BIG SPLIT THREATENED IN BRITISH POLITICS.

Lord Curzon Enraged at Government Over Kitchen Episode May Join Liberals and Become Leader, Perhaps Next Premier.

(Special Cable Despatch.) LONDON, Sept. 2.—It is possible that the two great parties of Great Britain, the Conservatives and the Liberals, are about to see the entering wedge of the line of cleavage and the greatest split in party politics witnessed since Joseph Chamberlain strayed from the more powerful of free trade and his commencement of a campaign in favor of protection.

VICTORIAN AND ANOTHER STR. ASHORE NEAR QUEBEC.

(Special to the Sun.) MONTREAL, Sept. 2.—The Allan line royal mail steamship Victorian, one of the new turbines, with three hundred and fifty passengers, general cargo, and the mail for Great Britain, ran aground at Cape Charles, one hour and twenty miles below here and about thirty miles above Quebec, at noon yesterday, and is still hard and fast.

(Special to the Sun.) MONTREAL, Que., Sept. 2, 8:40 a. m.—Nothing new has developed in regard to the Victorian. At last news received she was lying off St. Jean Des Chateaux, below Quebec, in thick fog. Where she struck is mixed rock and shale, and it is feared she is badly injured, as number two had a full of water. It is not yet known whether other ships can pass her in the channel, and what time the steamer is being anchored at Batiscau until Buoy Engineer Cowie gives orders to proceed.

POWER HERE COSTS LESS THAN W. G. ROSS STATED.

The statement made by W. G. Ross that it costs the street railway $60 per annum per horse-power has been called in question. It is the general opinion that it is much less than that. The Star made some inquiries this morning as to the cost of operating some of the large plants in the city.

LATE PERSONALS

Misses Martha and Zeala Morton, Pitt street, have returned from Boston. Miss McLaughlin, milliner, returned from Boston, New York and Philadelphia by Calvin Austin yesterday. Dr. and Mrs. Burgett and Miss W. Burgett are guests at the residence of Dr. Murray MacLaren.

Mr. Holmes, of the Bank of Commerce staff, left last evening for the coast where he will attend his sister's wedding.

Wm. G. Baskin, B. A. I., leaves this evening for the west where he will in future reside. Mr. Baskin is a St. John boy, a graduate of the U. N. B. in the class of 1893, and of the St. John High School in 1889. He has spent the last summer surveying in this province.

Dr. MacLaren is away on a trip to Upper Canada. Judge and Mrs. Trueman left last evening for Montreal to meet their son Harry, of the staff of the Bank of Montreal, at Sarsila, Ont., who is coming home on sick leave, an attack of appendicitis being feared.

The funeral will take place at 2:30 this afternoon of the late Mrs. Thomas Durbin, British street. The services will be conducted by the Rev. Mr. Walker of the Unitarian church. Interment will be at Cedar Hill.

Romances of the Horse Dealer

"MY GIRL'S RUN AWAY WITH A HOSS DEALER."

He Leads a Varied Life and There's Not a Day Without Its Interesting Experience of Some Sort.

An Elopement in Which a Certain Horse Dealer Was One of the Two Most Interested Parties

Tricks of the Trade and on Whom They Are Worked. The Horse Dealers as the Honored Guests of the Farmers.

BY PAUL DANBY.

A big, red-headed, deep-chested, serious-faced, rather awkward chap of about thirty stepped off the accommodation train from the West one day in early Spring, at a small local railroad station in one of the old Middle States.

"Jim," said the older of the two, "I'll bet that fellow's got horses to sell."

"Was," "cause he looks so serious for one thing. Hoss dealers always do look as solemn as your grandmother. He shows other signs of bein' a hoss dealer, but I can't describe 'em very well."

The older man's guess was right. The sanguine-topped stranger owned a carload of horses, which he had gathered in Missouri, the State in which he lived. As soon as he could find a place to sell them he purposed starting them on their eastern way.

It took the answer to only half a dozen of his seriously put questions to assure the horse dealer that he had reckoned correctly. Dumping his old hat behind the counter in the little hotel's apology for an office, he wandered solemnly back to the station, whence he dispatched a telegram to the caretaker of his carload of horses, telling her he had decided to put them on sale and directing that the car be started East as soon as possible.

In an hour, however, he had made good headway with them. His stories and talk were quietly humorous and not clever enough to rouse resentment in their rather sluggish minds, and, besides, under everything he said, there ran a vein of simple goodheartedness that was well nigh irresistible.

Moreover, his accent wasn't all Southern. It had something of the quality which always accompanies real blarney, and it was clear that, no matter where he himself hailed from, his foreignness came from a certain green tinge across the sea that has furnished the world with more than its share of talkers who really know how to talk.

THE HORSE SALE. Before the night of the third or fourth day thereafter, when the horse dealer's carload was left on the station's red siding by the daily freight, the red-headed horse dealer from Missouri, despite his deliberate ways, had managed to make the acquaintance of, or learned something about, pretty nearly every farmer within five miles of the station. He had also had a plain statement concerning his coming consignment of horses printed on two hundred postal cards, which he had scattered broadcast through the mails.

The sale took place about a week after the arrival of the carload. The horse dealer acted as his own auctioneer and made a record sale. He was never violent in his method of putting the merits of his horses before the prospective buyers nor was he strenuous in his jokes. But he made it clear to the farmers that he had good animals to sell, and the same vein of quiet, philosophical humor ran through all he had to say. His talk wasn't of the sort that would bring constant guffaws, but it did keep everybody in good humor all day long. The man didn't work half as hard selling fifty horses as the local auctioneers generally did auctioning off the farming tools and furniture of some family about to leave the community, but the result was very handsome returns. It was the first sale of the sort that had ever taken place in that neighborhood, and after it was over the general opinion of the people was favorable to the dealer.

There was one exception, though. From time to time as the sale progressed little delegations of the farmers' wives and daughters had peeped through an open door into the hotel yard and had given some attention to the proceedings.

A GOOD MIXER. It took the answer to only half a dozen of his seriously put questions to assure the horse dealer that he had reckoned correctly.

THE WOMAN IN THE CASE. "I'm going to marry Miss Smethers," he said, "and you'll have me to settle with if you bother yourself about her a little bit."

Everybody, including the girl, heard this bold defiance. She flushed more furiously than before. The horse dealer flushed, too, but controlled himself, and Goodell stalked away with his hands in his pockets, climbed into his buggy and drove home to his farm, some five or six miles away. He was almost blind he was so angry, and he never once looked at the girl, let alone speaking to her.

The immediate sequel need hardly be told. Some officious chap, sending possible complications that might give unwanted interest to the neighborhood, introduced the girl to the horse dealer that very day. The latter was interested, and instead of starting back West that night to buy more horses, leaving his helper to sell the remaining animals, decided to stay himself for a week or ten days.

ELOPEMENT AND REVENGE. Deliberately, but purposefully, he set about winning Mary Smethers, and her father not liking the Missouriian any more than Horace Goodell had, an elopement took place at the end of the week. Horace Goodell was beside himself for years he had expected to marry Mary some time, but had never had the courage to tell her about it, and before the elopement, Goodell tried to tell his side of the story to her, but she was so indignant that she wouldn't speak to him.

GOOD WILL. Goodell got his revenge, though, or thought he did. On the day after the elopement he took the train to a nearby city, hunted up one of the newspaper editors and made his way to the city editor's desk.

THEATRICAL CHIT-CHAT.

The local patrons of the drama have this week been entertained by an admirable equine show, which has proved a welcome change from the ordinary bill of fare.

Next week the Vitagraph will hold the boards and there is sure to be considerable interest shown as to how the local pictures taken on the occasion of the last visit will turn out.

Now that the dark evenings are approaching the thoughts of some lovers of the histrionic art will be turned to amateur theatricals.

It happens like this. The first meeting is called and a good number attend. Speeches are made, castles built in the air, and before the close of the evening everyone present fully believes they are bound to be either the leading lady or gentleman.

This is not intended to be a skit at all, but from a close study of amateur clubs Jim the Penman, knows incidents as given above, to have been the cause of the early demise of many such institutions.

her use is capital in book and score. Every part in it is played vividly, the dresses are beautiful, the dances delightful, and the stage direction of Ben Deal is admirable.

With this object in view Jim the Penman will be glad to hear from any one interested in the early foundation of an amateur dramatic club.

It is not altogether likely that Mrs. James Brown Potter may come to America for the vaudeville tour which some imaginative individual has announced for her.

Florence Crane, the Girl from Coney Island, is playing her last engagement in New York under Mr. Hammerstein's direction.

The Opera House management have made some good bookings for the coming season, and everything points to a very successful run of business.

Edna May has scored a stunning triumph at Daly's Theatre in "The Catch of the Season."

BIG SPLIT THREATENED IN BRITISH POLITICS.

Lord Curzon should return to England at the present time and join forces with the Liberals it would undoubtedly cause a political upheaval which must result in the downfall of the present Conservative administration.

In case Lord Curzon should play his cards right it is not impossible that he may find himself in the lead of the Liberal party.

Or Lord Curzon might choose the post of Minister of War, which would enable him to make more progress in the House of Commons.

SIR HENRY MORGAN, BUCCANEER

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY, Author of "The Southerners," "For Love and Country," "The Grip of Honor," Etc.

Sir Henry Morgan, deposed from the vice-governorship of Jamaica, with the help of Harnold, his secret enemy, again hosts the black flag. They capture two Spanish frigates, conveying a heavily loaded galleon, but are wrecked off the coast of Caracas. Captain Alvarado, born of unknown parents, but now the commandant of the Spanish port of La Guayra, Venezuela, loves the daughter of the governor, who has chosen De Tobar as Donna Mercedes' future husband. The governor sends Alvarado with a party to convey Mercedes to La Guayra. She discloses her love for him, and tries to jump her horse over the cliff, but Alvarado saves her and acknowledges love has conquered duty. Morgan's band, having buried their treasure, march to sack La Guayra and Caracas, and meeting the little party kill all except Alvarado and the two women. La Guayra is sacked and burned. Harnold, getting a crew of Alvarado's partisans, helps him to escape. The chapter closes with a thrilling account of an interview between Morgan and Donna Mercedes. DeLussan hearing Mercedes cries for help rushes to her assistance and is fighting Morgan when Alvarado's soldiers arrive. After a fierce fight in which Morgan's officers and many of his men are killed the old buccaneer is captured. Harnold tells his story and states that Alvarado is Morgan's son. This wrecks the happiness of Alvarado and Mercedes but later the story is disproven by a priest who shows that Alvarado is a son of the former governor, Don Francisco de Guzman.

The somber, sinister, although unknown purpose of the Spaniards had now turned to the utter inability of the buccaneer to foresee what was to be his punishment. He was a man of the highest courage, the stoutest heart, yet in that hour he was astounded. His knees smote together; he clutched his teeth in a vain effort to prevent their chattering. All his devilry, his assurance, his fortitude, his strength, seemed to leave him. He stood before them suddenly an old, a broken man, facing a doom portentous and terrible, without a spark of strength or resolution left to meet it. Whatever it might be. And for the first time in his life he played the craven, the coward. He moistened his dry lips and looked anxiously at the face to another in the dark and gloomy ring that encircled him.

"Lady," he said at last, turning to Mercedes as the most likely of his enemies to befriend him, "you are a woman. You should be tender-hearted. You don't want to see an old man die enough to be your father, suffer some unknown, awful torture? Plead for me! Ask your lover. He will refuse you nothing now."

"An eye for an eye," said the girl slowly, "a tooth for a tooth, life for life, shame for shame," but saying nothing until it rang through the room. "In the name of my ruined sisters, whose walls come to us this instant from without, borne in upon us by one hand, I refuse to intercede for you, monster. For myself, the insults you have put upon me I might forgive, but not the rest. The taking of one life like yours cannot repay."

"You hear?" cried Alvarado. "Take him away!"

"One moment," cried Morgan. "Holy father, your religion, it teaches to forgive, they say. Intercede for me!" His eyes turned with faint hope toward the aged priest.

boats had rowed out of sight of the captive that he might steal back and, himself unseen, watch the torture of the man who had betrayed him and wronged him so deeply. Alvarado complied with his request and had further promised to return for the boat-swain in two days. They calculated that the already exhausted prisoner would scarcely survive so long, and provisions and water ample for that period had been left for the sustenance of Harnold alone.

Morgan, however, did not know this. He believed his only companions to be the body of the half-breed who had died for him as he had lived for him and the severed head of Teach, a new comrade who had not betrayed him, or comrade who had not left his feet; the head had been wedged in the sand so that its sightless face was turned toward him in the dreadful, useless staring gaze of sudden death.

They had said to the buccaneer as they fastened him to the rocks that they would take his life, but that he would be left to the judgment of God. What would that be? He thought he knew.

He had lived long enough on the Caribbean to know the habits of the little stretch of sand at his feet, and then the water began. He estimated that the tide had been ebbing fast and calm as it was fastened upon him and abandoned. The rock to which he had been chained was still wet, and he noticed that the water was above his head. The water would recede and recede and recede until perhaps some 300 feet of bare sand would stretch before him and he would turn and come back, back, back. Where would it stop? How high would it rise? Would it flood in in powerful calm as it was fastened away? Would it come crashing in heavy assault upon the sands as it generally did, beating out his life against the spray again?

Of the two he thought he should prefer a storm. He would be beaten to pieces, the light would be out of him, he would be dead. But that would be a battle, a struggle—a action. He could fight if he could not die. He would not die if he could not die. He would not die if he could not die. He would not die if he could not die.

So long as it was light there was a sense of companionship in it which helped to alleviate his unutterable loneliness. And he had been so lonely. There were too many things in the past that had a habit of making their presence felt. He would not die if he could not die. He would not die if he could not die. He would not die if he could not die.

Then the moon sprang up suddenly. The sun had fallen. Her silver radiance flooded the firmament. Light, heavenly light, once more! Far away from him the two white sails were breaking on the silver sand.

He called down curses upon the head of the growing-eyed apparition. And the water broke into his mouth and stopped him. It called him to his senses for a moment. His present peril overcame the hideous recollection of the past. That water was rising still. Great God! At last he prayed. Lips that had only cursed shaped themselves into futile petitions. There was a God after all.

The end was upon him, yet with the old instinct of life he lifted himself upon his toes. He raised his arms as far as the chains gave him play and caught the chains themselves and strove to pull, to lift, at last only to hold himself up, a rigid, awful figure. He gained an inch or two, but his fetters held him down. As the water supported him he found little difficulty in maintaining the position for a space. But he could go no higher— if the water rose an inch more that would be the end of a cold breath only between the breaking waves now.

The body of the black was swung against him again and again, the head of young Teach kissed him upon the cheek, and still the water seemed to rise and rise and rise. He was a dead man like the other two—indeed, he prayed to die—and yet in fear he clung to the chains and held on. Each moment he fancied would be his last, but he could not let go.

By and by the waters fell. He could not believe it at first. He still hung suspended and waited with bated breath. Was he deceived? No, the waters were surely falling. The second seemed almost to him the first; now they were falling, falling! Yes, and they were bearing away that accursed body again and again, the head of young Teach, saved for the time being. The highest waves only touched his breast now. Lower, lower, they moved away. Reluctantly they lingered, but they fell—they fell.

To drown? That was not the judgment of God for him then. What would it be just out of reach of his lips?

It? His head fell forward on his breast—he had fainted in the sudden relief of his undesired salvation. He was still when it beat upon him, and after the first swift stroke he was a weight upon his shoulder again, for he had gone through the horror and anguish of death and had not died. He was alive still, but as the tide sank the waters were darkened. The stars out of the deep twinkled.

Then the moon sprang up suddenly. The sun had fallen. Her silver radiance flooded the firmament. Light, heavenly light, once more! Far away from him the two white sails were breaking on the silver sand.

He threw his glance upward, stopped suddenly, a fierce light in that old eye of his. "Look up," he cried, "and you will see! Take heart, man. I guess you won't have to wait for the tide, and the moon's not bothering you long. Remember, I am watching you!"

He turned and walked away, concealing himself in the cope once more, where he could see and not be seen. The realization that he was watched by one whom he could not see, one who gloated over his miseries and sufferings and agonies, added the last touch to the torture of the buccaneer. He had no longer strength or manhood. He no longer cried out after that one last appeal to the merciless sailor. He did not even look up in obedience to the old man's injunction. What was there above him, beneath him, around him, that could add to his fear? He prayed for death. They were the first and last prayers that had fallen from his lips for fifty years, those that day. Yet when death did come at last he shrank from it with an increasing terror and horror that made all that he had passed through seem like a trifle.

When old Harnold had looked up he had seen a speck in the vaulted heaven. It was slowly soaring around and around in vast circles and with each circle coming nearer and nearer to the ground. A pair of keen and powerful eyes were aloft there piercing the distance, looking, searching in every direction until at last their glances fell upon the figure upon the rock. The circling stopped. There was a swift rush through the air. A black feathered body passed between the buccaneer and the sun, and a mighty, hideous bird of the tropics, alighted on the sands near by him. He was a vulture of the judgment of God upon this man! For a second his tortured heart stopped its beating. He stared at the sudden thing, and then he shrank back against the rock and screamed with frantic terror. The bird moved heavily back a little distance and stopped, peering at him. He could see it by turning his head. He could drive it no farther. In another moment black with the horrible bird, high in the air, another, another! He screamed again. Still they came until it seemed as if the earth and the heavens were black with the horrible birds. High in the air they had seen the first one swooping to the earth and with unerring instinct, as was their habit, had turned and made for the point from which the first had dropped downward to the shore.

They stared at themselves about him. They sat upon the rock above him. They stared at him with their lustful, carion, jeweled eyes out of their loathsome, feathered heads, drawing nearer, nearer, nearer. He could do no more. His voice was gone. There was a weight upon his shoulder as the air they were still before him. His bloodless, foam lips mumbled one unavailing word: "Harnold!"

From the cope there came no sound, no answer. He sank forward in his despair, his head upon his breast, convulsive shudders alone proclaiming his falling life. He had no terror like to this which he, living, suffered.

There was a weight upon his shoulder now. Pierce lions sank deep into his quivering flesh. In front of his face, before a pair of black eyes that turned and made for the point from which the first had dropped downward to the shore.

And the restless tide came in. A man drove away the birds at last before they quite taken all, for the sun was still high in the sky. He was an old man, blind of one eye, the black patch out of the hideous hole that had replaced the socket. He had had no terror like to this.

JAPANESE FINANCES. The recent statement by the financial commissioner of Japan that his country never figured on an indemnity in her plan for financing the war and is easily able to handle her indebtedness without any enforced aid from Russia.

All told they have raised $78,000,000, and their credit was never in a more buoyant condition. The initial foreign loans of $14,000,000 were in short-term bonds, upon which Japan was required to pay 6 per cent. interest and pledge the Customs duties as security.

Interesting possibilities in British politics are told in the Star's cable dispatches today. Lord Curzon, before he was made viceroy of India, was one of the leading lights among the younger Conservatives, and the premiership was freely predicted for him.

Now, however, he is bitterly angry at his party, which has also apparently lost its admiration for him. If the estrangement should continue to the extent of causing an alliance between Lord Curzon and the Liberals, new interest and issues would be injected into the already tangled situation and the results might be remarkable.

British political life has been marked by some startling metamorphoses, but the spectacle of a leading Conservative of one parliament becoming the Liberal premier of the next would be a record breaker.

The province of Alberta, which commenced business yesterday, was computed to have a population of 173,000 at the beginning of this year. But the financial basis of union assumes a population of 350,000.

This is considerably less than the population of New Brunswick. Alberta starts out with an allowance from Ottawa of $1,022,535, which is fifty per cent. more than the total revenue of this province from all sources—Sun.

Capt. Wilkinson of the British steamer Moonlight was arrested yesterday on a warrant by the Peterson Downing Co. general merchants, whose offices are at 39 Water street. The steamer is in debt to the company for over $2,000 worth of salt, and the firm seized the person of the captain to bring about a settlement.

The first spoon match by the Scouts Companies of the Boys' Brigade was held on the range in their rooms last evening. The shooting was done with B. E. rifles, and twenty boys took part. The spoon was won by Private McDonald of Carleton, and the second prize, a knife, captured by Private Beville. Private Hastings took third prize.

Rev. Mr. McNeil of Calvin church presented the first prize, and P. W. D. Campbell the second. The third prize has been offered by another citizen and will be presented today. A number of spectators saw last evening's match.

Harry B. Burnham, who for some years has held the office of deputy sheriff for Digby county, has been appointed to a good position in the permanent service of the Inspector. P. J. Jones. Mr. Burnham will be available for service in any part of Canada.

The Public Trust Co., British Columbia, here last evening on his way from Woodstock to Montreal, to see his son Horace, of whose illness he had been informed Thursday. Prof. Brittain, before returning home, will probably attend the Kings Co. Institute, which meets in the new school building at Kingston next Thursday and Friday.

ALL IT NEEDED. There is more real oxygen in a liquid form in the "Solution of Oxygen" (purely kind) than any other preparation of a similar nature. As a prompt cure in the killing of all inside germs of the lungs, stomach or bowels it has no equal when coupled with "Celery King," the famous laxative.

The "Celery King," the famous laxative, will give you a free package of "Celery King" with every fifty cent or one dollar bottle of "Solution of Oxygen" (the coupon kind).

MANY ARE AFTER THE VAGANT SENATORSHIP. There is much speculation as to who will be rewarded for past services by the appointment to seats in the senate.

There are two vacant New Brunswick chairs that will have to be kept warm, and there are numerous pairs of trousers in this province whose owners are waiting for the job. Those whose chances are regarded as the best are Governor Snowball, whose gubernatorial term expires shortly, and Hon. H. A. McKeown, of St. John.

Other candidates for the position whose names are freely mentioned are A. Gibson, ex-M. P., and D. Gilmore, of Montreal and St. George. The great rival of Governor Snowball and Robert Thomson are also being put forward by their friends.

It is understood that Governor Snowball has the support of Premier Tweedie and Attorney General Pugsley, the idea being that in the event of Governor Snowball securing the seat in the next chamber, that Hon. Mr. Tweedie will become lieutenant-governor and Attorney General Pugsley premier.

If the attorney-general is called upon to form a government, it is believed that an appeal will be made to the province. In the event of Mr. LeBlanc being appointed to the senate, the liberal nomination for Kent would, it is believed, go to either James Barros, M. P., or J. D. Irig.

From a Medical Standpoint Golden Eagle Flour possesses qualities that demand earnest consideration. Indigestion and kindred disorders of the digestive organs are largely the result of using the white flours of today, from all of which the germ is excluded.

The regulative action of Golden Eagle on the system, and the ease with which it is digested, should induce you to avail yourself of the benefit which you and your family would derive from its use. It is meant to be eaten at every meal in the day and on every day in the year, so that its curative effects are continuously with you.

WILLIE WESTINGHOUSE STOPS THE CHIMNEY FROM SMOKING, BUT—

Dear Tommy—Our chimney got so choked up with soot that the smoke came out of the open fireplace.

So I made a rotary brush and went with Jim to lower it down the chimney.

We could hear it buzzing as Jim lowered it, but near the bottom it got stuck.

It stopped the chimney from smoking; but, say, Tommy, you should have seen that room! Yours, Willie.

HISTORY AND HEROES OF THE RUSSO-JAPANESE WAR.

In view of the happy ending of the peace conference, the following extracts from an article by the Tokyo correspondent of the London Times, and published in that paper on Saturday, the 5th inst., will be of interest: As we are now in the 18th month of the great war between Russia and Japan, the time seems to be appropriate for compiling some statement of the losses suffered by the combatants. The task is not easy. With regard to casualties on the Japanese side, tolerably accurate statistics were published throughout 1904, although even in that period there were quite a number of skirmishes which remained without exact return. But from the beginning of the current year the Japanese seem to have concluded that in these matters secrecy is to be mediocrity frank. At all events, they have never made an official statement of the total casualties during the siege of Port Arthur, or in the great battle of Mukden. In these cases, therefore, reports must be had to private intelligence, supplemented by a somewhat laborious calculation of ratios between aggregate losses and losses in combat ranks, the latter being always procurable from the Official Gazette columns.

actual total of killed, while official returns, seldom published, were generally proved to err greatly on the side of understatement. Therefore the figures set down in the Russian column of the following table must be regarded as minima: TABLE OF CASUALTIES. Name and date of battle, Japan Russia

In these cases, therefore, reports must be had to private intelligence, supplemented by a somewhat laborious calculation of ratios between aggregate losses and losses in combat ranks, the latter being always procurable from the Official Gazette columns.

THE JAPANESE LOSSES. One very salient landmark occurs itself. Last May a religious celebration was held in Tokio in memory of the officers and men who had perished in battle or died of wounds between February 8, 1904, and January 21, 1905, exclusive of the battle of Heikautai. The peculiarly solemn character of those rites, which are bound up with everything that the Japanese hold most sacred, precludes the possibility of any omissions from the national death-roll. Prayers were offered up for 28,999 military men and 1,887 naval men of all ranks; and it can be taken as absolutely certain that these figures represented the totals of both services up to the fall of Port Arthur. Assumed as experience indicates—that four men are wounded for every one killed, and assuming, further, that 10 per cent. of the wounded die, we are at once obtain an aggregate of about 105,000 casualties in all ranks of the Japanese army from the beginning of the war until January 31, 1905. If to this we add 8,000 for Heikautai, 25,000 for Mukden, and 600 on account of skirmishes up to the end of June in the current year, we obtain a grand aggregate of 166,000, in round numbers, representing the cases almost exactly with the total obtained by setting down the figures for each fight separately. But when we come to the Russian

ADMIRAL TOGO.

GENERAL KUROIKI.

The Russian vessels engaged in the war had an aggregate displacement of 430,224 tons, and those sunk had a displacement of 245,292 tons. In addition to the Russian battleships, two coast defense ironclads, one supply ship and two destroyers, with an aggregate displacement of 44,688 tons were captured, 19 vessels, with an aggregate displacement of 56,810 tons, are interned in neutral ports, and 10 vessels, totalling 53,536 tons, remain in service.

America: Wyefield, England; Siam, land; Scotaman, England; Silvania, England; Powerham, England; Severn, Germany; Bonulus, Germany; Esbyr Abbey, England; Vegsa, Sweden; Venus, England; Aphrodite, England; Tacoma, America; Harbarth, England; Industrie, Germany; Henry Bolckow, Norway; Quang Nam, France.

JAPANESE NAVAL LOSSES.

Table with 2 columns: Nature of Vessel, the war, Sunk. Battleships: 8, 2; Armored cruisers: 2, 2; Sea-going coast defense ironclads: 4, 1; Other kinds: 13, 4; Destroyers: 23, 2; Totals: 50, 13.

THE RUSSIAN RECORD.

The Russian record is different. Apart from the neutral vessels sunk by them in contravention of international law, and apart from the three Japanese transports which they sent to the bottom in April the Kinshu Maru, and in June the Hitachi Maru and the Inami Maru—the chief occupation of their cruisers has been to destroy little vessels—steamers and sailing ships—the property of private individuals trading in a small way.

From this table also torpedo boats, special service steamers and converted cruisers are omitted. By comparing the two tables several striking facts are observed. The first is that the Japanese force of 76 vessels, with a displacement of 274,184 tons, has sunk or captured 228,159 tons, remaining.

ADDITIONS FOR THE JAP NAVY.

Table with 2 columns: Name, Displacement. Nagatsura Maru, steamer: 1,084; Hanyei Maru, steamer: 800; Hagatsura Maru, steamer: 719; Yawata Maru, sailing ship: 198; Ansei Maru, sailing ship: 185; Hitachi Maru, sailing ship: 100; Susho Maru, sailing ship: 122; Koum Maru, steamer: 87; Kitoa Maru, sailing ship: 140; Takashima Maru, steamer: 318; Tokusei Maru, sailing ship: 131; Fukutsu Maru, sailing ship: 123; Jial Maru, sailing ship: 199; Hakutsu Maru, sailing ship: 91.

Of these 15 vessels one had a displacement of 1,084 tons, one of 800, one of 719, one of 198, one of 185, one of 100, one of 122, one of 87, one of 140, one of 318, one of 131, one of 123, one of 199, one of 91.

made by the two navies. The record for the Japanese navy is as follows, steamer being understood when the vessel is not described as a sailing ship. Ekaterinoflav, Russia; Mukden, Russia; Russia; Argun, Russia; Manchuria, Russia; Alexander, Russia; Resnick, sailing ship, Russia; Nicolai, Russia.

It is not pretended that in acting as these tables indicate Russia exceeded her right under the now recognised provisions of international law, but the facts certainly go to discredit the ex-ship. The principle which civilization tends to privatize, the principle of the municipality to private property.
