading. In that regard, I would refer the hon. member to page 528 of May's Seventeenth Edition where in part it is stated:

> —nor is it permissible to propose merely the addition of words to the question, that the bill be now read a second time, as such words must, by implication, attach conditions to the second reading.

In effect, if I may so suggest, that is what the hon. member in reality is seeking to accomplish. I hesitate to reach the conclusion that the amendment should not be put, because of the importance of the matter, the well-known interest of the hon. member is the subject of pensions and because the amendment might have given the House an opportunity to discuss the situation which the hon. member wanted to include in the debate which is now before the House. However, I feel there are some procedural difficulties which the Chair cannot overlook, and because of these procedural and technical difficulties I do not think I should put the hon. member's amendment at this time.

I apologize to the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) if I have deprived him of the opportunity to at least begin his speech. It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business, namely, public bills, notices of motions and private bills.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, in respect of the business of the House. It appears, so far as Bill C-186 is concerned, that it is stuck in one place; the needle seems to be stuck on the record. I should like to know whether the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council has any information for the House concerning the business for next Monday.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, we propose to continue with the measure before us this afternoon, the CNR financing bill. Following that we would likely proceed with the Buffalo and Fort Erie Public Bridge Company bill, the bill in respect of three small loans acts, after which we would likely consider the anti-dumping bill, the statutory instruments bill, the measure concerning packaging and labelling, and the co-operative associations bill.

Mr. Baldwin: Is that for Monday, or for Monday and Tuesday?

Mr. Jerome: That is the schedule for monday afternoon, and in the evening we will have to come up with something else.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

STATISTICS ACT

MEASURE TO REMOVE "DOMINION" FROM TITLE DOMINION BUREAU OF STATISTICS AND REPLACE BY "CANADA"

On the order:

October 20, 1970—Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs of Bill C-13, an act to amend the Statistics Act.—Mr. Robinson.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the hon. member for Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) has consented to withdraw this bill. Because he is not here today, perhaps it would be better to have it stood.

Mr. Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary might give his undertaking to the House, which I am sure will be accepted, that the hon. member has indicated that his bill should be withdrawn.

Mr. Jerome: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Motion withdrawn.

* * *

CANADA LABOUR (STANDARDS) CODE

EMPLOYER'S NOTICE BEFORE DISCHARGING EMPLOYEE—PAYMENT OF WAGES FOR PERIOD OF NOTICE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved that Bill C-20, to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code (notice and payment to employees in case of discharge or lay-off) be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, when I realized earlier today I would be moving an amendment to the second reading of Bill C-186 and then later would be moving second reading of Bill C-20, I had the notion I might win the first time but not the second. Apparently I was wrong about the first instance, and perhaps I will be wrong now as well and find that this bill is acceptable and that it will be permitted to go to the Standing Committee.

This bill seeks to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code. As hon. members are aware, we sought for a good many years to get Parliament to pass a labour code and finally a few years ago we were successful. Since that time we have been trying to get it improved. I believe it is fair to say the government is just as anxious as are members on the opposition side of the House to improve that piece of legislation.

• (4:10 p.m.)

I welcome the pounding of the desk by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Perrault). I think that is a good omen. At any rate, hon. members are aware that the Canada Labour (Standards) Code regulates labour matters with respect to employees who by the terms of the BNA Act come under federal jurisdiction. Almost every time a piece of legislation of this kind comes up, some journalist or other person thinks that it relates only to federal employees, in other words federal public servants. That is not so. This applies to people working in private industry in those kinds of occupations that are regulated by federal law such as railroading, shipping, communications, banking and so on.

We have several pieces of legislation that govern these relationships. There is, of course, the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. There is the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, which is before us now, there is the Canada Labour (Safety) Code, there is legislation respecting equal pay for equal work, and so on. The Canada Labour (Standards) Code is the one that provides for a certain number of statutory holidays per year and a certain number of annual holidays with pay. It also provides minimum wages, a maximum work week and similar conditions.

Bill C-20 seeks to add to that legislation one further provision. I have some other bills that add other provisions, but we will take these one at a time. The provision that this bill seeks to add to the Canada Labour (Standards) Code is that when an employee is laid off or discharged he must receive two weeks' notice. The details set out in the bill make it clear that under these circumstances an employer could lay off an employee by giving him two weeks' notice today but giving him two weeks' full pay, or he could give him notice today that he is through in two weeks' time and, of course, he earns his full pay during that period.

The bill spells out a number of details so as to relate this to matters of overtime and to pay that could be irregular from week to week, but the basic principle would be that no one could be discharged peremptorily without any pay. It is very simple—any individual being laid off must be given two weeks' notice, and that must include two weeks' pay, whether the person works or not during that time. There is the exception, of course, that if a person is laid off for just cause, some misdemeanour or what-have-you, the bill does not necessarily apply, but it does apply if the lay-off is because of want of work. The bill also contains a provision that works the other way, that an employee who plans to leave must give his employer two weeks' notice as well.

The other point I would like to make is one that is indicated in the explanatory note rather than in the bill itself, and perhaps I might read the last sentence of the explanatory note. It reads:

> This bill deals only with the case of individual employees being laid off, it being understood that other legislation is required to deal with mass lay-offs or plant shutdowns.

As a matter of fact, one of my colleagues is preparing a bill along those lines. We feel that in such cases the notice should be much longer than two weeks; it should be in terms of three or six months. What we are dealing with in this bill, however, is not the shutdown of a plant or mass lay-offs but, rather, the individual dismissal. We think that in such cases it should be the right of any employee to receive at least two weeks' notice and pay for that two-week period. I suggest that it is a very reasonable proposition, so reasonable and so minimal that one should not have to argue for it at all. The only criticism that I could imagine anyone might make is that the bill should go further. At least, I hope the idea that is in the bill will recommend itself to the House and that there will be approval to send it to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Charles Turner (London East): Mr. Speaker, I commend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for introducing this bill. I know that in so doing he has drawn attention to a situation in Canada which must leave many of us very unhappy. I say to the hon. member that his bill does not go far enough.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

It is time we stopped hiding behind the old excuse that we cannot pass legislation because it is not within our jurisdiction under the British North America Act. Five provinces in Canada—Manitoba, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Quebec and Saskatchewan—have legislation requiring an employer or employee to give notice of termination of employment. It is time we introduced laws in this country that would stop companies laying off employees when they feel like pulling up stakes and moving to other parts of the country or closing down entirely. These laws should apply from coast to coast and they should be federal laws. When a company has been established in any part of Canada for many years, the management of that company has a responsibility to the community in which it is located.

The city of London, Ontario, has thousands of people out of work because of the closing of Kelvinator of Canada, Robson-Lang Leathers, and the phasing-out of the 27 C.O.D. military base, as well as the recent announcement of the closing of the Eaton Automotive Company. True, the 27 C.O.D. and the Eaton Automotive Company have given at least six months' notice, but what happens to these employees who have given years of long, hard and faithful service to their employers? Many will be unable to obtain another job because of their age, and most of them are too young to apply for their pension. I sincerely believe that industry closing should be subject to investigation by the government and a public body composed of all interested groups, so that employees can be given notice of six to 12 months, where possible, with appropriate penalties for non-compliance.

I would like to read into the record a letter I received from a man who is going to be laid off from the Eaton Automotive Company. He wrote as follows:

• (4:20 p.m.)

> I am extremely annoyed at the way plants are closing down in London. I work at Eaton Automotive (Eaton, Yale and Towne) here in London and it recently announced closing of the plant to begin the 1st of January, concluding the 1st of June, 1971. Eaton, Yale and Towne has made a profit of 60.9 million dollars in 1970. It has eleven plants in Canada and plants in twenty-two other countries of the world. Why are we closing? According to Eaton's president, the plant's location is excellent, profits are high, good relations exist with both plant and office personnel, lots of room for expansion and the plant is only twenty years old. Still we are closing.
>
> The company has said it cannot find a product that is profitable. This is a lie! We have had three products successfully developed in our plant, being bucket seats, auto-interceptors (a balloon that inflates before a crash) and most recently the brake system we devised for cars. All three were developed in our plant to the extent of being put on a production line. The plant has sent all three items to the States for production and now says it can't find a profitable product. These products are in production and making money for Americans and not here in Canada where they should be.
>
> So there it stands. Why, I ask you, Mr. Turner, are we closing? Eaton also has the power to take work from one plant, put it in another plant and leave the workers out of a job. This should not be done and I ask you to help us. The plant is noted for closing other plants after 15-20 years production, putting elderly employees out of wark without a liveable pension.

I do hope you will speak on these matters in the House. It is the future of all Canadians.

Many industries in Canada are seasonal in nature. Therefore, when an employee is hired he knows what the job will be and whether it will be of short duration. This is where Bill C-20 should apply. Down through the years the trade unions of this nation have tried to take care of the problem of lay-offs by collective bargaining, but it must be stressed that barely a third of all Canadian wage and salary earners are members of trade unions. While a number of non-unionists are covered by collective agreements, the total thus protected probably falls well short of 50 per cent of the employed work force. Whether the workers need it or not, at least half of all wage and salary earners have no protection other than that stemming from individual agreements, common law and provincial legislation. It amazes me that according to a study of all Canadian industries in the year 1968, only 40 per cent of agreements—39 per cent of employees—had a lay-off provision, and 23 per cent of agreements or 19 per cent of employees specified a period of seven days or less.

We have been told that United States industries have an investment in our country of over $50 billion. Mr. Speaker, that is a large sum of money. Why did they make that huge investment in this country? I believe they looked at the opportunity to invest and make money on our natural resources. We, as Canadians, are glad they are here because they have created thousands of jobs for Canadians. But one of the main reasons they are here is that our wage structure is much lower than that in the United States. Now that the workers of this nation have organized to try and obtain better wages to enjoy their own Canadian way of life, many of these companies have decided that it would be cheaper for them to shut down their Canadian plants and transfer the work to their parent plants. Canadian law should not permit this to happen. Many of these companies were given incentives to locate in various areas of Canada. Therefore, they have an obligation to the areas in which they are located to help stabilize the employment there. These companies should be made to provide compensation to their workers who lose their jobs through no fault of their own.

In this age of automation it often happens that a particular job is eliminated by machinery or the closing of an industry, which can cause loss of seniority and other rights. We must remember, Mr. Speaker, that these machines do not buy homes, cars, furniture or the weekly groceries. They contribute nothing to the church or to the various charities. They contribute nothing to our way of life other than to take away a man's livelihood. Also, they pay no taxes and no union dues. Every time there is a strike, the management of these large companies try to think of ways to eliminate jobs by the introduction of machines. I believe they all should have a responsibility to the area in which they are located, to make certain that their employees are not forced out on the street to end up on welfare.

Public benefits to qualified workers through unemployment insurance were also intended to assist the displaced worker through the period in which he might be without work. In recent years, through collective bargaining the concepts of severance pay and the availability of unemployment insurance have been merged in a variety of ways. Workers who are laid off, with or without the expectation that the lay-off will be of a permanent nature, are also realizing in cash or in vested rights and fringe benefits that which they stand to lose, together with compensation for wages lost. Traditional severance pay plans provide a cash settlement in a lump sum or in instalments to workers whose employment has been terminated. I recall that during the time of conversion of the railways from steam to diesel, thousands of workers were laid off by both railways. They did not receive any severance pay but were very fortunate to have paid into the unemployment insurance plan so that they were eligible to draw benefits.

The prime purpose of supplemental unemployment benefit plans is to provide weekly allowances to workers on lay-offs in order to supplement unemployment compensation. Usually, the lay-off is not considered permanent, that is, both the employer and the employee expect the worker to be recalled to the job. Unlike traditional severance pay plans, supplementary unemployment benefits are paid only if the worker is unemployed. Under the auto pact, transitional assistance benefits—in short, TAB—were set up by the federal government when the Canada-U.S. auto trade agreement was signed. Its purpose is to assist workers who lose their jobs as a direct result of the agreement which set out to consolidate auto and auto parts production in the two countries.

TAB and unemployment insurance benefits together range from 62 per cent, plus an additional 2½ per cent plus an additional 2½ per cent for each dependent to a maximum of 75 per cent of an employee's previous earnings. The maximum may not exceed 65 per cent of the weekly average of both wages and salaries for the industry as a whole. An employee is eligible for TAB if he has worked in the industry for 16 weeks in the previous 52 weeks, and he receives one week of benefits for every two weeks worked in the previous year. There is a maximum period of 52 weeks. Benefits are to augment unemployment insurance benefits if they lapse while the employee is still entitled to TAB. The weekly TAB payment will then be increased to offset the loss.

Mr. Speaker, this is excellent protection and should be extended to all industries in the nation so that we can eliminate some of the constant worries of people who could be laid off through a general slackening in the business world. We should try to gear our country to full employment, but in the event of slowdowns in the economy the workers of the nation need protection against the interruption of their work week patterns.

As we move ahead into the 1970's we all have much to do to try and increase the benefits of the working people of Canada. We could take a big step forward now if we considered all sound suggestions in a serious light. Mr. Speaker, this is the challenge of the seventies: Full employment for all Canadians. In this fast-changing nation I believe it is a tragic situation when people are thrown out of work at ages when they cannot obtain another job. I sincerely believe this situation could be cleared up if all private industrial pensions were made portable from coast to coast in any industrial business. Thus, when an employee is laid off he would be able to take his pension with him to a new job, if he is fortunate to get one. It would prevent employers from saying a man is too old because he would not fit into their pension schemes. I believe it would also eliminate most of the problems confronting a person who is 65 years of age when he retires. Over a man's working years he would contribute, along with his employers, into the pension plan and he could retire with no financial worries about his future.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): It is very easy, Mr. Speaker, to begin my few remarks with commendation of the efforts and the methods of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I want to assure him right away that, both distorting and plagiarizing Shakespeare, I come to praise the bill, not to bury it—although I have noticed in the private members' hour that the two motivations sometimes coincide. I think at 4.30 p.m. I am safe from that dismal denouement.

• (4:30 p.m.)

As I say, it is very easy to support the work of the hon. member because I am in accord with most of the measures he brings into this House. When he is not discussing foreign policy or ideology generally in the political sense or economic policies in principle, and discusses the place of the dispossessed in our society, enlightenment in the labour legislation and, certainly, procedure—last Tuesday with regard to research—I am enthusiastically his supporter. If it were not for his modesty and my excessive laconic candour, I would be inclined to say in some fulsome way that he is one of the greatest parliamentarians seen in this chamber for many years.

I should like to praise him a little more, but he might think that I am pressing him in his role of chancellor of a certain university and that I might be ambitious, like some others, who find that honours come upon them by degrees rather than dissertation.

Mr. Dinsdale: No commercials.

Mr. Macquarrie: My friend from Brandon-Souris says "No commercials," and I shall heed his advice. I want to say that this is important legislation and it is more limited than many of the measures the hon. member has introduced in the past. As he has indicated, it deals with very important problems. Through the years in our society there have been many grievous disparities between labour and management. In the present day we find disparities of a serious nature developing within the labour sector as well. But this is not the particular aspect with which the bill deals. I quite agree with the hon. member who preceded me that the peremptory discharge of employees who have rendered faithful service is an outrage upon a civilized society. It has happened far too often in recent years.

There are many factors in our society which disrupt economic patterns and industrial set-ups. Quite often large bodies of people, through no fault of their own but because of technological or technical changes, governmental decisions or conditions in the market, find themselves cast into the ashcan of the unemployed. This is sometimes done brutally. I think the hon. member, in attempting to remove the guillotine from employees such as he mentioned, is very much on the side of the angels. I am against the guillotine in Parliament and I am against it in labour relations.

One of the things which has troubled us in recent years is the situation facing our students, although some of these may not precisely come under the three-month period of the hon. member's bill. They have had difficulty finding jobs which will assist them in their costly educational careers. We know that last year and the year before many were not able to find work. I have heard many shocking cases of those who were able to find work being discharged at the whim of the employer, with no redress and no warning.

I often think of the great responsibility that some of these callous and cynical employers bear in our society where there is great anxiety because youth is in revolt. How could they be otherwise than distressed and dissatisfied in a system which so often lacks reason and compassion? So, Mr. Speaker, this effort to ameliorate these conditions, to give the required measure of reason and compassion, is certainly a move in the right direction.

I also commend the hon. member's sense of balance. As he pointed out in his brief and succinct explanation, the employee must also act reasonably. I suppose it is a fundamental of civilized societies that the people comprising them must generally act reasonably one toward the other. It is a reflection, of course, of our occasional, if not frequent—and some would say eternal—irrationality that we cannot count upon man's essential nature but must legislate acceptable and minimum codes of behaviour and minimum laws of contract. This, of course, is what we are doing in this Parliament when we pass legislation of one kind or another. I believe this is important because we live in a society of much enforced unemployment. We have many victims of technological change. It is important as well because we have great mobility in our society.

I think this is the underpinning of an essential contractual relationship, and I am thoroughly in accord with it. I agree with the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner) who said that it deals with part of a very serious situation. When this bill comes to committee, as I am sure it will, I hope it will receive the support of hon. members from all parts of the House.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that all sides of the House are not of the same mind, that there should be no more speaking. I should like to agree with those who have spoken before me.

An hon. Member: Good. Now sit down.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): The consideration of notice of discharge is an extremely important matter and something should be done about it. However, I do not agree that it should be done in the way suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I agree with other members who have said that the provision does not go far enough. Why not three weeks or four weeks? Also, this proposal has to be considered with other things in the code; the whole code has to be considered.

I, for one, like the idea of severance pay rather than simply giving notice. First of all, a man who is to be out of work will look for another job because he wants money in his pocket. It will cost him money to go around looking for another job. Secondly, if he continues working during his period of notice, neither he nor his employer are satisfied because his mind is not completely on his job as he is thinking of finding another one. I would like the idea of notice to be confined to severance pay, and this principle should extend to all walks of life.

There are those who like to make remarks about Members of Parliament being so well off, and so on. If any of us without notice were to lose the next election, we would not receive any severance pay. Sometimes it is well for people to remember that. We would walk out without a cent in our pockets and we would be looking for a job. I think it is well to keep this in mind. I am not making the point that Members of Parliament ought to be included in this legislation, but from time to time it is well to remind people of these things. So many members seem to be ashamed of saying what they are worth. I am not one of those.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I wish to refer briefly to the Speech from the Throne. In it there is reference—granted, it was in broad term—to the government's intention of reviewing the Canada Labour (Standards) Code. If the government is to review one part of that code, certainly it will open up the entire code for amendments—this is something we ought to consider—and not just the aspect referred to in this bill. If the entire code is reopened in that way, I think the House will have to consider making a comprehensive set of amendments.

The bill we are discussing covers a very small area. It mentions the lay-off of the individual as opposed to a mass lay-off. Although these are distinct problems, they ought to be taken into consideration in the review to which I have alluded. Also, if we are to make changes to that code, changes will have to be made in all these areas. I do not believe it is sufficient to provide for advance notice to individuals if there is not appropriate provision for protecting large groups of employees affected by plant shutdowns. This is the kind of thing we run into very often in the part of the country I represent, and that situation results from the kind of industry established in the area. As you know, Mr. Speaker, our industry is not diversified. I have often spoken about this situation. If a mine closes in my area or if a plant shuts down, the whole town shuts down. This is unfortunate.

I think we must consider the broader aspects of the question we are discussing when dealing with the Canada Labour (Standards) Code. If, in its consideration of this matter, the government concludes that the concept of advance notice is not enough, then other factors will need to be brought into play. We must be concerned about manpower services, about retraining and the relocation of individuals, and about mobilizing all those who have lost their jobs. These are all matters which must be considered, along with the amendments that will be considered. But if we are to do that, the two weeks' notice suggested in this bill would not be sufficient. The extent of the advance notice should be directly related to the number of people who will be involved in the disruption. The more people who are disrupted, the greater should be the time required in which they are to be relocated.

In cases of technical change or industrial conversion the employer should be compelled to provide training opportunities for the employees affected whenever alternate employment is not available in the same plant. These are all matters which must be considered in the over-all review of the Labour (Standards) Code. That is why I say, Mr. Speaker, that although this bill is laudable in intent, it really does not cover the situation in the way it must be covered.

Let us look again at the question of notice of termination of employment. I should like to go back a little in time. In the nineteenth century in this country as in many other countries, employers had absolute freedom with regard to dismissal. The employment relationship was considered to be a contract freely entered into between equals for the purpose of exchanging services for remuneration, and thus it was considered similar to other types of contract of indeterminate duration. With the passage of time it became more and more recognized that the notion of the employer and worker being equal partners in a freely established employment relationship did not correspond to economic realty and that the worker, as the economically weaker party in the employer-worker relationship, required protection against hardships caused by loss of employment. The means of providing such protection most widely applied both in Canada and other countries was to impose a compulsory period of notice upon the employer.

The purpose of the notice period is to alleviate the hardship which results from outright dismissal. Advance notice provides an opportunity for the worker, while still employed, to prepare for the change in his situation caused by the termination of his employment and to look for another job. In order for him to be able to do that,

Mr. Speaker, it is necessary for the notice to be long enough for him to relocate in another job, to be retrained or to undertake whatever the case may require in his particular circumstances. In the various provinces there are different regulations covering this situation and we have seen that in most cases they are not adequate. However, I do not want to deal with that matter. I have no intention of talking until five o'clock, Mr. Speaker, because I do not want to be accused of talking out a bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): There are a few generalizations that I think it would be well to make here. I will not go over the codes, coverages or laws of the different provinces. Generally, all employers and employees, wage earning or salaried, whether in the public or private sector, are included except, as a rule, rural workers and domestic servants. Legislation generally provides for the inclusion or exclusion of various occupational groups or industries by subsequent regulations. Only Saskatchewan specifically excludes managerial staff.

The legislation of the provinces varies in respect of the length of notice which must be given. One week's notice is assured by a specific provision in Saskatchewan and Nova Scotia, or by the reasonable notice provision. There is some differentiation in four provinces, either by the length of pay period provision in Manitoba, Quebec and Newfoundland or by the service based provision of Ontario. Two of the three most recent pieces of legislation in Ontario and Newfoundland make it compulsory for employees to work out the full notice period, and this is a requirement not found in any other industrialized country.

The matter of reciprocity of obligations was referred to by the hon. member who introduced this bill. I should like to make one comment on that matter. Four provinces require the same notice for quits as for dismissals. Ontario provides for partial reciprocity, but the notice periods are considerably less for employees. Saskatchewan is the odd one out, requiring no notice from the employee.

I shall now talk about pay in lieu of notice, which in my opinion is a better method to use. Pay in lieu of notice is specifically provided for by one means or another. As in most industrialized countries, pay is defined as the wages due for the prescribed period excluding overtime. The criterion set out in Saskatchewan legislation is common in other countries as well.

An hon. Member: Does the hon. member know who brought that legislation in?

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): There is usually a period of probation during which no notice is required. Probationary periods in which notice of dismissal provisions do not apply range from two weeks in Manitoba to three months in Saskatchewan, Nova Scotia and Ontario. A point which should be stressed is that barely one third of Canada's wage and salary earners are trade unionists, so a great many people have no opportunity to become involved in the making of collective agreements. I wonder whether this is not a weakness in our system of bargaining and trade unions. Perhaps a permanent type of arbitration committee should be required which would deal with issues on a permanent and continuing basis, rather than directing its attention to specific contracts; negotiation would be a continuing process all the time.

• (4:50 p.m.)

I have other remarks to make, Mr. Speaker, but the clock is moving along so I think it would be well to terminate my observations at this point.

[Translation]

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I hope I will not be blamed for speaking today because I am not of those who make speeches very often. But in view of the importance of this bill, I intend to say a few words.

I could have expressed myself better on the technical aspects of this bill, but as my colleagues did so before me, I shall deal with the human aspect of this whole matter.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) doubtless is right in introducing this bill. If I understood my colleagues correctly, we agree on the necessity of making improvements. Unfortunately, as I have only a few minutes, I shall not be able to give all my reasons for supporting this bill.

Besides, if my colleague from Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) had taken less time praising the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) whom he considers and expert in legal and procedural matters, perhaps I would not be accused of trying to talk the bill out. Regretfully, this may happen since I have many things to say and not much time left.

When he presented the bill, the member for Winnipeg North Centre said clearly that it consisted merely of subsection (b) and I quote:

lay off the employee; without having given the employee at least two weeks' notice of termination of employment or layoff.

As do many of my colleagues, I find the two-week period rather short and I do not see any extraordinary advantage in giving the employee two weeks' notice.

In my opinion, the bill introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg-North-Centre should have provided a minimum period of two months. It would have been appropriate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Then move an amendment.

Mr. Boulanger: I will probably do so, if I have enough time, but the entire bill is based on that clause. In my opinion, a two-week period is too short. The hon. member should have asked himself whether a two-week period was really sufficient.

A supplementary period of two weeks could have been proposed, in order to enable an employee to fine some work.

An employee who has received a two-week notice and who must remain in the factory will find it difficult to seek employment, for his boss will seldom grant him one or two hours off per day for that purpose.

This period of two weeks should be granted with two more weeks, for the sole purpose of allowing an employee to seek another job.

As for the International Labour Conference (1963), I feel that the reasons given by an employer to fire an employee are still far from warrantable or warranted, because paternalism still rules in certain factories. Indeed, a foreman who prefers the gait of a 20-year-old employee to that of a 40-year-old one, will often find some mysterious reason to throw the latter out. We are only too aware that there are still injustices committed for such reasons.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question? Since he seems to like the principle of the bill but wishes its provisions to be improved, will he not move that the bill be not now read the second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the Standing Committee in order that it might be improved?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, this question is quite to the point and the hon. member asked it during the study of Bill C-43. As a matter of fact, he proceeded exactly in the same manner in directing a question to my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Deachman). But I just do not agree about the two-week period he proposes. I would have preferred that this period be of 30 days, two weeks of which, I repeat, would represent a holiday for—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, November 30, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

LANG MAE YUR LUM REEK

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. While I have heard on many occasions during my 13 years here glowing, eloquent tributes to St. Patrick, St. George, St. David, St. Jean Baptiste before our rules gave us a holiday on that saint's day, and many other heroes, I do not recall this House ever hearing a salutatory statement to the devout and glorious patron of all the Scots, devout or otherwise, St. Andrew.

Considering that the Scots and Scottish Canadians have made a major contribution to our public life, contributing some of our greatest Prime Ministers and sharing the ancestry of others, including the present one, it is fitting, I think, that note be taken of this auspicious day. I believe that a judicious combination of two Scottish characteristics, frugality and friendliness, leads me to the formula that we might extend to one another the wish for a happy St. Andrew's day. To you in particular, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all Scots here present and here represented I say, lang mae yur lum reek.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

SOCIAL SECURIY

TABLING OF WHITE PAPER, "INCOME SECURITY FOR CANADIANS"—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41 I wish to table copies in both official languages of a white paper entitled "Income Security for Canadians".

Today marks the end of the first phase of a searching examination of this important area of policy. The views of Members of Parliament, the provincial governments, the public at large and low-income groups particularly will have an important bearing on the determination of several issues of national importance.

It is my hope that agreement among all concerned will enable us to proceed with the fundamental shifts of policy emphasis and program initiatives proposed.

The sum total of these constitutes an important reorganization of the income security sector of public policy. At issue is the painstaking and complicated task of endowing with a renewed sense of purpose and social relevance, various income support policies which have evolved through the years in specific response to particular problems. Some of the programs involved are exclusively federal and reform of them can be accomplished with relative speed. Others involve the co-operation of provincial authorities and I intend to set in motion full, detailed discussions with those authorities immediately. While the dialogue implicit in the white paper techniques must be meaningful and complete, it is essential to remember that this policy sector concerns men, women and children in permanent and temporary difficulty. They await not just our words, but our actions, and in some particular cases long delay cannot in conscience be permitted.

Our guiding principle in the paper has been to find ways to ensure the greatest possible concentration of available resources upon the people in greatest need. This has led in turn to specific consideration of relative emphasis which should in future be placed on the two, previously parallel main components of income security. First, there have been income protection measures universally available to all or most people aimed at improving their general conditions or at preventing them from falling quickly into poverty as the result of various short-term interruptions of their personal income.

Second, there have been measures aimed more directly at the low-income minority of the population whose members either cannot enter the labour force through no fault of their own or who, even when working, do not derive from certain types of work sufficient income to provide adequately for themselves and their families.

The white paper argues that it is the second group that must today engage our main attention and resources. Here are to be found the aged, mothers by themselves raising children, the physically and mentally disabled, and the so-called working poor. Put another way, here are many of the family units in Canada containing children whose health and potential for economic, social and personal development may be limited by conditions beyond their control.

• (2:10 p.m.)

It is our belief that the people of Canada will share the conviction that the claims of these people must for the next few years at least take precedence. Such agreement would result in increased emphasis on selective income support for people in need, and lessen the emphasis on universal programs.

Thus, the paper proposes strengthening an extension of the concept of providing guaranteed income support not universally but on a selective basis related to family income. Certain alternatives, major and minor, to existing universal programs will enable us to place, in the short term, approximately $470 million additional a year in the hands of low-income people. This figure represents $194 million of additional cost under the GIS program, and $270 million redistributed under the family income security plan proposals resulting from benefits withdrawn from higher income families and in tax recoveries from beneficiaries.

For the longer term, proposed changes under the Canada Pension Plan should have the effect of increasing protection for various groups in need by another $365 million a year.

These important improvements can be made without diluting economic development programs which help to ensure productive employment for the majority so that the national wealth with which to assist the less fortunate may continue to be generated.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we are troubled by the persistence of widespread poverty in Canada. One-fifth of the total population is said to exist below the poverty line. I think we must learn to recognize the face of modern poverty. By far the greatest number of Canadians below the poverty line are working full time or part time and receiving virtually no assistance. Most of the others can work only part time in their part of the country or are old, blind, disabled, or mothers of deserted families. The number of Canadians who are poor because they simply refuse to work is said to be only 3 per cent of all those actually below the poverty line.

We are troubled by the failure of our increasingly costly welfare system to eliminate poverty. Our system was evolved piece by piece over the last half century, with each new program reflecting the problems and the values of its day. But there has never been a comprehensive overhaul of the entire structure based on consistent goals and principles. The result is a rather badly coordinated system which sometimes wastes funds in various areas and ignores real need in others. Such a system cannot be expected to cope with the rapidly changing conditions and problems of our technological society. Certainly a thorough examination is needed.

We believe that our society demands the creation of a full system of social justice. We claim that the major goal of our society should be to maximize every individual's freedom of choice and independence. But for men and women who are forced to devote their lives merely to staying alive there is neither freedom of choice nor independence of mind. Unless we act effectively, one-fifth of the Canadian people and their children after them seem destined to remain in that situation.

We believe such reform should give a key role to incentives. This, of course, does not apply to the aged and those outside the working force. But we should emphasize the necessity and importance of income development, of assisting all Canadians who can work to develop both the ability and the competence to achieve greater income earning potential. Opportunities and incentives are needed to encourage recipients to seek further training or fuller employment. Our present welfare and retraining programs, which all too often discourage such efforts, must be reformed. We require an income development program for residents of Canada that would be federally sponsored and integrated with provincial programs after full consultation.

A war against poverty was declared in this country a few years ago but it was abandoned. In all fairness, one must emphasize that poverty has actually deepened in the last couple of years in this country as a result of increased unemployment and of the failure of old age pensions, for example, to increase correspondingly with the increase in the cost of living. Certainly this white paper and its proposals are two years late. When one reads the white paper and sees what is in it one wonders why it took two years to prepare it and table it in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I will make no comment today on the unemployment insurance proposals which are in a separate package, nor on the proposals regarding the Canada Pension Plan which are not destined to come into effect until 1973. We will have plenty of time to talk about those. As to old age security, the flat rate is to be frozen at $80 a month. Single persons over 65 years of age are guaranteed an income with supplement of $1,620 a year and married couples $3,050 a year. It should be pointed out that the sum of $1,620 a year is still well below the poverty line for a single person over the age of 65. It should be pointed out also that these allowances are subject to tax. Above all, it should be pointed out and emphasized that the 2 per cent upward adjustment in terms of the cost of living is still to prevail for some reason that is quite beyond my comprehension.

The minister pointed out that these changes will cost $194 million. This will be paid out of the old age security fund. I should emphasize in passing that the amount that the government will save as a result of reducing its family allowances program will at least offset the increase in old age security payments. I do not think the minister intended to give the impression, but perhaps he did, that some $270 million is being transferred to recipients of family allowances at the lower end of the income scale. I think the figure is actually $100 million, and the sum actually saved will be some $270 million plus the $100 million. I do not object to the principle of selectivity here, but I emphasize that this assistance to the aged is late, is inadequate, particularly for single persons below the poverty line, and is subject to taxation. I do not see why the older people who have been held up for so long must wait until April 1 of next year to receive any help at all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: As to the changes with regard to family allowances, I suggest that the system adopted is rather crude, far cruder than it might have been in the sense that the income eligibility does not vary at all with family income. It could quite easily have incorporated this principle. A child will bring in some $180 a year at the maximum, and these benefits are taxable.

• (2:20 p.m.)

What might have been a program of substantial help to the working poor, and which might have tied in with a subsequent move toward a more comprehensive plan, seems to me to have been bungled. Above all, in view of the help which the children of low income families need, it seems to me that the government will have some difficulty in justifying why it has removed some $175 million a year from assistance to families with children.

Without going on at great length, Mr. Speaker, may I say that we see here no effective broadening of the basis of security. We see no recognition of the difficulties that the poorer provinces have in using the Canada Pension Plan to provide an adequate level of support in those provinces. We see no recognition at all of the tremendous load that the government has placed on welfare authorities through the increase in unemployment. There is no recognition, Sir, of the need to encourage people and help them to break out of the poverty cycle other than just a general reference that this is something that is going to be discussed with the provinces.

Sir, one-fifth of the Canadian people are living in poverty today. This white paper offers very little hope to most of them. It offers some to the aged, but much less than could have been done for the children of low-income families. After two years of gestation it is a very inadequate response to the needs of this country.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to be able to say that there are a number of things in this white paper, at least this white paper with a blue cover, that are good. There is another side to the coin, but may I indicate briefly the reason for my opening statement.

There is provision for an increase in the pensions of older people who are in need. This is welcome. There is an increase in what we now call family allowance payments for those whose total family income is below $8,000 a year. I hope the minister is not thinking I made a mistake. Between $8,000 and $10,000 the amount of the allowance tapers off, but for families with incomes below $8,000 there is an increase. This is welcome.

The proposals to improve the Canada Pension Plan, so far as I have been able to digest them, are all good. Then, of course, there is the usual bowing three times to the provinces assuring the country that co-operation with them will be sought. This is good, but it happens so often that it is hard to get excited about it.

I said that there was another side to the coin. The first criticism I wish to make is that it seems to me that if half as much time had been spent in trying to work out the details of a guaranteed annual income as was spent explaining to us that it cannot be done, we might be farther along the road. If the government will not listen to us I hope it will listen to the delegates at the policy conference of its own party who said that they want a guaranteed annual income.

An hon. Member: Pie in the sky.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Somebody over there calls it pie in the sky, but that was the position taken at the Liberal conference.

The second criticism I would like to make is with respect to the proposals to improve the Canada Pension Plan. As I say, they are all good, but they are all very much in the future and I get the impression that this book is full of words such as in this very section that tell us how wonderful things are going to be in 1976 and 1977. But the problem is that people are in need right now. In so far as the government relies on the improvements it is going to make in the Canada Pension Plan, I hope it will endeavour to get the provinces to speed up the process of making those improvements.

My third criticism is that this white paper, like so many documents in this field, sets out to help the poor and does so but still keeps them poor. It still provides for two categories of people, those who are self-supporting and those who have to receive aid. I think there are better ways to abolish poverty than by mere subsistence payments such as those set out in this white paper. As a matter of fact, I do not agree that the figures of $135 per month for a retired single person and $255 per month for a retired married couple represent the abolition of poverty.

The fourth criticism, Mr. Speaker, is that although the white paper devotes many paragraphs on many different pages to the subject of veterans legislation, those paragraphs are only descriptive. They tell us what has been done for veterans in the past and they tell us the present situation. However, despite the fact that we have been waiting for months for this white paper to get some lead as to what is to be done for veterans, there is no indication of where veterans fit into this total program of income security for Canadians.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I criticize the decision announced in this white paper, notice of which is already on the order paper, to freeze at $80 the old age security pension in the case of those who do not receive any portion of the guaranteed income supplement. When you call that bill for first reading, Mr. Speaker, I am going to enter a caveat against its procedural admissibility. I contend that there is a contract between the Parliament of Canada and the people of Canada under which our people, having paid taxes into the old age security fund, are entitled to the benefits of the Old Age Security Act. To cut out, as from January, 1971, the 2 per cent annual escalation is breaking that contract, is contravening the policy laid down by Parliament, and I think the bill should be looked at by Your Honour from that standpoint.

I remind the government and I remind the House that Mr. Pearson, Miss LaMarsh, the present Minister of Finance and the present Secretary of State for External Affairs, during the debates on the various bills that have amended the Old Age Security Act, emphasized the point that because Canadians were paying into the old age security fund they had coming to them as a right the benefits provided in the Old Age Security Act. One of those benefits is to have the basic pension escalated, if the cost of living goes up, by not more than 2 per cent in any one year. I suggest that to take that away at this time is unfair and unjust and in violation of a policy laid down by Parliament.

I should like to emphasize this point, Mr. Speaker, and with this I shall bring these remarks to a close, by indicating the kind of unfairness that will develop. Under this white paper, if a person is receiving old age security and a guaranteed income supplement combined, he will get up to a 2 per cent increase in his total income each year. But if a person is receiving, let us say, old age security and a retired civil servant's pension—and his total may be just about the same—he will get, by the legislation we passed last March, up to a 2 per cent annual increase in his retired civil servant's pension but no increase in his old age security pension. The third person is one in receipt of old age security and a pension from some private company or some other source. That person will get no increase at all because of the rise in the cost of living. On this basis in particular I think it is most unfair to cut out the annual increase in the basic old age security pension which was provided by Parliament and which is part of the contract we have made.

I agree with the Leader of the Opposition that it is unfortunate the government has not come through with an upward adjustment in the 2 per cent ceiling, but apart from that I submit that denying to the people of Canada who have provided for themselves some other resources and therefore cannot obtain the guaranteed income supplement the right to have their basic pensions escalated from here on is most unfair. This is the feature in the proposals before us to which I object most of all—the freezing of the basic pension at $80 a month.

• (2:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity of congratulating the government on its attitude toward Canadian families.

Since 1945, there has been a succession of pleas in favour of an increase in family allowances to parents and now the Economic Council of Canada is requesting, in its fifth annual report, among other things, a review of the Family Allowances Act, while also recording the constant increase in the cost of living. I see that the government has taken these recommendations into account.

To be sure, the time has come to adjust family allowances, as families in the low-income groups are in great need of help.

There is still a great deal to be achieved. Let us hope that the Canadian government will give more and more consideration to the family—consideration coupled with action. Our birth rate is alarmingly low. Let us help families in a concrete and efficient way.

It is a fact that children have a much better chance to live than they used to, but it is hardly fair to say that the mortality rate in respect of certain types of illness has declined. It has been, in a way, limited through the progress of science, through admirable efforts on the part of doctors as well as through the co-operation and enlightenment of parents.

Judging this progress from only one criteria, that of life conservation, Canada, one of the richest countries in the world, does not rank very high yet among the nations of the world. As a matter of fact, 12 countries have an infant mortality rate lower than Canada.

As far as allowances are concerned, we should take a logical position, because, according to the amounts allocated to foster-homes we find it more profitable to raise other peoples' children.

With regard to old age security pensions, we believe the rate adjustment to be simply ludicrous. There are over 1.5 million senior citizens in Canada, many of whom have reached age 65, with little or no income.

Many a time these hardships are their only reward for a life of toil. It would have been in order to adjust their pensions upwards so as to ensure a decent standard of living. Because of limited protection against rising prices, old age pensioners have felt the bite of inflation much more than most other Canadians.

The social needs of our senior citizens are too often neglected. Retirement draws the worker away from active participation in the activities of those institutions he previously belonged to. Because of some disability or other, or lack of income, they may also be deprived of the services offered in their neighborhood or the community. They may come up against problems that require the help of an expert, but they do not know where to go, and cannot always move about to get help.

Canada must play its proper role toward its older citizens by making sure their years of retirement are as pleasent and fruitful as the resources of the country can allow.

I have watched the behaviour of many political men closely enough to conclude that most of them would favour increasing family allowances and adjusting the old age pension reasonably. Still, they remain paralyzed, because of lack of money or the need to increase taxes, according to their concept of scarcity in an age of affluence.

However, ministers, members of Parliament, senators, judges, commissioners, not to mention the protégés of the system, provide against the cost of living increase. This last category has followed, when it did not go beyond, the cost of living requirements. Nonetheless, it is strange to see how easy it is to understand problems when one's own security is at stake, and how difficult it is to understand a situation as unfortunate as that of a high proportion of our Canadian families.

We should be ashamed of such behaviour. To those who can not find any other means than taxes to allow the necessary increases and who did not hesitate to give themselves the increases we all know about, I would ask why they cannot do something to give justified increases to those who need them much more than they do? Why try to ratio Canadian families? Producers and dealers are advertising their goods at great cost.

Why are taxes allowed to undermine the effect of such advertising?

It is simply illogical. In cutting down the flow of money by abusive taxes, the sale of products is at the same time restricted. It is not necessary to be a genius to understand that.

As far as products are concerned, we seem to understand that it is not necessary to deprive people in order to provide all Canadian families with the products they need.

Canada, a rich country, can certainly feed and clothe all Canadians at the same time without depriving some to serve the others. It is a mere question of seeing real wealth in goods instead of seeing it in the symbol which is only a means of getting the goods which are plentiful.

It is unfortunate that too many politicians seem to take seriously the information supplied by the financiers' noisy publicity. It is not surprising that a certain number of our graduates are so eager to turn to socialism.

With their acquired and unassimilated knowledge of science and letters and mostly on account of their ambition to reign rather than serve, they get ready for higher positions in order to enjoy real security. They should rather take into account the needs of the population in general.

We demand tax free allowances and pensions, but this is something that most of our economists are unable to comprehend. They understand everything that is to their advantage, but when it comes to others, they oppose various objections.

We waste too much time, here in this House, trying to find out who—rather than what—is right.

* * *

[English]

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

On the order: Introduction of Bills:

November 24, 1970—Mr. Saltsman—Bill intituled: "An Act to establish a Canada Development Corporation".

Mr. Speaker: I indicated to the House last Friday that the Chair had reservations about this bill and suggested to hon. members who might like to argue about its acceptability from the procedural standpoint that they could argue about it at this time or later, if they preferred to. If the hon. member for Waterloo wishes to present arguments at this time in support of the bill from a procedural standpoint, I shall be pleased to hear him.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, bearing in mind your remarks of last week, I have gone through the bill in an attempt to make it acceptable to you, Sir, and I hope that my efforts have been successful. The purpose of a private member's bill very frequently is to direct attention to an important matter. It is not our intention in the bill to suggest that it should involve implications for government revenue. The corporation would be entirely self-sufficient to that extent. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in light of our intention that this bill should not involve any implications respecting revenue for the government, I hope you will permit it to be introduced.

Mr. Speaker: If there is no further argument about the bill, perhaps I might be allowed to look at the matter a little more closely. I told the hon. member last week that I was very anxious to give him the benefit of the doubt. Perhaps what has been done with other bills before might be done with this one in the sense that we might be able to look at what might be considered as the financial provisions of the bill and, with the agreement of the House, have it amended accordingly. In any event, I will look into the matter and see if there is anything that can be done by the Chair in co-operation with the hon. member and in co-operation with the parliamentary counsel to make the bill acceptable from a procedural standpoint.

* * *

• (2:40 p.m.)

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING OBLITERATION OF MOTOR VEHICLE SERIAL NUMBERS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-201, to amend the Criminal Code (obliteration of motor-vehicle serial numbers).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is simply to make it illegal to operate or possess a motor vehicle on which the serial number has been altered or obliterated. The only conceivable reason for obliterating or altering a motor vehicle serial number is to try to conceal the fact that the vehicle has been stolen. Last year stolen cars cost Canadians over $20 million.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

NATIONAL FILM BOARD—FILM ON PREMIER J. R. SMALLWOOD

Question No. 109—Mr. Carter:

1. What was the cost of the film produced by the National Film Board on Premier J. R. Smallwood, tentatively titled Smallwood?

Questions

2. What was (a) the total footage of film shot (b) the total footage of film actually used?

3. What disposal was made of the excess film?

4. What was the number of people in the crew that made the film and how long were they in making it?

5. Did CBC undertake to purchase this film before it was made?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the National Film Board as follows: 1. $80,103.

2. (a) 43,000 ft.—(b) 2,000 ft.

3. All negative, as per usual practice, was retained by the National Film Board's stock shot library. Left over non negative material was donated to Premier Smallwood for his archives with the proviso that it would not be used for public exhibition or for political purposes.

4. Crew was composed of 4 men for 32 days; during a period of three days it was increased by nine; during a period of ten days it was increased by four.

5. No.

[English]

ESTABLISHMENT OF WATER QUALITY MANAGEMENT AREAS

Question No. 141—Mr. Harding:

1. In what areas does the government anticipate establishing Water Quality Management Areas as provided for in the Canada Water Act?

2. Have any such areas been designated to date?

3. Has the government entered into discussions with any provincial or local governments or any other groups in order to initiate the establishment of such areas?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. The Government anticipates that water quality management areas will be established, as provided for in the Canada Water Act, in any part of the nation where water quality management has become a matter of urgent national concern. Where the waters involved are located within one or more of the provinces the establishment of such management areas normally will take place by agreement between or among the federal and provincial governments concerned.

2. No such management areas have been designated to date; that part of the Canada Water Act providing for establishment of such management areas became law on September 30, 1970.

3. Yes. Arrangements have been made with each province to establish intergovernmental committees to maintain continuing consultation on water resource matters. Most of these committees were established in anticipation of the Act coming into force; and they have met on several occasions in connection with the formulation, coordination and implementation of water policies and programs. The possible establishment of water quality management areas is only one element in this policy and program review process.

[Mr. Carter.]

YOUTH HOSTEL AT BRIGHTON COMPOUND, CHARLOTTETOWN, PEI.

Question No. 180—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. What consultations were held with representatives of the Government of Prince Edward Island and/or the city of Charlottetown prior to the establishment of a youth hostel at the Brighton Compound in Charlottetown?

2. Who were the members of the advisory committee?

3. When was this committee formed?

4. When was the youth hostel opened?

5. What are the names and addresses of those responsible for managing and operating the hostel?

6. Were any youth leaders or social workers in Charlottetown requested to assume or assist in direction of the hostel and, if so, whom?

7. What is the estimated total cost of operating the hostel?

8. What amounts were spent in cleaning and renovating the building used?

9. What were the other major items of expenditure?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): 1. Prior to the establishment of the hostel in Charlottetown telegrams were sent to the Honourable Gordon Bennett, Minister of Education and Her Worship Mayor D. M. Corrigan of Charlottetown informing them of the emergency hostel program, and requesting their co-operation.

2. Members of the advisory committee: Mr. Frank Sigsworth, Barrister, P.E.I.; Miss Bea Mair, Dept. of Health, P.E.I.; Miss Carol MacMillan, Detached Youth Worker, P.E.I.; Mr. & Mrs. R. D. Donnelly, Local Citizens, Charlottetown; Mr. J. Evans, Y.M.C.A., Charlottetown; Miss Bernice Rowland, Public Health Nurse, Charlottetown.

3. This committee was formed on July 6, 1970.

4. The hostel opened on July 10, 1970.

5. Members of the management committee: Mr. Brian Bulmer, Fredericton, N.B.; Miss Pat Doherty, 3 Waverly Court, Charlottetown; Miss Janet McLeod, 18 Selling Street, Charlottetown; Mr. Larry Robichaud, Fredericton, N.B.

6. The Advisory Committee assisted in direction of hostel.

7. The estimated total cost of operating the hostel in Charlottetown was $7,882.

8. The budgeted amount for cleaning and renovating was $1,662.00.

9. The other major items of expenditure were staff salaries $4,070.00 and food $1,050.

[English]

YOUTH HOSTELS—SUMMER, 1971

Question No. 212—Mr. Goode:

Does the government plan to re-institute a program of temporary youth hostels for the Summer of 1971?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): At this time the government is in the process of evaluating the 1970 summer emergency hostel program and no plans have been formulated to date for a similar program during the summer of 1971.

[English]

COST OF EXTRA RCMP DUTY—ROCK FESTIVAL, 1969, ALDERGROVE, B.C.

Question No. 217—Mr. Rose:

1. What was the cost of extra RCMP duty at the Rock Festival held on Labour Day weekend, 1969, at Aldergrove, British Columbia?

2. What municipal or federal agency paid these costs?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): 1. The members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police do not receive compensation for extra duties such as overtime.

2. Not applicable.

CANADA STUDENT LOANS ACT—AMENDMENT COVERING PART-TIME STUDENTS

Question No. 261—Mr. Rowland:

Is the government giving consideration to amending the Canada Student Loans Act to enable part-time students in post-secondary institutions to participate in its provisions?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): This is a matter of government policy. Should the government decide to propose an amendment to the Canada Student Loans Act to make the suggested change it will be announced at the appropriate time.

CRTC—DIRECTOR RESEARCH AND PLANNING

Question No. 283—Mr. Aiken:

1. Who was the successful candidate for the position of Director, Research and Planning, CRTC, advertised under Public Service Commission Bulletin No. 70-3601?

2. What are the qualifications and experience of the successful applicant as a Research Director?

3. What is the nationality of the successful applicant and is he completely bilingual?

4. (a) What salary or remuneration is paid to the successful applicant (b) does he receive, in addition, a per diem allowance and, if so, at what rate?

5. Where does the Director carry on his duties each day of the week?

6. How long has the successful applicant lived in Canada and what was his previous employment?

7. How many other persons applied for the position and were all such persons Canadians?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission and the Canadian Radio-Television Commission as follows:
1. Mr. André F. J. Martin.

2. Attended the École des Beaux Arts, Bordeaux, France. Wide experience as a film producer, director and radio producer. Research and study experience in film and media subjects.

3. French national. Bilingual capabilities considered by the examining Board to be satisfactory for this position.

4. (a) Salary range, $19,100-$21,700; (b) No.

5. In Ottawa.

Questions

6. Mr. Martin has lived in Canada since July 3, 1967. His previous employment was Film Producer and Director and conducting research and studies in film and media subjects.

7. Twelve, not all of whom were Canadian.

AUDITOR GENERAL

Question No. 306—Mr. Fortin:

Does the Auditor General audit the books of every (a) proprietary (b) mandatory (c) mixed economy Crown corporation and, if not, does the government intend, in the near future, to allow him to do so?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): The Auditor General audits the accounts of all departmental and agency Crown corporations and all but five of the proprietary Crown corporations. Those five are: Air Canada; Canadian National Railways; Canadian National Railways Securities Trust; Cape Breton Development Corporation; Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

In addition, there are several other public instrumentalities for which the Auditor General is not the auditor. These are: Bank of Canada; Industrial Development Bank; Canadian Wheat Board.

As indicated in the Auditor General of Canada bill introduced the 16th of October, it is not proposed to alter the current legislative provision for the audit of Crown corporations, as found in sub-section 2 of Section 77 of the Financial Administration Act, which reads as follows:

> 77. (2) Notwithstanding any other Act, the Auditor General is eligible to be appointed the auditor or a joint auditor, of a Crown corporation.

RECIPIENTS OF OLD AGE SECURITY—BEAUCE CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 309—Mr. Rodrigue:

How many recipients of Old Age Security are there in the constituency of Beauce and, of this number, how many receive the Guaranteed Income Supplement?

[Translation]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Old age security statistics are not maintained in such a way as to make it possible to state the number of recipients in any given constituency.

[English]

RECIPIENTS OF OLD AGE SECURITY—MANITOBA

Question No. 321—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many people in Manitoba receive the Old Age Pension?

2. How many of these recipients receive the Guaranteed Income Supplement?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. In Manitoba, 94,175 persons receive the Old Age Pension.

2. The number of Manitoba old age pensioners who receive the Guaranteed Income Supplement is 47,777.

Questions

TIDAL POWER DEVELOPMENT—BAY OF FUNDY

Question No. 373—Mr. Forrestall:

1. For what purposes has the government decided not to allow access to the Atlantic Tidal Power Programming Board's investigation of Fundy tides until April of 1975?

2. What national interests could be compromised by allowing access to this documentation?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. The Report of the Atlantic Tidal Power Programming Board, dated October 31, 1969, and entitled "Feasibility of Tidal Power Devleopment in the Bay of Fundy" was tabled in the House on March 24, 1970 and, therefore, is a public document.

2. Not applicable.

ARTIFICIAL MILK

Question No. 375—Mr. Rodrigue:

1. Has the Department of Agriculture issued permits to allow the import of artificial milk?

2. What was the amount of artificial milk sold in Canada in 1969?

3. Does the government intend presenting legislation to prohibit the sale of artificial milk?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows: 1. No. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce administers The Export and Import Permits Act which controls the importation of certain products. Artificial milk is not under import control.

2. None.

3. No.

REGINA—POSITIONS IN FAMILY ALLOWANCES AND OLD AGE SECURITY DIVISION OFFICE

Question No. 382—Mr. Burton:

1. How many positions of "Eligibility and Review Clerk" are there with the Family Allowances and Old Age Security Division Office of the Department of National Health and Welfare in Regina, Saskatchewan?

2. How many of these positions require proficiency in both the English and French languages?

3. What is the description of the degree of proficiency required in each language for these positions in Regina?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. There are 27 such positions.

2. Two of these positions require proficiency in both official languages.

3. These positions require the ability to read specialized work terminology, to write letters and bulletins, to understand completely a conversation or discussion and to take an active part in a conversation or discussion.

[Mr. Munro.]

INFORMATION CANADA

Question No. 396—Mr. Mather:

1. What is the number of Information Canada centres to be established in various parts of the country?

2. What is the estimated cost of such centres?

3. Is consideration being given to avoiding duplication and reducing costs to the taxpayers by utilizing for public information purposes the existing information centres in Canada i.e. the public libraries?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): 1. The ultimate number of regional enquiry centres has not been determined. Current plans call for the gradual establishment of centres based on the six existing Canadian Government Publications Bookshops and the development of similar combined bookshops and information centres in those provinces where no federal sales outlets exist at the present time. In addition to the national capital centre, two regional establishments are envisaged for the current fiscal year and four in 1971-72.

2. Using the national capital centre as a base, the initial cost to Information Canada of each regional outlet, including interior design, furniture and equipment may vary from $40,000 to $60,000 depending on location. Rental costs and basic physical alterations, which also vary considerably according to location, age and condition of premises, are the responsibility of the Department of Public Works and would be included in its estimates.

3. Yes.

PERSONNEL OF COMPANY OF YOUNG CANADIANS

Question No. 403—Mr. Comeau:

1. What is the salary of the Director of the Company of Young Canadians?

2. What qualifications are required to hold such a position and who sets them?

3. How many persons are there on the Director's personal staff?

4. How many people are employed by the Company of Young Canadians?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): 1. Salary range of the Director of the Company of Young Canadians $20,000-$25,000.

2. The appointment is made by the Governor in Council based on experience and personal suitability for the position.

3. I am informed by the Company of Young Canadians that there are two assistants on the Director's personal staff.

4. I am informed by the Company of Young Canadians that the following people are employed by the CYC: Volunteers, 92; Field Staff, 23; Ottawa Operations, 23.

[English]

POLLUTION—ESQUIMALT HARBOUR

Question No. 421—Mr. Anderson:

1. Are Canadian naval vessels stationed in Esquimalt dumping untreated sewage into the Harbour and, if so, which ones?

2. Have any measures been taken by the Department of National Defence during the past year to prevent the discharge of untreated sewage by HMCS Dockyard into Esquimalt Harbour?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes, HMCS Qu'Appelle, Yukon, St. Croix, Gatineau, Cape Breton, Columbia, Chaudiere, Cowichan, Miramichi, Fundy, Chignecto; Two Gate Vessels (Porte de la Reine and Porte de Quebec) and the sailing yacht Oriole.

2. At the present time a comprehensive study is under way in conjunction with the Municipality which proposes a connection to the Municipal Collection System discharging to the Macaulay Point Outfall for final disposal into the ocean. Design is now complete for the new Dockyard and sewage interceptor system, and design is under way for the new Naden and Graving Dock sewage interceptor system.

ARMED FORCES—EDUCATION OF DEPENDANTS OVERSEAS

Question No. 443—Mr. Anderson:

Are all schools run by the Canadian Armed Forces in Germany using the same course credit system and, if not, for what reason is this practice not followed?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Yes, all secondary schools or combined schools at the secondary level adopted the credit system effective September 1, 1970. The extent of application may vary depend ng on the size of the school, grade level structures, physical facilities and pupil involvement. At the elementary level pupils are classified by grades where instruction is encouraged on an individual or group basis to meet the particular needs of the pupil.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—REPLACEMENT FOR ARGUS AIRCRAFT

Question No. 463—Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West):

1. Has any decision been taken as to the type of aircraft which will replace the Argus aircraft presently in use by the Canadian Armed Forces and, if so (a) when was the decision taken (b) how many aircraft will be procured?

2. What is the total cost of such aircraft, including spares, and what is the schedule of delivery and the anticipated date of operational status?

3. Has any decision been reached as to the ultimate disposal of the Argus aircraft?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): 1. No.

2. Cost of each aircraft, including spares, will not be known until the replacement aircraft has been selected.

3. No.

Orders for Returns

EMPLOYMENT OF MRS. GÉRARD PELLETIER BY CBC

Question No. 485—Mr. Coates:

1. Is Mrs. Gérard Pelletier presently employed or under contract to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and, if so (a) when was the original contract signed between Mrs. Pelletier and CBC (b) what are her duties?

2. Has her contract at any time been renewed or revised and, if so, on what date?

3. What remuneration does Mrs. Pelletier receive from CBC as a result of her employment?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. No.

2 and 3. Not applicable.

* * *

[English]

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CBC-CTV—CANADIAN AND AMERICAN SERIES CARRIED

Question No. 192—Mr. Rose:

1. For the year 1970-71, which American-produced series are to be carried by the private network, CTV, and by the Canadian Broadcasting Company?

2. For the same year, which Canadian series are to be carried by the CTV network and by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?

3. For the same years, what series are to be carried by CTV and CBC during the prime viewing time fo 7 p.m. to 11 p.m.?

Return tabled.

BANNING OF FISHING BECAUSE OF MERCURY POLLUTION

Question No. 281—Mr. Harding:

1. What rivers and lakes in Canada have been banned for fishing due to mercury pollution and, in each case, for what period of time?

2. What is the estimated loss in employment and fishing revenue due to the ban?

3. In each case, what has been the source of the mercury pollution?

Return tabled.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

TAKEOVER OF RYERSON PRESS BY UNITED STATES COMPANY

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the failure of the government to take action to prevent the takeover of Ryerson Press by an American concern, thus adding to the loss of a sector of the economy important to the development of Canadian identity and culture, and the fact that today is the last day on which action can be taken before the completion of the sale of Ryerson Press to McGraw-Hill.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Regina East has filed the notice required under the terms of Standing Order 26. The Standing Order outlines the factors which have to be taken into account by the Chair in determining whether the House should be adjourned for the purpose of such a motion. In fact, Standing Order 26 (16)(a) requires that the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency.

On many occasions it has been determined that the emergency contemplated by the rule implies a new, unforeseen or sudden circumstance which requires immediate consideration by the House. I do not think that the rule applies to situations which have been public knowledge for a number of weeks, as evidenced in this instance by numerous questions asked by hon. members. The first question was asked on October 9. Many other questions were asked since then and answers given, satisfactory or otherwise, depending on the judgment of the hon. members who asked the questions. On November 10 the hon. member for Skeena proposed under Standing Order 43 that the matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

It will be seen that the matter proposed for discussion today by the hon. member for Regina East can hardly be said to have arisen suddenly and in this sense is not an emergency. The Standing Order also requires that the matter come within the administrative responsibility of the government. There is some doubt in my mind whether this requirement of the Standing Order has been met in this instance.

I also suggest to the hon. member that his proposed motion is along the lines of a non-confidence motion. He proposes to discuss at this time the failure of the government to take certain action. In this sense the hon. member is proposing that the House consider a grievance or that the House consider a non-confidence motion.

For all these reasons I doubt very much that it would be in order at this time for the Speaker to put the motion of the hon. member for the consideration of the House under the terms of Standing Order 26.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—INVESTIGATION OF BEATING OF PERSONS ARRESTED

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister relating to the statement made by the Minister of Justice of Quebec over the weekend that some persons arrested under the War Measures Act regulations had been beaten and that he proposed to conduct his own investigation into this. As Prime Minister of Canada is he satisfied that this is an adequate response by the Quebec Minister of Justice to these findings of beatings of persons who were arrested under regulations issued by the government of Canada?

[Mr. Burton.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): That is my reaction, Mr. Speaker; it is a satisfactory response. It will, of course, depend on what the response develops into. There have been communications, as usual, between our ministers and the Quebec ministers. For the time being I feel that it is a satisfactory response. If the Leader of the Opposition wants to suggest any other response, I will consider it.

Mr. Stanfield: As the leader of the government does the Prime Minister not consider it his responsibility to make strenuous representations to the province of Quebec for an independent investigation into these alleged beatings in order to assure the people of Canada that an adequate investigation is being made into events that Canadians do not like to think are occurring in Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I would be prepared to consider the representations of the Leader of the Opposition that he does not have faith in the trustworthiness of the commission of investigation set up by the Quebec minister.

Mr. Crouse: That is not what he said.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I indicated that I did not think an investigation by the Minister of Justice of Quebec would be independent, at least as we understand the word. I ask the Prime Minister not to twist my words in the way that he has.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Will the Prime Minister indicate whether in his consultations, or those of the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General, with the provincial authorities there has been any suggestion that after the provincial investigation has been concluded some form of public statement will be issued to assure the general population of Quebec with regard to these matters?

Mr. Trudeau: I think that is a desirable eventuality. I will express the hope that it is proceeded with in that way. I am not sure, but I believe there have already been representations to this effect. I will, of course, convey this suggestion to the Quebec Minister of Justice.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I believe a couple of days ago I asked the Minister of Justice whether he would consider setting up a judicial inquiry, and I was wondering whether the minister had had some conversation with the Minister of Justice of Quebec with regard to setting-up such an inquiry at the provincial level. Has the Minister of Justice had any such conversation since I asked that question and, if so, what was the nature of the conversation and the result of it?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Since the question was put to me by the hon. member for Calgary North I have had conversations with the Minister of Justice of Quebec. Indeed, again this morning I expressed to him my deep concern at allegations of mistreatment by the police of certain people detained under the regulations promulgated pursuant to the War Measures Act.

I also talked to Mr. Jacques Hebert this morning, who is chairman of the three-man commission appointed by the Attorney General of Quebec to review the conditions of detention of those held under the War Measures Act. I was advised by Mr. Hebert that during the initial few days of the current crisis just after the proclamation of the War Measures Act, when over 350 people had been arrested at one time, there appeared to have been five or six cases of rough handling of accused persons by the arrested at one time, there appeared to have been five or six people of prolonged interrogation. All these alleged incidents, according to Mr. Hebert, apparently took place during the first few days following the proclamation of the War Measures Act when the wide arrests were made.

Mr. Hebert has personally assured me that no obstacles are being placed in the way of his committee, that they have been able to interview any detained person they wish to interview. Every complaint has been transmitted by Mr. Hebert and his committee to Mr. Louis Marceau, the protecteur du peuple, the Quebec ombudsman established under the laws of Quebec. The Attorney General of Quebec advised me this morning that he had authorized Mr. Hebert's committee to have complete access to all persons detained and that it was open to the Quebec ombudsman, who also has complete access, to suggest what indemnity should be paid or what other remedial steps should be taken in the case of anyone who has been unfairly treated.

I have also been advised by the Attorney General of Quebec that the disciplinary committee of the Quebec Provincial Police is investigating any allegations of rough treatment, and I am assured by the Attorney General of Quebec that the proper action will be taken.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

SOCIAL SECURITY

GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME—OLD AGE PENSION COST OF LIVING BONUS—CHANGES IN CANADA PENSION PLAN

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of the income security report which has just been tabled by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since chapter 6 of this report seems to be concerned mainly with giving some of the reasons for not implementing a guaranteed annual income, and in view of the statements that have been made by Dr. Willard, Deputy Minister of the department, before the Senate committee, and the majority opinion expressed by the Liberal policy convention the weekend before last favouring a guaranteed annual income, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government would be prepared to reconsider the whole question of the guaranteed income as being basic to a genuine frontal attack upon the problem of poverty in this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am informed as regards Dr. Willard that the leader of the New Democratic Party is quoting him very inaccurately; therefore I cannot deal with that allegation.

The other allegation concerning the position of the Liberal delegates at the policy convention two weeks ago I must deal with by stating that at that time they did not have this detailed argument before them. We knew, of course, what the argument would be, and that is why I suggested to them that they study the white paper with an open mind. I know they will do that, but I also hope that the members of the opposition will, though perhaps this is too much to ask.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the government has already provided for a cost of living bonus in the pensions paid to former civil servants and former employees of some agencies of the Crown, the armed forces and Members of Parliament and Senators, would the government be prepared to reconsider its decision with respect to discontinuing the cost of living bonus for those who are on the old age security pension? The cost to the government would be relatively small, $14 million or $15 million a year, and in addition it would seem that one group of pensioners is being discriminated against in face of the treatment meted out to other pensioners who come within the purview of the federal government.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of publishing a white paper is in order that all these questions be placed in context. We did, of course, consider the alternative suggested by the leader of the New Democratic Party, but we did not accept it because we thought it was more important to help the poor, as we do, than to help the rich, as he is suggesting. The white paper is there and the whole context is now available not only to members of the House of Commons but to the Canadian public. We will therefore wait for discussion of the white paper.

I must say that if it should be the desire of the country to accept the recommendation of the New Democratic Party leader, I hope at the same time they will indicate which taxes should be increased in order to finance this.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a final supplementary. I am sure the country will be pleased to know that the Prime Minister thinks that anybody receiving more than $140 a month is rich. May I ask a question about the Canada Pension Plan. As pointed out in the report, the federal government must give three years' notice to the provinces of any proposed change. In view of the fact that the provinces do not contribute but have the benefit of access to the funds of the plan, and also in view of the fact that three years is a long time to wait before making some of the changes recommended in this report, would the government undertake to consult with the provinces to see whether this period of time could be considerably reduced so that desirable changes could be made to the Canada Pension Plan in a much shorter period, preferably in 1971?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): If I may answer that question, Mr. Speaker, over the course of the last year or two in informal discussions with the provinces one or two indicated they would be prepared to relax the particular law that requires this notice. If this type of consensus develops as a result of discussions with the provinces on the Canada Pension Plan, then I think the government would be very happy to consider shortening the period.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister made representations to the provincial governments in regard to the advisability of reducing property taxes for pensioners as a means of increasing their discretionary income? If not, is he considering placing that item on the agenda for the next meeting of ministers of health?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, this may be a matter that can be discussed at these meetings of ministers of both health and welfare, but it seems to me that this is an area that lies exclusively within provincial jurisdiction.

* * *

FISHERIES

SHARING OF MARINE KNOWLEDGE WITH SOVIET UNION—ESTABLISHMENT OF OCEAN DEVELOPMENT AUTHORITY

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I want to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Can the minister say if and when Canada will sign an agreement to share scientific knowledge with the Soviet Union? Will the information shared be mainly in the area of marine knowledge, and can the minister indicate in a very general way whether Canada will make a reciprocal response to such arrangement?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, an agreement of a very general kind in respect of scientific matters is under discussion with the Soviet Union.

Mr. Lundrigan: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister indicate, in light of the recommendations of the Science Council of Canada that there be an increased effort on the part of Canada in the area of marine resources and marine knowledge, whether we are taking any steps toward establishing a Canadian ocean development authority?

Mr. Davis: The answer to the latter part of the question is no, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRE-CHRISTMAS PROGRAM—INTENTION RESPECTING BILLS ON TEMPORARY EMERGENCY POWERS AND AUDITOR GENERAL

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the President of the Privy Council and welcome him back. I hope he is in good health not only so that he may be better able to bear the slings and arrows of being Government House Leader but also because he might help us resolve some of the doubts that have arisen in the House as to the direction we are going and what the government wants us to do. Could he indicate later this week, in a statement on motions, what will be the likely course of government business from now until the Christmas recess, when that will be, and hopefully whether the government proposes to withdraw Bill C-190. In respect of Bill C-181, does the government intend to abandon further debate on that bill, despite the fact it has been debated for several weeks?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his welcome back to the House. I am delighted to be back and I am somewhat flattered to observe that the House refused to take any important decisions in my absence.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the benefit of the views of other House leaders before taking any decisions on the course of business. I hope to be able to meet the House leaders later today. As a result of that meeting and later consultations, it might be possible to clarify the program we would like to place before the House between this date and Christmas and to determine what the adjournment date will be as well as any other arrangements which would help to clear up the business we think we must clear up before taking that Christmas adjournment.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice. In view of the rumour attributed to the Prime Minister that he intends to abandon further debate on Bill C-181, can he say whether or not this is correct. Is it the government's intention not to proceed further with debate on that measure?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this rumour is not correct and I hope the hon. member will not contribute to the spreading of it.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. I wonder whether he can clear up the persistent rumour indicating that the government, because of the universal editorial condemnation it has received on its Auditor General bill, has decided to turn tail and run but leave the bill on the order paper not to be brought forward for debate at this session?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize for interrupting hon. members—

Mr. Hees: Oh, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: In spite of the hon. member's plea, I must say it is not in order to ask ministers or the government to confirm or deny rumours or reports. The question can be asked directly, but certainly it is not procedurally acceptable to ask whether or not a statement is correct or true.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the rumours have been so persistent during the last few days I think the Prime Minister would like to answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Even if the hon. member is more persistent than the rumours he cannot ask the question.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

TAKEOVER OF RYERSON PRESS BY UNITED STATES COMPANY

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact this is the last day on which action can be taken to retain Canadian control of Ryerson Press, will the minister indicate whether the government has reconsidered its previous approach to this matter and is going to take action to prevent this sale?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes and no.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, can the minister indicate whether the government is considering including provisions in its revision of the Combines Investigation Act which would prevent such sales, and can he also indicate when this bill will be available to the House?

Mr. Basford: As I made clear, we are in the course of revising the Combines Investigation Act. Of course, it would not be proper for me to say what will be in the revised Act before it is brought before Parliament.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE AID TO FARMERS LEAVING LANDS

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture related to statements the minister has made, the latest before the National Farm Congress, dealing with proposed government financial and other aid to farmers leaving their lands. I wonder whether the minister can give any indication as to when legislation dealing with this matter will be introduced in the House?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker; I cannot give a precise date but I can repeat the hope I have expressed many times that it will be soon.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FARM PRODUCTION AND DISTRIBUTION—REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINISTER CONCERNING CONTROL

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. Is it his intention to introduce further legislation, in addition to Bill C-176, to translate into action the minister's reported remarks, namely that in future all farm production and distribution will be determined by the government, that decisions in this regard will be taken completely out of the hands of farmers and farm organizations, as is done in the Soviet Union?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the minister has never made such a statement and the one press report that I saw to that effect I thought was journalism at its worst.

ESTABLISHMENT OF EFFECTIVE CONSULTATION PROCEDURE

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in view of complaints by provincial ministers of agriculture and farm organization spokesmen that there has been lack of consultation between these organizations and the two ministers involved in agricultural policy, can the minister assure the House that proper or workable consultation procedure will be set up between the federal government, farm organizations and provincial governments so there may be some understanding between them on the formation of agricultural policy.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think the congress we had last week went a long way towards satisfying effective procedure for consultation. Many of the provincial ministers, as well as leaders of farm organizations, indicated to me that this was a very useful exercise in that regard.

Mr. Gleave: I have a supplementary question. In view of reported statements that a program involving the retirement of farmers and, indeed, substantial acquirement of land is to be followed, has there been consultation with farm organizations and leaders on this program? Will this type of consultation be followed before such a program is started, so that we will not need another congress to discuss it after it has been in operation.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that one of the most useful ways to have consultation is for one side or the other to put forward a proposal. When I have a proposal which will set out the policy as far as the federal government is concerned, obviously and naturally we will put it to the provincial governments and farm organizations in order that they may give us their views.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest we should not get involved in a debate, but before going to another subject the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Lambton-Kent.

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the comment he just made about the terrible reporting of his statement I wonder since we have Information Canada now, whether he will try to get the proper position put forward through that organization?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think we should go on to another subject.

* * *

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. While I congratulate the minister on the white paper he tabled today, I wonder whether he would correct the oversight he made on Friday night, now acknowledged, in that Al Phaneuf did participate in the Grey Cup game, and that he and the Alouettes did a terrific job in bringing the Grey Cup back to Montreal?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I certainly do congratulate the Montreal Alouettes and offer my most sincere apologies to Mr. Phaneuf.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN POSITION ON SALE OF ARMS BY GREAT BRITAIN TO SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister of which I have given him notice. Will he help reconcile the apparent shift in government policy from what I thought was a rather firm position opposing the sales of arms by Britain to South Africa, as set out in the Prime Minister's letter to the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom last July, in light of an answer given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on this topic in London last Friday night?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member suggests the position of the government was made known to Mr. Heath in my letter of July and the position remains the same. Because the hon. member was good enough to give me notice of his question, I did look quickly at the article to which I believe he referred. All I can say is that the conclusions drawn in that story obviously are those of the writer. They do not represent the position of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Naturally, it is our desire that this issue or any issue will not force a break up of the Commonwealth. But to brand efforts to avoid the breaking up of the Commonwealth as waffling or softening is to confuse diplomacy with strident shouting.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister for his positive answer. Before he leaves for the Conference of Prime Ministers in Singapore in January, I wonder whether he would consider commenting one way or the other on the issue of whether a member of the Commonwealth, in his opinion, may take a unilateral policy decision which could result in a very fundamental change in the nature and make-up of the Commonwealth. I do not ask for a policy statement today.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Since the hon. member is suggesting that the comment not be made now perhaps there will be an opportunity for the Prime Minister to do this on motions some time.

SUGGESTION BY SOMALIA RESPECTING ELIMINATION OF TRADE WITH SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Prime Minister. Has the government of Canada had an opportunity to evaluate the suggestion put forward by the government of Somalia to the United Nations that South Africa's major trading partners hold meetings to discuss ways and means of eliminating their trade with South Africa and, if so, is the government of Canada considering initiating such consultations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the question I take it that the consultations have been suggested by a government and therefore that government has taken the initiative. I see nothing new about it. It is a matter which has been discussed at the United Nations for quite some time; that is, whether or not something should be done about trading with South Africa. The member knows the answer which has been given by the major trading nations.

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Speaker, the question which was put is a pretty specific one. I should like to ask the Prime Minister once again whether the government has examined the specific suggestion made by Somalia that the major trading partners—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is repeating the question in exactly the same terms.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

BASING OF FARES BY CERTAIN AIRLINES ON CANADIAN DOLLAR PEGGED AT 92 CENTS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Last week I asked the acting minister whether the government had taken action to deal with the overcharging of Canadian air passengers on international flights originating in Canada. The acting minister indicated the minister would reply as soon as possible.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Well, Mr. Speaker, the matter quite properly was referred to my colleague, the Minister of Transport, and is before the Air Transport Committee of the Transportation Commission. I hope my colleague will have more to say on this matter in the House tomorrow. In the meantime, it is perfectly clear that the present arrangements are due to an international arrangement through IATA but the fact is that Canadians travelling overseas are entitled to pay for their tickets in United States funds and in that way receive a reduction.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware that the IATA manual on traffic conference resolutions, as well as the commercial air service regulations, provide for the immediate removal of discrimination of this kind?

Mr. Basford: Yes, but those are matters being looked at by the Air Transport Committee and my colleague the Minister of Transport.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INTRODUCTION OF PENSION LEGISLATION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Now that the government's white paper on income security for Canadians has been tabled, will the government be introducing legislation to raise the disability pensions paid to veterans and also to raise the level of payments made under the War Veterans Allowance Act?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I hope to be in a position on Wednesday of this week to table veterans legislation. At the same time, I shall make a statement on motions concerning war veterans allowances and veterans pensions.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

INTERPROVINCIAL MARKETING—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SOLVE PROBLEM

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the statement of the Hon. Samuel Uskiw, Minister of Agriculture for Manitoba, made at the agricultural congress concluded this weekend to the effect that Manitobans were particularly embittered over the so-called chicken and egg war and the government's failure to enforce the provisions of the constitution to guarantee free movement of goods across provincial boundaries, what action does the government intend to take to rectify this serious threat to the unity of our country?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Well, Mr. Speaker, this matter was discussed at many of the policy forums held at the agricultural congress. I might say it was also discussed at the agriculture ministers' meetings which were held at the same time. I think the consensus expressed at the federal-provincial conference in September was that passage of some national measure to deal with this problem would be the most satisfactory way to deal with it. That opinion is still the consensus of the ministers.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

NORTHERN MANITOBA—EXTENSION OF SPECIAL AREA

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. I wonder if the minister could say whether any requests have been received from the province of Manitoba to extend the boundaries of the present special area in Northern Manitoba to include the rest of the territory in Northern Manitoba?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have met with the representatives of the government of Manitoba, particularly the Premier, Mr. Schreyer. There was talk of extending the limits of special and designated zones, but no decision was reached.

* * *

[English]

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

DECISION ON OVERTIME PAY

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Can the hon. gentleman advise us concerning the possibility of an early decision regarding overtime pay for members of the Royal Canadian Mounted police?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, that matter is being looked into. I cannot promise the hon. member an early decision.

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

PRINCE ALBERT—INVESTIGATION OF ESCAPE OF PRISONERS AND FIRES

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I, too, should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General. Can he give the House any account of the situation in the Prince Albert pentitentiary?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to do so. Ten of the prisoners who escaped last week have been returned to the penitentiary. One is still at large. Concerning the fires, immediately following the telecast of the Grey Cup game, fires set by a few malcontents broke out simultaneously in the office of the supervisor of recreation located on the south side of the auditorium building and in the library located on the north side of the building. One of the officers on duty was taken hostage by inmates and held for approximately three-quarters of an hour until released by other members of the staff. The damage was quite extensive and a very rough estimate of it is $100,000.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I wonder whether I might be permitted a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the light of the situation which existed over the weekend, and the hunger strike which took place on another occasion at the penitentiary about a year ago as well as the general tension which has existed in that institution for a period of a year and a half, would the minister be prepared to have a thorough inquiry conducted into the administrative competence of the officials of this penitentiary in an effort to see what might be done to alleviate the situation and ensure that in the future some respect will be paid to the officers employed there as well as the inmates in the institution?

Mr. McIlraith: Without admitting all the premises of the hon. member's question, I should point out that two boards of inquiry are presently dealing with matters at the penitentiary. One inquiry relates to the escape of the 11 inmates last week and the other relates to the fire and damage consequent on it. It would be premature to take a firm position on the question of a commission of inquiry to examine into the affairs of the institution until the reports of those two boards are received; the matter will be considered then.

* * *

POWER

PROPOSED FLOODING OF SKAGIT RIVER VALLEY—DISCUSSION WITH UNITED STATES AUTHORITIES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I am sorry to bother the Prime Minister, but I should like to ask him whether his government has taken any steps to open discussions with U.S. authorities on the question of the flooding of the Skagit Valley in British Columbia, a matter which I think is of great interest to some of his colleagues as well as to many others?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): This matter is receiving urgent attention from the government.

Mr. Stanfield: May I ask the question again, since the minister seems to be a little hard of hearing. Have any steps been taken to get the United States authorities to open discussions on the question of the flooding of the Skagit Valley.

Mr. Davis: I think the matter at issue is an internal matter for Canada and one that we must resolve ourselves.

PROPOSED FLOODING OF SKAGIT RIVER VALLEY—NECESSITY FOR CANADIAN PERMIT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the minister if it has been finally established whether or not the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources must grant a permit to the Seattle Light Company before this valley can be flooded, as was suggested by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in a letter which he sent to the hon. member for Fraser Valley West? Has that point been established so that we may know where the responsibility lies, and with whom the decision will lie, with respect to proceeding with the flooding of this valley?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): This matter is also under active consideration by the legal authorities here in Ottawa.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Since this consideration has been going on now for some ten months, may I ask the minister when we can expect the government to reach a decision with respect to who has the authority to grant permission and what action the government is going to take when it is decided whether or not a permit can be granted?

Mr. Davis: My answer to the question is, shortly. However, I should point out to the hon. member that the project is running into several new obstacles on the U.S. side and that we have more time to consider our course of action.

Mr. Stanfield: When the minister suggested that this was a problem that had to be worked out within Canada, was he endorsing the view attributed to the Prime Minister regarding the way in which the people of British Columbia had to solve the problem, or does he have something else in mind?

* * *

[Translation]

AIRPORTS

STE. SCHOLASTIQUE—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FROM FEDERAL GOVERNMENT IN BUILDING NEW HIGHWAY FROM HULL

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

As the construction of a new road is contemplated between Hull and the new international airport at Ste. Scholastique, would he tell us if the Quebec authorities have asked for the financial assistance of the federal government? If so, to what extent?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NEGOTIATIONS ON SALE OF ARMS TO FRANCE AND PROVISION OF SUMMER FLEET BASE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Perhaps he might be able to enlighten us a little regarding some suggestions made by the chief of the defence staff last evening on television. Can the Prime Minister indicate to the House whether or not the government has entered into any negotiations with the government of France with respect, first, to the sale of additional arms to that country and, second, with respect to the opening up of one of our defence bases on the east coast for a summer fleet base for the French navy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not aware of that. This matter comes under the Minister of National Defence. I will ask him to report to the House on it, if asked, when he next returns.

* * *

[Translation]

FISHERIES

CANADIAN SALTFISH CORPORATION POLICY RESPECTING PRICES TO FISHERMEN

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary of the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry whether he is able to answer a question that I put to him last Wednesday?

[English]

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): I am informed that the Canadian Saltfish Corporation was acting under powers given to it under a provincial Act respecting the marketing of salt fish passed on April 28, 1970. In section 2, the provincial Act provides that no person other than the corporation or an agent of the corporation shall buy salt fish. Therefore, no private firm can engage in this trade, even if the price they pay is greater than the initial price paid by an agent of the corporation.

* * *

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

EFFECTS OF POSSIBLE INCREASE IN OIL PRICES

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It arises from the statement made by western Canadian oilmen that they expect an over-all price increase of between 25 and 40 cents a barrel for their product, depending on the government's policies. I should like to ask the minister whether he has been looking into the effects which such an increase would have on consumer prices and, if not, whether he intends to do so?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I am not aware of the statement but I will search it out and see what ramifications it has for my department.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

NEWFOUNDLAND—INVESTIGATION OF BUS ACCIDENTS, QUALITY OF SERVICE

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary or the acting Minister of Transport. Could the department investigate the serious accident to a Canadian National bus in Newfoundland yesterday, and could the investigation include several previous accidents, as well as the general quality of the bus transportation system serving the whole province?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I will get in touch with the Minister of Transport immediately and I hope that when he is in the House tomorrow he will be able to deal with that very serious question.

* * *

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

EFFECT OF NATURAL GAS EXPORT AGREEMENT ON CANADIAN PRICES

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): I should like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs whether he has had a chance to check into the effect the recent agreement with the United States on the export of natural gas has had on consumer prices in Canada and, if so, when will he report to the House?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): That is a matter that is properly within the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board. I am not quite sure to what the question refers. The sale was approved by them and the effect on domestic supplies is outlined in the report of the National Energy Board.

* * *

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

HIRING OF UNITED STATES CITIZEN AS PUBLIC RELATIONS OFFICER

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): In the absence of the Secretary of State, I will put my question to his Parliamentary Secretary. Will he see that an inquiry is made of the CBC to determine whether or not all other possibilities were exhausted before a U.S. citizen was hired as chief public relations officer for the corporation?

Mr. James Hugh Faulkner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I will pass that question on to the corporation.

Mr. Broadbent: Would he also inquire whether or not this U.S. citizen was, until recently, an employee of the U.S. consulate?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

Canadian National Railways

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES, GUARANTEEING OF SECURITIES

The House resumed from Friday, November 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson that Bill C-186, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1970, to the 30th day of June, 1971, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina Lake Centre): We are on the forty seventh year of what I think has become the annual awards day for the Canadian National Railways, awards for their borrowings and their debts. I do not know if this is a longer record than the Academy Awards, but the number of annual awards for the CNR constitute, I think, a record in Canada.

I was disappointed at the manner in which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) chose to introduce this bill, in view of what had been said about the CNR each year, and in particular in the last two or three years regarding its financing problems and CN pensions. One would have thought the minister would have spent a few moments at least expressing government policy, and dealing with some of the questions that have been raised on numerous occasions both inside and outside the House. Instead of that, he chose to spend eight or ten minutes reading what I suggest must have been on the cover of the bill, and then he sat down. This is completely inadequate, and one hopes, however fondly, that before the debate on this bill ends someone else from the government will take part in the debate and deal with matters that were raised in particular last year and again this year.

• (3:30 p.m.)

I choose to call this the 47th annual awards-for-the-CNR Day. It all began in 1923 with the debt that started the company off under an initial financial burden that it can never repay, or at least reduce to a level where it could be met each year out of the operating revenues of the CNR. This continuing debt burden cannot be blamed on the Canadian National Railways. Most of the debt that the taxpayers have met each year can be attributed to the results of public policies which were in effect then, and which are still in effect now.

The evidence is ample that on a year-to-year basis for these 47 years the CNR has been operating efficiently and profitably. In the 47 years its rail operation has shown net rail revenues in 41 of those years, and rail losses in only six of them. In that same 47 years, however, there were only 13 of them when the government of Canada did not have to vote funds for deficits. In the other 36 years, Parliament has voted it a grand total—believe it or not—of $1,123,527,043. That is the total votes of Parliament to clear up deficits. They were not votes for capital expenditures, something which would be perfectly proper. They were not votes for debentures or bonds, or for the purchase of shares in the CNR. Those were the total votes in 47 years just to clear up deficits.

If one takes more recent times, from 1944 to 1969, a period of 26 years, the evidence of an efficient and viable Crown corporation is even more striking. In 23 of those 26 years our company, the CNR, showed a surplus. But after deducting interest on debt our company, the CNR, showed a loss in 21 of those 26 years. When one looks at the interest charges one finds an interesting and maybe peculiar situation. One finds that most of the interest charges are now paid to the government of Canada. For example, interest on debt in 1969, as shown in the CNR's annual report, comes to $74,205,000, but $45 million of that is interest to be paid to the government of Canada. At the same time, in the same year 1969, the CNR surplus in round figures was $49,500,000, and so it would appear that for that year much of the money we were voting for the annual award was money to be paid back to the government.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that something like $4 billion which is owned by the CNR is not of much interest to government members. No doubt they are prepared to perpetuate for another 47 years what goes on with this Crown corporation. And no doubt the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and other members over there, who are busy gabbling like a bunch of roosters in a chickenless coop, could not care less. But, Mr. Speaker, I hope that there are hon. members of this House who are concerned about it, and who are going to insist that the government do something about it.

I was saying that most, if not all, of the money that Parliament is being asked to vote in this bill for the CNR deficit is money that will be paid back to the government for interest owing to it. Similarly in 1968, interest on the debt of the CNR was $70 million, and again half of that was interest owing to the government of Canada. These interest charges are compounding a mounting debt. The debt is compounded each year by further loans that are used to pay off previous deficits, which include mounting interest charges that we owe ourselves. In the past ten years, the interest on the debt for our company climbed from $49 million to $74 million.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member but I must bring to the attention of hon. members that it is extremely difficult to follow the hon. member who has the floor when there are so many conversations taking place. I think hon. members should be prepared to co-operate with the Chair, and with the member who has the floor, a little more than that.

Mr. Benjamin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now that Zorro has left, and maybe left his mark over there, we can continue with what most of us consider to be a very serious matter. I was saying that in the past ten years, interest on the debt of our company has risen from $49 million to $74 million, while in the same period the company's return varied from a low of a $6 million loss to a high of a $49 million surplus. The total interest bill for 1969 for the CNR amounts to $95.6 million. That includes interest on unfunded debt, the major portion of which is the unfunded liabilities to the CNR pension fund. I am not an accountant, but it seems silly to me to be voting funds each year to the CNR to clear up deficits when much or even all of the deficit each year can be attributed to the interest that the CNR owes to the government of Canada. In other words, we are voting money to pay back to ourselves.

One way out of this dilemma is for the people of Canada, through the government which is the major holder of shares and of the debts of the company, to forget about getting any interest or dividends until such time as the CNR's financial position is such that it will enable it to make returns on the investment of the people of Canada. Surely there are other kinds of returns on investment that are just as important or even more important than monetary returns. Surely, the best return which the people of Canada can have for our investment in the CNR is in an efficient, comprehensive, national railway system providing maximum service to our people. I submit that this kind of profit is much better than any monetary profit.

It is obvious that as long as we put a monetary return on investment ahead of a return through public service we prevent our national rail system from functioning in the manner we need and want. As long as we insist that charging and collecting interest are more important than better rail transportation services, then the CNR railway services and financial position will continue to deteriorate. We cannot continue this kind of financial structure for the CNR and expect to maintain and improve the services we receive from our rail transportation system. We cannot have it both ways.

One way out of the dilemma will require a fundamental change in the attitude of the government and a fundamental change in our national transportation policy. The government and all of its predecessors have continued transportation policies that are based on the private enterprise myth of competition and profits. I submit that that is what has got us into our transportation difficulties, and what perpetuates and compounds those difficulties now.

Railways, by the very nature of their operation, are an essential public enterprise operation. They are not competitive private enterprises. Therefore, they are a public utility and, Mr. Speaker, public utilities should be publicly owned. The aim of those utilities should be service for the people at the lowest possible cost, with profit something very secondary. National transportation policies, especially where they affect railways and airlines, based on private profit and competition principles, are illogical. It is economic nonsense to have competition amongst public utilities. If present government policies and attitudes toward air and rail transportation are logical, then it would be logical to have competing sewer and water systems, and it would be logical to have competing street and highway systems. Since no one with any sanity would propose such a thing, surely it is time to get rid of private enterprise and competition principles in policies for rail and air transportation in Canada. The application of competition and private enterprise principles to airlines is eroding the capability and viability of Air Canada.

• (3:40 p.m.)

One would have thought we would have learned our lesson, Mr. Speaker, from the mess we got into with our railways for the past 80 years, but no, we have continued along the same path. In years to come I predict that we will be facing a situation with regard to Air Canada similar to that facing us now with regard to Canadian National Railways.

All over the world airlines are in financial difficulties, mostly due to the fact that too many of them compete for the same traffic. This, combined with the large amount of capital required for planes, means that they cannot all survive or, if they are to do so, they have to be heavily subsidized by the public. I submit that we are sending Air Canada down the same route as we sent Canadian National Railways and the other railways prior to its formation. To allow Canadian Pacific to participate in the most lucrative air passenger traffic in Canada, transcontinental traffic, and to allow them routes where there is only sufficient traffic to support one viable and efficient airline means that the two airlines will not do nearly as well. Handing more and more routes over to a multiplicity of private regional carriers is to limit Air Canada.

One ridiculous example of this, Mr. Speaker, is giving TransAir one of the ten most lucrative routes that Air Canada formerly serviced. This hurts Air Canada but it helps some friends of the government, namely a former executive assistant to a cabinet minister and a defeated Liberal candidate in a recent byelection as well as others. TransAir was heavily subsidized by the government while it messed around trying to give air service in the Prairie provinces, but it never did accomplish much. Those TransAir services are now reduced to the point where they don't count, although they now have that going route from Winnipeg to Toronto through Thunder Bay and Sault Ste. Marie. This multiplicity of companies, all heavily financed—

Mr. Osler: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre seeks the floor on a question of privilege.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Speaker, as a member of the party involved in the byelection referred to a moment ago, I want to make it abundantly clear that the gentleman whose name was not mentioned but was alluded to, had no connection whatsoever with TransAir until after the byelection. I do not see any reason why the two things go together.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a point of debate and not a question of privilege.

Mr. McCleave: He was paid now but flew later.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman now wishes that he had not brought up the subject. Suffice to say that the comment he made is answer enough.

This multiplicity of companies, all heavily financed and pursuing a limited volume of air traffic, is suicidal. The only result will be severe financial difficulty for a number of airlines in the future. Will we keep this up until we find the people and the government of Canada being called upon to bail out several bankrupt airlines? Surely, this is a classic case of history repeating itself. One only has to go back to the period 1880 to 1923 when everybody wanted to get into the act, particularly the wealthy friends of the government of the day, and build a railway. We had railways of a wide variety and kind, and with the exception of Canadian Pacific—we gave them enough to make sure they survived—they went bankrupt. If we did not learn from that lesson when are we going to learn?

I submit that we are following exactly the same pattern with regard to air traffic and airline policies as we did back in those days regarding railway policies. If we are to have an efficient and viable national transportation system by rail and air, it will require a fundamental change in the thinking and attitude of the government. It will be necessary to indicate that service takes priority over interest charges.

Speaking of service, Mr. Speaker, I for one do not put all the blame for the deterioration of service on the CNR management. With the kind of financial situation they have faced since 1923, no matter how worthy their intentions, they have had no option but to reduce service. One should give them full marks for making the maximum effort in attempting to improve and enlarge passenger services and passenger revenues as they have. It is probably the only railway in North America that increased passenger revenue and revenue miles between 1960 and 1969; in fact, in that period they almost doubled.

When you have a national transportation policy that places greater emphasis on interest charges and on making sure that bond holders are looked after rather than service to the public, then services are going to suffer. Since the end of World War II we have seen a reduction in train service. Some of these reductions were legitimate, the result of technology, particularly in the case of diesels. The discontinuance or reduction of passenger service lowered the volume of traffic and meant smaller revenues. Then, we saw the closing of railway agencies and ticket offices, followed by the abandonment of whole railway lines and railway subdivisions. Under this bill, though, money could be borrowed to build branch lines for mining corporations and the like, but never mind the public of Canada.

This has been the pattern followed by Canadian National Railways, and even more so by Canadian Pacific Railways, as well as railways in the United States. In considering railway costs, we must not forget to count the cost to our nation and our economy of the reduction of rail services. As a former railroader I readily admit that a few of the branch lines were superfluous, but a reduction of the scope proposed by CPR is unwarranted. I do not think the cost of that action has been considered by this government or the provincial government.

If one were to consider the cost of up-grading municipal road systems to accommodate traffic that would otherwise have travelled on railway branch lines, Mr. Speaker, it would amount to hundreds of millions of dollars. These costs have not been weighed against the cost of maintaining railway lines. Before more branch lines are abandoned, agencies closed or passenger trains discontinued, I think that the government, parliament as a whole, the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications and even the Canadian Transport Commission—although I do not think that body will do what I suggest—ought to look at the question of costs and determine what the total costs are in this area for all of Canada. It seems to me that we can make a more imaginative use of our rail transport and communications systems, and other transport systems such as trucking firms. In the towns or villages that have a population of 500 or more, why should there not be a transportation and communications centre? There, if you wanted to do so, it would be possible to make a telephone call, send a telegram, or send a telex message. Shipments arriving either by truck or rail would arrive at such centres. If you wanted to ship out goods by rail, road or any other transport system, you could ship them from such a centre. There, an interested person could have access to tariff information, to teletype facilities and to computers that might be located in cities such as Montreal, Calgary or Toronto.

• (3:50 p.m.)

An hon. Member: Or Regina.

Mr. Benjamin: Or Regina. Most facilities of this kind are being discontinued in areas around that city. Most of these small communities have lost their post offices; many have already lost their station agents but both of them have gone. Few of those centres have any sort of permanent truck depot, and none of them have immediate access to air transport facilities. The establishment of such centres would make available to the Canadian people such national transportation facilities as are available. I have thrown out that idea off the top of my head. Perhaps this would not be a practical suggestion for towns or villages with a population of 500; perhaps it would only work with centres of 1,000 people and more. Yet, it seems to me that that is the kind of facility which would make available to all Canadians the benefit of the different kinds of transportation and communications systems in the country.

In speaking about reduced train services, may I say this: it has been brought to my attention today that the Canadian National management intends to replace the passenger trains now operating between Ottawa and Montreal with dayliners. I understand this affects all present passenger trains, except the transcontinental service. All other trains will be replaced with dayliners. If my information is correct, this means the elimination of parlour cars and dining cars on the Ottawa-Montreal run. Of course, as we know, a dayliner is a sort of glorified bus on rails. It is my information that these changes are scheduled for February 1, next year. The trains to be affected are No. 31, which leaves Montreal for Ottawa daily at 8.10 a.m.; No. 131 which leaves Montreal on Sundays only at 10.15 in the morning; the west bound train No. 30, which leaves Ottawa for Montreal at 7.40 in the morning and No. 36, which leaves Ottawa for Montreal at 4.40 every afternoon. On this train you can obtain dining car service, buffet service and, for all I know, bar service. Not having travelled on the train, I have no personal knowledge about that. My information is that these services are to be suspended as of February 1.

If these reductions go into effect, first class rail passenger service with meals between the nation's capital and the largest city in the nation will disappear. The Canadian Pacific Railway already has pulled off its additional trains from the same route. I hope that every member of this House, and in particular all those members who are from Ottawa, Montreal, the area beyond Montreal and who represent that area between Ottawa and Montreal, will raise hell about this during the present debate. Of course, if my information is not correct, I will be happy to be corrected. If my information is correct, I hope that the members most affected and their constituents, will see to it that the matter is raised loudly and vigorously during the debate on this bill.

I now come to another matter that was raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who opened this debate on behalf of our party. I am sure members of all parties will say something about this, and I intend to take my turn in doing so. I am referring to the pensions of retired CNR employees and to the CNR pension plan generally. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that one year ago almost to this day, a debate began on a bill similar to this one for CNR financing. In that debate, Members of Parliament on all sides of the House persuaded the government to give a commitment that CNR financing and CNR pensions would be referred to the standing committee which would study these matters and make recommendations to this House.

We were all very happy that the government agreed to do this, Mr. Speaker, and I, having been a member of that committee, wish to say that it was a very good committee. I am sure it must have heard between 40 and 50 briefs. That is only a guess on my part. Possibly there were more. It sat dozens of times and spent hundreds of hours on this item. One cannot say that those members who served on it were docile Members of Parliament. There was the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner), who is a railroader. There was also the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg), who is a railroader. There was the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), who is not a railroader but who can make as much noise any day as a railroad. The committee consisted of men like that. I, too, an ex railroader was a member of that Committee. All of us had some knowledge of railroading and we all knew a little about pensions. In addition, we were served by an excellent staff. The Chairman of the committee did an excellent job and excellent briefs were presented to the committee. Believe it or not, and I was prepared to bet one year ago that this would not happen, the committee presented a unanimous report.

Not believing that that would happen, the hon. member for Moose Jaw and I were quite prepared to bring in a minority report. Nevertheless, that committee brought in a unanimous report which speaks well not only of the committee but of the soundness of the case put forward by the CNR employees and pensioners.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Hear, hear.

Mr. Benjamin: Only because the case of those men was so good and so strong did the committee bring in a unanimous report. In the discussions we had during the drafting of that report, we became aware of the unanimity of members from all corners of the House. There was a singleness of purpose in the minds of all members. We adopted the report unanimously; it was presented in this chamber and, again, wonder of wonders, something happened which rarely happens. When that report was submitted to the House, it was adopted by this House unanimously. That took place under circumstances even more rare, circumstances that I am sure Mr. Speaker would wish to see repeated. The report was so adopted without debate. Yet, despite that, Canadian National Railways has refused to act on that report. It ought to be pointed out that while the committee was drafting that report, Canadian National Railways through its vice president, Mr. Tarr, saw fit to announce some pension plan changes which in my opinion were very minor and totally inadequate. I repeat here what I said before the standing committee: that was a deliberate attempt by the Canadian National management to undercut the committee and head off its report. It was an insult to that committee and an insult to Parliament. Worse still, it was an insult to the CNR pensioners.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Hear, hear.

Mr. Benjamin: I hope that either the committee, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) or the government will censure the CNR management, and censure particularly the vice president, Mr. Tarr, for the way that committee was treated and for the cavalier attitude expressed by the CNR towards a unanimous report which was adopted by Parliament. I hope that the message gets through to them very strongly. I hate to say this, Mr. Speaker, because I have a great deal of admiration and respect for the management of Canadian National Railways. They have operated that railway extremely well in the face of horrible odds.

• (4:00 p.m.)

With regard to the matter of pensions for employees, Canadian National has acted little better than the best of railway pirates, namely the Canadian Pacific Railway. Because this is a publicly owned corporation, it is more responsible to Parliament and the people of Canada than a privately owned company. It is incumbent upon the management of the CNR to act in a better way than this. In fact, it is incumbent upon them to set an example for private employers in the transportation industry.

The cavalier attitude of the CNR toward Parliament needs to be dealt with by this government and by Parliament. I hope that members of all parties agree that this bill should not pass until such time as the government requires the CNR to implement the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications with regard to CNR pensions. If the CNR refuses to do the right thing, Parliament will have to require them to do what is right or act on their behalf. It is not too late for Parliament to make fundamental changes in our transportation policies in order to give greater priority to public service and public needs and less priority to the financing and the needs of financiers.

When the CNR began operations on January 21, 1923 the company debt was over $2 billion. Since that time, $1.8 billion has been added to that debt. The Canadian public owns almost all of the shares of the company. I am interested in knowing who still holds the $4 million of capital stock. Who are these stockholders and how long have they held these stocks? In which subsidiary companies are these stocks? I have been unable to acquire this information through my own resources, but I hope it will be given to the House. It will certainly be requested in the standing committee.

Another small item to which I wish to refer is typical of what has been allowed to happen to the finances of our railway system. There is over $2 million worth of debt held by the public which is a perpetual debt with 5½ per cent interest. I thought that perpetual bonds went out in the days of Queen Victoria. Maybe that is when these bonds were issued, I do not know. If so, it is time to repeal these last vestiges of the Victorian age. I would like to know who holds these bonds. Where are they? Are they held in subsidiary companies of the CNR? Are they perpetual bonds of the old Grand Trunk Pacific, Grand Trunk Northern, Canadian Northern Railways or Canadian Government Railways? The amount involved is only $2 million, but perpetuity is a long time. To receive 5½ per cent interest forever is pretty good, if you can live that long. I doubt whether they are held by individuals. If so, they will be unable to collect in perpetuity.

If these bonds are in the hands of some institution, I do not think it will be driven into bankruptcy or made a social welfare case if Parliament enacts legislation wiping these bonds off the books. If they were issued 50 or 75 years ago, we should determine the total amount of interest paid. If it amounts to more than the principal, that is a pretty fair return on the investment and the bonds should be recalled. These are some of the questions I would like answered. I hope we get the answers either in this chamber or in the standing committee.

I recommend to all hon. members a Dominion Bureau of Statistics document issued in September, 1970, catalogue No. 52201. It is entitled, "Canadian National Railways 1923 to 1969". I commend this booklet to all hon. members. Because of my ignorance of accounting procedures and terminology, I spent a week end trying to understand it. I may have misread or misunderstood some of this. If so, I hope someone will straighten me out. I hope all members have a copy of this booklet when the annual report of the management of the CNR is presented next spring. We need to get the message through to the management of the CNR that all members of this House want to be very helpful with regard to the company's financial obligations and liabilities. I am sincere in saying that. It is time the management of the CNR told us what they think should be done about the company's financial position. We could use this information.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has exp red. The hon. member can only continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the debate on the annual awards to the CNR, I ask hon. members on both sides of the House to give the matter of the CNR financing the closest possible scrutiny. It will be helpful to the committee when dealing with this bill and when dealing with the CNR annual report. It will also be very helpful to the CNR. Much more information is required, even more than is contained in this very thorough document. I hope the management of the CNR will be anxious and willing to supply us with the information which we request. With regard to that matter and to the matter of CNR pensions, on which the committee report was unanimously adopted, I hope that all members will attempt to get the message through to the CNR and the government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo.

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): It appears that even the Deputy Speaker is not able to get the name of my riding correct. It is Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo. I must ensure that the right names are used.

We are happy to note that today the government brought in its much heralded white paper on income security for Canadians. We certainly hope that vehicle is going to be carried forward and that the unanimous and detailed report presented by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications with regard to the needs of retired Canadian National Railway employees was given every consideration during the preparation of the white paper. Although I have never been employed by a railroad, I did for many years live in a town where railroading was a way of life. Many employees of Canadian National who worked during the depression years are now pensioners, and they are having a very difficult time making ends meet at a time when very little emphasis is placed on controlling inflation.

• (4:10 p.m.)

I welcome this opportunity that comes annually to speak about CN affairs. I should first like to make another plea to the Department of Transport to consider favourably the site I have proposed in Amherst township, in Dufferin county, for the new international airport to be built northwest of Toronto. This is a site that has a lot to offer. For example, not too many people will be displaced; the price of the land will be comparatively low; and it has good access to Toronto, Hamilton, London, Kitchener and Waterloo. This is a site that I feel should receive special consideration.

I was a little disturbed last week when I heard that one of the problems that might arise in this area is that there is no strongly flowing stream to carry away pollutants from the sewage and lagoon systems that might have to be constructed to cope with the expected approximately 100,000 people who would live there. I sincerely hope that by the time the proposed airport becomes operational this government, through the work of its National Research Council and as a result of the research undertaken by other government departments, will be in a position to introduce a recycling scheme that will make it possible for inland towns to promote and develop airports, as in this case, and industries.

To return to the main theme of my remarks, members from western Ontario have spent a lot of time in this debate discussing railroad matters. On November 1, all passenger rail traffic was discontinued in the very important and developing area north and west of Guelph and west of Stratford. At that time we felt that we might have lost the battle, but this does not always indicate that we have lost the war. This debate provides us with an opportunity of further discussing the developments that might take place in this particular area. We fought Canadian National Railways in this regard for many years. I have always felt that the Board of Transport Commissioners gave us a fair deal. I think sometimes we received better consideration from them than we have from the National Transportation Commission.

Looking back to the railway bill brought into the House by the minister of transport of the day, who had squirmed himself into this House from his many positions in the civil service, I can recall that this was not the first legislation he introduced which was controversial and which he had difficulty putting through the House. I am very glad to say that our party did not support that bill on the final vote. The National Transportation Act was to be the be-all and end-all of our transportation problems. It was going to unfold a great new transportation policy, one which I am still waiting to see. In fact, I think this legislation opened the door to the railways to close branch lines which, in a lot of areas, should still be continued.

As I have mentioned before, the inconsistencies in the decisions of the commission are outstanding. The other day the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson) mentioned the fact that the railway line in his area had not been discontinued. We noticed that, according to news articles, the CPR had discontinued it because people had to ride in baggage cars, stations were filthy and the scheduling was bad. However, the transportation commission ordered the CPR to continue operation of that line.

Let me refer once again to the hearings that took place during the Easter holidays last April in Owen Sound. One of the things pointed out to the Canadian Transportation Commission on that occasion was the fact that the CPR should upgrade its services and improve accommodation on the trains. Talking of riding in baggage cars, I have ridden in the baggage car of the rail liner that runs out of Guelph simply because there was not room for me in the rest of the car. This has happened weekend after weekend. Certainly, people who had to ride in the baggage car would look for alternative transportation the next time. A public relations job on the part of the railway was needed here. The last speaker said that rail liners are going to be run from Ottawa to Montreal. I suggest that if they are no more comfortable than the rail liners in my area, it is not going to be long before people will refuse to ride on them, too. Consequently, more pressure will be put on the highways of the nation to accommodate those who would like to travel on the railroad but find the accommodation so uncomfortable that they look for an alternative.

I am also getting tired of hearing this phrase "uneconomic branch lines". It is not only the railways that are uneconomic. For example, what about the CBC, many government departments, and especially the Department of National Defence with its aeroplanes that go straight into mothballs? How far do we continue this process of lopping off services that do not pay? The railroads have not devoted enough research into providing alternate means of travelling on the railroads. This is a matter I mentioned before and which I will keep on mentioning until I am told that it is economically and mechanically impossible.

There are miles of railroad lines across this country which are being maintained and, in fact improved. For example, in my area a new nuclear power project is being constructed at Douglas Point. Part of the money provided by this bill is for the construction of a new branch line from Hanover to Southampton and then up to Douglas Point. Once a day or once a week a train will carry oil to power the heavy water plant until enough steam is provided by the plant to enable it to be self-sufficient. That line is going to pay because the railroad would not put it in if it were not. The weight of the rails is being increased all the way up that line, and it will be ploughed all winter long. Why will this line be kept in service? Will it be only a 5 per cent or 10 per cent usage? If I were in the provincial government and the railway company applied for more PCV licences to operate their express trucks up there, I would ask them if they had ever tried putting those trucks on the rails which were not being used. I would ask them whether they had thought of putting on buses for the people to use. They would be much more comfortable than the old rail liners. I would ask them whether they had done any research in this regard.

• (4:20 p.m.)

I have a pamphlet which indicates that some experiments were conducted several years ago in the United States in this regard. Why is the Canadian National now considering the operation of these big turbo-trains between Toronto and Montreal which will cost millions of dollars? Do we know that these are going to pay? I suggest they may or may not. By the same token, I do not think the rail passenger service in this nation ever did pay, but this was only a small part of the total railway picture. This was part of the service the railway companies promised to give, not just at the time but in perpetuity. These companies made promises when they were given franchises to operate railways in this nation and they should be held to those promises, particularly in the populated areas. The people deserve rail service and these companies should reconsider their position. I hope they will spend a little more money in researching the feasibility and bringing into operation those things I have mentioned.

Why should all the provinces of Canada be faced with such heavy transportation costs and continue to subsidize the buses and trucks being used by the railway companies? The railway companies have not discontinued their freight and express service in this area. This service must be paying, so the very same people the companies said they were losing money on are still helping increase the revenues of these companies. I agree with an earlier speaker that the management of the CNR has done a fair job of showing a profit in the past couple of years and in reducing the deficit which has to be paid by the government of Canada.

I should also like to refer to the agreements which were made and the things which were given to the railways. It seems to be almost impossible to find the agreements made with the CNR but I imagine they were made on the same basis as the agreements with the CPR. These were the promises made by the companies. The company undertook to build a transcontinental railway by May 1, 1891 and from thereafter and forever maintain, work and run this railway. I have a very interesting little pamphlet entitled "The Federal Railway Land Subsidy Policy of Canada". It is rather interesting to note how much was given to the railways in those days, not only in the way of money but in land. In fact, in one area of Manitoba, for every mile of railway completed the company was given 6,400 acres of land. That was of great assistance and those gifts of land would be worth a lot of money today. I maintain that if the railway companies made an agreement with every town and village through which they run to provide service, they should continue that service as long as there are people to be served. Instead, they are now being allowed to cut off their service.

I have the feeling that in every one of those communities through which the railways run there is a lot of land which was given to them which they still own. Much of this land could be used by these communities. I know of one town in which the CNR has five acres in the most expensive area, and the company proposes to develop the land itself. When the railway companies came to these communities and asked for permission to run services through them, the communities were very happy, but by the same token they are very unhappy to see these services eliminated. I sincerely hope that as time passes some of these things I have mentioned will be considered.

There is one other thing that bothers me, and that is the fact that at practically every hearing the companies have appeared with a great many figures showing how they arrived at a loss position. We asked for an independent audit, but in many cases we were never able to get one. We often felt there were times when the companies charged too much of the operating cost against the passenger services they wanted to discontinue. Even after the Canadian Transportation Commission took over and was supposed to audit the figures of the CNR before they were presented at the hearings, we were not happy with the idea that this was such a financially poor service the companies should be allowed to get out.

When we look at the amount of money being voted each year to this Crown corporation we wonder about the auditing. I have here the Canadian National Railways System Auditor's Report to Parliament for the year ending December 31, 1969. It is not a very large document and it certainly does not go into much detail. If we wanted to find out what was going on in respect of the passenger service in the Bruce Peninsula, it would be impossible to find any figures in this auditor's report to Parliament. Through the years we have been finding areas of government which should probably be examined. In view of all these things, I feel it would be important to all Canadians to have this immense Crown corporation, which plays such a great part in the cost of living of everyone in Canada and is borrowing money from the federal government, brought under the Auditor General. The figures of the company should be presented to him and he should present a yearly report of its operations to this House.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas):

That Bill C-186 be not now read a second time as, in the opinion of this House, the making of financial guarantees or grants to the Canadian National Railways without the appointment of the Auditor General of Canada at least as a joint auditor of the CNR is not a principle that this House ought to support.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The House has heard the amendment moved by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Howe). If hon. members agree, I should like to consider this matter and discuss it with Mr. Speaker before putting it in a formal manner. I know that at least one other hon. member wishes to deal with the main motion. If this is agreeable, I shall reserve my decision for the present.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, it certainly is a pleasure to follow the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Howe), particularly on a subject such as this. This is a matter about which he has spoken on many occasions over the years, not only in the House of Commons but in the areas of Canada which he represents so capably. I must say that because of his speech my remarks will be shorter since many of the comments he made are those which I would have made.

I believe it is high time you and I, Mr. Speaker, as parliamentarians, decided who is responsible for transportation policies in Canada. We should decide whether it is the railways or the House of Commons. As the last speaker and others have said in this debate, although we are dealing merely with the Canadian National Railways in this bill as well as Air Canada, one cannot differentiate in respect of the CNR and the Canadian Pacific Railway in this connection. While it is necessary that the CNR each year ask Parliament for funds, the CPR received millions and millions of dollars as a result of agreements drawn up years ago. In addition the CPR was given millions of acres of land by the people of Canada. This money and the land were given to the CPR by the people of Canada in return for the provision of railway service for ever and ever. Because of this, this money has been going into the coffers of the CPR every year. Since the CPR is a private enterprise corporation, it does not have to come to the House each year to ask for money as is the case in respect of the CNR.

I should like for a moment to review some things which occurred many years ago when the railways began opening up the hinterland of Canada. Sir John A. Macdonald realized that in order to unite Canada it was necessary to have a railway system extending from Vancouver through to Halifax. Therefore, he and the financiers of that day, along with his associates, began thinking about how such a railway system could be started. Apart from having the brains to realize the necessity for such an undertaking, it was necessary to have the required money.

Many meetings were held and agreements were drawn up. By and large, the agreements were to the effect that the people would provide the money and the railways would provide the services for all time. In connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, we find that this railway was given $25 million. That was a large amount of money in those days. In addition, the railway was given 25 million acres of land. In return, the Canadian Pacific Railway was to build lines right across Canada and in various other areas of the country. Those services were to be provided for all time. The arrangement in respect of the Canadian National Railways was similar although it was financed by the Government of Canada. The railways were financed by hundreds of municipalities across Canada. This includes municipalities such as those in the riding of Bruce which I represent. The agreements provided that one municipality would advance $20,000, another $25,000, another $30,000 and another $40,000. In return for this money provided by the various municipalities, the railway was to provide railway service to these municipalities for all time.

It may be that in certain circumstances some corporations, provinces or municipalities should be permitted to renege on a contract. It may be, for instance, that in certain areas of Canada a railway system today simply does not pay. It may be also, if Parliament so wishes and agrees, that the railway should be allowed to withdraw services in certain areas. However, if that should be the case, I suggest that when one reneges on a deal the other side of the story should be taken into consideration. In other words, the municipalities across Canada who signed agreements in the first instance with the railways should have the money they paid returned to them. Is there anything wrong with such a suggestion? Surely, this is the manner in which private business is conducted. Surely, also, if I have a parcel of land which I exchange with someone for services rendered, if those services should cease it is only right and proper that the parcel of land should be returned to me.

In the areas which I and other hon. members represent, it would appear that the CNR is no longer providing the services but is selling the lands that were given to it at a profit. At least, this is what the railway is attempting to do in the riding of Bruce. The hon. member who spoke a few moments ago mentioned the Douglas Point project. This is one of the largest projects from a financial point of view by any government agency in Canada. It involves an amount in excess of $1 billion. The Canadian National Railways system is strengthening its tracks and so on, as well as improving its freight service. At the same time, however, the passenger service is being cut off through the whole area. The City of Owen Sound, with a population of approximately 19,000, and the immediate area with a population of 15,000 or 20,000, were left without rail passenger service as of November 1, 1970. Let us give the railways the benefit of the doubt and let us also assume that the Canadian Transport Commission did not make a mistake in cutting off passenger service in this area. Then, let us look at the deal that was made by the railway with the municipalities and let us consider the lands the railway received in return for providing service for all time to the people in that particular area.

Only a week or so ago, a motion was passed by the Bruce County Council. A copy was sent to me, the Canadian National Railways and to the Canadian Transport Commission. This motion, in effect, places the cards right on the table. Although I hesitate to mention in this House of Commons things which happen in a particular municipality or riding, nevertheless I shall refer to this motion because it hits the nail right on the head. That is exactly what we want to do. The motion which was put through reads:

• (4:40 p.m.)

That all lands in railway rights-of-way owned by either the Canadian National Railways or the Canadian Pacific Railway, which are no longer in use, be returned, without charge to the municipalities.

That motion was passed by the municipal council and it puts in one sentence exactly what should be done here in Canada. The CNR has called off the deal, so the municipalities should have the right to call off the deal also. We want the land back. The hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo pointed out the various fields in which the railways have been successful, such as the hotel business and the gas and oil business, in which the CPR in particular has been so successful. Certainly, the railways can bring wheat across the country when we make large sales to China, the U.S.S.R., or some other country. In many instances, they provide services all over the world. But they have forgotten the people who pay the bill, namely, the citizens of Canada.

I hope that when the time comes for the CNR officials to appear before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications these points will be brought out very strongly. Those people who travel to the Grey Cup and football games throughout the year cannot use the wonderful services about which the railway companies boast, such as the very best of refrigeration, etc. The Canadian Pacific Air Lines have an aircraft called the "Executive" which travels across Canada on which they have the prettiest girls in the world. On this flight you can use business machines of various types, you can get any type of magazine as well as the finest food in the world, but if you want to go 500 miles on a railway passenger train, in many instances you cannot even get a sandwich. In my opinion, the railways have purposely put themselves out of the passenger business.

I would like to add one thing in closing. At the hearings that were held in Owen Sound last Easter—and to all hon. members Owen Sound is a long way away from their territory, but I ask them to listen please because this is going to happen to them also—it was pointed out by the railways that the bus companies would take over. I say, nonsense; they are not taking over at all. From little towns like Port Elgin, Southampton and Kincardine you have to travel 300 miles to get to the city of Toronto. I say to hon. members: do not swallow all this nonsense about getting service after the railways close down. That is all I wish to say on this occasion. I would just ask hon. members who are on the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications to ask the following question of the president of the CNR when he comes before the committee: Do you not think it is fair, sir, that inasmuch as you have reneged on your side of the bargain you should give back the lands to the various municipalities in Canada which gave them to you for the service that you no longer provide?

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have been a member of this House for about five years and every year, the government introduces a bill in order to tell us that the CNR is in the red.

Looking at Bill C-186 today, most Canadian citizens would be inclined to believe that things have improved and that they should therefore rejoice. Nevertheless, that company's employees, especially the pensioners, are unfortunately the victims of conditions that are far from good.

[Mr. Whicher.]

Members have, a while ago, eloquently stated their views and those of the people chiefly concerned in their area and I deem it my duty to speak, as the representative of the Portneuf constituency, through which run the CN railway lines, and especially as member of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, which has heard since last year much evidence on the CNR's failings which are causing serious vexations to that crown corporation's employees, especially its pensioners.

For instance, we learned during the past year that 2,500 CNR pensioners receive only $25 per month, 7,325 only $100 per month and more than 8,000 get less than $200 per month, which means that a Canadian citizen who has contributed to the progress of his country during the 40 years he worked for the CNR, receives now as a monthly pension an amount lower than the allowance paid to people on welfare.

As a matter of fact, last week I met a Canadian National employee who told me that after his 43 years of service, his pension had been set at $211 per month.

Mr. Speaker, this fate is not exclusively reserved to Quebec, since it is also that of all CNR pensioners.

Witnesses from Edmonton, Sarnia, Ottawa, Montreal and Rivière-du-Loup have pointed out with figures that it would be possible for the CNR to increase by 25 per cent the pensions of its pensioners, without changing the rate of contributions, and even without affecting the capital, since the reserves are so high that the interest alone is adequate to pay the pensions. And the importance of those reserves have been proven before the last federal election, by tampering of the order of $371 million.

Paid every other Thursday, that is 26 times a year, during a certain time, the employee was contributing 5 per cent of his salary to his pension fund. Today, he contributes at the rate of 6.5 per cent, that is an average of $25 for two weeks, or $600 a year.

For its part—according to the agreement entered into in the early sixties—the Canadian National must pay an amount equal to the contribution of the employee, but it has happened that the company has not respected its commitments by neglecting to honour its payments, by simply disregarding its obligations, in short, by simplifying its obligations through the simple registration of its debts with the office of the Superintendent of Insurance in Ottawa.

One day, the representatives of the government, and particularly the Superintendent of Insurance, cancelled in one stroke a debt of $371 million, property of the CNR pensioners, without the latter having even been consulted. This action incited Mr. Edward H. Egan, representative of local T-700 of the Transport Union in Ottawa, to say, and I quote:

This fund has been administered in typical fashion by management and with utter disregard to its employees. We have nothing but contempt for their methods. Here we have a situation where the employees are paying for the recapitalization of the railway and the government, hand in hand with management, is retiring that debt. It is our contention that we have been had!

Mr. Egan made this statement when he appeared before the committee. Now, since this tampering has become a matter of public knowledge, here is what appeared in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record on Monday, May 11, 1970.

Peter Carew, Executive Secretary of the Canadian Railway Labour Association, says that the recent reduction in the unfunded liability of the Canadian National Pension Fund is a "devious, immoral action, little short of embezzlement" and "morally the action is little short of theft".

The committee heard various witnesses, including Mr. C. T. Vance, representing the Retired Railway Veteran's Association, Edmonton, Alberta. When the member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) asked him, and I quote:

My concern is with the reduction in the pension plan of the $371 million which apparently was approved by the Superintendent of Insurance. What justification is there for the approval of this reduction—

Mr. Vance replied:

Well, he must have approved it. I am assuming he did because I made a request of Mr. Humphrys that the entire Canadian National pension plan be audited and that we have a report. I have no hesitation in saying to you, sir, that they were skating on rather thin ice to avoid an audit. That is all I can say to you, sir. I have nothing more to say than that.

I think that had there been an audit, some of the things that I am complaining of might have come to light.

Mr. Speaker, in so doing, the government allows one of its corporations not to take into account a $371 million debt and, then, it acts independently to avoid an audit. Such behaviour is really dishonest and is a matter of deep concern for the people already on pension. And the employees still at work wonder what the future holds for them.

Their state of mind shows in their testimony, to which I take the liberty of calling the attention of the House. Among the witnesses heard on June 4, Mr. Vance, while testifying again on behalf of the Retired Railway Veteran's Association said, as reported in No. 31 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the committee:

Dealing with the Pension Plan, if the information we have is correct, votes are not taken on the Pension Board. It is a matter of the Railway bringing in a proposition, laying it in front of labour representatives and saying, "That is it; take it or leave it". And when suggestions are made by the employees recommending change the Railway immediately bring out of the so-called deficit which they created and they suggest to the employees that if they want to pay more then certain changes "might" be made. We believe it is essential that the Pension Board become a decision-making Board, rather than function strictly as an advisory type of Board.

During the past two years the railway temporarily has introduced early retirement schemes designed to encourage the over 55 age bracket to take their pension. Particularly on the most recent occasion, this has not been done on a fair and impartial basis. There are numerous instances of employees being turned down, even though there are laid off workers available in his occupation. While the money used for the scheme is not drawn from the pension fund, it appears obvious that the railway has money available for pensions whenever they consider it in their best interests. We suggest this money be placed in the pension fund in future, and arrangements made to use it in a more equitable, fair and impartial manner.

Mr. Speaker, here is what Mr. Egan, the representative of the 225-member Local T-700, said:

Mr. Chairman, Committee members, and ladies and gentlemen. Previously, as a conductor and trainman with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and now in the same capacity with the Canadian National Railways, I am in a position to know what our men want and need for a pension plan, and what shoud be done to have an equitable arrangement with the Company.

Every 14 days we contribute to the plan at the annual rate of 5.5 per cent on the first $5,100, and 6.5 per cent on the balance.

We now have a situation whereby we are the contributors and the recipients, but we do not make the rules nor do we have the power to change them as economic conditions demand. We are at the mercy of the Company and the Pension Benefits Standards Act administered by the Superintendent of Insurance. We will point out later in our brief that this arrangement leaves a lot to be desired.

The main theme of our brief is that at this time, with the amount of money that should be in the Canadian National Pension Fund, and with the contributions that will be coming in the future, the fund should be of such stature that we could have a plan which would carry itself in the not too distant future. This plan would give us all that we could hope for, as well as upgrade those already on pension.

Other themes are as follows:

1. To bring back dignity to those already on pension and who are existing on the poverty level. May I stress this? It is the poverty level.
2. To have an equal voice in administering this fund.
3. To create a Canadian National Pension Fund Corporation, completely independent of the Company and the government.
4. To force the Canadian National Railways to pay back to the fund the $675 million that was borrowed at 4 per cent for 60 years.
5. To force the government to cancel the reduction of this debt by $300 and some million—I have $300 million in the brief—with the claim that it was a surplus of funds.
6. To separate this fund from the Canada Pension Plan.
7. To strengthen the hope of all contributors to this plan of an adequate pension based on a rising economy so that we would never have to come on a bended knee to a committee such as this and ask for justice because of poor administration of our fund.

We are of the opinion that there are a number of things which should be done immediately. We are ashamed of our government; we are also ashamed of the Canadian National Railways.

We have shouted long and hard, but to no avail.

Mr. Speaker, as I still have much to say, allow me to call it five o'clock.

• (4:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Howe), at the conclusion of his speech some minutes ago proposed an amendment. The Chair took the amendment under advisement but did not put it to the House. After consultation with Mr. Speaker and officers of the table, I would like to make a ruling on the amendment now. However, in view of the fact the hon. member is not in his place, if hon. members would agree, this could be done at eight o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Business of the House

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland)—Regional Economic Expansion—Departmental study of implications of National Defence base closures; the hon. member for Halifax East-Hants (Mr. McCleave)—Finance—Size of increase in gross national product—Tax relief measures to stimulate economy; the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton)—The Canadian Economy—Takeover of Ryerson Press by United States Company.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF PUBLIC ORDER BILL—EXTENSION OF SUPPLY PERIOD

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief statement about discussions we have had in connection with the business of the House. It has been agreed that we call the Public Order Bill at eight o'clock tonight, and it is our firm expectation that it will be possible to conclude the debate by ten o'clock or earlier. If that is realized we would call the vote on the third reading of the Public Order Bill, if a vote is required, as the first order of Government Business tomorrow. With respect to having the vote tomorrow as the first order of business, I think this should be put in the form of a House Order, but with the understanding that at ten o'clock tonight, if as a result of any meeting with the other house leaders I have difficulties, or we all mutually have difficulties, I would come back to the House and say that maybe we should change that House Order.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) has well set out the discussions which have taken place. It is our hope in this party that the first suggestion will be consummated and that we will have completed the debate by ten o'clock this evening. If that be the case, then a vote will be taken as the first item after Orders of the Day. I think there can be no greater attraction to hon. members to make sure their speeches are even shorter than usual, than the hope that this matter may be completed and the vote taken tomorrow after Orders of the Day.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the government House Leader has stated the position with clarity and the hon. member for Peace River has clarified it. I shall just say, hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In view of the fact that the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin) had the floor at five o'clock, would it be in accordance with the wish of the House that the debate be adjourned by the hon. member for Portneuf and that the special order of the House be made in the terms of the agreement as set out by the house leaders?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I regret that I forgot momentarily, and was reminded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that after looking at the prospects of the work of the Standing Committees it is necessary to extend the date of the final supply day which, in the normal course, would be December 10. It has been agreed that we extend that supply day until December 15 so that we should make a special order that, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order 58(5), the present supply period shall end on December 15, 1970. If that is agreed, the 5th and final allotted day for the present period would be Tuesday, December 15.

Mr. Baldwin: That is acceptable, Mr. Speaker. It will give members of the opposition a chance to do more than just see the supplementary estimates as they go flitting by the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Fortin: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that a special order of the House be made in the terms outlined by the hon. President of the Privy Council?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, Private Members' Notices of Motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

MARINE RESOURCES

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT PROGRAM FOR DEVELOPMENT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the development, encouragement and maintenance of a co-ordinated, comprehensive, and long-range national program for the recovery and use of the resources of Canada's sea-coast waters and continental shelves; and to this end, effectively utilize the scientific and engineering knowledge and skills of the public service and government agencies and co-operate with private investment enterprise in the exploration, technological development and industrial use of the resources of the marine environment of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is indeed fortunate that this resolution has come to the floor of the House of Commons so close on the heels of the report to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) from the Science Council of Canada with respect to Canada's science and the ocean. Without going into the report in any detail, let me say that I whole-heartedly endorse virtually everything in the report and I commend it to the government in the hope they will be able to get on with it in the immediate future. Even a casual scanning of the efforts of other maritime nations with good mineral potentials off their coasts reveals the total inadequacies of our own efforts to date.

With a continental shelf covering some one and a half million square miles, almost half of our total land area, this failure to vigorously investigate is almost alien to our pioneering spirit and heritage. If I may be permitted, I will quote very briefly from the summary of the report of Science Council of Canada at page 7:

> Recent events have clearly indicated the urgent need to develop a sound national policy for the marine area. Challenges and opportunities exist which, if neglected by Canadians will be seized by others . . . The time for action is now.
>
> To meet these challenges . . . there is a need for a national program, a Major Program in Marine Science and Technology—

While other nations such as the United States, the United Kingdom, Japan, Russia and others are well into research and development programs, Canada seems content only to look for gas and oil, and that, until very recently, in only a minor way. One wonders if the current difficulties over federal versus provincial jurisdiction has been part of the cause. If so, Ottawa should settle with the provinces concerned now, before some of our offshore exploration for oil starts paying off with production and the resulting landgrab starts. There is need for, and room to, compromise on the part of the federal government in this area. The Prime Minister has already recognized this. A little over a year ago he admitted that there might be distinctions in law between the east and west coasts and, as well, between the coastal provinces and those in between.

Perhaps the point of resolving the question at the earliest time becomes clearer when viewed in terms of economic loss brought about by the continuing confusion in law. Whatever we do, it must be done soon and in a manner most likely to appeal to those who would investigate and develop the potential that we all believe is there.

A second, the apparent urgent need is to ensure that we protect the highly vulnerable sea environment. The clear message of Mr. D. G. Crosby, Canadian delegate to the United Nations special committee on the seabed reads:

> We have in many parts of the world now reached a stage on land where in the relatively near future, according to some eminent scientists, we may actually reach the irreversible stage as regards the pollution of our environment.
>
> Let us not make the same mistake with respect to the even more vulnerable environment of our seas and oceans.

With the experience of the Arrow in Chedabucto Bay we have taken a significant lead in pollution, its control, the costs to ecology, the legal implications and, hopefully, prevention. We should continue to press for rigid safeguards, but in a form that will encourage orderly scientific exploration, and protect the seas from the reality of pollution as it is with us on land.

The passage of laws or acceptance of standards at the international level, can work two ways. They can be such as to make safe exploration and subsequent exploitation possible or they can be excessive in either their restrictions or freedoms. Only when we establish firm policies and goals of our own will we be able to safely enjoy the rich rewards of the sea environment. Countries like Saudi Arabia have taken great initiatives. They have already claimed exclusive mineral exploitation rights beyond the limits of the continental shelf. We know of the sulphur, iron, manganese and the other hard minerals that are being mined all over the world, such as tin, for example.

Studies made to date of the resources other than oil reveal a wide range of minerals. Many of them are within easy reach of our shores; others in deeper water for which new techniques will have to be developed. The important thing is for Canada to identify these resources and move now to establish our rights to this wealth, settle the problems of controls over such things as depletion, pollution and policing, and get on with the task of developing the skills and the machinery to convert the potential into wealth for our country.

For Canadians, such studies would have even further direct benefits. Greater knowledge of our sea and underwater resources has important implications for fishing, navigation, weather sciences, not to mention our national prestige and the very obvious military implications. In our area we have a natural setting for the lead in such efforts. The Bedford Institute, Dalhousie University's Department of Oceanology, the National Research centre and the Defence Research Board blend smoothly with each other and the provinces' research efforts to make us in the Dartmouth-Halifax area a unique centre for such complex undertakings. That has been outlined by the Science Council of Canada. We have the industrial complex to support such effort and the skilled labour pool to back it up. We have a large naval complex and over 200 years of maritime experience. We have the shipyards and their traditional skills. In short, we have everything except the one, important ingredient, adequate federal interest and involvement.

• (5:10 p.m.)

I suggest that failure to take some initiatives now could well reduce us to a position of regulating the exploitation of the resources of our seabed. We could, as we have with so many of our minerals on land, wind up selling the raw material and buying back the finished products. We could lose the opportunity of opening up wide and diversified employment opportunities even in the early stages of such efforts. Time is the factor of importance, Mr. Speaker, not money. Failure to employ time wisely now could have long lasting adverse effects on our economic growth ability.

One area in which time could be spent very profitably, in my opinion, is in seabed geology. Surely, we could follow Australia's lead and prepare profile studies of our shelf and take the required core samplings to identify not only what the sub-sea floor is made up of, but in what quantities and where. When the day comes in the next 70 or 75 years on which it is no longer economical, in terms of pollution, to mine the land, we had better be prepared to turn to the sea and the resources both in it and below it. The depths of the ocean present all the challenges of a second frontier for Canadians, primarily because we have so far not committed ourselves to master or understand it. While we dare only to nibble at these resources, I am afraid we shall remain starved.

Great technological advances will be made during the 1970's in preparation for the 1980's, a decade which will surely see the mastery of the depths to 20,000 feet below the 2,000 foot level in which our technology now permits us to operate. It would be inexcusable for us to find ourselves dependant on the technology of others during the 1980's. We have more than most nations at stake. If we have found it difficult to effectively control our land resources, how can we hope to effect control of our sub-seabed resources without a demonstrated capability clearly stamped "Canadian".

What about the cost factor? That is clearly set out in the report of the Science Council. They call for an escalation in expenditure so that by the 1980's our investment will be in the order of $300 million. I support this proposal. Suprisingly enough, the figures that I worked out one year ago differ from the figures of the Science Council with respect to 1980 by only $15 million. One of the things we must be concerned about, if we are to accept this proposition after careful study, is this: we must make sure that the build-up, if it does take place, will be sustained. I imagine that the Science Council would support this idea, although it does not particularly deal with it in its report.

Attempting too ambitious a start could cause the program to face erratic support in the latter part of the 1970's. In other words, whatever research work is undertaken would have to be acceptable to the government in terms of its own order of priorities and must be capable of long term funding, without any question whatsoever. In my opinion, the program must not be subject to annual cutbacks, or increases, for that matter. It must be stable. The scientists involved must always know where they are going from the time they begin. At present, as I have mentioned, we have no national goals, although it is to be hoped that the Science Council of Canada's task force report and the recommendations in that report will commend themselves to the government of this country. It is to be hoped that we do not waste any time in getting on with developing the vehicle which will translate the Science Council report, which deals with urgent matters, into actual programs.

As I have indicated and as I stress again, we must tread a path of clearly outlined and adequate policies so that we may know how we shall treat these resources by 1980. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, to the members of the House and to the government, that leaving this to 1990 will be too late, because by that time the encroachments of other countries concerned about the environment of the sea will be such that we shall be regulators of policy and not exploiters of resources. The direction of less than .4 of 1 per cent of our gross national product into the resources of the sea is not enough. On the basis of controlled escalation, this should be more in the order of 1 per cent of our gross national product by 1980. It should be noted that this input I am referring to should reflect only government expenditures and should exclude expenditures by the Department of National Defence, which has military objectives in mind, and the expenditures of universities and private industries, the contributions of which will also enable us to understand the environment of the sea. A close study will have to be made of the order of the mix between pure and applied research efforts as between the public and the private sectors. At present we are spending about $8 million annually on applied research with respect to maritime resources and between $22 million and $23 million on pure scientific research and exploration. The figure of $30 million does not include the cost for ships and other related, supporting facilities.

It is my belief, Mr. Speaker, that by the middle of the 1970's our expenditure in this area annually should be at the level of $50 million and by 1980, as I have indicated, it ought to be very close to the $300 million figure. By that time we ought to be well launched on practical projects which will ensure that, as we go into the 1980's, Canada will have not only control over the exploration of the sea, the sea floor and what is under the sea floor, but control as well over the exploitation of the resources of the sea. I commend the Science Council of Canada for its work. I hope that there will be the widest possible publication of the study papers connected with report No. 10. They have my support in this program that has been recommended to the government and all members of the House.

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to talk very long because I know hon. members wish to vote on this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Comeau: I want to give them the chance of doing that. The motion presented by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) I consider, on the basis of my two years in the House, to be one of the most important matters that has been brought before the House. Although, if accepted, it would affect all of Canada, I submit that it would help to make the Atlantic provinces in particular more viable and self sufficient. We have not yet placed the proper emphasis on our resources, particularly mineral resources, in the Atlantic provinces, this is why it is vitally important to get moving on a program of this type.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I was advised by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) that this motion has been on the Order Paper since 1967, over three years. It is a shame that it was not debated earlier because the Science Council of Canada reported on this subject last week.

They could have taken the initiative from the suggestion of the hon. member had this motion been debated earlier. It is interesting to note the resemblance between the study completed on April 10 by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East and the one published this week by the Science Council of Canada. If the terminology is not the same, it is at least very similar.

Canada is a member of the Geneva Convention of the Continental Shelf, 1958. Canada can claim the natural resources of the seabed and subsoil offshore extending far beyond the limits of the territorial sea. Canada can claim the resources of the sea to a depth of 200 metres. There is a difference of opinion between the federal and provincial government with regard to the rights to offshore resources. In 1965, the Supreme Court dealt with the problem of resources off the west coast. The decision of the court in December of 1967 was unanimous. It found entirely in favour of the Crown. All submerged resources lying offshore from the ordinary low water mark are Crown property.

In 1968 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced that Canada should establish mineral resources administration lines to divide areas of federal and provincial jurisdiction. Areas landward were to be administered by the provinces and areas seaward to be administered by the federal government. He also stated that half the revenues accruing from mineral resources from within federally administered areas would be placed in a national pool and distributed to the provinces on a basis acceptable to them. Of course, not all the provinces agreed with this proposal. There was discussion on this subject at the recent Liberal convention. The matter is far from being settled, but is a problem which must be resolved. We should not prejudice our interest in the development, continued research and use of our marine resources. It does not matter which government has the jurisdiction because both the federal and provincial governments work toward the same end. I would not like to see the Atlantic provinces in comparison with gypped other parts of Canada.

In the interest of all Canadians, the federal government should greatly improve the marine resources program. This is pointed out by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East in a paper which he submitted some time ago. Canada is very active in the field of oil and gas. Many companies have carried out marine geophysical surveys. Since 1966, the number of exploratory permits issued has greatly increased, particularly with respect to northern gas. This applies to both the east and west coasts. As pointed out by the mover of this motion, studies have revealed a wide range of minerals, in addition to our oil resources. This is of particular interest to the Atlantic coast region.

It is well known that in the past fishing has been the main activity off these shores. The federal and provincial governments have failed to grasp the opportunities to explore and fully develop our resources. It is understood that provinces alone cannot finance or provide the necessary machinery for full exploration and development of our marine resources. Only the federal government can do the job properly. Certainly, the province of Nova Scotia cannot, by itself, do the job.

A lot of exploratory work remains to be done in the field of marine resources. It cannot be done by any one province. Many people, including members of this House, still believe that we should proceed with caution, particularly off the Atlantic coast, in view of the effect that exploration and development might have on our fisheries. Surely, there must be a point of balance. We must be able to exploit our marine resources to the fullest while still maintaining a viable fishery. I do not want to dampen the hopes of the fishermen in the Atlantic provinces, but at the same time the future does not look too promising. I believe there will always be proper conservation methods. I am glad to see the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) in the House. He is very interested in the conservation of our fishery. In the last five years there has been evidence of depletion of some species. It is to our advantage to find other means of income for the residents of the Atlantic provinces. We should not simply ignore motions such as the one presented by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East because of the benefits they would bring to the people living in the Atlantic area. This applies also to those living on the west coast.

I am referring to the Atlantic coast in particular because it has often been said that the Atlantic provinces cannot make it. Maybe they have not been given the chance. Perhaps everything that should be explored has not been explored in order to make these provinces viable. The reason for this motion is that the mineral resources off the coast of those provinces have not been explored fully. There is no doubt this would be of great benefit to that area. Increased research in resources other than the fishery is of prime importance at this stage.

The Science Council of Canada in their Report No. 10, the latest report, stated:

> The impact of such developments as offshore petroleum exploration and exploitation, new needs in fisheries and transportation, new demands in recreation, antipollution, and climatic prediction and control requires a serious reconsideration of the place of marine science and technology in our total national picture. The time for action is now!

The motion presented by the hon. member is of great importance. It is unfortunate that this subject has not been debated more often in the past because it is of prime importance to the development and well being of many Canadians. Many departments are interested in and concerned with the proper development of marine resources; for example, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in our Arctic areas, and the Department of Fisheries and Forestry. We cannot develop our resources on the east coast to the detriment of the fisheries; safeguards can and must be provided. Increased research under the National Research Council, at universities and so on, should make this possible.

• (5:30 p.m.)

I simply want to impress upon hon. members that the motion moved by the hon. member for Dartmouth-

Halifax East is of vital importance. The Department of National Defence has an interest in this matter in relation to its defence installations. So has the Department of Transport through its shipping branch. The Department of External Affairs has an interest because this matter has to do with extraterritorial rights. Perhaps the fact that so many departments are involved is why progress has been slow. The Science Council of Canada has made a positive recommendation that some move along the lines suggested by the hon. member be made, and it is the federal government that must take the initiative. The Atlantic provinces, indeed all of Canada, will have much to gain from increased activity in this area.

Some time ago the government reneged on its proposal to harness the Bay of Fundy tides. In my opinion, these tides are a tremendous source of energy and have fantastic possibilities in terms of making the Atlantic provinces more self-sufficient. No longer would the rest of Canada tell the Atlantic provinces that they must be given money in order to live. Although nothing has been done to date, a start can be made in the future on this project which is a long-term one. I suggest we adopt the recommendation of the Science Council of Canada as well as act on this motion. Since other hon. members want to speak, I shall not deal with the financial requirements that are involved; these have been dealt with by the hon. member as well as by the Science Council of Canada.

I might also point out that there are great possibilities here for mineral development. This is a subject we could talk about for days on end. Suffice it to say I support the motion and urge the government to do something about it, for in this area lies tremendous possibilities for all Canadians, particularly for those in the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a few brief remarks in support of the motion put forward by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall). I hope to conclude my remarks in about two and a half minutes so that, hopefully, the matter may come to a vote. The motion before us, in brief, calls for the development of Canada's east coast waters and continental shelf resources. Certainly there is sufficient merit in that proposition to bring us to the point where we would at least support the sending of the subject matter of the resolution to the appropriate committee, or perhaps a joint committee, for study and action.

It is a fact that Canada has either the largest or second largest seacoast shelf area in the world. In any event, its area is immense. We have done very little in the way of studying the potential wealth that lies within our seacoast areas, though we have done something to encourage exploration for oil and gas in our marine areas. Recently I expect hon. members read a report which suggested that we should look at the food resources of our marine areas, because it has been pointed out that the population explosion in the rest of the world is such that the existing traditional areas of food production may be insufficient to provide food for the world's needs in time to come.

Only the other day I read that the Japanese are now exploring the use of seacoast water with regard to hydro power development. Although this is in the very early, exploratory stage, it is an area in which the Japanese are interested. I think we are all vaguely aware of the potential mineral wealth that is lying just off our shores. All in all, I think the motion deserves our non-party support to the extent of at least sending it forward for further discussion and, hopefully, action.

I like the wording of the motion. The only change I would make would be to strengthen the idea that the federal and provincial governments co-ordinate their activities if this undertaking should commence. In the hope, as I said earlier, of the House coming to a decision on this resolution, I will now resume my seat.

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) for moving this motion and giving us the opportunity to discuss a topic which, as he himself pointed out, has not been adequately discussed in this House. He is a Maritimer with perhaps a special interest in this subject, though it is one that should concern all Canadians.

If the government of Canada is going to preserve its federal claim vis-à-vis the provinces, it will have to become more involved in research into the exploitation of the undersea continental shelf. If the federal claim is to have any credibility, this action must be taken in order to protect and to advance at the international level our case for national jurisdiction over the exploitation of our continental shelf. We must clarify our claims to national jurisdiction.

Before dealing with that subject I should like to talk for a moment about some of the things that Canada should be doing now, with the resources that are available to us, to increase our knowledge and our ability to take advantage of some of the new technology that is being developed. Possibly this is an area for Canadian-Soviet co-operation. We can offer many things to the U.S.S.R. in the area of mining exploitation. On the other hand, I think the U.S.S.R. has a lot to give us in the area of expertise and knowledge of deep water areas off our coasts. It is a well known fact that the so-called Soviet hydrographic fishing trawlers have photographed the sea floor up and down both the west and east coasts of Canada.

• (5:40 p.m.)

This area is one which is of prime interest to Canada, obviously. I would strongly suggest to the government of Canada that the next time it talks with Soviet officials about co-operation in various areas of technology, it should make a pitch for a much more substantial exchange of information in this area. Canada would certainly benefit. The need is obvious for a very comprehensive survey in Canada of the undersea conditions, of the geology, biology, mineralogy, and the various forms of sea studies including the wave action and meteorology of our ocean frontiers.

Perhaps there are ways for us to give some incentive to our industrial people to encourage private input into this kind of research. I would hope that we might consider additional tax incentives as encouragement for this particular kind of research, which in the long run is so essential to the establishment of our national claims over the continental shelf and for eventual full exploitation of this area.

In early 1970 President Nixon made certain proposals which were among the most important international proposals made by any country for a long time. They envisaged a world treaty under which nations would give up a good part of their claims to most of the riches of the world's seabeds. He proposed giving up to 90 per cent of the seabed to an international agency, with royalties going for international community purposes. The area beyond the depth of 200 metres to the outer limits of the continental margin would come under a special form of trusteeship whereby the coastal state would have the right to control access, exploitation, pollution and, in fact, the full development of the area to the limits of the continental margin without going so far as recognizing full, absolute and complete national jurisdiction over this area.

Canada has not taken an official position on the Nixon proposals. Our position seems to be at the moment that we agree there is an area which is beyond our national jurisdiction. We agree that there must be a more precise definition, and we agree that the area beyond must be exploited for mankind and in particular for underdeveloped countries. We have been, I presume, deliberately nebulous on this subject because the government has not made up its own mind.

I feel quite strongly that now is the time for Canada and every country in the world to move toward greater international input into undersea and sea exploitation. I do not think we can allow ourselves many more years of complete freedom of exploitation. Whether it be undersea exploitation, seabed exploitation or exploitation of the animal resources of the sea, we will have to bring this under international control eventually. It therefore seems to me it is to the distinct advantage of almost every country in the world to move toward a much more concrete form of international control than we have now.

The United States proposals perhaps have a military aspect to them in that the trusteeship suggested by President Nixon would eliminate the pattern of extending national jurisdictions to the edge of the continental margin. However, because this particular aspect of the U.S. proposal exists, I do not think we should underrate it or fail to see the tremendous value that exists in this proposal for a movement toward an international sea regime and much greater international co-operation between the peoples of the world. The countries of the world during the last few years seem to have been regressing into nationalism. This regressive nationalism which is occurring even here in our part of the world is not to the long-term advantage of any of us. The need for assistance to underdeveloped countries is greater than it has been and will be even greater in years to come.

I would suggest that development undersea resources on the so-called outer margin of the continental shelf is an area that should be exploited for the benefit of all mankind. I would take a position supporting the Nixon proposals, but the depth of the continental shelf could be an area of compromise. In fact, I disagree with the Canadian position if it is to be that we lay full claim to the continental shelf to its outer margin without any provision being made for a contribution from this extremely rich area to the underdeveloped countries of the world.

There is room for compromise in the Nixon proposals, but I do not think the Canadian position should be what it appears to be developing into, to lay full and absolute claim to all the continental shelf to its outer margin. This is an exercise of Canadian nationalism with which I would not agree. The trusteeship proposal should, however, be expanded upon. We should not simply have a trusteeship in this area of the continental shelf extending from a depth of perhaps 200 metres or 400 metres to the edge of the continental margin only for the purpose of exploitation of the seabed or beneath the seabed resources. We should have an international trusteeship set up whereby we can control, for conservation purposes, all the animal life in this area.

• (5:50 p.m.)

There are presently many examples of misuse of fishing rights which other countries have acquired over the centuries on both our east and west coasts. It is essential that a better international framework be established soon for this area.

I would hope the government of Canada will push strongly for another conference on the Law of the Sea. I should like to see us modify our position on the outer continental shelf to take into account the real need which exists for additional aid to the underdeveloped countries and which would take into consideration the danger inherent in increasing nationalism around the world. I would hope we would take a step toward the world community to which I believe most of us aspire over the long term.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, as we draw to the conclusion of a debate of this type it is good to return to the starting point; therefore, I wish to refer to the resolution put forward by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall). Through this resolution the hon. member has given us an opportunity during the past hour to debate a topic which is of vital interest to Canadians. The resolution states:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the development, encouragement and maintenance of a co-ordinated, comprehensive, and long-range national program for the recovery and use of the resources of Canada's seacoast waters and continental shelves; and to this end, effectively utilize the scientific and engineering knowledge and skills of the public service and government agencies and co-operate with private investment enterprise in the exploration, technological development and industrial use of the resources of the marine environment of Canada.

Dr. Solandt of the Science Council of Canada, perhaps quite unknown to the hon. member, has been working along a very similar line and one which closely parallels what the hon. member has suggested.

Mr. Forrestall: I never said I was the only one concerned.

Mr. Deachman: I must say it is to the credit of the hon. member that his discourse this afternoon should have been so closely related to what the learned scientists who comprise the Science Council of Canada have come up with. His proposal is pretty much akin to the proposal made in the monograph from which he quoted today. The hon. member in effect has entered the debate somewhat at the eleventh hour.

I should like to turn to the first page of this document which is dated November, 1970, and highlight for a moment what is proposed therein, because I believe it is generally acceptable to the House and probably just as acceptable to the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East. It shows that we really are getting close to doing something in this most important field. In this monograph Dr. Solandt says:

> It has been estimated that about half of Canada's ultimate potential oil reserves lie offshore.

That is to say, on the continental shelf surrounding continental Canada. Then at page 18 Dr. Solandt says this:

> To lift only one corner of the curtain, industry expenditures on offshore exploration are expected to grow from about $25 million in 1969 to a minimum of $40 million in 1970. The work requirements on federal government offshore petroleum exploration permits may result in an expenditure of some $1 billion by 1980. If exploitation follows, the financial outlays will certainly dwarf these exploration figures.

Further down on the same page he says what he would like to see done to cope with this problem.

> The Science Council therefore recommends that an interdepartmental committee be established immediately to satisfy this need. This committee should consist of senior representatives of federal departments having responsibilities in the marine environment—

He names those departments and then states on page 20:

> The Science Council recognizes that there can be several alternative mechanisms that will accomplish these ends, but in view of the need to establish a solid technological base as rapidly as possible, and since Crown Corporations have successfully fulfilled such mandates in the past, it recommends the establishment of such a corporation, a Canadian Ocean Development Corporation.

One of the recommendations of the Science Council is the establishment of a Canadian Ocean Development Corporation which would provide not only for Canadian ownership of marine technological enterprises but would also ensure that a significant proportion of the activities involved are carried out by Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The nour appointed for the consideration of private member's business having expired, I do now leave the chair. The House will resume at 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

[Mr. Deachman.]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PUBLIC ORDER (TEMPORARY MEASURES) ACT, 1970

PROVISION OF EMERGENCY POWERS FOR PRESERVATION OF PUBLIC ORDER

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-181, to provide temporary emergency powers for the preservation of public order in Canada, be read the third time and do pass.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, when the government, taking advantage of unanimous consent, introduced in the House the War Measures Act as a great emergency, it publicly undertook to introduce in the near future new legislation whose main characteristic would be permanency. However, to the general disappointment, the government has gone back on its promise and has postponed indefinitely its promise of permanent legislation, putting before us instead this temporary Bill C-181.

At the height of the crisis that shook not only Quebec, but the whole of Canada, in October last, the government proclaimed the War Measures Act to check the undercover and murderous activities of the FLQ. At that time, we supported the government, because we recognized—and we still do—the danger that the FLQ as well as any group that shares the same views represent for Quebec, for the future of Democracy in Quebec and in the rest of Canada. There was some kind of a consensus at that time to the effect that this legislation was inadequate.

There is no ready solution to this issue, Mr. Speaker.

Indeed, when we are dealing with such shameful and merciless people who have gone as far as abducting two men and ignominiously murdering one of them in order to achieve their political aims, the two eminently democratic bodies that are the Canadian government and Canadian Parliament must never cease to be on the alert. Abnormal conditions often call for extraordinary and tough legislation at times in order to preserve our institutions, our society and our fellow-citizens.

Having said this, there remains one undeniable fact: any legislation and measures enacted to stamp out this evil must never under any circumstances be such as to cause greater harm. Therefore, I want to state my position clearly as one of moderation and comprehension but also of strength, with respect to the revolutionary forces which are now actively seeking to destory our country.

I call for the passing of emergency legislation of a permanent nature. This is basic. This is the reason why I have the impression really that we are wasting our time now, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said, but not for the same reasons. He does not believe in Parliament, while I do. In any case, as the situation is now under control and as the measures taken neither saved Pierre Laporte's life nor brought back British diplomat James Richard Cross free, does it mean that these failures are due to our legislation? I do not think so. They are instead the result of the state of panic created by the governments who, by their inaction and their weakness, allowed our radio stations to alarm the people at any time, and thus to give the FLQ all the publicity it could need to keep this tension alive.

These failures and this weakness of the government are also due to our lack of experience in this new type of warfare, namely, the use of violence and force to overthrow the established government.

I believe that, in these circumstances, the police and armed forces, in spite of the difficulty of their task, are doing a good job. Of course, some problems have come up and there has been abuse of power in some cases, but I think that the police are not be blamed for that but rather the legislation under which they acted, the War Measures Act. And the experience of the first three weeks made the people realize how far such abuse might go, abuse due to poorly adapted legislation, imprecise, provoking and even in some regards, certainly disrecpectful of the basic rights of the human being. Therefore, we are in great need of new legislation on emergency powers, a permanent statute not intended solely to save face as it is the case with Bill C-181.

This new legislation on emergency powers which I call for like many other hon. members, should allow the cabinet to order emergency measures when, for example, transport and public services are disorganized, when the supply of commodities is endangered, when strikes jeopardize the national economy of a province or the efficiency of public services or when the lawful authority is seriously threatened by movements or associations advocating violence or force as a tool.

It is abnormal that unlike many other countries Canada should be without permanent legislation. Here we wait for blows to fall before taking action, instead of anticipating them. Is not leadership far sightedness?

Permanent legislation is and will always be a superficial solution to a crisis. Legislation can only control a situation on the outside but inwardly anger may continue to increase to the point of degenerating into terrorism.

Therefore, we must try mainly to restore order in our society, not only by voting a modern and permanent public order act but also by tackling fundamental problems which cause, have caused or will cause in future such outbursts of violence and terrorism.

When considering the continuing downgrading of the economic situation in Quebec, one can realize that it is but the beginning of our troubles unless we tackle the problems of poverty, social injustice, unemployment, slums, employment of our youth and the many questions arising from the basic problem: the economic situation.

Mr. Speaker, the leaders of Social Credit and their followers have been saying, for decades now, that all problems of a social or human nature had often one common origin, the economic problem.

Without trying to sound ominous, the Créditistes had foreseen the crisis which recently jolted not only Quebec but the whole of Canada.

How many times did we say that some day passions would grow so exasperated that the situation would become explosive unless we tried forthwith to put some order in our economic system. When so speaking, the Ralliement créditiste members were right once again and we hope that today, the government will hear our voice, the voice of the people who are fed up with promises of a "just society" and of "100,000 jobs" and who have lost any hope to see these promises ever materialize.

The economic situation in Quebec is far from satisfying and the Canadians, particularly the Quebecers, are desperate at the incompetence and inaction of this government. In view of the importance of this matter, let me describe for a few seconds the economic situation of both the Quebecers and the Canadians in general.

This winter, a 14 per cent unemployment rate is forecast in the Maritimes, a 13 per cent unemployment rate in Quebec while, for Ontario, this rate will reach only 7 per cent. For the last 15 years, the Quebec unemployment rate has always been from 20 to 40 per cent higher than the average unemployment rate in the whole country.

But what is most alarming, Mr. Speaker, is that in 1969 out of the 158,000 unemployed in Quebec, 65,000 or 42 per cent were under 25. Those young people who had been promised since 1960 a society of happiness, security and freedom through stable employment studied long and hard so as to be prepared for the task the society was offering them. But it turns out that these were nothing but empty promises by small-time politicians and even with their diplomas, the young despair of ever being able to do something with their hands and their education, and of ever being able to get a job.

Those young people—and I want to be their spokesman—are bitterly disappointed and most of them do not believe any more in Santa Claus Trudeau or Santa Claus Bourassa. The "just society" and the "100,000 jobs" are neither for today nor for tomorrow.

It is a shame to see that 42 per cent of the unemployed in Quebec are less than 25 and feel useless and rejected by society and it is easy to understand that their frustration could easily turn into revolt.

I therefore ask myself who is responsible, in the end, for the troubles which have shaken Canada, if it is not society itself, and particularly its leaders who have tolerated and created that situation in its entirety, through their inaction. That is fundamental and deep cause, and whatever the content of the emergency legislation may be, it will solve the problem only temporarily and very superficially. The time has come for an economic reform in depth.

It might be said that people who live off governments, who wait for whatever is given to them, are bound in greater number in Quebec, especially if one takes into account the very high level of unemployment in that province.

Indeed, in the province of Quebec, 572,800 persons depend directly on social welfare to live. To that number one can add approximately 29 per cent of those who work and whose standard of living is barely above the poverty level. In Quebec, 39 people out of 1,000 are on welfare as compared with 17 in Ontario.

Those figures are revolting, but the situation of those people is still worse, if one considers the huge wealth and possibilities of this country. Those people do not share at all in the prosperity and life of our country. In short, they are rejected by society. One must not be surprised if some want to reject society. And the governments ignore them completely.

The government fights inflation and the terrorists, sets up bilingualism programs, creates hundreds of royal commissions, and publishes hundreds of white papers—it tabled still another one today—but that does not in any way change the situation of those people which keeps getting worse instead of better.

That is why it is so important for us, members of Parliament, to assume our responsibilities, to give precedence to the interest of the people over that of the political parties, with a view to ensuring the freedom and economic security of each and every citizen. But that supposes an economic reform in depth. Our present society does not really take into consideration the needs of man, nor his aspirations. It refuses to hear his desperate cries. Some of these days, man will wake up and revolt. The federal government, through the CBC, the Company of Young Canadians and various other organizations, is, after a fashion, doing dishonest social work with the ratepayers' money, by showing only one side of the picture, by getting those needy people all worked up, by luring them with the beneficial effects of a society where everything is permissible, from abortionn to the legalization of drugs. The taxpayers are lured with the advantages of socialism, licentious life, revolutions that took place in other countries, but they are always shown only one side of the picture, so that one fine day, the nation awakens.

And when that happens, the government feels justified in extending its hold, its power, and in multiplying its dictatorial measures through laws which trample the basic civil freedoms, and it takes advantage of the situation. And when an election is called, the same governments ask: Give us a very strong majority. Then the people slip even further and the government seizes the opportunity to increase its hold, to grab everyone's property either through farm credit companies or the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Mr. Speaker, the respect of the human being will only be truly achieved by an economic reform in depth which will put money at the service of the human being, in order to put an end to the exploitation of man by high finance.

A reform is due and time is going by quickly. The bill under consideration is a swindle. It is nonsensical and is part of the great drama produced by the Liberal government to entertain the people and make them forget their real problems. This is why, on behalf of my fellow citizens of Lotbinière, I will vote against this bill which makes people forget their real problems and does not deal with the root cause.

• (8:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak at length on third reading of the temporary emergency powers bill. It is not my desire to hold up the vote on this legislation but I feel I must place my views about it on the record.

The War Measures Act was brought in by the cabinet by Order in Council almost six weeks ago. The House of Commons was not consulted first. The main reason given for invoking the act was that a state of apprehended insurrection existed in the province of Quebec. At the time we had no knowledge or evidence of any apprehended insurrection in Canada, and as events have unfolded here in Ottawa it has become crystal clear that no state of apprehended insurrection ever existed. Wild rumours and unfounded stories drove both the Quebec provincial government and our federal administration into a state of hysteria and panic. The fantastic exaggerations of cabinet ministers and their subtle hints of sabotage, plots and insurrection against the government were a major contribution to this whole unhappy affair.

I would agree that emergency action against the FLQ was needed. No one can condone terrorist activities in a democracy. But I am convinced we did not require the War Measures Act to bring about law and order. There are a number of sections in the Criminal Code such as those on treason, sedition, offensive weapons, unlawful assembly, conspiracy, and others which are readily available to our law enforcement officers to arrest those they suspect of being ready to lead demonstrations and to incite disorder and violence. If additional powers were reasonably needed, they could and would have been obtained from Parliament on a temporary basis. These additional powers could have extended the length of time of detention and permitted the authorities, without warrant, to search private dwellings for explosives and offensive weapons.

All parties in this House agree that the vast powers under the War Measures Act were far too restrictive and abusive for meeting the FLQ situation in Quebec. This was indicated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) after they were first introduced. It makes one wonder why the present regulations, which are less restrictive, were not included in the Order in Council when it was first brought in on October 16, 1970. The government had been considering the use of the War Measures Act for several days. The failure to bring in less restrictive powers under the Order in Council is just another example of the panic and chaos which struck every department of government during the crisis.

An interesting article appeared in the Globe and Mail on November 26. The article was really a severe chastise-ment of the exaggerated statements made by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand). I would like to quote for the record several paragraphs from it as follows:

• (8:20 p.m.)

Justice Minister Jerome Choquette was quoted yesterday as describing as highly exaggerated an implication by Regional Economic Expansion Minister, Jean Marchand, that there may have been as many as 3,000 heavily armed revolutionaries ready to fight for Quebec independence.

Mr. Marchand cited the figure as a justification for Ottawa invoking the War Measures Act to combat FLQ terrorism.

In an impassioned defence of the act, Mr. Marchand told the Commons on October 16 that the FLQ has 3,000 members. He said many had infiltrated into decision-making positions throughout Quebec. He claimed that the FLQ had enough explosives and arms to destroy downtown Montreal and said it was ready to use them.

"There are maybe 100 or 125 active members of the Front de Libération du Québec in my opinion," Mr. Choquette was quoted as saying. "Mr. Marchand has his own way about him. His statement was highly exaggerated. There were far too many conflicting comments and opinions coming from Ottawa during the crisis."

Mr. Bourassa said: "I would like to see Mr. Marchand's statement. Was he speaking of active terrorists, or sympathizers?"

When pressed by reporters to say whether he considered 3,000 an exaggerated number for active FLQ members, he said, "Well, you saw the arrests, about 100 still held—you have your answer there."

I point out, Mr. Speaker, that in the latest results given to the House of Commons, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) told us there were 454 individuals arrested under the War Measures Act and that to date 403 of them had been released. Only 51 had been detained to date, and of these only two had been sentenced. No doubt a number of those presently being detained will also be released without charge. Despite an intensive police search in every part of Quebec, no large caches of weapons or large supplies of dynamite have been located.

All this information would clearly indicate that the claimed threat of apprehended insurrection never existed. In my opinion, when the full story of the FLQ crisis is written in the months and years to come it will become abundantly clear that governmental panic at both the federal and the provincial level was the main cause for invoking the War Measures Act.

Another important and supplementary reason was the desire of the federal government to prop up the weak and vacillating Liberal cabinet of Premier Bourassa. Only one member of that cabinet had really stood out against negotiating with the terrorists, and that was the Attorney General. To help save the political hide of a Liberal Premier, and to prevent further active negotiations by the province with the FLQ for release of prisoners, 22,000,000 Canadians were stripped of their civil liberties.

We must not forget the role played by the mayor of Montreal in this FLQ crisis. He rightly requested federal assistance, but under the cloak of the War Measures Act he was one of the first to abuse its powers by using it against his municipal political opponents. I personally feel that the real crisis in the city of Montreal and in the province of Quebec is well in hand. There is no further need for the vast police powers of the War Measures Act and no need for the very extreme powers under the temporary emergency powers bill which is currently before the House. The crisis is in hand in Quebec and any remaining problems, in my opinion, could be handled adequately under the sections of the Criminal Code which I have already mentioned.

Let me add that recently the Prime Minister has tried to foist the blame on the news media for the wild rumours which were spread about plots, replacing of government administrations, etc. Every member and every reporter in this House knows where these wild rumours originated. They came from prominent cabinet ministers, from Liberal backbenchers and from the Prime Minister himself. Many of them are on record in speeches made by them. These members should get up in this House and tell the people of Canada what they have done. Trying to foist the blame on the news media is a disgraceful tactic and it must be highly embarrassing to those members who were guilty of originally spreading the rumours.

Despite the fact that the present measure is somewhat less restrictive than the War Measures Act, it nevertheless contains several very vicious and repugnant sections. In fact, these sections are so lacking in their protection of civil liberties and are so opposed to my ideas of Canadian justice that I refuse to endorse any type of legislation which contains them. Clause 8 will make offences retroactive. This is the most vicious feature of the bill. If something was legal five or six years ago, I fail to see the justice in now making it retroactively an illegal act.

Many hundreds of innocent individuals can be caught by this vicious feature and it should never be allowed to pass into law. Surely Canadians have a fairer sense of justice than to allow legislation of this type to be placed upon our statute books. This section makes an individual guilty until he proves himself innocent. No one who believes in basic civil liberties can endorse this abhorrent principle.

The second feature is the failure of this government to allow a review board or a review commission to make certain that the measures under this act are not abused. This safeguard is an absolute necessity, for many more innocent people may be arrested under this temporary measures act and could again suffer adversely because of our failure to allow an independent review to take place. The setting up of this board would in no way affect police action in the city of Montreal. Still this government remains adamant and refuses to allow this necessary protection of the civil rights of Canadians.

We are told that it is up to the province of Quebec to administer the act and that provision for a review board is not required. However, this is federal legislation and we have the powers delegated under the Constitution to insist upon the protection of the civil rights of every Canadian regardless of where he resides. We should protect those rights and insist that those who would use the powers of this new legislation must also agree to protect them. The host of abuses which have already taken place under the War Measures Act, including those moves made against political opponents for obviously political reasons, should serve as a concrete example to us. The abuses which have taken place will for the most part be perpetuated in the new legislation. Again, at this late stage of the legislation I appeal for suitable amendments to protect Canadians against these potential abuses.

Mr. Speaker, before I close may I touch briefly on the root cause of the FLQ trouble in Quebec. It stems primarily from the lack of basic social and economic reform. Contented citizens do not turn to terrorism if social and economic conditions can guarantee them a decent standard of living. But if unemployment is ever-present and basic social reforms such as housing, etc., are lacking, then groups like the FLQ can fester and grow on this type of discontent.

Why have we had this problem in Quebec and elsewhere without adequate action being taken? Who is to blame? We have had Liberal federal government since 1963—

An hon. Member: That is when the FLQ started.

Mr. Harding: —and precious little has been done on the federal level to alleviate the worsening situation in the province of Quebec. It is time the people of Quebec and the rest of Canada realized that the Liberal government of the past seven years has not done anything to alleviate adverse economic conditions or recognize the need for social reform in the province of Quebec. This lack of reform is the basic and the root cause of the growth of the FLQ.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harding: In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would say that under the War Measures Act a host of abuses have already taken place. A large number of innocent people have been ruined by being picked up and having their names associated with the FLQ. Some individuals have lost jobs and their wives and families have been harmed by these arrests. The powers under the War Measures Act have been used politically in the city of Montreal and in other parts of Quebec to get at political opponents. Every day some new abuse under the War Measures Act comes to light, and when Canadians are able to read the full story of what has actually taken place they will never again want to see the War Measures Act invoked in Canada during peacetime. Mr. Speaker, if this bill is to be voted on at third reading without being amended, I shall have no choice but to cast my vote against it.

• (8:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Romuald Rodrigue (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, no right-thinking citizen could remain indifferent to the serious problems that faced the Quebec and the Canada governments following the events of last October.

[Mr. Harding.]

No citizen could remain insensitive to the anguish felt by the Cross and Laporte families.

No Canadian could fail to disapprove of the offences committed, nor deny that in certain circumstances, the implementation of extraordinary measures is justified.

When the tragic circumstances we have known led to the invoking of the War Measures Act, we trusted the government and its leader, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he said there were very good reasons to invoke the War Measures Act.

Now, on October 16, the federal government, at the request of the government of the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal, invoked the War Measures Act.

In the light of the facts known and outlined by the Prime Minister and his cabinet, Parliament approved the action of the government on the understanding that a legislation not as stringent as the War Measures Act would be introduced in the House as soon as possible.

Therefore, Parliament acted in good faith on October 16 last. After a month, one would be inclined to believe that the reasons stated were groundless.

The act invoked to apply extraordinary measures was not adapted to the present circumstances. It had been drafted to cope with a wartime situation. In this instance, Parliament was facing an unusual situation, different however from the conditions prevailing in a country at war. We were therefore at grips with a situation without legislation appropriate to circumstances.

The replacement of the War Measures Act was consequently necessary. It was extremely important that a new legislation be discussed and passed in order to put an end to such a situation.

We have supported the principle of a new bill and made suggestions to the government. We were expecting a bill different from the one before us. During the discussion in committee, we have proposed amendments to Bill C-181. Members of other parties have also moved amendments, but they have all been turned down by the government.

The rejection by the government of any reasonable amendment makes Bill C-181 the twin brother of the Regulations for the preservation of public order.

As the government has not kept its word, I do not see why we should give unqualified support to an incomplete legislation which grants almost unlimited powers. We have supported the principle of an emergency measure, but not necessarily this one.

Rather than an emergency law with a permanent character, such as can be found in the Western countries, this government has preferred to introduce a temporary legislation, so that if a similar situation arose in another part of the country, or in a different way, it would again have to ask Parliament to promulgate the War Measures Act.

Could it be that the passing of the War Measures Act was not justified or still, that it was promulgated in a moment of panic? Both are possible.

Rather than introducing a permanent legislation, they have preferred acting hastily by passing an incomplete, temporary legislation, that is a last minute law. When are we going to get a permanent type of legislation?

This reaction from the government is not new. They give everything a temporary character. Nothing is clear in this bill. There is no detailed definition. Of course public order requires the respect of laws, and I am for it, but it infers in return that the government should respect individual rights. The proposed legislation barely touches on the problem and offers limited possibilities, except that it declares that an association is illegal and imposes punishment on those who belong to the said association, who say that they are members or participate one way or another in its meetings.

But who can prove that a person belongs to the unlawful association when no one even knows whether it issues membership cards.

Certain clauses of this bill grant to the government or the attorney general unlimited powers which could lead to abuses. Such powers confer full discretionay authority to the government. Why then pass legislation which will only apply to one association and to one province, Quebec in this instance? The Minister of Justice, in the explanations he supplied in the discussion at the committee stage, concluded by saying that the Criminal Code contains provisions allowing for the condemnation of persons deemed guilty of indictable offences.

Now, if the Criminal Code provides for punishment for crimes committed in October, why then was it necessary to resort to the War Measures Act?

The situation we have experienced and that the government would like to be carried on is extremely serious. We shall have to try, through every means at our disposal, to prevent the recurring of such a situation. We must tackle the task immediately and create a climate that would eliminate the ultimate causes which gave birth to the unlawful association.

We must also ponder over the consequences of the crisis we have just witnessed and particularly over our institutions. Democracy is so fragile a flower that it is seldom to be found under its most perfect form. It rests on a set of rules presupposing the agreement of the community. Should a group choose to live on the fringe of society and claim its own set of morals, every thing goes hay wire since it is true that lawfulness may exist only from a certain standpoint. Such is the case of subversion and terrorism. It is therefore inevitable that democratic rules be redefined. It becomes necessary to fight against a new danger for which there is no such thing as a traditional formula.

First of all, the citizens, and Quebecers in particular, should be given financial security and civil liberties. Right now, it is believed that civil liberties are significant, in theory only.

Our party has for too long preached a fairer distribution of production across the country. It is time that our voice be heard at last, because it is the people's voice which demands justice. The time has come to reform the economic system, to promote brotherhood and to adopt our economic as well as our social and political structures to man. The time has come to put money at the service of the human being, in order to remove the understandable frustration felt by people who do not receive their fair share of the national production.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, if deep constitutional reforms must be contemplated to eliminate in Quebec the causes that brought about the unlawful associations, we believe that our Canadian society should show the necessary flexibility and broadmindedness. This is not the time for arrogance, but for understanding and dialogue; we have a country to build, not to destroy.

We strongly believe that the federal government from now on will have to enter debates on the constitution with a spirit of brotherhood and national reconciliation. Again, what is important is first that Canadians live decently. The constitutional framework must not be an obstacle in the way of the fulfillment of Canadians, including the people of Quebec.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, for the next few minutes I intend to express my views concerning the causes that led to the troubles we have been through recently and which are probably not over yet, and my opinion on this bill which is before us for third reading.

It is about time, I think, that we should speak frankly. Ever since the crisis reached its height, I have kept my mouth shut because, in my opinion, we had to let the clouds clear and allow the present government all the leeway it needed to keep the situation well in hand and put a stop to terrorist activities.

First of all, I must say I am a true federalist, that I believe in a strong and United Canada, in mutual understanding but not in the submission of one of our provinces to the rest of Canada.

I totally disapprove of all the reprehensible acts of the FLQ, and support the position of my leader, that is, that the most energetic steps possible must be taken to safeguard what democracy we still enjoy.

I doubt that we should have to go over all the suggestions and amendments put forward by the various members of my party, or the opposition or even those of the government members, which, in any event, were turned down by the government although the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had invited us to make them.

All Canadians, and we members of Parliament above all, should stop to consider together the direct cause of all this effervescence in the province of Quebec during the past months.

The world has been shown a new image of Canada. In fact, forgotten are the red tunics, inflation, the Western Prairies, the dairy problem, the wheat problem; even our official recognition of Communist China—excuse me, of Red China—has escaped attention.

Suddenly, breaking through the government's political masquerade, economic, social and cultural problems have come to light.

Now is the time for speculation. Federalists or not, or attracted by all the world's ideologies, we are caught unawares, and even panicking. We must admit that the FLQ is the strongest in this whole matter. We must stop deluding ourselves and face reality. That is difficult and humiliating for each and every one of us. But this time, events that monopolize the mass media throughout the world do not originate in Asia, Africa or South America, but right here at home in the nice Catholic French Canadian province. "Is it possible?", respectable people ask.

To all hon. members opposite, I wish to say that they have become bourgeois under the cover of democracy, that such events had long been visible in our historical and immediate sky. We must not say that they take us by surprise.

The government was well aware of the situation, had been for a long time, but nobody was courageous enough to say what was wrong and, above all, to apply the appropriate remedies. The following question is raised: Why did it wait so long? Perhaps to let the events develop to such a point where he could save the situation and then be hailed as the great saviour of democracy. Thus with this new shield, he could continue to wheedle the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, this game can sometimes cost the life of innocent people. I see that several hon. members are shaking their heads and finding those remarks hard on the great savior of democracy. What to think about it? On what can those statements be based?

Can an answer be given to the following question: Why did not the government take heed of the many warnings given over a long period of time?

Let us recall some historical facts: the frustration of French Canadians faced with the arrogance of English Canadians after the conquest, their reticence at the time of conscription for the Boer War in 1901 and the 1914-18 war, the refusal of many of them to serve under the Union Jack during the 1939-45 war, the stand of the former Montreal mayor, Mr. Camilien Houde, on compulsory registration in 1940, a stand which got him a few years in jail at the expense of the federal government (what an honour!), statements by Louis-Hippolyte Lafontaine, Henri Bourassa, Canon Lionel Groulx, Maurice Duplessis, Right Hon. Louis St-Laurent, Daniel Johnson, the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste (Mr. Caouette), François-Albert Angers, Jean Lesage, Claude Ryan, René Lévesque and a great many others, all gave warning of what is happening today.

The leader of my party spoke in 1963 as follows:

> Separatism is a symptom of the injustice suffered by French Canadians. Most of these famous men were educated by old parish priests and still believe, as most of us do, that they must love their enemies. They were taught to turn the right cheek to whoever slapped their left one. They were taught not to kill. They therefore uttered strong protests against abuses, but they did nothing more than that.

[Mr. Beaudoin.]

• (8:50 p.m.)

Today however, young people have been educated by mechanical men, by learned fellows, by people who are engaged in a system of numbers and who teach only numbers to our students, who become what we know them to be.

The time to turn the right cheek is over. Movements like FRAP, citizens committees, the FLP, the MIS, the Vallières-Gagnon committee, the MLT and the latest, the MDPPQ, that is the movement for the defence of Quebec political prisoners, are movements that have had enough of holding out any cheek.

Mr. Speaker, the government has been getting warnings for a long long time. But it waited. For instance, why did it not take any account of the statements, supported by documents, made by Mr. Saulnier on October 11, 1969, when he said the following:

> We know that in Canada there are persons and groups of persons who work actively to realize a plan aimed at destroying all freedom in our form of democratic government and in this plan, the expression of the will of the people at the polls is excluded.
>
> In several instances, these people and these groups are inspired and financed by foreign political regimes belonging to an International whose ideas on basic freedoms are different from ours.

Why was there not an immediate reaction from the government when Mr. Saulnier and the legal department of the city of Montreal, through Mr. Michel Côté, appeared before the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts? At that time Mr. Côté tabled a number of documents found at the Company of Young Canadians headquarters and elsewhere. Those documents were leaflets entitled "Stratégie révolutionnaire" and "Mobilisation Numéro Deux".

In the event government members have never read these documents or to refresh their memory if they have forgotten Messrs. Saulnier's and Côté's statements, I would like to quote part of "Mobilisation Numéro Deux".

> Inevitably, the Quebce revolutionaries are led to get together under one word without losing their own personality. Whether they are now working with the FLP, FLQ, citizens' committees, unions, MLT, MIS, Vallières-Gagnon committee, they all participate in the same strategy. There are only two strategies: electoral strategy and revolutionary strategy. All those movements are fundamentally opposed to elections. That means therefore that they have chosen to overthrow established order through revolution.

Mr. Speaker, this same document unfolded a three-stage plan to spread revolution throughout Quebec. These stages went from radicalization, to spontaneous agitation and popular insurrection, including the armed occupation of plants, universities, schools and public services.

The description is complete: the objectives, the methods, the FLQ structure, its infiltration of organizations such as the Company of Young Canadians, etc. Even though the government does not usually give any consideration to the proceeding's of the committees, of the House, the ministers had other means to get information. They had only to read the newspapers or watch CBC television—the national network—to see and listen to revolutionaries such as Pierre Vallières explain what the FLQ intended to do.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) complained about lack of time and lack of warning. But Mr. Vallières himself warned him on the CBC.

Such behaviour shows some crass ignorance on the part of the government. I was somewhat amused when our Prime Minister expressed surprise one night in October 1970, on national television.

Why did the government charge that some political leaders were trying to cash in politically on these sad events? I wonder, earnestly and objectively, whether the government did not tacitly decide to do just that too by failing to react sooner to these events. That could cost a man's life, but, on the other side, are there not considerations that the government deems more important?

Mr. Speaker, while looking for the underlying causes of the problems that now bring the government to introduce the bill before us, I should like to remind the House that for the FLQ boys, our history starts much before 1867, a fact that some have tried to get across.

Is it not the English-speaking majority that says that since 1760 French Canadians are the sons of a conquered nation, that they are under-developed people and that they beg for dollars from Uncle Sam?

Is it not true that French Canadians rank 12th in Canada as far as their economic status is concerned? By the way, they rank just before Italians and Indians!

Her are some statistics published in La Presse of October 26, 1968 and taken from the findings of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism.

Mr. Speaker, I shall only mention the main points which struck me. Thus, the French-speaking Canadian has an annual income which is $1,000 less than that of the English-speaking Canadian, i.e. a 20 per cent difference. All across the country, including Quebec, the French Canadian earns 12 per cent less than any other Canadian regardless of his ethnic origin. All across the country, except in Quebec, the English Canadian earns 10 per cent more than other Canadians. Quebec is the only province in Canada where a unilingual English-speaking Canadian will earn more than a bilingual French Canadian. But in Quebec, as far as the salary is concerned, French Canadians rank 12th, out of 14 nationalities. It is not I who say that, but indeed the report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism. English-speaking Canadians earn 40 per cent more than the other people of various other origins. After graduation from university, a Jew will increase his income by $4171, an English by $4007, an Italian by $3695, and a French Canadian by $3290. As a result, French Canadians are represented in only 3 per cent of all transactions made through the Montreal Stock Exchange, and they only hold 15 per cent of all the real estate title-deeds. The French Canadian businessman is but the servant of the English-speaking Canadian businessman.

I feel it might be well for all members to read closely the fourth volume of the report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism to find out what the real situation is with regard to French Canadians. It is not what one might imagine or what the prime minister would have Canadians, from one end of Canada to the other, believe it is, with his slogan: a united Canada.

Like the reactionaries, I see, in the present situation in Quebec, an abnormal situation. They chose to change that situation through means of which I categorically and totally disapprove. Yet, I do agree that it is high time that situation were changed.

What does the text of the FLQ manifesto reveal? Essentially, the situation in which we now live. We must admit that they are right when they speak of our economic and social colonialism. In short, who are we? Do we have our own little Israel to build, to fight for, to protect? Are we done for as a people, or are we getting bogged down irrevocably in the chaos of anarchy?

• (9:00 p.m.)

Who are these terrorists? Cowards, assassins, traitors to the French Canadian nation! You have to admit, they are a little of all that. But why did they become traitors, terrorists, cowards, assassins, "rejects of history", to use an expression of the prime minister? There are certainly reasons for their murderous conduct. What is the responsibility of society, of the government, of the other race? When a man catches rabies because a dog bit him, we treat the man and kill the dog. It looks very much to me as if we are now doing the opposite.

These men, these FLQ members, realized that they are a conquered, exploited people, strangers in their own province. They are people with high political awareness, who are fed up with the situation in which they are living. Many people are shocked by government inaction, as evidenced by all the movements I referred to earlier, and which have been swarming in Quebec since the time of the quiet revolution. The process of ogling the FLQ through fake governmental microscopes leads us to believe that this movement is made up of bad guys and hench men, but it, fails to show the movement's fundamental nature. We are now taking the weapon away without trying to cure the mind that guided the arm that has been aiming it.

In an effort to help solve the problem, a new definition must be found for this federation which is slowly sinking within the slime of bureaucracy and submissive and unco-operative federalism. Such is the new challenge facing our young country; build a country with the people, for the people, by the people, in one word, build a democracy.

This present upsurge of terrorism is, by way of consequence, a unique chance for us to pull ourselves together. The terrorists apparently are not bent on revenge; they would rather, as they have shown, try and raise their flag next to the one which the Canadian people have been flying for the past 103 years.

If we consider the situation in a positive state of mind, we can, I believe, derive therefrom something meaningful. Such a movement spurs us on, rouses us, jolts us into the dynamism we need to build the country and a society which will be not only just, but human.

Mr. Speaker, this is no time for speculation or petty politics, but the time for great decisions. It is up to the right-minded to shake themselves and not become the victims of those who seek to overthrow the administration. Who knows but that the FLQ may be the prelude to many political upheavals throughout the whole of Canada.

To be sure, life in future will no longer be what it was in our country, Canada. The good times are gone. History is taking a new turning. Whither is Canada going? What will be its fate? Many a reply can come to mind, but one thing is certain. It all depends on how the government will be able to channel the existing forces to build or destroy our heritage.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that our future will he quite different from the past. We must constantly legislate, adjust the country to the present time, stop living like in the Middle Ages.

This is the lesson the FLQ gives us. It is now up to us to take advantage of the situation in order to survive democratically. But most of all, we must not forget that the grievances of the FLQ are exclusive to Quebec. It is a movement that makes the most of the present situation, unemployment, poverty, regional disparities, differences between the two main ethnic groups, arrogance towards one another etc... All this strengthens the FLQ, while it weakens the administration.

As I said before, we must look beyond the realities. The powers that be and the authorities might bring in the army to crush the terrorist movement which besets and threatens us. A sociologist would no doubt say that society is ill, but a chemist would say that a catalyser is needed to activate the chemical reaction. Thus both will say the same thing, but with a vastly different vivid language. At that time, if you manage to understand fully the picturesque of people, odd as it may seem we will be in my view in the process of achieving democracy.

In conclusion, I would like to read into the record an excerpt of the letter which the Prime minister sent to my leader on October 17. I quote:

> It is with the utmost seriousness that I invited then and that I am inviting again today your suggestions with a view to amending the regulations, as well as those you could put forward concerning the nature and the contents of a new legislation. I shall show much eagerness in considering your suggestions as soon as you are in a position to submit them to me.

Mr. Speaker, the opposition parties and even some government members made suggestions which have almost all been rejected by the government. Thus, as recorded on page 1391 of Hansard for last Monday, an hon. member on the government side proposed an amendment which read as follows:

> That Bill C-181 be amended
> (a) by striking out line 10 on page 3 and substituting the following:
> "mental change within Canada with respect to the province of Quebec or its relationship to Canada as that"

[Mr. Beaudoin.]

Consequently, the bill concerns only Quebec now and not the rest of the provinces. In fact, it concerns only the associations or movements which want secession. What about other provinces? What about other associations or movements which would advocate a shameless federalism, a federalism of submission and not of co-operation!

Since this government proclaims that it does not want a special status for the province of Quebec, I wonder if its deeds are in agreement with his words.

Ever since this government states that it wants bilingualism at large, a mari usque ad marem, it brings in reports and orders commissions to study the problem. But when it rejects amendments moved by one of its own who is asking that the bill now under consideration should be drafted in good French, I wonder if its words are not in contradiction with its deeds.

Even after saying that it would take due note of all our suggestions, the government rejected nearly all of them and I am wondering once more if it is not acting contrary to what it is saying.

Mr. Speaker, I am also against the bill's retroactivity since it could not be justified. If any provincial or federal political party were declared an unlawful association as a result of illegal doings of one or more of its members, everyone having participated in the party's activity would be considered an outlaw and guilty. I wish to emphasize that if fully implemented, this legislation would infringe upon man's freedom to work for an association or a movement which is not illegal at the present time. If, for instance, a handful of PQ extremists committed reprehensible acts which interfered with the freedom of the Canadian people, and if this party were to be declared an "illegal association", then all the people who have been active in this movement since its inception would be liable to prosecution.

Mr. Speaker, this provision of the bill is altogether opposed to my idea of liberty. This example can be applied to my party as well as to any of the opposition parties, either federal or provincial.

Therefore, if this bill is not amended so as to be applicable to all provinces, if it is not drafted in proper French as requested by the member for Matane (Mr. De Bané), and if the retroactive provision is not amended, I will vote against it.

We were told "Enough of this nonsense", but which nonsense? Ours or yours?

[English]

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, as we come to the conclusion of this debate I think it is important to reflect for a moment or two on what has been happening to us during the autumn. I think this period may well be regarded by those who look back on it as the autumn of extremes, because quite truly over the past two months, perhaps even more, we have been battered by two very dangerous and extreme elements present in our society.

One is the very obvious extreme of anarchy which this country has not suffered willingly over the past weeks. Anarchy is perhaps new in this form in our country but not in the world. Those who would take the law into their own hands, and those who would through acts of violence and terror seek to destroy a country or the moral strength of a nation really only ask for themselves an end that is chaotic, without purpose and of extreme danger to each and every citizen of the country concerned.

I think no member of this House and no rational and responsible member of society could accept for a moment those who would willingly impose, through criminal activity and force, changes in society. We have given an indication of that by the very rapid way in which the War Measures Act was agreed to by members of this House and also by the willingness with which the military forces of this country were brought into play.

If we have been the victim of the extremes of those who would resort to anarchy, there is also great danger that we may well be the victim of those who would seek to repress through the use of law. It is not altogether clear that a large percentage of the population of this country is concerned, but one cannot consider the regulations of the War Measures Act or, in fact, the present temporary public order bill without realizing that repression in many different forms has been introduced into this country with great speed and very widespread acceptance. To my mind the extent of its acceptance in no way justifies the validity of this measure the essential good it may do.

• (9:10 p.m.)

I believe all Canadians should be warned that in future they will have to be on guard not only in respect of those who would resort to acts of violence through blackmail, kidnapping and what-have-you, but also in respect of those who would willingly suspend the traditional processes of law in order to deal in a large-scale manner with the problems of anarchy.

From the beginning the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and members of this government have said there was knowledge which justified the actions taken. In the early stages it was not clear whether or not that knowledge was public, but in recent weeks the Prime Minister again and again has reiterated the fact that the information on which the government acted is well known. Some of us on this side of the House have not felt that the information was well known and attempts have been made to put that information on the public record.

If in fact we take the Prime Minister at his word, that in truth the facts are well known, then as one member of this House I would have to say that on the facts he has revealed and on the facts that other authorities have revealed there is no justification for the type of legislative or cabinet action which has been taken to deal with this crisis. It is, quite naturally, on that that the government will have to be judged.

Even if one were to agree for a moment that there was some justification on October 16 for the invocation of the War Measures Act and for the sweeping powers given the provincial authorities, surely the obvious question to ask on this last day in November is: Why now, a month or six weeks after the events of October 16, is the government asking for essentially the same powers it asked for in the heat of the moment and the crisis which developed on that occasion? What new arrests do the authorities contemplate? What new avenue of effectiveness do the provincial authorities intend to follow in an effort to rescue poor Mr. Cross, who in some way seems to have become almost a forgotten victim of the activities which have transpired? Why is it that now, at this distance from the immediate events of early October, the government must carry through until the end of April with this kind of sweeping and, I believe, repressive power?

Very shortly this legislation will be sent to the other place. It has been a fact of political life that the other place has existed from the time of confederation for the purpose of giving legislation a sober second thought. I would say from this place to that place that if ever there was a need for the other place to give that sober second thought, it is in respect of the type of sweeping powers being asked for in this legislation. Never was it more needed than now.

I earnestly hope that when the other place becomes seized with this temporary public order bill it will act, in my estimation, in a more responsible manner than this House has acted. I think that after the immediacy of the legislation and of the debate surrounding the immediate events in Quebec have receded into history, many of us will have to ask serious questions about what this extensive action has done to Canada itself. We will have to ask ourselves, in what way have we been able to bring together the people from different parts of this country, particularly the French-speaking people in Quebec and the English-speaking people who surround Quebec?

One feels increasingly that the walls of misunderstanding have been thickened, have been heightened, and that now more than ever there are, in fact, two solitudes in this country and that there is a pressing need to establish bridges of communication and understanding between French and English Canada. One cannot respond lightly to the precedents that have been established both by Order in Council and by the legislation which is before us, because I believe these precedents certainly have not been in the best interests of this country and, particularly, they have not been in the best interests of resolving some of the deeply ingrained problems which we face. It is true that the debate shortly will end in this House, but I believe the debate in the country is just beginning.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, the painful circumstances we have known prompt us to define our position accurately so that later, when everything has cooled down, when reason prevails again, we shall not regret decisions taken hastily because of highly deplorable circumstances. Mr. Speaker, to prove that the position taken since last week by the Ralliement Créditiste is not unfounded and that it expresses at least in an avant-garde fashion the ideas that will soon be shared by the people of Quebec and of Canada, I would like to quote an excerpt of an article published in Le Devoir on November 27, 1970:

When Mr. Turner was asked what would happen if a terrorist organization should spring up in another province to defend federalism by violence, the minister answered that "the Criminal Code certainly has provisions with respect to the use of this type of violence".

This statement is rather disquieting with regard to the scope of the future emergency powers act. Will the future act also apply exclusively to Quebec? If the Criminal Code is adequate, according to the Minister of Justice, to fight possible terrorist outbursts in other provinces, why is it necessary to resort to special legislation in the case of the province of Quebec?

Let us not forget that this measure suspends some fundamental rights of citizens and goes further than the Criminal Code.

This article appeared in the newspaper Le Devoir under the name of Paul Sauriol.

From this statement, we clearly see that we are right in defending Quebec. Too many government members believe that once the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has agreed, everybody follows suit. Some are so full of dictatorial power that they think they will get instantaneous and universal support, without reservation or limit, under the pretext that all are indomitably against force, violence and terrorism. It is thought that an emergency powers legislation can be adopted as if we were a bunch of simple-minded, traumatized, frightened people, ready to accept anything upon the word of a government of which the least we can say is that it has shown inefficiency, conceitedness, casual arrogance well hidden under the protective wing of one of the three famous doves, the right hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker, in order to spare all kinds of feelings, the bill under consideration circumscribes and demarcates its purpose to the sole province of Quebec. The honour, the pride, the vanity of the entire country are involved; we hasten to restrict the problem to Quebec. The Quebecer becomes this scabby, repulsive animal referred to by Lafontaine in one of his fables as the source of all evil. Who is responsible for all the troubles. We, Quebecers! What have we to defend ourselves against such charges, such an evil? Nobody ever thinks that the many Quebec Liberal members, whose number is inversely proportional to their worth,—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Matte: —could take in hand the defence of the vital interests of the province.

We have seen the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané) acting alone for a while. Since then, he has returned to the ranks. Nothing doing; the party is above the individual. There is no choice; it is "believe or die".

Thus we on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, through circumstances, are the only ones who may in all freedom criticize objectively. No minor consideration will keep us from doing what has been entrusted to us. If other members are not prepared to consider this law with all the seriousness and thoughtfulness required, we do not have to do the same. In fact, we are the official opposition as far as Quebec is concerned. Therefore, we shall not let our rights, privileges and pride be ignored through the irresistible impulse of a Prime Minister who wants to break the Canadians from Quebec once and for all.

Why have we been in favour of the war measures? Merely because we thought that we were dealing with leaders who could assume their responsibilities, who knew what they were doing, who were aware of facts and details that we did not know, and because, in those tragic circumstances, it seemed appropriate and altogether normal to leave this government absolutely free to arrest the terrorists and, thus, to bring back peace in this country.

Unfortunately, we must, after due consideration, ask ourselves whether responsibilities were actually assumed. Of course, an escalation had to be avoided. Already a diplomat and a minister had been kidnapped. Other kidnappings could be expected. This is why we were in favour of invoking the War Measures Act.

However, when it is a matter of voting for a measure aimed at ending violence and terrorism, then, we must take our responsibilities. The War Measures Act was not drafted by us. Besides, it was never directed exclusively at Quebec, that I know, and it being the case, we would still prefer the War Measures Act to other legislations which would place sole responsibility on Quebec.

Therefore, it is essential to fully analyze the situation and to ask ourselves to what extent our leaders could have been mistaken and have not, in their own way, resorted to terrorism.

I should like to endorse a statement by Mr. Fernand Daoust, of the Quebec Federation of Labour, before a delegation of the Quebec Labour Council, contained in a release to the newspaper La Presse. He pointed very accurately to the various responsibilities of the government I quote:

The labour movement squarely opposed the War Measures Act because it never believed that the reasons put forward by the Trudeau government were grounded.

To try and make the Quebec people believe that there was, at a given time, a state of apprehended insurrection amounts to a practical joke, he added. The history of revolutions throughout the world proves beyond doubt that when insurrection broke out in some countries, the workers were largely part of it and were involved in demonstrations aimed at overthrowing the government.

In Quebec, since the Cross-Laporte crisis, at no time did the organized workers consider coming down into the streets and overthrowing the government. In factories and offices, the workers, though worried, had no intention to start partial or general strikes. That is why the labour spokesmen started to question the reasons put forward by the three governments involved to invoke the War Measures Act.

And Mr. Daoust added:

This unbelievable rumour spread by the government is quite in the line of thought of Canada's Prime Minister who had said a few months before his famous words "Enough of this nonsense." This appeal from the Prime Minister pointed to a certain form of political repression and the action taken by the government in the last two weeks reveals that the political strategists of the Trudeau government chose to condition the Quebec people psychologically.

All in all, continued the FLQ's leader, it is an attempt at brainwashing designed to connect terrorism and violence with all those who, in our society, are opposed to the present status quo. It will be recalled that the leader in this field was Senator McCarthy who, in the United States, launched the widest witch hunt in modern times. It is unbelievable that after 15 years, McCarthy has still so many imitators among the politicians of this country.

The FTQ, recalled Fernand Daoust, was violently opposed to terrorism as a political means of action. The FTQ has repeatedly denounced the FLQ over the last few years; it cannot however yield to collective hysteria and operate with those who, in the name of the fight against terrorism, are prepared to trample the most sacred liberties of a community.

• (9:30 p.m.)

That is why our organization has deemed proper to make its voice heard and to caution the Quebec society against the dangers of any interference with the civil liberties in a society like ours.

That is a quite appropriate clarification, in my opinion, of the circumstances surrounding the violence unlatched in Quebec in October. And when it is suggested—and I agree with that suggestion—that it is the lack of responsibility on the part of the leaders that is to be condemned, I would like once more to give as proof some facts which show beyond any doubt that the leaders—particularly those of Quebec—had every possibility to crush the FLQ at the very beginning, but that they failed to do so.

When one reads in the Friday November 20th issue of Le Soleil an article by Lionel Bernier dealing with the Maison du Pêcheur at Gaspé, it is obvious that the statements made in the past two years by the mayor of Percé and that nobody believed or pretended not to believe, marked the beginning of the ensuing crisis.

I would like to quote that article in order to make the situation quite clear.

About the people of Percé, it says:

Attacked in their own town by strangers who wanted to lay down the law, the people of Percé got their backs up. They already felt that the action of those young people who lived beyond the fringe and who had an obvious taste for destruction was a bad omen.

They appealed to the government for help. However, they were told that they were witch hunting in broad daylight. Annoyed, the people decided to take the law into their own hands. Then came the famous night of the water spraying.

Then events occurred in quick succession. The Maison du Pêcheur and its leaders made the headlines and posed as Robin Hoods in a latter-day Sherwood. Rose, Simard, Arène, Lortie, Beauchamp were in the limelight.

Last summer, a new start, a new Maison du Pêcheur . . . libre this time, and the citizens of Percé and Grande-Rivière were hit again. There was an uproar in the court-house, repeated insults against authority, and to top it off, during a Court of the Sessions of the Peace hearing, after the judge had had to put up with rude interruptions, someone wrote in a window-pane looking into the court-room, the word "merde". And in red paint, on the outside brick wall of the building, facing the road, the words, FLQ will overcome.

Is this not clear enough? Was this not obvious enough? Perhaps some people thought that FLQ stood for Fédération libérale du Québec. And the story goes on as follows.

Officials of the town of Percé, after doing every effort to prevent the opening of the Maison du Pêcheur, after denouncing the promoters of the project repeatedly and warning government authorities against their negative action, had to put up with it after all.

Mr. Abnerd Biard whom we met at his home a few days ago, made this meaningful comment: "I had warned the government. They replied that these people were harmless,

—the Rose brothers, Simard "harmless" people—that they were school kids. I was told not to attempt to use any violence to drive them out of Percé. Today, we see what is happening. Prevention is often better than cure."

When people go as far as threatening he who precisely wants to expose the real terrorists, we start wondering.

Mr. Biard squarely accuses the two successive Quebec governments with failing to assume their responsibilities when there was still time.

"Nobody ever believed me when I stated that La Maison du Pêcheur was a terroists' retreat. Yet the FLQ sign was written out in full over all their walls. What is more, they painted it over our signs and our walls. Their whole behavior bore the impress of hatred and violence.

"They laughed at us when we told them that those fellows had no morals, that they indulged in drugs, that they lived as hogs".

"And again this year, when I requested police help, the Minister of Justice implied that I wanted to build a ghetto in Percé, that I was a fool. According to him, we were the ones causing all the trouble in our own community!

"I received threats by mail once during the summer. I heard people saying it was just a joke.

"The Maison du Pêcheur did publish and circulate two manifestos like the one that came out before the Labour Minister's murder. Violence was strongly advocated as the sole means of overthrowing the government. Slogans like this one appeared in writing: "People of Gaspé, let us unite and hit wherever it seems proper".

And where was the hon. member for that constituency at that time?

"In spite of all this, the authorities never did anything. They waited until the FLQ made its move.

"Instead of coming to my assistance, a policeman called during the summer and checked my rifles, warning me that if a shot was fired I would be first on the list of suspects, because of some old guns that were never used. That is the kind of protection I was offered.

"That is why, all summer, we settled for enduring the hippies, letting them insult us, threaten us and carry on their propaganda in favour of destruction and hatred. We were alone to defend ourselves, we had to make up our minds to that."

Mr. Biard goes on at length in this tone. He fails to understand why the Justice Department did not take action while it was still time. Or rather he explains it through infiltration of FLQ members within the government itself. According to him, the FLQ members in Percé enjoyed the protection of top men in the Quebec administration. He repeats that in the final analysis. The events simply confirmed his predictions over the past two years. He explains that violence was preached with the blessing of the authorities and of the police force. One day or another, according to him, it was bound to end like it did.

And he thinks that it is not over because too many influential people are involved. However, there will not be another Maison du Pêcheur at Percé. In addition, he states that there will be no more youth hostel, as he thinks both institutions are to be put in the same bag. And if, this time, Percé does not obtain adequate protection, they will take the necessary measures to ensure it themselves.

Mr. Speaker, if I took the trouble to read all this report, it was indeed to clarify the situation and prove that there was negligence on the part of officials in all this story, that they were afraid to stop these trouble-makers from the start. It is to be wondered if some did not want to take advantage of that in order to establish a system aimed at absolute control. In other words, Mr. Speaker, it seems that this situation is taken as a stepping stone towards dictatorship. That is what I think when I read about such events. And when nothing was done to stop them while it was not too late, it is easy to see that the agitation of these recent times was to be expected and that the authorities seemed to anticipate it. They were eager to see it happen so as to use it afterwards to establish another kind of terrorism.

And I come back to this statement in order to confirm the eagerness with which they tried to exploit the whole terrorized population. Furthermore, when the right hon. Prime Minister announced on the very day of the unfortunate murder of Pierre Laporte: Madam, it could be you or your children tomorrow, and where he was engaging in this gross demagogy, in order to break and to control all the better, Quebec, we had us part of it.

If the government is able to explain in a serious and credible manner that there has been effectively a real conspiracy, an insurrection, we will understand why all these measures were taken.

But, when we know that it was aware of what was going on and did nothing about it, even pleased with the fact that it had happened, in order to take a better control, that makes me quite unhappy. As a member of Parliament, I feel I must denounce this attitude.

In view of all those considerations, I am forced to vote against that bill which is absolutely inadequate, and which, in addition, constitutes a slap in the face of the Quebecers who in the end have to pay the piper. So, the time has come for the members, and especially those from Quebec, to denounce those methods. We still hope to convince the government, so anxious to pass another emergency measure to replace the War Measures Act, to display some wisdom. We understand quite well that because of all it implies the War Measures Act is not quite adequate, but this bill—as all my colleagues pointed out—does not in any way take our suggestions into account. As the leader of the Ralliement créditiste (Mr. Caouette) said himself; What is the use of asking for suggestions when the bill is already being printed?

We have been so ridiculed and downgraded that we are beginning to have enough and to ask that logic and reason prevail. It is too easy to say that the people support the government, because they merely want protection. This is an emotional and spontaneous reaction. Of course, the people want to be protected and all trouble makers to be arrested. That is obvious. It is not because 80 per cent of the Canadian people agree that terrorists are arrested. It only means that the population supports the government. Because it is in power, the present government gets support, considering the circumstances. And taking the situation into account, I think the government did not act with the required competence, with honesty and once again failed in its duty. Sooner or later, the people will recognize those facts and share my view.

• (9:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I did not want to speak on third reading and I shall only take a few moments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: We have come to what appears to be the end of the debate and we are in this position: Before this bill came to the House, the War Measures Act was implemented by Order in Council of the government. Then the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his government came into the House and asked the House to approve the War Measures Act and whether they had the confidence of Parliament and the country.

We in this party took the position that we would vote for the War Measures Act on the ground that another bill would be introduced. We now have that bill before the House. Most members must find themselves in a dilemma, because if they vote against this bill and it is defeated, we are back to the War Measures Act. I am not going to attack the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) personally tonight in any way, shape or form. We have had our say, we have moved our amendments and they have all been refused. But if this bill were to be defeated by a vote of the House, then we are back to the War Measures Act.

This bill is far from what we would like. In Toronto, where the game between the Alouettes and Calgary took place, in which Calgary did not seem to do as well as might have been expected, the Prime Minister lumped the whole opposition together, so I should take a few moments to put our position straight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: We intend to vote for the bill. If we do not, we will be back to the War Measures Act and its all-encompassing powers. I should like to read into the record figures on the time spent in this debate. I think it has gone on far too long, and I am sure the Minister of Justice would confirm that many times we have asked that it come to an end. The government have spent 603 minutes, or 10 hours 3 minutes, on the debate. The total opposition have spent 1,656 minutes, or 27 hours 36 minutes, of which the Progressive Conservatives have spent 565 minutes, or 9 hours 25 minutes. One of our members took an entirely different viewpoint to that of the party, so if you subtract his time you might say we took about 465 minutes apart from tonight.

In Toronto the Prime Minister said that the opposition has been holding up Parliament. But it certainly has not been the official opposition. The Progressive Conservatives have not held up this debate in any shape or form.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: We feel that we have taken a very responsible position. If the Prime Minister wants to misrepresent that fact, that is his privilege. When he made that statement he knew he was hiding the true facts. He will not get on with solving unemployment and all the other economic problems of the nation and he needs an excuse for his own and his government's inadequacies. I think it is time, on third reading, to point out where we stand as far as this debate is concerned.

I emphasize that none of us in this party likes this bill. Our amendments have been turned down. However, we are realistic enough to know that if we vote against the bill and it is defeated, we back to the War Measures Act which gives extraordinary powers in every field, without any remedies. Every Member of Parliament is in a dilemma when it comes to voting, and the responsibility for this is on the shoulders of the government.

In this House, during the question period and on other occasions, we have asked and asked and asked what the position is so far as prisoners are concerned and those who have been arrested under the War Measures Act. Today the mistreatment of those prisoners was exposed. Whatever their crimes may be, whatever they may have done—even those who have not yet been caught, like Rose and his cohorts—in a democratic state, under the rule of law, they are entitled to be treated with dignity and humanity. They have not been treated with dignity and humanity, and the government has refused to shoulder its responsibility.

We know the trick. When this bill supersedes the War Measures Act the government will say it is a provincial problem if prisoners are being mistreated. When I asked the question today I was glad to see that the Minister of Justice stood up and took his responsibility. I hope he will continue to answer questions in the House in reference to these matters.

As far as I am concerned, the mistreatment, the secrecy and the lack of responsibility of the government is something they will have to explain, not only to this chamber in the future but to the people of Canada and particularly to the people who have been arrested without charge and detained. If the amendments proposed to the bill had been accepted, there would have been a remedy for these abuses; they could have been brought to light; the parties in question would have received redress had they asked for it.

Tonight we are faced with voting to approve a bill we do not like. If we turn it down, we will get something worse. That is the dilemma facing the opposition, and the responsibility for the situation lies with the government. When the government moved to implement the War Measures Act, we asked for a bill with these remedies and they have been refused. This is the situation, Mr. Speaker. We in this party are prepared to vote and have been prepared to do so for days.

If the Minister of Justice wished, he could confirm that on behalf of this party I have asked and asked that the debate come to an end so we could get on with the other business of the country, particularly that aimed at solving our economic problems. The people of Canada know they are facing the toughest winter since the 1930s. The number of students who did not find employment last summer will be doubled by next spring when they get out of university and college.

An hon. Member: Two wrongs do not make a right.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to explain a situation which should once again be made quite clear.

I understand the point of view of the previous speaker, but I am amazed that time should be so precious when we are discussing such an important matter.

We have taken a logical attitude, when we asked that the new legislation be given a country-wide scope. Has the War Measures Act, which is national in scope, not been put in effect at the request of the Quebec government?

In my opinion, when Bill C-181 becomes law, it should be applied at the request of any provincial government. We have sufficiently devilled on the matter, I believe, to be well understood.

Secondly, we are told that if the present bill is not passed by Parliament, the War Measures Act will be enforced until it is recalled.

Well, for honest people, for people who are at peace with their conscience, the War Measures Act is nothing to worry about as it is solely directed at those who are against common sense, who approve of disorder and terrorism. In fact, it only applies to a very small minority.

And I wish the ideas of our country were taken into consideration in this matter. We did not plan any filibuster in this regard, but through democratic means and according to parliamentary procedure we have tried to have the word "Québec" crossed out so that the act would apply to the whole of Canada rather than to one province in particular. In fact, I feel that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) has a great enough sense of justice to have appreciated our point of view quite well, because we have had the opportunity to discuss this matter not only in the House, but also outside, and in a most private manner.

So, I would like us to be considered not as people trying to delay our proceedings but as members wishing to fulfill their obligation as objectively and as sincerely as possible.

• (9:50 p.m.)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The question is on third reading of the bill. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Pursuant to the special order made earlier this day, the recorded division on the motion now before the House will be deferred and will be set down as the first order of government business for tomorrow's sitting.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, would a member on the government side give us a rundown of the business for tomorrow?

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, as the first item of business tomorrow we shall proceed with the vote that was the subject of the order of the House this afternoon. Following that it will be our intention to call the co-operatives measure of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Then we shall call the Buffalo and Fort Erie bridge bill, followed by the merchant seamen compensation bill and then the packaging and labelling legislation. We prefer to leave open the possibility of our making a further announcement concerning the business for Wednesday.

Mr. Basford: There is also the weights and measures bill to be considered.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House agree to call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—DEPARTMENTAL STUDY OF IMPLICATIONS OF NATIONAL DEFENCE BASE CLOSURES

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, on October 26 I asked the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) if he would make public the report of his department concerning the regional economic implications of Canadian forces base closures. The minister's reply was as follows:

> —there is no question of making a public report. Nevertheless, this question is under consideration since the cabinet decided to close the two bases and, by the way, I shall be going to Manitoba very soon to review with the Manitoba government the best means of correcting the unfortunate consequences of these two base closures.

There are three points to note in the minister's reply. Firstly, we still do not know whether or not there is a report on the regional economic implications of base closures, although I have it on good authority that there is. If there is no such report, I suggest that that fact represents gross negligence and an appalling lack of interdepartmental co-operation by the government. Secondly, if there is a report, the minister has decided not to make it public; and thirdly, the minister intends to assist areas affected to overcome the adverse effects on their economies.

With respect to the third point, Mr. Speaker, I would say that the minister has been most co-operative, and if results measure up to the degree of co-operation which he has manifested we shall be most happy. However, I must also say, with all deference, that government offers of aid to achieve economic recovery are really beside the point, because citizens have the right to expect no less from their government; they are entitled to the kind of assistance which the government is prepared to offer.

The point to which I wish to address myself is the second, the seeming unwillingness of the minister to make public the information pertinent to a proper assessment by the public, and especially by residents of the areas affected, of a government decision having a profound effect upon the economy and social structure of a number of communities in the nation.

I should like to illustrate my point by referring to the effect of the closure of Canadian forces base Gimli upon the community of Gimli and the economy of the Interlake. The closure means a loss to the Interlake in excess of $7.3 million a year in salaries and wages. It means a reduction of 35 per cent per annum in total federal government expenditures in the Interlake. Closure of the base will mean a population reduction in the Interlake, mainly in the town and rural municipality of Gimli, due to the migration of military personnel and their dependants. The total number of persons involved is 2,394, or 42 per cent of the town and rural municipality of Gimli, the population of which totalled 5,660 persons. These figures are agreed to by officials of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

In short, Gimli is fighting for its life and the economy of the Interlake, an area selected for special attention for economic upgrading by the federal and provincial governments, has been dealt a body-blow. In such a situation it is only logical that the people affected should demand to know how and why their area was selected to suffer. They want to know the criteria which were employed in selecting the bases in their area for closure. They want to see the studies which ostensibly justify the closure, so that they can assess the accuracy of the information which such reports contain. These people are fighting against a potential economic disaster and they have been denied access to information which could make their fight effective, information which was accumulated—I emphasize this—at public expense.

To the best of my knowledge, there are three reports extant dealing with the subject of Canadian forces base closures. Two of them have been produced by the Department of National Defence and one by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Not one of these reports has been made public. This leads one to ask, why not? It also leads one to suspect that the government's decision was brought down on the basis of considerations other than those contained in the reports.

I am not saying that there is of necessity anything wrong with the government's rejecting the advice of its public servants. What I am saying is that when the government makes a decision, the public has the right to know upon what facts it based its decision. The public also has the right to sufficient information, to be able to judge the wisdom of that decision. In short, such reports should be made public and if the government's decision can be questioned on the basis of information in the reports, then the government should be expected to explain its position.

This country is troubled, as are most other countries in the world, by a growing mistrust on the part of the populace of the institutions of government. It is troubled by an increasing reliance, by the young especially, upon extra-institutional means of expressing opinions and seeking changes in policy direction. I speak of demonstrations violent and otherwise. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that one of the major contributing factors to this unrest, to the attitude of the public that the government stands apart from it, that it is not a means through which the community acts collectively in its own interest but is, instead, an opponent, a vague "they" which imposes decisions upon the public, is due to the hoary old tradition of keeping internal reports secret and not trusting the public with the information they contain.

• (10:00 p.m.)

This government has talked about participatory democracy. Meaningful and effective participation by the public in the governmental process must be predicated upon the public having adequate access to key information. Why not make such reports public as a first step in this direction? The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion has often indicated a lack of respect for sacred cows. This is one that could be abandoned, with immensely beneficial effects upon Canadian society. I call upon the minister to begin breaking the tradition of secrecy by making public, the report of his department dealing with regional economic effects of Canadian forces base closures.

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) for not being in the House when he began his remarks. Perhaps the adjournment proceedings began a little before ten o'clock and I was a few moments late.

I share with the hon. member the strong interest in having maximum information available, not only to the members of this House but to all Canadians, particularly those affected by economic circumstances which bring very painful effects to their communities and those who find themselves struggling to arrive at solutions. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion participates very actively and keenly in the multidepartmental teams that are formed to examine the adverse social and economic consequences of base closures. Such was the case with the two bases being closed in Manitoba. We are concerned and interested in doing everything we can within our departmental jurisdiction to mitigate the difficulties. Everything possible is being done under the incentives program to attract new industries to supplant the economic activity that is lost through the closing of bases.

The hon. member referred to some formal studies. I have been informed that no formal studies such as the type referred to at page 553 of Hansard exist in the department. There are necessarily studies of a nature in which officials are involved from the point of view of the department examining how its responsibilities can be brought to bear upon the dilemmas faced by these communities. As far as I am aware, there is no formal study of the nature suggested by the hon. member.

I know the hon. member attended, with a delegation from Manitoba, upon the minister and senior departmental officials to put the case of these communities before the government. This was very useful. The department is actively involved and concerned with finding solutions. It is a very beneficial process. We are doing everything we can to attract enterprise.

Fortunately, the two bases referred to by the hon. member are in the designated region of Manitoba. There have been from organizations some very interesting proposals on how to develop Rivers, in particular. One such organization is the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood, with which I am sure the hon. member is familiar.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

FINANCE—SIZE OF INCREASE IN GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT—TAX RELIEF MEASURES TO STIMULATE ECONOMY

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I think I am supposed to talk about the budget of next Thursday night and somewhat lift the veil of secrecy that has surrounded it until now. On the other hand, I think if I were Minister of Finance, one of the more difficult positions to fill in the House, I would approach the budget on Thursday night from several standpoints. First, I think I would approach it from the standpoint of housing, in which I have had an interest for a long time. I think we can, that we must, do more to give every Canadian his or her fair share of housing. I do not think there are many shibboleths to be cast aside when one deals with that matter.

I think one has to realize one cannot do this sort of thing by adopting the traditional marketplace approach to housing. Housing must be something that a person can afford and that a person must have. While one must rewrite certain rules in the book in that regard, they are not terribly difficult rules to rewrite. I think I could do it. I think CMHC could do it if given free rein. I think almost any member of this House could do it.

The second thing I would do if I were called upon to present a budget to the country on Thursday night is deal with the field of income tax. I do not think there are very many things to be worried or bothered about in the field of income tax. I think one has to have due regard to incentive. If I had to present a budget on Thursday night, I would give Canadians the thought that they could keep a little more of what they had or what they earned.

On those two things I would rest my case. If a person can earn as much as he wants to earn and be allowed to keep a fair amount of it, then that is fair enough. Secondly, if he wants to house his family in a certain way, that is also fair enough. On those two points I would be inclined to rest my case and see what the world could do against it.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like very much to thank the hon. member for his sneak preview tonight. I can assure him that the government always listens with care to his concerns and his recommendations, and no doubt he will have noted that from time to time they have been reflected in legislation and policy.

The hon. member has also noted that a budget speech is to be delivered by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) on Thursday evening. In view of the short lead time, it may be difficult to credit him fully with such of its contents as may accord with the sneak preview he has given us tonight. Nevertheless, the hon. member, reasonable as he is, may agree to wait until Thursday evening for a definitive response to his question.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—TAKEOVER OF RYERSON PRESS BY UNITED STATES COMPANY

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I asked the government whether it had reconsidered its approach concerning Ryerson Press and whether it was going to take action to prevent this concern, important to Canadian culture, education and the maintenance of a Canadian identity, from being taken over by a United States publishing firm, McGraw-Hill Company. Previous to that I had asked for leave to move for adjournment under Standing Order 26 on this subject. Today is the last day prior to the completion of the sale. This is the second firm within recent months to be taken over by a United States publishing concern, the other being the textbook division of W. J. Gage and Son.

[Mr. McCleave.]

• (10:10 p.m.)

The issue before us is critical. Much has been said about foreign ownership in the Canadian economy. For the most part this involved production and handling of goods and materials. Now the question of Ryerson Press involves the question of Canadian education, culture and identity. It is a matter of national concern that a major Canadian publisher of school textbooks should be sold to foreign interests. It is important that there be Canadian-owned facilities for printing textbooks for Canada.

The government has sloughed off many questions by claiming this industry does not lend itself to federal action and that it is a provincial responsibility. Indeed, the record of the provincial government of Ontario is no better than that of the federal government. It was pointed out that the federal government was able to take action concerning Denison Mines, and there are other examples in fields of broadcasting, banking and so on. The reply was that the federal government did not have the same authority as it did in fields such as uranium and banking to deal with this particular problem. This might be granted, Mr. Speaker, but it does not exhaust the avenues of action open to the government. I suggest that where there is a will, there is a way. The Liberals of Ontario wanted to take action. The federal Liberal conference wanted to see action taken. Even the other place wanted to see action, but the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and members of the government hid behind the Constitution.

I suggest that we cannot stop the erosion of Canadian independence by saying we will start tomorrow. If the government's attitude on this matter is a forerunner of its long-promised policy statement on foreign ownership, we do not have much to look forward to. If in fact there are jurisdictional problems, this has not stopped the federal government from undertaking a study of the printing and publishing industry which has not yet been made public.

It has been shown that even the threat of action is sufficient to stop some undesirable developments. If we had a Canada Development Corporation, to examine another alternative, it could provide the capital necessary to maintain Canadian control. Other means could have been found to enable potential Canadian buyers to obtain sufficient cash to complete a deal.

It may be noted in this regard that the management of Ryerson Press may not be entirely free of criticism for its past practices. The Combines Investigation Act will come up during the current session and revisions are to be made. I suggest we need to expand on its provisions to prevent this type of takeover. Another alternative is to establish a Canadian book-publishing corporation similar to the film development corporation. In fact, an attempt was made to present a bill in this regard by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard).

The government has tried to indicate that it did respond to Ryerson representations last spring, and correspondence was tabled. I have checked into that correspondence in this regard. First of all, the United Church officials wrote the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) as follows:

> During the past three years in particular, the Ryerson Press has experienced almost disastrous difficulties which undoubtedly would have culminated in the wind-up of the business were it not for the fact that the United Church, as sole owner, guarantees its line of credit with the bank, and this enabled it to obtain financial assistance which, on the basis of its own assets, would not have been available.

The letter went on to analyse some of these basic difficulties and stated:

> It is a matter of considerable concern that colleges and universities, either being newly established or experiencing mushrooming growth, have quite frequently stocked their libraries entirely through American book jobbers.

Then later on the letter stated:

> We have therefore decided that if a purchaser can be found, the Ryerson Press must be sold. At the present time, the only firm showing genuine interest is American.

The letter goes on to state they would be most unhappy about this development, and asks the government to accept a proposition whereby this could be avoided. The minister replied in a very non-committal way and said his officials would be around to see them. The United Church gave its reply on June 29. These representatives did not keep up the pressure as I thought they might have, but this still does not excuse the government for refusing to accept its responsibility and failure to take eleventh hour action that might have saved the situation. This lack of action until now must be classed as criminal negligence. There is still time in which to act, although only an hour and a half remains. I say, act now.

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few remarks in respect of the proposition suggested this evening by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton). I wish to say the government is concerned about this very serious matter and has expressed its concern in a very tangible way. It has instituted a study by a responsible firm of business consultants. That study has been received by the government. It is being studied at the present time. As soon as it is printed and available, the report will be considered in consultation with the principals of the industries concerned in Canada and with the provincial governments concerned.

As has already been pointed out, the area of school textbooks is one which is under provincial jurisdiction. The government is not hiding behind the Constitution; it is respecting it. We believe it is our responsibility to see that the province of Ontario in particular is consulted in respect of this very important matter.

The hon. member referred to a letter from Dr. Brisbin of the United Church of Canada in which some of the problems regarding the operation of Ryerson Press were outlined. However, the hon. member failed to read the whole paragraph. There are other problems regarding Ryerson Press. I should like to read the part of Dr. Brisbin's letter which refers to some of the other problems. He states:

> Some of the factors contributing to these difficulties were located in our own management and in adverse developments within the church which reduced the church's needs both for printing and for publications.

He goes on to mention some of the problems referred to by the hon. member. I want to point out that these are concerns and problems which are beyond the control of the government in any event. The government, however, is concerned about the matter. The same concern was also registered at our Liberal policy convention about ten days ago where in two resolutions the members of this party expressed very firmly their concern about this matter by an overwhelming vote. This is an indication of the seriousness with which we view the matter on this side of the House.

As soon as the report is printed, which will be very soon, it will be studied by those concerned outside of government and in government. I can assure the hon. member it will be acted upon as soon as policy can be formulated. I remind the hon. member, also, that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) is preparing an in-depth study of this particular subject as it relates to problems of foreign ownership in Canada, which will be submitted to Parliament in the form of legislation in the near future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must advise him that his allotted time has expired.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.21 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, December 1, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. STANFIELD—CORRECTION OF ERROR IN STATEMENT ON WHITE PAPER ON INCOME SECURITY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the course of speaking on motions and addressing myself to the government's white paper on welfare I made a statement which I should like to change because obviously it is incorrect. Based on a quick reading of page 33 of the white paper I made the statement that it involved a reduction of $175 million in the amount the government proposes to allocate for family benefits. Upon rereading this page later in the day I could see I was clearly wrong in saying that.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

TRADE

TABLING OF STATEMENT ON ENLARGEMENT OF EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 41(2) and with leave of the House, I would like to table copies in both official languages of a statement concerning the enlargement of the European Economic Community and to give a verbal summary of it. I wish also to have this printed as an appendix to Hansard if hon. members agree.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For text of statement referred to see appendix.]

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, in my recent talks with English and European representatives responsible for the negotiations, I highlighted four main themes:

1. Our concerns about the negative effects of E.E.C. enlargement on Canada's access to markets and on the framework and patterns of world trade.

2. Our conviction that in some instances mutuality of interests exists between Canada and Britain and the E.E.C., should bring about agreements beneficial to all.

3. Our intention to bring into play at an appropriate stage the contractual rights and obligations, under bilateral arrangements and under the GATT, which would be affected by E.E.C. enlargement.

4. Our views as to the importance of developing new initiatives for freeing of trade during the period of European negotiations.

In discussing the direct impact E.E.C. enlargement would have on Canadian trade, I drew a statistical picture of the changes in access terms which our exports to Britain would face if that country adopted the E.E.C. Common External Tariff and the Common Agricultural Policy unchanged.

It was essential for all negotiating countries to know that almost 70 per cent of our exports to Britain would be adversely affected if this took place.

As regards the more general implications, I emphasized the danger of polarization of world trade into inward-looking rival blocks.

I urged that the European Community use its influence to facilitate and encourage continued expansion of trade on a world-wide basis and not only within its own grouping of member and associated countries. If E.E.C. enlargement mainly has the effect of limiting and diverting trade from third countries, the Community itself would lose over the longer run in terms of consumer and producer costs. Moreover, outside suppliers could not remain indifferent to the loss of important traditional markets for their goods in the E.E.C. and in the countries associated with it.

Britain has already told the E.E.C. that it is prepared in principle to accept the Common External Tariff and the Common Agricultural Policy.

Certain special arrangements which Britain is seeking in its own interest could help some of our exports. Nine of the twelve industrial materials for which Britain has requested special arrangements are of interest to Canada. Needless to say, there will also be a transitional period for the necessary adjustments.

Mr. Speaker, on the basis of my discussions with European leaders, I can say that Britain and the E.E.C. are prepared to maintain a two-way flow of views and information with Canada throughout the negotiations. They are also willing to explore with us areas where their interests may, to some extent, coincide with our own.

It would be misleading for me to suggest, however, that there is a prospect for a major accommodation of Canadian trade interests in the short term. We must assume that, if the negotiations succeed, Canadian exports to Britain will eventually be subject to a Common External Tariff and a Common Agricultural Policy.

Canada would be less concerned, I told my interlocutors, if, apart from "élargissement" and "approfondissement", they started planning for "mondialisation"—or adaptation of the results of enlargement to the interests of freer world trade. This could take place during the negotiations or before the end of the transitional period.

• (2:10 p.m.)

[English]

In both Brussels and London I found the tendency to argue that the Canadians were exaggerating the negative impact of EEC enlargement on their trade and minimizing the importance of the growth that would follow enlargement in Europe, particularly in terms of import needs.

We were repeatedly assured by all that the policy of the EEC—and perhaps even more so of an enlarged EEC—would be responsible and outward looking. I said Canadians sincerely hoped that events would bear out these assertions.

What will be the Canadian attitude in the months and years to come? We shall continue to seek areas of mutuality of interests. We shall continue to urge the EEC and the applicant countries, when they are weighing the merits of alternative solutions, to include in the balance the interests of third countries and the future of the world trading community.

As the negotiations in Europe proceed, we shall be considering how our important contractual rights and obligations can be put into play most effectively. We shall also be reviewing the implications of EEC enlargement for Britain's preferential access to the Canadian market.

In the meantime, we shall use our influence in the GATT to maintain the momentum of trade liberalization efforts and press in particular for a major round of negotiations before the results of the enlargement negotiations are put into effect. We shall continue to urge the United States to provide, with the EEC and other major world traders, the leadership and support which is essential if these efforts are to succeed.

We shall have no illusions, however, that we can safely leave the protection of Canadians interests to others. As a major trading partner of Britain and a significant market for the EEC and the applicant countries, Canada is not without bargaining power.

It will continue to be a key objective of Canadian policy to intensify our trading relations with Europe as a whole. As illustrated in my tabled statement, a greater emphasis is being given to this area over a wide range of the programs of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The public and private sectors in Canada will have to work closely together in order to minimize the effects of EEC enlargement on our trade and to maximize its positive elements. I know that we can count on all sectors of Canadian industry, and I can assure them and the House that the government will do its part.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the government has at last apparently decided to take some interest in the negotiations that are going on for the expansion of the European Economic Community. This first indication of concern for developments in an area of major trading importance for Canada has been rather late in coming. And, unlike what we are told happens in the kingdom of heaven, there is no guarantee here that a late conversion means salvation.

I have been suggesting for some time that Canada should move quickly to make sure that her interests are not ignored when, as now seems likely, Britain and a number of other European countries enter the Common Market. Once that happens, this will be the largest trading bloc in the world, and let us not forget that. I have suggested, too, that the longer Canada waited to show its concern the harder it would be for us to have any impact. Hopefully, we have not waited too long, but from the minister's statement it is clear that beyond some polite assurances that things will not be too bad, he has come home emptyhanded. This is bad news for Canadian exporters, and particularly so for our farmers who have been selling millions of dollars worth of produce a year on the British market, and who must now contemplate competing in the protected Common Market.

I must ask if we are not faced here with some chickens coming home to roost? For the last couple of years, the government has followed a policy of retrenchment in foreign affairs. We have indicated a lack of interest in the affairs of Britain and the Commonwealth. We have partially withdrawn from participation in NATO and we have not even bothered for almost a year—until yesterday in fact—to have an ambassador in Brussels which is where the action is as far as the Common Market is concerned.

As a result, it is not really surprising, when one visits London and Brussels, as I did last summer, to find that the general feeling seems to be that Canada just is not concerned about the problems of Europe. The minister himself said he noted a tendency among people to whom he spoke to downgrade the effects of these developments upon Canada. It is surprising, Sir, that it should be late fall when a Canadian minister discovers this on behalf of the government of Canada. If that is the case, the obvious response is for Europe to lose interest in us. Why should it worry about our interests in Europe if we do not show any concern ourselves?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: There is no question about the general feeling in official circles in Britain and western Europe that Canada has lost interest in developing relations with Europe. The only concern we have shown is to complain about the Common Market allegedly discriminating against us on a few occasions. To this the Common Market people shoot back that we have indulged in exactly the same practices, only worse. I see an article in the Gazette today headlined, "Common Market Officials Laugh at Canada's Complaints." This is a measure of the loss of Canadian popularity and influence that has been going on for the last few years. This is why I charge that the government has been negligent. This is why I find so intriguing the assertion on page 7 of the minister's statement that Canada is not without bargaining power. That is wonderful to hear, but instead of talking about it why have we not been using this bargaining power? Why has it not done any good yet? Why are we not using it right now? I realize that it is very comforting for a government to talk about power rather than use it, but in this situation, if such power does exist, we had better use it.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Whatever our present bargaining situation may be, the minister's statement tells us clearly that the Canadian export economy is approaching dangerous times in relation to Europe. At the very least, I should have thought that this would force the government to take a serious look at our trading policies. But there is no sign of this. Instead, the minister merely offers us reassurances of good will that are even vaguer than the ones he received in Europe.

Does this mean that the present government has now reconciled itself to the fact that this country is simply going to slip unyielding into the embrace of North American continentalism? If so, it should tell the Canadian people that this is the case. If not, then we should have some indication that the government is seriously looking at the choices before us and at least trying to come up with alternative policies. This country must maintain and develop healthy trade patterns. Vague reassurances of the sort the minister has given us are not enough.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, this is a most serious statement that has been put before us today and the implications for Canada are pretty grim unless something is done about them. I am sure that the minister was reflecting the opinion of all Canadians when he expressed the hope that world protectionism would not increase and that there would be the entry of Canada and other countries into the European Common Market. Nevertheless, we have to be realistic about what is happening and not put our heads in the sand in face of the present situation. We have to realize that much of the polarization of trade and the formation of blocs is a direct reaction to the international corporations and to the policies of the United States government.

The European Economic Community, unlike Canada, is very jealous of its sovereignty and is very much concerned about what is going to happen to Europe in the face of international corporations and their operations round the world. Europe is moving to do something about it. Their answer is to set up viable industry in Europe capable of competing on equal terms with the international corporations, sometimes using the international corporation as a start.

One of the worries that France had regarding Britain's entry into the Common Market was that Britain would serve as a stalking horse for the United States, that Britain, under the conditions she was advocating at that time, would influence American entry into the Common Market. It appears that assurances have now been given to the members of the Common Market that this is not the case and that Britain's entry is now just a matter of time. In his book "The American Challenge" Servan-Schreiber pointed out the difficulty facing Europe and the necessity of challenging the attempt of the United States to dominate the world through its commercial practices and international corporations.

The Leader of the Opposition used the phrase, "the chickens are coming home to roost". This is very true. When we look at our behaviour toward Great Britain and the way the trade pattern developed between Canada and Great Britain we must blame ourselves for the fact that year after year there was a great imbalance of trade in our favour. Over and over again spokesmen from England came to Canada and said it could not go on this way. They pointed out that Britain was no longer in a position to keep buying the goods that Canada had to offer when Canada was not buying from them.

When the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert was leader of the Conservative party, as part of his program he made an attempt to divert trade and increase Canada's imports from Great Britain. For one reason or another that attempt never came off; whether it was frustrated by the extent of United States ownership in Canada I do not know. The British people could not be expected to accept unlimited one-way trade and as a result they are not now terribly concerned with either the Commonwealth or future relationships with Canada. This should not be too surprising, nor come as a shock to us.

Again, if we want to engage in international trade we shall have to provide some assurance to the other nations of the world we trade with that we are not going to be part of the American empire and that the Americans will not obtain entry to the Common Market through us. If we are to trade in some kind of independent fashion with other nations we shall have to assert our own sovereignty and independence and make it appear that we mean to do so and that we do not intend to remain in the satellite position we now occupy.

I sympathize with the problems of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin). I think he will have to continue acting along the lines he has blocked out in his statement. We should do everything possible to indicate to the Europeans that it is our desire to trade with them, and we should see what sort of arrangements can be worked out. Perhaps there could even be some kind of associate status for us in the Common Market so that our entry would not be barred. If we are unsuccessful in our attempts, we shall be faced with two horrendous choices, continentalism or isolation from world trade, or a third choice which may be what the minister referred to when he said we have some bargaining power. We are a very fortunate nation.

Mr. Baldwin: We are unfortunate in being ruled by this government.

Mr. Saltsman: We have almost all the resources any nation could wish for. We have intelligent, highly trained people and we can combine our resources to do an effective job. We can look to other nations for trade and can work with the underdeveloped parts of the world. There are many things we can do, but what is important at this stage is that the government get cracking and begin formulating policies touching the future of Canadian trade. We must do our best to convince the Europeans not to exclude us from their market, but we must also be prepared to take other measures if exclusion should take place.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) for having circulated a copy of the French version of the statement he made today in the House.

On behalf of my colleagues and in my own name, I am pleased to congratulate the minister for the steps taken by the government with a view to allowing Canada to keep up, if not to increase, its import and export trade with the European Economic Community countries.

I listened attentively to the minister's statement and I have been particularly impressed by the fact that the government gave much importance to "developing new initiatives for freeing of trade on a multilateral basis".

In my opinion, it is high time that Canadians understand that their country is in no way involved in world conflicts. I repeat, the time has come for us to become a sort of link or even get in the van to promote world-wide trade, no matter with what country we make exchanges. However we must ensure that the prices paid by countries for various products on world markets will not be detrimental to the Canadian market owing to higher production cost in Canada with regard to other countries.

Therefore, I invite the government to pursue those efforts and this kind of mediation with the world powers in order to extend trade to world dimensions and, if possible, to find greater markets.

* * *

[English]

POWER

BAY OF FUNDY TIDES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask leave of the House to make a motion under Standing Order 43 requesting that immediate action be taken by the government to reconsider the decision rendered by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with regard to the harnessing of the Bay of Fundy tides from a power point of view on November 24, 1970, when he stated, "There is no provision for reconsidering this matter at this time". I make this motion in light of the fact that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) told the House on May 29, 1970, that he would "see whether a valid review could be undertaken".

[Mr. Saltsman.]

• (2:30 p.m.)

When the Atlantic Tidal Power Programming Board presented its findings to the federal government, it stated that interest rates were the basic reason for not proceeding with the project at the present time. After that report was made public an International Conference on the Utilization of Tidal Power was held at Halifax from May 24 to May 29, with the consensus of that conference favouring an early start on the harnessing of the tides. Interest rates have dropped and are continuing to drop. Power demand is on the increase in both Canada and the United States. An immediate market would be available for the power, once produced.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member. He knows he cannot make a speech at this time. He must indicate as briefly as possible why he feels the motion should be made under Standing Order 43. The hon. member realizes that Standing Order 43 does not provide for debate or rebuttal. The hon. member should limit himself to indicating why the motion should be made at this time.

Mr. Coates: I therefore move:

That this House urges the government to take immediate steps to reconsider the report of the Atlantic Tidal Power Programming Board, coupled with the reports of the International Conference on the Utilization of Tidal Power, and—in view of falling interest rates and chronic and rising unemployment in the Maritime provinces, and substantial demand for the power that could be produced, with a view to harnessing the tides of the Bay of Fundy for power purposes at the earliest date possible.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North. A motion made under the terms of Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has heard negative sounds which would indicate that the motion cannot be put at this time.

Mr. Baldwin: The abominable "no-man".

* * *

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

On the order: Introduction of Bills:

November 24, 1970—Mr. Saltsman—Bill intituled: "An Act to establish a Canada Development Corporation".

Mr. Speaker: Again I have to remind the hon. member for Waterloo that the Chair has misgivings about this bill from a procedural standpoint. I have looked at the bill again and my misgivings are still very much present. I suggested to the hon. member yesterday that he might have a conference or discussion with the parliamentary counsel with a view to redrafting the bill. I understand that such discussions have taken place and that a new bill can be submitted in due course. If I am correct in my assumption, the hon. member may at this time wish to seek leave to withdraw his notice of motion.

Mr. Saltsman: As always, Mr. Speaker, you are correct in your assumption. With the permission of the House I will withdraw my bill and reintroduce it after redrafting.

Order discharged and bill withdrawn.

* * *

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING AMOUNT OF PENSION, MAXIMUM SUPPLEMENT AND ESCALATION THEREOF

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-202, to amend the Old Age Security Act.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish to enter the caveat to which I referred yesterday. As I have not seen the bill, it is hardly appropriate for me to argue about its procedural admissibility at this point. I have some doubts and I would like the privilege of raising them after I have seen the bill, but before we proceed to second reading.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

OIL

POSITION REGARDING EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES IN 1971

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In light of yesterday's proposal by the United States oil import administration that there be only a 55,000 barrel per day increase in Canadian oil exports to the United States next year, is it the view of the minister that the reported promise last week of full and free access for Canadian oil to the United States in 1971 represents a commitment of the United States administration or simply the views of the American officials who were present at the meeting?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I was looking for the communiqué to find the exact words. If the hon. member had read it carefully, he would have seen the words "free access" prefaced by the word "arrangements" leading to that. Consequently, what he reports is not necessarily against the trend indicated in the communiqué.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Stanfield: Will the minister indicate where he believes these matters now stand in view of the proposal of the United States oil import administration? Does the government of Canada propose to take any initiative with regard to the implementation of full and free access?

Mr. Pepin: I have found the text! It states that "it was agreed that "arrangements should be worked out quickly to permit in subsequent years full and unimpeded access to United States markets." The qualifications are rather important! I suggest that the growth of Canadian exports of oil is very favourable at this time and has been favourable in recent years. We are then rapidly moving toward the objective indicated in the communiqué.

Mr. Stanfield: Am I to assume that the impression I had that full and free access would be assured for the year 1971 is incorrect?

Mr. Pepin: The year 1971 is not in the communiqué, as the time for free access.

BUILDING OF PIPELINE TO MONTREAL—SECURITY OF SUPPLY IN EASTERN CANADA

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. At one time it was understood that one of the conditions the United States was imposing or asking of Canada in return for free access of Canadian oil to the United States markets was the building of a pipeline to Montreal. Is that still the case? Are discussions being held with regard to the building of a pipeline to Montreal as a condition of free access of Canadian oil to the American markets?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, but reference is made in the communiqué to the fact that security of supply in eastern Canada is of major importance.

Mr. Saltsman: Can the minister indicate what is meant by security of supply that would be satisfactory to the American government?

Mr. Pepin: I presume security means that in cases of major troubles in the world eastern Canada would not be handicapped economically or otherwise by the lack of petroleum imports.

REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES RESPECTING MAXIMUM CANADIAN EXPORTS IN 1971

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): I wish to ask the minister if the Canadian government has made or will be making representations to the American government to reconsider the increase of 55,000 barrels a day which has now been allotted and raise it to the 100,000 or 125,000 barrels a day necessary to fill the Canadian pipeline for the year 1971, inasmuch as following the ministerial meeting a week ago the minister assured us that Canada would be able to obtain this amount during 1971?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I can only refer to the communiqué which reads as follows:

For 1971, it is expected that pipeline capacity would need to be fully used and it was agreed that arrangements should be worked out quickly to permit in subsequent years full and unimpeded access to United States markets of Canadian crude oil and petroleum products surplus to Canadian commercial and security requirements.

That should enlighten the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Harkness: Would the minister now answer my question? Have representations been made, or will they be made, to ensure that the pipeline capacity is fully used rather than accept an increase of only 55,000 barrels?

Mr. Pepin: This was an agreed statement between Canada and the United States. We did not exercise undue pressure on the U.S. representatives to accept these words.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I was impressed by the communiqué but I would be still more impressed by an answer to this question. Is there any firm commitment that in 1971 there will be free trade and open quotas between Canada and the United States in the export of crude petroleum from Canada?

Mr. Pepin: I can only refer again to the text:

—it was agreed that arrangements should be worked out quickly to permit in subsequent years full and unimpeded access—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar for a final supplementary.

* * *

TRADE

STEPS TO LIMIT IMPORTS OF AUSTRALIAN AND NEW ZEALAND BEEF

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): In view of the demands by the National Cattlemen's Association in the United States that the United States government restrict meat imports from Canada to the 1970 level, will the minister assure the House that steps will be taken to limit the amount of beef imported into Canada from Australia and New Zealand to such levels as will not pose a threat to our own beef market?

Mr. Speaker: This is not a supplementary question, but since it has been asked the minister might wish to reply.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): This concerns a matter we negotiated with Australia and New Zealand during midsummer when it presented a serious problem. We hope that the kind of negotiations which led to a solution of the difficulty then will be conducted in the future.

FINANCE

GRANTS AND LOANS TO PROVINCES BASED ON RATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I direct a question to the Minister of Finance? It arises out of a statement made by Premier Bourassa of Quebec some time ago and the statement made on Friday night on television by the Prime Minister. Does the government intend to set up a fund from which the provinces will be able to secure grants and loans based on the rate of unemployment in their respective provinces?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Such a fund was suggested by the Prime Minister of Quebec at the last conference of Ministers of Finance and was referred to a committee for consideration.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the minister whether consultations have been held with the provinces on this question? Have most or all of the provinces concurred in the idea, and has the federal government yet reached a decision to establish such a fund?

Mr. Benson: First, consultations have been going on with the provinces with regard to Prime Minister Bourassa's suggestion. Second, the matter has not yet been resolved but the committee which I mentioned will perhaps report back to the finance ministers next week, or later.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Does the Minister of Finance intend to make any announcement regarding the establishment of such a fund when he presents his budget to the House on Thursday?

Mr. Benson: As I said, Prime Minister Bourassa's proposition with regard to a fund is being considered. As to any statement I may have to make concerning arrangements similar to, or different from, this proposal, the hon. member will have to wait until Thursday night.

* * *

[Translation]

THE BUDGET

ABOLITION OF SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Mr. Romuald Rodrigue (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

Yesterday, the Canadian Construction Association submitted a brief to the federal government asking for the withdrawal of the sales tax on building materials and on anti-pollution equipment. My question is as follows: Can the minister tell the House whether he intends to introduce a bill to withdraw the federal tax on building materials?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Once again, this is a budgetary matter and would be dealt with in the budget if it were so decided.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF BANK INTEREST RATES TO ASSIST INDUSTRY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. In view of the further lowering of interest rates in the United States yesterday, is it now the intention of the minister strongly to urge the Canadian chartered banks to take similar action between now and the end of the year so that Canadian industry may be afforded a similar opportunity to expand operations, thereby increasing employment?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): If the hon. member would look at the short-term interest rates in Canada, I think he would find they were lower than interest rates in effect in the United States.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: If the minister would look at the general level of interest rates in the United States—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hees: —he would see that they are continually being lowered below those prevailing in Canada. May I ask a supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: I was just about to suggest that to the hon. member.

Mr. Hees: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I just had to set the minister right. In view of the fact that he does not intend to ask the chartered banks to lower their interest rates, would the minister mind advising the House when he proposes to sever the strings by which Bergen controls and manipulates McCarthy?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister of Finance will recognize that the question is not in order and is not acceptable from a procedural standpoint.

* * *

SOCIAL SECURITY

CONSULTATIONS WITH PROVINCES PRIOR TO PUBLICATION OF WHITE PAPER

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is directed to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Would the right hon. gentleman advise the House as to the degree of consultation which may have taken place with the various provincial authorities prior to the publication of the government's white paper on income security? I ask this in light of the reaction by some of the provinces, particularly the province of Quebec, bearing in mind its own views and intentions in connection with income security programs.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I cannot say there has been any specific consultation apart from that which goes on frequently in the normal way but, of course, the aim of the government's approach by way of publishing the white paper is to obtain the reactions not only of other parties in the House but of others who may be involved, such as the provinces. The white paper is now available, and it is a form of consultation with the country. The House knows that some years ago the government did adopt this means of consultation with the country in general and with the provinces in particular, that is to say, by publishing white papers. This is the latest.

[Translation]

CONSIDERATION OF WHITE PAPER AT NEXT PRIME MINISTER'S CONFERENCE

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Would the Prime Minister inform the House if a discussion of this white paper will be on the agenda of the Prime Ministers conference to be held in December?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No conference is anticipated for December, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Valade: To rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister promise the House that this subject will be on the agenda of the Prime Ministers conference to be held either in February or June?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we will prepare the agenda for both conferences in the usual manner, that is to say after consultation with the provinces.

If they want to include the study of this white paper in the agenda, we might consider it, but I shall point out to the hon. member that the problem of social security and income support has already been discussed at past conferences and the position of the federal government and of the provinces is well known in this regard.

* * *

[English]

TRANSPORT

MARITIME PROVINCES TRUCK TRAFFIC SUBSIDY

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. On July 10 the minister announced his intention of making provision at the earliest date for the full 17.5 per cent subsidy to truck traffic in the Maritimes. Can he now advise the House when we may expect legislation in this regard?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): It was tabled on Friday, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he will give consideration to the proposal apparently recommended by his colleague the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing that the sales tax be removed from building materials, thus stimulating housebuilding and helping to reduce unemployment?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing has not made such a submission to me.

* * *

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—NEW SITE—CO-OPERATION OF PROVINCE IN PREVENTING LAND SPECULATION—DISPUTE BETWEEN LIMOUSINE CHAUFFEURS AND TAXI DRIVERS

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport to inform the House whether he was successful in obtaining the co-operation of the Ontario government last week to prevent speculation in the acquisition of land for the expansion of air terminal facilities urgently needed to meet the growing needs of Toronto and adjacent municipalities, and whether he is aware of the problem involving the chauffeurs of the limousine transfer company and taxi cab drivers at Toronto International Airport?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Do we have an hour, Mr. Speaker? Let me deal with the matter of negotiations regarding the new site. Quite productive meetings were held with the Prime Minister of Ontario and the Ontario Minister of Finance. I delivered to them formally the documentation which has been prepared over the last several months. They agreed to spend a week or so examining this documentation. The next meeting, which I hope will be definitive, is scheduled for December 11.

TORONTO—CRITERIA INVOLVED IN SELECTING NEW SITE

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement made the day before yesterday by the Ontario Deputy Minister of the Treasury and Economics to the effect that there needs to be integration of the regional economic development program between the federal and provincial governments, is the minister's department using this as one of its criteria in reaching a decision on where the new Toronto airport is to be located?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there were 109 different criteria, if that is the correct word, that were considered. I have not the slightest doubt that in the terms in which my hon. friend has stated the question this was one of them.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

TORONTO—STEPS TO ALLEVIATE OVERCROWDING AT MALTON TERMINAL

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): My question is also for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker, and I should like to welcome him back from Europe. In view of the announced delay of two years in the expected completion of the second terminal at the Toronto International Airport, has the minister's department any immediate plans to alleviate the pandemonium because of over-crowding of all facilities, which is causing a grievous situation at the existing terminal?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister should reply to the question, of course, but I do not think he should go into the matter at length as this should be done on motions.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member refers to an announced intention. It was not an announced intention in the official sense; it was a speculative newspaper story, and not all of them are always 100 per cent correct. This was one that was not correct. We think there will be a substantial improvement by the coming summer. If it appears to be appropriate I will make a statement on motions as to how we propose to do that, or make it known to the transport committee or in some other way.

TORONTO—SITES DISCUSSED WITH PROVINCE

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he can tell the House how many sites for the new airport were discussed, and were they north and west of Toronto?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, at the meeting with the Prime Minister of Ontario 59 sites were discussed and they were north, south, east and west.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Parkdale, who raised this question initially, for the purpose of asking a last supplementary, but we do have to move on.

TORONTO—DISPUTE BETWEEN LIMOUSINE CHAUFFEURS AND TAXI DRIVERS

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport again whether he has been seized with the problem that has arisen in Toronto at the international airport involving limousine chauffeurs and taxi cab drivers?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have been seized with the problem but not yet seized by the taxi drivers, although that is apparently getting close. There is only one real solution to the problem in Toronto and that is to resolve it in the same manner as we resolved it to some degree in Montreal. I have indicated that in terms of the federal government we are quite prepared to make places available for metred taxis at the Toronto airport. Unfortunately there can be no question but that some of the activities that are going on with regard to so-called soliciting, and I use that word in quite a proper sense, are illegal. We are doing our very best in a difficult situation because we do recognize there are legitimate grievances on the part of the terminal taxi operators.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

BASING OF FARES BY CERTAIN AIRLINES ON CANADIAN DOLLAR PEGGED AT 92½ CENTS

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Transport deals with the matter of Air Canada, Pacific Air and BOAC charging rates to Canadian and United States people travelling on these lines that are based on a Canadian dollar pegged at 92½ cents. Has the minister's department looked into this because it brings about a great reduction in air travel by foreign citizens using our Canadian lines?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I was advised of this on my return over the weekend and I have initiated inquiries through the Canadian Transport Commission and also through my own department. I hope to have an answer within a very short time, perhaps a day or two.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have addressed questions to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs on this matter. Did he, as he promised to do yesterday, refer the information to the Minister of Transport that there are regulations under the IATA Agreement and our Canadian Transport Commission that deal precisely with this matter?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs did, as he advised the House he would, discuss it with me. On that particular matter let me draw the attention of the hon. member and the House to the fact that the IATA agreement does provide for a reduction to something like $1.03, I think is the ratio, but unfortunately it does not come into effect under the international agreement until next April. I feel this is too late and we should do something in the interim. That is the matter on which I have requested further information.

* * *

HOUSING

INVESTMENT IN MORTGAGES BY BANKS AND OTHER FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing. Has he written to the banks, insurance companies and other financial institutions soliciting, if I may use the term of the Minister of Transport, funds for mortgages in housing development? If he has written to these institutions, would he inform the House whether he has received any replies and what the attitude of these institutions is?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, in addition to writing letters we held a series of meetings in September with the senior officials of banks and trust and insurance companies at which we discussed that very matter of forward requirements of capital for residential mortgages. We posed certain questions to them in terms of our requirements and targets for the future. We are meeting again with them in January. In the meantime I am meeting next week with most of the administrators of the major pension funds across the country to try to convince them also that it would be advisable to put more pension fund capital into residential mortgages.

JOINT MORTGAGE PROGRAM INVOLVING PUBLIC AND PRIVATE FUNDS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that private lending institutions do not contribute significantly to the financing of smaller lower-cost housing, a fact of which the minister is certainly apprised, as an incentive is it the intention of the minister to allocate funds to approved private lenders in order to implement a joint lending program whereby public and private funds would share in low-cost housing mortgages? This is something I believe the minister has referred to as marrying the private and public institutions.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, that proposed method is one option we are examining but I hope to open up many other options as to how we can get greater leverage in low-cost housing from the CMHC capital budget by enticing private lenders into that section of the market in which their activity is so vitally required.

SCHEME FOR RENOVATING PARTICULAR AREAS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, in view of the very persuasive speech by the minister on October 30 to the Rotary Club in Toronto in which he indicated that no corporation has come to him or the federal government with a new scheme for hiring poor people and training them and asking for some defrayment of the cost, and in the specific area of housing he has heard of no corporation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask his question directly and as soon as possible.

Mr. Gilbert: I am coming right to it, Mr. Speaker. The second suggestion was that corporations bring forth a scheme to renovate particular areas and ask the government for any help they may need. I wonder whether the minister has had a response to this excellent suggestion and, if not, what steps does he propose to take?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Somewhat disappointingly, Mr. Speaker, as yet I have had no response at least not in any precise terms that I would be able to deal with at this stage.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PROVISION OF LOW-RENT APARTMENTS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's answer and in view of the fact that thousands of senior citizens in need are living in apartment blocks where rents are continually escalating and, in consequence, they pay more than any increase in pensions, would the government consider financing special low-cost housing apartments for these people where the criteria would be need and age?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, we are doing precisely that on an ever increasing scale.

* * *

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONTROL OF ALUMINUM COMPANY SUBSIDIARY BY GUYANA

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I should like to put my question to his Parliamentary Secretary.

What is the position of the government with regard to the publicly announced intention of the government of Guyana to take over the Demba Company which is a subsidiary of the Aluminum Company?

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government of Guyana and Demba, an Alcan subsidiary, are supposed to start negotiations at the beginning of next week, in Georgetown.

The government of Guyana evidently has the right to establish the ways and means of operation of a foreign company on its territory. It is not the intention of the Canadian government to make a direct intervention, but I certainly hope the parties involved will reach a mutually acceptable settlement.

At all events, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government will be following the coming negotiations with great interest and keen attention.

* * *

[English]

AIR TRANSPORT

ISSUING OF INSTRUCTIONS REGARDING DC-8 SPOILERS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether his department has taken any precautions in respect of the question of the DC-8 spoilers. I ask the question in view of the action which apparently has been considered necessary in the United States.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, international regulations and custom require that when regulations or operational instructions are issued with regard to any type of aircraft by the country of manufacture, these are accepted and implemented by all other countries. This means that if the federal association or agency in the United States issues special instructions regarding the DC-8, these would become mandatory and would be introduced immediately in Canada.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, am I to understand from the Minister of Transport that his department would not take any action on its own unless action were taken by the country in which the plane was manufactured.

Mr. Jamieson: No; quite the contrary. We do have our own individual rules and regulations which differ in some respects, but I think the Leader of the Opposition will recognize that in such matters international standards are obviously desirable, and under these circumstances we will do the same as is recommended by the federal aviation authority rather than adopt a different course.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport whether or not instructions have gone out from the regulatory division of the Department of Transport to Air Canada with regard to the actual use of spoilers on DC-8 aircraft. In other words, has the department issued instructions in respect of the arming of and deployment of the spoilers only on the ground, as was done by the federal aviation authority in the United States some time ago.

Mr. Jamieson: I do not wish to appear to be reluctant to answer the question. I should like to take it as notice in view of the intricacy of it and give my hon. friend a detailed answer tomorrow concerning just what is the situation in the department. If the FAA has issued instructions, as I believe it has today or yesterday, these will be followed in Canada.

PARTICIPATION OF REPRESENTATIVES OF CERTAIN GROUPS IN AIRPORT PLANNING

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport relating to air safety. In the planning in respect of new and existing sites for Canadian airports by governments and government departments, is there representation on those planning groups by the Canadian Airline Pilots Association, by the aircraft manufacturing companies and by the Air Controllers Association.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, from my personal memory I do not wish to say whether these groups are consulted. My impression is that they are. Certainly, we undertake the widest degree of consultation, but I shall inquire about the specific groups to which my hon. friend refers.

* * *

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

KING CHRISTIAN ISLAND—INVESTIGATION OF GAS WELL BLOWOUT

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Will the minister institute a full inquiry into the cause of the recent blowout and fire on King Christian Island, in view of the report that the drilling superintendent who was fired because of the accident claims the management of Panarctic Oils was really at fault and knew the drilling regulations were being broken.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have already instructed one of the officials of my department to conduct an inquiry. He is an expert on oil exploration and I hope his report will soon be available. I believe he is due to arrive on King Christian Island tomorrow.

* * *

[English]

TRANSPORT

REPLACEMENT OF RAILWAY GRADE CROSSING FUND

Mr. Walter Deakon (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport if I may. Can the minister advise the House whether any progress has been made towards replacing or reinstituting the grade crossing fund, especially in order to assist the urban areas by providing a more equitable cost distribution for the rebuilding or construction of grade crossings in areas where this work is most urgently needed.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have been making regular progress reports on this particular matter. I can make another one today. As I indicated earlier, pilot studies are under way in Winnipeg with the agreement and concurrence of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities. These studies are designed to give us a formula for dealing with these problems nationally. The newest piece of information I can provide is that a submission has gone forward to Treasury Board asking for the necessary authorization to appoint a team of consultants to actually do the basic work on this particular problem.

NEWFOUNDLAND SOUTH COAST—COMMITTEE REPORT ON PROBLEMS

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Can the minister say whether he has received the final report of the committee appointed by him some time ago to investigate transportation problems on the south coast of Newfoundland.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if it is a final report, but there is a fairly comprehensive document and I would be delighted to make it available to the hon. member.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AGRICULTURE

DAIRYING—ASSISTANCE IN DEVELOPMENT OF NEW PRODUCTS

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Is the minister considering capital grants or other assistance programs to help the Canadian dairy industry develop new dairy products?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are involved in that in a limited way now.

* * *

[Translation]

AIRPORTS

DORVAL—PROHIBITION OF SALE OF "QUÉBEC-PRESSE" AT NEWSSTANDS

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Has the government requested CARA officials who have newsstand franchises at the Dorval airport to stop selling the weekly Québec-Presse? If not, is the minister aware of CARA's decision to stop selling Québec-Presse in three of their newsstands thus inflicting injury on freedom of expression?

Would the minister investigate the actual reasons why CARA took that step?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am under the impression that this question could be placed on the order paper and could, if there is any urgency, be debated on adjournment. In any event, the hon. member suggested that the minister investigate and he must presume that the minister will consider his suggestion.

* * *

[English]

POLLUTION

WATER CONTAMINATION BY DRYDEN AND SASKATOON COMPANIES

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Earlier this week I asked the minister a question in relation to two industries, one at Dryden, Ontario, and one at Saskatoon, which are causing extensive pollution of Manitoba waters. The minister said that meetings had been held with representatives of these industries and that these industries were not now dumping mercury into the adjoining waters. Will the minister now say whether he is satisfied that these two industries are not dumping other pollutants into the adjoining waters beyond what is determined to be an acceptable level?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, we have a task force out in the field at the present moment which is checking out both these plants. I will be glad to report to the hon. member as soon as I have their findings.

[Later:]

Mr. Gerald Richard Cobbe (Portage): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Did the committee that is studying the matter of pollution in the Saskatoon area also investigate the sewage facilities of the proposed Churchill forest products operation, which I understand is to go into operation very shortly?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is making a suggestion. He has to assume it will be taken into account.

* * *

GRAIN

USE OF INTERNATIONAL MARKET SPECIALISTS BY WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister who answers for the Wheat Board. Since it has been reported that the Canadian Wheat Board has a group of international market specialists presently undergoing extensive on the job training, could the minister tell us how many of these people are employed and when they will be going into the field?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking for statistical information. This kind of question cannot be asked at this time.

* * *

TRADE

POSSIBLE BRITISH ENTRY INTO EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—REVIEW OF CANADIAN ECONOMIC COMMITMENTS UNDER NATO

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is related to the statement he made in the House today. In view of the fact that the NATO treaty provides for co-operation among member countries, not only on military, scientific and political problems but also on economic matters, is it the intention of the government or of the minister to press for a review of our NATO commitments and responsibilities on economic matters in the hope of offsetting any economic losses which may occur to Canada if Britain does join the Common Market?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): That is too complex and general for me, Mr. Speaker. I will pass it on to the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he comes back.

[Mr. Davis.]

AIRPORTS

CHARLOTTETOWN—ACCELERATION OF IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I have a question for the Minister of Transport arising out of inquiries about crowding in Toronto. I refer to a more major situation. Can he advise us whether he is going to accelerate his stated program of improvements for the Charlottetown airport?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): The hon. member has been so effective in his representations that the acceleration rate is quite the most rapid in Canada already, but I will do my best.

* * *

THE MINISTRY

EXTENSION OF BEST WISHES TO SOLICITOR GENERAL IN ILLNESS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In the absence of the Solicitor General, who entered hospital today, may I ask the Prime Minister to convey to the Solicitor General our best wishes and also to thank him for accepting the Conservative proposition that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police should be paid for overtime duty.

* * *

INDUSTRY

GENERAL MOTORS—IMPORTATION OF CARS FROM UNITED STATES WHILE CANADIAN EMPLOYEES STILL ON STRIKE

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Last Friday I asked the minister whether the government intended to do anything about the General Motors Corporation's desire to import cars from the United States during the duration of the strike on this side of the border. The minister said he would look into this matter. I wonder whether he is in a position now to report to the House.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have looked into the matter. I suggest to my hon. friend that perhaps he should not accept without reflection the principle that when a country has a strike that country should prevent imports of commodities produced at the plant which is on strike, because if Canadians do that to others we may expect others to do it unto us and that would not be particularly pleasant for Canadian exporters.

DENISON MINES—NEGOTIATIONS TO PREVENT SHUTDOWN

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): My question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that as things stand some 900 employees of Denison Mines at Elliot Lake will be receiving notices within a month that they are to lose their jobs, can the Prime Minister advise what progress has been made in the negotiations between the government and the officials of Denison Mines to prevent the shutdown of the mines?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, some progress has been made. There have been meetings between the delegation from Elliot Lake and myself, followed by correspondence between the government and the mining interests. The House knows that our announcement of last July was made for the purpose of helping Elliot Lake in particular, and also to announce an assistance program for the uranium industry if it could be demonstrated that by using this assistance they would be able to continue in operation.

Mr. Foster: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. We are running out of time. Perhaps the hon. member might consider the possibility of returning for a supplementary question at the time of adjournment or of asking it tomorrow.

* * *

AUDITOR GENERAL

ALLEGED DOWNGRADING OF CERTAIN STAFF MEMBERS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I would like to ask the President of the Treasury Board if he would make a short statement justifying the allegation by the Auditor General of the downgrading of 28 members of his staff.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): If the hon. gentleman would give me some evidence of this allegation later, I will be glad to look into it.

Mr. Baldwin: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will realize that at this stage he would be entering the field of debate. Orders of the day.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a point of order. May I say in answer to the minister that all he has to do is read the proceedings of the committee meeting this morning and he will have all the evidence he needs. Mr. Speaker, tell him not to fool the House and misrepresent the facts.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Division

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PUBLIC ORDER (TEMPORARY MEASURES) ACT, 1970

PROVISION OF EMERGENCY POWERS FOR PRESERVATION OF PUBLIC ORDER

The House resumed from Monday, November 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-181, to provide temporary emergency powers for the preservation of public order in Canada, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to a special order made on Monday, November 30, 1970, the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division. The question is on the main motion. Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Turner, Ottawa-Carleton) which was agreed to on the following division:

• (3:20 p.m.)

YEAS

Messrs:

Alexander	Foster
Alkenbrack	Francis
Allmand	Gendron
Andras	Gervais
Asselin	Gibson
Badanai	Gillespie
Baldwin	Goode
Barrett	Goyer
Basford	Gray
Béchard	Grills
Beer	Groos
Bell	Guay (St. Boniface)
Benson	Guay (Lévis)
Blouin	Guilbault
Borrie	Gundlock
Boulanger	Haidasz
Breau	Hales
Brown	Harkness
Caccia	Hees
Cafik	Hopkins
Carter	Horner
Chappell	Howard (Okanagan Boundary)
Chrétien	Howe
Clermont	Hymmen
Coates	Isabelle
Cobbe	Jamieson
Comeau	Jerome
Corbin	Kierans
Corriveau	Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)
Côté (Richelieu)	Korchinski
Crouse	Lachance
Cullen	Lambert (Edmonton West)
Danforth	Langlois
Danson	Laniel
Davis	Leblanc (Laurier)
Deachman	Lefebvre
Deakon	Legault
Dinsdale	Lessard (LaSalle)
Downey	Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Drury	Lind
Dubé	Loiselle
Dupras	Lundrigan
Émard	MacEachen
Éthier	MacEwan
Faulkner	MacGuigan
Flemming
Forest Forget
Forrestall

Division

Messrs:

Mackasey
MacLean
Macquarrie
MacRae
McBride
McCleave
McCutcheon
McIntosh
McKinley
McNulty
McQuaid
Mahoney
Major
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
Monteith
Moore
Morison
Muir
Murphy
Nesbitt
Nielsen
Noël
Nowlan
O'Connell
Olson
Orange
Osler
Otto
Ouellet
Peddle
Penner
Pepin
Portelance
Prud'homme
Reid
Ricard
Richard
Richardson
Ritchie
Robinson
Rochon
Rock
Roy (Timmins)
Roy (Laval)
Ryan
Rynard
Schumacher
Scott
Simpson
Skoreyko
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Southam
Stafford
Stanbury
Stanfield
Stewart (Marquette)
St. Pierre
Sulatycky
Sullivan
Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Thomas (Moncton)
Thompson (Red Deer)
Tolmie
Trudeau
Trudel
Turner (London East)
Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)
Valade
Wahn
Walker
Watson
Weatherhead
Whelan
Whicher
Whiting
Woolliams
Yanakis
Yewchuk—174.

NAYS

Messrs:

Aiken
Barnett
Beaudoin
Benjamin
Brewin
Broadbent
Burton
Dionne
Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Fairweather
Fortin
Gauthier
Gilbert
Gleave
Godin
Harding
Howard (Skeena)
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Lambert (Bellechasse)
Laprise
La Salle
Lewis
MacDonald (Egmont)
Mather
Matte
Nystrom
Rodrigue
Rowland
Saltsman
Tétrault
Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley)—31.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the third time and passed.

[Mr. Speaker.]

CANADA CO-OPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS BILL

INCORPORATION, ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION, SHARE STRUCTURE, GENERAL POWERS AND DUTIES, ETC.

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-177, respecting co-operation associations, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre) moved:

That Bill C-177, An Act respecting co-operative associations, be amended by deleting all the words after the word "and" in line 21 of paragraph (d) of clause 68, and substituting therefor the following:

'the directors shall also appoint all other officers thereof.'

He said: Mr. Speaker, may I take a moment to explain, briefly, the purpose of the amendment. Its purpose is to leave no doubt that only the board of directors of any co-operative shall appoint an officer of that co-operative. We have had some discussion about this matter with senior people from the national co-operative movement. After discussing the point when the bill was before the committee, I moved an amendment which appeared not to be suitable. I therefore withdrew it so that the matter might be discussed further, with the hope that we could bring in another amendment during the present stage of the bill.

I have discussed this matter with other people who are concerned about this legislation. As the bill presently reads, it is possible for the president or vice president of a co-operative, who have been appointed by the board of directors, to appoint other officers. Actually, from my reading of the pertinent paragraph, it appears that even if the board of directors does not appoint certain officers, those officers may be appointed by the president, vice president or other officers and the act would not be thereby violated. I do not think that is the intention of this law. Admittedly, such an event is unlikely, but that it should be at all possible I believe is contrary to the common practice and wishes of the co-operative movement.

My second point is this: It seems that an officer of the co-operative movement who has not been elected can, as the language of the bill now stands, appoint another officer, without the authority of the directors of the co-operative concerned so to do. I invite hon. members to look at subparagraph (k) on page 3 of the bill, where "officer" is defined. There an officer is defined, among other things, as the president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, comptroller, general manager, managing director or any other individual who performs the functions of an officer. The senior management personnel are pretty well covered by the definition and they are not all elected officials. These men are defined as officers. According to the wording of the bill, an officer who has not been elected but who has been perhaps appointed by the board may appoint another officer without asking authority of the board of directors. For example, as I see it, a general manager who has been appointed by the board of directors, and who is an officer according to the definition of the bill, may in turn appoint another officer, let us say the comptroller. That comptroller would be an officer who had been appointed without the authority of the board of directors.

I admit that this is not likely to happen in any well organized and well operated co-operative, but I think that we have a dangerous loophole in the law. No matter how intelligently the law is interpreted, it is open for officers of the co-operative, as defined in the bill, to appoint other officers without first seeking the authority of the elected membership of the co-operative, namely the board of directors. There is a danger that the tail could wag the dog; and since the co-operative movement has been waiting over 60 years for this legislation, that is a danger we ought to avoid. For that reason, I think the amendment is proper. If adopted, I submit that the wording of the pertinent part of the bill would be improved. I hope the minister and the House will see fit to adopt it.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it might be helpful if I were to say to the House that I have considered the amendment. I appreciate the notice of it that the hon. member has given me in order that I might consider it. He has indicated to the House the purpose of the amendment. It seeks to clarify the intention of the bill. I submit it has that effect and I am therefore quite happy to indicate, on behalf of the government, that it is acceptable to us.

Motion (Mr. Benjamin) agreed to.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved that Bill C-177, respecting co-operative associations, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, by leave, now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Basford moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

• (3:50 p.m.)

He said: Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words for the record to explain what happened during the committee proceedings. A number of amendments were made to Bill C-177 respecting co-operative associations. I wish to comment on them briefly.

During second reading of this bill on November 2, representatives of all parties in this House expressed their agreement with the principle of the bill, although some reservations were expressed in connection with a number of specific provisions. As a matter of fact, after consultations with the co-operative movement and discussion in committee on November 25, we accepted a few amendments which do not change in any way the philosophy of the bill or its structure. I commend the bill to all hon. members and to the co-operative movement of Canada.

The Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, to which Bill C-177 was referred, heard from the co-operative movement which was represented by Mr. W. B. Melvin, president of the Co-operative Union of Canada, and his associates, and Mr. Martin Léger, president of Le Conseil Canadien de Co-opération, both of whom expressed the approval and support of their organizations for Bill C-177. I wish to read into the record a short statement made by Mr. Melvin before the committee:

> As I am sure you will appreciate, the introduction of Bill C-177 entitled "Canada Co-operative Associations Act" is an event of great significance for the co-operative sector of the Canadian economy. Indeed, co-operators have awaited this legislation for something over 60 years. Governments have come and gone in long succession since the year 1908 to the point where we almost doubted that it could happen.

I find some satisfaction and honour in the fact that I am the minister who, after approximately 63 years, is able to introduce this legislation which has received the approval of all parties. I wish to mention briefly the amendments that were made.

The original words in clause 5 of the bill required any co-operative seeking a national charter to have an office or place of business in each province. These words were replaced by the words "in more than one province". It appeared to some members of the committee that the original text of the bill could be a little too cumbersome and rigid if it received a strict interpretation. Co-operative associations would have been required to have a fixed place of business in each province where they carry on their business. The effects of the amendment is to remove any possible doubts. As a result, it will be sufficient for a co-operative to have a fixed place of business in more than one province. This amendment clarifies the scope of application of the bill and we are pleased to accept it.

Perhaps the most important amendment which was made by the committee concerns the repayment to withdrawing members of loans made to an association. This amendment differentiates the time of repayment depending on whether it is a demand loan or a term loan. It clarifies the provisions of the bill as to the terms of repayment.

The last amendment, asked for by the co-operative movement, has the effect of extending in clause 101 the grounds upon which an inspection or investigation could be carried out. The purpose of the amendment is to permit an inspection or investigation to be carried out for reasons in addition to those specified in the bill, namely that there is reason to believe an association has ceased to carry on its undertaking on a co-operative basis. With the amendments made in committee, the bill has the support of all members of the committee and of the co-operative movement across Canada.

I wish to express my thanks to members of the committee for the expeditious way that they dealt with this bill. I think that those who were somewhat critical of the decision to send the bill to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs will now see the wisdom of that decision in the light of the very excellent way the chairman and members of the committee from all parties dealt with the bill.

I also want to express my appreciation to members of the co-operative movement of Canada with whom my officials consulted over the last 18 months when drawing this bill. I also express my appreciation to the officials of the various provincial co-operative branches with whom my officials had the honour and privilege of meeting on a number of occasions. We were able to learn from these provincial officials with regard to the proper drafting of a national co-operatives act.

The fact that this bill has received widespread support in this House, received speedy and expeditious approval of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and received the uncritical support of the co-operative movement, is indicative of the value of the consultative process that occurred during the course of preparing this bill when meeting provincial officials and members of the co-operative associations. As a result, the government is able to place before Parliament a bill that has the overwhelming approval which this bill has received.

As I said on second reading, Mr. Speaker, the first co-operative bill was introduced and passed in this House in 1908. It was then defeated in the other place. Since that time those interested in the co-operative movement have been looking forward to an act permitting them to incorporate on a national basis. This bill provides the machinery by which co-operatives that organize and operate in more than one province can come to the federal government for a federal charter. That is a very important step to the co-operative movement. I am proud that I, as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, am the one entitled to pilot this bill through the House.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words in support of the final disposition of this bill in this House of Commons. It is a great moment to have this legislation before us, and it was perhaps the greatest moment in the recent history of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. There was some doubt about whether our committee would be able to stand up to the presence of such awesome legislation. We did our best to accept the challenge.

Perhaps our greatest moment in modern times was when the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) appeared before the committee with great humility and suggested that the present legislation was the result of a force far stronger than any royal commission. When I pressed to find what was greater than the force of a royal commission, I found out it was the committee headed by the minister a number of years ago when he was a humble back bencher. The humility on the face of the minister when he made that pronouncement will be cherished by me throughout this session.

The minister deserves his moment of grandeur. As pointed out by the member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), it has been many years since legislation of this type was attempted in Parliament. The last attempt failed. Now that we have experienced the easy disposition of this bill in our chamber, it seems strange that there was such difficulty before. When speaking in this debate on November 2, as recorded at page 791 of Hansard, the hon. member for St. John's East said and I quote:

> A bill of a similar nature was before Parliament in 1908 but was defeated by the other place for reasons which it would probably not be useful to go into at this particular time.

The reason the other place was ungentle with a measure of this sort in 1908 is an interesting historical fact, but we live in rapidly changing times. Perhaps this bill is the result of what Marshall McLuhan has called the development of the global village concept. The pace of communications has forced us into adopting this measure so that co-operatives which deal interprovincially will have a greater scope for their work. This is really the purpose of the bill.

• (4:00 p.m.)

It is a long bill. I think it is probably longer than the latest edition of the New Testament, as I somewhat irreverently remarked when it was being considered in committee. It is a long measure but its legal effect is simply to give recognition to the fact that co-operatives which operate across provincial boundaries have been established in Canada. For example, a co-operative established in Regina may operate in both Alberta and Manitoba, or a co-operative established in Moncton may deal with Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, and have some connection with Newfoundland. In short, the bill gives legal blessing to something which is a fact in Canada today. As a Member of Parliament coming from Nova Scotia where we have done great work in the co-operative field—we were, in fact, the pioneers, as the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) has been good enough to say—it gives me special pleasure to support this legislation enthusiastically. Once again, I cannot for the life of me imagine why, 62 years ago, there should have been any difficulty placed in the way of the co-operative movement by one of the chambers of this place.

May I make a few brief points in closing, Mr. Speaker? I think the bill has been well put together. It is a classic example of what we can do with legislation as a Parliament if due regard is paid to the needs of those who are directly concerned, if due regard is paid by the minister to getting the nitty-gritty of the legislation out of the way before it is presented either to the House or to a committee of Parliament. This is what the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has done. He has taken this measure, he has vetted it with the people most directly affected; it has been fine tooth-combed probably a half dozen times. All this effort brought its reward. The bill had good going in the committee, but not tough going, because we recognized what had been done by the minister and his officials before they brought it before us. Then, of course, hon. members on both sides of the House had accepted the principles of the measure. This is a good example of what can be done when legislation is tackled in this way, and accordingly we support it without reservation.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to delay the third reading of this bill. I rise merely for the purpose of expressing my gratification that this legislation is finally being passed by the House of Commons.

What we are developing in Canada is a mixed economy in which private ownership, co-operative ownership and public ownership each play an important part. The criticism from this party would be that the private sector of the economy wields too great a power and that the sectors of public ownership and co-operative ownership have been relegated to relatively minor roles; that if there is to be social democracy in Canada in any real sense we ought to strengthen the areas of participation in our economy of both the public sector and the co-operative movement.

Throughout the years many of us have been interested in seeing the co-operative movement strengthened and enlarged because it is the one vehicle which provides a counterveiling power to that of the vast corporations which today dominate our economy as a result of their ability to determine their own prices, control their sources of supply and embark on advertising programs which virtually decide buying patterns. In these circumstances, everything which can be done to strengthen and enlarge the co-operative movement ought to be done.

I can remember when I first came to the House of Commons in the 'thirties; the question of setting up a federal association of co-operative societies was raised repeatedly and always we were promised that legislation to this end would be placed on the statute books. During the time I was associated with the provincial government of Saskatchewan, as far back as 1945 we set up the first department of co-operatives of any province, not only for the purpose of introducing legislation to enable the co-operatives to grow and expand, but to give them active support and help. This meant that a high proportion of the business in the province was done on a co-operative basis by both consumers and producers. Since then, other provinces have set up co-operative departments or co-operative branches. Certainly, the Province of Nova Scotia, where the co-operative movement had its birth around the St. Francis Xavier University and Antigonish, has a record of which all Canadians can be justly proud.

When I came back to the House of Commons in 1962, I kept reminding successive secretaries of state of the promises which succeeding governments had made—undertakings that legislation would be brought down enabling the co-operatives to incorporate on a federal basis. If co-operatives are to compete successfully with large corporations which are incorporated federally they, too, must be incorporated federally. At the present time they are limited to provincial incorporation and it is on this basis that they are trying to compete with huge national monopolies and quasi-monopolies. Consequently, the co-operatives have been asking for years, with great patience, that the federal government should provide them with the necessary legal authority to operate on a federal basis so that they may be able to compete successfully with corporations organized on a federal basis.

I think it is a sad reflection on us that we should have taken so many years to accede to the request of the co-operative movement for legislation of the kind now before us. I should like to extend my congratulations to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) for taking the initiative and bringing in this legislation. I think the co-operative movement will be grateful to him for his action. I want to congratulate him on the kind of legislation he has introduced. It shows a real understanding of the needs of the co-operative movement. I should like to extend my congratulations to the members of the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for the thorough work they have done in going over this legislation. Now that it is before the House, I am sure hon. members can take a degree of pleasure in the fact that this will be a red letter day in the life of the co-operative movement, for today the Parliament of Canada has set up an important milestone by giving the co-operatives an opportunity to compete successfully in our economy and to make an immense contribution to the task of helping consumers and producers alike to act collectively for their mutual advantage.

• (4:10 p.m.)

I began by saying that ours was a mixed economy in which we had public, co-operative and private enterprise. Our economy is a three-legged stool, but such a stool will only support our society effectively if there is some fair and equitable relationship between the three legs of the stool. What we need today in Canada is to strengthen both the co-operative and public sectors of the economy. The reason I am very glad the minister has introduced this legislation, and that Parliament is unanimous in passing it, is that I think this will provide greater stability to our economy and provide a means that will protect both the consumers and producers in this country against undue exploitation.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

* * *

BUFFALO AND FORT ERIE PUBLIC BRIDGE COMPANY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING BORROWING POWER AND TERMINATION OF JURISDICTION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-179, respecting the Buffalo and Fort Erie Public Bridge Company, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Buffalo and Fort Erie Bridge Authority which operates an international bridge known as the Peace Bridge between Buffalo, New York, and Fort Erie, Ontario, was incorporated pursuant to a statute passed in 1933 by the legislature of the State of New York. Property and assets of the Bridge Authority in Canada, however, are acquired, held and managed pursuant to an act of Parliament entitled, "An Act respecting the Buffalo and Fort Erie Public Bridge Company" passed in 1934 and amended for the first time in 1957, and which this bill proposes again to amend.

The Authority consists of 10 members, five of whom are citizens of the United States and five of whom are Canadian citizens appointed by Governor in Council. The position of Chairman of the Authority alternates annually between Canadian and United States appointees.

The bill presently before the House is intended to amend two provisions of the existing legislation. The first amendment is in respect of the limit of the Authority's borrowing power which presently stands at $4 million. This will be increased to $15 million. The second amendment is in respect of the date on which the rights, powers and jurisdiction of the Bridge Authority are to be terminated and the property held by it in Canada to become the property of Her Majesty.

Whereas the existing statute stipulates that the reversionary date is July 1, 1992, or the date on which outstanding bonds are redeemed, whichever is the latter, the proposed bill would substitute July 1, 2020 in lieu of July 1, 1992. The Bridge Authority has been reviewing its long-range plans and anticipates the need to widen the present bridge to accommodate additional traffic. To this end, the Authority will have to borrow additional funds to finance improvements in capital facilities. The provisions of the present bill are designed to put the Authority in a position to proceed with this project.

An act was passed May 13, 1970 by the legislature of the State of New York incorporating amendments corresponding to those proposed in the present bill.

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say that we on this side of the House are in accord with the amendments which have been presented here. This is a very short bill with very little detail in it. There is very little to understand about it and, therefore, the bill should take very little time to pass through this House. As a matter of fact, it would seem to me to be quite in order not to send the bill to the committee for study but to handle it in the Committee of the Whole House, thereby accelerating the passage of the legislation. I trust that the government might find some means whereby this can be accomplished.

There are some general comments I should perhaps make on the Peace Bridge, as it is commonly known and as referred to by the hon. member who introduced the amendment. It serves the people of western New York state and southern Ontario. It is the terminus of the Queen Elizabeth Way and also No. 3 provincial highway across southern Ontario. This bridge provides a means for United States tourists to visit tourist areas along our north shore. I was pleased to hear during the introduction of these amendments that the purpose is to improve the bridge and widen it. This is long overdue because, as I have pointed out, it serves this part of southern Ontario and western New York State where the traffic has doubled or tripled since its erection. The widening of it is therefore long overdue.

The bridge serves the north shore of Lake Erie where there are several resort areas to which United States tourists are attracted. This is the easiest access route. I have in mind such areas as Woodlawn Park, Peacock Point, Port Dover, Turkey Point and Point Rowan.

An hon. Member: Hurray for Turkey Point.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): The hon. member says, "Hurray for Turkey Point". I agree with him and I invite all hon. members to visit these lovely resort areas on Lake Erie. Despite all the adverse publicity about Lake Erie being a dead lake and a cesspool of North America, this is just not true of the north shore. The currents in the lake generally run along the south shore where the major pollution exists. Anyone who had a look at Lake Erie from a low flying light aircraft could easily see the difference in the colours between the north and south shores.

So, I want to say here and now that the resort areas on the north shore of Lake Erie are excellent places to spend a vacation and many United States people cross the Peace Bridge to visit this lovely part of Canada. This route is also of benefit to the people in this part of the United States in that they find the bridge route to No. 3 highway the shortest route between Buffalo and Detroit. This saves them detouring around the south of Lake Erie to get to their destination.

As I said at the beginning, we approve of this measure and feel we should not spend a lot of time in passing it. The purpose is quite clear and I am sure there is no skulduggery involved here as was intimated in respect of another bridge, namely at Port Huron. We on this side, therefore, suggest rapid passage and perhaps it can be handled by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few remarks to make at the second reading stage. At the outset, I am in agreement with the suggestion of the previous speaker. I see no reason why we cannot deal with this bill in the Committee of the Whole without sending it to the standing committee. However, I leave that to the discretion of the Parliamentary Secretary and his colleagues.

In looking over the history of this company, and bridge legislation, in general which has been dealt with over the years, a number of questions come to mind. Perhaps these could be held until we get to the committee stage, but I note that in 1923, again in 1934 and 1957, there were amendments to the provision in respect of reversion of the property to the governments of Canada and the United States. We have continued to extend the date for this reversion. In 1957, the date was extended to 1992 and it is to be extended to 2020. I suppose that is far enough ahead to make sure that none of us are here when that date arrives. I wonder what the purpose is of having that provision in the bill. If it is a good idea to have a public company operate the bridge, why worry about the reversion clause. Perhaps the United States is afraid the Parliamentary Secretary might saw the bridge in half and take our part home. I do not see the necessity for this clause unless we really intend that those parts of the bridge lying on either side of the international boundary become the property of the governments and people of our two respective nations. Personally, I would like to see that happen.

• (4:20 p.m.)

I do not see any point in having a separate company operate a public thoroughfare such as this bridge. I do not understand why this could not be done very shortly. From a reading of the debate of 1957, it would seem that had the act not been amended then the bonds would have been paid off by 1962 and the respective halves of the bridge would have reverted to the government of Canada and the government of the United States. I do not know why that was not allowed to happen. I do not doubt that originally the local people felt a need for the bridge and, therefore, formed a private company. During the period from 1923 to 1927, a Canadian counterpart company was formed and laws were enacted in the United States and in Canada. This situation has existed ever since. I would appreciate having more information from the Parliamentary Secretary when we deal with the bill at the committee stage, or perhaps he or one of his colleagues would give further answers now.

I appreciate the desire to increase the borrowing power of the company from $4 million to $15 million because of the necessity to widen the bridge, but I do not understand why these funds could not come from the public treasury of the two respective countries rather than as a result of issuing bonds and paying interest for many years. If it is necessary to have bonds, then I do not understand why the governments of Canada and the United States could not buy up 50 per cent of the bonds each and collect the interest themselves, as is the case in respect of CNR bonds. This would make more sense than adding an additional cost to the users of the bridge.

Back in 1923 or 1925, the amalgamation of the two companies was envisaged. This was reiterated in 1934 and 1957. The intent was that the bonds would be paid off, the bridge would revert to the ownership of the two respective countries and the tolls would be reduced, if not eliminated. The tolls have not been reduced and I suspect they have been increased on more than one occasion. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary could provide information on this.

I believe there is other information for which we might ask and to which we should be entitled concerning the total annual revenue from tolls. Perhaps he would take the last few years, for example, and tell us whether the revenues have been sufficient to retire the debt and pay the interest and operational charges of the bridge. Also, we might be told whether there is any surplus because there is provision for any surplus to be divided equally between Canada and the United States.

Then, perhaps we could be informed whether the original bond issue has been paid off. I suspect it has been paid off. It would be of interest to ascertain that, as well as the total amount of interest paid out. Then, we might be given information concerning the bond issues in 1934 and 1957. We would like to know the amount of the present bonded debt, the rate of interest in respect of each issue, when the bonds are due and whether the revenue from tolls is meeting the obligations in respect of debt retirement, maintenance, repairs and so on of the bridge itself.

Finally, I should like to return to my initial point and request that the Parliamentary Secretary provide the reasoning behind the perpetuation of this private company. He might tell us why the objective sought is to be achieved in this manner rather than through the bridge reverting to the ownership of the two countries. I will not call this a dummy company because I do not intend to be unkind, but it is an extra facility which I do not believe is necessary any longer. We do not intend to oppose the bill, but I believe it would be helpful if the Parliamentary Secretary could provide this information either now or at the committee stage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must advise the House that if the Parliamentary Secretary speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles) I believe made a very valuable suggestion. He suggested this matter might be most expeditiously dealt with by having the bill considered by the Committee of the Whole rather than by the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. However, since the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) has indicated a desire for information which I believe can be best satisfied in the standing committee rather than in the Committee of the Whole, accordingly and regretfully we cannot accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand.

I do not think it is necessary to elaborate any further on the bill. It will be dealt with fully and the answers to the questions of the hon. member will be provided during the meetings of the standing committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

* * *

MERCHANT SEAMEN COMPENSATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PROTECTION, COMPENSATION, PAYMENTS TO WIDOWS AND DEPENDENT CHILDREN

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-188, to amend the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act and to amend an act to amend the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, like many of the bills before us this afternoon this is a relatively minor bill in many respects but major in many others in that it has as its purpose amendment of the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act in three areas especially, if I recall correctly. First of all, the intent is to increase the scale of compensation presently provided under the act to seamen who are not covered by compensation in certain provinces in Canada, namely the Atlantic provinces. The reason they are not covered by provincial compensation is a rather historic one.

Generally speaking the purpose of the bill, as it presently stands, is to provide compensation for seamen from the Atlantic provinces who are not covered by provincial compensation acts. Since this act has been in existence for many years, a certain number of people received compensation as a result of accidents which occurred on the job. The one change that we would make of course, the obvious one, is to increase these rates of compensation to bring them in line with the compensation provided in the Atlantic provinces in those areas that are covered by Provincial compensation. Therefore, the scale of the new bill would be uniform with the highest scale in any of the Atlantic provinces at the present moment.

• (4:30 p.m.)

The second change that we are recommending in the bill is to provide for these periodic increases through the Governor in Council. The regulatory factor here is that the increases would always be in conformity with the increases that occur in the various provinces.

The third, and perhaps the more important, feature in the eyes of many people has been suggested to me by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). On many occasions in the House of Commons, and particularly through correspondence, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants has emphasized the need for broadening the definition of the word "accident" to include certain illnesses, if I may use that expression, that occur on the job, such as dermatitis and illnesses of this nature. Again, this is pretty well in conformity with the more enlightened legislation that exists in the provinces.

To repeat, the three areas that are covered by the bill are: first, to increase the benefits of compensation to the people covered by this act to bring them into conformity with the levels of compensation in the various provinces; second, to provide that we can keep pace with the necessary changes to this act through the Governor in Council rather than by bringing them back to the House each time; and third, to broaden the definition of "accident" in conformity with the wishes of the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants and in order to bring it into conformity with the legislation in other provinces.

I might remind the House that the cost for those already on compensation would come out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. It is rather nominal in amount, and of course the cost of compensation for future accidents and so forth will come from the employers of people covered by the act. I hope, therefore, in view of the fact that the main purpose of this bill is to raise the benefits to people presently under the act and to those who may have the misfortune to come under the act in the future, this bill might receive a speedy passage. Possibly we could waive the necessity of going to the standing committee and have it accepted in committee of the whole this afternoon.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the minister for his statement. So far as my party is concerned, we would be willing to adopt the course suggested by the minister.

The minister has put forward very fairly the three principal changes in the bill. I think it should be emphasized that until we, as a Parliament, act and pass the bill, the benefits that flow therefrom will not reach the people who are concerned. Therefore, there is an immediacy about it that I am sure appeals to hon. members who want quick remedies. I know that my associates will agree with me when I say that should it be desirable to go into committee of the whole immediately and have the bill cleared in the House of Commons today, there would be no objection from this side.

May I also say I am very pleased that the minister and the Merchant Seamen Compensation Board have listened to a representation that I made. The minister has been more than generous in his reference to me in that regard, but the representation came from a woman in Halifax, a Mrs. Joyce Tines whose husband some years ago was serving on a boat going into the Caribbean. He suffered an illness and died. The man died, not because he was hit by a falling boom or the like but because of some infection that had entered his body. Under the old act he was simply not eligible for compensation, although the fact that he had an illness had been just as accidental as if he had been hit by something. However, there was that legal difference and the widow did not collect compensation. I suppose she cannot collect it even now, although in future other people who suffer an illness when they serve as Canadian merchant seamen abroad will be compensated. We have not solved Mrs. Tines' problem directly but I think a large part of the act should be called the "Tines act" because she fought for a cause on behalf of others.

In conclusion, may I again thank the minister for his generosity. I support this bill and I hope we can deal expeditiously with it.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I think I can say that I welcome this bill because of one feature of it in particular, that is the provision which will enable compensation rates to be suitably adjusted from time to time without direct reference to Parliament. If I remember correctly, this is about the third time I have been involved in a discussion of a bill similar to this one in respect of this particular act. The proposal for bringing the rates in line with those that are now generally prevailing under the various other compensation acts in the country is one that we can support.

I must say that a good point has been raised with particular reference to the broadening of the coverage. Apparently, a particular individual's problem must be brought into the open before this can be accomplished. I am glad the minister has acted to bring forward this proposal which results from the circumstances that were described by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). Certainly, the proposed broadening does not go beyond the normal terms that one expects in a compensation act. So far as my knowledge of British Columbia's law is concerned, any accident occurring in the course of or connected with the employment of an individual is deemed to be compensable. I think that if hon. members from the Atlantic coast, who are more knowledgeable of the details of the administration of this act, are satisfied with the suggestion that we deal with the bill expeditiously in committee of the whole, then from the general knowledge that I have of the act and the way it has functioned in the past I can see no objection to that procedure.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, we now have before us Bill C-188, "An Act to amend the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act and to amend an Act to amend the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act".

The explanatory notes read in part as follows:

The purpose of this amendment is to broaden the circumstances in which protection is afforded under the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act to merchant seamen and their dependants to include circumstances where disablement arises out of and in the course of employment.

And with respect to clause 2 of the bill, it is stated:

The purpose of these amendments is to increase the amounts of compensation . . . in respect of allowances for widows and dependent children of merchant seamen.

Mr. Speaker, we are aware that the people concerned by this bill have to face the cost of living which has reached an alarmingly high level and since they are in no way responsible for this increase, it is only fair and reasonable, in my opinion, that the government should proceed as it is doing now, through the minister, by introducing this bill in the House to enable these stricken people to avail themselves to a certain extent of this security to which they are entitled.

In view of all the opportunities which exist at all levels in this country, we know that Canadian production is high enough to allow each and every citizen to get his fair share without ever having to dread the future.

Because this measure will mainly benefit those seamen's widows and dependents, whether they have experienced the death of a kin or been sick or suffered an accident, we of the Ralliement créditiste shall consider it our duty to support this bill.

• (4:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question? The Chair gathered there was a suggestion from hon. members who spoke that the order be changed to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole rather than to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. I ask the House if that is the wish, that an order be made accordingly? Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Honey in the Chair.

Clause 1 to 7 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 8—Coming into force.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister when it is planned to have the act proclaimed since we know that is the date on which it will be effective.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I was going to ask the same question.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, I am hoping that this bill will also soon be passed by the other place, and certainly that the new rates will be in effect no later than January 1, something which would have been impossible if the bill had been delayed by the House, with possibly prolonged sittings in the Standing Committee. I can now assure the House that in view of the co-operation that has been extended the new rates will be effective as of January 1 next.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

* * *

ANTI-DUMPING ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING TRIBUNAL, INQUIRIES, REPORTS, ETC.

Hon. C. M. Drury (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill S-6, to amend the Anti-dumping Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, hon. members may recall the government statement reporting to the House on the impact of concessional financing on Canadian interests and the measures the government proposed to use in mitigating its effects in so far as it causes injury to Canadian industry. One of these measures was amendment of the Anti-dumping Act, broadening the terms of reference of the Anti-dumping Tribunal to permit it to determine injury or threat of injury to Canadian producers from imports for causes other than dumping.

The term "concessional financing" describes the practice adopted by some foreign governments of guaranteeing loans to Canadian borrowers at interest rates lower than commercial rates prevailing in the lender's home market in exchange for the borrower's commitment to purchase goods from producers in the country of the lending government.

Governments of most industrialized countries have provided facilities for financing exports for many years. Historically, government interest rates for such financing have been equal to, if not greater than, commercial rates. Under these conditions government export financing did not have a significant influence on trade between developed countries where businessmen have access to efficient money markets. However, over the past few years interest rates on government export financing have increased less rapidly than commercial rates. Therefore, such financing has become more attractive to prospective borrowers, and they are willing to commit themselves to limit their purchasing to firms in the lending country in exchange for concessional credit terms. The effect of such purchase commitments made by Canadian borrowers is to limit Canadian producers' opportunities to supply the needs of the Canadian market. Therefore, the government has decided to take measures to mitigate injury caused to Canadian producers by concessional financing.

I should like to make it perfectly clear that the interest rate differential which is of concern is that between the rate offered through the facilities of a foreign government's export financing program and that which prevails in the commercial money market of the lending country. We realize that there will often be differences in rates between commercial markets in different countries. This latter difference is analogous to differences which occur internationally between costs of other resources, and as such is a normal feature of international trade.

One of the measures is embodied in clause 3 of Bill S-6 to amend the Anti-dumping Act. This clause provides that the terms of reference of the Anti-dumping Tribunal be changed to permit the Governor in Council to direct the tribunal to inquire into circumstances relating to the importation of any category of goods, and to determine whether or not such imports are causing or may cause injury to Canadian producers. The tribunal's present terms of reference provide that it may inquire into injury from imports only in so far as injury is caused by "dumping", that is, when the "export price" of goods is lower than the "normal value" of like goods in the country of export.

However, there are other categories of imports which may cause injury, such as those whose prices are affected by government subsidies, or those imported in large volume at very low prices in a short period of time which disrupt orderly growth of a market and have an adverse effect on both Canadian producers and on exporters to Canada who have already established a position in the Canadian market.

The General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade recognizes the right of members to take action against such imports, and measures to permit such action are embodied in Canadian legislation. Specifically, the Canadian Customs Tariff provides that special duties may be imposed on imports which are subsidized by the government of the exporting country (section 6), or which are imported under conditions which cause serious injury to Canadian producers (section 7). While the Canadian legislation is consistent with GATT, we are obliged to defend action taken under these provisions by providing proof that injury has been caused or is threatened by certain imports. At present, the proof of injury is determined by the Governor in Council on the advice of officials. The new terms of reference proposed for the tribunal will permit the tribunal to determine questions of injury on request of the Governor in Council.

There are three principal advantages to the course proposed. First, the tribunal has developed considerable expertise in ruling on questions of injury through its inquiries relating to dumping under the Anti-dumping Act. This expertise can be readily applied to a number of categories of imports which may cause injury and will ensure consistent application of injury criteria as between types of imports.

Second, the tribunal already has the authority to obtain all the data necessary to analyse particular import situations, and a mechanism for holding hearings and accepting formal representations. Finally, it is independent of conflicting pressures of departmental administration and is able to devote all its resources to assessment of injury.

• (4:50 p.m.)

For these reasons, assignment of general responsibility for determination of injury to the Anti-Dumping Tribunal will increase the administrative effectiveness of these elements of our national trade policy and our ability to meet our obligations to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

During consideration of this bill by the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, members of the committee expressed concern that clause 3 as proposed did not clearly define the new terms of reference of the tribunal. The committee therefore recommended that the clause be redrafted to refer specifically to the tribunal's interest in "imports which might cause injury". The government has agreed to the suggested amendment in principle and I expect to propose an appropriate amendment for discussion in committee.

The bill also provides a number of technical amendments which have been included to clarify the wording of the present legislation in the light of experience gained in administering it. Most of the changes are self-explanatory. However, I would like to make specific reference to one or two of them.

In the present act, subsection 3 of section 29, provides that the tribunal must not make public any information which would adversely affect the competitive position of parties to the injury. This provision ensures that parties to an anti-dumping investigation will be willing to provide the type of information required to permit a thorough inquiry by the tribunal. "Parties" in this context includes importers and foreign producers as well as Canadian producers. The clause in the Canadian legislation reflects the provisions of Article 6 of the GATT anti-dumping code.

The present legislation states that confidentiality should apply to information obtained during tribunal "hearings". During the course of an inquiry the tribunal, of course, obtains a good deal of information in addition to that presented in formal hearings. Clause 7 of this bill amends the wording of subsection 3 of section 29 of the act to provide that no confidential information received under any circumstances during the course of the tribunal's inquiries should be made public in such a way as to make it available to a competitor.

Section 28 of the present act provides that a member of the tribunal may act on behalf of the tribunal as a whole in obtaining evidence. It further provides that a member acting on behalf of the tribunal should report results of his investigation to the tribunal as a whole, and that the report should be made available to each of the parties to the investigation. Much of the information in such reports will be confidential within the meaning of subsection 3 of section 29 of the act. Clause 6 of this bill will amend the act to relate the procedure for reporting between members of the tribunal specifically to the confidentiality provisions of the act. The report of a member of the tribunal to the tribunal as a whole will, therefore, be subject to the same confidentiality criteria as that established for information submitted directly to the tribunal as a whole.

In summary, this bill is put forward to broaden the present terms of reference of the anti-dumping tribunal to permit it to inquire into whether or not certain categories of imports are causing or may cause injury to Canadian producers, for reasons other than dumping. This will permit us to meet our obligations to GATT more effectively in cases where GATT and Canadian legislation provide that injury must be shown before action can be taken to restrict imports.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, it is rather interesting to note that the hon. Parliamentary Secretary's explanation is longer than the bill. This bill has already had exhaustive study. If we look back at last year's proceedings when this act was brought into effect, we will see that it was preceded by a white paper along with a draft bill which was studied in extenso. The government then reconsidered the whole operation and brought forward a bill on which I suppose every one thought they had done a very good job. In certain areas the government resisted amendments. I cannot say now whether these amendments include any that were resisted, but I think there are refinements. Undoubtedly, the experience of one year has brought about suggestions for making the act a better vehicle.

The motion at this time is to give this bill second reading and refer it to the Committee of Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. I do not intend to go into it at any great length, therefore, except to say that it is really a housekeeping bill. The real import is not so much to dot the "i's" and cross the "t's" or to change three months to 90 days; these are matters of little consequence. You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that at the time this legislation was under consideration last year we were concerned about what would motivate or energize the anti-dumping tribunal to conduct an examination of the practice of dumping any commodity. I know that a great deal of time was spent by public witnesses who made representations at great length on this bill, and also by members of the committee as well as by members of the public service charged with the administration of this legislation.

I would say that the principal provision of this amending bill is that an inquiry into matters in relation to imports that might be injurious to the trade or commerce of Canada may be made by direction of the Governor in Council. In other words, it is not only the deputy minister of National Revenue or a complaint from the trade that may initiate this inquiry. The cabinet itself may initiate it.

It would be very interesting to find out from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) or his representative why the cabinet has been moved to cause this amendment to be put into amending legislation within a year after the enactment of the major bill. With that interesting question, I would recommend to the House that we give this bill second reading so that we may get the answers to these and other questions in committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard)—Unemployment Insurance—inclusion of hospital workers—payment of cost; the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding)—Northern Affairs—implementation of land use regulations—performance bonds; the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin)—Oil—possible review of National Energy Board policy.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, Public Bills, Private Bills, and Notices of Motion.

Tobacco Health Hazard Act

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACTS, 1867-1967

AMENDMENT CONCERNING FINANCING OF PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

On the Order: Public Bills.

October 20, 1970—Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of Bill C-9, An Act to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1965 (Financing of private members' public bills).—Mr. Baldwin.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask that this bill stand at the request of the government in the hope that the whole question of private members' public bills will be raised in the Committee on Procedure and Organization. Therefore, I would ask that it stand, if the government will agree.

Mr. Mahoney: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Stand, at the request of the government.

* * *

• (5:00 p.m.)

TOBACCO HEALTH HAZARD ACT

PROVISION RESPECTING WARNING LABEL

Mr. Kenneth Robinson (Lakeshore) moved that Bill C-14, respecting tobacco as a health hazard, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity of presenting Bill C-14, respecting tobacco as a health hazard. This bill was on the order paper on a previous occasion but was not reached. This is the first time that a bill I have sponsored has been discussed on the floor of the House of Commons. I recall that two years ago some constituents of mine suggested it was a waste of time for private members to present bills. I can assure them now that this is not the case, because a bill of mine has come before the House and we now have the opportunity of discussing it.

The purpose of Bill C-14, respecting tobacco as a health hazard, is to make certain that tobacco and cigarette users are aware at all times that the use of these substances constitutes a health hazard. It is also proposed that a written and graphic warning be placed on all packages of tobacco and cigarettes. Clause 2 of the bill reads:

> All packages of tobacco and cigarettes shall bear the words "Health Hazard—use at own risk" with a skull and cross-bones symbol thereunder, in a prominent place on the front of the package.

The report of the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare, which dealt with the subject of tobacco and cigarette smoking, reads in part as follows:

> It is no longer in the public interest to prolong the debate about whether cigarette smoking is a health hazard.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel).]

> There can be no question that if cigarettes were a food or a drug or newly marketed, their sale would have to be prohibited or strongly regulated on the basis of evidence now available.

The report continues:

> It is perfectly obvious, however, that cigarettes cannot be banned today. Cigarette smoking is too widespread and is the basis of an economically important industry from grower through to retailer. Widespread illegal manufacture and distribution could be expected and economic hardship for growers, workers and others could follow a precipitous dismantling of the industry.

Consequently, there are two interests that must be balanced. The first is public health; the second is the protection of various segments of the tobacco industry. Let us first consider the question of the tobacco industry. The tobacco industry in Canada supplies full time employment to approximately 24,000 people. In addition, it supplies seasonal employment to 40,000 others. Every year in Canada the tobacco industry spends approximately $60 million on salaries for workers in the industry, pays $15 million for media advertising, spends $10 million on transportation costs and spends another $40 million on packaging materials and other supplies. In 1969, the total capital investment in Canadian tobacco farms was approximately $436 million. In 1968, of the total federal revenues, 6 per cent, or $555 million, was provided by the federal tobacco tax collections.

The other matter I now wish to consider is that of public health. On the public health side, cigarette smoking is one of the leading causes of preventable disease in Canada. According to the Report on Tobacco and Cigarette Smoking, 1969-70 of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, "cigarette smoking seems to be the dominant factor in the production of lung cancer and chronic bronchitis and emphysema", and is "an important risk factor in the development of coronary heart disease." The 1969 United States government supplement on health consequences linked smoking to coronary disorders, chronic bronchitis, pulmonary emphysema, throat and respiratory cancer and non-cancerous diseases of the mouth.

The risk of a fatal heart attack among the middle aged is two to three times greater for smokers than non smokers. Average male smokers have a ten times greater risk of lung cancer than non-smokers. Average male smokers have a six times greater death rate from chronic bronchitis and emphysema than non-smokers. I submit that these figures are irrefutable and ought to be taken into account in the consideration of this bill.

In 1968, the Department of National Health and Welfare estimated that a minimum of 10,000 Canadians die unnecessarily each year because of cigarette induced diseases—mainly heart attacks, lung cancer, chronic bronchitis and emphysema.

In October, 1970, the chief medical adviser for the British government reported that 100,000 Britons per year were being killed by cigarettes. In August, 1970, a study by a Berkley demographer indicated that smoking may be the strongest factor in the cessation of the trend toward longer life expectancy for western man. In January, 1970, a Japanese study revealed that Canadians are the second heaviest smokers in the world, second only to Americans.

The 1964 report of the Advisory Committee to the Surgeon General of the United States reported that death rates for smokers of cigarettes only are about 70 per cent higher than those for non-smokers and increase with the amount smoked. For those who smoke less than 10 cigarettes per day, the death rate, as compared with that of non-smokers, is 40 per cent higher. For those who smoke between 10 and 19 cigarettes per day the death rate is 70 per cent higher. For those who smoke between 29 and 39 cigarettes per day, it is 90 per cent higher, and for those who smoke 40 or more cigarettes per day, the death rate is 120 per cent higher than it is for non-smokers. Once again, Mr. Speaker, I submit that these are irrefutable statistics and ought to be considered carefully.

A study by the Canadian Department of National Health and Welfare entitled "Trends in Death Rates from Diseases of Interest in Relation to Smoking in Canada: 1950 to 1966", concluded that although in this period over-all mortality in Canada was reduced, "arteriosclerotic heart disease (including coronary) lung cancer, chronic bronchitis and emphysema all showed a marked increase in crude mortality during this period for both the male and female population." The study went on to say that, "recent excess mortality for these diseases was related to smoking".

On January 1, 1966, by virtue of the United States Federal Cigarette Labelling and Advertising Act, all cigarettes manufactured, imported or packaged for sale or distribution within the United States were required to carry the following warning: "Caution: Cigarette Smoking May be Hazardous to Your Health". Since that time this warning has proven to be too weak and ineffective.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that, given the obvious danger to health presented by cigarette smoking, given the educational program of the Department of National Health and Welfare to combat smoking and given the recommendation of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs that cautions be placed on packages of cigarettes as part of this educational program, it is recommended that the written warning, "Health Hazard—use at own risk" be placed on all cigarette packages manufactured or sold in Canada and that this warning be accompanied by a graphic warning in the form of a skull and crossbones. I submit that this symbol is vitally necessary to reinforce the written warning which has not proven effective in the United States. I hope that the minister will agree to the suggestions made in this bill, and that there will be unanimous support throughout the House for the bill to be passed at the earliest possible ime.

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I became aware only a few moments ago that the hon. member was to introduce his private members' bill during this hour. For that reason, perhaps my remarks will be briefer and not as comprehensive as they otherwise would have been. First, let it be said clearly that we on this side of this House, myself included, and I speak as a tobacco farmer representing a great many tobacco farmers in the county of Norfolk and the surrounding area, take second place to no one in our concern for health and welfare in this country.

• (5:10 p.m.)

The position that our marketing board has always taken on this controversial issue is that statistics, as liberally quoted by the mover of the bill, can be cited to show that there is perhaps some connection between smoking and health. I remind Your Honour they are purely statistics, damning though they may be. We could also cite the statistics to show quite the reverse if we took the time and energy to hunt for them. We are not convinced that the consumption of tobacco and cigarettes will shorten the life of every person. One can cite many examples of persons who have lived normal, healthy, long lives although they have smoked during most of their lifetime. If tobacco is as deadly as suggested by the hon. member, how can this happen? However, that is not what we are here to argue. I admit that there is statistical evidence that points to what the hon. member has said.

This bill deals with the labelling of cigarette packages with respect to the health hazard. As pointed out by the hon. member, when legislation in this regard was enacted in the United States, the packages were labelled to show that tobacco is a health hazard. It was later modified to read "The product contained in this package may be injurious to your health." I think the word "may" is very important. If the hon. member would be willing to insert that word in his bill, I would be more willing to support it, although not completely. The public would at least be made aware of the problem that may exist.

The individual should assess the hazard for himself. There are documents, pamphlets and literature disseminated by the Department of National Health and Welfare. Family doctors will advise individuals as to whether they should smoke. I admit that many people should not smoke. Once we have drawn these facts to the attention of the individual, he can make his own decision.

Why is tobacco singled out as the great culprit? Is it because it is easy to gather statistics on tobacco? What about liquor? In quoting statistics no one has separated the evidence to show whether it is tobacco alone or the combination of tobacco and alcohol that is harmful. We should not single out one commodity when others may be equally as harmful to human health. What about over consumption of food? Perhaps bread should be labelled to show that too much is harmful. We should not make tobacco the whipping-boy for all health hazards. There are many other foods to which the Department of Health and Welfare should direct its attention.

The hon. member rightly pointed out the dollars that are derived from the tobacco industry. I wish to deal with what has happened in the county where I live. The men who grow and sell tobacco at a reasonable price receive the most dollars per acre return of all agricultural products grown in Canada. This is an anomaly. If this is so, why do farmers reap such great benefits from growing and selling tobacco? The fact remains that they do receive these benefits. As long as they continue to receive these benefits, they will continue to grow it.

The area where I live was a waste land of drifting sand dunes until it was discovered that tobacco flourished well in that land. Instead of wasteful desert lands, that area today is a prosperous community of well kept buildings. The people of that area are tired of being the whipping-boy for all health hazards in Canada. I would like to see some common sense and perspective introduced into the background of national health. I could cite figures, but I do not think it is necessary.

If this House passes this bill, which I doubt because it will probably meet the fate of most private members' bills, I will move an amendment in this House or in committee to insert the word "may" on the label of any cigarette package in Canada.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, usually when my namesake and I take part in the same debate, we find ourselves on the same side of the issue. This is particularly true in matters respecting veterans' pensions and so forth. However, although our surnames may be the same, I must make it clear that we hold opposite views on this question. I appreciate his position that all of the blame for ill health and disease should not be put on one product, but the case made by the hon. member for Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson), and the statistics he has given us, must be taken seriously. I think his bill is well drawn, simple and clear. The marking that he believes should be put on tobacco in my view, ought to be there. Therefore, I hope that the House will have the good sense to support this bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to thank my colleague from Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) for having introduced the bill the way he did this evening.

I also know to what extent the members for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles) and for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) were concerned with the matter when the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs studied the dangers of tobacco a year ago.

I should like to speak today of a widespread habit, that of cigarette smoking. What I want to say about it is very simple. The use of cigarettes, from the point of view of the individual as well as society, is harmful. Too often that habit contributes to disability, illness, and as we all know, death itself.

I do not wish to give a series of statistics. Neither do I wish to give the clinical details of the process by which cigarette smoking brings about illness. However, I wish to point out that I am personally satisfied that smoking is a health hazard.

[Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand).]

We meet everyday people who come to see us and others who will come occasionally. Today more than ever hospitals are full of patients with lung cancer.

Cigarette smoking is easily habit-forming, and there lies the real hazard. Smoking is physiologically habit-forming. Breaking the habit does not come naturally, you have to fight hard to succeed.

I mentioned that cigarette smoking is detrimental both to the individual and to the community. The individual hazard can be easily pointed out. As I have just said, tobacco is one of the main causes of lung cancer. Moreover, smokers are more exposed to other forms of cancer than non-smokers.

I do not want to frighten people without reason, but I feel that is a known and unmistakable fact. It is obvious that people are not happy to have cancer, since the death rate is very high for this disease.

It is not the only indictment against cigarette smoking. Because cigarette smoking causes lung damage, it also makes one more prone to chronic respiratory diseases such as bronchitis and emphysema. Those who have been suffering from a painful and dry cough as a result of cigarette smoking will know what I am talking about.

How many complain to doctors in clinics of fits of coughing in the morning? And that is not all. The Heart Foundation has confirmed that the use of tobacco is an important factor in heart diseases. Indeed, it has been found that the death rate for cigarette smokers is 70 per cent higher than that of non-smokers. The risk is particularly high for young or middle-aged smokers, since they are two or three times more likely to come down with those illnesses than non-smokers in the same age group.

Coronary troubles hold the first place among fatal illnesses in our country. On the whole, there is no doubt about it. Smoking shortens life. Indeed, it has been clearly proven that each cigarette reduces a man's life by eight minutes.

This figure could also be calculated in years. Thus, a 32 year-old man who smokes from half a pack to one pack of cigarettes a day shortens his life by five years.

In the case of heavy smokers, the rate is obviously higher.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Therefore, cigarette smoking is an extremely dangerous habit. If it was found, for instance, that a given type of toothpaste or a certain brand of cereals presented a similar hazard, public opinion, I am sure, would require it to be completely withdrawn from the market. After all, health is one's most valuable possession, and life, an irreplaceable treasure.

One must not forget either that tobacco consumption involves certain undesirable, although not medical, consequences. A considerable number of man-days and man-hours are wasted yearly through ailments resulting from smoking—not to mention medical and hospital costs involved. Furthermore, numerous precious talents are forever annihilated through deaths resulting from lung cancer, heart attacks and other diseases caused by tobacco addiction.

Beyond economic considerations, there is man himself. We can never forget that in the end it is a question of health, happiness and life for countless number of productive Canadians. The surest way of avoiding the smoking habit is obviously never to start and to endorse the slogan "unlit cigarette, harmless cigarette".

I do not expect to see most inveterate smokers renounce their habit from one day to the next, although if they did I would be very happy.

Nevertheless it is among young people who have not yet started to smoke that lie our best chances of success. Statistics concerning youth are very interesting: Canada 50 per cent of Canadian men aged 15 and over smoke cigarettes; among women the rate is about 33 per cent.

Now let us look at some figures regarding young people. In the age group from 15 to 19 years, 35 per cent of the boys and 21 per cent of the girls are regular smokers. In fact, this figure is rather lower than it should be because even if educators and parents are systematically opposed to this addiction, it is often indulged in secretly. Most smokers contract the habit in their teens and if we succeed in lowering this percentage our efforts will not have been in vain.

For several years the department has been compaigning against tobacco. It has been especially preoccupied with youth. This program was to a large degree educational since we tried to convince smokers to stop smoking and non smokers to abstain from starting to do it by showing them the risks tobacco is to health. We think that we have succeeded in a way.

The smoking habit is so deeply rooted that the prohibition of cigarettes would not give any result and would also be an attack against individual freedom. Furthermore, we cannot encourage our young people to develop the syndrome of forbidden fruit. Even if cigarette smoking is prohibited in secondary schools, statistics show, as we know, that this habit is spread among students attending such institutions.

If because of us the use of cigarettes became a forbidden pleasure, we would only incite a greater number of people to try this experience. Mr. Speaker, you may have been yourself the victim of secret smoking sessions.

As for me, I think that the Canadian people must remain free to smoke or not to smoke. We only want to encourage the public not to smoke and if they must do so, we urge them to run as little risk as possible. This is the underlying reason for our present education programme.

The effort made in order to solve the problem of cutting down the consumption of cigarettes must aim at protecting the public at large. And I think that such is the philosophy of the Department of National Health and Welfare in this field.

It is up to the government to protect Canadians and, particularly, to put them before the following fact: it is obvious that if a danger exists in a certain segment of society, it is the government's duty to protect the people.

Although it is obvious that the sale of cigarettes cannot be prohibited at the present time, it is equally obvious that the production, distribution and sale of cigarettes cannot be considered in the same perspective as production, distribution and sale of other products. It seems reasonable at this stage to use any practical measure to help phase out sales promotion. At the same time, plans must be made to help producers and other persons who will be adversely affected by the ban on the sale of cigarettes.

Increased education of the public, as a deterrent to smokers, would be desirable, as well as efforts to make cigarette smoking less dangerous for inveterate smokers.

It has been claimed that if cigarette smoking is harmful sale of the product should be completely prohibited and that otherwise it would be neither constitutional nor legal to interfere with sales promotion. However, plain common sense dictates that prohibiting the sale of cigarettes would not serve public interest. It must be admitted that cigarette smoking is in a class by itself among Canada's social and health problems. Society is therefore justified in seeking out unusual solutions and rejecting any argument based on technical considerations. It is clearly against the interest of society to promote actively the use of a harmful product, even though prohibition of its production and sale may be unacceptable.

Public opinion is becoming more vocal every day, pressing for practical action to reduce the health hazard resulting from the use of cigarettes by Canadians. This concern has been shown unequivocally with respect to cigarette advertising.

It has been argued ever so often that cigarette smoking is a matter of free choice on the part of reasonable adults. This is true inasmuch as a person is, in the final analysis, responsible for what he wants to do with his own body. It is also true, nevertheless, that if cigarette smoking has become such a generalized practice, it is due to the fact that it is habit-forming to a certain extent. In fact, we all know that a major proportion of cigarette sales is accounted for by the fact that cigarettes are sold to people who are unable to stop smoking. Apparently, there are various degrees of dependence which may be explained by reference to pharmacological, social and psychological factors. In any event, the cigarette habit appears in the case of many heavy smokers as eliminating any freedom of choice.

It should be mentioned that despite limited funds, Canadian programs on the effects of tobacco on health are expanding and that a great number of Canadians, convinced that cigarette smoking is a health hazard, strongly wish that measures be taken in that respect.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, we must be logical and support the measures which society will take to solve the problem. This is no doubt the best reason in favour of enacting legislation to control cigarette advertising. We could hardly expect, for instance, our youth to be convinced that governments think that the use of tobacco is really hazardous when at the same time they allow unrestricted advertising of cigarettes.

Furthermore, a great many smokers would like to break the habit or have resolved to quit. This is why we must do everything we can to encourage them and to make smoking which is part of modern society less attractive.

• (5:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to ask the previous speaker a question? He quoted statistics which indicated that life expectancy is greatly reduced by the use of cigarettes. This is frequently done, but in general terms he referred to these figures as applying to the use of tobacco. My question is, do these statistics apply with equal force to persons who use tobacco in another form such as pipe or cigar smoking, or do they apply at all?

Mr. Isabelle: I had reference only to cigarette smokers.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Your pipe is O.K., Angus.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, the question of the use of tobacco, particularly cigarettes, has long been one of considerable controversy. I should like to indicate from the beginning that I support Bill C-14 presented by the hon. member. I was a member of the health committee which studied the usage of cigarettes and possible dangers to health and life. I was convinced, after listening to various knowledgeable witnesses from all aspects of Canadian life, that the usage of cigarettes is likely to do a great deal of harm to the individual.

I would be the first to admit that there is tremendous economic importance in tobacco, first to the producer such as my hon. friend the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles). I mean it sincerely when I say he is my friend, but I do not know whether he will be when this day is over.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You will have one Knowles for a friend.

Mr. Yewchuk: I will have to disagree with his conclusions in respect of this debate. I have in my hand a brief which the Ontario Flue-cured Tobacco Growers' Marketing Board presented to our committee. They point out statistics in respect of some of the great advantages there are to our country through the income generated by tobacco production and distribution. They point out that in 1968, for example, $57 million in revenue was realized from the export of tobacco. They also point out that the government realized $703 million in taxes during 1968 from the sale of tobacco.

I do not quarrel with the suggestion that this is a large amount of money, and certainly anything that makes money for the country might be justified in the eyes of some. I also would not argue with the fact that there would be a loss from a damaged tobacco industry should a bill of this nature be passed. I would not argue with the fact that in Ontario 3,774 farmers might experience financial difficulty as the result of the passage of legislation such as this by the House of Commons.

Most people in the country realize that many Canadians depend on the production of tobacco for their livelihood. There is in this brief a picture of an area of the country that used to look like a desert, with little sand dunes all over the place, a barren territory with a horse and buggy rolling across and the wind blowing sand all over. In the picture below it there is a beautiful farm with tobacco fields and little huts standing in a row where the tobacco is cured. This is certainly nice, but I am not convinced by these arguments.

The tobacco industry is in effect saying that for the purpose of making a profit we are willing to sacrifice health and years of human life. When we consider this matter we must look at these statistics very seriously. There are many statistics available and many research studies that have been conducted in this area. I do not think there is any doubt that the usage of cigarettes is harmful to health. As a matter of fact, it has been worked out in detail to the point where we are told that every cigarette a smoker uses shortens his life by seven minutes. The average person using a package of cigarettes a day from age 25 stands to lose an average of 8 to 10 years of life expectancy.

The hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand may know many people who are old and who have smoked all their lives. All I can say is that if they had lived to age 90 and smoked, they might have lived to age 120 had they not smoked. We also hear the argument that other things such as liquor are much worse than tobacco. Supporting this bill does not mean we are supporting the use of alcohol or saying that its use is less harmful than tobacco. Perhaps everyone would admit that the use of alcohol is very harmful and should be discouraged as much as possible, perhaps to an even greater extent than tobacco. We could also mention other substances such as bread, animal fats, cheese or any number of things; used in large quantities, they can have harmful side effects. It is well known that the use of animal fat in large quantities contributes very greatly to arteriosclerosis, coronary heart disease and those other things which are great killers in our nation today. At the same time, the fact that we are using these substances does not justify perpetuating the use of tobacco.

I should like to describe a patient I have in my care, Mr. Speaker. He is a man about 65 years of age who was a farmer. He had been using cigarettes to the extent of about a package a day for most of his adult life. About five years ago he began to complain about shortness of breath. When he ran after the cow he found she could outrun him because he was too short of breath.

An hon. Member: It was probably a young heifer.

Mr. Yewchuk: I suggest it was because the cow did not smoke and he did. In any event, his problem became much more severe. First of all I should point out that he had started to cough about 15 years prior to this time. He would get up in the morning and sound like one of those old steam engines that used to pull trains across the country. Something like the old Newfie "Bullet," he would chug along for an hour or two. Finally the bronchial tubes would be cleared of the yellow secretion and this would be deposited on the sidewalk or in some appropriate receptacle. Then he would be able to get going and put in his day. His shortness of breath and coughing became more persistent and severe to the point where about two years ago he required and received hospitalization for three or four weeks at a time. He would come in with a severe cough, producing large amounts of sputum and sometimes blood. He required medication.

• (5:40 p.m.)

An hon. Member: It is good for business.

Mr. Yewchuk: Yes, I suppose it is good for business. But of course that is not the primary concern of a physician. Then about a year ago the could not get on without the help of oxygen. He had to have it three or four times a day. This progressed to the point where he had to have oxygen almost continually. He lives at home with a tank of oxygen beside him. He has a mask on his face, his lips are blue and he can hardly speak a sentence without puffing. For the past few months he has required a machine to pump air into his lungs.

This is the picture of a man who is only a few weeks away from death. During the last three or four years he has been extremely uncomfortable. It has been a difficult situation for his family financially as well as emotionally. His family sits around and watches him slowly dying. I think this condition could have been completely avoided had the man not been a smoker.

As I have said, I do not deny that farmers, through no fault of their own and through no desire to produce injury to people, fell into tobacco farming. I do not believe, however, that this is any justification for continuing the promotion or usage of such a harmful substance. I believe the goverment now has an obligation to institute some kind of research in an effort to find alternative methods by which tobacco farmers may earn an equally good living. I believe research in this area is lacking. Much more effort is required in order to bring about some kind of a solution.

As has been suggested, people who have the smoking habit should be discouraged in respect of the use to tobacco through education programs among the youth and also among adults. It might be desirable to encourage people to develop other habits. Some people might suggest smoking hashish. It would seem that the federal goverment is promoting the replacement of tobacco by the use of marijuana. I do not believe I would approve of this because there is no research which indicates that marijuana will not produce the same harmful effects to the lungs of people. It might well produce emphysema, bronchitis and all the other illnesses and diseases about which hon. members have spoken.

I am receiving many suggestions but I do not think I should repeat some of them. One member said there are in the order of 60,000 deaths in Canada per year because of tobacco usage. This would seem to indicate a tremendously serious problem. We cannot afford to lose 60,000 people because of failure to act in an area which is entirely preventable.

I suggest that an alternative use might be found for the product of the tobacco producers and manufacturers and that alternatives might be found for people who smoke tobacco, such as scratching their heads or twiddling their thumbs. I do not know, however, how enjoyable or satisfying this would be. I believe that about a year ago the CBC ceased tobacco advertising on television. At that time there seemed to be an outcry to the effect that a tremendous amount of revenue would be lost. I do not believe this revenue has been lost, because the CBC has found alternative advertising. If this could be done in respect of the CBC, then surely it could be done just as well in respect of the farmers, manufacturers and distributors of tobacco.

I do not wish to talk out this bill, because I support it. I would point out one interesting fact about my hon. friend who spoke against this bill. He does not use cigarettes; he only smokes cigars. Research would seem to indicate that cigars do not produce the same amount of cancer, bronchitis, emphysema, and so on, that cigarettes do. Someone might ask whether these other substances are less harmful. As I believe was shown by the witnesses who appeared before our committee last year, it is not merely a question of whether or not one uses cigarettes, because there are many other factors which come into play. One is the question of whether or not a person inhales. It would appear that people who start smoking cigars from the beginning do not necessarily develop the habit of inhaling as much as do those who smoke cigarettes. From the research available now, there would seem to be fewer cases of pulmonary disease and lung cancer among cigar and pipe smokers.

However, in respect of persons who formerly had been cigarette smokers and switched to cigars or a pipe, it does not make much difference because virtually all cigarette smokers inhale every puff and generally speaking when they switch to cigars or a pipe they continue to inhale. Therefore, switching in itself does not make too much difference. So far as chewing tobacco and taking snuff are concerned, I do not believe there has been sufficient study in respect of these products to reach any very conclusive opinion. I believe the incidence of pulmonary disease would be reduced with the usage of these two products because they are not inhaled and, therefore, the nicotine and hot gas is not taken down the throat. There has been some suggestion that the use of these products could lead to cancer of the mouth and throat, and so on, so I do not believe they really are substitutes.

In conclusion, I reiterate that I am merely putting the facts before the House as I see them, and I am not choosing sides. I agree with the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) who said that people must make up their own minds and all we can do is make them aware of the possible dangers as well as the advantages, if any.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we have had a very severe condemnation of cigarettes and whisky, which leaves but one other and that is wild, wild women. I have no intention of condemning the vice, or whatever it is called, of wild, wild women. In respect of the bill presented by the hon. member for Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson), who is a very good friend of mine, I want to say the intent is good. I shall play the devil's advocate this afternoon and ask whether the bill and the remedies proposed would do any good.

• (5:50 p.m.)

First, the hon. member said there is irrefutable evidence that cigarettes produce lung cancer, emphysema, and so on. I, too, was a member of the committee and I will bring to the attention of hon. members the evidence presented by Dr. Hans Selye. He said that the greatest contributing factor to all these diseases, and especially to cancer, is stress. I asked him: "Dr. Selye, how would you recognize a man who is constantly living under undue stress? Does he chew nails?" Dr. Selye agreed he would chew nails. I asked: "Would he have a nervous tic?" Dr. Selye agreed he would. Then I asked: "But what is the most common symptom of stress?" I was told that cigarette smoking was the most common symptom; it is evidence of a man under undue stress. The question then arises: Is it the cigarette that kills the man, or is it stress? Smoking cigarettes is evidence that the man is under stress.

Mr. Yewchuk: It is cigarette smoking that causes stress.

Mr. Otto: Babies have colic. Babies drink milk. Therefore, milk produces colic. This is the same type of argument. I am not sure that it is indeed cigarette smoking or the use of the pipe or tobacco that does this harm. I think it is evidence of the fact that there is stress. I accept Dr. Selye's evidence, a man who is well known throughout the world for his studies in this field.

Before I rose to speak, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Isabelle) gave me several sheets of paper and said, "Here is your speech". He knows better than that. The introduction reads, "Mr. Speaker", I will go that far. The rest indicates that certain studies are being followed by the department. I am glad to see they are not so much on what sort of diseases might be caused by cigarette smoking but are, rather, on how to give up smoking.

This is the issue I wish to raise this afternoon. The bill points out how we should go about this. It recommends that there be a warning that cigarette smoking is a health hazard, in the form of a skull and crossbones. If you were an entrepreneur, what brand of cigarettes would you come up with? I know what I would do; I would come up with a skull and crossbones brand. One could not have anything better; every package would have your advertisement on it.

Then there is this business of whether or not cigarettes are a health hazard. I would remind the hon. member for Lakeshore that some time ago the Ontario government passed a bill in connection with the used car business. The bill stated that every car sold from a used car lot had to have a certificate stating whether or not it was roadworthy. In other words, if you sell a car you have to issue a certificate stating whether or not the car is roadworthy. Since that time every certificate for every car sold has contained the statement, in half-inch letters, that the car is or is not roadworthy. Nevertheless, everyone is buying these cars; it has not seemed to affect sales.

It is a curious quirk of human nature that although everyone knows that cigarettes are bad for them and that they might kill people, people do not apply this knowledge to themselves. It only seems to apply to others. This is the saving grace of mankind. One believes it is only dangerous to the health of others. Having said what I have said, I cannot believe that cigarettes are good. No one can convince me that the inhalation of smoke is harmless, because it must have some ill effects.

The question, then, is: How are we going to stop the use of cigarettes, or how are we going to stop their promotion? In so far as the report of the committee went, it was good, presuming that people behave like angels. But the truth is that people are not angels; we are human beings subject to all sorts of pressures and all sorts of promotional gimmicks. If you stop advertising on radio and television, there will be a switch to newspapers and magazines. If you stop that, there will be promotion of car racing, skiing, and so on. If you stop that, there will be contests with lots of nice prizes. If you stop that, there will be something else.

The only way is to hit the businessman, the promoter or manufacturer of cigarettes where it hurts. I have recommended this to the government several times. It is not fair that we should all pay half the advertising costs. The manufacturer of cigarettes writes off all his advertising and promotional expenses against his profits. In other words, 50 per cent is paid by the government. It is very simple to stop that. All the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has to do is say that from this day onward advertising and promotion of cigarettes will not be a deductible expense. That would do away with all this nonsense. If people want to advertise cigarettes, let them do so out of their own pocket.

I am a great believer in the power of the purse in so far as consumers are concerned. There is no easier way than to raise taxes on cigarettes, nor is anything justifiable. One dollar for a package of cigarettes would not be unjustifiable. If you want to smoke cigarettes, pay $1 a package. If that is not enough, pay $1.50. This is a workable process. Nothing would compel a man to break away from the habit more than the pocket-book telling him of the many things he could buy with the money even if it were whisky.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What are you advertising?

Mr. Otto: I am not advertising the abolition of either cigarettes or whisky, but I am saying that the bill makes good sense. This is a product which should be available if people really want it. It is not a product which should be advertised as being good for you. All the advertising and promotion say that indirectly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ANTI-DUMPING ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING TRIBUNAL, INQUIRIES, REPORT, ETC.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Drury (for Mr. Benson) that Bill S-6, to amend the Anti-dumping Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, it is little more than a year since we debated a bill on anti-dumping matters following very extensive examination resulting from a white paper on the subject. Some people might be inclined to be critical of the fact that having gone through the white paper process and having voted on and dealt with a bill on this subject, we see after such a short interval a new bill introduced proposing amendments to the previous legislation. However, I am inclined to think it is rather a good thing that the government is moving so quickly.

The subject is a complicated one. It is obvious that certain things have occurred since the previous legislation was passed that give rise to some of the proposed amendments. Based on my examination of the bill, I believe there are two main items in it. There are some cleaning-up items and two major changes, both of which I think are satisfactory.

We will have a greater opportunity in the Standing Committee to look at the proposed changes, but for the moment I believe the proposal to provide for an inquiry initiated by the Governor in Council is an important one. Very often some of the people who may wish to initiate an inquiry are involved in rather delicate negotiations with various governments with regard to concessional financing, and thus might find it difficult to initiate an inquiry. Proposed new section 16A would seem to give the Governor in Council power to call such an inquiry on examination of a certain situation that might be brought to its attention, or that might arise in connection with another investigation conducted by it. It is worth while to have this kind of power enshrined in legislation and at the moment I am inclined to support it.

The second important matter concerns confidential evidence. In committee we took the position that we could not find much reason why so much of the evidence had to be confidential. We are still inclined to wonder about the degree of secrecy that surrounds many inquiries and many business dealings in this country. However, our view did not prevail and the restriction with respect to confidentiality was written into the legislation. Now it appears that there are some loopholes with respect to confidential evidence, depending on how evidence is given to the tribunal. The provisions of clauses 6 and 7 seem to be an attempt to make sure that at least the principle of confidentiality is preserved, regardless of how evidence is given to or obtained by the tribunal. Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to see the bill go to committee for further examination.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

* * *

FARM IMPROVEMENT, SMALL BUSINESSES AND FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACTS

AMENDMENT PROVIDING ADDITIONAL THREE-YEAR LOAN PERIOD

Hon. Jack Davis (for Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-191, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-191 proposes amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act and the Small Businesses Loans Act. These acts, which are well known to hon. members, enable the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to guarantee term loans made by the chartered banks and other designated financial institutions to farmers, fishermen and small businessmen to finance a wide variety of capital improvement projects in connection with their business enterprises. Under the existing provisions of each act, these programs will expire on June 30 of next year and the main purpose of Bill C-191 is to provide for the continuation of these programs for a further three years to June 30, 1974.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Before discussing the provisions of this bill, I would like to comment on each program. The Farm Improvement Loans Act was implemented in 1944, initially for a three-year period. It has been amended on numerous occasions to add new lending periods and to enlarge the benefits available to farmers qualifying under the act. Presently, farmers may borrow up to $15,000 to help finance the acquisition of farm implements, buildings, equipment or livestock and to repair or improve assets which are used in their farming enterprises. In addition, farmers may borrow up to $15,000 for the purchase of additional land. This purpose, which was included in the act in 1968, allows farmers to purchase small parcels of land to round out an existing farm unit. Both of these limits are subject to an over-all maximum of $25,000 which a farmer may have outstanding at any one time for all loan purposes.

The maximum period over which repayment may be spread varies with the purpose for which the loan was obtained and ranges from three years in the case of trucks to 15 years in the case of land purchase loans. That the Farm Improvement Loans Act has played a crucial role in the financing of Canadian agriculture is evidenced by the fact that over $2 billion has been loaned during the quarter century of operations under the act. Lending reached a peak in 1966 and during 1969, the last full year of operations, approximately $142 million were loaned under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Claims paid under this program have been remarkably low and amount to just over one-tenth of one per cent of the face value of loans made.

The Fisheries Improvement Loans Act came into effect in 1955, also for an initial three-year period, and has subsequently been expanded and amended from time to time. Under the current provisions of the act, fishermen may borrow up to $25,000 to help finance the purchase, construction or repair of fishing vessels and equipment. The development of shore installations and equipment which are a necessary part of a fishing enterprise is also an eligible loan purpose. Borrowers may take up to ten years to repay most loans, although in the case of loans for certain purposes the maximum repayment period is shorter, more closely approximating the useful life of the asset being acquired. Lending under this program occurred at relatively low levels for several years. More recently, however, there has been a notable increase. In the year ending March 31, 1970, fisheries improvement loans reached a peak and amounted to $2.6 million. Claims have been very low under this program, totalling only $13,400 since inception.

The Small Businesses Loans Act came into effect in early 1961 for a three-year period. This legislation provides for loans of up to $25,000 to assist small businessmen in financing improvements in their business enterprises. In order to qualify, an enterprise must have gross revenues of less than $500,000 and must be engaged in one of the following forms of business activity—manufacturing, retail or wholesale trade, provision of services, construction, transportation or communications. Loans may be used to assist in acquiring fixed or movable equipment or for the purchase, construction or renovation of business premises. Since inception, more than $200 million has been made available to small businesses under the provisions of this legislation. Lending in recent years has been below the peak levels reached in 1964 and 1965 and amounted to $16 million in 1969. Losses under this legislation have also been small—less than one-half of one per cent of the total value of loans made.

[Mr. Mahoney.]

A number of general provisions apply in connection with loans made under each of the programs. Borrowers are required to pledge security for loans, generally by way of a charge on the assets acquired with the loan and by giving a promissory note. In certain circumstances, additional security may be required by the lender. Potential borrowers must also be prepared to make a minimum investment of their own in the project for which they seek a loan. There is also a maximum rate of interest which lenders may charge on loans. Until the recent past, the maximum rate of interest which could be charged on loans was fixed either by statute or regulation at 5 per cent for farm improvement loans and fisheries improvement loans, and 5½ per cent in the case of business improvement loans. These rates came to be increasingly unrealistic in view of the upward trend in the general level of interest rates, with the result that lenders found it difficult to make loans under these programs.

Changes have been approved whereby maximum interest rates are now determined semi-annually on April 1 and October 1 of each year. The rates are based on the average yields of selected government of Canada bonds over a six-month period to which is added a margin of 1 per cent. The maximum rate which can be charged during the period which commenced on October 1 of this year is 8 per cent for loans made under the Small Businesses Loans Act, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act and the Farm Improvement Loans Act for all loan purposes except the purchase of additional land. The maximum rate for land purchase loans, currently 8½ per cent, is determined by a slightly different formula designed to reflect the longer time that may be taken to repay these loans.

As I indicated earlier, the essential purpose of Bill C-191 is to provide for a continuation of these lending programs for a three-year period beyond June 30, 1971. An amendment is proposed, therefore, to add to each act a new three-year lending period to extend to June 30, 1974.

The bill also establishes the aggregate principal amount of guaranteed loans which may be made by all lenders in the new lending periods. For the Farm Improvement Loans Act it is proposed that the maximum be set at the same level which is in effect during the current three-year lending period. The proposed ceiling is $900 million in respect of loans made by the chartered banks and $300 million for loans made by all other designated lenders. The guaranteed loan amounts in the current lending period for the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act—July 1, 1970, to June 30, 1971—are $10 million for the chartered banks and $10 million for other lenders. It is proposed to double the amount for the chartered banks to $20 million but leave unchanged the limit in respect of other lenders. The increase for the banks is proposed in response to the growth in their lending which has occurred in the past four years.

The current lending period under the Small Businesses Loans Act extends from January 1, 1970, to June 30, 1971, and the limitation on the aggregate principal amount of guaranteed loans which may be made is $100 million and $50 million for chartered banks and other lenders respectively. For the new period, these ceilings will be doubled to $200 million and $100 million, reflecting the fact that the new period will be three years whereas the current period is a year and one-half.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to emphasize that these measures have been instrumental in the provision of intermediate and longer term loan funds for farmers, fishermen and small businessmen. The government bel eves that the continuation of these programs for a further three-year period is desirable and should significantly contribute to increased economic expansion and efficiency on the part of the borrowers.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, we in the official opposition propose to put up a number of speakers to deal with each of the subjects covered by this bill—the agricultural community, small business and the fishermen. For my part, Mr. Speaker, I would like to confine my remarks to agricultural loans. One could not help but follow with interest the history of loans to the agribusiness as outlined by the previous speaker. He traced the loans program from its origin through to the present day, ending with the proposed amendment to extend it for yet another three years.

Mr. Speaker, the original intent of this legislation was to make guaranteed loans available to the farming community at a low, fixed rate of interest in order that the industry could expand. The loans were to be used to encourage the renovation of farms being purchased by veterans and young men entering the agricultural industry and to amalgamate small units into larger, more viable ones. The money was used also in an attempt by the farming industry to improve and modernize production methods so that Canadian farmers could successfully vie with their competitors.

• (8:20 p.m.)

The previous speaker said that the success of the program is indicated by the fact that during the past 20 or 25 years approximately $2 billion were borrowed by people in the business of farming. The government is now limiting the aggragate of all such loans to $1,200 million. But I think the greatest indication of what is happening is the fact that these loans are falling off. The previous speaker indicated that farming people during the last 12 months borrowed approximately $145 million.

This shows, I think, that a very serious change in attitude is taking place in the agribusiness with regard to the help proferred by the government. These loans are no longer the tools in the hands of farmers that they were some years ago, and for two reasons. The first and basic reason is that no longer do the basic qualifications as laid down originally tell a man whether or not he is eligible for a loan. Very often a man does not know whether or not he may procure a loan. Not long ago, when farmers approached the authorized lending institutions they found to their amazement that no matter whether they qualified for a loan or not, they could not obtain one. The excuse given was that if the lending institutions were to lend money to sectors other than the agribusiness, a higher rate of interest could be procured.

Many farmers who went to lending institutions expecting to borrow money at 5 per cent, the rate of interest prescribed by law for farm improvement and similar loans, were told that the money was not available but that if they wished to take out a bank loan at a higher rate of interest, it would be forthcoming. That was said even though they might have qualified for a lower-cost loan under government regulations. It was found that the money just was not available.

Not until the government in its wisdom took off the 5 per cent interest ceiling and allowed the rates charged on these loans to be comparable with other lending rates did the money once more flow into the farming industry. This action, however, destroyed one of the main reasons why farmers had utilized these low-cost loans to such a great extent. They had been able to obtain money at lower rates of interests than those prevailing in the market, and that advantage disappeared.

There is another reason why the number of loans made and the desire for loans is dwindling. This reason has important and tragic consequences for the farming community. The experience of farmers, especially in the last two years, has been that government departments are at odds one with another in the policy being put forward with respect to the agricultural industry. Farmers who with great confidence borrowed sums of money to extend their holdings, improve their equipment and develop more viable farms, found to their dismay and alarm that the government had entered into policies which made it impossible for them to repay these loans.

Men who borrowed money to build a more competitive dairy farm found that government policy was designed to curtail the production of dairy commodities in Canada. Men who borrowed money to extend their production of primary produce found, suddenly, that the government had either withdrawn its subsidy on certain commodities or had curtailed them to such a degree as to lower profit margins or eliminate them entirely. Therefore, it is not surprising that farmers do not wish to borrow.

I think one of the greatest indications of the manner in which the agricultural community has reacted to the benevolence of the government is this. The increase in the estimated value of the capital assets of agriculture in Canada over the past 15 years has been almost identical to total borrowings, under the provisions of these laws, from government-authorized sources. In other words, Mr. Speaker, farmers have learned the hard way that borrowing this money does not solve their problems in the main. With dwindling profit margins and with the prospect of government policies that seem directed exclusively at the concept of supply management and production controls, no farmer today can confidently predict what will be produced even three years hence, let alone whether he will be allowed to produce certain commodities. In these circumstances, unfortunate though they may be, farmers are not encouraged to take advantage of these loans.

I am not surprised that the government is extending the program for three years. We in this party support these amendments but we do not feel confident that they will solve the difficulties of farmers. These loans are a vehicle of last resort for farmers who believe that by obtaining this sort of addition to their working capital they will correct some of the economic deficits which will face them in the future. It is not with any confidence that we approach the amendments, but it is with a sense of foreboding because we know full well that they will not solve the difficulties of our agricultural community. Of course, that is a matter of opinion. The allocation of more debt money for the Canadian agricultural community, which apparently is destined to face a rocky future in the years immediately ahead, leads one to believe that agriculture today in Canada has much to fear.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, as has been noted, the bill before us amends the Small Businesses Loans Act, the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. It extends the term of their operations for another three years and also extends the limits of the guarantees set out in the legislation. Other members of the New Democratic Party will be dealing with this bill in terms of its specific application to the agricultural and fishing industries in particular. There are a number of general comments that I should like to make about this legislation, which I feel are very relevant at this time, as we consider the bill at second reading stage.

I think it may be fairly noted, Mr. Speaker, that the scope of this legislation is such that it is designed to provide services to a group of people within the Canadian economy who might be termed as the independent people in the economy. For the most part, those people are declining in numbers; there is a smaller and smaller number of them each year. I think some important decisions will have to be made by Canada in the near future with respect to the people who are engaged in farming, fishing and small businesses.

• (8:30 p.m.)

We have to consider the future of these people, the services they require and the production they carry out at the present time in the sectors of the economy for which they are responsible. The bill before us may appear to be innocuous in many respects. It may appear mechanical and somewhat automatic in that it simply changes a few dates and makes a few other very minor changes. If we examine this bill we will see that this is not so. I suggest that it implies a continuation of policies which are now in effect, or the absence of policies as they apply to farmers, fishermen and small businessmen.

In many respects these policies or lack of policies have not worked in terms of serving the well-being and welfare of these groups within the economy, because there has been a constant drain of people from these various sectors, a drain which has not been a rational sort of movement or adjustment; it has occurred in a very irrational, haphazard way. This movement and adjustment is being made in the most painful possible way. This adjustment involves hardship and suffering for many thousands of Canadians in various parts of Canada. This particular economic sector involves continuing depressed conditions in many areas.

Many people who earn their living in occupations such as farming, fishing and small business are faced with depressed conditions. In many instances they earn below average incomes. The people engaged in these forms of livelihood often form the core of poverty problems in many areas of Canada. Each of these economic sectors is faced with problems. Small businesses are often faced with a capital shortage and difficulty in competing with large corporate enterprises. Very often there are institutional problems involving restrictions on the types of products that can be handled, services that can be provided and arrangements with distributors. There is a great deal of difficulty when small businessmen try to provide the type of service they want to provide the customers they serve.

Farmers are faced with a chronic situation involving low prices. A variety of market problems have plagued agriculture in Canada for many years. Many farmers are not only faced with competition in the market, but with competition from governments in other countries in terms of subsidies provided to agriculture in other parts of the world. There is a considerable lack of similar support to farmers in this country. Fishermen have a variety of problems involving prices and markets as well as the current problem of pollution.

All of the groups we are considering this evening are faced with problems involving technology and its influence on our society. Technology is forcing change and adjustment in the world. It is not a question of whether we are going to change, but of how this change is going to take place. What is going to happen? What sort of change will finally result? What will be the end result of the adjustments that are going to take place?

These changes can take place in two different ways. They can take place in an unplanned, destructive and insensitive manner which ignores human needs, community problems and other needs of the Canadian society. On the other hand, these changes can be effected through planning which considers human, social needs and the needs of communities throughout Canada. It involves a determination of objectives, a determination of what we want to do, how we want the various sectors of economy to develop and what role they are to fulfil in Canadian society.

What has the government done with respect to the programs within the scope of this bill? They have charged the borrower, whether he is a farmer, fisherman or small businessman, the current market rate of interest. The current market rate of interest has developed within the restricted market framework. In other words, we have influence on the marketplace because of the limited sources of capital available for borrowing purposes in terms of the sources of this capital. When the farmers, fishermen and small businessmen try to sell their produce or services they are left at the mercy of a market system that no longer operates on a competitive basis.

These groups of people operate within a framework which does not enable them to compete effectively and equally with other sectors of the Canadian economy. This is the basis upon which many thousands of Canadians must attempt to earn their livelihood. Credit programs alone will not solve the problems faced by the various groups. Past experience has proven that credit programs, however valuable and important a role they play—and no one would underrate or underestimate the importance of capital as a tool in effecting adjustment and in equipping these various groups to make a more effective contribution to the economy—have not done the job.

To be effective, programs must be complemented by other programs. This requires a comprehensive program involving the adoption of planning—not a form of planning imposed from the top down but planning which involves people and communities in determining their future. They must be equipped with the necessary resources to reach their objectives and the role in life which they desire. We must take a close look at our communities. What type of communities do we want in the future? Many thousands of communities in Canada rely on farming, fishing and small businessmen in order to remain viable. The future of many of these communities is threatened at the present time. The people do not know what is going to happen to their community in the future. The outlook is uncertain because of the concern in many parts of Canada due to the absence of government programs.

We have to develop rational structures in the various economic sectors with which we are concerned tonight, structures which consider the needs of people and communities. I can give a number of examples regarding my own province of Saskatchewan, with which I am most familiar, which require consideration. We must examine this legislation and other complementary programs that need to be developed if this legislation is to perform a useful and effective function. Many people living in the urban areas of Saskatchewan earn their living through some form of small commercial enterprise such as a general store, grocery store, farm implement agency, garage or service station. Many of these businesses are threatened. The people do not know what will exist in the future. They do not know what will happen to their community. A variety of public and government services are being withdrawn from their communities—railway station agents, post offices and a consolidation program anticipated by some elevator companies. These businessmen feel insecure. They are naturally concerned about what is likely to happen to them.

• (8:40 p.m.)

If this legislation is to serve a useful role it must be complemented by other programs which will further help small businessmen, farmers and fishermen whose interests this bill is intended to serve. In my own province of Saskatchewan many small businessmen feel most uncertain about their future. One reason for this is the lack of any effective form of community planning which takes into account the needs of those who make their living in the community and the kind of services they require. I realize that this calls for provincial legislation as well, but I contend that more effective controls should be applied to private industries and corporations to provide some services to the small communities I have in mind.

Let me give one example of what I mean. At present many small farm implement dealers throughout western Canada are being forced to the wall. For a variety of reasons they cannot continue to operate. The fact is they can carry only one line of machinery; in order to do business they are obliged to take out a franchise and this limits them to carrying one particular line of machinery. In today's world, this is not good enough. The system does not meet the needs of communities I have in mind. Hundreds of small communities in the rural areas are without the service of a farm machinery dealer because of the conditions laid down by the industry in line with its own business and competitive situation. Many of the farmers cannot obtain adequate service; they cannot buy the new farm machinery they require through a local dealer; they cannot obtain necessary parts and other services needed to carry on operations.

I could go on to deal at greater length with the situation of farmers and fishermen who I believe to be facing serious problems, but I do not intend to go into detail since some of my hon. friends will be dealing with further aspects of the subject. Certain decisions need to be made by Canadians with respect to the independent sector of the economy. In my view, governments must become more closely involved and a comprehensive program is needed, including community planning, industrial planning and, most important, planning oriented toward the needs of people, designed to ensure that they have an adequate opportunity to earn a decent livelihood. We cannot support the approach suggested by the task force on agriculture which, in effect, urges the government to get out of agriculture to the greatest possible extent.

The government must decide whether it wants small businessmen, farmers and fishermen to continue to operate. If it decides in the affirmative, commitments must be made to set up programs to deal with their needs. This means a change in the attitude of the people whom we call small businessmen, farmers and fishermen. There must be greater receptivity to the prospect of change. At the same time, I wish to make it clear that I do not blame many of these people for resisting some of the proposals for change which have been made up to now, because they have been most inadequate; they have failed to deal with the problems affecting these people.

Many small businessmen, farmers and fishermen have in the past taken what they call an independent outlook. They have even espoused a free enterprise attitude in the past. However, many have found through experience, sometimes bitter experience, that it is in their best interests to work together and apply the principle of co-operation rather than the principle of competition as embodied in the "dog eat dog" philosophy in which they were trained. As I say, public programs are needed, not programs which are foisted on people from the top or from government offices but programs which are worked out in conjunction with the people directly concerned. It is only through such a process that we can make the democratic system work; it is only through such a process that we can find solutions to some of the problems facing the Canadian society.

I hope that as we deal with this bill the government will give serious consideration to the needs of these groups of people. I hope we shall not be content with this small step simply extending the life of the three acts we are considering tonight in this one, omnibus measure but that those who sit on the treasury benches will develop further programs reflecting a new approach to these sectors of Canadian society. If such an approach, based on close involvement, is not adopted, I am sure the measure before us will not accomplish much in the long run to further the interests of those it is designed to help.

• (8:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, my speech will not be long; however, I wish to say a few words on Bill C-191, entitled "An Act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act".

Nothing much is new in this legislation except that a limit is set on the total amount provided for loans, as shown in the explanatory notes, and I quote:

> This amendment would provide for an additional three year loan period from July 1, 1971 to June 30, 1974 during which guaranteed farm improvement loans may be made.
>
> This amendment would provide that the aggregate principal amount of guaranteed farm improvement loans that may be made during the loan period ending on June 30, 1974 shall not exceed $900 million for all chartered banks and $300 million for all other lenders.

The last time the government requested the continuation of this legislation, I expressed my opinion on the loans granted for farm improvements and to small businesses. Yet farmers are still experiencing the same difficulties as before when they want to secure these loans. It seems that the government enacts legislation without asking itself whether it will benefit the interested people.

I believe that the Farm Improvement Loans Act belong to that kind of legislation at least as concerns our area. At first, when considering this legislation, we were anxious to see the results it would have among the farmers.

Seven or eight years later, in Quebec, and mainly in the Roberval area, we fail to see what good it did. It could have had many beneficial results if the government had agreed to listen to our advice and had increased somewhat the advantages offered to the farmers.

The problem in my region is first to get a loan. In fact, as I have often said to the inspectors in my region: "I believe you are paid by the federal government to refuse loans and not to grant them." Everything was done to refuse a loan to a farmer who needed it. All kinds of difficulties were raised and, in certain cases, I have heard good farmers being told by the inspectors that it was better for them to leave their farm and settle in the city rather than ask for loans.

I am not strongly in favour of loans. The more is lent to the farmers, the more they are forced to get into debt and the more they face bankruptcy. As an old farmer used to say: "With all those loans and never any direct help or protection, this is what happens. Thirty years ago I had a lot of money in the bank when I used horses to farm my land." Today, on the same farm and with the sane number of hands, we still work about 15 or 16 hours a day. Unfortunately, my three pieces of land are mortgaged and all I will bequeath to my children will be a heap of mortgages.

When all is said and done, what does the government do? They are not the lenders, but they do encourage banks and other lenders to grant loans to our farmers who get deeper and deeper into debt. Most important of all, chartered banks must not lose a cent. As for the farmer, he often has to give up his land. Many of them lost everthing but the chartered banks never lose a single cent because the government protects them.

It is difficult to have loans accepted. Inspectors are too strict and not familiar with our area. We see all kinds of nonsense. A loan was even refused because the road leading to the farmer's home was gravelled.

That is why I already quoted figures on loans granted in the western provinces and in Quebec. Everybody was astounded: 2,000 loans are granted in western Canada, only 100 or 150 in Quebec. You have the proof there of the strictness of inspectors and of the small number of loans granted in Quebec.

The second problem relates to interest rates. They will go up to 8½ per cent. Given the rates at which banks lend money nowadays, we shall still face the same problem: banks are not interested at all in lending at a rate of 8 or 8½ per cent while they can grant loans elsewhere at the rate of 11 or 12 per cent.

That is why bank doors are closed to farmers and nobody can blame them. Bankers are justified in not lending to farmers when they can lend the same money at a rate of 9, 9½, 10, 10½ and 11 per cent. As I always said, the law fails in that when the government determines a fixed interest to absorb the surplus payable by the farmer to have his application accepted, it should also agree to pay a discount.

You did not fail to notice the jump in number of federal loans granted in Quebec when the province decided to pay a discount as high as 3 per cent.

If the government seriously intends its loans to be of assistance to farmers with an interest rate of 8 or 8½ per cent when banks can lend at least at 11 per cent, it should be prepared to pay a 3 per cent discount or to refund this same amount to the banks or to the various lenders. Bankers would then be quite willing and ready to lend to farmers who, in turn, could acquire necessary farm implements and land.

With respect to farm machinery, we repeatedly asked the government to grant some assistance to the farmers, because it was the purchase of such machinery which drove them into debt. As a matter of fact, this machinery costs twice as much as it should, and the farmer pays a third time for it in the form of interest. This is why today he has a mortgage on his land. Governments have never done anything to help him.

If the government will not freeze the price of farm machinery, it should at least assist farmers with grants. On the other hand, if it wants to protect the major manufacturers of farm machinery, let it grant them a 20, 25 or 30 per cent subsidy on their production costs. This would compensate the farmer, who would not be facing bankruptcy today because of the cost of his machinery, and especially because he had to pay three times their price before owing them.

I wonder how many times we have made such a request. I am at it again tonight. We will be considering this bill and I hope the government will improve on it in such a way that farm loans will benefit farmers rather than banks and other lenders. The government could allow a discount or better still grant direct financial assistance for that purpose.

Where loans to small businesses are concerned, the problem is somewhat the same. In this respect, it has been said that according to the amending bill a further three-year period will be allowed for the granting of loans. Indeed, the explanatory notes included in the bill read as follows:

—the aggregate principal amount of guaranteed farm improvement loans that may be made during the loan period ending June 30, 1974 shall not exceed $200 milion for all chartered banks and $100 million for all other lenders.

A few loans have been granted to small businesses. The chartered banks keep their doors well closed because such loans are still more hazardous.

I could say the same about the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Because of the various interest rates the banks are absolutely not interested.

I hope that the government will have the opportunity to introduce amendments to this bill and to see to it once and for all that the people for whom those acts are enacted get more out of them.

• (9:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-191 is an omnibus bill which seeks to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Small Business Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. While I have great interest in the development of our agricultural community and the small business community, I intend to deal only briefly tonight with the section of the bill which seeks to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

This bill calls for the repeal of certain sections of the act. The first amendment would combine the two existing loan periods into one loan period in order to fully utilize the entire $20 million aggregate amount presently available for these two periods. The second amendment would provide for an additional three-year loan period from July 1, 1971, to June 30, 1974, during which guaranteed fisheries improvement loans may be made. It further provides that the aggregate principal amount of the guaranteed fisheries improvement loans which may be made in the new loan period shall not exceed $20 million for all chartered banks and $10 million for all other lenders.

I think it is important to remember that the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act came into force in December, 1955, for a period of three years and as a result of amendments from time to time thereafter the lending period was extended and the bill before us extends the act until June 30, 1974. It is my understanding that the intent of the legislation originally was the extension of term credit to fishermen for a variety of fishing improvement projects.

The maximum amount which may be borrowed by an individual fisherman is $25,000 and the terms of repayment are arranged so as to take account of the borrower's particular circumstances and other relevant factors, subject to the maximum term of repayment of 10 years. Maximum interest rates applicable in the year under review were 7¾ per cent from April 1, 1969, to September 30, 1969, and 8½ per cent from October 1, 1969, to March 31, 1970. Loans must be secured, and a borrower is required to provide a reasonable portion of the cost of a purchase or project from his own resources.

A quick look at the annual report tabled for the year ending March 31, 1970, will show that fishermen since the inception of the act have not been falling over one another in order to avail themselves of the benefits provided by this legislation. In fact, from December 12, 1955, to March 31, 1970, only 3,148 loans amounting to $9,851,296 were made. The amount of losses which had to be paid by the government as a result of the guarantees in this act amounted to $13,400. Nothing could indicate more clearly to anyone the integrity of Canada's fishermen. It is to their credit that the government of this country, over a period of 15 years of loans totalling almost $10 million, was only required to pay something in the order of $13,000 in losses. I point out to you, Sir, there are very few people as a group who enjoy such an enviable credit rating.

It is also interesting to examine the number of loans and the provinces in which they were made. I shall not quote all the figures because other members of our party may wish to participate in this debate. However, it is worth while to note that since the inception of the act 15 years ago, the following loans were made in the various provinces. These are totals covering a period of 15 years. British Columbia, 1,118; Alberta, none; Saskatchewan, 1; Manitoba, 9; Ontario, 63; Quebec, 127; New Brunswick, 175; Nova Scotia, 711; Prince Edward Island, 924 and Newfoundland, 20, for a total of 3,148 loans.

From these figures it can be clearly seen that in British Columbia the total loans amounted to more than half the loans made in the four Atlantic provinces. I hold no brief for the fact that British Columbia fishermen obviously made greater use of the act than the fishermen in Atlantic Canada, but I submit that there must be a reason for this. I suggest it is because our area of Canada has been suffering acute disparity for so many years that our citizens, and especially our fishermen, are loth to assume heavy debts at the high interest rates which, as I have indicated, have been charged by this government.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Quite frankly, I believe the time has arrived for a complete review by the government of its policy in so far as our fishermen are concerned. For example, I personally do not believe that the present shipbuilding subsidy program is adequate. A subsidy of 35 per cent is inadequate at the present time, in light of present day costs. It is true that fishermen from the Atlantic provinces and Quebec can obtain loans from their respective fishermen loans boards for the purchase of new vessels, new power units and certain types of fishing gear. However, due to the high cost of construction and the increased cost of fishing gear and equipment, east coast fishermen engaged in the production of a low-cost variety of fish, operating on a shorter limited season cannot, even with the availability of provincial loans, meet the high cost of fishing boats or look after their replacement.

Surely the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) must recognize that the construction subsidies on such vessels established some years ago should not have been cut back to 35 per cent. I would be the first to agree that subsidies on new draggers or trawlers, whether of wood or steel construction, need to be controlled and a stated amount should be available for each fiscal year. However, the abolition of the subsidy and then its reinstatement at the 35 per cent level has proved disastrous to the fishing industry and to our shipbuilding industry.

In view of the high unemployment rate in Atlantic Canada, I wonder why greater emphasis has not been placed by this government on a suitable over-all program of assistance to our fishermen in the form of aids to shipbuilding. Any funds extended in this manner would provide much needed employment in our shipyards, while adding to our commercial and fishing fleets. Without a shipbuilding subsidy our shipbuilders cannot hope to compete with foreign builders, a fact which was recognized by the recent 17 per cent export subsidy on ships announced only this week by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin).

We cannot compete due to our high labour costs and high cost of materials. I submit that our present high rates of taxation have not been helpful to our fishermen or our shipbuilders. At the present time shipbuilding in my constituency is at an all-time low, with only one or two small longliners under construction. However, this does not mean that more ships are not required, because more fishing vessels are needed as our present ships become obsolete. At the present time there is a need for new scallop draggers, and ships are required for the queen crab industry. With the expanded demand for fisheries products of all types in the United States, new groundfish draggers also must be constructed, ships which are capable of conversion to new and different methods of fishing, ships which can range great distances, ships which can fish deeper waters.

However, I point out to you, Sir, that unless the government recognizes its responsibility to our shipbuilding industry and to our fishermen by establishing a more realistic shipbuilding policy, the ships presently required by Canadians will be built in foreign lands. This would, of course, only aggravate our present serious unemployment problem. When a ship is built in a foreign land, it does nothing for the shipbuilding industry in Canada. It does not contain any wood or steel supplied by Canadians, it does not contain any Canadian heating equipment, any electronic equipment, any pipes or any plumbing, and the paint on its hull is not manufactured by Canadians. I know of no industry in Canada which makes a greater impact on our over-all economy than the shipbuilding industry. When a ship is constructed, it needs heat, light and power and a multitude of materials right down to the medicine chest for the sick or disabled fisherman.

For these reasons I believe the present subsidy program, rather than being helpful may in fact be harmful to our fishermen. With only a 35 per cent subsidy available, fishermen may well decide to build a ship much smaller than they require, simply because they have insufficient funds to build a ship of the size required for year-round fishing in the north Atlantic. For example, a 65-foot ship, whether it be a scallop dragger, longliner or purse seiner—whatever its purpose—simply cannot operate in the north Atlantic during the months of November, December, January, February and even part of March. If they do try to carry out fishing operations during this period, there is a physical hazard to the crew which would not be present on a larger ship.

In other words, this government, by its present policy of assisting the shipbuilding industry and assisting fishermen in providing a 35 per cent subsidy, is still encouraging short-range fishing operations at a time when all the signs are pointing to the need for long-range operations if we are to provide steady, year-round employment in the industry at stable rates of income for our fishermen. In my opinion, the 35 per cent subsidy could be increased to 50 per cent in order to offset the high cost of Canadian ship construction. This action would encourage, at the same time, more fishermen to participate in deep sea fishery, thereby increasing employment opportunities in many ancillary industries in Atlantic Canada.

As the minister is aware, extensive overfishing by foreign countries on our offshore banks is making it extremely difficult for many of our inshore fishermen to survive. We must, therefore, not only assist the inshore fishermen in acquiring the proper equipment with which to carry out their hazardous occupation, but we must do this in a manner that will make them competitive with foreign fishermen while at the same time enabling them to earn a livelihood and to provide for their families.

One way in which we can assist inshore fishermen, and for that matter deep sea fishermen as well, is by helping them cut their costs. We could move in this direction by lowering the cost of many ships that may be constructed.

On December 11, 1969, the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry announced changes in the fishing vessel insurance plan. I will not quote from this announcement. I refer to it only by date so as to remind the minister of the time he made this announcement.

I would suggest that this plan, with which I agree, be expanded. At present, for example, when a new ship is under construction it is necessary for the shipbuilder to place builder's risk insurance on the hull. Some three years ago builder's risk cost the builder .25 per cent. Today this cost, like every other, has increased and it is in the vicinity of .75 per cent. This is an increase of 300 per cent in the cost of builder's risk insurance. This cost must be integrated into the cost of the ship prior to the placing of the contract by the fisherman. The Minister of Fisheries and Forestry in his announcement of December 11, 1969, made changes in regard to the insurance which may be taken out by a fisherman or a group of fishermen on the hull after they take delivery of the ship and it is put into operation on the high seas.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Without reading the whole of the announcement, Mr. Speaker, the minister indicated that a 4 per cent rate on appraised value over $25,000 would be charged to a fisherman or group of fishermen as the price for insurance under the fishing vessel insurance plan. I would suggest that the minister take this plan one step further by incorporating in it the possibility of carrying the insurance that is required when a hull is under construction. This may sound like a small saving, but in view of the cost of ships today it may well amount to something like $600 to $800 for a fisherman or a group of fishermen if the present plan were expanded and the rate charged by the government were, say, approximately .25 per cent, the rate which was in existence some three years ago.

I would also point out that this coverage is generally placed overseas with an insurance corporation. Certainly it is not placed in Canada. Therefore, since we are subsidizing these ships, and even though I feel the 35 per cent subsidy is inadequate—it is still a part subsidy—in effect we are sending our tax dollars overseas in order to provide protection on a hull during its construction in Canada. This does not appear to me to make good sense. If we are going to assist our fishermen, I submit this is one field of endeavour that we should investigate. In effect, the government of Canada would be taking very little risk if it followed the course I propose.

I know of no instance in my native province of Nova Scotia where a ship under construction has caught fire, since the builders are very much interested in protecting their own livelihood. So, Mr. Speaker, I throw this suggestion out to the minister in the hope that he and his officials will give it some thought. In the event that they should decide to follow my earlier suggestion and expand the subsidy program to 50 per cent of the approved cost of the ship, I feel certain this would add impetus to shipbuilding in Nova Scotia, in Atlantic Canada and in fact throughout all of Canada. Also, the additional insurance program which I have suggested would be helpful in keeping down costs.

Farm Improvement Loans Acts

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, as other hon. members have outlined, this is primarily a housekeeping bill to update the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. With respect to small business loans, I notice that it will be guaranteeing another $300 million over the next three years which, broken down, means $100 million a year. In the Farm Improvement Loans area there are guarantees that run to approximately $400 million a year. But, Mr. Speaker, we find that last year with respect to small business loans we used only a shade over $6 million of the $100 million guaranteed. If my memory serves me correctly, in the farm improvement loans area we only used something like $48 million of the $400 million guaranteed.

With all the bankruptcies prevalent and the apparent need for money in this country, one must ask why we are not using a far higher percentage of the money that is available. I submit the main reason is that the rate of interest is too high. It is totally unrealistic compared with the returns that businesses are making today. Under this legislation money can be borrowed at 8 per cent or 9 per cent, but frequently businesses make a profit of less than half of that or none at all. I support the previous speaker in saying that the taxes we have to pay today are no help, either. More encouragement should be given to the banks to overcome the time lag in the lowering of interest rates. The other day I read that somebody had said a banker is like a fellow who lends you an umbrella when the sun is shining but wants it back once it starts to rain. This is too often the case.

One of the main problems facing business today is posed by cheap imports. This will be a continuing problem and may eventually prove disastrous. I am sure nobody wants this country to become isolated in terms of trade and I can think of no better way to meet foreign competition, and at the same time combat the problem of unemployment, than getting money into the hands of small businesses. But we cannot do this unless we are willing to provide the means to lower interest rates. Several years ago when the interest rate was 5 per cent, money could be borrowed, business could be promoted and things could move ahead. But money lent under the terms now stipulated will serve no useful purpose. I suggest that the government is not really guaranteeing too much of anything because there is no demand for money at such high interest rates.

In this regard the banks are in a very favoured position. They lend the money, collect their profit through the interest on it and the government guarantees them against loss. In other words, there is no risk involved. I point out that the total amount lent under the Small Businesses Loans Act last year, something over $6 million, is less than half the net profit of one of the chartered banks. This is a highly undersirable situation, considering the state of business today.

Speaking about the availability of money under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, I know one man very well who went into a bank in the Maritime area and asked the banker about a farm improvement loan. The banker looked at him stonily and asked, "What is that?" Finally the banker admitted that there was such a thing but said his bank never made such loans and in fact he did not know whether it could or not. Mr. Speaker, this is a service that should be available to everybody. It should be advertised. I know that in the Maritime area, when somebody does manage to get a farm improvement loan it is immediately thought that some sort of patronage or hanky-panky is involved, when actually people are only getting what is their due. The government granted to the banking system this monopoly on money and I suggest they should now see that the banks live up to their obligations and do their part to promote the economy and keep it healthy.

• (9:30 p.m.)

A disaster occurred in my area this summer, although the provincial government did not see fit to declare it a disaster area. We were very much alarmed at that time, but were assured that the minister would give consideration to declaring a moratorium on the principal amounts due on Farm Credit Corporation loans and farm improvement loans. A review of individual cases of need was indicated. So far, the results have not been too encouraging and I would like to take this opportunity to remind the minister, through his Parliamentary Secretary, that there is great need for special consideration when a disaster occurs such as the one in the Viking area. On that note I will close, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I want to add just a few words to the remarks of my colleague from Nova Scotia who presented statistics on the various loan bills before us in an effort to indicate to the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) some of the weaknesses of this legislation. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will be as receptive to my remarks as was his predecessor who worked with me for about a year in an effort to improve the legislation. That gentleman is in the House at the moment, and in all sincerity I must say that in the past year and a half he worked diligently to iron out the inadequacies of the legislation before us.

Perhaps we should first look at the problem, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, as soon as one looks at the distribution of the funds to the various provinces it is obvious that something is wrong. For example, in the year ended March 31, 1969, $7,272,291 were paid for a grand total of 2,788 loans across Canada. Eighteen of these loans were made in the biggest fishing province in Canada in terms of the number of people involved.

Under the Small Businesses Loans Act for the period October to December, 1969, 306 loans were made for a grand total of $3,589,097. Five of these loans were made in the province of Prince Edward Island. In my province for that quarter there were no loans, and this year to date there have been two loans out of a total of 1,452 for the whole country. We had only two loans, when over $16 million were expended in Canada under the Small Businesses Loans Act.

[Mr. Downey.]

That is the situation, Mr. Speaker. Now, what is the problem? The simple problem is that the government lost control of the legislation when it gave jurisdiction to the banks. It told the banks they could lend money under these acts if the applicant had a very good reason for borrowing. It was the intention of the government to assure the banks that if the individual ran into difficulty on his repayments, the government would guarantee repayment. But the bankers are pretty shrewed and they said to the small businessman, the fisherman and, I presume, to the farmer, "We can lend you money at a much higher interest rate and not worry about this type of loan at all." That is what they have done. They have literally gone against the federal government and said, "We are not going to toe your line. We are not going to lend money to these people under this legislation."

I have come across a case which concerns me. I shall give the Parliamentary Secretary details of it afterwards, if he wishes. A man from Moreton's Harbour, a famous fishing community in Newfoundland, gave me his name, the name of the bank, the name of the bank manager and all the statistics involved. He applied for a loan under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act and the bank asked for some guarantee that he qualified.

The banks say that a person must have the capitalization behind him and they are very rigid in this regard. This was not the intention of the government at all. They intended this legislation to be of benefit to the man who was an average risk, the person who might otherwise have difficulty getting a loan. But the bank said to this applicant that they had to be sure he was a good risk, and would not give him a loan under the act. At that time there was more money in his bank account at that bank, but he did not want to touch it because it was for a rainy day. Having refused him a loan under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, the bank proceeded to grant him a loan under their general loan procedures at about 12 per cent, compared with the 7 per cent it would have cost under the act. In other words, Mr. Speaker, because of the tight money situation the banks know they can lend whatever money they have available. Consequently, in provinces where money is tight, provinces with the greatest regional disparity, the banks are not interested in lending money under this legislation.

Last year I raised the question with the then Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance. He wrote to the president of the Canadian Bankers' Association, who replied as to why he felt money was not being advanced under the act. I know that the department applied pressure to try and loosen up financing, but they have not been successful because the banks have control. I say, Mr. Speaker, that this legislation is a waste of time.

We can do one of three things. We can take the legislation and toss it in the wastepaper basket, which may be the best thing to do with it; we can pass it, even though it is not functioning properly; or we can try to gain control of the lending taking place under it and bring the legislation back for further amendment. Let the federal government set up its own funding agency, if that is necessary and possible. I do not know whether that is a worth-while suggestion. It seems to be reasonable.

• (9:40 p.m.)

If the federal government is to become involved in assisting small businessmen, whether they be farmers, fishermen or other small businessmen, it should try to acquire control over its own legislation. Under present arrangements the people involved are not given a fair deal, especially in areas where there is a high degree of regional disparity. This is the problem. I have presented this case to the Minister of Finance on a number of occasions. He understands it. He is a very capable minister and understands the problem of regional disparity. He understands that fiscal and monetary policies must be uniformly applied across the nation.

This legislation is a perfect example of what I mean. We ought to make special legislative or regulatory arrangements to govern banks in areas where money is tightest. Those arrangements should govern the bank managers or the lending institutions concerned. We have laid down regulations governing their behaviour in the past and we shall have to adapt our policies to take care of areas such as the Atlantic region. I do not doubt that these remarks apply also to Quebec and some parts of western Canada; they apply to all regions where unemployment is very high.

We see these difficulties every time there is tight money. We see them especially in areas most affected by tight money, areas such as the Atlantic provinces and the slow-growth areas. I am concerned about this. Something is radically wrong. Small businessmen have made representations to me on the subject. Some of them have gone to banks, asked for loans and have been refused loans under the Small Businesses Loans Act, yet they have been offered loans at the regular interest rates by the banks. Obviously, this is a violation of the intention of the legislation passed by the federal government. It shows that the banks are really saying to the government, "You can keep your money and your guarantees. We are not interested, because we can lend to other industries at higher rates of interest." That is why I say this piece of legislation will be a complete waste of time unless we amend it so as to give us greater control over its application.

My only other point is this. Let us consider the fishing industry on the Atlantic coast. I am not too familiar with the industry on the Pacific coast, but perhaps the same considerations obtain there. Many of our fishermen are caught in a squeeze. They are inshore fishermen and they need to become fishermen in a bigger way. They need the capability to go where the fish are and to catch them. These men are caught in a squeeze. Not many years ago we had about 10,000 inshore fishermen in my province. I could not quote statistics for the other provinces. They were men who operated with small boats, some of them 35 feet long and less, with inadequate equipment and inadequate technology. These are the men who made up the bulk of our traditional Atlantic fishery.

These people are now faced with this situation. The inshore fishery stock having been depleted by the fishing vessels of the Soviet Union and the East Germans, our inshore fishermen cannot get out to where the fish are. The fish are no longer as close inshore as they were, and if these men are to make a living from the fishery they must acquire the capability of going farther out to sea. These traditional inshore fishermen need better fishing gear. They are still good fishermen; they know more about fishing than any of us. They are professionals, and they are caught in the squeeze. They cannot go after the fish. They need larger boats and better electronic equipment. They need radar and sonar, better nets and the technology that will enable them to go out where the fish are and find them.

I do not know how many thousands of fishermen in Atlantic Canada today—and there are roughly 10,000 in my province—cannot earn a living with the fishing equipment they possess. I say that the Department of Fisheries and the Department of Finance ought to get together and try to come up with an over-all, comprehensive program which will help these people. The alternative for these men is help under the Canada Assistance Plan, which they do not want. Fishermen do not want that. They are capable of earning their own living. They are people with skills and trades and able to prosecute a fishery in a reasonable manner.

Some of them have been kept afloat with the longliner program. Not long ago the government introduced a program under which, to help the fishery in one province, 60 longliners were built. That program is relatively small when one realizes that there are roughly 1,000 communities in one Atlantic province alone which need help. Sixty longliners do not go far among 1,000 communities. There are roughly 20,000 fishermen in one province. The government should seriously consider a comprehensive program along the lines recommended by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse). Under it the fishermen would have access to improved technology, which would assist them in their fishery and help them out of the squeeze.

I become depressed when I see such people in my riding. During the past week-end I talked to 300 people in a community on Fogo Island and every second man I talked to did not have the technological ability to get out to where the fish are. Yet these men are eager to fish, and given half a chance they would do a good job. I should like to describe some of the things I saw, but perhaps hon. members might not wish to hear me speak for half an hour about the heartbreaking cases of these people who want nothing but the chance to use their skills.

I shall give one more example of what I mean, Mr. Speaker. I met a man from a community called Seldom. He has a small boat; it is 40 or 43 feet long. Nobody, but nobody in the fishery stands a substantial chance in a small boat because you have to go a long way offshore to fish. That man has been going 25 miles offshore into the Atlantic. He leaves the shore and he goes straight out in the Atlantic. First of all, his facilities for getting back are inadequate. I hope to make representations to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) for the installation of better equipment to help people like him get back to shore.

That man has no radar and no sonar. He cannot sound the bottom and know what is beneath him. The Russians are out there with enough technology to frighten the hair off your scalp. Yet he is out there in a 43-foot boat and he has with him about five men.

This individual came to me and said, "I am ashamed. I am only landing between 4,000 and 5,000 pounds of fish, whereas I should be landing 15,000 and 20,000 pounds a day. But I cannot do it." He has to go between 25 or 30 miles offshore, where the big boats go, and he does not have sufficient electronic equipment. I said to him, "Can't you go to the provincial fisheries loan board?" He said, "But the loan board will ask, what security do you have?" This is a provincial board which makes loans.

Several people in the community have told me that he is one of the most reputable small businessmen in the community. If given the chance, he would be capable of bringing in two or three times the amount of fish that he brings in at the moment. He is capable of providing five families at least with a livelihood, and there are another ten families who work on shore in association with his venture. So about 15 families make a living from the capabilities of one man. How much money does he want to buy the equipment he needs? He needs $5,000. That is how much he needs to be able to go out where the fish are. If he does not get it he will have to go on welfare; he has no other choice. I could describe dozens of cases such as that, cases involving capable people who need boats of 50, 60 or 70 feet if they are to go out to the fish.

The hon. member for South Shore said that these men need the benefits of advanced technology to enable them to get out into the Atlantic. When you talk about those waters, you are talking about big boats, but I have been talking about the small, inshore fishermen, some of whom in their small boats have to go out between 25 and 30 miles. These men would bring back more fish if they had the necessary equipment. On the same evening I have been talking about, one fishing craft in the community brought back 33,000 pounds of fish worth $1,650. I think it had a five-man crew. They obtained that catch because they had the necessary radar and sonar equipment. They could find the fish and they knew what type of seabottom was under them. However, I am not going to draw any more maps. It is important for us to take a very close look at this legislation, because it is not serving our purposes in Atlantic Canada. The banks, with their loan policies, have deliberately frustrated the efforts of the federal government in the implementation of this program.

• (9:50 p.m.)

My second point is that we must have a better scheme to help fishermen and small businessmen. The resources are there and these men should be able to reap them. A comprehensive program should be established so that our fishermen cannot only earn a living but can make a significant contribution to Canada. The alternative is the Canada Assistance Plan.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all members listened with great interest to the speech of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan). It brought back memories of the time his party formed the government. Similar speeches, including some by Liberals, were made at that time and fell on deaf ears. His party formed the government in office and should have used their influence to solve these problems. We are involved in thinking in terms of the political philosophy of the government in an aspect of the so-called free enterprise or capitalist economy.

The manner in which the bill is constructed indicates that the government does not honestly believe in its own philosophy with regard to the free enterprise system. The government believes in foreign-controlled enterprise, a monopoly kind of enterprise with price-fixing conspiracies and the like. Even in those terms a person with initiative and drive is probably exemplified by small businessmen, fishermen and farmers.

Farmers and fishermen are our primary producers of food-stuffs, the farmer more than the fisherman because there is an element of union organization among fishermen which gives them economic leverage. The farmer has no authority, control or say over the price he pays for the machinery and equipment that he buys, or the price he receives for the goods he sells. The fisherman is in that position to a slightly lesser extent. These two groups of primary producers are at the mercy of an element in society that has control over some aspect of our economy, whether it be a manufacturer of equipment or gear or a distributor of foodstuffs.

By this legislation and the three acts that have been brought into force, the government has attempted to equate the prime producer and small businessman with large business. There is an attempt to force small businessmen, farmers and fishermen who do not have control over their economic destiny into an uncompetitive position with regard to the money market. As pointed out by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate, he is forced to deal from an unfair advantage position with the private chartered banks. He is forced to compete with the large fishing companies which by reason of their corporate structure can quite easily borrow money from the banks or float debentures at higher interest rates in order to obtain capital. Fishermen are at the mercy of the banks which may not want to lend them money, depending on the current interest rate.

The proposals in the white paper on taxation in so far as tax measures are concerned attempt to equate small businessmen with large business concerns. They should not be subject to equation. The intent and purpose of Parliament should be to give some advantage to our primary producers. Public funds should be available for loans at a rate that is reasonable, not usurious. The facilities of the nation should be provided within the concept of an extremely large credit union which would provide a service to our primary producers rather than drive them into a poorer and poorer economic situation.

I wish to refer briefly to the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act and the annual report which was published in March this year. The report paraphrases this act. It points out that under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act money may be borrowed from a bank for the purpose of buying and building fishing vessels, acquiring fishing equipment, major repair or overhaul of fishing vessels, purchase or construction of shore installations, construction, repair or alteration of buildings required by a primary fishing enterprise, or other prescribed developments of or improvements to primary fishing enterprises. There is a limit of $25,000 on the amount an individual fisherman may borrow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. In accordance with Standing Order 40, a motion to adjourn the House is deemed to have been made and seconded at this time.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the uncertainty today, can someone inform the House regarding government business for tomorrow?

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, I believe there is an understanding that the bill to amend the Old Age Security Act will be discussed tomorrow.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—INCLUSION OF HOSPITAL WORKERS—PAYMENT OF COST

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, on November 25 I raised the question in the House as to whether hospital workers should be included in the unemployment insurance plan. If they were, then the federal and provincial governments should costshare this program. There were several reasons for raising this subject. In 1951, Hon. Paul Martin, then Minister of National Health and Welfare, ruled that they should not be because there were few layoffs of hospital workers: attrition and retirement look after this matter; this is the way hospital workers leave the job. He therefore felt it would be an unnecessary cost to the hospital system.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Every minister of health since that time has come to the same conclusion. Surely they cannot all be wrong. But if they have been wrong and unemployment insurance is necessary, it is my contention that the federal government and the provincial government concerned should pay the contributions under a cost-sharing program. I take this view because the federal government has said: You must limit increases in total costs to 8½ per cent. Provincial governments have said the same thing, in spite of the fact that hospital costs have been rising at around 15 per cent.

According to the government, the increase must not amount to more than 8½ per cent, without provision for new facilities needed to keep operations up-to-date. And we must remember that this is an age in which new diagnostic methods are being introduced at tremendous speed, adding extra costs every year, an age in which our knowledge of medical and scientific facts is doubling every eight years. Costs will continue to increase if we are to provide top quality medical care. Otherwise, research will be stifled and medical progress will be retarded.

The government well knows that salary increases have amounted to more than 10 per cent across Canada and that 70 per cent of a hospital's budget goes in salaries. Yet it proposes to take 2 per cent out of the 8½ per cent I have mentioned and still expects the hospitals to meet their commitments. In effect, we are asked to run our hospitals on the basis of a 6½ per cent increase in total costs even though the real cost is twice that amount. Unless salaries are increased, this action will take $17½ million out of the workers' pockets and another $17½ million out of hospital budgets.

A hospital has only a limited budget, and costs have to be met. If it becomes necessary to raise salaries, the size of staffs will have to be cut. No one will argue that the workers do not need an increase in pay, bearing in mind today's spiralling costs. What happens if administrators have to let people go? There is very little fat in hospital budgets today and if anyone is let out, a nurse or a helper, the quality of the service goes down. When the nursing staff is affected, patients suffer directly.

Kenneth Box, administrator of the Queensway Hospital, Toronto, said he feels that if the 8½ per cent guideline must be followed he will have to cut 40 of the employees from a staff of 700 workers in a 350-bed hospital. Douglas Sneddon, executive director of the Sick Children's Hospital in Toronto says he is in trouble if he wants to live up to his responsibilities and pay a fair wage to the 3,000 employees. I think this makes the point. There must be no cutting of essential services in hospital care and no reduction in the quality of care. The government has promised this, but one becomes leery of government promises. When they brought in medicare they set up a health research fund to train the necessary doctors according to the ground rules. Then, when the centres were under construction, right in the middle of it they said: We are hard up; we must cut the fund.

Mr. Speaker, I have just come from a committee meeting in which we were talking about this very question. If unemployment insurance is necessary for hospital workers, if it is necessary to keep cost increases to 8½ per cent, then the federal government and the provincial governments, in all fairness to the people of Canada and to hospital workers, ought to pay for it on a cost-sharing basis.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the source of the hon. member's question is a recent resolution passed by the Canadian Hospital Association. The premise behind the question is that hospitals will always continue to expand and, therefore, that unemployment among hospital employees will not under these circumstances pose a problem.

Certain hospital boards have insured employees under the unemployment insurance regulations in the past. While this is not common practice, these boards saw fit to do so. The added flexibility given to hospital administrators in these hospitals has enabled them to adjust staff to the needs of patients by implementing staff reductions as required. They were able to do so because of the knowledge that employees laid off work would receive benefits from their unemployment insurance coverage.

Recent trends in health manpower show that local surpluses of hospital employees are merging in some areas of the country. To deny the benefits of unemployment insurance in face of this change of employment patterns would be contrary to the best interests of hospital employees and to the efficiency of the hospital. As the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Isabelle) stated at a recent seminar held in London, Ontario, between 70 per cent and 80 per cent of hospital costs are attributable to wages and salaries.

The government is now prepared under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act to accept small increases in total wage and salary costs which would ensue from the inclusion of hospital workers under the unemployment insurance plan. More than 2½ per cent of all Canadian workers are employed in hospitals and other health care institutions. To deny this segment of the Canadian work force the benefits of unemployment insurance would not be in their best interests.

A few days ago the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) attended a seminar in the city of Toronto, and hospital workers in that great city made a statement which is shocking in the year 1970. One lady professed to indicate that she is a hospital employee responsible for the care of human beings but was being paid substantially less than the monkey-keeper of the local zoo. The members of this House have to be concerned about the low wage levels of this profession and the need of these people for unemployment insurance.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rynard: You are making my point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must advise the Parliamentary Secretary that his time has expired.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS—IMPLEMENTATION OF LAND USE REGULATIONS—PERFORMANCE BONDS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on November 24 I asked the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) when the regulations respecting land use operations in the Yukon and Northwest Territories would come into effect. The following supplementary question was also asked:

> In view of the required posting of $100,000 performance bonds by the two oil companies doing work on Banks Island in the Arctic, why has this regulation not been applied to all companies doing similar work in the Arctic area?

The minister indicated that the land use requirements would soon become legal, but I received no answer to the supplementary question. I find it difficult to understand why the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has been so long in bringing down the northern land use regulations. I understand the department has been working on these regulations for almost two years. The legislation to which they will apply was passed many months ago, but the greatest tragedy of all is that a great and increasing economic development is taking place in northern Canada with no effective regulations to guide it. This is a shameful situation and one that should not be allowed.

It is obvious that the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development places low priority on the protection of our northern environment. It seems that the whole department is bogged down as far as environmental protection is concerned. The lengthy delay in instituting the northern land use regulations indicates this. I understand that the original draft dealing with these land use regulations has been drastically revised. The chances are that when the new draft comes to light we will find that the exploiters of our northern resources have forced the government to do away with some of the most effective control regulations. I will not speculate as to what we will find in the regulations when they are brought down by the minister, but I suggest there should be no further delay in having the regulations announced and in bringing the vast amount of exploration in our Canadian north under some type of control.

In checking over the budget for the department I feel that it is far too low if any major effort is to be made to enforce the regulations and to keep inspectors in the area. An adequate staff must be found, trained and hired. There is no indication that the department has proceeded at any great speed in this connection. Perhaps the minister could inform us how large a staff is already on hand to do the job of inspection once the regulations are announced.

• (10:10 p.m.)

Another major problem in connection with the whole northern development program is that there appear to be no overriding central objectives set out by the department. Long-term objectives are desperately needed for the north. We must know how the residents and the wildlife fit into the exploration and economic programs which will flow from it. This matter should be given the highest priority because the residents of the north will be living there long after the oil and the mineral resources have become exhausted.

I requested information from the minister concerning the reason other companies working in our northern areas were not bonded as those on Banks Island had been. Perhaps he can give me that information tonight. Is the bonding of companies engaged in exploration work in the north one of the new regulations to be brought down by the minister? If so, does it cover the entire area, or is the bonding of companies to apply only to certain sections of our Arctic areas? It would seem to me that immense ecological damage could be done by any company and that bonding is an excellent method by which to make certain that companies engaged in this exploratory work live up to the regulations. This is especially essential in our northern areas where the ecology is so fragile that it can be easily destroyed for centuries to come.

During the debates in this House on legislation dealing with our great north country there was agreement that our northern ecology must be protected at all costs. The need for land use permits with tough regulations was pointed out. The need for sharply increased research into Arctic problems was another requirement. It was also urged that the rate of exploration and exploitation should be slowed until we had the regulations to control it, as well as the research background and experimentation upon which to base our decisions and a fully trained staff to enforce the conditions under which land use permits are issued.

I urge the minister to bring down these regulations without further delay. I trust he has not given in to the economic interests in the north and so watered down these regulations that they will be largely ineffective. Land use permits are especially powerful weapons with which to protect our environment, and they must cover the entire area. Perhaps the minister can assure the House on this point tonight.

There is already a great deal of information available on our Canadian north. This must be drawn together and properly evaluated. I trust the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has already started to do this. I hope it has drawn heavily on the expertise to be found in other government departments such as Energy, Mines and Resources, and on the experience of other countries.

In closing, I again express my disappointment at the failure of the department to bring down long before now the northern land use regulations which are so vital to the protection of our northern ecology. I hope the minister can tell us tonight why there has been such a lengthy delay in setting up these regulations and when he expects to introduce them to the House.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the hon. member that his concern is rather surprising since, in the last few months, this House has passed three different acts to ensure a more rational development of the North, and so that the mistakes made in the South might not be repeated up there.

The hon. member will surely remember the will I myself introduced on the protection of the Arctic waters, as well as the bill dealing with the conservation of the inland waters in the Yukon and Northwest Territories which represent almost a sixth of all fresh waters in the world. To my mind, that act is the most modern there is.

In addition, one must also remember the measure passed at the end of the last session, authorizing the minister to enact stricter regulations respecting resource development in the Northwest Territories.

However, we cannot formulate the regulations mentioned by the hon. member before legislation is passed. I hope the regulations will soon be approved by the cabinet. Meanwhile, I myself have taken the initiative to oblige industries in areas where we feel the ecological balance is at stake, where native populations continue to live on fishing and hunting, to put up $100,000 to prove their good faith.

I must say that on Banks Island, the companies involved as well as the Eskimos and department officials have been working hand in hand and that the new procedure makes it possible for everybody to co-operate. Otherwise the department would be working alone, while the companies and the inhabitants of the Arctic Islands or other northern areas would be working on their side. Indeed, we are trying to co-ordinate the efforts of all those interested in convervation and exploration.

I think that the hon. member would be pleased to know that we will soon be enacting the regulations which he has been anticipating, but in the meantime, we have obtained the full co-operation of the companies involved as well as that of the native people.

[English]

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

APPENDIX

STATEMENT ON CONSULTATIONS IN LONDON, BRUSSELS AND GENEVA RE: E.E.C. ENLARGEMENT

On behalf of the Government and accompanied by officials of the Departments of External Affairs, Finance, Agriculture, and Indsutry, Trade and Commerce, I visited Geneva, London and Brussels in October to put forward Canadian interests in the current negotiations for enlargement of the European Economic Community.

In Gevena, I had a tour d'horizon of current world trade issues with the Director-General of the GATT. In London, I met with Prime Minister Heath and three of his Cabinet colleagues. I had talks in Brussels with five of the eight members of the E.E.C. Commission, the permanent representatives of the six member states, the British negotiating team, the Ambassadors of the other applicant countries (Ireland, Denmark and Norway) and the Ambassadors of the United States, Australia and New Zealand.

Those with whom I met welcomed our representations—they clearly wanted to have a better understanding of Canada's point of view.

Main Themes

In my conversations, I highlighted four main themes:

1. Our concerns about the negative effects of E.E.C. enlargement on Canada's access to the markets of the United Kongdom and Western Europe and its repercussions on the framework and patterns of world trade.

2. Our conviction that in some instances mutuality of interests exists between Canada and Britain and the E.E.C., offering scope for adjustments.

3. Our intention to bring into play at an appropriate stage the contractual rights and obligations, under bilateral arrangements and under the GATT, which would be affected by E.E.C. enlargement.

4. Our views as to the importance of developing new initiatives for freeing of trade on a multilateral basis during the period of European negotiations.

Some Effects of Enlargement

In discussing the direct impact E.E.C. enlargement would have on Canadian trade, I drew a statistical picture of the changes in access terms which our exports to Britain would face if that country adopted the E.E.C. Common External Tariff and the Common Agricultural Policy unchanged. Only about 36 per cent of these exports would continue to receive free entry compared with some 94 per cent at present. The remainder would face tariffs, loss of Commonwealth preferences and reverse preferences in favour of our E.E.C. competitors. Our agricultural exports would be in an even more difficult position as the inward-looking Common Agricultural Policy makes use of levies, subsidies and other special protective devices.

The actual effects on the volume and profitability of Canadian sales would, of course, vary considerably from one item to another. However, it was important to ensure that the parties to the negotiations were fully seized of the fact that almost 70 per cent of our exports to Britain would be adversely affected under the present Common External Tariff and Common Agricultural Policy.

I underlined that Britain is Canada's second largest export market accounting for about one-quarter of our overseas sales. It has been purchasing more than $1 billion of Canadian goods annually in recent years and in 1970, its purchases will exceed this level by a considerable margin. Our exports to the E.E.C. and other applicant countries are approximately of the same magnitude as our sales to Britain. Some of these would also be adversely affected by E.E.C. enlargement.

As regards the more general implications, we emphasized the danger of a polarization of the world trading community into inward-looking rival blocks. The E.E.C. is already the world's largest trading entity. Enlarged, it would account for more than one-quarter of world trade, that is, not including intra-Community trade—compared with about 20 per cent for the United States. About 50 of the 91 members of the GATT could be either members of the E.E.C. or countries associated with it.

I urged that the E.E.C. use its influence to facilitate and encourage continued expansion of trade on a world-wide basis and not only within its own grouping of member and associated countries. The world trading community and the E.E.C. itself would have much to gain from such an outward-looking policy. On the other hand, if E.E.C. enlargement mainly has the effect of limiting and diverting trade from third countries, the Community is itself bound to lose over the longer run in terms of consumer and producer costs. Moreover, outside suppliers could not remain indifferent to the loss of important traditional markets for their goods in the E.E.C. and in the countries associated with it.

The Enlargement Negotiations and Canada

As honourable members are aware, Britain has already told the E.E.C. that it is prepared in principle to accept the Common External Tariff and the Common Agricultural Policy.

As regards accommodation for outside interests, the only specific issues Britain has raised in the negotiations relate to access for New Zealand butter and lamb and Commonwealth sugar and to relationships between Commonwealth developing countries and the enlarged community.

Certain arrangements which Britain is seeking in its own interest could help some of our exports. For example, as I have already told the House, nine of the twelve industrial materials for which Britain has requested special arrangements are of interest to Canada. These are aluminum, lead, zinc, newsprint, wood pulp, plywood, phosphorus, ferro-silicon and silicon carbide. Together they account for more than one-fifth of our sales in the British market.

There would also be, in case of enlargement of the E.E.C., a transitional period during which Canadian exporters could adjust to the new situation. The British have proposed that the application of the common tariff on industrial goods be staged over three years and that there should be a transitional period of six years for agriculture.

On the basis of my discussions with European leaders, I can say that Britain and the E.E.C. are prepared to explore with us areas where their interests may to some extent coincide with our own. They are also willing to maintain a two-way flow of views and information with Canada throughout the negotiations. We hope that their agenda will not be too rigid to allow them to do these things in a meaningful way.

It would, however, be misleading for me to suggest that there is prospect of any major accommodation of Canadian trade interests in the short term. Apart from whatever possibilities may exist for adjustments based on mutuality of interests, we must assume that, if the negotiations succeed, Canadian exports to Britain will eventually be subject to a Common External Tariff and a Common Agricultural Policy.

The general situation as far as access for Canadian goods is concerned would be significantly improved if the trading countries of the world undertook, during the enlargement negotiations or before the end of the transitional period, a broad negotiation to reduce tariffs and non-tariff barriers to trade. This would mitigate the trade diverting effects of E.E.C. enlargement in much the same way as the Dillon and Kennedy Rounds eased the impact on third countries of the original formation of the E.E.C.

For the present, however, European energies are being concentrated on the re-shaping of Europe. In Brussels, it was emphasized that "élargissement" is only one of the current preoccupations of the E.E.C.—the other being "approfondissement," the progressive transformation of the Community from a customs union into a full economic and monetary union. We suggested that they should give more thought to the need for a "modialisation"—or adaptation of the results of the enlargement negotiations to the requirements of world trade.

European Views

In both Brussels and London, there was a tendency to agree that the Canadians were exaggerating the impact of E.E.C. enlargement on their trade. I was told that many of our exports would benefit from the dynamics of growth of the enlarged Community and its rapidly expanding import needs. Reference was made to the fact that the E.E.C.'s imports have more than doubled since 1958 when the Community came into being. It was also pointed out that the average level of the Common External Tariff on industrial goods was lower than that of the United States. Other favourable factors, including intercompany arrangements, could, some Europeans believe, ensure continued exports to an enlarged Community of some of our industrial goods.

In our meetings in London, the British sought to convince us that there would always be a large market for Canadian hard wheat in Britain because it was needed to maintain the right balance in milling operations.

We were repeatedly assured by all that the policy of the E.E.C. (and perhaps even more so of an enlarged E.E.C.) would be responsible and outward-looking. In fact, all said Europe "would not be comfortable with an inward-looking orientation."

We listened carefully to these reassuring assertions. I said we sincerely hoped that events would bear out the assumption of faster European economic growth following enlargement. This would not help us however, we emphasized, in those cases where their tariffs or other trade barriers were highly restrictive, as in the agricultural sector.

If Europeans are going to continue to need our industrial materials to sustain efficient economic growth, why impose on themselves the burden of paying significant customs duties on some of these products? If the enlarged Community will continue to need our wheat, should not the relevant regulations of the Common Agricultural Policy be adjusted to facilitate such trade.

I welcome their predictions that an enlarged Community would be outward-looking and said that we hoped to see this reflected in the progress of the GATT work program and in future initiatives toward trade liberalization.

Canadian Strategy

What will be the Canadian attitude in the months and years to come? We shall continue, as I indicated, to keep considerations of this kind before our trading partners in Europe throughout the negotiations. We shall continue to seek areas of mutuality of interests. We shall continue to urge the E.E.C. and the applicant countries, when they are weighing the merits of alternative solutions, to include in the balance the interests of third countries and the future of the world trading community.

As honourable members know, my colleague, Mr. Sharp, is now in Europe and will be discussing the implications of E.E.C. enlargement for broad Canada-Europe relations.

Our discussions will be pursued in the coming months with all present and prospective members of the Community. In our consultations with them, we are placing considerable emphasis on the kind of relationship which an enlarged Community would have with Canada and other countries and trading groups.

As the negotiations in Europe proceed, we shall be considering how our important contractual rights and obligations can be put into play most effectively. We shall also be reviewing the implications of E.E.C. enlargement for Britain's preferential access to the Canadian market.

In the meantime, we shall use our influence in the GATT to maintain the momentum of trade liberalization efforts and press in particular for a major round of negotiations before the results of the enlargement negotiations are put into effect. We shall continue to urge the United States to provide, with the E.E.C. and other major world traders, the leadership and support which is essential if these efforts are to succeed. We had the opportunity to discuss these matters recently with members of the United States Administration when the Joint Canada-United States Committee on Trade and Economic Affairs met November 23-24 in Ottawa.

We shall have no illusions, however, that we can safely leave the protection of Canadian interests to others. As a major trading partner of Britain and a significant market for the E.E.C. and the applicant countries, Canada is not without bargaining power. These countries all wish to do more business with us; we shall insist that the terms on which we trade are fair to us as well as to them.

It will continue to be a key objective of Canadian policy to intensify our trading relations with Europe as a whole. There will be adjustments to be made because of enlargement but in view of the magnitude and variety of Europe's import needs, there should be many opportunities there for Canadian trade. We must strive to gain a share of European markets which is more in line with our role in world trade generally.

In Industry, Trade and Commerce, we have already been giving greater emphasis to this area in our departmental programs. One-third of the officer strength of our trade commissioner service is now engaged in Europe. We are devoting more resources to trade fairs and missions in the European Economic Community. We are seeking to expand the framework for scientific and technological cooperation with a number of European countries. For example, following a science and technology mission to Belgium in June, we have drafted an agreement to facilitate this type of cooperation with that country.

In the first ten months of this year, our exports to the Community were 43 per cent above those in the corresponding period of 1969. In 1970, the E.E.C. will be, for the first time, a considerably more than $1 billion market for Canadian goods.

Our activities in some of the countries which are or will be associated with the E.E.C. are also being stepped up. For example, we have just had important discussions in Ottawa with a high level delegation from Algeria. These talks have led among other things to the sale of from 850,000 to 1 million metric tons of wheat for delivery over the next four years.

We will be continually seeking ways of improving the effectiveness of our trade development activities in the E.E.C. and associated countries. I hope that Canadian exporters will also ask themselves whether there is anything more they could do to expand their sales to this dynamic trading group.

The public and private sectors in Canada will have to work closely together in order to minimize the adverse effects of E.E.C. enlargement on our trade and to maximize its positive elements. I know that we can count on all sectors of Canadian industry and I assure them that the Government will do its part.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, December 2, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

NEW MEMBER

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has received from the Chief Electoral Officer a certificate of the election and return of Jack Murta, Esquire, for the electoral district of Lisgar.

* * *

NEW MEMBER INTRODUCED

Jack Murta, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Lisgar, introduced by the Hon. Robert L. Stanfield and the Hon. W. G. Dinsdale.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

First report of Standing Committee on Regional Development—Mr. Morison.

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[Translation]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

STATEMENT ON INCREASES IN PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in a few seconds I will have the pleasure of presenting a motion for first reading of a bill to amend the Pension Act.

As this bill is so closely related to the general question of rates of pension and war veterans allowances, I am taking advantage of the occasion to make clear the government's intentions on that subject. May I add that I am delighted to announce, in concrete terms, the plans to improve the benefits which are the right of those who served our country when democracy was being threatened in the world.

I am confident that the statement I make today will be welcomed by every member of this House, as it will warm the hearts of a large number of veterans.

The government plans to increase all pensions which are paid for death, or disability, related to military service by 10 per cent as of April 1 next.

Because these pensions are paid as a matter of right they are not subject to a means test and are free of income tax.

Under the revised schedules, the 100 per cent disability pension for a married man will rise by $408 to $4,464 per year. His single counterpart will find his pension increased by $324 to $3,504 per annum and the widow's pension will go up by $240 to $2,640 annually. Pensions for children and dependent parents, brothers and sisters will be proportionately increased.

These increases mean that an additional $22,000,000 will be paid to our pensioners next year, over and above the $214,000,000 they will receive this year.

We also propose to align the rates for pensions, paid under Parts I to X of the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, with those of the Pension Act. It is under this act that pensions are awarded to merchant seamen, ferry pilots, auxiliary services supervisors, and other quasi-military personnel who suffered disability, or died, as a result of their war service.

• (2:10 p.m.)

[English]

Also, Mr. Speaker, next April 1 we propose to raise the maximum allowances payable under the War Veterans Allowances Act and under Part XI of the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, by 15 per cent.

The new rate for single recipients will go up by $16 a month to $121, and the married rate will increase by $26 to $201 monthly. The rates for orphans and blind persons will be similarly increased. The present rates have been in effect since 1966 which explains why the WVA increase is 5 per cent higher than the pension increase.

War veterans allowances are subject to a means test, as before, which is based on income ceilings for single and married recipients. When the rates are raised these ceilings will be increased from $145 to $161 and from $245 to $271 respectively. We estimate that these revisions will mean that WVA and CWA recipients will receive an additional $21 million in the 1971-1972 fiscal year.

At the same time as the new WVA rates and ceilings go into effect, the regulations will be changed to provide that recipients who are also eligible for old age security and guaranteed income supplements, which are also being increased, will be deemed to be receiving the full amounts to which they are entitled under those programs. Their war veterans allowances will then be adjusted to supplement their OAS and GIS payments to bring their incomes to the level of their relevant income ceilings.

Mr. Speaker, it has given me the greatest personal satisfaction to be able to announce, on the same day, the increases in pensions and war veterans allowances as well as having the privilege of sponsoring a bill to enact into law the results of the most extensive review of the Pension Act in half a century. The three components have together resulted in a complete package of benefits for those who, when they were needed, placed their lives at the disposal of this country and for whom Canada has a special obligation.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, although I have been waiting with bated breath since nine o'clock this morning for the statement by the minister, I was surprised about five minutes ago when I was handed three pages. While I am heartened by the fact that there are increases, why it took so long to decide on an increase of 10 per cent for disability pensions and 15 per cent for those war veterans receiving allowances, who have not had an increase since 1966, is beyond my powers of imagination.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marshall: The important thing is, Mr. Speaker, that this poverty line that we keep referring to every day seems to be away up in the clouds as far as this government is concerned.

Mr. McGrath: Too little, too late.

Mr. Marshall: In a speech the minister made in the House in reply to my party's motion on October 27 urging the government to implement the necessary legislation, he said that the wheels of justice are slow. I am heartened, as I am sure all hon. members and the many thousands of Canadian war veterans will be heartened, that the wheels of justice are starting to move again—

Mr. McGrath: They need some oil.

Mr. Marshall: —and that we can see some ray of hope for these deserving Canadians.

It would appear most of the recommendations of the Veterans Affairs Committee are acceptable to the government, the most important being those relating to the Hong Kong veterans and other prisoners of war and their dependants. They include increased payments for those suffering exceptional incapacity, consequential disability, loss of paired organs, the retroactivity clause and the acceptance of an organization arrived at by compromise for the handling of applications and appeals.

As to the Hong Kong veterans and prisoners of war, the white paper produced in August, 1969, over one year ago, indicated recognition by the government at that time of their need, but an amendment was not introduced immediately to grant the benefits which the government said they agreed were deserved. The result is that even though the benefits will be retroactive, many of those veterans who suffered such exceptional hardship will not be able to experience the joy and satisfaction of some justice for their wives and children, if not for themselves, because they have passed on.

[Mr. Dubé.]

On page 37 of the white paper on income security, Mr. Speaker, there is a reference to veterans and the interrelationship of war veterans allowances and workmen's compensation. I find it very distressing that, some 25 years after these men in the prime of their productive life served their country in war, the government is now saying they were not really fighting an enemy, they were not dedicating their lives, they were not being tortured in prisoner of war camps but were "work-connected", to use the phrase in the white paper. I shudder at this phrase indicating that it is considered that veterans pensions should be integrated with the Canada Pension Plan and with workmen's compensation. This bothers me, Mr. Speaker. While I do not want to appear pessimistic, it is becoming, to me at least, more obvious day by day that the Department of Veterans Affairs will be gradually phased out and absorbed by the Department of National Health and Welfare. This is completely unacceptable to my party and, I am sure, to the nearly one million surviving war veterans and their dependants. I can only hope that somewhere in the cold heart of present-day bureaucratic thinking there remains some human consideration for the dedication of Canadian war veterans.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I say in a spirit of comradeship that my party offers our pledge of acceptance of this bill and our complete co-operation in its speedy passage. We are prepared to sit day and night in the parliamentary process to achieve third reading and passage of the bill.

This bill is a very significant step forward in the consideration of the dedication and service of some one million of our citizens, but there is much more work to be done. There are many phases of veterans legislation that must be re-examined and reassessed on a continuing basis. To mention a few, there are the merchant marine, the fire-fighters and the Newfoundland foresters, and we must also examine the Veterans Land Act to try to help those veterans who are still without decent accommodation.

• (2:20 p.m.)

I hope that in the not too distant future we who sit in this House, even if the wheels of justice and of Parliament are slow, will be able one day to stand proudly because of the feeling that we have paid our debt to the war veterans of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we in this party understand the pleasure that the minister feels in being able to introduce today a bill with regard to veterans legislation and also in being able to announce increases in the levels of disability pensions and payments under the War Veterans Allowance Act. I might be pardoned for suggesting that the very good bill that is to come as well as these increases are to a large extent a tribute to the good work that was done by the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs which was ably assisted by the representatives of the veterans organizations of Canada. However, Mr. Speaker, even though the minister may feel that this is a pleasant experience for him, I am afraid I must tell him that many veterans in Canada, especially those who have waited a long time for this announcement, will be disappointed.

The previous speaker has referred to the poverty levels which forever seem to be above the income levels of veterans and other groups in this country. I join with him in urging the government to try to bring our veterans at least up to the recognized poverty level.

The minister's announcement, Mr. Speaker, deals with two main categories of payments, namely, pensions that are paid as of right, and allowances that are paid under a means test. With respect to the pensions that are paid as of right, the minister has announced an increase of 10 per cent, effective April 1, 1971. May I remind him that a short while ago the national veterans organizations of Canada addressed an emergency appeal to the government, pointing out that there was a crisis in the experience of veterans. That group, in a very responsible manner, urged that there be increases in veterans disability pensions of 6 per cent as of September 1, 1970, and an additional 6 per cent as of January 1, 1971. A number of veterans have written to me and complained that their organizations did not ask for more. I suggest that that total of 12 per cent, to be in effect by January 1, 1971, was a reasonable request and that we are short-changing the veterans by saying to them that their increase is going to be only 10 per cent and that it will not be effective until April 1, 1971. I hope that these payments can be made sooner. It seems to me that this piece of legislation ought to be dealt with before we rise for the Christmas recess.

With respect to the proposed increase in the war veterans allowance payments, the minister emphasized that the increase in this area is 15 per cent. I suggest that despite that increase, we shall still be keeping these people below the poverty line. What bothers me most about the amendments proposed to the War Veterans Allowance Act is that the ceiling on the total income that recipients of the war veterans allowance can have has been raised, not by the 15 per cent that applies to the allowance itself, but by a figure of only 11 per cent in the case of single veterans, and by only 10 per cent in the case of married veterans.

I ask hon. members to listen for a moment to what this produces by way of a result in actual dollars. Under the legislation as it now stands, it is possible for a single veteran to have, by combining his pension, his war veterans allowance and his old age security pension, an income equal to $40 more than is the case for a non-veteran receiving the old age security pension and the guaranteed income supplement. I think that is as little as it ought to be. Yet in this proposal, the single veteran will be allowed only $26 more than is allowed to a person receiving the old age security pension and guaranteed income supplement. In the case of a married veteran at the present time, the ceiling is such that he can receive $30 more than the married person who is a non-veteran. That figure is being reduced to $16. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that is a case of short-changing. It is not good enough.

I hope when we get into the details of this bill, whether in Committee of the Whole House or in the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, that at least we will be able to get those ceilings changed. The most difficult part of the War Veterans Allowance Act is its ceilings. I know that it is difficult not only for the veterans but also for the administration, and it seems to me that at least the same percentage that was applied to the number of dollars being granted should apply to the ceiling. I think we might even go further. The two matters I hope we will deal with before this legislation is disposed of are the ceilings on total income in the War Veterans Allowance Act and the effective date of both of the proposed changes. April 1 is too far away. Many veterans will not live to see the increase.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, the bill the hon. minister commented on just now purports to increase veterans' pensions.

The bill is certainly timely and I welcome it as requests for an increase of veterans' pensions have been made over a long period. I remember that several times, on behalf of my colleagues, I urged the government to review the relevant regulations in order to improve the pensioners' situation.

Our suggestion and representations have at last had concrete results. This increase in veterans' pensions is not a luxury and it will certainly not make millionaires of our veterans. We are convinced however that this adjustment will be an appreciable improvement, because under the amendment to the regulations as a result of the passage of this legislation, the higher pensions will surely increase the purchasing power of the veterans who greatly need it.

This is why we are vigorously supporting the proposals of the government, but following consideration of the bill, we will perhaps move some amendments to improve it.

At any rate, I am convinced that Canada will not be poorer, once the rights of those people who fought for freedom are recognized.

I can speak on good ground, because a number of veterans and present members of the armed forces living in my constituency have often asked me to make representations to the authorities, in order to improve their lot. When we hear statements such as the one made today, we must co-operate and be pleased with the fact that the government has finally decided to do something really worthwhile.

* * *

[English]

AUDITOR GENERAL

ALLEGED CONSPIRACY TO DESTROY OFFICE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a motion without notice. The urgent circumstances are that it is unfortunately clear that this government is determined to destroy by both open and devious means the office of the Auditor General.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: Despite the cries of outrage from taxpayers and political commentators, Bill C-190 remains on the order paper even though it is offensive to all members of this party, other members of the House and 99 per cent of the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2:30 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: However despicable this legislative bludgeoning of a parliamentary officer, it is almost equalled by the attack on his effectiveness through the deliberate red-circling and downgrading of his key staff members.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The President of the Privy Council seeks the floor on a point of order.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I understand the importance of the Standing Order under which the hon. member seeks the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion and I have no objection to the debating material which he has imported into what ought to be an economical method of informing the House as to his intentions. Of course, the danger is that if debating material, charges against the government, argumentation and, at some points, hysterical outbursts are permitted under this procedural rule, it will be necessary for this side of the House to ask for an opportunity to reply.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: If it is to be admitted that debating material can be used and developed at this point, then fairness would require that members of the government should have an opportunity to reply in a similar way, debating equally. That is my point of order.

Some hon. Members: Then accept the motion.

Mr. Hees: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister has asked for a chance to debate this matter. All he has to do is give unanimous consent on that side of the House and he will get his debate right now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Peace River wish to address the Chair on the point of order?

Mr. Baldwin: No, Mr. Speaker. I was just about ready to put the motion.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Mr. Speaker: I should like to refer to the point of order raised by the President of the Privy Council. Hon. members who were in the House yesterday will recall that in similar circumstances I did indicate that I thought Standing Order 43 should not make it possible for hon. members to debate the substance of the subject they had in mind. The Standing Order is clear enough. A procedure has evolved recently since Standing Order 26 was amended perhaps by hon. members resorting to a procedural form which had been used over the years under Standing Order 26. In view of the fact that Standing Order 43 does not provide for a rebuttal I think the point made by the President of the Privy Council is well taken when he says that debating material should not be presented to the House by an hon. member seeking leave to propose a motion under Standing Order 43. However, I assume the hon. member for Peace River is now coming to his motion.

Mr. Baldwin: I was simply attempting to come within the words which require that urgent and pressing reasons for putting the motion should be established.

It is almost equalled by the attack on his effectiveness by the deliberate red-circling and downgrading—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I respectfully suggest that the hon. member proceed to the motion he has in mind as quickly as possible. I suggest to him that he cannot argue the substance of the matter at this time.

Mr. Baldwin: With all due respect, I am putting forward reasons why this motion should be placed before the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: The last sentence is: The Auditor General is thus hampered in recruiting and retaining the skilled employees essential to his task.

The motion I wish to move is as follows:

That the President of the Treasury Board no longer enjoys the confidence of the House, and the conspiracy against the office of the Auditor General must cease immediately, and measures more in accord with his right to scrutinize on behalf of the taxpayers substituted for Bill C-190.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member requires, of course, the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Hees: If you want a debate, say yes.

Mr. Speaker: I have to inquire whether there is unanimity which would allow the hon. member to put the motion.

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I sense there is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

SALARY RANGE OF STAFF—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43, by unanimous consent, in connection with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. It is related to the subject which has just been discussed, and in view of the statements made in that connection I will omit the preamble or explanatory statement and simply move, seconded by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North:

That the question of the salary range of the staff of the Auditor General be referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, so that the committee might consider recommending that the said salary range be determined by parliament rather than by the Treasury Board.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion which the hon. member for Selkirk seeks to propose. Again, the unanimous consent of the House is required.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I have to advise that there is no unanimity and in these circumstances, by virtue of Standing Order 43, the motion cannot be put at this time.

* * *

COMMUNICATIONS

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask the House to agree to a motion concerning Bell Canada.

Yesterday the Canadian Transport Commission again approved an increase in basic residential and business telephone rates amounting to approximately $22.5 million. It was only a year ago that the CTC approved increases requested by Bell Canada which added at that time $27.5 million to the company's revenues. The new decision means that Bell Canada will have an increase of $50 million in a year and will be able to earn a 7.5 per cent rate of return on invested capital compared with the maximum of 6.6 per cent allowed by the former Board of Transport Commissioners. It is obvious that the Canadian Transport Commission does not protect the people of Canada and continues to allow Bell Canada to milk the public.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I bring it to the attention of the hon. member, again with respect, that he should indicate the terms of his motion. Standing Order 43 will become difficult to accept as a workable Standing Order if hon. members do not take into account its limitations. Hon. members have the right, under the terms of this rule, to indicate briefly why there is urgency, why the matter they have in mind should be put now in preference to the ordinary business of the House, but I do not think they can import debate concerning the substance of the matter proposed for discussion in the suggested motion.

Bell Canada Rate Increase

Mr. Orlikow: I have completed the reasons for seeking unanimous consent. I will therefore move, seconded by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre:

That the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications be authorized to meet forthwith and proceed as quickly as possible to investigate and analyse the activities of Bell Canada and its subsidiaries, and report back to the House as soon as possible.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

[Translation]

This motion, proposed under Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. I must therefore ask hon. members whether they are all in agreement.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimous consent.

[English]

Therefore the motion cannot be submitted at this time.

* * *

ELECTION EXPENSES

CONCURRENCE IN RECOMMENDATION IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Hyl Chappell (Peel South) moved that the recommendation contained in the first report of the Special Committee on Election Expenses, presented to the House on Thursday, November 26, 1970, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

PENSION ACT AND CIVILIAN WAR PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES ACT

PROVISION OF INCREASES IN BENEFITS

Hon. Jean Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-203, to amend the Pension Act and the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PUBLIC SERVICE PENSION ADJUSTMENT ACT PAYMENTS—SUPERANNUATION ACT PENSION DISCONTINUANCES

Question No. 67—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. In each year since the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act of 1959 was passed, how many persons have received payments thereunder?

Questions

2. In each of the above years, what was the total amount paid out under the said Act.

3. In each of the above years, what was the average amount paid under the said Act (a) to retired public servants (b) to widows (c) to others?

4. In each of the last five years, either calendar or financial, for which statistics are available, how many pensions under the Public Service Superannuation Act (a) to retired public servants (b) to widows of public servants or widows of retired public servants, have been discontinued because of the death of the superannuate?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Number of persons who have received payments in each year since the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act of 1959 was passed:

Year	Number
1959-60	14,311
1960-61	13,885
1961-62	12,553
1962-63	11,709
1963-64	10,852
1964-65	10,077
1965-66	9,078
1966-67	8,162
1967-68	7,483
1968-69	6,860
1969-70	6,651

2. Total amount paid out under the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act for each of the above years:

Year	Total
1959-60	$3,112,231.
1960-61	2,956,515.
1961-62	2,817,263.
1962-63	2,657,706.
1963-64	2,504,503.
1964-65	2,344,711.
1965-66	2,236,212.
1966-67	2,038,329.
1967-68	1,905,478.
1968-69	1,777,869.
1969-70	1,641,304.

3. Average Amount Paid Out To:

Year	Retired Public Servants	Widows	Others
1959-60	$226.72	$124.88	$12.32
1960-61	225.43	124.42	11.79
1961-62	222.01	123.92	10.35
1962-63	220.66	123.59	10.06
1963-64	220.26	123.75	7.99
1964-65	217.94	123.08	6.19
1965-66	216.03	122.69	7.13
1966-67	212.52	122.64	5.93
1967-68	210.27	121.27	6.11
1968-69	208.19	119.21	4.56
1969-70	196.52	125.05	5.79

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

4. In each of the last five years, the number of pensions paid under the Public Service Superannuation Act which have been discontinued because of death:

(a) To Retired Public Servants:		(b) To Widows:
1965-66	1,489	1965-66	382
1966-67	1,523	1966-67	508
1967-68	1,572	1967-68	503
1968-69	1,751	1968-69	514
1969-70	1,899	1969-70	508

DUMPING OF NERVE GAS IN THE ATLANTIC OCEAN BY THE UNITED STATES

Question No. 88—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

Did the Government of Canada make any representations to the Government of the United States regarding the latter's action of dumping 3,000 tons of nerve gas rockets in the Atlantic Ocean and, if so, what was the nature of these representations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Government of Canada did not make any representations to the Government of the United States on this matter. Shortly after the United States intention to dump nerve gas rockets in the Atlantic became known, a team of Canadian scientific experts, including oceanographers and marine biologists, made a careful analysis of the technical aspects of the matter. The principal conclusions of these experts were: (a) Given the properties of cement under pressure, it was unlikely that the concrete vaults encasing the rockets would be ruptured; (b) Even if a sudden release of the gas should indeed occur, the local effect would be limited to a relatively small area for a period of less than a day; (c) Because of the rapid decomposition of the gas in salt water, there would be no effect on the surface. A high level team of British experts arrived at similar conclusions in an independent study. In the light of these technical findings it was concluded that there was no demonstrable risk to Canadians or Canadian territory. In these circumstances, and taking into account all relevant aspects of current international law, it was decided that no sufficient legal basis existed for Canada to make a protest against the proposed action.

COMPUTER SERVICES BUREAU—ADVISABILITY OF TENDERING WORK TO INDEPENDENT FIRMS

Question No. 166—Mr. Robinson:

Will the government consider the advisability of tendering the work of the Computer Services Bureau to independent firms and, if so, what economies are anticipated?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Government departments and agencies have the option of using commercial, university, other Government departments' computer facilities or the Computer Services Bureau in order to satisfy their computing needs. In making their demand for services through the Computer Services Bureau they indicate which facilities are to be used and, in the case of services outside the Government, they inform the Bureau of the tendering or negotiations they have already made with the individual companies. The Computer Services Bureau enters into contracts for these services. It makes payment for the use of all these computer services and in turn recovers the full cost from the department or agency concerned.

PROCEDURE FOLLOWED BY RCMP REGARDING INQUIRIES FROM FBI CONCERNING DESERTERS

Question No. 207—Mr. Gilbert:

What procedure is followed by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police regarding inquiries from the United States Federal Bureau of Investigation concerning deserters from the United States Forces?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Upon receipt of an inquiry from the Federal Bureau of Investigation, an investigation is conducted to determine if the person concerned is in Canada in violation of the Immigration Act. If so, this fact is drawn to the attention of the Immigration Department.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—MAN-HOURS SAVED BECAUSE OF UTILIZATION OF COMPUTERS

Question No. 218—Mr. Robinson:

How many man-hours have been saved as a result of the utilization of computers by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development during each year since computers have been used?

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Detailed estimates of man hours saved as a result of the utilization of computers by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development are not maintained. In general, the use of computers has improved and extended the analytical techniques of the planning, research and management components of the Department without the recruitment of large clerical staffs.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—LAY-OFFS AND HIRINGS BECAUSE OF UTILIZATION OF COMPUTERS

Question No. 219—Mr. Robinson:

As a result of the use of computers by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development how many employees have been (a) laid off (b) hired?

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): (a) No employee has been laid off by this Department as a result of the use of computers. (b) As of November 18, the Department employed 27 analysts, programmers and auxiliary equipment operators.

UTILIZATION OF ARMORIES AS YOUTH HOSTELS

Question No. 254—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many armories were utilized as youth hostels during the Summer of 1970?

2. How many youths used the armories for shelter during the Summer of 1970?

3. What was the cost of providing the service at the armories for youths?

4. Will the plan be continued in 1971?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): 1. 13 (2 in Vancouver).

2. Approximately 69,202 bed nights.

3. $155,000.

4. At this time the government is in the process of evaluating the 1970 summer emergency hostel programme and no plans have been formulated to date for a similar programme during the summer of 1971.

[English]

*SEAWAY TOLLS

Question No. 274—Mr. Southam:

To hold Seaway Tolls at their present level, is it the government's intention to follow the recent legislative action in the USA where Congress would forgive a large interest debt, provide for tax rebates and other debt-forgiving features with a view to placing the seaway on a sound financial footing?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority advises as follows: A decision has not yet been taken on this issue, but this and similar views will be taken into consideration.

[English]

YARMOUTH AIRPORT

Question No. 313—Mr. Comeau:

1. What amount of money has been spent over the past two years for the remodelling of Yarmouth Airport?

2. Are any monies allocated for the continued remodelling of this Airport during the next three years?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. $145,000.

2. No.

VISCOUNTS, DC-8'S AND DC-9'S

Question No. 331—Mr. Fortin:

How many Viscount DC-8 and DC-9 aircraft did Air Canada operate in each year 1965 to 1970 inclusive?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows:

Number of aircraft in operation

	Summer Peak (August)			Year End
	Viscount	DC-9	DC-8	Viscount	DC-9	DC-8
1965	39	0	16	39	0	16
1966	39	6	18	39	6	18
1967	39	13	18	37	18	21
1968	38	27	24	33	30	27
1969	31	33	31	28	33	32
1970	28	36	38	23	36	38

Questions

ALASKA HIGHWAY CONTRACT

Question No. 340—Mr. Nielsen:

1. Did the government call for tenders for the clearing, grading and sub-base from approximately Mile 900 to approximately Mile 930 on the Alaska Highway in preparation for paving and, if so, what are the names of the contractors who submitted bids and the amount of each such bid?

2. Was the contract awarded to the lowest bidder?

3. Was the contract later renegotiated with the contractor and, if so (a) were public tenders invited before such renegotiation (b) what was the difference between the contractor's initial bid and the renegotiated price for the work?

4. What was the final amount paid by the government to the contractor for this work?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes, tenders were called on May 1, 1969, from Mile 909.2 to Mile 928.5.

Contractor	Amount
Nanaimo Bulldozing Co. Ltd.	$ 961,584.00
Poole Engineering Co. Ltd.	1,023,822.00
Hirtz Bros. Construction Ltd.	1,153,361.00
General Enterprises Ltd.	1,241,351.24
Dawson Construction (Northern) Ltd.	1,257,299.00
Cattermole-Trethewey Contractors Ltd.	1,319,020.00
Peter Kiewit Sons Co. of Canada	1,407,536.00

2. Yes.

3. The original contract covered from Mile 909.2 to Mile 928.5. By the authority of Treasury Board Minute 691059 of July 30, 1969 the contract was extended to include from Mile 904.5 to Mile 909.2 at the same unit price for an estimated additional $375,000.

4. The final amount paid was $1,522,586.54, which includes $186,002.54 consisting of overruns of estimated quantities paid at contract unit prices and minor contingency work paid for under the terms of the contract.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT—LAY-OFFS AND HIRINGS BECAUSE OF USE OF COMPUTERS

Question No. 341—Mr. Robinson:

As a result of the use of computers by the Department of Transport how many employees have been (a) laid off (b) hired?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): As a direct result of the use of computers by the Ministry of Transport, there has been no staff lay-offs and 51 people have been hired.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT—MAN-HOURS SAVED BECAUSE OF UTILIZATION OF COMPUTERS

Question No. 342—Mr. Robinson:

How many man-hours have been saved as a result of the utilization of computers by the Department of Transport during each year since computers have been used?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): No direct estimate is possible of the total number of man-hours that have been saved in the Ministry of Transport as a result of the introduction of computers. This is due to the fact that the largest proportion of the comprehensive analysis of data done by electronic computers, both in the operational and statistical fields, could not have been tackled by manual or desk calculator methods.

[Mr. Duquet.]

VETERANS—DISABILITY PENSIONS

Question No. 357—Mr. MacRae:

1. As of October 31, 1970, how many veterans are in receipt of Disability Pensions?

2. Exclusive of the Attendance Allowance, how many veterans are in receipt of $5,496 a year or more?

3. Were War Veterans Allowances increased in 1965 as stated in Hansard on page 624 of October 27, 1970?

4. What is the average amount received annually by War Disability Pensioners (exclusive of Attendance Allowance)?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. 131,636.

2. 97.

3. These increases were announced on November 10, 1964, and were incorporated into the War Veterans Allowance Act on June 10, 1965. Their effective date was September 1, 1964.

4. Pensions are paid in twenty different classes, depending upon the degree of disability. The annual liability stands at $151,667,982. On this basis the average for all classes together, exclusive of attendance allowance, is $1,110.

LIBERIAN TANKER "ARROW"—COST OF CLEAN UP OPERATIONS

Question No. 376—Mr. Robinson:

1. Will the government consider the advisability of suing the owners of the Liberian tanker Arrow, Sunstone Marine S.A. of Panama, Aristotle Onassis, Imperial Oil Company and any others for the cost of the pollution cleanup?

2. Has the government been formally contacted by Imperial Oil for contribution towards payment of the company's expenditures for the cleanup operations resulting from the tanker Arrow?

3. Will the government be reimbursed through "TOVALOP" for the costs of the cleanup operation of the Arrow?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Law officers of the Crown and special Counsel are considering all avenues open to the Crown in the case of the Liberian tanker Arrow including the prospects of suing any person responsible at law for pollution cleanup costs.

2. No.

3. In part only, as recovery under "TOVALOP" is limited to recovery at a rate of $100 (U.S.) per gross registered ton shareable on a pro rata basis between owner and government. "TOVALOP" is purely a voluntary scheme and the acceptance of payment thereunder by the government would constitute a bar to any other action.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS—LAY-OFFS AND HIRINGS BECAUSE OF USE OF COMPUTERS

Question No. 378—Mr. Robinson:

As a result of the use of computers by the Department of Communications how many employees have been (a) laid off (b) hired?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications): (a) Nil; (b) five permanent employees; 10 part-time employees.

INSCRIPTION ON BANK NOTES ISSUED BY BANK OF CANADA

Question No. 391—Mr. Caouette:

1. Of all bank notes issued by the Bank of Canada bearing the inscription "The Bank of Canada will pay to the bearer on demand" (a) what does the inscription mean (b) what will the Bank of Canada pay (c) will it remit gold to the bearer (d) will it remit bills of another denomination (e) how long have the bills borne this inscription?

2. Of the new twenty dollar bills issued in 1969 by the Bank of Canada bearing the inscription "This note is legal tender" (a) what does the inscription mean (b) is this bill backed by gold and, if not, on what is it based (c) what difference is there between these new bills and the others which are outstanding and which are only promises to pay (d) for what reasons has the Bank of Canada made the change?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. (a) Prior to the amendment of the Bank of Canada Act in 1967, Section 21 (1) of the Act provided that notes should be payable to bearer on demand. (b) and (c) Prior to the amendment of the Bank of Canada Act in 1967, Section 22 (1) of the Act provided that "The Bank shall sell gold to any person who makes demand therefor at the head office of the Bank and tenders the purchase price in legal tender, but only in the form of bars containing approximately four hundred ounces of fine gold". Prior to the amendment of the Bank of Canada Act in 1967, Section 22 (2) of the Act provided that the Governor in Council, from time to time and for such period as he may deem desirable, may suspend the operation of subsection (1) and remove such suspension, and under this authority the operation of Section 22 (1) of the Act was suspended annually by Order-in-Council. (d) Yes. (e) Since 1935.

2. (a) The inscription "this note is legal tender" appears on the new $20 Bank of Canada note in conformity with Section 7 of the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act as amended in 1967. (b) No. Section 21 (1) of the Bank of Canada Act provides that notes shall be a first charge on the assets of the Bank. (c) There is no difference between the new issue of the $20 denomination and the previous issues in respect of their designation as legal tender. (d) To conform with the amended provisions of the Bank of Canada Act and the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS—LAY-OFFS AND HIRINGS BECAUSE OF USE OF COMPUTERS

Question No. 393—Mr. Robinson:

As a result of the use of computers by the Department of Public Works how many employees have been (a) laid off (b) hired?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): (a) None; (b) 11.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS—MAN-HOURS SAVED BECAUSE OF UTILIZATION OF COMPUTERS

Question No. 394—Mr. Robinson:

How many man-hours have been saved as a result of the utilization of computers by the Department of Public Works during each year since computers have been used?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): There has been no direct savings in man-hours resulting from the use of computers. However their use has contributed to the provision of complex information which would have required additional man-hours had computers not been used.

WATER SYSTEM IN CARLING, NFLD.

Question No. 417—Mr. Marshall:

Has the Province of Newfoundland made application to DREE for funds to provide a water system in Curling, Newfoundland and, if so (a) has a decision been reached (b) what was the decision?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): No formal application has been received. (a) and (b) Not applicable.

PASSPORTS ISSUED

Question No. 423—Mr. McCleave:

1. Up to the end of September, how many passport applications were processed this year at each office issuing same, identifying the offices?

2. How many passports in that time were issued to applicants from Atlantic Canada?

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Up to the end of September, 1970, 335,178 passports were issued this year at offices in Canada as follows: Ottawa, 252,820; Toronto, 36,400; Montreal, 31,838; Vancouver, 14,120.

2. The Passport Office does not keep precise records of the province of origin of passport applications. However, a sampling of passport applications received in the first nine months of 1970 indicated that slightly less than 3 percent of passport applications originated in the Atlantic provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland.

*ADMISSION OF LANDED IMMIGRANTS TO CANADA WITHOUT SECURITY CHECKS

Question No. 488—Mr. Diefenbaker:

How many landed immigrants in each year 1966 to 1969 inclusive and 1970 to date have been admitted to Canada without being subject to security checks?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): All immigrants to Canada are subject to checks and examinations to determine whether they come within any of the categories of prohibited persons described in the Immigration Act, including those pertaining to security. However, these checks and examinations are waived in the case of individuals such as minor children, wives of Canadian residents and aged parents unless there are reasons to believe that they should also be subjected to the more detailed type of check normally carried out. There is no way of determining how many immigrants may have been admitted where such detailed checks were not made.

* * *

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

RETIRED FEDERAL CIVIL SERVANTS PENSIONS—WIDOWS PENSIONS

Question No. 65—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. How many retired federal civil servants are receiving pensions, including their basic pensions and any supplement or supplements added thereto, of amounts within each of the following brackets: (a) less than $20.00 per month (b) $20.00 to $29.99 per month (c) $30.00 to $39.99 per month (d) $40.00 to $49.99 per month (e) $50.00 to $59.99 per month (f) $60.00 to $69.99 per month (g) $70.00 to $79.99 per month (h) $80.00 to $89.99 per month (i) $90.00 to $99.99 per month (j) $100.00 to $149.99 per month (k) $150.00 to $199.99 per month (l) $200.00 to $249.99 per month (m) $250.00 to $299.99 per month (n) $300.00 per month and over?

2. How many widows of civil servants or of retired civil servants are receiving pensions, including their basic pensions and any supplement or supplements added thereto, of amounts within each of the brackets indicated in the above question?

3. What is the number of retired civil servants and also the number of widows of civil servants or of retired civil servants presently residing in each province?

4. In respect of how many orphans of federal civil servants are pensions being paid and what is the average amount thereof?

Return tabled.

FARM ANNEX AT ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY

Question No. 202—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. Has the government taken steps to close any parts or divisions of the farm annex at the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary and, if so, which parts or divisions, by name, have been closed and for what reason?

2. With respect to each such division for each of the past five years, is it considered that the operation thereof was profitable and, if so, what are the financial statistics with respect thereto?

3. For each of the past five years and for each of the commodities raised at the farm annex, to what extent has the cost of production been (a) above (b) below the market price?

4. Within the past five years, has any stock of cans been scrapped or discarded and, if so (a) how many such cans were discarded (b) what was the value thereof (c) what were the reasons for discarding them?

5. Within the past five years (a) were any commodities transported to any place for canning and, if so (i) which ones (ii) in what quantities (iii) at what cost (b) were they transported to any place from the point of canning and, if so (i) where (ii) at what cost?

6. Who did the canning referred to in part 5?

7. Is any acreage at the farm annex lying idle and, if so (a) what number of acres (b) for what reason?

Return tabled.

STORAGE OF GASOLINE AND OIL IN THE NORTH

Question No. 320—Mr. Robinson:

1. Does the federal government have any portable gasoline or oil tanks for use in the North?

2. What plan does the federal government have for storage of collapsible tanks for oil and fuel?

3. Will the federal government consider the feasibility of requiring the storage of gasoline and oil in collapsible storage tanks as a safety measure?

Return tabled.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, my starred question No. 12 has been on the order paper since October 8, along with 24 other questions I have on the order paper at the present time, none of which have been answered. Starred question No. 12 was on the order paper during the last session of Parliament as well. I see no reason for this long delay in answering the question. I would ask the hon. member to try to secure an answer for me.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, may I say that this year we have made every effort to keep a close check on questions and to determine, if questions are not answered, whether there is some reason for the delay. Several departments are involved at times when answers are compiled and we do try hard to keep on top of them. I will certainly take notice of the hon. member's remarks.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, starred question No. 80 was also put on the order paper on October 8. Starred questions should be answered fairly quickly. Starred question No. 80 was also on the order paper last session, having been placed there on February 20. It has now been on the order paper for nine months.

The question is a simple one. It asks the Minister without Portfolio responsible for Information Canada whether he would table in Parliament the background studies and consultant reports which were prepared by the task force on government information and by the Privy Council. If the answer is going to be no, then it does not take nine months to say no. If it is going to be yes, we should have had the answer by now. I would ask the minister to get busy on the job.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to answer a question that is within my power to answer, but this question should be directed to the Privy Council.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

AUDITOR GENERAL

DOWNGRADING OF POSITIONS OF SENIOR OFFICERS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave under Standing Order 26 to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the action of the Treasury Board in downgrading the senior officer positions in the Auditor General's office as a result of which most of the 28 senior officers have individually lost $2,400 per year since July 1, 1967, a period when most public servants were receiving raises. This sinister attack on the office of the Auditor General which impairs the efficiency of his important office ought to be debated forthwith.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North has filed a notice of his intention to propose a motion under Standing Order 26. I have given very serious consideration to the matter and have considered all the procedural aspects of the motion. The hon. member for Calgary North proposes that the business ordered for today be set aside so that the House may debate Treasury Board decision affecting the remuneration of senior officials of the Auditor General's office, going back to July 1, 1967. The hon. member charges that the efficiency of the Auditor General's office has been impaired as a result of such action by Treasury Board.

Hon. members know the criteria which must guide the Chair in relation to Standing Order 26. I must determine whether the subject matter sought to be discussed can be termed an emergency. The word "emergency" used in relation to Standing Order 26 has always been interpreted to refer to a sudden occurrence, a newly arising situation which, because of that aspect, requires the immediate, urgent consideration of the House.

Is this requirement met in the circumstances indicated by the hon. member for Calgary North? This is obviously a very important matter and one which is or should be of interest and concern to all hon. members; and there is an aspect of immediacy in the sense that relevant evidence has just been heard by the public accounts committee. On the other hand, the situation referred to in the proposed motion goes back to July, 1967.

It is hardly necessary to remind the House that the Auditor General's relation to the government has been brought to the attention of the House on a number of occasions in recent months. In particular, the matter was raised on April 6 last by the hon. member for Peace River, also under the provisions of Standing Order 26. On April 13 the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands again brought the situation to the attention of the House, at that time by way of a question of privilege. The hon. member's motion is based on a submission that there was an attempt to "harass and intimidate the Auditor General".

Motions for Papers

The Chair also has to take into account the possibility that the matter might be debated in other circumstances. The House has before it at the present time the bill that was referred to a moment ago by the hon. member for Peace River. The Auditor General's report is now before the Public Accounts Committee and it can be reasonably assumed by the Chair that in due course the committee's report will be debated in the House. What is perhaps even more relevant is that the budget debate will take place very soon. While I agree the matter is an important and urgent one which hon. members may wish to debate, for all these reasons I suggest such a debate should take place as part of a discussion on a substantive motion rather than within the somewhat limited framework provided under Standing Order 26.

• (2:50 p.m.)

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[Translation]

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, notices of motions Nos. 46 and 111 are acceptable to the government subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential documents and to the authorization of the government concerned.

[English]

OIL AND GAS LAND REGULATIONS IN YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Motion No. 46—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all representations received by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development regarding the revision of Canada's Oil and Gas Land Regulations in the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO A NATIONAL PARK IN THE SHIP HARBOUR AREA, HALIFAX COUNTY

Motion No. 111—Mr. Forrestall:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all proposed plans, together with descriptions and correspondence between the Government of Canada and the Province of Nova Scotia with respect to a National Park in the Ship Harbour area of Halifax County.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notices of motions Nos. 8, 13, 23, 31, 55, 89, 101 and 102?

Motions for Papers

[English]

SUBMISSION TO DEPARTMENT OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS BY CANADIAN FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Motion No. 8—Mr. Saltsman:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all returns submitted to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs by Canadian financial institutions regarding information on consumer loan intentions in 1970 as requested by the Department.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the information on advertising budgets for the promotion of consumer loans was forwarded to us on the explicit understanding that the confidentiality of individual returns would be respected. Under the circumstances I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Saltsman: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, unless I read this improperly I have asked for returns by financial institutions regarding information on consumer loan intentions rather than advertising. Would the minister check the item?

Mr. Speaker: It will be allowed to stand for the moment.

Mr. Basford: In that case there is no such information and I would ask for this reason that the hon. member withdraw the motion.

Mr. Saltsman: I am not prepared to accept that at the moment.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion to be put or transferred?

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

INTERNATIONAL DRUG COMPANIES—CORRESPONDENCE PROVIDED BY UNITED STATES ON ANTI-COMBINE MATTERS

Motion No. 13—Mr. Saltsman:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, memoranda, etc., provided to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs by the United States Justice Department on anti-combines matters related to international drug companies and the price of quinine.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it would not be in the public interest to disclose confidential communications between my department and the United States Justice Department relative to anti-trust investigations because such disclosure could prejudice an anti-trust inquiry in either or both countries. For these reasons I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I do not see how that could possibly be accepted as a reason. The public is entitled to the information I have asked for.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

[Mr. Jerome.]

SPEECH BY DIRECTOR, RCMP SECURITY AND INTELLIGENCE BRANCH

Motion No. 23—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the speech delivered to the Canadian Society for Industrial Security, in Toronto, by John K. Starnes, Director of the RCMP's Security and Intelligence Branch.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Solicitor General as follows:

The remarks in question, made at a private meeting from which the press and public were specifically excluded, were given from notes and no text is available. A quite inaccurate and garbled version of a part of the discussion subsequently was published in the press, having been obtained in an unauthorized and unusual manner.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should indicate whether or not there is a document which can be tabled.

Mr. Jerome: As no such document is available I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, as I do not wish the leading official of the RCMP to be misrepresented I should like that information.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

ANALYSIS OF MANPOWER UTILIZATION OF THE MANITOBA GARMENT INDUSTRY

Motion No. 31—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study by Summerour and Associates Inc., Atlanta, Georgia, undertaken for the Department of Manpower and Immigration regarding the "Analysis of the Manpower Utilization of the Manitoba Garment Industry".

Mr. Jerome: Stand.

Motion stands.

STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

Motion No. 55—Mr. Broadbent:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the plan of the special task force to study the question of summer jobs for students as stated by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in his address to the Canadian Vocational Association on May 23, 1969.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I move this motion on behalf of the hon. member.

Mr. Jerome: Stand.

Motion stands.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS PENSION TRUST FUNDS, 1935 TO 1968

Motion No. 89—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the financial statements filed by the Canadian National Railways in respect to the Canadian National Railways Pension Trust Funds for the years 1935 to 1968 inclusive.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I move this motion on behalf of the hon. member.

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the government is prepared to file the required documents for the years 1967, 1968 and 1969 inclusive. Prior to the Pensions Benefits Standard Act, as passed on October 1, 1967, there was no requirement for filing such documents. The government is prepared to table the aforementioned documents subject to the conditions stated.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That will be agreeable.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations and conditions expressed by the Parliamentary Secretary, is it the pleasure of the House that Notice of Motion No. 89 be deemed to have been adopted.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE DEALING WITH HUMAN RIGHTS AND CIVIL LIBERTIES

Motion No. 101—Mr. Rowland:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence between the Government of Canada and provincial governments commencing June 25, 1968 (a) dealing with the subject of the endorsation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (b) seeking co-ordination in the field of Human Rights and Civil Liberties.

[Translation]

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Monsieur l'Orateur, as regards paragraph (a) of the notice of motion, there was no correspondence with the provincial governments in this matter.

As regards paragraph (b), it is not customary to table correspondence between the federal government and the provincial governments, as is the case at the present time in the field of the bill of rights and civil liberties. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

[English]

Mr. Rowland: In that case, Mr. Speaker, I have very little choice, but I think it reprehensible that there has not been correspondence dealing at least with (a).

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FEASIBILITY STUDY RELATING TO CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN UNITY ROAD IN NIGER

Motion No. 102—Mr. Rowland:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the feasibility study related to Canadian participation in the Unity Road in Niger.

[Translation]

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the consultants' study concerning Unity Road is a privileged document drafted to help the Canadian government in its development aid negotiations with the government of the Republic of Niger. Making this study public would destroy the confidence between the two governments.

Therefore, I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

[English]

Mr. Rowland: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining Notices of Motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—ABANDONMENT OF WAGES AND INCOMES GUIDELINE POLICY—NEW INCOMES POLICY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether the government accepts the recommendation of the Prices and Incomes Commission against a guideline policy for the year 1971 and, if so, is this decision based upon the government's view that such a policy is unworkable or, on the other hand, because it is unnecessary?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as one has seen in the press, the Prices and Incomes Commission came to the conclusion yesterday that it would not be possible to have industry agree to guidelines with labour not agreeing to guidelines on the other side. In the specific position they were in the commission decided they would carry on with the method of investigating particular price increases and particular wage increases and report to the government and the government would, of course, make these available to the public for their information, or the government's opinion would be made known to the public.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, now that the Prices and Incomes Commission has adopted the position of a study group, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether the government proposes through any other medium to establish an incomes policy through consultation involving the government, business and labour, or are we left simply with the alternatives mentioned in the chairman's review unacceptable unemployment, unacceptable inflation or compulsory wage and price controls?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the present situation is that Canada has a record better than that of any other western country in controlling inflation. I think this is agreed by the OECD and many other authorities. In respect of how we must proceed from here with regard to fiscal and monetary policy, I will be making our position known tomorrow night in my budget speech. How we proceed on the prices and incomes side is a matter for decision by the government, but no decision has been made at the present time.

INFLATION—SUGGESTED MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER AND LEADERS OF ORGANIZED LABOUR

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): As the only chance of price restraint continuing into the next year rests on the slim hope that organized labour will agree to give its very necessary co-operation, will the Prime Minister even at this late date consider, as he has been urged to do many times during the past year, meeting with the leaders of organized labour in an effort to persuade them of the vital importance of giving their co-operation?

Mr. Woolliams: Let us have an answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has already asked a supplementary question. Has he a further supplementary question?

Mr. Hees: May I put my question in a different way so as to make it easier for the Prime Minister to answer. Would the Prime Minister give consideration to putting his duty to the economy ahead of his fear of a rebuff and stop helping to push price restraint down the drain?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INFLATION—ABANDONMENT OF WAGES AND INCOMES GUIDELINE POLICY—NEW INCOMES POLICY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether the government is prepared to try to seek an incomes policy through some organization other than the Prices and Incomes Commission which, perhaps through no fault of its own, failed to secure the confidence of labour? Is the government prepared to seek such an arrangement directly or through some other means?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): The Prices and Incomes Commission indicated yesterday what had resulted from its consultations with business. The government must consider now what steps it may be willing to undertake in the future. As I indicated previously, since last March the government has been easing substantially on the fiscal and monetary side. In the meantime, quite contrary to what my hon. friend was saying last March, the rate of increase of prices has come down in Canada.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benson: Yes, this has happened, quite contrary to his forecast. We are still concerned on the cost side in an expanding economy that we may move too much and put too much pressure on the economy and perhaps cause another inflationary cycle. The government must, of course, in its expansion policies consider this matter very carefully.

Mr. Hees: What expansion policies? You do not have any policy, expanding or otherwise, and you know it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

PROVISION OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to ask a question related to the Prices and Incomes Commission and I direct it to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that the supplementary estimates which were tabled the other day do not contain any additional amounts for the commission, would he inform the House whether it is his intention to table additional estimates for the commission at some future date?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): If the provision made in the main estimates for this operation by the end of the year turns out to be inadequate, it will then be necessary to table supplementary estimates.

Mr. Lewis: Do I understand then that the President of the Treasury Board has not yet been able to assess the expenditure resulting from the reduced role which the chairman of the commission announced yesterday and is therefore not in a position to inform us whether additional estimates will be necessary?

Mr. Drury: The conclusion that I am unable to inform the hon. gentleman now whether supplementary estimates will be necessary is quite right.

Mr. Lewis: I should like to direct a further supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs or to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Prices and Incomes Commission has obviously failed in its declared objectives and has lost credibility in most sectors—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is obviously making a speech. He is debating an issue when he should ask a question.

Mr. Lewis: I have a question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister considering abolishing the commission or at least firing its pontificating chairman?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

FINANCE

FEDERAL INVESTMENT IN PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

As unemployment is rising at an appalling rate, will the minister say whether he intends, with the agreement of the provinces, to make massive investments in various public works in Canada?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): First of all, the premise is incorrect; second, the hon. member will have to wait for policies until the budget speech.

* * *

AUDITOR GENERAL

DOWNGRADING OF POSITIONS OF SENIOR OFFICERS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the great seriousness surrounding the situation concerning the Auditor General at the present time, would the government give serious consideration to reversing its decision to downgrade 28 members of the Auditor General's staff?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): It is hard to give serious consideration to most of the hon. gentleman's suggestions. He is probably unaware, by reason of the poor attendance of his party at the committee meetings, that this particular topic is under discussion there.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Since the minister refuses to answer my question I will ask him a supplementary question. Is not—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognize the hon. member for a supplementary question but it is difficult for the Chair to hear him.

Mr. Hees: Is not this move an attempt to do by indirect means what the government fears to do by direct means, simply a conspiracy to stifle the Auditor General, and will the government please cease—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): May I ask the minister whether he would be prepared to table any letters between his departmental officials, himself and the Auditor General in relation to the downgrading of the Auditor General and his staff at the present time?

Mr. Drury: Yesterday the Auditor General tabled such letters. May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that if the Opposition would just attend the meetings of the committee we would not have these questions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to ask the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for South Shore rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Crouse: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The President of the Treasury Board has made allegations in the House which are not correct and I ask that they be withdrawn. I am a member of the Public Accounts Committee and as a member of the Official Opposition I, along with three of my colleagues, was in attendance at the meeting when the papers were tabled.

An hon. Member: Where were the others?

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, if you can quiet this babble of the rabble I will go on with my point of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crouse: The government is trying to silence the Auditor General, but they are not going to silence me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: During my 14 years here, I have made a point of trying not to interrupt other members, when they speak in the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crouse: I would ask that members on the government side follow the same course if we are to have any decorum in this chamber. I wish to state that members of the Official Opposition were in attendance at the meeting yesterday to which the President of the Privy Council referred. I, therefore, ask him to withdraw the allegation that members of the Official Opposition were not in attendance at that meeting yesterday.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, if I made an allegation which was incorrect in fact, I hasten to correct it in any way necessary. Perhaps rather than referring to attendance I should have referred to the apparent lack of communication within their party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We will return now to the original question. The hon. member for Calgary North has the floor for a supplementary question.

Mr. Woolliams: I would like to ask—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Calgary North on a supplementary question.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a question about the letters. Were all the letters between his department and the Auditor General in reference to the downgrading filed before the committee, and were there any personal conversations between the minister and the Auditor General, or between any members of the minister's staff and the Auditor General that were not disclosed to the committee on that occasion?

Mr. Drury: Quite obviously, Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of conversations—

Mr. Woolliams: Oh, yes.

Mr. Drury: —with members of the administration. I do not think the Auditor General endeavoured, if indeed he could succeed, to produce before the committee yesterday a complete record of all the conversations that he has had with all members of the administration.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister be prepared to make a full statement on motions soon as to what the conversations were and what took place between his department and the Auditor General?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Baldwin: You mean a full confession.

Mr. Drury: —I understand the committee will be—perhaps it would be wrong to use the word "inviting"—summoning me to a session next week—

Mr. Woolliams: That is a good idea.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton West. Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for Edmonton West, but I believe the hon. member for Ontario seeks the floor on a question of privilege.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to add any further heat to this debate—

Mr. Hees: Then sit down.

Mr. Cafik: —but the hon. member for South Shore, who is a member of the Public Accounts Committee as I am, has indicated to the House that he was in attendance at those meetings, which he was. I make no bones about that, but he indicated that the government, through the report of that committee, was trying to muzzle the Auditor General. As a member of that committee I resent such a remark, because the report to which we are alluding and upon which the bill has been based was passed unanimously by the Public Accounts Committee of which he is a member and, if I remember correctly, he was in attendance at the time it was passed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Edmonton West.

* * *

[Translation]

IMMIGRATION

QUEBEC—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT RESPECTING ADMISSION OF IMMIGRANTS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Has consultation taken place or is consultation taking place between the federal and provincial governments on the subject of admitting immigrants into Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, discussions have previously been held on the subject. I obviously cannot say what matters were studied. It all depends on the subject and the date to which the member is referring.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again, I apologize to the hon. member for Edmonton West. We may get to his supplementary eventually, but I understand we have a question of privilege from the hon. member for Athabasca.

Mr. Yewchuk: On a question of privilege, I just want to put the record straight, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If that is the purpose of the hon. member in seeking the floor, that is not a question of privilege. I suggest that the hon. member for Ontario did not have a question of privilege, and again I suggest to the hon. member for Athabasca that if we are to pursue this debate as to who attended and who did not attend the committee meeting, and whether there were communications or not, it will not advance the work of the House very much. However, I will hear the hon. member for Athabasca.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege pertains to the statement which was made that this report was unanimously approved by the members of the committee. I state that this was not so. The chairman of the committee was not present. The report was not signed by him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Athabasca has the floor. Perhaps he should be allowed to indicate what the privilege is.

Mr. Yewchuk: The question of privilege is the fact that the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee was away on an official trip to Japan.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again, I suggest to the hon. member that this is not a question of privilege. Obviously, there is debate between hon. members as to who was there and who was not there. The citations are numerous to indicate that this cannot be construed as a question of privilege.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the question of privilege—

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member for Athabasca kindly resume his seat? I suggest to hon. members that we are going nowhere very fast. We have had a series of questions of privilege as to who attended a meeting and who did not attend a meeting. I suggest to hon. members that this has nothing at all to do with privilege. It should not even be raised as a question of privilege. Obviously, there is disagreement among hon. members as to who signed the report, whether it was unanimous or not, who attended a committee meeting and who did not attend a committee meeting. Perhaps this should not have been raised at all in the first instance, but now I do suggest to hon. members that we will fritter away the whole question period if we continue with questions of privilege that are not questions of privilege. The hon. member for Edmonton West.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a second question I would like to direct to the Prime Minister.

Are discussions being held at the present time with the government of the province of Quebec on the matter of admitting a given class of immigrants of a given nationality and would these discussions also concern the advising of immigrants landing in Canada and of Canadian-born citizens who would wish to settle in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that any such meetings are held, certainly not at the prime ministers' level. We heard about this problem for the first time through the newspapers.

* * *

[English]

TRANSPORT

PARTICIPATION OF YOUNG PEOPLE IN STUDY TO PROMOTE SAFE DRIVING

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I am one of the few members of the Public Accounts Committee who do not have a question of privilege at this time. Instead, I have a question I would like to direct to the Minister of Transport. I do so because this is safe driving week in Canada. Since no group of drivers is more prone to accidents than the group between the ages of 16 and 24 years, would the minister consider emulating the action of his counterpart, Mr. Volpe, of the United States Department of Transport, and encourage a study in which a group of young people would take part with the idea of promoting a motor vehicle safety campaign throughout the country?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if this is safe driving week you would never know it here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Jamieson: However, I assure the hon. member that I will be very glad to take his suggestion into account. Mr. Volpe will be in Canada for meetings with me in early January, as will his and my counterpart from the United Kingdom, and we are working on something along the lines of an international campaign of the kind suggested by the hon. member.

EXPLANATION OF ADVERTISEMENT IN REGINA LEADER-POST

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Could he explain an advertisement placed by the Department of Transport in the Leader-Post of November 26, 1970, which calls for a tender for an NDP site in Regina?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Jamieson: Well, I had a good answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the House would like to hear it.

Mr. Jamieson: It is a direction finder for the NDP because in Saskatchewan, as elsewhere, they have obviously lost their way completely.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the hon. member for Yukon is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Nielsen: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I would not want the minister even unintentionally to mislead the House. The initials "NDB" stand for "non-directional beacon."

Mr. Jamieson: That is what I meant.

* * *

[Translation]

INCOME TAX

EXEMPTION OF FEES PAID TO SCHOOL BOARD MEMBERS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Could he tell the House whether, following the requests made by the Quebec Association of school boards, he intends to recommend to the government to consider non-taxable entertainment allowances paid to school boards trustees, which is what Quebec is doing now?

[English]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the minister is away today on government business, but I shall take the question asked by the hon. member as notice and draw it to his attention.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Abitibi wish to ask a supplementary to his first question?

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, it is more a point of order.

I directed my question to the Minister of National Revenue. I can see that his body is here, but I wonder where his mind is. If he heard my question, I would like him to answer, if at all possible.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I did not hear the question the first time. I am taking the hon. member's question as notice and shall answer it tomorrow.

* * *

[English]

INDUSTRY

DENISON MINES—NEGOTIATIONS TO PREVENT SHUTDOWN

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister was interrupted yesterday—at least, his answer was—and you suggested that I might ask a supplementary today. In view of the very serious economic situation in Elliot Lake, can the Prime Minister advise what progress has been made in the negotiations between the government of Canada and the officials of Denison Mines to prevent the shutdown of this uranium mine?

An hon. Member: Better get Mr. Pearson back.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to pursue yesterday's answer and indicate that the government has a continuing concern over the situation in Elliot Lake. I was telling the House that there have been active exchanges and consultations between the parties concerned, the latest being in November. The minister is presently leading a delegation to Japan on the problems of mining, and I believe the president of Denison Mines is part of that delegation. I think it is, therefore, safe to assume that uranium will be discussed. I know that when the minister returns he will resume negotiations, in mid-December and hopefully we will find a solution.

* * *

DRUGS

EXPRESSION OF OPINIONS BY MEMBERS PRIOR TO INTERNATIONAL MEETING IN VIENNA—LE DAIN COMMISSION FINAL REPORT

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the Le Dain Commission will cost the people of Canada at least $1,200,000, will the minister now tell the House how he will fulfil his pledge, given on October 21 this year, that members could express their views in the House on the drug question within two months, and before Canada commits herself at the Vienna conference thus perhaps jeopardizing the necessary but costly work of the Le Dain Commission?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think that hon. members have had ample opportunity already to express their views on the Le Dain Commission report.

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. Munro: You certainly have.

Mr. Rynard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It is obvious that we are not going to meet in the House to talk about it, so could the minister now tell us what reservations will be made at the Vienna conference?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, as far as the government's decision on the position to be taken at the Vienna conference with regard to reservations is concerned, this will be announced in due course, certainly before the House recesses.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, in light of the appeal of the directors of anti-addiction programs for nine provinces urging that the government should not sign the international drug treaty prior to the tabling of the final report of the Le Dain Commission, can the minister inform the House whether the government has responded to this appeal in an affirmative manner?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, all I can indicate at this time is that the government has taken note of these reservations and its decision as to policy on this question will be made known to the House.

Mr. Mazankowski: I wonder if the minister would undertake to make a statement on motions on the government's view of the relationship of the pending international commitment—the protocol on psychotropic substances—and the forthcoming Le Dain Commission report?

Mr. Munro: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to consider that.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

FARM MACHINERY—INQUIRY AS TO FINAL REPORT OF BARBER COMMISSION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. In view of the continuing concern about the high prices of farm machinery, can the minister inform the House whether he has received the final report of the Barber Commission and, if not, when does he expect to receive it?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I have not received that report yet, Mr. Speaker, and I am sorry to say that I cannot give a precise date for its receipt as Dr. Barber has not yet indicated this to me.

TRADE

STEPS TO LIMIT IMPORTS OF AUSTRALIAN AND NEW ZEALAND BEEF

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Further to the question I put to the Minister of Agriculture yesterday, Mr. Speaker, about the importation of beef, may I ask what limitation was agreed to between Canada and New Zealand in the negotiations to which he referred in his answer?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure it would take longer than you would allow to answer that question. However, it is a matter of public record that shipments were stopped from July 2 until some time in September, so that the stocks here or that were destined for Canada exceeding the amount consumed here could be cleared away.

* * *

INDUSTRY

MARITIME PROVINCES—EFFECT OF INCREASE IN FUEL OILS

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Mr. Speaker. What action is the government taking to roll back the 50 per cent increase in the cost of some important fuel oils used industrially in the Maritime provinces, such as Bunker C, in order to keep down the cost of production in that part of the country?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, these price increases would be subject to review and examination by the Prices and Incomes Commission.

Mr. Hees: Boy, do they ever do a job! They certainly keep those prices down.

Mr. MacLean: I am aware of that, Mr. Speaker, but could the minister state what benefit has accrued to the consumers of this oil and to the Maritime provinces from this procedure?

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether the question as asked is in order. The hon. member is inviting the minister to state what benefits have accrued from policy. This is hardly a question that could be allowed at this time.

Mr. MacLean: Perhaps I could rephrase my question and address it to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Could the minister state what action his department is taking to keep the effectiveness of industrial expansion in the Maritimes from being negated by the exceptional increase in the cost of fuel which is also having an effect on the cost of electric power?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): If the hon. member will wait a couple of days, perhaps I will then be in a better position to answer his question.

[English]

SPORTS

PROTEST AGAINST SUSPENSION OF HOCKEY PLAYER—METHOD OF SIGNING

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister received a telegram from western Manitoba signed by more than 500 people protesting the suspension of a young hockey player with the Brandon Wheat Kings by the MAHA and the CAHA against the wishes of his parents? If so, what action is the minister taking on the matter?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have received the telegram referred to by the hon. member and we are looking into this matter.

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, as the player mentioned by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris was signed to a player's card when only 15 years old, and without the consent of his parents, can the minister assure the House that the government will soon present legislation to end the CAHA slave market methods of signing our youth to player cards?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, for some time the government has been looking into its legislative competence in this particular area, and when that has been decided it will be announced in the House.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

ALLEGED TRAFFICKING IN INDUSTRIAL MILK QUOTAS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): My question is addressed to the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister investigate serious allegations of trafficking in industrial milk quotas, which the regulations of his department apparently permit, and will he make a report to the House on motions in due course?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to have a little more detailed information from the hon. member respecting this question. I would advise him that milk quotas are not negotiable as far as subsidy quotas are concerned and fluid milk quotas, of course, are the responsibility of the provinces.

SERVING OF NEW ZEALAND BUTTER BY AIR CANADA

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, as it is obviously desirable that Canadians use Canadian dairy products as much as possible, would the minister, with his colleague the Minister of Transport, look into the situation on our national airline, Air Canada, which serves New Zealand butter with in-flight meals, and ask the airline to serve only good Canadian butter in future?

Inquiries of the Ministry

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REFERENCE OF LAND USE REGULATIONS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Will he confirm to the House the commitment he gave to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development in the previous session to refer to that committee the draft regulations on land use for the Territories? If so, could he indicate to the House when he will be prepared to refer those draft regulations to that committee for its consideration?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I cannot grant the request of the hon. member because the regulations involved have not yet been approved by the governor in council, but as soon as they will have been approved, I will try to determine whether that question can be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

* * *

[English]

AUDITOR GENERAL

UNANIMITY OF FIFTH REPORT OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the hon. member for Pontiac who is vice-chairman of the Public Accounts Committee. I direct it to him because of the absence of the chairman, the hon. member for Wellington. Was the fifth report of the committee to the House of Commons dated June 26, 1970, relating to the Auditor General's report in fact passed unanimously?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is not admissible under the rules. Questions to chairmen of committees can only relate to forthcoming proceedings of those committees. For example, members can ask whether committees will sit or not sit. The question asked by the hon. member is not procedurally acceptable.

* * *

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

RECOMMENDATION FOR PLACEMENT UNDER DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In light of the recommendation that the Canadian Wheat Board be placed under the Department of Agriculture, made by the grains committee study group that was established to review the task force report during the recent agricultural congress that has just been concluded in Ottawa, may I ask when the Prime Minister plans to implement this important recommendation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not received any of these reports so far. When I receive them, I will study them.

[Mr. Hees.]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

MAINTENANCE OF REASONABLE RETAIL FOOD PRICES AND PROFITS

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to questions asked by my leader and other hon. members. I will therefore omit the preamble and ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs the following: Will the minister not employ some effective method of surveillance and supervision to maintain reasonable and legitimate retail food prices and profits that will be conducive to the welfare of the consumer and to the survival of the small, independent merchants in our rural communities?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question is in the form of a substantive motion. I suggest that he has made a submission to the minister and he must assume that it will be considered.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, could I not obtain an answer, either negative or affirmative, from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has to assume that the answer to this kind of logical and interesting question would be yes.

* * *

FINANCE

TAX CONCESSIONS TO "TIME" AND "READER'S DIGEST"

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. My question is related to the decision of the government that, for constitutional reasons, it cannot involve itself in the sale of Ryerson Press to McGraw-Hill. It involves a field in which no such prohibition exists. Would the minister immediately take steps to end the preferential tax concessions available to Time and Reader's Digest?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this matter was dealt with by Parliament. Legislation was passed. If the government were going to make changes it would, of course, propose them in the normal manner.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I assume from that answer that the minister is going to continue maintaining Time and Reader's Digest as friends of his party.

* * *

[Translation]

SOCIAL SECURITY

QUEBEC—DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING TRANSFER TO PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Since the Quebec premier stated yesterday that his government intends to repatriate the social security programs, could the Prime Minister tell the House whether consultations are now under way in this connection between Ottawa and Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should know that the government's position is indicated in a white paper introduced almost one year ago at a federal-provincial conference.

I am convinced the opposition will approve our position as soon as they have the opportunity to read that white paper.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Is it the intention of the government to delay the implementation of the recommendations in the white paper on income security until more thorough discussions can take place between the federal government and the Quebec government in this regard?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, that depends on the part of the white paper that is concerned. Most recommendations will be implemented only in a few months, after the introduction of bills that will be discussed in this House. If the members of the hon. member's party wish to delay the payment of the supplement to be paid to older people, they have but one thing to do—vote against the proposed measures.

* * *

[English]

INFORMATION CANADA

AVAILABILITY OF ALLEGED DIGEST OF RESPONSES TO GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCEMENTS

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister in charge of Information Canada. It is with respect to the digest of responses to government announcements about which I asked him a question on November 10. Can the minister say when the first report will be ready? Will he also assure the House that all responses on the matter of the Auditor General, both favourable, if there are any, and unfavourable, will be made available to Parliament?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I do not know anything about the digest which the hon. member has invented.

Mr. Bell: Does the minister not know that in his department they are making a big play about this so-called digest?

Mr. Stanbury: I know that we are not, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

COMBINES

CURTAILMENT OF RESTRICTIVE PRACTICES OF PROFESSIONAL SOCIETIES

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Can the minister tell the House what consideration, if any, has been given to the methods whereby the restrictive practices of professional bodies, such as the dental, legal and medical societies, can be curtailed so that the opportunity to receive professional services at reasonable cost will be available to all Canadians no matter where they may live?

An hon. Member: That applies especially to lawyers.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Economic Council of Canada, in its report on competition policy, recommended that services, including those of professional groups, be included within the Combines Investigation Act. The recommendations of the Economic Council are in front of the government in preparing revisions of the Combines Investigation Act.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

EQUIPMENT OF AIRPORTS WITH GLIDE SLOPE ELECTRONIC SYSTEM FOR BLIND LANDINGS

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of growing public concern after many airline catastrophes, can the minister assure the House that all airports in Canada serving scheduled airlines have the glide slope electronic system, or its equivalent, for blind landings in bad weather?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, obviously this is the kind of question which requires a written answer. I can assure the hon. member I have been told that by world standards our system is certainly as good as or better than most. If the hon. member would like me to furnish a written answer about the specifics of what is available, I will be glad to provide that for him.

Mr. Ryan: Please do.

* * *

FINANCE

PROFITS OF CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the announcement by the Royal Bank yesterday of a 10.1 per cent increase in its profits, would the minister make a statement on motions with regard to the profits of the banks and deal especially with the increase in profits of the Royal Bank, which was 10.1 per cent, that of the Toronto-Dominion Bank, which was 15.7 per cent—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should not give information. He has asked his question.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the banks publicly indicate what their own profits are and it is not necessary for me to indicate on motions what they are. My hon. friend obviously knows what the profits are.

Old Age Security Act

[Translation]

FINANCE

LOW INTEREST LOANS FROM BANK OF CANADA FOR PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct another question to the Minister of Finance.

Can the minister inform the House whether he will exert due pressure on the Bank of Canada to obtain low interest loans with a view to financing public works since this measure could alleviate unemployment next winter?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in answer to this question, I think that the monetary policy followed by the Bank of Canada over the last number of months has indeed had the effect of lowering interest rates in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING AMOUNT OF PENSION, MAXIMUM SUPPLEMENT AND ESCALATION THEREOF

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-202, to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

• (3:40 p.m.)

He said: Mr. Speaker, The bill before us today is the first of several measures promised in the white paper on income security which I tabled in this House on Monday. As the white paper indicated, this legislation has to be introduced immediately to meet the various deadlines entailed in our proposal.

In the white paper, we served notice that we were going to put much less emphasis in future on the demogrant approach, which pays universal flat-rate benefits to everybody who meets certain age and residence requirements. We also indicated that we would be putting much greater emphasis on the guaranteed income approach to alleviating poverty in this country. Although we cannot at this time contemplate a guaranteed income program for all Canadians, in every age group, we can use the guaranteed income approach very effectively for certain groups in the population, especially those who are no longer in the labour force.

Four years ago this month, in December 1966, the guaranteed income supplement program for old age security recipients was approved by the members of this House. In January 1967, people who were 68 or older, and who had no other source of income, became eligible for a 40 per cent supplement to their old age security pension, that is, an extra $30 a month. In the three succeeding years, the amount of this supplement rose slightly as the cost of living rose, and the whole benefit, old age security and guaranteed income supplement combined, became payable at earlier ages. Since January of this year, people who were 65 or older could receive as much as $111.41, consisting of $79.58 in old age security pension and $31.83 in guaranteed income supplement.

This guaranteed income supplement program has proven very effective; 818,000 people, or almost half all old age security recipients, were drawing some supplement as of last June. By October this figure had reached 821,000. These people submit application forms each January stating what their family income has been in the previous calendar year. In this way we can be sure that the benefits are being paid to those who need them most, the aged people who have little or no other source of income. This program cost $263 million in 1969-70, and during the current fiscal year it is expected to cost $285 million.

There are two major features of this program which have made it so effective. One is the income test I have just mentioned. This is an impersonal test that does not involve any private investigation of one's living habits or spending habits. It is no more degrading than the income test that all taxpayers must undergo when they file their income tax returns. The second is the built-in incentive feature. The supplement is not cut back by a dollar for every dollar a person has from other sources. It is cut back by $1 a month for each full $2 a month one has from other sources. This leaves an incentive for older people who can augment their pensions by doing some work to do so. It leaves an incentive for younger people contemplating their retirement to save toward that day. At present a single person could have up to $768 in other income, or $1,722 including his old age security pension, before he would be ineligible for any supplement. A married couple could have up to $1,536 in other income, or $3,444 including their old age security pensions, before they would be ineligible for any supplement.

We believe this program has proven successful in dealing with the problems of the aged poor, although we concede that the amount of benefit is no longer adequate. We have, therefore, decided to extend the program to cover people who will reach age 65 after 1975. At present the supplement is only available to pensioners born on or before December 31, 1910. This bill will remove that restriction.

There will be a small number of persons born after 1910 who will be unable to benefit from the Canada Pension Plan, including those already disabled or widowed. There will also be a certain number of persons who will get a Canada Pension Plan retirement pension, but because of long periods of unemployment, underemployment or because of a lifetime spent at or near the minimum wage, that retirement pension will be very small. As the law now stands, a man who was disabled in 1965 or earlier, a woman widowed in 1967 or earlier, and a person with a very small retirement pension will, if they have little or no income, be eligible for a guaranteed income supplement if they reach age 65 before the end of 1975, but not if they reach 65 after January 1, 1976.

Although relatively few in number, each person denied the protection of the guaranteed income supplement would justifiably feel discriminated against. Therefore, the bill proposes to eliminate this source of discrimination.

The major feature of the bill before us, Mr. Speaker, is the increase that is proposed in the amount of the supplement. The current legislation sets the supplement at 40 per cent of the old age security pension. With the old age security pension at $80 a month next year, this would mean the supplement would be $32. Instead, we are proposing to remove this proportionate relationship, and to raise the supplement to $55 a month for single people and to $95 a month for a married couple if both are pensioners. Together with an $80 old age security payment this will mean a total monthly benefit of $135 if single or $255 for a couple if both qualify.

In 1967, the combined benefits were $105 if single and $210 for couples. At the rate prices have been increasing since then, the corresponding values for these amounts in January 1971 would be $122 and $245. Our proposed rates of $135 and $255 more than restore what their pensions would have been had there been no limiting of escalation.

Married couples who are both pensioners will be assured incomes of $3,060 a year. They can draw a partial supplement if their combined income is less than $2,304 excluding old age security, or less than $4,224 including their old age security pensions. A person married to a non-pensioner could draw a partial supplement as long as his income is under $3,600 excluding old age security, or $4,560 including old age security. Your Honour will agree, I am sure, that these amounts will be very helpful to a great many low-income aged persons across Canada.

Your Honour will have noted that the rate proposed for a single pensioner is more than half that proposed for a couple. This represents a first step in adjusting the level of benefits to reflect the fact that single pensioners face a higher cost of living per person than do married couples. Data were provided on page 40 of the white paper showing that single aged persons are on the whole poorer than aged couples. For example, 37 per cent of single pensioners have no other source of income, as compared with 19 per cent of married couples over 65. Up until now, the old age security and guaranteed income supplement program paid a single person half the rate for a married couple. However, most of the provincial assistance plans long ago recognized the need for a differential, and pay one person from 60 to 66 per cent of the rate for a couple. Studies of family budgets have shown that an aged person needs about two-thirds of the amount required by an elderly couple to get along. The proposal in this bill will raise the minimum income of a single person to 53 per cent of that for a couple. If only the amount of the supplement is considered, the single rate is 58 per cent of the rate for a couple. This we regard as a first step in improving this relationship; we hope that further adjustments can be made the next time the rates are improved.

• (3:50 p.m.)

After the first year of operation at these new rates, the supplement will be raised in April 1972 by the 2 per cent escalation which will be reflected in the pension index for that year. This automatic escalation feature is to be retained for the GIS program, and will be applied to the total combined amount of old age security plus GIS, that is $135 and $255. Thus, in April, 1972, a 2 per cent increase would mean that the single rate would rise to $137.70 and the married couple's rate to $260.10. In other words, the amount of the supplement would be raised to $57.70 for single persons and to $100.10 for couples. On the basis of price increases in 1970, it was felt that the 2 per cent ceiling could justifiably be retained, since price increases this year have remained within that limit. The increase in benefits we are proposing will take care of the past abnormal increases in prices, and the automatic escalation of not more than 2 per cent should take care of any price increases that may be expected in future.

Another change contained in the bill before us is the proposal to switch from a calendar to a fiscal year basis for the payment of benefits. Applicants will still be asked in January of each year to report their income from the preceding calendar year. Then, during the period January to March, the administration will be processing and verifying applications as they do now. But, instead of making retroactive adjustments in the supplements for the first three months, they will start paying the new rate in April; this rate will carry through to the following March. To cover the period January to March, 1971, before the new rate of benefit comes into effect, pensioners who qualify will receive during these months the same amount as they would have been entitled to had no changes been made in the legislation at all. Single pensioners will get up to $33.61 and married pensioners will receive up to $67.22 a month.

Other changes in the legislation have also been proposed to make it more equitable. Married couples who have been living apart for more than a year can be treated as single in cases where one spouse cannot be found or refuses to co-operate by providing required information. In cases where one spouse is in a hospital or nursing home, and the other has to live alone with the same costs as a single person, that spouse can be treated as though he were single.

At the present time, spouses who do not draw pensions have to declare their income for the previous year and are not given the option of substituting their current year's earnings if they have retired. This option is granted to those who are pensioners. The Act thus discriminates between pensioners whose spouses are over 65 and those who are under 65. The bill proposes to remove this discrimination by allowing spouses under 65 to declare they have retired and to substitute current earnings for previous earnings.

Another change proposed will allow people to exercise the option to retire more than once. Experience has shown that older people do take up new work after retirement, and suffer hardship in the year they retire from their second employment if they have already declared their previous retirement when applying for the supplement in the past. The bill before us proposes to allow them to declare their retirement on more than one occasion.

Two changes are proposed for the basic OAS pension. There will be a longer residence period required of those who do not reside in Canada between the ages of 55 and 64. For each year in the period during which they were absent, they will have to substitute three years after age 18 instead of two years after birth. Thus, a person would be required to have resided in Canada from age 18 to age 45 if he were to be absent from age 55 to his 64th birthday, to qualify for OAS at age 65.

The other change is the proposal to remove the automatic escalation from the basic OAS pension. It will be set at $80 until changed by some future parliamentary action. This decision was made in order to concentrate the financial resources available for income support for the aged on payments to those most in need of help. In 1971, this new policy will release $15 million for use in financing the increased supplement; in 1975 an extra $100 million will be released for this purpose. In the first fiscal year, 1971-72, our proposals are expected to cost an additional $194 million; without the $15 million savings, they would have cost $209 million.

There are those who argue that the OAS pension itself should have been increased. To raise it by $10 a month to $90 in 1971, would have cost an extra $206 million. We considered it a far better use of resources to concentrate this sum on improving the supplement for low-income aged pensioners. We have, therefore, suggested raising the supplement for single pensioners by $22 and for married couples by $29 a month at a net cost of $194 million. By so doing we have been able to ensure that all persons over the age of 65 will have incomes of at least $1,600 if single, or $3,000 if married pensioners. It is estimated that about 970,000 pensioners will be drawing the supplement, including about 470,000 who will get the full supplement. This seems a far more appropriate way to spend the money available than to raise all old age security pensions by another $1.17 a month. That is what is involved in removing the automatic escalation feature.

The substantial increases recommended for aged pensioners receiving the guaranteed income supplement and the other changes proposed in the legislation are proposed as a result of the experience we have gained concerning various inequities and anomalies in the administration of the Act, as well as from observations made by hon. members in cases where particular rules have led to injustice. This bill, with the changes I outlined in the latter part of my remarks, will, we hope, to a considerable extent correct those inequities and anomalies.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to make some comments on this bill at the second reading stage. Others of my associates will emphasize various points, but there are a number of features in this bill on which I wish to comment this afternoon. As the minister has told us, the bill provides for a flat rate old age security pension which is frozen at $80 a month. Single persons over 65 are assured of a minimum income of $1,600 a year, and married couples $3,060 per year.

The first question that comes to my mind having read the white paper is, why the delay? We received the impression that there was some massive comprehensive overhaul of the whole approach to welfare that made it impossible for the government to take action in the area of old age security. But when one reads the white paper, one sees that no such comprehensive overhaul is involved. It is, therefore, impossible to understand why the government could not have proceeded to amend the legislation relating to old age security so as to provide something approaching justice for the older people of this country who are living below the poverty line.

Surely, the delay is not justified on the ground that such a move would be inflationary. The minister would not pretend for a moment, I am sure, that taking this action would have been inflationary. Certainly, it is not part of any general approach to welfare which could not have been proceeded with by itself. It seems to me that the delay that has taken place is inexcusable, and it has been very unfair to the older people of this country. Surely, we are not so hard up in this country or so callous as to sit back for a number of years and allow the older people who are in need to fall into a more and more difficult position each year. This has been happening, in part, because of the 2 per cent limit of escalation that the government has insisted on maintaining. So, the first question that does occur to one is how the government justifies the delay, one which must weigh very heavily upon the conscience of the minister and the members of the government.

The new maximum figure for the single aged is $1,600 a year. The second question I ask myself is, why this particular figure? It is still below the poverty line. The figure for a married couple is slightly over $3,000, which is not far off the poverty line indicated by the Economic Council of Canada. I was disappointed that the minister did not give some lucid and convincing explanation as to why the figure $1,600 was chosen as the upper limit for single aged people. I think the House deserves an explanation, either from the minister or from someone on that side of the House, as to why that figure was chosen rather than a figure more in line with what is generally considered to be appropriate, particularly in view of the long period of delay and hardship to which the government has exposed these people.

In considering this level of aid, one must bear in mind that it is taxable, and one must relate it to the white paper on taxation. There is no reason to believe that single aged people or the married aged people are going to be altogether exempt from taxation. The exemption figures proposed in the white paper do not relate by any means to the figures contained in this bill or in the white paper on welfare.

Another matter we have to bear in mind when considering the adequacy of the $1,600 figure is the 2 per cent limit on escalation of the cost of living. I could hardly believe the minister was talking seriously this afternoon when he justified this 2 per cent maximum on the basis that the cost of living was not expected to go up more than that this year. He must have stayed up a long time last night figuring out that particular explanation.

What possible justification is that for the 2 per cent escalation limit? If the cost of living is not going beyond 2 per cent, then why impose a limit of 2 per cent? On the other hand, if it may go beyond 2 per cent this year or next year, why the limit of 2 per cent, particularly in view of the fact that this 2 per cent escalation limit has caused much of the injustice suffered by the older people in recent years. So, I contend the minister has given no reason for deciding on the $1,600 figure, and certainly has shown no justification for retaining the 2 per cent escalation limit to keep pace with the cost of living.

As to the $80 frozen rate for old age security, apart from the guaranteed income supplement, the escalation feature is now being dropped. I ask the minister why he has taken this step. The reason it is to be frozen is not obvious; neither is the reason for the basic old age security pension not moving upwards as the cost of living moves upwards. These people have contributed to the old age security fund, which I think shows a surplus of some $700 million. I suggest the minister will have to explain to the House and to the people of this country in greater detail than he has up till now why this action is being taken before he will convince us that the basic old age security pension ought to be frozen at $80 a month, and that any future escalation to keep pace with the cost of living ought to be eliminated.

As I say, the escalation has been held to 2 per cent. My view is that it should move upwards in line with the cost of living, especially when one considers the extent of the contributory nature of this plan and the surplus that has been built up in the fund by the contributions of those who are now drawing on the fund. This is particularly important when one considers the fact that, even with the addition of the guaranteed income supplement, these pensions are still below the poverty line.

I am not saying that the present proposals are approaching justice, but they are certainly a vast improvement over what has been the situation. Neither the government nor the minister has given the House any explanation at all to justify holding the older people of this country to the limits of the aid they have received for so long. But their hearts somehow having been warmed from some source, perhaps the minister himself, and having decided to move suddenly, why did the government postpone the effective date until April 1, 1971. Why are the older people in this country faced with the difficulty of having to work their way through this winter on these old rates? This course cannot be justified. The delay in the past cannot be justified and the delay in not implementing these increases until April 1, 1971 cannot be justified. The minister, I believe, had the honesty not to try to justify it.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Munro: Administratively.

Mr. Stanfield: Administratively, it can be done. There is no reason why it cannot be done, but the government is not prepared to move.

There is another feature which has not been corrected in respect of which I believe something might be done. This is in connection with the administrative arrangements. A lot of our older people are hurt badly when, perhaps through administrative error, their is an overpayment. When this happens, I believe the administration should bear more responsibility than it has to date because such an error can work great hardship against the older people. I also think consideration should be given to some plan whereby the pensioner can resort to other than the governor in council or to someone within the government service. I realize this may involve difficulties, but I do not think the regulations in respect of this whole procedure for appeals should be too costly within bureaucracy itself. I believe this is something the minister ought to consider, but I shall not dwell on this matter at this stage since we are talking about the principle of the bill.

I want to emphasize that the delay until April 1, 1971 is inexcusable just as the delay to date has been inexcusable. The use of the figure $1,600 for single people certainly has not been justified yet. This must be justified. I concede that it represents a substantial improvement over what we have had, but I am sure the minister would concede that this $1,600 does not take a single aged person up to what is now considered to be a minimum figure in respect of living in this country as worked out by bodies such as the Economic Council of Canada. The 2 per cent limit on the escalation in connection with the cost of living has not been justified, and I do not believe it can be justified. The freeze on the basic old age security rate at $80, without provision for any future escalation because of an increase in the cost of living, has not been justified. I believe it is very difficult to justify, particularly in view of the contributions made to the old age security fund and the very substantial surplus which now exists in that fund.

I want to say quite frankly that I approve of the general approach of helping those who are in need. I think, however, when some of those who have contributed to the $80 a month have their pensions frozen at that level and are prevented from receiving any compensation in the future as a result of increases in the cost of living, this is not fair. I approve of the use of the guaranteed income supplement approach but I believe it is inadequate, especially in connection with the single aged people. I had hoped that when the legislation came in, we would get rid of the 2 per cent upper limit of adjustment in connection with the cost of living which has caused so much grief. I hope the government or the minister will see fit to take out this provision because in my view it cannot be justified and will lead to a great deal of hardship in the future.

While I compliment the minister for the improvements which are being effected, because I agree they are substantial, I suggest the bill is very inadequate in the senses I have indicated. I hope the minister really agrees with me in this regard and that with our help, if he does agree that the points I have made are valid, we can have this bill further improved as it goes through the House and can remove the very substantial five or six injustices I have emphasized this afternoon and which the House should not adopt.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is a bad bill. I realize that on Monday, when the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) tabled his white paper on income security for Canadians, I stood in my place and said there were a number of items in it that were good and that I welcomed. I did so because when one is aware that people are in distress any alleviation of that distress is to be welcomed. However, now that I have had an opportunity to study this actual bill, I believe the first thing to be said about it is that instead of its being an act respecting old age security it is an act for the re-distribution of old age poverty. In his remarks just now, the minister said that it would cost a certain number of dollars to put these proposals into effect. He did not, however, say that there would be any increase in taxes to cover that cost. Indeed, in the white paper it is declared that there is enough in the old age security fund, or that there will be enough in the old age security fund from the taxes now being paid, to take care of the changes being made by this bill for the next few years. In other words, we are not talking about a re-distribution of wealth as between the working part of our population and the retired people. We are simply stirring it around a bit among the older people themselves. We are calling upon some of the older people to do with less so that some other older people may have a bit more. That is not old age security; that is the redistribution of old age poverty.

I noticed that the minister hesitated to rise and move second reading because he had heard me say yesterday and the day before that there was a point of order I wanted to raise in respect of this bill. The reason I did not do so was that once I had seen the bill, and made a general study of the points of procedure on which I had done some research, I came to the conclusion that my points related to equity and legality, so were not exactly procedural points but rather were arguments against the bill itself. Therefore, rather than raise a point of order, I decided I would endeavour to meet the bill head on. In a few minutes I shall be indicating the reasons I thought the bill was out of order and the reasons I believe no government should be asking Parliament to pass this bill for there is at least one utterly offensive feature in it.

Before I begin my criticism of the bill I believe it is only fair that one who has criticisms should state what he thinks ought to be before us at this time. I differ from the Leader of the Opposition in this respect. I think that instead of building on this old age security guaranteed income supplement combination we should go back to the principles that were established in the Old Age Security Act that came into effect in 1952. There should be before us a bill increasing the basic pension to $150 a month payable to all our people over 65 without any means or income test and subject to escalation to the full extent of the rise in the cost of living.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If the government thinks that that is beyond its capacity to plan and bring in, and if the government wants a second choice, I will offer it. I do so reluctantly because my first choice is what the Canadian people would like. My second choice would be for the government to bring in a bill raising the basic old age pension to $100 a month and granting a supplement of $50 so that those who are in need will at least get the $150 a month which surely is a minimum figure. I urge that nothing less than one or the other of these two proposals is what should be before us at the present time.

I have characterized this bill as a bad one, and I implied in the remarks I made on Monday and Tuesday that in my view it should not have been admitted. My reasons for that revolve around the fact that Parliament made a contract with the Canadian people. The word "contract" is not mine alone. It appears on page 24 of the minister's white paper and again in substance on page 42. Mind you, he uses it in a different context. He uses it in buttressing his arguments as to why all the present schemes cannot be replaced by a guaranteed annual income. He says that the old age security program cannot be eliminated because Parliament made a social contract with the Canadian people. The Canadian people have been paying into the old age security fund and they have a right to draw the pensions provided in the Old Age Security Act. That was the point of order that I felt could be raised.

I point out that in Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, citation 382, there is a reference to the fact that Parliament on occasion has refused to proceed with a bill that contravened policies laid down by Parliament in previous acts. We have laid it down as a policy that the people of Canada are required by taxation to pay money into the old age security fund, and we have undertaken in the Old Age Security Act that the Canadian people, having paid into that fund, are entitled to the pensions and the benefits set out in that act. That was stated clearly to us by Mr. Pearson when he was prime minister, and by Mr. St. Laurent before him. It was stated clearly to us by Miss LaMarsh when she was piloting certain amendments to this legislation, and I suspect my friend, the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr.Monteith) drew attention to this when he was minister of national health and welfare.

More recently, on March 15, 1965, when the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), in his capacity of minister of national revenue, was dealing with the Canada Pension Plan and wanted to argue against some of the things that we were advancing, he went out of his way to point out that parliament had guaranteed to the people of Canada the benefits provided in the Old Age Security Act. I also draw attention to the remarks made by the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), when he was minister of finance, on December 19, 1966, in the course of a minibudget that he was presenting on that occasion. He devoted a section of that budget speech to the Old Age Security Act, both the fund and the payments. He read to us a portion of the Old Age Security Act which provides that the minister of finance must annually report to Parliament on the state of the old age security fund.

The Old Age Security Act provides very clearly that if there is not enough money in the fund to pay the benefits required by the act, the minister of finance shall report to Parliament on how he thinks the deficit should be made up. There is no suggestion in that act that Parliament or the government has any right to do the other thing, that is to cut off any of the benefits because there is a shortage of funds. The benefits are part of a social contract. They have been guaranteed by statements of ministers, and by the act itself, to the people of this country. I submit that to cut off any of these benefits is to break a contract, and the government is doing this in a kind of bill that should not be before Parliament.

As I said, the minister in his white paper refers to this social contract on page 24. He refers to the fact that it is a social contract, that people have built their retirement plans on the basis of this program, and therefore it would be quite unfair and quite unthinkable to take it away from them. Then, on page 42 where he is discussing again the question of the flat rate benefits, he says that many people have planned their retirement on the expectation that they will receive old age security at the age of 65. To deny them this benefit would be extremely unfair and a breach of faith.

Mr. Munro: Where is the word "contract" mentioned?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On page 24, there is reference to the fact that it is a social contract.

Mr. Munro: But where is it on page 42?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On page 24.

Mr. Munro: You said it was in both places.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On page 24 there is the statement that this program has almost the nature of a separate social contract between the state and its citizens. On page 42 the minister used different language. He said that to deny them this benefit would be extremely unfair and a breach of faith.

Mr. Munro: Yes, to remove the entire thing.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thank the minister for his interjection. It is a breaking of the contract, a breach of faith, to remove the entire thing. I say that to remove anything that has been guaranteed to the people under this act is a breach of contract and a breach of faith. One of the things that has been built into this act is the guarantee of an escalation, if the cost of living goes up, by at least 2 per cent per year. For the last three or four years people have built their retirement plans on that fact just as much as anything else, and taking away that 2 per cent is just as much a breach of contract as if the pension were reduced to $70 or to $50 or wiped out altogether. It is that fact which makes it seem to me that this is the kind of legislation that should not be brought before Parliament by a government that believes in the rule of law, that believes in social contracts, and that believes in keeping any kind of faith.

I decided not to raise these arguments as a point of procedure but rather as arguments in the debate, which I suspect the Speaker would have told me they were. In addition to these arguments, I want to point out what the government has done in social terms in the matter of escalating because of the rise in the cost of living. This government—the Liberals, and I have lots of things to say about them—

Mr. Mackasey: They are not all bad.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Just a minute, let me continue. The Liberals have it to their credit—just a minute, my dear friend in the red shirt—that they were the first federal government in Canada to introduce the principle of escalating pensions. They attached this principle to the old age security pension as well as to the Canada Pension Plan. Then, they put it in the Devco pension plan and in a few other such plans. We have argued for many years that this was a good beginning and that we should go on and do it in other plans. And so we did last March. We accepted this principle and applied it to the pensions of retired civil servants, of retired RCMP personnel, of retired armed forces personnel, and of retired Members of Parliament.

• (4:30 p.m.)

What kind of people are we? We pushed ahead with this idea of escalating pensions as the cost of living goes up until we got ourselves covered by it. Now, we are going to go back and take it away from those on the basic old age pension. The minister may want to interject that there is a special half of one per cent that we pay into a fund for this purpose. But every citizen of Canada who pays taxes at all pays 4 per cent into the old age security fund, and is paying 3 per cent in sales tax. He pays indirectly, as well, corporation taxes, and part of that contract, part of what people pay for when they pay those taxes, is that they should get what Parliament has said they should get. Therefore, I submit that this is not only a breach of contract but that we are destroying something that is good, something that this government started.

What is going to happen as a result? I made a brief reference to it on Monday. Instead of moving to the day when almost everybody in retirement could anticipate that his income would go up by at least a couple of per cent, we will have our retired people in several different categories.

The first group I want to talk about are the people on the old age security and the guaranteed income supplement. Their pensions will not be very high but they will be the fortunate ones in that they will get a 2 per cent increase every year if the cost of living goes up by that much. Their total income will escalate.

Then, there will be people like retired civil servants who get the old age security pension and their civil service pension. Their civil service pension will escalate every January, but their old age security pension will not escalate if they are getting only the basic pension.

Then, there will be people on private pensions from outside employers, the CPR and so on. Their total pension will be the old age security and the basic amount of their other pension, and they will be out in the cold completely. There will be no increase for them because of the cost of living increase. I should admit that there is a slight modification to that. Those who have any portion of their retirement pension from the Canada Pension Plan will get an increase with respect to that portion. But what a patchwork we are building up when what we should be doing, after the progress we made last March and based on what we have done in previous years, is moving toward the concept of all pensions in retirement going up at least 2 per cent as the cost of living goes up. But instead we are retreating from that, and taking it away from the 800,000 of our people on the basic old age pension by itself.

If I were a Liberal—

Mr. Mackasey: You are pretty close. There is hope for you yet.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I hope you applaud my restraint.

Mr. Mackasey: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I would be terribly ashamed that my party had come in with this good principle and now was about to destroy it.

It is in the same category as universality. You know, we claim the credit for that, and rightly so, for we kept prodding the government to remove the means test from the old age pension. We are proud we did that until we won. But when the bill to do so was brought in, it was a Liberal government that brought it in, and the Liberals around the country boasted of the fact it was their party that recognized the principle that people in retirement should have their pensions not on the basis of a means or income test but as a matter of right.

These two good principles which, whoever may have done the prodding to begin with, were put into law on the basis of bills brought in by Liberals—universality of payment and escalation because of the cost of living increase—are now being abandoned and destroyed by the government. It is for that reason, Mr. Speaker, I have to say, despite my slightly generous remarks on Monday, that this bill is a bad bill. It ought not to be before Parliament. I do not raise a point of order against it, because it is more than a procedural issue, but I do suggest that the members of this House should meet it head on in debate. They should insist not that the Liberals adopt something the opposition is asking for but that the Liberals get back to the principles they followed when they brought in the Old Age Security act back in 1951—the best piece of social legislation that was ever brought into this House of Commons.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare today, and also the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he has talked about this matter, tell us it is a case of taking away from the rich, or not giving it to the rich so that we can give it to the poor, to those who are needy. That is a very nice and high-sounding phrase, take it away from the rich to give it to the poor. If that were what we were doing, particularly if it were an over-all proposition and we were saying to the rich in our society of whatever age, "You should have less so that the retired people could have more"—we would have to applaud. But all this bill is doing, even at the risk of repeating my phrase, is redistributing old age poverty; that is what it is doing. It is taking away from some retired people and giving it to others who are also retired.

If even the latter phrase fitted, if description used by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Prime Minister were correct, one might have to listen to it. But who are these rich who are being asked to do with less? Who are these rich who are being asked to settle for an increase of 42 cents and to have their pensions frozen at $80? Who are these rich who are no longer to get an increase in their pension on the basis of the rising cost of living? Well, to begin with, any single person over 65 years of age who has other income of over $110 a month will not qualify for the supplement, will therefore qualify only for the basic pension, and will not qualify for the escalation. Do you call a 65 year old single person with $110 of other income apart from his pension, rich? I don't think you can. No one can, not even the Prime Minster.

Let us look at the statistics, and I thank the minister not only for having given them to me in answers to questions put on the Order Paper but for having them included in this white paper. Mind you, if I read the document correctly he was giving these figures to show us there is not enough income amongst the older people to tax back to make a significant difference. The tables given us on pages 40 and 41, when you break them down, show that our people over 65 years divided into three main categories. There are 1,700,000 of these people. I take it that under the new provisions about 60 per cent will qualify for the guaranteed income supplement. At present that figure is about 48 per cent, but about 60 per cent will qualify under the new ceilings. That leaves 40 per cent. That 40 per cent falls into two groups, one of 30 per cent and one of 10 per cent. I am talking about 30 per cent of the whole 1,700,000 of our people who are over 65. The 30 per cent I am talking about have incomes between the cut-off figure of about $110 a month and a figure of about $3,500 or $4,000 a year single, or twice that married.

Let me drive that home as strongly as I can, and I am avoiding a lot of detailed figures I have worked out because I want to make the point. That 30 per cent of 1,700,000 people represents over 500,000 Canadians, 510,000 to be precise. There are over 500,000 Canadians, 65 years of age and over, who are just over the $110 a month or the corresponding figure married, but their total incomes run from that up to $3,500 or a bit over $4,000 single, or twice that married.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Munro: Let's talk about the new rates.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We are talking about the new rates. I am using the minister's—

Mr. Munro: You are using the old rates.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, no. Just a minute. Mr. Speaker, I have been dealing with this matter as long as the minister and he will readily admit that. I am saying that under the new rates $110 a month other income is the point at which you do not get any GIS, and the minister now nods his head. He realizes I know what I am talking about. I am saying that there are over 500,000 people in that area, from a point just over the figure where they do not get any GIS to around $3,500 or $4,000 a year. Mr. Speaker, these are the rich. These are the people who the minister and the Prime Minister say must do with less so that we can help the poor.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I think it is shameful. Somebody over there snorts or something—

An hon. Member: It is a Liberal.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But, Mr. Speaker, if ever there was a clear demonstration of what I want to call this act, there it is. It is an act for the re-distribution of old age poverty. We are asking these people, these retired Canadians, and incidentally Canadians who had a social contract and believed they could count on their pension increasing by at least 2 per cent per year as long as they lived, to settle for $80 a month for all time or until some government calls upon Parliament to take action again. In January they are going to get $80 instead of the $81.17 they would receive if this act did not go through, and $80 it will be for years to come.

Apparently the people in this category are the rich. I confess that I get annoyed by the minister and the Prime Minister saying that we are not going to give it to the rich any more. There they are, those 500,000 people. They are starting to write to me about it and, indeed, it begins to look as though I may hear from all 500,000 of them. I shall need some help to answer them. But the kind of help we want, Mr. Speaker, is at least to leave them with that 2 per cent increase we have been giving up to this point.

Now, Mr. Speaker, those are the rich, the people we are taking it from. A lot of them are far below the $3,500 or $4,000 level, some are at the $2,000 level or even less.

Mr. Munro: May I ask the hon. member a question? Are you saying—

An hon. Member: As long as it is not counted in his time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. If the minister wishes to ask a question he should stand and address the Chair.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member if he is suggesting that 500,000 pensioners will receive the flat rate of $80 a month and not get GIS and that they are all on this narrow band above $110?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am.

Mr. Munro: The whole 500,000?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am taking the figures the minister gives on pages 40 and 41, and I am trying to get some merging of single and married. Sixty per cent of the single are below $500 a year and 60 per cent of the married are below $3,300 a year. I have done some meshing of these figures and if I may go back to my point, of a total of 100 per cent I say 60 per cent have incomes so low that they will qualify for GIS. Perhaps there are 10 per cent at the top who are not in need. In between that top 10 per cent and the bottom 60 per cent there is 30 per cent. Thirty per cent of 1,700,000 is 510,000. That is my arithmetic. These are the rich for whom the minister and the Prime Minister want to do nothing, from whom what they have must be taken away. They are not rich, they are in need, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We are taking from the rich to give to the poor. And what are we doing for the poor? If asking these 500,000 people to surrender some of their alleged affluence amounted to something substantial being done for the needy, maybe I would say it is up to them to do it. What does this bill provide? We are going to increase the maximum benefit for single people from $114.41 per month to $135 a month, which is $23.59. How many potatoes will that buy? We are going to increase the married total from $222.82 to $255, that is $32.18 or $16.09 each for man and wife. It may have sounded good in the headlines, and a lot of people may have thought that the millenium had come, but by the time they get their cheques in April they will be saying, "Some millenium".

Mr. Gilbert: Forty-two cents worth.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I cannot press too strongly upon the minister the disappointment I feel over this legislation, coming as it does from a Liberal party which was the first to bring in the principle of universality of payment and the principle of escalating pensions. What we should have before us instead of this bad bill is a liberal bill, one that would go back to the principle of 1951 and provide an increase in the old age security pension to $150 a month payable to all without any means or income test. I say again, reluctantly but realistically, that if the government is not prepared to go that far, at least it should bring in $100 a month as the basic pension and $50 a month as the guaranteed income supplement, making a total of $150.

Mr. Speaker, may I take the few minutes I have left to comment on some of the details in the bill to which the minister has referred. Some of them are welcome and important but some are not outstanding. I do not quite know why the change is being made whereby a person who does not have the necessary last ten years of residence before age 65 is required to substitute previous years to the extent of three times the shortage since age 18 rather than twice the shortage since birth. It seems to me that the restrictions on the pension are tight enough already without making them tighter. However, I have to admit that offhand I do not know of any cases that will be adversely affected by this, though I am sure there will be some. Any tightening of the regulations has that result.

I note the removal of the year 1910 for the act, so that this guaranteed income supplement becomes not a temporary thing geared to the Canada Pension Plan as it was when it was introduced in 1966, but a permanent piece of legislation. I suppose if we are going to operate this way, then that date should be removed but what I do not like about it is that it adds to the permanence of this two level arrangement, universal security on the one hand and the means test supplement on the other. I welcome the fact that some anomalies have been corrected, particularly cases where people have had their income reduced during a year for reasons other than retirement—such as a widow losing a pension. In fact, such people have sometimes had to wait two years before getting an adjustment. As I read the bill that will be corrected, though I am not sure it will be completely corrected. I believe that could happen in the early part of the fiscal year and the adjustment not be made until the next fiscal year. What then about the current fiscal year? When other income is cut off in the middle of a fiscal year the increase is needed right then.

The change from payment on a calendar year basis to a fiscal year basis seems to make administrative sense and I do not quarrel with that. However, I do quarrel, as did the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), with the comment made by the minister about the 2 per cent ceiling. I know, Mr. Speaker, that we have to refer to each other here by our constituencies or titles but I feel like saying, "John, how could you? How could you stand up and tell us that we should leave the 2 per cent ceiling there?" I will come back to order, Mr. Speaker, and ask the minister how he could leave the 2 per cent ceiling there because the cost of living is not expected to rise much more than that in the years ahead.

An hon. Member: No—he said this year.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If this is true, then we do not need any ceiling. In any case, I believe most members feel that the ceiling on the amounts by which pensions can be escalated should be removed altogether.

• (4:50 p.m.)

The minister made some reference to removing the discrimination against the spouse who is below 65 years of age. His remarks sounded enticing, and it looked as if something interesting were coming, as if we were going to do something for the spouse who is under 65. Apparently all that he or she can do is supply a current estimate of his or her income, for the grand total. There seems to be nothing which will deal with the real problem, namely, the difficulty that two people have in getting along on one income when one is over 65 and the other is under 65. I will not at present try to work out a formula, but it seems to me that when the breadwinner, if one can still use that phrase in this modern age, is retired and on a pension, the pension he gets ought to be sufficient for himself and his spouse, no matter what the age of his spouse might be.

The minister said that a number of anomalies have been straightened out. That is true. Some of the improvements are important and welcome. I suppose the one that I should now like to refer to is one that he will tell me is out of his field and that I should wait for the speech which is to be made at eight o'clock tomorrow night by the Minister of Finance. I will wait, and we will discuss this matter and this bill when we get it to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. I believe, very strongly, that we should take a special look at the income tax position of pensioners, especially when they are on the guaranteed income supplement. I will not quarrel when the minister says that I am so strongly in favour of the universal approach that I do not have the right to talk about correcting the guaranteed income supplement. Nevertheless, I must deal with what is before us.

I still think it is iniquitous in the extreme in legislation known as the guaranteed income supplement, the purpose of which is to bring pensioners up to a certain level, to give pensioners that supplement with one hand and to take it away by taxation with the other hand.

Mr. Stanfield: The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, only I see no resemblance to the Lord on the government side. The members over there may think they are lords, but the facts are different. I am speaking about the situation as it is at present. Even with the present guaranteed income supplement for persons between the ages of 65 and 70, once those persons get that supplement they are over the income tax exemption level and, instead of getting the net guarantee that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is supposed to give them, they obtain something less, because his dear friend, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), comes along with his tax. Under the new levels, the situation will be even worse.

Is the minister rising to make an announcement?

Mr. Munro: No. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes.

Mr. Munro: The hon. member a little while ago said that he did not like the recommendation in the bill to make the guaranteed income supplement program permanent. He did not like it because it perpetuated distinctions between the aged people, between the ones who actually need the supplementation and the ones who do not and who receive only the old age security pension. Really, what I am asking the hon. member is this: is it his position that he would like to do away with the guaranteed income supplement program entirely? If he does not wish to make this program permanent or if he wishes to have it phased out, does he think that the money that would otherwise be put in this area should assist the old age pensioner generally in a completely univeral coverage? My second question is this: would he then still be prepared to recommend only $100 as the limit for all pensioners in the country?

Mr. Gilbert: The minister has missed the point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I thought the minister was listening intently to me.

Mr. Munro: I was.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I answer his first question by saying categorically, yes, I should like to go back to the completely universal program. I realize that I do not have the support of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) on that, but I think I could win him over if I could spend some time with him. Yes, I should like to go back to the completely universal program, and I would collect more by way of income tax from that 10 per cent of the population that is at the top of the income scale. I see the minister shaking his head.

Mr. Munro: The hon. member knows very well how much he would get.

Mr. Peters: There is plenty of money here.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I know that my time is running out. Surely, you will allow me the two minutes that the minister took. I come back to his question. If all we are going to do is merely redistribute the amounts now given to the older people, of course we cannot do it; but if we are prepared to consider the Canadian family as a unit and if we are prepared to redistribute our total wealth in terms of justice and fairness to our older people, we can do it.

May I answer the second part of the minister's question? He asked me if I still support a pension of $100 a month.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Could I have a couple of minutes more, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It will be necessary for the hon. member to obtain the unanimous consent of the House, because his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House agree unanimously to allowing the hon. member to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members of the House. I shall not abuse their kindness. I thought I made it clear to the minister and to the House in the first sentence or two of my remarks this afternoon that, in my opinion, what should be before the House is a bill providing for $150 across the board. Back in 1966 we were asking for $100 a month, yes; but we are asking for $150 a month across the board. That is the position I take, that my party takes, and that is the position that I think would make sense so far as the people of this nation are concerned. I say again that if we attempt to put the old people off to one side by themselves and stir around and redistribute the resources that we make available to them, it cannot be done. On the other hand, if we take an over-all, comprehensive view of Canadian society, we can.

May I close by drawing attention to a rather ingenious provision in this bill regarding the guaranteed income supplement. The minister referred to it. The government's intention is that the increases shall not become effective until April 1. This applies to the guaranteed income supplement, and the Leader of the Opposition made a special note of that fact. Yet I notice that the bill is ingeniously drawn in such a way that people on the guaranteed income supplement will obtain exactly the same amount of money in January, February and March, whether the bill passes or not. If the bill passes, they will get the rate provided for in the legislation as it now stands. It works out to the figure the minister mentioned.

Mr. Monteith: Is it not $111.41?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It will be a bit more. They will obtain the addition of the 2 per cent escalation due in January. That is what the bill, if passed, would give them in January, February and March. If the bill does not pass they will get the sum of $112 or $113, or an amount like that, by virtue of the legislation as it now stands. But, Mr. Speaker, the 800,000 Canadians who receive only the basic old age security pension—which they get as part of the contract, because it is their right to receive it—will receive only $80 a month in January, if this bill passes this month. That is an increase of 42 cents from this year's $79.58. If this bill does not pass, they will get $81.17. You know, that poses a challenge to Parliament does it not?

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that in the light of all the facts, members on both sides of the House will give this bill very serious consideration. It deals with a terribly important issue. It deals with a matter which, in 1951, we resolved in what I think was the finest way it could be resolved, when we said old age pensions should be paid to all as a matter of right. I hope that we come back to justice, fair play and a decent concept of social security for all Canadians.

• (5:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I intend to be brief in my remarks on Bill C-202.

Since I came to this House, there has often been talk of increasing the old age pension, but not much has been achieved in that regard.

Even though this bill provides for nothing more than a 42 cent monthly increase in the pension of those whose income does not exceed a certain level fixed by the act, we still intend to support it in order that a higher pension might be paid to our old people as soon as possible.

But we should ask ourselves whether our senior citizens are not entitled to better consideration. In Canada, in 1970, do these people not have a right to more gratitude for the efforts they made building the country, for their discoveries and the progress we owe them? Unfortunately, more than 500,000 of those who could continue the work started by Canadians aged 65 or over, are unemployed.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that nobody would be any poorer if Canada decided to give old people a minimum income which would allow them to meet all their needs without having to worry about tomorrow.

I know a great number of people who live in very strained circumstances. We must admit that with $3,060 two persons cannot easily procure shelter, pay school and municipal taxes, buy clothes and live decently. This is surely not an amount commensurate with our ability to pay.

When Jacques Cartier discovered Canada and when the first settlers in his party had to pick wild berries, fish and hunt to provide for their needs, old people could not rely very much on the assistance of the state in difficult times.

However, in 1970, conditions have changed and we should show more gratitude to those who are really quite deserving. Canada can do more. Those people are not asking for charity, but justice. We must distribute the wealth of our country instead of hoarding it or paying grants to curtail production. We should pass somes measures which would enable the aged to enjoy a well earned security. I understand what the government means. I am sure that the present government, as well as the preceding ones, has meant to show gratitude to the older people by drafting legislation which would allow the payment of pensions. I remember—and yet, I am not very old—that a number of years ago, when one mentioned this possibility of paying pensions or family allowances, one was called a communist. These measures did not make sense. They could not see why one should give money for nothing, to people who had not been required to work to deserve it.

Times have changed. Nowadays, everyone agrees that this is not a communist deal, but a matter of social justice, of economic possibilities. Everybody wants the government to keep on paying these pensions and to increase them without of course being brought to the brink of bankruptcy.

We have production surpluses of all sorts. Machinery is lying idle in our factories and getting rusty. Workers have nothing to do. Last night, four young men from my riding told me that they had been fired. They asked me if I could do something for them. I answered that I was willing to help them—I do this every day—but the system is faulty, we are not proceeding in the right direction.

Instead of putting our economic car on the right road so as to enable the young to work, we are driving a car with half its wheels off the road.

Young people are ready to help raise the old age security pensions but on condition that they should be able, in turn, to earn money.

Fortunately, some provincial governments have taken the lead and proved that it was possible to pay more than a small pension which allows only for living from day to day with no security at all.

The provinces of Alberta and British Columbia have seen to it that old people get an income of $139 and $149 respectively.

These provinces are none the worse for it. As a matter of fact, their production potential is sufficient to meet the demand of aged people who have a higher income.

An aged person who receives a pension, say $130 a month, could not live decently when rents are $180 or even $200 a month. You might say the difference will be put up by the provincial government under the social welfare plan. However, it happens that these persons may feel ill at ease, they may consider themselves as public charity cases and be dissatisfied with their lot.

Mr. Speaker, our economic system offers major opportunities of all kinds in the construction industry, the manufacture of clothing, of foodstuffs. However, the system is being paralyzed and an effort is being made to deprive some people of such advantages.

Not so long ago, I was impressed when reading the following:

> Our production system must therefore be geared to production of goods which will meet, first of all, the elementary needs of mankind, then the secondary needs, and finally those needs which come into the class of affluence and luxury.

It can hardly be suggested that the increase the government is proposing is going over that level to fit into the luxury level. Definitely not! Still it is possible to do more, taking into account the capacity to produce. Now, legislation is passed to increase pensions gradually according to the development of our country and we expect the government to do it. Were we to reduce our demands, we would be unfair to our senior citizens.

In my opinion, increasing old age security pensions only to keep them in line with the ever increasing cost of living would not be enough because with higher standards of living resulting from increased productivity, our old people should be allowed to benefit from this situation to the same extent as all other Canadians.

This is what we call the heritage of a nation. Our senior citizens have all contributed to this national wealth. They strove to produce wealth so that they could benefit from their work in their older days.

Some people say sometimes that it is annoying to pay taxes in order to support older people. Why did they not save money when they were working, so as to be able to provide for themselves? But these people are not to blamed, for they were overtaxed all their lives and squeezed for interest charged by the comptroller of credit that belongs to the nation.

Some people who cashed in on the nation's credit were rewarded in the form of interest from the taxes paid by Canadians. It is no wonder then that most older people are in a difficult situation and did not succeed in saving money to enable them to live decently for the later years of their lives.

This is the pattern we keep on fighting. However, we do progress. We see from one day to the other that we can do better, that certain changes are in order, but progress does not come about fast enough. The events overwhelm us and we have the situation which prevails now in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I should hope that the minister will prove not charitable but just in the means test and that if through errors in the implementation of the new plan, some Canadians receive a few dollars to which they are not duly entitled under the law, they will not be treated too harshly.

Without there being dishonesty on the part of pensioners, due to misunderstood answers or questions while completing forms, it happens sometimes after two, three or four years, that the department finds out it has paid too much money. The old people must then pay it back at a time when their income has never been so low. A certain amount of money is deducted from their pension cheques and they are put in a difficult position. It is inhuman.

This is why I would like to ask the minister to tell his officials not to be too harsh so that in such cases the old people do not become even more miserable than they were.

As I said at the beginning, Mr. Speaker, we intend to support this legislation but we also want to make some suggestions and to bring in amendments. We do not feel that this is the last pension increase. We hope that the Old Age Security Act will be amended again so as to grant a justified increase of pension.

For the next eight, ten or fifteen years, it will be impossible for anyone to run in an election by telling older people: We have raised your pension by 42 cents a month and we have slightly adjusted your guaranteed income supplement, it was a gift. More honesty is needed. Right after this bill is passed, we should keep considering the old age security situation with a view to bringing it in line with our productive capacities so that our senior citizens will be able to live many more wonderful years in a Canada they helped to build for us.

For these reasons, and because we are still in the prime of life, we wish the government would do even more so that it can be said everywhere that in Canada people live on more than just memories. They line on gratitude and material goods. We must ensure that it will be said that Canadians realize that God has not put on our territory so much wealth in order to accumulate it to create misery, but to have this wealth distributed among Canadians. We must ensure that nobody will think any longer that it is necessary to live in misery in the midst of plenty.

• (5:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): I do not know whether it was the anticipation of my speech or the Social Credit philosophy we have just heard which so quickly emptied this chamber, but I hope that before I am through I shall not be addressing just you, Mr. Speaker; I see the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) nodding his head and I am glad of this assurance that he will be here for a while.

I do not intend to deal, now, with specific figures or to indulge in the hair-splitting evident in the remarks of the NDP spokesmen and, to some extent, in those of the spokesmen for the Official Opposition; I believe we should keep this sort of thing for the committee. After all, the result of second reading will be to get the bill into committee. I propose to deal with the general principles embodied in this measure and with the position of the parties opposite in relation to those principles.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said he would like to see a liberal bill. Then, he went on to say he would like to see a liberal bill like the one brought in during 1951 or 1952. I can tell him that Liberal bills do not go back to 1952, 1910 or 1912. All the legislation we have is forward-looking legislation. If he wants to go back to 1914 it indicates the direction the New Democratic Party is taking, not the Liberal party, and he should know this. I have listened time and time again to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

You know, as he rises, with his very revered look, one would think there was sincerity there. I have known this gentleman for years; he and I have been good friends. But I had the feeling today he was trying to sell sincerity and make the most of it. Because the substance of what he was saying does not make sense. What does he recommend? He himself cannot believe it. He recommends one hundred and fifty dollars a month for everybody, or two hundred dollars a month and the application of the principle of universality.

• (5:20 p.m.)

If I were a member of a party that had very little or no chance of ever forming the government, of ever being responsible, I would offer them $1,000 a month. The hon. member knows this. In one breath he says there should be universality; but when it comes to who is going to pay for this, he and his party will turn round to the working men, the tax payers, those who are tired of paying taxes, and will say to them that it will be the rich who will pay. What he has said today is a clear indication that he objects to the idea of selectivity that is contained in this bill. Then, he says that this is not a Liberal document.

I know that to break the so-called rule of universality is difficult. Does the hon. member not think that we know that we are going to be unpopular to some? Does he think we believe it is easy to do this? Somebody has to have the guts to do this, and we have done it. We know you cannot apply the principle of universality and give everybody the great benefits the hon. members talked about unless someone is taxed for them. He and others have said time and time again that the poor working man is tired of paying taxes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Let us tax you and me.

Mr. Otto: We are taxed. The hon. member himself said that. The numbers of people who are supposedly rich are not sufficient to pay for this. What the hon. member is really saying is that we should not pay $153 or $156 only to those who need it; we should make a universal payment to everyone of $150 or even $200. But when the hon. member asks where the money should come from, he will discover that it comes from the working man who has to pay taxes, real estate taxes, income taxes. He is the fellow who is being squeezed, and it is the government who is accused of squeezing him.

The hon. member's statements are irresponsible and do not make sense. When he gets into the committee he will have to show where he is going to get the money to pay for the benefits he wants. In committee he will be told that the money will not come from the rich because there just are not enough rich, including the hon. member and me.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Speak for yourself.

Mr. Otto: Then, all of a sudden he became a legal expert and dwelt on the question of contracts at some length. The idea that seemed to flow from him was that we had made a pact with all the contributors to the old age security fund; that we are now saying to them that we dare not go back on that contract even though this money is being redistributed from the same fund and that this surplus in the fund is not going to last.

We have made other contracts. For example, practically ever since confederation people who have bought property not meant for speculative gain have expected that the proceeds from the sale of the property would not be taxed as a capital gain. It is hon. members opposite who claimed that this tax should be applied retroactively. If that were the case, where is the contract? If there is a contract on the one side there must be a contract on the other side. The idea of having a static, immovable contract does not make sense.

I do not think anybody in Canada would interpret a so-called contractual obligation in that narrow sense. No member on this side is giving this money to the rich; the money is being redistributed because we have to be selective. As a nation we cannot afford to apply the principle of universality with generosity and aplomb. However, I shall be talking later on an issue close to this to illustrate why we cannot afford this principle. We cannot even afford what we think we can afford. I say that the suggestion that we continue this general idea of universality does not make sense. As I say, although the government knows it is going to be unpopular somebody must have the nerve to go ahead and take this action. The provisions in this bill will provide some benefit to those who are really in need.

I suggest that averaging out the payment what we are really talking about is an income of $440 a month for a man and his wife. That is not affluence; but if that couple have no more children to feed and clothe and are living by themselves, it is not exactly extreme poverty either when you compare their income with those who have nothing. Since we are not going to be popular with these 500,000 people to whom the hon. member referred, it is politically opportune at this time for him to appeal to them. This is why the hon. member's party is trying to take their side. It does not matter whose side they are on as long as the voters will support them. I suggest this is not being sincere. If the hon. member has a theory to expound, then we should be pleased to hear what it is.

Other questions have been raised, one of which was escalation. The question of unlimited escalation or a 2 per cent escalation is a difficult one. Most of the wage earners today who have to pay taxes to support payments of old age security and other benefits somehow gear their demands not to their total salary but to their take home pay. If the government were to tell these people that they needed an additional one half of one per cent in order to raise more money, then the wage earners in turn would ask for more wages. And, so on it goes. For example, we could apply the escalation principle to the sale of government bonds, or to payments of mortgage interest. If we were to do that there would be a pull toward escalation, toward a higher level of payments, and we just cannot do this in light of today's economy.

There are two principles contained in this bill. The first is the theory of selectivity. Whether we are proposing social welfare programs, old age security legislation or other like measures, we cannot give to all the people the things that they want because the economy would not tolerate it. Therefore we have to be selective. We have to tell those who do receive these special guaranteed supplements: "You will be entitled to receive $151 or $153 a month because you have to live and we will not see you starving to death".

On the other side of the coin, we have to say to those that receive $500 a month: "You will get $80 a month and no more. If we give you more we cannot give more to others, unless of course we take it from you". And so we have the same vicious circle. We have to come to some sensible conclusions, and this is one of them. I shall not deal with some of the other matters but will leave them up to the other speakers. However, I wish to say that this is indeed a liberal bill. I hope that in the committee all these questions will be explained. I am pretty sure they will be. I refer to the date of April 1, 1971 as the cutoff date and these other points. I am sure these things will be explained in the committee when we sit down with the administrators and the other people who have the facts and figures. Then, we will be in a position to make common-sense suggestions and accept common-sense arguments. In the main, I would ask the support of this House for the bill because we are treading on a path which will not be a popular one and I believe every member here should know it will not be popular. I do not think the opposition, merely for political purposes, should take advantage of something that has to be done.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy listening to the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto). He is always very interesting, and at times he is amusing. He usually has a wealth of figures and a good imagination. I pay tribute to him for all these reasons. I have sat with him as a member on committees. I have always enjoyed being on those committees with him. I hope we will both be members of this committee because I am sure when he manipulates figures I will try to have something to say. I do not hold that against him. He has a new Liberal policy. Is it the just society one? The Liberal policy of the past, as suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), just does not fit in with his philosophy.

May I say I am very glad the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) finally made a move. I am sure he must be acutely aware of the things he has left undone and the damage and shortcomings of some of the things he proposes. As the hon. member for York East said, there will be some repercussions in respect of some of the provisions that are being introduced. I congratulate the minister for what he has done and I hope I am, at least partially, cognizant of the difficulties governments face in introducing bills, in finding the necessary funds and in accepting responsibility for what they do.

I shall chastise the minister for the bad things he has done and the things he has left undone. There is much he has left undone. It is certainly not a magnanimous measure. Subtly, the minister tried to leave the impression he was giving a lot when in reality he was taking something away. Robin Hood at his best could not have done better. In an interesting article the Toronto Daily Star mentions this under the heading "Munro initiatives help the poor". The article reads:

> It was his Robin Hood costume. If his government brings in legislation—as it should, promptly—to implement the social security white paper tabled yesterday, it will be asking Parliament to take from the rich and give to the poor on a scale never matched in Sherwood Forest.

Well, it is quite a compliment to him that he could outdo Robin Hood whose legend has lived through the ages. The minister did not go further because the realities of the misnomered just society did not allow him to do so. After all, the just society has not operated the way the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) had pictured it. His prescience has not worked. His surplus vanished and he was out a few million dollars more in his calculations. This is not unusual for this minister.

Perhaps the Minister of Finance remembers the wise old axiom that the plans of mice and men oft go astray. I suggest to the hon. member for York East that if his figures are no better, he should be very careful before the committee. What is the reason for the delay in relieving the humiliation of the old people and their difficulties in life? Nothing is to be done before April 1. Santa Claus just did not come. To give the minister credit I admit that he did his best to try to gild the lily, but quickly this will disappear when cold reality sets in. Those promises of things to come might never materialize. This is merely a white paper, a feeler to test the water. We hope it is that because then perhaps some of the things in it can be changed. Perhaps we can give the Liberals a shot in the arm by redirecting them on the right course. What about the poor old age pensioner? He needs bread and the government gives him cake—shades of Marie Antoinette. It will be a sparse Christmas for many people who will not believe this government could not have made arrangements for the increase to become available before the year's end. The approach to poverty is becoming a hodge-podge of municipal provincial and federal welfare boards with duplications and over-lapping. Often times no one receives help because the help is buried in bureaucracy.

It was interesting and sad to learn last evening that the Department of Health and Welfare has been sending out papers to addresses which had been changed five years previously, or even longer, and to non-existent places. Perhaps some of these people had passed away. However, this is government, this is bureaucracy, and perhaps this type of thing just cannot be helped, but surely to goodness they should try to do something about it. The approach to poverty, as I have said is becoming a hodge-podge of welfare boards. Let us take the case of the old age security pension. The recipient pays for it. The amount now is 4 per cent. Why is it said that the old people who are over age 65 do not deserve it. Surely, these people have been paying for it over the years through taxation. An amount of 4 per cent has been received from these people on a sliding scale from the time they began paying income tax. If a person had been fortunate enough to have a job, he was paying income tax on a sliding scale up to $240 per year. Those earning were paying more. I say that this is not right. How many people would like to make insurance payments on that basis? This is a tax which has been paid year after year so that the people would receive the old age pension as a matter of right, and not in the form of charity.

Surely, it is a principle of any business that when one makes a contribution toward a fund in order to provide for his old age this should not be taken away from him. I believe the old age pension, since people are taxed in order to pay for it, should be paid as a maximum at the level of $3,060 per year to married couples and $1,620 per year for single people and should be tied to a cost of living increase. This I support, and I congratulate the minister for doing this even though it is done on the means test, but even at this level these people are being left in the land of poverty according to the Economic Council. Since everyone who pays income tax contributes to his own old age pension fund, and pays according to his income up to $240 per year, it is my belief that everyone has the right to receive it.

• (5:40 p.m.)

If a person does not need the pension because his income is above the poverty line, taxes will look after that excess income. According to this principle, regardless of whether or not it is a Liberal principle, the money is raised by taxing those who have bigger incomes. That was the principle. Hon. members can go back and look at the debates recorded in Hansard of those days. The minister's bill also has the demeaning feature of separating people into two classes. If a person has a taxable income—and here is another point that bothers me—whether or not the old age supplement has made his income taxable, he has to look after his own hospitalization. I do not know how many hon. members have had this point brought to their attention but I run into this very feature over and over again. Even if a person receives the old age supplement and his income is taxable, he has to pay for his hospitalization and for his OHSIP as well as his drugs. As I have stated before, this principle applies to the single or married couples receiving the income supplement if they have taxable income.

I think that sometimes this is very unfair because, after paying income tax and hospitalization, these people end up below the income level which they would have had before getting the supplement. The government committed itself to this principle when it made those persons who are on a guaranteed income supplement pay for their hospitalization and medical insurance if their income is taxable. In other words, they are taking some of the supplement away from them when they make them pay taxes and hospitalization. Furthermore, the government sticks to this principle when it taxes by 50 per cent all the old age pensioner receives above the supplement. Surely, in this way the government taxes the supplement away from these people. Therefore, the government cannot keep riding two horses all the time. Perhaps they realize that there must be work incentives. The Globe and Mail had a small article on this which I think is apropos. It reads in part:

> So why not experiment with the old folk? Not all, despite the white paper, wish to be removed permanently from the work force. Why not allow a pensioner $3 or $4 of earned income for each dollar deduction of supplement? The cost to the government would not be great, the able old would not be trapped in a workless world, and useful information could be amassed on the effectiveness of such an incentive to work.

The article goes on to read:

> Just in passing, it might be noted that when members of Parliament revised their own pension scheme, they did not feel it necessary to insert a clause deducting $1 of pension for each $2 of other income.

The principle of dividing old people into two classes bothers me. This principle was given up in 1951 after careful consideration. The principle was brought out over and over again in the debates of those days. If hon. members would go back to the debates of 1951 they would see this. It is abundantly clear it was ruled out by the St. Laurent government because it encouraged too many people to get rid of estates. It cost too much to police. With the situation as it is now, with estate taxes and confiscations, this process may be accelerated. This will encourage people to give their money away so as to qualify for a guaranteed income supplement, and it will not be long before the 900,000 people who qualify today will become 1,700,000 tomorrow. The problem is that to qualify on a means test for 60 per cent or more is very demeaning. This is pointed out in an article in the Star which reads in part as follows:

> Another of the neediest groups, people over 65 with little or no income of their own, will be substantially helped if the white paper proposals take effect. The increases of $22 a month for single supplemented pensioners and of $28 for married couples are more than welcome, and they too are overdue, for these pensioners' real incomes have steadily fallen as the cost of living rose. To their new pensions should be added an escalator which will fully cover future price increases.

This government proposes the removal of the escalation clause and that presents another problem. When people apply for this guaranteed income supplement, if the application forms are not filled out correctly and an overpayment is made, the poor old recipient can starve as he pays it back bit by bit in the months ahead. This occurs over and over again. I have had people coming to see me, as I think most other hon. members have, telling me that through an error on their part, which perhaps was not intentional, they received for a time more than they were entitled to and then have had to pay it back leaving them with not enough to live on. This is not a nice thing to happen to old people. Actually, it is very cruel in a good many cases. Just the other day a case was drawn to my attention of a poor old lady whose husband had died. The government suddenly found out that he owed them some money. It was only $6. They threatened action. The widow was living in poverty trying to pay the funeral expenses out of her small pension.

This is why I believe in the principle of universal pensions. As it is there is far too much demeaning of the individual. I have some figures here that would indicate the average earnings of a person at the age of 65. Of 68,000 people who were paying income tax at 65, the reported average income was $4,020. At the age of 70 that figure dropped to $4,000. A couple aged 65 years and over will receive $3,060. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) pointed out, one has to draw a comparison between the reported poverty level income of $4,020 and the $3,060 that will be received.

This is why I believe in universal pensions and in getting away from the bureaucracy and the humiliation which our people have to undergo. I do not believe in the division of our people into the rich and the poor. A great many of these people have come through the great depression, and I know some of them personally.

Mr. Gilbert: The Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) agrees with that.

Mr. Rynard: I am sure he does. There would be no question of bringing out a white paper such as this one if he were in charge. I want to bring this point home. The difference is very small and those people have come through the great depression. They worked for years in hard times. Many of them worked for a buck a day. Some of them bought the perpetual bonds in the grim 30's the payment of which the government has now welched. I refer to the 3½ per cent perpetuals which were supposed to mature in 1966, and which every banker in the country said would be paid off at that time. Those bonds are now worth only 38 cents on the dollar, and I am sure the Minister of Labour realizes that the purchasing power of that dollar has been cut by a third. In effect, therefore the bonds are actually worth less than 15 cents on the dollar.

• (5:50 p.m.)

This bothers me because I am not a partisan politician. I know many of the people who bought those bonds. I was a young doctor in those years. I know how we were paid then. I know the difficulties people had in making ends meet. That they now have to accept 15 cents on their dollar shows how cruel and hard governments can be.

The white paper, Mr. Speaker, may even discourage people from saving for their old age. As I have said, the estate tax is confiscatory. People may say to themselves, "We will not be any further ahead by scrimping and saving. Our friends across the road will get $255 per month with the old age pension and the supplement. They are not providing for their old age. Why should we?" Surely, this Canada of ours is too great a resource country for that? Surely, we have too many opportunities to start playing that type of game? What effect will this double standard have on the thrift and industry of the community and of the country?

The middle class upon which this country is dependent for its prosperity, the people who must carry the load if the country is to progress, are being taxed so heavily that their incentive is being destroyed. We are encouraging people not to save because we will provide them with a guaranteed income supplement. They will ask each other, "Why not live like our neighbours? Why not keep up with the Joneses? The government will help us anyway." The individual's incentive is being destroyed. Once this happens the tax base will be gradually eroded. I congratulate the minister on the crumbs he has thrown, but I regret the inability of the government to grasp the question of poverty, to meet the problem in a realistic manner instead of with this hodge-podge attack.

The hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) said that of course we never do things for political purposes. I could go through the Department of Health and Welfare in both the province of Ontario and the federal government and point out place after place where the neglect is woeful. We have chronic illness hospitals but we ship people out of them by telling them they are not in need of active treatment any more. In each case a committee will tell a patient, "You are fit to go out." Despite government controls, the cost of ward care has risen to $40, $50 and $60 per day. I have seen patients almost cruelly shoved out.

Where do these people go? They expect to be covered by hospitalization, for which they may have paid for years. But hospitalization does not cover them when they are chronically ill, and so they go to a home. What nonsense! That is not proper coverage. Why doesn't the federal government accept its share of this cost? Why doesn't it take the pressure off active treatment hospitals, and contribute to the provinces for the care of these patients in chronic illness hospitals? Governments just are not doing their best.

I think it was the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who said that people should always be alert to prevent a government from being completely incompetent. This is very true. This old age supplement should have been made universal. I have cited the reasons for that. Our old people have paid for it. They have been taxed at 4 per cent. They have been taxed on a sliding scale up to $240. It is theirs by right. I do not believe we should separate the old people, saying to some that they are rich and to others that they are poor. The cost would be minimal.

I am sorry the Minister of National Health and Welfare is not in the House because I noticed he quoted a figure of $150 million or $160 million as the cost of paying an extra $10 per month.

Mr. Francis: $200 million.

Mr. Rynard: I thank the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis). How in the world would it cost $200 million to give 500,000 people $10 a month?

Mr. Francis: I am sorry, I made a mistake.

Mr. Rynard: I think the minister made one too. I will look it up in Hansard tomorrow, but he made that mistake. I think he said $160 million. I am not a mathematician, but I can say that if the minister looked at that properly he would have come up with a figure around $50 million or $60 million. Maybe the minister in error multiplied the 1,600,000 by ten. It would not take that much money, and if we were paying them too much it would be taxed away. Surely, this is the principle upon which the government was working with respect to the guaranteed income supplement. Otherwise how could it have put some of these pensioners in the income tax bracket.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock—

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, could it be confirmed to us what the business will be tomorrow afternoon? We know what it will be at night.

Mr. Jerome: The intention is to continue with this measure tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. Bell: And supposing we did complete it fairly early tomorrow?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Six o'clock.

Mr. Jerome: I have had a word with one of the other house leaders and perhaps I am advisedly not prepared for that eventuality.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 2 p.m.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, December 3, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received which is as follows:

Government House,
Ottawa, 3 December, 1970

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable Gérald Fauteux, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, December 3, at 5.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Louis-Frémont Trudeau
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

• (2:10 p.m.)

AUDITOR GENERAL

CONSENT TO WITHDRAWAL OF BILL—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER STANDING ORDER 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask leave of the House to present a motion under Standing Order 43.

The clear and pressing necessity for this motion is very direct and can be stated in a sentence or two. Yesterday the President of the Treasury Board was quoted as saying outside the House that in order for Bill C-190 to be withdrawn it would be necessary for the House to give unanimous consent and he thought this would not be forthcoming from the opposition. Believing that it would, and hoping that the government agrees, all I need to do, seconded by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), is to move:

That this House gives consent to the President of the Treasury Board to withdraw from the order paper government order No. 38, namely the order for the second reading of Bill C-190, an Act respecting the Auditor General of Canada.

Mr. Hees: Now what are you going to do?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. As is well known by now, hon. members realize that the unanimous consent of the House is required for this motion to be put. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Trudeau: Carried.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? It is very difficult, I must say—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether a voice vote is appropriate in such circumstances. I must say that I could not hear any nays or dissenting voices.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: My understanding is—

Mr. Fairweather: Where is Drury?

Some hon. Members: Where is he?

Mr. Speaker: My understanding is that the motion is now to be put. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Carried.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, had I been given the opportunity a little earlier I could have saved the House some time.

An hon. Member: Oh, come off it.

Mr. MacEachen: I should like now to do what I intended to do when I got to my feet—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen:—and that is to ask, on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board, for the withdrawal of Bill C-190 from the order paper.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. From a procedural standpoint I doubt whether the motion proposed by the minister is in order. My understanding is that the motion under Standing Order 43 has been put and agreed to by the House. I would not think that anything further is required at the present time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Fire him!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon. members will realize that this is a very novel situation. There are few precedents that I know of and I would certainly like to hear the opinions of hon. members on the procedural aspect of the matter, whether we can at this point by discussing the matter further reflect in this way on a vote or whether it is required, the vote having been taken, that the President of the Treasury Board be given the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the President of the Privy Council might like to attempt to enlighten the Chair on this point.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, as I read the first adopted motion, the House gives consent to the President of the Treasury Board to withdraw the bill. Presumably there is then required an action on the part of the President of the Treasury Board, that of asking to withdraw the bill. In other words, the motion gives consent, but there is a requirement to be fulfilled on the part of the President of the Treasury Board in order to withdraw the bill. That is my view—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen:—procedurally, and that is why I ask on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacEachen:—for consent to withdraw the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt that it is necessary to hear further argument. I agree with the point of view of the President of the Privy Council. The motion is that this House gives consent to the President of the Treasury Board to withdraw. He has to be given an opportunity to withdraw, the House having given unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order may I suggest that the House has given its consent to this ex post facto request.

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Woolliams: Apparently the minister does not know what he is doing.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I never expected such co-operation from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: I gather now, Mr. Speaker, that from a procedural point of view I may ask on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board to withdraw the bill affecting the Auditor General of Canada which is on the order paper at present.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The point is quite clear. Has the President of the Privy Council leave to withdraw the said bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and bill withdrawn.

[Mr. Speaker.]

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT, OBJECTS AND POWERS, BYLAWS, AND REPORT

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-204, to establish a Canada Development Corporation.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to mobilize private and public funds and to channel them into investment serving the public interest of Canada as a whole, and to expand the public sector of the economy where necessary for the growth of the economy, for national planning and for increasing Canada's independence.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL SECURITY

NEGOTIATIONS FOR RELEASE OF JAMES CROSS BY KIDNAPPERS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he has any information to give the House about Mr. James Cross?

[Translation]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. During the course of last night, police forces undertook an intensive search in order to locate Mr. Cross and his kidnappers as well as the killers of Mr. Laporte.

Following this action, the police received a note from the presumed kidnappers of Mr. Cross calling for discussions between a person designated by them and a representative of the governments. This morning, the representative of the federal and Quebec governments, Mr. Robert Demers, initiated such discussions.

The House will remember that several weeks ago the governments offered those holding Mr. Cross as a hostage a safe-conduct in exchange for his release. The offer still stands, and representatives of the Department of External Affairs are now in Montreal to make arrangements in connection with this safe-conduct, if necessary. The House will understand that, as discussions are now in progress, I cannot give more information at the present time.

However, Mr. Speaker, the Justice Minister (Mr. Turner) or myself will report to the House on any important new development.

[English]

AUDITOR GENERAL

DOWNGRADING OF POSITIONS OF SENIOR OFFICERS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as Government House Leader. Does the authority he is exercising for the President of the Treasury Board in the House today include the authority to indicate to the House that the red circling of the senior staff in the office of the Auditor General will now be discontinued?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): No, Mr. Speaker, my authority does not extend that far, but it does extend far enough to ask the hon. member to co-operate with me in cleaning up the other items on the order paper as quickly as possible.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): You are a poor loser.

DOWNGRADING OF POSITIONS OF SENIOR OFFICERS—RECONSTITUTING OF COMMITTEE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): As it appears quite certain that the efficiency and effectiveness of the staff of the Auditor General are being greatly impaired, will the government review the entire situation with a view to reconstituting the government committee which was examining this matter?

An hon. Member: Will you come?

Mr. Baldwin: My question is, in view of the fact—

Mr. Trudeau: To whom are you directing the question?

Mr. Baldwin: I am directing my supplementary question to the President of the Privy Council who apparently is answering today for the President of the Treasury Board. Will the minister discuss with the President of the Treasury Board the immediate necessity of reconstituting the government committee which was dealing with this matter so that at the earliest possible time the order downgrading the staff of the Auditor General can be revoked and proper arrangements made so that his staff will receive recognition?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to convey this representation to the President of the Treasury Board. I hasten to add that I was acting for the President of the Treasury Board with respect to the matter which related to the business of the House. I am not acting for him in any other respect.

Mr. Baldwin: I will direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister who seemed quite interested in this matter a little while ago.

Mr. Trudeau: What do you want to ask me?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Will the Prime Minister reconsider the position of one of his ministers in this whole matter and, if necessary, ask for his resignation?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As a result of this whole episode, Mr. Speaker, I certainly will advise my ministers that if there are any unanimous recommendations from standing committees over which the opposition has control, we should not automatically give implementation or credence to those recommendations from a committee which the opposition controls.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister consider implementing the unanimous recommendation made last year by the Public Accounts Committee dealing with the Bonaventure, which the government apparently did not like?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

[Translation]

NATIONAL SECURITY

NEGOTIATIONS FOR RELEASE OF JAMES CROSS BY KIDNAPPERS—NAME OF FLQ REPRESENTATIVE

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. A few moments ago he told us that the counsel for the governments, Mr. Demers, had negotiated the release of Mr. James Cross. Could he say who was the other representative?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at this stage I cannot answer the question, all the less as I did not understand it.

* * *

[English]

LABOUR RELATIONS

USE OF UNITED STATES COST OF LIVING INDICES IN CANADIAN WAGE INCREASE AGREEMENTS

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): I have a question I should like to ask the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. Having regard to discussions which are now under way in the automobile industry, does the government support the use of United States cost of living indices as a means of calculating wage increases in connection with Canadian wage agreements?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is inviting the minister to make a statement which I suggest is much too general in nature. I do not think a question in those terms is acceptable at this point.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH

EFFECT OF CERTAIN BRANDS OF TOOTHPASTE ON TOOTH ENAMEL

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is based upon a recent study by the American Dental Association which found that some brands of toothpaste were of such abrasive quality as to be harmful to tooth enamel. Can the minister advise whether similar studies are being conducted in Canada and, if so, what measures are being taken to safeguard Canadian users from any harmful effects?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not know how urgent this question is either to the minister or to the hon. member, but I doubt very much whether there is sufficient urgency at this time to enable the Chair to accept it. If there is urgency which is not apparent to the Chair, the matter can be discussed at the time of the adjournment, but I suggest that the question is not acceptable from a procedural standpoint at this time.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STUDY OF NATO'S OUTLOOK—REPORTED CRITICISM BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Was the Minister of National Defence expressing the official view of the Canadian government when, as has been reported, he criticized the study of NATO's outlook for the seventies which calls for an improvement in the conventional armed strength of that organization, by describing it at the NATO ministerial meeting as not imaginative enough?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not know whether the question refers to a policy statement of NATO itself or a government policy statement.

Mr. MacLean: Both, Mr. Speaker. My question refers to the reported criticism by the Minister of National Defence of this NATO study. I was inquiring whether this criticism had the authority of the Canadian government.

Mr. Trudeau: To the extent that the NATO study departs from our own policy statements it does, of course, have the authority of the government. The policy of the government in this regard has been made known. To the extent that it does not depart, it concerns something with regard to which the government has made no policy statement as yet.

Mr. MacLean: May I ask whether, on their return from Europe, the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Minister of National Defence will make a statement to the House on motions reporting on the meetings so that the House may be fully aware of Canada's stance at these meetings?

Mr. Trudeau: I will ask the ministers to consider that suggestion.

[Mr. Speaker.]

PENITENTIARIES

PRINCE ALBERT—REASONS FOR SUSPENSION OF CERTAIN MEMBERS OF STAFF

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice who I assume is also Acting Solicitor General today. Can the minister tell us whether the six staff members at Prince Albert Penitentiary who have been suspended were suspended as a result of the investigations of the board of inquiry which, at least a few days ago, was looking into the riot and fire which occurred at the penitentiary?

Hon. John N. Turner (Acting Solicitor General): I have not yet received a report on this particular aspect of the affair but I shall be in touch with the hon. member.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Am I to assume from that reply that the minister has received some reports on some aspects of the affair?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): All I meant to say was that I have been briefed by the Deputy Solicitor General on this matter but that I have not received the information which the hon. member is seeking.

PRINCE ALBERT—INVESTIGATION OF CONDITIONS BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): I should like to address a question to the President of the Privy Council. In view of the serious situation which appears to have developed at Prince Albert Penitentiary, and the fact that the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs does not have a heavy workload before it, would the government consider giving this committee terms of reference which would enable it to visit the penitentiary to examine the conditions there at first hand?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): I would be happy to discuss that suggestion with the chairman of the committee.

* * *

TRADE

AGRICULTURE—REASONS FOR 1969 DEFICIT—PROSPECTS FOR 1970

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): My question is for the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that in 1969, one year after this government came to power, and for the first time in the history of Canada, there was a trade deficit—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows he has the floor for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. Yewchuk: I was just coming to it, Mr. Speaker. I was about to say that there was a trade deficit of approximately $36 million in the agricultural industry. Would the minister indicate now or make a statement on motions as to what the reasons for this may be and what the prospects are in this area for 1970?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons, which is well known to all members of the House, is that for that particular year there was a very sharp decline in exports of grain. The predictions of my colleague are to the effect that this will be corrected, and that correction is already under way.

* * *

GRAIN

ADDITIONAL SALES—MOVEMENT INTO EXPORT POSITION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. The minister has talked about sales of grain, yet grain is still piled up on farms and the country elevators are plugged. If there have been all these sales made, why is the grain not moving?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): It is certainly true, Mr. Speaker, that a large quantity of grain is on hand, and this is the reason for certain action that we took last year, which was not necessarily supported by the hon. member opposite. Grain is moving very rapidly out of the country elevators. The country elevators were congested at the beginning of this crop year, but it is my hope that we need not operate them in that fashion in the future.

Mr. Woolliams: In light of the sarcastic answer of the minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: —would the minister now be more practical and tell the House when quotas will be increased in order to move the grain?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, quotas have been increasing steadily as grain is required in the movement. The hon. member may not be aware of the fact that there is a ten bushel quota for barley, a three bushel quota for Durum, a two bushel quota for wheat generally, a five bushel quota for rye, and an eight bushel quota for rapeseed, and so on.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair will allow one more supplementary to the hon. member for Calgary North but we will go on with another subject after that.

Mr. Woolliams: I put this supplementary question to the minister. There may be the quotas he describes, but will he tell the House why grain is not moving off the farms to the country elevators in line with these quotas? That is my question, and I say to the minister he should stop misrepresenting the facts.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, is the minister not aware that the quota on rye now is eight bushels rather than the five bushels he mentioned a few moments ago?

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—REQUEST FOR COPY OF STATEMENT BY QUEBEC MINISTER OF JUSTICE ON SEARCHES, ARRESTS, ETC.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice. Would he be good enough to obtain a copy of the statement made yesterday by the Quebec Minister of Justice in the National Assembly of that province giving details of the searches and arrests and other matters since the proclamation of the War Measures Act, and table that statement in the House?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to do that. I checked the figures myself and they agree with the figures I delivered on behalf of the RCMP as of November 24, 1970. I will be glad to get those figures.

Mr. Lewis: I understand from press reports that the Minister of Justice of Quebec did not merely give the figures that the Minister of Justice gave us here but also gave other breakdowns. This is the information that I hope the minister will agree to table.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice of Quebec tabled in the National Assembly in response to a written question details somewhat more full than those that have been required of me here. But so far as they relate to the figures I have given the House, they do correspond.

WAR MEASURES ACT—INVESTIGATION OF BEATING OF PERSONS ARRESTED

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Has the Minister of Justice been in touch with the Minister of Justice of Quebec regarding the inquiry into the alleged mistreatment of some of those who were imprisoned under the War Measures Act regulations, and has the minister any report he can make to the House, either briefly now or on motions at an appropriate time?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, my last conversation with the Attorney General of Quebec on that particular subject was on Monday, and I did report to the House at that time. I have nothing further to add at the moment.

[Translation]

WAR MEASURES ACT—PAYMENT BY QUEBEC FOR SERVICES OF ARMED FORCES

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice.

Can he tell us whether the statement of the Quebec Minister of Justice, to the effect that the services of the armed forces in Quebec are costing $500,000 a day, is correct?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): There is no reason why I should confirm that, Mr. Speaker. That is the responsibility of the Quebec National Assembly.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that Bill C-181 has been passed, could the Prime Minister tell us who, in due course, will pay the cost of the services of the Canadian armed forces in Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have already answered that question four or five times.

When an agreement has been reached between the province of Quebec and the federal government, I shall be pleased to give further details.

* * *

[English]

GRAIN

SUPPLEMENTARY REPORT OF WHEAT BOARD FOR 1968-69 CROP YEAR—POOL ACCOUNTS DEFICITS

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Can the minister inform the House when the supplementary report of the Canadian Wheat Board for the crop year 1968-69 will be available?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this report is in the hands of the printers and should be available perhaps in a couple of weeks for tabling. May I add that contrary to the indication given in the committee yesterday the order in council in connection with the wheat pool was passed on September 23.

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): Can the minister inform the House of the deficits in each of the pool accounts for wheat, oats and barley for the same year, 1968-69, which the federal treasury has been obliged to underwrite in recent months?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would think that that question is of a statistical nature. My limited understanding of these complicated matters would lead me to believe that this is the kind of question that should be asked in writing on the order paper.

* * *

HOUSING

PREVENTION OF INCREASES IN RENTS PAID BY SENIOR CITIZENS AND PEOPLE ON LOW INCOMES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister responsible for housing. In order to give further recognition of and sympathy toward the housing problems faced by our senior citizens and people on low incomes, and in light of recent proposals contained in the government white paper on income security for Canadians announced by his colleague, can the minister assure the House that the government will take steps to prevent immediate increases in rent for senior citizens or families living in public housing developments where rents are geared to income?

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, to the degree possible we will do so. In fact, the rent to income scale which I suggested in the public housing guidelines last year is pertinent and those guidelines are generally moving toward implementation by the provinces; but the fact of the matter is that that kind of decision is primarily one for provincial exercise.

Mr. Alexander: Would the minister pass on the information I have given him this afternoon in order that we may have some consensus in regard to the plight of our senior citizens and those on lower incomes?

CHANGE IN INTEREST RATE ON LOANS TO SOCIETIES FOR SENIOR CITIZENS' ACCOMMODATION

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister in charge of housing whether the government is giving any consideration to changing the interest rate on loans to societies to be used for financing senior citizens' housing, which loans at the present time are paid back over a 50-year period at approximately two and a half times the principal?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the interest rate on directed social housing programs has an immediate relationship to the cost of borrowing to the government, a matter constantly subject to examination, always with the desire of bringing the rate down.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ARGENTIA, NFLD.—REPORT ON EFFECTS OF CLOSING OF UNITED STATES NAVAL STATION

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Can the minister tell the House whether he has yet received a report from the task force appointed by him some time ago to investigate the economic plight of people living in the Argentia area of Newfoundland caused by the closing down of the United States naval station in that region?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will inquire if I have received a report lately.

* * *

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LENGTH OF EMPLOYMENT TERMINATION NOTICE TO SURPLUS WORKERS

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of National Defence; I gave notice of the question last week. On May 15, 1970, as reported at page 7011 of Hansard, in an exchange between the minister and myself the minister indicated that any employees whose employment would be terminated as a result of Canadian Forces base closures would receive six months' notice. I should like to ask whether this policy is still in effect and, if so, has the minister investigated whether civilian employees at the Canadian Forces base at Gimli and other bases subject to closure are being declared surplus to requirements and having their employment terminated in a lesser period than six months?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have been given a folder today from the Minister of National Defence but there is no reference to this question in it. The best I can assure my hon. friend is that I will bring it to his attention or, if he is delayed in returning to Canada, we will try to obtain an answer for the hon. member.

* * *

PUBLIC WORKS

EARLY CONSIDERATION OF ESTIMATES BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. In light of the fact that the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works did not study the estimates of that department last year, will the minister agree to table his estimates at an early date so that committee may make an early start and thoroughly discuss the matter of wharf and harbour facilities particularly in the Atlantic area?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): I would be agreeable, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Will the minister give consideration to undertaking a special manpower training program for the hundreds of Nova Scotians who have been forced out of their jobs by the new Liberal government in that province?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

* * *

GRAIN

WHEAT—IMMEDIATE INCREASE IN DELIVERY QUOTA

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. Would the minister give immediate consideration to increasing the quota on wheat from two bushels in order to provide badly needed cash to the farmers and to fill the half empty elevators on the Prairies, as requested by the Manitoba wheat pool?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question of raising quotas is in the hands of the Wheat Board which has been studying carefully both the requirements for grain and also the handling efficiency of the elevator system. I hope the hon. member is not suggesting that it is in fact a wise move to plug the elevators to the hilt so they are incapable of handling—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the minister's comment is argumentative.

Mr. Dinsdale: In view of the expanded exports and before the severity of winter sets in, would the minister instruct the Wheat Board to increase the quotas?

PRODUCTION AND RECEIPTS POLICY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON TIMETABLE AND POSITION OF FARM LEADERS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): May I ask the minister whether, in view of the severe and specific criticism levelled at the minister's proposed cereal grain policy by the president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and other farm leaders, and in view of the indication by the minister that this program will be finalized before the year's end, he will make a statement on motions to the House early next week setting out the government's time-table and his program for consultations with farm leaders?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that a statement next week on a timetable would be useful. I ask the hon. member to refer back to the comments of the president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. His comments have in fact been very constructive and helpful in our consideration of these proposals.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, would the minister then consider setting before the House the considered opinions of the farm leaders and others who have considered this policy in order that the House might be informed?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the farm leaders and others have this issue under very serious consideration. They have not yet given me any final view on their positions, but we anticipate having further discussions with them within the next ten days or so.

PRODUCTION AND RECEIPTS POLICY—FARM CONSOLIDATION PROGRAM

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Now that the proceedings of the Canadian Agricultural Congress have been completed, can the minister indicate to the House when he will be in a position to elaborate on the proposed policy of farm unit consolidation as outlined in the grains policy?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think this is a general reference in the grains policy to programs which are being actively reviewed by my colleague the Minister of Agriculture.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PRODUCTION AND RECEIPTS POLICY—INQUIRY AS TO STATEMENT BEFORE CHRISTMAS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister in charge of the Wheat Board whether, after the consultations are completed as referred to by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar and the government has reached a decision, the minister will be in a position to make a statement on motions before the Christmas recess outlining the final program position of the government in respect of the grains policy proposal?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not expect it will be possible to do that before the Christmas recess.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

NEGOTIATIONS FOR RELEASE OF JAMES CROSS BY KIDNAPPERS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is now in a position to give any further information concerning Mr. Cross in view of the news reports that have been issued in this regard? I do not wish to press for any disclosure the Prime Minister might consider improper, but is there any further information he can give the House now?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Of course I have not left the House since I last answered the question and I have no further information, although I too am receiving press reports to the effect that a car is on the way to St. Helen's Island. I have no information at this moment as to who is in the car.

* * *

[Translation]

UNITED NATIONS

PRESENCE OF AGRICULTURAL EXPERTS ON CANADIAN DELEGATION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): In the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I should like to put my question to his Parliamentary Secretary.

Considering the significant Canadian contribution to the food program in under-developed countries, through the United Nations, could the Parliamentary Secretary tell us whether there are some agronomists in the Canadian mission to the United Nations?

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian delegation to the United Nations is quite capably headed by the Ambassador Yvon Beaulne and in addition to the permanent staff which is assisting him, the government sends each year a certain number of experts who take part in the proceedings of the United Nations committees. However, the Canadian International Development Agency regularly uses the services of agronomists and farm experts.

[English]

COMBINES

SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF SO-CALLED PRICE WAR AMONG GROCERY CHAINS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs arising out of a question I asked about a week ago concerning the alleged price discount war among the major grocery chains of the country. Further to the question I asked on that occasion, has the minister requested members of his department to look into what might appear to be a fraudulent advertising campaign advising people that prices are being cut when in some cases they appear to be increasing? Has the minister requested officials of the Combines Investigation Branch of his department to look into this price war to ascertain if any pricing agreements or arrangements are being made among these major grocery chains?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my officials have been instructed for quite some time to make sure that the Combines Investigation Act is observed.

* * *

[Translation]

HEALTH

QUEBEC—MEASURES TO ASSURE REASONABLE LEVEL OF MEDICAL SERVICES

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare.

As no agreement has yet been entered into between the government of the province of Quebec and the medical specialists, could the minister tell us what measures he intends taking to ensure decent health service standards?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe will admit with me that his question is of a rather general nature. It seems to me that the minister can only answer such an important question by way of a statement on motions unless he is in a position to reply to it briefly and quickly.

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think I can explain briefly that the discussions I have had with my counterpart in the province of Quebec have indicated to me that health standards are not going to be prejudiced at all and that there is nothing in their legislation which is contrary to medicare.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

ENTRY OF SUBVERSIVES FROM COMMUNIST COUNTRIES

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In light of what may be happening today in Montreal, will the minister immediately close, or cause to be much more selective, the entry into our country of persons from Cuba and other communist countries which support subversive activities in Canada?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that there is a great deal of relevance between the two parts of the question put by the hon. member. There are, of course, rules in the Immigration Act and regulations to which I might refer him which deal with certain classes of persons whose entry into Canada is not desired, and I think these rules are fairly adequate. But I would be glad to receive any specific representations if the hon. member has some specific change in mind.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I am sure the minister understands the purport of my question. If these subversive persons are moved from Montreal to Cuba today, according to certain agreements that have been made, we do not want them back. That is why I ask him to close immigration from Cuba.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a question for the Prime Minister with respect to the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Security. Has the Prime Minister or the government made a decision to implement any more of its recommendations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. There has been further consideration of some of the recommendations in that report, and the government will announce any change in policy in due course.

* * *

HEALTH

SAFETY DEVICES TO CONTROL EXHAUST EMISSIONS FROM PROPOSED NUCLEAR REACTORS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): My question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Could the minister indicate to the House whether or not his department or any agency of the government has been in touch with United States authorities with respect to proposals to build a large number of nuclear reactors around the Great Lakes, and particularly with respect to the safety devices which would control the emissions from the exhaust stacks of such nuclear plants?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I will have to take notice of that question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

NEWFOUNDLAND WHITE PAPER DEVELOPMENT PROPOSALS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): My question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Would the minister advise us whether his department has accepted the white paper proposals submitted by the province of Newfoundland for the development of the west coast, including all-weather highways, three national parks and two airports?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me to be a very wide question. Perhaps the minister might reply briefly.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): We are considering this white paper in the same way as we consider other documents.

[English]

DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES ON LEGISLATIVE CHANGES RELATED TO VARYING ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Is the government currently carrying on discussions with the provinces concerning possible changes in regional development legislation as they relate to current economic conditions in various parts of Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, we are in constant contact with the provinces on the subject of insufficiently developed areas and we are now making particular efforts to solve the problems that arise.

[English]

Mr. Burton: Is the government considering extending the scope of regional development incentive grants beyond secondary industry, or is it also considering the establishment of more special areas where—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is inviting the minister to make a very general statement which normally should be made on motions.

* * *

INFORMATION CANADA

AVAILABILITY OF ALLEGED DIGEST OF RESPONSES TO GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCEMENTS

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): I have a question for the minister in charge of Information Canada further to my efforts to obtain information on Information Canada. Would the minister now like to revise his answer of yesterday when he stated there would be no digest of comments on government announcements as referred to in my question?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): In the way the question was phrased there seemed to be some idea in the hon. member's mind that there would be a digest of responses to government announcements. I know of no such digest. In trying to search my mind for what he might be talking about I thought it might be a report on the feedback of comments, concerns, expressions of opinions or inquiries that come through the inquiry centre from time to time. If that is what he has in mind, we hope to issue a report of that kind once a month. Since the inquiry centre just opened, probably the first one might be at the end of the year and then once a month after that. Of course members of all parties would receive those reports at the same time.

Mr. Bell: Now that we understand each other, may I be assured that we will receive these reports in Parliament in the same way that other persons will outside Parliament and that they will tell us how the latest reaction to government announcements have fared in public print, to use the exact words of one of his departmental officials?

Mr. Stanbury: The reports, as I have just mentioned, will go to all Members of Parliament at the same time.

Mr. Bell: And they will not be selective?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question of the minister responsible for Information Canada.

Since several requests have been made by some colleges or CEGEPs in order to get better information in respect of Canadian politics, would the minister be in favour that his department distributes to junior colleges or CEGEPs in Canada, or at least in my riding,—since the question originated there—some information coming directly from Information Canada?

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, Information Canada's budget does not allow this service, but I am willing to discuss it with the hon. member and my colleagues.

In my view, the suggestion to provide colleges with as much information as possible concerning the federal government is excellent.

* * *

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the President of the Privy Council about the business for the rest of this week and for next week and whether he has any indication now of the target date for the recess?

Mr. MacEachen: I thank the hon. member for his question. Today we hope to continue with the debate on the Old Age Security Act. It is understood that the debate will adjourn at 5 p.m. today so that the budget presentation can be made at 8 p.m. tonight. If it is necessary, I would like that to be put in the form of a House order.

Tomorrow we will resume the second reading of the Old Age Security Act if it is not completed today. If that is completed tomorrow, we will go on to Bill S-2, the Statistics Act, Bill C-184, the Export Development Act and Bill S-4, the Canada-New Zealand Trade Agreement. Tomorrow we can consult with regard to further business following these items, if necessary.

On Monday I would propose to call the budget debate. I do not wish to make any further announcement regarding the business next week until I have had an opportunity to meet the house leaders tomorrow morning following the budget presentation to discuss our plans.

With respect to the target date for adjournment, it had been the plan of the government to adjourn on December 18. I hope that it will be possible to reach an orderly arrangement to complete all the necessary business. I am not saying this in any way to create a controversy or confrontation.

Mr. Stanfield: No threat?

Mr. MacEachen: No threat. We must keep in mind that it may be necessary to sit beyond that date, but I think with co-operation on all sides we can adjourn on December 18 or near that date.

Mr. Baldwin: Now that the bill dealing with the Auditor General is out of the way, does that not help the hon. gentleman in fixing a target date?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. KNOWLES (WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE)—REFERENCE BY PRIME MINISTER TO CONTROL OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): During the course of the oral question period the Prime Minister made reference to a committee of this House of which he said the opposition has control. It seems to me that it is a point of privilege to put on the record the fact that the Public Accounts Committee consists of 20 members, 10 Liberals and a total of 10 from the opposition side of the House—six, two, and two. The Chairman is a member of an opposition party. This means that when he is in the chair the votes are ten to nine in favour of the government. So it is the government which controls that committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Later:]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to this question of privilege. I should like to indicate that there is obviously a disagreement on the matter of control between the hon. member and myself in view of the statement that I made. It was my impression, Mr. Speaker, that the party that named or appointed the chairman was in some degree in control.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: If this is incorrect I do ask to withdraw my statement, but in exchange I suggest it might be better perhaps if in the future the chairman were from the government side and this would give the opposition control. We would be prepared to do that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Prime Minister may wish to correct his words when he says that a certain party names the chairman. The chairman is named by the entire committee and does not represent a party.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Also on the same question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding that the chairmen of committees were supposed to preside over the committees in an impartial way rather than try to control them. I must say that the Prime Minister's statement was rather shocking to me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is dead right, and that is why I suggest that in the future the chairmen should be a member from the Liberal party.

MR. NIELSEN—INFORMATION CANADA—REPLY TO QUESTION BY MINISTER

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My question of privilege arises out of the answer given by the minister responsible for Information Canada to the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster. Here I am referring to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, issue No. 25, the minutes of May 21, 1970, at page 25:47, where Mr. Phillips, Executive Assistant, Information Canada, was reported as saying:

> In other words, Information Canada will be providing analysis of public information media, clipping services, which will automatically go to all members of parliament, to the government, both sides of the House and to officials. But in addition to that, it will make media analysis digests on specific subjects where a department needs it for its own internal uses.

I want to ask the minister if that, indeed, is what is going to happen in the department?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a question of privilege. The hon. member might have asked this as a question but the question period expired four minutes ago.

Mr. Nielsen: On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that he is not respecting well known rules of the House. This has nothing at all to do with privilege and I hope he keeps that in mind. I will hear the hon. member now.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I want to press the question of privilege because it appears manifest that the minister's reply is different from the published evidence of a committee of this House. Either the minister is incorrect or was unintentionally misleading this House today or this evidence is incorrect, and the minister should be allowed to clarify the matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This could be done during the question period. I suggest to the hon. member that, as is well known to all members, debate as to facts cannot be termed or considered privilege. The hon. member cannot raise this matter as a question of privilege, and that is my ruling. Orders of the day.

• (3:10 p.m.)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING AMOUNT OF PENSION, MAXIMUM SUPPLEMENT AND ESCALATION THEREOF

The House resumed, from Wednesday, December 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Munro that Bill C-202, to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Services.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, ever since the government took office it has led the elderly people of this country to hope for great things. We members know this because we have been receiving delegations, messages and letters from elderly people across the country asking to have their pensions upgraded, pointing out the gap between the cost of living and their pensions, and urging that something be done. Every time delegations came to Ottawa to meet the government they returned home with full hearts and empty hands. They were led to believe that relief was just around the corner, that the government was taking time to make a survey of their needs, what it would cost them to live in a modern way, and that when the package deal was ready they would be everlastingly grateful for having a government which was so considerate of elderly people.

I happened to be with a group of elderly people in my part of the country, British Columbia, the day after the announcement was made about the increase in pensions. The announcement stated that there would be a $5 increase beginning January 1 next. Mr. Speaker, the reaction among those people was one of dismay, disbelief, and disappointment. They were not taken in one little bit with the suggestion that this would be a $5 increase. This group of people had been struggling hard to keep on their own, to manage without the supplement. Without any loss of time they saw through the newspaper headline, and came to the very accurate and sensible conclusion that what they were being offered after January 1 was an increase of precisely 42 cents. As I say, their reaction was one of dismay, disbelief and disappointment. They could not bring themselves to believe that a government which had come into being with such a modern and progressive image of a true feeling for people, could accord them this kind of shabby treatment, and do it under the guise of giving a $5 increase when it was merely an increase of 42 cents. They were not deceived. They knew exactly that they were not only the poor, forgotten people but the disregarded people, the cast-aside people for whom the government had very little use.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, that announcement was made on the same day as the announcement concerning wage increases for people in some of the branches of the armed services. These people were appalled at the difference in the amount that could be found for people in the armed services compared with what could be found for them. They were not resenting the fact that the armed services got an increase in wages, but felt that if this government could find the money to give an increase to the military, then they could surely have no reason for pushing aside the pioneers of this country. One of the women at that meeting had already prepared a letter to send to Ottawa. As soon as the news came through, she had got busy with her pencil and paper and I quote here the relevant part of the letter which she wrote to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson):

> Mr. Benson, have you been quoted correctly in the Vancouver Sun, Friday, November 27, "Pensions Get $5 more January 1—The government will increase the basic old age pension by $5 to $80 a month?" As Finance Minister are you deliberately trying to talk double to Canada's senior citizens or is your computer at fault? How else would you dispute statistics—$5 plus $79.58 is $84.58—not $80? Every daily newspaper and Canada's T.V. and radio quoted your statistics with "$5 increase to $80." Stanley Knowles, M.P. corrected you with: "The increase is not $5, but only 42 cents." You denied. Even the recipients of the dole verified Mr. Knowles' statistics.
>
> Just review old age senior citizens' pensions from 1957 to 1963, when pensions jumped from $46 to $75, an increase of $29 in six years, or 40 cents a month;
>
> 1963 to 1968, pensions increased $75 to $76.50 in five years $1.50, or 2½ cents a month;
>
> 1968 to 1971, increase in three years of $3.08 or 80 cents a month.
>
> Total increase in 14 years of $1.22½ a month, about one-fifth of one per cent.

This is a letter from a woman of education, one who has busied herself in community affairs, who has never been on the dole and who has always kept her head above water. She had hoped to receive a pension enabling her to live to the end of her years in conditions commensurate with the services she had rendered. She points out that the total increase in the pension for the last 14 years has been $1.221/2 per month or about one-fifth of one per cent.

I want to point out to the government that the elderly people of this country have not been taken in and they realize that what is being done is to degrade them still further. They will not be impressed with this legislation. Naturally, any group that can get a little bit more is going to take it but that does not mean they are grateful or believe they have had a fair deal. They will realize as well as I do, now that they have seen the legislation, that this bill has the sour smell of poverty about it. There is no way around the fact that this government, which prides itself on modern ways, as far as elderly people are concerned has contented itself with giving them crumbs.

Old age pensions have never been set in line with the cost of living. In this country, they have always been set at a level consonant with the political expediency of the moment. Ever since the time when old age pensions were set at $20 a month at age 70, with a means test, they have had little relationship to what it costs to live. They were set at the level the government of the day believed it could get away with, and were scraped down to the last cent with the means test. The only time we have had an increase in old age pensions since then has been when there was a sufficiently strong organization of elderly people, when a few people in this House were prepared to go to bat for them and when public opinion made it necessary to give an increase. These increases have been niggardly in the extreme.

But this bill has some refinements of torture which are noteworthy, Mr. Speaker. For the first time, it makes the poor finance the destitute. It divides people receiving the old age pension into two classes, the poor and the destitute. To get the money, the government scrapes it off the backs of the poor, the upper group in that income bracket and makes them finance the lower group.

One thing during yesterday's debate which I remember very vividly was the minister's positive incredulity when he heard that of the 800,000 old age pensioners the 510,000 who will not get the supplement have incomes below $4,000. Most of these people are still in the poverty bracket, according to the figures of the Economic Council of Canada and the latest figures from Senator Croll of the Senate committee on poverty. The minister was genuinely incredulous when those figures were brought to his attention. As a matter of fact, he did not believe them and sought to take issue on their accuracy with my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I think the minister should know by now the utter futility of trying to take issue with that hon. gentleman on facts and figures concerning old age pensions.

If there is one member in this House who has lived for pensioners in the lower income group, and that includes the public service, the armed forces, the railways and everybody else on low pensions, he is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Yet when it was pointed out to the minister that the 510,000 old age pensioners who will lose this supplement were still in the poverty bracket, he just did not believe it until the member proved it with figures from the government's own white paper. The minister had spoken with approval of the fact that, by cutting off the 2 per cent escalator from the people who would not get the supplement, the government this year would save $15 million and by 1975 would save $100 million in handling old age pensions. In other words, they would use this money to help finance the really destitute among old age pensioners.

No wonder my colleague referred to this as the rationing of old age poverty. It is exactly that. It is simply saying to the whole group of old age pensioners and elderly people in this country at age 65, "We are not going to go near the people who have the real money in this country in order to help finance a pension in line with the cost of living; we are going to get the money from those of you who are better fixed in order to meet the needs of the completely destitute." That is what the government is saying. As a matter of fact, the minister spoke with pride as though he were a Robin Hood robbing the rich to help the poor, instead of a comfortably insulated cabinet minister compelling poor old age pensioners to finance those who are even poorer.

Why not get this money from the rich? Something else that happened yesterday struck me vividly. When this suggestion was made to the minister I remember the sort of hopeless shrug he gave. He probably has been keeping track of what has been happening to the white paper on taxation. We know the response the white paper on tax reform has invoked. Rich corporations and better off groups of citizens have come here and utterly refused to accept a fair taxation system for this country. I am glad the minister has returned to the House. I am sorry he did not have the intestinal fortitude to say, "We are going to bring in a good pension, a modern pension, that will allow the older people of this country to live decently, and we are not going to do that by taxing other old age pensioners. We shall tax those people who are capable of bearing on their shoulders those who have given of their best to this country."

• (3:20 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. MacInnis: I wish he had done that. In many ways the minister is courageous, but I suspect that in this case he allowed himself to be dominated either by other members of the cabinet. I see that he shook his head when I mentioned the cabinet. Well, certain sections of the public must have influenced him. I do not know which is worse, being dominated by the cabinet or by the public.

Mr. Lewis: The minister shook his head because he was in pain.

Mrs. MacInnis: Maybe he has a headache.

Mr. Lewis: Perhaps he was not suffering very much before this.

Mrs. MacInnis: If he has a headache now, I can only say that it will get much worse when the elderly people of this country find out what is being done to them not for them, but to them. Perhaps the elderly did not organize too well in times gone by; but I predict that they will organize now, and they will have the support of other sections of the community which know what a very mean and dastardly thing has been done to these pensioners.

An hon. Member: Oh, no.

Mrs. MacInnis: Another thing that surprises me about the minister is this. One of his reasons for denying the 510,000 people involved the benefit of the 2 per cent escalator clause is that he believes the cost of living will not go up this year. What on earth gives him that idea, I do not know.

Mr. Gilbert: He must be on drugs.

Mrs. MacInnis: I do not know what kind of drugs he is on, but I suspect he became intoxicated with his own rhetoric yesterday. I see no other reason for his attitude. As Senator Croll and others have ascertained, the cost of living in the last two years has gone up 8 per cent. But suddenly the minister predicts that those increases are all in the past, and that living costs will not rise this year. Why should they not, particularly since just a day or two ago the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission decided to forego moral suasion. The commission, which has been the tool the government has used to persuade the rich and suggest economic controls for the poor, has given up any hope of persuading the rich to keep the cost of living within bounds. The commission cannot do that, as we said from the beginning. Until such time as we put all incomes into the pot and determine the proper relationship between different kinds of incomes, we shall not be able to control the cost of living.

One of the bad features of this bill to which we have drawn attention, and I think this is very bad, is this. It will divide old age pensioners into two groups. One group will be compelled to finance the other, and I think that is very bad.

Mr. Munro: Would the hon. member permit a question, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. MacInnis: Go ahead.

Mr. Munro: I was wondering whether you are one of those in the NDP who advocates the guaranteed annual income?

Mrs. MacInnis: Yes.

Mr. Munro: Then, do you feel that there is—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The minister has permission to ask a question, but he ought to direct it to the Chair.

Mr. Munro: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I asked the hon. member whether she advocates the guaranteed annual income. Implicit in that position is there not this: that that will divide the whole population into those who qualify for it and those who do not?

Mrs. MacInnis: I cannot see that.

Mr. Munro: What is the difference between that principle and the one we are debating here?

Mrs. MacInnis: I cannot see that the guaranteed annual income concept would divide our people any more than our income tax laws at present divide our people. I cannot see the minister's point. It is not valid, I submit. Yet, we are dividing the old age pensioners into two groups and saying to one group, "You must finance the other." We are taking money from one group in order to finance the other. I cannot see any other explanation for it. In other words, the minister here is creating, if I might use the term, the poor poor and the rich poor.

Mr. Munro: Where are we to obtain the $194 million, if we allow this 2 per cent to all?

Mrs. MacInnis: I was talking about 510,000 people. The government says that it cannot raise this money, because there is none available. Yet it is not ashamed to go to our old age pensioners, who have a hard enough job as it is keeping their heads above water, and say, "We are going to make it impossible for some of you to obtain the supplement, and we are going to cut off, for some of you, the 2 per cent escalation benefit." The government knows perfectly well that by doing this to the better-off old age pensioners, the rich poor, it will lower their standard of living and increase their insecurity. The minister knows that full well. The "rich poor" pensioners are still below the poverty level. Nevertheless, the government has decided that these people do not need help and they have therefore been excluded from the benefits of the 2 per cent escalator clause.

In addition, these pensioners cannot obtain the supplement. These 510,000 people are below the $4,000 a year income mark. Many of them live in very precarious circumstances indeed. First, they have no hope of obtaining the supplement. Second, the escalator provision is denied to them. Third, some of them are worrying right now as to what will happen to their rents. In times gone by, whenever pensioners received even a small pension increase, landlords raised their rent. What will the minister do about that? I know perfectly well what he will do. He will hide behind the excuse that he and his colleagues have always used that rent controls are a provincial matter and that they have no intention of talking to provincial governments in order to obtain some kind of rent control system. What is the sense of increasing a pension at all if every time you increase it the increase is gobbled up by the landlord? That has been happening to many of our elderly people.

And what happens if they have other income? They will not be allowed the supplement on account of that other income. Many of these elderly people have pitifully small pensions from other sources. I know that many women teachers have bombarded me and the minister too, I have no doubt, with letters pointing out that they contributed to their pensions when pensions were much, much lower, and that these small pensions have shrunk in purchasing power. Now, their means are very slender. If they were to get the supplement, their pension might be big enough. But its purchasing power is shrinking all the time. However, under the new regulations, the $80 a month basic pension is to be frozen in perpetuity or until such time as this government either changes its mind or is dismissed.

An hon. Member: Then, it will be continued in perpetuity.

Mr. Monteith: No. The government will be changed.

Mr. Gilbert: That is quite right.

Mrs. MacInnis: What about the question of income security? The white paper was to deal with the question of income security for Canadians. Only one thing is clear and only one thing is guaranteed under the white paper so far as old age pensioners are concerned. The poverty of our elderly people is to be maintained. They will not be lifted out of poverty. Sure, the government will give them a few more coppers, and they will be glad to get those few more coppers.

An hon. Member: It's a little bit of silver.

Mrs. MacInnis: You can buy a shin plaster, if you like, with the increase of 42 cents. You could break it down into a quarter, a dime, a nickel and a couple of coppers, if you prefer it that way. That is what our elderly will be getting. I think that this policy is all wrong.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Unfortunately, we have to deal with policies presented by the government. This is not a good policy for the elderly people of this country. This policy of handouts and hope is far too reminiscent of the old policy of hampers at Christmas and charity for the less fortunate. These "less fortunate" people are those who built the foundations for today's technology. They pioneered this country. As a result, we have automobiles, television sets and all the other advantages of this modern age. They have lived insecure and hard lives. What they are being given today is not enough to live on but too much to die on. If they were not such a hardy breed, they would not survive. This does not say much for us who do this to them.

If the minister would raise his sights he could do more, even under the whip of some sections of public opinion, such as those who are too well off, or under the whip of some sections of the cabinet. A whole new approach of recognition and gratitude is needed for those who built this country. These people need social justice, not handouts. There should be a package policy which, in addition to a money income should include housing for the elderly. I know that homes are being built for the elderly, but it is only a fraction of what is needed. The only time an elderly person can move into a modern home in my city of Vancouver is when another elderly person dies. That is not good enough, in addition to a housing policy, there should be a policy with respect to hospitals for the chronically ill. Yesterday the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) urged the minister to include hospitals for the chronically ill in the legislation dealing with medicare. Such hospitals could look after many of our elderly people. I understand that the minister's colleague in charge of housing has made funds available for one home for elderly people which will include nursing care. I congratulate him for this breakthrough. But this is only a small oasis in a vast desert of need.

The minister should recognize the need for paramedical services being included in medicare. Many elderly people require medical attention for their feet and eyes as well as chiropractors or osteopaths. The elderly desperately need paramedical services, but the minister is hiding behind powerful interests who do not want these services provided. I suspect that powerful medical interests want a monopoly with respect to people requiring paramedical services. I suspect it is this group which makes the decisions. I ask the minister to consult with the provinces in connection with legislation passed in this House in 1966 which gives the minister the power to make an agreement with one or more provinces with regard to paramedical services. This agreement can be made under existing legislation. Why is the minister not doing this? I know one province that I feel sure would be in agreement. They would provide the necessary agreement within a short time.

Our elderly people require community activities such as the Jewish people provide in their Golden Age Club very close to their community centre in Vancouver. This centre provides activity and friendship for the elderly people in that area. I know similar centres exist in other parts of Canada. The minister should provide leadership for such programs.

It is time that the accent was put on maturity in this country. Elderly people cannot be discarded like old boots or swept under the rug. These people deserve our recognition and gratitude. They should be provided with a quality of living that is worthy of them and which reflects favourably on the community. These people are experienced. If we encourage them, we will be repaid many times over.

I appeal to the minister to consider carefully the proposal made by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, to provide a universal old age pension of $150 a month. Of course this cannot be done by scraping the backs of some old age pensioners to finance others. We must have a fair taxation system. The government should implement some recommendations of the Carter report, such as spreading the burden of taxation fairly across this country and on the shoulders of the taxpayers. If the minister will not accept this proposal, he should accept the proposal providing $100 a month pension with a $50 supplement. We owe that to the elderly people of this country. I dread the thought of returning home at Christmas to find only a few crumbs thrown from the rich man's table to those people on old age pension. There should be a decent type of pension package for the elderly people of this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend this afternoon to make a grandiloquent speech packed with statistics and which might be beyond some hon. members' understanding.

I just want to say that in my opinion the white paper is a masterpiece, all the more so as we have been expecting reforms in social security in Canada for several years.

We need only recall that in November 1962 the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) asked for a reform of social security in Canada. He also asked that old age pensions be increased.

The white paper is a working document and it will be discussed at length at future federal-provincial conferences. It is a reflection of the comprehensive philosophy that is the trade-mark of a forward-looking government which has since 1919 always been ahead of all others in the field of social security.

A short while ago, I heard the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) state that the Minister of National Health and Welfare was suffering from headaches. Those have been caused by the incredible amount of work he has been doing and, for the most part, they are due to the numerous congratulations that have been extended to him.

I spoke with older people last night and this morning, and they are all very happy with this new measure. Not one member, I think, received any phone calls from these people expressing discontent.

I could give you a great deal of statistics, but I shall simply say to support my point that 52 per cent of older people receive a supplement ranging between $1 and $31.83. But of these, 475,000, or 28 per cent, receive the full amount of $31.83.

The underlying principle is fantastic. It is a fairer distribution of wealth. That is why the 2 per cent supplement for the high cost of living was suppressed.

I heard the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne) recently say that we will never in this way solve the problem of increasing poverty among the masses. This is true. Surely, when we draft laws, certain boundaries are not easy to determine. Still one must agree that the measure now under consideration will certainly help a great number of people, including those who have served Canada well, as has been so often repeated in this House. I feel that the elderly are satisfied with their lot and that they will send us letters of congratulations. Indeed this bill is not perfect, but it is at least an answer to a certain wish of the people.

• (3:40 p.m.)

And to come back to the principle of universality, the hon. members for Winnipeg-North-Centre and Vancouver-Kingsway would grant $150 to every aged person, but as in democracy a choice must be made, we have opted for selectively because it is fairer. Pension universality would lead to socialism and entail enormous expenditures.

Those who are not in office may say what they want, and it is a pity because in the process they often show irresponsability.

As for the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) he said the program was too modest and not generous enough. He spoke as if he had felt the obligation to say something in the House so that later on he will be able to say that when the bill was introduced, he expressed some criticisms. But I am sure that deep in his heart—and he is a great-hearted man—he supports the measure. He cannot say so openly, because he is the Leader of the official Opposition.

As for our friends of the New Democratic Party who surely show some socialistic tendencies, they cannot understand our attitude and we cannot agree on the administration of the legislation, baceuse their principles are opposite to ours. Indeed, legislating in such a field is not as easy at it is believed. We must not forget also that the funds which we can take out of the taxpayers' pocket are limited. Between two evils, one must choose the lesser. This is why the principle of selectivity rather universality has been chosen.

When we see sick persons, as I do every day, we note that they want to show their gratefulness to governments which thought about them. That is why I am convinced the people of Canada will approve this bill, as well of course as the principles of the white paper, and especially the provisions with regard to family allowances and old age pensions; and also the study that will be made of this document which, to my mind, is a masterpiece.

We are told that we should mind our own business, in the federal government, and leave such programs as that on old age security to the provinces. Yet, it will be remembered that, in 1951, the Canadian government, implementing the recommendations of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on old age pensions, proposed to the provinces a constitutional amendment expressly granting Parliament the power to set up a national old age security pension plan to be administered by the government of Canada. The provinces agreed to it and, in 1951, the Constitution was amended accordingly.

Mr. Speaker, I believe what we are doing will be welcomed by the elderly people of Canada, even those who are sitting at home looking at television with nothing else to do but think, eat, rake over their past and look a little toward the future. When we give them more money, they are very happy, not caring about the constitution and the legal problems which might come up when such a bill is introduced. They are concerned with concrete things. When you give a child candy, it appreciates the candy, not because it is made in China, in Russia, in Montreal or in England, but because it is good.

[Mr. Isabelle.]

From the practical point of view, discussions should be limited as much as possible to approve such a clever and rational legislation the aim of which is to allow older citizens to become first class citizens who will be able to afford some luxury.

Last Tuesday, that is on December 1st, a woman who had just received her pension cheque, told me that even with the supplement, she had only $13 left at the end of the month. Thanks to the new legislation, she will obtain a great deal more. She will appreciate all the more those who had a thought for her and the other old people who are facing daily problems. As much as possible, we should speed up the process in order to consider other more important matters. Regardless of the amendments made or what is said about this legislation, basically the bill is very good. Once again, the government has demonstrated, without any doubt, that it is forward-looking as far as social security is concerned, as it has always been since 1919.

No other government has done as much in the field of social security as this one. No other government that could succeed it will ever be able to do better. Besides, if it had not been for the federal government, I am wondering where social security would be today? The federal government is often criticized in various quarters, but yet, it is the federal government that has given the breath of life to all Canadians.

It is for that reason that we carrying on our work, regardless of any criticism. Whatever we do, I am sure that we are on the right road. It took many months to prepare this legislation. By adopting it, we shall be of great service to those who look to us, not for discussions, but for bread and butter and a small measure of comfort, in order to spend their last years in comparative well-being.

• (3:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, could I have permission of the House to revert to motions to report on the matter I discussed earlier?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the Prime Minister permission to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

NATIONAL SECURITY

STATEMENT ON NEGOTIATIONS FOR RELEASE OF JAMES CROSS BY KIDNAPPERS

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did undertake to report later to the House as soon as I had some further and confirmed information. I am very happy to announce that I did speak to Mr. Cross in the last little while.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Cross is presently on Terre des Hommes, technically in the hands of the Cuban government. Negotiations are being pursued and are being completed for his final liberation. Negotiations are along the line of our undertaking to offer safe conduct to those who were his alleged kidnappers, and these negotiations are proceeding.

I must say that my first reaction is one of joy and relief at these events, and I am sure that all hon. members of this House and the Canadian public share this reaction. In the name of all Canadians I want to congratulate Mr. Cross for his fortitude and his family for their great patience.

I would also add that we are very thankful for the co-operation that existed at all levels between the government of Quebec and our government with regard to this matter. I want to commend the police for their coolness, especially in the final stages of this nightmare. I also thank the Canadian public for their patience throughout.

I believe there is nothing I can usefully add at this stage. I have, as I say, talked to Mr. Cross, and also to the British High Commissioner. I am trying to establish contact with Prime Minister Heath of Great Britain. I repeat that at this stage negotiations are well along toward a useful and final solution to this ghastly nightmare.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we are all very pleased to hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) confirm the story which has been circulating among the press for some time. We are very pleased that the Prime Minister is now in a position to confirm that Mr. Cross is, shall we say, in safe hands. We hope that he is as well as one can expect, or even better than one could reasonably expect, after having been a captive for so many weeks.

I knew Mr. Cross and his wife in Halifax. I knew him as a very fine person indeed, and his wife too. They both have shown very special qualities during these weeks. We have all been feeling very much for them. I sincerely hope that their sufferings are over and that they may be able to join each other very soon.

I do not know whether this would be a proper question, but the Prime Minister indicated negotiations were going on with a view presumably to granting safe conduct for the kidnappers of Mr. Cross. Do these negotiations in any way involve also the kidnappers of Mr. Laporte?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to tell the House what I know about that. My understanding is that three men, or three people rather, were in the House where Mr. Cross was being held. Our arrangement was to assure safe conduct for the people who were holding Mr. Cross in return for the delivery of Mr. Cross alive and well, which is the case; also for immediate members of the families of the alleged kidnappers. I understand the negotiations involve, apart from the three found with Mr. Cross, four other people, two being the wife and child of one of the people found on the premises, the two others also having immediate links with those who were on the premises.

I cannot at this stage give any further details of the exact number and quality of the people involved as the negotiations are being pursued. I repeat that my information is that a maximum of seven people are involved.

Mr. Stanfield: Might I ask one further question for the greatest possible clarification. Do the negotiations include the alleged murderers of Pierre Laporte?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. Our position on this had been quite firm, that safe conduct would be offered those who were responsible for the kidnapping of Mr. Cross and his being held to ransom, but not for those involved in the death of the late Pierre Laporte. It is our firm information that these negotiations do not cover any of the known or suspected people involved in the death of Mr. Laporte.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I will take but half a minute to say that no matter what differences there may have been with regard to various questions previously, I want to congratulate the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau), the Prime Minister of Quebec and all others who have been involved in this nightmare, as the Prime Minister properly described it, and to express on behalf of my colleagues and myself our relief and joy that Mr. Cross is free.

May I also express to Mr. Cross our admiration for his behaviour, and to his wife and family our hopes that on their reunion they will never again have to undergo what they have undergone until now. It seems to me that this is a moment for universal joy in this country at the end of this nightmare; and I merely want to add my words to those that have been expressed by the Prime Minister and by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield).

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I was very happy to learn a moment ago the goods news announced by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the effect that Mr. Cross is now at Man and His World, that he had spoken to him and that Mr. Cross was now in the hands of the Cuban government.

The Prime Minister said that negotiations were under way, that they were progressing and that this news is bound to reassure a great number of Canadians.

I am happy mostly because Mr. Cross' life has been spared. It is comforting that it is still possible to negotiate between people in order to save a human life. It helps us to understand better the value of life and I am convinced that all Canadians now watching television or listening to the radio are very happy to hear the good news that Mr. Cross is still alive and that his release is imminent.

As Mrs. Cross and her children, all Canadians are pleased to hear that at last Mr. Cross has been found. Indeed Mrs. Cross and her children, who were so long in anxiety, must be very happy to hear what the right hon. Prime Minister has just said.

Old Age Security Act

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

• (4:00 p.m.)

[English]

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING AMOUNT OF PENSION, MAXIMUM SUPPLEMENT AND ESCALATION THEREOF

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Munro, that Bill C-202, to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Services.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Just prior to the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Parliamentary Secretary had spoken in the debate. I attempted to get Your Honour's attention in order to ask a question. I wonder if I might ask the Parliamentary Secretary a question now?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Broadview has a question for the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Gilbert: The Parliamentary Secretary said he had received many messages congratulating him and the government in respect of the increase in pensions. I wonder whether he is aware of the fact that as of January 1, 1971, some 510,000 people will be receiving pensions of $80 if this bill passes prior to our Christmas recess, but that if it does not pass before then the same people will be receiving $81.17? Is he aware that there will be a shortage of $1.17, and is it his intention to so advise those people who have commended the government on this legislation?

Mr. Isabelle: Mr. Speaker, I have already mentioned the point referred to by the hon. member. I did so in my speech. As I said, this same principle applies for those people who were going to receive only $1.21 or something of that nature. I am sure that those people who are now receiving only $1 as a supplement will be satisfied to share this with those who have not got enough. In addition to the messages, I have received telephone calls and if the hon. member would like to know the number he might call my office and I will give him the information.

Mr. J. W. Monteith (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we heard two speeches on Bill C-202, the first by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis). It was an eloquent plea on behalf of our elderly citizens. She pointed out many avenues along which elderly people could be assisted. I should like to commend her for this.

Let me refer to the speech by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I am afraid it reminded me of speeches made in this House by the gentleman who preceded me as the Minister of National Health and Welfare. When he sat on this side of the House as the hon. member for Essex East, he made simply ridiculous claims in respect of the efforts of the Liberal government in the field of social welfare. I am now wondering whether this parliamentary secretary may also be looking for a call to the other place. Certainly, he has endeared himself to the government by his laudatory remarks, ill-founded though they may be.

Mr. Baldwin: You mean to Hull?

Mr. Monteith: Bill C-202 is to be referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Services and certainly I am not going to speak at any length as I wish to see its reference facilitated.

Yesterday my leader and the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) both voiced some doubts and some concerns about this legislation. I intend to voice some doubts and concerns. Before emphasizing one or two of my personal concerns in this respect, let me recall a statement made yesterday by the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) whom I see standing behind the curtain listening very intently. He said that in his opinion there had been some hair-splitting by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). He went on to say that some of the statements made by members on this side of the House did not make sense and he accused people over here of a certain amount of irresponsibility. I should like to read one sentence of the hon. member's speech made yesterday:

> If I were a member of a party that had very little or no chance of ever forming the government, of ever being responsible, I would offer them $1,000 a month.

I think that statement is the height of irresponsibility. It is an indication of how much can be said for the hon. member's arguments concerning universality versus selectivity. This is something I should like to discuss for a moment.

We should consider the different approaches in respect of universality versus selectivity. Perhaps I am thinking out loud at the moment, but back in 1950-51 there was a joint committee of this House and the other place which met for a considerable period of time. The four parties in the House at that time were represented on that committee as well as two parties from the other place. This joint committee brought in a unanimous recommendation as to how we should assist our elderly citizens. Perhaps that was the first time in the history of this country that such a unanimous recommendation was brought forward by such a committee.

That recommendation was to the effect that everybody should receive $40 per month upon attaining age 70 as a right, without any means or needs test. There were certain residence rules, that is agreed. But I repeat that that recommendation was unanimous and I think it was sound. Since then, there have been some upward revisions in the amount paid and there have been some changes in residence rules, some lowering of the age when the payment commenced. As the minister of that department for a period of time, I had the responsibility and the pleasure of sponsoring some of the amendments for consideration in the House. Incidentally, the Parliamentary Secretary mentioned what a God given gift to Canada the Liberal party has been in the field of social welfare. I suggest that our government of that day had an enviable record in the field of social welfare. I suggest also that the claims of the Parliamentary Secretary can simply be labelled outrageous.

• (4:10 p.m.)

That universality of approach which was recommended back in 1950-51—I think the act came into force on January 1, 1951—continued until very recent times. I think it was a sound approach. Everybody was free to apply for and receive old age security without any stigma attached to it and without any suggestion that it was not their right to receive these funds. Incidentally, I have known individuals in the early days of the Old Age Security Act who would not apply for the pension, even though they were entitled to it. They were too proud to do so. I think, however, that as time went on and people realized they were being taxed through the corporation tax, the sales tax and the personal income tax to pay for old age security, everybody pretty well agreed that this was a sound approach. The receipt of old age security was theirs as of right. A fund was established which, at the end of the last fiscal year, was in the neighbourhood of $725 million.

The guaranteed income supplement came into being in 1966. At that time I recall moving an amendment in this House that all old age security recipients receive $100 a month. I still think that that would have been the right step to take at that time. However, the guaranteed income supplement was chosen, and it does seem to me that Canadians as a whole have now pretty well accepted the principle that those who show need for it should be able to receive monthly payments over and above the basic old age security payment. We all remember the 2 per cent cost of living annual increase in basic pensions, as well as the guaranteed income supplement. But even that was completely inadequate. It was a maximum figure. Since that time the cost of living has increased immeasurably more than that. Most years the increase was double that amount.

Primarily I want to say a few words about the basic pension which is now to be fixed at $80 a month and frozen at that figure. The minister intimated that in 1967 position with regard to comparable return would be restored. This is absolutely incorrect. The minister also, as the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) pointed out, seemed to want to leave the impression that there will not be any further increases in the cost of living. I say again, that is utter nonsense. The basic figure—if there is going to be a basic figure, and I am not arguing with that—should be at least $85 and more to restore recipients to a comparable position to that of 1967. Instead of that, the minister is making the figure $80. It is 42 cents more than the recipient is receiving as the basic pension this year. But if the pension had kept step with the increase cost of living, it would have been a great deal higher.

Yesterday the minister referred to an abnormal increase in the cost of living over the past few years. It is not abnormal to recipients of old age security. I suggest it is disastrous. Now, that basic figure is to be frozen at $80 a month. I think this is wrong. To be comparable with 1967, it should be considerably higher. There is to be no further escalation on this basic rate due to the increases in the cost of living. The basic pension is going to be frozen forever or, as was indicated earlier, unless there is a change of heart in the government. I suggest there should be a change of government because certainly this is not an adequate figure. Recipients have been taxed to build up this fund. It is their fund, it is their money, and the money is available. There was $725 million odd in the fund at the end of the last fiscal year. If recipients have other income, they will be taxed in the future.

I am concerned about the departure from the principle of universality. I have always felt that the wealthy who receive old age security pensions pay a huge percentage of them back in income tax, but they have paid into the fund originally. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) yesterday outlined the position in which various groups of retired Canadians will find themselves. This was a very interesting and accurate analysis. At the moment, I am concerned with the group of people about whom mention was made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, those 510,000 Canadians who have some other income and who, as a consequence, will not be receiving the guaranteed income supplement because they will not qualify for it. However, their total income will be very small.

• (4:20 p.m.)

They are going to be limited to the $80 per month. They are not going to be allowed any escalation of that $80 to off-set increases in the cost of living. Mr. Speaker, I think this is wrong. It is wrong to penalize our elder citizens who, over the years, tried to save a little for their retirement, as well as pay taxes, and who are now singled out as not being eligible to receive a cost of living increase.

The government has not fulfilled its promise of a just society. While I agree with some of the provisions in Bill C-202, I point out that it should have been introduced two years ago. As has been so eloquently mentioned today by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, our elder citizens have been suffering untold hardships. They have not been receiving proper attention from governing bodies throughout the country.

Despite huge increases in the cost of living, some 500,000 of our elder citizens will still be penalized. As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of some of the provisions in the bill. Despite my reservations, I urge its rapid consideration on second reading so that it may go to committee and be returned to the House, even though 500,000 people whose pensions are to be frozen at $80 per month would be receiving $81.17 if the legislation were not passed by the first of the new year. Despite this fact, I believe the bill should receive rapid passage simply because of the guaranteed income supplement which is so necessary, and which will mean so much to so many of our elder citizens who are in dire circumstances.

Old Age Security Act

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to express my opinion about the treatment of our older people in Canada.

We are trying at the present time to improve the Old Age Security Act, but this bill will give older people less security than before. We disagree will the white paper's recommendations and we certainly do not agree with those who say that older people are given a fair treatment, that they receive more than anywhere else, that they can do nothing else but congratulate the government and all the administrators in this country.

I say it is far from being the case, contrary to the claims of certain members or observers.

Every day, like other members, I meet a number of old age pensioners from all over Canada and they ask me whether it would be possible, through discussion with the responsible people, to obtain pension increases, for they cannot make both ends meet. As a matter of fact, 90 per cent of the older people complain that they are in need due to an overly rapid increase in the cost of living. Yet, the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) said a while ago that older people were satisfied with their lot and were thanking the present government for being so generous to them.

The government is far from generous. Indeed, it is the older people themselves who built this country, who left us the heritage of progress. In return, they certainly deserve some consideration from the administration.

Mr. Speaker, if we compare what older people receive in Canada with the income other Canadian pensioners get from the government, such as veterans, who receive pensions reasonable enough to allow them to face the cost of living, we find that the old age security pension is far from being equal to that of veterans, for instance.

The pensions paid to widows or orphans and other dependents of ordinary citizens and to older people should be as high as those granted to orphans and widows and other dependents of veterans.

Those who worked to build the country should get the same consideration as those who died on the battlefields to save it.

The pension of veterans' widows is being increased by $240 to $2,640 per annum or $220 per month. But why should not all other citizens be given the same treatment?

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, whether a citizen dies at work, on the battlefield or in any other field of social activity, his widow, his children or his dependents remain Canadian citizens, and their social, economic or political needs are still the same. So why not grant the same pensions to the dependents of a deceased ordinary Canadian citizen as those granted to the dependents of a soldier who died in the war or after?

Is the citizen responsible for building houses, manufacturing furniture or tilling the land not as deserving as a policeman, a seaman, an airman, or a soldier who looks after the security of the Canadian people? Then why not treat in the same manner all the Canadians who look to the government for the bare minimum?

Why does the old age security pension of a veteran amount to $2,640 a year, or $220 a month, while that of an old worker is only $110 a month? I want to know the reason and I want us to discuss it. It is essential to reach logical and specific conclusions and to remove once and for all these differences in income which go against the government's commitments towards our citizens who are entitled to live out of our national production for 1970 and 1971.

Each year our production should help our people to live before being used as a reserve.

That is why this bill which provides $80 per month for older people is illogical. As for us, we see the situation as follows: since the government claims to have found some solutions to check the rising cost of living, it should actually stop increasing. But did the government actually find a truly effective formula to prevent the cost of living from increasing? If they have found one, they should freeze the old age pensions at $80 per month without paying attention any longer to the rising cost of living. But I presume the government is far from having found this magic formula and it is therefore illogical to set the old age pension increase at $80 per month.

The hon. member for Hull stated a moment ago that pensioners will get more generous pensions, that this bill will be beneficial and welcome because inadequate pensions by $30, $32, $33 or $35 a month are being raised. I do not know exactly the amount of this increase, but if the pensions were increased by $20 a month, it would still not be enough since the cost of living has increased four fold in the last few years and keeps on increasing.

Those who now receive benefits are subject to a needs test. All those who get a supplement claim it is not enough. They come and ask us to urge on their behalf the Department of National Health and Welfare to make up the difference. Needs are great because the cost of living is too high. If it keeps on increasing pensions would have to be raised, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said, to $150 a month for all older people and this, without a needs test.

In this manner, the government would save on administration costs and we would no longer have old people ask for a supplement, claiming that they are as poor as their neighbours, their fellow-citizens, who also receive a pension. Why punish those who told the truth? Those people have no right to receive a supplement and every day, there is some argument as to whether such and such a pension is entitled to the supplement.

If we want to be logical, we should put an end to such discrimination against older people. If we are fighting to achieve justice then we should hand out every month, without a means test, a sum of $150 to each and every older citizen and, through income taxation, we could take away from the rich whatever surplus they have and distribute it to those who are not so well-to-do.

The government should improve on this legislation. In due course, we intend to introduce an amendment to this act, as suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, aimed at increasing the pension to $150 per month, which definitely would not be too much in a country as rich as ours.

This year, our surplus amounts to $34 million. We pay western farmers not to grow grain. We penalize eastern farmers to prevent them from producing milk and other foodstuffs. In spite of it all, we tolerate that citizens should go hungry because they do not have the necessary slip of paper to buy all what they need.

We can treat our senior citizens equitably: it only calls for a spirit of social solidarity. Through taxation, we could set up a fund to assist our older people.

We could go further and say that it is as illogical to take money from such places, when other solutions would be possible. Nobody ever thought about that.

Never have we looked into excess profits; never have we looked into the resources of big financial institutions, of large companies, and of hidden reserves which amount to billions of dollars. We could take a few hundred million from these sources to ensure decent security for the aged.

We shall never put enough money in circulation to make our economy viable. Whenever we place money into the hands of people, we do boost the economy; we are exerting pressure on the economy so as to make it increasingly effective. The economy needs transfusions because it is depressed and in the need of injections, a way of placing pressure on the economy to make it operative.

Mr. Speaker, though not a socialist, I strongly support the measures put forward by NDP members. We could however raise pensions without falling into socialism.

The existing capitalist structure revolves around profits and expenses.

Sufficient returns are needed so that, once expenditures are deducted, we are left with profits. This is the formula that we must apply. Then, we will be able to pay everyone what he is entitled to. Aged people will then enjoy a reasonable standard of living in a country which is overflowing with resources. I hope that this formula will be understood by our administrators.

Once this put in practice, we will not have anymore problems, and it will be easy to increase pensions to $150 without any means test, because this is a terrible trial for aged people. Some spend sleepless nights, for months in certain cases, worrying about this means test that they must put up with. They are forced to accept those ill-famed and illogical inquiries which in most cases are half-done because investigators do not have all the required competency nor all the information they should have.

Mr. Speaker, it would be better to abolish those inquiries and to apply the income tax formula. If some people do receive too much, the excess will go in to taxes.

Old Age Security Act

• (4:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, the measure before us is very important and marks a significant point in the development of Canada's social welfare and social—

Mr. Gilbert: Insecurity.

Mr. Francis: —security policies. I wanted to comment today largely on the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) whom I see in the House. As I listened to him yesterday, I recalled the various stages in the development of Canada's programs in this area and it seemed to me that one had to take stock, in a manner that the hon. member was not doing as he addressed this House.

The classic image of Canada's programs that has developed I think was very well exemplified by the hon. member. I think he took some justifiable pride in the development of the demogrant or universal benefit programs. He indicated that he was solidly committed to that principle and at this stage was not prepared to reconsider it, even in a faint way. Indeed his first choice, as he said to this House, would be to raise the old age security pension to $150 a month on the same basis as it is now paid. His second choice would have been to raise it to $100 a month, and pay the supplement of $50 a month on a guaranteed income basis. The party which he represents, Mr. Speaker, has an excessive concern, in my opinion, with the problems of distribution of wealth. This is highly commendable, but the problem of the government is to balance the policies for distributing wealth with those policies that go towards creating it. In other parts of the world we have seen the philosophy of the new left in our time expressed. Men like Servan-Schreiber have written very, very ably showing that in contemporary society we must carefully balance policies dealing with the distribution of wealth with policies that go to creating the incentive that will bring about the wealth that is to be distributed.

The basic issue placed before us in the white paper which we must face and which the hon. member did not face, is this. On page 3 the white paper indicates that there are now about four million low income people in this country despite an annual outlay of about $4.5 billion on income security programs. The demogrant approach involves immense sums of money. We are introducing at this stage the principle of selectivity.

In response to the question, is this the best allocation of our resources in the attack on poverty in our country, it is not enough to say that this is retrograde; that this measure violates the principle of paying everybody; and that it is not consistent with the kinds of programs that Canada pioneered. Let us look for a moment at the cost of giving everyone $150 a month. That is a fair question to ask. The minister in this House said that for every $10 a month paid additionally with the old age security pension, the cost increase would be $206 million. The total aggregate figure for some 1,800,000 recipients at $120 a year comes to over $200 million. The cost of raising the amount from $80 a month, as proposed in this bill, to $150 a month for everybody would be $1,442 million, according to that estimate. That estimate is based on current case loads. There is no question at all but that there would be an increase in that sum. The cost of going to the $100 a month pension and giving the $50 a month supplement equals about $900 million.

We are not talking in terms of trifling sums of money, Mr. Speaker; nor can members in this House say that we can ignore the inflationary aspect and that somehow it is reactionary to think about price effects or the possible effects of incentives in industry, and that all you must do is increase your taxes by that amount to cope with the problem. Mr. Speaker, I am as concerned as any member of the House is about this matter and members on this side of the House are concerned, because we are thinking here of introducing the principle involving the limitation of the programs that have been available on a demogrant basis under which we have been giving assistance to everybody regardless of income, so long as the people involved have met certain very simple criteria of eligibility, age and residence.

We are simply saying, "How can our resources be placed most effectively in the hands of those who are in that group that the white paper refers to as the 4 million low income people?" I know that the hon. member in his presentation before the House argued that those who will not receive the supplement are not rich. He said that roughly 60 per cent would receive the supplement and 40 per cent would not receive it under the proposals. He then attempted to give a projection of the incomes of that other 40 per cent and indicated to us that in his opinion we were doing something which was very, very wrong.

The art of government is the art of the possible, Mr. Speaker. It always involves compromise. There is always the difficulty of placing the resources available in such a way as to achieve the purposes you have in mind. I submit that what the government has been doing with the demogrant approach will not cure poverty. It will lead to an excessive strain on the resources of this country if we attempt to cure poverty on this basis. Such action would be inconsistent with price stability and the creation of those incentives essential for the creation of additional wealth that is so necessary. Hon. members on the other side of the House say that we can do this, that we can afford to do it, and so on. They have not proven their case; they have simply assumed that case. There are difficulties in our trying to raise all benefits to a level that comes close to that generally recognized as the poverty level. There would be difficulties if we were also to try to achieve other objectives in our program.

• (4:50 p.m.)

One of the areas in which the hon. member quite properly concentrates his attention is the area in which people who receive the supplement could thereby become liable for income tax. This seems quite wrong. To the person who is in difficult circumstance and receiving a supplement, the payment of even a small amount of income tax is a burden. Our tax exemptions are certainly in need of reform. There is no question about it. On another front, the white paper on taxation did suggest an improvement in basic exemptions. We have not yet arrived at the stage when the basic tax exemption can be equal to a presumed level of poverty.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Francis: It is fine to ask "why not", but it is necessary to cost the implications. The contention of members of the New Democratic Party is that the democratic approach is the means by which they want to eliminate poverty with a minimum of supplementation related to income or resources. The members of that party have the obligation to show where the funds are to come from and how such funds can be consistent with price stability and incentives to industry, the main source of wealth. They do not look at that side of it. They just say that the pensions should be raised to $150 a month and that the $1,442 million will be found. It will not come like manna from heaven.

There is only one source for that kind of money, the taxpayers, or there will be the terrible burden of inflation. Hon. members opposite smile, but the burden is on them to demonstrate that alternatives can be found. There is no way in which a society can spend its way into wealth. There is no way in which it can print money so that everyone will be better off. It cannot impose crushing burdens of taxation and still have the kind of developing society that we take for granted at this time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the hon. member permit a question? Is he aware of the fact that the arguments he has been making for the past ten or fifteen minutes are the same arguments we were given in the late 1940's and 1950's against having a demogrant approach as far as old age security is concerned?

Mr. Francis: At this stage the hon. member is trying to be on both sides. He says that in his opinion demogrants work and that poverty can be eliminated. In this area $4.5 billion are being spent and there are four million people in the low income level. The hon. member should look at the results of the approach he is advocating. He has to demonstrate something better. He should not approach the matter through the eyes of the Fabian socialists of three generations ago, but through the eyes of the younger generation, the new left, which not only looks at the means of distributing wealth but the very important incentives which create it. I suggest that the hon. member read what Jacques Servan-Schreiber and others speaking for the new generation have to say about the needs of contemporary society.

We have heard the same story from every member of the New Democratic Party. Their formula is immensely simple, raise the benefits and spend more. Mr. Speaker, that is not the answer. The members of that party, some of whom held responsible positions in industry and other places, should ponder the fact that the program they are suggesting is purely and simply a program of guaranteed inflation. There are no other consequences that can flow from the measures that they suggest.

Having given that sharp difference of opinion, I wish to state that we recognize the contribution of members of that party, their concern with pensions and the principles of continuous improvement. We in this party are equally concerned. The party which I have the honour to represent has pioneered the basic measures of social security in Canada, including the Old Age Security Act. However, this does not cloud our minds from asking the question asked in the white paper, having spent this sum of money and having made this commitment, what are the measures we have to take now to ensure that those in the poverty level have a greater claim on the scarce resources in our country?

Mr. Peters: May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order please, in doing so, I presume the hon. member will move the adjournment of the debate because of the special sitting tonight.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved:

That this debate be now adjourned.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, Private Members' Notice of Motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

SCIENCE

REQUEST FOR COPY OF STUDY RESPECTING USE OF ANIMALS FOR EXPERIMENTAL PURPOSES

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the report of the findings of the survey team which, under the direction of Dr. H. C. Rowsell, inspected university research laboratories across the country earlier this year and made an assessment of the conditions surrounding the use of animals for experimental purposes.

She said: Mr. Speaker, for years a growing number of Canadians have been deeply concerned about conditions surrounding the experimentation on animals for medical and scientific purposes. Members of Parliament have been trying to get action on this matter. The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), myself and others have been trying to get the subject of animal welfare sent to a committee. I am still waiting for a reply to a letter I wrote to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on April 8. I received an acknowledgement from his secretary, but I am still waiting for an answer.

Other countries are far ahead of Canada in their legislation in this regard. Britain first acted on this matter in 1876 and there has been a recent survey. The United States has had legislation dealing with this matter since 1965 and Denmark since either 1953 or 1954. The legislation of those countries provides protection for the animals used for experiments. What about Canada?

For the last three sessions, 1968, 1969 and this session, the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Groos) has had a bill on the order paper dealing with the desirability of legislation and regulations surrounding experiments on animals. His bills have always been too far down on the order paper to be reached. I had a bill last session and again this session which is supplementary to the hon. member's, with more detailed regulations.

What has the Canadian government done with respect to this matter? In 1969, animal care association panels appointed by the Canada Council on Animal Care visited over 200 animal facilities at 37 universities across Canada. Their survey was very thorough and their report on the conditions they found is frank. In some instances, genuine efforts have been made by universities to operate better facilities since the preliminary survey was carried out two or three years ago. In a good many other cases, however, conditions still left much to be desired.

• (5:00 p.m.)

This is from the famous Rowsell Report for which I have been asking for a couple of years. Mr. Speaker, people need this information if we are to keep up with the progress which has been made in this field by Great Britain and, more recently, by Denmark and the United States. The Littlewood report brought out in Britain in 1965 emphasized the desirability of keeping the public informed as to the facts of animal experimentation and the efficacy of controls designed to reduce suffering to a minimum. One of the means recommended to this end was the annual publication of informative returns by the Home Office. Yet, when I ask for the Rowsell Report, what answer do I get? On October 28, the Parliamentary Secretary requested me to withdraw my motion. I quote this sentence from what he said:

It is an understanding among the scientific community that details pertaining to scientific research projects are a matter of confidence between the researcher and the donor organization. For this reason the Department of National Health and Welfare does not make public the findings of researchers.

I believe this to be an indefensible position. After all, these reports are not the property of the federal government; they are the property of the people of this country who have provided, through taxation, the funds which enabled the research to be done. In my view it is wrong for the federal government to act as though these reports were its own property. Refusal to produce these documents is wrong not only on that ground; it is wrong, as the Littlewood Report points out, because the public ought not to be kept in the dark about these things.

Use of Animals for Research

A summary of the Rowsell Report was issued to the press at the time of its release and here are some excerpts from that document:

Post surgical animals are maintained for a long period of time under low farm practices which are inadequate for these animals. A number of dogs which were emaciated and required supportive therapy, were located on a private farm.

A large part of the animal care is the responsibility of a part time untrained student assistant. Provision and training of animal attendants is a haphazard process which is the responsibility of the individual investigators.

There was no evidence of a disease control program for any animals.

Standards of animal accommodation, and particularly of animal care, in this area are not acceptable.

The most serious inadequacies result from the lack of adequate direction, supervision and veterinary care.

Mice and rats were crowded in some cages, while empty cages were nearby. Dead and obviously ill animals were observed.

There is no post-operative care regimen for the animals.

These are excerpts describing conditions in Canadian universities surveyed by Dr. Rowsell. These universities receive support from the federal government out of funds raised by taxing the people of this country. I maintain the people have a right to know what the conditions are in these scientific laboratories. If the public were better acquainted with these conditions the result would be far greater organized pressure to get ahead with the legislation we need to control experimentation on live animals.

Why has this particular report not been made available? From talks I have had with Dr. Rowsell and others, I believe the secrecy stems largely from the fact that the government is afraid of upsetting some of the staff of universities where conditions were bad. The report says that a serious attempt has been made to improve conditions. But why should we surround bad conditions with secrecy? It is this very secrecy which has made it impossible, so far, to secure legislation to control experiments on animals in this country. Canada, as I have pointed out, is a long way behind other nations in this respect. There is nothing frivolous about wanting to see these reports. Their contents are the very stuff out of which progress can be made in setting higher standards.

The minister has told us it is the policy of the department not to make such reports available. I can tell him that there are researchers who do not agree with this point of view, researchers who want this information to be made available. One such researcher wrote to me and I propose to read into the record those parts of his letter which are relevant. He was commenting on the statement which the Parliamentary Secretary made in reply to my request and which I quoted earlier, the statement in which the Parliamentary Secretary said there was an understanding that these reports were a matter of confidence between the researcher and the donor oganizations. Well, in at least one researcher's opinion, this is "complete nonsense." The letter to which I have referred states:

I enclose an outline of one of our projects sponsored by Health and Welfare. One part of the government does not know what the other is doing in research. The Canada Council sponsored a study of the Youth Employment Service in Britain. This recommended that Manpower set up a similar service. The idea has already been discussed and rejected by Manpower.

There are many examples like this—no connections between research workers and between research and reality. Science involves openness—it means you must know what else is going on, and let other people know what you are doing.

I know that the people administering welfare grants for the Department of Health and Welfare want to tell the public who is going where, and doing what, in research relevant to social development.

Also, our research is funded by public funds—we must be accountable for this money, financially and morally, in the sense that we must tell people what we are doing. The government is using research as a synonym for slush funding all kinds of wild projects, or for public relations projects—

Anything I can do to help get research results out into the open, I shall do.

For obvious reasons I shall not release the name or the address of the writer of this letter; I certainly hope he is not identifiable from anything I have read. I can assure hon. members that I have his name and address. He is a person who believes, as I do, that the government has no business to sit on these public reports and act as though they were private property, particularly when the findings ought to be out in the open for the good of the whole community.

I am concerned about this whole question of animal welfare, because Canada is living in the backwoods as far as legislation intended to control experiments on animals is concerned. Any member of this House will appreciate the frustration experienced by our constituents when they keep writing to us, as Members of Parliament, urging us to do something about this question, apparently in vain. The present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is the second prime minister to whom I have been writing to urge that the whole subject of animal welfare be considered in committee and dealt with in open discussion. Then, when we have found out what is required, we can pass suitable legislation to bring Canada into the twentieth century. But there has been evasion all along the line. Everyone smiles tolerantly when the question is brought up in this House, as though it were in peculiar taste to mention the subject at all. And nothing is done.

The Rowsell Report is only one of the documents I have failed to obtain through a motion for the production of papers. I have a host of similar motions on the order paper, as do a number of my hon. friends. We are not putting down these motions just to be ornery or mean. We are putting them down because we believe, as a matter of principle, that there should be openness, not secrecy.

Many of us were pleased to find, earlier today, that we had won a victory in this House through the decision not to proceed with the bill which would have pilloried the Auditor General, the watchdog of the treasury, for his work. In the same way there should be openness in this House with regard to documents. I do not intend to quit this battle to get these particular documents until we win another victory. What is the government afraid of? It is not responsible for conditions in these particular labs, so why should it mind unveiling the true situation? If this government means what it says about participatory democracy, then it should be glad that there are pockets of people in this country who very badly want to see legislation put on the statute books of Canada laying down rules controlling experiments conducted with live animals. I cannot for the life of me see what the government is trying to hide or cover up. As I say, we should have openness with full information to the public. We should also have the full co-operation of the public in securing this much needed legislation.

• (5:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it would seem that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) and the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare took up much of the time of the House today. We apologize for doing so, but I trust it is for the greater good of the nation.

Mr. Speaker, the motion for publication of the report of the findings of the survey team, which under the direction of Dr. H. C. Rowsell inspected university research laboratories across the country and made an assessment of the conditions surrounding the use of animals for experimental purposes was rejected. In fact, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, during the last session, asked the hon. member to withdraw her motion.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare cannot produce the briefs requested by the hon. member because Dr. Rowsell's inquiry was done on behalf of the Canadian Council on Animal Care, a body organized as a standing committee of the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada. The Association is an entirely independent organization, not a Crown agency. Moreover, the report prepared by Dr. Rowsell is confidential and to divulge its contents would betray the Council's confidence and hinder its relations with research institutions.

I would also like to remind the House of the recent debate on the bill introduced by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch). The government does not avoid its obligations to ensure that laboratory animals are treated, kept and taken care of in a decent way.

I would like at this stage to point out to the House a recent measure passed by the Ontario Legislature and which deals with the care to be given to animals used for research purposes. This legislation eliminates the dealer in laboratory animals which has been mainly responsible for abuses in that field. I would like to add that with few exceptions, all Ontario humane societies have approved the safeguards prescribed by the Ontario legislation which will put an end to most of the inhuman treatments of animals in the past.

We can hope, Mr. Speaker, that this legislation will serve as example to the other provinces. In Ontario, breeders of laboratory animals and research establishments must obtain a licence and their premises will be inspected. If they do not comply with the regulation, their licence could be repealed. In addition, experimentation, breeding and distribution will be submitted to legislative control. Under the act, anesthetics are to be used in all experiments which may cause pain and analgesics have to be administered in the course of post-operational care. The act also requires the creation of committees responsible to see that all necessary care is given animals in research establishments, as was recommended by the Canadian Council on Animal Care. These committees are responsible for coordinating all activities connected with research animal establishments, including care standards, personnel training and steps to be taken to prevent pain. These research projects on animals will have to be supervised by this committee so that the latter can insure that the provisions of the law have been strictly complied with.

Let us now examine briefly the activities of the Canadian Council on Animal Care. At the national level, the Council functions as a sort of external consultant agency to insure that guidelines on care and use of animals in laboratories are uniformly applied. After its setting up in 1968 one of its first initiatives was to punish the handbook entitled Care of Experimental Animals, A guide for Canada. In order to prepare that handbook Dr. Rowsell, former executive director of the Council, made a first assessment of 39 universities, 24 federal government branches or research centres and 17 pharmaceutical laboratories.

The guide was used to evaluate the facilities and techniques employed in research and teaching establishments in Canada.

The care given to animals in those establishments was evaluated by professional groups with experience in the various fields of research, breeding of domestic animals and veterinary science concerned with laboratory animals, including members of the Technical Advisory Committee of the Canadian Federation of Humane Societies. Members of such groups provided their services voluntarily.

The Council also attempts to determine the need for professional and technical specialists in veterinary science concerned with laboratory animals, and intends to make recommendations in this regard, if necessary.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Council on Animal Care puts its services at the disposal of government organizations, institutions and persons directly interested in the care and use of laboratory animals. Requests for advice, on the rise because of our close relationship with other national and international associations dealing with animal sciences and animal care have constantly increased.

Progress made up to date by the Canadian Council on Animal Care, through a voluntary system of control, is satisfactory. Not only is such a system bringing in improvements in research and teaching but it also makes sure that public concern and interest for the welfare and ethical use of laboratory animals are dealt with in an efficient and responsible manner by the scientific community.

Use of Animals for Research

Mr. Speaker, the fact that people have been more concerned about the care of laboratory animals these last few years, is perfectly commendable. However, in order to understand correctly this greater concern, it is necessary to recognize the existence of several causes and objectives. Among these, it is to be noticed that researchers are concerned about animal care and ways to improve it because they realize that the use of animals in bad condition often alters the results of experiments. Researchers want also to establish a uniform type of animal for the whole range of biological and medical research. In every type of research, the common denominator is good health, in the general sense of the term, and therefore, it is clear that for research purposes, it is necessary to have animals in good shape.

The reports submitted by the assessment groups are considered by a resource group of the Council and discussed and accepted by the Council before being submitted to the designated administrative board of the establishment involved. These reports that the hon. member would like to be made public are confidential. Their findings have always been approved by the directors and the scholars concerned and have led in almost all establishments to the creation of local committees concerned with the experiments and animal care.

The basic principles of the use of animals by first year medical students have been reviewed to encourage the use of less sophisticated animals. The principles specify that no experiments shall be conducted on vertebrates if they injure the normal health of the animals or if they cause them any pains or troubles. These principles were approved by the Foundation of Young Scientists which sponsors scientific exhibitions. Moreover, this Foundation has accepted to ensure a higher degree of supervision on students who use animals for these scientific exhibitions. Projects using animals must be approved, and a responsible supervisor must be assigned to them.

• (5:20 p.m.)

The Council on Animal care is also concerned with increasing the availability and improving the quality of animals to cope with the needs of research and dissemination of information on animal sources in Canada. The needs of regional supply centres, the means to control and licence commercial suppliers, and the compilation and inventory of all types of animals raised in various establishments in Canada have been considered.

The question of the use of laboratory animals raises in the mind of scientific researchers the question of ethics, a question which has been often raised and has been studied for a long time. Ethical pressures on the individual scientist come from his colleagues, from local committees, from a provincial advisory committee or from a national council, to mention only a few of the groups which supply him with money for research and which publish papers.

Therefore, controls already exist to ensure humane treatment of laboratory animals, and they are applied according to the best democratic tradition of this country.

[Mr. Isabelle.]

Mr. Speaker, during the last half of this century, many research fields have been suggested, including chemotherapy, virology, endocrinology, radiobiology and medical genetics, while others that were only in their infancy at the beginning of this period, namely immunology, nutrition, biochemistry and applied pharmacology have evolved to such an extent that they are almost unrecognizable.

Before 1900, it was thought that the specific causes for illnesses were foreign to the human body. Today, illness is considered as a functional disorder to which many factors contribute, especially bacteria, viruses and other micro-organisms as well as the receptivity of the system, the nutritional state and professional risks.

Such a new concept of disease has greatly enlarged the scope of biological sciences and therefore greatly expanded the field of biological research and experimentation, the object of which is to prevent or relieve suffering in man and animals.

Perhaps the greatest achievement of the last 50 years in the field of medicine is the progress made in chemotherapy, the treatment of infections by means of drugs. In 1935, the discovery of sulpha drugs made possible for the first time the efficient treatment of bacterial infections. A few years later, a wide and growing field of research on antibiotics was open, due to the evidence of the therapeutic effectiveness of penicillin in bacterial infections. Since the discovery of penicillin, not so long ago, many new types of therapeutic and chemical products have been discovered and used, for instance, for the treatment of such illnesses as diabetes and high blood pressure.

In the field of immunology, science has reached a level of development far above that of the study of defence mechanisms. Today, we are trying to understand body reactions to the invasion of any kind of foreign proteins as well as the problems posed by allergic reactions which seem to be the result of an unfavourable reaction of the body towards its own organs and, more recently, the unfavourable reactions resulting from the grafting of complete organs such as the heart and liver.

In the field of surgery, many breakthroughs over the last few years are a direct result of experiments made on animals. Many of the main achievements in the field of chest, heart or brain surgery are the result of studies on the physiological effects of similar operations performed on animals. The successful use of artificial materials for reconditioning body structures are also based on preliminary experiments made on the performance of those materials in the body of an animal.

Mr. Speaker, we should remember the experiments of Professors Vineberg and Selye of Montreal, who have contributed much to science in Canada through experiments on animals.

These are but a few examples of the fields of medical science which have, as I just said, benefited by research on animals, demonstrating that each step forward in science has been accompanied by an increase in the scope of experiments and the number of specialists qualified to carry them out and therefore of the number of laboratories equipped with the necessary research facilities. The need for animals to be used in scientific research is therefore a direct implication of research for scientific knowledge.

When research is geared toward potential applications to humans, the need to use a living animal is subject to fundamental principles of medical ethics. No doctor will proceed with a new method of treating a patient unless he is reasonably satisfied that this new process is or seems to be adequate for relieving his patient, nor unless he is perfectly aware of any potential side effects that he may have to assess professionally as against the benefits of the operation. The information which helps the doctor in making a decision is often enough based on the results of comprehensive studies of the effects of new techniques recommended for operating on animals.

Hence, our conclusion may be that the demand for laboratory animals will continue to increase in the near future and that the development of substitutes for tests on animals will not materially affect the demand for in vivo laboratory animals because in vitro tests do not allow the doctor to acquire the necessary guarantee before trying a new medicine or a new treatment on his patient. Indeed, the expansion of research will bring in more problems as regards proper supplies and care for animals. These are the reasons why the Canadian Council on Animal Care has been established.

People who are frequently required to look after and use animals for scientific research have the moral obligation and the responsibility of directing this research for the benefit of both people and animals. This responsibility consists, partly, in constantly seeking the discovery of proper solutions to the problems arising out of the anxiety or the hazards to which these animals are exposed.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would say that I am convinced that the work of the Canadian Council on Animal Care is the answer to both the ethics and the concerns of society, so that animals used in scientific research be treated humanely. Wherever possible, inferior forms of animal life and insensitive systems are used. However, wherever it is necessary to use superior animals to better the lot of mankind and the animal world, such research is conducted, I am satisfied, in a very humane manner.

Perhaps I should say, before concluding my remarks, that it is thanks to animals that medical science has reached its current level. If animals could understand, we would extend our gratitude to them. It is said that a dog is man's best friend. I am sure that all scientists have the greatest respect for animals, and to an increasing degree, they use humane methods in their experiments.

• (5:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the notice of motion by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) before the House this afternoon requests that an order of the House do issue for a copy of the report of the findings of the survey team which under the direction of Dr. H. C. Rowsell inspected university research laboratories across the country earlier this year and made an assessment of the conditions surrounding the use of animals for experimental purposes.

The Parliamentary Secretary has outlined many of the reasons why the government cannot produce a copy of this report. First and foremost among these is that this survey was carried out by an agency which is independent of the government. But I think there are many other reasons why it would not be in the best interests to release this report.

The Canadian Council on Animal Care was set up in 1968 because it was recognized that there was a need for better animal care in Canada. The first director of this agency was Dr. Harry Rowsell, a former professor of the Ontario Veterinary College who later became professor at the Western College of Veterinary Medicine in Saskatoon. Dr. Rowsell, whom I know very well, is the most competent person to be the first director and the first man in charge of the Canadian Council on Animal Care.

One of his first tasks was to produce a guide on the care of experimental animals, which I am sure people who are concerned about this matter in Canada have read and have found to be a most adequate, initial book on the subject. I am sure that as our experiments on animals become more complicated and sophisticated, this book will be amended and new aspects will be added to it. However, as an initial document for this kind of agency it was and is an excellent text.

The next task that the Canadian Council on Animal Care undertook was a survey of all the laboratories throughout the country, both the research laboratories and those that are operated by drug companies as well as laboratories which are located at universities. I think it should be understood that the survey of these facilities did not only have as its purpose an assessment of the treatment of animals at these laboratories; it also had an educational mission, because the guide had been produced only a year before and such a survey had not been carried out by this type of survey team composed of very capable people travelling across the country to assess these facilities. So I believe the role of this survey team had great educational value for the people operating these research laboratories. I understand that this was done on a voluntary basis but that nearly every laboratory in the country co-operated.

Certainly, as time goes on there will be more sophisticated assessments of research laboratories, and perhaps better regulations. But I think it would be very inappropriate for the first report of the survey team, which contained not only an assessment of animal care facilities and laboratory facilities but also provided an educational role for the people operating these facilities, to be released. I believe that after the survey team visited the various facilities throughout the country, the level of animal care and the kind of facilities provided improved greatly. Since it was voluntary and was done on a confidential basis, I think it would be quite inappropriate for this report to be released.

I expect that at a later stage we will want to establish a regulatory body, whether it be federal or provincial, which will assess these facilities, and if they are not up to a certain standard penalties will be imposed on the laboratories and research establishments concerned. However, I do not think that the overwhelming amount of publicity which would emanate from the publication of this report would necessarily have the best results.

The study of the basic processes of life are fundamental to medical research and to other health science disciplines. Frequently these studies require that research be carried out with animals, and also that living processes be studied as an adjunct to teaching. The benefit which society derives from the use of animals for research and teaching is incalculable. As an example I would cite the dramatic decline of poliomyelitis which has resulted from the development of a vaccine, prepared through the use of monkeys, against the virus of this disease. This is best illustrated by the statistics for Canada. In 1959 nearly 1,887 cases of poliomyelitis were recorded; however, in 1969, ten years later, the incidence of poliomyelitis in Canada was reduced to zero through development of the polio vaccine.

• (5:40 p.m.)

The use of living animals for teaching and research is a privilege which is accompanied by responsibility for ensuring that the highest standards of humane care and treatment are provided for animals in our teaching and research institutions. Rapidly expanding scientific research and increased student enrolment in recent years have resulted in increased need for animals. In Ontario alone, in 1967 approximately 636,000 animals ranging from mice to domestic farm animals were used for these purposes. This large use of animals for scientific research, which escalates at between 10 per cent and 20 per cent per year, has necessitated the establishment of more institutions and has sensibilized facilities for animal acquisition, for better accommodation, care and treatment of the animals, requiring the use of professional staff who are especially qualified in respect of animal care.

There are already many programs which provide training and experience in research animal husbandry, and there is a growing emphasis on research into animal diseases and the methods of care, housing and handling of laboratory animals. Research scientists recognize the responsibility for providing the highest standards of care in the accommodation of animals, if for no other reason than that animals used in research and teaching must be in all respects healthy and not subject to environmental or other stresses which could prejudice the results of their studies. To provide animals of the quality necessary for research and teaching, all latent and subclinical diseases must be detected and eliminated by the professional personnel who care for the animals. Facilities must also be constructed to provide research animals with a stable and comfortable environment.

In 1967, a symposium on the care of animals for teaching and research in the life sciences was held at Queen's University. This symposium, which was sponsored by the faculty of medicine at Queen's, introduced the concept of the Canadian Council on Animal Care, whose objectives are to provide guiding principles for the care of experimental animals in Canada and to work for their effective application. At this symposium Dr. G. Malcolm Brown, chairman of the Medical Research Council of Canada, delivered a paper on the National Research Council report on animal care and the role of the granting agency. In this paper Dr. Malcolm Brown stressed the importance which the Medical Research Council attaches to the care of experimental animals in Canada.

His concern was not only that experimental animals should be treated in a humane manner but, also, that for the purposes of research there is a common basis for good animal care which is not simply a matter of description and definition. Dr. Brown also noted that there was room for improvement in animal care and informed the symposium that scientists are continually seeking improvement in this area.

I shall review briefly the history of the Canadian Council on Animal Care: As early as November, 1963, the Medical Research Council requested the National Research Council to establish a committee to study the situation with regard to the humane use and care of experimental animals. The National Research Council acceded to the request and set up a committee composed of a distinguished jurist, representatives of the two councils, representatives of universities, medical and veterinary schools and a representative of the Canadian Federation of Biological Societies.

This committee's terms of reference included a request for recommendations for improvement in the procurement and production of experimental animals, facilities for their care and control over experiments. The work of this preliminary committee was carried out thoroughly under the able chairmanship of Dr. W. H. Cooke, director, division of biosciences, National Research Council, and was the subject of a special report published by the National Research Council in June, 1966. In large measure the recommendations contained in Dr. Cooke's report resulted in the establishment of the Canadian Council on Animal Care. This body, which acts in an advisory capacity, seeks to ensure the development and use of satisfactory practices. In addition, it is the vehicle for proving and exchanging information on animal care.

At the provincial level the committee recommended the establishment of an advisory board which would concern itself with all facets of the problem of animal care, including procurement, production and care of experimental animals. The committee recommended at the provincial level that the registration and licensing of dealers in laboratory animals be instituted where present arrangements were unsatisfactory. Mr. Speaker, this of course has been carried out in the province of Ontario under the legislation which was passed last year.

At the local level the committee recommended that institutions establish their own committees on animal care, with responsibility for ensuring that generally accepted principles were followed within their laboratories. Perhaps the most significant finding of the committee was that in its opinion voluntary controls would be more effective than legislative controls in ensuring that improper experimentation did not occur. In arriving at this recommendation the committee examined legislation relating to animal care in various countries and decided that effective control rested in large measure on the judgment of the individual investigator and that of his colleagues, both immediate and remote. The committee concluded that this type of check is the major influence even when there is controlling legislation. Moreover, there are situations which no legislation can foresee or provide for, and an alert and informed attitude must remain the most effective check on the use of animals, as indeed it does in Canada today.

The concern of society for the care of experimental animals is just one part of the examination which society is making of its many activities. Democracy is a system of checks and balances, and it is right and proper that from time to time it should receive the attention of those outside medical and scientific research. The National Research Council and the Medical Research Council by their actions, which have led to the Canadian Council on Animal Care, have left the individual investigator vulnerable to a wide range of comments and pressures. These pressures come from his colleagues, local committees, provincial advisory boards and the national council, to say nothing of the groups which provide the money for his research and which publish his papers. This is a method of control in the best of democratic traditions.

It may be useful at this moment to review briefly some of the elements involved in the use of animals in research. When a new chemical is isolated or developed that promises to be of value to man, it is tested in animals before it is applied to the human body. In many instances the chemical structure of the new substance can be ralated to a particular pharmacological activity, and with this foreknowledge a definite screening plan can be initiated. However, in some instances where the pharmacological interest is in a group of chemically similar compounds about which there is little knowledge, the research approach may be a blind one in the first instance. For the safety of man, such preliminary research must begin with animals.

Generally, the initial screening of new chemicals is done with small animals such as rodents, because of their size, their availability and reproducibility; and because they are relatively inexpensive, these early tests are frequently conducted with rats, mice or guinea pigs. Moreover, their short life span affords an ideal opportunity to follow the effects of treatment in its entirety. For some aspects of research, certain animals are more suitable than others. For example, rats and mice will retain oral doses that many non-rodents reject. Hamsters are ideal for research on mucous membrane because the cheek-pouch of this animal provides an ideal area for testing the healing properties of solutions intended for use on such tissue in humans. Rabbits have relatively large body areas and rather sensitive skin, which makes them excellent subjects for testing how irritating chemicals may be. It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that while the term guinea pig is properly associated with experimentation, these creatures are not widely used for experimental purposes.

• (5:50 p.m.)

When administering test material to animals, the investigator attempts to determine the lethality of the chemical, its effects, side effects and range of efficacy. Administration of the material may be oral, subcutaneous, cutaneous, intramuscular, intravenous or it may be administered in some other way. If the researcher knows the intended use of the substance in man, he will attempt to emulate administration of the substance. After initial tests with rodents or rabbits have supplied data on the nature and toxicity of the compound under investigation, if these have been fruitful, more elaborate studies can, if necessary, be devised.

It is at this stage that the larger animals are employed. These more advanced studies are usually conducted longitudinally over a period of time that may be from six months to two years or even longer. Small animals are rarely used for long-term studies because their smallness makes it difficult to follow weight gain or loss with any degree of accuracy. Another aspect in the selection of animals for research is age. In some experiments mature animals are needed, while in others the young are necessary in order to follow growth patterns as they develop.

As I have already mentioned, the smaller the animal generally the shorter the life span, so with the smaller animal researchers are able to go through the whole life span in a relatively short period. They can then judge the effects upon a human who has a much longer life span. Because of possible genetic effects to offspring from compounds ingested by parents, tests may be designed to cover several generations, in which case fertility and reproductive patterns will be examined.

In recent years some uncommon research animals have been introduced into the research laboratory because of special characteristics which make them especially suitable for certain types of studies. These include fish, reptiles, birds and farm animals. Animals having certain personality characteristics, such as aggressiveness, may be used in testing tranquillizing drugs and changes in the personality of the animal in response to these drugs would be studied. This may be very useful for drugs which could be used for Members of Parliament, because some of them are very aggressive. We could determine by the study of aggressive types of animals whether they would be especially useful in humans at a later stage.

As the previous speaker has already stated, and as I mentioned earlier in this speech—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Right Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (6:00 p.m.)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act respecting the Federal Court of Canada.

An act to provide temporary emergency powers for the preservation of public order in Canada.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) moved:

That this House approve in general the budgetary policy of the government.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my purpose tonight in this budget address is to set down in a concise manner the economic strategy of the government for achieving our first economic objective—a steady and substantial improvement in the real income of Canadians everywhere. I propose to go about this task in the following way.

First, I will describe the economic and financial situation as it has developed to the moment. Second, I will discuss the measures we have taken since the last budget in March and the measures we now propose be taken to guide the economy onto a course of high and sustainable economic expansion and full employment. Finally, I will chart the route onto this course as we envisage it for the economy in the balance of this fiscal year and through the next.

A steady and sustainable improvement in the standard of living of all Canadians requires the fullest possible utilization of the nation's human and material resources. It also requires that all regions, sectors and groups of people share in economic expansion; that we progressively narrow regional economic differences; and that we obtain a progressively more equitable distribution of the goods and services we produce.

It is often stated that we must also reach for economic stability, a good price and cost performance, and a satisfactory balance of payments. I see these conditions as means to the end, not the end in themselves. We are concerned about the balance of payments, exchange rates and trade because we cannot hope to reach a steady improvement in the prosperity of our people without satisfactory performance in these areas. Similarly, we are concerned about reasonable economic stability because without it efforts to achieve our primary objective will be frustrated. In brief, our only ultimate concern is for the well-being of all our people. Our other concerns are significant only in so far as they contribute to or detract from this goal.

On October 13 I gave the House a rather detailed account of economic developments this year. I shall not repeat that account tonight. I do wish, however, to draw attention to a number of key features of the situation and to new information which has become available since I last reported.

Of prime importance is the fact that employment is rising in Canada and unemployment on a seasonally adjusted basis appears to be falling. This underlying improvement is suggested in the statistics for September and October after allowing for normal seasonal patterns. There may yet be month-to-month fluctuations from the trend.

The national accounts for the third quarter also reveal that real output in the economy is rising. The pause in the growth of production of goods and services which marked the second quarter did not continue, and this latest information confirms that the economy is now advancing again, although the advance would be stronger if major labour disputes were not in progress.

We are in fact having a considerable boom in housing in Canada, owing in substantial measure to the effectiveness of government policy. Housing starts reached the quite extraordinary level at the annual rate of 270,000 in October. We shall not have a record year for housing in 1970 because of the lower rates of starts in the first part of the year, but it will be a satisfactory year especially when viewed in conjunction with the unusually high level of starts of last year. It is worth noting that the growth in starts currently in progress is concentrated in low income housing in regions of the country where the need is great and where employment growth has been sluggish.

The latest figures on capital investment apart from housing are also stronger and the recent preliminary survey of capital investment intentions indicates growing strength in this area of activity next year, although this year activity in this sector has been one of the weaker elements in our economy.

The year 1970 will go into the records as our best year ever in international trade. The increase in our exports especially in the early part of the year was very vigorous, and perhaps more important the latest figures suggest that this new level of exports is being well sustained. Our merchandise trade surplus for the first ten months of the year was at an annual rate of $2\frac{3}{4}$ billion. The current account of our balance of payments, including trade in services as well as goods, will show a record surplus this year. This condition is reflected in the strength of the Canadian dollar in exchange markets, which has persisted in spite of a very sharp reduction in recent months of new borrowings by Canadian provinces and corporations in the United States and overseas capital markets. Our foreign exchange reserves now stand at $4.6 billion.

Undoubtedly the strength of our trade balances reflect the success we have achieved to date, in comparison with other nations, at least, in putting the brakes on price increases. Other factors have played a part, but the fact remains that we have had a better price performance than every other industrial nation this past year. From the third quarter of 1969 to the third quarter of 1970 consumer prices in Canada rose by 3 per cent. According to the recent detailed report prepared by the OECD—that is the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development—this was a lower figure than for any other of the 22 members of the OECD except Finland, where the figure was 2.8 per cent. For the United States this indicator of the increase in the cost of living was up 5.7 per cent. Wholesale prices in Canada have been falling since March of this year. Most industry selling prices as computed by the Bureau of Statistics have also been falling since the end of the first quarter. The price deflator of gross national expenditure has shown smaller quarter-to-quarter increases this year, on the average, than last year. Thus it can be asserted that our price performance in Canada has shown a clear and market improvement and compares extremely favourably with all the other countries in the trading group of the western world.

The new information confirms the healthy state of our international trading position, the strength of home building, and the decline in the rate of price inflation. It indicates that employment and real output are again rising and that the level of unemployment after seasonal adjustment appears to be falling. These are very welcome reports on the state of the economy.

• (8:10 p.m.)

There is no question, however, that the rate of growth of employment must improve and that unemployment must be reduced if the economy is best to serve our overriding objective of the highest sustainable improvement in the standard of living of all Canadians.

Both inflation of prices and high unemployment are our enemies in the quest of our main objective. We must fight and control both of these enemies and the government intends to maintain its fight on both fronts. If we have allayed the forces of inflation this year that does not mean we can now ignore this enemy. Cost increases remain high, and the capacity to absorb them in further reductions of unit profits is now very limited. It is all too easy to encourage inflationary potential and this we do not intend to do. But we must also maintain and indeed strengthen our resistance to the other enemy, unemployment. Much of the balance of my remarks tonight will be concerned with our program for intensifying our fight against unemployment, helping those who have suffered most from inflation and resisting the dangers of igniting a new round of inflation.

Mr. Speaker, the government has engaged in what has been virtually a continuous adaptation of our fiscal policy. Fiscal policy in our opinion should not be a matter of taking decisions at only one time of the year—budget time—and passively reviewing developments the rest of the year. We have repeatedly stressed that we keep the economy under continuous review and that we will not hesitate to bring forward further measures as we conclude they are warranted. We have introduced a series of measures since the last budget which I have already described in detail in this House. I should like to review them briefly before passing on to describe the next phase in the evolution of our policy.

The budget of last March itself was expansionary with its prospect of a reduced budgetary surplus and increased net non-budgetary expenditures. The projected increase in cash requirements was of the order of three-quarters of a billion dollars. Now, quite apart from the large amounts of cash required to buy foreign exchange, the increase has virtually doubled to $1½ billion. This doubling is the result of developments in the economy and the new measures we have adopted in the continuing adjustment of policy. The measures taken since the budget include:

—increased outlays to the provinces of some $350 million to cover accelerated transfers of tax revenues, accelerated payments of technical and vocational school grants and higher equalization payments;

—the summer employment program for students and expanded social assistance programs which added $73 million to expenditures;

—an additional $100 million in August to the 1970 capital budget of CMHC to finance the start of an additional 15,000 units of low cost housing this year in regions where the need was great and unemployment especially severe;

—a special program of $60 million of expenditures on capital and other projects in regions of slower economic growth and on manpower retraining.

In addition to the increasingly expansionary fiscal policy, monetary policy since late last winter has been set to give increasing encouragement to economic expansion. Interest rates have been falling this year. The bank rate itself has been reduced in four stages from 8 per cent to 6 per cent. There has been some decline in long-term rates, including mortgage rates. Short-term rates have fallen much more and are 3 to 3½ percentage points lower than at the beginning of the year. The three-month treasury bill yield on November 26, at 4.4 per cent, was 3.4 percentage points below its high of last January. The prime lending rate of the banks is now lower and their liquidity position presents no obstacle to the expansion of their loans. The volume of currency and deposits in the economy has increased this year at a considerably more rapid rate than the value of the gross national expenditure. Monetary policy is now clearly expansionary.

The effects of these expansionary fiscal and monetary measures are only beginning to be felt in the economy; they will be felt with increased force over the next several months. None the less, the government now feels that it would be appropriate to add to them the stimulus of a variety of yet further measures.

Some of these measures are directed toward the immediate needs of the winter ahead. Others are intended to reinforce existing policies and ensure that the economic pick-up in sight for the year ahead will be both strong and sustained. They will also be directed in large part to those regions of the country where unemployment is highest, and to those groups in our society whose incomes are low. I should like now to outline briefly these new proposals, and to refer as well to the fiscal implications of certain other major policy developments which will also have a stimulating effect upon the national and regional economies in the year ahead.

The first of the new measures relates to unemployment insurance. As hon. members know, the objectives and proposals for fundamental reform of the unemployment insurance system were set out in the White Paper tabled last June by my colleague, the Minister of Labour. I am confident that we are well on the way to a vastly improved system of unemployment insurance, providing substantially better protection for all workers in Canada. Because of the time required for consideration and implementation of the new system, however, it is not expected that the higher levels of benefit can be introduced until about next July.

• (8:20 p.m.)

In the meantime, therefore, the government has decided that there should be an immediate increase of 10 per cent in the rates of benefit under the existing system.

This supplementary allowance would be provided to all workers receiving the insurance allowances during the period January to June next. It would be financed by a special government contribution to the insurance fund at a total cost of $54 million. I am sure this increase will be particularly helpful to unemployed workers and their families, especially during the usual seasonal winter peak in unemployment. It will, as well, give an immediate and direct stimulus to the economy, the benefits of which will spread quickly right across the country.

A second new measure proposed is to give still further aid to the provinces, and through them to municipalities if the provinces should so decide. This will take the form of assistance in the financing of additional job-creating public works. A fund to help stimulate the economy will be set up to operate during the remainder of this fiscal year and 1971-72. A total sum of $150 million will be provided by way of long-term loans at favourable interest rates.

The distribution of this fund to the provinces will be based upon a formula which takes account of their differing levels of unemployment experienced over the last six months of 1970. Because of their population size and current unemployment problems, the largest amounts will be made available to the provinces of Quebec and British Columbia. Based upon our estimates, however, all provinces will be able to make claims upon this fund as a source of finance for clearly identified capital projects initiated before the end of calendar 1971.

We will, of course, seek the co-operation of the provinces to ensure that projects are undertaken quickly. Wherever appropriate, these projects will be co-ordinated with the existing development programs of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, which in co-operation with the Department of Finance and other federal agencies will administer this loan program.

The projects should be additional to whatever would have been planned for 1971, or they should require financing that would have been beyond the provinces' borrowing capacity. A number of provinces advise us that they have important projects which they would like to move forward quickly in order to create new jobs and economic activity. This additional financing will make this help possible.

In making provision for this fund, we took carefully into account the special submission by the Prime Minister of Quebec to the federal-provincial conference of last September. That submission dealt with the question of evening out fluctuations in provincial revenues over good times and bad. It was agreed at the conference that federal and provincial ministers of finance should give further study to joint efforts to improve fiscal stability. The government's response in this regard as outlined today is directed to the immediate needs in the year ahead. We would plan, however, to continue to explore with the provinces the whole concept involved in possible joint stabilization arrangements for the future.

The federal government itself, of course, is also responsible for a wide range and variety of important capital works across the country. As a third measure of added stimulus, therefore, it is intended to allocate a further sum of $23 million to departments and agencies to undertake further capital improvements in regions where unemployment is most severe. This is a follow-up to the earlier decision announced in October to add $60 million to departmental spending. The review of programs undertaken in that connection indicated a further range of important needs that had been deferred because of the shortage of budgetary funds. It is now proposed to take further steps to reduce this backlog of requirements. Wherever possible this work will also be initiated this winter, continuing where necessary into the next fiscal year.

Parallelling this expanded capital program carried on by federal departments, a fourth program is also planned to accelerate the development of access roads and necessary local services in the area surrounding the new Montreal International Airport. Parliament has already provided substantial funds for construction of the airport itself. Work is getting into high gear on this major project. It will proceed rapidly throughout the year ahead. Services throughout the surrounding municipal areas must also be progressively developed if the region is to achieve its full potential as a dynamic centre for economic growth in the province and the country as a whole. A sum of $20 million of contributions to these needs will therefore be allocated through the special areas program of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

A fifth measure proposed is to provide immediately a further amount of $40 million to the capital budget of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. As I have already recalled, the corporation's budget was raised by $100 million last August to enable it to expand its lending for construction of moderate cost homes for home ownership and rental accommodation for families of modest incomes. The response to this initiative has been remarkably quick. It is apparent that the corporation's program is filling a real and urgent need. As before, it is intended that the bulk of these additional funds should be directed to areas where housing and employment needs are greatest. This additional appropriation will help not only to assure a very high level of housing starts but also to strengthen the round of economic activity that accompanies the creation of new family homes.

Accompanying these direct government programs, three further steps to stimulate the flow of investment in the private business sector are proposed. The most important of these will be presented shortly to the House by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, but I should like to describe here very briefly the main highlights. Certain important amendments to the Regional Development Incentives Act will be proposed. If they are approved by Parliament they will be followed by the designation of a new region within which a special system of capital incentive grants will be applied to encourage new private investment. This new region will include the three countries of relatively slow growth in southeastern Ontario—Stormont, Glengarry and Prescott—and the southwestern part of Quebec, including Montreal, which is not now designated.

• (8:30 p.m.)

The development incentives will be available within this new area for a specific time period. We believe they will bring to more rapid fruition many investment projects which would not otherwise be likely to materialize for some time.

It will also be proposed that the present ceiling on incentive grants for individual projects in the Atlantic provinces should be raised, and that a new system of loan guarantees to assist in the financing of viable new enterprises in all the designated regions should be established.

As I have suggested, the details of these important extensions of the industrial incentives program will be made known shortly. They will go into effect as quickly as possible, although it will be some time before their cost will be reflected in our expenditures. It is also very difficult to predict the volume of investment likely to be effected or the probable cost of the incentives. Judging from experience with the program to date, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion foresees a total increase in outlays because of the new program amounting to about $130 million over the period of the next few years. Incentives of this magnitude certainly provide a powerful forward thrust to increased private capital investment and the creation of jobs throughout the designated regions. The new system of loan guarantees will reinforce that effect.

The other two measures to maintain and expand employment in the private sector directly are aimed at particular industries. One of these is the shipbuilding industry. As recently announced by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, a carefully designed program of further assistance to Canadian shipyards over the next year and a half is to be introduced to help our companies improve their competitive position and expand sales in strong world markets. We intend to provide the financial support required and we look to the industry to continue to diversify and increase its efficiency in serving both domestic and foreign markets. It is estimated that this program may cost upwards of $60 million over the next several years.

The other situation relates to the footwear industry, which is facing exceptional problems of adjustment. It is proposed that the provisions of the General Adjustment Assistance program should be extended to firms in this industry which require financial and technical aid to restructure their operations in order to improve their competitive position.

Both of these industries tend to be labour intensive. They are also located to a considerable degree in slower-growing regions of the country where unemployment is highest. They are, therefore, industries uniquely fitted to receive selective measures of support at this time.

Supplementary estimates covering several of these measures will be tabled in the House tomorrow morning.

Mr. Woolliams: Why don't you do it now?

Mr. Benson: In this over-all review of economic stabilization policy, I should also recall several other areas of expenditure of particular relevance to the expansion of the national economy in the course of the year ahead.

Last Monday the Minister of National Health and Welfare tabled the government White Paper on Income Security. Apart from its signficance as a social document, its proposals have important fiscal and economic implications which are likely to be widely debated. For the moment, however, I need only note the fact that beginning on April 1 next the proposed boost in the combined old age security pension and guaranteed income supplement up to the level of $255 per month for a needy couple will raise total federal payments by almost $200 million over the fiscal year. Under the proposed plan it would not be necessary to raise the taxes earmarked for old age pensions since the yield of these taxes appears adequate to finance the new system. Moreover, a plan along the lines suggested in the White Paper to restructure family allowances, that is, restricting them to families with incomes below $10,000 annually, more than doubling them for families in the lowest income brackets, and making the allowances taxable, would redistribute the expenditure toward needy families in a very significant way.

I should also recall yesterday's announcement by the Minister of Veterans Affairs regarding veterans' pensions and allowances, involving a net increase in expenditure of about $25 million next year.

Changes in our major social programs are clearly directed to the lower income groups in our society. They are also of greater relative importance to the weaker regions in the country. One can be sure that the great bulk of the expenditure will quickly work its way into the consumer spending stream. The impact of these long-planned measures of social justice will thus come just at a time when it is desirable to stimulate demand in the economy not only for purposes of the short-term economic upturn but also for continuous and sustained economic growth.

Much the same stimulus would flow from new government proposals in quite a different area. I refer here to the grain receipts stabilization plan outlined to the House five weeks ago by the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. If that plan is enacted and—

Mr. Horner: If!

Mr. Benson: —made applicable to the 1970-71 crop year as recommended, it will involve cash stabilization payments to western farmers next spring and summer totalling over $100 million. This would be the net payment contributed by the government to stabilize 1970-71 receipts. There would, of course, be important offsetting savings in government expenditure by the elimination of the temporary wheat storage payments which have been shown to be an inefficient form of assistance. However, the immediate effect of such a stabilization plan would be to put much needed cash into the hands of the farmers next spring.

The largest part of this flow of cash would go to Saskatchewan, where the provincial economy has been hardest hit by the decline in grain marketings since 1968. Large numbers of farmers in both Alberta and Manitoba, however, would also be helped. Taken together with the much higher grain sales and the prospects for further improvement, this early injection of cash would give a significant boost to the entire Prairie economy. Its multiplier and spill-over effects, in terms of increased purchases of goods and services imported from other provinces, both east and west, would be of great importance.

We can also anticipate that the very large and continuing contributions from the federal government to the provinces will prove to be an expansive source of support in the economy in the year ahead. These transfers both by way of unconditional equalization and the grants for the support of shared-cost health, welfare and education programs now require over $3 billion in cash payments.

The supplementary estimates for the current year have already shown an increase of about $79 million payable for equalization and related transfers. A further rise of about $90 million is anticipated for 1971-72. These increases illustrate the responsiveness of the equalization system in stabilizing and supporting the revenues and expenditures of those provinces which may experience a worsening of fiscal disparity when growth in the economy falls below normal.

As for the shared-cost programs, including health insurance, welfare assistance, and higher education, the excessive rates of cost increase experienced in recent years do show some welcome signs of slackening. Nevertheless a preliminary forecast indicates a further rise of almost $350 million in increased payments to the provinces in support of these basic programs.

Finally, I should mention that although the detailed estimates for 1971-72 are still pending, they are expected to provide for a further advance in the regional development work of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Total expenditures here may rise above the level of $300 million next year.

Mr. Speaker, I turn now to the implications this entire program has for the government's financial position in the current fiscal year and in 1971-72. I have not had occasion as yet to give an indication to the House as to our requirements for next year. Detailed estimates will be presented in the usual way early in the new year. Our present calculations envisage that the cash requirements for 1971-72 would be about $200 million higher than the $1,500 million we are now estimating for the current fiscal year. These figures are apart from any effect of foreign exchange transactions and from the effects of the new program I have described tonight. Our cash requirements for the current fiscal year are high and we still have a considerable portion of them to finance. The new programs will add about $100 million to the requirements for the current year and $400 million to those already contemplated for the next fiscal year. Thus with the new programs our cash requirements for 1971-72 would be half a billion dollars higher than this year's combined budgetary and non-budgetary needs.

We have given the most earnest consideration to the best means of financing these requirements. We want to impart as strong an impetus to the economy as we can without regenerating a spiral of price increases. At the same time we wish to give added support to the disadvantaged regions and groups in our economy. There have been expectations that I would be announcing tax cuts tonight. The government has had to consider whether such a measure would direct economic stimulus and support to these economically weaker regions and groups in the most effective way. We have concluded that it would not. A reduction of taxes would be stimulating, that is not to be doubted. But the positive programs I have described will not only be stimulating but will penetrate more surely to the particular points in the economy where stimulus and relief of economic hardship are most required.

• (8:40 p.m.)

In adopting this policy we have, as I have said, added greatly to our cash requirements. A responsible government which is operating on a realistic basis has to be concerned about the total size of its net borrowing requirements. We have to guard against creating too rapid an expansion of the money supply, that is to say we have to guard against another encounter with the second obstacle to a rise in living standards that I have spoken of tonight—a renewed surge of prices. The borrowing needs of the government must be covered by a combination of sales of securities to the banking system and to the public. There are limits to the extent to which the banks can be encouraged to increase their holdings of government securities without running the very serious risk that the expansion and increased liquidity of the banking system will trigger inflation and expectations of inflation. There are also clear limits to the extent to which the general public can be induced to increase its holdings of government securities without this causing upward pressure on interest rates, which would of course restrain capital investment. High interest rates would also tend to push borrowers into foreign capital markets and either produce a further appreciation of the Canadian dollar or increase our need for cash to buy exchange in order to prevent such appreciation. A yet higher value for the Canadian dollar would also tend to restrain the Canadian economy. If we had to purchase exchange to prevent an appreciation, the financing of the extra cash requirements involved would produce yet more pressure on interest rates. I believe hon. members will agree that we must avoid such pitfalls.

For all these reasons, we have decided with reluctance that we shall have to find some of the cash required this fiscal year and next by means other than borrowing. I proposed, therefore, that taxes be kept at present levels by extending the surtaxes on personal and corporate incomes through the calendar year 1971. These surtaxes over a 12-month period are worth $245 million in revenue.

Hon. members I am sure will recall that the surtax on individuals does not apply to the first $200 of basic tax. It therefore does not apply to about 25 per cent of Canadian taxpayers. A single person does not pay any surtax if his income is below $2,743. A married man with two children does not pay any surtax if his income is below $4,343.

While I have no new general tax measures to propose tonight, I am proposing a special measure directed to our present economic circumstances. I referred earlier in my remarks to the fact that private capital investment has been one of the weaker elements in the picture. This has been particularly the case with respect to investment in our secondary industries. To encourage better performance in this area, I propose to provide a special incentive for all businesses engaged in manufacturing and processing. Effective tonight manufacturing and processing enterprises will be permitted to value new investments in machinery, equipment and structures at 115 per cent of their actual cost as a base for earning capital cost allowances. This capital cost allowance supplement will apply to such new capital investments put in place during the period commencing tomorrow morning and ending March 31, 1972. Further details will be provided in a bill and regulations.

Mr. Lewis: At what hour tomorrow morning—four o'clock?

Mr. Benson: One of my friends says, before you get up.

Mr. Lewis: That is at four o'clock.

Mr. Benson: Hon. members will recognize that this new instrument of Canadian fiscal policy is in harmony with our basic approach of focusing our measures upon the specific needs of the economy in order to attain maximum impact. Since the measure will increase significantly the net return on capital investment, I am confident that it will encourage new capital projects and speed up the implementation of capital outlays planned for the future, and thus create new jobs for a variety of the skills of our growing labour force. The tax bill of business enterprises affected will be reduced in each of the next several years to a total of about $250 million. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1972, I estimate the reduction at $25 million.

With the permission of the House, Mr. Speaker, I should like now for the information of members to include as an appendix to Hansard tables in the form normally provided with budget speeches. These include a summary statement of our cash requirements for 1969-70 and our current forecast for 1970-71, the yields for the same two years of our main categories of budgetary and old age security revenues and again for the same two years, tables and explanatory notes giving the budget figures in terms of the national economic accounts in the form published by the Bureau of Statistics together with a reconciliation with the budgetary accounts.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For tables referred to above, see Appendix A]

Mr. Benson: Since I last presented similar tables to the House in mid-October there have been some changes in the figures forecast for 1970-71 quite apart from those which arise out of the new measures announced tonight. In particular budgetary revenues are expected to be lower by $100 million owing to changes in the economy, especially those arising from substantial work stoppages. Expenditures will be some $50 million higher reflecting the impact of certain items already presented to the House as supplementary estimates. In addition, net non-budgetary requirements will be somewhat higher. Taking account of tonight's measures I am now estimating a budgetary deficit of $320 million and net non-budgetary requirements of $1,250 million, making a total cash requirement of $1,570 million apart from foreign exchange transactions in the current year.

For 1971-72, taking account of the programs described tonight including the continuation of the present level of taxes, we estimate that the budgetary accounts will show a deficit in the area of $600 million; and that our net non-budgetary requirements will be in the area of $1,300 million. Thus the total cash requirements excluding exchange transactions are expected to be approximately $1,900 million.

I should like now to speak briefly about the economic outlook. I have referred to the fact that real output and employment are now rising. It is my firm belief that they will continue to rise and gain in momentum through 1971. Unemployment, seasonally adjusted, fell last month. It is undoubtedly the case that the unadjusted figures of unemployment will rise through the winter months as they always do. But I am hopeful that seasonally adjusted unemployment will prove in fact to have peaked during this quarter unless an improvement is delayed by certain important labour disputes.

I do not wish to suggest that the route to full employment will be easy. With the rapid expansion of the labour force we are experiencing in this country and with the prospect of increasing productivity as the economy expands, very substantial rates of real growth will be required to absorb the new workers and reduce unemployment. But I believe that, led by the policies of the government, there will be renewed confidence in the private sector and a steady advance toward full utilization of our human and material resources. I expect a greater growth of consumer expenditure next year. I expect that investment in housing will be strong. As the year progresses I anticipate that other investments too will expand at an increasing pace. While we cannot expect our exports to show another leap forward next year similar to the one they made this year, they will continue to be strong. I feel sure that other levels of government will be demanding goods and services from the economy at a greater rate than this year. We have set our policies in the confidence that, guided by them, the economy will advance to new, higher levels of output that will permit growing employment, reduced unemployment and continued good price performance.

• (8:50 p.m.)

We are looking to growing increases in the value of gross national product next year, which by the second half may be running at a rate about 8½ per cent above the second half of this year. With continued good price performance these figures imply an increase in real output that will be sufficient to more than offset the increase in the labour force and expected growth of productivity and so reduce unemployment progressively during the year.

The governement will continue to watch the developing situation with great care and should policy changes become necessary or desirable we shall, as we have been doing, make suitable adjustments without delay. In saying this I have in mind not only progress toward full employment but also continued satisfactory price performance. If we do not achieve the restraint of prices and costs that we must have, we shall not shirk from action that may be required on that front.

Recently I took part in meetings of finance ministers in Brussels and of the International Monetary Fund and World Bank in Copenhagen. These meetings have given me an opportunity to compare notes about economic developments with government and business leaders of all the principal countries. Only last week we had a meeting here in Ottawa of the Canada-U.S. Joint Economic Committee and this gave me another chance to see how we are getting along compared with our neighbours. It is good to see your country though the eyes of others.

My counterparts abroad who are called upon to help manage their national economics would be pleased to claim for their countries the record of Canadian economic attainment over the past several years. They, looking from the outside, are able to see things about Canada which some of us, with myopic concern about day-to-day issues, fail to see in front of us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, they see a high and rising standard of living, a strong currency, rapidly expanding export trade, the largest current account surplus in our history and, compared to most, a good price performance, and to them these are no mean accomplishments. When I remind them that the expansion of our economy and the growth of our employment have been less than adequate in recent months, and that the rate of cost increases is still too high, they point to their own very serious problems in exactly these same areas.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Even your own members are laughing at you.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, in concluding my budget presentation tonight I want to re-assert my strong and abiding optimism in Canada's future. We are endowed with bountiful resources to which the world is turning with increasing interest. We have sound and stable government and a well-established determination to keep it strong. The large investment of recent years in advanced education and vocational training will enhance the productive capacity of our rapidly growing labour force and help our people adapt more readily to requirements of a rapidly changing industrial technology. Our manufacturing industries have shown a remarkable capacity to penetrate world markets and meet import competition at home. We are working hard to expand economic opportunities in the weaker regions of the country and can, I think, rightfully claim some measure of success. We have improved and are continuing to improve the social security system and have made good progress towards a more equitable distribution of our national income.

I have no doubt, and I am not speaking as a government, that we as a Parliament—I trust all members of Parliament are responsible—and as a nation will overcome whatever difficulties will present themselves and keep the economy moving forward on a growth path with increasing momentum that will absorb our full human and material capacity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benson: And, Mr. Speaker, with a little patience we can reach this ultimate goal without rekindling the fires of inflation. Investors from all over the world are obviously willing to place their bets on Canada, and my strong advice to Canadians everywhere is that there is no better bet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 1 of Standing Order 60, I wish to lay on the table of the House copies in English and French of notices of ways and means resolutions referred to in my budget statement.

[Editor's Note: For text of notices of ways and means motions, see Appendix B.]

An hon. Member: You have laid an egg.

Mr. Stanfield: That was the best part of the speech.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the government, through the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and its supporters, is vainly grasping at straws tonight to get back to the centre of the stage.

An hon. Member: Author!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Before I comment on the minister's remarks, Mr. Speaker, I must say that this evening we join with all in Canada in grateful appreciation and relief at the news that Mr. Cross has been found and is now in safe hands.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Having said that, Mr. Speaker, may I say that we have witnessed a posturing act—

An hon. Member: You've seen nothing yet.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): And I am sure there is absolutely nothing in what we did see. This posturing act and the clichés offered by the government show their attitude. Of course, as has been said before about the activities of this government: Look at the damned mess we are in now.

On previous occasions, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has said there is need for only one budget a year. When we were discussing the budget he presented last March it was pointed out that the 3 per cent surtax would lapse. He was asked whether it would be restored, and he said no. But within the last few days the minister had to scurry and he told us we would be having a budget. Why? There are only two budgetary proposals here. One is a great deception of the Canadian public and works to the hardship of those people about whom the minister and the government pretend to care so much—the lower income earners. So what happens? The surtax is imposed for another year.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Stanfield: Higher taxes; raise the taxes!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is not giving any relief to low income earners. It gives no relief to old age pensioners—

An hon. Member: Six per cent unemployment and higher taxes.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —if they pay taxes. It gives no relief to anyone under the so-called poverty level. Everybody, whether rich or poor, gets the same relief of $200 of tax before the 3 per cent surtax is imposed. In this budget there is no measure to relieve that particular hardship. We are told with great fanfare that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) has announced a 10 per cent increase in unemployment benefits. But that does not help the person who cannot qualify, nor the person whose benefits are running out; and there are thousands and thousands of them. You might as well give them cake, since you are not able to give them bread. What is required are jobs.

We are told about redistribution and about income security, but that does not take care of the winter. This measure only comes into force on April 1 next. We are also told about veterans allowances, but this will not help this winter either. That comes into effect in the spring. I suppose everything has to come with spring.

Mr. Crouse: This is a springtime budget.

An hon. Member: Like you.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): At least I will come in the spring; you will never arrive. Mr. Speaker, we are having a budget at this time because of the erratic manner in which this government has conducted the economy over the past two or three years. First of all it stubbornly refused to recognize that we had inflation.

Mr. Pepin: What?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I will not go through, chapter and verse, all the attempts that were made to get the government to recognize that there was a problem of inflation. Then we saw a sudden awakening. The government was warned by the Economic Council of Canada in its fifth report, and we know what its reaction was to that gentle warning. In effect, the Economic Council said. "Be careful, because the measures that you have taken will have long and deep effect and may turn the balance the other way." In the fall of 1968 the Economic Council gave that warning, and the Minister of Finance will well remember how he—

Mr. Woolliams: I don't think he ever read those reports.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —appraised that incursion by the Economic Council, and how he felt they were criticizing the actions of the government. It was only a warning, but how true it was. Now we see the government scurrying the other way to restore the balance. And why? Because all its monetary and fiscal measures taken in an effort to fight inflation have resulted in massive unemployment.

Mr. Speaker, I do not for one moment share the optimistic attitude of the minister this evening with regard to his forecast. The minister shakes his head. But we know what his estimates have been in the past, his forecasts and his guarantees. They were not worth the paper they were written on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: He has never been right yet.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is the reason we have this budget this evening. There is nothing interesting in this budget apart from the continuation of the surtax and the special depreciation allowances.

Mr. Woolliams: What do you expect from a small-town bookkeeper?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This statement could have been made on motions, Mr. Speaker. There is nothing here with regard to a tax cut. There is nothing here that says the government is resisting a cut at a meaningful level with regard to the sales tax on building materials. There is nothing here with regard to a tax cut for low income recipients, although I would have expected that to be attractive to the minister. It is in the general line of what he will have to do if he wants to put into practice at least part of the proposals contained in the white paper on tax changes. This is what he is driving at, Mr. Speaker. Now was an opportune moment to go part of the way on personal incomes—not next spring, not 1972. For these reasons I feel that the budgetary proposals will not meet the problem.

Let us review the proposals, Mr. Speaker. There are the unemployment benefits I have spoken about and the loans totalling $150 million, but when one looks at the formula for distribution and the type of work that has been brought forward, this is a disguised winter works program. With regard to the $150 million to be provided if provinces and municipalities wish to participate in these programs, when does the government think they will be able to bring their programs forward? Will they be able to put men to work next month, or the month after? The way bureaucracy works at all levels of government will result in these people still being unemployed next April and May. But it sounds good.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Also, one must look at the formula and the distribution. I call the attention of hon. members to the table at page 5 of the budget highlights where in the next to last column there is an indication of how much money will be available to the provinces. We see that for Newfoundland there is $5 million; for Prince Edward Island, $1 million; for Nova Scotia, $4 million; for New Brunswick, $4 million; for Quebec, $68 million; for Ontario, $17 million; for Manitoba, $8 million; for Saskatchewan, $5 million; for Alberta, $4 million and for British Columbia, $35 million. Mr. Speaker, there are many municipalities which could use the total of their province's entitlement and just drop it in one corner of their operations if they want to take care of the unemployment that exists and do something meaningful in this regard. Take the $4 million for the province of Alberta, for instance. That is not even a small drop in the bucket compared with what is required.

With regard to the $23 million, one should look at the miscellaneous estimates. We are now seeing how the $60 million is being apportioned and allocated among many departments. This is not an additional expenditure. This is really a reallocation of funds with regard to which there has been a shortfall of expenditure. They are funds which would normally die through the effluxion of non-expenditure. We are transferring them and they are an additional expenditure. What are we going to have in connection with this proposal? Will it be more of the same? Will there be further examination? Or is this $23 million merely a reallocation of credits from an estimate already provided for by Parliament. We shall see what the estimates reveal.

Then there is the matter of the $20 million. I suppose this will be a supplementary estimate for the Montreal international airport. We shall see whether that sum will provide jobs this winter. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we will not see those jobs next summer or next fall, but perhaps in the following spring. If my memory is right and my experience is correct, the Department of Transport and its engineers and architects, notwithstanding the good will of the genial Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson), just do not work that fast. As a matter of fact, on the basis of previous experience with regard to international airports, they will be lucky if they have spent any of this money by well into 1972.

I should like to consider further aspects of this budget. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell), the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. MacEachen the House was adjourned at 9.15 p.m.

APPENDIX A

GOVERNMENT OF CANAD

Budgetary and Old Age Security Revenues
(Millions of Dollars)

	1969–70	1970–71 Forecast
Budgetary Revenues
Personal Income Tax	4,562	5,315
Corporation Income Tax	2,612	2,355
Non-Resident Tax	249	255
Estate Tax	101	115
Custom Duties	818	820
Sales Tax	1,717	1,750
Other Duties and Taxes	897	990
Total Taxes	10,956	11,600
Non-Tax Revenues	1,357	1,435
Total Budgetary Revenues	12,313	13,035
Old Age Security Revenues
Personal Income Tax	1,027	1,140
Corporation Income Tax	227	215
Sales Tax	577	595
Total Old Age Security Revenues	1,831	1,950

Federal Government Revenue and Expenditure on a National Accounts Basis
(Millions of Dollars)

	1969–70 Preliminary	1970–71 Forecast
A—Revenue
Direct Taxes, Persons	6,790	7,655
Direct Taxes, Corporations	2,257	2,130
Direct Taxes, Non-Residents	252	255
Indirect Taxes	4,024	4,180
Other Current Transfers from Persons	4	5
Investment Income	1,052	1,240
Capital Consumption Allowance	214	235
Total Revenue	14,593	15,700
B—Expenditure
Current Goods & Services	4,453	4,815
(Non-Defence)	(2,610)	(2,965)
(Defence)	(1,843)	(1,850)
Transfer Payments to Persons	3,702	4,235
Subsidies	571	660
Capital Assistance	97	140
Current Transfers to Non-residents	198	220
Interest on the Public Debt	1,675	1,880
Transfers to Provinces	2,719	3,700
Transfers to Local Governments	88	100
Gross Capital Formation	459	520
Total Expenditure	13,962	16,270
C—Surplus (+) or Deficit (−)	+631	−570

23568—40

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURE

Public Accounts and National Accounts Reconciliation
(Millions of Dollars)

	1969–70 Preliminary	1970–71 Forecast
1. Budgetary Expenditures	11,938	13,355
Deduct
2. Budgetary Transfers to Funds and Agencies (1)	−551	−620
3. Post Office Expenditures	−341	−390
4. Deficit of Government Business Enterprises	− 77	− 85
5. Reserves and Write-Offs	−323	− 85
6. Purchase of Existing Capital Assets	− 9	− 10
7. Budgetary Revenue Items Offset Against Budgetary Expenditure (2)	− 80	− 60
	(−1,381)	(−1,250)
Add Extra-Budgetary Funds Expenditure
8. Old Age Security Benefits	1,732	1,910
9. Unemployment Insurance Benefits	542	825
10. Government Pensions	176	220
11. Prairie Farm Emergency Payments	4	5
	(2,454)	(2,960)
12. Expenditure of Government Funds and Agencies (1)	646	720
13. Capital Consumption Allowances	214	235
14. Miscellaneous (3)	91	250
15. Total Expenditure, National Accounts Basis	13,962	16,270
16. Surplus (+) or Deficit (−), National Accounts Basis	+631	−570
17. Surplus (+) or Deficit (−), Budgetary Basis	+375	−320

(1) In the national accounts, budgetary appropriations to various funds and agencies are replaced by the expenditure actually made by these funds and agencies.

(2) This item mainly consists of revenue from sales of goods and services by the government. These sales appear as final expenditure of the private sector and are deducted to avoid double counting.

(3) This item includes the supplementary period adjustment. In the national accounts, expenditures on goods and services in the supplementary period are divided between adjacent fiscal years; most other expenditures are shifted entirely to the next fiscal year.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT REVENUE

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS AND NATIONAL ACCOUNTS RECONCILIATION
(Millions of Dollars)

	1969-70 Preliminary	1970-71 Forecast
1. Budgetary Revenue	12,313	13,035
Deduct
2. Budgetary Return on Investment	−860	−955
3. Post Office Revenue	−355	−350
4. Other Non-Tax Budgetary Revenues	−142	−130
	(−1,357)	(−1,435)
5. Corporate Income Tax, Excess of Accruals (+) or Collections (−)	−582	−440
Add
6. Old Age Security Taxes	1,831	1,950
7. Unemployment Insurance Fund, Employer-Employee Contributions	494	500
8. Government Pension Funds Employer-Employee Contributions	494	540
9. Prairie Farm Assistance Act Levies	6	5
	(2,825)	(2,995)
Government Investment Income:
10. Interest on Loans, Advances and Investments	423	490
11. Interest Receipts on Social Insurance and Government Pension Funds	285	385
12. Profits before Taxes (Net of Losses) of Government Business Enterprises	344	365
	(1,052)	(1,240)
13. Capital Consumption Allowances	214	235
14. Miscellaneous (1)	128	70
15. Total Revenue, National Accounts Basis	14,593	15,700

(1) These miscellaneous adjustments represent insurance companies tax revenues, miscellaneous indirect taxes, miscellaneous transfers from persons and adjustment for the supplementary period. In the national accounts, revenue in the supplementary period is shifted into the following fiscal year.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA CASH REQUIREMENTS
(Millions of Dollars)

	1969-70	1970-71 Forecast
Budgetary Transactions
Revenues	12,313	13,035
Expenditures	−11,938	−13,355
Surplus (+) or Deficit (−)	+375	−320
Net Non-Budgetary Transactions Excluding foreign exchange transactions	−293	−1,250
Total Government of Canada Cash Requirements Excluding foreign exchange transactions	− 82	−1,570
Amount Required to Date to Finance Foreign Exchange Transactions	−335	−1,216*
Total Government of Canada Cash Requirements Excluding future foreign exchange transactions	−253	−2,786

*As of November 30, 1970.

APPENDIX B

NOTICE OF WAYS AND MEANS MOTION

AN ACT TO AMEND THE INCOME TAX ACT

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide that the surtax imposed on individuals and corporations by Part IA of the Income Tax Act be applicable in the case of individuals to the 1971 taxation year and in the case of corporations to taxable income earned in 1971.

NOTICE OF WAYS AND MEANS MOTION

THE INCOME TAX ACT

That it is expedient to amend the Income Tax Act to provide that a taxpayer who acquires prescribed property in the period between December 3, 1970 and April 1, 1972 for use in a manufacturing or processing business, shall, for the purpose of computing capital cost allowances in respect thereof and for other related purposes, be deemed to have acquired the property at a capital cost to the taxpayer equal to 115 per cent of his actual capital cost.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, December 4, 1970

The House met at 11 a.m.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B), 1970-71

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting Supplementary Estimates (B) for the financial year ending March 31, 1971, was presented by Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

[Later:]

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE ON MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to move, seconded by Mr. Benson:

That the Supplementary Estimates (B) for the year ending March 31, 1971, tabled in the House this day, be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

First report of Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs—Mr. Clermont (Gatineau).

[English]

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

First report of Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization—Mr. Deachman.

[Editor's Note: For text of above reports, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[Translation]

INDUSTRY

BOOK PUBLISHING—TABLING OF STUDY

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41 (2), I should like to table copies in the two official languages of the survey on the Canadian Publishing industry.

Hon. members can obtain copies from the distribution service.

[English]

AUDITOR GENERAL

EXPEDITING OF NEW BILL—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a motion under Standing Order 43, with which this House is vaguely familiar. The urgent circumstances are as follows: Yesterday the government withdrew Bill C-190, but it would appear that the recommendation from the Governor General still applies. I have today just filed notice of a bill entitled "An Act respecting the Auditor General of Canada" setting out, generally, the terms and conditions which were in a draft bill submitted by the Auditor General to the Public Accounts Committee at the request of that committee.

It is essential that this crisis of confidence in a parliamentary officer be resolved at once in order that the House may proceed to establish, without delay, a proper basis for the responsibilities and duties of the Auditor General. I therefore ask for unanimous consent to move the following motion:

That this House waives the 48 hours notice required under Standing Order 42 (1) and that leave be given to introduce the said bill this day.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Peace River under the terms of Standing Order 43 which requires unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimity and the motion cannot be put at this time.

* * *

• (11:10 a.m.)

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLEGED BIASED NEWS REPORT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask leave of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43 to request that the government take action to refer a tape of the CBC national television news that was seen at 11 p.m. last night, December 3, relating to the events surrounding the withdrawal of Bill C-190 from the order paper of the House, to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts. Accordingly I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir):

That this House requests the government to refer a tape of the CBC national television news of December 3rd, 1970, seen at 11.00 p.m. in Ottawa, relating to the withdrawal of Bill C-190 from the order paper of the House of Commons, to the Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts to determine whether or not that news report was biased and slanted in favour of the government.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Regina East.

* * *

FINANCE

SALARY OF MINISTER—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the newfound spirit demonstrated in the House yesterday toward motions moved under Standing Order 43, I hope the House will continue to demonstrate a positive response to such initiatives concerning matters of pressing importance and necessity. In view of last night's budget presented by the Minister of Finance, I should like to move under Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the salary of the Minister of Finance be reduced for the winter months of January, February and March, to the average benefit received under the unemployment insurance fund, which is approximately $36 a week, plus the new increase of 10 per cent, for a total of $39.60, and that the minister report back to the House on April 1st the results of his experience in living on that salary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the House that the Chair has ever increasing qualms and doubts about the use of Standing Order 43. Hon. members know that a motion under this Standing Order requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

* * *

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES ACT

PROVISION OF SPECIAL DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVE, LOAN GUARANTEE, ETC.

On the order: Introduction of Bills.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that on the notice paper notice is given by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion of a bill entitled, "An Act to amend the Regional Development Incentives Act." It seems to me that it would be in the best interests of all of us to have the contents of the bill made available as quickly as possible. I therefore ask for the consent of the House for this bill to be given first reading so that it can be made available to hon. members as quickly as possible.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will realize that again unanimous consent is required. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEachen (for Mr. Marchand, Langelier) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-205, to amend the Regional Development Incentives Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

ORDER OF CANADA

SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF MR. AND MRS. JAMES CROSS AS HONORARY COMPANIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the great courage demonstrated by Mr. and Mrs. James Cross and the services rendered to Canada and, indeed, to humanity at large by the courage, dignity and strength of character demonstrated by them in their time of crisis, would the Prime Minister consider, on behalf of the people of Canada, some appropriate recognition of this courage and service? For example, would he ask, on behalf of Parliament and all Canadians, that the Queen's Privy Council for Canada recommend to the Governor General the appointment of Mr. and Mrs. James Cross as honorary companions of the Order of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the words of the Leader of the Opposition are well chosen. I agree with the statements he has made about Mr. Cross. As to the recommendation he has just made to the government, we will take it under the most earnest consideration. I thank him for the suggestion.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

WITHDRAWAL OF PUBLIC ORDER (TEMPORARY MEASURES) ACT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in view of the very happy news about the rescue of Mr. Cross, will the Prime Minister indicate whether he and the members of his government are now giving consideration to the termination of the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that yesterday, in telling the House how elated we were about the news of Mr. Cross, I congratulated many of the participants in this drama but I omitted to mention the Canadian Armed Forces. I wish to state this morning that they performed a very difficult and trying role extremely well, which speaks very highly of them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATUS OF KIDNAPPERS OF JAMES CROSS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice relating to the statement by the minister that the kidnappers of Mr. Cross have been exiled. Is it the intention of the government to take away their citizenship by statute? If not, will the minister outline very briefly to the House the exact status of the kidnappers and their dependants?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the word "exile" is probably inaccurate. As I understand it, there is no intention to proceed under the Canadian Citizenship Act. But I did mention that, subject to any undertaking of which I am not aware which might have been given by Mr. Demers who represented the federal and provincial governments, it is my view that if any person against whom there might be evidence relating to the kidnapping of Mr. Cross were to return to Canada he would be subject to prosecution.

CANADA-CUBA EXTRADITION ARRANGEMENTS—INFILTRATION OF CANADA BY ADVOCATES OF VIOLENCE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A supplementary question. I am not dealing with the three or seven persons that have left Canada, but are there extradition arrangements between Cuba and Canada at this time similar to those between Canada and the United States?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I have not managed to research that point yet, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary. As the Royal Commission on Security stated very definitely that there was foreign infiltration advocating the use of violence and crime to overthrow governments in Canada, and they mentioned Cuba in particular, will there now be any further investigation with regard to infiltration and, in line with the recommendations of the royal commission, will the necessary protests then be made?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will take that question under consideration, Mr. Speaker. Nothing has changed in the attitude that the government has taken toward this problem over the last few months.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

PUBLIC ORDER ACT—WITHDRAWAL OF ARMED FORCES FROM QUEBEC

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question.

Did he recently talk with the Quebec Premier and was there any decision about the withdrawal of armed forces from Quebec? If so, I would like to know if the withdrawal will be gradual or total.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity recently—the day before yesterday, I think—to talk with the Premier of the Province of Quebec and we discussed the problem. He told me he intended to submit to us a plan for gradual withdrawal which would not be implemented now, however. Perhaps he gave full details to the Minister of National Defence, but I agreed with him on the principle of gradual withdrawal.

Of course, as I had told him before, I stated that the armed forces had been sent at the request of the province of Quebec and that we would not withdraw them before we were asked to do so by the provincial authorities.

[English]

ARRANGEMENTS WITH CUBAN GOVERNMENT RESPECTING KIDNAPPERS OF JAMES CROSS

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): May I ask the Minister of Justice what financial or pension arrangements were made with the Cuban government for taking these exiles?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I am not aware of any arrangements, Mr. Speaker.

WITHDRAWAL OF PUBLIC ORDER (TEMPORARY MEASURES) ACT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): When I asked the Prime Minister a question earlier relating to the termination of the Public Order Act the right hon. gentleman apparently forgot my question and referred to the Armed Forces. Can the Prime Minister tell us now whether he or the government are giving consideration to terminating the Public Order Act?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): There is a clause in that Act which is a constant reminder to the government that it can cause the Act to be terminated. The events of yesterday certainly have not been assessed yet by the government in light of the hon. member's suggestion. I might say that we have plans to get periodic reports from Quebec and from our police officers so that we can keep this thing under review. Certainly it is not our desire to keep the Act in effect any longer than necessary, but there is no new development which can make me say today that we shall seek the termination of the Act now.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In view of the concern felt about the powers conferred by this Act and in view of the Prime Minister's statement that the situation will be under continuing review, would he or the Minister of Justice be prepared to make a statement on motions early next week outlining the reasons, if there are reasons, for continuing the Act over the next few weeks?

Mr. Trudeau: There is no reason I can see now for making a statement on motions. The reasons the bill was invoked and supported by all parties in this House, at least in principle, have not changed. It is a question of knowing how much longer we shall need to have the police exercise these special powers before there is certainty that the events which gave rise to the bill are no longer a threat to us.

EXTENT OF WARRANT FOR ARREST OF MURDERERS OF PIERRE LAPORTE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Realizing that the Act in question provides for arrest and detention without warrant, may I put these two questions to the Minister of Justice? The first part is obvious, I suppose. Is a warrant out for the arrest of Rose and his cohorts for the murder of Laporte in accordance with the appropriate sections of the Criminal Code, and is the power of that warrant in the hands of all police forces in the province of Quebec, namely, the Montreal city police, the provincial police and the RCMP, because these men have not been arrested yet?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Because of the details involved in that question I should like to take it as notice and respond early next week.

Mr. Woolliams: Might I ask a further supplementary question because of the importance of this subject. Will the minister now seek to make a full statement to the House? It is rather appalling to find we cannot get this information on such an important matter.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I am in the House today representing the Solicitor General who underwent an operation yesterday and possibly I do not have all the detailed information the hon. member might require—and that was a detailed question. I am doing the best I can for the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT AND ECONOMIC GROWTH FORECASTS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he would be good enough to table in the House the forecasts concerning employment and unemployment in the coming winter months with which he has been provided by his departmental or other advisers?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

Mr. Lewis: I did not hear the answer.

Mr. Benson: No.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the minister has refused to table those unemployment forecasts. If that is correct, is the minister willing to table material that would indicate to the House how he arrived at the forecast for the growth rate in 1971 in order that hon. members may be able to test forecasts against studies that have been made?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would suggest to the hon. member that it might be difficult for the minister to make this kind of a statement by way of an answer to a question at this stage of our proceedings. The hon. member might try to find some other way to obtain the information he is seeking.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I did not think I had asked for a statement. Perhaps I did not make myself clear. I intended to ask whether the minister would table in the House whatever material was available to him which he feels free to table in order to give the House the basis of his forecasts of economic growth and unemployment next year.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I could not table in the House all the conversations and information that has come to me from officials of my department. This varies from day to day. It is just impossible to do this. The hon. member's question would in fact mean that I should table all the confidential information of the Department of Finance. This is just impossible.

Mr. Lewis: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the forecast by the Minister of Finance is at variance with the forecast made by the Chairman of the Economic Council on December 2, who suggested that to arrive at an unemployment figure of 4 per cent we would have to attain an economic growth of about 10 per cent—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member kindly ask his supplementary question.

An hon. Member: Make your speech later.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, it is pretty difficult to ask this kind of a question without indicating the basis—

An hon. Member: Oh, sit down!

Mr. Lewis: In view of the difference between the minister's forecast and what Mr. Smith said was necessary, will the minister undertake to explain at some point the reason for his disagreement with Mr. Smith?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary to make an explanation to the House every time there is a difference in forecasts by various people in the country. I have heard my hon. friend make some forecasts I thought were wild, but he did not try to explain why they varied from the facts.

Mr. Lewis: We will see whether they are wild.

ESTABLISHMENT OF ORGANIZATION TO MAKE SHORT-TERM PREDICTIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the obvious reluctance of the Minister of Finance to give official forecasts, and in view of the fact that his forecasts have sometimes not been entirely accurate, will he again review the recommendation of the Economic Council of Canada that the government should support the establishment of an organization in the country for the purpose of making short-term predictions? Will the minister please give us his assurance that he will consider this in view of his refusal to make these predictions himself?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, quite apart from the intimation that I refuse to give information—I do not refuse to give information—the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition is well worth considering and I will give it serious consideration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benson: I have been doing so for some time.

Mr. Stanfield: For two or three years.

Mr. Benson: As a matter of fact, it was a matter of my personal view that some such organization might be supported and I got moving on it at one point some time in—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

IMPACT OF BUDGET POLICY IN CREATING NEW JOBS IN QUEBEC

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of Prime Minister Bourassa's promise to provide 100,000 new jobs in Quebec whereas in the result only 3,000 new jobs have been found, will the minister tell the House what impact his new policy will have in increasing employment in Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member is not suggesting that this is a question which can be asked at this time. I am sure he must have in mind the possibility of a statement being made on motions. If he wants to rephrase his question along those lines it would be in order.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would make a statement on motions as to the impact of his policy in respect of the employment situation in Quebec in view of Mr. Bourassa's promise of 100,000 new jobs and the result of only 3,000 new jobs?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of National Revenue.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

INCOME TAX

EXEMPTION OF FEES PAID TO SCHOOL BOARD MEMBERS

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer the question put to me on Wednesday last by the member for Abitibi.

His question deals with financial policy rather than the administration of financial legislation and consequently, it comes under my colleague, the Minister of Finance. The minister may perhaps give a further reply in due time.

* * *

[English]

GRAIN

ABOLITION OF TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the budget speech last night and the statement on western agriculture, can the minister tell the House when he will bring forth legislation abolishing the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the exact question of timing on the legislation which may result from final decisions on the implementation of the recent proposals is yet to be determined.

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, could the minister advise the House what the estimated savings to the government would be this year by abolishing the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act?

Mr. Lang: Not at this point in time but I probably could obtain some figures for the hon. member.

PRODUCTION AND RECEIPTS POLICY—STABILIZATION PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of statements in the budget address last night concerning the grain stabilization proposal, could the minister indicate if it is the intention of the government, on the adoption of such a proposal, to arrange for payments under the stabilization plan to the farmers during the Spring months?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the proposal indicates a hope to have a payment made for the current crop year. The final determination of the payment, assuming the legislation required is in place, would of course require figures which can only be final at the end of the crop year so it would likely be made in the fall, but it is envisaged that payment of up to $100 million might be made.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PRODUCTION AND RECEIPTS POLICY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT FOLLOWING MEETINGS WITH FARM LEADERS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister, in order that these various programs or part programs may be brought into focus, whether, following the meetings with farm leaders which he told me yesterday would take place within the next ten days, he will make a statement to the House setting out the results of those meetings and outlining with some clarity the proposals he intends to set before the House?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Again the hon. member insists on suggesting dates and times which I do not think I have anything to do with. There will be many meetings, some taking place say two weeks from today or a day or two ago in two weeks, but I am not sure if as a result of those meetings it would be useful to make a further statement. When a decision has been taken as a result of all the consultations which are going on and the many consultations we are having with farmers generally across the Prairies, I shall be glad to enlighten the House further.

* * *

TRADE

EFFECT OF GENERAL MOTORS STRIKE ON AUTOMOTIVE BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can the minister inform the House if the prolonged General Motors strike has reversed the automotive balance of payments in favour of the United States and, if so, has the government any plans to remedy the situation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there was a strike in the United States too, by the way, which would have a similar effect on the United States automobile production.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

BASING OF FARES BY CERTAIN AIRLINES ON CANADIAN DOLLAR PEGGED AT 92 CENTS—TRANSPORT COMMISSION DIRECTIVE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Minister of Transport. Is the minister now in a position, in response to inquiries from all sections of the House, to make some further comment about air fares and the possibility of obtaining reduced fares if one can get hold of some United States dollars?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Transport Commission has issued a rather lengthy statement. I think the core of it is that the Air Transport Committee herewith directs that—this is to all established airlines in Canada—a new currency conversion rate be adopted for effect not later than December 15, 1970, which reflects the closing rate of the interbank exchange market for United States dollars in terms of Canadian dollars for December 1, 1970. The effect of this ruling and directive from the CTC is to correct the anomaly which existed previously.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Now that the government has acted on this matter, can the Minister of Transport assure the House that there will be compensation paid to Canadians who were bilked under the former policy, particularly in light of the increased profits announced by Air Canada recently?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I do not know anything about increased profits announced by Air Canada. In respect of the first part of the question, my hon. friend knows that is quite impossible.

* * *

HOUSING

PROVISION OF REASONABLE RENTAL ACCOMMODATION FOR ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to pose a question to the Minister without Portfolio responsible for housing. Will some or all of the further $40 million that the Minister of Finance announced last night would be added to the capital budget of CMHC be lent to provide reasonable rental accommodation for men in the ranks of the armed services who are posted to cities such as Ottawa and find that because of the generally high level of rents they must pay more than half their take-home pay for inadequate housing?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the programs under the CMHC capital budget all across the country are directed to people in the lower half or lower third of the income group. Whether it is this $40 million or other sums that have been spent this year and will be spent next year, these sums are directed to that end. I appreciate the hon. member having drawn that particular situation to my attention. I will look into it but, generally speaking, if their income qualifies them for access to this kind of housing we will be most receptive to providing it, within budgetary constraints.

Mr. MacLean: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Would the Minister undertake to discuss the matter with his colleague the Minister of National Defence in view of the fact that these personnel do not come to these areas by choice but are posted because of the requirements of service in the armed forces?

Mr. Andras: I will be glad to do so, Mr. Speaker.

STIMULATION OF CONSTRUCTION IN HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT AREAS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the minister. Has the minister decided on a course of action the result of which would be to stimulate the building of houses in areas where unemployment is the highest?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): I think we have been doing quite a bit of that in the past year. Employment certainly is one of the objectives in respect of the allocation of CMHC funds for next year in addition to providing housing for those areas and those people that need it most.

* * *

FINANCE

PROVINCIAL BORROWING FROM SPECIAL LOAN FUND

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Have any of the provinces indicated they are prepared to take up their share of the proposed $150 million special loan fund and, if so, will he tell us which provinces?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are having a finance ministers' and provincial treasurers' meeting on Monday and Tuesday next and I imagine this matter will come up for consideration at that time. In view of the very attractive rate at which the funds can be borrowed compared with what the provinces have to pay in the open market, I would think they would all be quite happy to take up the funds.

* * *

POWER

PROPOSED FLOODING OF SKAGIT RIVER VALLEY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries arising out of an answer he gave me a few days ago in respect of the Skagit Valley when I asked what action the government had taken with regard to this question by way of discussions with the United States authorities. At that time the minister said that we had to solve this question within our own country first. Would the minister make a statement to the House on motions early next week indicating where the matter stands in the view of the government, precisely what the problem is and, in particular, what action the government is taking or is proposing to take in respect of this problem?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I will be making certain recommendations to the government in this connection and, assuming that they or some modifications of them are accepted, I think it might be reasonable to make a statement in the House in a few days time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRADE

POSSIBLE BRITISH ENTRY INTO EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—REVIEW OF CANADIAN ECONOMIC COMMITMENTS UNDER NATO

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs yesterday is reported as making an unusual foray into commercial matters at the Brussels NATO ministerial meeting, where he called for a constant dialogue between the United States and Europe to avoid trade confrontation, is the minister now in a position to answer my question of Tuesday when I asked if it was the intention of the government or the minister to press for a complete review of our NATO commitments and responsibilities on economic matters, in the hope of offsetting any economic losses which may occur to Canada if Britain does join the European Common Market?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the reason that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is in Europe now is to amplify what I did on my own tour which was exclusively of economic import. He is now trying to demonstrate the effect of enlargement of the Common Market on future Canada-Europe relations, and in doing so he is making the sort of comments that have been reported. I do not feel competent to deal with the question as to the effects of this on NATO, and I think I said quite properly that I would bring the hon. member's question to my colleague's attention when he gets back.

* * *

FINANCE

PROPOSED TAXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES—INCREASED EXEMPTIONS FOR CHILDREN IN FAMILIES EARNING MORE THAN $10,000 PER YEAR

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that family allowances are to be taxable under the proposals in the white paper on social security, can the minister say if there will be increased exemptions for children in families earning over $10,000 per year who will not qualify to receive family allowance benefits?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if this proves to be the case and if the new system of family allowances were adopted the government would have to make a decision in this regard, and indeed it will have to make a decision in any case when the tax reform proposals are brought forward, presumably in the spring.

* * *

POLLUTION

ATLANTIC OCEAN—DUMPING OF OIL BY U.S. MILITARY FORCES—SAFETY PRECAUTIONS IN OFFSHORE OIL DRILLING

Mr. G. W. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, and I direct it to him as the expectant minister of environment. Has the government made or is it planning to make through normal channels any representations to the United States with regard to the intentional dumping of excess oil supplies by the U.S. military into the Atlantic ocean?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I have not heard any specific reference made to intentional dumping of oil by U.S. authorities, but I will make inquiries.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, in view of the continued large spills of oil from underwater oil drilling, is the government planning any discussions with the major oil companies that are now drilling off shore, with regard to safety regulations?

Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, discussions have been going on, and various precautions have been taken in this connection.

COME-BY-CHANCE OIL REFINERY—PROTECTION OF MARINE LIFE

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. On November 17 I asked the minister to give the House an assurance that all necessary precautions would be taken against pollution from the refinery at Come-By-Chance, to which the minister replied that he was keeping a close eye on the situation. Is he aware of a report submitted by Dr. Warner, environmental biologist at the university in Newfoundland, dealing with the establishment and construction of the proposed refinery at Come-By-Chance?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows he may not ask whether the minister is aware of the existence of a report. A question in those terms is not in order. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Carter: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will return to the hon. member later.

[Later:]

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, mine is a supplementary question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. In light of the report submitted by Dr. Warner and the evidence given by Dr. Warner at the recent environmental pollution committee meeting, is the minister now satisfied that all necessary precautions are being taken to guard against pollution from the refinery at Come-By-Chance.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): I am not entirely satisfied, Mr. Speaker, and will be making further inquiries.

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, can the minister inform the House whether the Come-By-Chance oil refinery authorities have requested permission from his department to proceed with construction, and requested the approval of his department in accordance with the amendments to the Canada Fisheries Act which we passed last session?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in matters of this kind the initiative must be taken by the officials of my Department. I can assure the hon. member that the necessary initiative has already been taken in this case.

* * *

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

METHOD OF PROVIDING FOR PAYMENT OF INCREASED COST

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the statement that the minister made in response to a question of mine in the House on October 13, may I ask him whether the increased costs of the Prices and Incomes Commission are being covered out of the contingency fund? I am sure the minister realizes that he said then that these increased costs would be covered by a supplementary estimate, but in view of the fact that no such supplementary estimate has been tabled can the minister say how these increased costs are being covered?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman assumes that there are increased costs. His colleague was indicating to us yesterday that there would be decreased costs. What I said in response to the question the other day was that if there are increased costs over and above the provisions already made, these will be covered by supplementary estimates. If the costs are less in the current year than forecast the money will not be spent, and there will be no necessity for a supplementary estimate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As a supplementary question, may I ask the minister if he is in a position to say that the costs of the Prices and Incomes Commission are being held within the original estimate?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge they are.

* * *

[Translation]

INCOME TAX

EXEMPTION OF FEES PAID TO SCHOOL BOARD MEMBERS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put to the hon. Minister of Finance the question I had addressed to the Minister of National Revenue on December 2 last.

I would like to ask him whether, following the requests made by the Quebec Association of school boards, he intends to recommend to the government to consider non-taxable entertainment allowances paid to school board trustees, which is what Quebec is doing at the present time?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is a question that has come up over a period of many years, and of course it is a matter which is under review with respect to the tax reform bill that we intend to bring forward. I think if one looks back one will recall with respect to many of these allowances which are presently tax free that it was recommended that they not be tax free.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DEPLOYMENT OF EMERGENCY SUPPLIES TO FALL-OUT SHELTERS—MARKING OF LOCATIONS

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In order to be prepared for nuclear accident or warfare, and to assist with winter works this winter, would the Prime Minister consider deploying emergency supplies in the next few months to all inventoried public and private fall-out shelters, and cause the public marking of the locations of them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will take the question as notice for the minister, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

TRADE

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS—IMPROVEMENT OF ACCESS TO OTHER COUNTRIES

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the recommendation of the four discussion groups dealing with marketing and trade at the recent agricultural congress, to the effect that Canada should take the initiative in improving access to other countries for agricultural products, will the government take steps as soon as possible to implement this important recommendation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): We will do our best, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

[Translation]

POLLUTION

GRANTS TO INDUSTRIES FOR RESIDUAL WATER PURIFICATION

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister responsible for housing and urban affairs.

Inquiries of the Ministry

As he is no doubt aware of the considerable amount of pollution created by industry, would the minister tell the House if the government intends to grant subsidies or tax reductions to encourage a larger number of industries to ensure treatment of their waste-waters?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): I will take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

CONSULTATIONS WITH MANUFACTURERS OF DC-8 ON SPOILERS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Are officials of the Department of Transport consulting with the manufacturers of the DC-8 jetliner for the purpose of perfecting the design of a fail-safe spoiler for that aircraft, which would prevent the inadvertent deployment of the spoilers while the aircraft is still in the air?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will know that I would not be able to give him a technical answer with regard to the specifics of the question. I do know that there are ongoing conversations with the manufacturers of the aircraft relating to the accident and it is reasonable to suggest that this is the main subject of discussion. I do not want to get too technical because I am afraid I am not competent in that field.

Mr. Nielsen: I wonder if the minister would inquire of his officials to determine whether this particular safety factor is being looked into, and when conclusions have been reached by his officials would the minister report to the House?

Mr. Jamieson: I will be very glad to do that, Mr. Speaker.

EFFECT OF SONIC BOOM

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I have a question for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Has the government formulated a definite policy in regard to the sonic boom and its effect on Canadian communities in general? If not, what surveys on the problem have been made or are contemplated by the Department of Transport?

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest to the hon. member that this is information which might be given by way of a statement on motions or his question could be put in writing or, as a third alternative, it could be considered at the time of adjournment.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF NEW CHIEF COMMISSIONER

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. How soon can we expect the appointment of a chief commissioner for the Wheat Board, and will he be someone from within the grain industry or is the minister looking elsewhere for an appointee?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the House some time ago I thought it appropriate to await the report of the committee appointed by the Wheat Board itself to examine its own operations before giving further consideration to this matter, particularly in view of the fact that the present commissioners are doing an extremely competent job of handling the work at the present time.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

TRANSFER OF TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEES TO CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I have a question for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker, although I know he is busy enough. Would the minister inquire and report to the House on the progress being made in the transfer of Department of Transport employees at what is now known as the Point Edward Industrial Park, formerly the naval base, to the Cape Breton Development Corporation which comes under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion? At the same time would the minister report whether the employees of this department, when transferred, will retain benefits compiled over the years as public service employees?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have been advised of the subject matter of the question and have to report that I have had conversations with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and have also written to him about the details of the various elements involved in the controversy, if it can be called that. I shall be happy to report to the hon. member and the House as soon as I receive a reply.

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

PRINCE ALBERT—ESCAPE OF PRISONERS AND FIRE

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): I have a question for the Minister of Justice in his capacity as Acting Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister now report on the escape of prisoners and the fire at the penitentiary at Prince Albert?

Hon. John N. Turner (Acting Solicitor General): Not completely, Mr. Speaker. I shall undertake to do that on Monday in my capacity as Acting Solicitor General.

[Mr. Speaker.]

NATIONAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON AGREEMENT FOR RELEASE OF JAMES CROSS

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it being apparent from the previous answers of the Minister of Justice that the government is not yet fully informed of all the arrangements made for the release of Mr. Cross and the safe passage of the kidnappers to Cuba, will the minister make a full and complete statement on motions on Monday or early next week outlining the agreements which were made relative to that release?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the premise of the question. The terms of reference given to Mr. Demers were very clear that while he could discuss the circumstances of safe conduct out of Canada for those having some connection with the kidnapping of Mr. Cross, there was to be no discussion of any such treatment for anyone suspected of having any connection with the murder of Pierre Laporte. Those were the terms of reference. I just want to be assured that no further undertakings were given by Mr. Demers in the conversations he had. In the circumstances, I do not think a statement to the House is necessary.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Simpson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister said that he did not accept the premise of the question when I said it was apparent that the government was not fully informed. In one of his previous answers the minister stated that they were not fully informed on the arrangements.

* * *

MANPOWER

LEGITIMACY OF ORGANIZATION ADVERTISING SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR STUDENTS IN GERMANY

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador on a point of order.

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I am not given to asking too many questions and when I do ask a question the House may not regard it as too important, but I do. Today I have what I regard as a very important question and I should like the indulgence of Your Honour to be given permission to ask it.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is not my indulgence but it is the indulgence of the House that is required. As far as I am concerned I enjoy the question period so much that I would be prepared to go on all day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peddle: Mr. Speaker, I do not enjoy the question period that much. My question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and concerns a publication of an organization called SEE—Students Employment Europe—inviting applications for 5,000 student summer jobs in Germany. Considering that upward of some two million young Canadian students are in the category to which the invitation is directed, can the minister advise if he has investigated the legitimacy of this organization, SEE, and their student employment program?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my colleague the minister responsible for citizenship indicated in the House earlier that investigations are being made in regard to this organization. While it would appear that the organization was well-intentioned, it has no official connection whatever with the government and indeed had no official means of assuring placement of the students abroad. The activity of the organization is therefore ceasing, although our department and the department of the minister responsible for citizenship are endeavouring to make use of some of the information and some of the interest expressed by young people who have communicated with the organization.

Mr. Peddle: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member the further indulgence of the House for a supplementary question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peddle: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact each student applying is obliged to forward $1 with his application, which would represent a potential return of up to $2 million to the organization SEE, would the minister not agree that since two months have elapsed it is high time Canadian students were advised that this SEE program is legitimate or that it is, as it appears to be, simply a skilfully contrived shakedown?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary question is obviously of an argumentative nature.

An hon. Member: It was a good question.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OLD AGE SECURITY

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING AMOUNT OF PENSION, MAXIMUM SUPPLEMENT AND ESCALATION THEREOF

The House resumed, from Thursday, December 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Munro that Bill C-202, to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Services.

Old Age Security

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, yesterday when I heard the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) use the word "demogrant" I was not sure whether I should be insulted, because he kept referring to my party as being in favour of it. I did not know whether it was a bad word or not so I looked for it in the dictionary but could not find it. However, in the white paper it is explained as meaning universal grants. But the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who is a little ahead of the dictionary, indicates that it comes from the Greek word "demo", meaning people and "grant" of course, is self-explanatory.

It may be a good word, and if it means what my hon. friend says it means, then I am in favour of it and have no objection to it being used in that sense. The development of new words runs ahead of the dictionary on the table, Mr. Speaker, and maybe they are more specific than some of the words that have been used more generally in the past.

• (12:00 noon)

I am sure everyone was pleased with the presentation of the white paper on income security for Canadians. Many of our Canadian people are living in circumstances of serious need and changes must be made that will enable those Canadian people to acquire an income which will provide them with the necessities of life. There is great difficulty in determining where the poverty line should be drawn, and especially where it should be drawn for our older people. I am sure everyone agrees that Canada has the resources and wherewithal to give our senior citizens the type of income that will allow them to live out their last years decently, as a reward for their work in developing Canada. This income must be sufficiently large to make sure that our older people are not in want.

Over the years we have changed our old age pension provisions. Every time we have tried to raise pensions some politicians in this House have said that the old age pension should not be raised. Not many years ago some of them were saying that a pension could not even be implemented. I have been interested in the question of the old age pension ever since it was at the level of $40 a month. Going back somewhat, I can remember the time when Mr. Harris lost an election by saying that the old age pension increase ought not to be $10, but that it ought to be $6. After that, the old age pension was increased by $10 every time a new government was elected. Actually, the old age pensioner was the only one who was happy with the numerous general elections that we had in this country over a short period of time.

Last night the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) brought down a budget. Many members of the general public who know of the difficulties of old age pensioners and of others receiving assistance under the Canada Assistance Plan as well as other federal programs, realize that there is an anomaly in providing assistance of certain kinds and then taxing part of the money that is received in this way. Let us take as an example the supplementary benefits to be made available under the bill we are discussing. We shall be granting to a single person $1,620 a year, or $135 a month. That will be paid to persons having no income other than the pension. Such people may be able to get by on $1,625 a year; yet, under our income tax laws, they will have to pay tax on that amount in excess of $1,100 that they receive, because a single person's basic exemption is $1,000 plus $100, for a total of $1,100. As a result we shall collect income tax on the remaining $520 which, at a tax rate of 15 per cent, amounts to $75 per year.

I do not know what the people in the Departments of National Revenue or Finance are thinking. Surely, there is something wrong with our tax structure when old people, and particularly those between the ages of 65 and 70 who receive the supplement on the basis of a means test, must pay income tax. I was surprised that the government should bring forward a budget which made no changes in the personal exemption levels. I am surprised that those on welfare were not considered. The difficulty is worse for a married couple than for a single person.

If a wife is working or obtaining an income, once she reaches the level of $920 she cannot be classed as married for income tax purposes. She is classed as single and must pay tax. If she does not pay that tax, the additional tax is deducted from her spouse's income. Surely, the government could have given some consideration to this specific matter. If it had been considered in the budget, perhaps the bringing down of a budget last night would have been justified. The level of personal exemptions ought to have been raised.

It was said, when we suggested in connection with the white paper on tax reform that the exemption for a single person ought to be increased to $1,500, that such an increase in the exemption would deprive the government of between 15 per cent and 25 per cent of its revenue from income tax. It seems that single people receiving incomes of $1,500 or $2,000 pay between $100 and $200 in income tax. They cannot bear such a burden. The burden could be borne better by those earning $12,000 a year and more, by people such as Members of Parliament. The income tax of several thousands of dollars they pay hurts them less than the smaller sums that the less well off must pay. I, therefore, think that we are being very dishonest with the older citizens of this country.

Farmers have asked me questions concerning income tax, and I admit that perhaps I gave them incorrect advice. I am particularly thinking of a farmer who worked hard all his life on a small farm. He kept his wife and himself, raised a family and sent them to school. He lived all these years without ever earning enough to pay income tax. This man was very religious, very honest and very sincere. As I say, he never was in the category of those who had to pay income tax. Having finished farming—he is 84 years old now—he asked me if I would help him in filling out an income tax form. Having been left with about 50 sheep, which produced an income for him of between $400 and $500 from the sale of wool and lambs, he thought he ought to pay income tax. He said to me that he ought to start making out his income tax form. I said, "For God's sake, don't get mixed up with the income tax people at your advanced age; they will ask you to go back probably 15 years and produce records of your farm income; they will wonder why you were not paying income tax during all that time." He had absolutely no records to prove that he did not have enough income to pay income tax. I told him that since he had no records of expenditures or earnings, although I was quite prepared to help him with his tax forms, it would be best if he did not become involved with the Income Tax Department. I said, "They will wonder why you did not file any tax forms before this; why you did not file any last year, the year before and in the years before. I am afraid you will not be able to make this kind of arrangement." My advice therefore to that old age pensioner was, "Do not file an income tax form."

I should like to know what other Members of Parliament have said to old age pensioners they represent? I think we all agree that no tax ought to be levied on the pensions our elderly citizens receive. Yet, in the new proposal which is to become effective next April, single pensioners will be required to pay back to the government $75. They cannot afford this. The minute the supplement is paid to old age pensioners, they will be required to file income tax returns and pay back $75. How many Members of Parliament will say to their constituents, "Do not file a form and do not pay the tax"? I am sure most hon. members realize most old age pensioners will not be in a position in April of any year to pay $75. The tax for a single pensioner will be $75 and it will probably be more than $150 for a married couple, if both are receiving the supplement.

• (12:10 p.m.)

Many members say this is not important. If this legislation is passed, Mr. Speaker, we will have legislation which will cause people to be dishonest. If by this legislation a million of our citizens become liars and cheats, then something is wrong with our income tax exemption system. If we pass this legislation knowing that this will happen, we are dishonest. Something should be done about it. The Minister of Finance should have dealt with this situation in the budget he presented last night. I am sure all hon. members realize that when we establish a guaranteed income supplement with a means test or a needs test, we are not providing extra income for those who will be receiving it. We should establish an income tax structure that will allow these people to keep the money given to them. It should not be considered welfare.

If the family allowance, unemployment insurance and other benefits are to be considered income, there will not be a guaranteed annual income. If these benefits are to be taxed, we should change our income tax structure so that these benefits can be considered as welfare. These benefits should not be taxable. We must not create a situation whereby those receiving the benefits will intentionally lie and cheat, with the full knowledge of the legislators.

In the white paper, of which social security is only a part, the guaranteed income is considered as a right of all persons. I am deeply involved in the program under the Canada Assistance Plan as well as the welfare structure in Ontario. I am concerned about the number of people who say to me they will not apply for assistance. These people do not qualify for disabled pensions. They cannot get a job because they are over 50 years of age, have no education and cannot be retrained. They will not apply for welfare because of their Christian heritage. They believe that it is good to work and bad to receive welfare. To receive welfare, in their opinion, indicates that a person is too lazy to work.

While some mistakes do occur, 99.5 per cent of the people applying for assistance do not consider they are receiving welfare. They apply for assistance from the state because of conditions over which they have no control. Their situation has been created by society. The financial assistance provided to these people should be provided as a right, not as welfare.

I am opposed to a ceiling on the old age pension. I can see no reason for a $60 cut-off. It removes the incentive to earn more money. When the government needed more money in order to increase the old age pension, it raised the cut-off to $90. The cut-off is now $120. The cut-off should be removed. A millionaire receiving the old age pension should also pay toward it. It is within his ability to pay 4 per cent, although maybe it should be cut to 3 per cent.

I understand that there is $720 million in the old age pension fund at present. This amount is sufficient to increase this pension. When the old age pension was set at $40, everyone said that it could not be raised. The pension was raised and there is now more money in the fund than ever before. If the ceiling were removed, the pension could be increased to $100 or $150 a month without much difficulty.

The hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) stated that he is opposed to the principle of universal payments in this field. The people who have said to me that they will not apply for assistance are not saying that they will not accept the old age pension for which they are eligible. What they are saying is that they will not accept the benefits of a pension to which they have not contributed and to which they do not have a right. Because they do not feel they are entitled to it, they consider it welfare and are therefore reluctant to accept it.

If a person receiving the guaranteed income supplement earns additional money, this additional amount is deducted almost dollar for dollar from the pension. There is no incentive for people to work. If one looks at this Parliament, the Senate and many industries in this country, he will see that many persons over the age of 65 are making a considerable contribution. Our tax structure is set up in such a way that any money they earn above the pittance they are allowed is subject to income tax. This structure is not satisfactory and should be modified in order to be more realistic and honest. People should be permitted to earn more than they are presently permitted to earn.

It is interesting to listen to governmental officials stating how much something is going to cost and why it cannot be done. We are told this every time we suggest an increase in the old age pension. The statistical geniuses of the government departments present all kinds of figures. It has been stated that the program to give a guaranteed income of $1,600 for a single person and $3,000 for a married couple would cost $3.8 billion. If the figures were $1,800 for a single person and $3,000 for a married couple, they state this would cost $5 billion. This is probably true, but it illustrates why figures are so misleading. That is not the cost to the treasury. If we made this kind of payment we would automatically get back a very large part of the expenditure. One of the major municipalities in my constituency is the town of Kirkland Lake. The council there is always lamenting that they have the largest welfare expenditure in the Province of Ontario, closely followed by several other northern communities.

• (12:20 p.m.)

But this welfare business is an industry in many of these communities. All the money that is put out goes back to the municipality, plus 40 per cent from the federal government and 40 per cent from the provincial government. It seems to me any money we provide by way of a guaranteed annual income for our citizens is money which will not be put in banks or hidden under the mattress; it will all be spent on necessities and it will quickly go back to its source as a form of revenue. Even in the area of income tax, if government statistics are right, 20 per cent of the money paid out to old age pensioners is returned to the government at the present time in the form of direct taxation and I suggest that indirectly, after four or five transactions have been made, all the money is returned to government coffers.

In my opinion there is no group of people in the country who deserve a greater degree of security than those who are in the old age category. These are the people who, much more so than my generation, made a contribution to establish this nation on the road to which it has been dedicated. They were hard-working people and in the main they earned their livelihood by the sweat of their brows. They made a contribution which I believe entitles them to the type of security in their old age which we have not been providing over the years. It is time we provided them with a form of income, whether a guaranteed income based on a negative income tax or some other arrangement that does not concern me at the moment, which is not a football in the political arena. There can be nothing much more degrading than to find politicians going around the country during every election talking to old age pensioners and saying "If you elect us we will give you $5 more", while others are telling them "Vote for us and we will make it $10." Old age pensioners are then supposed to make up their minds on the basis of how much has been promised them. For some time it has seemed to me that this arrangement is unsatisfactory and that a much more satisfactory policy would be one by which pensions were paid, and increased, on a scale related to the gross national product.

Then again, any needs test is bound to discriminate against senior citizens who have been able to save some small amount for their old age as opposed to those who have not. Persons who have been able to save two or three thousand dollars find they have to spend this money before they can receive what someone else may have been paid initially as a right. The present arrangements do not allow for those who have spent all their lives, maybe, trying to save a few dollars for their retirement or for their old age. Anyone who bought government annuities is in a particularly bad position because these are directly related to income from other sources, and any kind of means test or needs test will affect the holder of these annuities severely.

Another problem is presented by the inability of the old age pension branch to establish a relationship with the social security number which most Canadians now carry. When we get in touch with the administration concerning an old age pension cheque we cannot trace that cheque through the social security number because we have not updated our system. The Canada Pension Plan and at least one provincial plan are all related to social security numbers, yet the old age pension plan is not. It seems to me we should update our programs so that old age pension cheques are made out on the basis of social security numbers, thus making it easier to trace lost cheques. It would also be easier to correlate the other data now available for complying with age qualifications than it is under the present system where old age pensioners carry numbers of their own and are not related to the social security system. There has certainly not been a poorer branch than this one, in my experience. In Toronto there is a branch under a provincial director. A request I made the other day was answered by someone on a telephone in that branch. I asked whether I could call him back. He said, no, call this number. I asked how many worked there, and he said 16. I do not know how many social security numbers and pension numbers they have, but I am sure I would not get much satisfaction just by phoning that telephone number to make an inquiry, and I had to relay the inquiry to a much higher level to get any kind of satisfaction. It seems to me this branch should relate its work to social security numbers and operate in a much more efficient manner than it does.

I will give one example. I have a letter which came to me in May, 1970. The writer informed me that his wife had made an application for an old age pension 18 months previously when she was told there was some difficulty about her age. I have written several letters and I have received several replies. I was informed by the Department of National Health and Welfare that a tribunal was to be set up to deal with this problem. I received a letter which informed me that this women, who made the application, had some difficulty in establishing the date of her birth. It was difficult to decide whether she was born in 1902 or 1904. I do not think it makes a damn bit of difference if she was born in 1902 or even 1905. She should be eligible for the old age pension. Because they have not been able to establish when she was born, as yet they have not paid her the old age pension. We are aware of the fact that retroactive payments can only be made for a period of one month.

• (12:30 p.m.)

The government would have a great advantage if it seriously considered programs of guaranteed annual income such as those in the United States. I am aware of the difficulties involved and I know there are differences of opinion as to whether our resources could support such a program. I am aware of the limitations in respect of income tax.

If the government provides a guaranteed income, payments will have to be made at least once every month. Perhaps they could be made more often. Some people will require a guaranteed income payment for a period of only six months per year. There is a wide range of needs and problems. If this matter were referred to a committee, I am sure these needs and problems could be related to a realistic welfare structure and there would be a resultant saving. I understand the province of Ontario has saved a great deal of money as a result of the establishment of the family and social services branch whose inspectors do the work associated with several plans. This work has been co-ordinated under the one department, and it supplies the information to various welfare agencies. This has resulted in a saving.

This idea could be adopted in the federal field. I have a friend who travels around the province conducting this type of investigation. We have discussed this matter of making information available. He made the point that the federal government sends people around to take the census, and the provincial government has people travelling throughout the province obtaining information as to jobs, income and other things at the same time. He suggested this was a duplication of effort. The suggestion was that it would be very easy for him to ask several more questions and obtain all the information which could be made available to various government agencies. My argument was that, while this might be possible, the result would be that many Canadian citizens would have to supply unlimited information and thereby be deprived of their privacy. Individuals in this country are entitled to a private life, even in relation to their income status.

There are several arguments in this regard, many of which have not been understood. I would be very surprised if agreement could not be obtained from many individuals to allow the state access to individual private financial arrangements. This would be particularly true if the government provided individuals with a financial cushion in time of need. Individuals are often in need because of sickness, unemployment or because they are attending retraining courses. Whatever the reason may be, if an individual were assured that the state would provide for him I expect he would be willing to give the state access to his financial status.

We are aware of the fact that many well paid individuals evade income tax to some extent. We are all aware of the fact that a well known Canadian in the sports field, because of a technicality, was able to evade paying something in the neighbourhood of $200,000 to $300,000 in taxes. We are also aware of the fact that people in the lower income bracket cheat on tax payments. By correcting this situation, the government could afford to pay more to those people who need assistance.

I was speaking to a man the other day who had worked for many years, but as a result of an accident became disabled. He suggested the amount the Workmen's Compensation Board allowed him was not sufficient. He said he was not able to return to work. I looked at his injured arm and it looked as good as mine. The doctor does not know whether he is capable of working. The only person who knows that is the man. He knows whether he is cheating. I give this example to show that some people at the bottom of the income status cheat in so far as income tax is concerned. The government may also be guilty because it has established a system which encourages taxpayers to cheat.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peters: My hon. friends say, "Oh, oh", but when it comes to working on the basis of—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must advise him that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House give unanimous consent to the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the courtesy of hon. members and I shall try to be brief. The point I wish to leave with government members is that this type of program is still a stop-gap program. It has disadvantages in so far as welfare is concerned. The concept of universality is not the answer to everything. This country is rich enough that it can afford to adopt a universal type of assistance for all Canadians who exist at or below the poverty level. When we are discussing the white paper on social assistance we should relate it to the assistance provided in the United States. The assistance provided in that country is much higher. We should adopt a similar program which would be applicable to all persons. In this way, all we would have to do would be to supervise the return on money, making sure it was above the level at which we established the guaranteed income. Then, it could apply to young and old, all Canadians.

• (12:40 p.m.)

When we really do some serious thinking, we may be surprised to find that the figures provided are very exaggerated and that in the long run our nation can provide people with a much better program. A nation which is not willing to modify its income tax structure, which provides the anomalies our income tax structure provides, is not being fair to the people who in many cases have to cheat. I do not believe the government really expects this will not happen.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, the new pension increases forecast in Bill C-202 will likely receive the approval of all members of the House of Commons, even if there is difference of opinion in respect of how and in what manner the details should be worked out. Yet, I would believe there are significant changes in direction in the government's handling of the problem of old age security. The thrust of this bill is away from the principle of universality when old age security is frozen at $80 to await action by some future Parliament and the 2 per cent cost of living automatic increases will be deleted and will apply only to the guaranteed income supplement. On the other hand, in the Unemployment Insurance white paper the government proposes to sweep into the net a million workers not now covered, such as teachers, hospital employees and so on, many of whom are highly skilled workers who are rarely if ever unemployed except by their own choosing. It is obvious in this case that the application of the principle of universality to those who must pay unemployment insurance will increase their number so that more money will be available to pay for those who are frequently unemployed. It is a form of guaranteed income and wealth sharing device by means of the instrument of universality.

I am most disappointed that the government has chosen to freeze the old age security pension at $80 and not allow any automatic increases of 2 per cent for the cost of living index rise after the taxpayers have contributed to this by means of 4 per cent on the income tax and 3 per cent on the sales and corporation taxes. In other words, it is a form of annuity insurance, even if it does not necessarily bear a return in relation to the input of the individual taxpayer. It was a right of every tax paying citizen and his spouse and dependents as they reached the age of taking the pension to have this money regardless of what his financial situation was. He has earned it by his deductions from his income and the paying of sales tax over the productive years.

As inflation increases and the real wealth of the country grows, more and more money will be collected from the individual taxpayer because of increased incomes, and because of the steady rise of the cost of goods bringing in more revenue in the sales tax, more money for old age security will be in the government's coffers. But the government intends to freeze the old age security pension at $80 and make much less valuable the income tax contributions the citizen will make or the sales tax he will contribute. So far as old age security is concerned, the government has abandoned the annuity principle on which it was originally based and substituted a flat payout that contradicts the annuity principle on which it was first founded. There is a large surplus of over $700 millon in this fund. In the interest of keeping faith with the taxpayers who have contributed to the fund, I think this 2 per cent automatic escalation clause should have been retained. Indeed, it would have been much better to have retained the automatic escalation clause in the Old Age Security Act and have retained for Parliament the right to make changes in the guaranteed income supplement.

While I would recognize the great need of the guaranteed income supplement, this is still the chief vehicle by which the government is attempting to preserve a level standard of living among the elderly. It might well be that each year Parliament should debate what the level of this standard should be. In any case, with inflation rising at the rate of 5 per cent per year for the past several years, a 2 per cent limit on the rise in the guaranteed income supplement is well below what the cost of living increases are likely to be.

In Canada we are devoting much of our energies to the social services of our citizens. We have been able to do so in part because, sheltered by our mighty neighbour to the south, we have not had to expend our national energies in defence as have some other nations. We have been blessed with abundant natural resources, and with the development of modern technology in our cold climate we have reaped great benefits. In short, much of our good fortune in many ways has been the accident of living in our area of the world. Even so, a great deal of poverty or at least what we chose to define as poverty, exists in our country.

I should like to turn to the matter of the variation between the federal government and provincial programs, who is responsible for poverty and so on. I wish to read from an editorial which appeared in the Montreal Gazette for December 3 entitled "Not the final answer". One paragraph in this article reads as follows:

> As a beginning, the question ought to be settled of whether a general social philosophy is going to prevail throughout the nation or whether the provinces will be free to set their own social objectives and shape their programs accordingly. The constitution gives the provinces jurisdiction in the health and welfare fields, but the federal government has long been taking the initiative because of its spending power and its determination to ensure minimum national standards of social security.
>
> To those who are poor, it does not matter a bit whether help comes from the federal or the provincial government. It is, nevertheless, a real issue. Federal-provincial conflicts can impede effective reforms in the system.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I should like to present an idea in respect of our viewpoint on the guaranteed income supplement. When the British North America Act was formulated over 100 years ago, the provinces were entrusted with health, welfare and education. Even now a joint constitution committee is studying ways and means of rewriting the constitution to alleviate the strains on our unity.

It is my contention, Mr. Speaker, that one of the great strains on our confederation is the strain on our provinces by the overwhelming demands of health, welfare and education. Many programs have been forced on the provinces before they were ready or had the financial means to carry them. Even in my province, the Minister of Education last week warned that education costs must be contained. Similarly, health and welfare are escalating at a rate that cannot continue for long without serious dislocation and disaster to our economy. We have had plenty of warning from responsible authorities. The most recent is the Economic Council of Canada warning that some slowdown in this expansion must occur.

So long as a program such as old age security, with a set amount of money for every receiving individual in any part of Canada, was functioning there was little economic strain on the provinces. Similarly the family allowances, with the set amount of dollars to each recipient whatever the residence of that individual, did not put so much strain on Dominion-Provincial relations.

• (12:50 p.m.)

But with the advent of shared-cost programs whereby the federal government, on the basis of need, attempted to set a standard of care, and whereby the provinces had to foot half of the bills, then difficulties arose. The provinces, under the stimulus to give an adequate service which was paid for in part by federal funds, were unable to set up adequate spending safeguards. These programs have not and are not likely to change in the immediate future, and there is no doubt more prudent programs would have been developed had the provinces been under more responsibility to do their own financing.

It seems to me that under our system of financing the provincial governments will have to allocate a system of priorities, especially in personal care services, for their citizens. I would think that the guaranteed income supplement could well be administered by the provinces, although I would admit that it is not as important for this to be administered by the provinces as it is for many of the other shared-cost programs.

I would think that the provinces could well be given unconditional grants, based on a federal formula, to take care of regional disparities. Such formulae are already in existence, and then the provinces could set their own priorities as to the needs of their citizens. There is no evidence that each provincial government would be any more unaware of the needs of its citizens than the federal government. As Canadians, we would have to trust in the good sense of the provincial governments.

Our slavish adherence to a dollar value of social benefit creates some injustice. There is some variation in the cost of living across the land, and even more in the variation from individual to individual within the same community.

The newer concept of welfare moving toward a so-called guaranteed income for all poses considerable problems, and will not in itself cure all our social ills or remove the considerable inequalities that will remain even if this could be set at a high level. The setting of a guaranteed income is only one other poverty base line from which we measure poverty.

The settling of a guaranteed income is beloved by administrators whose simple solution to all problems is the mere setting of an arbitrary figure of dollars. But this is of little value unless the dollar value of this guaranteed income is related to what it will buy in the market in food, shelter, and the other necessities of life. It is obvious that this will vary in different parts of Canada, and under many different circumstances in individual cases.

The idea of guaranteed income raises all sorts of questions yet unanswered. In what manner should the level of the guaranteed income be set? The Economic Council of Canada has been widely quoted with respect to its assessment of what the poverty level should be. I have not seen how that level was arrived at, but obviously it is only one person's or a few persons' opinion. Obviously, it will be open to all sorts of opinions and variations. Will it reduce production significantly and, if so, will the benefits received be an adequate compensation for the degree of loss of production should this occur? Will it cause the freezing of workers in areas or jobs, when they should move either their location or their occupation?

In the proposed guaranteed income supplement with the modest built-in incentive to earn more money, there will be an attempt to keep the older worker productive. As such it will be of some interest and value in the assessment of what effect a guaranteed income can have on our productivity as a whole. But it will only be indicative of a segment of our population who, at the end of their productive years will be induced to continue in work habits that they have been used to over the years. Experience here, I would emphasize, will be of little value in the experience rating of incentive poverty programs as a whole, mainly because of the age group to which it will be applicable. There are some other features of the guaranteed income supplement proposals with which I would be in general agreement, and will study them more fully in committee.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I certainly wish that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) were here today so that he could hear the remarks of the different members, but I understand he is away on government business. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) says he is meeting the provinces. However, we have the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Isabelle) here, and I will direct my remarks to him with all the fire and brimstone of a Methodist preacher, so I am sure the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride) will listen attentively.

I would have said to the minister that he has made a mistake with regard to the title of Bill C-202, which it is said is an act to amend the Old Age Security Act. I would suggest it is an act to redistribute old age poverty. I suggest the minister should make the appropriate change in the title because really the government is playing a game of charades with the Canadian people.

The minister is saying, "I am going to give you a Christmas turkey," when in fact he is really giving our senior citizens an old pigeon. It is not costing the government one penny to bring forth this bill, Mr. Speaker. Here we have a government that brings forth a white paper on income security for Canadians, and then takes a so-called bold first step with regard to implementing its recommendations. All Canadians should be told that Bill C-202 is not costing them one penny. What it really is doing is redistributing poverty amongst senior citizens.

I would think the Parliamentary Secretary would not be happy if he really knew the impact of this bill. Yesterday, in rather glowing terms, he said, "You know, this white paper on income security for Canadians is a masterpiece." I would say it is a masterpiece of deception. It is really a social fraud that is being committed on Canadians.

I notice that the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) is in his seat, Mr. Speaker. This morning he directed a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) seeking to learn the intention of the government with regard to changing the income tax exemption for children in families earning over $10,000. The hon. member knows that the government was clever enough to put through amendments to the Income Tax Act recently, which will mean that families earning over $10,000 will not be able to claim $550 per child exemption as they were able to do if they did not get family allowance, and instead will only be able to claim $300. Mr. Speaker, I will be delighted to complete my remarks this afternoon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being one o'clock this House stands adjourned until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, prior to the luncheon recess I mentioned that I was sorry the Minister of National Health and Welfare was not present but apparently he is away on government business. However, he is ably represented by his Parliamentary Secretary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert: I shall therefore direct my remarks to the hon. Parliamentary Secretary, and I am sure he will pass along my words of wisdom to the minister. I said, Mr. Speaker, that Bill C-202 should not be called an act to amend the Old Age Security Act but should have a new name; it should be called an act to redistribute old age poverty because that is exactly what it is. I maintain that the government is playing a charade with the Canadian public and in trying to play the part of Santa Claus, instead of giving turkey for Christmas it is giving crow.

The Parliamentary Secretary claimed yesterday that the white paper on income security for Canadians is a masterpiece. I contend that it is a masterpiece of deception, and that the government really is committing a social fraud on Canadians. Bill C-202 is the first step in an attempt to implement this masterpiece of deception on the Canadian public, Mr. Speaker.

I pointed out that the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) had picked up another point with regard to family allowances. In a rather clever way, the government amended the Income Tax Act with the result that people earning over $10,000 a year will not be entitled to family allowance nor, Mr. Speaker, will they be able to claim the $550 deduction previously available. This will now be reduced to $300. This move is the second stage of the government's masterpiece of deception.

• (2:10 p.m.)

The Parliamentary Secretary also mentioned yesterday that he had received many phone calls and letters from constituents in praise of the bill. In one of my question, I pointed out that he should consider replying to these people by informing them what will happen if the bill passes prior to Christmas. If the bill passes prior to Christmas, the people who are receiving the old age security pension, but who are not entitled to the guaranteed income supplement, will get a mere $80 as of January 1. Those who are entitled to the guaranteed income supplement will receive it as of April 1. On the other hand, if this bill does not pass, and I expect Liberal members will try to help their aged constituents, the automatic 2 per cent escalation provision will remain in effect and those people, instead of getting $80, will receive $81.17. I am sure that government supporters will want to delay the passage of this bill so that our older people can obtain slightly more money.

The hon. member for Winnipeg—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Gilbert: I meant to say the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, Mr. Speaker. He is our leading spokesman in this House on the matter of pensions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gilbert: The poor old minister had difficulty in understanding what the hon. member said the other day in his speech. Clearly, the poor old minister had difficulty in understanding what was obvious. The hon. member, in his opening remarks, said that not only will this measure redistribute old age poverty, but that it is a bad bill. He set out his reasons for that and I shall develop his reasons as I go along.

The Parliamentary Secretary said that this bill was a good bill and that he had received many compliments from his constituents. I think the minister and Liberal supporters ought to hear what other experts have to say about the bill and the white paper on income security. I wish to read an excerpt from the Toronto Telegram of Tuesday, December 1. The article deals with what Dr. Frei, the director of the Metro Social Planning Council of Toronto and others had to say about the matter. The article reads in part:

> Increases proposed for old age pensioners—minimums of $135 for single persons and $225 for couples—were 'less than our organization had asked the Government for, but a lot better than they have been getting.
>
> 'At least now pensioners shouldn't have to scrounge for food the way they have been.'
>
> Dr. Frei—the director of the Metro Social Planning Council said the pension increases proposed would mean that pensioners 'are now slowly approaching the position where they can at least exist.'

I thought the Parliamentary Secretary ought to know what the director of the Metro Social Planning Council of Toronto had to say about the subject. The article goes on to report what Miss Ethel Neilson, president of the Senior Women's Committee for Pension Increases had to say: The article reports that she:

> —did not lament the proposed dropping of cost-of-living increments to pension.
>
> 'The increases were so small they really didn't make much of a difference anyway.' she said.
>
> Although she said her group had been hoping for an increase to $150 a month for single pensioners, the proposed $135 would be a significant improvement.
>
> 'At least now people will have enough to buy adequate food.'
>
> She voiced a fear that was repeated by several of those commenting on the proposals—that landlords would nullify proposed benefits by increasing pensioners' rents.
>
> 'I would like to see them freeze rents for old age pensioners', Miss Neilson said.
>
> According to David Maben, head of St. Christopher House, which is in constant touch with pensioners in the city's depressed west end, increases in rent take place whenever pensions are raised.
>
> Miss Neilson added that even with the proposed increases, pensioners would not be able to afford to buy new clothes. And the lodging they would be able to afford would still consist of shabby one-room flats with shared kitchen and bathroom facilities.

I think the Parliamentary Secretary ought to be acutely aware of the comments of people such as these. I hope, after the bill has been referred to the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs for study, that the committee will travel across Canada, meet in the different highly populated centres, and hear representations of bodies such as the Social Planning Council, various welfare organizations, and so on, in order to gain an inside view of the difficulties of those old age pensioners with whom such organizations must deal. The committee ought to travel across Canada and listen to the views of pensioners. Not only that it should, as a group, go into the homes of pensioners, into the shabby flats that Miss Neilsen mentioned, and see how they live every day. They should see what food they buy, partake of a meal with the pensioners and see what sort of clothing pensioners can afford. That ought to be done before the legislation passes. That is the type of study we need in connection with this particular bill.

Mr. Ryan: Tell the committee to bring their lunch and not partake of a poor pensioner's meal.

Mr. Gilbert: I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will take notice of this advice, and I hope the committee will travel across Canada to hear the views of those different organizations that deal with our senior citizens.

You know, Mr. Speaker, it is about time we took pensions out of politics. I recall that in 1957, after the Liberal government of the day attempted to increase pensions by $6, from $40 to $46, it was defeated. The Conservative government was elected in 1957. As I say, they won the election and the Liberals were referred to as the "six buck boys" On assuming power, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), immediately increased the old age pension to $55. This was welcome news for the senior citizens. Since then, the pension has been increased by amounts of $10, and now it is at the level of $75 plus the 2 per cent cost of living provision. As a result of the legislation we are now considering, Liberal members will not any longer be called the "six buck boys"; they will be called the "ten cent boys". Let me tell you why, Mr. Speaker.

As of January 1, our old age pensioners will be receiving $80. That is an increase of 42 cents over the present pension of $79.58. That 42 cents a month works out to approximately ten cents a week. For that reason, instead of being tagged as the six dollar boys, the Liberals will be tagged as the "ten cent boys".

Mr. Stanfield: The pensioners will get less than ten cents a week.

Mr. Gilbert: As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) says, our pensioners will get less than ten cents a week. That is a fine Christmas gift for our government to give our pensioners. I am sure that hon. members will be proud to tell the senior citizens of their ridings that they are to get an increase of less than ten cents a week.

Mr. Ryan: Brother, can you spare a dime?

Mr. Gilbert: Nor is that all. Beginning on January 1, many of our pensioners will be denied the benefit of the 2 per cent escalation clause. Can you imagine that! If this bill does not pass during the present session, some of our pensioners will get $81.17. If it should pass, they will get only $80. In addition, they will be denied the benefit of the 2 per cent increase that is designed to take care, in part, of increases in the cost of living. Is this something that Liberal members ought to be proud of when they return to their constituencies and face the senior citizens of their ridings?

Mr. Ryan: No, certainly not.

Mr. Gilbert: I am not proud of this bill, and I would not wish to be part and parcel of this type of legal chicanery that is being imposed on Canadians at this time.

Not long ago the Minister of Finance, in one of his ebullient remarks, said that a single person could live on $30 a week. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre took him up on this and proposed a motion for testing the Minister of Finance. The motion asked the minister to live on $30 a week for a few months, and then report to the House his experience. The minister did not accept that challenge. This morning the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) invited the Minister of Finance to attempt to live on approximately $39 a week. This is the amount the average unemployed person receives in unemployment insurance benefits. The Minister of Finance did not accept the challenge. Is it any wonder?

• (2:20 p.m.)

The Senate Committee on Poverty, and other committees, found that it cost $1,800 for a single person to exist in Canada in the year 1968. The figure for 1970 is $1,944. In 1968, the amount a married couple needed to exist in Canada was $3,000. The figure for 1970 is $3,240. A single person receiving the basic pension of $80 and the income supplement of $53 a month receives $1,620 per year. This is far below the poverty line set by the Senate Committee on Poverty. The amount required by a married couple in 1970 is $3,240. Under the proposed legislation they will be receiving $255 a month or $3,020 a year. This is the type of legislation the government has introduced.

As the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) stated this morning, these people will not only be living below the poverty line, but they will be taxed as well. A single person will be taxed on any moneys he receives over $1,100. In other words, a single person who receives $1,620 will be taxed on $525 at a rate of 15 per cent. This amounts to $75. With a deduction from the pension of $75, a person will be living far below the poverty line. The same situation applies to married couples. There was no magnanimity on the part of the Minister of Finance with regard to removing these people from under the income tax umbrella. Is it any wonder the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has called this a bad bill?

We must not lose sight of the fact that it was Mr. J. S. Woodsworth who forced the government to introduce pensions. When they were first introduced, they were in the amount of a miserable $20 a month. In addition, a means test was required. Since that time there has been a steady progression with regard to increases and changes in principle.

In 1951 a very important principle was implemented, the principle of universality. From 1951 to 1966 all Canadians, regardless of their income, received the basic pension. In 1966, the guaranteed income supplement was introduced. Attached to that guaranteed income supplement was an escalation clause which provided that if the cost of living increased more than 2 per cent in any one year, the old age pension would be increased by 2 per cent. Experience has shown that in Canada the cost of living has increased substantially more than 2 per cent per year since that time. Old age pensioners have not only received the basic $75, but the 2 per cent escalation.

We have developed two principles. One, the principle of universality and, two, the principle of the escalation clause related to the cost of living. What are we doing in this legislation? We are casting aside the principle with regard to universality and limiting the principle related to escalation. Hon. members should realize that experience in European countries indicates that they moved first with regard to the principle of universality, then to the principle of selectivity and back to the principle of universality. I think the reason is obvious. I think it will become more obvious to Canadians if this legislation is adopted. Selectivity creates a tremendous divisiveness between members of the community. Some senior citizens will be receiving $80 a month, some will be receiving $135 a month and some married couples receiving $255 a month. Instead of applying the principle of universality, the principle of selectivity is being applied. Experience in different countries has shown that the divisiveness created between members of the community cannot be tolerated. These are the reasons that we say this is a bad bill.

A few years ago the Liberal government adopted the famous phrase "war on poverty". They have not yet fired a single shot. They have not yet even coped with the battle. In fact, they have copped out. They have not even attempted to get on to the battle ground in order to fight. At one time poverty was considered in the sense of absolute, total deprivation. Today, it not only means a lack of income, but a lack of opportunities for good health, education, meaningful employment and recreational facilities, the things that develop self respect, a sense of worth and integrity which should be regarded as normal in the community.

I can do no better, Mr. Speaker, than to quote from the Fifth Annual Review of the Economic Council of Canada with regard to the approach to poverty in this country:

> We believe that serious poverty should be eliminated in Canada, and that this should be designated as a major national goal. We believe this for two reasons. The first is that one of the wealthiest societies in world history, if it also aspires to be a Just Society, cannot avoid setting itself such a goal. Secondly, poverty is costly.
>
> It also said that poverty in Canada is real, that the numbers affected are not in the thousands but the millions, and that there is more of it than our society can tolerate or our economy afford.
>
> And the council defined a poverty line, in money terms. This summer, Senator David Croll, the chairman of the Senate Committee on Poverty, took the council's figures, made the adjustment for an 8 per cent increase in the cost-of-living since, and came up with the following:
>
> Poverty, for one person, began in 1968 at $1,800; in 1970, this was $1,944. Two persons, $3,000; now $3,240. Three, $3,600; now $3,888. Four, $4,200; now $4,536. And, he said, the point below which poverty begins rises thereafter by $600 for each child.

If, as the government wants, we are to have a just society, surely this should be one of our national goals. Bill C-202 is not the proper approach. When we talk about poverty, we should talk about the over-all situation. We should not merely talk about income for senior citizens, but decent housing, medical and recreational services for these people. With regard to decent housing for senior citizens, we have barely scratched the surface. There is one senior citizens project in my constituency. Names must be placed on a waiting list and the waiting time varies between four and five years. Is it any wonder that I say this proposal merely scratches the surface?

• (2:30 p.m.)

As to medical services, when these people require hospital treatment they get it, but after treatment they are often obliged to move to a convalescent home and most of our hospitalization schemes do not cover the costs of these homes. So, whatever money they have saved is quickly depleted by the cost of nursing services. Surely, when we are dealing with senior citizens we should concern ourselves not only with income at these levels but with housing and medical services, the total picture.

My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre, in his eloquent speech on Wednesday, set forth his reasons for calling the government's proposals a "redistribution of old age poverty". Some hon. members who are in the chamber today were not present on that occasion and I think I should attempt again to impress upon the government just what he meant. As of January 1, a single person will receive $1,620 a year and a couple will receive $3,060. At the present time a single person receives $111.41, and under the new provision will receive $135.70, a net increase of $23.59 subject to income tax. This is, if he is entitled to the full income supplement. A couple now receives $222.82 and under the new provision they will receive $255; the difference is $32.28, or $16.09 each. This is the so-called gift the government is making—a difference of $23.59 to a pensioner who is entitled to a full guaranteed income supplement and $16.09 to a married person and also to his wife.

All we are doing is shifting poverty around, and my friend was perfectly right in his assertion. The figures show that 60 per cent of those receiving old age pensions will be receiving some form of guaranteed income supplement and that the other 40 per cent is made up of people who are receiving only $80. Ten per cent of these are in the wealthy class, probably like some of the members of the Liberal party who have additional incomes.

Mr. Anderson: Speak for yourself; you are a lawyer in Broadview.

Mr. Otto: A rich lawyer from Broadview.

Mr. Gilbert: The other 30 per cent are people whose incomes range from $2,200 to $4,500—$2,200 for single persons and $4,500 for married people. Would you say, Mr. Speaker, that these are rich persons in Canada today? I would not think so. These incomes place them almost below the poverty line. Yet, these are the men and women who would be denied the benefit of the 2 per cent escalation provision and be given an increase amounting to less than 10 cents a week. We are certainly fortunate to have among us experts on pensions, such as my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre, who can point out to us that the people who will suffer, 30 per cent, or 510,000 of the 1,700,000 drawing pensions, are people receiving total incomes of between $2,200 and $4,500. Is this being fair to our senior citizens?

I have a few minutes left to me, and I should like to direct my attention to the idea of a guaranteed annual income. Yesterday the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) spoke forcibly and eloquently on this subject. In substance, he said we could not afford it. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre reminded him that this has been the story of every Liberal government in the past when increases in pensions were proposed.

Mr. Francis: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has referred to my remarks yesterday and I believe he is obliged to quote them correctly. The context of my remarks was not the guaranteed annual income proposal but the universal payment of $150 a month to pensioners proposed by his friend from Winnipeg North Centre.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I must bring it to the attention of the hon. member that his question of privilege is merely a point of debate. If we were to allow questions of privilege with regard to the interpretation of speeches by hon. members, it would prevent us from progressing in the debate.

Mr. Francis: With the greatest respect, the hon. member is misquoting me. That is not a question of debate; it is a fact which can readily be verified by reference to Hansard.

Mr. Gilbert: If I misquoted the hon. member for Ottawa West, I will rephrase what I said. He may be right with reference to his remark concerning the demogrant of $150 in accordance with the universality principle. He said it would cost too much. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre reminded the hon. member for Ottawa-West that this was the story which has been told time and time again with regard to any proposal for increasing old age pensions.

Mr. Francis: But it was not a guaranteed income I referred to.

Mr. Gilbert: Hon. members will recall when another Liberal government was defeated in 1957 in connection with its proposal to increase the old age pension by $6—they were called the "six buck boys". Perhaps they will now be known as the 10 cents a week boys, or the 42 cents a month boys. I thought there was at least something they could learn. When we establish the principle of universality, and make looking after our senior citizens a national goal, surely we can find the money to take care of them.

We in the New Democratic Party say there should be a demogrant of $150 a month. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre says that if this is not considered possible we should take a first step by making it $100 a month for each person with a $50 supplement. The hon. member wrinkles his nose like a ravished virgin and asks: Where does the money come from? He cannot come up with the answer. It is unfortunate. We are in favour of the demogrant because it affirms the principle of universality, because it minimizes the division within the community and gives to Canadians a sense of dignity, a sense of worth and a sense of accomplishment.

A few months ago a debate took place on the subject of a guaranteed annual income and the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) set forth our beliefs. He told the House that two myths had arisen with regard to this proposal. The first was that any such scheme would be abused. I am not going to take the time to quote the experts, but these studies have shown that less than 5 per cent of the people in receipt of welfare abuse that privilege. Therefore, the myth of abuse is exploded.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Second, we have the myth that if you give people money, they have no incentive to work. In this regard we are fortunate that a welfare experiment was carried out in New Jersey, because that experiment revealed that people who do receive money of a welfare nature do not lose their incentive to work. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride) is a United Church minister, one who I am sure would want to translate the mind and the spirit of the Christian doctrine into lay action. He has agreed that the experiment conducted in New Jersey was one which had exploded the myth regarding abuse and regarding removing incentive to work. I would expect him to rise in his place and speak with the eloquence of a Cicero and the strength of a Billy Graham and let the Canadian people know that it is about time we maintained the principle of universality; that the principle of selectivity will create a divisiveness that is not worthy of Canadians. I am waiting for his speech and hoping that he will oppose this niggardly approach to the senior citizens of Canada.

In closing, may I say I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will have the strength and courage, when the bill is referred to the committee, to travel across the country to hear the representations of different groups and will reconsider this poor principle of selectivity as well as the restriction on escalation. I trust he will rise and speak against it, indeed that we will all speak against it. I hope the government will bring forth a bill that will not only provide for $150 a month but an escalation provision that will keep pace with the cost of living. This will be our goal, and we shall strive hard to achieve this end.

Mr. Anderson: Would the hon. member permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich rising for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member for Broadview would permit me I would like to ask him a question with regard to the motion that was refused earlier this day requiring the President of the Treasury Board to live on $58 a week for one year.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You mean the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Anderson: My apologies, I should have said the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). If the hon. member is putting this forward, as did his colleague for Regina East today, in a serious way, I hope both he and the hon. member for Regina East, not forgetting their wealthy colleague from York South, have taken steps to do this very thing. Otherwise, it appears to me that once more the members of the New Democratic Party are saying: "Don't do what we do, do what we say", which is the double standard and the double talk that we so often hear from the members of that party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The hon. member for Broadview.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, as Your Honour so often says, I am wondering just when the hon. member is going to get to his question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I have recognized the hon. member for Broadview for the purpose of answering a question. Is the hon. member for Comox-Alberni rising for the purpose of speaking in this debate?

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, I heard the hon. member's question. I am happy to see so many members in the House this afternoon, since attendance on Friday afternoons is usually pretty thin. When we proposed to the Minister of Finance that he live on $39.60 a week, which is the average unemployment insurance benefit a person would receive, we were challenging the Minister of Finance to do just that. One thing I like about the type of government we have is that there is a front bench on which sit men who are attempting to lead the country. If these men do not accept that challenge, then it does not give us very much strength to proceed. What we need is acceptance of such a challenge, in the same way as yesterday they accepted the challenge to withdraw the Auditor General bill.

I am sure that the hon. member for Eskimo, or rather Esquimalt—it sounds to me so much like an ice cream sandwich I have difficulty remembering his constituency.

Mr. Dinsdale: "Boloney sandwich".

Mr. Gilbert: The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich is a single man, one who has not had the responsibility of marriage or children. Nevertheless, he could be representative of single people in Canada, and if he could live on $39 a week and accepts the challenge, I too will accept the same challenge and live on $39 a week, plus an allowance for a married man and for children. Then, we will have a real battle.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, in view of the hon. member's failure to answer my question, I think a supplementary question is in order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret I must advise the hon. member for Broadview that his time has expired, and it is not in order to accept a further question unless he has unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Let us hear the supplementary question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton.

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I shall take but a few minutes to comment on item 44 standing on the Order Paper in the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro). I think the speeches so far in this debate from both sides of the House have pinpointed most of the issues. I want to add my few words and say it seems to me that, although this bill is essentially a limited one which seeks merely to amend the Old Age Security Act, what we have before us is but one approach in a broad spectrum of approaches to attempt to eliminate and reduce poverty in Canada.

Poverty will be attacked through various mechanisms, such as family allowance, old age security, the guaranteed income supplement, the Canada Pension Plan, the Canada Assistance Act and other measures. I shall not go into any of those in detail; this can, and I hope will, be done in committee.

It is my opinion that a guaranteed income in Canada in this technological age that we have entered, and in which we are destined to live for some time, is inevitable. Sooner or later we will have to have a total, integrated plan for a guaranteed income that is applied across the board. What we have at the present time, if I may be permitted to describe it in the broadest sense, is just that, a guaranteed income. If you consider the programs to which I have just referred, plus the additional programs administered by the municipalities and provinces with the aid of federal financial assistance, there is no way a person, regardless of age can live below a certain economic standard. The problem is that that standard varies depending on a person's age.

For example, a man who is 64 is not eligible for certain benefits which he will receive only when he reaches the age of 65. The question is really a philosophical one. No member of this House would want to see a citizen of Canada forced to live below a certain level; but the issue boils down to one of finance. Can we afford to give people a certain income? Can we afford to establish a higher guaranteed income in Canada? If we can we must then ask ourselves how much it will cost. I suppose some hon. members might quite logically ask whether we can afford not to provide it. It seems to me there are good arguments on both sides.

• (2:50 p.m.)

If I can deal with those arguments for a moment, I should like to say that the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) quoted accurately from what I said as recorded in Hansard for April 6, that the research done in New Jersey and also in Calgary, Alberta, confirm the fact that, contrary to what most Canadians continue to believe and which our culture tends to support, aid to people in the low income bracket does not take away or diminish initiative.

I think if we are going to talk about this we have to recognize that our culture, as it is today, still has a kind of hangover or legacy from the day when it was accepted that it was good to work and bad to be unemployed or shiftless and not to work. Therefore people, even if they wanted to work but could not find employment and were forced to go on any welfare scheme, because of the nuances of our culture, were prodded very quickly to go to work again. This is not a personal opinion. I can substantiate that statement very thoroughly by the excellent study done by the University of Wisconsin through an organization known as Mathematica Incorporated of Princeton, New Jersey. It can also be substantiated by the work done in Paterson, Passaic and Trenton as well as a number of other places including Princeton, New Jersey. These studies revealed that when people were given more assistance they helped themselves and moved away on their own initiative from the poverty line.

It might be worth while to read their conclusions. The data suggests there is no evidence that work effort declined among those receiving income support payments. On the contrary, there is an indication that the work effort of those receiving payments increased relative to the work effort of those not receiving payments. The study goes on to state that a number of in-depth interviews of participants in the project were conducted in order to determine the attitudes of individuals toward work. These interviews clearly indicated that low income people are strongly motivated toward work. The majority of those interviewed indicated that they aspired for better jobs and were willing to move to another city or take training even if it meant a pay cut, on a short term basis, in order to get the jobs. The majority also indicated that they were willing to work at two jobs in order to support their families.

Research in England has also shown that high tax rates on those of high income, and this is putting a lie to another widely held opinion in our culture, does not lower the incentive to work. It seems to me if you combine that with the Calgary research, which indicates that about 95 per cent of those who receive assistance did merit it, a fairly substantial case can be put forward for saying that assistance does not diminish the work effort of people.

However, there is one question still unanswered toward which we have not directed our attention, and that is: What would happen in a culture where everybody thought it was a respectable thing not to work and pay your own way? This is really an unanswered question, but this is an area which leaves me with some doubt. The work incentive was the subject of the New Jersey and the Calgary research and other projects, but did these projects produce the results they did produce because those, studied were a microcosmic group within a total culture that still continues to be work-oriented? I suspect they did.

We cannot simply assume, since in a work-oriented culture most of the people are providing themselves for their advanced years and putting some money aside, that if we help some who are, shall we say, honestly poor through no fault of their own and they take the aid they receive and use it to better themselves because they want to be like the majority that the same would happen in a new culture. We have to ask a more profound question. You see, this would be a turnabout, a different issue altogether. What happens when the majority is in the position of being the recipients of guaranteed incomes and it is only the minority who are the producers, the workers or self-motivators? What would be the cultural pressures at work then? Would research like that in New Jersey produce the same results?

I think that the principle this bill suggests is a good one because it says that we in society have an obligation to help those who are indeed poor and who cannot help themselves. But we also have an obligation to continually encourage people to help themselves. It is one thing to help someone who cannot help himself, but it seems to me it is another thing to take any steps which would prevent a person, who could very well help himself, from doing so. In spite of the problems inherent within the selectivity scheme, and in spite of the fact that there will be times when people will be dishonest, as the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) pointed out this morning, and in spite of the fact we are going to have this divisiveness mentioned by the previous speaker, namely that it will be possible to have two persons receiving old age pensions, one, of whom will be receiving a lot of supplement and the other receiving hardly any, I do not see any better way now available to us in Canada to help those who genuinely need to be helped short of a guaranteed income across the board.

If we provide a guaranteed income across the board we must again ask how high we are prepared to go? If we put it too high, we are going to be in the position of literally changing our culture. I am not afraid of turning the culture around. It might well be that the time has come, again in a modern age, when we ought to turn the culture around and look at it from the other side. But before we do turn it around so that we conclude that to look after one's self is no longer the ideal, let us remember that in Canada at this moment there are many hundreds of thousands of citizens, whom we all here represent, who feel very strongly that there ought to be more of us stand in this chamber and say: Look, Mr. Citizen, you also have a responsibility for yourself.

And that too is important. As an hon. member has mentioned, I am in my third profession, but one of them is being a clergyman. When I went to my first parish in northern Ontario, before I lived in the residence for two hours I had 20 transients at my door. So, you have to do a lot of thinking about whom you do or do not help, who is in need and who is not. Then, you begin to take seriously how you help people who are transients off a rail line. You have to ask yourself a more searching question.

I used to say this to the men who would come to my door: Do you really think I should help you to keep doing what you are doing? In other words, I had to choose to terminate their existence as bums or help them continue living as bums. It is the same thing for the government of Canada in respect of poverty in Canada. No matter what you do it is the wrong thing. If you say no, you are always left with the haunting feeling that perhaps this was the one of two or maybe the one out of four—take your fractions any way you wish—who was the honest man who was down on his luck and whom you should have helped. We must help the poor. But we must not help or encourage the poor to live as they do. In any individual case you must ask whether this is the honest type of man who is down on his luck and who should be helped. On the other hand, perhaps it is the type of person who would, as so many do—and I am giving an extreme example here—take the aid you would give him or them, as in an example I remember, and cast it aside. I recall once being rather taken in by a fellow, in retrospect. I obtained a good pair of boots for him and was disturbed to find that he had thrown them over the fence into the yard of the next door neighbour. If you help a person who is honest and genuinely poor, no sooner than you do someone else comes along who will spoil the situation.

• (3:00 p.m.)

If we can retain a culture in North America in which it is good to work, then we should have no fear of having all the income security plans we wish and all the guaranteed income we can provide because people will reluctantly live in that manner. But we must always be looking further and further ahead and asking ourselves whether we possess a culture in which the day will come when the majority will be among those who are willing to take what is handed out, ride free on someone else's ticket without qualm and the social pressures to work which surrounded the people studied in New Jersey.

Recognizing the monetary limitations we have to accept within our nation, recognizing the desperate need to do something about the genuinely honest poor, and recognizing—as many members have pointed out—the fact that when you come to the breakoff line of any program that is attached to a selectivity or means test type of approach there will be a large area in which there will be discrimination between honest and responsible people and some dishonest people who will take advantage of the program, the step we have taken is really the only one open to us.

We must remember that we must inevitably move in the direction of a guaranteed annual income, adding the caveat that as we do that I hope some organization or institution in Canada will begin massive research into this question: When the general attitude prevails that people ought to provide for themselves, one can receive aid and at the same time have a greater incentive to help oneself. But if the whole culture was no longer work-oriented, could we expect these same benefits to accrue from the same program? This is a fundamental question of urgency now. With those remarks I would hope this bill could be referred to the committee as rapidly as possible, where it can be dealt with in detail.

[Mr. McBride.]

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I begin my few remarks with an expression of thankfulness in respect of this bill. Long ago I was taught to be thankful for small mercies. By Zeus, this is a small one! I notice the Ciceronian member who preceded me ended in the growing tradition that once an individual expresses himself, he then suggests the matter move on quickly to the committee. Surely he will allow me a benediction after his sermon.

I enjoyed the hon. member's remarks both this afternoon and when he made them earlier in another debate. I appreciate the fact that he is sticking by his convictions. I was a little surprised when my hon. Presbyterian friend from Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) said this morning he was going to act like a Methodist preacher. I thought that was carrying the ecumenical movement a bit too far! I also enjoyed his remarks. I think a matter of this kind requires that we look a little deeper than usual and that we do not fear being profound on these matters which are in large measure a general appraisal of some pretty fundamental things in our society.

I mentioned the small mercies and I do confess, as did the leader of our party the other day, to a feeling of intellectual deflation—an unusual word at this time—concerning the presentation of this measure and, indeed, the white paper by the minister. It seems that in recent years the political life of this country has been characterized by a deliberate process of inflating the expectations of the Canadian people. It seems to me there is always an immense governmental and administrative labouring, followed by an overdue birth of some legislative mice or, to use the jargon of the day, some dwarf demogrants.

So often we are presented with white paper upon white paper and have a study following a series of preceding studies, and always there is dripping from this process the expectations of tremendous things to come for the Canadian people. I suppose that is part of the charismatic age. Charisma was a concept once known to political scientists and theologians; now it is a handmark of the practising politician in some sectors and in some countries. Very careful use of slogans is adduced to bring forth a response of great expectation. One of the great elections of this country was characterized by a couple of slogans. One was the just society, and another was the appeal to preserve national unity. I read now that even the slogan "the just society" has been discarded. I feel that if the slogan is gone, then it is all gone.

Mr. Dinsdale: That is all there ever was.

Mr. Macquarrie: In this debate I cannot talk about national unity but I do think an awful lot about what has happened to it. This should not surprise me, because even Dickens' "Great Expectations" had a sad tone. We never seem to end this process. I was wondering where the man now in charge of the Post Office was. I am not referring to the incumbent Postmaster General, who is present, but rather the other one. I discovered he is in Britain and that we are studying, through the minister, something we have studied in the last few years through all sorts of research. I refer to the questions of the zip code and the transfer to a Crown corporation. How much studying do we need?

Today hon. members have discussed, and could not help but discuss in respect of a bill of this kind, the question of poverty. We have had wars on poverty, committees on poverty, studies on poverty and hearings on poverty. We are investigating it, we are fighting it, we are trying to measure it, and the poverty line seems to be moving. There are differences of opinion concerning who is poor, but there is a profound feeling that there are far too many poor people today. If I heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) correctly last night, 10 per cent of the people are in the rich category and the rich category starts at $10,000 a year. So the poverty line is a mighty big net which draws in a great many Canadians. Whatever the statistical precision of this day on the poverty line's location, there are far too many people below it.

• (3:10 p.m.)

It is a terrible thing that this country that we talk about as proud, as glorious and as free, this country that Laurier said would have the twentieth century in its hands, should be a country in which there is so much unemployment, so much poverty, so much drag upon economic growth and so much dissatisfaction from people who look to the state for a return for their efforts on behalf of the state.

On this quiet, thoughtful, friendly afternoon it is not my intention to say everything I would like to say, or indeed to take all my time. I would like to be generous and give a few minutes to the other fellows. But I am troubled by many things in this measure—not just the amount. I think a lot about this whole question of the means test, if that is not too archaic a word. I am just old enough, at 51, to remember some of the pitiful, painful degradation through which Canadians passed as, in an earlier day, they tried to qualify for the mere pittance of old age pensions, as they were then called, which were doled out by penurious and callous governments of all sorts.

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) spoke about people cheating. I am too gentle a man to use that word, but certainly people did present themselves in lights which were probably not quite accurate, and many people turned over property to others. They thought it was a gesture, so that they could prove to the state that they were impoverished. And the poor devils discovered the only reality perhaps in the whole wretched business was the divesting by themselves of their little bit of property. So, Mr. Speaker, I have a built-in concern about the means test. I think it is an iniquitous thing which has blighted people. It made people do things before the emanations of the state that citizens should not be called upon to do.

Perhaps we have reached an age of sophistication where just because we have changed the name—we do not use means test any more; we talk about negative income tax and the needs test—we have reached the stage where we can obviate the necessity for these degrading procedures. But I am not yet convinced of that. I wish I were, because I know that the people in the elder group in our society today are having a very, very hard time. In earlier civilizations, to be old was to be honoured, perhaps to be revered, and the expression "the elders among us" was an accolade. Now the older citizen is apt to be thrust aside because we live in an age where one has to be new, modern, or young, or pretend to be one of those. Perhaps the virtues and values which a long life gives are improperly regarded and insufficiently valued. And so, to the economic problems of the old comes the social problem, and at times indeed perhaps it is a spiritual problem.

I am troubled and others have mentioned this—that those in the old age pension sector are regarded as pawns in political infighting. That was certainly the case, Mr. Speaker, and there is a little of that yet. But I think there is less of it because of the government which was led by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

There was a very clever sort of campaign for years that unless you were a supporter of the party of Mackenzie King, you were somehow likely to be opposed not only to old people but to welfare generally. I can well recall campaigning in 1956 for the election of 1957—I knew I needed a head start—and a dear old lady saying to my colleague, now the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean), and to myself—there was nothing senile about the lady, but she was very concerned—"They tell me that if you people get in we will lose our pensions." I thought how base, how terrible for someone to try to indoctrinate that poor soul with the evil consequences of a Conservative victory.

That is why I have always been proud of the fact that the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert laid at rest those Kingsian suggestions and post-Kingsian suggestions that the party of Macdonald and the party of Borden had any lack of concern for the social welfare of Canadians, old and young. So I think it is less an issue today than it was, and I think that that is an improvement.

Thoughtful students of gerontocracy and the care of the aged are concerned today that our society is not doing enough to find useful activity for older people. I do not want to quote New Jersey, Princeton, or even Calgary, but careful, thoughtful studies in this area reveal a tremendous area of useful activity for people who, according to our public service regulations and according to the personnel requirements of the private sector, are too old, are on the shelf. It is well known that useful, creative activity is of tremendous value in enriching the life, physical and spiritual, of older people and indeed perhaps in prolonging it; and the prolongation of useful life is surely a cherished goal of our society.

But if we have a system whereby the useful activity and the creativity of the elderly person puts him in the situation where his earnings are diminished, then you are back to where you started when the means test was abolished, because the big argument for the abolition of the means test was that it discouraged savings, the frugal habits of life. Now, again, when I use those expressions I show myself as someone who is very old or who reads history because now, of course, we must talk about incentives. This is one aspect that troubles me. I do not think we should make it more difficult for people to be active and, indeed, to be gainfully active.

Another observation that I must make in connection with the white paper and the general approach which is put forward—I do not pretend to disagree with everything in the white paper; it would be both narrowminded and dishonest if I said that—is that I think there must be greater sensitivity on the part of government as a whole and all emanations of it. The thing that troubles me very much is the way in which senior citizens are put to great discomfort. I know many, many people who receive war veterans allowance. Then they reach a stage where they come up against the guaranteed annual supplement, and there are months when they are cut down in their payments and they do not know why; they cannot understand what bureaucracy, what the government, the state, is doing.

I find great areas of insensitivity. For instance, one I have been troubled about for a long time—and I am meeting insensitivity myself as I take it up with government—concerns a person who was confined to a nursing home, an ill person. An up-to-date nursing home if at all possible will get the patient out of bed for a little exercise. That is good medical care. But, by Jove, the person will discover that unless he or she stays in bed for ever and ever, the expense will be disallowed. That person is not considered a bed patient, yet those who are looking after his or her health will properly make every effort to get them out of bed on all reasonable occasions.

• (3:20 p.m.)

A little while ago I had a conversation with a political observer who said, "I believe this government is going to call an election. In this country, when governments start jacking up old age pensions it always means they are going to call an election." I reflected upon that for a moment and felt that it was unlikely because it was only a few years ago that we had one.

An hon. Member: That is a Tory tactic.

Mr. Macquarrie: But when the book was opened and I saw the 42 cents there, I was convinced that no amount of charisma, no prolongation of Information Canada—

Mr. Baldwin: And no slouch-hat!

Mr. Macquarrie: —no appeal, re-appeal or white paper could make that look sufficiently attractive. No one can make 42 cents look like a munificent abundance, even at the Christmas season. So I told this man I did not think there would be an election over this issue or any other; but I think he had long since divined that such was the case.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, again and again the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) have told the people of Canada that the government proposes that the rich will be asked to pay the cost of meeting the needs of the poor, the old and the sick. This bill which we are discussing is supposedly the first step toward the bright new world which this social security system will bring.

It would be interesting, however, if this House and the people of Canada could see what the government has successfully hidden; if they could see the study on social security prepared by Dr. Willard, and the white paper tabled by the minister. In the light of past studies and testimony given by Dr. Willard, I am sure there is a world of difference between what he proposed and what the government has decided is politically feasible and attractive.

There is nothing in these proposals, Mr. Speaker, which can be taken to mean what the Prime Minister has said so often, that the rich will be asked to pay to help the poor. What is being asked is that the poor pay to help those who are even more poor. It is obvious that the payments already made to the old age security fund, and the increased payments which are now called for, will provide sufficient money to pay the increased benefits proposed for those who qualify for the supplement.

I am sure many members on the government side share our concern about this division of people receiving old age pensioners. Many of us are concerned about 800,000 people now receiving the old age pension, those who have been getting the basic pension of $75 a month set forth in the legislation of 1966 plus the cost of living bonus which brought their total up to $79 a month. As of January, 1971, they would have received $81 a month, but with the passage of this bill that $81 will be reduced. In fact, we will be telling those 800,000 people that from January, 1971, they will receive not more than $80 a month and there will be no increase in that fixed amount.

In the province of Manitoba, almost 50 per cent of the 94,000 people receiving old age benefits receive no guaranteed income supplement. Are they rich people, as implied by the Prime Minister? Are they so wealthy that they do not need the extra income? Of course that is not true. A few of them may have supplementary incomes but most of those receiving the old age pension alone are existing because they have modest savings or a pension, in many cases, based on employment before or just after World War II when wages were very much lower than they are today so the pension is relatively low.

I do not intend to put the figures on the record but hon. members know that over the years the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has asked many questions about CNR and CPR pensions. Members know that only a small percentage of former employees of the CNR, Air Canada, CPR or even of the city of Winnipeg have any other pension. For the most part, these people have incomes of between $2,500 and $4,200 a year. Not only will they be denied a supplement to their basic pension but it will be fixed at the niggardly amount of $80 a month.

Senator Croll's committee on poverty has done important and useful work. It is not often that I feel inclined to compliment members of the Senate, but this committee has been doing fine work. The Economic Council of Canada had issued figures establishing the poverty line and Senator Croll's committee brought these figures up-to-date. Now it is estimated that a single person with an income of less than $3,200 a year, or a family of four with an income of less than $4,500 a year is living in poverty. This means that a large percentage of the people who do not qualify for the income supplement are living in poverty, yet these are the people who will be locked into poverty in the future by this bill.

Mr. Speaker, who are these rich people who will not receive the guaranteed income supplement, who will be limited to an increase of 42 cents a month—less than ten cents a week, as estimated by my hon. friend from Broadview (Mr. Gilbert)? The single person over 65 years of age who has other income of $110 a month will not qualify for the supplement. Is the single person earning $190 a month or $2,280 a year the person the Prime Minister was referring to when he said that the rich would have to pay to help the poor? I do not accept that. I know that the people of Canada will not accept it. I suppose we ought to be thankful for small mercies. Because of the increased benefits to be brought in, the number of people in the group I have talked about will be reduced from 800,000 to 500,000. I am referring to people with incomes between $3,500 and $4,000 a year.

• (3:30 p.m.)

What we are proposing to do in this bill is much too little for our citizens who will live in the affluent Canada of the 1970s, and it is much too late. We in this party have proposed a pension of $150 a month payable at age 65 without any means or needs test or other income qualification. I expect it is too much to expect this government to accept that proposal. They would say it is too generous and that we cannot afford it. I deny that. This debate is not an occasion for discussing what we can or cannot afford in this country. If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare really want to know what we can afford, I suggest they should look at the recommendations of the Carter commission and then scrutinize the tremendous tax loopholes as a result of which oil companies, gas companies, land speculators, builders and others like them either escape the payment of taxes or pay very small amounts in taxes.

If we were to plug these tax loopholes, our proposal for paying $150 a month to everyone aged 65 and over would not be impractical at all. Even in the present circumstances I suggest that we could very easily think about a pension of $100 a month for those aged 65 and over, plus a guaranteed income supplement of $50 a month for a total of $150 a month. I do not for a moment believe we cannot afford that. I do not for a moment believe that if we had a fair taxation system, which at present we do not, the people of Canada would object to that kind of pension being given to our old people.

I now want to deal with another subject that has arisen repeatedly in this debate. The other day the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) castigated members of this party because we kept pleading for a universal old age pension plan. As we listened to him, it became obvious that for him and the government as a whole universality has become a dirty word. May I remind hon. members that it was a Liberal government which first eliminated the means test from the old age pension legislation; it was a Liberal government which made the old age pension universal.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): After 20 years of prodding.

Mr. Orlikow: Of course, they had to be prodded. We shall continue prodding them. But it was a Liberal government which did that. I felt sorry that Liberal members such as the hon. member for York East virtually apologize for that. I think they ought to be proud of it. It was a Liberal government that established the hospitalization insurance plan. When the debate on the hospital insurance plan was taking place, I remember that the former Conservative Premier of Manitoba, Mr. Roblin, argued very vehemently that the people of Canada did not need a universal hospital insurance plan and that all that was necessary was for the government to implement a hospital insurance plan for those who could not afford the sort of private plan to which others already belonged.

A former Minister of National Health and Welfare who is now the government House leader in the Senate, Senator Martin, demolished that argument completely and proved that the best way of providing for hospital insurance was through a universal plan to which everyone belonged and to which everyone contributed. It was a Liberal government, Mr. Speaker, which established a medical insurance plan based on universality. The same arguments were advanced then.

I remember the Conservative Premier of Manitoba arguing that we did not need a universal medical insurance plan, that we already had plans such as the Manitoba medical services private, non-profit plan and that there were commercial insurance companies such as the Great West Life which already insured a substantial percentage of the Canadian people. He argued that therefore we did not need a universal medical insurance plan. Mr. Roblin proposed that the medical insurance plan should cover only those people who were not already covered. Yet it was a Liberal government which decided, correctly, that the best way of meeting the needs of the Canadian people was through a universal insurance plan, a plan into which every citizen of Canada paid what he was required to pay and from which every citizen of Canada received benefits. The plan would pay certain of his medical bills.

Mr. Rock: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: I see the hon. member from the area of Montreal, who perhaps is the greatest exponent of private enterprise in this House, applauding what I have said. Previous Liberal governments thought everybody should be covered.

Mr. Rock: Of course they did.

Mr. Orlikow: We in this party urged the government to adopt the universal approach.

Mr. Foster: Would the hon. member permit a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member who has the floor. The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) is inquiring whether the hon. member who has the floor will permit a question.

Mr. Orlikow: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has advocated a universal old age pension of $150 a month for every Canadian, without a means test. I should like to know whether he has an estimate of how much such a program would cost in addition to our existing program.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, these estimates have been made. When the bill is before the committee we shall bring the figures forward. I do not have them with me today, but they are available. I am not worried about the cost. My position is similar to that of a former Liberal Prime Minister, Louis St. Laurent. Although he had been a successful corporation lawyer he was not ashamed to take the old age pension. When questioned about it he said that he would pay back in taxes all the money which was required to pay his pension.

I have no doubt that the taxation system could support a pension of $150 a month which we have been proposing. I say to the hon. member for Algoma and to the hon. member for York East, do not be afraid of universality. It has been part of the program of Liberal governments over the years. If it was a good idea in the past, it is a good idea now. What interests me about the arguments being trotted out about the dangers of universality is this. The people who are arguing against universality and saying, "Let us devise an old age pension plan, or a welfare plan or a medical insurance plan only for those who need it," are the same people who so often make certain kinds of speeches in Parliament and outside.

• (3:40 p.m.)

If one reads the annual speeches of the president of the Chamber of Commerce or the president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, he will again and again read strictures about how terrible it is that the number of civil servants in Canada continues to rise, and how terrible it is that the bureaucracy increases and becomes more expensive. I can think of no more simple way of increasing the number of civil servants than by having a needs test, means test or income investigation with regard to the old age pension or the guaranteed income supplement. People will be required to carry out investigations. Accountants will have to ensure that people have not miscalculated.

I do not intend to deal with those who supposedly want to "milk" the plan. I believe the vast majority of people are inherently honest. They sometimes inadvertently make mistakes because they do not understand all the provisions of the plan, or for similar reasons. If this plan is accepted, accountants, bookkeepers, social workers and others will be required to investigate the incomes of those people applying for the supplement, to ensure that they are entitled to it. It is ludicrous that those people who argue that the plan should be based on need rather than being universal in scope are the same people opposed to increasing the number of civil servants.

This is not the time to discuss in detail a guaranteed annual income, a negative income tax or any of the other proposals which have been made. But these would cut down the number of civil servants required and would make life easier. They would eliminate the feeling of people who qualify for the old age pension or the guaranteed income supplement that there is something degrading about applying for it. If there were some form of annual guaranteed income or negative income tax, a person could simply fill out a form requesting assistance. I am referring to those who have reached retirement age, are sick, widowed or require extra income because of a chronically ill child. We would eliminate the fragmented and complicated systems which we now have in this country.

In the time remaining to me I wish to deal with the situation with regard to pensioners since the pension legislation was last amended in 1966. Many members of the government have tried to create the impression that through this legislation the government is proposing something very radical and generous. Under the new regulations, only 60 per cent of the people over 65 years of age will be entitled to the old age pension. If we look at the record of what has happened since 1966, we will see that this legislation is not in fact generous.

In 1966 a pension of $75 a month was set for everyone over the age of 65. It provided for the payment of a supplementary income of up to $30 a month for those who had little or no income. Since 1966 the consumer price index has increased by approximately 16 per cent. The 1966 legislation provided for an annual increase in the pension of 2 per cent a year. Members of this party warned the government that they were making a serious mistake by shortchanging the old age pensioners. As a result of limiting the cost of living increase to 2 per cent a year, the old age pension has been increased by 6.1 per cent since 1966. The position of those receiving the old age pension has grown worse each year. Since 1966 they have suffered a reduction of 9.9 per cent.

By this bill the government intends to increase the supplementary payments only to those who qualify. A single person will be entitled to $135 a month, and a married couple to $255 a month. This will merely put those people, with respect to real income, in the same position as they were in 1966. I submit this country is substantially more affluent than it was in 1966. In terms of real income we can afford to give them more than we could in 1966. By this legislation, those who qualify will return to the same position as in 1966. Those who do not qualify, 40 per cent of those now receiving the old age pension or approximately 500,000 people, will receive almost 10 per cent less than they received in 1966. In fact, they will continue to receive a fixed amount regardless of the increase in cost of living in future years.

Approximately 40 per cent of those now receiving the old age pension will not receive increased benefits because of the pension they receive as a result of employment before retirement. That amount is also fixed. In addition to their old age pension being reduced by almost 10 per cent, their cost of living will rise in the future. For those whose benefits will be increased to the same level as in 1966, their future increases will be limited to 2 per cent a year.

When introducing this bill, the minister made the astounding statement that he expected the cost of living would not rise more than 2 per cent a year, and therefore these people would be protected. Well, Mr. Speaker, we have not had a year in the last couple of years or more in which the cost of living index has not risen by more than 2 per cent, and there is no indication at all that in 1971, 1972, or 1973 the increase in the cost of living will be restricted to 2 per cent a year.

• (3:50 p.m.)

What we are saying to these people is: We assure you that in 1971 your real income will be about the same as it was in 1966, but in 1972 or 1973 you will begin to fall behind again. This is not good enough for people who have spent their lives working and building this country and providing the basis upon which most of us are living pretty well. It seems to me we can do, and ought to do, much more for the old people than the government proposes.

In the few minutes I have left I wish to deal briefly with one other matter which it seems to me has been completely overlooked in the proposals the government has put forward. My hon. friend from Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) quoted what has been said by people working full-time with pensioners in the city of Toronto, but I am sure the same could be said of every city in Canada. What has happened every time there has been an increase in pensions is that to a large extent the increase has been eaten up almost immediately by an increase in the rents which people receiving the old age pension must pay. Few old age pensioners can afford to live in their own homes. There is not a Member of Parliament who does not receive every year scores of letters from old age pensioners complaining bitterly that as a result of increases, not just in the cost of living in general but in their local realty taxes, they cannot afford to continue to live in their own homes.

In addition to these people there are thousands of old age pensioners who have never had their own homes, who because of the shortage of housing for people in the lower income brackets have always been restricted to living in one room or in shared accommodation in a house in the central part of Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Vancouver or in other cities in Canada. For these people, the increase the minister is proposing will disappear in a month or two because the shortage of housing accommodation will permit landlords to increase rents. I had hoped that this government, which was elected largely on the slogan of the just society, would by now have come forward with an imaginative, aggressive program to provide housing accommodation for those who have retired and who simply cannot afford to live in accommodation provided by the private market.

We have made progress. My hon. friend from Broadview talked about the one old age housing project in his constituency. There is one in my constituency. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre has one in his constituency, and I am sure there are similar facilities in every city in Canada. One needs to spend only a few minutes, although I have spent hours, in these housing projects which have been designed and built specially for old age pensioners, to realize the fantastic difference it has made in their lives, to realize that for the first time many of them have decent accommodation. For the first time they have recreational facilities, a place where they can get together with people of their own age, people with their own interests, to play a game of bridge or, as I saw in one of the old age projects in a constituency, a game of bingo in the afternoon, which they all enjoy.

But the number of old age pensioners who have this kind of opportunity is very small, probably not more than 5 per cent of the total and certainly not more than 10 per cent; and, as my hon. friend from Broadview said so eloquently a short while ago, the waiting period for those who want this kind of accommodation can be anywhere from three years to five years. Time after time, in the period between a couple making application for accommodation and the time the room or apartment becomes available, one of the applicants, the husband or the wife, dies. This is not something of which we can be proud. It was my hope that the government would have brought forward measures to indicate their real concern for the old people, a real program aimed at providing adequate living accommodation for them.

I wish to close by repeating what I said as I began my remarks. This is not a plan by which the rich will help to provide for the needs of the poor. It is a plan, deliberately designed, by which the poor will be called upon to make sacrifices in order that those who are even poorer may receive a little more. I think this is not good enough for the people of this country.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills and private bills.

Family Allowance Act

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance about the forthcoming business for the House? Yesterday the government House leader indicated that Monday would be devoted to the indoor pursuit of the budget. I now understand that according to arrangements made, Tuesday will be set aside for the budget as well, with a vote on the NDP subamendment if they think they can improve on our amendment. Will the Parliamentary Secretary confirm this?

Mr. Mahoney: That is correct. Monday and Tuesday will be devoted to the budget debate, and assuming an amendment and subamendment are forthcoming there will be a vote on Tuesday evening. On Wednesday I assume the old age security measure which we are now debating will again be discussed. However, that is a subject for further discussion among the House leaders.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is good to have this information. I can assure the hon. member for Peace River that we shall improve upon his party's amendment.

• (4:00 p.m.)

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

FAMILY ALLOWANCE ACT

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN ALLOWANCE FOR CHILDREN UNDER 16

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to the advisability of amending the present Family Allowance Act to the advantage of all children in Canada less than 16 years old, to provide for increases to an amount of at least one dollar per day, increases which are absolutely necessary to justify adequate support to parents who still consent to prepare for our country the future generation of workers and, if necessary, of soldiers capable of defending it when needed. In addition, the House should study the means of earmarking the necessary amounts for payment of these family allowances from the national production of goods in order not to increase personal or corporation income taxes, or the cost of living, or the cost of any goods or service, for this purpose, which is perfectly possible, easy and to the advantage of all the citizens of Canada, as well as very profitable for the whole general economy of all the nation.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased once more to discuss the same motion that has appeared on the order paper for several years. Last year, the House was unable to grant me time to discuss it. This year, I am happy to explain the motion that reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to the advisability of amending the present Family Allowance Act to the advantage of all children in Canada less than 16 years old, to provide for increases to an amount of at least one dollar per day, increases which are absolutely necessary to justify adequate support to parents who still consent to prepare for our country the future generation of workers and, if necessary, of soldiers capable of defending it when needed.

In addition, the House should study the means of earmarking the necessary amounts for payment of these family allowances from the national production of goods in order not to increase personal or corporation income taxes, or the cost of living, or the cost of any goods or service, for this purpose, which is perfectly possible, easy and to the advantage of all the citizens of Canada, as well as very profitable for the whole general economy of all the nation.

Mr. Speaker, since I was elected in 1962, my party has entrusted me with putting the case for family allowances. I have been doing so for eight years and I have not won anything so far. My statements on this matter would fill quite a book.

Today, I would like to make a summary of my numerous remarks on this issue which, in my opinion, is the most important one ever discussed in the House.

Mr. Speaker, this is the most important question, as it affects seven million citizens, namely more than a third of Canada's population. It is an important subject because seven million children, the hope of this country, cannot provide for themselves and must, of course, rely on their parents and on the society in which they live.

If parents have the first responsibility as far as the life and education of their children are concerned, we must recognize that they assume that responsibility within an organized society, under the federal government's authority.

Let us remember that in all matters concerning the monetary system, currency, the banking system, rates of interest and the issuing of money or credit, the federal government retains all powers, but it must also respect the life of every Canadian citizen.

More and more money is needed in order to live in our society today. Even if 8,500,000 adults can earn money from work or from investment of their capital, there are still 13 million other citizens who have no cash income at all and therefore no purchasing power neither from work nor from their capital. But the latter are all entitled to a standard of living based on the annual national production.

That is the basis of any study on the importance of the amounts of money that are to be guaranteed to each Canadian as a guaranteed personal income from birth to death. That is the first right of the citizen.

The government must recognize its economic and monetary responsibility in connection with the right to live of each Canadian citizen.

Children, who cost a lot, cannot earn their living. The father works at the same salary as the bachelor. The housewife does not receive any salary.

On the other hand, companies have nobody to support, they make very big profits, they pile up the greatest reserves and make the biggest capitalizations with billions every year from the annual national production.

This year, on a production of $84 billion, $34 billion is capitalized and only $50 billion goes to consumption. Let us face those known facts before taking decisions in connection with family allowances.

Mr. Speaker, it is before the prospect of a deficient consumption of $50 billion and a capitalization of $34 billion that we have to place ourselves to study the case for family allowances. Indeed, in 1970, seven million Canadian children or students are dependent upon their parents or society in general under the responsibility of the federal government. In 1970, consumption is deficient at $50 billion compared to an extravagant capitalization of $34 billion out of a production amounting to $84 billion.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Those figures are recognized by all those responsible for our economic policy and we should reach logical conclusions and work out easily applicable solutions.

First we should guarantee every Canadian citizen a decent income that will provide for the necessities of life when he gets no personal income through his work or his capital.

Secondly, we should get the required funds not from working people but from capitalized amounts mainly from major companies.

Mr. Speaker, before too much capitalization is allowed, consumption should be high enough. Prior to facilitating the expansion of companies and providing for the future, we must, as of now, see to the survival of Canadians.

The most elementary common sense compels us to draw such conclusions.

In the present circumstances, our economy is out of balance. A minimum of thinking leads one to realize that each citizen's primary right is his right to live.

At the present time, their work and their capital provide 8,500,000 Canadian citizens with purchasing power, whereas 13 million Canadians have no work nor capital. Shall we condemn them to die or to disappear from our society?

No, Mr. Speaker, nobody will admit such conclusions. If, in my notice of motion, I am asking that a monthly allowance of at least $30 per month be paid to each Canadian child and that this amount be taken from the huge reserves of the large companies and the amounts they capitalize each year, the reason is that we should not reduce the other citizens' purchasing power, nor increase taxes or the cost of living.

Mr. Speaker, I am today suggesting a complete revision of our economic system; however, it would be adaptable to the present mechanisms of our monetary, economic and political systems. The only thing to do is to impress on our governments the need for a sense of direction in our economy.

What is today recognized as the established order is economic unbalance or organized disorder. This is the reason why all the government's new decisions embodied in the white papers and the estimates can only spread confusion all over Canada. I know very well that my proposal can be implemented only in a new economic perspective. This is why my notice of motion states very clearly that the House should study the means of paying a monthly allowance of $30 and, and I quote:

> —earmarking the necessary amounts for payment of these family allowances from the national production of goods in order not to increase personal or corporation income taxes, or the cost of living, or the cost of any goods or service—

I am not asking that $30-a-month family allowances be paid immediately for all children below 16 years of age; what I want is that a study be undertaken to determine the possibility of changing our way of managing the economy of our country. No longer are we endeavouring to fulfil the needs of our fellow-citizens. Instead, we are working toward the development and the financing of companies which are getting richer every day while numerous citizens are being gradually denied the income with which they would fulfil their own physical, intellectual and spiritual needs.

Therefore, I recommend that a study group be instituted and charged with the responsibility of finding means of achieving a national economic balance between incomes, expenditures and profits, between individuals, families and companies, from the national production of goods, which must be adjusted to consumption and capitalization, in order to provide for our citizens' needs. We must do so before allowing corporations as administrative implements to earn and capitalize too much for our future development.

Remember that other capitalist countries, including Germany and Japan, have practically achieved full employment, while our own situation in Canada is deteriorating. We must find ways to produce more by employing the full work force in order to create even more income and to stimulate production.

However, persons without employment or capital should have sufficient purchasing power to provide for the bare necessity, which would result in a better flow of consumer goods and daily personal services. This would contribute to increase the number of jobs at all levels, not only in big cities but also in the smallest parishes.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that my notice of motion will be considered and that a study committee will be established to examine ways of considering the whole orientation of our national economy, in order to achieve the economic balance between capital, labor and the vital rights of unemployed and poor citizens; between management, employees and dependent citizens; between production, consumption and capitalization; between personal requirements, production costs and prices and also the gigantic capitalization reserves.

All those words are most meaningful. They all are important in building a balanced and orderly economy, aiming towards its true goal: to meet the needs of living citizens, and also to strive for profits and capital investment by institutions.

Both these things are necessary, but meeting the present needs of citizens in 1970 should not be sacrificed to seeking over-ambitious capital investments in view of our future development.

Each year's production should provide for the current year's needs before it is applied to the needs of subsequent years. Instead of using $34 billion for capital investment out of a production of $84 billion in 1970 and consuming only $50 billion, let us consume $12 billion more, deducted from the $34 billion for capital investment. That will still leave $22 billion for capital investment for our future development, still more than $1,000 per capita. Those $12 billion added to consumption would provide monthly family allowance payments of $30 for the 7,000,000 school-children under 11, $60 for students between 12 and 17, $90 to each citizen between 18 and 59, without work or capital, and $120 to all citizens of 60 or over.

Every citizen would thus be assured of a guaranteed income, either through his labour or through his capital, from the national product in each fiscal year. The 21,500,000 people who make up the Canadian population would thus be assured of a decent purchasing power.

As all those figures are accurate, they should be carefully studied. If we set aside $12 billion for purchasing power from a capitalization of $34 billion, $1 billion would be circulated each month to assure a minimum guaranteed income to each citizen. And, should we do this under our present system, nothing would need to be changed, except that the government would have to make a decision.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has now expired.

Does the House agree that the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) should finish his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Compton.

Mr. Latulippe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. members for allowing me to continue but I have nearly finished.

• (4:20 p.m.)

I was saying earlier that if we put more money in circulation fewer people will have to receive unemployment benefits and welfare allowances. We could solve this problem, and it would not cost the government any more to give away money as guaranteed income than as family allowances or social welfare benefits. All the plans now implemented could disappear and be replaced by the guaranteed income to every Canadian citizen. It is possible, if we rely on the economic reality of our country. If we provide work to almost all citizens, the national product will double and it will be easy to find a billion dollars a month to assure Canadians of a viable and well balanced economy that will satisfy them.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) presented his motion at four o'clock, His Honour the Speaker discovered that my hon. friend did not have any of his party colleagues with him to second the motion and therefore he took the liberty of naming me.

Mr. Walker: Politics make strange bedfellows.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Go back to sleep, Jim. I had not given my prior consent, but I have no objection at all to being the member who makes it possible for the hon. member for Compton to have his motion discussed during the private members' hour this afternoon. I confess that the motion is worded in language I perhaps would not want to place on the order paper, mainly because even if we should pass the motion I do not quite know what would be the result. It seems to me, however, that the hon. member has a point. He emphasized it in his remarks and it is a point which Parliament and society as a whole one day will have to consider.

I know my hon. friend is criticized because he and his colleagues talk about providing increased benefits without increased taxation. Indeed, the immediate response to that is that it cannot be done. I should simply like to put it this way. Twenty, thirty or forty years from now no doubt our productive capacity will have resulted in an even greater quantity of goods and services than we now produce, and I just cannot imagine that we will continue to divide an increased quantity of goods and services among our people in such a way that a few are fabulously wealthy and a multitude are grievously poor.

I think we will find a better way to distribute the goods and services we produce. I believe we will get over the idea that it is good enough to increase the standard of living of those at the top by three or four times the extent to which we increase it for those at the bottom and that we will find a better way to distribute our goods and services. Perhaps in the 20, 30 or 40 years to which I have referred we will not achieve economic equality in a country like this, but unless we move toward greater equality and away from an era in which we forever widen the gap between rich and poor, our society will be in a bad way.

I do not subscribe to the economic theories of my hon. friend who moved this motion of which I am now the seconder, but I am glad to see the subject discussed. I commend him for raising it year after year, and I think hon. members who wish to criticize my hon. friend's proposals should come up with something better or we might as well call it five o'clock.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief because I know that other members have something very important to say on the motion moved by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe).

As I always do, I have listened closely to his speech delivered with the impassioned spirit which always impresses the House. His determination to conquer straight off and to revolutionize the whole modern society of our time at one swoop does him credit. The member is very honest, very nice and pleasant, comes from a good family, is a shrewd businessman, but when he makes a speech like the one we have just heard, especially on the theories that he has outlined, I wonder if he is serious, because he knows very well that what he said might possibly apply in a society without any inequalities.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) claims that unless inequalities are removed, there will be problems. That is obvious, because we cannot all be equal. There shall always be more intelligent, more successful people. Short of living in an ideal society, it would be absolutely impossible to achieve this. Socialist and communist states have tried to achieve it, but they have failed.

The hon. member would have us increase allowances by $1 a day. That is the theory that he would have us consider.

The hon. member referred to capitalists and that is why I say again that it is impossible to achieve equality among citizens. There always will be rich and poor people. It is not because needy persons are more stupid than the rich. It is because they cannot improve their lot in their environment. In my opinion, the government must play a suppletory part. Basing ourselves on that theory, we must admit that the rich people must help those of slender means, not to make them richer, but to enable them to lead a normal life and to become first class citizens.

The member is well-intentioned, but his proposals are impractical, except in an ideal society. But if we were living in an ideal society where everyone would be honest and enjoy the same standard of living, jails, schools and Parliament would be useless. In fact, as long as there is people on earth, some will suffer, there will be happy people, poor ones, rich ones and dishonest ones. In a word, there will be all kinds of people.

That is why any good society adopts democracy, because it allows it to make a choice which, in this case, consists in taking from some people to give to others in order to make everybody happy.

That is all I had to say. I believe the hon. members who will speak after me will be able to give figures to support what I have just said. But it would be unthinkable for a self-respecting society to resort to such solutions, particularly to help children who expect so much from politicians!

I hope that when they read our speeches, they will at least be able to say that government members could submit significant data. A close study of the notice of motion now before us makes one realize that it would be practically inconceivable to adopt it.

Family Allowance Act

• (4:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to make a few brief comments on the motion put before the House this afternoon by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe). In many ways it is a very fitting day to have this private member's motion before the House because we have been debating social security, including the guaranteed income supplement, and his motion refers to an improvement in the family allowance program.

I congratulate the hon. member for being so persistent with this motion. He mentioned that for the past eight years, since 1962 I think, he has been placing this motion before the House and debating it each year, and today he was good enough to go through all the details of the ideas and theories which he has developed over those years. I do not think the hon. member should be too disappointed, because on reading the white paper on social security we find that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) proposes to bring in a new family income supplement plan on April 1 next, which will in effect provide the equivalent family allowance of $16 per month per child to families earning up to $10,000 a year.

The hon. member is proposing a family allowance of a dollar a day per child, which is about $30 a month, so we are almost half way to meeting his proposal. However, to implement his proposal immediately, a quick calculation shows that if it were to be a universal program it would cost something like $2.7 billion. At present, family allowances cost something like $560 million and with the increase proposed by the minister I understand the cost will be $660 million. Therefore, a tremendous cost would be involved if we were to implement the hon. member's plan.

Someone recently carried out a study on the cost of implementing a guaranteed annual wage with the floor being the 1967 poverty line. Of course, we have had much inflation since 1967 in the Canadian economy and the poverty line established in 1967 by the Economic Council of Canada is out of date. But even to implement a guaranteed annual income at the 1967 poverty line would cost something like $2 billion in addition to our present social welfare program.

I would like to take a moment or two to look at the other end of the spectrum. This afternoon the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) said his party advocated setting up a universal old age pension of $150 a month across the board and without a means test. I asked him what the cost would be and he was not able to supply it. Since then I have ascertained that there are 1,670,639 people over 65 years of age in Canada, and if you multiply that number by $1,800 you get a figure of slightly over $3 billion. Of course, many people are already receiving old age assistance and the old age supplement and this amount would have to be subtracted from that figure. Therefore we are talking about an additional $1 billion or $2 billion. These programs are very costly if they are universal. If the proposal of the hon. member for Compton were adopted and we were to give each child a dollar a day up until age 16, we would be paying $30 per month per child. To pay a pension of $150 a month at age 65, as advocated by the seconder of the motion, would cost $5 a day from age 65, across the board to every Canadian.

Our primary concern this afternoon is to discuss the family allowance program which first came into being in July, 1945. From July, 1945, until April, 1949, the family allowance was paid on a selective basis depending upon a family's income. In 1949 the income tax exemption for children was made the same for everyone, whether they accepted family allowances or not; therefore, it was to the advantage of most families to accept the allowance. Since 1949, therefore, it can be said that family allowances have been truly universal.

Until September, 1957, there were four rates payable under the family allowance program. For children under six the rate was $5 a month. For children between the ages of six and ten the allowance was $6 a month. For children between 10 and 13 the allowance was $7 a month, and for children between 13 and 16 it was $8 a month. In 1957, however, the $5 and $7 rates were dropped so that a child under ten received $6 a month and children between ten and 16 received $8 a month. The effect of this change was to raise for the majority of children the amounts payable.

In September, 1964, the youth allowances program was introduced. This scheme provides for payment of $10 a month in respect of children aged 16 and 17 who are in full-time attendance in school or university or who by reason of a severe physical or mental ailment are precluded from attending school. At present the youth allowance program is costing in the order of $55 million annually.

In the province of Quebec youth allowances are not paid. In Quebec a similar program entitled "schooling allowance" is in effect. The federal government makes a grant to the province to cover the cost of this schooling allowance. For the fiscal year 1970-71 it is expected that the Quebec program will cost the federal treasury approximately $22,350,000. The current cost of the family allowance program is in the neighbourhood of $560 million. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the minister has tabled a white paper which proposes the introduction of a family income security plan. The family income security plan is one of the measures designed to give greater emphasis to anti-poverty measures. This emphasis should be effected in a manner which enables the greatest concentration of available resources upon those with the lowest incomes. For this reason, selective payments based on income should be made where possible, rather than universal payments which disregard the actual income of the recipient.

• (4:40 p.m.)

The family income security plan, which replaces the family allowances plan in effect, is applicable to all children under 16. Its major proposals are: first, the benefit to be increased to $16 for each dependant child under 16 in families where income is not more than $4,500 a year; second, where family income exceeds $4,500 a year, the rate of benefit will be gradually reduced until a benefit of $5 a month for each child is payable to families of a combined income of $10,000 a year; third, families with incomes in excess of $10,000 a year would no longer receive any family benefit; fourth, family income security benefits would be treated as taxable income of the person who claims the child as a dependant for income tax purposes.

To illustrate the approximate amounts of benefits which will be payable under this proposal at different income levels, I would like to quote the following figures: for incomes up to $4,500, the monthly benefit per child will be $16; for incomes between $4,501 and $5,000, the benefit will be $15; between $5,000 and $5,500 the benefit will be $14, and so on until we reach a family income of between $9,501 and $10,000 when the payment will be the minimum, $5. Over $10,000 the benefit will cease.

Mr. Speaker, what will be the effects of these proposed changes to the family allowance plan? First, the universal payment will no longer be paid to families with higher incomes and resources will be concentrated on those people who are in real or potential need. The proposal will give additional money to people whose own resources are not enough to meet the needs regarded by society as basic. Thus, for the children of families who through no fault of their own are in the low-income bracket the program will provide funds necessary for the maintenance of their children.

The family income security plan will provide real and direct benefit to over 640,000 low-income families. For families with a combined income of $4500 or less the plan will provide payments of $16 a month for each child. This represents a 100 per cent increase for children ten through 15 years of age, and a 167 per cent increase for younger children when compared with the family allowances program of today. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, of 3.1 million families with children under the age of 16, three-fifths will receive higher benefits than those they receive at present under the family allowances plan, and approximately one-fifth of these will receive the full $16 a month benefit.

The family income security plan will increase the incomes of families on social assistance, including most of the 150,000 mothers who are by themselves raising some 330,000 children. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, the program is amendable to future increases in benefit level and to extension to adult family members and to childless persons. The cost of the family income security plan in its first year of operation will be in the neighbourhood of $660 million, or about $100 million more than at present. The higher benefits of the new plan which is proposed will be financed from approximately $270 million of benefits withdrawn from higher income families and by tax recoveries from beneficiaries.

An hon. Member: A lot of research there, Maurice.

An hon. Member: He did his homework.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the family income security plan proposed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare will have the effect of redistributing the present allowances received by families in higher income brackets to those in lower income brackets. This, Mr. Speaker, is a direct attack on poverty. Surely this proposal is putting the dollar where it is needed most. Were the motion of the hon. member to be adopted, and were allowances for all children in Canada less than 16 years of age to be increased by $1 a day, the cost to the federal treasury would be a total of $2.7 billion a year.

An hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Foster: A total of $2.7 billion a year. This is four times the current expenditure of the family allowance program, which costs approximately $560 million. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the proposed family income security plan contained in the white paper on income security proposes the strengthening of the concept of providing guaranteed income support, not universally but on a selective basis related to family income and family needs. The guiding principle in the proposal is to ensure the greatest possible concentration of resources upon the people in greatest need. It reflects a new sense of purpose and social relevance and is a specific response to the particular problems of those in the low-income bracket.

[Translation]

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I shall speak only for a few minutes because I am convinced the hon. members will want this motion to be put to the vote.

The motion is interesting in that it ties in with the discussions we have had since the white paper on social security was tabled.

I do not agree whole-heartedly with the remarks of the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Isabelle) who says simply that there will always be poor people and rich people.

That argument is not valid, when an attempt is being made to solve the problems of the needy. I blame the government on that score.

Something must be done for the poor.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, that attitude is realistic, though.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry says that we must be realistic and I agree with him. But, when older people are paid $80 per month, when war veterans get a mere pittance and mothers receive $6 per month per child, I do not believe this is being realistic.

This morning I received a petition signed by about a hundred mothers, asking for an increase in family allowances.

It is quite true that the white paper published this week by the government suggests increasing to $16 per month family allowances for families having an income of less than $4,500.

An hon. Member: Very good stuff, Louis!

Mr. Comeau: Very good stuff, I agree.

I congratulate the government: at last it has seen the need. If it also agreed to increase the old age pensions and veteran's pensions in the same proportion, I would be very happy.

It is my understanding that this change will take effect in September 1971, and I for one shall certainly support it. However, I fail to see why this measure should disregard a person whose annual income is only $10,000.

Mr. Corbin: Poor people!

Mr. Comeau: It is true that in the opinion of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, some make thousands of dollars and can pretty well get along without that. It is perhaps not logical that I, with only two children, should receive that $12 a month.

There are still families with 7, 8, 9, 10, and even 12 children who absolutely need allowances. Indeed a family, especially in the city, with a salary of only $10,000, is certainly not rich.

I commend the member for his arguments. I do not quite agree with him. Perhaps he is exaggerating when he says we should provide allowances of $1 a day. I wish to commend him as there is no doubt that we must increase them. I think they will be increased again soon.

I do not agree with the member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) whose arguments were based on the cost of the allowances.

Mr. Speaker, money is always available for what one wants to do. After a degree of priority is agreed upon, the required money is easily found.

Talking about cost is not necessarily a good argument since everything is costly nowadays.

Although I did say that I do not accept all of what the hon. member for Compton advocates, I believe the situation can still be improved.

The cost argument is not valid: if there is a will to find money, there is a way. Indeed, if the government should present a policy liable to bring about the harmonious development of our country, everybody would make more money and would pay more taxes. Government revenue would grow and, consequently, pensions could be raised.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit me a question?

Mr. Comeau: Provided it is brief.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. member whether he considers that the increase in family allowances has priority over the development of the Bay of Fundy tide-driven plant.

Mr. Comeau: Both these projects, Mr. Speaker, should be given top priority.

[English]

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Louder, please.

Mr. Perrault: —the matter before the House relates to an important aspect of income security, namely, the present Family Allowances Act. I should like to say, however, that in the past two days we have heard an incredible amount of pathos and bathos from opposition members who have been suggesting that this government is made up of a group of hard-hearted, tight-fisted, flint-souled people who are not concerned about the welfare of the underprivileged.

Mr. Comeau: That is quite right.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Well put.

Mr. Perrault: We have listened to this great outpouring of sentiment for the underprivileged in our society. I remind hon. members that not only does the present government feel great concern for those with large families who need improved family allowances, to whom the hon. member has referred, but that the members of this party are willing to act on behalf of the underprivileged.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Perrault: We recognize, on this side of the House—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Apparently the Liberal party is willing to undo what it has done.

Mr. Perrault: —that the families of our nation deserve more help, as do our senior citizens.

Mr. Comeau: Then why does the government not help them?

Mr. Perrault: The unemployed need more help, also. I say this to hon. members: No nation in the world is doing more for its senior citizens and families, and for those who are dispossessed and underprivileged, than is this nation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Louder!

Mr. Perrault: This is a matter of record. Oh, we have heard the other parties, the Social Credit supporters especially, saying that we must help families. Last night the financial critic of the Conservative Party sounded like the voice of Christmas past when he said something like, "We want to see Liberal proposals that will bring about improved assistance for the underprivileged in society." What about the record of Conservative governments, provincial and federal, in these areas?

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Perrault: They have not matched, in any sense, the generosity shown by successive Liberal governments, federal and provincial. And what about provincial Social Credit governments in Canada? Not one of them has a record that is as creditable as that of the federal Liberal government of today. Last year an NDP government was elected in the province of Manitoba. The unemployed, at a special convention condemned the NDP for failing to assist the unemployed who were suffering.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Louder!

Mr. Perrault: And then they proceeded to move resolutions showing they wanted to chuck that government out of office.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Smile, Ray.

Mr. Perrault: You know, Mr. Speaker, these other parties discovered when they were in government that there is an inevitability to financial laws and that governments must bring order to their priorities. Surely, we must help the families of Canada; but we must help those families which need our help most.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Perrault: No doubt the hon. member is asking for unanimous consent to allow me to continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My point of order is this. I believe the House is so enjoying the hon. member's speech that it would like to hear the rest of it.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Bell: It is too hard on the staff.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Who said no?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): According to the rules of this House a certain procedure must be followed if we want to extend the hours of sitting. Since this procedure has not been followed, I have no choice but to say that the hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at two o'clock, pursuant to paragraph 1 of Standing Order 2.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, December 7, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

STATUS OF WOMEN

TABLING OF REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table copies in the two official languages of the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in Canada.

* * *

TRADE

TABLING OF AIDE-MÉMOIRE AND NOTE TO UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as promised by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on November 25 last, I have the honour of tabling on his behalf the memorandum and note sent to the American government on the trade policy of the United States.

* * *

[English]

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra) moved that the first report of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, presented to the House on Friday, December 4, 1970, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACTS

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DISSOLUTION AND TERM OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-206, to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1965 (Duration of House of Commons).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Speaker, this bill is designed to be a small step in the direction of returning the focus of government in this country to Parliament, where it belongs. The measures advocated in the bill would, hopefully, increase the influence of the individual Members of Parliament through broadening the range of issues upon which free votes would be possible, thereby strengthening Parliament's role in the policy formation process. Specifically, the bill would take away the right of the Prime Minister to recommend dissolution of Parliament and place that power in the hands of Parliament by establishing a set term of four years for Parliament, except—

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member to remind him that he cannot make the statement at this time which he would normally make on second reading. He can only explain the bill briefly. I am not sure whether the hon. member considers his statement to be brief, but he should bring it to a close as quickly as possible.

Mr. Rowland: For me, Mr. Speaker, this is brief. I will bring it to a close as quickly as possible. The bill establishes a set term of four years for Parliament, except in the eventuality that the government is defeated on a specific motion of want of confidence, or if it is defeated on a bill or a portion of a bill—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Unfortunately for the hon. member, the standards of brevity which apply are the Speaker's standards, and the hon. member has exceeded those standards. I must therefore ask the House whether the hon. member has leave to introduce the said bill.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

AUDITOR GENERAL

PROVISION FOR APPOINTMENT, SALARY AND DUTIES

On the order: Introduction of Bills:

December 4, 1970—Mr. Baldwin—Bill intituled: "An Act respecting the Auditor General of Canada".

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will suspect that the Chair has serious reservations about the bill in respect, of course, of its financial aspects. The hon. member knows that a bill which has financial aspects has to be preceded by a royal recommendation. The hon. member very imaginatively has seized upon the recommendation which had been received in respect of a bill which was before the House previously and has been withdrawn. The hon.

member apparently considered that the recommendation was still floating around in a vacuum and seized upon it and decided to apply it to his own bill.

The hon. member realizes he has to convince the Chair that His Excellency has actually communicated with the hon. member for Peace River and advised him that he would support his bill and was recommending it for the consideration of the House. I have not been in touch with His Excellency to confirm this, but I would like the reassurance of the hon. member that His Excellency has actually recommended this bill and not another bill which was before the House previously.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I will start by saying that His Excellency did not get in touch with me over the weekend to inform me that he had withdrawn his recommendation. On the assumption that Your Honour might like to hear argument on this point, I have prepared some material.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Yes or no?

Mr. Baldwin: I see that I have a hanging jury on the other side. They are against me before I even start. Last Thursday the government somewhat reluctantly withdrew Bill C-190. Bill C-190 had been introduced pursuant to a recommendation of His Excellency which first appeared on the order paper on Friday, November 13 in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) who was not in the House at either the birth or the death of his bill. The recommendation was as follows:

> His Excellency the Governor General recommends to the House of Commons a measure respecting the Auditor General of Canada to provide for the appointment, salary and duties of the Auditor General and for the appointment of the required officers and employees.

On November 16 the bill was introduced by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) for the President of the Treasury Board in precisely those terms.

I have three grounds upon which I base my submission that this bill can be introduced and proceeded with at least as far as third reading before any question can arise. Even then, in the light of the special circumstances here I submit that no question should arise.

About three weeks ago, in connection with an application I made in the course of a debate on the Canada Grain Act I argued very strongly and, I believe, correctly, that an amendment which the government had introduced to that Act was not covered by the recommendation and that it should not be allowed for that reason. Your Honour then ruled that the amendment was, in fact, merely a repetition of a previous statutory provision which was repealed by the present Grain Act and that the recommendation of His Excellency need not be varied. This is my first point, and I urge it strongly upon Your Honour.

My second point is that the bill is covered by the recommendation of His Excellency which was expressed in the wording I have read in respect of a measure dealing with the Auditor General of Canada, providing for his appointment, salary, duties, and so on. I shall not take up the time of the House by reading what took place in this chamber last Friday although I have read the record with some interest. When the President of the Privy Council withdrew the bill on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board he presented the House with a unique situation, as Your Honour pointed out. Here was a money bill, brought in pursuant to a recommendation by His Excellency which simply said in very general terms that a measure could be introduced in respect of the Auditor General. There is no suggestion that the recommendation has been withdrawn; the bill has been withdrawn but the recommendation still exists. Moreover, we have heard time and time again from the Prime Minister and from the President of the Treasury Board that this was not the government's bill. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, we did not take this too seriously; we thought hon. gentlemen opposite were trifling with the truth when they said this. But the point they made over and over again was that this was not the government's bill but a bill they had seen fit to bring in consequent upon recommendations by a committee of this House. In these circumstances I submit that the recommendation stands, and that if it is possible for any hon. member to bring in a bill which falls within the four corners of the recommendation, it should be accepted.

[Mr. Speaker.]

The bill I have brought in deals with the Auditor General; it deals with the appointment of the Auditor General, the salary of the Auditor General and the duties of the Auditor General precisely as established in the recommendation which His Excellency made to the government for the benefit of the House of Commons. I contend that as a member of the House of Commons I am entitled to take advantage of the situation. Since there is a recommendation with no bill, I have fitted a bill to the recommendation. The measure I propose ought not to be refused merely because it varies to some extent from the one put forward on behalf of the government, merely because it provides for better conditions for the Auditor General and for the exercise of a greater measure of objectivity in his operations. Otherwise, as I say, it falls squarely within the ambit of the recommendation.

I should like to read to Your Honour one citation from Beauchesne which appears to cover this point—Citation 251:

> It may happen that the resolution sanctions some expenditure without fixing the maximum amount to be spent. If, for instance, the resolution recommends that adequate salaries be paid a newly constituted body and the amounts of the salaries are fixed in the Bill based on that resolution, the Committee on the Bill has the right to increase those amounts—

• (2:20 p.m.)

I suggest that that is authority for the proposition that, when the recommendation is there and is couched in general terms and no bill is before the House, it is proper for a private member to bring a bill in on the basis on which I brought in this bill.

Over and above that, my third point is that I rely on the fact that as the Standing Orders now exist they do not prohibit a member from introducing and debating a bill relating to financial expenditures, though they may inhibit his right to have the bill brought to a position where a vote can be taken on it. I base this point on the vague possibility that Your Honour may not agree with what I have said so far.

Section 54 of the British North America Act, is, of course well known. It provides as follows:

It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass—

I call Your Honour's attention to those words, "to adopt or pass".

—any Vote, Resolution, Address, or Bill for the Appropriation of any Part of the Public Revenue—to any Purpose that has not been first recommended to that House by Message of the Governor General—

I point out in that regard that historically the Quebec resolutions and the London resolutions, upon which the British North America Act was based, contain somewhat different wording. They contain the wording that "it shall not be lawful to originate or pass". In place of the words "to originate", the British House of Commons, in enacting the British North America Act, used the words "to adopt or pass".

I call to Your Honour's attention that there is a plain difference between the words "to originate" and "to adopt". As the British North America Act has been passed, there is a leeway on the part of any private member to introduce and to debate a bill, but not to require the House to come to the stage of adopting and passing the bill on third reading. The way the House got around that was that in the Standing Orders as they existed before the rule changes we made in 1962 there was a condition precedent that it was essential for there to be a financial resolution, and the financial resolution had to be introduced by a minister and debated in the House. That way provided a practical means whereby a private member, not being able to introduce such a resolution, was inhibited from being able to say that not only did a private member have the right to introduce a bill dealing with money but also to have it debated.

In 1968 when we made our changes to the rules this particular provision was repealed. In place of Standing Order 61 the House introduced Standing Order 62. The first part is simply a re-enactment, a copying, of section 54 of the British North America Act. Subclause 2 provides that there shall be a certain procedure, through the means of printing a recommendation on the notice paper and in Votes and Proceedings when a measure dealing with financial expenditures is to be passed.

My submission is that anything that prohibits a private member from introducing a measure of this kind must fall within the four corners of Standing Order 62(2). My brief contention in this regard is that that Standing Order constitutes, in effect, an attempt by this House of Commons to amend and to change section 54 of the British North America Act. The British North America Act makes it quite plain that it is competent for any private member to originate, but not to seek to have passed, a bill that deals with financial measures, and this House is not competent on its own to repeal the British North America Act.

Under those circumstances I urge that on any one of those three grounds Your Honour might well allow the introduction of this bill. This would give the House the opportunity to discuss and to debate freely and honestly what in its opinion should be the proper duties of the Auditor General. This officer, who acts on behalf of the taxpayers of this country, must have some clarification of his role, some expansion of his independence and his objectivity, without which the sufferings of the taxpayers will continue ad nauseam.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw Your Honour's attention to just one precedent which I think can be presented in support of the position taken by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). I believe it also goes directly to the question Your Honour raised, namely, whether the recommendation of the Governor General can float around in a vacuum and be picked up by anyone who wants to use it or whether it has to be attached to a particular measure.

I ask Your Honour to look at page 423 of the Journals of the House of Commons for Monday, May 19, 1947. For those of us who deal in procedural matters that is relevantly recent. It so happens that three days earlier, on May 16, we had tabled a petition signed by John Beckett of Winnipeg, Manitoba, and 256,282 other persons praying that the Old Age Pensions Act be amended. Our petition called for the pension, which was then $30 a month, to be raised to $50 a month, for payment to be made at age 65, for the means test to be eliminated, and for various other improvements to be made. Hon. members will realize that these requests involved the expenditure of money. Therefore there might be assumed to be some question whether a petition which asked for these changes could possibly be in order.

The page in the Journals to which I draw your attention records the report of the Clerk of Petitions on the petition that we had presented a few days earlier. I believe that the Clerk of the House of Commons is the Clerk of Petitions, and the Clerk of the House of Commons at that time was none other than Dr. Arthur Beauchesne. After citing the terms of our petition he said:

Although this petition prays for an increase in old age pensions, I submit that the Governor General having already recommended that the scope of the Old Age Pensions Act be amended to increase the amounts to be paid, the constitutional rule that petitions asking for an expenditure of public money are irregular does not apply in this case.

I find that all the requirements of Standing Order 68 have been complied with.

I feel quite certain that Dr. Beauchesne did not go to see the Governor General of that day to find out whether he supported our petition, but he took the view that there was a Governor General's recommendation in favour of an increase in old age pensions and therefore he found our petition in order. I submit there is an analogous situation before us now. There is a Governor General's recommendation that something be done in respect of the Auditor General, and now we have a bill that can make use of that recommendation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If there is no further discussion on the matter I am quite prepared to give a ruling at this time. I have given serious thought to the matter in that the hon. member indicated a few days ago this bill would be introduced. As I said, I have given serious consideration to the procedural aspects of the hon. member's proposed bill and I am quite prepared now to give my views of the situation.

I have to recognize that the argument proposed by the hon. member for Peace River, gallantly supported by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, is interesting but, I suggest, nothing more. I cannot in any way agree with the hon. member for Peace River. Again I say that he has to receive some kind of commendation from the Chair and those interested in procedure for the arguments which he has submitted for the consideration of the Chair and all hon. members, but I would not think hon. members would expect the Chair to accept those arguments. They point again to the difficulty relating to private members' bills. I fully appreciate this. I gather there have been discussions between representatives of the parties and that there is an intention to have the whole question of private members' public bills referred to the Committee on Procedure and Organization. This would include the bill of the hon. member for Peace River, apart from this one, which is on the order paper and which will bring the whole matter to the fore. It will then be possible for the Committee on Procedure and Organization to make recommendations to the House in respect of the handling of public bills introduced by private members.

• (2:30 p.m.)

The difficulty of course is that no hon. member, including a member of the Cabinet, can introduce a public bill which implies the expenditure of public funds without a recommendation of His Excellency. This applies not only to private members but to members of the government. They cannot introduce such a bill without the recommendation of His Excellency.

In the case of the Auditor General's bill such a recommendation was required. The bill was introduced to the House with the recommendation. It is of course a very novel approach to say that that bill having been withdrawn the recommendation is still available for anyone who desires to introduce a bill which might be called the same thing but which provides for something different. The hon. member I am sure would be the first to admit that his bill is not on all fours with the one which was presented by the government. Having admitted that himself, at this moment he has put himself out of court because it is a different bill. His Excellency recommended a bill which was different. He looked at that bill and said to us, "I have seen the bill and recommend it to the House", and it is that bill he recommended. That bill having been withdrawn I do not think it is necessary for His Excellency to communicate with us and ask us to return the recommendation.

The hon. member cannot deal with a bill once it has been withdrawn. There is no recommendation for the hon. member to seize upon and attach somewhat artificially to his own bill. This having been said I would say I cannot accept the hon. member's suggestion and I have to tell him that his bill cannot be read a first time at this time or at any time.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CREATION OF SPECIAL RESERVE AREAS IN CANADA'S NORTHLAND

Question No. 55—Mr. Orlikow:

Has the Government of Canada decided on which special reserve areas in Canada's northland in which resource development activity is to be banned and (a) if so (i) what are they (ii) what criteria were used to identify them (b) if not, when is it anticipated that they will be created?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The Government of Canada and those departments responsible for development and for conservation in the north have not yet completed their studies of special reserve areas in which resource development activity is to be banned. There are certain areas now being investigated for national parks, special ecological areas under the auspices of the International Biological Program and archaeological sites which will be considered for withdrawal at a later date in an orderly schedule commensurate with present and future requirements. The Government of Canada is particularly cognizant of the need to protect the northern environment because of the critical sensitivity of this environment, and has accepted the principle that unique areas, unless they must be developed in the national interest, must be protected even if no immediate need for aesthetic appreciation or research can be justified. (a) (i) One of the areas withdrawn is the East Arm, Great Slave Lake (Artillery Lake) area consisting of approximately 2,860 square miles. This area was withdrawn from further alienation under the Territorial Lands Act on March 24, 1970. (P.C. 1970-526 and 527) for the purpose of a future national park subject to consultation and agreement with the Indian people. Wood Buffalo National Park was established in 1922. The Thelon Game Sanctuary, established originally under the Northwest Game Act in 1927, is given protection from mining activity by exclusion, and it is not open for staking under the Canada Mining Regulations. There are 16 migratory bird sanctuaries in Canada's northland but these areas are not completely excluded from resource development. These sanctuaries were withdrawn under the Migratory Birds Convention Act. (a) (ii) The criteria used include: (a) Uniqueness of a particular area in terms of landscape, habitat for a particular species of animal or occurrence or other rare biotic or abiotic forms. (b) A specific area for withdrawal may be outlined as being representative of a much larger area which may be defined as units or sub-units of a physiographic area or land form which it is in the national interest to preserve. (c) Preservation of archaeological sites. (d) The potential of the area to meet the objectives set in Section 4 of the National Parks Act dedicating national parks to the people of Canada for their benefit, education and enjoyment. (b) Not applicable.

VISITS OF AMBASSADORS AND HEADS OF MISSIONS TO NORTHERN CANADA

Question No. 108—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. How many foreign ambassadors travelled to Northern Canada, visiting Norman Wells, Inuvik, etc., (a) during September, 1970 (b) during October, 1970?
2. Who were they and what countries did they represent?
3. What country hosted the tour?
4. What were the total expenses incurred by the tour?
5. What was the purpose of the tour?

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Ambassors and other heads and acting heads of mission (a) 20; (b) 19.

2. Tour No. 1 (September 23-29, 1970): Greece, His Excellency Aristide N. Pilavachi, Ambassador; Jamaica, His Excellency Vincent H. McFarlane, High Commissioner; China, His Excellency Yu-chi Hsueh, Ambassador; Colombia, His Excellency Luis Ernesto Ordonez, Ambassador; Swaziland, His Excellency Dr. S. T. M. Sukati, High Commissioner; Israel, His Excellency Ephraim Evron, Ambassador; Japan, His Excellency Shinyichi Kondo, Ambassador; Austria, His Excellency Dr. Eduard Schiller, Ambassador; Venezuela, His Excellency Wolfgang Larrazàbal, Ambassador; India, His Excellency A. B. Bhadkamkar, High Commissioner; Czechoslovakia, His Excellency Bretislav Matanoha, Ambassador; Brazil, His Excellency Frank Moscoso, Ambassador; Nigeria, His Excellency Edward O. Enahoro, High Commissioner; Afghanistan, His Excellency Abdullah Malikyar, Ambassador; Holy See, His Excellency the Most Reverend Guido del Mestri, Pro-Nuncio; Uruguay, Mr. Gualberto H. Urtiaga, Chargé d'Affaires a.i.; Ceylon, Mr. M. Rabot, Acting High Commissioner; Germany, Mr. Wilhelm Fabricius, Chargé d'Affaires a.i.; Thailand, Mr. Sirajaya Buddhi-Baedya, Chargé d'Affaires a.i.; Belgium, Mr. Jules Marchal, Consellor.

Tour No. 2 (October 5-11, 1970): Argentina, His Excellency Constantino Ramos, Ambassador; Lebanon, His Excellency Dr. Alif Gébara, Ambassador; Barbados, His Excellency C. B. Williams, High Commissioner; Netherlands, His Excellency Theo H. Bot, Ambassador; Bulgaria, His Excellency Kiril Chterev, Ambassador; Indonesia, His Excellency R. D. Bandoro, High Commissioner; Peru, His Excellency César A. De La Fuente, Ambassador; France, His Excellency Pierre Siraud, Ambassador; Turkey, His Excellency Irfan Tansel, Ambassador; Cuba, His Excellency Dr. José Fernandez de Cossio, Ambassador; Tunisia, His Excellency Dr. Abdelaziz Hamzaoui, Ambassador; Sweden, His Excellency Ake Malmaeus, Ambassador; Pakistan, His Excellency M. S. Shaikh, High Commissioner; Korea, His Excellency Pil Shik Chin, Ambassador; Spain, His Excellency Juan José Rovira, Ammassador; South Africa, His Excellency Matthys Izak Botha, Ambassador; Hungary, Mr. Gyula Baranyi, Chargé d'Affaires a.i.; Congo, Mr. Jean-Baptiste Mbila, Chargé d'Affaires a.i.; Portugal, Dr. Da Silva Preto, Chargé d'Affaires a.i.

3. Government of Canada.

4. The estimated cost of the two tours is $43,000, an amount which is being shared by three departments, National Defence, External Affairs and Indian Affairs and Northern Development. All the accounts have not been received, but it is likely that the actual costs could be slightly lower than the estimate.

5. The purpose of the tour was to provide heads of mission accredited to the Government of Canada with an opportunity to see at first hand something of the Canadian north and the developments taking place there. Throughout the world there is growing appreciation of the economic potential of the North and of its peculiar vulnerability to such environmental problems as pollution and erosion. As a result there is considerable interest abroad in the Canadian Government's determination to ensure that as the development of Northern Canada proceeds the environment and the well being of the people are protected. Often the problems involved are not well understood. It therefore seemed desirable that heads of mission in Ottawa see for themselves conditions in the Canadian north and the progress being made there both in terms of utilizing the natural resources and of improving living conditions through the provision of better education, housing and health services. It was hoped that in this way the heads of mission would be able to understand and report more fully to their governments on the policies that Canada is pursuing in its northern areas.

Although travel facilities in the North have improved greatly in recent years, it is still difficult for someone on his own to obtain a comprehensive view of the region in a brief period of time. Some assistance on the part of the Canadian Government was necessary and it was concluded that this could be provided most effectively by means of an organized tour.

Questions

WELLS DRILLED BY PANARCTIC OILS LIMITED IN CANADA'S NORTH

Question No. 195—Mr. Saltsman:

1. Since its inception, how many wells have been drilled by Panarctic Oils Limited in Canada's north and, in each case, where were these wells located?

2. What wells have been abandoned by Panarctic, and at what depths?

3. What is the estimated expenditure in the above well-drilling projects?

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1 and 2.

Name	Location	Depth (feet)	Present Status
Panarctic Drake Point N-67	Melville Island		under active operations
Panarctic Sandy Point L-46	Melville Island	6,895	abandoned
Panarctic Marie Bay D-02	Melville Island	4,175	abandoned
Panarctic Drake Point L-67 (first relief well)	Melville Island	10,671	suspended gas well
Panarctic Towson Point G-67	Melville Island	5,123	abandoned
Panarctic Hoodoo Dome H-37	Ellef Ringnes Island	11,072	abandoned
Panarctic Homestead Hecla J-60	Melville Island	11,865	abandoned
Panarctic Drake Point K-67 (second relief well)	Melville Island		under active operations
Panarctic King Christian D-18	King Christian Island		under active operations
Panarctic Amund Central Dome H-40	Amund Ringnes Island		under active operations

3. According to information received from Panartic Oils Ltd., all-inclusive gross costs applicable to the six wells that have been completed or abandoned are approximately $11.9 million.

DEBT OWED BY CEYLON TO CANADA

Question No. 280—Mr. Robinson:

What debt, if any, is owed by Ceylon to Canada and what are the terms of repayment?

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): The answer in so far as CIDA is concerned, is $11,000,000 comprised of nine development loans. Two development loans amounting to $2,500,000 have a repayment period of 50 years with a grace period of ten years and a service and commitment charge of ¾ of 1 per cent. The remaining seven loans amounting to $8,500,000 have a repayment period of 50 years, a grace period of ten years and an interest rate of 0 per cent.

POSITION OF MR. S. SIDDIQI—DEPARTMENT OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES

Question No. 288—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Does Mr. S. Siddiqi work for the Department of Supply and Services and, if so, in what position?

2. What are the responsibilities and functions of Mr. Siddiqi's position?

3. When did Mr. Siddiqi join the Department?

4. Has Mr. Siddiqi been seconded on loan for nine months to the Air Industries Association of Canada and, if so, who is paying Mr. Siddiqi's salary during that period of time?

[Mr. Buchanan.]

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes. Project Officer, Shipbuilding and Heavy Equipment Branch.

2. Procurement of technically complex systems, products and services with duties requiring the conduct of all phases of the purchasing cycle, including planning, facility and bid evaluations, contract negotiations and document control and related administration.

3. July 24, 1967.

4. Yes. Mr. Siddiqi's salary is paid by the Department of Supply and Services and the full amount is recovered from the Air Industries Association of Canada. The loan of Mr. Siddiqi to the Association is in keeping with the Government's policy of interchange of Government employees with personnel from the private sector.

DEBT OWED BY JAMAICA TO CANADA

Question No. 329—Mr. Fortin:

How much does Jamaica owe Canada and what are the repayment terms?

[Translation]

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): In so far as CIDA is concerned, the answer is: $10,000,000 comprised of thirteen development loans. Eight loans amounting to $5,475,000 have a maturity of fifty years, a grace period of ten years and a service and commitment charge of ¾ of 1 per cent. Four loans totalling $4,025,000 have a maturity of thirty years, a grace period of seven years and an interest rate of 3 per cent. The last remaining loan in the amount of $500,000 has a maturity of twenty-three years, a grace period of seven years and an interest rate of 3 per cent.

[English]

FUTURE OF CANADIAN EXCHANGE RATE

Question No. 410—Mr. Saltsman:

Will the Government of Canada give assurance to Parliament that the Canadian exchange rate will be allowed to remain on a floating basis for the next twelve months?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): No. It remains the intention of the Canadian Government to resume the fulfilment of its obligations under the Articles of Agreement of the International Monetary Fund as soon as circumstances permit.

CANADIAN WILDLIFE SERVICE—RESEARCH MADE ON SHOT SHELLS

Question No. 442—Mr. Anderson:

1. Has the Canadian Wildlife Service made any report on the use of iron shot or teflon coated lead shot in shot shells to replace the untreated lead shot now in use?

2. Has the Canadian Wildlife Service set a date after which the sale and manufacture of untreated lead shot shells is prohibited and, if so, what is that date?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. No. Research in materials to replace lead in shot shells was conducted by the U.S. Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife. The Canadian Wildlife Service, in co-operation with the National Research Council, is conducting tests on the effect of hard shot materials on gun barrels. The preliminary results of those studies are contained in a National Research Council report DME MP-53.

2. No. A date has not been set because at the present time there is no known method of treating lead shot to eliminate or reduce its toxicity.

SALE OF LICENCES FOR HUNTING OF POLAR BEARS

Question No. 467—Mr. Coates:

1. Have complaints been received by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development with regard to the sale of licences for the hunting of polar bears?

2. What are the regulations for the hunting of polar bears and what is the licence fee?

3 How many polar bears have been killed through the issuing of hunting licences by the Department in the past five years?

4. Is there any danger that the polar bear will become extinct and, if so, what action is being taken to protect the species?

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes, for the sports hunting of polar bears.

2. An amendment to the NWT Game Ordinance allowing the sports hunting of polar bear was passed by the Council of the Northwest Territories in January 1970. The amendment permits the sale of a polar bear sports hunting licence to three classes of subject, namely: (a) Territorial residents charged a fee of $50; (b) Canadian citizens charged a fee of $150; and (c) non-resident aliens charged a fee of $250. A licence holder must be accompanied by a licensed guide who is in possession of a polar bear seal. This is to ensure that the number of animals to be taken by sport hunters will be deducted from the present quota allowed to holders of general hunting licences. Therefore, under the legislation a sport hunter must buy his licence from the Territorial Government hire an Eskimo guide and outfitter who is in possession of a polar bear seal indicating that one animal from the settlement quota has been assigned to him by the settlement council, and also pay the settlement council a fee of $1,000 for releasing that part of their quota to him as the quota is granted to the settlement, not to individuals.

3. Licences for the sport hunting of polar bear are issued under the Northwest Territories Game Ordinance and as the legislation was only passed in January 1970, it is impossible to give a total over the past five years. Since January 1970, four (4) polar bears have been killed through the issuing of sports hunting licences.

4. No, at a recent international meeting of polar bear scientists it was determined that under the quota system Eskimo hunting does not now threaten the survival of the polar bear population. However, concern was expressed about specific subpopulations and as a result the Canadian Wildlife Service, in cooperation with the Northwest Territories Government, is continuing studies of the polar bear population and distribution and a complete review of the kill limit and the quota allotment to various settlements is to be carried out in 1971.

INCOME TAX AMENDMENT TO ALLOW REPRESENTATION ALLOWANCES FOR SCHOOL COMMISSIONERS

Question No. 507—Mr. Rodrigue:

Has the Minister of Finance considered the possibility of amending the Income Tax Act so that part of the amount received by school commissioners be considered as a representation allowance?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Deductions from income for tax purposes are a matter of Government policy. If the Government should decide to propose an amendment to the Income Tax Act to make the suggested change, it will be announced at the appropriate time.

LABELLING OF "VAPONA"

Question No. 508—Mrs. MacInnis:

Does the Department of Agriculture intend to take action similar to that in the United States by requesting that the manufacture of "VAPONA", Shell Oil Company, include warnings on labels that the strips should not be used in kitchens, dining rooms or food preparation areas and, if not, what are the reasons?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, since conclusions drawn from collaborative evaluation of toxicological and residue data by the Department of Agriculture and the Food and Drug Directorate, Department of National Health and Welfare, have reconfirmed that the use of these strips, in accordance with label directions, does not represent a hazard to human health.

Inquiries of the Ministry

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE—REDUCTION IN MAN-HOURS AS A RESULT OF UTILIZATION OF COMPUTERS

Question No. 535—Mr. Robinson:

How many man-hours have been saved as a result of the utilization of computers by the Department of Agriculture during each year since computers have been used?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Records are not maintained in such a manner as to provide this information. The computer is used extensively in the Department as a tool for research, much of which would not be possible without this facility.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE—LAY-OFFS AND HIRINGS AS A RESULT OF USE OF COMPUTERS

Question No. 536—Mr. Robinson:

As a result of the use of computers by the Department of Agriculture how many employees have been (a) laid off (b) hired?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): (a) Nil; (b) 228.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EXTENSION OF BENEFITS ON INTERIM BASIS—TERMINATION OF PAYMENTS DURING WINTER MONTHS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Are he and the government giving any consideration to a measure to extend the period of benefits under unemployment insurance on an interim basis in view of the difficulties we face this winter? I ask this question because a few weeks ago he indicated he preferred employment to unemployment insurance benefits, which we all accept, but since the government has recognized the importance of increasing benefits, is the government now prepared to recognize the importance of extending these benefits on an interim basis?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, because of the particular season of the year, from December 15 on we have what are known as seasonal benefits which make it much easier to extend the duration of the normal benefits that we would expect to be in force at other times of the year. I feel we have enough latitude in that regard because of the seasonal benefit feature which permits a relaxation of the normal attachment to unemployment insurance, and that we should proceed in the proper manner, by increasing the benefits rather than by extending the duration of the benefits.

Mr. Stanfield: Has the minister had prepared an estimate of the number of persons on unemployment insurance who will have to go off it in the course of the winter months because their benefits will expire even with the seasonal arrangements he has suggested?

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, the estimate of the number of people on unemployment insurance is at the best an estimate which is usually made by the Unemployment Insurance Commission in conjunction with the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and is usually based on the experiences of previous years. Whether or not people will be removed from the rolls during the winter months depends, of course, on the type of work attachment and the number of stamps presently in the person's book, but it is not the policy of the Unemployment Insurance Commission to apply these rules with any degree of severity in the winter months, particularly in respect of those who come under the seasonal benefit arrangement.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, would the minister obtain from the Unemployment Insurance Commission the commission's estimate of what the situation may be and would he at a convenient opportunity give this information to the House?

Mr. Mackasey: I certainly can inquire whether it is at all possible to obtain this information with any degree of accuracy. Of course it is based on the labour attachment of the claimants when they first come into the plan. It is difficult to inform the House with any degree of accuracy but at least I will try.

INTEGRATION WITH MANPOWER OFFICES

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that the Unemployment Insurance Commission offices are separate from the Manpower offices, would the minister advise the House whether he is taking any steps toward co-ordinating or integrating these two departments?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): The degree of co-ordination is not to be measured by the physical presence of Manpower and the Unemployment Insurance Commission in the same building. I would say we have never had more co-ordination or co-operation than in recent months.

* * *

MANPOWER

EXTENSION OF UPGRADING PROGRAM—ALLOCATION OF FUNDS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has the government taken a decision yet on the extension of the manpower upgrading program which is complementary to the government plan to increase unemployment insurance benefits? If so, can he state whether a plan has been devised to allocate these funds by provinces?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the part of the decision that has been taken in this regard is well known to the House. No further decision has been taken.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have recognized the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I shall return to the hon. member for St. John's East in a moment.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for St. John's East has a supplementary to a previous question.

Mr. McGrath: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration because I do not think the minister understood my question in the first instance. In light of the serious anticipated increase in unemployment, has the government reached a decision yet on extending substantially the manpower upgrading program and, if so, has a plan been devised whereby funds for this program will be allocated by provinces?

Mr. Lang: I will be glad to repeat my answer so that the hon. member may now understand it. I indicated that additions to our program in this area have been previously announced to the House. In answer to his question, no further decisions beyond that announcement have been taken.

* * *

STATUS OF WOMEN

COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS—NATIONAL DAY CARE ACT—ABORTION

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the strong recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women for the adoption of a national day care Act, is the government prepared to take immediate steps to secure the agreement of the provinces to the enactment of such legislation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the report has just been tabled this afternoon. Cabinet only took cognizance of it last Thursday. We wish to conduct the usual study before making any statement on it. Of course, as the hon. member knows, under the Canada Assistance Plan we are already participating in the payment for day care centres set up by the provinces.

Mrs. MacInnis: Is the government prepared to introduce legislation this session to effect changes in the Criminal Code relating to abortion which are in line with the commission's recommendations?

Mr. Trudeau: The same answer, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I wish you would not abort me before I ask one more question. In view of the fact that the report was three years in the making and its recommendations on this matter are very definite, could the Prime Minister tell us how soon we may expect legislation?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member is repeating substantially the question asked previously.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DISPOSITION OF ROYAL COMMISSION REPORT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the Prime Minister how soon we may expect some statement from the government as to what disposition it intends to make of this report, whether the report will be sent to a standing committee of the House or whether the government intends to bring down legislation directly to implement some of the recommendations? Will a statement be made in the near future by the government regarding the report?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): First we will consider the report; then we will announce to the House what course we will follow.

COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS—EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if particular attention will be given at an early date to the recommendations regarding the employment of women in the Public Service which, after all, is a matter which comes completely within the federal purview?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not know how long members of the opposition have had this report in their hands but we have just received it; therefore I cannot answer all these questions.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister said the government has had the report since last Thursday—we have had it for only half an hour.

* * *

[Translation]

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ALLEGED INFILTRATION OF FLQ CELLS

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Can he tell the house if RCMP officers were or are still infiltrated in FLQ cells?

* * *

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MEETING WITH PROVINCES ON POSSIBILITY OF RAISING MINIMUM WAGES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I would like to address a question to the Prime Minister. As the information which has been the result of the hearings of the Senate Committee on Poverty clearly indicates that more than half of the nearly five million people living in poverty in Canada are working, most of them for minimum wages, is it the intention of the government in the near future to hold a meeting with representatives of the provinces to discuss the possibilities of raising minimum wages all across Canada to a point where recipients and their families can emerge from poverty?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am sure the provinces heard the representation of the hon. member.

Mr. Hees: I wonder whether the Prime Minister would hear my representation in this supplementary question. When will he start doing as much to help those who are willing to work for a living as those who are unwilling to work for a living?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: I must say to him that if I ever have need of a heart transplant—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

GRAIN

DISCUSSIONS WITH ELEVATOR COMPANIES ON POSSIBLE REDUCTION IN STORAGE RATES

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): My question is for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the proposed termination of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and bearing in mind that there is no need for additional grain storage facilities in Canada in the foreseeable future, could the minister say whether any discussions have taken place or are taking place with the elevator companies regarding a possible reduction in grain storage rates?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Of course, discussions on rates go on periodically in light of all the circumstances which occur. Some discussions have in fact taken place in the not too distant past.

Mr. Downey: Could the minister indicate to the House whether there is any possibility of reductions?

Mr. Lang: It is really premature to comment on the new circumstances which will occur. Over the years the companies have tended to indicate that the storage rates have been higher and the handling rates lower than were required in economic terms. Of course, while there may be a lower amount of grain in storage, it is also anticipated that there will be a higher amount of grain moving through the facilities, and it is my hope that this will in a large way offset the problem for the companies.

REQUEST THAT MARKETING OF RYE, FLAX AND RAPESEED BE BROUGHT UNDER WHEAT BOARD

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): In view of the statement at the annual meeting of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool that the marketing of rye, flax and rapeseed should be brought under the operations of the Canadian Wheat Board, and in view of the unsatisfactory operation of the futures market in recent months in regard to rapeseed, will the minister take the necessary steps to implement the request of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Some time during the course of last winter a committee studied the question of the marketing of oilseeds particularly. That committee did not come down with a flat recommendation along the lines suggested by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool but did indicate some need for further study into this question. We have asked that same committee to study the question further with a view to perhaps shedding further light on the question.

Mr. Gleave: May I then ask the minister whether the fact that he officiated at the opening of the rapeseed futures market at Thunder Bay indicates his support of that type of marketing?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PRODUCTION AND RECEIPTS POLICY—RECONSIDERATION OF PROPOSALS

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): My question is directed to the minister reporting to the House for the Canadian Wheat Board. It is related to the one just put by the hon. member for Battle River. In view of the statement from the president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool emanating from the just concluded annual meeting of the pool to the effect that the delegates felt that the minister's stabilization plan was woefully inadequate, will the minister give consideration to a complete overhaul of his proposals at the earliest possible date?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The whole point of the proposals in their form was to have discussions with producers and producers organizations. I can tell the hon. member that the statement he has quoted does not represent the general consensus of farmers who have looked at the proposals and the benefit they can bring to prairie agriculture.

PRODUCTION AND RECEIPTS POLICY—PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): In view of the fact that the press is leaving the wrong impression that western farmers are to receive $100 million under the grain proposals when in fact there will be a corresponding reduction in storage of $70 million and $20 million under the 3 per cent deduction—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member ask a question. He has the floor for the purpose of asking a supplementary question.

Mr. Korchinski: I want to lay the foundation for my question. Since there will also be an undetermined amount for interest payments, will the minister be making an announcement on a program which will in fact put real cash into the depressed western economy?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I almost have to lay the foundation for my answer by saying that some of the conclusions of the hon. member are incorrect in view of the fact that the temporary Wheat Reserves Act money, for instance, by and large went to the handling companies rather than to farmers—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously this is a debate between the hon. member and the minister.

[Later:]

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, in reply to an earlier question of mine the minister responsible for the Wheat Board indicated that the elevator companies were receiving the payments. Are we to assume that under the new plan the elevator companies will no longer be paid for storage?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the point I was making, of course, was that the amount of money in question had not found its way into the hands of the farmers. The plan will be that far less grain will in fact be in storage so that the expense will not be incurred. On the other hand, the $100 million which will be going forward to the farmers will be received by them.

* * *

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PROPOSED INCREASE IN AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE RATES—EVIDENCE OF COLLUSION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the statement by the president of the Canadian Underwriters Association to the effect that there will be a substantial increase in car insurance rates for 1971, and the literature which is sent out by the Insurance Bureau of Canada telling Canadians to get ready for very sharp increases in automobile insurance, may I ask the minister whether his department or any of its agencies are looking into the question of auto insurance rates to see whether or not any increase for 1971 would be fully warranted?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The insurance industry is examined from time to time by the Combines Investigation Branch for any breach of that Act, but as the hon. member knows the Act does not deal with whether or not price increases are warranted.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask whether the restrictive Trade Practices Commission or the Prices and Incomes Commission have taken a look at these car insurance rates to see whether or not there is any collusion between the various companies, and are they investigating to see why the rates charged in Saskatchewan are substantially lower than the rates charged in other provinces and whether this is by design or because of some difference in cost? If they are not looking into the aspect of collusion, will the minister undertake to see that they do and report back to the House?

Mr. Basford: The question went all over the place, Mr. Speaker, including Saskatchewan. The Combines Investigation Act, with which I trust the hon. member is familiar, deals with the question of price conspiracies or price collusion. If there is evidence of that, then there is a breach of the Combines Investigation Act.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I raised this matter last year and the minister undertook to have the Combines Investigation Branch look into the question. Has the minister received any report and is there any evidence of collusion?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, it is my practice, as it was of all my predecessors, not to reveal the results of inquiries except by laying charges in court or, as the Act requires, by inclusion in the annual report of the director.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Peace River has a supplementary to the previous question.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs if we are to assume from his answers that the role of the Prices and Incomes Commission will be, to use the vernacular, restricted to that of "bird watching"?

* * *

[Translation]

AIRPORTS

STE. SCHOLASTIQUE—NUMBERS OF JOBS TO BE CREATED

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should have liked to put a question to the Minister of Transport, but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary.

In connection with the statement made yesterday in Lachute by the President of the Quebec Federation of Labour, Mr. Louis Laberge, is it true that only 2,000 new jobs will be created as a result of the opening of the new international airport in Ste. Scholastique instead of 5,000 as already announced by the government?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Portneuf will admit that the question, as put, is out of order. He is asking the government to confirm or deny a statement made outside the House, and under those conditions, the question cannot be accepted.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED AMCHITKA UNDERGROUND NUCLEAR TESTS—REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he will have the Minister for External Affairs report to the House on his return whether he has made representations to the United States government expressing our concern over the forthcoming Amchitka underground nuclear tests and, if so, would he report the result of those representations? This is particularly timely not just because of the expected date of the tests but also because of public statements recently by eminent scientists in California warning of the dangers of a test of such magnitude triggering other earth tremors of far-reaching proportions.

[Translation]

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the minister is returning tonight from Europe and I am sure he will take action on the hon. member's question at the first opportunity.

* * *

[English]

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF WHITE PAPER

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this fall the minister promised a white paper on immigration with projected changes foreseen by him in the Immigration Appeal Board. It is now December 7 and the white paper has not appeared. Is the minister in a position to confirm that he will be tabling the white paper between now and the Christmas adjournment or is to be delayed until the new year?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not expect to be in a position to take any such action between now and the adjournment.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In light of the increasing pressure of the problems dealing with immigration, can the minister give us an idea when in the new year he will be tabling that white paper?

Mr. Lang: The more relevant urgency, of course, to which the hon. member referred, is the issues which require amendments to the immigration Appeal Board Act which have been mentioned. Work is going forward on proposals in this regard on an urgent basis and I hope we can see some concrete move within the House on this matter early in the new year.

[Mr. Speaker.]

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR FEASIBILITY STUDY OF UNION OF NEWFOUNDLAND AND PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. As Premier Smallwood of Newfoundland has declared that he is opposed to any union of his province with the three Maritime provinces but is strongly in favour of a union of Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, can the Prime Minister advise if the government of Canada is prepared to give to a feasibility study of a Newfoundland-Prince Edward Island union a degree of financial assistance commensurate with that given to the maritime union study?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the premiers of those two provinces were to indicate their desire to embark upon a feasibility study, of course we would consider such a request with as much attention as any other.

* * *

[Translation]

UNITED NATIONS

RESOLUTION RESPECTING REFUSAL OF ASYLUM TO KIDNAPPERS OF POLITICAL FIGURES

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Could he tell us whether he intends to consider the suitability of sponsoring at the United Nations a resolution inviting all member states to refuse the right of asylum to kidnappers of politicians, in order to curb the recent rash of such kidnappings?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have not considered the matter, Mr. Speaker, but like the minister's Parliamentary Secretary, I will refer it to him upon his return.

* * *

[English]

POWER

RECONSIDERATION OF POSSIBILITY OF USE OF BAY OF FUNDY TIDES

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he will give consideration to requesting the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to re-evaluate the evidence available to his department on the power possibilities of the Fundy tides and thus lessen the adverse reaction his reply brought last week?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall ask the minister to read this question and see if he has an answer for it.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN POSITION RESPECTING INTERVENTION IN GUINEA BY PORTUGUESE ARMED FORCES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the report to the Security Council by a special commission of the United Nations to the effect that the recent fighting in Guinea was assisted by regular armed forces of Portugal, has the government instructed our representative at the United Nations to prepare some steps and to propose some action against Portugal for this alleged aggression?

[Translation]

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it seems that the members of the Security Council are considering at the present time the draft of a resolution and that the Canadian government representatives with the United Nations are watching the situation closely.

I would like to remind the hon. member that the Canadian government has time and again expressed its opposition to the continuance of Portuguese colonialism in Africa. The Canadian government's position is well known to Portuguese authorities.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I know the government's position, of course. Portugal is also a member of NATO, as is Canada, and may I ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether it is the intention of the government or the minister to take the position that NATO should censure Portugal and perhaps consider its expulsion from that organization for this alleged aggression?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I hope not.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be in the House tomorrow probably, but certainly Wednesday, and he will answer the question.

* * *

[English]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ARGENTIA, NFLD.—REPORT ON EFFECTS OF CLOSING OF UNITED STATES NAVAL STATION

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, on December 3 I asked the Minister for Regional Economic Expansion a question concerning the report of a task force appointed by him to investigate economic conditions in Argentia, Newfoundland. Can the minister say whether that report has been presented?

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): That report was submitted a few months ago, Mr. Speaker. The question is whether it has been followed up. It has for a large part. Some recommendations were accepted, in particular those relating to the renovation of the castle in Hill National Historic Park, to the rebuilding of a road at Long Harbour, and to the building of a fish factory.

The other recommendations are now under consideration and they will be put into application as soon as they are accepted.

[English]

Mr. Carter: I thank the minister for his reply but I should inform him that the big plan announced on July 6—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER VISIT PEOPLES REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Having in mind the agreement of recognition between this country and the Peoples Republic of China and the potential value of peaceful trade that may result from it, would the Prime Minister consider making a trip to the Peoples Republic of China in the coming year?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I thank the hon. member for his suggestion, Mr. Speaker, and I shall consider it in due course.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

STATUS OF KIDNAPPERS OF JAMES CROSS

Mr. Bruce Howard (Okanagan-Boundary): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question related to an answer that was given on Friday by the Minister of Justice. My question is directed to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of citizenship. Has he reviewed the answer given by the Minister of Justice concerning the citizenship of the kidnappers of James Cross? Also, is it his intention to recommend to the government that the citizenship of these criminals ought to be cancelled?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the matter has been considered. It would require a special Act of Parliament. It seems unlikely, however, that these persons would have any opportunity of enjoying any of the privileges of Canadian citizenship without subjecting themselves to the discipline of Canadian law. I am not sure, in the circumstances, whether these people warrant the devotion of any more time and attention by this House.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister, who seems to be fully informed on the subject, whether these people would be travelling with Canadian passports?

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, that question ought to be directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, no doubt it should be. I will take up the matter with him.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the effect of the statute of limitations, under which the opprobrium of the country may be rendered ineffective after seven years, would it not be reasonable for the government to cancel the citizenship of these persons in order to avoid the possibility of their returning to Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is an argument, not a question.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister has indicated that this could only be done by introducing a special Act of Parliament, can the minister advise us whether the government has ruled out the introduction of such an Act in order to cancel the citizenship of these people?

Mr. Stanbury: No, Mr. Speaker. The government as a whole has not given consideration to this step, although I have examined it. If the hon. member or others wish to make any representations on this subject, we shall be glad to receive them.

* * *

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

HIRING OF UNITED STATES CITIZEN AS PUBLIC RELATIONS OFFICER

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. I hope that he will be able to resume his seat in time to answer it. About a week ago, Mr. Speaker, I asked his Parliamentary Secretary if, before hiring an American citizen to head the public relations department of the CBC, the government had considered all other possibilities. I further asked if he would inform the House as to whether this same individual had until recently been an employee of the United States consulate. At that time the Parliamentary Secretary informed the House that the Secretary of State would provide an answer.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, when the question was asked I was away on a mission abroad. I have not seen my Parliamentary Secretary since I returned, therefore I am not aware of what the hon. member is saying. I shall look into the matter before giving him an answer.

[English]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO ESTABLISH DEPARTMENT

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Government House Leader. Since he is just leaving the opposition benches, may I, in the meantime, direct it to the Prime Minister. Can the right hon. gentleman tell us when we can expect legislation to establish the proposed department of the environment which was recommended earlier in the session? Could we have an answer to that question?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we expect to give notice of this very shortly, possibly today or tomorrow.

Mr. Lundrigan: A supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Public Works whether the functions of his department relating to the establishment of public works facilities for the fishing industry of Canada will be transferred to the new department of the environment?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think that in asking a detailed question of this kind the hon. member is anticipating an order of the day.

* * *

HEALTH

INCLUSION OF PARAMEDICAL SERVICES UNDER MEDICARE

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare looks relatively relaxed today so I shall direct a question to him. Would the minister kindly define what he means by "consensus", as that word applies to the inclusion of paramedical services under medicare?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. For the time being the minister will have to continue resting.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase my question.

An hon. Member: Yes, the hon. member should.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to rephrase his question?

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I will do my best. May I ask the minister whether he does not feel that the inclusion of paramedical services under medicare ought to be proceeded with in a manner identical to that followed in the case of medicare itself, that is, by allowing each province to enter the scheme when it felt it was ready to do so?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am still doubtful about the question as asked from a procedural standpoint. The hon. member is making a proposition or suggestion to the House. I think a question asked in those terms is not in order. Perhaps the hon. member might give the matter some further thought. For the moment, I will recognize the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

EXTENSION OF TELEVISION COVERAGE TO NORTHWESTERN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. In view of continuing delays in the extension of television coverage to remote parts of Canada, especially northwestern Newfoundland, and in the light of the evidence of the relaxation of austerity measures, will the minister ask for an immediate review of the situation so that these areas may be afforded this communications media as quickly as possible?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the facts and situations in remote areas of Canada are continuously under review. The Corporation makes constant efforts to reach these far off places. The percentage of those that have not been reached yet declines every year.

* * *

[English]

NATIONAL MUSEUMS

EXAMINATION OF FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION BY COMMITTEE OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State whether, in view of the disturbing charges made by the hon. member for Battle River with respect to the administration of the museum branch following the presentation to the House of a motion under Standing Order 43, he is considering referring this matter to the appropriate committee of the House for examination?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I do not know exactly what the Leader of the Opposition is referring to, but one thing is certain and I keep reminding hon. members of it, the Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, in the course of its forthcoming sittings, may well discuss any matter relating to broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts. I am positive that if the committee feels that the point made by the Leader of the Opposition is important, it will be put on its agenda and hearings will be held on the matter.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I assume from the reply of the Secretary of State to my question that he has not conducted any investigation himself into the charges made by the hon. member for Battle River?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: No, Mr. Speaker. I merely said that, unfortunately, the charges brought by the hon. member for Battle River are a mystery to me, for the time being, perhaps because I cannot remember now who is the member for Battle River.

[English]

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Secretary of State not aware of the great increases in administrative costs, travel expenses, and in other areas in the past year or so which have taken place in the museums' branch. Has he not looked into this matter at all?

An hon. Member: This is not a slow growth area.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Oh! I see, Mr. Speaker. It comes back to me now and I beg the hon. member to excuse me.

Indeed, there is an inquiry going on on this subject and, of course, it is conducted by the Museum Society that will ultimately send me a report. This is therefore a question which is before the Board of Trustees of the National Museums for consideration.

* * *

[English]

HEALTH

REDUCTION IN GRANTS TO NATIONAL CANCER INSTITUTE

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Why have grants to the National Cancer Institute been reduced, and what is the government's intention with regard to this and other grants this year?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question should be placed on the order paper.

INCLUSION OF PARAMEDICAL SERVICES UNDER MEDICARE

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, if I get up any more, I shall need the assistance of paramedical services myself. I shall try again. Is the minister considering allowing paramedical services to be included in medicare on a province by province basis?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, may I advise the hon. member that a federal-provincial conference of health ministers is to take place this week to deal with the whole question of how the extension of the services of the various health professions may be handled by the federal and provincial governments.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether the government intends to advise the provincial representatives at the conference that the federal government will be prepared to make its contribution to any province that is prepared to extend paramedical services under the medicare program?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, the types of discussions that are taking place relative to how the federal and provincial governments would get together on this whole question of paramedical services and the extension of cost-shared areas precludes my saying what will be done with respect to any particular profession. I am precluded from stating, until the discussions are completed, whether action could be taken just because one province as distinct from others may want an extension.

MEDICARE AND HOSPITALIZATION—RECOMMENDATIONS ON WAYS OF SAVING MONEY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Since there has been a good deal of talk by the government with regard to ways of saving money in the medicare and hospital plan field, I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare when we may expect a report on the ways this administration is adopting to save money in this field.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As the Leader of the Opposition may be aware, Mr. Speaker, a task force report, which was developed as a result of federal and provincial participation in the whole health cost area, was prepared which contained many recommendations. Many of these recommendations have been accepted by various levels of government in terms of joint action to achieve this objective. The specifics as to what further action can be taken by both levels of government will be made known following the health ministers' conference this week.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question. Following the conference this week, will the minister make a report to the House stating precisely what recommendations have been accepted and at the same time putting a dollar tag on the savings involved?

Mr. Munro: I will be very pleased to consider taking this action, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

[Translation]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ESCALATION OF PENSIONS OF RETIRED EMPLOYEES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

[English]

Is the minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): After all, one should be bilingual and use both languages. Is the minister now in a position to answer the question I directed to him on Thursday, November 26, which was as follows:

Can the minister state when the CBC will put into effect an arrangement for the escalation of the pensions of its retired employees similar to the arrangements for retired public servants that were passed by this House last spring?

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

The minister said he would inquire.

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I have an answer, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: But this is an answer which probably will not please the hon. member because it is precisely that I have not yet received the answer to his question.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Thursday, December 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson, that this House approve in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, since the budget speech was delivered on Thursday night, we have had an opportunity of assessing what thin gruel it is. The country has had an opportunity to examine the budget. There has been a flow of reaction through newspaper comments and the like. I have yet to see one editorial positively accepting the premises of the minister's speech or the recommendations which he made.

There is a rather odd situation this afternoon. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) cannot be here for the resumption of the debate. There is a valid explanation why he is not here, and I am not complaining about his absence. However, the members of this House are faced with a rather odd situation when discussing the financial affairs of this country. The minister is attending a conference with his provincial counterparts. Financial negotiations and arrangements between the federal government and the provincial governments will be decided at this conference. The members of this House will not have an opportunity to say anything about what will happen in their province. It matters little whether they are members of the government or whether the provincial government is of the same party stripe. They will not participate in the negotiations nor will they represent the people of their province during such negotiations. It is as though the cabinet, which in effect is the government, has almighty power. The administration is the government. The Minister of Finance is subject to the advice of his senior officials.

Yesterday, by way of historical interest, I read volume three of the Mackenzie King memoirs which dealt with the early years of dominion-provincial conferences. In 1945 and 1946, particularly 1946, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) participated in those negotiations. They were very difficult. He knows even within the limited disclosures by the diaries of Mr. Mackenzie King, there was much horse trading and knifing in the back. It makes one wonder whether the ministers of the federal government and their officials made power sharing deals with the representatives of the provinces. It was as though they were carving a pie, namely, the Canadian body corporate. This pie was being carved by the representatives of the federal and provincial governments, each struggling for more power. These memoirs give a great insight into what has evolved as a result of negotiations between the federal and provincial governments in the fields of finance and health, as well as other areas in which there is joint jurisdiction. It is not a pretty picture.

I am struck by the complacency with which these decisions are accepted by members of this House. It represents an abdication of the right and duty of members to represent the people in their own provinces. They are not in the picture at all. Some sort of deal will be worked out. There will be preliminary negotiations with regard to the renewal of the federal-provincial agreements and fiscal arrangements which have to be worked out next year. Possibly some deal will be worked out with regard to changes that will be made in the income tax field. Yet what will hon. members have to say about an income tax system worked out and possibly agreed upon by others. What will the members of this House have to say about this situation? I am sure many hon. members share the feeling of frustration that I have. I am using this opportunity to put this, their own problem, before hon. members.

• (3:20 p.m.)

It amounts to this: the government of this country boils down to fewer than 40 men who are the wheelers and dealers of the interests of all Canadians It is as though the federal government says "I want this part for my empire" while each of the provinces says "I want equal dominion over the same area." Whom are they quarrelling over? What is going to be gained? I know what is going to be lost—it is the poor hide of the Canadian taxpayer which comes out of these deals the worst for wear. So this afternoon, in commenting upon the budget proposed last Thursday night, I am reduced to the position of a man who is in a broadcasting booth in a radio station and talks to a lot of people without knowing what effect his words are having on them.

This budget, and the whole procedure surrounding it, is most important. It lies at the core of government. It represents the ways and means the government must adopt to raise the money to make possible the supply which it will ask this House to grant. We are dealing now with the other half of the balance of the government's whole administrative spending program.

I wish the government would adopt a consistent policy with regard to the presentation of budgets. There have been fluctuations from one point of view to another, depending on circumstances. I recall the minister's predecessor, now the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), telling us that having regard to the complexity of a modern economy, and in order to exert a better degree of control, he intended to propose that there should be two budgets in a year. Presented with this prospect, however, the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) said: Oh, no, there is no need. Last March, when no tax changes were proposed and it was quite obvious that the minister was dropping the surtax on income tax, he acquiesced in this view and was quite prepared to accept it at that time; unless there was another budget there would be no continuation of the surtax; it did not bother him one bit. As a matter of fact it was not intended that there would be a further budget, because any such move would give rise to the possibility of tax changes which were the subject matter of the white paper on taxation, a new system which was not then to be ready.

So, why have we been presented with a budget at this time? After all, when Parliament reconvened in October it was not intended that there should be a budget this fall. Indeed, I am sure there was no intention of presenting a budget three weeks ago. Has it been brought down because there is now an indication that the economy is not going well? Is it because the October figures indicate that the budget deficit which had been forecast was likely to be considerably greater than was expected last summer, particularly in June, as a result of the minister's undertaking that more money would be passed on to the provinces? I admit that allowance must be made for the acceleration of payments to the provinces, but this is a once-in-a-lifetime event, cramping up the procedure by one month; it does not represent any continuing betterment of provincial positions, since the provinces will only get a windfall payment this year representing one month's payment of tax. Nevertheless, there was need to save some $250 million. After all, the minister will be obliged to go to the market for a lot of money this year and next year. If he is trying to save $250 million, a continuation of the surtax becomes necessary. The procedure is simple. The tax forms are there; it is the simplest way. This is reason number one for presenting us with a further budget.

It is likely, too, that there was a belated attempt by the government to fight unemployment. Notwithstanding statements made inside this House and outside it by leaders of political parties in opposition to the government, by the head of the Canadian Congress of Labour and others, that unemployment will be serious this winter, much more serious than the government appears to believe, nothing was done until—and this may be the ironic consequence of events in Quebec—a number of complacent cabinet ministers suddenly realized that unemployment was likely to be very serious and that some token effort, at least, would have to be made to show that the government was trying to deal with the situation. In addition, of course, it was realized that the government was running increasingly counter to the advice of the Economic Council of Canada.

There is possibly a third reason, Mr. Speaker. During the middle of the year and in the early fall, money was poured very generously into some regions of the country by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand). The House was treated to a succession of bulletins, almost daily, as massive injections of money were announced. Incidentally, I am not satisfied that all these projects are viable. I believe some of these industries will die on the vine as soon as the effect of the capital which was injected into them has worn off. I say this because in my view these enterprises are not deeply rooted; they are subject to much uncertainty, and it may be that sums of $10,000, $15,000 or $25,000 here and there have simply been poured down the drain. In some cases political I.O.U.s may be attached to the grants which have been made. In any event, I believe some of them to be non-productive. Anyway, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion is reported to have said there was no way in which he could successfully pump money into various areas in order to relieve unemployment while the national economy as a whole was sagging, and that some effort must therefore be made by the government to increase the tempo of the economy as a whole.

What has happened? We are faced with a strange paradox inasmuch as the minister has continued a surtax which had been imposed as a deflationary measure, a strong deflationary measure, and, I would say, one which had been wrongfully imposed because it was the wrong way to fight the inflation with which we were faced. As a matter of fact, I would say that the surtax was even more inflationary, because it figures largely in the calculation of take home pay and in the wage demands made by organized labour, certainly by anyone considering the level of his earnings or take home pay. What has happened has been that the 3 per cent surtax on income tax was passed on as quickly as possible into the pricing system.

• (3:30 p.m.)

In any event, this deflationary fiscal instrument is to be found in a budgetary document that emphasizes expansion from the word go to the very last line. I would ask what place it has in such a document. Is it because we are engaging in a two-sided fight, with the left hand continuing to fight inflation with a surtax, and the right hand trying to prime the pump in order to get the economy going again? What sort of exercise is the Minister of Finance asking this Parliament and the country to undertake as a result of these proposals? The minister now has us engaging in a kind of split personality situation.

What does this budget propose? Let us look at some of its highlights. The unemployment insurance benefits are to be increased immediately by 10 per cent. I commented on that the other night. A budget was not required for this, Mr. Speaker, because the supplementary estimate providing for this was tabled last Friday. How much will this measure produce to enable us to fight high winter unemployment? It is estimated that over the winter and up to April 1, $31 million will be available, with the balance of $23 million being found some time during the coming year, making an over-all total of $54 million. I suggest that it is during this winter that we must deal with our massive unemployment. I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that this instrument is at best a very poor one, a mere half measure.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Then, there are to be loans totalling $150 million to be made available to the provinces through a fund to finance job-creating projects next year. This proposal was greeted with great fanfare by some people. But may I point out that these are loans, and loans have to be repaid. We do not know the terms of these loans. Any province that wants to participate in this program must consider whether, first of all, it needs to create jobs; secondly, what its share of the financing is going to be; and then how the loan is to be repaid. Unless the provinces undertake this exercise, and particularly the consideration of repayment of the loan, they are merely following the course of a spendthrift going into bankruptcy.

I am sure that none of the provincial administrations would want to become involved in this sort of exercise. How much of this $150 million is going to help solve unemployment this winter? Perhaps, some $40 million of it will. It will also be interesting to know the conditions under which the provinces will qualify for such loans. Are they, as hinted in the budget speech, to be loans of the type granted under the old winter works program, where people who would not normally have been working on any project are to be employed? If this is not the case, then those who have will have more. In order to deal with the unemployment problem we must put on the payroll men who have not been employed or who are likely to lose their jobs. This is the only way to fight unemployment.

The, $40 million is to be shared by the provinces under a complicated formula. For example, for the province of Alberta $4 million is to be made available, and 40 per cent of this, namely $1.6 million, is earmarked for between now and March 31 next year. I do not know that this money is going to be a great deal of help. After all, what municipalities are going to go through the necessary administrative procedures in order to get their programs before the provincial government? It may be that the provincial government itself has a program on the shelf that it would not have to spend weeks designing and planning for in order to put men to work. There will be a time lag in this proposal, so in this respect it fails to deal with the high unemployment rate this winter.

A further $23 million is going to be allocated to federal departments and agencies to make capital improvements in areas of highest unemployment. This money is to be spent before March 31. So far there is no sign of any supplementary estimate in this regard, so all it means is that there is going to be a redirection of government spending programs already provided for into certain regions of high unemployment. This is not putting another $23 million into the system; there is no expansion here, merely a redirection.

The sum of $20 million is to be allocated to the new Montreal international airport, $5 million of which is to be spent before the end of the fiscal year 1970-71. I should like to know whether the plans for this word are now ready, or is this money simply going to pay for that part of the program that was already underway? In any event, the sum of $5 million has been earmarked. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will have a $40 million expansion of its capital budget, all of this for 1971-72. So here again, there is nothing to help fight this winter's unemployment; this proposal is designed for the next fiscal year.

Then, there is to be an expansion of the industrial incentives program. I must be very careful here, Mr. Speaker, since an area that you know rather well is to be designated for special incentives. Also included is the city of Montreal and surrounding areas. I was told by one government official that in the province of Quebec 99 per cent of Quebeckers live in areas that are now designated for special incentives. I wonder why the other one per cent was not included. However, 99 per cent of the population presumably live in special incentive areas.

Direct loans will be made to the footwear industry, and these loans are to be available only in 1971-72. No help is to be given to the industry this winter. The sum of $5 million was previously announced for the shipbuilding program for 1971-72. Again, there is no assistance for 1970-71.

Old age pension and guaranteed income supplement increases amount to $200 million out of a fund that is earmarked for old age security. Those people who have contributed to the fund are told they will get their contributions back in greater quantities, but not until April 1, 1971. The change in the family allowance program represent merely a redirection of the money. It was said that there should be a redistribution of income to the lowest income groups in the weaker regions. I do not understand how anyone can say that old age pension and family allowance recipients live in greater numbers in weaker regions. I would think quite the contrary, and I cannot see how this is going to help the lesser developed regions of the country because old age security recipients and family allowance recipients are spread across the whole of the country.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Let us then look at the capital cost allowance supplement which would permit manufacturers and processors to value investment in new equipment at 115 per cent of the actual cost. It is suggested this plan will cost the treasury $25 million. In other words, there will be another $25 million presumably left in the private sector, but none of it in 1970-71 and precious little, I would say, in 1971-72. Frankly, all the adoption of this plan means is that the present economic situation is not good enough to entice manufacturers and processors to carry out normal business investments. There has been a lag because of the flatness of domestic economy. Now, a longer and a bit bigger carrot is going to be dangled for a period of about 15 months. There will be a windfall involved here for people who normally would be constructing new buildings and changing machinery. I cannot envisage a major industry being able to assess the market and come to the decision that it should construct a major plant, making the necessary acquisition for the plant and the new machinery by March 31, 1972. This is just not done that way by major industries. It cannot be done that way.

An hon. Member: You are wrong.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): An hon. member on the other side disagrees with me. A major industry just cannot build a plant, purchase and instal the machinery within that period of time. There may well be a replacement of machinery and additions made to plants. This may well help to some degree, but let us not fool ourselves that a major industry will be enticed to come into a particular area and avail itself of the advantages of this provision.

The budget speech also contained this statement:

In addition to the increasingly expansionary fiscal policy, monetary policy since late last winter—

I find that a most amazing statement. It talks about something in addition to the increasingly expansionary fiscal policy. Where was there any expansion in fiscal policy during the past year? Taxes were maintained at the same level and we now have the new proposal to increase taxes by renewing the surtax. As a matter of fact, that was the heart and core of the last budget. This was an ill-founded proposal. That budget also referred to increasing consumer credit control. If anyone can talk about that as being expansionary on a fiscal basis, he should start to explain the English language. There is no way the last budget should be considered as anything but an inflationary one. The government said consumer credit controls were absolutely essential and we were going to have them within a month. Of course, we saw their demise in June because there was only one result at the end of consumer credit controls and that was increasing unemployment in this country. In any event, somebody was misguided enough to indulge in the folly of thinking that consumer credit controls were necessary last summer to deal with the problem of inflation which existed then.

We are told there was an expansionary fiscal policy. On the contrary, there has not been one bit of expansion in fiscal policy. In so far as monetary policy is concerned, there has been relaxation of the bank rate and accompanying declines in the commercial bank prime rates. Even this morning, a further decline was announced by one bank. When I consider the effect of this so-called expansionary monetary policy on the average rate of interest on long term government bonds, I conclude that the people of Canada who are picking up government bonds just do not believe the government.

I invite hon. members to look at the Bank of Canada's statistical summaries which indicate the incredible position of this government having to pay an average of 8.13 per cent on its long term bonds. It is true that in the last month the rate has declined to about 7.5 per cent. If the government in this case is not believed by the public, how on earth can anyone ask for a lower interest rate? The farm improvement loan rate is set on the basis of that government long term rate. The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation interest rate is set in relation to that rate. Farm Credit Corporation loans are set on the basis of the government's long term rate. This is supposed to be the best rate in the country. When this best rate is over 8 per cent, it means that the public just does not believe the government and that its performance is not credible. Let us not say there has been this vast improvement as a result of expansionary monetary policy.

Let us consider some of the criticisms and comments. The minister made a great deal during his opening statement about the change in the direction of the rate of unemployment. There has been just one slight deviation for one month, and even in that regard the minister said it resulted from a sort of general public service lexacon which may cause variations from the trend from time to time. In other words, it was just as likely that we had to maintain a downturn in the rate of increase of unemployment. Let us see what it is after Christmas. What I am saying in this regard is that I do not believe the minister's optimism is justified based upon the change in unemployment statistics in one month.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Nor can I see justification for optimism with regard to the consumer price index. If one would take a look at page 903 of the November 1970 Statistical Summary of the Bank of Canada, one will see that with regard to the consumer price index there has been a slight downturn or levelling off of the curve in late October and November of 1970. However, this is a reflection of a much sharper turndown in food prices. There has been nothing but a constant climb in all the other elements which go into making the consumer price index. One has only to look at the chart as soon as the fall surplus is over—which is the harvest season—and one will see a turnup after Christmas in a number of food prices such as fruits, vegetables and certain types of meat. Then, we will see again a turnup in the consumer price index. I regret that as everyone else does.

I mention again that I do not think the reference to either the rate of unemployment or the change in the consumer price index this year is a sufficiently strong base for the minister's enthusiasm and optimism in the opening paragraphs of his speech. The representatives of the provinces are meeting in Ottawa. It will be very interesting to read what they have to say to the minister and how they react. I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Perrault) has already taken cognizance of what has been said by the Premier of his province. He, of course, has had a lot of experience with the Premier of his province. The people of British Columbia found the Premier of that province much more reliable than the hon. gentleman because he went nowhere in the provincial House.

Then, there was the emphasis on the foreign trade balance. The minister made much in his speech about the rate of increase which had taken place. But the rate of increase in the third quarter levelled off. The gap between exports and imports continued, mostly because imports declined due to the flatness of the domestic economy. Canada just was not importing as much in the last quarters of 1970. We will see what happens in respect of the last quarter as a result of the unfortunate strike in the automobile industry. This will knock our trade figures for a loop. There will be a very serious cut.

I was very intrigued with the attitude of the minister when he was interviewed on television immediately after the presentation of his budget. I remember how he almost climbed down the throats, if that were possible, of his interviewers because they were being most skeptical about his performance and his budget, particularly when one of them asked about the man in the middle income group and what on earth was being done for him.

The man in the middle income group has become the sacrificial lamb of the country. In respect of unemployment insurance, it is his body that will be bled. In so far as family allowances are concerned, the cutoff is $10,001. Is it the $10,000 a year man who is rich now? When the minister was asked this question, he replied that such a man was within the rich class. If that is so, then I find that the policeman, the commissioned officer of say major rank, the sergeant of the mounted police, the carpenter, the plumber, the electrician and the garage mechanic are all above $10,000. They are, then, in the rich class in this country. The minister made some statements to the effect that less than 10 per cent of the taxpayers of this country are above the $10,000 class. Ah, in number perhaps, and I am not so sure for 1970.

If we look at the 1969 Edition of Tax Statistics covering the 1967 calendar year—and I refer hon. members to the summary table number 2 on page 10—we will find that those who have filed returns on which the total income was $10,000 a year or more in 1967 represent about 10 per cent of the total number of people. They earned 18 per cent of the income but paid 37 per cent of the tax. If we add the increases in salaries and wages that have been received by Canadians since 1968, at an average rate of between 8 per cent and 9 per cent and in some instances more, we see that more and more people have moved into that rate above $10,000. I judge, therefore there would be rather more than 10 per cent in numbers who would be earning more than 18 per cent of the income. It may go as high as 25 per cent of the income earned in this country. These people will certainly have paid well over 40 per cent of the personal income tax. These are the people who are to be hit harder.

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, but it seems to me that a small group of individuals in this country who are not the aristocracy of business but who represent a cross section of the working populace of this country, whether they are white collar, blue collar or whatever collar people—I suppose most of them wear sport shirts now—

An hon. Member: Turtleneck.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Turtleneck—they are the ones who are bearing the brunt of the tax load. They are the ones who, presumably in the mind of I do not know whom, are to be bled much more because at every turn it is those in the $10,000 and up bracket who go into the pen to have their throats cut.

• (4:00 p.m.)

I would have liked to have seen the minister do something in the budget by way of a tax cut for the lower income groups. The injection of money there would have been that much more quick and effective. For instance, there could have been a 6 per cent reduction in personal income tax for all income classes, which would inject $325 million. If it were for those earning less than $6,000 a year, it would require $87 million in tax forgiveness. A 10 per cent reduction in personal income tax rates for those earning less than $6,000, would inject $140 million.

If the minister wanted to do something that has been advocated from both sides of the House—and I know that a number of government supporters are in favour of it—he would have reduced the sales tax on building materials. I say "reduce" because I think that in the light of the changes that are being proposed for old age income security and the GIS, one must leave 4 per cent of the sales tax paid into the old age security fund inviolate at this time. Therefore, I say that the minister could have reduced the sales tax on building materials to, say, 4 per cent. The total tax take now under the reduced building program is in the neighbourhood of $225 million, so it would only be about two thirds of that amount which would be injected into the economy or given up out of revenue.

Mr. Perrault: Provincial revenue as well?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am not talking about the provinces. The sales tax program with regard to building materials starts here. I will not engage in the practice of giving provinces certain advice. If they see fit to remove a portion of their sales tax from building materials, I think the Canadian nation would benefit thereby.

Mr. Perrault: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I will only advise the government in whose House I am a member, not the others.

The third thing I would do is to remove uncertainties in the export market. There are a number of other incentives that could have been considered. Many of our export industries are now having to enter into long term agreements based upon a floating Canadian dollar. Because of the threat of the repegging of the dollar, they are unable to engage in the market in normal hedging operations. They cannot lay off and buy forward because the dollar might be pegged back at 96 cents or 97 cents, where it is readily defendable under the present circumstances. Ask the lumber industry, ask the auto parts industry and ask a number of other export industries just how easy it is to do business. Ask the heavy chemical industry where lay-offs by the hundred are taking place. We will have to consider what has been happening to the Canadian economy. It has been receiving some heavy body blows during the past years, many of them because one step was not related to another.

The minister thought he was going to fight inflation by accelerating the tariff cuts with regard to the Kennedy round. A number of industries were going to be barely able to keep alive on the basis of the cuts over the five years. The knife was being shoved into them slowly. Ask the heavy chemical industry, ask the fine paper industry and ask some of the others what is happening to them. Their position is exceedingly difficult as a result. First of all, they face heavy additional competition on the domestic market; second, their prices are greatly accelerated by reason of the unpegging of the dollar and the uncertainty as to when the dollar may be stabilized. It is not that I am necessarily an advocate of a pegged dollar, but we happen to be part of a team that is working in the International Monetary Fund. We all subscribe to the Breton Woods Agreement; we are all signatories to it, but twice now Canada has seen fit to say "I am going to take the ball and I am going home". If everybody else did the same, what would happen?

I will ask hon. members whether any of them remember the absolutely nonsensical and suicidal international financial battles that were waged in the 1930's when we had completely unrestricted currencies.

Mr. Laing: R. B. Bennett.

Mr. Perrault: Your hero.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): At that time the Canadian dollar was caught in the same position as other currencies. Of course the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) is talking through his usual hat. I would like to see him rise to his feet to give a reasonable and reasoned argument regarding the condition of moneys in the 1930's and subsequently. Let us look at what happened to England, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, and all the others. Now, there is a considerably greater stability at the present time, but it is at a fearful price as the Canadian government for certain reasons sees fit to sit on the outside of the international monetary agreement.

I would have liked to have seen the government make some proposals to expand the incentives with regard to pollution control machinery, both for municipalities and industry. There is something that will accomplish several things. It will help to control pollution, and certainly people are worried about that today. We know that industry and government have to have some help in order to achieve that control. That would have been a proper step because, in addition, employment would have been provided both in the production of machinery and the operation of the plants.

Certainly we could have renewed or expanded the system of incentives for sewage treatment that existed some years ago by introducing a forgiveness feature into any grant system, as was done at that time, so as to assist the municipalities to deal with the effluent that comes from their sewage systems. This is one of the worst sources of pollution, and yet little or nothing is being done to assist municipalities in dealing with the problem.

Therefore, I move the following motion:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after that" and substituting therefor:

"this House deplores the abysmal failure of the government to make any budgetary proposal to effectively stimulate the Canadian economy with a view to an early substantial reduction of high winter unemployment and to alleviate the economic plight of pensioners and other Canadians in receipt of incomes below the poverty level, as described by the Economic Council of Canada".

• (4:10 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Hon. members have heard the motion put by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). The hon. member for Waterloo.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, the budget serves to confirm something which has been obvious to most observers for a long time. It confirms that Canada's economic objectives are in tatters and that the Trudeau government has abysmally failed to solve some of the serious difficulties in this country.

When the Economic Council of Canada set out the goals for this country, stable prices, full employment, steady growth, and a viable balance of payments, everyone was in agreement that these objectives could be achieved with some kind of intelligent approach to economic problems. What happened to these objectives?

Let us deal with full employment. The unemployment situation in Canada is disgraceful. No words can describe the damage done by this government. We have the highest level of unemployment of any industrialized nation in the world. That is some record, but this government has managed to achieve it.

Mr. Stanfield: And they have only started.

Mr. Saltsman: Let us hope they get stopped in a hurry.

As for growth, again the record of Canada is worse than that of any other industrialized nation. The government tries to manufacture figures to show that we are getting something like 7 or 8 per cent growth, but it does not say how much of that figure is the result of inflation. The other thing the government does not say is that the remaining growth shown in those figures results from the burgeoning population. If we want to compare our growth with that of other nations, the key is in the per capita comparison. It is amazing how a government could have shattered the economy so effectively.

There may be some members on the other side of the House who will say that I have just taken two of the goals, and that the government has been more successful with the others. Well, let us take stable prices. The government maintains that prices have risen less rapidly in Canada than in any other country in the world, except Finland. It is true that there has been a marginal improvement in prices but the question to be asked is, at what cost? What kind of price do we pay for a marginal improvement? It is true that prices have been held down marginally, but the government will not be able to do that in future because the lid is coming off now. The Prices and Incomes Commission has turned out to be a major fiasco. It has not been effective. Prices have been held down only in some sectors that were vulnerable to pressure. For instance, banks have not held down prices. In the last three years, their profits have increased by almost 75 per cent. There has been failure in the area of stabilizing prices, Mr. Speaker, and there is very little to be proud of regarding that. Any marginal improvement has been achieved at enormous cost to the sectors.

We do not have a viable balance of payments. When a government is preoccupied with trying to reduce the value of the dollar, when it is embarrassed by the $4 billion and more it has in reserves, that is not a viable balance of payments situation. One of the difficulties with the balance of payments in this country is the slow growth of our economy. Unemployment is diminishing economic activity and because of our dependence on branch plants from the United States there is a slowdown of imports. Our policy of tight money, which fortunately is being relaxed now, and of high interest rates, has brought money into Canada that was in large measure speculative and was not necessary. The so-called improvement in our balance of trade has not been good. It cannot be sustained and is an embarrassment to us at this moment.

Unemployment has cost us a great deal, Mr. Speaker. Rather than try to give you my views or my figures on this cost, I should like to quote the words of a federal official as reported in the Globe and Mail of June 17, 1970. The article reads:

Unemployment may cost Canada $5 billion this year in lost production and the cost of providing welfare payments and job retraining for the unemployed, federal officials say.

This does not begin to put a dollar value on the human costs involved in job loss and disrupted family life. Nor does it include relief payments by the provinces and municipalities.

The article goes on to mention the hidden unemployment which does not show up as a statistic. The reference is to people who would have been in the labour force and part time workers who would have been glad to work had employment been available. This editorial concludes by indicating that such lost production cannot be recovered.

One would have thought there would have been an outcry in the country as a result of this terrible record, but I regret to say that such has not been the case. The government's suicidal economic lunacy is often camouflaged by events. At the same time that the budget was brought in, all Canadians were relieved to learn that Mr. Cross had been released and all attention was focussed on this matter. Very little attention has, therefore, been paid to the budget or to the economic policies of the government.

But, Mr. Speaker, the matter of Mr. Cross, the province of Quebec and the budget did not stop there. This budget was designed to take some steps to deal with the difficult unemployment problem in Quebec. An idea was advanced by the Premier of Quebec but was not incorporated in the budget. This budget is insipid; it is not going to answer the problem but will only create new problems.

The people of Canada want to see unemployment cured in Quebec and every other province. The measures proposed in this budget, the capital fund that is suggested, will neither cure unemployment in Quebec nor do anything of significance for the rest of Canada, Mr. Speaker. The dimensions of the problem are too great to be overcome by the picayune proposal of $40 million or $50 million to be pumped into Quebec some time in the future.

On various occasions Premier Bourassa has said that he must have at least 100,000 new jobs for the province. The record shows that in a modern society every job created costs almost $30,000. For the province of Quebec alone, fast arithmetic shows that the cost would be $3 billion. Even under the designated area program, which pays 20 per cent of the cost, that means pumping $600 million into one province immediately—and the problem is not confined to just one province.

How can we accomplish any kind of intelligent objective with the type of program the government has presented? For the whole of Canada, $150 million is available. That is a lot of money but not enough for dealing with a problem of the magnitude of the one that exists. The money is a teaser, because there is not enough to deal with the problem. Questions will be asked about it. Some will say that it is well and good for the government to make available this money, but they will want to know where it is to come from. I will deal with that point as I progress.

• (4:20 p.m.)

On budget night everyone was expecting a tax cut, or, if not a tax cut, at least a dropping of the 3 per cent surtax. I think everybody had a reason for expecting that. A tax cut would have been the sensible thing to bring in, and opposition critics might have been hard put to find reasons for condemning the government for its actions. The government would not have found that intolerable. But there was no tax cut. There was not even a dropping of the 3 per cent surtax. One wonders, why did the government not drop it? It seemed like the best thing to do. Removing the surtax would have pumped money into the economy and, apart from the economic benefits of such a move, the boost in terms of psychology would have been enormous.

We have often heard ministers of finance say, when defining their economic objectives, that it is equally important for us to attain certain important psychological objectives. Why were taxes not cut? They were not cut because the government had put intself into a box. It could not afford to do so. It did not have the money it needed, because it has been giving away money in many areas. I suggest that the government's action in allocating this money to certain areas is not as useful or as helpful as either a tax cut or a removal of the surtax would have been, because that action would have stimulated the economy directly. Actually, the government has closed off, through its policies, many of its available sources of revenue. Let us look at what is being done.

One measure being proposed is increasing the depreciation allowance up to a maximum of 115 per cent. The depreciation allowance has been suspect for a long time. No one has suspected it more in the past than the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). I should like to refer to an article that indicates the minister's thinking on the question of depreciation allowances. These allowances, according to this article, constitute a great giveaway program and the federal government will probably take steps to reduce the size of this program. Instead of following that course the minister, in his budget, has introduced an accelerated program. The article was printed in the Monetary Times of September, 1968. It is entitled, "Ottawa—and deferred taxes". The subheading is: "The question is: Can the Federal Government today afford to grant capital cost allowances as a means of stimulating growth?" The Article reads:

> Big business may soon have reason to examine a further dimension of the Just Society: The Federal Government, with ample cause to do so, is almost assuredly taking a hard long look at capital cost allowances—the rates of depreciation allowed for tax purposes.
>
> Projections made on the strength of a study done for the Carter Report suggest that since 1949 tax deferrals, arising from capital cost allowances, are now close to $6 billion. That is $6 billion which Ottawa never got and which had to be made up in other ways, notably by increasing taxes paid by individuals—hardly tolerable for a government which has been so chronically strapped for cash.

The article then refers to reporting and reads:

> The report to the tax authorities can understate actual earnings to a degree that is totally misleading of their value. DBS, for example, uses the returns made to tax authorities in calculating profit trends. Would the trend have declined so vigorously (if at all) last year if corporations hadn't been writing off new investment of the preceding years at the maximum rates?

Later, the article continues:

> This is one major cause for another look at capital cost allowances. Another is the consequences for the company that makes maximum use of them. It is, in effect, overstating cost of expansion and understanding return, distorting its balance sheet and building into its operations a windfall benefit as a permanent fixture—
>
> The estimated $6 billion of deferred taxation since 1949 would have permitted a corresponding reduction in other forms of taxation. Suppose it had been lumped into reducing the personal income tax? The effect of such an action would have been to increase potential spending power of individuals to some extent, no small inducement to growth itself and, by far, of a healthier nature.

The writer of the article interviewed the minister. It was his impression that since the minister was a former accountant, he was well aware of some of the abuses connected with capital cost allowances. He thought the minister wanted to take a more realistic approach to capital allowances. As so often happens, when people become ministers they forget some of their previous good intentions. The point is that the capital cost allowance is not a good way to stimulate the economy. It is good for two things. First, the capital cost allowance improves the profitability of some corporations; second, it enables a corporation to hide the fact that its profitability has been improved. It would have been far better if the minister had taken the amount of money involved from some of these corporations and given it back to the people who want to spend it. The problem is not a shortage of machinery. The problem is not the necessity of encouraging capital expansion. The problem lies in the shortage of purchasing power.

The people of this country need many things, but they do not have the money to buy them. By cutting taxes, we could have stimulated the economy. By taking other steps, such as increasing income tax exemptions, we could have further stimulated the economy. That stimulation would have been reflected by increased purchasing power, which would have started the wheels of industry moving again. According to the minister, it is anticipated that this new measure will cost the government about $250 million. That is almost the same amount of money that the government would have lost if it had dropped the 3 per cent surtax. The minister is thereby saying to us that the best way of meeting our present day problems is by giving industry the benefit of this money instead of by cutting taxes for ordinary people. I think he is dead wrong. I cannot understand his reasoning or logic.

If the government is short of money and wishes to maintain the flow of funds, surely the granting of these increased depreciation allowances was not the way to solve its difficulties. Increased depreciation allowances create difficulties. Of course, the first impact of such measures is to encourage people to modernize their plants. There can be no argument about the value of plant modernization programs. The government is allowing industry the money to do that. The increased depreciation allowance will enable industry to construct buildings and acquire machinery. To the extent that the allowance is used to erect buildings, it will create employment. Yet, when the allowance is used for the purpose of machinery acquisition, two things happen. The tendency is for more automated machinery to be used. In the short run, that throws people out of work. To that extent, the allowance does nothing for the man who suddenly finds himself unemployed.

In addition, the machinery itself is seldom bought in Canada. Most of such machinery that we use in this country is imported from the United States. Therefore, first, we see the usual offset taking place as a result of automation. There are fewer jobs as a result of automation, and automation increases which increased capital cost allowances. That unemployment is compensated for by increased employment in the capital goods sector. So goes the theory. But that will not happen in Canada, because our machinery for the most part is not made in this country. Perhaps it would have been better if the government had said these grants were to apply only to purchases made in Canada. Yet even so, there would be some obvious difficulties. The measure itself is poorly designed. I cannot comprehend why it was used, particularly since the government has had such bad experiences with depreciation allowances every time it has permitted them. The last time the minister used them, his purpose was to slow down the economy. That did not work. He did not learn anything from that experience. He is talking about using increased depreciation allowance and more rapid write-off to stimulate economy. I do not see how that will work. It certainly will not work as effectively as other measures.

• (4:30 p.m.)

I now wish to deal with the regional development program. For years, many of us have fought for regional development programs to stimulate the economy of some less industrially developed parts of Canada. We are now taking a second look at the whole program. It does not make any difference who first had the idea for this program. If there is a way of ruining an idea, the Liberal party will find it. They have a fantastic talent for destroying good ideas.

Mr. Barrett: What a philosophy.

Mr. Saltsman: I am glad the hon. member is awake. It is always better to speak to a group whose eyes are open, even if their ears are not.

Mr. Barrett: Make it good so we will stay awake.

Mr. Saltsman: The idea of regional development was good. It received the support of virtually every political party. What has happened to this program? Regional development must be enormously selective. It must be pinpointed and restricted to very few areas if it is to work. If not, the incentives could be so enormous that they will become self defeating.

Virtually all of Canada has been designated under the regional development program. It would make more sense, and there would be less paper work, if the government would state which areas of Canada are not designated under the regional development program. The entire Atlantic region, all of Quebec except one per cent, the entire province of Manitoba, a large part of Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia are designated. What is the sense of this program? When this fact is pointed out to the minister, he says not to worry because there will be different rates of incentive; the present rates will apply to the new areas designated but there will be different rates for the areas presently designated.

Mr. Stanfield: Give him a few more months.

Mr. Saltsman: At least we are together in this. It is a comedy. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) appeared before a committee of which I was a member. I am sorry I did not have time this afternoon to look for a specific reference. If someone wants it, I will locate it. The committee at that time was discussing the level of grants. The maximum was going to be 25 per cent. One of the members of the committee asked the minister whether he would consider a 30 per cent maximum. The minister replied that if there was to be a 30 or 35 per cent maximum, the government might as well operate the industry instead of giving all that money away. The minister was correct. What has been proposed today? The government is proposing a maximum of 50 per cent.

The regional development program has not significantly helped those areas which need help. Even by raising the maximum to 50 per cent, those areas will not be significantly helped. We have now reached the point where the cost is so great that we may as well operate the industries. A Canada development corporation should be established. It should take over the crown corporations. There should be a policy of economic planning to ensure that the designated areas have industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Saltsman: There can be no other way. We have learned that offering a bigger and bigger bribe is not paying off. We have no information as to how many industries would have located in the designated areas if the incentives had not been offered. We do not know how long the industries will remain in these areas, nor do we know whether they are the type of industries that are viable and useful to the various parts of the country.

How long are these programs going to continue? Although the government is relying on them, we have now reached an end point. Whatever merit the programs may have had in enticing industries through tax concessions and grants to some of the less industrially developed areas of Canada, experience has shown that this has not worked and there is very little promise of it working in the future. We must face this fact.

With less costs to the Canadian taxpayers and more potential, the crown corporation seems to be the most suitable vehicle for this kind of approach. The history of DEVCO in Cape Breton illustrates what we are suggesting. Meanwhile, the program is costing a great deal of money.

The government has pointed out its inability to find money. The Carter commission report was examined in this House, but we still do not have a capital gains tax in Canada. To my knowledge, we are the only industrialized nation that does not have a capital gains tax. This has cost the country a great deal because what it does not get in one area, it has to get from another. Those who do not pay the capital gains tax are subsidized by the wage and salary earners of this country. They pay tax on every cent they earn. There is a limit on how much people can be taxed at any given time.

The allowances to the oil and mineral industries, which we hoped would be changed, apparently are not to be changed. Without waiting for the report of the committee, the minister announced that he was again going to be generous to this area. His courage failed him. I regret that the courage of the members of the committee also failed them. Instead of criticizing the minister for making a statement of this kind while they were drafting a report, they included congratulations in their report. I am sorry to say this because I have a high regard for most members of the committee. It appears that the pressure on them is too great, even for those noble committee members.

Mr. Barrett: I like that word—noble.

Mr. Saltsman: I am glad you like it. Keep on listening and you may learn something. There is evidence that the low income and middle income wage and salary earners in this country are greatly overtaxed. This is because of the benefits of depreciation allowance, capital cost allowance and capital gains. There are no capital gains or depreciation allowances for the wage and salary earners. They cannot write off anything. They must pay high levels of tax. Income could be obtained from other sources than the wage and salary earners of this country. Even those earnings over $10,000 are being treated unfairly in comparison to other sectors of the economy.

Another area I wish to deal with is the gross inefficiency of the economy because of policies this government has adopted. We have said on many occasions—and this might be a good occasion upon which to repeat it—that we in Canada use 30 per cent more capital per worker than does the United States, the wealthiest nation in the world, yet we produce 30 per cent less. Every study which has been made shows that this dismal record does not arise through incapability on the part of the workers of this country or through the misuse of resources but, rather, because of the way in which capital is managed in our branch plant economy.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I shall be moving an amendment in a few moments, Mr. Speaker. Let me conclude by saying this. The ability of this government to congratulate itself on things for which it should be ashamed, surpasses the imagination. The minister talks about the good state of our current balances; he tells us that our foreign reserves are in great shape; he notes our better price performance and the decline in short-term interest rates. Yet, while all this great stuff is going on, we are slipping further and further behind. Not long ago, Canada enjoyed an income per capita which was the second best in the world. We have now slipped to fourth place, behind Switzerland and Sweden.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Saltsman: Canada is a country with vast resources. What more could a country ask for than we have here?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Good government.

Mr. Saltsman: Right; that is what we need. we have been blessed by everything except an intelligent government.

An hon. Member: And an opposition.

Mr. Saltsman: Oh, the opposition is doing all right. It is the government.

We are living in a society which is being challenged by dangerous men, by people who have no use for democracy or for our institutions. No doubt, there have always been men like these, and there always will be. What we ought to remember is that they play on real grievances which exist in society. There is ammunition available to them. They can ask: What good is your system of democracy if you cannot find a job, or if you cannot find a house? In this way, our society is in danger unless we do something about it.

The government showed a willingness to suspend civil rights when it felt democracy was in danger, and it used drastic and dangerous means in doing so. Where is the government's courage when we in the opposition ask them to bring forward, not measures which prejudice civil liberty, but bold measures to curtail the economic chaos in this country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Saltsman: Why is it so terrible to ask that the government set up a fund, not of $150 million, which would not really help the people of Quebec, but amounting to billions of dollars to deal with the many social and economic questions which confront us? Now is the time for the government to mobilize the savings of the people of this country whether they are in banks or in trust funds and use them for the benefit of Canada, because those who hold them at the present time are not doing so, or failing to do so effectively enough. This is what needs to be done. This is a time to act with courage, conviction, and understanding.

There are certain steps which should be taken immediately and these are set out in our amendment. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

> That the amendment be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:
>
> "and this House deplores in particular the failure of the government to alleviate the plight of those in receipt of inadequate incomes by providing that no income tax shall be paid by single persons earning $2,000 a year or less, or by married persons earning $4,000 a year or less, and also by providing tax relief for those in the middle income brackets."

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform The House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall—National Defence—Suggested special militia training program for young Canadians; The hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Sulatycky)—Combines—Curtailment of restrictive practices of professional societies; the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose)—Public Service—Sharing of decisions affecting job classifications with employees—amendment of legislation.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson, that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government, and the amendment of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Saltsman.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say a few words on the budget that was introduced last Thursday. I listened to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) with great interest, and I do not rise to speak in this debate as a financial expert, but as an individual who wants to express his opinion on a budget that the Minister of Finance has tried to defend and about which he has tried to arouse enthusiasm.

Mr. Speaker, I read this budget many times on my way to my constituency for the weekend. I would have liked to prepare these remarks better, but I did not have time to do so, because my train was late today.

I am always astonished when I compare Canada's budget with that of other countries with almost the same population. This country, with a $13 billion budget for 20 million citizens, does not succeed in providing the necessaries of life to low-income families and in solving once and for all the situation with regard to consumption.

We do wonder, Mr. Speaker, and like all the others, we try to find where the problem lies. I, for one, maintain that we overspend on administration and underspend on participation. Very little money is paid out to those who stand in need of it.

For instance, the Department of Agriculture estimates total several hundred millions of dollars, but if we take the administration costs into consideration, we are utterly astonished to realize how little farmers get. That is why I said earlier that too much money goes into administration and none is left for those who would need it so much.

This budget once again reflects the erroneous mentality of bureaucracy. The minister contends that the expansionary fiscal and monetary measures he took are beginning to show results which will further improve. He said that most economic indicators show an improvement of the Canadian economy and that unemployment is easing off. This one is a bit steep and if the minister would take a tour around my region, he would notice immediately that unemployment is not easing off at all.

The first measure proposed by the minister is designed to jack up unemployment benefits. Indeed, I would like to make a few remarks on this point.

While benefits were expected, according to the rumours from the government side, to be doubled, they will be raised by 10 per cent only, and this is not likely to solve the unemployment problem in the least. The sufferings of the unemployed will continue.

In my region, the problem is not one of whether the benefits are going to be raised or not. The minister should have thought of changing the unemployment insurance regulations by requiring, for instance, a smaller number of stamps. To qualify for benefits, a worker needs 30 stamps but he can never work long enough to accumulate that many unemployment insurance stamps.

In my constituency, hundreds of workers are not eligible for unemployment insurance benefits because they have not accumulated enough stamps. After two, three, four of five weeks of discussion, they are told that this is a regrettable situation, but they will have to seek help elsewhere.

This is when they are directed to welfare offices. For a family of five, six or seven children, welfare is no fun. However welfare allowances are expected to double in my region since the workers have been unable to accumulate stamps and are not entitled to allowances.

If the minister or his officials had made the effort to further study the allowance increase so as to permit the unemployed to cope with a higher cost of living, they would thus have solved the most urgent problem. In addition, the minister told us that loans in the amount of $150 million will be granted to the provinces through a fund intended to stimulate the economy and this money will be used to finance, during the year to come, job-creating investment projects.

Mr. Speaker, there again loans are involved. The government merely says: We are ready to support the provinces, the municipalities and the companies wishing to borrow, so that they can get deeper into debt.

We have only two money sources, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) says, taxing and borrowing. And these estimates point to borrowing.

On this matter of borrowing, I read a newspaper article reporting what the Quebec Premier thinks of the benefits offered the provinces by the government. I believe that he was expecting something other than availability of loans. I quote:

> For the first time in several years, the Quebec Minister of Finance can indulge in the luxury of choice between several options: borrow slightly less than last year on the money markets or improve Quebec's credit rating; or maintain borrowing at its present level and use surplus liquidity to convert into debenture loan part of the short-term commitments of the government toward school boards, for instance; or borrow more this year and increase capital expenditures and several extra-budgetary items such as government investments in SOF and Soquem.

As concerns the cyclical stabilization fund dealt with by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), here is what I read in a newspaper:

> It is therefore quite a service that Edgar Benson has rendered his Quebec colleague. Nevertheless, it should be mentioned that the new $150 million fund is not yet exactly the contingency assistance fund called for last June by the premier of Quebec.
>
> Mr. Bourassa had proposed the establishment of permanent machinery; the program announced by Mr. Benson will terminate in a year and a half. Mr. Bourassa wanted the contingency assistance fund to be replenished by statute with certain federal taxes, which would vary according to the needs; the funds made available to the provinces will come from the consolidated revenue of the central government and their importance is left entirely to the discretion of the latter. Mr. Bourassa had suggested that the contingency assistance fund give the provinces both loans and grants; the federal Minister of Finance has kept only the loans.

That is what we regret. Had the Minister of Finance followed all the suggestions of the present premier of Quebec, we would not have to deal only with loans, borrowing and mortgages in connection with the provinces. It must not be forgotten that the sum of $150 million will be used in so far as the province of Quebec is able to borrow and municipalities and other organizations keep on running into debt.

• (5:00 p.m.)

I wonder where we will end up with all those debts, and whether we are not doing the provinces a disservice by allowing them to double their debt without ever getting direct help that does not lead to debt.

But, what can be done? Our present financial system is made for debts, and must make the best of it. After collecting about $13 billion in taxes from the people, the federal government asks the provinces to go into debt for it. The minister proposes as a third measure, and I quote:

> —it is intended to allocate a further sum of $23 milion to departments and agencies to undertake further capital improvements in regions where unemployment is most severe.

When considering that $23 million are divided among the various departments, I immediately think of the Department of Agriculture. Indeed, I am anxious to see what will be the amount allotted to that department especially in Quebec, because the budget does not propose any measure to promote agriculture in that province. I trust that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) will take into account the different letters he receives and that he will take the necessary steps, in order to stimulate Quebec agriculture.

I am anxious to see what steps will be taken, because I would like some of those credits to be affected to farming in my area where 75 per cent of the people are connected with farming and need some help comparable with that received in other areas. Our district has experienced some disasters and I hope that the Minister of Agriculture will let us know the amount that the Minister of Finance wants to give the department of Agriculture and the sum that will be forthcoming for our regions.

The minister also stated as follows:

> A further $20 million will be allocated to development of roads.

It is no use hoping to get any thing for our regions. It is for Montreal. This sum of $20 million will be spent on the development of the new airport and will not alleviate in any way unemployment in our region.

As the minister stated, the purpose of this budget is to stimulate the Canadian economy and alleviate unemployment. Of course, the big problem today is unemployment. But what causes this unemployment? First of all, the increase in interest rates has favoured the big fellow to the detriment of the little one.

Today measures are proposed to reduce unemployment when for two years there was harping on inflation. Inflation has never existed at the level of the worker, of the small wage earner, but rather at the level of big finance. The government is still promoting the latter to create inflation.

The government is presenting both ineffectual and temporary measures to give assistance to the low-wage earner and the unemployed. Such measures will have no immediate effect in my area.

As for the $40 million for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, once again is a measure which, because of the high rate of interest and the very strict terms imposed by that agency, will have no effect. No family man with an average income can build a home in my district. That is the situation for all those who wish to build a low-cost home. I know that the loans are far the big contractors and not for the average citizen.

In my region there is a housing shortage. The $40 million will be used for building about 4,000 homes. In my opinion, this is not a solution for the family man who needs a dwelling and must pay a very high rent because he has many children. In cities nowadays landlords refuse to rent to a family with five children.

The government will have to find a better formula. If it does not want to lower interest rates for fear of antagonizing financiers, let it give at least rebate to average wage earners so that they may build a house.

In this budget speech, the minister also said that:

> The proposals set out in the White Paper on Income Security will have important fiscal and economic implications which will mean additional payments of $200 million and a new redistribution of income for those in the lower income group and the less favoured areas.

We agree with the principle of old age pensions, but not to give the older people a guaranteed income, as is proposed; this is only a pretext to appoint hundreds of inspectors merely to go and search senior citizens' homes to see if they have hidden $50 or $100.

• (5:10 p.m.)

That is why we are calling for across-the-board allowances and pensions, to avoid the expense of 3,000 inspectors snooping in homes to check on whether a certain senior citizen is not getting $5 or $10 more than he should. In fact, I believe the guaranteed income costs as much in inspections and salaries as the senior citizen is getting.

If we give old people a flat-rate pension, those who do not need it should reimburse it when making out their income tax returns. The Taxation Division is well enough organized to make the relevant inquiries, which would do away with the two inspection systems we now have.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

Every week-end, we are faced with 30 or 40 cases of old people being dealt with unfairly. The inquiry was not carried out properly and we have to go back and find the error. We manage to do it but at the cost of God knows how many headaches. The government should pay out pensions whenever practicable and put an end to its policy of distributing grants only to create employment.

Let us do away with administrative costs and inspectors' salaries, and then we will be in a position to hand out to our older citizens increased pensions without increased taxation.

The same is liable to happen with respect to family allowances. A system set up to investigate to the last cent expended is also recommended in this instance. There is going to be a reduction in the amount of family allowances paid to the wife of a man earning $4,500 or more.

Never will $16 be granted for each child, except to a few families but the rest will need it too. In fact, the head of a family who earns $6,000 or $7,000 a year but who has 7, 8 or 9 children will not be so much better off. I have here an article published in today's newspaper and signed by Mr. Paul Sauriol, about family allowances. He is presently in favour of this measure, of course, because all the press as well as Information Canada, which is financed by the government and speaks up for its policies, would be hard put to it to give an unbiased opinion. However, this is what Paul Sauriol writes:

> The proposed change in family allowances is the only one of the three where the government really advocates dropping universal benefits in favour of selective allowances.
>
> The monthly allowances would be increased to $16 per child for families with an income of $4,500 or less, and the allowances would be gradually reduced as the family income increases and they would cease completely for families with an income in excess of $10,000 a year.

When the head of a family earns $10,000 a year but has 11 children he cannot be said to be rich. And in relation to that I quote further:

> One thing must be said, first of all: the real value of family allowances, their purchasing power, has greatly diminished these last few years as a result of price increases, so that the $16 per child given to underprivileged families would merely re-establish the former purchasing power of present allowances.
>
> The principle of selective assistance to most disadvantaged families is excellent, but the decreasing rate suggested in the white paper has one serious defect, because it does not take into consideration the number of children in a family, nor their age. Wednesday's papers mentioned the case of one family where the father earns a little more than $10,000 and where the twelve children are eligible for allowances. Under the proposed reform. that family would not be entitled to any allowance while another one with three children and having an income of $7,000 would get $33 per month. The family—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Barney Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I really had hoped to deal at some length with the intelligent contributions made to the debate by speakers for the opposition, but unfortunately so far I have been unable to find anything sufficiently constructive to really counter. As a matter of fact, they discounted themselves by the weaknesses of their arguments and by the contradictions which were prevalent. However, I suppose that is to be expected because they have their job to do and they have to extend themselves to face a budget as strong as this is. But now that the big guns are coming up in the debate—I understand I am to be followed by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees)—I think the tempo should pick up and excitement reign as this House deserves.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I feel, in all sincerity, that this was a most imaginative budget because it dealt with the issues as they are and not as we would like them to be, and it dealt with them in a realistic manner. We were able to look at things in specific terms and in the total context of the situation that faces our country as a great trading nation in the world today, bearing in mind the program we have had for the last many months to curb inflation which has had a high degree of success, with the unfortunate side effects that were regrettably to be expected and certainly greater than we had wished.

We have used very specific and sharp instruments rather than the broader, blunt instruments which the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) suggested. The opposition always have neat packages, but today they had a great, big package of actions which they advocated with no real understanding of the consequences of those actions. I am not saying they advocated the wrong action, but it is not the one we chose. We chose to deal with the problems in our country that are of a regional nature to a large extent, and we are trying to zero in on them.

I think that the budget policies have been particularly consistent and they are part of an over-all program. I do not think the Budget can be isolated from other programs which this government is undertaking. It should be considered in relation to the white paper on tax reform, that on income security and that on unemployment insurance, plus the fiscal and monetary policies of the government as well as the actions of the Prices and Income Commission. I think these things express the philosophy of the government and are the articulated steps to deal with our problems.

What is most important in the budget is a rejection of the old, standard, universal type of program which was perhaps good in its times. Perhaps as a result of welfare programs and policies of this type, which we followed over the past years, our economy has changed and has shifted. Today when we talk of a middle income group, we really mean the group in the $10,000 to $25,000 income range. I think it is a fortunate country that has a middle income group with that size of income, but that is not the fact, we have replaced the principle of universality with an attach on specific problems.

I think the government was well intentioned, and certainly it was an opportune time to try to eliminate a means which is demeaning. It is something which we would not like to face and we would not like to see other people face, nor is it generally administratively efficient. The result, however, was that those who really needed help in our expanding and affluent society were getting less help, and those who did not need it were getting it. This was costly and inefficient. Now, we are zeroing in on those people who need help. I do not suggest for a moment that we are doing as much as is necessary or as much as we would wish. I think we are doing as much as we can, and we are doing it in stages.

There is a minimum of pump priming. The things that are being presented in this budget and in our other programs are those which are economically viable, and this is extremely important. There is not much point in pouring money down the drain in welfare programs. Some must be continued, but to the extent possible we should build the type of programs that help sustain themselves and help to lift up the deprived so that they can be self sustaining. There are those who suggest that by providing this type of assistance to people we are creating a welfare society, a type of society that depends on welfare, people who are permanently on welfare. That has been the case to a large extent in the past, but we are trying to overcome this tendency to have generations in the same family develop a welfare psychology.

Certainly, these people are the exception rather than the rule. As I understand it from surveys that have been done both in this country and elsewhere, a very high percentage of those people in receipt of welfare are unemployable for a large number of reasons. Some 45 per cent are unemployable because of physical or mental disability. They just cannot work or they are too old. Well over one third are women who have been abandoned, who are divorced or widowed and are left with dependent children still of school age. When you distil this down, less than 5 per cent of welfare recipients are able to work but are not working. Sociologists tell us that even among this group, there are undetected psychological problems which might prevent them from working. These studies were carried out in Canada and also in the United States. The results in both countries were amazingly close. It would be a shame to think that this group of less than 5 per cent is typical.

There are those who advocate throwing out welfare programs because there are those who abuse them. But there is no point in throwing out the baby with the bath water, and I suggest that all those who abuse our government programs and our tax systems are not welfare recipients. There are many people who are quite affluent and who abuse our system in one way or another, so let us not pick on that small group.

I think we realize that equalization payments, which are part of our system and have been good in the past, have not been adequate to deal with the disparities in our regions. Those of us who come from favoured areas—and I consider the area from which I come as being particularly favoured—are conscious of the fact that we are favoured because we are part of Canada and only in a united and prosperous Canada can we remain favoured. However, we hope we will all be equally favoured. If the other parts of the country are able to become economically viable so that unemployment is decreased and people are prosperous, then we from the Toronto region for instance would benefit from that because they are our markets and we become theirs. The trade and prosperity that is generated helps to lift up all of us. In this respect, and particularly in view of recent events, I think those of us from such favoured regions are happy to see our government take an initiative to help pull other parts of the country closer to the level which we enjoy.

Perhaps we are disappointed in some ways that we will not have a tax reduction, but I suggest we might have had a tax increase as a result of these programs because these programs will make us more prosperous and the more money we make, the more taxes we pay. I do not object to taxes of that sort. But by the same token, even though we come from a favoured region, the urgency of other programs is no reason for neglecting the legitimate needs of the great urban centres which are prosperous also. I refer to the expansion of airport facilities in Toronto and the many other factors that necessarily have to be dealt with in a growing urban area.

Mr. Marshall: Information Canada.

Mr. Danson: Information Canada could tell us a great deal, and I am sure it will.

The interesting part of the programs in the budget is the recognition that society has changed, that government has changed, and that the relationship of one to the other has changed considerably. In years gone by, in the days when government expenditures were something like 7 per cent of the gross national product, the government played a small part in our lives. But today, when you consider all the levels of government, we are talking in terms of 40 or 45 per cent of the gross national product which passed through the hands of government. Government is a big factor in our lives. It would be nice to say that less government is the best government, but that is not the case. First, it is not necessarily the best—I am not suggesting it could not be better—but less government is not going to be the case in our time. I think any realistic person who examines what is happening now will realize that government has improved. What we have done is blend the private and public sectors, and it is important that we continue to do this. The government should act as a conduit to the public sector, directing the economy to the extent that is necessary, and no more, so that we can all prosper by it.

• (5:30 p.m.)

In the budget speech on December 3, at page 1741 of Hansard the minister referred to provision of a further $40 million to the capital budget of Central Mortgage and Housing. In August $100 million was added, and some $200 million has been provided for low-cost housing. This stresses the direction the government is taking. The government has infused in the order of $1 billion into the private sector and the construction industry primarily for low-cost housing. This is where the help is needed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But it is needed this winter.

Mr. Danson: This is where help is needed, rather than for high-cost housing. The money will start the program moving. We have signalled our intention to help the economy in this way, and I think this is important. The hon. member for Waterloo spoke at some length about the provisions for accelerated depreciation and gave all the reasons why he thought this was bad. This is not to be done all at once, but at least we are telling the economy that we are starting to expand in this direction. We must be careful, however, not to overdo this because of the success we have had so far with our anti-inflation programs.

If the hon. member for Waterloo wants to list the reasons why accelerated depreciation is bad, he may do so; but I would like to quote from a memo which an eminent economist wrote to himself on October 20. This was B. J. Danson, M.P., outlining why he felt accelerated depreciation is good. Occasionally, when I have thoughts I try to put them in writing in order to develop some degree of logic. Therefore I said to myself that aside from the infusion of mortgage funds for housing, which we have in great measure, I believed the most effective and least costly tool could be the acceleration of depreciation on capital equipment for industry. This might follow the pattern of double depreciation used in 1962, although the degree of impetus to the economy could be controlled by the degree of acceleration. In other words, rather than the current 20 per cent on machinery it could be that 25 per cent or 33⅓ per cent would be more adequate.

Amongst the advantages is the relatively limited effect on revenue as opposed to massive spending programs. The effect on revenue is great—$25 million in the first year and $250 million over the whole period. This is positive spending and not pump-priming spending. Then many deferred expansion programs would be freed because we know there will be incentive for this type of program. This would considerably offset some of the pessimism that has existed in the business community.

Another advantage is that jobs would be created immediately in the engineering and construction of the machinery itself, plus the concurrent auxiliary expansion necessary to house and service it. When new machinery is delivered, the utilization of it creates more jobs. The hon. member for Waterloo suggested that it eliminates jobs because of increased efficiency. Certainly this might be a factor, but I would hate to see our economy sponsor increased inefficiency in order to create jobs or continued inefficiency. Productivity would increase by means of additional modern capacity and the replacement of older and less efficient equipment.

Smaller companies, frequently Canadian-owned with limited resources, would be encouraged more readily than larger corporations whose decisions are less influenced by limitations on available capital. This could be an area where the question of Canadian ownership could be enhanced as was suggested by an hon. member. There could be greater incentives for Canadian-owned businesses. I do not think that this is an area where we want to build up nationalism, but we do want to give impetus to productivity and efficiency. Flexibility can be obtained through the rate at which or the period in which purchases must be made. The experience of the early sixties was highly successful and gave considerable impetus to Canadian-owned companies even though there were no qualifications regarding nationality.

Another factor which we might consider is allowing this accelerated depreciation under the regional expansion program. I understand this program does not so qualify at the present time. We would develop some flexibility in our regional expansion program through capital cost acceleration. We have already introduced the principle of using 115 per cent of value for depreciation purposes at existing rates. I should like this principle to be watched very closely in order to make sure that it does not overheat the economy. By the same token, the areas of greatest industrial concentration naturally have the greatest potential for unemployment of skilled workers, and this is happening already. I submit that this provision in the budget will help alleviate that condition.

A matter which may be related to the budget, and one which was raised at the hearings on tax reform—I believe it is mentioned also in the report on the status of women—is aid to day care centres. This question was not included in the report of the finance committee, but a submission was made in the brief by the Vanier Institute for the Family to the effect that day care centres should be encouraged. I think this could be achieved by a budgetary measure.

It is good business to have more women in the work force, and the provision of day care facilities would encourage them to return to work. I do not believe that most businessmen have thought seriously of this, however. If we consider providing something like a 150 per cent write-off for the expense in the first year of establishing day care facilities, we might find them more interested. It makes good business sense and good social sense. Women would be happy to work, knowing that their children would be taken care of and it would be a great contribution to the morale and efficiency of our society.

Another area for concern is summer student employment, which will soon face us. In considering this question I have come to the conclusion that no one massive program will look after all students but, rather, what is required is a mass of programs, each one to look after some students. I was surprised and delighted at the success of the program for hiring students which was provided by our armed services last summer. It seemed to work out well for the students, and the armed services appeared to be happy with it. Having had that success, we should look at ways to improve that program rather than just providing more bodies for square-bashing. Perhaps the program could be developed as a paramilitary peace corps in Canada, with the students becoming involved in questions of the environment, ecology, pollutino clean-up and the like. In my own city of Toronto I should like to see them work on cleaning up the Don River.

I understand that Arctic command has some ideas germinating about taking students into the Arctic in the summer. They could work with the native people and help in the new communities by cleaning up the filth in the rivers and elsewhere. Perhaps this would serve to get young people enthused about the Arctic. If a few hundred were to start on such a program, some would become Arctic oriented. Some might become so Arctic oriented that they would be willing to devote their futures to it. I think that would be great for this country. In subsequent years, those who went there previously could help other students in going to the Arctic. I think the Arctic is a practical area for this kind of activity.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Last night I spoke at a function known as police appreciation night at the Centennial Baptist Church, Markham, in my constituency. It occurred to me that it might be worth while to have students during the summer months working with our police forces. It would improve their appreciation of what the police have to do and contend with. These students could talk to their fellow students about their experiences. The experience would be a revelation. Also, some of our youth might be inspired to make law enforcement their career. Our police forces at all levels ought to participate in that kind of program, which would be of minimum cost and extremely helpful. When I spoke to ex-chief Mackay of the Toronto police, who has now gone to greener pastures as chairman of the Liquor Licence Board, I learned that he thought this suggestion was worth while. Apparently it is not new. He also felt that people should be encouraged to a greater extent to employ summer students in their homes and cottages.

There are many other things I should like to talk about at this time. However, there are other members who wish to speak and I shall close my remarks by making one more point relating to national objectives. I am certainly not trying to articulate our national objectives at this time. Some of our difficulties stem from the fact that we must work from election to election. It is not that we do not try to think of the long-term; it is merely that our thinking is circumscribed by the fact that we must face an election every four years or so. Nevertheless, the Economic Council is looking at the long-range picture. The Prices and Incomes Commission seems to be looking at some of our short-range problems. These problems are always present and affect management, labour and society in general.

It seems to me that if we could bring these disparate bodies of society together we would see, if we could look far enough ahead, that all of our national objectives are identical and that the things we each want in Canada for our children or for our children's children are the things we want for society as a whole. If we could bring all these various groups together we would see, if we could look far enough ahead, that we have a mutuality of interest in the solution of our common problems and that we have common objectives. I think it would be found that our objectives and even our methods are not mutually exclusive. We could then fill in the gaps in greater harmony.

Since I know that we are to be favoured with an address by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees), and because more members are now entering the House—they want to listen to him—and time is getting on, I shall defer to the hon. member.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, may I start by thanking the Parliamentary Secretary for his graciousness in terminating his remarks, thereby giving me a chance to finish my speech before six o'clock. I appreciate this very much indeed.

The budget that has been presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) I believe could be summed up as an expenditure of $500 million to try to bolster the economy which, because of lack of positive government economic policies, has been allowed to run down in a rather shocking fashion.

Mr. Bell: Shame!

Mr. Hees: We all hope that this infusion of $500 million will greatly reduce unemployment. We can only wait to see what the results will be, hoping that they will be successful. I believe this budget pays far too little attention to incentives to stimulate the economy and make it possible for employment not to be provided just on a temporary basis as a result of construction projects but on a continuing and expanding basis. I believe that by stimulating the economy we could provide the expansion of our continuing economic processes, those processes carried out by industry, so that we could have not simply an increase in employment now but a continual increase of employment because the economy would be stimulated, would be moving faster and would be continuing to employ more and more people.

I believe that the 115 per cent capital cost allowance is a move in the right direction and will no doubt result in additional purchases of capital equipment which would not otherwise be made. I believe there are three other moves that the government could and should make at this time to stimulate the economy. First, it should bring great pressure to bear—and I know that these people listen when pressure is applied—on the chartered banks of this country to lower their commercial lending rates so that construction and the general operations of industry can be expanded and employment increased.

Second, I believe the government should introduce tax incentives in the form of tax rebates paid on the basis of increased productivity, which would induce industry to make the necessary expenditures on new plant, equipment and production systems which are needed in order to lower costs and selling prices, thus making our products more competitive, making it possible to sell them in greater volume and thereby enabling more people to be employed.

Third, I believe the government should announce that it has decided not to cancel the 21 per cent tax on the first $35,000 of corporate profits, which tax is particularly important to small businesses. It should announce that the 21 per cent tax will remain and will not be replaced by the regular 50 per cent rate. This kind of move, Mr. Speaker, is very much needed to restore the confidence of business in the future of the economy, and to persuade industry that it is justified in making the expansionary moves which we all know are being held back in large number at the present time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: That is making it impossible to employ the number of people we should like to see employed in our country.

I should like to speak for a few moments on the position of the Auditor General, who has been brought under attack very severely by this government during the past few weeks. Actually, there has been by the government a process of attack on the Auditor General for the past several years. These attacks have been brought to a head rather spectacularly during the past few weeks. For many years, as we know, this country has benefited greatly by having the expenditures of the federal government checked and commented upon in the yearly review to Parliament known as the Auditor General's report. Although the primary job of the Auditor General is to see that proper accounts are kept by all government departments, he is also authorized by the legislation to report on any matter that he considers should be brought to the attention of the House of Commons.

All governments, both past and present, have been embarrassed from time to time by disclosures of wasteful spending of public funds. This has made them more careful about expenditures in the future and the country has benefited as a consequence. From time to time, Mr. Speaker, when I was a minister I was shocked to learn from the Auditor General's report of stupid mistakes which departments for which I was responsible had made. Although it was extremely embarrassing at the time, the knowledge that a watchdog had a constant eye on our operations made me and those who worked for me do a better job of running the departments for which we were responsible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: All the members of the government did a better job because of the careful and constant watch which the Auditor General kept on all moneys spent by departments. But, Mr. Speaker, by the presentation of the government's bill in respect of the Auditor General, all this was to be changed. The proposed bill would have taken away the right which the Auditor General enjoys under the legislation.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Deachman: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The point of order is quite clear. There was before the House a bill dealing with the Auditor General. That bill was withdrawn with the unanimous consent of the House. I think the hon. member was a party to that decision. The hon. member knows one does not reflect in this House upon decisions of the House. The bill has been withdrawn; we cannot go back to it and discuss it in this debate. The bill was withdrawn by unanimous consent of this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) wish to speak to the point of order?

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member who has just spoken will know if he reads the rules of the House, when a bill is disposed of by a vote of the House, whether it is passed or rejected it cannot be debated further in the session. When a bill is presented but is not acted upon, hon. members are at liberty to debate or speak about it as much as they want.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I wish to dispose of the point of order. It seems to the Chair that the bill having been withdrawn from the House, and the fact that this was by unanimous consent, will give more force to my ruling. The matter is not now before the House. The bill could be reintroduced by the government later this session. It seems to me, with respect, that the point raised by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) is not well taken.

Mr. Hees: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I ask Your Honour to note that the interjection of the hon. member has taken approximately four minutes of my time. I would appreciate it if I could go to four minutes past six o'clock in order to complete my remarks. As I said before I was so rudely interrupted, the proposed bill would have taken away the right which the Auditor General enjoys under the present legislation of calling to the attention of Parliament instances of wasteful spending of public funds that have come to his attention. I refer to such items as the Bonaventure, the $8 million St. Lawrence harbour that will never be used, and the approaches to the Prince Edward Island causeway. The proposed bill would have restricted him essentially to a bookkeeping function with no right to comment on bureaucratic mistakes and extravagances.

Hon. members know that the first move along the road to dictatorship is the removal of criticism by a government or would-be dictator. That the government would think it could get away with a move which would have removed it from detailed and informed criticism for misuse of funds is a shocking example of arrogance and is a measure of how far this government has moved along the road to dictatorship.

This measure was obviously aimed at the present Auditor General, Maxwell Henderson. Over the years, under both Liberal and Conservative governments Mr. Henderson has been diligent in reporting to Parliament and the public instances of wasteful and foolish government spending. This has apparently irritated cabinet ministers and senior civil servants to the point where today they have decided that at all costs and in any way available to them he will be removed from office. If they had succeeded it would have been one of the most serious blows ever struck at parliamentary government in this country. The time to stop this march toward dictatorship is now.

Even before last week the opposition made it very clear that they intended to fight every inch of the way this latest move to suppress criticism. As a consequence of this determination the government lost whatever courage it posessed, which was very little, turned tail and ran. However, Mr. Speaker, the government's position has been made very clear by the undermining of the position of the Auditor General—which members of the cabinet have systematically undertaken, by the downgrading of his staff and the undisguised hostility which members of the cabinet openly show toward him.

The position of the Auditor General should be further protected from this government and any future power-hungry government which would like to prevent any criticism of its actions. I am convinced that further protection should be given to the Auditor General by requiring a two-thirds vote of both Houses of Parliament in order to remove him from office, instead of the present simple majority. A simple majority vote enables a government with an over-all majority, such as the present Liberal government which also has a majority in the Senate, simply to call in its members and vote him out of office.

The hostile attitude of the government makes it obvious that added protection is needed for the office if the Auditor General is to continue to carry out the very valuable task which he performs for the people of Canada. I believe that such a move should be brought before Parliament at the earliest possible moment, for the benefit of parliamentary government in this country.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) shall call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) on the budget statement he delivered to this House last week. I believe Canadians should hear more statements of this type. In addition, his address contained a budget which I believe will strike with pinpoint accuracy at the most troublesome areas of unemployment in the country.

However, it is not so much the budget itself I wish to discuss tonight as the statement which went with it and the confidence displayed in that statement, though the budget itself was certainly well thought-out and contained a program vastly better than anything presented in the last few hours by spokesmen for the opposition parties. But let us consider the budget statement for a few minutes and examine some of the confident statements which the minister made, together with some of the facts to which he drew our attention as far as the Canadian economy is concerned.

My hon. friend pointed out that employment is, in fact, rising in Canada and that unemployment on a seasonally adjusted basis appears to be decreasing. He went on to say that real output in the economy is rising. Later he told the House we were experiencing a considerable boom in housing in Canada and that apart from housing, capital investment was strong. He said, further, that 1970 would go on record as the best year ever in international trade. Last, he informed us that Canada had achieved a record envied by other countries in the world in putting the brakes on price increases. From the third quarter of 1969 to the third quarter of 1970, consumer prices rose by only 3 per cent compared with 5.7 per cent in the United States and even larger increases in many other countries. Only one country had a better record, Finland, with an increase of 2.8 per cent.

The minister did not paint a completely rosy picture. He admitted there was an unemployment problem and said that the rate of growth of employment must improve. But all in all it was a very optimistic and confident statement, the kind of statement which is rarely heard in Canada these days. Sometimes, when we display optimism of this kind as we discuss the prospects of our country we are accused of being stupidly patriotic. Generally, when this House discusses the future of our country and the prospects of its economy we display a most pessimistic attitude. This negative or pessimistic attitude is evident throughout the country as it is in this House. I noticed it on the evening the Minister of Finance made his statement. Whenever he expressed confidence in the Canadian economy or in the future of this country there were snickers and guffaws from the opposition benches.

This is indicative of the attitude taken by some members of this House, including the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). I have heard it expressed on other occasions; for example, during the debate on the Speech from the Throne. But it does not alter the fact that the vast majority of the people still have great confidence in this country. I believe we have to fight the type of negative attitude displayed by some people in this country and in this House. It is nothing new. The pages of history are filled with pessimistic predictions as to Canada's future. The one which perhaps most ludicrously underestimated Canada's potential appeared in an English newspaper of 1871 as follows:

> A word or two on Canadian finances in general would be in season. Canada is one of the most overrated colonies we have. The country is poor and crushed with debt. The province and city of Quebec are notoriously bankrupt.
>
> In the end, the Dominion will have to go into liquidation. One day, when the load gets too heavy, Ontario is pretty certain to go over to the States, into which it dovetails and where its best trade outlet is.

• (8:10 p.m.)

I suggest it is time we began to develop a positive attitude in relation to the prospects for this country, which are certainly very bright indeed. The attitude of people in this country seems to be that that we should criticize everybody and everything. This includes foreign countries. It is time we began to look at the good things in Canada and to take an optimistic and positive approach, the type of approach that the Minister of Finance took in his budget.

I should like to quote from a recent article that appeared in the Banff Crag and Canyon in which the editor was berating the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for its anti-American attitude. In a constructive spirit he suggested that the CBC should present a program on what a good country Canada is and how we as citizens can make it even better. He went on to say:

> Maybe a series on the opportunities to get away from it all in the north and the chances to make a good living there.
>
> Certainly, there are plenty of people in other parts of the world who would welcome the chance to come to Canada—to enjoy the things we take for granted.
>
> The CBC should be pointing out, to Canadians, the many good things that await them right in their own country and forget about wasting the taxpayers' money on expensive programming beating the daylights out of the United States of America.

Those people who take a negative approach seem to think that government should do everything for them. They criticize government because it is not doing enough, and seem concerned only with what government can do for them personally. I suggest this approach is not only improper but does not display the type of positive attitude that has brought this country to its present state of prosperity, an attitude it will be necessary to adopt in the future to bring about even greater prosperity. Those who take a negative approach feel that some powerful central authority, be it a provincial or federal government, will look after them. Instead of expecting the impossible, I suggest these people should show a little initiative and attempt to improve their own position, as they could well do if only they would so determine.

Many people in this country have the idea that it is a wealthy country, that Canada has great resources, that the land is rich and that from the land and its resources we can do well economically both as a nation and as individuals. I suggest that the time when we can do this is almost over. It is time we began to think, not of what we can get from the land to make ourselves wealthier but what we ourselves can contribute to this country.

I was interested to note that of all the industrialized nations of the world, Canada appears to be the least inventive. According to my information, residents of at least ten major countries filed patent applications at rates very much in excess of the rate in Canada. For every one patent application filed in Canada by a Canadian, 18 are filed by foreigners. Canada's rate of inventiveness is probably the lowest in the entire world. I suggest this is because we expect the country to be rich, to give everything to us. We do not use our intuition and apply our talents to the inventing and devising of methods to improve our economic situation and to develop technology. I suggest this attitude is due to our negative outlook.

I should also like to quote from an article that appeared several months ago in a leading United States daily. This article very much reflects my own opinion of the attitude of people toward government and toward what they expect from government, and illustrates how individual initiative contributes toward both economic and social growth. The article reads, in part:

> There are few greater powers on earth than the cumulative effect of individual initiative rightly directed—
>
> Today, as they look about them, men are staggered by the immensity and the complexity of the problems confronting them. The threat of war, spreading pollution, racial bitterness, vast poverty, urban blight, crime and violence, the withering away of moral and religious standards, personal and public tensions, these and many more challenges bewilder the individual. And, to a degree unprecedented in history, millions look to some central source of public authority to save them.
>
> But one need only talk with wise public officials, with thoughtful political scientists, with insightful historians to perceive how fruitless it is to look to such central authority to make the world, or a nation, right.
>
> What is required is the awakening of a realization that most of these problems—above all, those which stem from a lowering of personal and civic standards—can only be solved through a massive grass roots effort. There must come the time when the average individual recognizes that he must actively participate in solving one or more of the problems which he sees around him.
>
> Such individual effort has a breadth, a sweep, an inspiration which no organized government program can equal.

I believe that is the type of initiative that comes from taking a positive approach. It is the attitude that is engendered by the sort of positive statements that the minister made last week in his budget address which help to build a belief in Canada, a belief that will foster economic growth. Aside from the benefits that will accrue from the programs announced in the budget, the optimism and confidence expressed in the speech are a very good sign for Canada.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have to agree with one remark made by the previous speaker, the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Sulatycky) namely, that the statement we heard last Thursday evening from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) is the kind of statement that is not too often made. On behalf of the Canadian people I say thank God it is not made too often. It is quite obvious that what the colleagues of the Minister of Finance refer to as a budget speech is nothing more than the confession of the Minister of Finance and the government that their illogical and insane policies, their so-called war on inflation and their deliberate attempt to create unemployment have had, as we on this side of the House predicted, a ruinous effect on the economy of this country. This government has forced the economy to the brink of disaster by its illogical and ill-conceived policies to fight inflation.

Sitting in this chamber and watching the Minister of Finance deliver his address last Thursday night, one got the impression that his skin was so thick that in comparison a rhinoceros would be a sensitive creature. The Minister of Finance demonstrated to the Canadian public that he does not know where his economic policies are taking this country. Certainly, this budget is the latest piece of documentary evidence we have had to prove this point.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Last March we saw the minister stand in his place and say to the Canadian people that the brakes were on. The words he then used were "restraint," "cutback" and "tighten the government's purse strings." He said a surplus was essential for our economic well-being, and to hell with unemployment; because the Minister of Finance, as did his leader the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), made the statement that they were prepared to drive unemployment to an all-time high in an endeavour to win their so-called, phony war on inflation.

In his budget speech on Thursday night, without batting an eyelash the minister performed a complete about-face. Instead of forecasting a budgetary surplus of some $300 million, he said there would be a deficit of $320 million. In spite of the fact that we have a seriously sick economy with probably the highest rate of unemployment in years, with housing starts right across the country, especially in the Atlantic region, at an all-time low, with profits and volume of new business declining rapidly, the minister talked as if the economy was never better and is going ahead full blast. The minister would have us believe that the economy is advancing in leaps and bounds, that the unemployment situation is rapidly disappearing and that seasonally adjusted unemployment is rapidly falling off.

The minister would have us believe that we are having a boom in housing and that we will go into 1971 with an all-time high and, as he stated, one of our best years in international trade. It is quite obvious that the minister is being fooled by his own figures, because in 1970 the unemployment figure rose to an almost all-time high, with predictions being made by competent economists and those who are eminently qualified to make such predictions that unemployment will increase possibly to 9 per cent.

In spite of the remarks of the minister concerning the housing boom and the number of starts, in fact housing starts as of November 10 in the Atlantic area showed a decline, for the first nine months of this year, of 39 per cent. The minister, with his usual contempt for the unemployed of this country, announced an immediate increase of 10 per cent in the rate of benefit for those receiving unemployment insurance. I am sure the people on the rolls of the unemployed must think this is a magnanimous effort on the part of the Minister of Finance and the government! It amounts to an additional $4 or $5 a week.

We on this side of the House feel that the government has an obligation to do everything possible to alleviate the suffering of those unemployed this winter, particularly in view of the fact that their plight is due in no small measure to the actions taken by this government in the past year and a half. If this government had any real feeling for the unemployed people it would have proposed an emergency amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act to provide for substantially increased benefits from January 1 to July 1, which will be the critical months ahead for people on the rolls of the unemployed. The increased benefits should be in line with the recommendations of the Gill report. The present ceiling on unemployment insurance benefits is $53 per week. We believe in updating the Gill report recommendations which would increase the ceiling for a man with dependants to $60.24. This figure is arrived at by calculating the benefits as 60 per cent of income. There is currently a surplus in the unemployment insurance fund of $464 million, which we believe is adequate to finance such a temporary measure.

We believe that the government should have removed the 3 per cent surcharge on personal income and corporate taxes. It is estimated that such a move on the part of the government would inject an additional $150 million into the private sector of the economy. If this government had been seriously interested in helping Canadians and in trying to stimulate the economy, not only would it have removed the surtax but it would have announced a 10 per cent reduction in personal income tax for those earning less than $6,000 per year. This would have injected an additional $140 million into the economy. This additional money would have been injected mainly into the economy of the more depressed regions of Canada where the distribution of personal income is less, particularly the Atlantic provinces.

The government's proposed amendment to the Regional Development Incentives Act, which will have the effect of including a part of Ontario and Quebec including Montreal, will be seriously detrimental to the Atlantic area, especially to the province which I represent. What chance do the Atlantic provinces have to compete with new industry when so much of the industrial heartland has been made eligible for incentives? With close to 65 per cent of Canada designated as special areas in the economy, economically depressed, underindustrialized areas can no longer have special status. As somebody said the other day—I believe it was in the Globe and Mail—when everything is designated, nothing is designated. With regard to the province of Newfoundland, the only benefit we will derive from the budget presented by the Minister of Finance is the $5 million allocated to the guaranteed loans program. Maybe we can look forward to another $1 million in Newfoundland through accelerated public works programs, but this will not achieve the objective of substantially reducing unemployment in my province this coming year.

While I am talking about unemployment I should like to refer to a question I posed to the Minister of Economic Regional Expansion (Mr. Marchand) this afternoon concerning the plight of the people in the Argentia area of my riding, where things are pretty tough as a result of the phase-down of the United States naval station three. On July 6 of this year the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) went to Newfoundland and with his usual described as an emergency assistance program aimed at flurry announced that a $2 million plan, which he softening the effects of the phasedown of the U.S. naval station at Argentia, would be put into effect. In his usual style he went to great lengths to describe them as crisis projects. They include the construction of a community stage and other facilities for the fishermen. They include the construction of a boatbuilding and boatrepair facility. They also include $100,000 in the way of boatbuilding subsidies.

The minister indicated the government would make $450,000 available by way of grant to enable the department concerned to make an immediate start on the Castle Hill national historic park. He referred to a sizeable amount of money for the reconstruction and paving of approximately nine miles of road in the area. He referred also to a recreational area in Jersey Side leading to a nature trail at a site close to the Castle Hill project. As I have said, the minister's statement did not amount to very much and the people in the area have concluded that it is nothing more than a blast of hot air. I might add that only one or two of the projects announced by the minister, on which he claimed some $2 million would be spent, have been started. Less than $500,000 of that amount has been spent on the projects and this has not provided many jobs.

• (8:30 p.m.)

It seems the government has recognized the real extent of the emergency in words only, because of all the projects announced only two have actually commenced. If that is the best the government when it has been recognized by all concerned that a real emergency exists and a large number of people have been thrown out of work because of circumstances over which they have no control—such as the phasing down of the U.S. naval station—I would hate to see this government endeavour to bring in benefits in an area where an emergency does not exist.

In all fairness to the Minister of Transport I should say it is quite possible he is not solely responsible for what is happening in that area. It is possible he is not receiving full co-operation from the Newfoundland government. It is possible he is not receiving the required co-operation from other government agencies which are involved, and it is possible the bureacracy has taken over with its usual lack of response to the problems facing the people of this nation.

There are a number of possible excuses that could be put forward by the Minister of Transport and his colleagues in the cabinet, but I am afraid that is of little consolation to the people of the area who face serious social and economic consequences as a result of the U.S. naval station being phased down. I am inclined to believe that the Minister of Transport, presumably speaking on behalf of his colleague the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, has led the people down the garden path with nothing but empty promises of grandiose plans involving multimillion dollar expenditures. The people concerned in the area do not condone such action on the part of our government. Too much time has already been lost. These people have been left up in the air for almost a year, with very little more to show than they had last year at this time.

I urge the government and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion especially to take immediate action to bring relief to the people of the area who are desperately groping for a way in which to retain their independence and keep body and soul together. I also urge the government to make representations to the United States government with a view to having the existing facilities which are not now being used by the base, and are lying dormant, turned over to the Canadian government, the Newfoundland provincial government or the private sector for possible development. I have great faith in that area of Newfoundland. I believe it has the necessary potential to get back on its feet if the government is willing to go in there and do its share in helping the various groups that are desperately groping for an answer to the very serious problems facing the people.

To return to the special incentives program announced by the Minister of Finance on Thursday last, I am convinced this will have a detrimental effect on the economy of the so-called have-not provinces, especially the Atlantic provinces of Canada, because I believe by designating parts of Ontario and parts of Quebec, including Montreal, as special areas little incentive will remain for industry to establish itself in the Atlantic region. So I do not believe we have any great reason to be jubilant or to get on our knees to the Minister of Finance when he states that other areas will be designated as special areas under the special incentives program, because this will have a detrimental effect on the Atlantic region.

I do not think we have any great reason to be jubilant over the announcement of the Minister of Finance in respect of the other incentives he says are being suggested by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion when we realize that almost 80 per cent of the money allocated for special incentives will be pumped into the new Quebec designated areas. I might ask what this leaves for Newfoundland or the other eight provinces of Canada which so desperately need added incentives for industry and new employment opportunities.

It has been said that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, in lauding the program of his department expects it to create a number of jobs in Canada because money is to be made available to industries under the Regional Development Incentives Act. What the minister does not say, in announcing that 500 jobs will be provided here or 500 jobs will be provided there, is that he is speaking of perhaps ten years hence, and that while the industries to which assistance is provided are projecting a total employment of 500, 1,000 or 1,500 people, it does not mean they will start employing that number of people right now in 1970 or, indeed, in 1971. Some of these industries will fail. Some will never get off the ground.

I believe the minister mentioned an industry in the riding of my colleague the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall). This was to be a hockey-stick factory which would employ 50 or 75 people. This figure is being used by the minister and his colleagues in an effort to boost their own stock and justify the action they are taking under the special incentives act. However, the industry to which I refer never got off the ground. It is dead before it can start. Many of the plants which we hear about, and which are expected to employ large numbers of people as a result of special grants from the department, never get started; consequently, the minister is misleading the Canadian people by endeavouring to have them think he is providing these jobs as a result of special grants and other incentives to industries in certain areas.

To sum up, I would have liked this government on Thursday night, through the Minister of Finance, to have shown its sincerity and its desire to strengthen the economy by taking a number of concrete steps and making definite proposals which I believe would have the effect of strengthening the economy. I believe the government should have removed the surtax on personal and corporate income and should have made every effort to restore business confidence and lay the groundwork for the private sector to expand the economy, because true expansion can only occur in the private sector.

I believe the government should initiate reforms in the construction industry. This could be done by reducing or eliminating the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. We have heard the minister in this House express a desire to increase the housing starts in Canada and make it possible for the Canadian earning an average salary to acquire a home of his own. There is one thing the minister could have done: he could have followed the recommendation of his predecessor by impressing upon his colleagues in the cabinet the need to eliminate or reduce the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. Such a move on the part of the government would have been an expression of its sincerity in trying to bring an end to the housing problems and in providing housing for the Canadian with an average salary.

• (8:40 p.m.)

We believe, also, that the government should increase the amount of money for mortgages available through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. We believe these moneys should be made available on a regional basis. There are parts of Canada where housing is more badly needed than in other areas; therefore, we believe that in certain provinces—and I can speak for the province of Newfoundland—much more money is needed for housing than in the more wealthy provinces.

When the minister referred to his magnanimous offer of $40 million for housing, this was an insult to Canadians and especially to those who are now living in substandard conditions. I say this because $40 million is not even a drop in the bucket and certainly will not go any way toward solving the housing problem in Canada. Indeed, I can tell the minister ways in which this $40 million could be spent in parts of my riding.

Therefore, as I said at the outset, the budget speech was obviously an admission by the Minister of Finance and his colleagues that they have been wrong in their policies to fight and to curb inflation. He gambled but he has lost. He is not prepared to go all the way and admit his mistake, so he is trying to soften the blow by bringing in a few temporary measures, makeshift measures, that will have no lasting effect on the economy of our country.

I conclude my remarks by repeating what was said by the Premier of British Columbia, that the Canadian people would have been 3 per cent better off had the Minister of Finance sat in his seat and not risen to make the non-budget speech on Thursday night.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, it has been said that one thing as sure as death and taxes is the certainty that a finance minister in presenting his budget is immediately denounced as inept and shortsighted, no matter whether he proposes a raise or a reduction in taxes or confirms them as they are. On Thursday, December 3, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) read the budget speech, the opposition reacted as predicted. They said, "Nothing good is in it. It didn't lower taxes. It didn't forecast a surplus. It didn't raise the security pension to $150 for everybody without a means test". According to its critics, the budget was a useless exercise.

Let us examine the proposals in this document without prejudice and see whether there is anything good in them. To an unbiased observer the budget reveals a 16 months program of spending that will pour $300 million into the battle against unemployment. It will add a further $200 million to the economy to pay for the announced increase in old age pensions and guaranteed supplements.

Unemployment insurance benefits are to be increased by 10 per cent immediately. Loans totalling $150 million will be made to provinces through a fund to finance job-creating capital projects next year. A further $23 million will be allocated to federal departments and agencies for capital improvements in areas of highest unemployment, which will also take care of the province of Newfoundland. A further $20 million will be allocated to development of roads and other local services for the new Montreal international airport.

[Mr. Carter.]

The capital budget of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will be increased by $40 million for housing projects. The industrial incentives program will be expanded to establish a new system of capital incentive grants for areas of acute unemployment and to establish a system to guaranteed loans. The group of measures includes the assistance to shipbuilding announced recently by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), which I hope will also assist the Port Arthur shipbuilding yards in northwestern Ontario. A capital cost allowance supplement will permit manufacturers and processors to value investments at 115 per cent of actual cost and enjoy higher than usual depreciation on capital projects. Business enterprises that will be affected will save an estimated $25 million in taxes in the fiscal year 1971-72.

These and other benefits contained in the speech of the Minister of Finance are designed primarily to take care of those in the low-income bracket and to boost employment, and are aimed specifically at increasing capital investment in industrial development. I congratulate the minister for resisting the temptation to cut taxes prematurely, because had he done so he would not have been able to announce a program of jobless benefits and an increase in pensions, to say nothing of grants to Canadian shipbuilding.

The official opposition's critical assessment of the measures contained in the budget does not make sense, and they have failed to indicate any positive changes that under the circumstances could be construed as being practical. As far as members of the New Democratic Party are concerned, they can always be counted on to introduce proposals to cut taxes and, of course, to introduce programs costing impossible sums of money.

The budget was to a great extent based on the proposals contained in the white paper on social security, about which the Ottawa Journal of December 1 in its leading editorial said something to the effect that when the white paper proposals are implemented, Canada will have the most comprehensive guaranteed income plan in the world. The editorial reads in part:

> That is the answer to doctrinaire socialists, or dreamy idealists, who say that the white paper does not go far enough in redistributing income.

Happily, the year 1970 was our best year in international trade. The clouds that darkened our economic horizon were relatively high unemployment and inflation, and the budget was geared to fighting these enemies. I have no doubt that the government will continue to introduce measures to control both.

• (8:50 p.m.)

While our economy has been greatly helped by healthy exports, I should like to suggest that the re-pegging of the dollar at 2.5 cents higher than it was, thus setting the Canadian dollar at 95 cents in relation to the U.S. dollar, would have an immediate impact on earnings in the pulp and paper industry, iron ore and most of the other export industries. I mention the pulp and paper industry in particular because the constituency which I represent, along with others in northwestern Ontario, is heavily dependent upon the export of pulp and paper as well as other forest products. The increase in the value of the Canadian dollar has posed a very serious problem for most export industries. I believe that industries affected by the present exchange situation are not likely to attract capital for investment unless the government decides to revalue the Canadian dollar at a more realistic rate than the present one.

Contrary to the belief of some of our economic nationalists who are forever deploring foreign investment in Canada, we still need investment capital, preferably Canadian of course. But Canadian capital alone is not sufficient to meet the demands of an expanding economy to reduce unemployment to the minimum. It is all very well to urge increased ownership of Canadian resources and industry whenever possible, provided we do not discriminate against the non-resident investor. We should be thankful that foreign investments have made possible the standard of living which we now enjoy.

My colleague, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), when speaking at the recent policy convention of the Liberal party in Ottawa pointed out that the economic nationalism campaign is a campaign of the rich in areas such as Toronto and southern Ontario, where there is not any shortage of capital, and is not concerned with other parts of the country where there is shortage of capital. I even find the nationalism of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) as expressed in his speech which he delivered in Denver, Colorado, hard to take. Happily, he has since declared that he had been misunderstood.

When the government tables the policy statement on foreign ownership, I hope it will not contain some of the extreme proposals made to it in the report of the House of Commons Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. I was not a member of the committee at that time but I have had a chance to study the report since it was made public. It appears that the report was approved by the committee with undue haste. It suggested, as a guideline, 51 per cent Canadian participation in foreign companies and that an alien control agency supervise and control the activities of foreign firms in Canada.

I for one would disagree most emphatically with any such proposal, and I would have cause to worry greatly were it not for the fact that I have confidence in the good sense of the cabinet to reject any such inconsiderate recommendation. I have reason to believe that this final recommendation was made at a committee meeting when only 17 of 30 members were in attendance, and of those present only 11 voted for it, one voted against the proposal and five abstained from voting. On a matter of such grave importance I submit that the report in question should be recalled by the chairman and reintroduced into the committee for further consideration.

Canadians, unfortunately, are not inclined to gamble on risky things the way our friends south of the border do, yet some Canadians resent our neighbours' desire to control something here which they brought about with American money and initiative. We should be aware that Canada's economic potential in the field of resources still requires foreign capital to develop it.

One Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Jean-Paul Drolet, made more sense than did his minister when he stated, addressing the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy convention on the subject of foreign ownership of our natural resources, that the controversy over foreign ownership is unimportant as long as the best interests of the Canadian people are being served, and that the government must work with the mining companies, no matter what country they come from, in order to best serve the interests of Canadians. I am talking about partnership between the government and private enterprise for the benefit of the community", the deputy minister said. A number of studies have suggested that whatever the criteria, foreign-owned companies do not perform very differently from domestic-owned companies and the government should intervene only when the interest of the Canadian people is not considered first.

We are concerned with an industry that has an annual value of about $5 billion and is expected to double in the next ten years. "Foreign investment," said Mr. Drolet, "comes to Canada because foreign investment is essential to Canada's economy and its growth." Capital investment means expansion, expansion means jobs and jobs mean prosperity for all. I have never heard a man working for the Great Lakes Paper Company, Abitibi, Canada Car or Steep Rock Iron Mines complaining or wondering whether the shareholders are Canadians or Americans. What employees are concerned with is continuity of their jobs. That is what we want—jobs.

Mr. Alexander: Right.

Mr. Badanai: While the budget speech did not make a direct reference to pollution, this question is taken very seriously by the government. The Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) has been devoting a great deal of his time to solving the problems of pollution. He is an ardent advocate of pollution control measures and has succeeded in making industry sit up and take notice. Of course, pollution control will be a costly program which will have to be extended over a period of many years. The government will have to decide what is absolutely essential and urgent and what can be deferred.

I have here, Mr. Speaker, an article which appeared under the heading "Special Report—Pollution Control" in the Newsletter issued by the Spruce Falls Power and Paper Company, Limited, in February, 1970. The report reads in part.

> Water is one of our great natural resources. Without it we could not exist. Our bodies need it as much as our industries do. We drink it and are refreshed. We wash in it and are clean. We swim in it and are exhilarated. We fish in it for sport and for profit. We build homes and cottages near it for aesthetic satisfaction. We build factories near it to have transportation routes and because industrial processes require it. Clean water is life-giving, yet many of this country's water sources are polluted.

The Budget—Mr. Badanai

• (9:00 p.m.)

Pollution has existed from time immemorial. As a problem, however, its impact has only been felt since localized population densities have produced more waste than our lakes and streams can assimilate.

Pollution comes from three major sources: from human and animal waste, from industry and from erosion carrying soil and debris into our lakes and streams.

In spite of the excellent past and present work by some municipalities and industries, many of our lakes and streams are still polluted—

Water pollution has become a national problem.

One clear trend that emerges from a look at the economics and politics of water pollution control is that the politics are fast becoming more important than the economics.

"The public hue and cry," says the Pulp and Paper Magazine of Canada, "will pressure Canadian industry into cleaning up its streams over the next decade despite the cost." The only slim hope is that industry can succeed in educating the public and government to adopt reasonable water quality standards, stringent enough to keep the water clean but not so expensive that they will force industries out of business. As one industry executive put it: "A pristine pure stream would be of small consolation to a man deprived of the means of earning his living"—

Many companies have made extensive investments in waste control systems during a period when there was little if any legislative pressure on them to do it. In many cases there was some financial return on the investment. But now that governments are stepping up their requirements and introducing stringent standards, considerable outlays will be required to meet these new conditions, and there will be little or no financial return.

Money is one of the keys to solving many problems in the pollution field. The technology is advancing and with enough money much can be done to improve our environment. However, we are still searching for means that will give the desired result that the country can afford based on economics. As federal justice minister John Turner said: "The physical solution is available. The problem that remains is an economic one, and perhaps, an administrative one. It costs money to treat water before discharging it into a stream."

In the nine-year period from 1960 to 1969 inclusive, Canadian pulp and paper mills representing 75% of the industry's total production spent more than $95-million on pollution control facilities—

In Ontario alone, it is estimated that primary treatment for all mills would cost $28 million and even this amount would not reduce suspended solids to the required OWRC regulations. In Quebec, the water board estimates mills in the province will have to spend $100 million to meet the board's recently announced requirements.

Looking at the industry as a whole, some estimates have placed the further capital cost of pollution control in excess of $250 million, with an annual operating cost of $40 million, to install primary and secondary treatment in every mill in the Canadian pulp and paper industry.

On a former occasion, Mr. Speaker, I indicated in this chamber what the pulp and paper industry is doing in its efforts to control this menace. The Great Lakes Paper Company in Thunder Bay, for example, is spending millions of dollars to curb the pollutants which infest the air over the Kaministikwia River, and they are to be congratulated on their successful beginning. Of course, the most desirable condition would be a pollution-free environment, but this ideal state is only possible in a completely sterile environment in which there is no life.

It would be most desirable to have both the housing to accommodate the increasing population and the facilities for work and recreation in a pollution-free atmosphere. But in our growing urban and industrial community we must learn to live with change. We must also recognize that people create pollution. The fact that we cannot achieve perfection is no excuse for not doing as much as we can, but we still have to be practical and realistic. The fact that the government, in co-operation with the provinces and the United States, is deeply concerned about the problem of protection of the environment on the borders of our Great Lakes is shown by their seizing every opportunity which new technology is bringing into the control of pollution.

I am also concerned about the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, which is reported to be seeking higher tolls on the Seaway and the imposition of tolls on the Welland Canal, which would adversely affect the economy of Thunder Bay and northwestern Ontario. Cheap transportation has always been vital to Canada's success as an exporter. Owing to the vastness of the country, this factor must be kept alive if we are to export surplus wheat, iron ore and other goods and supplies economically. In reverse, the price of imports would probably soar if rates were scaled up. The shippers would just foist increased fees on the consumer in the form of higher prices for goods purchased.

Ontario manufacturers, basing their business on export, are already facing fantastic competition from countries which possess a number of advantages. The Seaway Authority is running the risk of putting Canadian industry out of competition if it raises user charges and increases export costs. The result would not help to reduce unemployment. I would therefore urge the government to reconsider any proposals for raising fees on a transportation system because the net effect of such an increase would be increased prices of food and services.

In the matter of housing, every community has its problems. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has recognized the need to boost the capital budget of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Under the capable leadership of the minister responsible for housing and urban development, these problems are being tackled with vigour and intelligent application in an effort to give every family in the land a decent home.

The budget, Mr. Speaker, reflects the goals of the government: the reduction of unemployment, the control of inflation, the promotion of social justice, and it seeks to encourage a prosperous economy.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): In discussing this motion and amendment, Mr. Speaker, one wonders what the main purpose was in presenting this minibudget. Some people have been unkind enough to suggest that the purpose of the budget was to retain the 3 per cent surtax. That may have been the prime objective. The whole tenor of the budget creates the impression that the government is unsure about where it is headed. It is not sure of the means to get there and does not know what it wants to accomplish. Is the main commitment to correct the heavy unemployment situation, or to fight inflation? The budget does not indicate which.

The budget does not set out a clear plan or program to accomplish whatever end the government has in mind. It leaves the impression that the government intends to act as an umpire in the Canadian economic arena. When those engaged in the struggle fall out of the ring, the umpire will pick them up, throw them back in and tell them to try again. I quote from the document entitled "Budget Highlights" as follows:

Most economic indicators show improving trends in the Canadian economy. Employment is rising, unemployment appears to be falling—

Employment only appears to be falling! I continue quoting:

—and we have moved out of the pause in the growth of production of goods and services.

It states that there has been a pause. Nothing has been happening. The people of Canada know that nothing has happened. It has now been put on the record. I am reminded of an old saying of many years ago, that prosperity is just around the corner. The government could have used the old stock phrase rather than inventing a new one.

Latest figures suggest that the high level of exports established early in 1970 is being well sustained.

Canada's price performance compares extremely favorably with all other major trading nations of the western world.

As stated by a previous speaker, Canada has dropped to fourth place among the western nations with regard to standard of living. There is no commitment to full employment in this document. There is nothing to assure the Canadian people that they will not lose their jobs and become non-earners. There is no commitment to fully use the resources of Canadians. Some hon. members have referred to large figures. The previous speaker talked in terms of billions of dollars. Perhaps some day we will be told how much was lost in productivity because of the number of people who were unemployed last year. I wonder what the total would be in terms of houses, roads and bridges that could have been built for Canadians to enjoy.

We hear and read many statistics, but to get the true picture we must talk to the people involved. A sign on a very good house in Saskatoon indicates that it is for sale. Why? The owner, an architect, has found it necessary to leave Saskatoon because of limited job opportunities. It was necessary for him to move somewhere else to get a job so that he could support his family. A worker in a hotel, whom I happen to know, advised me that her sister had been fired from a beauty establishment because there was not enough work to keep her busy. The owner of the establishment simply advised her that her services were no longer required. These are people, not just statistics. This is the way our economy has been functioning. Farmers are told to take their land out of production. People trying to sell clothing and other items to retail and other outlets in Saskatoon are not receiving the size of orders that they normally do. There are rental signs in the wholesale district of that city. These facts indicate what is actually happening to the economy.

Canadians hoped for the presentation of an economic pattern for this country in the budget. Instead they are left with the unpleasant and uncomfortable feeling that unemployment will continue to be high this winter. There is no clear indication of what will happen next summer. High interest rates continue and investors are discouraged. This affects all sectors of the economy. It affects that part of the economy in which I have always earned my living. It affects farmers who wish to invest in machinery, a feed lot or the various other enterprises involved in a farm. The government is proposing subsidizing loans for capital growth. Were will it all end?

The previous speaker talked about the need for foreign investment. There is division in the country on this matter. He is, of course, entitled to his opinion. We have reached the point where we bribe foreign investors; they are paid to locate in certain areas of Canada. I shall give an example to show how ridiculous the situation is. In the city of Saskatoon a refinery was built from scratch by local people. It was bought by British American Oil, resold to Gulf Oil and is now being closed. Well paid people are being moved out of this city, people who were employed in that industry. They are going to Alberta, to British Columbia and to Nova Scotia. Yet this was industry which we had established in that city, an industry which paid for itself from the time there was only a little service station there. All the money necessary for its establishment was earned out of Saskatoon and out of the Prairie region it served. It will no longer be there, and we are now trying to persuade smaller industries to come in.

• (9:20 p.m.)

In another area of Canada, $6 million is going to a foreign outfit. Do you know how things will end up, Mr. Speaker? A while ago I was organizing a rural area and a chap drove me around. I asked what he was doing and he said, "I was farming up to last spring." I asked him why he quit and he said they had sold the farm. When he was a young man he told me he had rented a half section. He said he would take me around and show me. It was one of the best half sections in the area. He was very proud of it. He took me around and showed it to me. He said, "I planted those trees. That is a nice farmstead. I kept it painted." I said, "Why aren't you still there?" and he replied, "The lady who owned it decided she would sell it to her nephew."

That is where this country is heading. We shall work the land, plant the trees, improve the buildings, make a nice farmstead, and when it is done somebody else will own the thing and tell us we are through. It is time we quit being starry-eyed and decided where we are going. Mention has been made of the large sums of money which will be made available to the province of Quebec. I am not concerned about the amount of money which will be made available to Quebec, and I am a westerner. What I am concerned about is that Canada should be an operating country, a viable country economically, and that Canadians should own it. Any government which runs this country should be as concerned about one section of it as it is about another. Surely, if a government has a right to call itself a national government it must be concerned about all sectors of the economy.

What concerns me most directly, though, is what is happening in the area where I live. I am concerned about whether this budget or minibudget is helpful to the hundreds of people who live in that community. As far as I am concerned, the answer to that question is no. The government has no program which would meet the needs of this community. I do not say this in a narrow sense because I realize that agriculture and industry are interdependent. Farming is not isolated from the economy as a whole but is part of the total economy. If the whole sector does well, then farming will probably do well, and if farming does well one can be reasonably sure that industry as a whole will do well. Agriculture is an industry which multiplies the purchasing power of the money it earns; this purchasing power is spread out because farmers are unable to keep what they make; they have to spend it.

A recent task force report talks about retraining farmers and taking them off the land. It is utter nonsense to say that people must be taken off the land and trained for other jobs when the rate of unemployment is as high as it is today. What jobs? Has this government ever made a commitment to the 3 per cent unemployment level as recommended by the Economic Council? When the government makes a commitment of this kind maybe we can take some of the recommendations of the task force seriously, but until it does, I for one do not intend to take them seriously. At the present time we cannot provide sufficient jobs for those who want to move out of agriculture, let alone for those whom some economists up in the ivory tower might propose to move out as well.

In the same document, Mr. Speaker, great play is made of the $100 million stabilization fund which is to be set up for farmers. This is to be a one-year shot, if it is done even for one year. Let us accept that these people mean what they say. In future years the stabilization fund will be supported by the means of a 3 per cent deduction—and this is not to be 3 per cent off the net but 3 per cent off the gross. It will be like a property tax. Under the plan which is proposed, the farmer will pay whether he has a loss or whether he makes a profit. It comes off the top, Mr. Speaker. It is off the gross, and it is ridiculous.

There may be some who will say, "Let us make it 1 per cent, not 3 per cent." I shall not discuss this idea of stabilization in great detail because there will be other opportunities to do so, but I say to the government, "Tell the whole story; do not come into this House with half the story. Tell the people that the farmer will be contributing off the top and that he will pay this money to stabilize his income at a level which may not even be above the poverty level."

Mr. Speaker, I do not want anyone to guarantee me poverty; I can do that for myself. I do not need a government to guarantee me poverty. When they undertake to see that the income level will be at or above the cost of production to the average efficient farmer, then they are talking about a guaranteed income, and that is a reality. But what they have been talking about is a myth, a dream. They should listen and talk to the farmers as I did a week ago, sit in a hall and listen to 25 of them and get the feedback. Then they would know what the farmers think. At present we do not know what the government intends to do. Hon. gentlemen opposite should go to meetings and get the farmers opinion.

We shall not be sure of the size of the deduction until the minister gets up one of these days to make a full statement. I have asked the minister in charge of the Wheat Board more than once to make a statement on motions. It is about time he told the House exactly what he has in mind. The people of Canada pay attention to the budget and think: More cash. There go the western farmers again, money running out of both pockets and going strong.

A similar thing occurred last year when the government talked of giving the farmers $140 million. They have not yet received this money, and probably will only receive about half that amount. Not only does the government expect the farmers to pull themselves up by their bootstraps; they expect them to hold themselves up by their bootstraps once they get there. That is about the basis of the program. To offset the cost of the program the government will discontinue the storage payments and discontinue PFAA. They will try to recoup the money they spend. That is the typical approach of this government. I have been here a couple of years now and can almost recognize the pattern.

• (9:30 p.m.)

The government said that it will increase old age pensions by taking from the rich and giving to the poor. But when you examine this more closely, you find that those at the upper level of the pension group are going to finance those at the bottom. There was no mention of the rich; they did not figure in the equation at all. When the government says it is going to stabilize farm income and incomes from cereal grains, they mean they will do it at the expense of the people concerned. They are going to use the open market system to the greatest extent possible. That is one forecast that I make.

On one side you have myth, on the other side reality. When hog prices drop to 22 cents a pound or $22 a hundred; nothing happens. There is a stabilization program on hogs; the only trouble with it is that it does not work. Through this budget the government is adopting a "now you see it, now you don't" approach. It is putting up money for loans here, money for loans there; The impression is left that the drop in farm income is going to be relieved, that unemployment will diminish with the creation of additional jobs.

I sincerely hope the grain farmers of western Canada will send a signal to this government that is loud and clear, telling the government they do not accept the proposed cereal grains program. This program will not pull the farmers out of their difficulties. I suggest the government face that fact right now, rather than slog along with the program for four or five years and then try to clear up the problems it will leave behind.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) has presented a very gloomy picture of the Canadian scene. Fortunately, in his budget speech last Thursday night the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) presented a much happier picture, one in which we have reached the peak of the unemployment problem on a seasonally adjusted basis and are moving into a period of less unemployment during 1971. I suppose the voices of doom and gloom that we hear from the far corner of the House are only to be expected since the members there tend to take this approach.

This budget that the Minister of Finance presented last week tends to be a very selective document. It tends to have specific effects on localized regions throughout the country. Not the least of these, of course, is the special attention that has been paid to the sovereign counties of Stormont, Glengarry and Prescott, in which Mr. Speaker has a special interest in that he represents them in this House of Commons. I am sure all hon. members in this chamber have special sympathy for the unemployment and economic problems in his constituency. Because of the non-partisan position that he occupies in this House with great dignity, he is unable to take the government to task publicly and get them to deal with these problems. In any event, his message seems to have got through and I believe all hon. members will rejoice in his area being one of many parts of this country which have been designated for assistance in acquiring new industries.

This policy of helping areas of special need, such as areas of high unemployment, is consistent with the selectivity approach of the government as outlined last week in the white paper on social security. The approach there was not to universality but to selectivity; to put the resources of the country where there is greatest need. So with this budget, the majority of the resources are put where there is greatest need. Much of the budget's attack is directed at the fight against unemployment during the forthcoming winter months. Its approach is not only directed to public expenditure in areas of high unemployment; it also seeks to stimulate the private sector through grants to private industries which wish to locate in areas of high unemployment. In addition, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is to receive more funds for loan purposes.

I suppose some historians may look on this budget as being the Quebec crisis budget, since it was presented a few weeks after the recent events in that province. In addition, the budget places a great deal of emphasis on the stimulation of industrial activity in and around the metropolitan area of Montreal. Included in this is the designation through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion of the southwestern part of the province of Quebec for industrial incentive grants. Some $130 million has been allocated in this regard. A like benefit is also divided amongst the counties of Stormont, Glengarry and Prescott. Funds have been set aside for new access roads and ancillary services around the new Montreal airport at Ste. Scholastique, as well as special assistance being given to the shipbuilding and footwear industries, many of which are located in the province of Quebec.

Looking at the unemployment figures in the province of Quebec and the recent events that occurred there, I believe most Canadians will view with sympathy the special problems of that province. At the same time I think there is a feeling in some parts of Canada that the provincial and municipal authorities in Quebec and in the city of Montreal have a responsibility, not only to control the violent acts that have been committed by groups like the FLQ but to provide a level of public administration that will encourage the private sector of the economy to invest in the province. If this were the case, unemployment in the province would not be of crisis proportions and the federal government would not have to present a budget that earmarked the majority of its funds for one province and for one metropolitan area. Surely this kind of budget places some strain on national unity.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Having said this I say that many parts of the budget contain benefits which apply throughout the country, including an increase of 10 per cent in benefits under the unemployment insurance fund. Many parts of the country will have very heavy unemployment this winter, and these benefits will be especially welcome. This will act as an interim adjustment between January 1 and June 30, when the new scale of benefits will come into effect. The contribution of $54 million to the unemployment this winter will help remove the sting of being unemployed during the winter months.

I am most pleased to see the establishment of a new $150 million loan fund to stimulate activity through public works projects carried out by provinces and municipalities. At a time when we have high unemployment it is most appropriate for the federal government to put funds into the hands of the provinces and the municipalities for public works projects which will create employment. I believe much of this money in the province of Ontario should be used on sewer and water projects in the small towns and communities. Practically every small community throughout the province is being pressed by the Ontario Water Resources Commission to establish new sewage treatment plants and sanitary sewers. However, the level of provincial and federal government assistance is so low that these municipalities cannot afford to carry out the work.

In many cases the municipal tax level would be doubled, and in some cases tripled, if these new facilities were provided. Therefore, I believe the Minister of Finance should designate that in the province of Ontario these funds amounting to $17 million be earmarked to assist small municipalities to instal sewage and water treatment plants.

Surely this $17 million can only be classified as a windfall to a province such as Ontario with its vast resources. It could well afford to use these funds in areas which receive very little attention outside the golden horseshoe at the west end of Lake Ontario. I also know that the Department of Public Works will be spending approximately $23 million on public works projects. This will be in addition to the $60 million program announced by the minister last October. This is a good time to initiate these projects, when we have high unemployment and can save unemployment insurance benefits by giving men jobs.

I commend the Minister of Finance on his special provision of 115 per cent capital cost allowance for secondary and processing industries if they establish new facilities before the end of the 1971-72 fiscal year. This will be of special benefit in stimulating secondary industry. This, coupled with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion's incentive grants for secondary industry, which apply throughout northern Ontario, will be one more incentive for secondary industry to locate there.

Another good measure which the Minister of Finance announced was that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion bill, which I believe will be coming before the House this week, will provide a guarantee for loans to any company which has received a grant under the regional development incentives program. This will be especially useful because many industries which are able to raise 20 per cent equity and receive a government grant still have trouble raising additional capital funds. This guarantee by the federal government for a large percentage of the additional funds will mean that many projects can go forward which were not able to go forward in the past. I know one company which has been nearly a year lining up its line of credit. In the future this kind of financing will be guaranteed by the government, which will mean that projects can get off the ground faster.

I am disappointed that the special provisions outlined in the budget for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion did not include special assistance for utility services in areas where we are trying to stimulate secondary and processing industries. In my constituency of Algoma we have a great need for a natural gas pipeline to link Sault Ste. Marie with Sudbury. Although a study has been carried out by Trans-Canada Pipe Lines, the cost is so high at the present time it is not economically feasible to establish it. At the same time we are providing incentives in capital cost allowances and regional development loans to encourage secondary industries to locate in this area. Some industries, including a plywood mill, have been lost to the area because we do not have natural gas.

So we have the question of which came first, the chicken or the egg. In this case we cannot get certain types of secondary industry because we do not have natural gas available. At the same time we cannot get natural gas to these communities because there is not a sufficient market. Who can break this vicious cycle? In my view, only the government can break it. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion can break it by providing long-term loans or grants to transmission companies to establish a pipeline. Then as secondary industries comes into the area and decreases unemployment, there will be an increased use of gas not only by the secondary industries but by domestic users. In the end the utility company, with this increased demand, will be self-sufficient.

In the same vein, I believe that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion must take another look at its exclusion of the pulp and paper industry from incentive grants. This industry has been excluded from these grants both for new pulp and paper mills and for expansion of existing facilities, on the rationale that these plants will only locate where wood fibre exists. This is quite true as far as it goes. But let us look at the situation surrounding this industry during the last two or three years. In 1969 the Minister of Finance removed the tariffs which had been negotiated under the Kennedy Round on paper products coming into Canada, instead of there being a gradual phasing out as had been planned. Then last spring the Canadian dollar was revalued upward. This had a negative effect on the pulp and paper industry because it lost most of the 7½ per cent differential between the Canadian and the United States dollar.

Coupled with this is public demand for control of pollution from pulp and paper mills. I am not one to condone the pollution which has been caused by many pulp and paper mills in our country, but I believe that most mills are moving as rapidly as possible to overcome this problem, bearing in mind that the current market for pulp and paper is very soft.

The cost of anti-pollution equipment is tremendous and no special tariff provision has been provided to assist the pulp and paper industry. In many parts of northern Ontario the pulp and paper industry has long-term plans to expand its facilities and to build new plants, but with the current economic climate in North America for markets and the problems I have outlined, these plans are becoming further and further away from realization. I believe that if regional development grants were made available to this industry for expansion and modernization, many of these programs would go forward, creating many new jobs in these parts of the country.

It can be argued that secondary industry and processing industries are the best way of stimulating economic activity rather than basic industries. It seems to me we cannot attract enough secondary industries. However, I believe that thousands of new jobs would be created in northern Ontario if further consideration were given by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to regional development grants to the pulp and paper industry.

In conclusion, I find the most encouraging part of the budget presented by the minister the fact that he feels unemployment reached a peak in the last quarter of 1970 on a seasonally adjusted basis. He anticipates that our gross national product will rise during the second half of 1971 at a rate of over 8 per cent. If such a rate of growth can be achieved while we are controlling inflation, our unemployment picture will certainly show improvement. Therefore I hope the minister's prediction, based upon information available to him, is correct.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I, too, join the previous speaker in expressing the hope that the prediction made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in his budget speech will be a reality and that the economy will move ahead. I certainly believe it is a pleasure for everybody here to have the opportunity in a budget speech to discuss some of the problems in Canada. I think that probably the bulk of the problems we face today can be attached to the budget or to finances in general.

Although the minister's remarks in the budget speech indicate hope for an improved economy, hope that the situation will be better in the future, I believe there is still some confusion in many of our minds concerning whether the methods he uses will really do the job. It was comforting to me to see the emotion displayed on the minister's face when he listened to the remarks of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) concerning the beauty parlour operators in Saskatoon who were being thrown out of work. It is an indication, to my mind, that he has a heart. Sometimes when we travel across the country there would seem to be an indication that the people do not believe our Minister of Finance really has a heart.

The minister has been saying that the purse strings are being loosened, whereas in reality I believe the purse strings really were loosened in respect of the banking system early last summer, although nothing really happened. Credit was eased and any business which showed an indication that it was a good prospect had funds available to it. I suggest that the announcement now that the purse strings will be eased is merely an effort to make people have a little more hope in the future. Nothing is moving ahead. The demand for money is not there. Confidence in the economy has been shattered.

There is a projection in the budget that there will be improvements in the capital cost allowance base for the manufacturing and processing industries. This is fine. Predictions were made concerning the amount this would cost the treasury in respect of tax money, but really there will be no cost to the treasury if these industries do not have the confidence and the demand for their products which would encourage them to move ahead. I question whether or not these industries will take advantage of the improved capital cost allowance base.

Then we have the matter of unemployment. This is a difficult situation. Certainly there is a trend for all people to depend more on government services to provide for them from the cradle to the grave. I realize a government must recognize these trends and follow, certainly to some degree, the wishes of the people. But I say we should have more public projects and that we should redirect many of our funds presently being used for unemployment insurance and various other social measures to government work projects. In character building I believe it is far more important for the people to do a day's work for the money they receive.

Arguments have been put forward that in many areas of the country people who have families should not be moved and therefore should not be offered employment in another part of the country where jobs are available. I can hardly buy that concept because we as Members of Parliament, or a great many of us, must spend six or eight months of the year away from our families. I cannot really legitimatize the argument that many of the people who are receiving unemployment insurance are not in the work force because of the mobility factor, and that they should not leave their homes at least for some period of time when jobs are available in another area. I suggest that every able bodied man in this country should be looked at again in terms of what he can do and where he can do it. The excuse that he cannot become a truck driver or something else because he is a plumber, a carpenter or has some other vocation is not reason enough for not being employed if a job of some kind is available.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—SUGGESTED SPECIAL MILITIA TRAINING PROGRAM FOR YOUNG CANADIANS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, on November 26 I asked the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) whether in view of the success of the summer student militia program introduced by the government, which employed some 5,000 students, he would consider introducing a special militia training program similar to the program introduced by the Progressive Conservative Party in 1961, which oriented many young Canadians into training for civil defence and at the same time tended to overcome unemployment which had reached comparatively serious proportions.

I brought the question to the attention of the minister because I was very closely involved in this training program and found it to be invaluable in many respects. My reason for pursuing my request for this type of program tonight is that I am still convinced such a program would be invaluable due to problems in our country with which evidently we are having a difficult job to cope.

While I am reluctant at this time of night to bring back members on the opposite side to answer my question, I do so without apology due to the offhanded answer I received from the minister, for which he is becoming famous. He ignored the common courtesy I extended in sending him not only a copy of my question but also some background notes. Members on the opposite side of the House continually are prodding for positive suggestions which they could consider, and therefore I offer this common sense idea which I feel should be given serious consideration.

• (10:00 p.m.)

It is very evident that the government now realize the almost fatal mistake they were making in reducing the Canadian forces strength over the past two years to what was inevitably to become a state of ineffectiveness but for the unfortunate turn of events in Quebec. And as in their lack of realization of the value of military insurance against any kind of aggression, terrorist activities in Quebec, which we would all like to believe never happened, came upon this country without warning. Now I am sure they realize the need for preparedness to ensure security not only from without but from within.

The success of the summer student militia training program emphasizes the value of military indoctrination, not particularly to create military might but to instil leadership qualities, discipline and youth development, not only for our students but, just as important, for those who are still in their developing years after leaving school. Just as this training program was of considerable value to young men in our country in assisting in civil defence in 1961 when this was the thinking of our military minds, so would such a training program be of great value in training a cross-section of our country in aiding the civil power in case of a recurrence of hostility and insurrection.

Since the summer training program was so successful in combating unemployment, so would such a program continue to create a multi-purpose effect, not only to alleviate unemployment but to give the youth of our country a sense of purpose in the growth and progress of the country which they will one day be called upon to lead. While time does not permit me to elaborate further on the many other advantages, although the Minister of National Defence repeated that he was not considering such a program, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) just a few hours ago, when speaking in the budget debate, mentioned many other advantages of the training of our youth in contributing to the development of the Arctic, in supplementing the police force, combating pollution, and other ideas which are worthy of consideration.

A special all-year militia or reserve force training program should be introduced as soon as possible, under the responsibility of the reserve forces of Canada, to stand ready as a part-time force which, instead of being given more responsibility by lip service and being continually withdrawn should in fact be a supplement or back-up of our regular forces. It would be interesting to know just how many more troops would have been available for other tasks, if the need arose, while we faced the terrorist situation in Quebec. I hope that someone with a little military knowledge is aware of the need for future preparedness.

The youth of this country are our most valuable asset; not the minerals, not the oil, not the gas, but our youth. They are being neglected because we have failed them somewhere along the line. If we keep telling them to participate and involve them only in dialogue, we are being dishonest in not giving them a sense of participation and involvement. A Canada-wide youth development or training program, or whatever we want to call it, will give them a sense of purpose and will show that we care. I urge the Minister of National Defence to consider, with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang), initiating such a program as soon as possible.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member attributed to me some sentiments a few moments ago which he said I expressed in the budget debate and which I would gladly claim, but I have yet to participate in the debate so I must disclaim credit for them.

In his question the hon. member indicated a general interest in the employment situation in Canada, the general advantages of military training in the character building process of Canadian youth, and a particular concern combining the two general interests in a specific program of six-week courses under a special military training program.

The hon. member will be aware of the specific, imaginative and viable measures to combat unemployment and to alleviate the hardships of those who are now unemployed which were contained in the budget presented last Thursday. Since the hon. member has spent his day, as I did, listening to the budget debate, it is probably not necessary to recite to him the litany of measures proposed in the budget to aid those who are, regrettably, now unemployed and to create new employment opportunities.

To quote from the budget speech, some of these measures are directed toward immediate needs of the winter ahead. Others are intended to reinforce existing policies and ensure that the economic pick-up in sight for the year ahead will be both strong and sustained. They will also be directed in large part to those regions of the country where unemployment is highest and to those groups in our society whose incomes are low.

Obviously the hon. member's general concern, and that of the government, about unemployment and its consequences are identical. With respect to his specific suggestion I should like to refer him to the reply of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) as recorded at page 1494 of Hansard of November 26. In the absence of the minister I can add nothing further to the answer at this time. I can, however, assure the hon. member that his specific representation will again be brought to the minister's attention upon his return.

COMBINES—CURTAILMENT OF RESTRICTIVE PRACTICES OF PROFESSIONAL SOCIETIES

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, last week I had occasion to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) what steps he had taken or may have contemplated taking with regard to curtailing the restrictive practices of certain professional societies. Mr. Speaker, you and member of this House who belong to professional societies will know and understand that statutes in our provinces give to professional bodies a unique position in that these societies can pretty well legislate as to all circumstances surrounding the practice of their particular profession within a province.

As a result, professional societies may to a great extent regulate the fees which members charge and they may also regulate the number of people who enter the profession. I am not so much concerned with the fees charged by members of professional societies as I am with the practice of those societies in restricting the membership of a profession within a province.

My attention has been drawn to the practices of dental societies and I wish to zero in on them particularly.

An hon. Member: Drill them, Allen.

Mr. Sulatycky: I am not aware of the situation in other provinces but I have some knowledge of the situation in Alberta and in Canada generally. The Royal Commission on Health Services, which took many years to prepare its report, indicated that in 1959 Canada stood behind Germany, Sweden, Norway, Austria, the United States, Denmark, New Zealand, Switzerland, Australia, Finland, Greece, Spain and France in the ratio of dentists to the population. Since that time research has indicated that we have not gained substantially. In 1959 there was one dentist for every 3,032 people in Canada. The most recent statistics I could find for the World Health Organization were issued in 1966 and they indicate that we have one dentist for every 3,070 people. Rather than improving, the situation is getting worse. The reason for this is that most dental societies, and I speak particularly of the Alberta Dental Society, practically bar dentists who have not graduated from a university in Canada.

The regulations of dentists' societies in Canada mean that you cannot apply to have your qualifications assessed unless you have an established residence within the province where you wish to practise. If you wish to practise in Alberta you must establish a residence there before you can apply to have your qualifications assessed. It is ridiculous to expect someone from Britain to move to Alberta and become established there before having his qualifications assessed. This kind of practice is shameful, in my opinion, and should be curtailed as soon as possible. I wish we could bring the full weight of the new restrictive practices act to bear on this type of action.

• (10:10 p.m.)

The result in Alberta, according to the health services people, has been that we have had the sum total of exactly two dentists who obtained their qualifications at a university that is neither in Canada nor in the United States. In all Canada we have only had 33 dentists who have come from outside this country or the United States. It is my opinion that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs should bring in strong legislation so that the federal government could take action to ensure that people all over Canada, no matter whether they live in the largest cities of the smallest hamlets, have dental services readily available. People should not be deprived of these services through the restrictive practices of dental societies.

These remarks could apply equally well to other professions and professional societies. I am particularly concerned about the dental societies in Canada and about the dental society in Alberta. I wish through you, Mr. Speaker, again to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to say what steps are being taken. When can we expect the dental societies in Canada to be compelled to open their doors so that persons, wherever they may be in Canada, will have access to the best dental services? This move should not in any way detract from the quality of the service. I believe that the inquiry in Ontario into civil rights indicated that professional societies should ensure that not only those persons who are licensed to carry on a profession should qualify, but also that all qualified applicants ought to be licensed. I think there ought to be federal legislation to ensure this, particularly in so far as the dental societies of Canada are concerned.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member will appreciate that in responding on behalf of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) I must, of necessity, restrict my comments to the areas coming under the jurisdiction of his department and not follow what might be a natural propensity, that of roaming into areas of responsibility that the provincial legislatures have chosen to delegate to certain provincial societies and professional societies.

The Economic Council of Canada in its report on competition policy recommended that services, including those of professional groups, be included within the Combines Investigation Act. The recommendations of the Economic Council are before the government in preparing revisions for the Combines Investigation Act. The government's intention will be disclosed when the bill to revise the act is introduced and the hon. member will have every opportunity, following the bill's introduction, to make any representations he deems desirable. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will be interested in reading the hon. member's remarks as well as in receiving information from anyone else relating to this subject.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

PUBLIC SERVICE—SHARING OF DECISIONS AFFECTING JOB CLASSIFICATIONS WITH EMPLOYEES—AMENDMENT OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, no doubt many members of the federal civil service rejoiced at the statement on November 27 by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) who announced to the House in response to my question: "The government is now reviewing the Public Service Staff Relations Act." One does not need to be a specialist in labour relations to say that the period between 1964 and the present time has been one of uncertainty and instability for many career people within the service. To charge that the situation has been chaotic is perhaps overstating the case, Mr. Speaker. None the less, the reclassifications in the professional category were to have been completed by July 1, 1967 some three years ago. They have been postponed time and again, and today there are nearly 5,000 professional people, or 17 out of 28 groups, yet to be completed. These groups have to be satisfied with a classification heading termed as a "provisional assignment".

Why has there been so much foot-dragging in this? Why have certain groups such as engineers, who challenged their classification, never been given a reason for a review board ruling? Why are there the closed files? Why are most of the professional institute people "flying blindly" when bargaining for individuals or for particular services? I should also like to ask, what is the "gimmick" behind the whole classification jungle?

Mr. Speaker, my interest in this classification matter came about because it was my custom to visit inmates of federal correctional institutes from time to time. I find that when I make these visits most of my time is spent with correction staff who buttonhole me and complain bitterly, rightly so, about classification problems. Many civil servants believe that so long as the determination of classifications and duty assignment remains inflexibly enshrined as a non-negotiable right of management, in this case the government, the whole progressive system of collective bargaining is a meaningless ritual and a farce.

Suspicions abound that as the government, through negotiation, upgrades the salary for a particular classification, there often shortly follows a change in the job description and the position is downgraded. Civil servants feel that the government has it both ways. It can and does raise a civil servant's pay and, through manipulation of the classifications, lower it at the same time. The offending part of the Public Service Staff Relations Act which permits the government to do this is section 7. It provides as follows:

> Nothing in this act shall be construed to affect the right or authority of the employer to determine the organization of the public service and to assign duties to and classify positions therein.

In the time remaining to me I wish to cite a few examples which give rise to the suspicion and bitterness which characterizes many public servants as a result of section 7. First, a CR-3 challenged his classification. The board of review reclassified the employee to CR-5 and awarded retroactive pay to March, 1968. He has received no retroactive pay to date. Why? Because the management is now reviewing his duties.

Second, under the general service classification cooks are classified FOS-6 everywhere except in Archambault, a new federal institution, where they are classified FOS-5, a saving of $1,800 per year. Incidentally, last Thursday the cooks signed a two-year agreement. However, I understand that all general services are to be reclassified as of October, 1970. Third, a technical inspector 6 was assigned extra duties. He was reclassified in the engineering scientific support group which carries the same maximum salary as TI-6. I suspect that this move was taken because a promotion to TI-7 would cost the government an additional $1,100 per year.

I anticipate that the government will take refuge from these charges by saying that these anomalies only happen during reorganization or with new positions. However, that is far from the whole story. The solutions to problems such as I have outlined lie in the government giving up some of its high-handed management prerogatives and beginning to share these decisions with those affected. I hope that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) will amend section 7 so that classification and job descriptions can become a negotiable part of the future bargaining process. It is only enlightened and sensible that this be done. The government, which is one of the largest, if not the largest employer in Canada should provide a model for other employers to emulate. It is appropriate that the Public Service Staff Relations Act be amended. The vehicle for review could be a parliamentary committee equipped to study the matter, where all the facts could be aired.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the late show provides members who have asked questons and have not received satisfactory answers the opportunity to again raise the matter. It also gives them the opportunity to raise numerous other matters not asked in the initial question. This is something of a handicap to those who are responsible for answering, and I can only apologize to the hon. member for my lack of clairvoyance and reply for the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) to the question which the hon. member asked on November 27. As reported at page 1538 of Hansard, the hon. member asked:

• (10:20 p.m.)

> Is the President of the Treasury Board considering the amendment of the Public Service Staff Relations Act to allow decisions affecting classifications and job restrictions, now the sole prerogative of the government, to be shared with its employees?

The reply is as follows: As the President of the Treasury Board stated at the time, this legislation is under review by the government and it would be improper for me to try to predict what changes the Public Service Staff Relations Act might undergo. I can only say that in connection with this review there will be hearings, at which time I imagine certain interested parties will put forth the hon. member's suggestion.

The hon. member further inquired as follows:

In view of the fact that many C.R. positions are being reclassified and reduced at the present time, does the minister not feel that this procedure makes a farce of the whole collective bargaining process?

To this question the reply is as follows: I take issue with the hon. member's premise, namely, that many C.R. positions are being reclassified and reduced at the present time. There is an ongoing reclassification review by Treasury Board of many jobs in the public service and the C.R. category has not been singled out either for review or for purposes of reducing the wage scales.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.23 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, December 8, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DRURY—SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATE FOR PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the question of privilege. The other day, in response to a question from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I indicated that, to the best of my knowledge at that time, provision made in the main estimates for the Prices and Incomes Commission would be adequate to meet their needs during the current year and consequently no provision was made in the supplementary estimates which I tabled for a change in this provision. As a consequence of the negotiations at the recent conference which the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission had with representatives of business in Canada, the future course of action of the commission is now rather clearer. I have now learned that a proposal will be made for supplementary estimates, in addition to the provision made of approximately $1 million in the main estimates, for the balance of the fiscal year.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. In view of the statement that the minister just made, can he say whether any money is now being drawn from the contingency fund to cover the commission's expenses?

Mr. Drury: It will be drawn from the contingency fund, Mr. Speaker, prior to the tabling of further supplementary estimates in the House.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

Second and third reports of Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, in both French and English—Mr. Clermont.

[English]

AGRICULTURE

Second report of Standing Committee on Agriculture—Mr. Beer.

[Editor's Note: For text of above reports, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

THE MINISTRY

TABLING OF ORDER IN COUNCIL TRANSFERRING RESPONSIBILITIES FOR ENVIRONMENTAL MATTERS TO MINISTER OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I wish to table copies of Order in Council P.C. 1970-2047, dated November 26, passed pursuant to the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act. It deals with the transfer of responsibilities for environmental matters to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry and is directly related to the bill of which I gave notice yesterday.

* * *

[Translation]

HEALTH

TABLING OF REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON USE OF ORAL CONTRACEPTIVES

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 41, I would like to table copies in the two official languages of a report of the special committee established by the Minister of National Health and Welfare to advise the Food and Drug Directorate on all aspects of the innocuousness and effectiveness of oral contraceptives sold in Canada.

* * *

• (2:10 p.m.)

[English]

AGRICULTURE

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe) moved that the first report of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, presented to the House on Thursday, November 26, 1970, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

FINANCE

TAX CONCESSIONS TO "TIME" AND "READER'S DIGEST"—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire whether the House would be content to give unanimous consent to the moving of a rather bland and mild motion pursuant to Standing Order 43. The pressing necessity therefor is the need for the House of Commons to express an opinion in favour of Canada. The motion I seek consent for is as follows:

This House is of the opinion that the special tax concessions made available to Time and Reader's Digest are inimical to the interests of Canada and should be forthwith discontinued.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Skeena. By virtue of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimous consent. The hon. member cannot put the motion at this time.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to suggest to Your Honour that you should not have heeded the negative voices from the Liberal party, especially in light of the decision made a few weeks ago by over 800 to 50 to discontinue these tax concessions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that this is not the kind of consideration that the Chair has to take into account. I have to listen and to advise the House as to what I have heard. In this case there were negative replies, so the motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

MEASURES TO STIMULATE ECONOMY FOLLOWING CONFERENCE WITH PROVINCIAL TREASURERS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. Following his conference with the provincial treasurers, at which concern was expressed regarding the rate of growth of the economy in the future, does the minister propose to make any statement? In particular, does the minister intend to propose any new measures to stimulate the economy along the lines indicated by the provincial treasurers?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the House is presently debating the budget which was designed to do just this.

Mr. Stanfield: Since the minister is clearly not going to make a statement, may I ask him whether the provincial treasurers expressed concern regarding the effect of the current and prospective slow growth of the economy upon provincial government finances, both on the revenue side as a result of the slowdown in revenue growth and on the expenditure side with regard to increased expenditure on welfare resulting from increased unemployment?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the only one who expressed that opinion was my hon. friend's friend from Toronto.

Mr. Stanfield: Since the minister is not prepared to be very forthcoming, I should like to ask him whether it would be fair to say that, in the view of the provincial treasurers at the meeting, the minister's management of the economy has greatly increased the financial difficulties of their provinces, far more than any offsetting, any help—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think it is in order for the Leader of the Opposition to ask whether it would be fair or unfair to say something; in those terms the question is argumentative and I do not think it can be allowed.

Mr. Stanfield: Then I would ask the minister whether the provincial treasurers did not make it very clear to him that the dampening effect of his policies on their revenues did far more harm to them than any benefit they might derive from the minister's loan fund?

Mr. Benson: It would not be fair at all to say that, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CONVERSION OF PART OF FUND FOR LOANS TO PROVINCES TO GRANTS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the Minister of Finance whether the provincial treasurers, during his meeting with them, expressed any views or made any representations regarding the $150 million loan fund? Did they ask whether part of this $150 million could be in the form of grants rather than loans, as originally suggested by Premier Bourassa of Quebec?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Of course they would rather have grants than loans, Mr. Speaker, but generally I would say the loan fund was very well accepted. The only thing they wanted was more.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that these loans will add to both the debt and the debt charges of the provinces, will the minister tell us whether he is prepared to consider making part of the $150 million available to the provinces in the form of grants on the basis of the rate of unemployment in each particular province?

Mr. Benson: I would say no, Mr. Speaker. These are loans and they will help the provinces greatly. They will enable the provinces to bring forward projects—this is a condition of the loans—which they could not otherwise undertake in the current or the coming fiscal year. This, I believe, is important to the Canadian economy.

AMOUNT ALLOCATED TO ALBERTA FROM LOAN FUND

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have a further question for the Minister of Finance. Bearing in mind the fact that the budget previously discriminated against certain cities—Calgary, Edmonton, Vancouver and others—with the object of cooling off the economy, may I ask whether the province of Alberta has now made a formal complaint on the grounds that the provision of only $4 million, which will be spent over a number of years, to the province from this loan fund is discriminatory against the province of Alberta?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member does not appear to realize that the regulation regarding depreciation to which he refers expires at the end of this month.

Mr. Woolliams: I am well aware of what the Minister of Finance has just said. He is merely trying to cover up the situation. I asked him whether he had received any formal protest from Alberta alleging discrimination with reference to this $4 million. We know what he did to Alberta last year.

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I have not even had a formal protest from the hon. member for Calgary North.

* * *

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

TERMINATION OF EMPLOYMENT OF CHAIRMAN AND SOME STAFF MEMBERS IN VIEW OF CHANGED ROLE

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question I should like to direct to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Prices and Incomes Commission is in future to function as a fact-recording rather than as a price-regulating body, in consequence of which its need for executive direction will be greatly reduced, is it the intention of the government to terminate the employment of the chairman and of his principal staff members in order to be consistent with the oft-repeated admonition of the commission to industry that costs should be kept as low as possible?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): This being the day of the Minister of Finance, I will ask him to reply to that question.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the commission is to continue as a fact-finding body to examine undue increases—

An hon. Member: At great expense to the taxpayers.

Mr. Benson: The hon. member is a great expense to the taxpayers. The commission will continue as a fact-finding body. It will present its findings, particularly with respect to price and wage increases, to the government and it will be up to the government and to hon. members to express their opinions on them just as the commission did in the past.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, as the function which the commission has carried out during the past year has been a complete failure and as it is going to be less useful to the Canadian people in the future, will the minister not follow the advice of the commission and cut costs for the good of the Canadian people?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HOUSE OF COMMONS

COMMISSION ON MEMBERS' AMENITIES—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and I do not ask it because of any interest I have in any recommendations in this connection. When will the government be tabling the report of the commission in connection with members' salaries and the like and increases thereto?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the House takes note that the hon. member is not interested in this, but for the benefit of the rest of the members I am empowered to say that the chairman of the commission said he would be prepared to issue his report to the government early next week. As soon as we receive it I propose to table it in the House.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister in a position to say whether the report provides that any increase which may be brought into effect shall not be effective until after the next ensuing election?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the usual practice of the government when it asks for a report of this kind, not a royal commission report, is to receive it, study the recommendations and arrive at a policy before tabling it. But out of respect for Parliament, which the right hon. member knows I esteem greatly—

Mr. Baldwin: When did you start?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: When did he commence?

Mr. Trudeau: —I thought it wiser in this case, since it deals with a matter which involves equally all opposition members as well as government members, to seize the House and perhaps public opinion with the report before the government dare touch it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am pleased to know that the Prime Minister is starting to have some respect for Parliament, even belatedly, but in view of the fact the government does not intend to touch the report before it is presented to the House, has he examined it yet, even though untouched?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am not psychic and I do not know what is in the report. I have not received it and I am not in a position to indicate the content of it, without having touched it or seen it.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings addressed to the Minister of Finance.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe that the hon. member for Joliette wishes to ask a supplementary question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister tell us if he is aware that most hon. members would be interested in knowing more about those increases before the next general elections?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising to ask a question supplementary to his previous question?

Mr. Hees: Oh, no, Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the question of the right hon. member for Prince Albert to the Prime Minister. As he has indicated that public opinion will guide him in his decision on this important matter, has he decided to follow the practice of the late Mr. King which was to find out by which gate the sheep wished to leave the pasture and then lead them through it?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

STATUS OF WOMEN

DESIGNATION OF MINISTER TO IMPLEMENT COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Will he consider designating a minister of the cabinet to deal with the implementation of the recommendations of the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the bill of which I gave the House notice yesterday concerning government reorganization does permit the government to have greater flexibility in the appointment of ministers. If the House passes this bill with great speed, perhaps I will be able to extend that flexibility in the direction of the hon. member.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to learn about the flexibility. In view of the widespread interest in this report, would the Prime Minister meanwhile inform the House and the country as to which minister is to receive the many representations from individuals and organizations which will come in?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, in so far as the report deals with matters under the jurisdiction of this Parliament, it appears to me there are ministers now who are empowered to deal with all aspects of our society. Thus it would be a relatively easy matter for those who wish to make representations on labour matters to know what minister to address themselves to—obviously the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that this royal commission report contains many recommendations concerning abortion I wonder whether the Prime Minister would consider asking the Minister of Labour to take care of this matter?

[Mr. Speaker.]

COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS—PROVISION OF RETRAINING PROGRAMS AND DAY-CARE CENTRES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the goals set forth in the government's white paper on income security, is the government planning any new programs of retraining and day-care centres to assist the large number of women who are forced to subsist on welfare rolls?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the increased programs for training have been announced. Of course, if the hon. member is referring to the recommendations of the recent royal commission report, these will be under consideration in due course.

* * *

POST OFFICE

CHRISTMAS MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Post Office whom I welcome back from his far-away pursuits of far-out zip codes. Can he now give a reply to the question taken on his behalf by the Postmaster General many days ago concerning the four days without mail in the Christmas season, a lacuna of service inexcusable and intolerable even in the post-Kieransian era?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Coté (Minister without Portfolio): I have not seen that question, Mr. Speaker. I will take notice of it now.

* * *

NATIONAL REVENUE

REASSESSMENT OF FARMERS DOING OFF-FARM WORK

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue. Can the minister indicate whether, on behalf of farmers, the Minister of Agriculture has conferred with him about the present policy of reassessing for tax purposes farmers who for economic reasons are taking off-farm work, and has he assured the Minister of Agriculture that this policy, often made retroactive, will be sympathetically reviewed?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture and I are in contact with each other on a number of matters and I always listen carefully to anything he has to say to me.

POLLUTION

CONTINGENCY PLAN TO DEAL WITH MAJOR OIL SPILLS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries who now has the responsibility for dealing with matters of environmental pollution. It is founded on evidence produced before the Special Committee on Environmental Pollution by witnesses from the petroleum industry of Canada and a scientist from Memorial University, all of whom indicated under questioning that Canada had no contingency plan to deal with a major oil spill similar to the Arrow disaster. My question to the minister is: What steps is the government taking to provide Canada with such a contingency plan?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the government does have a contingency plan. Also, in respect of the particular area which I know the hon. member has in mind we have a task force in my new department looking at the industrial project in question.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether, when the task force makes its report, he will release it to the House?

Mr. Davis: I would be glad to do so, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

GRAIN

SPREAD IN RAPESEED PRICES—INVESTIGATION OF MANIPULATION

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. I gave him notice. In view of the unjustified spread which has prevailed in recent weeks between cash prices for rapeseed paid to producers at prairie points and future prices quoted basis Vancouver, has the minister initiated an investigation into what appears to be manipulation in the pricing and marketing of rapeseed? If not, will he undertake such an investigation and report to the House?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): My concern about the spreads to which the hon. member refers led me several weeks ago to inquire of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange about its knowledge of the situation, and I asked for its comments upon it. This was in line with the recommendation of the oilseeds committee report which had indicated that in the first instance we should expect to see a better degree of self-policing within that organization.

Mr. Gleave: May I ask the minister, since he has referred to self-policing, whether he can assure the House that he will make the report public in view of the fact that apparently self-policing has not worked well in the last two months?

Mr. Lang: It is of course true that the spread has existed, but on the other hand rapeseed prices have been rising substantially as well. I cannot really indicate to the hon. member what use I may be able to make of the report until I know what report I will receive and under what circumstances and conditions it will be sent to me.

* * *

INFORMATION CANADA

ADVERTISEMENT FOR CHIEF OF ATTITUDINAL SURVEYS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether, in light of the advertisement placing by Information Canada in newspapers calling for a chief of attitudinal surveys to provide the government with reliable public opinion reports on a variety of topics relating to government programs, is it now government policy and is the government now planning to go into the business of public opinion polls for political and other purposes?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It appears that the hon. member would not know what an attitudinal survey is even if he were shown one.

* * *

FINANCE

RESTRICTION OF BORROWINGS BY CANADA IN UNITED STATES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is for the Minister of Finance. Would the minister advise the House whether, during the recent discussions between Canadian and United States cabinet ministers, there was any intimation from the United States Secretary of the Treasury to the Canadian government that means would soon have to be found to restrict borrowings by Canada in the United States, and will discussions start between officials of the Department of Finance of Canada and U.S. treasury officials with a view to arriving at some formula which would impose such a restriction on the flow of funds from the United States to Canada?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

GRAIN

PRODUCTION AND RECEIPTS POLICY—PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I would like to direct a question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. In light of his statement yesterday that under the new grains policy the elevator companies will no longer be paid under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, will any storage payments or handing charges be paid for out of the pool accounts which would normally go to the farmers?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The normal practice, of course, is for payments to be made by the Wheat Board to the handling companies for storage which they perform on its behalf, and there will be no change in this policy. The change is in the financing by the government of a portion of the cost to the Wheat Board for these charges.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The farmers could lose $60 million a year.

Mr. Korchinski: My question to the minister is for clarification. Is it not right that money will come out of the pool accounts that would normally go to the farmers?

Mr. Lang: As I explained yesterday, there will of course be some consequential effect in regard to the amount of grain which is in the handling system. As hon. members know, the first 178 million bushels of wheat have always been carried by the Wheat Board or by the farmers pool account, and with the increased movement of barley which we anticipate and the increased movement of rapeseed it is unlikely that the system could efficiently handle or carry regularly much more than that amount of wheat in any case.

PAYMENT TO WHEAT BOARD UNDER TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Could the minister inform the House whether or not the payment which would have accrued to the Wheat Board under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act last August 1 has in fact been made to the Wheat Board?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I do not believe that the payment has been made to this point.

PRODUCTION AND RECEIPTS POLICY—STATEMENT IN BUDGET RESPECTING STABILIZATION PAYMENTS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In view of statements made in the House last week by the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board that payments under the grain stabilization plan would not be made until after the end of the crop year, could the minister throw some further light on the statement contained in his budget speech that cash stabilization payments would be made next spring and summer totalling $100 million?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I checked that statement with the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and he agrees that the statement is fair and reasonable.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): My question is to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the fact that the consequential payments he mentioned would be in the neighbourhood of $60 million, is he considering steps whereby farmers will not have to bear the cost of this extra payment?

[Mr. Korchinski.]

Mr. Lang: I am afraid I would have to ask the hon. member to explain what he means by the consequential $60 million. I explained that with the much smaller amount of wheat being carried, the ordinary payment under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act would in the future be much reduced.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a question of privilege with respect to the answer just given by the Minister of Finance in which he indicated that he had checked his statement in the budget speech with the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. I suggest that there is a direct conflict between those statements and I suggest they cannot be allowed to pass—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a debate between the hon. member and the minister. I believe that in the past I have had occasion to say that a dispute or a debate between two hon. members as to what the facts are cannot be considered a matter of privilege and cannot be raised as a question of privilege. Perhaps the hon. member might find another way of clearing up the record.

* * *

[Translation]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PROPOSED INCREASE IN AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE RATES —INVESTIGATION BY PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should have liked to put a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate affairs, but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary.

Can he tell us whether the Prices and Incomes Commission will investigate automobile insurance premiums which seem to be increasing from year to year, since a 12 per cent increase is expected for 1971?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the question was asked yesterday.

* * *

POST OFFICE

MONTREAL—DISCUSSIONS WITH FORMER EMPLOYEES OF G. LAPALME INCORPORATED

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Post Office.

Since he has had discussions with employees of G. Lapalme Inc. these last few months, could he say if this matter has been shelved or if negotiations are still going on with the minister?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): Let us say the matter has not been shelved, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RELATIONS WITH CUBA AND ALGIERS IN LIGHT OF TRAINING OF TERRORISTS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister make a statement on motions some time before the Christmas recess, or perhaps request the Secretary of State for External Affairs to do so, concerning our relations with the Republic of Cuba and the Republic of Algiers. I specifically refer to the question of Canadians being trained as terrorists under the auspices of these governments with whom we have relations who are sent back to Canada and, in the Cross case, sent back to Cuba. A great many Canadians are inquiring about this.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The Secretary of State for External Affairs will be in the House tomorrow and if asked the question he may be able to reply.

* * *

GRAIN

WHEAT—ESTIMATED CARRY-OVER FOR 1970-71 AND 1971-72—STORAGE CHARGES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): My question is for the minister who reports for the Wheat Board. It is very difficult to follow him in the answers he gave to various hon. members. As it is today, the government of Canada pays the excess on the storage over and above 170 million bushels of wheat. The result is that the farmer gets that much more than he otherwise would get. I ask the minister this: What is the estimated carry-over of wheat that the government has in mind now for 1970-71 and 1971-72? He must have some estimate.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, at this stage it can only be an estimate, but it may be in the order of 250 million bushels.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If it is 250 million bushels then on approximately 70 million bushels the storage will be charged to the farmers whereas today the government pays it? Is that not correct?

Mr. Lang: That is correct, Mr. Speaker, on that sort of figuring. In other words, the reduction from the amounts which would have gone out of the treasury to the farmer may be in the order of $15 million, and in compensation through the stabilization fund he may receive $100 million.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce but he seems to have disappeared within the last 30 seconds.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SHIPBUILDING

CONTRACTS FOR HALIFAX SHIPYARDS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. Would the hon. gentleman check with the Minister of National Defence and other ministers with ships regarding possible contracts for Halifax shipyards in view of pending lay-offs?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Yes, I will do that, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

FINANCE

MERGER OF PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION WITH ECONOMIC COUNCIL

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Since the Prices and Incomes Commission now has 125 men on its staff and as its chairman has announced that the guidelines on prices and wages will be dropped by the end of this month, thereby relegating the commission to the minor role of making fact-finding studies of prices and wages, is any consideration being given to merging the Prices and Incomes Commission with the Economic Council of Canada, thereby enabling the government to cut down on some of its staff?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to say that I think the commission did a tremendous job in the last year. Only in Canada will you find there were not increases in basic commodity prices in the last year.

* * *

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT RESPECTING PENSIONS TO EXPEDITE FINANCING BILL

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport may I direct a question to the Acting Minister. In view of the desire of the government House leader to get through as much business as possible before the Christmas recess, will the government consider making a commitment with respect to CNR pensions, as recommended by the House of Commons, so that we can get the CNR financing bill through with a minimum of debate?

Hon. James Richardson (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Transport has responded to that question several times.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask if instead of just communicating with the CNR we can have a commitment that something will be done?

Inquiries of the Ministry

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—REPORT ON ACCIDENT INVOLVING SNOW-CLEARING EQUIPMENT

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, who is supposed to be here today but is absent, I direct my question to the Acting Minister of Transport. I know we have a Minister of Transport who is an actor, but we have an Acting Minister of Transport.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Carter: Can the minister inform the House whether a report has been submitted to his department as the result of a CNR accident with snow-clearing equipment near St. John's almost a year ago?

Hon. James Richardson (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am certain that accident has been studied carefully. I will check to see if a report has been brought forward.

NEWFOUNDLAND—INVESTIGATION OF BUS ACCIDENTS, QUALITY OF SERVICE

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, again in the absence of the minister, and as a supplementary question, could the acting minister check into the series of accidents involving the CNR in that province and make a full report to the House of Commons at the earliest possible opportunity to indicate the quality of CNR operations in that province?

Hon. James Richardson (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am certain that both hon. members who have asked questions in this area know that the CNR follows up all accidents with great care and that there are continuous studies to improve safety.

* * *

INDUSTRY

AUTO SUBSIDIARIES' SALES—EXPANSION COMMITMENT BY AUTOMOBILE MANUFACTURERS

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the reports of the declining percentage of sales of Canadian auto subsidiaries, as a percentage of the total North American market, has the minister requested that Canadian auto manufacturers come to Ottawa soon in order to get a commitment about future expansion of the automotive industry on this side of the border?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, that is news to me. I was not aware of a decline. I will check to see if the hon. member is better informed on this matter than I am, but the future of the auto pact agreement, in view of the United States suggestion that the safeguards should be eliminated, is presently being reviewed in my department. As was said in the communiqué issued at the end of the Canada-U.S. ministerial meeting, meetings will be held soon at which these safeguards and other possible improvements of the pact will be considered.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Broadbent: Would the minister assure the House that he will attempt to obtain a commitment from the Canadian manufacturers to improve the safeguards which go back to the 1964 levels of production?

Mr. Pepin: There is a difficulty there because the Americans would consider that setting targets would be worse than keeping the safeguards which they are requesting should be suspended or abolished.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, would the minister advise the House whether it is the government's intention to include replacement parts when they are studying the pact?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, this will be included in the possible improvements that will be discussed at the next Canada-U.S. meeting.

* * *

FISHERIES

RAISING OF ACCEPTABLE LEVEL OF MERCURY IN PRODUCTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Does the minister plan to raise the acceptable level of mercury in fish products from .5 parts per million to one part per million as advocated by some cabinet ministers of the province of Ontario?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that this question was asked before, but if I am wrong the minister may wish to reply.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker. However, we will be holding meetings early in the new year with health officials from both the United States and Canada with a view to exploring the possible raising of the level. Meanwhile, since Canada exports 90 per cent of its commercial catch and because the quality of our fish is its greatest attribute we are carefully observing to the .5 parts per million specification.

* * *

[Translation]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

RIGHT OF EMPLOYEES TO EXPRESS THEIR OPINIONS

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister concerning some remarks made last Saturday by the president of the CBC, Mr. George Davidson, on the program entitled: "Your Two Bucks Worth".

Does the Prime Minister and his government agree with Mr. Davidson's statement that as long as separatism is a valid political option, CBC employees have the right to express their political opinions, whether or not they are separatists?

Mr. Speaker: I regret to intervene at this point, but the hon. member must agree that it is out of order to ask a minister to confirm a statement made outside the House by a person other than a minister.

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ATTENDANCE OF MINISTERS

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that there were only 11 ministers present yesterday and only 11 today when there should have been 18, that is, seven away on each day, and in view of the fact that on the order paper there is a measure that would increase benefits for ministers and parliamentary secretaries, can I ask the Prime Minister if this will mean a further decrease in ministerial attendance or will we be able to count on them being here more often?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the House may be interested to know that all the ministers who are away are away on government business and they are replaced in the House by acting ministers or by their parliamentary secretaries. Mr. Greene, of course, is in Japan on a Canadian mining mission. Mr. Chrétien is in Yellowknife attending the Arctic transportation conference.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The reason I intervene at this moment is that the Chair has always suggested to all members, including cabinet ministers and the Prime Minister, that members should be referred to by their constituencies and ministers by their ministerial responsibilities. I think we should try to respect this practice.

Mr. Trudeau: That is very good advice, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is in Japan on a Canadian mining mission. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is in Yellowknife attending the Arctic transportation conference. Both have their acting ministers present today. The Minister of Agriculture is in Edmonton attending the Union of Farmers annual convention. The Minister of National Defence is visiting the Canadian Forces base at Lahr, Germany, after having attended the NATO meetings of course.

Mr. Baldwin: Goody, goody.

Mr. Trudeau: The Minister of Transport is in Yellowknife attending the Arctic transportation conference. The minister responsible for housing and urban affairs is attending the Second Conference on Mortgage Investment for Trusteed Pension Plans, and the minister acting for him is also here. The Minister of Finance, who is at the federal-provincial finance ministers—

Mr. Stanfield: He is here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: He didn't know you were here, Ben.

Mr. Trudeau: I am told, Mr. Speaker, that if he is absent the Minister of National Revenue will take note of questions for him.

Mr. Bell: Regardless of whether these ministers are away on important duties, in view of the fact they have violated the roster system would the Prime Minister consider red-circling their positions until such time as they come and attend to their business as they are supposed to in the House each day?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will take note of the approbation of the hon. member for red-circling and I will read the Beaupré Commission report concerning members with this in mind.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the right hon. gentleman if any plans are contemplated for throwing out the roster system and allowing ministers who are in the buildings to attend in the chamber to answer on behalf of their departments, as they ought to according to the rules of the House of Commons?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, this matter has been coming up less frequently as of late because I think it has been recognized that the system has some advantages.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: For the ministers, no doubt.

Mr. Trudeau: If I have some firm representations from the opposition that they would rather go back to the chaotic system of the past in which the opposition never knew what ministers responsible for departments were going to be present to answer questions—

Mr. Hees: But they are here every day.

Mr. Trudeau: —we will certainly be prepared to consider the matter. But there will be no guarantee that the attendance of ministers will be any more frequent than now. Ministers have to attend cabinet meetings and attend to government business across the country.

Mr. Hees: We always used to do that in the past.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair sees that three members wish to ask supplementary questions, the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond, the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate and the hon. member for Chicoutimi. There is only one minute left in the question period and other hon. members wish to ask questions. I wonder whether it is the wish of the House that we pursue this matter.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Trudeau: No doubt it is about the "rooster" system. I hope the hon. member says something funny.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises from the comment just now made by the Prime Minister. He referred to the previous system under which opposition members did not know what the responsibilities of the ministers were. Mr. Speaker, one does not need to strain one's memory to recall that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion did not know what his responsibilities were with respect to the Cape Breton Development Corporation, nor did the Minister of Justice, nor did some others.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question of privilege, he ought to state it quickly. He knows what a question of privilege is. What he is bringing forward now is debate; it is not a question of privilege.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I could produce letters from the ministers indicating that they do not know—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That will not strengthen the hon. member's case in so far as privilege is concerned. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Monday, December 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson, that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government, the amendment thereto of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) (page 1808) and amendment to the amendment of Mr. Saltsman (page 1812).

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I should like to comment on certain aspects of the budget concerning industrial development.

Of course, I do not want to repeat the remarks of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) on the state of the Canadian economy, except to mention again that our exports are faring relatively well, with a surplus trade balance estimated, on an annual basis, at $2.75 billion, which helps to give us, for the first time since 1952, a surplus in our balance of payments. I note that this results partly from the success of the government's fight against price increases, and I also note that it is taking place in spite of the inevitable re-evaluation of the Canadian dollar.

I also note that the Minister of Finance, in his budget speech, comments on the slowing down of the rate of economic growth this year, estimated at 2.5 or 3 per cent for 1970, compared to 5 per cent in 1970. Although the rate of growth is now improving, the government, in view of persistent unemployment, has decided to give it an extra push by initiating additional incentives.

[Mr. Speaker.]

The government, as we know, faced two alternatives. The first consisted of general measures such as tax reductions, which the government felt could lead to a return of galloping inflation. The other alternative was adoption of specific, selective measures, geared to specific regions, specific industries and specific individuals. As we know, it has chosen the second alternative. Had the government chosen the first one, the opposition would of course have accused it of lacking intelligence, finesse and subtlety. Had it chosen them both, the opposition might have accused it of irresponsibility. But as it has chosen the first one, it is accused of lacking courage.

Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that the government will never win that game, because there always will be criticism.

But by choosing the first alternative, that is selectivity, the government is in good company. In a recent OECD commentary, for instance, a Committee on economic policy stated, and I quote:

[English]

—'in cases where unemployment is rising towards unacceptable levels, attention should be directed to the possibility of selected action directed to areas of high unemployment, rather than indiscriminate increases in public expenditure or general tax cuts.'

• (3:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Thus we are in good company when we choose a selective approach rather than a general one.

As regards industrial development, Mr. Speaker, there are, in the budget of the Minister of Finance, four measures which for me, as Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, have a tremendous value, and I know that hon. members will want to keep them in mind too.

These four measures proceed from a concern for reinforcing the industrial base, and this shows that the short term concern meets the long term one. Here they are: (1) The expansion of the industrial incentive program of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, which is already well known. (2) Additional capital cost allowances to manufacturers and processing industries which may result in a tax abatement amounting up to $25 million, and bring to Canada a possible $3 million investment. (3) Measures providing for loan insurance and direct loans to some especially affected industrial sectors; (4) Subsidies to the shipbuilding industry.

Obviously, I would like to discuss the last two items. First of all, why is this assistance provided to those industries, more specifically to the footwear industry which has come up to join the textile and clothing industries? Why this assistance to shipbuilders?

The hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) has pointed out in a recent speech—and this, by the way, happens to be the only positive things he said then—that there was a relationship between the demands arising out of international trade liberalization and the demands of industrial efficiency.

In other words, if we, the people of Canada, strive to trumpet forth the advantages of free international trade and make it pay, then the Canadian industry must become highly competitive. Otherwise, our philosophy does not agree with our interests. And this is my concern at this time.

Exports are faring relatively well, especially in the primary and semi-manufactured products sectors. We are selling easily enough our grain, our oil, our gas, our coal and our materials to international markets.

But what about manufactured products? Obviously that sector is making progress, but it is encountering difficulties and will always have them because international competition is and will remain extremely keen.

However, Mr. Speaker, it should be mentioned that we are progressing. Ten years ago, our exports accounted for approximately 10 per cent of manufactured products. Today, they represent between 35 and 40 per cent.

I agree that cars play a most important role. In any event, we have progressed, but may I reiterate that competition is fierce, particularly under the current circumstances of international trade which are lower tariffs, frequently involving protectionist threats, especially in Canada, a reduction in the national defense budget, a most healthy dollar and in certain industrial sectors, a desire by Canadian workers to attain wage parity with their American counterparts.

Is it not self-evident, Mr. Speaker, that we must give this sector of secondary industries, where the best prospects for creating jobs are, all the consideration that the circumstances I have just described warrant?

So we must continuously try to rationalize our manufacturing sector, and in this respect, all the tools available to the government and the public sector must be used.

I shall not mention all those available to my department as well as to some others, but this budget contains a provision which seems of particular interest to me—the extension of the General Adjustment Assistance Program to the footwear industry. You will recall that this extension had already been made to the textile and clothing industries.

This decision, I think, deserves some specific attention from hon. members.

In most cases, Mr. Speaker, this rationalization process is ensured by industry itself. There are also cases where it is not done, unfortunately, especially when industrial sectors are endangered and become vulnerable because of the liberal trade policy of the federal government. Where profits are lower and the future looks less promising, I feel that the government may and must contribute, in short may and must try to help private enterprise to rationalize and modernize its operations, or just to keep up to date as is often the case.

Mr. Speaker, we know that there is a program of manpower conversion to which the federal government contributes some $300 million a year. I think it is normal that a few millions of dollars be contributed also yearly to ensure that the conversion of industry itself, of factories, takes place where there are particular problems of the type that I have outlined.

[English]

The general assistance program is known to many members of the House, but possibly not well enough. I wish to spend five minutes to describe it.

The GAAP program was established in 1968 to provide financial and technical support to Canadian manufacturers to take advantage of export opportunities arising out of the Kennedy round tariff cuts made by Canada and other countries. That is the main purpose of it.

The program is administered by a general adjustment assistance board which consists of a chairman and two members from the business community, as well as members from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Department of Finance and the Department of Manpower and Immigration. It will soon include members of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to ensure that maximum co-ordination is accomplished.

The Board is authorized to provide three forms of assistance. The first form is government assistance of up to 90 per cent of loans made by private lenders to manufacturers for the restructuring of their operations. This is a loan. There is a charge of one per cent of the sum involved. The second form is direct government loans to manufacturers who have been seriously injured or threatened with serious injury and are unable to obtain an insured loan. In some cases then there is the possibility of a direct government loan.

The third form is grants of up to 50 per cent of the cost of services of qualified consultants required for the developments of sound restructuring proposals.

To date, the board has authorized loan insurance of $32.6 million to assist 30 manufacturers. No manufacturers have qualified for direct loans. Grants totalling $77,000 have been approved for consulting assistance for 10 manufacturers. I wish to give some examples to illustrate how useful the program has been.

A small Ontario based appliance manufacturer had been showing outstanding growth in sales and earnings. Exports sales in particular increased from $105,000 in 1968 to $700,000 in 1969 as a result of an aggressive sales policy combined with the Kennedy round tariff reductions. Further growth was limited because of the unavailability of funds to finance the required inventory buildup. The GAAP board authorized insurance of a $300,000 working capital loan early this year. With this financing, exports for 1970 will reach $1.4 million. Further, outstanding growth is projected for 1971.

Another example is a Maritime manufacturer who had developed a product line which was well received in the United States Market. The Kennedy round reductions further improved the market potential, but sales increases were restricted by limited plant capacity and inadequate inventory financing. The GAAP program provided a grant to finance a portion of the cost of a consulting study which recommended changes in plant layout to streamline production flows and more than double plant capacity. The board later authorized insurance of a $470,000 loan to enable the company to implement the consultant's recommendation and provide inventory financing. The combination of grant and insured loan assistance will enable the company to increase export sales by $1.3 million per year by 1972.

It is forecast that as a result of the loan insurance authorized to date, exports in 1971 will be $28 million higher than they would have been without GAAP. For 1972 and 1973 the equivalent figures are $54 million and $89 million. I suggest that this is a very valuable program, Mr. Speaker. Now, if the program is good for exports, why should it not also be good for the domestic market? Extension of the program for that purpose was announced a few weeks ago in respect of textiles and clothing. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) announced the other night that it would be extended now to the footwear industry. I do not think anyone will disagree with that. I hope not. Parliamentary approval is now being sought through supplementary estimates for extensions of GAAT to all three sections: textiles, clothing and footwear. By so doing, we shall be contributing to the process of rationalization of those industries.

• (3:10 p.m.)

I might add that a further amendment to the GAAP program will authorize the board to insure loans made to certain non-manufacturing firms providing financial, marketing or other services essential for the operations of eligible manufacturers.

The situation is this, Mr. Speaker. A manufacturing plant somewhere in Stormont, let us say, would be in a better position if somebody was taking responsibility for financing, warehousing, marketing, or the like. The GAAP program, which up to now, could be used only by manufacturers, will now be offered to those who contribute indirectly to manufacturing. Again, I believe this is a good move. May I underline the importance of the announcement made the other day by the Minister of Finance with respect to the extension of the GAAP program to the footwear industry.

[Translation]

The footwear industry, as we know, is very important in Canada because it provides employment to 20,000 or 30,000 workers. However, being so fragmented, it is now going through a difficult period of adjustment. It is also submitted to strong pressures from imports.

I have here some figures that I would like to quote:

[English]

Fifteen footwear firms in Canada have gone out of business in the past 12 months. In the first half of 1970, the volume of imported leather footwear was some 16 per cent higher than in the first half of last year and this trend is expected to continue. Six of the larger firms, employing about 2,600 workers, have recently requested federal government assistance in restructuring their operations to enable them to compete effectively. The import pressure is great, and this pressure comes not only from low cost countries but from highly industrialized countries such as Italy, France, United Kingdom and the United States. The only real possibility in these circumstances is for the Canadian footwear industry, the leather section in particular, which still has 80 per cent of the domestic market, to become as efficient as possible. If they do so, not only will they keep that good large share of the domestic market but they will export a lot more than they are exporting today.

Everybody agrees with this. The Canadian footwear industry and the clothing industry possess originality, have ideas, and have style. They could produce for the Canadian market, and export a lot more than they do now.

Again, in order to do that, they need to be fully modernized; they need to specialize; they need to integrate. They agree with this estimate of their needs. They say, though, we should do something to help them do just that. And this is what is intended by the extension of the GAAP program.

[Translation]

The same concern for rationalization can be found in the government decision, as the result of increasing international demand, to assist the shipbuilding industry for export purposes. We know that this grant will range from 14 to 17 per cent, according to the tonnage of the ship.

The main purpose of that decision, confirmed by the Minister of Finance, is evidently to contribute to maintain a certain number of jobs. Jobs in that sector throughout Canada have decreased by some 5,000 since 1966 and they now number between 5,000 and 6,000. But if the steps already announced were not taken, perhaps 1,000 others would disappear during 1970 and next year. Consequently, it is essential to act.

In my statement of November 27 last, I emphasized the importance of reducing costs in this industry. It is easy to say. But the only way to do it is to try and produce more than one unit at a time, to build in small series. This is why both the number of ships being built and the budgetary measure encouraging exports are important.

I insisted also on the importance of diversification and specialization in order to lessen the vulnerability of shipyards in terms of fluctuations of the national and international demand.

Mr. Speaker, people should not believe that this desire for rationalization in the shipyard sector has only come up recently: my department has a Defence Material Industry Productivity Program known as DIP which has already tackled and made an important contribution to the problem. In fact, several shipyards, including St. John Shipbuilding, Marine Industries, Vickers, Davie Shipbuilding have already shared in the DIP program of my department to the amount of $3 million and have improved their production.

What about the result? I gave it in my release of the other day: "It is significant that a number of our yards are already producing efficiently a wide variety of heavy equipment such as pressure vessels, penstocks, gates, steel structures, industrial machinery and equipment and rail car, etc."

Do people know for instance that Marine Industries in Sorel and Davie Shipbuilding in Lauzon are already devoting 50 per cent of their activities to projects other than shipbuilding?

That is an attempt to diversify which I thought worth mentioning.

In conclusion, making secondary industry more modern, diversified and specialized is one of the basic concerns of my department and of the government. I wanted to show today how the two measures announced by the Minister of Finance—the extension of the temporary assistance program and the subsidies to shipbuilding—were part of a larger framework, that of continuing improvement of Canada's industrial base, which will enable us to serve the domestic market more efficiently and to increase our exports.

[English]

Mr. McCleave: Would the minister permit a question arising out of his remarks in connection with shipbuilding? It occurs to me that once the ships were built they might have foreign crews. Are further steps planned so that we might have not only more Canadian shipbuilding but more Canadians manning the ships?

Mr. Pepin: This is one of the many questions which was raised by the Robertson report, the possibility of having a Canadian merchant navy. The report is still being considered but, along with other studies, as I said on a previous occasion, no decision has been made on the matter.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to comment in detail upon the remarks of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), though I have no doubt a number of my hon. friends will do so. At the outset of his observations, the hon. gentleman referred to his pleasure concerning the state of our exports. I should like to remind him, before I go any further, that the large balance of trade presently in our favour is perhaps due not so much to any increase in our exports as it is to a reduction in our imports. I also express the hope that the minister will not be so lost in admiration for the balance of trade this year that he will overlook some of the difficulties he and I discussed the other day in connection with future Canadian exports, particularly to Britain and the common market.

• (3:20 p.m.)

With regard to the budget, this budget marks the end of a so-called period of restraint and the adoption by the government of some sort of goal of expansion. The government ends this period of restraint not with a full treasury but with a substantial and increasing budgetary deficit. It ends this period of restraint with the country experiencing massive unemployment, with its anti-inflationary program in ruins, indeed dismantled, and with the Prices and Incomes Commission retiring into a period of seclusion.

Despite this, the minister told us the other night that everything is going to be great. Unfortunately, the minister has not yet been right. Let us consider just how wrong he has been. I am not going to go back to 1968, when he told us that we were going to have a balanced budget and, in fact, we had a deficit of $750 million. There is no need to go back to 1968, let us consider 1970.

Mr. Benson: How about 1969?

Mr. Stanfield: I will be happy to talk to the minister about 1969 at any other time but let me talk about 1970 at the moment. Let us go back to the March budget when the minister took a good, clear look forward. One thing he said was that the situation was such that "'we need to consider introducing consumer credit controls to keep the economy from running away on us". He predicted a surplus of $250 million for the year. During the first few months he abandoned any idea of introducing consumer credit controls, and by October he was talking about a budgetary deficit of $150 million. In his budget speech the other night, he talked about a budgetary deficit of $350 million.

The minister refers to this as "a process of constant and continuing review". That is how he describes it. What we really have on the part of the minister is a constant and continuing effort to adjust to his previous errors in estimates, his previous forecasting mistakes. First of all, the minister realizes that he is completely wrong about consumer credit regulations. Then, he realizes things are not going the way he calculated so he increases some sharing arrangements made with the provinces to "reverse the process", as he called it. Then, as the year went on he realized that he and his colleagues had created a virtual catastrophe in the housing program, and he now sees the need to put more money into the program.

We now have this budget. From March until today, there has been a constant effort on the part of the minister to readjust to the very serious errors in forecasting he made last march. The forecasts of the March budget were a complete botch. No one need take my word for that; all he need do is to follow the manoeuvring of the minister ever since. At first, he was rather cautious and very complacent, but his manoeuvres escalated until recently they reached a flurry of activity as the extent of unemployment in this country finally became apparent, apparent even to this government with its superb talent for seeing only what it wants to see and absolutely nothing else.

The minister said on television the other night in a program called "Encounter" that his forecasting this year had been pretty good, that things had worked out just about as he had anticipated. That, Mr. Speaker, is patently untrue in view of the manoeuvring and scrambling that he has been doing ever since he made those forecasts. I must say I find it impossible to believe that the government foresaw what has happened but sat back and allowed it to happen. I am prepared to believe that the government is incompetent, but I am not prepared to believe that it foresaw the present levels of unemployment, for example in the province of Quebec, British Columbia and the Atlantic provinces. I am not prepared to believe that the minister and his colleagues foresaw this level of unemployment and accepted it, despite the hard boiled remarks made by his Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) regarding the degree of unemployment that he is prepared to accept. I can see that the government is absurdly complacent, but I do not believe it is that cruel.

One of the most alarming aspects about the whole economic scene in Canada today is that, despite these terrific errors in forecasting and judgment, the Minister of Finance still believes that his forecasting was good. His capacity for self-delusion almost goes beyond the degree of complacency that the government exhibits.

The budget of March was a bad mistake in judgment. The slowdown in our economy had already been allowed to go too far. There were warnings from the Economic Council of Canada and from others. To continue deliberately to run down the economy below par, and deliberately to hold down the growth in the economy below the rate of growth of the labour force, with the consequent increase in unemployment, is inexcusable. Why did the government make such a distorted judgment of the outlook last year? Was it to show those fellows in the organized labour movement just who is boss in this country? It was said to be done in the name of fighting inflation. I have said many times that the minister's policy was inhumane.

The minister and his friends are fond of talking about OECD. Massive unemployment is not accepted by OECD as a weapon or tool for fighting inflation. It is not accepted because it weakens the will to fight inflation. Despite all the talk about OECD by my hon. friend opposite, no government in western Europe would accept anything like the degree of unemployment that this government has accepted during the past year.

Furthermore, there is not the slightest evidence that unemployment to this degree is in any way a necessary part of an effective fight against inflation in this country. I admit that when a government brings on a recession and creates massive unemployment, certainly the rate of price increases will slow down. But the Canadian people have had to pay a very heavy price. Not only have they had to pay a very heavy price, but the government has not dealt with the basic causes of inflation in this country. The government has not established any defence against the development of inflation in future in this country. Indeed, the anti-inflationary machinery of this government lies in ruins. The Prices and Incomes Commission has reverted to the status of a study group and, as it has done so, it has made this pronouncement: The Prices and Incomes Commission has said that unless there is moderation in wage demands in this country we can expect either excessive inflation, excessive unemployment or compulsory prices and wage controls. That is the pronouncement of the Prices and Incomes Commission on its way to retiring into obscurity. It is a grim prospect, in addition to the existing unemployment and other difficulties of this country.

• (3:30 p.m.)

The Prices and Incomes Commission also accepts and emphasizes the view that fiscal and monetary policies are not by themselves adequate tools to fend off inflation. This is also the view of the OECD, and it is not for the Minister of Finance or anybody else to pretend that they are adequate in themselves.

Here we have massive unemployment and we have a big budgetary deficit. We have a government which has no idea how it is going to cope with inflation when we do achieve something like full employment again, short of the prospect of compulsory control. The minister says that the main weapons against inflation must be monetary and fiscal policies. He says voluntary restraints can work only for a short time. Let me say two things to him, sir. Monetary and fiscal policies will not do the job by themselves and even compulsory controls can work only for a short time.

I admit that no country has worked out a satisfactory program in respect of a voluntary income restraint policy. I admit that, but nevertheless nearly every country now recognizes the need, as does the OECD. The government has become aware I think that voluntary restraints must be based on co-operation, and cannot be imposed by a government or government agency. Such a policy has a much better chance of getting started and working if it is introduced in a period when inflationary pressures are not too great.

The government tried to introduce such a policy from above, and tried to do it when inflationary pressures were very great. I had urged an approach to this sort of thing in this House as far back as 1967. The government delayed, and when it tried it failed to get co-operation. As a result, the effort was abandoned. I say in all sincerity that if inflationary pressures have now ceased, and if the rate of inflation has now decreased, this is the time the government should be trying rather than giving up. It should be redoubling its efforts to participate with management and labour in working out a program of restraints.

I do not say this is easy but I say the government should try. I also suggest that tax reductions at this time would have helped create an appropriate climate for this kind of initiative in this country. If the government was able, in a period lacking strong inflationary pressures, to work out a framework of restraint on the basis of co-operation, then fiscal and monetary policies could be used to prevent an over-heating and building-up of excessive pressure. Then, we would have a chance in Canada of attaining satisfactory employment and stability at the same time. Instead, the government has thrown in the towel. Its boast of success against inflation is not the result of superior management but simply the result of a severe slowdown of our economy and severe unemployment in our country. Now, we have a slowdown and unemployment, and the outlook is for more inflation as our economy expands because this government clearly knows no way to head off inflation. Indeed, the government is already commencing to increase its own pressures on the capital markets of this country.

The keynote of this budget, if there is one, is expansion. What is the government doing with regard to unemployment and what is its approach? Its approach is basically one of pump priming concentrated in areas of slow growth in the country. The reason given for increasing expenditures and loans rather than reducing taxes is that this is an effort to pin-point where the expansion is to take place in order to benefit areas of slow growth.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said this afternoon that the government cannot resort to a reduction in taxation without producing galloping inflation. With all respect to him, there is nothing to back up his statement. In fact, there is very good reason to believe that a reduction in income tax at this time would modify wage increases. In any event, there is not the slightest reason to believe that a reduction in income tax at this time would lead to galloping inflation in this country.

When the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce purported to justify the resort to increased expenditures in certain areas rather than reducing taxes he again quoted the OECD as advising countries to consider selective approaches to unemployment rather than such general measures as reduction in taxation. That advice of the OECD makes very good sense for countries in western Europe, for example. It makes excellent sense for a government that has virtually full employment, except in certain areas of the country.

I suggest it is nonsense on the part of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to take this advice which makes very good sense under other conditions and apply it to Canada where there is massive unemployment across the country.

Mr. Pepin: I say that my program will combine both.

Mr. Stanfield: No, sir. I anticipate there is a much more fundamental reason for the government choosing the course it did rather than choosing to reduce taxation. I think it is because of its mechanistic view of the economy of Canada. It believes you can slow down the economy any time by tightening the screws, and obviously you can. Conversely, the government seems to believe that you can bring about expansion when and where you will simply by loosening the screws and putting more gas into the machine by spending more money. Certainly, you can slow down the economy that way but you cannot necessarily assume this is a machine that you can start up again simply by feeding it a little more gas. The economy is not just a piece of machinery which the government can regulate in this way.

The expectations and confidence of individuals play a great role. The minister, in his budget speech, stated his expectations but he certainly did not create confidence. He did not carry a conviction to this country that his projections were going to prove to be true. It is fair to say that everyone in this country was virtually shaken by the increase in taxation and by the increase in taxation I mean the imposition of the surtax beyond the time when it was clearly understood it was to be discontinued. I think everybody in the country is disconcerted by the implications of this move by the minister. I say there ought to have been a tax decrease, particularly for people with lower incomes. The Minister of Finance admitted that a tax decrease would have an expansionary effect on the economy.

• (3:40 p.m.)

I say, too, it would provide a great psychological lift. Indeed, such a reduction in taxation leading to an expansion in the economy would tend to generate more revenue for the government. The government, therefore, would not be giving up very much revenue as a result of reducing taxation in a way which would lead to expansion of the economy. The government did not choose to do that. It chose instead to maintain taxation, and then some. It chose this course because I believe the government thought it was better for the government to raise and spend money in order to try to pinpoint where growth will take place than it was for the government to free the individual when this was possible. I say this attitude of the government toward increased taxation is depressing and is counterproductive. Such an attitude certainly adds to the uncertainties that are around as a result of the floating dollar and adds to the uncertainties that are around as a result of the failure of the Minister of Finance to clarify what he proposes to do in respect of tax reform and what recommendations of the committee he proposes to accept.

All this uncertainty is holding up decisions in the private sector of the economy. As I have said, this action of the government in increasing taxation when it ought to be reducing taxation adds to the uncertainties. I might be more accurate if I were to say this decision by the Minister of Finance to increase taxation at this time gives certainty to the fears of many Canadians that the minister will use tax reform, as he is now using economic disparity, as an excuse or a disguise for higher taxation in this country. That is a pretty depressing prospect. The driving force of the economy is not just the money the government pumps around in this country. Certainly, intelligent fiscal policy is an important factor in growth and stability. But individual motivation is important, incentive is important and confidence is important. The government is destroying incentive, is destroying confidence and is discouraging the people of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Over the years we have heard a lot about the fight against poverty. The minister referred to old age security and pensions. The other night he said we are increasing these pensions and the assistance to the aged just at the right time. The right time for whom? The right time for the pensioners was a couple of years ago. Yet so much does the minister identify the interests of the government with the interests of the older people of this country that he assumes this is just the right time for the older people of the country. He asks them to wait until next spring for this kind of help. The minister says it is just the right time.

Mr. Benson: For the economy.

Mr. Stanfield: For the economy, I see. I am sorry but I am no more ready now than I was before to accept the minister's judgment concerning what is just the right time for the economy, either. It may be more obvious that the minister's timing was not in the interests of the older people of the country, but one does not have to look much further to decide it was not right for the economy, either.

Certainly, the government is not attacking poverty. Certainly, there is no sign in the government's white paper on social security that the government intends to attack poverty. I want to say that a buoyant economy in this country is essential to any attack on poverty. First of all, a buoyant economy is necessary in order to reduce unemployment which has added so much to the poverty in this country in the last year or so and, second, a buoyant economy is necessary to produce the revenue needed for an effective high productivity program. I say that the prompt stimulation of our economy is an essential part of the fight against poverty in Canada today. The same applies to regional disparity and regional poverty. Surely, it is not necessary for me to emphasize the importance I attach to the fight on regional disparity. It is not necessary for me to emphasize the importance I attach to moving ahead more rapidly in areas of slow growth in this country. I believe this government will get nowhere in an effort to help these areas of slow growth unless the economy of the country generally is buoyant.

The areas of slow growth, such as the Atlantic Provinces, parts of Quebec and parts of the other provinces, are the first to feel the effect of any slackness in the national economy. It is in these areas the slackness tends to concentrate. More than ten years ago, this fact was emphasized to the governments of the Atlantic provinces by consultants we used. Professor Alex Cairncross, who later became the chief Economic Advisor to the government of Great Britain, emphasized to us that the Atlantic provinces and other areas of slow growth certainly needed development programs but that these would do little good in those areas unless the national economy was healthy and going forward at the same time. I have been saying this for years. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) apparently finally has realized this also because he said so in the House the other day. This realization, however, certainly is not reflected in the government's policy as announced in the budget. As one would anticipate, the national slowdown in our economy has created new depressed areas.

If the Minister of Finance continues in the same way, the whole country will require designation pretty soon. Indeed, in the sense that the whole economy is below par, it almost requires this today. If the economy picks up substantially, such programs could help Quebec and other areas of slow growth—although I must say that the concept of designation is coming pretty close to being absurd, if it is not there already, when one considers the proportion of the country that has now been designated. I repeat that I am certainly in favour of such measures of help. But the best immediate help to the Province of Quebec, the Atlantic provinces and other areas of slow growth would be a rapid increase in national prosperity. This is the measure that would afford the most immediate help to all these regions because these are the regions which feel the greatest impact of the national recession that is taking place. I say that tax reduction is the most immediate and effective way to produce this prompt stimulation of our economy. Such a tax reduction could be associated with specific measures of encouragement.

Tax reduction would create the psychological climate required for expansion, as the Minister of Finance admits. This was the course which should have been taken, rather than the choice made by the Minister of Finance which was a tax increase, with an all-wise government increasing its encouragement in certain sectors of the economy and just assuming that its increased expenditures as well as some kind of an expanding monetary supply in themselves would ensure an expanding national economy, without which the minister's help to slow growth areas will accomplish very little or practically nothing.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Of course, I suppose it is possible that the minister may be right for once in this projection, but what a chance to take. If the economy is slow to respond, after being screwed down the way it has and worried after this budget, consider first of all the beautiful fiscal mess that the minister will have created both for himself and for his provincial counterparts. But, more important, think of the disillusionment and the bitterness that will have been created among our youth and among the hard core unemployed.

Our economy is not just a machine. The minister and his colleagues talk in terms of inputs and outputs, but what he is really dealing with is people. He is fooling around with the lives of people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I know his job is difficult. I do not think he is an unkind man. I assume he is a man with some feeling and he probably says to himself when one of his policies creates some unemployment that it hurts him more than it hurts the unemployed, rather like the parent taking the whip and beating the child. I say to the minister in all sincerity that his methods of forecasting are not reliable enough to justify the kind of decision he has taken in his budget. In fighting inflation he resorts to overkill—unintentionally I am sure, because he did not know what he was doing—and in fighting unemployment in Canada today he is guilty of underkill. I say the economy needs a large stimulus now, and despite what the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said, this would not be stoking the fires of future inflation. A cut in taxes now would not stoke the fires of future inflation. There are all kinds of slack in the economy today, and a large stimulus now need not be a continuing stimulus. As the economy picked up, the minister could start applying the braking process. But what he needs to ensure now is that the economy picks up, and he should not just take that for granted.

I say to the minister that his forecasting methods are crude, that the government's methods of manipulating the economy are crude, and that the economy is far more complex than he and his advisors conceive, otherwise they would never have concocted the white paper on tax reform. Instead of a tax reform designed to fit our economy, the government has been trying to fit the economy to its concept of tax reform. Now, instead of producing a budget designed to suit the needs of this country, a living, breathing complex of relationships among people, the government chooses to treat the economy as a piece of machinery which it can adjust at will, as if it were a question of putting in a little gas in the right place and in the right amounts. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, don't you believe him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Hundreds of thousands of Canadians are already paying a high price in unemployment. The budget does virtually nothing for them in the coming months, and they will continue for months to pay for the government's past mistakes. I ask, how long are we all going to have to pay for the present mistakes of the government in the budget that we are now discussing? One newspaper describes this budget as "a scattergun approach". That is certainly not being too hard on the government. Apparently the government has decided that such an approach is sufficient, because it still does not really believe our economy is in trouble. In fact, after reading the budget speech itself, one would think that there are no real problems in Canada at all. In language consistent with the language in the Speech from the Throne, this budget speech once again takes a complacent, unconcerned line that has become the hallmark of this government. It talks smugly about "improving trends", tells us that we are "moving out of the pause", and generally simply takes for granted what it should be proving.

This budget is really little more than a gesture, a sort of public relations gimmick, a pat on the head of the unemployed and the Canadian people to say "there, there, you will see; everything will be all right". It is a little like a mother saying she will kiss away the hurt suffered by her little child when he has a fall. That is O.K. if it is just a scratch, but the government's policies have wounded our economy far more deeply than that. I say it is an insult for this government to suggest that now all it has to do is to kiss away our wounds. It is an insult to the Canadian people, and it is an insult to the hundreds of thousands of unemployed men and women walking the streets of Canada today looking for work.

This budget does nothing to help the low and middle income Canadian taxpayers. On the contrary, through the maintenance of the surtax when it was supposed to be eliminated, when we were all assured that was to be the case and when everybody was counting on it, the budget hurts everybody. Our approach would have been one of selective tax reductions, once again with the aim of engendering confidence. But the government has refused to do so, and once again I say the government is wrong.

This is a sort of go-it-alone budget, one that assumes rather arrogantly that only the government can be trusted with anything, even if it is precious little, that only the government can be trusted to do anything about economic expansion. The budget ignores the contributions of Canadians, whether they be taxpayers or businessmen. The budget ignores the contributions that Canadians can make through their own efforts and through their own decisions.

This is a budget that does nothing to encourage confidence in the economy, the sort of confidence that can lead to expansion and to growth. True, the government speaks in optimistic words, but we have seen enough of this government's lack of foresight to realize that these are words and nothing more. The government can fool itself, but it is not going to fool anybody else. What was needed was not words but action to demonstrate the government's confidence in the economy. There was not any. That was the true eloquence of that speech, a very unfortunate sort of eloquence, if I may say so.

This is a budget that clearly falls between two stools. In terms of the serious and immediate situation this winter, including the prospect of the worst unemployment situation in a decade, this budget is virtually useless, and in terms of long term economic planning it is virtually meaningless. It gives no hint of what, if any, long term plans the government has. This budget is totally devoid of meaning. Perhaps we will have another budget in January, I do not know. The budget is a mish-mash of unrelated, mostly insignificant measures that neither give any hope for the solution of immediate problems nor provide any guidelines for the future of our economy.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and other opposition speakers so far have called for a number of measures which I wholeheartedly endorse. These include the abolition of the surtax, the immediate relief for low income wage earners—which the government itself has claimed to favour—a reduction in the federal sales tax on building materials, and an emergency amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act to temporarily increase the period of benefits and reduce the qualifications during the coming winter.

• (4:00 p.m.)

An hon. Member: For how long?

Mr. Stanfield: On an interim basis.

Mr. Benson: You just spent $2,000 million.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister says we just spent $2,000 million.

Mr. Benson: That's right.

Mr. Stanfield: That is a completely irresponsible statement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: A completely irresponsible statement.

Mr. Benson: Add it up.

Mr. Stanfield: I calculated it, Mr. Speaker, and that is the kind of silly talk in which the Minister of Finance indulges. That statement is as silly as some of the forecasts he has made in the past.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Sir, these are practical proposals. They are the sort of proposals that we were expecting the government to bring forward when it announced it was going to bring down a budget, because when it made that announcement we assumed the government had something useful to contribute. Instead, we have a document that, I am sorry to say, is quite worthless in terms of facing up to the very grave problems we are facing today.

The Financial Times summed up the situation, I think, very nicely in an editorial this week, and I quote:

> Mr. Benson's budget last Thursday may not have disappointed everybody in Canada. No expectations were high and some pessimists expected less than others. But Mr. Benson must have administered the greatest possible disappointment to the largest number of people.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Stanfield: Sir, this is a disappointing document. This is an arrogant, complacent document. But it is one that once again shows the Canadian people the true face of the government. I am only sorry that the Canadian people have to pay so high a price to have a glimpse of the reality that is behind the fine words which we have been served so long.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, this is the budget that was not going to be brought down, in order to deal with the unemployment situation which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) says does not exist, and to improve the economy that the government says is progressing satisfactorily. Certainly, that is the conclusion anyone would come to who reads the speech of the Minister of Finance when presenting this budget last Thursday. That speech, Mr. Speaker, would lead one to believe that the Minister of Finance is living in a world of make believe. As reported at page 1738 of Hansard he says:

> —unemployment on a seasonally adjusted basis appears to be falling.

Surely, the minister has to be kidding. It is true he can hang that statement on a technicality because the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate from September to October dropped from 6.9 per cent to 6.6 per cent. However, he fails to point out that at the end of October there were 419,000 unemployed, that this figure is 21,000 higher than the previous month, and 105,000 higher than the same month of the previous year.

On the same page the minister is reported as saying:

> The national accounts for the third quarter also reveal that real output in the economy is rising.

Later, on the same page, he is reported as saying:

> —this latest information confirms that the economy is now advancing again—

But in the same speech, Mr. Speaker, the minister admits that budgetary revenues are expected to decline by $100 million below what had been forecast, which is surely an unfailing sign of a slackening in the economy. The fact is that the national economy is stagnant. There has been hardly any real growth since last spring. After allowing for taxes and rising prices, the average real personal income of Canadians actually dropped in the first half of this year.

It should be pointed out that the minister's optimism is in glaring contrast to statements made by Mr. Arthur Smith, Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, in a speech which he made in Montreal on December 2. On that occasion the Chairman of the Economic Council said:

> Thus a significant portion of our national production resources are now running to waste—in total, perhaps at an annual rate of about $4 billion. In other words, on the average, in each week in the latter part of 1970, perhaps about $75 million to $80 million of output is not being produced that could potentially be produced, and an equivalent amount of total income that could potentially be earned is not being generated.

In the same speech, the Chairman of the Economic Council went on to point out that it would require an increase in real output of about 10 per cent to take the economy back to about 4 per cent unemployment by early 1972. To achieve our potential output by 1973 would require a 7.5 per cent growth rate in each of the next two years. I point out that this is a totally different prognosis of our economy from that which has been given to the House by the Minister of Finance. We have already had a bill to gag the Auditor General. Perhaps we shall now be confronted with legislation to silence the Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, whose economic forecasts have been conspicuously accurate and whose warnings the government has consistently ignored.

In his speech the minister said, and I quote:

> We are in fact having a considerable boom in housing in Canada—

This is mainly due to massive pump priming by the government. But the 270,000 housing starts to which the minister referred should be set in their proper perspective. At the beginning of the year the government set as an objective the construction of 200,000 houses. This was later revised downward to 180,000 houses. The last reports indicate that this goal will not be reached, and that the figure is more likely to be in the neighbourhood of 165,000 homes completed in 1970.

The minister contends that rising prices have been curbed, but this has been largely due to the drop in food prices with disastrous results for the farming population. The slowdown in price increases has been bought at the price of an economic slowdown and an unemployment rate that is the highest in the western world. The truth is that the Prices and Incomes Commission has abandoned its guidelines as a colossal failure because the government lacked the courage to impose selective mandatory controls in the sensitive areas of the economy. The government has consistently followed what I would call a stop-go policy. Instead of pursuing a policy that has clear cut goals and objectives which the Canadian people could understand and foster, the government's economic policy has been one of fits and starts.

In 1967 a former minister of finance, now the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), said the economy was like a car that had been going too fast, and that we must now take our foot off the gas and put it on the brake. Six months later he took his foot off the brake and put it back on the gas, and a few months later he had it back on the brake again. In 1968 the government decided to put its foot on the brake with a vengeance and introduced monetary and fiscal restraints. It was warned by the Economic Council of Canada, by some of the best economists in the country, by newspaper editors and by members of the opposition, that these restraints would inevitably lead to an economic recession. As late as a few weeks ago when the president of the Canadian Labour Congress, Mr. Donald MacDonald, warned that unemployment could reach 9 per cent this winter, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) not only questioned the accuracy of these figures but questioned Mr. MacDonald's veracity. For the past year danger signals have been flashing, but the government has consistently refused to see them. Rumour has it that the Prime Minister is annoyed with some of the economists in the Department of Finance for not warning the government of the impending unemployment crisis. Yet the government has no one to blame but itself. It has consistently refused to listen. Consequently, this country faces a very grim winter indeed.

• (4:10 p.m.)

The government was asked questions in the House as to whether any new measures would be introduced to deal with the unemployment situation. The answer was no. They were asked whether unemployment insurance benefits would be increased. The answer was no. They were asked if the government would implement a winter works program. Again, the answer was no. Having said no to all these proposals, the Minister of Finance is belatedly trying to put them into effect by bringing down this budget.

However, the budget, I submit, is too little and too late. Because of the time lag, through which it takes between four and six months for policies to become effective in providing jobs, the action taken by the government now will do little to provide employment this winter. It is to be hoped that it will provide some benefit in 1971.

This stop-go policy has caused irreparable damage to our economy. We have lost production in the last two years that can never be recovered. The government have been jumping from the brake to the accelerator, going when they should be stopping and stopping when they should be going.

An hon. Member: And going into reverse.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Now they have put their feet on the brake and the accelerator at one and the same time, with the result that the car has stalled.

An hon. Member: It stalled because they went into reverse.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The Minister of Finance will be known as the "great miscalculator". He has been wrong in almost every prediction that he has made.

An hon. Member: Take away his driver's licence.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): He has landed this country in an economic mess. If he had lived a few hundred years ago under an absolute monarchy—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Perhaps he did.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): —he would have been demoted from keeper of the King's purse to keeper of the royal chamber pot.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: Everything in this country has gone to pot.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): This budget should have been aimed at getting the country going again. In order to do this, the government would need two basic approaches: first, an expansionist program to put the unemployed to work; second, a redistribution of purchasing power to stimulate the economy by creating effective demand. It is for this reason that the members of the New Democratic Party have been advocating repeatedly that the government should use large expenditures for the purpose of stimulating housing, the construction of schools and hospitals and other items of high social priority. We have urged that financial help be granted to the unemployed, to the old age pensioners, to those on veterans pensions and to the recipients of war veterans' allowances. We have pressed for a reduction of tax payments for the low and middle income groups. This would have had the effect of redistributing income.

What have been the government's solutions with respect to these proposals? First, let us see what they have done about expanding the economy to put the unemployed to work. Belatedly, now, they are going to spend some money on public works. Twenty million dollars has been allocated for roads to the international airport at Montreal, and $23 million for the rest of Canada.

An hon. Member: Big deal.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Yes, big deal. This is a pathetic gesture, like throwing a sardine to a hungry whale. They are proposing to spend $40 million for housing. This will help, but it falls far short of what is required. No action is being taken to reduce the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials at a time when the lumber industry, which depends for 80 per cent of its business on the export trade, in facing a 6 per cent increase in costs as the result of the rise of the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar.

The government has proposed setting up a $150 million capital loan fund, from which the provincial governments can draw for public works. Mr. Speaker, the premier of Quebec first made these proposals last June in Winnipeg, at the federal-provincial conference. He called for a fund to be utilized for both grants and loans. The grants were to increase for the provinces with the highest unemployment and the loans would be a smaller part of the contribution which they would receive. What the provinces are to receive are not grants at all, but loans entirely, loans to be lent at very high rates of interest. No wonder Premier Bourassa is reported in the press as having said that, "The budget is insufficient to deal with Quebec's problems."

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Let us see what this fund is to do in putting the unemployed to work. It is to be spread over 16 months. Quebec is to get $68 million, and $28 million of that amount this winter. British Columbia will get $35 million, and of that amount $13 million this winter. Ontario will get $17 million, and $6 million this winter. Manitoba will get $8 million and $3 million this winter. Saskatchewan and Newfoundland will each get $5 million, and of that they will get $2 million this winter. Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are to get $4 million, and of that $1.5 million this winter. Prince Edward Island will get $1 million. Mr. Speaker, does anyone really think that these amounts of money will enable provinces to cope adequately with the problem of unemployment?

Mr. Stanfield: The Minister of Finance seems to think so.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): By refusing to give this money in the form of grants as opposed to loans, the federal government has merely passed the buck to the provinces, which must now increase their debts and debt charges in order to receive amounts of money that will do little to help them solve the problems of the unemployed.

Let us see what the government is doing about the matter of redistributing purchasing power. We all expected, of course, that the 3 per cent surcharge on personal income and corporate tax would be dropped, because it was due to expire at the end of this month. The government has announced that the tax is to be retained. Mr. Speaker, this budget was not necessary. The public works items in it could have been included in the supplementary estimates, and members of the government could have made statements on motions. Why was this budget brought down? This budget is a farcical charade designed to conceal the reimposition of the 3 per cent surcharge which the minister said only six weeks ago would not be reimposed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): This whole structure has been built up as a budget to conceal the fact that the government was going to continue taking from the pockets of the taxpayers of Canada $245 million a year. That money ought to have been allowed to remain in their pockets so that they could buy goods to stimulate the economy and create effective demand in this country.

Mr. Gilbert: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: A nice Christmas present the taxpayers have been given.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): By creating effective demand, the government could stimulate the economy more effectively than by making available some of the write-offs and capital cost allowances which it proposes to hand out. These, the minister tells us, are going to cost the taxpayers of this country some $250 million. There has been no reduction of taxes in the lower and middle income groups. The least that could have been done was to have exempted from taxation single persons earning $2,000 a year or less and married couples earning $4,000 a year or less. The government has not done that. This is why we have moved an amendment criticizing the government for failing to do this. Even those in receipt of the guaranteed supplement will have to pay income tax on a pension which leaves them far below the poverty line.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Instead of raising pensions for those in receipt of the basic old age pension, as of January 1 their pensions will be reduced by $1.17 a month. Under the present legislation those receiving the basic pension would be entitled to a cost of living bonus which would have increased their pension to $81.17 a month. The government is to freeze their pension at $80. What does this mean? Assuming that the cost of living increases by at least 2 per cent, and it will probably increase more than that, at the end of five years they will be receiving $9 a month less in actual purchasing power than they would have received if the legislation now on the statute books had been left alone.

It seems unbelievable that the government would freeze the basic old age pension and refuse to grant a cost of living bonus to these people. No other group coming under federal jurisdiction is denied a cost of living bonus. Retired civil servants, military personnel, Members of Parliament, Senators and those receiving the Canada Pension Plan all have a built-in cost of living bonus in their retirement plan. Only the old people are discriminated against.

What is the government saving? It is saving $15 million a year. Contrast this with capital cost allowances to industry which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) estimates will cost the treasury $250 million. The government cannot find $15 million a year to give a cost of living bonus to the old people, but it can find $250 million to hand out to industry through write-offs. This is in keeping with the Liberal philosophy, "take care of the corporate structure and the corporate structure will take care of you."

Increased pensions for veterans and recipients of the guaranteed supplement will not come into effect until April 1, 1971. This will do nothing to help these people eke out an existence during the coming winter months. It will do nothing to help stimulate the economy at a time when it is in the doldrums. One cannot escape the conclusion that the government is callously unconcerned about what happens to the old people, the veterans and the unemployed during this winter. Their plans are aimed at an economic upswing during the latter part of 1971 in the fond hope that the economy will be rolling again by 1972. Such cynicism is unhumane and inexcusable. I am convinced that the Canadian people are not likely to forget this attitude.

[Translation]

Mr. Romuald Rodrigue (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, the supplementary budget tabled last week by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) brings nothing new but that it indicates the government has abandoned its policy of balancing the budget.

Over the last few years, both the government and the Minister of Finance have spoken very highly of the benefits to be derived from a balanced budget.

With a strong government, they said, there will be no more adverse budgets. The government was to take every step to insure maximum administrative efficiency.

All the afore-mentioned, Mr. Speaker, was to bring us a just society and a balanced budget. Those promises were made throughout the country and widely publicized, and Canada was to enjoy after that all the pleasures of the Garden of Eden.

That period was short, barely long enough to launch the publicity and inform the population. We just got to see the outside of that famous paradise, that is to say the fence in front of which some flowers had been planted for show.

Yet the Minister of Finance was so optimistic in his budget speeches of the last two years. Nevertheless last Thursday, as he announced a deficit, the Minister of Finance kept his smile and his confidence. Confidence in what? I wonder.

The minister talked of strategy, of economic objectives, of improving the income of Canadians, of guiding the economy toward high and sustained expansion, of eliminating regional economic disparities, of a more equitable distribution of goods and services and of several other matters. How conceited! There is no doubt that those objectives offer interesting features and are sought by all Canadians.

• (4.30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, I am positive that all members, whatever their political affiliations, are wishing for the same thing as the hon. minister and that they approve of the objectives. We hope these expectations will materialize and progress beyond the stage of wishful speeches. Otherwise, we will be bound to believe that the minister has joined the ranks of meteorologists who are always so sure of their long-term forecasts which in any case prove to be partly right in the long run.

So, this is a return to the adverse budget policy. When the budget was introduced last March, a surplus was forecast but now it so happens that the Minister of Finance is speaking of a $570 million deficit for the current year. Even if the minister while forecasting a deficit has no new taxes to announce except for the extension of the 3 per cent surtax, or social development tax, until December 31, 1971, an adverse budget points to new taxes later on. This is not for the coming months, of course, but new taxes will have to be levied some day, because deficits cannot be covered by borrowing only. So, there will be an increase of the national tax and of course, interest also will have to be paid on these borrowings, because as far as I know, the minister has yet to make the decision of asking the Bank of Canada to finance public projects on an administration cost basis.

For the time being, the government deals with liquidity problems, without caring too much for the future. A few weeks ago, it floated a $550 million bond issue, at rates of 5¼, 6 and 7 per cent depending on the term of the loan. It was said on the prospectus of this issue that the capital from the bonds would be used for the redemption of $375 million worth of maturing on Canadian government bonds on December 15, 1970 and for general expenditure purposes of the Government of Canada, including advances to the Canadian National Railway for the reimbursement of $40 million in bonds maturing on January 16, 1971, at a rate of 2⅞ per cent.

The amounts borrowed to redeem bonds at maturity are ever increasing, in fact, they are even greater than the amounts to be redeemed, as well as the rates of interest. That is what budget deficits lead us to: ever increasing debts and rates of interest, to the extent where servicing the debt—14.1 per cent of the budget—ranks third immediately following health, which represents 23.7 per cent, and regional economic expansion, 13.7 per cent. It will not be long before servicing the debt ranks second among budget expenditures.

The 10 per cent increase in unemployment insurance announced by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey), which is provided for in the budget, will certainly be welcomed by the recipients. That step will enable them to meet part of their needs. By taking that step, the government recognizes the seriousness of the situation. They also recognize the fact that the programs announced in the budget will have no beneficial effect on the economy before several months.

Let us not delude ourselves about the results of the programs that have been announced: several months will go by before all the preliminary steps have been taken, so that the amounts given for this year will in effect be carried over to 1971.

While admitting that higher unemployment insurance benefits will put additional purchasing power into the hands of jobless consumers, we should not forget those people who are not entitled to these benefits, those who are no longer eligible or will soon cease and those who have never been eligible for one reason or another. Those people will not benefit from the 10 per cent increase and we know that there are many of them.

The Minister of Labour stated in his press release of December 3, and I quote:

> The 10 per cent increase in benefit rates will put a total amount of $54 million into the hands of the unemployed. This increase in their purchasing power will help stimulate the economy.

We agree with this statement. For years we have been repeatedly asking that the consumer's purchasing power be increased so that no action from the government will be necessary as regards production or investment.

It is astonishing that before suggesting a 10 per cent increase in the unemployment insurance benefits, the minister did not ask himself certain questions. In fact he did not say: Those benefits cannot be increased because they will create inflation. He did not hesitate. He did not say I am sorry, we cannot do it, there are not enough products, dairy products are scarce, grain is scarce, Canada is short of clothing. I am sure he did not even think of that. Indeed, he was quite pleased to make this announcement because he knew that it would be well received.

When the Minister of Finance said, in beginning his speech, that employment in Canada is rising, I think he was contradicting himself. If employment is rising, why has it been decided to raise unemployment insurance benefits and to announce the introduction of new programs? It is high time the real problem should be recognized.

More precisely, the Minister of Finance declared, some time ago in Alberta, that unemployment has become the government's No. 1 enemy. In saying so, the minister confessed to his own failure.

During the year 1970, large corporations have laid off at least 10,000 workers in the province of Quebec only. In my view, these figures are conservative since lay-offs in large corporations outside Quebec have not been taken into account. Among the larger corporations, Canadair has laid off nearly 3,150 workers during the year 1970 and has announced another 350 lay-offs before the end of the year.

Canadian Marconi has laid off 800 workers since the beginning of the year.

In the Quebec City area, Industries Valcartier, a general Investment Corporation subsidiary, will lay off 500 persons before the end of the year.

On the other hand, the United Aircraft Corporation has reduced its staff from 5,400 employees to 4,850 since the beginning of the year.

In the last six months, some six companies in Drummondville have closed their doors or have laid off nearly 800 workers.

Recently, the Wabasso Corporation has been laying off employees in Grand'Mère and Trois-Rivières.

This is the situation in the field of employment. All the investment programs which have been announced will be beneficial in the long term. But this does not solve our present short-term problems.

Before investing or capitalizing in excess, we must also think of consuming.

Adoption of the sub-amendment now being considered which aims at raising personal tax exemptions to $2,000 for single persons and $4,000 for married persons would be a positive action allowing people with insufficient income to increase their purchasing power, consume more and leave in the economy an important sum of money. I will therefore support this sub-amendment without qualification.

Before concluding my remarks, I would like to say a few words on the extension of the General Adjustment Assistance Program to the footwear industry. That program will not solve all our problems. I agree with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), who believes that certain industries must modernize and recycle their production. That is true, but the great problem now is not so much that of modernization, because I know certain industries which have spent considerable sums of money in recent years to modernize their plants and which are in a position to produce a very large quantity of shoes everyday. Yet, despite all that modernization, those industries are facing problems because for a few years now we have been importing very large quantities of shoes from countries where salaries are low and where they still use manufacturing processes given up here many years ago. I have even learned that in some countries, certain phases of the manufacturing of shoes were given to women who did part of their work at home during their spare time.

Thus by proceeding in that manner, it is obvious that goods can be marketed at a lower price and I do not believe that, even if the government is ready to pursue notable endeavours in the way of modernization, it will be in a position to definitely solve the problem confronting the shoe industry, especially if it merely grants subsidies to the manufacturers or guarantees their borrowings. In fact, from 1956 to 1969, footwear imports increased by 568 per cent, reaching in 1968 the record volume of 46 million pairs of shoes.

Now, I believe that the problem is acute, especially considering that skilled shoe industries are located in areas where unemployment is quite high and where wages fall below the Canadian average. Therefore, measures other than the assistance made available for modernizing machinery should be introduced because the existing uneasiness in the footwear industry has significantly contributed to boost unemployment in several areas this year. I consider that it is high time to act before it is too late.

There are many other points that I should like to touch upon and that I feel very important, including construction. As many others, I had hoped that the Minister of Finance would announce at least some reduction in the sales tax on building materials. This would have been a tremendous encouragement to construction in some areas of the province of Quebec as well as in the whole country.

The government did promise to provide an additional $40 million in the field of construction. This amount will be used to build some 4,000 housing units. Frankly, considering the housing needs in Canada, it can be seen that those $40 million cannot solve the problem.

Once more I express the wish that the Minister of Finance seriously consider the possibility of abolishing the sales tax on building materials. I hope he will bring forward in a few months, before the next budget, bills to assist those who need a home. Reducing or abolishing that tax would be a great step toward the solution of Canada's housing problem.

• (4:40 p.m.)

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Make it good!

Mr. Mackasey: I thank the hon. member for the advice. I am debating whether to follow my notes or to answer the heckling. Perhaps I should start again and try to follow the text.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Enjoy yourself!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It would be more interesting if you would just talk to us.

Mr. Mackasey: If I were to talk about the socialists I would have to comment on their contributions to this debate to date, which amount to absolutely nil. That is predictable. It was the same contribution we have heard from them during every budget speech for the last 25 years—no taxes, more welfare, put the corporations out of business, and somehow everything will work out all right. This has been their philosophy in Saskatchewan for so many years, and we all know what happened to the hon. member; he has been travelling ever since.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): They are not doing very well now!

Mr. Mackasey: I know you are not, but hope springs eternal. Perhaps the hon. member, having lost the leadership of his party, should go back to his riding cap in hand and say to his constituents: "If you will take me back I shall be able to represent you a little longer".

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): That does not happen to be true, but you could go out there and try.

Mr. Mackasey: I understand my Parliamentary Secretary did a good job, but perhaps the hon. gentleman will do better next time. I would rather talk about unemployment insurance and the contributions that will flow from the increased benefits that come into effect on January 1, namely the 10 per cent increase in benefits for people on unemployment insurance.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) was kind enough yesterday to ask some basic questions about why the Minister of Labour had recommended that the government follow the procedure of increasing the size of the benefits rather than extending the period of benefits for the winter months. I must admit that the alternative suggested in the question of the hon. gentleman had been thoroughly discussed within the department but rejected in favour of increasing benefits, and for fairly logical reasons that I should like to explain.

One of the reasons is this. If not for logical reasons certainly for historical reasons, and because of climatic conditions, we have paid in the winter months what is known as seasonal benefits. Seasonal benefits, as most members of the House already know, provide a method for extending unemployment insurance benefits to those unemployed who, under normal circumstances, would not be eligible for benefits for a variety of reasons—for example, perhaps not enough stamps in their book, indicating insufficient attachment to the work force before becoming unemployed.

Because we already have in the existing plan this feature that permits the Unemployment Insurance Commission the maximum degree of latitude with regard to extending existing benefits to those people who normally would not be drawing any benefits, it was felt that it might be in the best interests of the economy, and of the people drawing unemployment insurance in particular, that these benefits be increased by 10 per cent.

I think it is significant, too, that the $54 million will not be taken out of the Unemployment Insurance Fund but will be taken from general revenue. This simplifies the introduction of this change and prevents the necessity for legislation. In addition, it removes the temptation on anyone's part to suggest that the 10 per cent increase, or the $54 million, should at the same time be accompanied by an increase in contributions.

I think this particular feature of the budget that was announced by the minister the other everning should meet with general approval from the House. Let me make it quite clear that it helps only certain of the unemployed, those who are temporarily without earnings, rather than the chronic unemployed, the underemployed, or people who unfortunately have to live off assistance and welfare. Nevertheless this immediate injection into the economy of $54 million should in some way help to provide some of the spending power that I think we need if we are going to stimulate the economy in the immediate future to any great degree.

• (4:50 p.m.)

I think the Minister of Finance has already pointed out in greater detail than I could, and I do not intend to repeat, the other features that were announced during the week prior to the budget. I have in mind the increase in war veterans' allowance pensions, and in basic pensions, GIS, etc, all plans which eventually will put into the hands of people many at the bottom level of the income scale in Canada the type of income they need and deserve.

I might sound rather like a heretic if I were to suggest that a country as rich as Canada should never again be faced with this degree of unemployment. People today are interested in the quality of life rather than quantity of life. A better educated work force and, paradoxically, a better educated non-working force will no longer tolerate the booms and busts of our economy. They have been synonymous with most of the economies of what is loosely known as the western world. The targets of this and all future governments should at all times be full employment. I think I am really echoing the sentiments of the cabinet in general, and certainly those of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in saying that, everything being equal, this government is dedicated to the concept of full employment.

Full employment is a matter of definition, of course. The Economic Council defines it as 3 per cent unemployment. Others define it as 3.5 per cent, and the actual records I have from 1962 probably indicate that the rate of unemployment in the last decade has been between 4 per cent and 5 per cent. I might indicate as well, in case the opposition feels a little smug or complacent about their own record, that between the years 1958 and 1962 the rate of unemployment in this country surpassed 7 per cent. I am not trying to be partisan by this remark but there is a parallel between the problems which confronted Canada between 1958 and 1962 and the problems that face the country at the present moment.

[Mr. Mackasey.]

Behind unemployment, or contributing to it, has been the repetition or recurrence of inflation. Among our economists, at least those of whom favour, Galbraith, Friedman, Keynes, there is a difference of opinion as to how to control inflation. Traditionally, the manner in which it has been controlled in most countries associated with the International Monetary Fund and similar organizations has been by fiscal and monetary policies.

The Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson warned a year or so ago that fiscal and monetary policy control inevitably and unfortunately led to unemployment. It seems to me, as a person who does not claim to be an economist, that the time has come when economists both in the government and outside find a better way of controlling inflation and replace measures that unintentionally put Canadians out of work. I think speakers on both sides of the House have indicated the terrible toll this takes and the lack of productivity it generates. There is a greater need at this time for a better way when the work force of this country, both employed and unemployed, is demanding a better quality of life. People today no longer will tolerate slums or accept unemployment. They will not tolerate pollution and exploitation.

Perhaps one of the phenomena of the present decade, and certainly of the future, is that the people have the media to communicate their discontent. Perhaps what has been overlooked by the House is that as far back as the month of March the Minister of Finance predicted the problems with which we are now faced. In the month of March the government released considerable sums of money into the economy. The chartered banks of the country today have more than ample money available for lending, and interest rates have decreased substantially. This was not the result of action taken last week but the result of action taken last March. This indicates that the Minister of Finance was doing the proper things as far back as March to stimulate the economy, to control unemployment and to reduce the always terrible spectre of inflation which, in the final analysis, is as equally demoralizing as a high rate of unemployment.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and the leader of the NDP as well, as other hon. members in the opposition, are and will logically be talking about the problem of unemployment. They talk about people on fixed incomes and our senior citizens. I am as aware of these people as they are. I am not unaware of what inflation does to these people on fixed incomes. All of us realize there is a limit to what a country of this size with 20 million people can do in the form of desirable social measures. This is a country of many regions with many regional disparities. It does not have the productive capacity of the United States. Certainly, anything is economically possible in a time of full employment. I think the message we should be getting is that we cannot expect both a high rate of unemployment and the high measure of social assistance this country desires and expects. Certainly, none of us appreciates or feels comfortable with certain fiscal and monetary policies that control inflation but result in higher unemployment.

There is no point in any member of the opposition or anyone else presuming that inflation was not one of the great problems this country has been faced with in the last year or so. It is all too easy to forget that it still lurks around the corner. Learned economists still point out that unless we are very careful, the reinjection of money to prime the pump, as somebody has said, such as money needed to increase housing starts for instance, is a factor that contributes to inflation. I might also mention the $54 million which will be put into the economy this winter and the $150 million the provinces will be using for winter works, as well as the reduction in interest rates designed to stimulate operations and expand the economy, all are potential factors in recreating inflation.

• (5:00 p.m.)

One thing intrigued me more than anything else in these contributions to which I have listened today. I refer to the contribution of the leader of the New Democratic Party who on many occasions has emphasized the need for selective controls in the future. This could be the answer. I have heard him use this expression on half a dozen occasions in this House. To this extent, we know that he is sincere in speaking of selective controls. I have heard him on radio and television speak of the use of selective controls. I have never heard him tell us precisely in what areas he would use his selective controls. I do not know whether he would advocate controls in respect of abnormally high wages in the construction area. I do not know whether this is one area he would consider. In all probability, he would place selective controls on the chartered banks of the country. In line with the philosophy or what used to be the philosophy of that party—I am not sure what it is these days but presumably it is the philosophy before the waffle group takes over—I presume the selective controls in this country would be in general against big business just as if big business has no place in the economy.

Big business does generate jobs and the opposition must realize that if we are to have the social policies this country needs, and if we are to create the jobs we need for perhaps the fastest growing force in the world, we will have to encourage Canadian investors, multinational and international corporations to invest in this country, preferably along guidelines that will protect the Canadian economy and prevent further erosion of Canadianism. Nevertheless, I think the suggestion of the hon. gentleman who leads the New Democratic Party that we should be prepared to introduce selective controls might very well be the answer to the next round of inflation. The point I am getting at is that this country can no longer afford the type of unemployment that faces us this winter.

If an unemployment figure of 3 per cent historically has been equated with full employment or what is commonly called the trade-off point or the emergence of inflation, then from that point on, if we are to have full employment, it is obvious that we will have to find something other than simply fiscal and monetary policies with which to conquer inflation. It may be that selective controls would be a solution. Certainly, this would be preferable to massive unemployment. We may have to introduce controls. They may be selective controls, as Galbraith suggests, over key industries and over key trade unions or over the unions which operate in the key industries such as the steel industry, the automotive industry, the chemical industry and others. He suggests these unions should be controlled because their agreements affect the service industries and the effect on these industries breeds dissension among the low-income workers, so the spiral starts all over again. I do not know whether these are the selective controls to which the hon. member alluded, but they are the controls referred to by Galbraith.

The other method by which to control inflation is voluntary restraint. I think we have gone through a period which indicates that this approach leaves a lot to be desired because there were not too many volunteers. There were very few volunteers in the professional ranks. There were not too many landlords who were prepared to roll back rents. There were not many professional associations, such as architects and engineers, that were willing to roll back their fees. There were not too many people in the medical profession who thought they should reduce their fees. So obviously the villain of the piece was identified as organized labour. The method of voluntary restraint leaves much to be desired because it requires not only the full co-operation of some of the groups I have mentioned, but also requires the full and absolute co-operation of the provinces since we live in a federal state. It is unfair to select labour as the villain of the piece in respect of the workability of voluntary restraint. It is also unfair to presume that the Prices and Incomes Commission did not have any effect on prices.

If the Prices and Incomes Commission had no effect on prices, then big businesses would be tripping over themselves to re-endorse the concept because so long as they endorsed the concept and labour did not it was very easy for them to pinpoint labour in respect of its inability or unwillingness to co-operate. The fact that big business has not re-endorsed the Prices and Incomes Commission is an indication that this commission did have an effect, if only a psychological effect, on prices. With the new policy it will be interesting to see whether or not prices will remain within bounds over the next year or year and a half.

I believe the proposed changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act which will come into effect in July represent legislation which is long overdue. I believe this is the feeling of the committee which is composed of members of all parties in the House. Certainly the co-operation has been extraordinary. The points of difference have been very few. I believe this is a realistic approach to unemployment, or to the problems in respect of a particular group of unemployed, those who are temporarily unemployed or temporarily without earnings.

This legislation is not intended to be, nor will it ever need to be, a substitute for a guaranteed annual income. Nor, indeed, will it be the instrument by which to look at the problems with regard to the permanently disabled, the permanently unemployed or people without work for long periods of time. But at least the benefits under this new plan which will be related to income will permit the person temporarily out of work to seek work without the problems which plague people who draw the rather low benefits which the unemployment insurance plan now provides. At the present time there are too many Canadians who happen to live off two cheques, one from the Unemployment Insurance office and another from the Canada Assistance Plan or local welfare. The new plan, if adopted and if the standing committee report does not basically change it, will do a good deal to remedy this. There is one feature in it which ought to appeal to members of the House. This is the fact that the government will absorb the cost of the plan once it reaches 4 per cent seasonally adjusted.

I do not believe members quite appreciate precisely what this means. When, for reasons best known to the economists or to the government, the unemployment figure may hit anywhere up to 7 per cent, the cost to the government would be $433 million. Certainly, this is a sum which may make people wish to review a little more closely what we call the trade-off factor. I think this regulatory feature is one of the better features of the new plan.

• (5:10 p.m.)

In conclusion let me say that I think the time is approaching when the problem of inflation should be tackled on a tripartite basis. I think that some medium of communication between labour, management and government is imperative in the future. There have been such talks of course at private levels. I have participated in some of it, and some of the viewpoints that have been advanced by economists attached to the labour movement have been very enlightening, very fruitful and very progressive. But I do not think that organized labour can stand back and divorce themselves from the problems of this country any more than big business can expect to operate in isolation without any humanitarian approach to the problems. I am not particularly pleased when multinational corporations close up plants in Cornwall or London, Ontario, with a minimum of advance notice and with little or no concern for the plight of the people whom they put out of work.

These are the type of responsibilities that private enterprise must assume in the future because there is more on trial than just the government or the opposition. In effect, the whole system is on trial, and people want more out of the private enterprise system than just a job and 4 per cent or 5 per cent rate of unemployment. They want full employment; they want social measures; they want an end to slums and pollution and all the other social evils. The message that all of us should get is that unless we are capable of taking up this kind of challenge we are going to be hardpressed to maintain this kind of private enterprise system which I happen to think is the best for our economy, despite what the socialists may think. We need and will see more and more government intervention and government participation in the decisions over the next decade. We can no longer afford inflation nor can we any longer afford abnormally high rates of unempoyment.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): I really had not expected to be called upon to speak in the House so soon, but it appears my colleagues in the official opposition have decided that, since I am here, they might as well put me to work.

Mr. Mahoney: Good idea.

Mr. Murta: It would be an understatement to say that I am happy to be sitting in the House of Commons. What would perhaps be closer to the truth would be to say that I am overwhelmed. It is surely one of the greatest honours that can be accorded to any Canadian to be selected to representent a riding in this great country. Having said that, I hope hon. members will indulge me when I say that it is a particular honour to be chosen to represent the Lisgar riding in the province of Manitoba.

Hon. members will know that I came to the House of Commons as a result of a by-election following the untimely death of the previous member for Lisgar, George Muir. In his years in the House, George Muir earned the respect and regard of the people in his riding as well as of those who knew him in his capacity as a sitting member. I hope and trust that, as I mature in this job, those who selected me as his replacement will feel that they have made the right choice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murta: This might be a good time to enlighten my colleagues as to the advantages of living in the Lisgar riding, and to invite them to take the first possible opportunity to avail themselves of our hospitality. Easterners are inclined to think of Vancouver, Edmonton or Calgary when mention is made of the west, but the fact is that the great Canadian west begins in Lisgar.

Lisgar riding stretches for about 130 miles from east to west, bounded on the south by the United States border and ending in the picturesque farmlands of a town called Killarney. Its eastern boundary follows the twists and turns of the Red River as it flows north from the United States border, and part of the northern boundary is the historic Assiniboine River. The Pembina River winds through Lisgar from west to east and flows into the Red River.

A large proportion of Lisgar riding comprises fertile land, and this, coupled with the fact that there are no large cities in the riding and very little industry, has resulted in an agriculture based economy in the riding. This can be both good and bad. In good times, when crop and livestock prices are high and there are good markets, life in Lisgar can be filled with all of the good things for which men and women strive. Conversely, when the agricultural economy in the country is in decline, the people of Lisgar would feel the effect a bit more than areas which enjoy an input from industries or resources. It could be said that in Lisgar we live with one anxious finger on the pulse of the agricultural economy.

People are the most important element in any riding, and I would like to speak for a moment, with justifiable pride, about the people in Lisgar. We have a situation that is fairly representative of agricultural communities in the country in that about 30 per cent of our people are 45 years of age or older. This is largely because we cannot provide adequately for the young people, talented and eager young people who want more than is available to them in a situation where the family farm is on the decline and there is no industry to absorb them. This is understandable, but it saddens me none the less, to see young people leave the rural life, not because it does not appeal to them but because there is no alternative.

About 40 per cent of the people in my riding are of British origin. Among them are some of the first families to settle in the area. About 11 per cent are of French Canadian origin, and it is the nature of the French Canadian to preserve his language and his culture wherever he settles. This has greatly enriched the culture of Lisgar, and we can consider that we benefit from the fact that we have the best of the two founding cultures of this great nation. We are also extremely proud of the people of Dutch ancestry who make up about 23 per cent of our number, and the 11 per cent of our riding who are of German origin. There are others, such as Poles, Ukrainians and Italians, to mention a few of the ethnic groups that grace our riding. We are indeed fortunate, and perhaps a little proud.

It is to the credit of the farmers of Lisgar riding that they saw the wisdom of diversification in agriculture long before the advent of the Lift program. Our people are not easily discouraged, and when it became apparent that farmers would have to adapt to new conditions and appeal to new markets if they were to survive, they began to diversify. They diversified because they wanted to survive. The people of Lisgar, for the most part, enjoy their way of life. The farm and the rural community are what they know best and what they like best, and they have decided that they will not easily be discouraged from holding on to the way of life that appeals to them.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I should mention in connection with that, Mr. Speaker, that about 80 per cent of the farm families in Lisgar live on the farm the year round. It is not just a business with them; it is their way of life. Many of the people I am talking about weathered the great depression. They came out of it poorer, but proud and more determined. Such people scoff at suggestions that they leave the farms for the cities, and we can ill afford to displace them, whatever the reason.

Much as I believe that the farm and the rural community are worth saving, and much as I believe that the headlong rush to the cities should be decelerated, I am not suggesting that we attempt to stop the clock. Progress is just as inevitable as death and taxes, and we in Lisgar want as much as anyone else to be a part of the great era of science and technology that lies before us. And we in Lisgar realize full well that we can do much to preserve our present environment by diversifying still further, and setting out to attract industry to bolster our local economy. At the same time that we are ensuring the continuance of those things that we want to keep, we might also encourage our young people to stay in our riding. The time has come when we need them. However, we must ensure that we not only keep them but that in future, when they look back, they will be glad they stayed.

To attract industry, a riding must have a labour force and an abundant supply of good water. We have the labour force and the water in Lisgar, but the water flows through our riding into the Red River and is lost. It is possible that at some future time my colleagues in this House will join with me in exploring ways that this water might be put to use in Lisgar. My predecessor was engaged in studies with regard to a series of dams on the Pembina River which would make supplies of water available to our agricultural region, and also provide the water reserves necessary to the development of industry. If a series of dams such as this could be built I have no doubt that industry and processing plants, as well as a new intense form of agriculture would emerge in Southern Manitoba.

Before I leave this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to dwell for just a moment on the aspect of agricultural people leaving the farm to find a new life in the city. By this I do not mean the young people who are just starting out in life. I am thinking about the people whose lives have been moulded, people who have spent a considerable part of their working lives in the agricultural economy, and who cannot easily adjust to an alien way of life. For the most part, these people would not have an opportunity to learn a new trade or profession, and would therefore be unable to compete in the job markets.

If it is necessary that these people should be relocated, and I concede that this will be necessary in many cases, then their prospects would be bleak indeed if we did not plan such moves very carefully in advance. I know many such people, and so I have a particular interest in what happens to them. They are for the most part proud individuals who have been used to working hard for what they receive. They would not take lightly to such remedies as welfare, and yet without training they would not have a chance in an alien environment. I mention this, Mr. Speaker, because this is an area in which I will take a special interest when I become fully involved in the affairs of the House. I do not suggest that I am in favour of accelerating the decline of the family farm as a part of the Canadian agricultural industry and as a way of life for those who prefer to live and work in the country. It just so happens that I think if our rural life is to continue it will be because of strong family farm units in rural areas.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murta: I understand fully that an uneconomic farm unit must be phased out of the economy, just the same as an uneconomic business or industry must fall by the way. I am hopeful that some means can be devised whereby as many as possible of our farm units can be preserved where people want to remain on the farm, and where such people can contribute to the success of their farm businesses with the application of sound management principles. Those who are forced to leave the farm should be trained for new jobs, and assisted until they are resettled.

While there are many advantages to living in Lisgar, Mr. Speaker, we are faced at the present time with the same problems that face the rest of the country. For that reason my people are understandably interested in what the federal government is doing and what it is proposing with respect to resolving farm problems. Now that I am in Ottawa, I expect that I will be getting letters and phone calls asking me what I am doing to help solve some of these problems.

Again, like the people in the rest of Canada, the farmers in my area are sorely beset by a shortage of cash to see them through the winter and to assist them in getting in the crops in the spring. Because of the nature of the farm industry in my riding, it appears that the corrective measures instituted thus far will have less effect than in some of the areas further west. However, I will be in a better position now to determine just what is being done and what is being planned.

Cash shortage in my riding is the result not only of slow movements of grain out of storage but is also the result of low market prices for hogs and other livestock. There is also a great deal of concern in my riding over the way the traditional markets for eggs and poultry have virtually dried up as a result of provincial restrictions imposed recently on the movement of eggs and poultry across provincial boundaries. I am hopeful that these problems will be resolved before permanent damage has been done to our traditionally stable markets.

Inasmuch as the entire economy of Lisgar is agriculture oriented, I hope sincerely that we will be able to devise some means of getting our farmers through the winter and spring. It is imperative that we do so if we are to head off economic disaster in rural ridings. I am not being an alarmist, Mr. Speaker; the situation is really that critical.

My colleagues will no doubt be happy to learn that I am about to conclude my remarks. I would guess that they are as happy as I am that I managed to get through my first speech without destroying the parliamentary system of government. I will try to correct that when I engage in serious debate in the future.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Murta: I would like to conclude my remarks by saying to my colleagues on both sides of the House that it has been most gratifying to have been received so warmly on my arrival here. I have been greatly encouraged by the kind of assistance that has been rendered me on every hand. Now that I am formally installed as a member of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, I hope fervently that I will be here long enough and will conduct myself in such a manner that I will be able to feel at some future time that my colleagues on both sides of the House are also my friends. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (5:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, several things have already been said about the budget, but there is still a great deal to say. The main things have yet to be said. No mention at all has been made of logical solutions likely to settle our problems. The problems exist, but no solution is being proposed. Solutions are feared as if they were thunderbolts, but I shall take it upon myself to suggest some.

Every time the budget is brought down, reference is made to taxes and the taxpayers are even more burdened with taxes. Indeed, the administration takes in from 50 to 60 per cent of the income, so that the taxpayer is left with practically nothing.

In order to make money available to taxpayers, new loans must be raised and, consequently, more debts, that many more new burdens and difficulties which lead us to the worst failures on record. The more we move ahead, the more complicated the process becomes; as the rate of unemployment increases, so does dissatisfaction and also the trouble we have in solving our problems.

And all this is due to the fact that we ignore the true solutions to our problems. Once these problems are solved, it would be easier to provide for a sound administration.

Over the weekend, through the newspapers, I read some of the comments of various public and semi-public organizations on some aspects of the budget.

No general reduction in income taxes was announced, but a 10 per cent increase in unemployment insurance benefits was made official.

If we decide to increase unemployment insurance benefits, it is a sign that we are very far from the measures which should be passed to give the population what it is entitled to.

It was decided to continue for another year the surtax of 3 p. 100 on individual and corporate incomes. Well, Mr. Speaker, when one wants to relieve someone who has a very heavy load to carry, one makes his burden lighter rather than heavier. The situation is directly opposite in the present budget.

Nearly $150 million are granted to the provinces for job-creating projects, therefore laying at the door of the provinces the present difficulties because if they borrow $150 million they will have to pay an excessively high rate of interest.

If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) had frozen the interest rate at 1 or 2 per cent, then it could have been said that he was truly willing to help the people instead of being partial to the financial sector. What he is doing now he is doing it for the latter at the people's expense as well as at the expense of the provinces already overtaxed and to whom further loans will only bring further difficulties.

Subsidies of $23 million are granted to the areas that have won the "unemployment Grey Cup" for the fight against unemployment and $20 million for building roads and facilities at the new airport. That makes sense because such things are necessary, but those are not the measures required to solve the problem of unemployment because machines are doing the work nowadays. In fact, only a few hundred workers will be hired for the construction of the international airport.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Chamber of Commerce of Canada, two of the most powerful organizations in the country, give the same interpretation to the budget statements of the Minister of Finance. Both say that the minister has chosen to give a little help instead of a moderate assistance to the economic development. Those are the words of Mr. J. C. Winthrop, vice-chairman of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

The newspaper La Presse of December 5 featured an article by Mr. M. K. Carthy, the Executive Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce, who speaks along the same line. In both cases, they are experienced people whose opinion deserves respect.

As for me, Mr. Speaker, I want to take advantage of the few moments at my disposal to try and determine the constant cause of popular dissatisfaction over the budget that the minister has tabled.

Mr. Speaker, the estimates for our national production for the year 1970-71 are so favourable that they should allow all Canadians to enjoy a decent life. If we admit the importance of this production, on the other hand, we can state positively that it is not in keeping with the purchasing power of most Canadians.

• (5:40 p.m.)

United Nations experts have many times called the Assembly's attention to the vicious circle in which the undernourished people find themselves.

According to them, malnutrition is one of the main causes of poor health in the Western world. And yet, we pay Western farmers to prevent them from growing grain, and that does not bother anybody, except those who are hungry. That makes them think.

The capacity to run into debt is greater than the ability to repay. Where are the reforms that the Minister of Finance or the government introduced to remedy the situation? Nobody notices anything and loses sleep over it. Discussions are held in order to go deeper into debt, while the old debts remain unpaid.

The government refuses to face facts. We are heading for complete failure because of our refusal to recognize that the problem is strictly economic, because we refuse to protect our economy by using our rights and prerogatives.

A time will come when new strategies will be planned because capitalism refuses to realize the meaning of the progressive discontent of frustrated populations. However, it is time to tell those who govern us to wake up, because they are dozing in the face of a dissatisfied society on the road to rebellion. The man who is naturally dedicated to justice revolts in the face of the present glaring injustice of our financial and fiscal systems. If we persist in ignoring the real objectives of community life, the real functions of the nations ministers and representatives, the fundamental structures of society will be undermined at the root and we shall witness the final collapse. The day this will happen may not be far away, and I am not hoping it will come. I am here today because I want reforms and because I see what is forthcoming. If others cannot see it, I do. Such are the conditions in which I speak before you now, in all awareness, anxious to assume my own responsibilities.

I regret that such a large number of Liberal and Conservative members have no solutions to offer to the government. It would still be possible to bring in the corrective measures needed within the framework of our conventional capitalism and stop communism from gaining ground.

We are fighting against poverty. Every attempt is made to balance our present economic system which generates poverty, but poverty persists. Departments and commissions are set up to determine whether poverty exists in Canada. This problem has been considered for many years.

When I was elected to the House in 1962, the Liberals were in the opposition. They were accusing the government of doing nothing to fight unemployment. They deplored the high unemployment rate, they denounced the misery of the people and they asked the government to take the necessary steps to put an end to it.

And the Conservative government passed all sorts of measures, including a winter works program, for instance, in the hope of protecting our citizens from unemployment and poverty. To this end, credit was loosened and the government had to run into deficit again and the Liberals inherited this situation when they took office. They said that the country was suffering from inflation and that it was absolutely necessary to take measures liable to cure it. But, in the guise of fighting inflation, they are pushing the Canadian people back into a state of dire need and they put our economy out of balance to an extent yet unknown in our country.

We are unable to avoid going from one economic recession to another. And even with stable governments, we have never succeeded in ensuring economic stability. Therefore, no stability, either with the Liberals or with the Progressive Conservatives. Indeed, we have known only unemployment, poverty and wars because we refuse to establish social justice as a means of distributing affluence instead of want.

The hon. Minister of Finance is now attempting to solve the present economic problem with his dropping-tube budget. Indeed, it takes more than a dropping-tube to eliminate the economic disorders we are now plagued with and that will plague us in the future if the government persists in generating want instead of distributing affluence.

We are not responsible enough to assume our responsibilities. Such an attitude is totally uncalled for.

The people are disatisfied with their traditional administrators, Liberals and Progressive-conservatives. The people are fed up with old-line politics of backward and fossilized governments, unable to keep in tune with modern thought and science.

There is something wrong with the thinking of administrators, and any remedy is being cast aside. When one is well seated in an upholstered chair, when there is no problem at home, when a certain class of society is satisfied with the system, as are the big financial institutions —because that system is a gold mine for them, even if they operate at the expense of the little people—one can expect that the people will see to it one day. And that day, it will be a terrible disaster.

The dissent of students, and even the sensible recommendations of the new and less complacent political parties are as many symptoms of an uneasiness which will not disappear even through the most desperate efforts of an obsolete administration not attuned at all to our modern times.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Since the beginning of this century we have seen big industrial capital settling down in Canada and expanding so successfully for itself and for its millionaire and billionaire institutions; time has come to wonder whether all this show of power and production is actually meeting the rightful aspirations of our population.

Recent unusual events have forced this government to introduce unusual legislation.

Where are we heading to? The people are at a loss and are watching the government and the 264 ministers and Members of Parliament they have democratically elected to lead the country. This includes even the disserters and those who voted for the opposition members, including the impatients and the revolutionaries who are trying to get justice within a just society in Canada.

The unusual events that forced us to introduce an unusual legislation deserve at least being analyzed and studied with a view to finding their underlying reasons. And this is not being done. Let us think about it because when the bus is slowly skidding off the highway the driver should be wakened up and not the passengers. We are now trying to wake up the passengers because the driver is doing a bad job and refuses to take his own responsibilities to reach his goal.

This is a comparison. Normally when a passenger is travelling by bus no unusual events happen. Everybody reaches his destination and is quite satisfied with the trip made at an agreed price.

If the bus skids into the ditch, the passengers have reasons to be annoyed and dissatisfied, to seek out the people responsible for the unusual event and to ask at least to be led to their destination as established on departure.

If at the time of the last elections our citizens asked for a just society in a united Canada, they expect to live in such a society. They have reasons to be displeased if they see injustice everywhere, as well as a faulty distribution which makes the rich become richer and the poor poorer. They are also right when deploring unemployment and inflation, the exclusive privileges granted the large corporations, the hardship, want, insecurity and poverty prevailing among too large a sector of the population which, in its own way, contributes to the social, financial, economic and political life of the whole nation, according to its means and intellectual capacities.

The unwonted events which took place these last months should compel us to plead guilty and examine our conscience as to the way we guided the destiny of 22 million Canadians who paid to have a just society in a united Canada, as requested by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who seems to be doing its utmost but who is always hindered in his action by traditions, red-tape and known or secret influences. It behooves us to support him in order to lead the state again towards justice, balance and harmony.

Mr. Speaker, when you administer a whole, you must take care of every part, because as everybody knows, the whole is made up of the parts. Canada is a whole which is made up of 21.5 million Canadians. These 21.5 million Canadians must be given a guaranteed income. Everywhere production is divided between consumption and capitalization. In all administration, revenue equals expenses plus profits. If we are to have a just administration, we must have revenue. In order to pay taxes and live decently, every citizen must have an income. And if the individual in society does not have sufficient income to cover his expenses, then there is unemployment and the undeserved poverty that we now have.

On behalf of all Canadians, I call upon hon. members to think deeply. In the name of justice, I call upon them to meet their responsibilities and to establish a fair system of justice based on economic reality. None of this was provided for in the budget, and few members strive towards social justice in Canada. I have come to the conclusion that they have no social conscience at all.

In 1970 production amounted to $84 billion. One should find in this amount expenses for $63 billion and benefits for $21 billion. That percentage of 75 and 25 should show up at the level of every single administration whether individual, domestic, social, municipal, provincial or federal. Everone should get his share of that production of $84 billion. Consumption should amount to $50 billion, and the capitalization surplus should amount to $34 billion. Capitalization is so considerable that citizens are denied a decent living standard. Part of it should be distributed within society. The Minister of Finance should have announced a reduction of the cost of living that is high at present because of ambitious people who capitalize too much.

The minister should have stepped in but unfortunately he still protects the big financiers. He is the enemy of the people because he does not assume his responsibilities.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must do so, it being six o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

[Translation]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, before recess, I was saying that it would be easy to balance our economy if we would all co-operate.

The various white papers published up to now by the government, the Speech from the Throne in September 1970, the miniature budget brought in by the Minister of Finance on Thursday last, the investigation of the Senate committee on poverty as well as the eventual report that is not expected before next April, those are different indications that the economic system is sick and completely unbalanced on the whole as well as in its various forms of activity.

What should be the established order is organized disorder, planned economic unbalance. And all the efforts made to correct this situation do nothing but clog all the more the wheels of administration without in any noticeable way improving the results. Everyone does his best, under these circumstances, at each administrative level, but the main fault lies with those who lead, be they well known or unknown, elected by the people or by the shareholders of big financial, industrial or business corporations.

Mr. Speaker, I have drawn a table to shed a little light on all the white papers proposed by various departments. This table is more eloquent than all the thick reports of the Royal Commissions on banks, unemployment, poverty, biculturalism and many other topics, which are so costly in time and money but very often do little more than increase the confusion in the minds of officials, ministers and departmental technocrats.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must point out to him that his time has expired.

The Chair is taking this opportunity to remind the hon. member for Compton that it is not in keeping with parliamentary procedure to allow hon. members to have part of their speeches or a document printed in Hansard unless the House is agreeable.

[English]

Would the House agree to allow the hon. member for Compton to table the documents and tables or to make them an appendix to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Apparently the House is not willing to allow the hon. member to do so. I, therefore, feel compelled to recognize the hon. member for St. John's East.

[English]

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, when the minister introduced his budget a few days ago we were encouraged by the many references he made to regional development and particularly to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. We were encouraged because many of us in the House, indeed many throughout the country, have long held the view that in order for regional economic expansion programs to be effective in this country they must be co-ordinated with the government's monetary and fiscal policies.

We hope that the government is finally coming around to this viewpoint, because in order to have regional development policies that result in the creation of employment and the stabilization of the economy there must be this co-ordination with our monetary and fiscal policies. More particularly, if these regional development programs are to be truly effective in stabilizing the economy and creating employment, then they in turn must be truly regional in concept. We therefore welcome this change in government policy, noting at the same time that it is one we have advocated for some time.

• (8:10 p.m.)

This concept is directed essentially toward the creation of employment opportunities in the regionally disadvantaged areas of the country. It is our belief that if you designate the whole country as a special area under a regional development incentives program, as my colleage the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter) said you will end up, in fact, with no special areas and the program as a consequence defeats its very purpose. This is what we have been trying to tell the government since this program was first announced. As a result, we draw some encouragement from the fact that the minister announced in his budget speech that the government proposed to lift the ceiling on individual projects undertaken in the Atlantic provinces under the regional incentives program. Special incentives are essential if the area is to attract new industry or encourage plant expansion by existing industries.

We all know that industry has to take the initiative under this program, and we point this out as one of the major weaknesses in the program. If the initiative is left to industry, it will want to locate in areas close to major markets. This, we submit, is a major weakness in the program. The government, in announcing the special incentives for the Atlantic provinces—which we feel are essential if the area is to compete with other designated areas close to the major markets of the country—offset this advantage to the Atlantic region because in the same budget speech the government announced the designation of the city of Montreal and the southeastern area of Ontario as special areas. I submit it will take considerably more than the 10 per cent additional incentive for the Atlantic region, which the government has proposed, to offset this move.

I am not for a moment suggesting that unemployment is not seriously high in Montreal and the southeastern area of Ontario, because we all know it is. I am saying that the Atlantic provinces do not stand a chance under this program. There is no way they can compete with the advantaged areas of the country in terms of transportation and proximity to major markets. In this respect the Atlantic provinces are just not in the ball game. I am very much afraid it will take a winter of hardship, as a consequence of probably the highest unemployment since the depression, to prove this point. This also applies to other areas of the country; I have in mind particularly northern Ontario and the Gaspé region of Quebec.

The proposed amendments to the Regional Development Incentives Act will certainly improve the program; nobody would deny that. But it will not do so in so far as the regional disadvantaged areas of the country are concerned. I make special reference to my own province of Newfoundland. In this connection that province does not stand a chance. The only way industry will be induced to establish in the province of Newfoundland, with its transportation problems, is if the people of Newfoundland will assume all the risks involved in a new venture. We have evidence and many examples that this is a fact. The people must assume all the risks, thereby making it so attractive to promoters that they in fact have nothing to lose. The people of Newfoundland must assume all the risks which would normally be assumed by the entrepreneur. This added burden to the people of Newfoundland must automatically increase the already high burden of provincial debt. This is a debt which I submit is already critically high.

The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) and the officials of his department seem to have been completely carried away. That is the only way one can explain the reason for this program which makes the whole of the country a designated area, to the economic disadvantage of regions which are now completely out of the economic picture, particularly areas such as the Atlantic provinces which had certain advantages prior to the coming into effect of this program. I refer to programs such as the Atlantic Development Board which gave that area a special status. This special status has been lost. The government cannot escape its responsibility to the slow-growth provinces such as Newfoundland and the other Atlantic provinces. The government has a responsibility to discharge in respect of the implementation of its special programs. It must be responsible to the regionally disadvantaged areas of the country.

These special programs can only be successful when the government recognizes that regional development must be approached on a regional basis. There must be regional application of this policy. What is good for the city of Montreal, the county of Glengarry or the southeastern area of Ontario is not necessarily good for Newfoundland, the Atlantic provinces, northern Ontario or the Gaspé region of Quebec.

It is a fact that unemployment in the Atlantic provinces is expected to reach 14 per cent of the work force this winter. What other area in Canada would tolerate such an astronomically high level of unemployment? This is the prospect we face in the Atlantic provinces. In Newfoundland and other parts of the Atlantic provinces, the rate of unemployment will actually exceed this figure. It may, as the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) suggests, go as high as 20 per cent. This government does not seem to realize that the structural causes of high unemployment in this region, such as remoteness from major markets, an aging population, inadequate educational capacities and reduced capability of the work force, have been seriously aggravated by the government's anti-inflationary policies.

• (8:20 p.m.)

It is not good for the government to saddle a region with the high cost of its anti-inflation campaign and then, unsuccessfully, try to offset these costs with an inadequate regional incentives policy. I submit that the region must be provided with a new economic base. The Atlantic provinces must have a new economic base if they are to compete not only in terms of this program but under ordinary circumstances with the rest of Canada.

To quote the major recommendation of the fourth report of the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, we must have a new economic base if we are to become a viable sector of the Canadian economy. Regretfully, I suggest to the House that we will not get that essential, new economic base under this program and consequently the program will fail, as it is failing now, to meet the needs of the Atlantic region. As I have said, what little advantage we had has been lost. We have lost the little special status that we had. To realize this one has only to quote the recent reaction of APEC, the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, in reference to the budget and to the government's proposal to designate Montreal and the southeastern area of Ontario as special area. The reaction was as follows:

> If DREE wishes to counterbalance the designation of Montreal, Hull and Cornwall it has the power to do so by extending maximum grants to firms locating in the Atlantic region. Extending the ceiling is merely window-dressing.

Further in the same article there is this statement by the government of New Brunswick:

> This will make it more difficult for us to attract new industrial firms, which will tend to locate in central Canada. Although Mr. Benson has indicated these are only for a limited time it will be difficult for Ottawa to resist local pressures to retain them.

By designating the city of Montreal and southeastern Ontario as special areas under the regional development incentives program, the government has in fact placed the Atlantic provinces at a further disadvantage which will become more painfully apparent this winter with the prospect of a record high rate of unemployment, the highest contemplated unemployment since the depression.

I listened today to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) refer to the need for a selective approach to areas of high unemployment. This is precisely the point we have been trying to make in the House since the government announced its program. I submit this is the point the government has failed to recognize in bringing down this policy. The government persists in taking a blanket approach to the problem, failing to recognize that this country is not one homogeneous unit but is, rather, comprised of five distinct areas each with a distinct economy. I submit this is a major weakness of the government's program to deal with regional economic development and is, regretfully, one which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) failed to recognize when he brought down his budget.

What is equally disturbing about the government's development policies is the arrogance that seem to personify the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. The department takes an arrogant approach to the problems of regional disparity. We see it in the House in the minister's cavalier attitude in responding to questions on regional economic expansion. As a matter of fact, the attitude of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion is such that we cannot seem to get an answer to a question in this House; he always seems to skate around the question.

One senses the same arrogance on the part of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, in the Standing Committee on Regional Development. The attitude of the minister, his deputy minister and the officials of the department toward the members of this Standing Committee of the House is such that they tell the members of the committee as little as possible. They completely fail to respond to questions. The minister and his officials evade questions and adopt a cavalier attitude, or one of non-cooperation, with the committee. The result is that this Standing Committee is one of the most ineffective committees of the House.

This committee should be in a position to help the government and the department in devising and implementing regional development incentives programs. This particular committee, of which I have the honour to be a member, has travelled throughout the country. It has visited many areas of western Canada, the Atlantic provinces and eastern Quebec where members of the committee had an opportunity to take a first-hand look at the existing programs for which the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion assumed responsibility and see them at work. We had an opportunity to speak to the people in these areas.

However, the committee has failed to make a single recommendation to the House. As I say, it is the most ineffective committee of the House. I submit that a great deal of the blame for this situation rests with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and his deputy minister, because their attitude has created a situation of continuing frustration.

The arrogant attitude of this department, upon which so much dependence is placed by the government in this budget, is frightening. It is causing a great deal of concern because the government feels—certainly the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion feels—that in regional development programs it is preferable to proceed on the basis of trial and error rather than on the basis of listening to the elected representatives of the people and taking advice from the provinces and municipalities of this country. The minister, in a statement released today, explains the proposed amendments to the government's regional industrial incentives program as follows:

• (8:30 p.m.)

> We have had to learn some lessons by experiment. No doubt it will turn out that we have made a few mistakes.

Time does not permit me or my colleagues from disadvantaged areas of this country to catalogue those mistakes in the House because it is a substantial catalogue of trial and error. Why is it necessary for the government to proceed in this way? Why does the government not pay heed to the Standing Committee on Regional Development? Why does the government not pay attention to the members of this House who day after day direct questions to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion? In particular, why does the government not consult the provinces and the municipalities? Why does it persist in ignoring these essential sectors of government in respect of programs that can only be successful and effective so long as they have the complete trust and confidence of the provinces and municipalities? The government persists in its program of trial and error.

In the same statement the minister announced that in order to reduce the tremendous workload that is placed upon the shoulders of senior officials of his department in connection with the regional development incentives program, a special board would be established. I quote from the minister's statement as follows:

> I therefore propose to establish a small board, consisting of my own senior officials plus representatives of the Department of Finance and of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, together with a few expert advisers from the private sector.

No reference whatsoever was made to the provinces and municipalities which have an essential part to play in any industrial incentives program and which have a very important role to play in any program of regional economic expansion. Why the government persists in this philosophy is beyond me. One can only conclude that this department, with its minister and deputy minister, its senior technocrats and bureaucrats, a department which every day grows in size and in organization, has an attitude of "we know best".

They have a condescending, cavalier attitude toward the provinces and municipalities of this country and to the House. They refuse to take advice in areas where programs they are implementing are essential to the local governments, municipal and provincial. Perhaps the attitude of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion can best be summed up by a comment that was made by an assistant deputy minister of the department at a conference on regional and rural economic adjustment which was held in Winnipeg from November 12 to 14, a conference sponsored by the Canadian Council on Rural Development and the Canadian Economic Association. He said that one of the reasons the performance of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion was less than adequate was that DREE had to respond to political expediencies in their development program.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. McGrath: May I be permitted one final sentence?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House give unanimous consent to the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McGrath: I merely wanted to say that this sums up the failure of the department—it has to respond to political expediencies. For this reason it has failed to meet the objectives set out for it by Parliament. Consequently, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion has an obligation to the House, in view of the special responsibility placed upon him by the budget, to come before the House and explain his program in terms of the budget.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, the economic program of this government since it was elected in 1968 has achieved the paradoxical combination of a series of ad hoc decisions combined with a consistent and lunatic preoccupation with inflation. Even on the question of inflation itself the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has never been able to sort out whether he is dealing with the cost-push or demand-pull factors. We saw in his budget last spring all kinds of contradictory evidence on this point, and we saw the same kind of confused thinking in the budget which was brought before us last week.

The result of this kind of seriously and almost criminally directed effort has been that the growth rate of our economy has been reduced in effect to zero, if we consider the population growth and, not unrelated of course, we are about to achieve in Canada the highest number of unemployed in the history of our country. This has been the serious forecast by a number of competent economists regarding the trends which will reach their lamentable peak next February. This, I repeat, is a deplorable record for any government, and particularly deplorable in light of the expectations of hundreds of thousands of Canadians who thought they were electing a progressive Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Instead of dealing in a serious and meaningful way with the situation, instead of coming before Parliament and the people of Canada last Thursday with an imaginative, sound, serious program dedicated to achieving full employment and, not unrelated again, a sense of community in this country, we had the same kind of quick, unthought-out, contradictory proposals that have characterized the Minister of Finance since he assumed that position. The budget gives every indication of being concerned both with unemployment and inflation. The surtax is left on, yet all the rhetoric that is in the speech purports to reflect a concern for the unemployed position in which hundreds of thousands of Canadians find themselves. A trivial $250 million is to be given up by this government in its 115 per cent capital cost depreciation allowance program—a pitiful amount of money if we intend seriously to inject funds into the economy to do something about unemployment.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Firstly, the government proposes to grant an increase of $5 to a family man who is living on unemployment insurance—a ridiculously low amount which would still leave an unemployed man with a family at the poverty level. If you consider the budget seriously, these are the central recommendations. Instead of that, what was needed was a concerted attack on the present economic position of the country. We should have had an across the board tax cut for middle and low income families, and complete removal of taxation from family men and women with incomes up to $4,000 and single people with incomes up to $2,000.

Secondly, we should have had a major infusion of public capital into the economy. Thirdly, we should have had an indication from the government that it was going to establish a central economic planning board which would give serious priority to economic development. The amount of money that this party recommends, Mr. Speaker, is not the paltry $250 million that the minister is going to save on the 115 per cent capital cost depreciation allowance, but rather it is in the billions of dollars. That is what we need now, and we need it in a very serious way. It should not be spent in subsidizing private corporations but in the creation of Crown corporations and co-operatives on the one hand and, on the other, on encouraging public expenditure through municipal governments and agencies which already exist. I will return to that point.

It seems to me that this kind of spending through the public bodies and co-operatives on the one hand, spending on new enterprises and significant increases in expenditures at the municipal level on the other hand would achieve the desirable economic effect of injecting new cash into the economy and therefore would provide some increase—I do not want to exaggerate the possibilities—in job opportunities.

The second important point to be made is that such money spent affects people living in our society on the basis of equality, and that is what the spending and the use of political power of democratic governments in our kind of society should be all about. Let me give specific examples of how this money could be spent in a way that would not just stimulate the economy but would benefit those who need it most. In respect of public housing, for example, approximately 2 million people are in need. In the city of Toronto alone there are 88,000 of these people. That is a rough calculation based on 22,000 families who right now need public housing. Yet the government is spending only 3.9 per cent of all its funds on public housing, which is less than 60 cents per capita. Spending in this area would have an important spin-off effect by encouraging full employment in all industries related to housing and it would provide housing to people who badly need it, many of whom are out of jobs.

Secondly, in terms of tax relief I have already said that tax cuts across the board are needed at the middle and low income levels, and we need the complete removal of income tax from single people earning up to $2,000 and from couples earning $4,000 or less. The other point I want to make with respect to tax reform, which should be introduced now and not postponed, is that the government, if it wants to redirect the economy, should get away from the ad hoc kind of decision-making that has gone on in Canada ever since World War II. It should take seriously the objective of stimulating and expanding the public sector. It could have done this now by introducing special tax credits for those who want to purchase municipal and provincial bonds. This would be a significant reform.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel).]

It is in the area of municipal and provincial public spending that we can most readily affect those who have average and low incomes, because in the main the facilities provided by municipal and provincial governments are provided to citizens on the basis of equality. It makes no difference whether a child is a member of a rich or a poor family in terms of whether that child benefits from public schools, public universities, public parks, public swimming pools, or what have you.

It is just this kind of shifting of priorities that we need in our economy if we are to take simultaneously and seriously the democratic objective of equality and the economic objective of stable employment. But no such indication has come from the government, certainly not in this budget and certainly not in the white paper on tax reform.

The hundreds of thousands now unemployed, the fishermen in Newfoundland, the auto workers in my constituency who were unemployed in their thousands before the strike which is currently taking place and will likely remain so after it has been settled, the unemployed cab drivers in this city—in short, the unemployed throughout the country—need their unemployment insurance benefits increased and increased immediately. Those benefits need to be increased much more than the paltry $5 which the government offers for the family man. The very minimum we need, and need now, is the kind of proposal in the white paper on unemployment insurance. There is no reason why an unemployed man in this country should not receive at least two-thirds of his income during periods of unemployment. He does not create that unemployment. It is created by the economic policies of government, whether it be federal or provincial, and neither he nor his family should have to suffer the consequences.

In terms of public spending, the government could have shown a little imagination. For example, it could have decided to develop winter parks in the way that many of the provinces have developed summer parks. We could have taken our national parks and installed several ski-tows in each of them at a cost of $50,000 or $60,000 per tow. That would provide a minimal kind of employment initially, but at the same time it would provide a real opportunity for skiing Canadians who happen to earn less than the $15,500, which is the average income of skiers in this country, to use such facilities. We could provide a meaningful and exciting winter parks program for the people of this northern country instead of leaving our recreational facilities in the winter available primarily for the rich.

Also, at the time of the budget announcement the government could have decided that it would no longer leave to corporations the unfettered right to open and close factories. We could have taken away from Duplate Canada Limited and the Dunlop Corporation of Canada Limited the right unilaterally to throw hundreds of workers out of work even though the men and women might have been in those jobs for up to 35 years. It is not merely the human right to have some say about your job that is at stake here—and that is an important right—but also at stake is the unfettered right of corporations to make these investment decisions. Only by getting at that kind of control which currently remains with our corporate sector can we effectively develop an economy based upon the principle and the goal of full employment.

Much of the fooling around with the system, the special tax allowances and so on, that the government seems to admire so much is totally and completely wasted. What is needed instead is a serious effort by the government to have some say in these investment decisions. But, Mr. Speaker, that would mean effectively taking on the corporate directors in this society, and no Liberal government in the past—and certainly not this Liberal government—has shown the slightest indication of willingness to take this kind of action.

Mr. Benjamin: What about "Tiger" Basford? He takes them on.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the member who preceded me talked convincingly about the inadequacy of the regional development program. He did not mention that over 60 per cent of the funds which have gone into that program since the election of this government have gone into foreign-owned industries. We are perpetuating, in underdeveloped parts of Canada, the economic sickness which is reflected in the developed regions. Our party has argued that this kind of financial assistance to foreign-owned firms should cease immediately. We are not saying that no foreign capital should come in; that should be made clear. However, we are insisting that when it comes in, it ought to come in on the basis of a minority shareholder.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Instead of relying overwhelmingly, as we now do in regional development programs, on foreign-owned firms which will distort the priorities of our economy and which will contribute to the boom and bust cycle, we should be encouraging a combination of mixed capital development projects, using federal funds and private Canadian capital as well as private foreign capital. This method has been used in Turkey, in Sweden and in Japan. It has been used so often that one would think even Liberals had learned about it.

In addition, we should use in many cases public capital exclusively for investment in development. In some cases we ought to create entirely new enterprises, and in some cases we ought to buy up existing enterprises, especially those in the natural resource sectors. We have some $4 billion now in the reserve fund. A good part of that money will not be needed if we maintain a floating exchange rate. I do not see why a good part of this money should not be used to gain control, for example, of the oil and gas industry in this country. This would stop the export of the profits of that industry. Also—and this is at least of equal importance—it is a modern industry in this society and in the modern world economy. It has real potential for growth.

By gaining control of that kind of industry we would begin to control the research and development that is related to its ownership. We could begin to develop in Canada, for example, many of the new products that are associated with the petrochemical industry in its operations all over the world. These products are being currently developed outside our borders because the industry is foreign-owned. This kind of imaginative step, if taken, would not have provided remarkable, short-run improvements in our unemployment situation. It would have provided some new jobs; there is no doubt about that. However, such a step would have indicated that this government is interested in bringing about a structural change in the economy and that it is providing for real, economic growth in the future. In the budget speech there is not the slightest hint that the government intends to move in this direction.

Finally, what is needed is a federal economics planning board. This board ought to be concerned about all the areas I have mentioned. It ought to encourage the development—the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) ought to do this—of equivalent planning boards in all provinces so as to co-ordinate the investment priorities as between the federal, provincial and municipal authorities of this country. Such a step would require, of course, the federal government and provincial governments to assume a number of the powers currently held by corporations, especially the exclusive power to determine their investment priorities. That is the kind of deliberate action that is required, and only that kind of action will begin to have, in the long run, a significant effect on our economy.

What would be the net effect of the proposals that I have made? Some are specific and some are rather general in nature. It would be irresponsible of me to suggest that in the short run thousands of new jobs would be created. That would not be the case. There would be many new jobs created if we started to put money into housing, streets, schools and new, publicly-owned enterprises; but it would take time for the effects to be really felt. Probably they would not be felt until next spring, at best.

In addition to the short-run economic effects, however, there would be other benefits. The people of this country would sense that we have a government that is concerned about equality for all the people, about equality of condition for all the people of this nation. If in the short-run such action is unable to bring about 100 per cent employment for our people, and if it is unable to bring about a purely egalitarian situation, it would enable us to regain control of our economy over a period of time. It would be seen that the government fully intends to use democratic power in the economic sector of our society to bring about the kind of full democracy that is surely desired by all. Such action, in short, would give the people of our country who are now living in a condition of unemployment without power and lacking in dignity, a real basis and legitimate foundation for believing there is hope for the future.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like in opening my remarks to extend my felicitations to the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) who made his maiden speech a little earlier in this debate. He has succeeded a man who was well known to many of us and dearly beloved. In following in the footsteps that George Muir trod in this House, I wish him well. The hon. member expressed some concern that many of us in the House think of the west as beginning at Calgary, Edmonton or Vancouver rather than at Lisgar. May I assure him that when he has been here a little longer he will find that many members think the west begins at Oakville or Hamilton.

In the debate this afternoon the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) joined in the general clamour for a tax reduction and increased social programs, while all the time complaining about the government's increasing pressure on the capital markets as a result of the deficit proposed in the budget that we are considering. As nimble as he is, the Leader of the Opposition will have difficulty keeping all those dumbbells in the air at one time. There are some contradictions that we must face in terms of simple arithmetic if not sophisticated economics.

• (9:00 p.m.)

The Leader of the Opposition has suggested that monetary and fiscal policies alone cannot do the job of curing inflation; that we must supplement these with an incomes policy, although he says this has not worked satisfactorily anywhere. If left with monetary and fiscal policies as the main weapons against inflation, how would he use them? How would he maintain the full employment that he advocates and still bring the long, inflationary spiral under control? This, Mr. Speaker, is an aim that no country, regardless of the degree of intervention the government has taken in the private sector, has succeeded in achieving.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) earlier today advocated large expenditures in terms of schools, hospitals and like items of social developments, as well as increased financial assistance to the aged, disabled and unemployed. He also advocated a tax reduction for those in the low income group. He at least had the decency not to criticize the government for pressure on capital markets in view of the program that he was advocating. However, he was concerned about what he alleged were the stop-go programs that this government had adopted. I asked him to recall the problems that the Labour government in Britain faced when it pledged to end its stop-go policies. They were obliged to follow stop-only policies in order to prevent inflation caused by the wage demands of the unions that supported them. That party is no longer in power.

The reaction of the opposition parties to this budget provides the clearest indication so far as to how bankrupt they are in policies and programs for promoting strong, stable, long-term growth in our economy. The Conservatives and New Democrats have engaged in a contest to outbid each other in extravagance in their proposals for creating a massive government deficit through mammoth increases in spending and a major reduction in government revenue through tax cuts. There would be economic disaster for Canada if the government were to adopt their proposals, or if through some misfortune they had the opportunity to implement them.

With regard to inflation, opposition parties have over a number of years belaboured the government when prices have risen, acknowledging that inflation is a critical national problem. Yet they have opposed virtually all measures adopted by the government to deal with this problem, measures of a kind which the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development and the International Monetary Fund recently urged other governments to follow.

I quote as follows a number of recommendations of the OECD for the coming 12 to 18-month period for countries facing inflation:

> All member countries should aim to restore at least the degree of price stability associated in the past with sustainable levels of employment and economic growth. To this end, cautious demand management policies are required. Excess demand should be eliminated and governments should be prepared, where necessary, to accept temporarily some slack in the use of resources until there are signs that better price stability has been achieved.

I believe Canada has achieved that position. Other nations have yet to achieve it. I continue quoting:

> In cases where unemployment is rising towards unacceptable levels, attention should be directed to the possibility of selective action directed to areas of high unemployment, rather than indiscriminate increases in public expenditure or general tax cuts. Within the framework of appropriate over-all fiscal restraint, expenditure on government-sponsored manpower training and relocation programs should be increased as much and as quickly as is possible.

That is precisely what this budget is all about. This budget is a series of measures of selective action directed toward areas of high unemployment. It is not indiscriminate increases in public expenditure or general tax cuts. The third recommendation of the OECD made last month is as follows:

> Despite the difficulties, the search for effective price-incomes policies should not be abandoned; but this should be regarded as a long-haul operation unlikely to yield miracles.

I think it has been proved to our satisfaction that this has not yielded miracles in Canada. The government is pursuing these policies in an attempt to achieve all that it can within the limits of our Constitution. We have every confidence that in the long haul we will indeed achieve these objectives.

Experience has shown that the present inflationary round that Canada, as well as other nations, has had the misfortune of having is one of the most serious and intractable ever to develop in the post-war period. What solutions have the Progressive Conservatives advanced to halt this inflationary spiral? They have urged the adoption of voluntary restraint guidelines. This afternoon the Leader of the Opposition stated that the government adopted these guidelines a year or two too early and that now is the time to be pushing them. That is regrettable. The government in fact did this long ago through the establishment of the Prices and Incomes Commission. The Conservatives also advocate the abolition of the sales tax on building materials. Is it possible to imagine that so major and critical a problem could be overcome by such a bromide?

The exercise of responsible restraint by all sectors of the economy is desirable and necessary. However, the OECD, the International Monetary Fund and the Economic Council of Canada have all underlined the fact that such restraint can only be a supplement to other measures adopted by governments to put out inflationary fires. In fact, Conservative proposals for dealing with inflation are so devoid of substance as to be ludicrous.

The Conservatives have charged that the government has done too little, too late, to deal with the problem of unemployment. They now urge mammoth increases in spending and mammoth tax cuts. This is diametrically opposed to the course they proposed some months ago. What was the position of the Conservative party earlier this year? When estimates for the current year were tabled in this House in Feburary, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), the party's financial critic, strongly criticized the projected increase of $900 million. He said:

> When we consider that in 1963-64 the total estimates or total expenditures of the government were just over $6.4 billion, we can see that the series of Liberal administrations has more than doubled government expenditures at the federal level. We have complained from time to time that this government follows the practice of taxing up to expenditures. It is for this reason that we are facing continuous surcharges or additional taxes.

In the budget debate on March 12, the hon. member for Edmonton West again complained about the projected $900 million increase in benefits and said:

> That is not controlling expenditures. If there were to be control, if there were to be a real fight against inflation by fiscal measures, we would be taxing to defeat inflation, not merely to catch up with the bills that are coming into the government.

Speaking in this House during the Throne Speech debate in October, the hon. member for Edmonton West dismissed as insufficient the series of measures adopted by the government since the last budget. He contended that a "much more massive injection must be furnished by the government". In this House, on November 12, the Leader of the Opposition urged major increases in spending, echoing the New Democratic Party's proposal for calling a federal-provincial conference to discuss development of a public works program, in addition to substantial spending in other areas.

• (9:10 p.m.)

The Leader of the Opposition also proposed tax cuts on the same occasion suggesting it would be "very interesting" to see whether this would work to counter inflation. While his proposal was lacking in clarity, he appeared to suggest that the surtax should be allowed to expire and income taxes reduced a further 6 per cent. This, presumably, was in addition to the abolition of the sales tax on building materials. The cost of these tax cuts would be as follows. The elimination of the 3 per cent surtax would cost $240 million, the reduction of personal income tax by 6 per cent would cost the treasury $310 million and the cost to the provinces as a result of the same cut could be $135 million.

In addition, eliminating the sales tax on building materials would cost $360 million, and if the Leader of the Opposition intended that his proposed 6 per cent income tax cut should extend to corporations as well as to individuals, the treasury would lose a further $118 million. In other words, the total cost of these suggestions to the treasury, if implemented, would be $1,163 million, or $1.04 billion if the 6 per cent reduction in corporation tax is excluded.

The New Democratic Party has recognized that inflation is a serious problem and has acknowledged the need to employ fiscal and monetary restraints to help overcome it. Nevertheless, they have continued to urge a massive expansion within the existing framework of fiscal and monetary policy which would have the very opposite effect. They have suggested that inflation could be overcome by the imposition of controls over prices and incomes, although recently they have been shifting away from this position.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Not at all.

An hon. Member: What about the unemployed?

Mr. Mahoney: You will have the opportunity to prepare your manifesto before the leadership meeting. We have listened to the trial run with some interest. We note that the imposition of controls is strongly opposed by both the Conservative Party and by organized labour, which may or may not have something to do with the shift in the approach taken by the NDP. The government has resisted pressure to apply controls because of the adverse impact this would have on economic growth consequent upon drastic interference with the working of the market economy.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

