2. When you reported on this subject to Cabinet last week, we were under the impression that the second phase of informal and non-committal discussions in Washington at the ambassadorial level would have been resumed by now. This estimate of the timetable was based on information given us by the State Department.

3. However, it now appears likely that the talks will not be resumed for another week or two. The reason for the delay appears to be that the Permanent Commission of the Brussels Powers, at its meetings last week in London, reached agreement on a draft commentary on the Washington paper of September 9. They may also have reached agreement on the actual text of a draft treaty. The documents on which they have agreed have now been referred by them to their respective governments for approval and comment. The Western Union Permanent Commission will meet again on Thursday, the 25th, to receive these comments.

4. On the assumption that, at the meeting of the Permanent Commission this week, substantial agreement can be reached, the United Kingdom is hopeful that they will have their comments ready for communication to Ottawa and Washington before the end of this month.

The Cabinet simply noted the report by the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs at its meeting of 24 November.

5. Papers are being prepared in the Department for the guidance of the Canadian representative in the discussions in Washington when they are resumed. One paper is a commentary on the Washington paper of September 9. This commentary has been prepared in a form in which it could appropriately be circulated to the other participating countries. Mr. Pearson has approved of the text of this commentary.

6. Another much shorter paper<sup>171</sup> has been prepared which summarizes the longer paper and contains some material which could not appropriately be included in the longer paper.<sup>172</sup>

7. It may be found necessary to supplement these two rather formal papers with an informal letter to Mr. Wrong, giving him some of the reasons for the proposals and suggestions made in the other two papers.

8. None of the papers prepared at the present time involve commitments by the Canadian Government. Such commitments are unnecessary at this stage, since the next phase of the discussions are to remain informal and non-committal.

9. It is still impossible to forecast with any degree of precision the length of time which is likely to elapse between the beginning of the second phase of the informal discussions and the final signature of the treaty. One officer in the State Department has hazarded the guess that the period may be as long as three months.

Following for Reid only from Wrong, Begins: North Atlantic Treaty. I have questioned Achilles about Callender's Paris despatch on page 8 of today's New York Times reporting that the Brussels Treaty Powers are ready to resume negotiations here immediately. He said that the despatch seemed to contain many inaccuracies. Bérard, the Minister at the French Embassy, had called at the State Department yesterday to say that he had heard from Paris that instructions might arrive by the end of the week unless it was found necessary for the Brussels Permanent Commission to consider comments from the Governments on the paper drafted by the Commission.

2. Mr. Claxton told me on the telephone yesterday that Robertson had reported that Jebb was of the opinion that instructions would not reach Washington for at least a fortnight. Would you please repeat Robertson's telegram to me?

3. Achilles mentioned that the French have twice in the last fortnight denied the reports in the press that a complete Draft Treaty has been prepared in Paris for presentation at the next stage of the talks. The latest denial was made by Bérard yesterday. He thinks that we should not get into a discussion of drafts until we have got further on the scope of the Treaty, the methods of approach to other North Atlantic countries, the circumstances giving rise to the casus foederis, and other debatable issues.

4. I asked him what he thought of an interim arrangements agreement on the general lines of your proposal. He said immediately that they "could not look at" any agreement coming into effect on signature as it would seriously prejudice the consideration of the Treaty itself in the Senate later. He takes the view that the Article in the Treaty covering the establishment of agencies should be on the lines of the Brussels Treaty — i.e. a Council should be set up, probably able to function continuously, which would have authority to establish other necessary agencies. I have expressed before my concern lest an attempt to spell out the agencies to be established in the Treaty would lead to protracted discussion and dispute over composition, terms of reference, location and so on. I much prefer to get the Treaty first and then debate these matters in a Council, on which we would, of course, be effectively represented.

5. Achilles mentioned that he now attached greater importance to the inclusion of economic provisions on the lines proposed in the annex to the paper of September 9th. He said that the State Department would not accept any obligation to establish economic or cultural agencies under the North Atlantic Treaty because of the confusion which this would create with other international agencies in this field. They would want, however, some general blessing to be given in the Treaty for bilateral, trilateral or multilateral collaboration between the members.

6. I regret that my message to you No. WA-2980 of November 19th was so abruptly worded. It was dictated in a great hurry just before leaving to catch a train, and I had no time to include elaborate explanations. I think that if you had been present at the discussions of last summer it would be easier to understand the reasons which have led me to reject a number of your proposals as impracticable at this time.

7. I have not commented on your memorandum to Mr. St. Laurent of November 15th, and will not now do so in detail since it has already been presented. I have doubts on some points which you make in it. These include the estimate of the strength of our position given in paragraphs 7 to 13. The purpose of the negotiation is to tie up the United States with the defence of Western Europe, and no one but ourselves will be much impressed by Canadian electoral considerations. The issues affecting the appointment of a Supreme Commander (paragraph 14) are in my judgment best left for discussion after the Treaty is concluded, provided that it gives us an adequate forum; I think that we are more likely to get our position recognized if we do it this way. I doubt that the Brussels Treaty agencies will be wholly superseded by the North Atlantic agencies (paragraphs 15 and 16) because that would be a replacement of Western Union by North Atlantic Union, which is certainly not in the mind of the State Department. The Brussels agencies should, however, become secondary to North Atlantic agencies. As you know, I am quite unconvinced about the utility or the feasibility of a deliberative body (paragraphs 19 to 23). In this section also your aim seems to be wholly to merge the Western Union movement in a North Atlantic Union, and this will not go down here. Finally, I believe that there is no chance at all of getting serious consideration for as elaborate a proposal as your Draft Treaty. I think it unnecessary to present a Canadian draft at this stage, and I am sure that what both the United States and the Brussels Powers are aiming at is a short Treaty corresponding to the annex to the September paper. Ends.

Ottawa, November 25, 1948

TOP SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Pearson only from Reid, Begins: North Atlantic Treaty. Your telegram No. 456 of November 22.† Claxton made a brief report to Cabinet yesterday on the reasons for the delay in holding the second phase of the exploratory talks in Washington but no, repeat no, documents were brought before Cabinet. My estimates of the date of resumption had been given Wrong by Hickerson, who had confidently expected that the Brussels powers would be ready to start discussions as soon as the State Department said that it was ready.

2. The present situation is as follows.

Three documents are being prepared:

(1) A "Commentary" for circulation to the participating governments.<sup>173</sup> This is a revision of the draft memorandum of November 14 which had been entitled "Statement of preliminary views of the Canadian Government."

(2) A much shorter paper for Cabinet which would not, repeat not, be circulated to other governments and which would be given some such title as "Memorandum for guidance of Canadian representative."<sup>174</sup> This is based on the commentary but includes such passages as paragraphs 3, 4(b) and 4(c), which you suggested in your telegram No. 441 of November 21, be deleted from the commentary as not being appropriate for circulation to other governments.

(3) An informal letter of "supplementary instructions"<sup>175</sup> to Wrong which would develop some of the main reasons for the suggestions put forward in the other two documents.

3. My understanding is that it is not, repeat not, intended to circulate the commentary to Cabinet but that "the memorandum for guidance" will probably be circulated at a Cabinet meeting, presumably next Wednesday, December 1.

4. In the immediately succeeding paragraphs of this telegram I will report on the present text of the commentary.

5. Paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 of the draft of November 14, as amended by your telegram No. 441 of November 21, have been restored, since on more mature consideration we considered this would be better than substituting a series of quotations. Amended, these paragraphs include nothing to which Wrong has objected except the word "constitutional" in paragraph 4(d), which Wrong submits is ambiguous. The annexes have also been deleted and a short series of quotations now appear in the annex to the second paper.

6. Your telegram No. 441 of November 21. All the changes suggested have been made, including deletion of sub-paragraph 8(d). Many thanks for your congratulations which I have passed on to Crean, Hopkins and Ignatieff.

7. Your telegram No. 463 of November 23.

(1) Sub-paragraph 8(f) is being retained but in the supplementary instructions Wrong will be told not to press this if objection develops.

(2) Paragraphs 20, 21 and 22 have been deleted. I would suggest, however, that in the supplementary instructions Wrong be informed that this is the kind of chain of authority which the Canadian Government would consider appropriate.

(3) Paragraphs 37 and 38 have been deleted.

(4) Section 13 has been deleted but in the supplementary instructions Wrong will, if you agree, be authorized to bring forward this formula, emphasizing that the principle embodied in this formula has already been accepted by the Senate when it ratified the Chicago Convention and that it provides what would appear to be a realistic compromise between the rigidity which would flow from a requirement of unanimity in making amendments and the unrealism of a provision under which the United States and the United Kingdom would obligate themselves to accept an amendment adopted by the other contracting states. The practical effect of the Chicago formula is to give countries like the United Kingdom and the United States a veto over amendments which affect them but to take the veto away from countries like Luxembourg.

(5) The expression of a preference in 54 (a) has been deleted.

(6) Section 15 is being transferred to the supplementary instructions to Wrong but I am afraid the target date of January 15 for signature is hopelessly optimistic.

Hickerson now guesses three months between the resumption of the talks in Washington and the date of signature. This, he says, would be required in order to give time for "the necessary soundings" by which I suppose he means "soundings" of the Senate. This means that the formal diplomatic conference would not conclude until the end of February.

8. This leaves the problem of paragraphs 11 to 17 on the Interim Arrangements Agreement. Hopkins, Ignatieff, Crean and I had a long session on this this morning and I hope you will not mind my asking you to give further consideration to this question in the light of the following considerations, most of which have not as yet been drawn to Wrong's attention.

9. If Hickerson's estimate is reasonably accurate, it would look as if there may, in any event, be another three months of negotiation before the Treaty is signed. If we were to put forward early in December a tentative suggestion that consideration be given to an Interim Arrangements Agreement, and particularly if we were to put such a suggestion forward in a top secret Commentary which avoids the use of such terms as "the Canadian Government suggests" and which is prepared for circulation either before or at a series of informal and non-committal meetings, we shall have plenty of opportunity to withdraw the suggestion or not to press it if we become convinced that it would cause delay or endanger the ratification of the Treaty by the Senate of the United States. The Interim Agreement could be drafted in such a way as not, repeat not to require ratification by the Senate since it would give rise to no, repeat no, international obligations but would merely constitute interim organs for consultation and planning. These organs would not, repeat not, formally replace the Western Union military organs but I assume they would make unnecessary the continued presence of Canadian and United States observers on these Western Union military organs. The interim organs established under an Interim Agreement would cease to exist once the corresponding organs had been created by the North Atlantic Organization after the Treaty has come into force and it would seem to me, therefore, that there could be no, repeat no, problem about the relationship to the interim organs of states which acceded later to the Treaty.

10. My reasons for feeling that it might be useful to instruct our representative to explore the question of an Interim Agreement in the second phase of the exploratory discussions are:

(a) If the governments participating in the Washington discussions were, at the conclusion of the second phase of the discussions, to agree in principle on the desirability of an Interim Agreement to operate during the interval between the signature and the coming into force of the Treaty, they could immediately, through normal diplomatic channels, consult on such difficult questions as the membership and terms of reference of the various interim organs and the nomination of specific persons for specific jobs. The crucial question is the membership of the Commanders-in-Chief Committee; this should not, I would hope, be too difficult. (For instance it is, I think, generally assumed (i) that the Supreme Commander will be an American and it will be up to the United States to designate Eisenhower or Bradley or some one else; (ii) that Montgomery will be Deputy Supreme Commander and (iii) that General de Lattre will probably become Land Commander.<sup>176</sup> If the decisions on these and the other appointments are not made before the Treaty comes into force they will have to be made after, and the only question is whether the necessary top-level discussions through diplomatic channels begin about December 15 or February 15 or, say, May 15.) However, if the discussions are going to be difficult, surely the sooner they commence the better.

(b) The establishment of interim organs should make easier the working out of the ultimate relationship between the military organs of the North Atlantic Organization with those of the Brussels Powers.

(c) Would not your position when you present the Treaty to the House of Commons be somewhat stronger if you could point to an Interim Agreement under which Canada had already been given equal representation with the United States and the United Kingdom not only on a Council but on a Chiefs-of-Staff Committee and a Military Supply Board. This, you could say, demonstrates that Canada will be given the same recognition on the permanent organs of the North Atlantic Organization once they are set up after the Treaty has come into force, and that Canada is thus getting a share in control of policy appropriate to its share of the burden of risks.

(d) Our bargaining position is at its strongest before we sign the Treaty. Therefore if any of the United States or United Kingdom people have any thought of excluding Canada from full membership on the North Atlantic Chiefs-of-Staff Committee it would be better to smoke them out before we sign the Treaty. Moreover it might be easier for all the contracting states concerned to obtain agreement on such questions as the membership and the terms of reference of organs during the enthusiasm of a successful conference than two or three months later when there is usually a let-down.

(e) It has almost become standard practise now, when signing a multilateral treaty setting up a new international organization, to set up at the same time an interim organization to operate during the interval between the signature and the coming into force of the Treaty. We could therefore put forward our suggestion for an Interim Agreement not as a revolutionary proposal but as normal practise.

(f) Finally, it might well be that every signatory government would find it easier to gain parliamentary and public support for the Treaty if it had been demonstrated that the North Atlantic nations had established effective interim military organs, especially in view of the critical period which can be expected early next Spring. Next March may well be a period of acute tension, punctuated by crises arising out of stories which the Russians may plant that they are about to precipitate hostilities.

General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower, Chief of Staff, US Army (-Feb.), then President, Columbia University; General Omar N. Bradley, Chief of Staff, US Army; Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery, Chairman, West European Commanders-in-Chief Committee (Oct.-); General Jean de Lattre de Tassigny, Commander-in-Chief, West European Land Forces (Oct.-).

People are likely to be more confident and steady during this dangerous period if they know that organs have been set up by the principal Western powers to meet an attack.

11. The time factor in this matter seems to me of paramount importance. If an Interim Agreement is concluded, interim North Atlantic military organs will be in existence next Spring should there be a Soviet attack. Furthermore, the right of effective Canadian participation in these organs will have been established, thus avoiding the problems which plagued us during the last war and which arose out of an arrogation of power by the United States and the United Kingdom.

12. I am looking forward to receiving your decision on whether paragraphs 11 to 17 on the Interim Agreement should be (a) retained in the Commentary, (b) transferred to the supplementary instructions to Wrong, or (c) dropped. Ends.

Following for Reid only from Wrong, Begins: Since despatch yesterday of my WA-3024 on the North Atlantic Treaty, I have learned on fairly good authority that the present thinking in the State Department on the duration of the Pact favours a 10-year term and that Dulles, who originally supported a term of only five years, is now in agreement. This is, of course, no reason why we should not argue for a longer term, but I imagine that what will come out in the end is 10 years firm plus, perhaps, automatic renewal for subsequent 5-year periods unless the Treaty is denounced or revised at the end of 10 years. A longer original term would probably have the effect of reducing the influence of the United States in support of closer union in Western Europe, which remains an important objective of their foreign policy.<sup>177</sup>

2. I am sure that we shall run into a good deal of difficulty about the position of Italy and that, no matter what answer is found, we shall frequently have to review the relationship of Italy to the Pact. Do you think it would be a good idea to get the Joint Intelligence Committee to give an estimate of Italian military potentialities, taking into account such questions as the limitations on armament imposed by the Peace Treaty, the probable military capacity of Italy to do any serious fighting even if re-armed, the industrial contribution which might be made by the Italian engineering and aircraft industries in view of their location and dependence on impor-

I am afraid that I will not be able to have ready until Monday, November 29, a clean copy of the "Commentary" in the form and language in which it has received Mr. Pearson's approval. Mr. Wrong has recently sent in a number of suggestions for revision which I have repeated by cable to Mr. Pearson and he is giving them his consideration. I expect to have his final reply by Saturday or Sunday.

2. As you know, there are three documents being prepared in the Department:

(1) A "Commentary" for circulation to the participating governments. This is a revision of the draft memorandum of November 14 which had been entitled "Statement of preliminary views of the Canadian Government."

(2) A much shorter paper for Cabinet which would not be circulated to other governments and which would be given some such title as "Memorandum for guidance of Canadian representative." This is based on the commentary but includes such passages as paragraphs 3, 4(b) and 4(c), which Mr. Pearson suggested in his telegram No. 441 of November 21 be deleted from the commentary as not being appropriate for circulation to other governments.

With regard to the interim arrangements agreement, I fully appreciate the force of the arguments you put forward so cogently in its favour and as you know I was originally attracted by the idea but on further reflection I have come to the conclusion that it would introduce a complicating and controversial element into the negotiations. Paragraphs 11 to 17 should therefore be excluded and replaced by the additional sentence to paragraph 10 as stated in my telegram No. 482 of November 26th. I do not object, however, to including in Mr. Wrong's supplementary instructions a reference to the possibility of bringing up the question of interim arrangements if that seems desirable at any time during the Washington discussions. You will of course have noted Wrong's account in his telegram No. 293 of November 25th, paragraph 4 of the adverse preliminary State Department reaction.<sup>184</sup> In this connection I do not think that there is any likelihood of the Brussels agencies being superseded at any rate in the near future by the North Atlantic agencies. Following for Reid, Begins: My immediately preceding teletype.† North Atlantic Treaty. Changes suggested in my immediately preceding teletype are of a drafting character. There are three other points which it may be difficult to settle except on the basis of discussion, for which you may not have time. If it is possible, however, I would be grateful if you would draw these three points to the attention of Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Claxton. It may be possible that they can be covered orally in Cabinet without changes in the document.

2. The first point concerns paragraphs 10 and 12. In paragraph 10 the memorandum states that it is important that the original signatories should include the Scandinavian countries. Paragraph 12 says that it would be difficult to support an invitation to Italy because Italy does not border on the North Atlantic. Sweden and Denmark, however, do not border on the North Atlantic either, and there is therefore an inconsistency between these two paragraphs.

3. The second point concerns paragraph 13. The last sentence says that the pledge should be as close as possible to that undertaken by the parties to the Brussels Treaty. The attention of the Cabinet is thereby drawn to specific commitments which the Government may be asked to undertake. It occurs to me that we should be certain that members of the Cabinet fully understand the nature of these commitments and realize consequences which may flow from the Treaty.

4. The third point concerns the Annexes. It occurs to me that the succession of quotations from Mr. King, Mr. St. Laurent, Mr. Claxton and myself may seem to other members of the Cabinet to be an attempt to indicate that so great a commitment has already been taken by the Government that the Cabinet has no other alternative than to accept the proposal which is being placed before it. ## NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY

Draft of Proposed Memorandum for Guidance of the Canadian Representative in the Second Series of Informal and Non-Committal Discussions in Washington

Introduction

1. At the beginning of October on instructions from the Cabinet, the Governments of Belgium, France, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States were informed that the Canadian Government had considered the proposals set forth in the Washington paper of September 9, 1948, for a "North Atlantic Security Pact" and was ready to enter into a treaty with these countries, and such other countries as might be agreed, on the general lines of the annex to that paper.

Reasons for Canada Entering Into the Treaty

2.(a) The march of events has shown that the Soviet Union is seeking world domination by aggression, direct or indirect. Nation after nation has succumbed to these tactics. The only world war which might occur in the foreseeable future would be a war for domination by Soviet Communism. Such a war would in time involve all the Western powers who would either have to fight or fall. Canada could not avoid being involved in such a war.

(b) The only way to prevent the further spread of Communism through nation after nation is for them to stand together now. That is the lesson of two world wars. The only way to avoid conflict or conquest is to prevent both by standing together.

(c) In these circumstances, the only way to prevent war is to make it clear that the Soviet Union could not win. In order to convince them of this they must be confronted with an overwhelming preponderance of force organized for peace. This force must be organized in such a way as to ensure that it is so used as to guarantee that the free nations will not be defeated one by one, thus jeopardizing the security of Canada.

(d) The organization of such a preponderance of force under a North Atlantic security pact is the one and only solid basis for the defence of Canada.

(e) It could establish a constitutional basis for the collective organization of defensive power in peace and for the devolution of power in war from the members of the Alliance to its organs and agents. This would contrast favourably with the concentration of power in the hands of the Big Two or the Big Three during the last war.

(f) It could contain within itself possibilities of growth and of adaptation to changing conditions.

(g) The North Atlantic countries already constitute, in fact, a group of nations sharing similar democratic ideals and cultural traditions. The creation of a "collective security system" among them may well provide a basis on which it may be possible to build, in the course of this generation, a closer unity of the North Atlantic world.

Primary Objective of the Forthcoming Negotiations

3. The objective of the forthcoming negotiations should be:

(a) To establish, within the framework of the United Nations Charter, a treaty for collective self-defence among the countries of the North Atlantic region, based on continuous and effective self-help and mutual aid, and

(b) to strengthen the national security of each contracting state by the establishment under the treaty of joint agencies, which would in peace-time be agencies of recommendation and which could in wartime become agencies of military decision.

The Treaty and the United Nations

4. It is important that the organization established by the Treaty should be kept strictly within the framework of the United Nations.

Organs to be Established Under the Treaty

5. It will be necessary for the Treaty to contain a provision setting up a Council (presumably of foreign ministers) empowered to establish such organs as from time to time seem necessary. These might be similar to those now set up by Western Union.

6. Should signature of the Treaty not take place for some time, or should it seem likely that some months may elapse between the signature of the Treaty and its coming into force, it might be necessary to make provision at the time of signature for setting up an Interim Council empowered to establish interim organs.

Canadian Control

7. The association of the Canadian Government with the proposed Treaty must be based upon due constitutional processes. This means not only that the Treaty must be approved by the Canadian Parliament but also that the ultimate control by the Canadian Government of any measures recommended by the Council which may entail military or economic contributions by Canada must be preserved.

Non-Military Provisions

8. In order to emphasize the positive and moral content of the Treaty, it should include provision for consultation, cooperation and common action in the economic field, and also a provision under which the contracting states would accept without qualification the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court on any legal dispute which may arise among them. Moreover, the preamble should set forth, in much the same language as the preamble to the Brussels Treaty, the belief of the signatories in the values and virtues of their common civilization and their common determination to work for the promotion of their mutual welfare and the preservation of peace, which is the aim of the Treaty. The language of the Treaty should be simple and clear and "officialese" and pedantic terms should be avoided.

Original Members of the Organization

9. It is desirable that the original signatories should include, if possible, the Scandinavian countries, Iceland and Ireland, as well as the participants in the Washington discussions. If one of them should refuse to join, it will be necessary for those willing to join to give careful consideration to whether the Organization can extend guarantees to any country which does not reciprocate, although the strategic importance of bases in one of the countries might justify special arrangements between the Organization once it has been set up and the country concerned.

10. All the contracting states should be able to subscribe to the principles of democracy, personal freedom and political liberty. There will be difficulty in reconciling these principles with Portuguese membership in the Organization. Only the most important strategic considerations can therefore justify Portugal's inclusion.

11. It would be difficult to support an invitation to Italy to become a member of a North Atlantic Organization since Italy not only does not fall within the North Atlantic region, but she could contribute little to the common pool of resources. In view, however, of Italy's strategic importance, the Organization once it has been set up might make special arrangements with Italy, under which Italy would receive a promise of defence by the North Atlantic Organization and, in return, agree to grant defence facilities to the Organization.

The Undertaking

12. It would seem wise to limit the undertaking to give mutual assistance under the Treaty to attacks on members or on states with which the Organization has made defence arrangements, but the undertaking should not apply to non-self-governing territories outside the North Atlantic Region, unless such territories are specifically included. The undertaking should be as close as possible to that in the Brussels Treaty, which reads as follows:

"If any Party should be the object of an armed attack in the area covered by the Treaty, the other Parties will, in accordance with the provisions of Article 51 of the Charter, afford the Party so attacked all the military and other aid and assistance within their power."

Duration

13. The Treaty might remain in force for, say, twenty or twenty-five years.

NORTH ATLANTIC SECURITY; RESUMPTION OF WASHINGTON DISCUSSIONS

10. The Minister of National Defence, as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to the discussion at the meeting of November 24th, submitted and read a draft of a proposed memorandum for guidance of the Canadian representative in the second series of informal and non-committal discussions which were soon to be resumed in Washington. Copies of the draft were circulated.

After drawing attention to the fact that, on instructions from the Cabinet, the governments of the other participating countries had been informed that the Canadian government were ready to enter into a North Atlantic Security Pact, the memorandum went on to state the reasons for Canada entering into the treaty and the primary objective of the forthcoming negotiations.

Reference was then made to the relationship of the proposed treaty to the United Nations and to the organs which would be established thereunder. The association of Canada must be based upon due constitutional processes which meant that the treaty must be approved by Parliament and also that ultimate control of any measures recommended involving military or economic contributions by Canada must be reserved to the Canadian government. The inclusion of certain non-military provisions would be desirable.

The membership of the organization should include the Scandinavian countries, Iceland and Ireland, as well as the participants in the Washington discussions. Strategic and other considerations might justify the inclusion of other states, specifically Portugal and Italy.

The basic undertaking of the treaty would be to give mutual assistance against attacks on members or on states with which the organization had made defence arrangements. It should be along the lines of the undertaking in the Brussels Treaty. The pact might remain in force for say twenty or twenty-five years.

11. The Cabinet, after considerable discussion, agreed:

(a) that the memorandum submitted be amended as follows:

(i) by the deletion of paragraph 10, it being understood that the Canadian representative would be instructed that, if the question of Portugal's inclusion arose, he would indicate that the Canadian government did not wish to oppose Portuguese membership on purely ideological grounds; and,

(ii) by the addition of the words "for strategic reasons" after the word "unless" in line 6 of paragraph 12; and,

(b) that the memorandum submitted, as amended, be approved for the confidential instruction of the Canadian representative in the forthcoming resumption in Washington of discussions on the North Atlantic Treaty.

TELEGRAM WA-3085

Washington, December 4, 1948

TOP SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Reid from Wrong, Begins: Your letter of December 1st† enclosing the commentary on the North Atlantic Pact.

This is a very respectable paper. I have some doubts about two or three points of substance and a few unimportant questions of form which I am passing on in case it is not too late for minor changes to be made.

2. The following are the points of substance:

(1) Paragraph 7(e). I fail to see how the Charter could be amended “on the lines of the provisions in the North Atlantic Treaty,” since the Treaty will be a regional arrangement only and possibly one of fairly short duration.

(2) Paragraphs 18 and 19. From recent talks here it is fairly clear that we shall have to accept a close association with Italy from the beginning either by full membership of Italy or by a simultaneous engagement towards Italy. I should hope, therefore, that our position could be modified by the omission of the 3rd, 4th and 5th sentences of paragraph 18 and by the modification of paragraph 19, leaving our policy somewhat more flexible.

(3) Paragraphs 28 and 29. There may be no harm in putting up this proposal, but there is no serious chance of its adoption because of the attitude of the Senate towards unlimited compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court.

3. On questions of form the following points occur to me:

(1) The last three sentences of paragraph 2, which are in my own language, seem to me unsuitable for inclusion in a commentary of this sort. They were spoken with a completely different purpose in mind.

(2) Paragraph 9. The reference to “the consultative council” is ambiguous as the continuing agency of the North Atlantic Pact has not yet been named.

(3) Paragraph 12. I think that “with full obligations” should be added at the end of the second sentence. I also have some doubts about calling the North Atlantic Pact “the Organization”.

(4) Paragraphs 34 and 35. I would prefer that paragraph 35 be dropped, or put into separate instructions to me. In paragraph 34 can we not avoid that horrid word "officialese"? Ends.

of September 9, 1948*

TOP SECRET

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY

This Commentary sets forth a number of provisional views on some of the problems raised in the Washington paper of September 9, 1948. It has been prepared for the use of the Canadian representative in the second phase of the informal and non-committal discussions in Washington.

The circulation of this Commentary to the other participants in the second phase of the Washington discussions does not at this stage commit the Canadian Government to the views expressed in the Commentary.

SECTION ONE
INTRODUCTION

1. At the beginning of October, the Canadian Government informed the governments of Belgium, France, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States that the Canadian Government had considered the proposals set forth in the paper of September 9, 1948, prepared in Washington as a result of the discussions in Washington during July, August and September, between the Under-Secretary of State of the United States and the Ambassadors of the United Kingdom, France, the Benelux countries and Canada, and that the Canadian Government was ready to enter into a Treaty with these countries, and such other countries as might be agreed, on the general lines of the annex to this paper.

2. A Treaty on the general lines of the annex would be appropriate to the realities of the existing international situation for the following among other reasons:

(a) The only way to prevent war is to make it clear that the Soviet Union could not win. In order to convince the Soviet Union of this, it must be confronted with an overwhelming preponderance of force — military, economic and moral — organized for peace. This force must be organized in such a way that it is so used as to guarantee that the free nations will not be defeated one by one, thus jeopardizing the security of each.

(b) The Treaty could be based on the principle of a pooling of risks, of resources, and of combined control over policy and establish a constitutional basis for the collective organization of defensive power in peace and for the devolution of power in war from the members of the Alliance to its organs and agents.

(c) The Organization established by the Treaty could contain within itself possibilities of growth and of adaptation to changing conditions.

(d) The North Atlantic countries already constitute, in fact, a group of nations sharing similar democratic ideals and cultural traditions. The creation of a collective security system among them may well provide a basis on which it may be possible to build, in the course of this generation, a closer unity of the North Atlantic world.

SECTION TWO

PRIMARY OBJECTIVES OF THE FORTHCOMING NEGOTIATIONS

3. The primary objectives of the forthcoming negotiations might be stated as follows:

(a) The establishment, within the framework of the United Nations Charter, of an arrangement for collective self-defence among the countries bordering on the North Atlantic based, (as called for in the Resolution of the Senate of the United States of June 11, 1948), on "continuous and effective self-help and mutual aid." This should demonstrate the determination of the contracting states to meet their obligations under the Charter of the United Nations and to encourage the "progressive development of regional and other collective arrangements for individual and collective self-defence."

(b) The strengthening of the national security of each contracting state by the establishment under the Treaty of joint agencies, which would in peacetime be agencies of recommendation and which could in wartime become agencies of military decision. These agencies would strengthen the individual and collective capacity of the contracting states to resist aggression. They would begin their work as soon as possible in an effort to preserve peace by deterring any would-be aggressor; if aggression should occur, these agencies would help to ensure victory over our enemies.

SECTION THREE

PREAMBLE OF THE TREATY

4. The Preamble might usefully set forth, in much the same language as in the Preamble to the Brussels Treaty, the common belief of the signatories in the values and virtues of their common civilization and their common determination to work for the promotion of their mutual welfare and the preservation of peace. The Preamble could also make clear that the contracting states are uniting their strength not for the purpose of waging war but for the purpose of preventing war and that the aim of the Treaty is peace.

SECTION FOUR

THE TREATY AND THE UNITED NATIONS

5. It is important that the organization established by the Treaty be kept strictly within the framework of the United Nations and that the Treaty contain a number of provisions which are directly linked with appropriate provisions of the Charter. Thus:

(a) The pledge of mutual assistance in the event that a contracting state is the object of an armed attack should contain a reference to Article 51 of the Charter which recognizes the "inherent right of individual or collective self-defence" against an armed attack.

(b) The Treaty should provide that any measures of self-defence taken under it shall, in accordance with the provisions of Article 51, be immediately reported to the Security Council and terminated as soon as the Security Council has taken the measures necessary to maintain or restore international peace and security.

(c) The Treaty should contain a reaffirmation of the undertaking of all Members of the United Nations, set forth in Article 2 (4) of the Charter, not to threaten or use force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state.

(d) The section on economic, social and cultural cooperation might include a provision under which the contracting states would agree that they would seek to attain the objectives set forth in this section by making the most effective use possible of other international economic, social or cultural organizations in which the contracting states are or may be represented.

(e) The Treaty should contain a reference to Article 103 of the Charter to the effect that none of the provisions of the Treaty shall be construed as impairing or conflicting with the rights and obligations of the signatory states under the Charter.

(f) The Treaty should contain a provision for registration with the United Nations under Article 102 of the Charter.

SECTION FIVE

ORGANS TO BE ESTABLISHED UNDER THE TREATY

6. The only organ mentioned in the Brussels Treaty is the "Consultative Council". The Brussels Powers have, however, found it necessary to establish a number of other organs, among them a Chiefs-of-Staff Committee, a Military Supply Board, a Commanders-in-Chief Committee, a Military Committee, and a common secretariat.

7. It appears evident that the North Atlantic Organization will, in order to be effective, need to have from its outset, most, if not all, of the organs which Western Union has found necessary. The Atlantic Treaty, therefore, should contain a provision for establishing a Consultative Council empowered to set up such organs as from time to time seem necessary, in order that the Treaty may be implemented speedily and effectively.

8. The association of the Canadian Government with the proposed Treaty must be based upon due constitutional processes. This involves not only approval of the Treaty by Parliament but also control by the Canadian government of any measures recommended by the Council of the North Atlantic Organization which may entail contributions by Canada of a military or economic nature. The Council should therefore be composed of Cabinet Ministers of the signatory states, who would make recommendations to their governments on policy. The Council would direct its subordinate bodies to carry out planning and required action within the framework of agreed policy.

9. This does not necessarily mean that every member of the North Atlantic Organization need be represented at all levels in all organs of the Organization. To insist on this would make some of the organs unworkable. But the controlling decision on matters of policy must ultimately rest with the governments of the members of the Organization. Accordingly, all subordinate bodies of the Organization and of its executive agencies would be required to carry out agreed decisions on the basis of the Council's recommendations.

SECTION SIX
ORIGINAL MEMBERS OF THE ORGANIZATION

Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Iceland and Ireland

10. The original members of the Organization should be Canada, the United States and the parties to the Brussels Treaty, together with such other nations of the North Atlantic as are willing and able to undertake the obligations of the Treaty and are acceptable to the states participating in the Washington discussions. It is particularly important for Canada that as many as possible of these other countries come into the Organization with full obligations. Otherwise, some Canadians may ask why Canada should make greater commitments than other North Atlantic democracies which are more directly menaced by the Soviet Union than is Canada.

11. Moreover, it is important to Canadian security that the North Atlantic Organization should secure the facilities which it needs from the Scandinavian countries, and from Iceland and Ireland.

12. Consequently, every effort should be made to persuade the Scandinavian countries and Iceland and Ireland to become original members of the Organization. If one of them refuses to come in it will be necessary for the states which are willing to join the Organization to consider very carefully whether the Organization can extend guarantees to any country which does not reciprocate, although the strategic importance of bases in such a country might justify special arrangements between the Organization, once it has been set up, and that country.

Italy

13. It would be difficult to support an invitation to Italy to become a member of the North Atlantic Organization, since Italy not only does not fall within the North Atlantic region, but it could contribute little to the common pool of resources. In view, however, of Italy's strategic importance the Organization, once it has been set up, might make special arrangements with Italy, under which Italy would receive a promise of defence by the North Atlantic Organization and, in return, agree to grant defence facilities to the Organization.

SECTION SEVEN
THE AREA TO BE COVERED BY THE PROVISIONS FOR MUTUAL ASSISTANCE

14. The pledge of mutual assistance in the Brussels Treaty comes into effect if one of the signatories is "the object of an armed attack in Europe." The pledge in the Rio Treaty comes into effect "in case of an armed attack which takes place within the region" described in the Treaty; it therefore comes into effect if a non-member state within the safety-zone of the region is attacked.

15. There are sound arguments against the inclusion in the North Atlantic Treaty of a "safety-zone" provision similar to that in the Rio Treaty, within the geographical limits of which any act of aggression against any state in that zone would mean war with all the parties to the Treaty. Such a proposal would give all the other countries within the North Atlantic zone a very good reason for doing nothing in the way of "mutual aid and self-help" (as demanded by the Vandenberg Resolution); they would be assured of powerful allies without undertaking any commitments, even a commitment to furnish facilities. On the other hand, if the guarantee under the Treaty is limited to attacks on the members of the Organization, the effect would be to increase the risk of a Soviet attack, or of Soviet indirect aggression, against a non-member — such as, say, Sweden.

16. Since it would be desirable for all the countries in the North Atlantic area to become members of the Organization, it would seem wise to limit the guarantee under the Treaty to attacks on members or states with which defence arrangements have been made. This issue will necessarily have to be left open until soundings have been taken of the North Atlantic countries which were not represented in the Washington talks this summer.

SECTION EIGHT THE NATURE OF THE PLEDGE

17. The three possible formulas worked out in the Washington discussions this summer were:

A. Based on Rio

"An armed attack by any State against a Party shall be considered as an attack against all the Parties, and, consequently each Party undertakes to assist in meeting the attack in the exercise of the inherent right of individual or collective self-defence recognized by Article 51 of the Charter."

B. Based on Brussels

"If any Party should be the object of an armed attack in the area covered by the Treaty the other Parties will, in accordance with the provisions of Article 51 of the Charter, afford the Party so attacked all the military and other aid and assistance in their power."

C. Compromise

"Provision that each Party should agree that any act, which, in its opinion, constituted an armed attack against any other Party in the area covered by the Treaty be considered an attack against itself, and should consequently, in accordance with its constitutional processes, assist in repelling the attack by all military, economic and other means in its power in the exercise of the right of individual or collective self-defence recognized by Article 51 of the Charter."

18. In deciding on a formula, regard should be had to the following considerations:

(a) the firmer the pledge, the greater the effect the Treaty may be expected to have in deterring the Soviet Union and in restoring in Western Europe the confidence necessary for the economic reconstruction and the rearmament of that area; and

(b) the more the pledge is limited by constitutional safeguards, the less controversial it is likely to prove in the domestic political field.

The first of these considerations is clearly the more important. Therefore, if the United States representatives in the forthcoming discussions feel that the United States cannot go as far as the Brussels formula, it is to be hoped that the formula agreed on will be as close to the Brussels formula as is possible.

SECTION NINE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COOPERATION

19. As reported on page 13 of the Washington paper of September 9, 1948, the Canadian representatives in the Washington discussions emphasized the importance which they attached to the inclusion in the Treaty of provisions for the encouragement of cooperation among the signatories in fields other than security. In their opinion, such cooperation would contribute directly to general security. They felt that the purpose of the Treaty should not be merely negative but that it should create the only dynamic counter-attraction to totalitarian communism — a free, prosperous and progressive society.

20. In addition, in order to strengthen the collective capacity of the whole Organization to resist aggression, it is essential that the combined production of goods and services of the members of the Organization should be as great as possible, particularly at a time when a large proportion of this combined production must unhappily be devoted to preparations to resist aggression.

21. For these reasons, it is important to include in the Treaty effective provisions for consultation, cooperation and common action in the economic field.

SECTION TEN PEACEFUL SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES

22. It is proposed in the annex to the paper dated September 9, 1948, which resulted from the Washington exploratory talks on security, that the Treaty should include "an undertaking to submit every controversy which may arise among the parties to methods of peaceful settlement." The Brussels Treaty contains an article along these lines which is, however, subject to the qualification that the contracting states accept the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court over disputes inter se — "subject only, in the case of each of them, to any reservation already made by that party when accepting this clause for compulsory jurisdiction to the extent that that party may maintain the reservation."

23. The inclusion in the North Atlantic Treaty of a provision under which the contracting states would accept without qualification the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court on all legal disputes which may arise inter se would be a useful demonstration of the belief of the signatory states in the rule of law among nations.

SECTION ELEVEN
DISQUALIFICATIONS

24. The concluding note of the annex to the Washington paper reads as follows:

“The question of including a provision for disqualification under certain circumstances of any of the signatories from enjoying the benefits of the Treaty requires further consideration.”

Presumably the “certain circumstances” include the coming into power of a communist-dominated government in a contracting state.

25. The Treaty might provide for the expulsion or suspension of a member by a unanimous vote of the other members or by a vote of, say, two-thirds of all the members.

SECTION TWELVE
DURATION OF TREATY

26. The Brussels Treaty remains in force for fifty years. The Rio Treaty remains in force indefinitely, but any state can denounce the Treaty and its denunciation becomes effective two years later.

27. Generally speaking, the longer the initial duration of the Treaty, the more effective it is likely to be as a deterrent to aggression and as an encouragement to self-help and mutual aid. The Treaty might, therefore, remain in force for, say, twenty or twenty-five years. The Treaty might also include a provision similar to that in the Brussels Treaty under which, after the end of the initial period, each contracting state would have the right to cease to be a party to the Treaty, provided it had previously given one year's notice of denunciation.

SECTION THIRTEEN
LANGUAGE OF THE TREATY

28. It is considered desirable that the Treaty should be easily understood and that it should, if possible, be drawn up in such a way as to strike the imagination of the public and kindle their enthusiasm. Consequently, it is important that every effort be made to draft the Treaty in simple, clear and unambiguous language avoiding “officialese” and pedantic terms which might create an unnecessary bar to understanding.

29. In pursuance of this objective:

(a) The international security organization established by the Treaty might be called in English “The North Atlantic Community” or “The North Atlantic Alliance” or “The North Atlantic Union”; and in French “La Ligue de l'Atlantique Nord” or “L'Alliance de l'Atlantique Nord”, or “L'Union de l'Atlantique Nord”.

(b) The Treaty might be given a simple title such as “The North Atlantic Treaty”.

(c) The states which sign the Treaty might be called in the Treaty, not “signatory states”, “contracting states” nor “High Contracting Parties”, but the “North Atlantic Nations”.

(d) The Preamble might set forth in a number of short sentences the purposes of the Treaty and be written in the name of the people of the North Atlantic Nations and not in the name of the contracting states.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY

As you [J.W. Pickersgill] may have noticed, Le Devoir is becoming even more violent in its advocacy of neutrality for Canada. For this and for other reasons, it might perhaps be useful if one of the Ministers were to give a speech before Christmas following up the Prime Minister's speech of November 11. The speech might, to a very great extent, be an expansion of the introductory passages in the memorandum presented to Cabinet this week, and it might then go on to give to the Canadian people everything that we feel we can now give them about the views of the Canadian Government on the various problems which will arise in the drafting of the treaty.

I would be glad to have a talk with you about this any time at your convenience.

2. These are the only changes, with the exception of minor drafting points. I shall telegraph to you the supplementary instructions as soon as they are ready for your approval.

3. Wrong has pointed out that neither the State Department nor the European representatives will circulate a commentary when the conversations are resumed. He therefore suggests that it would be inappropriate to circulate the Canadian Commentary. I am not convinced by this argument. It seems clear that the Brussels Powers would not wish to circulate a commentary as we already know that they wish a pact along the lines of the Brussels Treaty. I can understand that the State Department might not wish to show their hand by issuing a commentary at this stage. In our case, however, I can see positive value in circulating a commentary. I should be grateful for your ruling on this point. Ends.

Ottawa, December 7, 1948

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Pearson only from Reid, Begins: North Atlantic Treaty. Canadian Commentary. Reference final paragraph of my immediately preceding telegram.

The Commentary, as revised, is now reduced to eight pages. Wrong, even before the latest revisions were made, said that he considered it to be "very respectable", which is high praise from him. I think it would be a pity if he were not, repeat not, now instructed to circulate it to the other participants in the Washington discussions. As revised, it does not, repeat not, commit the Canadian Government but its circulation would give us an opportunity to put forward some of the arguments for the line which Cabinet has authorized Wrong to take in the discussions. We could also, if you saw fit, send a few copies to London and Paris and perhaps to Brussels and The Hague for transmission to the local Foreign Offices and this might have some effect on the instructions sent from those Foreign Offices to their representatives in Washington as various questions emerge in the discussions there.

2. The reluctance of the State Department to circulate a Commentary of their own is clearly due to their desire to be able to tell the Senators, whom they will be sounding out later on, that none of the issues have been closed by the State Department. I assume that one reason why the Brussels powers are not circulating a Commentary is that they found it extremely difficult to reach agreement on anything except the bare text of a draft treaty which is not much more than a slight revision of the Brussels Treaty.

3. My only worry at the moment about the course of the forthcoming discussions in Washington is that most of the other participants may argue for a Treaty that is nothing more than a military alliance. This would not be in accord with the Prime Minister's repeated public emphasis on the necessity for a positive and moral content in the Treaty; moreover a mere military alliance would not, I think, be calculated to secure the same degree of public enthusiasm and support in Canada. This provides another argument for the circulation of the Commentary since the Commentary includes some arguments for the Prime Minister's position and some suggestions on how the Treaty might be drafted to meet his views.

TOP SECRET

Following for Wrong from Reid, Begins: North Atlantic Treaty. Thank you for your telegram WA-3085 of December 4. I have made the following changes in the Commentary as the result of your suggestions:

1. I have eliminated paragraph 7(e). Supplementary instructions, however, will ask you to raise this matter during the discussions. I shall explain fully the reasons for this suggestion.

2. Paragraphs 18 and 19. I have eliminated these paragraphs and have substituted paragraph 10 of the "Memorandum for Guidance of the Canadian Representative" approved by Cabinet on December 1, the text of which was telegraphed to you.

3. Paragraphs 28 and 29. I am leaving these paragraphs in for the following reasons. While I realize the Senate has been opposed to compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court, without reservation, I understand that the State Department would not be opposed to our raising this issue. You will recall that the State Department told us this in strict confidence some months ago when we told them that Canada was considering accepting the optional clause without reservation. They are obviously not in a position to do so themselves in view of the past attitude of the Senate, but I think they would be interested in any arguments which might persuade the Senate to change its views so long as the State Department does not have to put forward the arguments on its own behalf.

4. In regard to the questions of form which you raised, I have now eliminated paragraphs 2 and 3 of the Commentary and have adjusted paragraph 4 so that it is more in line with the memorandum approved by Cabinet. The opening sentence of paragraph 4 therefore now reads: "A Treaty on the general lines of the annex would be appropriate to the realities of the existing international situation for the following among other reasons." Sub-paragraph (a) has been re-drafted in substantially the same terms as paragraph 2(c) of the memorandum approved by Cabinet. Subparagraphs (b), (c) and (d) have been slightly reworded but the substance has not been changed.

5. I have cleared up the ambiguity in paragraph 9, the second sentence of which now reads: "The Atlantic Treaty, therefore, should contain a provision for establishing a Consultative Council empowered to set up such organs as from time to time seem necessary, in order that the Treaty may be speedily and effectively implemented."

6. I have altered paragraph 12 to include "with full obligations". The use of the term "Organization", however, seems a useful portmanteau term rather than referring throughout the document to "the Organization set up under the Treaty" or some similar phrase.

7. I have retained paragraphs 34 and 35. Ends.

TOP SECRET

Following for Reid from Pearson, Begins: Your telegrams 351 and 352 of December 7th. North Atlantic Treaty. As you point out in your telegrams under reference, there is much to be said in favour of circulating the commentary particularly in its present "very respectable" form to the other participants in the Washington discussions. On the other hand, if Wrong who is on the spot and knows the pre-negotiation atmosphere in Washington takes exception to the circulation of the commentary at this stage, I should be inclined to postpone its circulation. The question seems to me to be largely one of appropriate timing. It may be that after the initiation of the negotiations and after we have had an opportunity to size up the positions of the other participants might be a more useful stage at which to circulate our commentary. It may even be that we would wish to make certain further changes in the light of these initial discussions. It seems to me that thus it is a matter of tactics as to whether our views as contained in the commentary would have their maximum effect at the opening stage of the negotiations or at a later stage and I think you should consult Wrong on this point.

2. In any case, I do not think it desirable at this stage to send copies of the commentary to Foreign Offices of other participating countries as this might appear to commit us in advance. Ends.

Washington, December 10, 1948

TOP SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

North Atlantic Treaty. The Acting Secretary of State met the Ambassadors of the other countries concerned this afternoon.<sup>186</sup> The surprise of the meeting was Mr. Lovett's insistence on rapid progress towards completing a draft treaty. He said that we should now "aim at the end product", adding that "far greater definition" was needed before he finally cleared the project with the President and took it up with the ranking members of the Congressional Committees. Several times he emphasized the importance of the time element, although he expressed no direct criticism of the three months' intermission since the last meeting of the group.

2. In this Mr. Lovett must have overruled some of his advisers, since as recently as yesterday they were suggesting at the State Department that we should not be concerned with actual drafting at this stage of the talks. No-one, however, objected to the procedure proposed by the Acting Secretary.

3. Much of the meeting was concerned with the discussion whether the Brussels Treaty Powers should table the draft and commentary received from London. All their representatives emphasized that their instructions were tentative only, in order to clarify issues arising from the study of the September paper. It was indicated that all, or most, of them had separate instructions from their Governments. I have learned, incidentally, that there is an unresolved difference between the British and Netherlands Governments on the one hand and the French and Belgian Governments on the other hand about the admission of Italy as a full party to the treaty.

4. It was finally agreed that the documents prepared by the Brussels Permanent Commission would not be presented at a full meeting, so that the press could be informed that there had been no exchange of papers. They will be distributed probably tomorrow. There will be a further meeting of the full group on Monday, at which it is expected that a working group will be re-established to go through the project article by article and to consider in detail the related questions of the countries to be invited to adhere, the procedure of approaching them, and so on.

5. In view of this development, I think it desirable that I should be able to distribute in a similar manner the Canadian commentary on the September paper. I have not yet received its final text, and I hope that it will be forthcoming promptly.

6. There is no new indication of the attitude of the Government of the United States. Mr. Lovett remarked that a number of Latin-American countries were showing a great interest in the proposal, because they were concerned to find out whether they might be involved in war through the operation of the Rio Treaty in the event that an act of aggression took place in the North Atlantic area.

7. There was general agreement that there should be no publicity about what goes on in this series of talks. I emphasized the importance of discouraging speculation, pointing out that detailed advance discussion of the differences between the commitment in the Brussels Treaty and that in the Rio Treaty, for example, tended to depreciate the actual value of the Rio commitment if that was what we had to accept. A brief press statement, the text of which I am sending en clair,† was issued at the end of the meeting, accompanied by much photography, but nothing more than this was said.

I expect to obtain Claxton's approval for circulation in the morning. Pearson's views are contained in his telegram No. 589 of December 9 which I have relayed to you. Providing I have Mr. Claxton's final approval it is therefore in order for you to distribute the commentary to the representatives of the other governments.

I attach copy No. 28 of the Canadian Commentary on the Washington Paper of September 9, 1948. This has now been substantially revised. Mr. Pearson has now agreed to the text.

Mr. Wrong, in paragraph 5 of the attached telegram of December 10, now expresses the view that the Commentary should be circulated to the representatives of other Governments. Mr. Pearson, in his telegram No. 589 of December 9, considers that the circulation of the Commentary is largely a matter of timing, and suggests that Mr. Wrong is in the best position to know when it should be circulated.

I should therefore be glad to have your early agreement for the circulation of the Commentary to the representatives of the other Governments in Washington on Monday.<sup>187</sup>

TOP SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Reid from Wrong, Begins: Your EX-2833, draft supplementary instructions on the North Atlantic negotiations.<sup>188</sup> I think your draft over-emphasizes the difference between the commitments in the Brussels and Rio Treaties. The Rio Treaty, after all, contains an undertaking that each party must regard an attack against another party "as an attack against all the American States," and must undertake "to assist in meeting the attack." This, it is true, is qualified by the provision of Article 20 "that no State shall be required to use armed force without its consent." We must remember that a pledge on the lines of the Rio Treaty is likely to be the best that we can get, and we must not underrate its value, which is very considerable.

2. I cannot accept the argument in your paragraph 23 that an understanding that each party will decide whether an attack has taken place is "equivalent in law to no pledge at all." From the time of the Pentagon talks onwards it was recognized in these discussions by all the participants, including Mr. Pearson, that it was an inherent attribute of sovereignty for each Government to decide this for itself unless an international body was established to which the power of decision by a majority vote was delegated. It was also recognized that it would not be practicable to set up such an international body in this case. (If a Council under the Treaty could only act by unanimous agreement, the effect would be that each Government would decide the matter for itself and instruct its representative how to vote).

3. Our concern in the earlier stages was to eliminate an explicit statement from the commitment to the effect that the right of decision was vested in the individual Governments.

4. As to the use of the phrase "in accordance with its constitutional processes," we can try to transfer this to the preamble in some appropriate form rather than include it in the body of the Treaty. It will have to appear somewhere or other. The United States representatives are apologetic about this and would agree that it is a statement of the obvious.

5. In general, I doubt whether much in the way of supplementary instructions is really needed, and I hope that I shall not receive a very lengthy and detailed document which would limit my capacity in seeking to compromise conflicting views of the other participants. I shall, of course, seek instructions on specific points that arise, and I am thoroughly familiar with the general position of the Government.

6. On the general nature of the argument in these paragraphs I think that it is unnecessarily diffuse. I do not want to have a long debate by teletype on what should go into the instructions while simultaneously busily engaged in the actual negotiations.

7. Finally, is the Canadian Government prepared to accept "an automatic commitment to go to war" in the event that the Russians occupy the whole of Spitzbergen and stop there, or if some similar development takes place at a marginal point within the area covered by the agreement? Ends.

North Atlantic Treaty. The second meeting of this series was held this afternoon.<sup>189</sup> At it, Lovett asked me if I would give a brief review of the Canadian position. This I did, emphasizing among other points our desire for as definite a commitment as possible, our hope that the Scandinavian countries, Iceland, and Ireland would be included as full members, our concern that the Treaty should authorize collaboration in fields other than defence, and our belief that a political organ of consultation on the ministerial level should be established. I explained that there would be a number of other points which we would bring up at a later stage.

2. I ended by urging that we should now set a target date on which we would hope that the Treaty would be signed. Lovett at once took this up, and it was agreed that the target should be February 1st. I doubt that we can in fact meet this target, but its acceptance ought to speed up the proceedings.

3. The Belgian Ambassador then suggested that the group had been informed of the general views of Canada and the Brussels Powers but had heard no statement from the United States. Mr. Lovett based his reply on points which, in his judgment, must be included in order to satisfy Congressional and public opinion. His four points were as follows:

(a) At the risk of repetition, he considers it essential to include reference to procedure by constitutional process in the text of the Treaty as well as in the preamble. As this is a statement of the obvious, I suppose that we cannot press an objection.

(b) He said it must be made abundantly clear that the Treaty is not in conflict with the Charter and that the effective operation of the Charter remains the aim of the parties. This is generally acceptable.

(c) It would be unfortunate if the military aspect alone was emphasized. In this, he had in mind the suggestion of the Brussels Powers that the North Atlantic agency should be called a defence organization. He cited the consultation provisions of the Rio Treaty, pointing out that they had just been brought into operation by Costa Rica nine days after the Treaty had come into effect, and endorsing my remark that the North Atlantic Treaty should have a political organ.

(d) Every endeavour must be made to bring in other North Atlantic countries, so that the Treaty would not be only an engagement between the Brussels Powers, Canada, and the United States. This suits our book.

4. The rest of the meeting was devoted almost wholly to discussion of how to speed up the negotiations. It was recognized that there are two sets of interrelated questions: the drafting of a text and decision on the countries which should participate, the area to be covered, the methods of approach to other Governments, and so on. In the outcome, a Working Committee was set up, to meet probably daily from Wednesday, with as its first task the separation of the difficult questions from those which are mainly a matter of drafting. It is to draw up an annotated agenda for use of the Ambassadors Group, which may meet again on Friday. Stone and Rogers will sit on this Committee for Canada.

5. It was agreed to continue to use the "Metric" security regulations for the distribution of documents and to observe the strictest secrecy about matters under discussion here.

6. What Lovett wants is a complete text plus proposals on original participants and related questions as soon as we can get it, which might be before the middle of January. He is very anxious to reserve time for consideration of the project in the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and possibly in the House Committee as well, early in the session of Congress, and insists that he must have a more or less final text. He agreed when I suggested that what we were aiming at now, on the analogy of parliamentary procedure, was to give second reading to the text. Then there would have to be a committee stage, with possibilities of amendment in detail, followed by third reading at the time of signature.

7. Lovett asked whether there was likely to be a long interval between signature and deposit of ratifications by any of the Governments represented. Everyone expressed the view that parliamentary approval could be given in his country in not more than two months, especially since all the legislatures will be in session in the early months of 1949.

Following for Reid from Wrong, Begins: In your letter of December 11th you requested my views by telegraph on your draft supplementary instructions<sup>191</sup> in connection with the North Atlantic Treaty. The following is a summary statement:

(1) Paras. 2 to 4. I question the logic of this proposal. The Geneva Protocol was open for signature by all League members whereas the North Atlantic Treaty is a regional agreement within the framework of the United Nations. While the text will undoubtedly make clear that the signatories have no intention of violating either the letter or the spirit of the Charter, this particular suggestion might easily be misrepresented as condoning such a violation by binding the parties to seek amendments to the Charter to make it accord with their views.<sup>192</sup>

(2) Paras. 5 to 11. At the Ambassador's meetings yesterday I tried out the suggestion of an interim arrangements agreement and got no support from anyone. I pointed out that preparatory bodies had been established at the time of the signature of the conventions setting up the new international organizations, but nobody was impressed with the analogy, especially since it had just been agreed that there need not be more than two months' interval between signature and ratification. Let us therefore not spend any more time on this idea.<sup>193</sup>

(3) Para. 15. There is certainly no intention on the part of anybody that the Treaty should cover dependent territories outside the North Atlantic area. The definition of the area to be covered is likely to be discussed very shortly, and we shall have to explore various ways and means. I take it that there is no objection to a clause requiring consultation between the parties in the event of an attack on a dependent territory in another region.

(4) Paras. 16 to 26. I have already commented on these paragraphs in my WA-3144 of December 11th.

(5) Paras. 27, 28 and 39. These paragraphs could bear the construction that we wish new agencies to be established for economic collaboration. There is no chance of this, but I believe that the United States will join with us in urging on the Brussels Powers the importance of including an article on the lines of paragraph 3 of the Annex to the September paper. The purpose would be to give a general blessing to multi-lateral and bi-lateral collaboration between the parties in economic social and cultural matters but to safeguard the position of existing organizations in this field, such as the O.E.E.C., the Economic Commission for Europe and UNESCO.<sup>194</sup>

(6) Paras. 29 and 30. There is no prospect of American acceptance of a special amendment procedure, since they believe a scheme on the lines suggested would arouse opposition in the Senate.<sup>195</sup> The importance of finding some more flexible method of amendment than unanimity is related to (a) the duration of the commitment, which may not be more than ten years, and (b) the number of parties, which may not be more than 12. In these circumstances it would be unwise and fruitless for us to push for the procedure you suggest.

(7) Paras. 31 to 37. As my reports of the meetings on December 10th and 13th have shown, the situation has changed, and we are now getting down to drafting and have established a target date. It is certainly not expected here that the final formal conference need last more than a very brief period, although its length may depend on the answer to the question whether other North Atlantic countries will be original signatories or will accede later.<sup>196</sup> This is due for early discussion.

2. You may conclude from these observations that in my view it is unnecessary to pursue further the question of supplementary instructions. Ends.

Washington, December 15, 1948

Those present were as follows:

Canada—Mr. Stone, Mr. Rogers
 United States—Mr. Kennan, Mr. Hickerson, Mr. Reber, Mr. Galloway, Mr. Merrill
 United Kingdom—Mr. Hoyer-Millar, Mr. Henderson
 France—Mr. Bérard, Mr. Wapler
 [Netherlands]—Jonkheer Reuchlin, Mr. Vreede
 Belgium—Mr. Taymans, Mr. Vaes
 Luxembourg—Mr. LeGallais

Mr. Kennan presented a draft of what the United States Working Party thought might be suitable suggestions for Articles IV, V, and XII of the proposed pact.† He suggested that the Working Group proceed from the general to the particular and take up general considerations before discussing specific articles. He then presented a paper suggesting an agenda for the meeting.† With respect to Item 5 of the agenda, he said that whatever the language of the text of the article defining military obligations there would, in fact, be vast differences in the effect of the obligation accepted by the various countries. Mr. Hoyer-Millar suggested the addition to the agenda of the discussion of the possibility of the inclusion of economic and social clauses in addition to the military clauses. In other words, should the pact go beyond military articles? Mr. Kennan thought that the subject of the area involved in the pact should be treated as an article rather than as a general question (this was to include the matter of overseas territories).

Discussion of Item 1 (Procedure of Negotiation)

Mr. Kennan said that the United States feels “quite strongly” that it would “cause unnecessary trouble to us all” to call a formal conference for anything more than signature. Mr. Hickerson said he wanted to talk at a later date about the place of signature. Mr. Hoyer-Millar said that he saw no need for a formal conference — that the Foreign Ministers could just turn up to sign. Mr. Hickerson said that he did not want to follow the San Francisco United Nations technique. Mr. Kennan said he saw no reason to call it a conference at any time. He suggested that the Working Group advise in this sense.

Discussion of Item 2 (Other Countries to be Initially Taken In)

Mr. Kennan said he thought the meeting should discuss how and when before deciding what countries. Mr. Bérard asked if Canada omitted Portugal purposely. Mr. Stone and Mr. Hickerson explained that Canada would not oppose the inclusion of Portugal if overwhelming strategic considerations were brought up. Mr. Kennan said he thought that when the “second reading” was completed and a document had been agreed upon by the Ambassadors’ meeting, and when we have an idea that the document so produced is more or less acceptable, then would be the time to take soundings of the other countries to see if they are willing to join. Mr.

Hickerson said that the United States Government's position differed from that of the other six participants as they have all approved the specific idea of a North Atlantic Pact in principle, but the United States Government has not as yet, although it has approved the general idea of regional pacts. Mr. Kennan said that we must be able to approach the other countries with something fairly firm but not yet final. Mr. Stone explained that the Canadian Working Party thought that there might be advantages in letting other countries have a hand in the drafting and that we should, therefore, approach the other countries before the wording of the pact is too close to being final. Mr. Kennan said it was difficult to define the point at which other countries should be consulted, but that he thought we should have reached it when we have a document which we all feel would be satisfactory to discuss with them but which has not reached the stage at which we would no longer be willing to accept amendments. Mr. Bérard remarked that the French Government was anxious that there should not be too long a delay in approaching other governments because they may take considerable time to act on the invitation.

Mr. Kennan said we should decide at this time what country should approach whom in order that the country which is going to make the approaches will be able to keep in touch with those governments from now on to prepare the way for a formal approach later. Mr. Bérard cautioned that we must be sure that consultation with other powers does not complicate negotiations unduly. Mr. Kennan said that if countries decide to join they should authorize their Ambassadors to join the Ambassadors' Group in Washington. Although he recognized the desirability of some flexibility in the method of approach, he thought there should be some norm which would be considered the ideal method. Jonkheer Reuchlin said that the United States, as the host country, should make both the soundings and the approaches. Mr. Hickerson said he thought the United Kingdom should make the approach to Portugal. Mr. Hoyer-Millar said he thought the approaches would be more fruitful if the United States made all of them since only the United States could give the answers to questions about what the United States was willing to do. He thought, however, that the United Kingdom would be willing to join in an approach to Dr. Salazar if necessary. Mr. Kennan said that, subject to overnight thought, he would give his qualified consent to having the United States make all the approaches. He said that in the approaches he would have to make it plain that "The Pact" and "Military Aid" are not the same thing.

Mr. Kennan asked what countries should be approached, but he said he thought there was no doubt about Iceland, Norway, and Denmark. Mr. Hoyer-Millar said he thought it was necessary to give a warning to watch the timing of the approach to be made to Ireland. Mr. Kennan said he was not inclined to discuss domestic political considerations in relation to the pact and that was the view of the officials in the United States Government. Mr. Hickerson said the United States will not touch the problem of partition. Mr. Kennan remarked that he did not think Irish participation was fundamentally important. He said he would take note of the fact that the United Kingdom might have comments concerning the timing and the method of the approach to Ireland.

Mr. Hickerson said the United States would be glad to see Sweden join the pact if Sweden was willing to do so, but he felt "quite strongly" that we should all proceed on the assumption that Sweden will not participate. He suggested that there should be no direct approach to Sweden but that Norway and Denmark should be told that they can tell Sweden that Sweden will be welcome. He was not willing to risk an almost certain rebuff from Sweden. He saw no reason to make an approach which he felt almost certain would be answered in the negative. Mr. Kennan backed Mr. Hickerson's idea that there should be no initial approach. Mr. Bérard suggested that, according to French information, the Danes may be reluctant to participate. Mr. Kennan remarked that he was making a note that the timing in relation to Denmark would be an important factor. It was agreed that no approach should be made to Sweden, but that Norway and Denmark should be told that Sweden would be welcome and that they may so inform Sweden if they wish.

Mr. Kennan asked the Canadian view concerning Portugal. Mr. Stone again explained that some Canadians had objections to Portugal on ideological grounds but that these ideological objections would not outweigh strategic considerations. Mr. Kennan thought that the Azores outweigh any ideological qualms. The next best route to the Azores would absorb an additional fifteen thousand men for maintenance alone. Mr. Hoyer-Millar said he would like to have the United States Ambassador associate himself with the United Kingdom Ambassador if the latter is to make the approach to Dr. Salazar. Mr. Kennan agreed that while the two Ambassadors should not see Dr. Salazar together, they should certainly do so the same day, and, if possible, in immediate succession.

Mr. Kennan said that the United States feels that Italy's status in relation to the North Atlantic Pact depends upon its relationship to the Brussels Pact. Italy would be eligible for full membership in the North Atlantic Pact if it adhered to the Brussels Pact. The United States is very much concerned about Italy but is anxious to avoid an invitation to Italy which might seem invidious to the other Mediterranean states. Consideration of Italy must be coupled with the consideration of countries like Greece and Turkey. Mr. Bérard talked at length in defence of the inclusion of Italy. Mr. Kennan used some of the Canadian arguments against Mr. Bérard. Mr. Bérard did not like the idea of making Italy's participation contingent upon subscribing to the Brussels Pact. He thought it should be put the other way around, and that Italy's participation in the Brussels arrangement should be made conditional upon participating in the North Atlantic arrangement. Mr. Hoyer-Millar said he doubted if Italian public opinion would support a move to subscribe to the Brussels Pact. Mr. Bérard said he thought Italy was ready to subscribe to both. Mr. Kennan said United States concern was solely to make sure Italy does not feel repelled or rejected. Mr. Reber said that he was anxious that Italy be brought into the Western European community. Mr. Bérard said that North Africa was very important to France and to French defence. Italy is part of the outlying defences of North Africa (Hickerson had earlier cast doubt upon the willingness of the United States to include North Africa). Mr. Bérard went on to say that Italy was really a Western European Country. Mr. Hoyer-Millar and Mr. Hickerson both revealed that there had been a recent approach from Turkey for participation in the North Atlantic Pact, brought on largely by press talk of the inclusion of Italy. Mr. Reber said that he is sure Italy wants to take part in the North Atlantic Pact but is not so sure about its wanting to take part in the Brussels Pact. Mr. Kennan said the United States

Chiefs of Staff now think that Italy is necessary to the defence of Western Europe (Mr. Hoyer-Millar said that the five Western Union Chiefs of Staff, in September, thought the reverse). This marks a change in the outlook of the United States Chiefs of Staff. Mr. Hoyer-Millar said the United Kingdom Staff thinks that the main attack would be against the Brussels Pact Powers proper, across the Rhine. He feared the inclusion of Italy would lead to the dissipation of United States assistance. Mr. Bérard said he thought something would have to be done later about making a Mediterranean arrangement. By telling Greece and Turkey that this was to be done we might manage to make them less anxious about the inclusion of Italy in the North Atlantic Pact. Mr. Kennan suggested that we might return to this question when we discuss the nature of the obligations accepted. Mr. Stone said he thought the Canadian Government would be very much concerned about the extension of Canadian responsibilities under the Pact to the Middle East. He referred to paragraph 13 of the Canadian commentary and said that there would be little difference between that and full membership for Italy, in his personal opinion.

Mr. Taymans said that Belgium had been impressed by the decision of Western Union Chiefs of Staff that Italy would be a military liability. Belgium, however, would not take a definite position at the present time. Jonkheer Reuchlin, in addition to rehearsing some of the arguments already heard, suggested that Italian public opinion might be attaching itself to the idea of remaining neutral. Mr. Kennan summarized the debate on Italy by saying that there were two alternatives: (1) To admit Italy with limited obligations; (2) to leave Italy out, but to make a strong statement to show interest and concern over Italy. Mr. Hickerson and Jonkheer Reuchlin remarked that the DeGasperi Government would probably fall if Italy was not invited.

Washington, December 16, 1948

Those present were as follows:

Canada—Mr. Stone, Mr. Rogers
United States—Mr. Kennan, Mr. Hickerson, Mr. Reber, Mr. Achilles, Mr. Galloway
United Kingdom—Mr. Hoyer-Millar, Mr. Henderson

[Netherlands]—Jonkheer Reuchlin, Mr. Vreede
Belgium—Mr. Taymans, Mr. Vaes
Luxembourg—Mr. LeGallais

Mr. Kennan suggested that the meeting turn to the discussion of the articles as most of the rest of the general questions on the agenda bear closely on specific articles. Mr. Stone suggested the use of a sub-group for the obvious articles. It was agreed to run through the articles seriatim. Mr. Kennan then circulated drafts of Articles 1 and 3 (papers IWG D-3/1 and D-3/2).

Discussion of Article 1 (IWG D-3/1)

The meeting discussed this article, amended it and approved it as amended (see attached paper CWG-1).

Discussion of Article 3 (IWG D-3/2)

Mr. Stone suggested the insertion of the words "through collaboration in economic, social and cultural fields." Mr. Bérard objected to the use of the word "economic" as he thought that the bonds uniting the North Atlantic nations were purely cultural and had nothing to do with economics. A compromise was reached by inserting the words "through collaboration in the cultural, economic and social fields." Mr. Hoyer-Millar said, and he was speaking on behalf of the rest of the Brussels Powers, that if such an article is necessary, and his instructions will not yet let him say that it is, he thinks that this article would be acceptable in its present form (see paper CWG-2 for revision).

Discussion of Article 4 (AWG-D7A)

This article was accepted as drafted.

Discussion of Article 5 (AWG-D7A)

Mr. Kennan said that, in the United States' opinion, this clause should be an acknowledgement of a broad obligation but that the details of the action to be taken in accordance with the obligation must be determined elsewhere. In other words, this clause should not try to define the obligation specifically. Specific actions will have to be determined after the Treaty has been signed. He drew attention to the fact that the draft as submitted was a great departure from the Rio formula, and stressed that this draft had not been circulated outside of the United States Working Group. Neither he nor the other members of the United States Group would be willing to say what Senators might think. Mr. Bérard said he did not like the dropping of the words "help" or "aid" from Article 5. Europe, he said, was longing for a promise of help and this promise appeared to be missing from the United States draft. Mr. Hoyer-Millar asked Mr. Bérard to hold on and said that this draft did not shock him. He suggested the insertion of the words "military or other" in front of "action". It was agreed that the following wording should be used in an effort to meet the French position: "Such military or other action as may be necessary to assist the party so attacked and to restore and assure the security of the North Atlantic area." Mr. Stone suggested the addition of the words "against one or more of them" after "attack" in line 2. There was a debate over what would happen if Iceland, as a non-member, was attacked. It was the consensus of the meeting that we could not give a written guarantee to non-members and the phrase was, therefore, accepted. Mr. Taymans wanted "forthwith" after "will take". This was accepted.

Mr. Kennan said that he wanted more time to think about the area to be defined in paragraph 5. He agreed, in reply to a question by Mr. Hoyer-Millar, that Bornholm was intended to be included. Mr. Bérard objected to the mentioning of the North Pole by name, although he did not object to its inclusion in the area. Mr. Stone suggested that the meeting decide on the places which are to be included in the area and then seek to define the area. This was agreed. Mr. Kennan remarked that the United States Group was not sure what it thinks about the inclusion of North Africa. He proposed that the meeting pass to Article 6 and leave Article 5 in abeyance (see paper CWG-4 for revision of first sentence of Article 5).

Discussion of Article 6 and 12 (Article 12 AWG-D7A)

Mr. Kennan said that the United States accepts the outline given in Article 6 of the Brussels draft as being a correct description of what would occur, but said that he would not like to see it set forth so openly in a public document. He said that the United States Group would prefer to set up a more general organ of consultation. The United States cannot accept the word "determine" under 6(ii)(a) as a legal obligation. The United States could accept "recommend". He assured Mr. Bérard that the United States has no mental reservations. The reason this form of wording is being sought is to meet the constitutional requirements of the United States. Mr. Bérard said he did not like the word "consultative" in front of "Council" because France was hoping for more than just consultation. Mr. Hoyer-Millar asked whether the Council would deal with political matters. Mr. Kennan replied in the affirmative. Mr. Stone presented the Canadian Ambassador's revision of the United States draft of Article 12 (see paper CWG-3 attached). It was agreed that Mr. Achilles would try to draft a compromise on Article 12 to include all the ideas brought forth during the meeting.

Dear Hume [Wrong],

I enclose a draft of today's date of the North Atlantic Treaty. It has been prepared with the text on the right hand side and with observations on the left hand side. The observations, you will note, are taken from the Commentary.

2. Hopkins, Crean and Ignatieff have done a great deal of work in improving on the previous draft, and I hope that you will agree that it marks a very considerable improvement.

3. So far as I am aware, it is entirely consistent now with the Commentary, and I hope that it contains nothing to which you will take exception.

4. As soon as Mike [Pearson] gets back — which is not now expected until noon tomorrow — I shall bring it to his attention and suggest to him that he show it to the Prime Minister.

5. Meanwhile, you may take it as being the texts which officials in the Department would recommend you would be authorized to put up for discussion in Washington.

6. My guess is that the Americans are being much too optimistic about the length of time which will lapse between the conclusion of your work in Washington and the signature of the Treaty. I am convinced that governments, and in particular this Government, will want to have at least two weeks' time to consider the draft agreed to in Washington before they send a Cabinet Minister to attend a formal conference.

7. Brooke Claxton also feels very strongly, and I am inclined to agree with him, that it is completely unrealistic to expect that the formal conference of Cabinet Ministers will be perfunctory. In his opinion, it will last at least two weeks.

8. On the assumption, therefore, that your group can produce a draft treaty by January 15, the earliest date at which it would be signed would, on this view, be about February 15th.

Yours sincerely,
ESCOTT [REID]

On the left hand pages of this document are re-produced extracts from the Canadian Commentary of December 6, 1948, on the Washington Paper of September 9, 1948; on the right hand pages are the Articles of a Draft Treaty.

The Draft Treaty should not be construed as having the approval of the Canadian Government. It represents an attempt at this official level to draft a Treaty on the general lines of the discussions held in Washington during the summer of 1948.

PREAMBLE

WE, the people of the North Atlantic Nations, are dedicated to the cause of peace. We believe in the dignity and worth of every man, woman and child. We affirm our faith in the principles of parliamentary democracy, political liberty and personal freedom which are our common heritage.

WE, are confident that, by applying the principles of self-help and mutual aid, we may contribute to the establishment of a peaceful world in which everyone may live in freedom from fear and want and with liberty of thought and worship.

WE are determined to unite our efforts to maintain peace and to preserve these principles and freedoms.

OUR Governments, therefore, have agreed to this North Atlantic Treaty, and do hereby establish, in the exercise of the inherent right of collective self-defence recognized in Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations, and in accordance with the Principles and Purposes of the Charter, an organization to be known as the "North Atlantic Community" whose member states shall be known as the "North Atlantic Nations".

Observations on the Preamble

It is considered desirable that the Treaty should be easily understood and that it should, if possible, be drawn up in such a way as to strike the imagination of the public and kindle their enthusiasms. Consequently, it is important that every effort be made to draft the Treaty in simple, clear and unambiguous language avoiding "officialese" and pedantic terms which might create an unnecessary bar to understanding.

In pursuance of this objective:

(a) The international security organization established by the Treaty might be called in English "The North Atlantic Community" or "The North Atlantic Alliance" or "The North Atlantic Union"; and in French "La Ligue de l'Atlantique Nord" or "L'Alliance de l'Atlantique Nord", or "L'Union de l'Atlantique Nord".

(b) The Treaty might be given a simple title such as "The North Atlantic Treaty".

(c) The states which sign the Treaty might be called in the Treaty, not "signatory states", "contracting states" nor "High Contracting Parties", but the "North Atlantic Nations".

(d) The Preamble might set forth in a number of short sentences the purposes of the Treaty and be written in the name of the people of the North Atlantic Nations and not in the name of the contracting states.

The Preamble might usefully set forth, in much the same language as in the Preamble to the Brussels Treaty, the common belief of the signatories in the values and virtues of their common civilization and their common determination to work for the promotion of their mutual welfare and the preservation of peace. The Preamble could also make clear that the contracting states are uniting their strength not for the purpose of waging war but for the purpose of preventing war and that the aim of the Treaty is peace.

CHAPTER ONE POLITICAL AND DEFENCE COOPERATION

Article 1

The North Atlantic Nations agree that an armed attack by any state against any North Atlantic Nation is an attack against all the North Atlantic Nations. In accordance with Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations, each North Atlantic Nation undertakes to give immediately to any other North Atlantic Nation which is attacked by any state all the military, economic and other aid and assistance in its power.

Observations on Article 1

The pledge of mutual assistance in the Brussels Treaty comes into effect if one of the signatories is "the object of an armed attack in Europe." The pledge in the Rio Treaty comes into effect "in case of an armed attack which takes place within the region" described in the Treaty; it therefore comes into effect if a non-member state within the safety-zone of the region is attacked.

There are sound arguments against the inclusion in the North Atlantic Treaty of a "safety-zone" provision similar to that in the Rio Treaty, within the geographical limits of which any act of aggression against any state in that zone would mean war with all the parties to the Treaty. Such a proposal would give all the other countries within the North Atlantic zone a very good reason for doing nothing in the way of "mutual aid and self-help" (as demanded by the Vandenberg Resolution); they would be assured of powerful allies without undertaking any commitments, even a commitment to furnish facilities. On the other hand, if the guarantee under the Treaty is limited to attacks on the members of the Organization, the effect would be to increase the risk of a Soviet attack, or of Soviet indirect aggression, against a non-member — such as, say, Sweden.

Since it would be desirable for all the countries in the North Atlantic area to become members of the Organization, it would seem wise to limit the guarantee under the Treaty to attacks on members or states with which defence arrangements have been made. This issue will necessarily have to be left open until soundings have been taken of the North Atlantic countries which were not represented in the Washington talks this summer.

In deciding on a formula, regard should be had to the following considerations:

(a) the firmer the pledge, the greater the effect the Treaty may be expected to have in deterring the Soviet Union and in restoring in Western Europe the confidence necessary for the economic reconstruction and the rearmament of that area; and

(b) the more the pledge is limited by constitutional safeguards, the less controversial it is likely to prove in the domestic political field.

The first of these considerations is clearly the more important. Therefore, if the United States representatives in the forthcoming discussions feel that the United States cannot go as far as the Brussels formula, it is to be hoped that the formula agreed on will be as close to the Brussels formula as is possible.

The pledge of mutual assistance in the event that a contracting state is the object of an armed attack should contain a reference to Article 51 of the Charter which recognizes the "inherent right of individual or collective self-defence" against an armed attack.

Article 2

At the request of the North Atlantic Nation or Nations attacked, and until the North Atlantic Council has reached agreement on collective measures, each North Atlantic Nation will determine the immediate measures which it will individually take in fulfillment of its undertakings under Article 1 of this Treaty and in accordance with the principles of self-help and mutual aid.

Article 3

In addition to any other act which the North Atlantic Community may characterize as an attack within the meaning of Article 1, the following shall be considered as attacks:

(a) Armed attack by any state against the territory, the people, or the land, sea or air forces of another state;

(b) Invasion, by land, sea or air forces of any state, of the territory of another state, through the crossing of boundaries demarcated by treaty, judicial decision, or arbitral award, or, in the absence of frontiers thus demarcated, invasion of a region which is under the effective jurisdiction of another state.

Article 4

Any measures of individual or collective self-defence taken under this Treaty shall be immediately reported to the Security Council of the United Nations and shall be terminated as soon as the Security Council has taken the measures necessary to maintain or restore international peace and security.

Observations on Article 4

The Treaty should provide that any measures of self-defence taken under it shall, in accordance with the provisions of Article 51, be immediately reported to the Security Council and terminated as soon as the Security Council has taken the measures necessary to maintain or restore international peace and security.

Article 5

This Treaty shall not be construed as impairing or conflicting with the obligations of the North Atlantic Nations under the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations. Each North Atlantic Nation undertakes not to conclude any alliance or participate in any coalition directed against any other North Atlantic Nation or to accept obligations in conflict with this Treaty or with the Charter of the United Nations.

Observations on Article 5

It is important that the organization established by the Treaty be kept strictly within the framework of the United Nations.

The Treaty should contain a reference to Article 103 of the Charter to the effect that none of the provisions of the Treaty shall be construed as impairing or conflicting with the rights and obligations of the signatory states under the Charter.

The Treaty should contain a reaffirmation of the undertaking of all Members of the United Nations, set forth in Article 2 (4) of the Charter, not to threaten or use force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state.

Article 6

The North Atlantic Nations undertake to communicate to each other the terms of any undertakings of assistance against aggression which they have given or may in future give or decide to give to other states. Each North Atlantic Nation agrees to refrain from concluding any agreement which will limit its obligations under this Treaty or indirectly create new obligations for the other North Atlantic Nations.

Article 7

The North Atlantic Nations agree to consult concerning any development which might threaten their independence or which might call any of the foregoing undertakings into operation.

Article 8

The North Atlantic Nations agree to make every effort, individually and in common, on the basis of continuous and effective self-help and mutual aid, to strengthen the individual and collective capacity of the North Atlantic Nations to resist aggression.

Article 9

Subject to the provisions of Article 4, each North Atlantic Nation agrees that, if it becomes engaged in hostilities following an armed attack against it or arising in consequence of the application of this Treaty, it will not conclude any armistice or treaty of peace except through the North Atlantic Council and with its approval.

The North Atlantic Community may, on terms to be agreed between the Council and the state concerned, extend some or all of the guarantees of this Treaty to any state whose defence is considered by the Council to be vital to the defence of the North Atlantic Community.

Observations on Article 10

Consequently, every effort should be made to persuade the Scandinavian countries and Iceland and Ireland to become original members of the Organization. If one of them refuses to come in it will be necessary for the states which are willing to join the Organization to consider very carefully whether the Organization can extend guarantees to any country which does not reciprocate, although the strategic importance of bases in such a country might justify special arrangements between the Organization, once it has been set up, and that country.

CHAPTER TWO ECONOMIC, SOCIAL AND CULTURAL COOPERATION

Article 11

The North Atlantic Nations undertake to make every effort in common to eliminate conflict in their economic policies, to coordinate their production, and to encourage the greatest possible development of trade between them.

Article 12

The North Atlantic Nations undertake to make every effort in common to promote the attainment of a higher standard of living by their people and greater economic and social justice, to bring about a better understanding of the principles which form the basis of their common civilization, and to promote cultural exchanges between themselves.

Observations on Articles 11 and 12

As reported on page 13 of the Washington paper of September 9, 1948, the Canadian representatives in the Washington discussions emphasized the importance which they attached to the inclusion in the Treaty of provisions for the encouragement of cooperation among the signatories in fields other than security. In their opinion, such cooperation would contribute directly to general security. They felt that the purpose of the Treaty should not be merely negative but that it should create the only dynamic counter-attraction to totalitarian communism — a free, prosperous and progressive society.

In addition, in order to strengthen the collective capacity of the whole Organization to resist aggression, it is essential that the combined production of goods and services of the members of the Organization should be as great as possible, particularly at a time when a large proportion of this combined production must unhappily be devoted to preparations to resist aggression.

For these reasons, it is important to include in the Treaty effective provisions for consultation, cooperation and common action in the economic field.

Article 13

The North Atlantic Nations agree that in seeking to attain the objectives of this Chapter they will make full use of international economic, social or cultural organizations in which they may be represented.

Observation on Article 13

The section on economic, social and cultural cooperation might include a provision under which the contracting states would agree that they would seek to attain the objectives set forth in this section by making the most effective use possible of other international economic, social or cultural organizations in which the contracting states are or may be represented.

CHAPTER III NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL

Article 14

There is hereby established the North Atlantic Council. The Council shall consist of all the North Atlantic Nations. Each North Atlantic Nation shall have one representative in the Council.

Article 15

The Council may establish such subsidiary organs as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions. The Council may delegate to any organ or officer of the Community such of its own powers as it sees fit and may revoke or modify any such delegation of power at any time.

Observations on Articles 14 and 15

The only organ mentioned in the Brussels Treaty is the "Consultative Council". The Brussels Powers have, however, found it necessary to establish a number of other organs, among them a Chiefs-of-Staff Committee, a Military Supply Board, a Commanders-in-Chief Committee, a Military Committee, and a common secretariat.

It appears evident that the North Atlantic Organization will, in order to be effective, need to have from its outset, most, if not all, of the organs which Western Union has found necessary. The Atlantic Treaty, therefore, should contain a provision for establishing a Consultative Council empowered to set up such organs as from time to time seem necessary, in order that the Treaty may be implemented speedily and effectively.

The association of the Canadian Government with the proposed Treaty must be based upon due constitutional processes. This involves not only approval of the Treaty by Parliament but also ultimate control by the Canadian government of any measures recommended by the Council of the North Atlantic Organization which may entail contributions by Canada of a military or economic nature. The Council should therefore be composed of Cabinet Ministers of the signatory states, who would make recommendations to their governments on policy. The Council would direct its subordinate bodies to carry out planning and required action within the framework of agreed policy.

This does not necessarily mean that every member of the North Atlantic Organization need be represented at all levels in all organs of the Organization. To insist on this would make some of the organs unworkable. But the controlling decision on matters of policy must ultimately rest with the governments of the members of the Organization. Accordingly, all subordinate bodies of the Organization and of its executive agencies would be required to carry out agreed decisions on the basis of the Council's recommendations.

Article 16

The Council shall work out plans to ensure (a) the maintenance of an overwhelming preponderance of military, economic and other force on the side of peace, and (b) prompt and effective action by the North Atlantic Nations under Article 1 of this Treaty.

Article 17

In the event of hostilities arising in consequence of the application of this Treaty, the Council shall perform the functions of the Supreme War Council of the North Atlantic Community.

Article 18

The Council shall normally meet at . In order that the Council may be able to act promptly and effectively, each North Atlantic Nation shall at all times maintain at the seat of the Council a representative accredited to the Council.

CHAPTER FOUR STAFF

Article 19

The Staff shall comprise a Chancellor and such secretarial, administrative and other employees as the Community may require.

Article 20

The Chancellor, who shall be the chief administrative officer of the North Atlantic Community, shall be appointed by the Council.

Article 21

The other members of the Staff shall be appointed by the Chancellor under regulations established by the Council.

The paramount consideration in recruiting the Staff shall be the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity. Due regard shall also be paid to the desirability of an equitable distribution of posts among the nationals of the North Atlantic Nations.

CHAPTER FIVE PEACEFUL SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES

The North Atlantic Nations agree as follows in respect of any dispute which may arise between themselves:

(a) all disputes falling within Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the International Court of Justice shall be referred to the Court and the decision of the Court shall be final and binding;

(b) all other disputes shall be submitted to conciliation;

(c) any party to a dispute which involves questions for which conciliation is appropriate, and other questions for which judicial settlement is appropriate, shall have the right to require that the judicial settlement of the legal questions shall precede conciliation.

It is proposed in the annex to the paper dated September 9, 1948, which resulted from the Washington exploratory talks on security, that the Treaty should include "an undertaking to submit every controversy which may arise among the parties to methods of peaceful settlement." The Brussels Treaty contains an article along these lines which is, however, subject to the qualification that the contracting states accept the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court over disputes inter se — "subject only, in the case of each of them, to any reservation already made by that party when accepting this clause for compulsory jurisdiction to the extent that that party may maintain the reservation."

The inclusion in the North Atlantic Treaty of a provision under which the contracting states would accept without qualification the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court on all legal disputes which may arise inter se would be a useful demonstration of the belief of the signatory states in the rule of law among nations.

The provisions of Article 23 in no way affect the application of relevant provisions or agreements prescribing some other method of peaceful settlement, whether provided for in the Charter of the United Nations or otherwise.

CHAPTER SIX
GENERAL

This Treaty shall be registered with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

The Treaty should contain a provision for registration with the United Nations under Article 102 of the Charter.

Article 26

The Council may invite any state to accede to this Treaty on conditions to be agreed between the Council and the state so invited. Any state so invited may become a party to the Treaty by depositing an instrument of accession with the Chancellor, who will inform each North Atlantic Nation of the deposit of each instrument of accession.

Article 27

The Council may, by resolution, suspend or expel any North Atlantic Nation from the privileges of membership in the North Atlantic Community if a resolution calling for such suspension or expulsion is handed in writing to the Chancellor at least two weeks in advance of its consideration by the Council, and is approved by a two thirds vote of the Council at two meetings of the Council separated by an interval of at least two weeks.

The concluding note of the annex to the Washington paper reads as follows:

“The question of including a provision for disqualification under certain circumstances of any of the signatories from enjoying the benefits of the Treaty requires further consideration.”

Presumably the “certain circumstances” include the coming into power of a communist-dominated government in a contracting state.

The Treaty might provide for the expulsion or suspension of a member by a unanimous vote of the other members or by a vote of, say, two-thirds of all the members.

CHAPTER SEVEN
COMING INTO FORCE

Article 28

This Treaty shall be ratified by the signatory states in accordance with their respective constitutional processes. The instruments of ratification shall be deposited as soon as possible with the Government of ----- which will notify all the signatory states, and the Chancellor when he is appointed, of each deposit.

Article 29

This Treaty shall come into force on the date of the deposit of ratifications by France, the United Kingdom and the United States and by a majority of the other signatory states.

Article 30

This Treaty shall remain in force for twenty-five years. After the end of that period, each North Atlantic Nation shall have the right to cease to be a party to this Treaty one year after it has given notice of denunciation to the Chancellor.

The Brussels Treaty remains in force for fifty years. The Rio Treaty remains in force indefinitely, but any state can denounce the Treaty and its denunciation becomes effective two years later.

Generally speaking, the longer the initial duration of the Treaty, the more effective it is likely to be as a deterrent to aggression and as an encouragement to self-help and mutual aid. The Treaty might, therefore, remain in force for, say, twenty or twenty-five years. The Treaty might also include a provision similar to that in the Brussels Treaty under which, after the end of the initial period, each contracting state would have the right to cease to be a party to the Treaty, provided it had previously given one year's notice of denunciation.

This Treaty, of which the English and French texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited in the archives of the Government of -----, Duly certified copies thereof will be transmitted by that government to the governments of the other signatory states.

In faith whereof, the representatives of the governments of -----, having exhibited their full powers found to be in good and due form, have signed this Treaty. Done at the City of -----, the ----- day of -----, one thousand, nine hundred and forty-nine.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY

I attach for your consideration a letter to Mr. Wrong supplementing the views set forth in the "Memorandum for Guidance of the Canadian Representative" which was approved by Cabinet on December 1st, and in the Canadian Commentary dated December 6th, which has been distributed to the representatives of the other governments participating in the present Washington talks. Mr. Wrong has already commented on the previous draft, and while he has taken the view that he would prefer at this stage only to have direction on specific points, I think there would be some merit in sending supplementary instructions in this form. First, it would be useful for the record. Secondly, it would make our position clear on certain points which will arise, and in particular, on the nature of the pledge.

<sup>197</sup> Il y a une copie de cette note et sa pièce jointe dans les documents de Wrong (volume 5), avec la mention suivante au haut :

There is a copy of this memorandum and its enclosure in the Wrong Papers (volume 5), with the following note at the top:

A later, but out-of-date, edition of E[scott] R[eid]'s supplementary instructions, given me, unsigned, 'for information' by L.B. P[earson] in New York, Dec. 29th H[ume] W[rong]

2. I have in mind that at least certain parts of the document should be approved by the Prime Minister and perhaps by Cabinet — in particular the paragraphs on the nature of the pledge. It will be most unfortunate if the precise nature of the pledge, to which we are prepared to commit ourselves, is not clearly understood. In a recent telegram, Mr. Wrong has applied the acid test. In supporting a formula on the lines of the Brussels pledge (which Cabinet agreed to) "is the Canadian Government prepared to accept 'an automatic commitment to go to war' in the event that the Russians occupy the whole of Spitzbergen and stop there, or if some similar development takes place at a marginal point within the area covered by the agreement?"

3. The suggestion in paragraph 2 of the letter that a Joint Declaration be made at the time of signature would have the additional merit that it might be used as the basis for a resolution which might be introduced in Parliament before the Treaty is actually signed. This would be in line with the procedure followed in introducing the Resolution in respect of the United Nations before San Francisco. A Joint Declaration of this sort might also help to ensure that the explanation of the Treaty during the debates in Congress and Parliament on ratification of the Treaty would follow similar lines and would possibly help to avoid the United States giving one interpretation of the nature of the commitment, while we give another.

4. I have thought it desirable to leave in the suggestion of an Interim Arrangements Agreement, although Mr. Wrong's initial suggestions along these lines at the Ambassadors' meeting on December 13th met with no support. The suggestion that a proposal for interim arrangements might be made was approved by Cabinet.

5. I attach for your signature a Memorandum to the Prime Minister,<sup>198</sup> enclosing a copy of the supplementary instructions to Mr. Wrong for his consideration.

NOT SENT

Dear Mr. Wrong:

You will already have received by telegram the text of the "Memorandum for Guidance of the Canadian Representative in the Forthcoming Series of Informal and Non-Committal Discussions in Washington," which was approved by Cabinet on December 1, 1948. I have also sent you the Canadian Commentary on the Report of the Washington Exploratory Conversations of September 9, 1948, for distribution to the representatives of the other powers taking part in the current talks in Washington. The first memorandum is, in part, a summary of the Commentary, although the reasons for Canada entering into the North Atlantic Treaty, contained in paragraph 2 of the Memorandum, were introduced largely for domestic purposes. I should, however, like to supplement the views set forth in these two documents for your information and guidance during the discussions.

The Treaty and the United Nations

2. There are already indications that one of the arguments which the Communists are busily engaged in making to certain well-meaning people is that the proposed North Atlantic Treaty is a violation of the spirit, if not of the letter, of the United Nations Charter. It might be wise, therefore, for the signatories of the Treaty to make clear in a Joint Declaration at the time of signature, that they continue to adhere to the principles of universal collective security set forth in the Charter, that they have been forced to adopt temporarily the alternative courses open to them under the Charter of collective security agreements only because Soviet intransigence has made it unsafe for them to depend upon a weak system of collective security on a 'universal' basis, and that once an effective United Nations security system has been established they will readily return to a universal system of security. I attach at Annex A a tentative draft text of such a Joint Declaration.†

Organs Established Under the Treaty

3. With regard to Section 5 of the Commentary, we are anxious that the Treaty should be implemented as speedily as possible. It seems probable that the Treaty will not be signed until the middle of February, and that it will not come into force until the middle of April. Next March may well be a period of acute tension with the Soviet Union, and the existence of effective organs during this period might do much to deter any aggressive actions on the part of the Soviet Union, and to give confidence to the people and governments of the Western countries.

4. The Brussels powers consider it unlikely that the organs set up under the Brussels Treaty will be superseded, at any rate in the near future, by North Atlantic agencies. We also understand the United Kingdom and French Governments are most anxious to retain the Brussels agencies. The phrase that M. Schuman used recently in speaking to me of the North Atlantic agencies was that they would be "gradually superimposed on the Brussels agencies." Until the Atlantic agencies are set up, I would suggest that the United States and Canada might continue to cooperate with the Brussels agencies. Such cooperation would no doubt go far to ensure that effective organs are in being to meet a possible Soviet threat in the spring, before the Council established under the Atlantic Treaty is in being or has had the opportunity to set up the necessary organs to implement the Atlantic Treaty.

5. An alternative and perhaps preferable method of meeting the problem would be to sign an Interim Arrangements Agreement at the same time as the Treaty is signed. You will recall that the Cabinet Memorandum of December 1 said that, should signature of the Treaty not take place for some time, or should it seem likely that some months may elapse between the signature of the Treaty and its coming into force, it might be necessary to make provision at the time of signature for setting up an Interim Council empowered to establish interim organs. I attach at Annex B a draft suggesting the lines upon which an Interim Arrangements Agreement might be drawn up.†

6. If an Interim Arrangements Agreement is thought to be desirable, it should, of course, be drafted in such a way as to avoid the necessity of ratification by the United States Senate. This should not be difficult, since it would give rise to no international obligations but would merely constitute organs for consultation and planning.

7. Such an agreement might well be advantageous from Canada's point of view. Our bargaining position will be stronger during the course of negotiations for the Treaty than after it is signed. It might therefore be wise for us before signature of the Treaty to secure agreement on Canadian membership of an Interim Chiefs-of-Staff Committee. This would frustrate any efforts on the part of the United Kingdom or the United States to exclude us from membership on the permanent organ.

8. Whatever procedure is adopted, it is important that we avoid the monopolization of authority by the United Kingdom and the United States which occurred in the last war. We should be unwilling to accept such an arrogation of authority in our peacetime planning, or in the conduct of another war; although in the latter event, no doubt a substantial delegation of power would be necessary for the speedy and effective conduct of the war.

9. In paragraph 5(f) of the Commentary, the view is expressed that the Treaty should contain a provision for registration with the United Nations under Article 102 of the Charter. It seems important that it be made clear at some point in the informal discussions that we do not consider that there is any legal necessity for registering with the United Nations any of the arrangements which are made after the Treaty comes into force. In our view, therefore, there would be no necessity to register decisions of the Council to set up various organs or, indeed, any other defence arrangements reached by the signatory powers under the Treaty. (As you know, this problem has arisen with respect to inter-governmental agreements reached as the result of recommendations of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence.) If an Interim Arrangements Agreement were signed, it would appear necessary to register it with the United Nations, although as soon as it lapsed it would, in our view, be unnecessary to register arrangements for the establishment of subsidiary organs under the Treaty.

Original Members of the Organization

10. With regard to Section 6 of the Commentary, the Canadian Government is anxious that Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Iceland and Ireland, or at least as many of these countries as possible, should be original members. In our view, the adherence of these countries at the outset would demonstrate clearly to the Canadian public that we were not undertaking commitments disproportionate to those undertaken by states more directly menaced by the Soviet Union. The adherence of these countries would consequently assist us in gaining the measure of public support for the Treaty which will be essential if we are to contribute our fair share to the commitments which will arise under the Treaty.

11. I realize that there are difficulties in the way of all the Scandinavian countries joining at the outset, particularly in view of Sweden's attitude. While every effort should be made to bring all the Scandinavian countries in, we may have to be satisfied, at least at the outset, with a provision in the Treaty under which the North Atlantic Organization, once it is set up, will be empowered to make special defence arrangements with a country.

Portugal

12. During the discussion in Cabinet of the "Memorandum for Guidance of the Canadian Representative" it was decided that no reference should be made to the position of Portugal in any document for circulation to other Governments. It was decided that you should not take any initiative in raising the question of the association of Portugal with the Treaty Powers or with the North Atlantic Organization after it is set up. If, however, the matter is raised you should intimate that, if there are sufficient strategic reasons for inviting Portugal to become an original member, or to be associated with the Organization after it is set up, the Canadian Government would not be inclined to oppose such arrangements on the grounds that Portugal might not be able to meet the ideological principles which are referred to in the preamble of the Brussels Treaty and which, presumably, will be reaffirmed in the North Atlantic Treaty.

The Area to be Covered by the Provisions for Mutual Assistance

13. Nothing is said in Section 7 of the Commentary concerning attacks on colonies and dependencies. It is important that the guarantee be limited, in general, to the metropolitan areas of member states and of other states with which the Organization makes defence arrangements. Perhaps the best method would be to specify those territories outside the metropolitan areas of the member states which would be covered by the guarantee. Thus Greenland, the Azores and any other territories which are of strategic importance to the defence of Western Europe and this Continent, and are within the North Atlantic region might be specified. It would be for consideration whether French North Africa, for example, should be included. In any event, we can see no objection to a provision in the Treaty requiring consultation between the parties should an attack be made on a dependent territory in another region.

The Nature of the Pledge

14. The main question in the drafting of the Treaty will of course be whether the pledge of mutual assistance is to be based on the Brussels formula or the Rio formula.

15. Having in mind the position taken by the United States thus far, a pledge based on the Rio formula may be the most that we can expect. Indeed it may be contended that so long as United States forces are in Western Europe, such a pledge would in effect be equivalent to the Brussels pledge, since the President, as Commander-in-Chief, could and no doubt would order the United States forces to resist in advance of a declaration of war by Congress.

16. While the value of a pledge based on the Rio formula should not be underestimated, the Canadian Government would prefer the pledge to follow as closely as possible the Brussels pledge. Such a pledge would in our view have a greater deterrent effect on the Soviet Union than the Rio pledge, and would make it more difficult for Soviet leaders to misconstrue, or to mislead others about the firmness of, United States foreign policy.

17. We hope, therefore, that you may be able, during the forthcoming discussions, to persuade the United States representatives to go further in the direction of the Brussels formula than they have hitherto been willing to go. Certainly, whatever formula is worked out, what is being undertaken should be made clear beyond possibility of doubt. It would be most unfortunate if, during the debates in Congress and Parliament on ratification of the Treaty, the United States were to interpret the pledge in one way and Canada in another.

18. It may be argued that the form of the pledge will not make much difference since, in any event, an attack by the Soviet Union on a member of the alliance would inevitably involve all the members in a major war. If this is so, however, it seems desirable that the pledge should reflect these facts.

19. It may also be argued that the acceptance by the United States of the Brussels formula might be interpreted to mean that, in the event of an attack in Europe, the United States would have to throw all of its forces into Western Europe. This seems to us to be a strained interpretation of the Brussels pledge, since it would be the responsibility of the Chiefs of Staff of the North Atlantic Organization to work out the strategic concept of how or where a war would be fought in given circumstances.

20. Nor, in our understanding, would United States constitutional processes be affected adversely by the acceptance of the Brussels formula. Whatever formula is eventually agreed upon, however, I hope that the United States will not insist on the inclusion of any such phrase as "in accordance with its constitutional processes." It is surely evident that no signatory will commit itself to act otherwise than in accordance with its constitutional processes. If something other than this is meant by the use of such a phrase, the United States representatives should be asked to make their position clearer.

21. It would seem to me that the real objection of the United States representatives to the Brussels formula is not a constitutional one but is based on the political undesirability of the present Congress binding future Congresses. Under the Brussels formula, the right to declare war would still be vested exclusively in Congress, but Congress would be under an obligation to declare war if in future an attack is made against a co-signatory.

22. In our view, under the Brussels formula, the question whether an attack has occurred (which would bring the commitment into operation) is one of fact. Since the North Atlantic Council will not be given the authority to decide whether the signatories will go to war, it will in practice be left to the signatories themselves to determine whether an attack has taken place. This, it seems to us, makes unnecessary and undesirable the inclusion in the pledge of an explicit provision that each state will determine whether an attack has occurred within the meaning of the pledge. It remains our view that the pledge should be firm and that it should be clear from the language of the Treaty that the signatories are determined to resist by force of arms any further encroachments by the Soviet Union in the area covered by the pledge. If, for example, Norway were a signatory, and Spitzbergen were attacked or occupied by Soviet forces, the other signatories should in our opinion be required to go to war.

23. The United States is not alone in foreseeing certain difficulties in the way of securing public support for a pledge along the lines of the Brussels formula. While the press reaction in Canada to the North Atlantic Treaty has on the whole been favourable, some editorials have already appeared in Canadian papers urging that Canada should not enter into a Treaty which contains an automatic commitment to go to war. We propose to meet this by stating that the national interest demands the conclusion of a treaty which is best calculated to prevent war, and that the best chance of preventing war lies in making it clear to the Soviet Union that war with one of the signatories means war with all.

Economic and Social Cooperation

24. Section 9 of the Commentary contains the Canadian views concerning the importance of including in the Treaty provision for consultation, cooperation and common action in the economic field. Plans for the mobilization of the maximum military strength on the part of the Organization would not be fully effective without complementary plans for the pooling of essential resources and for the most economic combination of the production facilities of the signatory powers. Some countries are better suited than others for the production of certain types of material. Similarly, it would be more economical to have some countries specialize in certain branches of research and development.

25. If, therefore, the Treaty is to have its full effect in deterring the Soviet Union from aggression and in strengthening the collective capacity of the whole Organization to resist aggression, it should provide for continued consultation, cooperation and common action in the economic field. For this purpose, an Article along the lines of paragraph three of the Annex to the Washington paper of September 9th would be satisfactory, although we should prefer that the Article be written positively, rather than contain a negative qualifying clause, as suggested in the Annex. Thus we might say that in the cooperation envisaged the North Atlantic Nations "will make full use of international economic, social or cultural organizations on which they are or may be represented." I do not think that such a clause would imply that we wish to establish new agencies, while it would state in positive form that existing organizations, such as O.E.E.C., the Economic Commission for Europe and the specialized agencies of the United Nations will be used to the full, thus avoiding duplication.

Future Procedure

26. I am glad to learn that your group in Washington is going to try to produce a complete Treaty text and proposals on original participants and related questions by the middle of January. I very much doubt, however, whether the treaty could be ready for signature by February 1st. The draft Treaty text prepared in Washington will, of course, have to go before Cabinet, together with recommendations on the amendments which we think might usefully be made in the draft before it is signed. My guess is that we will require at least two weeks here between receipt of the Washington draft and the opening of the formal conference. This would mean that the conference could not open until early in February.

27. How long the conference is likely to last, I am not prepared to say. I hope it would not last longer than two weeks; I am sure it will last longer than a few days. It must be remembered that the discussions up to January 15, 1949, will all have been "informal, non-committal and exploratory." I do not think it is reasonable to expect to move from that situation to signature of a treaty of this importance in less than a month.

28. If your discussions end about January 15, and if the formal conference opens towards the beginning of February, it may be desirable for the Government to ask Parliament to adopt a resolution of the kind which Parliament adopted before the San Francisco Conference. Officers of the Department are now working on a draft of such a resolution. One advantage of putting such a resolution before Parliament would be that it might tend to blunt the edge of the criticism that the Government intends to sign a North Atlantic Treaty without first taking Parliament and the people into its confidence.

29. An additional reason for suggesting in paragraph 2 that a Joint Declaration should be made at the time of signature is that the resolution to be submitted to Parliament could be based on it. If this procedure is followed a Joint Declaration might help to ensure that the explanation of the Treaty during the debates in Congress and Parliament on ratification of the Treaty would follow similar lines, and would possibly help to avoid the United States giving one interpretation of the commitment while we give another.

General Spirit of the Treaty

30. As you have no doubt noticed from Canadian newspapers, the Government is being severely criticized in the great majority of the French-language newspapers for its advocacy of a North Atlantic Treaty. I am convinced, however, that the general attitude of French-speaking Canadians is not adequately reflected by the editorials in the French language press. It is nevertheless of very great importance that the kind of Treaty which is eventually presented to the Canadian Parliament for approval should be one most calculated to appeal to all sections of Canadian opinion.

31. There is, I think, no doubt that the Canadian public would be much more wholeheartedly in favour of a Treaty which has a positive and moral content than of one which is little more than a military alliance. Consequently, I hope that you will be successful in convincing your colleagues in Washington of the necessity of including in the Treaty provisions for economic, social and cultural cooperation between the signatories along the lines I have suggested.

32. Mr. St. Laurent, as you know, has emphasized in every one of his public speeches on the Treaty the importance which he attaches to the Treaty including positive provisions for cooperation in fields other than military. His difficulties in the House of Commons will be increased if the Treaty does not adequately meet the specifications which he has laid down.

Yours sincerely,
[ESCOTT REID]

TELEGRAM WA-3177

Washington, December 17, 1948

TOP SECRET. IMPORTANT.

North Atlantic Treaty. This message is designed to assist you on your return to Ottawa in catching up with developments since the discussions were resumed here on December 10th. I have reported the main points that arose at the meetings of the Ambassadors group on the 10th and 13th in my messages WA-3142 and WA-3150. The agreed record of these meetings will shortly be available and will be forwarded by bag.

2. Since then there have been two meetings of the Working Committee at which considerable progress has been made. It is apparent that the end product will contain little or no matter which was not included in the Annex to the Washington paper of September 9th and will follow the proposals in the Annex fairly closely.

3. There is some difficulty about reporting discussions in the Working Group as their recommendations are likely to be revised at the meetings with the Ambassadors. I do not intend to submit texts to you as they are agreed on in the Working Group, and I am endeavouring to arrange that the Ambassadors Group should meet fairly frequently so as to ensure that the same points are referred to all the Governments. The following paragraphs indicate the stage that has been reached in the Working Group, which is now meeting daily. The Ambassadors Group will deal with them early next week.

(a) A formal conference is unnecessary, and the negotiations should be carried on in Washington under current procedure. There should be a final meeting attended, if possible, by the Foreign Ministers for signature. (I think that the United States might support having the signature take place in Ottawa with Canada as the depository of the Treaty and ratifications. If this looks advantageous from the point of view of domestic politics, we should be ready to say so before very long, but the idea can, of course, readily be killed.)

(b) The Ambassadors should prepare the Treaty in a form which would be firm but not final before a formal approach is made to other North Atlantic countries. This approach should be carried out by the United States, except possibly in the case of Portugal. In the case of Ireland the United States would reject any attempt to bargain over the partition issue.

(c) The following countries should certainly be approached initially: Iceland, Norway, Denmark, Ireland and Portugal. There has been strong emphasis on the strategic necessity of including Portugal which overruled our doubts arising from its form of Government.

(d) Because it is considered almost certain that Sweden would refuse an invitation, Sweden should not be directly approached, but the Danes and Norwegians might be asked to intimate to Sweden that they would be welcome if they wished to participate.

(e) The question of Italy is still open. The French are pressing strongly for Italian participation, and the British are opposed. The United States insists that Italian security must be covered in some way. They still suggest adhesion to the Brussels Pact leading to membership in the North Atlantic Pact. The United States Chiefs of Staff have changed their views and now consider Italy necessary for the defence of Western Europe.

(f) Some understanding should be reached about reassuring Greece, Turkey, Iran, and Italy if Italy is not included in the Pact. We are arguing that this is a matter for the United States and the United Kingdom rather than the North Atlantic Group.

4. In addition the Working Group has considered draft texts covering paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7 and 12 of the Annex to the Washington paper. This consideration has reached the following stage:

(a) Paragraphs 1 and 2. Insert a single article which will repeat the language of article 2 (3 and 4) of the Charter. Since we desire participation of States not members of the United Nations, this repetition of general obligations of United Nations members is considered useful.

(b) Paragraph 3. The British and French are cold towards a general pledge of economic and social collaboration, but we can probably get a clause in saying that the parties will encourage cooperative efforts between any or all of them in this field, subject to the employment as much as possible of existing international organizations.

(c) Paragraph 4. An article should contain an undertaking to strengthen individual and collective capacity to resist aggression on the lines of the Vandenberg resolution.

(d) Paragraph 5. The State Department, to our surprise has produced a very tentative draft omitting references to constitutional processes and containing a pledge to take military or other action in the event of an attack against any of the parties. I shall submit the full text to you as soon as it becomes somewhat firmer.

(e) Paragraph 7. The definition of the area to be covered is now under consideration. It seems certain to include the Metropolitan territories of the parties in Europe and North America and their island territories in the North Atlantic. The definition proposed by the Brussels Permanent Commission would have covered the whole Mediterranean and the Suez Canal. We are resisting this. The French, however, are pressing, not unreasonably, for the inclusion of Morocco and Algiers,<sup>199</sup> partly on the ground that Algiers is part of Metropolitan France and Morocco faces the North Atlantic. It has been decided to postpone an attempt at exact definition until decision has been reached on the participants, especially Italy.

(f) Paragraph 12. The only agency directly established by the Treaty will probably be a Council. There is difficulty in providing that this must both be on the Ministerial level and able to function continuously. We have put forward a draft, which is under consideration as a counter draft to a clumsy American proposal.

5. Since the aim of this series of discussions is to produce a Treaty acceptable to the seven Governments although subject to later amendment after other countries have been brought in, it will be useful if quick preliminary approval or criticism can be given in Ottawa to specific points as they emerge from the Ambassadors meetings. There will have to be an opportunity for revision when a complete text is developed, but unless the major provisions are agreed currently the negotiations may drag on. If you agree, I shall submit as soon as possible after each meeting of the Ambassadors the points accepted (or the area of difference) for your consideration.

At a meeting of the Working Group on 17 December, the French representative also advocated inclusion of Tunisia.

Procès-verbal de la réunion du Groupe de travail
Minutes of Meeting of Working Group

Washington, December 17, 1948

Those present were as follows:

Canada—Mr. Stone, Mr. Rogers
 United States—Mr. Kennan, Mr. Hickerson, Mr. Achilles, Mr. Galloway, Mr. Murrell
 United Kingdom—Mr. Hoyer-Millar, Mr. Henderson
 France—Mr. Bérard, Mr. Wapler
 [Netherlands]—Jonkheer Reuchlin, Mr. Vreede
 Belgium—Mr. Taymans, Mr. Vaes
 Luxembourg—Mr. LeGallais

Mr. Kennan accepted the understanding, on the Working Group level, that the United States will make all approaches to other countries, with reservations in the cases of Portugal and Ireland.

Mr. Bérard said he might want something about the implementation of Article 1 said in Article 6 (sometimes called Article 12). He wanted the Council to act as an organ of conciliation as well as an organ of defence. Mr. Hoyer-Millar did not want to take the chance that European squabbles would be settled under the North Atlantic Pact instead of through some European organization. Mr. Bérard wanted something put in Article 6 to emphasize the defensive functions of the Council, but he wanted also to show that that was not its sole function by making note of its conciliatory duties. Mr. Stone said the Canadian Group would want to look at this suggestion before accepting it. Mr. LeGallais said he would favour Bérard's suggestion. Mr. Hoyer-Millar remarked that the British Government had looked upon the Council's function as being almost entirely military.

Article 5 (IWG D-3C)

Mr. Achilles introduced a re-wording of the first sentence of Article 5 for the approval of the meeting. Mr. Kennan said that the reaction to the wording put forth by the United States Working Group yesterday and today had been favourable, although the Working Group had not yet tried to get any Congressional reaction. It was agreed that no adverse comments had been made on the first sentence of Article 5 today.

Mr. Kennan said that Africa and Italy were intimately connected. If Italy was not included in the area he was not sure whether the United States would be willing to have the pact cover North Africa. The United States Working Group has given further consideration to the problem of Italy. The best solution might be to have Italy invited to accede to the North Atlantic Pact and, at the same time, to work out some sort of association with the Brussels Powers. An idea that had occurred to him this afternoon was that we might invite Italy by a note to join the North Atlantic Pact and arrange to have Italy write a note in reply declining, the two notes to be so arranged as to show very close association between Italy and the North Atlantic and, at the same time, to settle Italian political differences by proving that Italy was not rejected but that she, at the same time, had not undertaken any military obligations which she could carry out under the Peace Treaty. This suggestion was based on the assumption that Italy did not really wish to subscribe to the pact. One effect of this manoeuvre might be to keep North Africa out of the area. Mr. Bérard remarked that the exclusion of North Africa would not be satisfactory from the French point of view. Algeria is part of Metropolitan France. Algeria should be included and so should Morocco and Tunisia. Mr. Kennan assured Mr. Bérard that the United States is not averse to the inclusion of North Africa but that no firm decision has yet been reached. Mr. Hoyer-Millar asked where the Eastern most line would be drawn if Italy were included. Mr. Kennan replied: Algeria. Mr. Bérard asked that Tunisia should be included. Tunisia and Italy, he said, were closely connected. Mr. Taymans remarked that if North Africa was included consideration might have been given to other parts of Africa. Mr. Kennan replied that the United States cannot get involved in Africa. Mr. Taymans said the inclusion of Algeria but not of the Belgian Congo would raise grave difficulties with public opinion in Belgium. Mr. Hoyer-Millar raised the question of the British troops in the Suez Canal zone. Mr. Kennan said that this would drag the pact farther East than the United States was willing to go. The United States wants to keep to the North Atlantic: to go further makes the pact anti-Russian. Mr. Kennan said that there should be further attempts to try to find out what would be the Italian reaction to an invitation. If we discover that Italy would refuse an invitation obviously we need not argue about her further. If Italy were excluded either by her own action or lack of an invitation, her status would be the same as that of Greece and Turkey. Italy might, like Sweden, be more useful as a neutral. Mr. Bérard said he wanted a memorandum setting forth the pros and the cons of Italian participation presented to the Ambassadors to guide them in their discussions.

The Report of the Working Group to the Ambassadors

It was agreed that Mr. Stone should be responsible for preparing a draft of a report from the Working Group to the Ambassadors. Such a report should contain an outline of the Working Group's opinions on the general questions which were discussed, should set forth the agreed articles and should list the unresolved articles (concerning Italy and the scope, for example), and should set forth the different views in respect of the last category. The summary should note that the views given were those of the Working Group only.

Article 6/12 (IWG D-3d, CWG-5)

Mr. Bérard said that France had originally wanted a pledge of automatic help. From there it had hoped to get a pledge of immediate help. Now France wanted, at least, some mention of help. Mr. Bérard would like the Treaty to say that the Council will, in particular, immediately set up a defence committee. He wanted to include the spirit of the London draft, if not its wording.

A sub-committee, consisting of Mr. Bérard, Mr. Achilles and Mr. Henderson, left the room to try to agree on a fresh draft for the meeting. They came back later with document CWG-5/2. Mr. Kennan said he wished to consider this paper over the week-end and that in any case he would wish to water down the second sentence slightly to eliminate the word "measures". It was agreed that further discussion of this point should be deferred until Monday.

Articles 8, 9 and 11 (IWG D-3/3)

Mr. Hoyer-Millar handed around a draft article (marked BWG-1), the sense of which declared that none of the earlier treaties entered into by the parties was suspended or negated by the present treaty. Mr. Kennan said he thought he could accept the first paragraph of the United Kingdom draft. He did not like the second paragraph concerning coalitions. It was agreed, tentatively, to accept the first paragraph and to place it probably after the combined clause of Articles 8, 9, and 11. The meeting then accepted the United States draft of Articles 8, 9, and 11, headed "Article Y".

Mr. Kennan said that the United States accepts the London draft of Article 10. He thought the language of this article included any situation anywhere in the world of interest to any party. Mr. Hoyer-Millar said he thought it might be well to make it explicit somewhere that overseas territories were included. Mr. Kennan said he thought this was superfluous. Article 10 of the London draft was accepted.

Article "Z" (IWG D-3/4)

Mr. Hoyer-Millar said that, as drawn this article transfers the onus for refusing to allow the entrance of Greece and Turkey from the North Atlantic Powers to the Brussels Powers. It was agreed that the phrase "North Atlantic and Western European" should be included in place of the language already in the draft. Mr. Kennan did not think any more accurate wording could be used to describe the area until a decision had been taken about Italy.

Article on Duration

Mr. Kennan said that if the Treaty was confined to the North Atlantic Powers the United States would probably be willing to have the duration longer than if the area extended further East. Jonkheer Reuchlin asked if the United States would object to binding the next generation. Mr. Kennan replied that he did not think the United States Group could go beyond the forty-year period mentioned by Mr. Byrnes in his offer to the Soviet Union. Mr. Achilles spoke of twenty years as a convenient term. Mr. Hickerson said there had been no attempt to check with Senators. However, he thought it would be wise to keep the duration in multiples of four years in order to keep the time at which the pact would fall in a year when there would be neither a Presidential nor a Congressional election. Mr. Kennan said that the United States could accept the language of ratification of the London draft provided the time was left blank. He thought that a long-term pact had a less anti-Soviet appearance than a short-term one.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY

As you know, the Brussels Powers have circulated to the other participants in the Washington discussions a draft text of a North Atlantic Pact, as prepared by their Permanent Commission. They have also circulated a commentary on their text.

2. Mr. Wrong has reported that the general impression in Washington is that the Brussels Powers took a long time to produce very little, and that this impression seems to be shared by the representatives of the Brussels Powers in Washington. Mr. Heeney's comment is that the Brussels mountain laboured and brought forth a deformed mouse.

3. The Canadian commentary was circulated in Washington on Tuesday, December 14, but we have not yet circulated a draft treaty.

4. I think that there is a good deal to be said for us now authorizing Mr. Wrong to circulate our draft treaty in its present form. The latest draft, which is dated December 17, represents, I think, a very great improvement over previous drafts. It has been very much cut down in length and is now in complete accord with the Canadian commentary.

5. Since, in its present form, it is a joint product of Hopkins, Ignatieff, Crean and myself, I feel I can say that, in my opinion, it is a very workmanlike job.

6. It contains now, I think, nothing which is superfluous or likely to cause unnecessary controversy. We have gone through it many times, article by article, and have removed anything which, in our opinion, is not wise or useful to put forward.

7. It is, of course, entirely clear that, no matter how great the effort we make, we shall not be able to persuade the other participants in the informal discussions in Washington to agree to precisely the kind of treaty which we want, the outlines of which are given in the memorandum approved by Cabinet on December 1. However, I am sure you will agree, from your experience in international discussions, that our chances of getting something pretty close to the kind of treaty we want will be very considerably increased if our own treaty draft is taken as a basis, or the basis, of discussion in the present talks in Washington.

8. Since the Brussels draft is so imperfect there is, I think, a good chance that, if we can get our draft before the participants as early as possible next week, it will be found by the end of the week that our draft is being used as the basis of discussion, even though this will not be explicitly admitted.

9. Any danger that the circulation in Washington of the Canadian draft treaty would tie the hands of the Government would, I think, be slight. In the first place, we could, as suggested in the note on the cover of the draft, state that the draft should not be considered as having the approval of the Canadian Government, but that it represents an attempt, on the official level, to draft a treaty on the general lines of the discussions held in Washington during the summer of 1948. Secondly, we are protected by the precedent set by the Brussels Powers, who have circulated a draft but who, as reported by Mr. Wrong, have taken the position, with which everyone agrees, that the articles in the draft treaty are no more than suggestions.

10. Mr. Wrong, as you know, was, until a week ago, opposed to the circulation of the Canadian commentary. He changed his mind after the Brussels Powers had agreed to circulate their draft treaty and commentary. In order that the press could be informed that there had been no exchange of papers, the Brussels documents were not presented at a full meeting.

11. Mr. Wrong may still have some hesitations about circulating a Canadian draft of a treaty, but I should think that the considerations which led him to urge that our commentary be circulated should equally lead him to concur in the circulation of a draft treaty.

12. I sent Mr. Wrong, in Friday's bag, a copy of the draft treaty, so that if you should decide to instruct him to circulate it, he could have copies mimeographed in Washington immediately after making any revisions that occur to you.

13. I attach two copies of our draft treaty.

14. I am sending you a separate note, of today's date, on the subject of the supplementary letter of instructions to Mr. Wrong.<sup>200</sup> There is not the same degree of urgency about this supplementary letter of instructions as there is about the draft treaty, but I would hope that you may be able to sign it as early as possible next week.

15. I am also sending you Volume 4 of your personal duplicate file on the North Atlantic Treaty. You will find, at the bottom of the file, the Washington paper of September 9 and the memorandum which you presented to Cabinet on October 6.

TOP SECRET. IMPORTANT.

North Atlantic Treaty. My WA-3177 of December 17th. A meeting of the Ambassadors' group is called for December 22nd which is expected to consider a comprehensive report from the Working Group. Stone is drafting this report. It will show a substantial area of agreement, and the remaining differences ought to be soluble.

2. The Working Group's report will include draft articles for the whole Treaty except possibly the preamble, to some of which reservations will be attached by certain members. It will also cover questions of original membership and future procedure.

3. In the Working Group the State Department representatives have shown themselves much readier than before to consider a fairly lengthy term for the Treaty, and have suggested as possible an engagement for twenty or even forty years.

4. We expect to be sending you a fairly lengthy report after the Ambassadors' meeting on Wednesday, and we hope that it will be possible for you to let us have at least your initial comments a few days thereafter, in spite of the holiday season.

*Procès-verbal de la réunion du Groupe de travail
Minutes of Meeting of Working Group*

Washington, December 20, 1948

Those present were as follows:

Canada—Mr. Stone, Mr. Rogers

United States—Mr. Kennan, Mr. Hickerson, Mr. Achilles, Mr. Galloway, Mr. Murrell

United Kingdom—Mr. Hoyer-Millar, Mr. Henderson

France—Mr. Bérard, Mr. Wapler

[Netherlands]—Jonkheer Reuchlin, Mr. Vreede

Belgium—Mr. Taymans, Mr. Vaes

Luxembourg—Mr. LeGallais

After some preliminary discussion the meeting turned to a consideration of a draft report on the deliberations of the Working Group for submission to the Committee of Ambassadors. The Working Group, at the same time, considered the first international draft of a pact. All references in these Minutes are to the articles as numbered in the new draft (draft 4).

The report was accepted with French and Netherlands reservations concerning the mentioning of the International Court of Justice. The French wanted the process spelled out and the Netherlands were not sure that they could allow the complete suppression of Article 2 of the London draft.

Article 2

It was noted that the meeting would have to ask the Ambassadors what should be done about the inclusion of this article.

Article 3

No comment.

Article 4

Mr. Hoyer-Millar said the United Kingdom would probably want something said about overseas territories.

Paragraph 1 was accepted with only one small verbal change in the text of the article.

The United States Working Group presented, and then withdrew, a new draft (AWG D-8) of paragraph 2 of Article 5, defining the area to be covered. Argument at once arose concerning North Africa. Mr. Bérard reiterated French unhappiness about the hesitation being shown over the inclusion of North Africa. Mr. Kennan said he was tentatively opposed to the inclusion of any part of North Africa. Mr. Hoyer-Millar said his instructions required him to say that he thought Africa north of 30° north should be included where the territory was owned or occupied by forces of the participating powers. Mr. Bérard said France would not be satisfied with the inclusion of Algeria alone or of Algeria and Morocco alone: Tunisia must, he said, be added as it was impossible to discriminate against Tunisia. He said the instructions from his Government were to the effect that France cannot accept the treaty unless North Africa is included. Mr. Taymans said that Belgium did not want any mention of Africa in the draft at all, but if Africa is mentioned he will have to press for the inclusion of the Belgian Congo. Mr. LeGallais said he sided with his Belgian colleague. It was decided that the report to the Ambassadors should show the United States, Canada, Belgium and Luxembourg in favour of the United States draft, and France, the United Kingdom and the Netherlands in favour of the London draft. The report was not, however, to enter into a discussion of what parts of North Africa were to be included but was to confine itself to the general principle of including any part of North Africa.

Mr. Kennan at first suggested the addition of a new paragraph 4 to provide for allowing the Security Council to use the agencies of the North Atlantic Pact under Article 53 of the United Nations Charter. In view, however, of the use in that article of the words "but no enforcement action shall be taken under regional arrangements or by regional agencies without the authorization of the Security Council . . .," the Working Group did not feel drawn towards the United States suggestion and Mr. Kennan withdrew it. Jonkheer Reuchlin said that he thought paragraph 2 of Article 6, as drafted, was unnecessary and redundant as the subject was already covered, in his opinion, in Article 1. He wished a note to this effect to be made in the report to the Ambassadors.

Article 7

Accepted without comment.

Article 8

Mr. Kennan said the United States does not like the inclusion of a reference to the Defence Committee because it might be held, for example, to mean that the Icelanders are compelled to sit on the defensive body. Mr. Kennan seemed to be implying that he hoped the present Western Union Military Committee would continue to function and that the smaller stepping-stone countries would not be represented on it but would have to be satisfied with general control through the Council. He said, however, that on his personal responsibility he would be willing to go as far as the draft AWG D-8. The meeting amended the United States draft to read as follows: "The High Contracting Parties hereby establish a Council to facilitate implementation of the present treaty. The Council shall set up such subsidiary bodies as may be necessary; in particular, it shall establish immediately a defence committee which shall recommend measures for the implementation of Articles 3 and 5 in order to ensure the effective defence of the North Atlantic area."

Mr. Kennan referred to the French desire that the Council act as a board of conciliation for the participants in the pact (this question is related to Article 1). He asked Mr. Bérard if he had a draft of the French proposal but Mr. Bérard did not. Mr. Bérard said that he was ready to draw up the provision for the Board to have conciliatory functions if such a provision was necessary from the point of view of Canada and the United States. Mr. Stone assured Mr. Bérard that it was not necessary from the Canadian point of view. Jonkheer Reuchlin asked that note be made of the fact that the Netherlands favours a reference to section 36 (2) of the Statute of the International Court under Articles 1 or 8.

Article 9

Was accepted as amended.

Article 10

Mr. Achilles said that the wording as approved the last time made the failure of one signatory to ratify the treaty a veto on the treaty coming into force. He had, therefore, drawn up a fresh draft (AWG D-8) which sought to eliminate this difficulty. The meeting discussed the provision for the ejection of any state which might fall into Communist hands and discovered that such a provision was extremely difficult to phrase satisfactorily. It was decided tentatively to eliminate any clause for expulsion, pending further consideration.

TOP SECRET. IMPORTANT.

North Atlantic Treaty. My WA-3189 of December 20th. The Ambassadors' Group met for over two hours this afternoon.<sup>201</sup> The discussion was almost wholly devoted to the possible inclusion of North Africa and Italy in the area to be covered by the Treaty. Lovett observed that the problem of the area was the only contentious point of critical importance that still remained to be settled. In the case of North Africa you will recall that the draft produced by the Brussels Treaty Permanent Commission would have covered attacks on any party north of Latitude 30, and would therefore have included the North African coast, the Suez Canal and the whole Mediterranean. At today's meeting there was general reluctance to include French North Africa in the area, except on the part of the French with mild British support. Bonnet argues strongly about the French difficulties if Algeria, Morocco and Tunis were not explicitly covered. Franks thought the British Government might be prepared to take the same line. There was no real argument in favour of extending the area eastwards from the Tunisian boundary.

2. In the case of Italy, only the French pleaded for the admission of Italy as a full partner to the Treaty. All the others took the line that Italy should not be included, but that some sort of an assurance must be given to Italy that her security was a matter of immediate concern to the North Atlantic countries.

3. It was decided to refer an agreed report of the discussion on these points to the Governments for further instructions, and this will be forwarded as soon as it is available.

4. Today's meeting did not go over the draft articles prepared by the Working Group, but the Working Group was instructed to meet again tomorrow and to see if they could produce an agreed text for all the articles except that covering area and the preamble. This should present no serious difficulty. The intention is to forward the draft articles to Governments for consideration as soon as they have been passed by the Working Group. I hope, therefore, to be able to send these to you by Friday. Several Ambassadors, including myself, will seek some change in the texts as presently drafted, and their observations are to be the basis for the further consideration of the drafts by the Working Group tomorrow.

5. Lovett wishes to consult several people outside the State Department before the Ambassadors meet him again. Because of the holiday season there will not be a further meeting of the Ambassadors until late next week at earliest. It is hoped, however, in the interval to present to Governments a sufficiently comprehensive report on the texts and the points at issue to enable them to despatch prompt instructions to their representatives here. Ends.

Following for Reid from Wrong, Begins: North Atlantic Treaty. Reference our telephone conversation, the following is the text of paragraph 1 of the commitment article as tentatively agreed upon although there may be one or two slight verbal changes before it is submitted to Governments:

"The parties agree that an armed attack against one or more of them occurring within the area defined below shall be considered an attack against them all; and consequently that, in the event such an armed attack occurs, each of them, in exercise of the right of individual or collective self-defense recognized by Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations, will assist the party or parties so attacked by taking forthwith such military or other action, individually and in concert with the other parties, as may be necessary to restore and assure the security of the North Atlantic area."

2. Paragraph 2 of this Article would define the area and cannot be drawn up until we settle the questions mentioned in my WA-3221 of December 22nd. The general intention, however, is to cover attacks on the parties in their metropolitan territories and intervening sea space between the North Pole and the Tropic of Cancer.

3. There is resolute resistance from the other participants to introducing in the treaty matter not absolutely essential to achieve the main purpose. Ends.

RE NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY

With reference to the current discussions in Washington, so far as I know we have never obtained the advice of the Chiefs of Staff on the strategic necessity or advisability of including in the proposed arrangements countries other than those taking part in the present discussions.

2. Presumably at least a tentative decision will be taken in Washington before long and I think that our representatives there should be informed of the military aspects of including certain countries as they are now advised on the political.

3. If you agree you might address a letter to the Secretary of the Chiefs of Staff Committee asking the Chiefs of Staff's immediate consideration of this question and mentioning the countries which have been referred to as possible participants or as states with whom subsequent and subsidiary arrangements might be made.

4. This suggestion is belated. It should have been made long ago, not only because we should have the Chiefs of Staff's advice, but also because of the importance of keeping the Chiefs of Staff organization in step in such mixed political-military matters.

United Kingdom—Mr. Hoyer-Millar, Mr. Henderson
France—Mr. Bérard, Mr. Wapler
Netherlands—Jonkheer Reuchlin, Mr. Vreede
Belgium—Mr. Taymans, Mr. Vaes
Luxembourg—Mr. LeGallais.

The meeting began by trying to decide what it was that the Ambassadors had meant it to do. It turned to a consideration of the articles of the draft treaty.<sup>202</sup>

Preamble

Mr. Bérard suggested the elimination of the preamble, as it had not been discussed. Mr. Kennan agreed, provided the meeting is not able to go over the preamble.

Mr. Bérard wanted to leave Article 1 as it stands and to put in a new article after Article 8, to cover the details of the use of the International Court of Justice. Mr. Hoyer-Millar said that his government was satisfied with Article 1 in its present form, and agreed to the elimination of Article 2 of the London draft. He did not want to add anything after Article 8.

For the draft which resulted from these deliberations, see enclosure to Document 467.

Article 2

Mr. Hoyer-Millar said that his government was not happy about the inclusion of an article on economic, social, and cultural co-operation. But it was possible that these objections might be withdrawn if an assurance were received that no new machinery was to be set up. Mr. Kennan asked if any of the working groups had any objection in principle to the inclusion of such an article. Mr. Bérard replied that his government does not agree in principle, but is willing to accept such an article if it has to. Jonkheer Reuchlin said he thought the Netherlands, too, could accept such an article if it did not mean setting up new agencies. Messrs. Taymans and LeGallais agreed with the position stated by Jonkheer Reuchlin. Mr. Bérard summarized by saying that the Brussels Pact powers do not think such an article is necessary; they think it would be adequate to have a reference in the preamble; but all will accept the article if no new machinery is to be set up.

There was discussion of a new draft submitted by Mr. Stone. It was accepted in part, but Mr. Stone did not think that the article as amended would be adequate for the Canadian Government. Mr. Kennan suggested that all working parties recommend acceptance of the new draft as a compromise.

Accepted.

Article 4

Amended.

Article 5

Paragraph 1 was accepted.

The meeting amended Paragraph 2, Alternative "A". Jonkheer Reuchlin said that his government could accept either "A" or "B". Mr. Hoyer-Millar said that it should be noted that he was no longer pressing to have the area in Africa extended eastward to include British troops in Egypt. Mr. Bérard suggested that France and the U.K. consult to try to produce a new draft of "B". Mr. Kennan said that the U.S. would regard the violation of the territory of a country under occupation as being a casus belli, whether the troops of one of the parties were involved in actual fighting or not. Mr. Bérard said that French public opinion was ready to extend the protection of the pact to the troops of parties in Germany, but not to be put in the position of defending German territory.

Mr. Hoyer-Millar reiterated that the U.K. does not wish to include Cyrenaica or Egypt in the area.

Mr. Bérard suggested that North Africa might be covered without mentioning it. He said that he did not think the French Government would sign the treaty unless North Africa was covered.

Article 6

Mr. Hoyer-Millar said that one of the UK lawyers noted that this is the first time "breach of the peace" is mentioned in the draft. Article 4 was amended accordingly, to include this phrase. There was debate over the use of "refer" or "report" in paragraph 2. Everybody but Mr. Hickerson stood out for "report". Mr. Kennan left the room to see Mr. Lovett, and returned with a ruling in favour of "report". Jonkheer Reuchlin then withdrew his objection to the inclusion of paragraph 2.

Article 7

Accepted.

Mr. Hoyer-Millar asked for an assurance that the Council set up under Article 8 is to be composed of a deputy appointed by the Secretary of State of the United States, plus the diplomatic representatives of the other powers. The UK wanted to ensure that action could be taken under Article 5 without waiting for a formal meeting of the Foreign Ministers. The idea is to eliminate both undue delay and undue burdens on the Foreign Ministers.

Mr. Kennan said that the United States military want "broad" inserted in front of "measures" to make it plain that the Council and its Defence Committee are not to get deeply involved in the details of military planning. As there appeared to be opposition to this proposal, Mr. Kennan said he would drop it for the time being.

French Proposal for a New Article

Mr. Bérard proposed the addition of an article on the use of the International Court of Justice, and on the definition of the conciliatory functions of the Consultative Council. Mr. Hickerson said that the introduction of a blanket arrangement for conciliation would raise difficulties with the Senate. Further discussion of the proposal was postponed.

Article 1 (Peaceful Settlement)

The parties undertake, as set forth in Article 2 of the Charter of the United Nations, to settle their international disputes in such a manner that peace, security and justice are not endangered, and to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force in any manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations.

Article 2 (General Welfare)

The parties will encourage cooperative efforts between any or all of them to promote the general welfare through collaboration in the cultural, economic and social fields. Such efforts shall, to the greatest possible extent, be undertaken through and assist the work of existing international organizations.

Article 3 (Mutual Aid)

In order better to assure the security of the North Atlantic area, the parties will use every endeavor, severally and jointly, by means of continuous and effective self-help and mutual aid, to strengthen their individual and collective capacity to resist aggression.

Article 4 (Consultation)

The parties will consult together whenever, in the opinion of any of them

(a) The territorial integrity, political independence or security of any of the parties is threatened; or

(b) There exists any situation which constitutes a threat to or breach of the peace.

Article 5 Paragraph 1 (Mutual Assistance)

(1) The parties agree that an armed attack against one or more of them occurring within the area defined below shall be considered an attack against them all; and consequently that, if such an armed attack occurs, each of them, in exercise of the right of individual or collective self-defence recognized by Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations, will assist the party or parties so attacked by taking forthwith such military or other action, individually and in concert with the other parties, as may be necessary to restore and assure the security of the North Atlantic area.

Article 5 Paragraph 2 (Definition of Area)

(2) The provisions of the foregoing paragraph shall be applicable in the event of any armed attack directed against the territory, the population or the armed forces of any of the parties in:

Alternative A

(a) Europe or North America;

(b) The sea and air space of the North Atlantic area north of the Tropic of Cancer.

Alternative B

(a) Europe or North America; Africa north of latitude 30° north and west of longitude 12° east;

(b) The sea and air space of the North Atlantic area north of the Tropic of Cancer; and

(c) The sea and air space of the Western Mediterranean, west of longitude 12° east (or if Italy comes in, longitude 20° east).

Article 6 (United Nations)

This Treaty does not prejudice in any way the obligations of the parties under the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations. It shall not be interpreted as affecting in any way the authority and responsibility of the Security Council under the Charter to take at any time such action as it deems necessary to maintain or restore international peace and security.

Article 7 (Other International Engagements)

The parties declare, each so far as he is concerned, that none of the international engagements now in force between him and any other of the parties or any third State is in conflict with or affected by the provisions of this Treaty.

Article 8 (Organization)

The parties hereby establish a Council, on which each of them shall be represented, to deal with matters concerning the implementation of this Treaty. The Council shall be so organized as to be able to meet promptly at any time. The Council shall set up such subsidiary bodies as may be necessary; in particular it shall establish immediately a Defence Committee which shall recommend measures for the implementation of Articles 3 and 5.

Article 9 (Accession)

The parties may, by agreement, invite any other country in the North Atlantic or Western European regions to accede to this Treaty. Any State so invited may become a party to the Treaty by depositing its Instrument of Accession with the Government of ----- . The Government of ----- will inform each of the parties of the deposit of each such Instrument of Accession.

Article 10 (Ratification and Duration)

This Treaty shall be ratified by the signatory States and the Instruments of Ratification shall be deposited as soon as possible with the ----- Government. It shall enter into force between the States which have ratified it as soon as the Ratifications of a majority of the signatories have been deposited and shall remain in effect for ----- years from that date. It shall come into effect with respect to the other signatory States on the date of the deposit of their Ratifications.

After this treaty has been in force for ----- years, each of the parties may cease to be a party one year after its notice of denunciation has been given to the ----- Government.

The ----- Government shall inform the Governments of the other parties of the deposit of each Instrument of Ratification and each Notice of Denunciation."

WASHINGTON SECURITY TALKS

REPORT OF THE WORKING GROUP TO THE AMBASSADORS' COMMITTEE

The Working Group have reached agreement on practically all the articles of a possible Pact. The text of these articles is given as Annex A. Explanatory notes on the individual articles are given as Annex B.

The only articles of the treaty on which it was not possible to reach agreement were the following:

(a) Article 5(2)—the area to be covered and in particular whether French North Africa is to be included. (Annex A, page 7)

(b) Article 8 (bis). Whether, as proposed by the French representatives, an additional article should be included providing for the reference of disputes to the International Court and endowing "the Council" with certain powers of conciliation.

(c) Article 10. Ratification and duration. (Annex A, page 12) the United States representatives preferred to leave the question of the duration of the treaty open at this stage.

While the Working Group were able to agree on some of the countries which should be invited to participate in the treaty, they were unable to reach any decision on the question of Italy or to make any firm recommendation on the steps to be taken to give assurances to Greece and Turkey (and perhaps Iran). A statement of the position in respect to Italy and Greece and Turkey, etc., is given as Annex C. The Working Group agreed on the procedure to be followed for the subsequent course of negotiations, approaches to other Governments, etc. A statement of their views on this point is given as Annex D.

The Working Group recommend that the Ambassadors forward a copy of this report to their Governments with the request that the latter furnish as soon as possible their comments on the text of the treaty and their views on the specific points mentioned above on which the Working Group has been unable to reach agreement. Ends.

Annexes B, C and D will be found in my immediately following messages.

Comments on Proposed Articles

The following are comments on the draft articles included in Annex A. They are presented in the same order and under the same numbers as the articles in Annex A.

1. Peaceful Settlement of Disputes

A draft of Article 1 designed to replace Articles 1 and 2 of the outline of September 9th and Articles 1 and 2 of the Permanent Committee's suggestions was agreed in the form given in Annex A.

2. Co-operation in the Cultural, Economic and Social Fields

The Brussels Powers' representatives doubted the necessity of including an article calling for economic, cultural, and social co-operation and feared duplication of existing machinery. They agreed, however, that, if such duplication were clearly avoided, they would have no objection to including such an article. (Article 3, September 9th paper.) Canada and the United States strongly favoured including one. It was agreed that the text given in Annex A would be generally acceptable as a compromise, since the Canadian representative would have preferred a more strongly worded provision.

3. Pledge of Self-Help and Mutual Aid

This article was acceptable in the form given in Annex A.

4. Provision for Consultation

The text of this article as given in Annex A is the text as suggested by the Permanent Commission in London, which was found to be acceptable without change.

It was agreed that this provision for consultation covers all threats to the peace, including attacks against the overseas territories of any of the parties to the treaty, and that this should be recorded.

5. The Pledge of Mutual Assistance

The Working Group accepted Part 1 of the proposed Article 5 in the form given in Annex A.

It is proposed that Part 2 should define the area to be covered by the treaty. Two drafts of this part of Article 5 are presented in Annex A, marked (a) and (b). Draft (a) was acceptable to the United States, Canada and Belgium. Draft (b) was acceptable to France and the United Kingdom. It will be noted that the essential difference between these two drafts is that Draft (a) excludes any part of Africa or the Mediterranean from the area to be covered by the treaty, whereas Draft (b) includes parts of North Africa and of the Mediterranean.

6. Relationship to the United Nations

The Working Group agreed to the draft of this article as given in Annex A, which is designed to replace Articles 8, 9 and 11 of the September 9th Document.

7. Conflict with other Treaties

The United Kingdom representative proposed a separate article declaring that the present treaty was not in conflict with any previous treaties entered into by the parties, and the draft as given in Annex A was accepted.

The United Kingdom representative proposed an additional paragraph as follows:

“None of the parties will conclude any alliance or participate in any coalition directed against any other of the parties or against any members of the United Nations.”

The French representative supported this proposal but it was not accepted.

8. Organization

The Working Group accepted the draft as given in Annex A.

8. (BIS) International Court and Conciliation

The French representatives were concerned lest the Pact be interpreted as an instrument of coalition. It should on the contrary appear as a regional Pact with the appropriate machinery of such an organization. They suggested, therefore, that an article be added after Article 8 providing that the parties will refer to the International Court of Justice all disputes which come under the provisions of Article 36 of the statute of the Court. This article would also provide that the Council established by Article 8 should act as an organ of conciliation when other means of conciliation or arbitration have failed. It would be understood that the Council should in no way interfere with the operation of existing treaties and agreements between the parties. Other representatives pointed out that the International Court, although of special importance, was only one among many of the available peaceful means for settling disputes. As regards the proposal that the Council should become an instrument of conciliation, it was considered by other representatives that the Council might thus duplicate and perhaps confuse the operation of existing treaties of conciliation between parties to the Pact or of permanent agencies already established. Furthermore, the possibility of disputes between parties to the Pact of such a serious nature as to defy solution by these existing agencies or under existing treaties seemed to some members of the Committee so remote as to make it unnecessary to establish a further agency of conciliation as between the parties.

It was also believed that mention of the International Court might mean protracted delay in negotiating the treaty in view of the difficulty of finding language which would adequately safeguard the reservations which various countries have already made or would have to make. For these reasons, the additional article proposed by the French representatives was not accepted.

9. Accession Clause

This article as given in Annex A was accepted by the Working Group with the understanding that a more accurate definition of the area from which acceding countries might come might be agreed upon at a later date.

10. Duration of the Treaty

At the request of the United States representatives, decision on the duration was deferred, but it was generally agreed that the number of years should be a multiple of four. It was agreed to insert the article on ratification given in Annex A, with the length of time left blank.

11. Various forms of an article which would provide for the expulsion from the treaty of any signatory under certain circumstances were discussed. This proved difficult to express and on balance it was decided to recommend that no such article be included. Ends.

North Atlantic Treaty. Reference my immediately preceding messages. Following is the text of Annex C to the Working Group's report to the Ambassadors' Committee, Begins:

*Annex C
Italy*

No agreement as to whether an invitation should be extended to Italy to join the Pact as an original signatory could be reached. It was thought that a brief review of the arguments for and against the inclusion of Italy might be useful.

(i) Arguments for the Inclusion of Italy

(a) The non-inclusion of Italy might result in a very serious increase in Soviet propaganda and other efforts to detach this country from Western Europe.

(b) Non-inclusion would be a serious blow to the Italian Government. On the other hand, there is evidence of support in Italy for a policy of neutrality. On the basis of the information it had, however, the Group thought that it might be easier for the Government of Italy to justify participation than to explain exclusion to its Legislature and to the Italian people.

(c) If an invitation is not extended to Italy to become a full member, she might refuse to associate herself in any way with the Pact. The supporters of a policy of neutrality would then presumably carry the day.

(d) Geographically Italy occupies a position of considerable strategic importance on the right wing of the defence of Western Europe. In case of conflict it would be essential to safeguard the southern flank as well as to guarantee the security of the southern route by which assistance from North America would be in part carried to Europe. The position of Italy is important to the operation of this route and it is otherwise important that Italy not be in enemy hands.

(e) It would be illogical to exclude Italy from this Pact while encouraging efforts to integrate her more fully into the Western European economic organization — such as the projected Franco-Italian Customs Union.

(f) As long as Italy is not a member of the North Atlantic Pact, her participation in the Brussels Pact would perhaps not be acceptable to the signatories. On the other hand, the United States Working Group thought that Italy should perhaps not join the North Atlantic Pact unless she had acceded to the Brussels Pact. In the course of the discussion it was suggested that the Italian Government might be invited to accede to both Pacts simultaneously.

(g) If one of the objectives of the Pact is to tighten cultural and political ties between North Atlantic and Western European countries, Italy, by reason of her civilization and her mercantile and maritime traditions, would appear to be an appropriate member.

(h) Italy could logically be asked to join the Pact on grounds of geographical continuity, whereas the same argument did not apply in the cases of Greece and Turkey, for example.

(ii) Arguments Against the Inclusion of Italy

(a) Italy is not a North Atlantic Power.

(b) Because of the arms limitation clauses of the Peace Treaty, Italy will not be in a suitable position in the foreseeable future to undertake new military commitments. Indeed, it might be said that from the strictly military point of view the inclusion of Italy would impose a definite burden on the other parties, particularly if, in the event of conflict, Italy were a belligerent.

(c) Some of the countries now conferring have, understandably, certain hesitation about extending too far afield the very considerable obligations which they would assume under the Pact. The inclusion of Italy might, therefore, be open to question if it were to involve the inclusion of territories further afield.

(d) The security of Italy is a problem of the security of the Mediterranean, which might be covered by another Pact, thus obviating Italy's inclusion in a North Atlantic Pact.

(e) Since the security of the North Atlantic area (in a strict geographical sense) is a long term consideration, a Pact concerned solely with security in this area could be of longer duration than one concerned with the security of territories outside this area.

(iii) Views of the Representatives

The views of the different representatives were as follows:

(a) The French representatives said that their Government strongly favoured the inclusion of Italy for the reasons given in (i) above.

(b) The British representatives said that their Government were opposed to the inclusion of Italy for the reasons given in (ii) above, but they felt strongly that, if Italy were not in the Pact, she should be given adequate assurances on the question of her security and that recognition of her ties with the west should be made in some way.

(c) The Canadian representatives opposed the inclusion of Italy for the reasons given in (ii) above. They qualified this opposition, however, by saying that they appreciated the importance of some of the arguments in (i) and they believed that measures of some kind would have to be taken to assure Italy that, as a part of the western world, she was not being overlooked.

(d) The Belgian representatives said that their Government was not opposed in principle to the inclusion of Italy if this were favoured by the other Governments; they were reluctant, however, to see her included for the reasons given in paragraphs (c) and (d) of (ii) above. They agreed that something should be done so that her ties with the west would not be weakened.

(e) The Netherlands representatives, although they recognized the importance of Italy to the western world, wondered whether its inclusion would not impair the strength of western defence. Appropriate arrangements should be devised to extend some measure of protection to Italy and to give support to those Italians who strive to keep Italy on the side of the western nations.

(f) The Luxembourg representative considered that something should be done for Italy.

(g) The United States representatives considered that a satisfactory solution to the problem of Italy, which would strengthen rather than weaken Italy's natural ties with the west, must be found, preferably by simultaneous association in some mutually acceptable form with the Brussels and Atlantic Pacts.

(iv) In the circumstances further instructions from Governments are urgently required.

(v) Greece and Turkey

It was agreed that while Greece and Turkey could not participate in the North Atlantic Pact, some further steps would have to be taken to assure the Governments of these countries and perhaps Iran that their security had not been lost sight of and was a matter of concern. It would be all the more necessary to give such an assurance to these countries if Italy were to be a signatory of the Pact. If Italy were not to be a signatory she should receive similar assurances to those given to Greece and Turkey.

The United Kingdom representatives suggested that the situation might be met by including in the Pact an additional article somewhat on the following lines:

"Should any State member of the O.E.E.C. other than a party to this treaty, be the object of an armed attack, the parties will immediately consult together with a view to taking such measures as may be desirable or necessary in order to restore the situation."

The other representatives thought that this problem should be dealt with otherwise than by an article in the Pact. Ends.

North Atlantic Treaty. Reference my immediately preceding messages. Following is the text of Annex D to the Working Group's report to the Ambassadors' Committee, Begins:

Annex DProcedure for Negotiations and Approaches to Other Governments1. Procedure for Negotiation

(a) It was considered that a formal Conference would not be necessary for the next stages in the negotiation of the treaty. The present arrangement of a Working Group and an Ambassadors' Committee reporting to Governments might well continue. The personnel of the Working Group could, of course, include any representatives which any of the seven Governments might see fit to appoint. Other countries than the original seven, after having been invited and accepted participation in the Pact, might also send representatives to the Working Group and Ambassadors' Committee.

(b) No recommendation was made about whether it would be desirable to hold a brief formal Conference for the signing of the Pact at the conclusion of the negotiations. This should be decided at a later date.

2. Approaches to Other Governments

(a) Iceland, Norway, Denmark, Ireland and Portugal should be invited to join the Pact if they are willing.

(b) Invitations should be extended after the wording of the treaty has become reasonably definite but before it has become final in order to avoid confronting the other countries with a definitive text on a "take it or leave it" basis. The appropriate moment to extend these invitations would be when the seven Governments have reached substantial agreement on the text of the treaty and have finally decided what other Governments are to be invited to participate. The countries willing to participate in the Pact should join in the discussions in Washington and take part in the final stages of the drafting of the treaty.

(c) Between now and the time for issuing invitations, it would be desirable to keep the other Governments generally informed of the progress of the Washington talks without however, going into detail.

(d) The United States representatives agreed to the suggestion that the United States should be responsible not only for extending the invitations at the appropriate moment but also for giving the interim explanations referred to in the immediately preceding paragraph, except in the case of Portugal, which in both respects should be approached by the United States and United Kingdom Governments together. This would not exclude the possibility of the other Governments, in the course of their normal diplomatic relations, discussing the question of the Pact in general terms with these countries. All seven Governments should keep each other informed of any conversations that they might have with the prospective signatories.

(e) The following points were made regarding certain individual countries:

(1) It was doubtful whether a direct approach should be made to Sweden at this time. It would nevertheless be appropriate for the Norwegian and Danish Governments to be informed that, if Sweden wished to become a party, she would be welcome — the Norwegians and Danes being at liberty to pass this information on to the Swedes.

(2) The United Kingdom representatives indicated that their Government would have comments to make on the timing and method of any approach, whether formal or informal, to Eire. Ends.

You asked, for Tuesday morning, my comments on the draft treaty which is Annex A of the Working Group's report.

2. While the draft Treaty is considerably shorter, and is less formal and particularized than the Canadian draft, I think it an excellent job.

3. It is brief and succinct and covers, I think, in a general way what the Canadian Government has had in mind.

4. To illustrate:

(1) The pledge (Article 5) is firm and is indeed quite close to the Brussels formula;

(2) Article 8 (relating to the Council) seems satisfactory and authorizes the establishment of the necessary subsidiary bodies;

(3) Cultural, economic and social collaboration are covered in Article 2;

(4) The "coming into force" provisions (Article 10) seem adequate.

5. Noting Mr. Wrong's observation in his message W.A. 3227 of December 23, that "there is resolute resistance to introducing in the treaty matter not absolutely essential to achieve the main purpose," I would not wish to suggest additional Articles for the draft Treaty.

6. I have, however, certain suggestions with respect to the following Articles:

(1) Article 1—This Article is in my view juridically unsound, but perhaps politically desirable;

(2) Article 5 (2)—I am not an expert, but I should have thought alternative A preferable;

(3) Article 6 (1)—I suggest rewriting as follows:

"This Treaty shall not be interpreted as affecting in any way the obligations of the parties under the Charter of the United Nations or the authority or responsibility of the Security Council to take at any time such action as it deems necessary to maintain or restore international peace and security."

(4) Article 7—I do not like. I should have preferred the following (based on Article 5 of the Canadian draft Treaty):

"Each party to this Treaty agrees not to accept any obligations in conflict with this Treaty or with the Charter of the United Nations."

(5) Article 9—I should have thought it wise to add, as Clause (2), the following (based on Article 10 of the Canadian draft Treaty):

“The Council may, on terms to be agreed with the state concerned, extend some or all of the guarantees of this Treaty to any other country in the North Atlantic or Western European regions whose defence is considered vital to the defence of the parties of this Treaty.”

(6) In view of the (apparently) agreed form of the draft Treaty, I would dispense with any Preamble. It seems to me, however, that a Joint Declaration might be o.k.

(7) In view of the degree to which the present draft meets the Canadian position, I think congratulations are in order for those in Washington. The Treaty does not, in form, “kindle the imagination”, but its substance (representing as it does a revolution in Canadian and United States foreign policy) I would expect to have that effect.

(8) I have sent a copy of this to Mr. Riddell and Mr. Crean.

(9) I return Mr. Wrong's latest teletypes plus the documents you let me have on Friday.

I attach two memoranda of today's date.<sup>203</sup> The first memorandum contains comments on Annexes A and B of the December 24 report from Washington. The second memorandum contains comments on Annexes C and D.

2. There are three copies of each of these memoranda.

3. After you have discussed these with Mr. Wrong and have revised them, you might wish to consider having them circulated through London to the European participants in the Washington discussions. In that case, we would also, of course, give a copy to the State Department.

4. It seems to me that it might be appropriate to do this since, in a sense, we would be putting up in the capitals concerned the arguments which Mr. Wrong has been advancing on our behalf in Washington.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY

The second phase of informal, non-committal and exploratory talks in Washington on security.

Draft of Canadian comments on Annexes A and B of the report dated December 24, 1948, of the Working Group to the Ambassadors' Committee

-----
The following are to be considered as provisional Canadian comments. When the Committee of Ambassadors has prepared a second draft of a treaty in the light of the comments they receive on the first draft, that draft will be put before the Canadian Cabinet and the comments of the Canadian Government will then be circulated to the other participating governments.

2. The Working Group is to be congratulated upon the excellent work done in the preparation of a draft North Atlantic Treaty. In general, this draft appears to be satisfactory. The comments which follow are suggestions for improvement in matters of detail.

Article 1. Peaceful Settlement

3. Juridically this Article is unnecessary for those signatories which are Members of the United Nations but it may be felt to be politically desirable.

4. The Canadian Government has consistently emphasized that it would be wise if the treaty were to have as great a positive and moral content as is possible. It would therefore appear advantageous to include in the treaty an article along the lines of that suggested by the French representative, providing that the parties will refer to the International Court of Justice all disputes which come under the provisions of Article 36 of the Statute of the Court.<sup>204</sup> This would be a useful demonstration of the belief of the signatory states in the rule of law among nations.

5. Therefore it is suggested that Article 1 of the draft be followed by an article reading as follows:

This and the following 18 footnotes are marginal notes or changes by L.B. Pearson:

This has been brought up in working group. Wrong will try again but reference to Int[ernational] Court without reservations will not be acceptable.

"The parties agree as follows in respect of disputes which may arise between any of them:

(a) all disputes falling within Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the International Court of Justice shall be referred to the Court and the decision of the Court shall be final and binding;

(b) all other disputes shall be submitted to conciliation;

(c) any party to a dispute which involves questions for which conciliation is appropriate, and other questions for which judicial settlement is appropriate, shall have the right to require that the judicial settlement of the legal questions shall precede conciliation.

The provisions of this Article shall not be interpreted as affecting the application of relevant provisions or agreements prescribing some other method of peaceful settlement, whether provided for in the Charter of the United Nations or otherwise."

Article 2. General Welfare

6. It is realized that Article 2 may be the best compromise that can be attained. However, in view of the importance which the Canadian Government has attached to the inclusion in the treaty of provisions for the encouragement of cooperation among the signatories in fields other than security, it is hoped that the other participating governments might agree to a strengthening of Article 2. Collaboration in the cultural, economic and social fields would contribute directly to the general security, since, in order to strengthen the collective capacity of the parties to resist aggression, their combined production of goods and services should be as great as possible, particularly at a time when a large proportion of this combined production must unhappily be devoted to preparations to resist aggression. Moreover, it is important, in order to secure the widest measure of public support for the treaty, that the treaty contain explicit provisions which will make clear that its purpose is not merely negative.<sup>205</sup>

7. Consequently, it is suggested that the following two sentences be substituted for the first sentence of the draft Article 2:

"The parties agree to make every effort in common to eliminate conflict in their economic policies, to coordinate their production,<sup>206</sup> and to encourage the greatest possible development of trade between them. The parties also agree to make every effort in common to promote the attainment of a higher standard of living by their people and greater economic and social justice, to bring about a better understanding of the principles which form the basis of their common civilization,<sup>207</sup> and to promote cultural exchanges between themselves."

Remainder of this sentence struck out; a marginal note refers to the part of the sentence beginning "promote": put in preamble.

Article 3. Mutual Aid

8. In order to avoid the use of the term “severally and jointly”, which is not generally understood, it is suggested that the words “individually and in common”<sup>208</sup> be substituted.

Article 5. Paragraph 1. Mutual Assistance

9. While we should have preferred a text worded similarly to the Brussels Treaty, the present text seems generally satisfactory.

Article 5. Paragraph 2. Definition of Area<sup>209</sup>

10. Alternative “A” is preferred. One immediate advantage of “A” is that it would cover Italy whether or not Italy is an original signatory.

Article 6. Paragraph 1. United Nations

11. It is suggested that, since the first and second sentences each relate to interpretation, the drafting might be improved if it read as follows:

“This Treaty shall not be interpreted as affecting in any way the obligations of the parties under the Charter of the United Nations or the authority or responsibility of the Security Council to take at any time such action as it deems necessary to maintain or restore international peace and security.”<sup>210</sup>

Article 6. Paragraph 3.

12. It is suggested that it would be wise to reproduce precisely the language of the Charter and therefore to insert the words “maintain or” before “restore international peace and security.”<sup>211</sup>

Article 7. Other International Engagements

13. It is suggested that, since the present draft merely states what may or may not be a fact and imposes no obligation, it is juridically ineffective. Whether or not this Article is retained it is considered that the following sentence should be included:

“Each party to this Treaty agrees not to accept any obligations in conflict with this Treaty or with the Charter of the United Nations.”<sup>212</sup>

Article 8. Organization

14. Since the words “subsidiary bodies” in the third sentence might not be considered as covering the employment of the necessary staff or secretariat, it is suggested that after the words “subsidiary bodies” the following words be added: “and appoint such staff”.<sup>213</sup>

<sup>208</sup> «in common» a été remplacé par «collectively».

Article 9-A. Special Arrangements

15. In addition to an accession clause, it would appear necessary to include a clause which would enable the parties, by agreement, to make a special arrangement with a country such as Italy which may not be a party to the Treaty. Consequently, it is suggested that an article be added after the accession article which would read somewhat as follows:

"The parties may, by agreement, and on terms to be agreed with the state concerned, extend some or all of the guarantees<sup>214</sup> of this Treaty to any other country in the North Atlantic or Western European regions whose defence is considered vital to the defence of the parties to this Treaty."<sup>215</sup>

Article 10. Ratification and Duration

16. A clause might possibly be added providing for registration of the Treaty with the Secretary-General of the United Nations even though this is not juridically necessary. The clause might read somewhat as follows:

"This Treaty shall be registered by the ----- Government with the Secretary-General of the United Nations."<sup>216</sup>

17. It is also suggested that the usual provision be added on authentic texts and on the custody of the authentic texts. This provision might read as follows:

"This Treaty, of which the English and French texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited in the archives of the Government of ----- . Duly certified copies thereof will be transmitted by that government to the governments of the other signatory states."<sup>217</sup>

18. It will also, of course, be necessary to add the usual termination to the Treaty. This might read as follows:

"In faith whereof, the representatives of the governments of -----, having exhibited their full powers found to be in good and due form, have signed this Treaty."<sup>218</sup>

Done at the City of -----, the ----- day of -----, one thousand, nine hundred and forty-nine."

Preamble

19. In order to set the tone of the Treaty, it is suggested that it should have a very simple preamble, which might read as follows:

"WE, the people of the North Atlantic Nations, are dedicated to the cause of peace. We believe in the dignity and worth of every man, woman and child. We affirm our faith in the principles of parliamentary democracy, political liberty and personal freedom which are our common heritage.

WE are determined to unite our efforts to maintain peace and to preserve these principles and freedoms.

OUR Governments, therefore, have agreed to this North Atlantic Treaty, and do hereby establish, in the exercise of the inherent right of collective self-defence recognized in Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations, and in accordance with the Principles and Purposes of the Charter, an organization to be known as the "North Atlantic Community" whose member states shall be known as the "North Atlantic Nations".

Joint Declaration at Time of Signature

20. There are already indications that one of the arguments which the Communists are busily engaged in making to certain well-meaning people is that the proposed North Atlantic Treaty is a violation of the spirit, if not of the letter, of the United Nations Charter. It might be wise, therefore, for the signatories of the Treaty to make clear in a Joint Declaration at the time of signature, that they continue to adhere to the principles of universal collective security set forth in the Charter, that they have been forced to adopt temporarily the alternative, open to them under the Charter, of collective security agreements because Soviet intransigence has made it unsafe for them to depend upon a weak system of collective security on a 'universal' basis, and that once an effective United Nations security system has been established they will readily return to a universal system of security. A tentative draft text of such a Joint Declaration is attached.<sup>220</sup>

Language of the Treaty

21. The Canadian Government attaches importance to attaining the greatest simplicity and clarity possible in the language of the Treaty. It is therefore hoped that the other participating governments will agree that, instead of referring to the signatory states in the Treaty as "parties", they may be referred to by some such name as "the North Atlantic Nations".<sup>221</sup> Similarly, it is hoped that the other participating governments will agree that the Treaty be given some such simple title as "The North Atlantic Treaty".<sup>222</sup>

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY

The second phase of informal, non-committal and exploratory talks in Washington on security.

Draft of Canadian comments on Annexes C and D of the report dated December 24, 1948, of the Working Group to the Ambassadors' Committee.

Italy

The arguments for the simultaneous association of Italy, in some mutually acceptable form, are impressive. This need not mean that Italy would be a party to the Treaty either as an original member or by accession but that, before the Treaty is signed, approaches should be made to Italy to ascertain its views on the nature of the association. We are impressed by the strategic importance of associating Italy with the Treaty not so much for the positive contribution it might make in men and material but as a means of ensuring that bases in Italy will not fall into Soviet hands.

2. The precedent created by the association of Italy with the Treaty would not necessitate the conclusion of similar arrangements with countries such as Greece and Turkey, since Italy like Sweden is contiguous to a North Atlantic Nation.

3. These considerations underline the importance of including in the Treaty not only an accession clause but a clause providing for special arrangements.

4. On the other hand the use of a special arrangements provision might give Italy an opening to demand return of some or all of the former Italian colonies as a quid pro quo whereas this might be avoided if Italy were invited to become an original member.

5. It would seem to us that Italian membership in, or association with, the North Atlantic Treaty need not necessarily carry with it adherence to the Brussels Pact.

Greece and Turkey

6. We think that the draft Article 4(b) on consultation covers the point raised by the United Kingdom representative and that the inclusion of a special article is unnecessary. In order to give the appropriate assurance to the governments of Greece and Turkey and possibly Iran, their attention might be drawn to the implications of Article 4(b) and it might be pointed out to them that under this provision, the signatories of the Treaty would immediately consult in the event of an armed attack on any one of these countries and would decide on the measures to be taken.

Procedure for Negotiation

7. It must be remembered that the Canadian Cabinet has been informed that the conversations now going on in Washington are informal, non-committal and exploratory. It would seem to us therefore that the final draft prepared at the ambassadorial level in Washington will have to be submitted formally to governments for their consideration and a formal diplomatic conference held to consider amendments proposed by governments and to reach agreement on a final text. We would hope that, in view of the importance of the Treaty, all the Foreign Ministers could attend this conference.

Approaches to Other Governments

8. We agree that Iceland, Norway, Denmark, Ireland and Portugal should be invited to become original parties to the Treaty after a second draft has been agreed on in Washington by the Committee of Ambassadors. The representatives of those countries which are willing to participate should then join in the discussions in Washington.

9. We agree with the suggested procedure in respect of Sweden.

<sup>226</sup> Yes, if Italy in. No if out on grounds not included in Brussels Pact.

3. Would we be prepared to participate in any general assurance given to Greece, Turkey, and possibly Iran?<sup>227</sup>

4. Do we agree that the U.S. should be responsible for keeping other possible participants informed and should extend the invitations to participate?<sup>228</sup>

5. Do we want a formal Conference, for signature, or possibly at an earlier stage?<sup>229</sup>

6. Is it acceptable that the detailed negotiations should be conducted by the Ambassadors' group in Washington, with possible additions?<sup>230</sup>

B. THE DRAFT ARTICLES

Preamble

Have we any particular views on the form of the Preamble and on whether the Treaty should be between heads of States or intergovernmental?

Article II

Does the draft go far enough in authorizing collaboration in fields other than defence?<sup>231</sup>

Article V

Para. 1. Is the commitment satisfactory from the Canadian point of view?<sup>232</sup> Note that a reference to constitutional processes will probably be insisted on by the Senate.

Para. 2. Does alternative (a) cover adequately the Far Northern area and islands in the North Atlantic itself?<sup>233</sup> Would we be prepared to agree to including the Western Mediterranean as far as the Tunisian border?<sup>234</sup>

Article VIII

Is this a sufficiently explicit definition of the functions of the Council?<sup>235</sup>

Article X

What are our present views on duration of the Treaty?<sup>236</sup> Is it satisfactory that it should come into effect when ratified by a majority of signatories?

C. QUESTIONS NOT COVERED IN THE DRAFT

1. Do we strongly desire an Article dealing with the peaceful settlement of disputes between the parties and possibly abolishing reservations to the International Court's jurisdiction between themselves?<sup>237</sup>

2. Do we favour an Article permitting the suspension or expulsion of signatories of the Pact?<sup>238</sup> Note that the U.S. may request this after consulting congressional leaders.

Do we attach any real importance to an Article requiring registration of the Treaty with the United Nations?<sup>239</sup>

BERLIN SITUATION

You will recall that on March 20th last, the Soviet Commander-in-Chief in Berlin, General [sic] Sokolovsky [Marshal V.D.], ended the activities of the Allied Control Council which was responsible for governing Germany under the Potsdam and other four-Power decisions.

2. The issue upon which General Sokolovsky chose to bring the Allied Control Council's work to an end was the Western Powers' refusal to report to the Control Council on the 'decisions' which were alleged to have been reached in the first part of the London talks on Germany. The first session of the London talks had ended on March 6th and a number of tentative agreements were published in a communiqué. However, the Western Powers denied that any 'decisions' had been reached and in any event the agreements that would be reached would be in the form of recommendations which would be submitted to the governments of the participating states for action.

3. As you know, the Soviet departure from the Allied Control Council was accompanied by a series of annoying restrictions on the Western Powers' communications between the Western Zones and their sectors of Berlin. The resultant tension reached its climax in the Gatow air crash on April 5th when a Soviet fighter aircraft collided with a United Kingdom transport with serious loss of life. Thereafter Soviet restrictive regulations were enforced more reasonably.

4. It was anticipated that when the final report of the London talks was announced, as it was on June 7th, there would almost certainly be an even more energetic reaction on the part of the Soviet authorities. Their initial reaction was, however, comparatively mild until the Western Powers announced on June 18th their intention to reform the discredited German currency without Soviet participation.

5. Although the Western Powers in their original announcement excepted their sectors of Berlin from the currency reform, the Soviet authorities asserted, nevertheless, that Berlin was 'in' the Soviet zone of occupation and that Western currency would not be used in the city. On June 22nd, there was a four-Power meeting in Berlin to discuss currency reform. The Western Occupying Powers expressed their willingness to accept a single currency for all of Berlin and agreed that Soviet Zone currency could be used provided that 'the adoption of the currency reform should be by quadripartite agreement' and that 'the issue of currency should be subject to quadripartite control.'

6. General Sokolovsky refused these conditions and on the same day he announced the Soviet plan for currency reform.<sup>1</sup> The Soviet Commander at the same time asked that no difficulties be raised to the introduction of Soviet Zone currency into all of Greater Berlin as the Soviet plan stipulated. The Western Military Commanders informed the Soviet authorities that they could not agree to the use of Soviet Zone currency in their sectors of Berlin unless the conditions mentioned above were fulfilled. They then issued separate instructions which introduced a new special currency to the three Western sectors of the city.

7. Hitherto, four-Power Military Government in Berlin had continued to function under the Kommandatura in spite of the virtual demise of the four-Power governing body for all of Germany — the Allied Control Council. However, on June 24th the Soviet representative on the Berlin Kommandatura was reported as saying that that body has ceased to exist 'for all intents and purposes.'

8. It has, of course, long been apparent that the object of the Soviet authorities was to rid themselves of the Western representatives in Berlin whose presence, they claimed, was justified only because Berlin was the seat of four-Power government for all of Germany. As this reason no longer applied, the Soviet view is that the Western Powers no longer have the right to remain in the city. As you know, the Soviet pressure has varied from complete interruption of land communication to the cutting off of power from the Western sectors. It is, of course, impossible to say how far their determination to bring about a withdrawal of Western Powers from Berlin will carry them.

9. The United States Commander-in-Chief has expressed himself in unmistakable terms that the United States authorities will leave Berlin only if physically ejected. General Clay has been quoted as saying that an attempt to do this would mean war.

10. The United Kingdom is, it seems, equally determined to stay and Mr. Robertson has reported that the Foreign Office considered that there was a real danger of a clash in Berlin during the coming months but that even an armed clash would not lead to war.

11. The French have consistently expressed their anxiety over possible Soviet reaction to the London recommendations on Germany and have been lukewarm to the idea of adopting an uncompromising stand on the Berlin issue. They have, nevertheless, followed the United States-United Kingdom lead in all the declarations affecting the Western Powers' position in Berlin.

To this end some 80 Dakotas would be required. They were a bit short of aircraft and particularly crews. Could or would Canada help.

2. I immediately replied that in my view this was a matter which should preferably be taken up between Governments rather than through the Administration in Berlin. There were High Commissioners both in Ottawa and London.

3. Later spoke [to] Steel<sup>2</sup> who said he was meeting Robertson<sup>3</sup> later that night to discuss the plan in its several aspects. EXTERNAL AFFAIRS; INTERNATIONAL SITUATION; BERLIN,
 WARSAW CONFERENCE, ATLANTIC SECURITY

3. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reported on developments in the international situation:

The position in Berlin contained elements of danger. The U.K. Military Governor had protested to Soviet authorities upon the interruption of traffic from the British Zone to Western Berlin; as yet no reply had been received.

The Warsaw conference of nations within the Soviet orbit had condemned the Western German settlement approved by the United Kingdom, the United States and France as a violation of the Yalta and Potsdam agreements. Russian policy was clearly motivated by the intention to capitalize upon the natural German desire for unity.

Western European countries were reluctant to provoke the U.S.S.R. so long as the U.S. position remained in any doubt. On the eve of a Presidential campaign it was difficult for the U.S. government to give any firm undertaking which would satisfy Western Europe. It was to be noted, however, that the Republican platform included an international plank based upon the Vandenberg resolution.

4. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted the Minister's report.

I also attach a copy of an interim reply I sent on June 26th, our telegram No. 113.†

2. There is no sign of any change in the United States and United Kingdom intentions to remain in Berlin and although the French seem less anxious to make an issue of the Berlin situation, I think it is doubtful if they would withdraw alone.

3. Although I have thought it wise to be prepared for a worsening of the situation, you will see from our telegram No. 114 that we have stressed the importance of avoiding any action which might suggest that we were giving the lead for a general exodus on the part of missions accredited to the Allied Control Council. You will note that we have suggested that General Pope should move with, but not ahead of, the United Kingdom, United States and French authorities in the matter of evacuation.

4. You will recall that we had decided some time ago to send a consular officer (Mr. A.J. Hicks) from Berlin to Frankfurt. In view of the present developments there would now seem to be some advantage to have him established there as soon as possible and I have, accordingly, asked General Pope to arrange this.

SITUATION IN BERLIN

You will have received telegram No. 980 of June 28 from Canada House† summarizing Mr. Bevin's statement to the Commonwealth High Commissioners in London about the situation in Berlin. Mr. Bevin attaches the very greatest importance to the Western Powers holding on in Berlin. He admits that the point has been reached where it looks like war, but he himself does not fear war over this. He thinks that if the Western Powers hold on, the Russians will change their course and tactics. In this case, the effect not only in Europe but also in South-East Asia and China would be tremendous because it would be the first time since the war that any country had really stood up to the Russians.

2. I now attach telegram No. 981 of June 28 from London† and telegram No. 176 of June 28 from Berlin.

3. In his telegram No. 981, Mr. Robertson reports that, at the meeting summarized in telegram No. 980, Mr. Bevin, after making it plain that the U.K., U.S. and French Governments were agreed in their determination to resist Russian pressure to force them out of Berlin, went on to say that these Governments were prepared to take up the Soviet challenge and to feed two and a half million people by airborne supplies. This meant a tremendous employment of transport aircraft to which the three Western Powers would each contribute to the limit of their availabilities.

4. He said that the U.K. and U.S. Governments would be very grateful for any assistance that other countries could give in making additional transport aircraft available.<sup>4</sup>

5. The same sort of request of the Canadian authorities has been informally made to General Pope in Berlin, as you will see from his telegram. In Berlin, both aircraft and aircrews were mentioned.

6. In addition, Mr. Bevin asked the representatives of the Commonwealth countries in London to inquire from their governments what stocks of concentrated dehydrated foodstuffs they might have available for shipment to Berlin.

7. Mr. Robertson believes that, in the circumstances, the United Kingdom request for assistance in providing aircraft should be given prompt and serious consideration.

8. I would support Mr. Robertson's recommendation. It seems to me that the trial of strength which is now going on in Berlin is of crucial importance. I cannot believe that the Russians want to push things to the point of war but I believe that they may be prepared to do everything short of war to get the Western allies out of Berlin. Rightly or wrongly, the situation has now got to the point where the withdrawal of the Western powers from Berlin, leaving the two million Germans in the Western zones in Berlin in the lurch, would be a tremendous blow to the prestige of the Western powers, not only in Western Europe but elsewhere.

9. On the other hand, a successful demonstration of the ability of the Western powers to act together on this matter and to force the Russians to change their tactics might well have a very considerable effect in strengthening the determination of the Western Europeans to resist Soviet pressure.

10. It may be argued, however, that Canada should not directly intervene in this test of strength between the U.S.S.R. on the one hand and France, the United States, Great Britain and Benelux on the other. We are, of course, not responsible for the unhappy developments that have occurred in Berlin, though we were informed of the policies of the Western powers which have caused the U.S.S.R. to take the action that it has taken. Nevertheless, there is no escaping the fact that we would be implicated in any conflict which might result from this situation.

11. I am sending a copy of this memorandum to the Prime Minister and to Mr. Claxton. Mr. Claxton will be able to find out whether we could, in fact, make transport aircraft available. We are making inquiries from the E.C.A. Availabilities Committee of Trade and Commerce on the availability of stocks of concentrated dehydrated foodstuffs. First indications are that there are considerable stocks available. In case you wish to discuss this matter in Cabinet, I am sending Mr. Heeney a copy of the memorandum and of the enclosures.

As all Commonwealth countries were represented at the meeting, it will be difficult to trace the leak. [Ottawa], June 30, 1948

Supplementing my previous memorandum on Canada's participation in the efforts to supply Berlin with foodstuff by air, the following points are, I think, important:

1. Mr. Bevin has stated to our High Commissioner that the United Kingdom Government did not believe that the Berlin situation would lead to war. He thinks that the Russians will try everything short of war, but that, if the Western Powers hold firm, the Russians will back down and that this will have a tremendous effect on the world because it will be the first time since the war that any country has really stood up successfully to the Russians. Mr. Bevin added that, if we can get through this present difficulty successfully, there is a real possibility of ending the age-old feud between France and Germany, with all that this would mean for Western European unity.

2. This Berlin situation is one in which the United Kingdom, the United States and France are pursuing a common policy.

3. If we accept the request to participate, we may be making our contribution to a successful stand against the Russians and, therefore, eventually to a solution of present international difficulties.

4. If we refuse to participate, it would mean that, even in a matter of such importance when the three great Western Powers are acting together, we stand aloof.

5. If we participate by sending aircraft, it might of course develop that an incident would take place which would concern a Canadian aircraft and might become the occasion of war. However, it would only be the occasion and not the cause, and I doubt whether we would be justified in refusing to participate by this risk alone.

6. It may be argued that this was a battle of power politics arising out of the policies of the Western Powers towards Western Germany for which we are not responsible and, therefore, they have no right to implicate us in the result. Against this, however, is the fact that we have been kept informed of developments in regard to the formation of the Western German state, the issue of the new German currency, etc., and that, if we had any doubts as to the wisdom of these measures, we could, and should, have expressed them.

7. It is of course true that whether we take action or not in regard to the United Kingdom suggestion we will be involved in any trouble which might result from the present situation in Berlin. It is inconceivable that a war resulting from these difficulties which finds the U.S.S.R. on one side and the three great Western democracies on the other would not involve Canada. This being the case, it might be argued that we should do what we can to stop the Russians, short of war. The best way of doing this is to show them that they cannot starve Berlin and in this way drive the Western allies out of Berlin. If they are convinced of this, then I think Mr. Bevin's optimism will be justified and an arrangement will be made with the Russians, possibly along the lines of acceptance of the new Russian currency in the whole of Berlin in return for abandonment by the Russians of the blockade.

Mr. Stone has just telephoned from Washington to say that he has returned from the State Department, where he was making some enquiries about the situation in Berlin. He was informed that that situation is critical, but that the State Department is confident that, by diplomatic firmness and by utilising every possible method of air supply, they can defeat the Russian purpose to force them to withdraw from Berlin. They have, however, at the moment not enough air transport and need all that they can get. They have noted the reports from London of the United Kingdom request for help in this connection from Canada and the other Dominions, and they would be grateful for any such help that might be given.

They are, at the moment, working on a press statement which will be issued very shortly, emphasizing that they are going to stay in Berlin and have no intention of allowing themselves to be driven out.

They have heard of the rumour that the Russians may put up barrage balloons. If this happens, they will tell the Russians that, if those balloons are not down by a certain time, they will be shot down.

SITUATION IN BERLIN; AIR SUPPLY OF FOODSTUFFS

5. The Prime Minister reported upon the grave situation which had developed in Berlin and read communications from the High Commissioner in London following meetings of Commonwealth representatives with the U.K. Foreign Secretary.

Mr. Bevin had stated that the United Kingdom, the United States and France were determined to remain in Berlin, despite the risk of war. Jointly, representatives of the three powers were considering emergency means of supplying by air the necessary minimum quantities of food to the population of the western sectors. This would require the employment of large numbers of aircraft and the collection of quantities of concentrated foodstuffs. The three powers were agreed that it was all important not to yield to Soviet pressure.

Mr. Bevin had said that the United Kingdom and the United States would be grateful for any assistance any countries could give in making additional transport aircraft available for the proposed operation. He had asked representatives of Commonwealth countries to enquire what stocks of concentrated dehydrated foodstuffs they might have available.

A subsequent message from Mr. Robertson had reported that newspapers in London had announced that Commonwealth countries had been asked to lend Britain transport aircraft to help break the Russian blockade. Such reports were unauthorized and it would be correct to reply to any question on the subject in Parliament that no formal request had been received. The latest news indicated that the peak of the crisis was over and that emergency mobilization of transport aircraft might not in fact be required.

A message had also been received from the Military Mission in Berlin, reporting upon the emergency plan for feeding the western sectors by air. It had been intimated that help from other countries would be welcomed.

(Telegrams Nos. 980 and 981, Canada House to External Affairs, June 28; Telegram No. 1000, Canada House to External Affairs, June 30; Telegram No. 176, Canadian Military Mission, Berlin to External Affairs, June 28).

6. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that, upon receipt of the enquiry from Canada House, a preliminary list of foodstuffs in Canada which might be made available if the government so decided had been prepared. This indicated that, without any special measures, substantial quantities could be provided. Even larger amounts could be had if the government had recourse to requisition or retail purchase.

7. The Minister of National Defence observed that, as yet, there had been no request for Canada to assist by providing transport aircraft, though the subject had been mentioned by the U.K. Foreign Secretary. The air-lift of 3,000 to 4,000 tons of foodstuffs a day would require a very large number of aircraft and involve as many as 600 flights a day — an operation of great complexity and difficulty. It would be possible for Canada to make available five or six 'Northstars' — a very small fraction of the numbers of aircraft which would be needed.

Since the only Canadian planes which could be provided would be military, the possibility of an R.C.A.F. plane becoming involved in an 'incident' should be borne in mind. Further, policy with respect to Germany had been formulated and administered without opportunity for Canadian participation. The U.K. government should be informed that any request for Canadian assistance of this character would involve these and other important considerations and Mr. Bevin should be advised confidentially of the difficulties involved.

8. Mr. St. Laurent emphasized the vital importance of the western powers persisting in their refusal to yield to Soviet pressure.

A report had just come from Washington that the U.S. government were considering the issue of a public statement to the effect that they intended to remain in Berlin and that, if Soviet authorities employed barrage balloons to interfere with the air-lift, they would be dealt with drastically.

While Canada had not been a direct participant in the formulation of policy for Germany, it was to be remembered that the government had been kept fully informed of the course of events and of the decisions taken, also that Canada would necessarily be involved if war were to result from the present crisis.

9. Mr. King suggested that it might be necessary to make a statement on the subject in the House that afternoon. At the morning sitting a question had been asked. In reply it had been stated that an answer could not be given until the situation had been considered by the government.

10. The Cabinet, after further considerable discussion, agreed:

(a) that the High Commissioner in London be directed to inform the U.K. government of the foodstuffs which could be made available by Canada to assist in feeding the western sectors of Berlin;

(b) that the difficulties involved in any request of Canada to provide transport aircraft be brought confidentially to the attention of U.K. authorities; and,

(c) that a draft statement be prepared on the subject for the Prime Minister's use in Parliament.

Ottawa, June 30, 1948

My dear Colleague,

In connection with the discussion at Cabinet today regarding the enquiry made through the High Commissioner at London as to whether we would assist in meeting the emergency in Berlin, I thought I would set down here the reasons for the view I took so as to make sure there is no misunderstanding about them.

It seems to me that the course I suggested can be supported on five main grounds.

In the first place, the fact that Canadian military aircraft were used to assist in carrying out the occupation of Germany would appear to commit us to support the occupation with all its consequences, even war, and this although we had no say whatever in determining the policy which set in this course of events. This might be put more extremely if it should turn out that some action in connection with one of our planes had precipitated hostilities.

The second point is that bringing in Canadian assistance may appear to be provocative. We have no status as one of the occupying powers. Again, the Russians would make a good deal of this should it happen that a Canadian plane was made the actual occasion for an incident which led to war.

The third point is that we have in fact no status in the matter except as the subsidiary or paid help of the United Kingdom or of the United States.

The fourth point relates to the manner in which the enquiry was made by the United Kingdom. It seems to me that no friendly power, certainly not a power having the special relations which Britain has with Canada should put us in the position where we might feel that we had to take a course of action just because of the fact that an enquiry had been made. In such circumstances the right course for the country which is wishing to make the enquiry would be to ask very privately and discreetly if we would have any objection to an enquiry being made. Otherwise we might be put into the position where we would feel it necessary to adopt a course because publication of our refusal to do so would assist another nation, in this case the Soviet Union, or prove a source of embarrassment to us.

A fifth point is that it would appear that here our assistance would be of a token character, invited primarily for the purpose of giving the impression of Imperial solidarity. We have not got the same interest in this phase of the matter as have France, Belgium or the Netherlands, both because of their geographical situation and because of their membership in the Western Union as well as because of the fact that they are, I understand, powers which in fact have occupying forces.

In favour of our helping in every way possible is the fact that this is a vitally important test of strength which might determine the course of events for months and years ahead. If the Russians succeed it will be a major disaster for us, whereas if they do not succeed it will be a setback of at least some consequence for them. Eventually if there is war, we would take part and go all out to help in bringing victory to our side. It might be argued that we should go all out now, despite the objections I have made, in order to do everything in our power to setback the Russians over this issue.

In view of the announcement credited to the Foreign Office that an enquiry had been made, my own disposition would be to take no action publicly until the matter develops further but to tell Mr. Robertson of our general attitude along the lines discussed this morning.

Yours sincerely,

BROOKE CLAXTON

to Prime Minister*

I asked Sir Alexander Clutterbuck to see me this afternoon regarding the request from the United Kingdom for concentrated foodstuffs from Canada for supplying Berlin and the suggestion, made by Mr. Bevin at the meeting of the High Commissioners yesterday, that the United States and the United Kingdom would appreciate any air transport assistance from other countries that might be available. I told Sir Alexander that, as a result of a leakage in London, it appeared that this latter suggestion had been magnified and misrepresented into a request from the United Kingdom for such air transport assistance from Canada. I read to him the Canadian Press story based on an alleged Foreign Office statement. I said that if the Foreign Office had issued any such statement, it was unfounded and misleading on the basis of the reports of the meetings in question which we had received from our High Commissioner. I had confirmed this fact by a telephone conversation with Mr. Robertson. Sir Alexander said that, if the alleged Foreign Office statement had in fact been made, it was most unfortunate, but he thought that possibly the news story itself was inaccurate and that there had been no such statement. I told him that our High Commissioner was checking on this. There certainly had been a leak in London, though that was not necessarily the responsibility of the United Kingdom authorities. In fact, Mr. Robertson indicated that the leak might well have come from a High Commissioner's Office.

I told Sir Alexander that this matter had now been misrepresented in the press in London and in reports to Canada in such a way as to cause real embarrassment here, and that it would be helpful if a statement could be issued in London saying that the newspaper story, based on an alleged Foreign Office statement, was unauthorized and unfounded, and that no request for aircraft had been made. I also mentioned this to Mr. Robertson as one way of attempting to rectify the position.

I pointed out to Sir Alexander that, if the three occupying powers in Berlin wished assistance from other countries in supplying the civilian population of Berlin, they no doubt would get together and request such assistance from not one but all the governments who were friendly to them and in a position to help. I expressed my own personal opinion, however, that long before such help could be made available, the Berlin situation would have come to a head, as it obviously could not go on indefinitely as at present.

Sir Alexander appreciated our position and expressed the view (which Mr. Robertson also expressed on the telephone) that the United Kingdom Foreign Minister had no intention whatever of making any suggestion or request in a manner which would prove embarrassing to the Canadian Government. He seemed to think that all Mr. Bevin was doing with reference to aircraft was exploring the position in an informal and non-committal way and that his remarks, as reported in Mr. Robertson's telegram, did not constitute a formal Governmental request.

Ottawa, June 30, 1948

TOP SECRET. MOST IMMEDIATE.

For Robertson from Pearson. Further my telegram No. 1008.† Air transport for Berlin.

The Canadian Press story based on an alleged Foreign Office statement has caused great irritation here for reasons which you will appreciate. On the basis of your telegram 981,† the Prime Minister was going to state in the House this afternoon in answer to a question addressed to him this morning that, while there had been a request for foodstuffs to assist in supplying Berlin in the present emergency, no request had been made for air transport. Paragraph 2 of your telegram 1000 [sic] merely stated that Mr. Bevin had remarked that the United Kingdom and United States would be grateful for any assistance other countries could give by making additional air transport available. This is not interpreted here as a request as contrasted with the request for foodstuffs mentioned in paragraph 3 of your telegram. Furthermore, the alleged Foreign Office statement goes further than Machtig's suggested reply to questions would warrant. In the circumstances, therefore, we are at a loss to understand how such a statement could have been issued, if indeed it was issued and is not merely an inaccurate newspaper gloss. It will be quite obvious to you that in any event it has put the Government here in an embarrassing position.

2. One way of helping to remove this embarrassment would be to have the British authorities disavow the Canadian Press story as unauthorized and unfounded, adding that no request for transport aircraft has been made, that the matter was merely touched on informally in the course of discussions.

3. The procedure adopted by Mr. Bevin on this occasion as reported in your telegram 981 has aroused fears and suspicions here. It may indeed be argued that certain people in London are more interested in a centralized Commonwealth policy in this matter than they are in the provision of the assistance requested.

4. In any event, the transport aircraft that could be supplied from Canada would not be sufficiently numerous to make any important contribution to the total strength, while even to make this small number available would be difficult and would mean transferring them from other duties, including flights North, at the time of the year when these duties can most effectively be undertaken.

5. The situation, however, is better in regard to concentrated foodstuffs and I hope to be able to send you shortly information of quantities that could be made available to meet the emergency. This matter is being urgently canvassed by the government in a desire to help.

London, July 1, 1948

TOP SECRET. MOST IMMEDIATE.

Following for Pearson from Robertson, Begins: Your telegram No. 1008.† Following appears to be sequence of events:

1. Original leak to Evening Standard, as reported in my telegram No. 1000, probably came from Australia House. I brought matter immediately to attention of Commonwealth Relations Office, and agreed with Machtig on the possible answer to questions in Canada suggested in my telegram under reference. In the meantime, the Canadian Press, writing up the Evening Standard story for transmission to Canada, claimed to have got from somebody in the Foreign Office News Department the 'confirmation' cited in your telegram. I saw Nash, Head of the Foreign Office News Department, this morning, who is investigating the origins of the Canadian Press story. He did not think anybody on his staff could have used the language attributed to them in the Canadian Press despatch, was at complete variance with their instructions.

2. In the meantime, Foreign Office propose to issue the following substantive press statement this morning, and by its implications disavow the attribution to them of the Canadian Press story in question.

3. The Commonwealth Relations Office, who are most genuinely upset and exasperated by the handling of the whole business from beginning to end, will be cabling their regrets to the Government of Canada, and will send the Foreign Office press statement to all their High Commissioners for guidance in handling the matter of the Foreign Secretary's original statement to the High Commissioners in London.

4. There has been nothing on the subject in London press this morning, except the text of the Prime Minister's statement in Parliament with which the Foreign Office press statement will be completely in line.

5. Text of first Foreign Office statement, which has just been cleared with the Foreign Secretary, is as follows, Begins:

In speaking to the Commonwealth High Commissioners on Monday concerning the situation in Germany, Mr. Bevin mentioned the difficulties which would arise in supplying Berlin by air, and referred to the possibility of seeking concentrated foodstuffs and transport aircraft from any of the free countries which might have these readily available. It is understood that certain Governments have already indicated that they have foodstuffs available. No request for the supply of aircraft will be made unless further developments in the situation should require this. Ends. Message ends.

London, July 5, 1948

Following for Pearson from Robertson, Begins: Your telegram No. 1040 of the 3rd July.†

I saw Underhill, the Head of the Canadian Press Bureau, this afternoon, and pointed out the differences between the Foreign Office statement of July 1st and the Canadian Press despatch quoted in your telegram No. 1036.† He agreed after some pressing that the two texts might not leave the same impression on the reader, but insisted that the Canadian Press story filed from London was written in good faith and represented their best understanding of the purport of the Foreign Office communiqué. They had simply been trying to explain what they understood to be the facts in simple terms that would be understood by their Canadian readers. He was very sorry that the story had caused this embarrassment, and hoped that this sort of misunderstanding wouldn't arise again. He had already given Canadian Press Headquarters a full account of the circumstances that led up to the filing of the despatch in question.

2. It was an unprofitable interview. I was quite ready to accept his explanation that he was acting in good faith, but did not press the obvious inference that that assumption left pretty serious incompetence or ignorance as the only remaining explanation of the distortion of the Foreign Office statement. Ends.

I attach a copy of a memorandum dated July 6th, 1948,† giving the background to the present difficulties in Berlin. Also attached is a copy of a note dated July 6th which the United Kingdom and the United States today delivered to the Soviet Government.‡

2. The blockade of Berlin is now complete except for the air corridor by which the Western Powers hope to supply the two and a half million Germans of the western sections of the City. A number of personal and written approaches made to the Soviet Military Government in the hope of having communications and services restored to Western Berlin have produced no results.

3. The Western Powers have maintained a united front in the Berlin crisis, and it is evident that they agreed on the following points:

(a) The Western Powers must remain in Berlin, certainly by all measures short of war;<sup>5</sup>

(b) That they should confine their representations to the Soviet military authorities in Berlin as though the blockade were, in fact, the result of administrative and technical difficulties.

(c) That nothing should be done to force the Soviet military authorities into a position from which it would be difficult for them to withdraw. Thus, the three Western Powers have each declined to entertain the Berlin Magistrat's (City Council Executive) request that the question be brought before the United Nations.

4. It has become apparent, however, that little is to be expected of the Soviet military authorities in Berlin and we have been given the text of a note delivered to the Soviet Government today, July 6th, by the United Kingdom and United States. France also presented a note, which varied slightly because of France's different legal position in Germany. (France was not a signatory of the Potsdam and other relevant declarations.)

U.S. & U.K. prepared to go even to war. Louis S. St. Laurent.

5. The note, which will not be published immediately, reaffirms the rights of the Western Powers to communication with Berlin, and makes it quite clear that they will not be induced to abandon these rights.

6. In conclusion, it observes that negotiation and not duress is the manner in which members of the United Nations should settle disagreements, if any, and it suggests that, as a first step four-power negotiations should take place in Berlin. However, a condition to any negotiation must be the prior removal of restrictions on communications with Berlin.

7. An earlier draft of the United Kingdom-United States note had suggested that, subject to previous restoration of communications, a four-power meeting should be held in Berlin by the military governors. If they failed to agree the differences should go to the Council of Foreign Ministers and in the event of a failure by that body, the appropriate organ of United Nations should be consulted.

8. A possible reason for modifying the first draft to eliminate reference to the Council of Foreign Ministers and United Nations might have been to leave the Western Powers some points for future bargaining. It is understood that the U.S.S.R. is anxious to revive both the Allied Control Council in Berlin and the Council of Foreign Ministers, and could claim a considerable victory in being offered both these concessions before the bargaining began.

SITUATION IN BERLIN

1. The Secretary of State for External Affairs described developments since the meeting of June 30th and read the text of a note presented by the U.K. government to the Soviet government on July 6th. An identical communication had been presented by the U.S. government and one similar in terms by the government of France.

After protesting the action of Soviet authorities in imposing restrictions on transport to Berlin from the west, the notes asserted categorically the rights of the three countries in occupation of their sectors in Berlin with free access thereto and went on to declare that they would not be induced by pressure to abandon these rights. As a first step, it was suggested that the four occupying authorities should participate in negotiations for settlement of questions in dispute; a prerequisite of such negotiations, however, would be restoration of communications.

2. The Prime Minister observed that there had been no further word from the United Kingdom with respect to assistance from Canada, in relation either to food-stuffs or air transport.

The situation remained very grave and might deteriorate further at short notice. National Defence should be in a position to report upon the readiness of the Services in case of any sudden emergency, particularly Air forces.

3. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted the report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the observations of the Prime Minister.

Dear Brooke [Claxton],

The Minister has been good enough to let me see your letter to him of 30th June regarding recent suggestions that Canada might assist in meeting the present emergency in Berlin. I hope you will not consider it inappropriate for me to make one or two personal observations on the points which you emphasize in your letter.

Many of the points seem to me to be entirely sound, based as they are on the inept way in which this matter was brought to the attention of the Canadian Government. I am not, however, so sure in my own mind that the points would be equally sound if the United Kingdom, the United States and France had made a request for assistance of a number of democratic countries, including Canada. A request of this kind would, for example, have made it clear that any assistance which was invited from us was not for the purpose of giving an impression of 'Imperial' solidarity, but as a demonstration to the Soviet of the solidarity in an emergency of the North Atlantic democratic states. Such a demonstration might have had valuable international results and have served the national interests of Canada. I doubt myself whether a demonstration that the North Atlantic states were backing up the three Western occupying powers in their efforts to hold Berlin would be any more provocative to the Russians than any other demonstration of the strength and will to cooperate of the North Atlantic powers.

In your first point, you state that Canada had no say whatever in determining the policy which has resulted in the present course of events in Berlin. It is true, however, that we have been kept well informed by the United Kingdom of the developments of their policy in this matter and we did know how things were shaping up. We also took advantage of the opportunity offered to us to submit to the six powers meeting in London our views on the whole range of the German problem; even though these views were only preliminary and on the official level. The decision not to insist on any greater participation in the decisions reached in London was, I believe, made by the Government. This, of course, raises the old problem of whether we are entitled to use the argument that we were not a party to the formation of a policy as a reason for remaining aloof from its consequences when we, in fact, did not desire to accept the responsibility that comes from participation.

My own view is that the United Kingdom handled this matter in an irritating and inept way which may well justify the reception that it received in Ottawa. I am not at all sure, however, whether that reception should have been the same if the request had been made in a different way. It is true that one consequence of participation in collective action, or in any collective arrangements designed to prevent war, is that the aggressor may, accidentally or by design, put us in the position where some Canadian incident or some Canadian action becomes the occasion of war. I think, however, that this is not too great a risk to take if there are compensating advantages from participation in collective action, as I think there would be.

Yours sincerely,

L.B. PEARSON

SITUATION IN BERLIN

4. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that the position in Berlin was very serious. The Soviet reply to the notes of the three powers was under consideration. The Allied air lift of supplies was continuing but could not go on indefinitely.

The situation was being discussed by the Brussels Powers and considered urgently in Washington. Meantime, the government crisis in France illustrated the weakness of that country in the face of any possible aggression.

5. The Minister of National Defence, in answer to an inquiry by the Prime Minister, stated that Canadian forces available for any immediate emergency were small. Within a year effective formations of some size could be put in the field; by that time all three Services would be in a position to deploy units, trained and equipped for operations. This period would also be necessary to enable industrial production and training establishments to bring larger forces into being.

6. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted the reports of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of National Defence.

I am sending you herewith two telegrams, one from Washington† and one from London,† which give some interesting additional information on the Berlin situation.

The telegram from Washington indicates that the British and Americans, after some initial differences, are getting together on the question of procedure. They will apparently deal in the first instance with Molotov rather than Stalin. This, I think, is wise. Stalin in this matter should, I suppose, be considered as a court of last resort.

More important is the apparent agreement that, if the approach to Molotov fails, then the matter should be submitted to the United Nations. If this is to be done, I think it is of the greatest possible importance that the implications of this step should be carefully thought out in advance and agreement be reached as to the steps that should be taken at Lake Success and the order in which they should be taken. I must say that I get pretty worried at the tendency attributed to Mr. Bevin to play this piece 'by ear', and I think that the State Department are very sound in insisting that all possible results of an appeal to the United Nations should be thought through before taking it.

Finally, the Washington telegram reaffirms that there is no evidence that the Russians desire to provoke war over Berlin, though there is a real danger of an accidental war.

The telegram from Canada House gives an interesting analysis of Russian policy as seen by the Foreign Office. It is felt that the ultimate and unshakeable Russian aim is to obtain control over the whole of Germany and, if it is necessary for that purpose, to keep Western Germany in a state of chaos and uncertainty. It is because this latter objective was being defeated by Western Allied policy that the crisis over Berlin was provoked.

I get the impression from the Foreign Office analysis that there is great reluctance to agree to Four Power talks on the whole German problem. I am glad that this reluctance has apparently been overcome in the draft United Kingdom reply. It is, of course, obvious that there are certain dangers and disadvantages in such talks, but these, I suggest, are not so great as the dangers and disadvantages of merely standing pat in Berlin and defying the U.S.S.R. This latter policy is, indeed, no policy at all as it is admitted that the present position of the Allies in Berlin will be untenable after a short time if the Russians desire to make it so. For that reason, I think that Four Power talks are essential. At best, they will result in the Western Allies remaining in Berlin by a new agreement, at worst they may create a situation, which certainly does not exist at present, where it would be possible for Berlin to be abandoned with results which, while unpleasant, will not be fatal.

The draft United Kingdom reply to the Soviet note attached to Mr. Attlee's letter to you of 21st July† seems to me to be a wise and carefully thought out statement of the case. It is firm but not provocative and leaves the door open for a negotiated settlement of the Berlin difficulties.

It firmly reasserts the absolute, not merely the conditional right of the Western Allies to be in Berlin and refutes vigorously the misrepresentation of British policy towards Germany contained in the Soviet note. It particularly emphasizes, and I think this is wise, that a first object of British policy is to restore a democratic and united Germany. The note then asks the U.S.S.R. to lift the blockade of Berlin and affirms, in return, the willingness of the United Kingdom to discuss not merely the Berlin difficulties but 'outstanding problems affecting Germany as a whole.' This is an important concession to Russian desires. The United Kingdom note, however, and quite rightly, states that there can be no discussion with the Russians of these outstanding problems under the pressure of conditions which the Soviet Government itself has taken the initiative in creating.

The concluding paragraph of the note expresses the desire of the United Kingdom to cooperate with the U.S.S.R. in the establishment of firm conditions of peace in Europe generally which would allow economic rehabilitation and political recovery. The note then concludes with the following important sentence:

'They have been and are therefore ready, as soon as pressure upon the Western Allied Powers in Berlin has been removed, to discuss as between the four Powers, together with other European nations, the best means of restoring peace, confidence and understanding between all the Allies in the recent war.'

It is to be hoped that the United States and the French Governments will agree to a reply to the Russians along the lines of the United Kingdom draft. I understand from Mr. Wrong that the first draft of the United States note is in substance not very different from the British. If this approach is agreed on (and I feel sure it will) then the onus of refusing to negotiate a solution of the existing difficulties is put squarely on the Russians.

The United Kingdom note is also reassuring in that it abandons any suggestion that force should be used at this time to breach the Berlin blockade even at the risk of having to resist Soviet countermeasures. This, of course, is particularly important. A final effort is to be made for conciliation, but only if the Berlin blockade is lifted.

It is, of course, clear that the Western powers cannot undertake to begin talks, not merely about Berlin but about the whole German problem, until Soviet blockade pressure has been removed. There may be a difficulty here. The Russians may say they will lift the blockade once the talks begin, and the Western Allies counter by insisting that talks cannot begin until the blockade is lifted. Surely it should be possible to reach agreement on the basis of opening the talks and lifting the blockade simultaneously.

The important thing is to begin negotiations, though I realize that this cannot be done until Soviet pressure is lifted in view of the repeated statements of Washington and London that they will not yield to force. It is also important, I think, even from the point of view of the Western Allies, that the negotiations should be concerned with the whole of Germany and not merely Berlin. This would transfer the conflict from Berlin, where the Western Powers are at a physical disadvantage, to the whole of Germany, where the Soviet would be on much weaker ground. It seems to me that it is impossible for the Western Allies to maintain their position permanently in Berlin if Germany is to be indefinitely partitioned. Therefore, either this partitioning should be ended, on conditions which are agreeable to the Western Allies, or steps should be taken to bring about a situation which would make withdrawal from Berlin ultimately possible.

There remains the question of the reference of the dispute to the United Nations. This is not mentioned in the United Kingdom note and may have been abandoned for the time being. I think myself that it would be a mistake to bring the United Nations into this picture at the present time, though of course ultimately, if the worst happens, this will have to be done. In any event, before the question is referred to the United Nations, the Western Powers should have determined as precisely as possible the successive steps which they wish to see taken, and have decided upon concessions which they are prepared to accept at the insistence of the United Nations in the interests of securing a peaceful settlement. If the question were referred to the Security Council, for example, a drafting committee consisting of three non-permanent members, including the Ukraine, might be established. This procedure would be useless unless the two "Western" non-permanent members were in a position to start some process of negotiation and were not merely expected to hold the United States-United Kingdom line without any concession whatever. The Western Powers, therefore, would have to foresee the possibility that the Security Council might bring in a resolution instructing the parties to resume negotiations without reference to the conditions which they had previously indicated.

I am attaching herewith a report from the Canadian Press† of a comment made by a Cabinet Minister on the possibility of Canada joining Australia in assisting in the Berlin airlift. I wonder whether it is necessary, at this time at least, to make the points which are made in the alleged statement. Might it not be better to point out that no request has been made for Canadian assistance.

It is, of course, true that we have had no part in the German occupation, but to state that merely invites the reply that we refused to take part. There is an answer to that reply, but the argument can become pretty unprofitable. Similarly, it is only half true to say that we have no part in the German developments because the British have been keeping us very carefully informed of them and we could, if we so desired, attempt to modify their policy. I am not suggesting that it would be wise to do so, but again to make this point merely invites a counter-argument.

I think that the final point is even a more dubious one, namely that we have no desire to take part in a situation that might easily explode into war. That really doesn't seem to me to be any argument either against or in favour of assisting. Explosion into war would have nothing to do with our assistance. Furthermore, we would inevitably be involved in the consequences of any such explosion, so I think it is conveying the wrong impression to suggest that, because we remain aloof from the situation, we may be able to remain aloof from the possible explosion arising out of it.

Unfortunately, the attached telegrams from London, Nos. 1266 and 1269,<sup>6</sup> indicate that we have not heard the last of this airlift business. The Australian offer will undoubtedly provoke interest and possibly controversy in this country, while the Daily Telegraph article referred to in 1266 is mischievous and embarrassing.

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Pearson from Robertson, Begins: The Daily Telegraph this morning, under heading of 'Britain Seeks Air Lift Aid,' and sub-heading of 'Call to Dominions', says: Quote:

The British Government, I understand, has sent to all the Dominions a suggestion that they should assist as far as they feel inclined in the air lift to Berlin.

An offer by Australia to send 10 Dakota transport aircraft is part of the response. Transport Command, I learn, has indicated that it will accept, but it hopes RAAF<sup>7</sup> crews and maintenance staff will accompany the Dakotas. The RAF may be able to take over later.

Britain has made it clear to the Dominions that any help will be welcome, technical or otherwise.

Individual Dominions are, of course, free to make their own decisions. Their replies are expected shortly. Unquote.

2. I spoke to Machtig about this story this morning, and he is arranging to have the Foreign Office News Department refer enquirers to the communiqué of July 1st, text of which is quoted in my telegram No. 1007. This communiqué remains a correct statement of the position.

3. The Times this morning reports from Canberra that Mr. Chifley has announced that the Australian Cabinet have decided that 10 Dakota transport aircraft, with crews, should be made available to assist the Western Allies in the air lift of supplies to Berlin should the United Kingdom require such assistance from Australia. It is undoubtedly this announcement from Canberra which has led the Daily Telegraph to revive last month's story about a 'request' to other Commonwealth Governments for transport aircraft. Ends.

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Following for Pearson from Robertson, Begins: Reference my telegram No. 1266 of today's date.

The United Kingdom authorities are presently assessing the strain of their contribution to the Berlin air lift on their available equipment and trained transport personnel. In this connection you will have noted that some ten days ago the Air Minister postponed previously announced demobilization orders for certain categories of RAF personnel to help meet the strain imposed on RAF resources by its share of the air lift commitment.

2. Nothing has been said to me yet about the possibility of a request being addressed to the Government of Canada for transport assistance. I have, however, thought it wise to advise Machtig informally of the continuing relevance of the considerations put forward in your telegrams No. 1020 and 1021 of July 1st.<sup>8</sup> What weight the Commonwealth Relations Office have will certainly be thrown against any suggestions of asking for "token" aid. They can be counted on to do their best to prevent any repetition of the Foreign Secretary's ill-considered approach reported in my telegram No. 981 of June 28th.† Ends.

Dear Mr. Pearson,

GERMANY

You will no doubt have seen reports in the Press that the Australian Government have offered to make ten Dakota aircraft available to assist in the air lift to Berlin, if required. This offer has been considered in London, and a reply has been sent to the Australian Government explaining that the great need at present is not for aircraft but aircrews. The number of aircraft which can be used is limited by the airfield capacity available in Germany, and the United Kingdom authorities expect soon to have to reduce the number of our Dakotas in order to make room for United States reinforcements of C 54's. My Government have therefore asked the Australian Government whether instead of providing aircraft they could make trained aircrews available to help the Royal Air Force aircrews, who are working intensely under great pressure.

Following on a sympathetic statement recently made by Dr. Malan in the South African Parliament, the United Kingdom High Commissioner in the Union of South Africa is also being asked to inform the South African authorities of the great need for aircrews, and to say that if they were able to make any aircrews available they would of course be extremely valuable.

The position is also being explained to the New Zealand Government in case, in view particularly of the Australian offer, they should wish to take any similar action.

I feel that the Canadian Government will wish to have this information before them in view of the uncertainty regarding the duration and outcome of the negotiations now proceeding in Moscow.<sup>9</sup>

Yours sincerely,

The following comment appears in a covering memorandum from Pearson to St. Laurent dated August 18†:

The letter does not request any help from Canada, but the last paragraph suggests somewhat delicately that such help would be welcome.

MOSCOW DISCUSSIONS ON GERMANY<sup>10</sup>

Introduction

The present Moscow talks got under way on August 2nd, 1948, when Stalin received the representatives of the United Kingdom, the United States, and France. Stalin stated that the Soviet Government would agree to a joint statement making the following points:

(a) Removal of all transport restrictions between Berlin and Western Zones, and simultaneously

(b) Withdrawal of Western, in favour of Soviet Zone, currency in Berlin, and also simultaneously

(c) Announcement of resumption of negotiations regarding Berlin, and of a Four-Power meeting to consider other outstanding problems affecting Germany.

2. Stalin asked to have recorded his Government's desire that the implementation of the London decision on Western Germany be suspended until the Four-Power meeting had tried to reach an agreement on Germany. The Western representatives 'privately made statements which went as far as possible to meet Marshal Stalin,' but explained that they must consult their Governments.

3. Four subsequent meetings with Molotov have been held: on August 6th the Western representatives submitted a draft of a joint statement, on August 9th Molotov presented a counter-draft, on August 12th the Western representatives gave their Governments' comments on the Soviet counter-draft, and on August 16th they presented to Molotov a re-draft of the joint statement.

Area of Agreement

4. The Western draft of August 6th showed the Western Powers prepared to agree on several points made during the Stalin interview, namely, removal of transport restrictions by both sides, acceptance of Soviet Zone currency in Berlin, and opening of new negotiations regarding Berlin and Germany as a whole. Neither that meeting, however, nor the three subsequent meetings, have achieved agreement on two disputed points: the control of Soviet Zone currency in Berlin, and the implementation or not of the London decision on Western Germany.

Disputed Point: Control of Berlin Currency

5. The Western draft of August 6th, called for quadripartite control of Soviet Zone currency in Berlin, the Soviet counterdraft of August 9th for sole Soviet control. Molotov explained that in the Soviet view quadripartite control had lapsed throughout Germany as a whole as a result of the London decision, and the Western Powers could not claim any quadripartite authority in Berlin until it had been restored in Germany as a whole. To this, the Western representatives replied on August 12th that for the Western Powers the entire negotiations hinged on the recognition of their unconditional right to be in Berlin by the acceptance of quadripartite control of currency there. They could not recognize Berlin as a part of the Soviet Zone. Molotov's reaction to this was milder than expected. He seemed concerned to set a date on which the transport restrictions should be lifted and the currency changes made. Accordingly the Western re-draft presented on August 16th named August 25th as the date on which the restrictions should be lifted, and the Soviet Zone currency accepted for all Berlin provided that before that date the four Military Governors should have worked out arrangements for its issue and use under quadripartite authority. Molotov objected that this involved the unconditional lifting of the restrictions, but the conditional acceptance of Soviet Zone currency in Berlin, and that therefore there was no simultaneity of the concessions, as Stalin had proposed. He suggested that the Military Governors be told to make arrangements for lifting restrictions and changing-over currency simultaneously, but would not agree that the instructions to Military Governors should provide for quadripartite control. The Western representatives replied that to send Military Governors any directive unless basic principles had been agreed in Moscow would merely be transferring to Berlin problems which had proved insoluble in Moscow.

Disputed Point: Implementation of London Decisions

6. The Western draft of August 6th made no hint of the cautious reassurance on this subject apparently given by the Western representatives at their meeting with Stalin, but the Soviet counter-draft devoted a couple of sentences to this point. The Western representatives pointed out that Stalin had agreed not to make this a condition of the present discussions, and have refused to accept any reference to the London decisions in the joint statement as they do not wish the impression created that they have been negotiating on this point under duress. The most the United Kingdom will concede is a reference in a separate non-confidential document to the effect that the Western Powers, while re-affirming their desire for Four-Power agreement for the whole of Germany, which the London decisions do not preclude, are nevertheless unable to agree to postponing the implementation of those decisions. At the last meeting on August 16th, however, Molotov made no mention of the London decisions, which may indicate that the Soviet Government now realize the Western Powers will not give way on this point.

Present Position

7. The United Kingdom representative in Moscow has now been told to seek, together with his colleagues, a second interview with Stalin. At this meeting he is to maintain the line described above. He is to point out that if this line is accepted, the Powers would be reverting to the situation which existed before the Soviet blockade of Berlin began, and before currency reform took place in Western Germany.

8. The intention in seeking this second interview with Stalin, therefore, is to have Stalin reverse Molotov's stand on currency control, without conceding anything on the London decisions. Mr. Robertson reports from London that Mr. Bevin was cautiously optimistic that this could be done. His optimism is apparently based on the increasing effectiveness of the Berlin air lift, and the increasing economic difficulties of the Soviet Zone of Germany.

AIRLIFT FOR BERLIN

You will have seen press reports, which appear to be accurate, that the South African Government has offered aircrews to assist the British in their airlift programme. This has, of course, received a good deal of attention and we have had enquiries from the press about it. The fact that a South African Government which is considered to be so unfriendly to the British connection has made this gesture naturally points up the problem so far as Canada is concerned.

The news services are carrying this morning the following despatch from London:

'An Air Ministry spokesman says that Britain has not asked Canada for aid in flying food to blockaded Berlin. He says whether such aid will be offered is up to the Canadian Government.

'The spokesman adds: 'It is well known that we would like all the help we can get — South Africa and Australia offered help and these offers have been accepted.'"

I understand that Mr. Claxton is giving consideration to this question. I wonder whether you would think it desirable to have a word with him about it in the light of the South African development.

EUROPEAN SITUATION; GERMANY

22. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that despite the progress made at Moscow the military authorities in Berlin had so far failed to reach agreement and matters were at a standstill.

It was difficult to judge the Soviet intentions; the only comfort that could be drawn from recent events was that the Russians had so far not taken the opportunities afforded by the present difficult situation to precipitate an incident.

23. The Minister of National Defence, in answer to a question by the Prime Minister, stated that the U.S. Secretary of Defence at the meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee held on August 16th had acquiesced in the Canadian appreciation of Soviet intentions — there was no limit to the aggressive purposes of the Soviet Union; nevertheless war was not inevitable, though plans should be made on the basis that it was.

24. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted the Ministers' reports.

BERLIN AIR LIFT; PARTICIPATION BY COMMONWEALTH COUNTRIES

25. The Secretary of State for External Affairs observed that it had been announced that both Australia and South Africa would participate in the air operation for supply of food to the Berlin population.<sup>11</sup>

While no formal request had been made for assistance from Canada, the fact that there was no Canadian participation had caused criticism and would cause further unfavourable comment. In this connection it had been noted that Canada had no status whatever in the occupation of Berlin or of Germany as a whole. Further, it had been in mind that the particular relations between the Soviet and Canadian governments were such that distinctively Canadian participation might be made the occasion of an incident if the Russian authorities decided to force the issue at any time.

26. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted the Minister's observations.

EUROPEAN SITUATION; BERLIN; AIR LIFT

13. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that the attitude of the Soviet representatives in discussions in Moscow and Berlin had led the United Kingdom, United States and France to conclude that the U.S.S.R. were deliberately dragging out negotiations with no intention of reaching agreement. For this reason, a note had been sent to the Soviet government asking whether Soviet authorities would lift the blockade of Berlin in consideration of agreement to have the Soviet Mark apply to all sectors of the city; a reply had been requested by September 29th.

The governments of the United Kingdom, United States and France had agreed that if, as seemed probable, the Russians turned down this proposal or failed to reply, the whole problem would be referred to the United Nations. Whether such a reference would be made to the Security Council or the Assembly was presently under discussion by the three Foreign Ministers. It seemed likely that the former would be the better course in the first instance.

14. Mr. Pearson added that U.K. and U.S. authorities had advised their governments that it would be possible to continue the air lift throughout the winter in sufficient volume to provide for the minimum requirements of the population of the Western sectors. In this connection it was not improbable that, if the Berlin problem were referred to the United Nations, the situation might arise in which the representatives of other nations would have to declare themselves for or against the attitude adopted by the United Kingdom, United States and French governments. This in turn might quite well lead to an appeal to other nations including Canada for cooperation with the United Kingdom and the United States in the maintenance of the air lift. If an appeal were made on such a wider basis, the government would no doubt wish to reconsider the Canadian position in relation to contribution to the air lift.

15. The Minister of National Defence said that his reports confirmed what Mr. Pearson had said concerning the feasibility of continuing the air supply to Berlin throughout the winter.

If Canada were to decide to cooperate in such circumstances as were visualized, it would be possible for the R.C.A.F. to send a self-contained squadron of Dakotas (ten aircraft) capable of moving some 75 tons a day.

16. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted the Ministers' reports.

AIRLIFT TO BERLIN

Now that the discussions in Moscow and Berlin have broken down and the three western powers have referred the Berlin situation to the United Nations, a new situation has arisen which would appear to warrant reconsideration by the Canadian Government of its attitude on the Berlin airlift. The action of the three western powers in placing the problem before the Security Council has resulted in the problem now coming before a body of which Canada is a member.

2. Regardless of whether or not the Berlin airlift should be continued indefinitely, it would seem clear that the airlift must be continued throughout this winter. The continuance of the airlift throughout the winter will be a difficult operation and will require an increase in the aircraft, aircrew, and ground crew available for the operation.

3. The average daily tonnage delivered by the U.K. and the U.S. combined is about 3,800 tons of which the U.K. provides 30% and the U.S. 70%. The U.K. is using about 96 aircraft. The requirements for October and November are estimated at 4,500 tons daily, increasing to 6,000 tons daily in January, then falling off to an average of 4,000 tons daily.

4. I am informed by the Department of National Defence that a period of approximately six weeks would elapse between a decision by the Canadian Government to participate in the airlift and the arrival of Canadian aircraft, aircrew, and ground crew in western Germany.

5. I would therefore suggest that the Cabinet approve publication of a statement along the following lines:

The United Kingdom, the United States and France have for some months been attempting to reach agreement with the Soviet Union on the lifting of the Soviet blockade of Berlin. Their efforts have met with failure and they have now referred the matter to the Security Council, of which Canada is a member. It is to be assumed that the Soviet Union will not fail to exercise its veto in the Security Council, and it will not be possible, therefore, for the Security Council formally to adopt a resolution on the subject. However, if seven members of the Security Council, after considering the matter, express agreement with the position which the western powers have taken in their dispute with the Soviet Union over Berlin, the Canadian Government will be glad to assume a share of the responsibility for the airlift, if the powers principally concerned desire such Canadian assistance. Canadian assistance would take the form of a squadron of ten Dakota aircraft, complete with its own aircrew, administrative and servicing personnel. This would involve a total of 90 aircrew and 219 ground crew.

Mr. Pearson spoke to me on the telephone today, mainly to get some inkling as to how the discussions with E.C.A. had gone. He then raised a question which is much in his mind: the possible Canadian participation in the air lift to Berlin. He said that he had got fairly general, but not yet unanimous, agreement among his colleagues to the view that Canada ought to do something now that the issue had been placed before the United Nations. What he was bothered about was what form the contribution should take. He thought that it might create difficulties over organization and command if four or five countries added each a small quota to the Allied forces, and thought better results might be secured if the Canadian share took some other form. This might be possibly a greater part in trans-Atlantic ferrying or the taking over of responsibility for the increased operations at Goose Bay, or something of that order.

He added that Mr. Robertson was discussing in Paris the possibility of some sort of a joint appeal for assistance in the air lift, so that it would not in our case be labelled solely as aid to Britain. I told him that I had suggested, on my own responsibility, to Hickerson a couple of weeks ago that he should turn over in his mind what sort of approach might be made to Canada in this connection, but that I had heard nothing from him since then.

It was agreed that I should see Hickerson and have a further talk with him on the matter.

I spoke to Mr. Hickerson in the sense of Mr. Pearson's inquiry this afternoon. He said that in his own judgment the most effective contribution which Canada could make would be to provide planes and the air crew to fly them into Berlin. He wanted to know how much we could do. I told him I had no exact information, but I had heard it suggested that we might find ten North Stars fairly soon. He fully appreciated that it was easier for us to do this now that the problem was before the U.N. In reply to his question I said that I thought that it would not matter whether any Canadian aircraft worked from a British or a U.S. base, and that as the North Stars had British engines it would probably be more efficient for them to work with the R.A.F.

He told me that they now had 160 aircraft employed in the airlift with enough reserves to keep the airlift at this number. General Clay has recently appealed for more aircraft for winter use, and the decision is before the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Hickerson was sure that Clay would get what he asked for.

He could not see any role as useful for Canada to play in Atlantic ferrying or at Goose Bay. The ferrying consists almost entirely of planes that have come back for re-fitting after 1,000 hours flying time. They get their check at the end of 500 hours in the U.K., but they are returned to the U.S. at 1,000 hours.

He thinks Canadian participation will be useful both as practical assistance and as a demonstration of intent. He is going to speak quite privately to some people in the U.S.A.F., and promised to let me know very shortly the result of his inquiries.

Hickerson told me this morning the results of his inquiries about possible Canadian participation in the air lift to Berlin. The U.S.A.F., he said, are most enthusiastic about Canada giving some assistance. As to the form of the assistance, their preference would be that we should send transport planes to operate from the British bases, as technically this would be the most efficient method. Their second choice would be for the planes to operate in Germany with the U.S.A.F. Alternatively, but a poor third choice, we could do something useful in the trans-Atlantic service by working in with the services now conducted by the Military Air Transport Service.

Both in the State Department and the Defence Establishment they would be very glad to see us flying planes into Berlin. The State Department is ready to fall in with our own suggestions as to what action they could take to make this decision easier for us. As Hickerson put it, they are prepared to twist our arm, squeeze it gently or do nothing at all.

I said that I understood that some discussions were going on in Paris on the subject and that the way might best be cleared there rather than through any action in Washington.

[Postscript:] Information passed to Pearson by telephone. He said there were difficulties with some of his colleagues. The crux is to find some way of making the supply of Berlin a responsibility of others as well as the occupying powers.

Dear Hume [Wrong]:

Apropos of our conversations Friday and yesterday about possible Canadian participation in the airlift with North Stars, I think I ought to tell you that I saw today a personal telegram from General Clay which has such an important bearing on this question that I am quoting for your and Mike Pearson's secret information a paraphrase of this message:

'I am seriously disturbed over delay in Washington in decisions to send additional C-54's. After decision is made there will be corresponding delay in their arrival in Germany. The bad weather is almost upon us and the present lift is exceeding our minimum needs by only a slight margin. Present lift will not meet bad weather conditions. In addition to more planes, additional flight personnel is also needed.

'I am fully confident that given the planes we can do this job. Additional planes are needed from the psychological point now to prove we can do the job in bad weather and to build up a little coal for space heating. Moreover, I believe the Soviets may yield if we demonstrate now that we can meet weather demands. In my opinion we are winning the fight now and now is the time to maximize our airlift.'

I earnestly hope that the Canadian Government will decide to participate in the airlift at the earliest possible moment.

Yours sincerely,

JOHN D. HICKERSON

UN SECURITY COUNCIL; BERLIN

5. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meeting of September 25th, reported that the breakdown of direct negotiations between the Western Powers and the Soviet government had resulted in the Berlin question being brought before the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter as a matter threatening peace.

By a vote of nine to two, the Council had decided, the previous day, to include this question on the agenda. The Soviet representative had at once indicated that he would not participate in its discussion. Canada had voted with the majority.

It was not yet clear what precisely the Western Powers hoped as a result of further discussion in the Security Council. There would be advantage from a propaganda point of view and it might be that an atmosphere favourable to some kind of settlement could be created. For the present, the Canadian delegation had been instructed not to be drawn into the discussion until there had been an opportunity of studying specific proposals for the next step.

(Telegram No. 74, External Affairs to Canadian Delegation, Paris, Oct. 2, 1948).†

6. Mr. Pearson then read a draft telegram to the delegation in Paris, setting out preliminary views on the attitude which they should adopt. They should seek guidance on any specific proposals before supporting them in the Council. Initially, however, they should obtain clarification of the intentions of the Western Powers.

Soviet boycott of any Council resolution of censure was inevitable, but continued examination of the question was necessary to maintain the Council's prestige. It was hoped that during the Council's discussions, the Western Powers might reach agreement on the best solution.

Our preliminary view was that the issue might well be widened to include the German settlement as a whole and a reference thereof might be made to a conference of all belligerents. In this connection, consideration should be given to suggestions put forward by the Head of our Berlin Military Mission for possible demilitarization of the Berlin area.

7. The Acting Prime Minister suggested an alteration in the wording of paragraph 1 of the draft telegram submitted with reference to the delegation's attitude upon proposals before the Council.

8. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted the Minister's report and approved the draft telegram submitted for despatch to the Canadian delegation, subject to revision along the lines indicated by Mr. St. Laurent.

London, October 12, 1948

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Acting Prime Minister from N.A. Robertson, Begins: On my first return to London on September 18th, I had an exploratory word with Mr. Hector McNeil, the Minister of State, about conditions under which some direct Canadian participation in the airlift to Berlin might become feasible and desirable. Since our return to London from Paris, I have talked with the Secretary of State for Air and Air Vice-Marshal Hardman, who is in charge of RAF participation in the airlift. These conversations were inconclusive and left a number of hypothetical political questions unanswered. They have, however, left me with the feeling that the difficulties of a diplomatic and technical order in the way of any appropriate Canadian contribution to the airlift are sufficiently serious to make it unwise for us to pursue such a project further at this stage.

2. The major diplomatic difficulty is a fear which I find held by responsible people that the Soviet Union might challenge, perhaps by direct interception, participation in the airlift by planes<sup>13</sup> flying the flag of a country which is not one of the occupying Powers with a legal claim under the terms of the Articles of Surrender, and subsequent Inter-Allied Agreements, to participate in the occupation of Germany and the Government of Berlin. I believe this was a consideration in the minds of the United Kingdom and the United States in discouraging an earlier Dutch suggestion that they might be able to provide some of their Army transport planes for the lift, and was also a factor in the United Kingdom suggestion to Australia that provision of aircrew would be more helpful than the provision of additional transport planes.

3. After my conversation with Pearson on this subject from Paris, I made some enquiries about the practicability of a Canadian Transport Squadron taking over some definite "relay" responsibility from the R.A.F., which would permit the latter to increase proportionately its diversion of its own transport planes to the Berlin

In a covering memorandum (DEA/11840-40, October 13)† to St. Laurent, Reid pointed out that this argument would not apply to Canadian air and ground crew.

service.<sup>14</sup> This approach does not seem likely to lead to anything, because the R.A.F. is not in fact carrying out any unified 'relay' transport operations which are directly ancillary to the Berlin lift. They have put all available transport planes into this operation, stripping their various transport services all around the world, and more particularly cutting down to a dangerously low level their strategic R.A.F. transport service to the Middle East. From a purely service point of view the R.A.F. would welcome the provision of transport planes if it would enable these services to be restored, but I did not think they should be given any encouragement whatever to expect assistance of this order in a field so remotely and indirectly related to the problem of the Berlin airlift.

4. I formed the impression that so far as the combined lift operation is concerned, the limiting factor over the next few months is likely to be aerodrome facilities rather than the number of planes or numbers of airmen. This means that both the United States and the United Kingdom are attempting to assemble as many planes with large cargo-carrying capacities as possible, and are substituting them for the Dakotas which were used in the first phases of the lift. In terms of logistics, therefore, though an offer of North Star Squadron would make sense and be very welcome if the diplomatic difficulties already mentioned did not operate, an offer of Dakotas might be more of an embarrassment than a help.<sup>15</sup>

5. The United Kingdom began in July by carrying about half the total airlift into Berlin. This proportion has been steadily diminishing as more and larger American aircraft become available, and the plan over the winter months contemplates about four-fifths of the tonnage being carried by the United States Air Force and one-fifth by the R.A.F. This one-fifth share will be increasingly carried by Yorks rather than Dakotas. In order to keep up its schedule of York flights, the R.A.F. have had to improvise special training courses for York operators, and have had to withdraw a certain number of Yorks from the lift for use in training. The R.A.F. is short of York-trained crews, and the aircrews sent from Australia, New Zealand and South Africa are all being re-trained in this country to help make up the shortage.

6. My general conclusion, based on the foregoing factors, is that it is not presently practicable to arrange the sort of direct and distinct Canadian contribution to the airlift which on general grounds of policy might have seemed appropriate.

7. This is a very hasty appreciation done between two sessions of the Prime Ministers' meetings, but I thought you might wish to have something from me on the subject to discuss with Pearson and Claxton before you left for London. Ends.

Apparently St. Laurent reacted negatively to Reid's proposal of assistance by providing personnel to the RAF as it could be depicted as Canadian recruitment for the RAF (tainted by colonialism). See ibid. Reid noted that this argument did not apply to relief for American efforts.

Reid noted that it was contemplated that Canada would offer North Stars, not Dakotas.

IMPORTANT MATTERS BEFORE THE UNITED NATIONS — SECURITY COUNCIL AND GENERAL ASSEMBLY

I submit for your consideration a summary of the following of the more important matters at present before the United Nations, indicating also the position taken by the Canadian delegation, which you may wish to refer to your colleagues at the meeting of the Cabinet today, Tuesday, 12 October.<sup>16</sup>

A. Security Council

1. Berlin Question

On Wednesday, 6 October Cabinet approved, with one amendment, a draft telegram instructing the Canadian delegation in Paris on the line which should be followed in discussions on the German problem in the Security Council.

On Thursday, 7 October we were informed that Mr. Bramuglia of Argentina was sponsoring an attempt by the six Security Council members not directly involved in the Berlin dispute to find some basis for resuming direct negotiation. Having in mind the Cabinet's discussion of the Berlin question, the delegation in Paris was told that it was of the first importance that the Western Powers' reactions should be secured in advance to any proposal that may result from these private talks, since it was not desirable that the Canadian delegation should associate itself with any move which might embarrass the Western Powers.

Information from Paris on Saturday revealed that the six power efforts were to continue over the weekend and it was considered advisable to bring to the delegation's attention some points which were implicit in the instructions which it had already received. The three points were:

(a) Any proposals the delegation may support or any suggestions for a statement in the Council it might consider making should be cleared before reference to Ottawa with the United Kingdom, United States and French delegations.

(b) The Soviet Union must have, in fact, lifted the blockade of Berlin before the opening of a Council of Foreign Ministers' meeting.

(c) If this were done, the Council of Foreign Ministers could discuss the whole German problem as had been suggested by the United States delegation.

Over the weekend Mr. Bramuglia elicited from the Western Powers a memorandum stating their position which might serve later as a resolution in the Security

Apparently Cabinet did not discuss the Berlin question.

Council. Mr. Bramuglia then asked Mr. Vishinsky two questions embodying the main points of the Western Memorandum:

What would be the U.S.S.R.'s attitude

(a) to a resolution calling for a simultaneous removal of Soviet and Western imposed restrictions on communications in Germany;

(b) to a meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers to take place immediately after the first condition is met, to solve outstanding questions concerning Berlin and Germany as a whole.

Mr. Vishinsky's reaction was to subdivide the first condition into:

(a) the lifting of restrictions imposed by both powers, and

(b) the use of the Soviet zone German mark in all of Berlin and the withdrawal of the Western mark from the city.

Mr. Vishinsky was to confer with his Government and report back to Mr. Bramuglia. The Soviet Government's reply is now awaited.

Mr. Vishinsky's counter-proposals represent no advance from the previous Soviet position, and indeed the Western Powers had already agreed in principle to both these conditions in Moscow. The agreement was however, nullified by the Soviet attitude in Berlin when details for implementing these decisions were being discussed. It would seem, therefore, that some action on the part of the Soviet Union in token of its good faith would be necessary before the Western Powers would consider it profitable to negotiate, once more on the basis indicated by Mr. Vishinsky. I attach a copy of the telegram† giving the most recent information on the Bramuglia talks.

MEMORANDUM ON BERLIN MILITARY MISSIONS<sup>17</sup>

On October 13th the Canadian Press carried a story from Berlin that Marshal Sokolovsky had queried the right of the 'neutral' military missions in Berlin to remain there.

2. The story was published by the Soviet controlled newspaper Tagliche Rundschau and was based on an incident which occurred in the Berlin negotiations of August 31st to September 7th when the four Military Governors were attempting to write the conditions for the raising of the Berlin blockade.

Claxton had asked Reid for information about this episode.

3. While the status of allied military personnel on military trains to the West was being defined, General Robertson raised the question of the status of members of 'neutral' military missions. To this Sokolovsky replied that as they were accredited to the Allied Control Council and as the Allied Control Council no longer existed (the Soviet having walked out on March 20th) these missions had no standing in Berlin. The Tagliche Rundschau, however, omitted reference to Sokolovsky's additional remark that should the Allied Control Council be 'reconstituted' that would be another matter.

4. Taken out of their context these comments assumed a significance out of proportion to the importance given them at the time. One opinion is that the story was released to get a reaction out of the Western countries.

5. It has been our attitude, and this conforms with the Western attitude, that the Canadian Military Mission was established on a four-power invitation and need only be withdrawn at the request of the same four powers.

UN SECURITY COUNCIL; BERLIN SITUATION

3. The Minister of National Defence and Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs reported developments since the meeting of October 6th.

The representatives of Argentina, Belgium, Canada, China, Colombia and Syria had, through the President of the Council, sought a clarification of the respective positions of the two sides in order to see whether it would be possible to find a basis for further negotiations. The Western Powers were prepared to resume talks in the Council of Foreign Ministers only when the blockade of Berlin had been lifted. The position of the Soviet government was essentially unchanged.

Preliminary consideration had been given in private meetings of the six 'neutral' delegations to the possibility of a jointly sponsored resolution. It was hoped that the effect would be to consolidate public opinion behind the efforts of the Western Powers to obtain a lifting of the blockade and the resumption of negotiations. The Canadian delegation were keeping in close touch with the representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States. Before agreeing to joint sponsoring of any proposal in the Council, Canadian representatives would seek instructions from the government.

4. Mr. Claxton read the text of a telegram which had just come in from the Permanent Delegate which included a draft resolution proposed by the representative of China for preliminary consideration by the other 'neutral' states.

This draft called upon the occupying powers to refrain from action which might aggravate the present situation, to continue to discharge their responsibilities for the maintenance of peace and order in Berlin, and to lift the blockade and settle the monetary issue.

A draft reply had been prepared authorizing the Canadian delegation to join in sponsoring a resolution on these lines provided that the United Kingdom, United States and French delegations concurred; any alterations in substance would have to be referred back to the government.

(Telegram, Canadian Delegation, Paris, to External Affairs, No. 227, Oct. 19,† and draft telegram, External Affairs to Canadian Delegation, Paris, Oct. 20, 1948†).

5. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted the Minister's report and approved instructions to the Canadian delegation on the lines indicated in the draft message submitted by the Minister.

Following for Reid from Wrong, Begins: With reference to your letter of October 18th† about the air lift to Berlin.

The risk of Soviet interference with any planes engaged in the air lift which do not belong to an occupying country has not been mentioned in my conversations at the State Department. Mr. Pearson may not have told you of my telephone conversations with him on this subject early this month. At his suggestion, I approached Hickerson very informally and he, after consulting the United States Air Force, told me that both the State Department and the Air Force would be very glad to see Canada doing something to share the load. The Air Force thought something might be done by us in connection with the trans-Atlantic service, but would much prefer that Canadian transport planes should fly into Berlin, operating either from British or American bases. He said that the State Department was ready to approach us to this end if it would facilitate our participation and would fall in with our suggestions as to how such an approach should be phrased.

2. Hickerson has since then asked me more than once about how the matter stood in Ottawa. I think that I should talk to him again this week and in particular pass to him the substance of the second paragraph of Robertson's telegram No. 1788 of October 12th. I am not certain myself what importance to attach to the possibility of Soviet interference with planes not belonging to one of the occupying countries which might participate in the air lift.

3. Will you discuss with Mr. Pearson before his departure what should be said to the State Department, as I believe that if we decide against direct participation, we should prepare the ground by a further discussion in the near future? Ends.

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Reid from N.A. Robertson, Begins: Reference my telegram No. 1788 of October 12th, Berlin airlift.

During the Prime Ministers' meetings, Evatt and Louw both made incidental reference to the steps their Governments, with New Zealand, were taking to provide aircrew to help the RAF in the Berlin airlift. The former implied that there had not been adequate public or press recognition in the United Kingdom of these offers of assistance. This impression was combatted by United Kingdom Ministers, who spoke of their Government's gratitude and appreciation, and said they felt the press had reported the presence in this country of the Australian, New Zealand and South African aircrew who were being specially trained for participation in the lift. Gordon-Walker, who was in charge of United Kingdom press relations during the Prime Ministers' meetings, was at first inclined to give the press some supplementary information about Commonwealth participation in the airlift, but refrained from doing so.

2. The foregoing is, I think, relevant background for the following reference to the Berlin airlift which was made in the King's speech at the opening of Parliament today:

Begins: Meanwhile, Berlin is being supplied by air, and aircraft from the United Kingdom, some of them flown by crews from other Commonwealth countries, are combining with those of the United States to keep Berlin linked with Western Europe. Ends.

3. In brief anteroom conversation during the Prime Ministers' meetings, Arthur Henderson, the Secretary of State for Air, referring to our earlier conversation reported in my telegram under reference, said simply that it would be a great help if it were feasible for Canada to provide, say, 10 or 12 four-engine bomber crews.

4. When I reported this conversation to Mr. St. Laurent he raised the question of whether a request for assistance of this kind could not perhaps come more appropriately from the United Kingdom and United States jointly, rather than from the United Kingdom alone. If this line is to be pursued, I think our position might usefully be explained to the Americans in Washington before it is taken further forward in any conversations here. Ends.

PRINCIPAL ISSUES BEFORE THE UNITED NATIONS — SECURITY COUNCIL AND GENERAL ASSEMBLY

I submit for your consideration a summary of developments on the principal issues before the United Nations at the present time, which are the Berlin and Palestine questions, on which you may wish to report to your colleagues at the meeting of the Cabinet on Wednesday, October 27.

1. The Berlin Question

At the meeting of the Cabinet on October 20, Mr. Claxton reported on the efforts of the 'neutral' six delegations to seek clarification of the position of the two sides, in order to see if it would be possible to find a basis for future negotiation. These efforts led to the preparation of a draft resolution by the Chinese delegation. Mr. Claxton read the text of this draft and it was agreed that the Canadian delegation might join in sponsoring a resolution along these lines, provided the United Kingdom, United States and French delegations concurred. Alterations of substance should be referred to the Government. The Canadian delegation was instructed accordingly.

On October 22 a definitive text was received, but as it did not depart in substance from the text considered in Cabinet on October 20 the Canadian delegation was instructed, upon the authority of Mr. Claxton, to support the draft resolution. It may be noted that the main alteration in the draft resolution consisted of the fixing of dates upon which the successive steps of the resolution were to be implemented. (Text attached.)†

The resolution was addressed to the four Governments with responsibility in Germany as occupying Powers, and its terms included provision for the simultaneous lifting of the blockade and the removal of restrictions imposed by the Western Powers on communications with Eastern Germany. At the same time, the four Military governors in Berlin were to begin negotiations to arrange for the unification of currency in Berlin on the basis of the Soviet mark. These negotiations were to be conducted in accordance with the directive agreed to by the four Governments in Moscow on 30 August which included Four-Power control over currency. These arrangements were to be completed by November 20, and within ten days following the lifting of the blockade and agreement on the unification of currency in Berlin, the Council of Foreign Ministers was to meet to discuss all outstanding problems concerning Germany as a whole.

Mr. Vishinsky objected to this proposal and suggested that negotiations for the unification of currency in Berlin should commence immediately and be completed so that a unified currency could be established in Berlin, simultaneously with the lifting of the blockade. The Western Powers, however, refused to accept such a proposal on the grounds that the negotiations leading to a unified currency would be carried on under the duress of the blockade.

It was under these circumstances that on Monday, October 25 the draft resolution sponsored by the six 'neutral' delegations and introduced by Dr. Bramuglia failed of adoption by a vote of 9 to 2. One of the negative votes was that of the Soviet Union, which imposed its veto.

There is as yet no indication of the Western Powers' intentions regarding a possible next stage in dealing with the Berlin dispute. It would appear that, at this stage, they have achieved at least two objectives, namely, those of gaining time and of obtaining support for their position while isolating the Soviet Union and the Ukraine.

3. I discussed with Mr. Pearson this morning the issues raised in your WA-2781 and Robertson's No. 1887. Mr. Pearson said that participation by Canadian aircraft in the Berlin run was now out of the question. There were, however, two possible courses of action for Canada: the first, to provide a Canadian transport squadron of North Stars to take over 'relay' responsibilities in the North Atlantic from the United States Air Force; the second, to provide air and ground crew to assist in the direct airlift to Berlin. It would, of course, be possible for us to volunteer such an offer. However, Pearson thought that it might be preferable if the United States and the United Kingdom were to ask Canada and some five or six other countries for whatever help they could supply.

4. Would you therefore be good enough to speak to Hickerson, informally, on this subject and pass on to him the substance of the second paragraph of Robertson's telegram No. 1788 of October 12.

5. Mr. Pearson is impressed by the argument in this paragraph. He does not necessarily accept the argument as valid, but he feels that it would be unwise to give the Soviet Union an opportunity to use an argument which would appear to have at least some validity.

6. I am repeating this telegram to Robertson. Ends.

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Washington, November 1, 1948

Dear Mr. Reid:

With reference to your EX-2510 of October 28th and previous communications about the Berlin airlift, I have talked the matter over with Hickerson this morning.

He is not inclined to attach much weight to the argument that the Soviet Government might make an issue, even an incident, out of the participation of Canadian planes in the airlift, but he agreed that it was quite impossible to predict what their action would be. He suggested that we might put in planes of our own with the insignia of one of the occupying powers, but I told him that there seemed to me to be compelling arguments against this course and that any assistance which might be given by Canada would have to be fully publicized. He seemed to be impressed by these considerations, and I made it clear to him that direct participation of R.C.A.F. planes in the Berlin run was now out of the question.

I put to him the suggestion that the United States and United Kingdom might ask Canada and some other countries to give whatever help they could manage. He said that he would think this over and consult some others, but his own impression was that an appeal of this sort would present some difficulties and that it could, in any event, not be made except in the light of whatever happens on the Berlin issue at the United Nations.

I should think myself that if once we rule out direct participation by Canadian planes, the most satisfactory second course would be the provision of air and ground crew for use on the Berlin run. The assumption of relay responsibilities on the North Atlantic seems to me to be open to the strong political objection in Canada that the Government is dodging the issue and adopting an ineffective, indirect, and safe modicum of aid. In view of the fact that Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa have already all provided air crew, it would, on the other hand, be hard for the Government to come along at this stage with an offer of air crew which would be represented as belated unless it came in response to an appeal for further aid from the United Kingdom, in which the United States should join, if possible. I made these points in talking to Mr. Hickerson. It may be some little time before I hear from him again on the subject.

Yours sincerely,
H.H. WRONG

McNaughton, Lapointe,<sup>18</sup> Riddell and I [Pearson] had a very interesting visit to Berlin over the weekend, where we saw General Clay and General Robertson and were given full information about the air lift. We returned via Wiesbaden, where we were shown by Generals Tonner and Douglas the United States operations at that end. The lift is, of course, a magnificently impressive operation and we are satisfied here that it is a matter of great international importance that it be carried through to a successful conclusion. If the Security Council negotiations which are now going on can find a satisfactory formula to solve the Berlin difficulty, then no Canadian question regarding the continuance of the air lift will arise. Such a solution, however, seems to me to be unlikely, though the situation will be clearer in a day or two. If the efforts of the "Six" fail, then I think that it will have been made clear where the responsibility lies on the U.S.S.R. and some Security Council resolution may be passed which will put the matter on a broader international basis than it is at present. The question of participation by other countries will then become more important, as the lift will presumably be continued.

2. I will, of course, want to discuss this matter with you on my return, but I think that we should begin now to reconsider our position in the light of the possible developments outlined above. All concerned at Berlin and Wiesbaden felt that irrespective of the diplomatic difficulties in regard to the participation of R.C.A.F. planes (which the Americans, though not the British, were inclined to minimize), there would be no real advantage in an offer of Canadian transport aircraft, partly because two-engined planes are not now required as they are too small and partly because our North Stars are not entirely suitable because of the difficulty in maintenance and repair of the Merlin engine. However, great stress was laid by the United States and United Kingdom officers on the immense practical help which could be given by participation of Canadian air crews. The resources of personnel, both British and American, are now being strained to the limit and Canadian help of this

UN SECURITY COUNCIL; BERLIN SITUATION; AIR LIFT

17. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reviewed the efforts which had been made by the 'neutrals', including Canada, to effect a settlement of the Berlin situation.

At present, the committee of experts, under Mr. Robertson's chairmanship, were attempting to work out a solution of the delicate and complicated currency situation. It was expected that the committee would report the following week.

If an agreed solution were not found, it was difficult to foretell how the Berlin position would develop. Technically, U.K. and U.S. authorities were now satisfied that the air lift could be continued indefinitely. If the currency proposals submitted by the expert committee were refused by the Russians, it was possible that the operation might become a responsibility of the United Nations rather than of the occupying powers.

18. Mr. Pearson described the air lift operations and reported the views of the U.K. and U.S. commanders in Berlin. Both U.K. and U.S. forces were short on aircrew and mechanics and assistance in these departments would be welcomed. There were technical difficulties in the way of participation by Canadian aircraft. However, if and when the air lift became a matter for the Security Council, it might be that Canadian participation would have to be reconsidered.

New York, March 13, 1948

Sir:

I should like to refer to my despatch No. 8 of 4 March concerning the work of the Atomic Energy Commission,† the last paragraph of which indicated that I would wish to discuss the question of the future work of the Commission in greater detail in a further despatch.

2. As you will have noted from our recent communications on the subject, certain delegations, notably the U.S., U.K. and French, have indicated their preoccupation with the timetable to be followed in respect to the work of the Atomic Energy Commission. We have known for some time that these delegations were contemplating a break in proceedings and it is now evident that they definitely consider that it would be desirable to suspend the Atomic Energy Commission's work sine die. It is clear also that these delegations now favour including such a recommendation in the Commission's Third Report.

3. The Atomic Energy Commission, as you are aware, is presently engaged in two distinct projects, the first a detailed examination of the Soviet Government's proposals for the international control of atomic energy which is being dealt with in the Working Committee; the second a consideration of the organization which an International Agency would need to have to carry out the functions suggested in the majority conclusions given in the Commission's Second Report.<sup>1</sup> Discussion of both these matters will probably be exhausted during next month or, at the latest, in May. It has long been foreseen by most of the delegations on the Commission, and particularly the U.S., U.K. and French delegations, that the other items on the Commission's Programme of Work cannot usefully be considered under existing conditions.

4. The question therefore immediately arises of the desirability of suspending the Commission's activities, the form which the Third Report of the Commission should take, and the course which this delegation should pursue in the negotiations leading up to the writing of such a Report. These are matters on which an early decision will be necessary and I suggest that in view of their fundamental importance they might usefully be discussed by the Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy.

5. It has been obvious for some time that further progress in the Commission towards agreement on the principles which are to govern the international control of atomic energy is impossible in view of the difference of principle which exist between the Soviet Union and the nations of the western world, in general, and the United States, in particular, on these and other important questions. The recent discussions on the Soviet proposals show that they are unprepared to accept certain points which the majority hold essential to any satisfactory plan. It would seem that the Soviet objections arise from the fact that in the present international political situation they do not feel that they can give up to an international body in which nations they consider unfriendly to them are bound to be in the majority, the degree of authority of which the other nations are convinced is essential for security.

6. The United States draft proposals for inclusion in the Third Report of the Atomic Energy Commission, forwarded under cover of my despatch under reference, together with the draft prepared by the French delegation, as amended by Dr. Babbitt of our delegation, reflect these fundamental differences and the impasse which these differences have brought in the Commission's efforts to reach an agreement at this stage. The terms in which the Atomic Energy Commission reports to the Security Council and to the General Assembly, the reasons for its inability to carry out its terms of reference, at least for the present, will require urgent and careful consideration.

7. It will be noted that in the United States draft proposals the penultimate paragraph reads as follows: 'The Commission recommends that the negotiations should not be carried further in the Atomic Energy Commission until such time as the sponsors of the General Assembly find, through prior consultation, that a basis for agreement on the international control of atomic energy exists.'

8. It is my opinion that this language should be altered for two reasons. First, I think that the Third Report should not convey any message indicating that a stage of finality has been reached in the Commission's effort to reach agreement. I think it is important in any such document to stress the fact that, while the majority of the Atomic Energy Commission have been unable to reach agreement with the Soviet Union, nine countries out of the eleven members of the Commission, plus Australia, Brazil, Egypt and the Netherlands, only excluding Poland, who have served on the Commission, have reached a remarkable degree of agreement on all the important points which they hold essential to the success of any plan for the international control of atomic energy. Secondly, as I pointed out to General Osborn,<sup>2</sup> the present language is open to the interpretation that it would be for the sponsors of the General Assembly Resolution of 24 January 1946 to decide whether or not a basis for agreement on the international control of atomic energy exists and, therefore, whether the work of the Atomic Energy Commission is to be resumed or not. This would be tantamount to giving each of the sponsors a virtual veto over this question. On the other hand, it must be recognized that unless there is agreement amongst the sponsors, there would be little point in calling the Commission together, as the result would almost inevitably lead back to the position in which the Commission now finds itself.

9. In my opinion, the proposed Third Report might follow one of three alternative lines: (1) It might merely report to the Security Council and ultimately to the General Assembly, the situation which exists where further progress of the work of the Commission in respect of atomic energy is at present not possible, and leave it to the Council and the Assembly to decide what action it should take in the circumstances; (2) the Third Report might include a specific recommendation along the lines indicated in the U.S. draft proposals or altered in a way in which the sponsors of the General Assembly Resolution of 24 January 1946 might consult one another and report back to the General Assembly and (3) the Third Report might include a recommendation of such a character that debate would be joined on the substance of the question in such a way that the Security Council and the General Assembly would be asked to make a recommendation on the merits of the alternative plans referred to in the Reports of the Atomic Energy Commission.

10. The last course would necessarily involve a 'showdown' with the Soviet Union to which reference has, from time to time, been made by representatives of the United States and raises the general question as to whether the time is propitious for making an issue with the Soviet Union on the question of the international control of atomic energy.

11. Related to this question is the future of the Commission on Conventional Armaments to which I have referred in my teletypes Nos. 160 and 225 of 13 and 21 February, † respectively. The work of the Commission on Conventional Armaments is likewise hampered by the fundamental disagreements between the Soviet Union and the other members of the Commission. Here again a decision will be required as a matter of urgency regarding the line which the Canadian delegation should follow in further discussions in private and in the Commission, having in mind that a decision may be reached within the next few weeks regarding the suspension of the further work of this Commission. Here again it will be necessary to take into account the general objectives which should be pursued in relation to the Soviet Union in deciding on what procedure should be adopted in regard to the report of the Commission on Conventional Armaments.

12. Open disagreement with the Soviet Union on these issues in the Security Council and in the General Assembly might, of course, serve to make clearer to the public the dangers inherent in the absence of agreement with the Soviet Union on the international control of atomic energy and on the regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces. On the other hand, decisions of such a grave character obviously cannot be considered in isolation but must be regarded in terms encompassing not only the relations between countries of the western world and the Soviet Union and its satellites, but also in relation to the prospects of continued cooperation with the Soviet Union within the United Nations.

13. If, as seems possible, it is the intention of the United States delegation to make the work of these two Commissions an issue without regard to the larger questions involved, I would question the wisdom of such a course. For this reason I believe that in suspending the work of the Atomic Energy Commission and of the Commission on Conventional Armaments, we must make it clear that there is a distinction which should be drawn between the two different purposes for our action. On the one hand, there is the purpose which is now both necessary and desirable of informing the Governments and the public of the world as to the position which has been reached on these important questions. On the other hand, there is the alternative purpose which might be followed of making use of the suspension of the work of the two Commissions as an additional complaint against the Soviet Union for their failure to cooperate with the western world in a vitally important field.

14. In view of the urgency and the importance of the matters raised in this despatch, it would, I suggest, be useful to have any additional information which you may be able to obtain from other sources as to the intention of other governments, and in particular, of the U.K., U.S. and French governments on these questions.

15. I would, in addition, like to suggest that it might be useful to convene at an early date a meeting of the Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy to consider specifically the questions which a suspension of the Atomic Energy Commission's work will raise, and the position which should be taken by the Canadian delegation in regard to the Commission's Third Report.

Your despatch No. 13 of March 13th and subsequent correspondence concerning the work of the Atomic Energy Commission.

I agree that under the circumstances the activities of the Atomic Energy Commission should be suspended.

2. As to the form of the Third Report, I think that it should be short, clear, and emphasize in simple words that the general public can understand that in spite of substantial progress which has been achieved in formulating the conditions for a satisfactory international control of atomic energy, further discussions and eventual agreement would be impossible in view of the uncompromising attitude of the U.S.S.R. It would therefore appear inadvisable to quote in the Third Report, (which should be prepared with due consideration to its propaganda aspects), long excerpts from the first two Reports which are of a highly technical nature. The objective should be to convince the general public not the experts who can always refer to the first two Reports.

3. As to the recommendations to be made in the Third Report, it is our view that the lines indicated in paragraph 9(a) of your despatch under reference should be followed if at all feasible. The Commission should merely report that further progress of the work of the Commission is at present not possible. It would be up to the Security Council and to the Assembly to advise as to what is to be done in regard to the fundamental disagreement between the U.S.S.R. and the western world. The difficulties of the Commission are merely one of the aspects of this disagreement which cannot be overcome in the Commission.

4. It would appear to be undesirable to recommend in the Report that the Commission would not resume its work unless the original sponsors of the Resolution concerning the Atomic Energy Commission agreed that conditions had changed sufficiently to warrant a renewed effort. This is likely to be criticized as an attempt to give these nations a right of veto which is not required in fact. Should a premature proposal be made by any Member of the United Nations that the Commission should be reconstituted, it would always be possible to oppose this move on the ground that the U.S.S.R. have not altered their general approach sufficiently to justify the hope that they would agree to the essential conditions laid down in the first two Reports.

4. The line to be taken at the next Session of the General Assembly concerning the attitude of the U.S.S.R., can be determined later in the light of the situation obtaining when the Report comes up for discussion. If the U.S.A. intend to make an issue of the attitude of the U.S.S.R. they should anticipate in the Report the Soviet argument that atomic bombs should be destroyed now. This is an old controversy as to which should come first, security or disarmament. The U.S.S.R. may be able to build up a plausible case and this should be borne in mind in drafting the Report. Ends.

At an informal meeting held in the United States Mission yesterday between representatives of the United States, United Kingdom, Canada, China, France and Belgium, it was tentatively agreed to reword that part of the Third Report contained in the penultimate paragraph of the first United States draft, referred to you under cover of our despatch No. 8 of 4th March,† in such a way as to give the General Assembly the opportunity to reconvene the Atomic Energy Commission if it finds the general political atmosphere sufficiently improved to warrant such a step. In addition, the sponsors of the General Assembly Resolution of 24th January, 1946, 'who are the permanent members of the Atomic Energy Commission,' can also reconvene the Commission if, through prior consultation, they find that there exists a basis for agreement on the international control of atomic energy.

2. As this rewording represents a change in substance, Osborn of the United States delegation indicated that it would require reconsideration by the State Department. The French and Belgium representatives indicated that the redrafted paragraphs would have to be referred to their Governments before final acceptance.

3. The United States delegation consider that the Commission should recommend to the Security Council that the Third Report be transmitted to the General Assembly 'as a matter of special concern.' In accordance with the instructions contained in your teletype under reference, we have indicated that, in our opinion, the report should only be referred to the Security Council. Miles of the United Kingdom delegation indicated at the meeting yesterday that the United Kingdom Government also have reservations in this regard and may be opposed to a recommendation requiring transmittal of the report to the General Assembly.

4. I will, of course, refer the precise text of the relevant paragraphs to you when agreement on these points is less tentative.

Atomic Energy Commission. Reference my teletype No. 393 of April 8th and paragraph 3 of your teletype No. 329 of April 5th concerning the wording of the last paragraph of the Commission's third report.

2. At an informal meeting held in the United States Mission today between the Canadian, Belgian, French, United Kingdom and United States delegations, Miles of the United Kingdom delegation indicated official reaction in London was favourable to the United States' proposal to have the Commission recommend that the Security Council refer the three reports to the General Assembly 'as a matter of special concern'.

3. Miles was careful to point out that this represented only the official view. He explained he had been instructed to state that he would be unable to give his Government's final views on this point and on the report as a whole until after April 16th, and consequently it would not be possible for the United Kingdom delegation to support the general form of the report if it were presented on Thursday, April 15th, as originally planned. In the circumstances, it was agreed to postpone presentation of the report until the views of the United Kingdom Government were known.

4. From what Miles said, it would appear that the United Kingdom Cabinet are considering the implications of the report in relation to the work of the Military Staff Committee, the Commission on Conventional Armaments and the general effect which it will have on United Kingdom policy in the United Nations.

5. The official United Kingdom view appears to be based on the argument that since the question of atomic energy must, in any event, go to the General Assembly this year, it would be better strategy to recommend such a course now in order to forestall similar action by the Soviet Union.

6. The United States delegation advanced the following arguments in support of their view:

(a) If the majority do not recommend that the Commission's three reports be referred to the General Assembly, they may be accused by the Soviet Union of being unwilling to debate the question in public.

(b) As the responsible body, the Atomic Energy Commission should take the initiative in making any recommendations on atomic energy.

7. Later in the meeting, Arneson advanced what might be considered as an additional reason. The United States delegation is anxious to have the position clearly defined in advance to allow them to proceed with their preparations for the next regular session of the General Assembly. He had in mind, for instance, that it will require time to have United States Missions 'educate' all those countries not represented on the Commission 'so that they can take a useful part in any debate in the General Assembly.'

8. De Rose of the French delegation indicated that he had now received his Government's first reaction. They appear to share our reservations, although he was careful to point out that they had not reached any definite conclusions in this respect. The Belgian representative appears to incline to the United States views, maintaining that reference to the Security Council alone at this stage would merely invite 'double debate'. Ends.

Repeat to Washington No. EX-1035.

Your No. 412 of April 13. Atomic Energy Commission.

We have examined the draft of the third report forwarded under cover of your despatch No. 26 of April 10, 1948† and in particular the final section (General Conclusions and Recommendations). We believe that these are such that they should be supported by the Canadian delegation.

2. The conclusions and recommendations are, in our view, well stated, so as to set out in clear terms the principal reasons which have lead to the present impasse.

3. As to the disposition of the report, it should be satisfactory to have it submitted to the Security Council only and to provide, as in the present text, that the work of the Commission be suspended until such time as the General Assembly or the permanent members of the Commission find that there is a basis for agreement.

4. If the U.S. delegation insist on their proposal to have the Commission recommend that the Security Council refer the three reports to the General Assembly as a matter of special concern, you should indicate your readiness to support this proposal if good reasons can be given in its favour. In our opinion, the arguments outlined in para. 6 of your teletype No. 412 do not appear to be adequate. If the U.S. delegation still maintain their attitude and it appears that they will be supported by the U.K. and French delegations, you are authorized to concur in the proposal for the sake of agreement. You should point out however, that it may be unwise for the majority to commit themselves at this stage before the matter has been discussed in the Security Council.

5. There is no objection to having the report sponsored solely by the U.K., the U.S. and France.

TOP SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Please repeat the following to the Canadian Ambassador to Washington: Atomic Energy Commission.

Reference my teletype No. 412 dated April 13th, concerning the wording of the final paragraph of the statement to be submitted in connection with the third report.

2. Osborn handed me today an aide-memoire representing the United States delegation's reasoned arguments in favour of explicitly recommending the transmittal by the Security Council of the Commission's three reports to the General Assembly. The text is contained in my immediately following teletype.†

3. As Osborn indicated that the United States delegation's instructions in this regard have originated with the State Department, you may consider it useful to have the Canadian Ambassador in Washington discuss the question with Lovett. In my view, if the United States Government indicate that they attach special importance to recommending the transmittal of the Atomic Energy Commission's reports to the General Assembly, I believe we should not carry our opposition to the point of differing with them in public.<sup>3</sup>

4. As stated in previous communications, the views of the United Kingdom Government in this regard will not be known until after April 16th. The French delegation have indicated that their Government has not yet come to any firm decision. The Belgian and Chinese delegations would appear to favour the United States' views.

5. In accordance with today's telephone conversations Cadieux-Starnes,<sup>4</sup> Stone-Starnes, I have repeated the texts of this and the immediately following message to the Canadian Ambassador, Washington.

Canadian delegation to the United Nations which have been repeated to you in my teletypes Nos. EX-1031† and EX-1032†, Atomic Energy Commission.

Pearson and I agree with Gen. McNaughton that the Canadian delegation should not carry objection to the U.S. proposal concerning the transmittal by the Security Council of the Commission's three reports to the General Assembly to the point of disagreeing with them in public.

2. Mr. Pearson submitted to the Minister a telegram authorizing Gen. McNaughton to concur if the U.K. and France are prepared to fall in with the U.S.

3. It would be helpful, however, if you could find out from Lovett who, I understand, has a personal interest in the matter why the State Department attach so much importance to this proposal.

4. It is our feeling here that it may be unwise at this stage to commit ourselves to a public debate with the U.S.S.R. on atomic energy at the next meeting of the General Assembly. Furthermore it would be up to the Security Council to transmit to the General Assembly with such recommendations as may seem warranted, the three reports of the Commission. For the sake of agreement, however, we are prepared to concur in the U.S. proposal but we are concerned that this may be another case where the State Department expect Canada and other countries to commit themselves for the sake of agreement to a certain course which the U.S. may later on abandon due to unexpected developments. We cannot see that anything would be lost through not inserting in the third report the recommendations proposed by the U.S. but that some embarrassment may be caused to all concerned later on if changed circumstances make it inadvisable to have a debate with the U.S.S.R. at the next meeting of the General Assembly on the points under reference. Ends.

TOP SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Following for Heeney from Wrong, Begins: Your EX-1034 of April 16th, Atomic Energy Commission.

I was not able to see Lovett until today. I explained our doubts about the wisdom of inserting in the report of the Commission the words 'for consideration and transmittal along with the two previous reports of the Commission to the next regular session of the General Assembly as a matter of special concern.' I based my argument on the possibility that it might prove untimely to have a full debate at the next Assembly and that it was not necessary to commit ourselves to this course so far ahead.

2. Lovett, in reply, went over a good deal of the ground covered in the United States aide memoire quoted in McNaughton's message No. 430 of April 15th.† In general his position is that the complete failure to secure agreement in the Commission must be brought into the open, and that this could only be done effectively by placing the position before the Assembly. He remarked that, if one asked the first ten people one met in the United States or Canada what was being done about the international control of atomic energy, they might all well answer that plans were being worked out by a United Nations Commission. He added that the Governments which had not been represented on the Commission were paying little or no attention to its failure to achieve results, and that it was desirable for them to be required to take part in a discussion of the situation. He was anxious that the Commission itself, consisting for the most part of men who have been working on the problem for over two years, should propose the reference of its reports to the Assembly rather than that it should be left to the Security Council whose actions were governed by political considerations. It would take some time for all the members of the United Nations to study the reports, and it was important that they should be warned now to be prepared for a discussion next September. He appears to think that there is almost unanimous support in the Commission for this point of view, adding that the State Department had only adopted it after anxious study of possible alternatives.

3. He argued that, if the question was not brought before the Assembly in this way, it was very likely that the Russians would bring it up in their own terms, perhaps connecting it with the question of Control of Conventional Armaments. I remarked that we ought to be able to prevent this, but he considers that there is a real tactical advantage in the course proposed.

4. Another point he made is that the first two reports of the Commission have not received anything like the notice warranted by the importance of the subject, and, unless special treatment was proposed for the third (and perhaps final) report, it would be regarded as just another interim report. All three reports ought to go to the Assembly together for consideration jointly. Ends.

With reference to Mr. Wrong's teletype WA-1204 reporting his talk with Lovett, it is now quite evident that the U.S. State Department attach great importance to having the Commission recommend that their report be transmitted to the General Assembly as a matter of special concern. Ottawa, June 9, 1948

THIRD REPORT OF THE ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION TO THE SECURITY COUNCIL

The Atomic Energy Commission has now suspended its work sine die. The reason for this decision is that although the essential requirements for a satisfactory international control of atomic energy have been defined in the First and Second Reports of the Commission, the Soviet delegation is not prepared to concur in the recommendations made in these two reports. It is felt that until the Soviet Government is prepared to agree to the essential technical requirements of control, there would be no point in continuing discussions in the Commission as this could lull public opinion in the world generally into believing that some progress was being made towards the establishment of the control of atomic energy.

2. The chief points at issue between the U.S.S.R., the Ukraine and the other members of the Commission are the following:

(a) The U.S.S.R. and Ukraine insist that atomic weapons should be outlawed and existing stocks destroyed before an international control agency be established. The U.S., the U.K. and France suggest that an international agreement to outlaw the national production, possession and use of atomic weapons should be embodied in a treaty providing for a comprehensive international system of control and including guarantees and safeguards adequate to ensure the carrying out of the terms of the treaty and to protect complying states against hazards of violations and evasions.

(b) The U.S.S.R. consider that the Security Council as at present organized should have the final say in any controversies concerning atomic energy. The other members of the Atomic Energy Commission are of the opinion that the rule of unanimity of the permanent members of the Security Council should have no relation to the work of the agency. They feel that no Government should possess any right of veto over the fulfilment by the Agency of the obligations imposed upon it by the treaty nor should any government have the power through the exercise of any right of veto or otherwise to obstruct the course of control or inspection to be carried out by the proposed international control agency.

(c) Under the Soviet Union proposals, clandestine activities would be subject to investigation only when they are suspected. The international control agency would not have the right to exercise control over exploration for mineral resources or related activities. The Soviet Union claim that nations should be allowed to carry on unrestricted scientific research in the field of peaceful use of atomic energy. The other members of the Commission feel that the international control agency should have very extensive powers of inspection. Thus, there would be inspection of declared activities to ensure the use for peaceful purpose and to prevent illicit diversions of material. In addition, the agency could conduct other geological and mineralogical surveys and exploration as well as aerial surveys to provide full information concerning world supplies of source material. The agency would also undertake inspection and aerial surveys to detect clandestine activities or violations of the treaty or convention.

3. The Third Report states that the opposition in the Commission between the U.S.S.R., the Ukraine and the other members cannot be resolved by further discussions within the Commission and recommends that the three reports be approved by the Security Council and transmitted to the General Assembly as a matter of special concern. The Commission further recommends that until such time as the General Assembly advises that this situation no longer exists, or until such time as the sponsors of the General Assembly Resolution of January 24, 1946, who are the permanent members of the Atomic Energy Commission find, through prior consultation, that there exists a basis for agreement on the international control of atomic energy, negotiations in the Atomic Energy Commission be suspended.

4. Gen. McNaughton is satisfied with the course followed hitherto by the Commission and recommends that he be authorized to approve in the Security Council the three reports and to vote for their transmission to the General Assembly as advocated in the Third Report. In view of the short time available before the meeting of the Security Council next Friday, when the matter will come up for discussion, I have advised Gen. McNaughton that I concur in his recommendation.<sup>5</sup>

5. In consultation with my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I have already authorized Gen. McNaughton to approve in the Atomic Energy Commission the recommendation that the activities of the Commission be suspended and the three reports be submitted to the Security Council with the recommendation that they be referred to the next regular session of the General Assembly. The Third Report merely contains this recommendation together with an outline of the technical requirements of a satisfactory international control of atomic energy as provided in the First and Second Reports of the Commission. The Third Report contains also some statements made by Mr. Gromyko, the report of the Commission on the Soviet proposals submitted on June 11, 1947 and the text of the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly on January 24, 1946, and December 14, 1946 setting up the Atomic Energy Commission and defining its terms of reference.

New York, June 24, 1948

The discussion in the Security Council on the reports of the Atomic Energy Commission was concluded at the meeting of the Security Council on Tuesday, 22nd June.

2. The discussion brought out no new arguments. The Soviet delegate, supported by the Ukraine, opposed the approval of the reports and also opposed the suspension of the work of the Atomic Energy Commission, arguing that the Commission should carry out the resolutions of the General Assembly of 24th January, 1946, and 14th December, 1946, by working out a Convention for the prohibition of atomic weapons and for the destruction of existing stocks and then considering the Soviet proposals for the international control of atomic energy. On the other hand, the majority upheld the essential elements of the plan of control contained in the three reports, insisting, in particular, that the prohibition of atomic weapons cannot be considered as a separate stage to precede the establishment of a system of control and also insisting upon the position that the Soviet proposals for control, based upon periodic inspection, would not provide sufficient guarantees to ensure compliance with an international agreement for the international control of atomic energy.

3. The difference in attitude on the part of the Soviet Union and its associates was further emphasized when Gromyko requested the Chairman of the Atomic Energy

Action approved by Cabinet on June 10.

Commission to insert the following paragraphs in the statements which he had already made in the Working Committee. The Chairman acceded to Gromyko's request although the report had already been adopted without these additional remarks. I quote them as indicating, in summarized form, the points on which the Soviet delegation is placing the most emphasis:

Gromyko's additional paragraphs are as follows:

Begins: Insertion for Annex 5 (a) of 3rd Report on page 55, the following paragraph should be inserted after the second paragraph:

'Yet the most important and urgent task is precisely that of prohibiting atomic weapons. The control must be subordinated to that task. It must ensure the implementation of a Convention on the prohibition of atomic weapons. The task of the international organ, of which so much has been said in the course of the debate, must be to ensure that States parties to the Convention carry out the obligations they assume to prohibit the use of atomic energy for military purposes. Without the prohibition of atomic weapons it is illogical and idle to speak of international control. Control must be subordinated to the main aim, that of prohibiting the manufacture and use of atomic weapons.'

Insertion for Annex 5 (b) of 3rd Report on page 69, the following paragraph should be inserted after the first paragraph:

'At the same time, due recognition must be given to the fact that international control of atomic energy, as such, would be useless in the absence of a Convention prohibiting atomic weapons. There is no point in establishing international control unless atomic weapons are prohibited, since the object of such control is to ensure that States parties to the Convention fulfil their pledges to prevent the use of atomic energy for military purposes. Unless it were decided to prohibit atomic weapons, there would be no sense in establishing international control, since it would have no object. The object of establishing international control and setting up an international control body is, in fact, to ensure that the decision to prohibit the production and use of atomic weapons is implemented.'

4. Manuilsky,<sup>6</sup> who has now appeared in the Council in order to take over the Presidency in the month of July, made a lively speech on the above theme at yesterday's meeting. He was followed by the representative of Colombia who said that the Commission and the Security Council had no alternative but to confess their inability to find a solution to the problem of international control of atomic energy by reporting the facts to the Assembly. On the other hand, it was not the Assembly which should find the solution, as this was the responsibility of the Great Powers and they should come to an agreement on this matter.

5. The United States draft Resolution, the text of which was given in my teletype No. 663 of 9th June,† was then put to a vote, the result of which was as follows. In favour: Argentina, Belgium, Canada, China, Colombia, France, Syria, United Kingdom and United States of America; against: Ukraine and USSR. Since one of the two members opposed to the Resolution was a permanent member, and as the

President had stated that the Resolution was a matter of substance, he declared the Resolution as not adopted. The Soviet veto had, of course, been foreseen and I had been asked by the United States and United Kingdom delegations, for tactical reasons, to submit the alternate Resolution which would have the Council merely transmit the reports to the next Assembly and to the members of the United Nations as a matter of special concern as quoted in paragraph 8 of teletype No. 663 of 9th June. I therefore moved the draft Resolution after Gromyko had used his veto against the United States draft Resolution, prefacing it with the remarks which are contained in my immediately following teletype en clair.†

6. Gromyko argued that the second Resolution was also a matter of substance because it contemplated the transmittal of the question to the General Assembly for consideration. However, he indicated that he would not wish to utilize the double veto, but merely wished to be on record with the view that he regarded the act of transmittal of a matter by the Security Council to the Assembly as being a matter of substance.

7. In effect, Gromyko would not have been able to uphold his position as the President had ruled the Resolution as a matter of procedure and called attention to the fact that the non-permanent members do not regard themselves bound by the San Francisco Great Power Declaration on voting procedure. El Khouri had, in fact, invited Gromyko to question his ruling and Gromyko would, of course, have failed to obtain the necessary seven votes to overrule the President.

8. The draft Resolution was then put to the vote and was adopted by nine votes to none, with two abstentions (USSR and Ukraine). The text of the Resolution as adopted is the same as given in paragraph 8 of my teletype No. 663 of 9th June with one exception — i.e. the phrase 'on this matter' following the words 'Security Council' in the last line has been changed to 'on this subject'. Ends.

METHOD OF HANDLING THE ATOMIC ENERGY QUESTION AT THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The question of the tactics to be employed at the General Assembly on the question of atomic energy has resulted in a difference of opinion between the United Kingdom and the United States.

2. The United Kingdom Ambassador in Washington recently presented an aide mémoire to the State Department outlining the United Kingdom views concerning the tactics to be followed in the General Assembly on the work of the Military Staff Committee, the Commission for Conventional Armaments and of the Atomic Energy Commission. The United Kingdom proposed that these matters be considered en bloc to demonstrate the obstructionist tactics of the USSR, and that the question of atomic energy, disarmament and security should be treated at the General Assembly as connected parts of the same major problem: can the United Nations make any real progress in these matters as long as certain Member Governments are unwilling to abandon in the common interest any of their legal rights under the Charter?

3. The view of the State Department is that the work of the Atomic Energy Commission should be considered as one major item of the Agenda. They judge that to follow the tactics suggested by the United Kingdom is to play into the hands of the Soviet Union. They also feel that failure to make the control of atomic energy a formal issue might not only imperil the results of all the Commission's work but would quite possibly make impossible a General Assembly vote of approval on the UNAEC plan. The State Department also is anxious to subordinate the issue of Conventional Armaments because the record of the majority in the CCA is none too strong and there is some danger of confusing and thus weakening the strong UNAEC record.

4. The Canadian Permanent Delegate to the United Nations has submitted impressive arguments against the tactics suggested by the United Kingdom. He states in part that the atomic energy question at the General Assembly may be approached in either of two ways. On the one hand, the matter may be dealt with on its merits and discussed with a view to informing governments and public opinion generally on the position which has been reached in the Atomic Energy Commission. In addition, he states 'it is desirable to bring into a wider forum the majority proposals for the international control of atomic energy.' On the other hand, he points out, the discussion might, as the United Kingdom have suggested, be used merely 'as an illustration of a wider thesis' of the Soviet non-cooperative attitude in a number of matters on which there must be agreement if there is to be world peace. This latter approach, he feels, would lead to a protracted debate with the USSR in which the consideration of the Atomic Energy Commission reports would be largely obscured. The General believes that the General Assembly will offer the first real opportunity to bring the question of the international control of atomic energy before the Member States of the United Nations and before world public opinion. He further states that if the reports were to be discussed in an objective manner primarily to inform world opinion, they would on their merits win wide public support. If, however, the reports were used only as a means to assail the USSR, their merits would be obscured and they would add little to a wider understanding of the problems.

5. The General feels that an objective discussion would strengthen the majority opinion by gaining the support of nations that so far have not participated in the work of the Atomic Energy Commission. He concludes: 'If the reports of the Atomic Energy Commission were to be used only as an additional stick with which to beat the Soviet Union, the value of an objective endorsement of the proposals by the General Assembly would, it seems to me, be virtually lost.'

6. The views of the Canadian Permanent Delegate have been referred to the Canadian High Commissioner in the United Kingdom and to the Canadian Ambassador to the United States. They concur in the views put forward by General McNaughton.

7. Further talks will take place between representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States in an effort to resolve the present difference of opinion. If you agree, we shall inform General McNaughton that we concur in the views put forward by him and that he is authorized to inform both the United Kingdom and the United States Delegations that we support the United States proposals for the debate on atomic energy in the General Assembly.

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Following for General McNaughton from Riddell, Begins: During Monday and Tuesday of this week conversations were held in this Department with Rusk and Raynor of the State Department and Jebb of the Foreign Office concerning the forthcoming meeting of the General Assembly. In the course of these meetings a thorough-going exchange of views and information concerning Agenda items took place between ourselves and these officials. A full report of the discussions is being prepared and will be made available to you.†

2. One of the subjects discussed was the method by which atomic energy and allied subjects should be considered in the Assembly. As you probably know, the United States and United Kingdom points of view in this regard are now much closer together than they were two or three weeks ago. Jebb, however, suggested that the general question of disarmament should be brought into focus by producing one resolution covering atomic energy, disarmament and military staff committee. This resolution might be divided into distinct sections, and the section on atomic energy might be sponsored by all members of the Security Council who at one time or another had supported the majority report. The debate on each section should be separate and distinct.

3. In the course of these discussions we stated clearly your concern that main points of atomic energy discussion should not be blurred by confusing them with discussions on disarmament and military staff committee report.

4. Discussions on this subject here were inconclusive, and Rusk and Jebb agreed to continue them in Washington. I said that I thought it important that you should be associated with any further consideration of the subject and we agreed that State Department would invite you to attend their conversations with Jebb on atomic energy and allied topics. Rusk said that he would ask Osborne also to attend and that he would have Osborne inform you of the conversations and invite you to be there.

5. I hope that these arrangements will work out as we expect, and that it will be possible for you to go to Washington for the discussions.

Washington, September 3, 1948

TOP SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Following from McNaughton, Begins: Reference my teletype No. 946† from New York, conference re atomic energy in Washington. This morning at 10 a.m. a discussion was held in the State Department regarding the handling of the atomic energy question at the Paris Assembly. Rusk acted as Chairman and Osborne, Raynor, Johnson and Arneson were also present from the United States. Jebb was present, accompanied by Allen from the United Kingdom Embassy. Carter was with me.

A general discussion developed in which both Osborne and myself emphasized our strong belief in the necessity for the General Assembly giving endorsement to the proposals agreed to by the majority in the three reports of the Atomic Energy Commission; and, to this end, the necessity of having a full and separate debate on the reports of the AEC at the General Assembly in Paris, without, in this debate, introducing extraneous factors relating to the CCA and the Military Staff Committee. I also emphasized again my belief in the imperative need for educating public opinion in regard to the majority proposals in the AEC reports, and the consequent necessity for full discussion in the Assembly.

2. Jebb stated that in view of Cadogan's recent reports to the F.O., the United Kingdom now saw this matter in a somewhat different light and he (Jebb) accordingly had received new general instructions. The United Kingdom now agreed that it was desirable to have a separate debate on the AEC reports, for the reasons which we had given. They felt, however, that it was also essential to have debates on the question of disarmament and the Military Staff Committee — as they believed that unless provision were made for separate debates on these subjects the Soviet and their satellites would undoubtedly introduce these matters into the debate on atomic energy and consequently confuse the issue. Jebb said that the United Kingdom still felt the best procedure would be to have one final joint resolution adopted by the Assembly with separate sections dealing with atomic energy, the CCA and the MSC. This joint resolution could also contain a fourth section generally condemnatory of Soviet non-cooperation in these and similar matters. Jebb said, however, that if it were desired to have four separate resolutions along these lines, instead of four sections in a joint resolution, the United Kingdom would have no objection.

3. I emphasized again my view that a separate resolution was needed regarding the AEC and pointed out that the AEC reports were in a very different category from those concerning conventional disarmament and the implementation of Article 43. The CCA had not even reached the stage of making recommendations regarding safeguards; and the MSC had made virtually no progress at all. The AEC, on the other hand, had prepared comprehensive reports advancing important and far-reaching proposals. It was not reasonable to discuss these three matters on the same basis or to link them together in a joint resolution. I added that if a resolution were adopted endorsing the AEC reports, two other separate resolutions could also, of course, be formulated dealing with the MSC and the CCA. However, the essential thing, at this stage, was to obtain General Assembly endorsement of the three reports of the AEC and such endorsement should not be confused by linking it to other issues.

4. Raynor suggested that the 'connecting link' referred to by Jebb in regard to Soviet non-cooperation in the AEC, the CCA and the MSC could possibly find expression in a general condemnatory resolution during the discussions dealing with the veto. If such a resolution were introduced, this would seem to be the most logical place for it to be considered.

5. Jebb seemed to react favourably to this and said he would report it to his Government. His main point was that there should be a resolution generally condemning Soviet non-cooperation. He seemed to agree that this might logically be introduced when the veto was discussed (i.e. when the report of the Interim Committee was considered).

6. The result of this was that Jebb will report to his Government the proposal recommending that there be three separate resolutions on the AEC, MSC and CCA and that there be a fourth resolution (possibly to be considered in the veto discussions) condemning in general terms Soviet non-cooperation. Further discussions will presumably be held when the United Kingdom Government have given Jebb instructions on this point.

7. Regarding sponsorship of the resolution endorsing the reports of the AEC, Jebb again failed to give an assurance that the United Kingdom would accept joint sponsorship along with the other States which had formed the majority in the AEC. After I had questioned him on this, Osborne pointed out rather sharply that United Kingdom delay in this matter had already extended for six weeks. Jebb then said that he would recommend to his Government that they accept this joint sponsorship and would ask that a reply be given to him as soon as possible so that he could advise the State Department.

8. In summary, therefore, the meeting ended in agreement on the principle that there should be a separate resolution endorsing the three reports of the AEC. Only two points remain at issue. The first is the question of United Kingdom joining in the sponsorship of such a resolution (along with the other majority members of the AEC past and present) and it seems, from what Jebb said, that this will almost certainly be forthcoming. The second point concerns the question as to whether there should be a fourth resolution generally condemning Soviet non-cooperation and, if so, whether such a resolution should be introduced and who should sponsor it. On this latter point I, of course, reserved our position and said that any sponsorship by Canada in such a resolution would be a matter to be decided by the Government and the delegation in Paris.

9. It was emphasized in the discussion this morning that if the procedure for dealing with these three matters separately is to be successful a strong Chairman of the First Committee is essential. I gathered from the discussion that the United Kingdom and United States are hoping that Spaak might be available for this duty and that if he is not their next choices would be, in order, Nervo of Mexico or Tsiang of China. Undoubtedly a strong Chairman will be needed both of the First Committee and of any Sub-Committee formed to deal with the atomic energy discussions.

Atomic Energy. Unexpected decision taken late afternoon September 29th in Committee I to place atomic energy first on agenda and to commence debate on morning of September 30th made it necessary for delegation to complete on short notice arrangements for participating in discussion.

2. Immediately after decision to proceed at once with atomic energy debate, General Osborn called on General McNaughton, and following plans were made, subject to approval of respective delegation leaders.

(a) General McNaughton agreed to open the debate,<sup>8</sup> since he had moved resolution in Security Council referring question to Assembly. Added consideration was that General Osborn could not speak for United States delegation in Committee, and it was thought that subject could be better introduced by person who had served on both Atomic Energy Commission and Security Council.

(b) Plan to prepare draft resolution to be presented jointly by 14 nations which had participated in majority reports of A.E.C. had to be abandoned as time did not permit consultations.

(c) General McNaughton should, at conclusion of his statement, introduce draft resolution repeating in general and popular terms resolution in support of majority reports of A.E.C. which had been vetoed in Security Council by U.S.S.R. General Osborn agreed to have Mr. Arneson, who is specially skilled, assist General McNaughton in preparing a resolution in these terms.

3. In consequence, General McNaughton spoke first at opening of debate in Committee I today (September 30th). Text of his address, which was delivered from notes, will be secured from verbatim reporters and forwarded by teletype as soon as possible.

4. General McNaughton concluded his address by offering draft resolution, text of which is given in my immediately following telegram. He indicated that draft had been prepared quickly, and delegation itself might offer, or accept amendments suggested by others. He also expressed hope that other States which had participated in A.E.C. in producing majority report would associate themselves with resolution.

5. General McNaughton was followed immediately by Senator Austin who gave a detailed explanation of United States policy. He rebutted Vyshinsky's accusations by emphasizing how the United States had from the first offered to turn over her vast plant to international control and submit to an effective system of international inspection of the entire process of production. The question, he said, now was whether the other members of the Assembly concurred in the judgment of the 14 members who had formed the majority in the A.E.C. The A.E.C. had more work to do and must know the views on its work of the Assembly, which created it. He asked for a decisive endorsement of the line being pursued by the Commission and added that if a significant number of members abstained from voting the people of the world would have little hope of ending the impasse. Although Senator Austin specifically blamed the U.S.S.R. for frustrating the plans for international control by their "reactionary" views on sovereignty, his remarks were not unduly provocative.

6. The only representative prepared to speak further was the El Salvadorean who, in order to "break the ice", offered general support to the Canadian and United States views. It was only after Spaak had called several times for further expressions of opinion, and the Argentinian had tried to press him to take a vote on the matter, that Vyshinsky spoke. He complained of a cavalier attempt to rush through an important resolution, the text of which they had received a few minutes before and in English only, and he referred to the requirements of rule 109. Spaak denied trying to rush the matter but agreed that rule 109 applied. He accepted, therefore, Vyshinsky's request that the meeting break up and meet tomorrow morning for further discussion of the Canadian resolution.

RESTRICTED

Following is text of draft Resolution on Atomic Energy commission introduced by General McNaughton in First Committee, September 30th.

1. Whereas, in its Resolution dated 24th January 1946, the General Assembly established the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission and set forth its Terms of Reference;

2. Whereas, the General Assembly has received from the Security Council and has examined the First, the Second and the Third Reports of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, which contain its proposals for the control of atomic energy to the extent necessary to insure its use only for peaceful purposes and for the elimination from national armaments of atomic weapons, and an analysis of the nature of the impasse confronting the Commission and the recommendations resulting therefrom;

3. Whereas, the First and Second Reports of the Commission show how and to what extent the world must adapt itself if it wants to be protected against the misuse of its new discovery, specify ways and means to eliminate the dangers of diversion, clandestine activities, and the seizure of atomic materials and facilities, and, to these ends, contain specific proposals including principles for the governance of national policies and of the policies to be pursued by the International Control Agency itself;

4. Whereas, only if traditional economic and political practices are adapted to the overriding requirements of international security, can these proposals be implemented;

5. Whereas, cooperative development and complete dissemination of information alone promise to remove fears and suspicion that nations are conducting secret activities;

6. Whereas, the General Assembly is fully aware of the impact of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission's plan on traditional prerogatives of national sovereignty, however, in the face of the realities of the problem it sees no alternative to the voluntary sharing by nations of their sovereignty in this field to the extent required by the Commission's proposals. Accordingly, the General Assembly finds no other solution which will meet the facts, prevent national rivalries in this most dangerous field, and fulfil the Commission's terms of reference;

7. Whereas, the Commission now reports that it has been unable to secure the agreement of the Soviet Union to even those elements of effective control considered essential from the technical point of view, let alone their acceptance of the nature and extent of participation in the world community required of all nations in this field by the First and Second Reports of the Atomic Energy Commission;

The General Assembly, therefore,

8. Approves the General findings (Part IIC) and recommendations (Part III) of the First Report and the specific proposals of Part II of the Second Report of the Commission as constituting the necessary basis for establishing an effective system of international control of atomic energy in accordance with the terms of reference of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, and approves the report and recommendations (Part I) of the Third Report which contain an analysis of the nature of the impasse confronting the Commission and the recommendation resulting therefrom;

9. Recognizes the grave dangers to international peace and security resulting from the absence of effective international control of atomic energy and calls upon all nations to fulfil their responsibilities to the world community by accepting the necessary basis for such control as approved by this body.

Your telegram No. 88, text of draft resolution on Atomic Energy Commission. While I find myself in general agreement with the text of the resolution introduced by General McNaughton on the Atomic Energy Commission, I note that it merely recommends endorsement by the General Assembly of the findings of the Atomic Energy Commission as the necessary basis for international control of atomic energy.

2. In view particularly of the speeches made by the Syrian and Belgian delegates, I wonder whether it is still intended to introduce a proposal, in the form of an amendment, which was discussed in New York recommending that the powers which originally sponsored the introduction of the Assembly resolution of 24 January, 1946, might consult together with a view to exploring the possibilities of finding a basis for recommencing the work of the Atomic Energy Commission. As General McNaughton may recall, at a private meeting held in the offices of the United States mission on July 28th, there was general agreement that one of the countries not now represented on the Atomic Energy Commission might put such a proposal forward. Norway was mentioned in this connection.

3. The text of the resolution, as it now stands, might be taken to imply recommendation on the part of the Assembly that the Commission itself should resume its work. This seems to be confirmed by paragraph 1 of the memorandum quoted in your telegram No. 85 of October 1st.†

4. I think some clarification of these points may be desirable, otherwise the discussions on atomic energy may become centered on the question of whether the Atomic Energy Commission should resume its work rather than on the merits of the majority plan of control, as was intended.

Atomic energy, my telegram No. 110 of October 5th, 1948.† Following from Permanent Delegate is a resumé of developments Monday and Tuesday in Committee One, Begins: In Monday's debate we received firm support, as expected, from New Zealand, and, more surprisingly, from Sweden. Sandler of Sweden made an intelligent speech in which he asked a number of pertinent questions but stated unequivocally that the Soviet proposals for control were inadequate and the majority plan solidly founded and feasible. The Indian delegate also implied general approval in a speech in which he suggested that Vyshinsky had added little in his resolution which was not contained in the Canadian resolution. He asked whether, if the Canadian resolution were carried, the Atomic Energy Commission would proceed with its work to the drafting of a treaty. The generally favourable attitude expressed by Sweden and India are valuable because of the disposition those States have some times shown to pursue a middle course.

3. Manuilsky then did the Soviet case no good by a wild speech in which he reverted to the conventional charges and seemed unaware that Vyshinsky had on Saturday made what were supposed to be 'concessions'.

4. Austin concluded the session by asking Vyshinsky the obvious questions about his latest proposal. He exposed the futility of destroying atomic bombs, which are easy to make, and emphasized that no one, not even the Russians, wanted to destroy the nuclear fuel which, although it was the dangerous substance, was also the source for all peaceful purposes.

5. I opened the discussion Tuesday morning with a statement intended to answer the question raised by India, to continue the process initiated by Austin of smoking out Vyshinsky's new resolution and explaining in concrete terms something of the work actually done by the Atomic Energy Commission. A summary of this statement was contained in my telegram No. 116 of October 5th.† Full text follows by bag.

6. The other speakers on Tuesday were the representative of Czechoslovakia who supported Vyshinsky in conventional terms and of the Philippines who rhetorically supported the Canadian resolution.

7. Hodgson of Australia then spoke. He said the Soviet resolution was not acceptable in its present form but should be given further consideration. He directly attacked the Canadian resolution as inadequate in that, although it might demonstrate the weight of support for the majority view, it offered no assistance for further work by the Commission. He associated himself with the views of Ramadier and Rolin<sup>9</sup> and proposed a Sub-Committee to try and reach agreement. We were surprised at the attack made on the Canadian position by Hodgson and can only assume that it resulted from a personal intervention by Dr. Evatt. Ends.

Atomic Energy. After consultation in delegation yesterday, it was decided that I [Lionel Chevrier] should accept responsibility for balance of debate on atomic energy. This decision was taken principally in order that Canada should be represented in these decisions by a member of the Government at the time when decisions were being taken, but partly also because Security Council has been meeting and will probably continue to meet simultaneously with Committee One.

2. Summary of discussion on Atomic Energy Commission in Committee One today is given in my immediately following teletype.<sup>10</sup> At 3:30 this afternoon, Chairman announced that general debate was closed, and I then moved adjournment for following reasons:

(a) Very strong support had developed for two resolutions, (one by Ecuador and one by Australia), that all proposals concerning atomic energy be referred to a Sub-Committee for purpose of drafting an agreed text.

(b) We wished to give consideration whether at this stage Canadian resolution should be amended in sense of your telegram No. 88 of October 4th to give continuing responsibility of Sponsoring Powers. We have been hesitating to take this step because we did not ourselves wish to put forward proposal which gave us this responsibility.

(c) Decision had to be made by our delegation whether to stand by original proposal, without reference to Sub-Committee, in spite of probability that amendment to refer it to Sub-Committee would carry. Alternative would be to accept reference to Sub-Committee, stating that we would carry the debate further there.

3. Resolutions before Committee at the moment are as follows:

(a) Canadian resolution;

(b) Soviet resolution calling for simultaneous Conventions on prohibition of bomb and control and inspection;

(c) Syrian resolution calling for Atomic Energy Commission to proceed to the drafting of a treaty in spite of deadlock;

(d) Australian resolution pressing for continuance of discussions in Atomic Energy Commission on basis of new resolution to be drafted by this Assembly.

4. British, French and Belgians, in private consultation held subsequently, pressed strongly for acceptance of Sub-Committee, which they thought to be inevitable. The United States concurred in this view most reluctantly. It was finally agreed that arrangements should be made for New Zealand or other delegation to put in amendment to Canadian resolution, suggesting that Sponsoring Powers consult on basis for recommending work of Commission. I would then accept the amendment, and at the same time accept suggestion that Sub-Committee be established.

5. I expect that we shall proceed on this basis when Committee One meets today (Thursday). Ends.

Repeated to London No. 32.

Following from Riddell, Begins: Atomic Energy: Sub-Committee commenced work on Friday morning with original Canadian resolution as basis of discussion. Through inadvertence, New Zealand amendment referred to in previous telegrams had been designated by New Zealand delegation as a 'resolution' and Soviet delegation insisted that it be considered as separate proposal. If considered as separate resolution it has, of course, an entirely different effect to that intended. It was finally decided to continue consideration of Canadian resolution, adding or subtracting as Committee determined.

2. Discussion was then commenced on operative part of Canadian resolution, i.e., paragraphs 8 and following Soviet and Ukrainian delegates (Malik and Manuilsky) made vigorous attacks on majority reports of AEC. By end of the day, however, it was clear that majority of Committee was prepared to subscribe to principles of majority reports. When Committee re-assembled Saturday morning, revised draft of paragraph 8 was presented as follows:

'Approves the general findings (Part IIC) and recommendations (Part III) of the First Report and the specific proposals of Part II of the Second Report of the Commission as constituting the necessary basis for establishing an effective system of international control of atomic energy to ensure its use only for peaceful purposes and for the elimination from national armaments of atomic weapons in accordance with the Terms of Reference of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission.'

3. After listening to restatement of Soviet position by Malik, Committee then rejected by nine votes to two a Soviet amendment that no opinion be expressed on the reports of the AEC and adopted the revised paragraph eight as given above, by nine votes to two.

4. When Committee re-assembles on Monday morning, General McNaughton will submit revised text of remainder of operative part of Canadian resolution as follows:

'9. The General Assembly expresses special concern in respect to the analysis of the situation which is contained in the third report of the atomic energy commission; regrets that unanimous agreement has not yet been reached; and recognizes the grave dangers to international peace and security resulting from the absence of effective international control of atomic energy and the elimination from national armaments of atomic weapons.

'10. The General Assembly requests the sponsors of the General Assembly resolution of 24th January, 1946, who are the permanent members of the Atomic Energy Commission to consult following this session, in order to determine when there exists a basis for agreement on the international control of atomic energy to ensure its use only for peaceful purposes and for the elimination from national armaments of atomic weapons, and there upon to request the Secretary-General to reconvene the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, the activities of which have been suspended, in order to resume its task and in any event the sponsors shall report the results of their consultation to the next regular session of the General Assembly.'

5. This text has been agreed with French and United States delegations, and it is expected that United Kingdom delegation will also accept it as it stands. Chinese delegation is uncertain about concluding paragraph, and will probably prefer some form of wording which keeps AEC active. Indians also will prefer wording as given in paragraph nine of their draft resolution A/C.1/315).

6. It is intended, when operative parts of draft resolution have been completed, to tidy up preamble, and improvements suggested in your telegram No. 112 of October 8th† will be taken into account. As you know, original resolution was prepared in somewhat precipitate manner, and we ourselves have referred in Committee to need for drafting improvements. Unfortunately, your telegram did not arrive in time for suggestions to be taken into account in redrafting operative part of resolution.

7. It may prove difficult to secure acceptance of final paragraph of revised text as shown in paragraph 4 above. Many delegations are unwilling to see activities of AEC suspended, even though they are prepared to support majority reports. United States delegation intends to hold firmly to wording which leaves AEC in state of suspension, and they will have our support and that of United Kingdom and New Zealand. Scandinavian and Benelux countries will also support this wording, although French and Belgians may weaken. Australia, China, India, Syria, and a good many Latin American countries may join Soviet bloc in opposing it. It may, therefore, be advisable to have some alternative form of wording under consideration in case it becomes expedient to abandon the text as it now stands in our revised resolution. Ends.

Your telegram No. 162 of October 11th, 1948, paragraph 7.

I hope that it will be possible to secure acceptance of text which will leave AEC suspended. If it is found that this will not be possible for the reasons you indicate, rather than accept that the AEC resume its work on an indefinite basis, the following compromise formula might be considered: The AEC would resume its meetings, but for the specific purpose of determining whether agreement with the U.S.S.R. on the basis of the majority reports of the Commission, as approved by the General Assembly (paragraph 8 of the Resolution) can be reached. If the Commission finds that this is not possible, it would then suspend its activities again and the procedure suggested in the final paragraph of the revised text, in paragraph 4 of your telegram under reference, would become operative.

2. Such a formula might make it possible to obtain the support of countries who are prepared to vote for majority reports but are reluctant to see the AEC suspend its activities without a final effort by the AEC to reach agreement with the U.S.S.R.

3. You might also consider changing the word 'when' in the phrase 'to determine when there exists' in paragraph 10 of your draft to the word 'whether'.

Referred to London by air bag.

My telegram No. 219 of October 18th,† atomic energy.

Report of Sub-Committee discussed by First Committee, Monday, October 18th. I made statement following advance text reported in telegram No. 219. This statement, which came immediately after vigorous restatement of Soviet position, contained specific reply to almost every point made by Malik.

2. Australia proposed amendment to Canadian resolution substituting paragraph 2 of Indian resolution for our paragraph 3, and re-numbering present paragraph 3 as '4' revised to read as follows:

'4. Requests the six sponsors of the General Assembly resolution of 24th January 1946, who are the permanent members of the Atomic Energy Commission, to meet together and consult in order to determine if there exists a basis for agreement on the international control of atomic energy to ensure its use only for peaceful purposes and for the elimination from national armaments of atomic weapons, and to report to the General Assembly the results of their consultation not later than its next regular session.'

3. Effect of Australian amendment would be to have six sponsors attempt to agree on principles while A.E.C. would at the same time continue its work. Australia fears public reaction if A.E.C. should be formally suspended. Privately one member of Australian delegation said they expected support from India, although India had earlier spoken in support of its own resolution.

4. Syria supported Indian resolution, and El Salvador gave ambiguous support, saying if Indian resolution not likely to receive majority support they could accept the Canadian resolution with amendments.

5. South African delegation, having received unsatisfactory directions from their Government, made purposely vague statement saying they generally preferred Canadian resolution, but for reasons which all would understand their country had to give this problem particular attention, and they would therefore reserve their position with respect to matters dealt with in paragraph 1.

6. Following afternoon meeting, I spoke with Ramadier, Spaak and Austin concerning the progress of the debate. Spaak and Ramadier were strongly of the view that last paragraph of Canadian resolution would not, repeat not, carry in its existing form. Austin said United States would not agree to any modification of position as stated in this paragraph. Subsequently, however, McNaughton spoke to Osborne and showed him revised form of Indian and Australian paragraphs concerning continued meetings of A.E.C. which, if added as new paragraph to existing Canadian resolution (omitting reference to suspension of A.E.C. activities) rather than substituted for existing last paragraph, would appear acceptable. New paragraph would have effect of keeping A.E.C. active but for limited purposes only. Instruction to proceed with drafting of Treaty would be omitted.

7. Our proposal would therefore be to accept revision of our paragraph 3 proposed by Australians and add a new paragraph 4. (groups corrupt — repetition requested.) upon the Atomic Energy Commission to resume its sessions, to survey its programme of work, and to proceed to the further study of such of the subjects remaining in the programme of work as it considers to be practicable and useful."

8. McNaughton saw Hodgson Monday evening and secured his concurrence in this revised text. U.S.A. delegation is consulting Washington to determine whether it too can accept revised wording and whether Austin can propose it.

9. I have indicated willingness of this delegation to accept revised wording because it seems to me that chance of securing adherence to important first paragraph of resolution was being endangered by hesitation of many States to vote for last paragraph.

10. First Committee meets again Tuesday afternoon, October 19th.

My telegram No. 228 of October 19th, Atomic energy.

U.S.A. delegation received direction from Washington that support be given to revised draft of Canadian Resolution, but because of firm stand taken previously against resumption of Atomic Energy Commission activities, and because they still felt that stand was reasonable, U.S.A. delegate should not introduce new amendments.

2. I therefore submitted amendment to First Committee this afternoon October 19th with concise statement indicating our desire to reach agreement.

3. In subsequent discussion Ecuador, Australia, Sweden, United Kingdom and New Zealand indicated approval of new form of Resolution. Austin gave impressive speech outlining U.S.A. position, but saying in interests of reaching greatest possible agreement they were prepared to acquiesce in the new proposals. Te Water of South Africa made brief statement saying they would most certainly support paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 of new Canadian Resolution even though they must, for reasons already explained, reserve their position on paragraph one, U.S.S.R. and Polish delegates repeated previous statements of Soviet position.

4. Debate to be concluded tomorrow October 20th with Cuba and Ecuador on list to speak.

Atomic energy. General McNaughton made statement in plenary session, following the text contained in my telegram No. 326 of November 3rd.<sup>11</sup>

2. India proposed two amendments to the Canadian resolution, the first amendment was to insert the words "in substance" between the words "approves" and "the general findings", in paragraph 1. This was rejected by a vote of 9 to 15 with 26 abstentions. The second Indian amendment substituted for paragraph 4 of the Canadian resolution the following text: "Call upon the Atomic Energy Commission to resume and continue its work, to proceed with the study of all the matters within its terms of reference, and to prepare for submission to the Security Council, as early as possible, a draft treaty or convention incorporating the Commission's ultimate proposals." This amendment was rejected by a vote of 5 to 31, with 15 abstentions. Canada voted against both amendments.

3. The Soviet resolution was also voted upon and rejected 6 to 40 with 5 abstentions.

4. The Canadian resolution was adopted 40 to 6, with 4 abstentions.<sup>12</sup> The Soviet block voted against the resolution, and South Africa, Afghanistan, Venezuela and India abstained. Ends.

II. Course of Action to be Followed as Regards the Atomic Energy Commission

4. General McNaughton pointed out that the Resolution adopted by the General Assembly at its Plenary Session on November 4th directs the Commission to resume its meetings and to proceed with the consideration of such items remaining on the agenda as can be usefully dealt with; furthermore, the six permanent members of the Commission are to examine whether a basis for agreement with the U.S.S.R., as regards the international control of atomic energy, can be established. This suggests two lines of approach:

- (a) further exploratory work of a technical nature in the Commission itself; and,
- (b) a high level meeting to explore the political aspects of the plan of control.

5. General McNaughton reported that after discussion with Mr. Osborne, the U.S. delegate on the Atomic Energy Commission, he had agreed to recommend that the Atomic Energy Commission should meet again in the first week in January. He had also agreed to recommend that the Commission should undertake first a re-writing of its three reports. Certain ambiguities and inconsistencies in these reports have come to light in Paris. Furthermore, the delegates of certain countries have experienced difficulties in understanding the majority proposals as outlined in the reports. It is felt that a more readable, concise and coherent statement [of] the majority proposals will be very useful in explaining these proposals to the general public. Furthermore, the re-drafting of the reports will enable the delegates of the three new members of the Commission (Egypt, Norway, Cuba) to familiarize themselves with the background and details of the work accomplished up to now in the Commission.

6. General McNaughton emphasized that in these forthcoming discussions there will be no attempt to modify the principles laid down in the reports. These principles have been endorsed by the General Assembly as the only satisfactory basis for the establishment of a system of international control, and the Commission has no mandate to plan its programme of work except within the framework already approved by the Assembly. The Commission, having re-drafted its three reports in a simplified form, will then consider how far discussions can usefully proceed on any of the items on the agenda (stages, organization of the control agency, etc.). In General McNaughton's opinion, these discussions will primarily be directed to preparing the ground for a meeting of the permanent members of the Atomic Energy Commission as directed by the Resolution of the General Assembly.

7. General McNaughton and Mr. Osborne, having discussed this meeting of representatives of the permanent members of the Commission, have agreed to recommend to their respective governments that the meeting should take place late summer or early next fall, so that a report may be prepared for the next Session of the General Assembly. General McNaughton and Mr. Osborne have also agreed to recommend that the meeting should be at Foreign Ministers level.

8. In answer to a question whether the U.S.S.R. is likely to alter its stand on the majority proposals, even after they have been simplified, General McNaughton stated that an important success had been achieved in Paris in securing very strong approval of the reports; he is convinced that the pressure of world public opinion in support of the majority proposals will be felt in Moscow. In his opinion, the U.S.S.R. may yield in the end and it would be undesirable, even if the General Assembly Resolution did not preclude this, to compromise now on the essential principles of the plan. General McNaughton is hopeful that a solution will emerge from the discussions in the Atomic Energy Commission.

9. The Chairman enquired whether consideration had been given to the adoption of alternative policies in case the U.S.S.R. were to refuse to compromise. General McNaughton referred to the various statements which he and Mr. Chevrier had made in support of the majority proposals: these statements were drafted with a view to meeting this and similar objections to considering the majority proposals as the only satisfactory basis for the establishment of an international system of control of atomic energy. General McNaughton is more convinced than ever that the majority proposals are the only possible basis for agreement, and in his opinion, there is no alternative but to make every effort to convince the U.S.S.R. of their soundness and uniqueness. In General McNaughton's view, there are still four or five years to develop a plan of control and to induce the U.S.S.R. to accept such a scheme of control. In his opinion, it would be unwise at this stage to envisage publicly alternative policies.

10. Failing agreement with the U.S.S.R., General McNaughton agreed that it will be essential to continue the tripartite arrangements under the auspices of the C.P.C. General McNaughton felt that even if a North Atlantic Security Pact were concluded, it would still be necessary to continue these arrangements, but that it would be unwise to broaden the agreement to include France. He reported that Belgium is quite pleased with her present position and that in all likelihood, she will not press for the establishment of nuclear plants on its territory as this would make her strategic position even more dangerous. The Scandinavian countries have radio-active materials, and if they were to join the North Atlantic Security Pact, it would be necessary to give careful consideration to their relationship with the C.P.C. countries.

11. Mr. Riddell enquired whether consultations had taken place with U.S., U.K. and French officials as regards the programme of work of the Atomic Energy Commission. General McNaughton reported that the plan outlined above represented an informal agreement tentatively reached between himself and Mr. Osborne. The French delegate, Mr. DeRose, has been consulted and he is in substantial agreement. There has been so far no discussion with the U.K. representatives, but it is known that they had reservations as to the course taken in Paris, and they may have different views as to the tactics to be followed when the Commission resumes its meetings in New York.

12. The Panel noted with approval the course of action which General McNaughton proposes to follow as regards the Atomic Energy Commission, and agreed that it is still too tentative to warrant a formal report being made to the Cabinet. It was agreed, however, that the minutes of the meeting should be circulated to the Ministers concerned for their information.

Following for Mr. St. Laurent from Wrong, Begins: Heeney has sent the attached message to the Prime Minister<sup>13</sup> about today's discussions here and the desirability that I should be authorized to make tomorrow the declaration of the Government's intention, provided that there is no change of substance from the drafts considered by the Advisory Panel in Ottawa. The need for haste arises because the Secretary of State is most anxious to be able to say in confidence to a few key senators, including Vandenberg, that satisfactory arrangements have been reached before the hearings on the European recovery programme begin on Thursday. Mr. Marshall also will be able to attend a meeting tomorrow, but will thereafter be occupied at the Capitol for some days. It would be rather awkward if the British and United States representatives were both to make their declarations, and if I should be able only to say I must refer the text to Ottawa before a declaration can be made on behalf of Canada. TOP SECRET. MOST IMMEDIATE.

Following for the Prime Minister from Heeney, Begins: We had a preliminary meeting this morning with the United Kingdom and United States representatives and it seems probable that a basis of agreement will be reached within the next twenty-four hours. A few outstanding points (of no particular significance to us) are being considered this afternoon with a view to the production of an agreed draft.

2. Provided that agreement on these outstanding points is reached by the officials this afternoon, a meeting of the Combined Policy Committee will be held tomorrow afternoon with the purpose of recording the declarations of intention on behalf of the three Governments. You will recall that this was the form which it was proposed that the new arrangements should take.

3. The United Kingdom representatives now have authority permitting them to make the declaration of intention on their Government's behalf. The United States representatives would also, of course, be in a position to do likewise. On the other hand, although, as you know, Mr. Howe and Mr. St. Laurent have agreed that arrangements along the lines proposed would be in the Canadian interest, specific authority has not actually been given enabling Wrong to make a similar declaration.

4. Unless some issue at present unforeseen arises in this afternoon's discussions, the terms of the identic declarations of intention will correspond substantially to the draft considered by our advisory panel with Mr. Howe and Mr. St. Laurent. Agreement along these lines would, in our opinion, be extremely satisfactory from the Canadian point of view.

5. In the circumstances I would suggest that before tomorrow's meeting Wrong be authorized to make the declaration of intention on behalf of the Canadian Government, provided that the text of the declarations to be made by the United Kingdom and United States representatives does not depart in substance from the draft already considered in Ottawa. It would, I think, be altogether desirable that Canada should accede to these arrangements at the same time as the other two Governments, and both the United Kingdom and the United States are anxious to conclude the matter tomorrow if at all possible.

6. If you concur, I would be grateful if you would have a most immediate telegram sent authorizing Wrong (if the above conditions are met) to make the declaration on behalf of the Canadian Government. I am quite satisfied that if Mr. Howe were available he would agree that this was the right course.

7. Wrong is sending a separate message to Mr. St. Laurent on this subject immediately, and the Minister may speak to you about it. Ends.

TOP SECRET. MOST IMMEDIATE.

Following for the Prime Minister from Heeney, Begins: Reference my message of yesterday.

Last evening the officials of all three countries agreed upon all remaining questions and arrangements are going forward for the meeting of the Combined Policy Committee at 4:00 o'clock this afternoon.

2. Agreed revisions in the draft documents do not represent any change in the substance of those considered in Ottawa. In my opinion the final texts which emerge are most satisfactory from the Canadian point of view. To meet United States constitutional requirements the Declarations of Intention by the three Governments are now to be called collectively a Modus Vivendi. We and the United Kingdom have agreed that there is no objection to this term.

3. In my immediately following teletype I am quoting the text of the Modus Vivendi, which it is proposed to include in the Minutes of this afternoon's meeting in the form of declarations by the representatives of each of the three countries.

4. If we have no word from you by the time the Committee meet, Wrong proposes to say that there has not been opportunity for consideration of the final texts in Ottawa, but that the terms are, in his view, consistent with Canadian policy and are likely to prove acceptable. He would then add that if and when accepted by the Government the other members of the C.P.C. will be so notified.

5. It is quite evident to us here that this is the most favourable opportunity likely to occur to settle these questions in a way satisfactory to all three Governments. So far as Canada is concerned the arrangements covering exchange of information will be particularly helpful to our scientific people. I very much hope, therefore, that we will have word from you which will enable us to conclude the matter this afternoon. Ends.

TOP SECRET. MOST IMMEDIATE.

Following for the Prime Minister from Heeney, Begins: With reference to my immediately preceding message, the following is the text of the Modus Vivendi to be inserted in the Minutes of the C.P.C.:

MODUS VIVENDI

1. All agreements between the three Governments or any two of them in the field of atomic energy shall be regarded as null and of no effect, with the following exceptions:

(a) The Patent Memorandum of 1st October 1943 as modified by subsequent Agreement on 19th September 1944 and 8th March, 1945.

(b) The Agreement and Declaration of Trust dated 13th June, 1944.

(c) The exchange of letters between the Acting Secretary of State and the British Ambassador of 19th and 24th September, 1945, concerning Brazil.

(d) The agreed public declaration by the President of the United States, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, and the Prime Minister of Canada of November 15, 1945.

2. The Combined Policy Committee, already established, and subject to the control of the three Governments, shall continue as an organ for dealing with atomic energy problems of common concern. The Committee shall consist of three representatives of the United States, two of the United Kingdom, and one of Canada, unless otherwise agreed.

3. The Committee shall inter alia:

(a) Allocate raw materials in accordance with such principles as may be determined from time to time by the Committee, taking into account all supplies available to any of the three Governments.

(b) Consider general questions arising with respect to cooperation among the three Governments.

(c) Supervise the operations and policies of the Combined Development Agency referred to in paragraph 4 below.

4. The Combined Development Trust, created on the thirteenth of June, 1944, by the Agreement and Declaration of Trust signed by President Roosevelt and Mr. Winston Churchill, shall continue in effect except that it shall henceforward be known as the Combined Development Agency. Of the six persons provided for in clause 1 (2) of the Declaration of Trust, three shall represent the United States, two the United Kingdom and one Canada.

5. The United States, the United Kingdom and Canada will, within the limits of their respective Constitutions and Statutes, use every effort to acquire control of supplies of uranium and thorium situated within their respective territories. The United Kingdom will, insofar as need exists, communicate with the Governments of the British Commonwealth for the purpose of ensuring that such Governments exercise control of supplies of uranium and thorium situated in their respective territories. The United Kingdom will consult with the Commonwealth Governments concerned with a view to encouraging the greatest possible production of uranium and thorium in the British Commonwealth, and with a view to ensuring that as large a quantity as possible of such supplies is made available to the United States, United Kingdom and Canada.

6. It is recognized that there are areas of information and experience in which cooperation would be mutually beneficial to the three countries. They will therefore cooperate in respect of such areas as may from time to time be agreed upon by the CPC and insofar as this is permitted by the laws of the respective countries.

7. In the interest of mutual security, classified information in the field of atomic energy will not be disclosed to other Governments or authorities or persons in other countries without due prior consultation.

8. Policy with respect to international control of atomic energy remains that set forth in the three-nation agreed Declaration of November 15, 1945. Whenever a plan for the international control of atomic energy with appropriate safeguards which would ensure use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes only shall be agreed upon, and shall become fully effective, the relationship of these countries in atomic energy matters will have to be reconsidered in the light thereof.

2. Following is the text of the Declarations which it is proposed to make in placing on record in the C.P.C. the intention of the three Governments:

Mr. Lovett: I am authorized to say on behalf of my Government that it intends to proceed on the basis of the modus vivendi which is before us in regard to atomic energy problems of common concern to the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom, and Canada.

(here insert attached draft)†

Lord Inverchapel: I am authorized by my Government to say that they also intend to proceed on the basis just described by the Chairman.

Ambassador Wrong: I am also authorized by my Government to say that it intends to proceed on this same basis.

Mr. Lovett: I propose therefore that this modus vivendi be included in the Minutes of this meeting. Ends.

Washington, January 9, 1948

My dear Mr. Howe:

Heeney will be reporting to you verbally on your return on the very successful outcome of the recent meetings of the C.P.C. I thought, however, that as your alternate on this committee I should let you have a brief report in writing. (The principal documents are going forward by today's courier.)

You will recall that the most difficult problem which had to be solved was the allocations problem and the particular question of the disposition of unallocated stocks in the United Kingdom. On this question the Americans and the British were far apart when Makins<sup>14</sup> returned home in December for further instructions. The instructions which he brought back with him in January, however, were such that soon after his arrival it was clear that with the same good will as governed the conversations in December, it would be possible this time to reach a solution.

It was decided that the sub-groups should meet first, that is the group on allocations and the drafting group. To start the ball rolling we arranged a very small group for January 6th at which Bateman<sup>15</sup> and I represented our side and it was at this meeting that the British laid their new proposals on the table. On the American side there was no effort made to conceal their pleasure at the new British offers.

Later in the morning of the 6th the entire materials group got together and it was decided that a drafting group would meet in the afternoon to iron out the final details. Heeney and Stone attended this drafting group for our side. The group after four hours of concentrated work produced what I am sure you will regard as very satisfactory documents setting forth: (a) the basis of future cooperation, now described as a modus vivendi, and (b) the allocation of raw materials for the years 1948 and 1949. Separately the United Kingdom and the United States representatives established the text of the document describing the basis of the exchange of information among certain members of the British Commonwealth. With this matter we had little to do. We limited ourselves to advising the British that we did not consider that this was a time to press if the Americans showed any reluctance to accept the principle of the exchange of information in certain limited fields between the United Kingdom and other members of the British Commonwealth, excluding Canada. I think that the fact that the Americans were prepared to accept these principles, however limited may be the fields, serves as a further indication of the change in the atmosphere in Washington.

The meeting of the C.P.C. itself on Wednesday, January 7th, was to have been a purely formal affair with the remarks of each member on the various items of the agenda set down beforehand. There was, however, one disturbing point introduced by Mr. Lilienthal<sup>16</sup> concerning the principles of technical cooperation which, although it was quite satisfactorily settled, thanks to the adroitness of Mr. Makins and Mr. Lovett, had the meeting worried for a few minutes. I think that it is worth discussing this point in some detail as it may arise from time to time and create temporary difficulties in the implementation of the principles laid down in the field of the exchange of information.

From the beginning of these discussions last December we have had clear evidence that in the lower ranks of officials of the Atomic Energy Commission there was a feeling that the United States might be going too far — farther than it legally could under the Atomic Energy Act — in offering exchanges in fields of "information and experience". Stone, for example, has reported to me that Volpe, Assistant Counsel for the Commission, tried very hard in the course of the preparation of the minutes of the meeting of December 15th, to have the report of the discussions on the exchange of information in this meeting toned down considerably, to the point where it would not have reflected accurately the very forthright views of both Lovett and Lilienthal on this matter. The British had noted also this reluctance on the part of junior men in the Commission to go as far as senior officials of the United States Government and Makins used it as an argument for fresh and more liberal instructions when he was in London, saying that time was of the essence, for fear this disposition to restrict the fields of technical cooperation might seep upwards.

The men on the United States side who have this disposition made an effort in the drafting committee on January 6th to have their views reflected in the documents there drafted, but without success. They made one further effort in the C.P.C. itself by persuading Mr. Lilienthal to attempt to have written into the minutes of the meeting that in the matter of the exchange of information it was understood by all members of the committee that each and every topic on which information would be exchanged must be submitted to the Combined Policy Committee. On being questioned, Mr. Lilienthal admitted that this would mean that no technical cooperation could be gotten under way until the Combined Policy Committee next met. His idea was that the sub-group of scientists whose duty is to examine the fields in which information might be exchanged would be established at once in accordance with the decision of the committee and that their recommendations would then be considered by the committee, say at the end of the first quarter of 1948, when it will presumably have to meet again to consider allocations. Mr. Lilienthal's main argument was that in appointing a scientist to this sub-group and delegating to him the power to decide in what fields information could be exchanged with other countries, the Atomic Energy Commission of the United States was exceeding its powers of delegation.

Mr. Lovett immediately pointed out that insofar as he himself was concerned he would be inclined to regard this as a cumbersome procedure. Furthermore, he recalled that at the last meeting of the C.P.C. on December 15th he had stated, during the discussion on this same topic, that the members of the C.P.C. (and other two members had agreed) were about as badly qualified to pass on any technical scientific questions as any three people could possibly be. (He was, of course, referring to me as your alternate and not to you as the member, and that was the basis on which I agreed with him!) He was unable, therefore, to see the advantage of having a scientific sub-committee refer specific technical problems to a group of men who would obviously have no choice but to retire into a room and flip a coin in order to reach a decision.

Makins said in answer to Lilienthal's statement that on the British side they had definitely not understood that exchanges of information would be subject to this particular sort of control and in this I agreed. Makins then went on to say that his conception of the operation would be that the United States member of the sub-group of scientists would report to the Atomic Energy Commission and from the Commission got his authority to proceed to arrange for the exchange of information with the United Kingdom and/or Canada in any specific field. Should the United States member come back to the sub-group and say that exchanges in the opinion of the Commission were not possible in a particular field, the British and Canadian members of the scientific sub-group would have two choices — either they could accept the Commission's view or they could request that the matter be referred to the C.P.C. if it was of such importance as to involve considerations which might be aired before this committee. Lilienthal gracefully accepted Makins' statement and withdrew his own.

Whether it is a precedent or not, I am unable to say; in any case, this particular meeting of the C.P.C. was held in Blair House and ended with drinks being passed to all present.

In the matter of the question of the exchange of information, which is, of course, perhaps the most important for us at the present time, we have in the two days since the C.P.C. meeting had further evidence of the very great desire on the top level to carry cooperation in the technical field just as far as possible under the present law. Indeed, we have been informed that there is a willingness to ask for amendments to the Atomic Energy Act should the interpretation which it is thought can be given to it prove in experience to be too restrictive. Makins tells me that George Kennan of the State Department told him in no uncertain terms that this cooperation simply had to work and we have clear evidence that Forrestal is in favour of it without any reservations and in this is at one with Lovett and, presumably, with General Marshall who was, unfortunately, not able to attend the meetings.

Yours sincerely,

H.H. WRONG

Ottawa, January 10, 1948

Dear Mr. Howe:

The meetings with representatives of the U.K. and U.S. governments on collaboration in the field of atomic energy resumed in Washington on January 6th, the Canadian government being represented by Wrong, Stone, Bateman and myself. The discussions concluded with a final meeting of the Combined Policy Committee on January 7th.

The results of these resumed meetings are exceedingly satisfactory, not only from our own point of view, but from that of the United States and the United Kingdom as well. Agreement was reached on all outstanding points and in an atmosphere of the warmest co-operation.

The new understanding between the three governments, which replaces the Quebec Agreement and (with a few stated exceptions) the agreements subsequent thereto, is to be known as a modus vivendi and is included in the minutes of the Combined Policy Committee meeting of January 7th. In substance this form of words, accepted by the representatives of all three countries, is the same as that which was reported to you and the Secretary of State for External Affairs at the meeting of the Advisory Panel, which was held before you left Ottawa. The Combined Policy Committee is continued as the medium of co-operation; the Trust continues (as 'the Combined Development Agency'), specific provision being made for Canadian representation thereon; provision is also made for agreed allocations and for the exchange of information and experience.

The earlier document on 'technical co-operation' is being included as an annex to the C.P.C. minutes for this meeting and the agreement on allocations is also set out providing for the maintenance of the minimum programmes of all three countries during 1948 and 1949. As you know, it was this last question which caused the greatest difficulty. In the event, however, Makins had obtained from his government new instructions which enabled the U.K. representatives to accept the basic U.S. requirement for the maintenance of pipeline and reserve stocks adequate to meet their needs. It is provided in this document that the mutual guarantee of stocks at these stated levels is bound up with the other provisions; it was made quite clear in the discussions that the implementation of these undertakings by the United Kingdom was conditional upon the satisfactory carrying out of the arrangements for the exchange of information.

As soon as the texts of the final documents have reached me from Washington I shall send a complete set to you for your file. I feel quite sure that you will find them not only interesting but thoroughly satisfactory from our point of view. If the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission and the technical sub-group set up by the Combined Policy Committee continue to show the will to co-operate, which was evident in our meetings in Washington, there is every reason to hope that collaboration between the three countries is off to a new start which will prove mutually helpful.

At the last moment it seemed that on the U.S. side there would be difficulty in accepting an obligation to disclose all information as intended by the C.P.C. because of the legal situation under the McMahon Act.<sup>17</sup> However, the Under-Secretary of State (who presided in General Marshall's absence) took the responsibility of accepting the U.K. position (and our own) on this matter, with the result that the revised texts were approved in toto by the Committee.

In your absence I reported from Washington direct to the Prime Minister and obtained his authority (with Mr. St. Laurent's concurrence) to have our Ambassador declare the adherence of the Canadian government to these arrangements. With a view to the confirmation of this action the subject is being put on the agenda for next Tuesday afternoon's Cabinet meeting.

I shall look forward to an opportunity of supplementing this report to you verbally some time after you return.

Yours sincerely,
A.D.P. HEENEY

Following for Heeney from Wrong, Begins: We are sending by courier leaving this afternoon a report on the meetings which you attended here, addressed to Mr. Howe, together with copies addressed to you, which you might distribute to Pearson and Robertson. We are also sending you today, in duplicate, such of the documents as are available. The Minutes of the final meeting will follow next week.

2. The point that requires very early action in Ottawa is the nomination of our representative on the Standing Scientific Committee. The United States intend to appoint Vannevar Bush as well as Fisk, who was named at the C.P.C. meeting, and the United Kingdom are appointing Woodward. I expect that the British will be pressing for the Committee to begin operating soon. Will you discuss this with M[a]ckenzie<sup>18</sup> and with Mr. Howe on his return?<sup>19</sup>

3. Makins told me yesterday that he had just seen Lilienthal and Kennan separately and had talked over with them Lilienthal's intervention about the exchange of information which took place at the C.P.C. meeting. Lilienthal seemed satisfied with the decision reached and did not press his point. Kennan spoke very strongly about the intention of Marshall, Forrestal, and Lovett to make the arrangement work satisfactorily, saying that if the United States Commission was too much influenced by the restrictive ideas of Volpe and others of its officers, the administration was prepared both to seek the amendment of the McMahon Act and to replace one or more of the Commissioners who had been causing some difficulties. I gather that Straus is the Commissioner chiefly concerned. Kennan remarked that it would be pretty difficult to interfere with the execution of an arrangement strongly supported by Marshall, Forrestal, and Lovett. Ends.

ATOMIC ENERGY; COLLABORATION WITH THE UNITED KINGDOM AND THE UNITED STATES

23. The Minister of Reconstruction and Supply reported that discussions had recently been concluded in Washington between representatives of the U.K., U.S. and Canadian governments respecting the revision of the wartime arrangements between the three countries for collaboration in the field of atomic energy. The government had been represented by Mr. Wrong (as alternate member to the Minister on the Combined Policy Committee) and Mr. Stone of the Embassy, Dr. MacKenzie of the National Research Council and Mr. Batemen of the Atomic Energy Control Board and (for the final meetings) Mr. Heeney.

Full agreement had been reached for technical cooperation and the exchange of information and for the allocation of supplies of essential materials to meet the requirements of the three national programmes. The conditions which had been agreed had been recorded as declarations of intention on behalf of the three governments in the minutes of the Combined Policy Committee. Together they constituted a modus vivendi which, from the Canadian point of view (as well as from those of the other parties), was most satisfactory. It was anticipated that the new arrangements for exchange of information would be of great assistance in the further development of the Canadian programme.

24. Mr. Howe said that the Canadian representative (Mr. Wrong) had adhered to these new arrangements at the final meeting of the Combined Policy Committee on January 7th upon authorization given by the Prime Minister to Mr. Heeney.

Before the last meetings were held in Washington, the Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs had met with the Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy (December 23rd, 1947) and had received a full report upon the proposals which had been worked out in earlier meetings in Washington. These provided the basis upon which the modus vivendi had been developed.

(Telegram WA-39, Mr. Heeney to the Prime Minister, Jan. 6; telegram EX-40, the Prime Minister to Mr. Heeney, Jan. 7, 1948).

25. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted with approval the Minister's report.

RE ATOMIC ENERGY; U.K.-U.S.-CANADA COLLABORATION

Wrong informed me by teletype yesterday that a meeting of the C.P.C. will probably take place on Friday of this week, or Monday of next. Nothing of special importance to Canada is likely to arise, and Wrong will represent Mr. Howe as his alternate, unless he is instructed to the contrary. An agenda is expected to be prepared in the next day or two and a copy will be sent to Mr. Howe.

2. U.S. officials concerned (Lilienthal and the State Department) informed Wrong, not long ago, that they were inclined to think that the time had come to make an inconspicuous public announcement about co-operation between the U.K., U.S. and Canada. The two chief reasons given were, first, that it was desirable to show the public that the deadlock in the U.N. Commission does not mean that there can be no international collaboration in this field and, second, that there was constant danger that information would leak out about meetings between the scientists and experts of the three countries. A copy of a draft 'joint statement' is attached. The U.S. do not necessarily intend that the statement should be in fact 'joint'. They may propose that anything agreed on be included in a speech by the U.S. Delegate at the U.N. Commission.

It is probable that this question of a public statement will be discussed when the C.P.C. meets and Wrong will require instructions as to the Canadian attitude.

3. Before putting the matter before Ministers for direction I have consulted members of the Advisory Panel (Mackenzie and McNaughton). In the absence of Pearson I have also consulted the Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs because of the external policy aspects of an announcement of tripartite collaboration at this time.

Mackenzie comments that from the strictly Canadian internal standpoint he does not think that it makes any difference whether a statement is made or not. Informed people in this country already know that some type of co-operation has existed in relation to atomic energy with both U.K. and U.S. scientists. As to the desirability of forestalling a leak, Mackenzie thinks this is for the Americans to decide. He does not feel qualified to offer an opinion as to the effect in relation to the United Nations.

McNaughton has wired me that in his view the proposal for a public announcement at this stage should be approached 'with the utmost caution'. In particular, he fears the effect of such a statement on our collaboration in the U.N. Atomic Energy

Commission with such countries as France and Belgium. If it is decided to go ahead, he has indicated his opinion as to the line such a statement should take. A copy of his teletype to me, of June 19th, is attached.†

4. My own view is that the Americans have not made their case for a public statement at this time. It is at least arguable that any measure of public encouragement to be derived from an announcement of collaboration between the three countries would be more than offset by the impression (which the U.S.S.R. would be quick to foster) that the U.S., U.K., and Canada have had their tongues in their cheeks all along and that we have never really intended that the U.N. Commission should get anywhere. As to security, the danger of a leak has probably grown with the development of collaboration but it has existed for a long time.

5. If the Americans are insistent, I think that, after raising the considerations mentioned, our representative should probably concur and bend his efforts to having the form of announcement take into account the points mentioned in McNaughton's telegram. As the U.S. Defence Department have suggested, any statement made should be as inconspicuous as possible and the emphasis should be on a continuation of the collaboration which has gone on for some time; it should also be fitted in carefully with joint policy in the U.N. Commission in support of real international control under the stated conditions.

6. If you agree please so indicate in the margin of this memorandum and I will send a telegram to Wrong instructing him along the lines indicated in paras. 4 and 5.<sup>20</sup>

RE ATOMIC ENERGY; ANNOUNCEMENT OF U.K.-U.S.-CANADA COLLABORATION

You will recall that we were informed that U.S. authorities would likely propose to the Combined Policy Committee that some appropriate public announcement be made concerning collaboration between the U.K., U.S., and Canada in the field of atomic energy. This proposal was drawn to the attention of Mr. Howe and yourself in my memorandum of June 22nd and, subsequently, on the authority of you both Wrong was instructed that he should consent to the course proposed by the United States if U.S. representatives insisted upon its importance.

I agree, being particularly impressed by views stated in Gen. McNaughton's wire. St. L[aurant]

Our representative at the C.P.C. meeting, which was held last week, pointed out the reservations which we had upon the wisdom of any announcement at this time. Nevertheless, the United States did insist and our representative indicated that we would press no objection.

It has now been suggested, informally, to Stone that Dr. Lilienthal, the Chairman of the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission be invited to visit Chalk River toward the end of July and that during his two or three days in Canada he make a public speech on atomic energy, in which reference (in agreed terms) would be made to continued co-operation and exchange of information, etc., between our three countries. This announcement would be given no undue prominence but would merely form part of his address. The United States themselves now agree that a formal statement would be undesirable.

There can, of course, be nothing against Lilienthal being invited to Chalk River. The only questionable part of the U.S. suggestion is the possibility that announcement here might give disproportionate prominence to Canadian participation which might easily be magnified and exploited by the U.S.S.R.<sup>21</sup>

Mr. Howe sees no objection to falling in with the U.S. suggestion but thinks Lilienthal's visit might better be deferred until toward the middle of August. He suggested that the Canadian Club would be an appropriate forum for a speech by Lilienthal.

Will you please let me know your view so that I may let Stone know what word should be given to the U.S. authorities?

I am sending a copy of this memorandum to Pearson.

Washington, July 21, 1948

Dear Mr. Heeney:

Mr. Lilienthal had lunch with me today, and I have just dictated a message to you about the question of a visit by him to Chalk River. I find him a very attractive and understanding person. He spoke fully about the reasons which lead him to attach importance to some not very informative announcement of the continuation of tri-partite collaboration in the development of atomic energy. The fact which had not been mentioned in previous discussions of this question was that he foresees a lot of internal difficulty in maintaining and expanding scientific collaboration unless a careful public explanation is given of what is being done. He said that there was trouble with some of his own people over the decisions reached in December and January last, and that this trouble would increase if the general nature of the decisions continued to [be] shrouded in secrecy. He meant by his own people in this connection members of the staff of the Atomic Energy Commission. He may possibly also have meant some of his colleagues on the Commission. You may recall that at the final meeting of the series last winter, held in Blair House, it was arranged that all the members of the Commission should attend on the ground that this would be useful in laying to rest doubts held by one or more of the members. I know that Mr. Strauss was the principal doubter at that time.

This suggestion was discussed by CPC at its meeting on July 7. The United Kingdom secretary for this meeting was D.D. Maclean, later revealed as a spy for the Soviet Union.

Mr. Lilienthal also said that there were hesitations in some quarters in Congress which might easily become very embarrassing if the impression grew up that international collaboration was being conducted in an underhand manner. He thinks that a good deal could be done to cope with difficulties such as these if it were said on an appropriate occasion that of course scientific cooperation with Canada and the United Kingdom was continuing, and back it up by references to the statements issued in August 1945, and to the meetings between the three Heads of Governments here in November of that year.

He said that the concern expressed did not relate to collaboration with Canada. It was the collaboration with the United Kingdom that caused anxiety. He mentioned in this connection that some of the U.S. scientists who recently visited the United Kingdom project had expressed their worries on their return.

For international reasons also he believes that something should be said before the Assembly meets so as to avoid charges of bad faith during the debate on the control of atomic energy.

I explained to him that it would be difficult to arrange a visit to Chalk River until after August 9th, and that we thought in any case that it would be inappropriate for a public reference to collaboration to be made in Canada although it could suitably be made in this country on his return. The time-table presents serious problems. It is now the 21st of July and if anything is to be said it should be said by early September at latest. Mr. Lilienthal is in urgent need of a holiday and has arranged to be away from early August until Labour Day — dates which he cannot now switch. He thinks that he himself will have to be the spokesman. He is going to think over various ways and means of finding a suitable occasion — not an easy matter at this season of the year. As I mentioned in my message to you, I told him that I thought a private visit to Chalk River could be arranged in the near future if that would help. Such a visit is, of course, unnecessary for the main purpose if some other suitable expedient can be found. We agreed that the occasion must be such as not to give prominence to whatever was said about tri-partite cooperation. You will note that his main concern is the possibility that opinion at home may turn sour and prevent or endanger continued cooperation. It seems to me to be clearly in our interest to do what we reasonably can to assist in meeting this danger. He fully agrees with our objections to a formal press statement, and I think that we could safely trust him to say nothing that would be embarrassing to us even if his remarks had not been cleared in advance, but were made off the cuff at a press conference.

Yours sincerely,

H. WRONG

RE STATEMENT ON OLEOMARGARINE AT CAUCUS

Mr. St. Laurent asked Baldwin to give me a report for you on the discussion at Council yesterday (when you were not present) at which the hope was expressed that you would say a few words about the oleomargarine question.

Baldwin prepared a note which is attached. I gather two things were suggested.

(1) An explanation of why the government had agreed at Geneva to the removal of the ban

(2) An appeal to supporters of the government not to make public statements taking any irrevocable stand until they had considered all sides of the question.

I thought it might be helpful to have a short memorandum on the reasons for the action taken at Geneva. I am accordingly attaching a note which Mr. Deutsch has prepared.

RE OLEOMARGARINE

The discussion in Cabinet as to the statement that might be made in caucus ran along the following lines:

The general agreement on trade and tariffs concluded at Geneva represented an agreement among the major trading countries of the world, i.e. the countries who account for 80% of the world's foreign trade.

In the course of the negotiations our own representatives made vigorous attempts to have removed from the provisions of the agreement the general clause which would prevent nations from imposing import bans of the type contained in our legislation preventing the importation of oleomargarine. These attempts, however, were unsuccessful and the general agreement as it now stands requires that Canada if she adheres to the agreement, get rid of the present legislation banning the importation of oleomargarine. In a sense this may be considered as the price which we paid for the numerous tariff concessions we obtained from other countries, particularly in respect of agricultural products.

The government has accepted the general agreement and therefore must remove the present oleomargarine legislation. The alternative would be rejection of the general agreement which would, in effect, be rejection of a major government measure and therefore equivalent to the defeat of the government. No real possibility exists of making any change in the present general agreement.

In the circumstances, the adoption of any hard and fast or final attitude in this matter on the part of members might have serious consequences; rather the objective should be a free and open discussion of what the government should do now that it is placed in a position where it must make some change in the existing legislation.

The points to be considered in this connection would be:

(a) Whether it would be feasible since the government must remove the ban on importation, to continue to maintain the ban on domestic manufacture; and

(b) what arrangements with regard to tariff or excise tax treatment might be substituted for the present legislation?

[Ottawa], February 3, 1948

GENEVA TRADE AGREEMENTS AND THE PROHIBITION OF THE IMPORTATION OF OLEOMARGARINE

The removal of quantitative restrictions on international trade is one of the basic provisions in the Geneva Trade Agreements. Great importance was placed upon this provision by all the chief trading nations at Geneva because, in the past, quantitative restrictions have been more ruinous to international trade than any other protective device, such as tariffs and subsidies. Consequently, signatory countries agreed to refrain from the use of such quantitative restrictions apart from specifically defined exceptions. The exceptions relate to measures necessary to safeguard the balance of payments, the protection of essential security interests, protection of public health, etc. A number of other closely controlled exceptions are allowed to meet certain temporary and special circumstances.

The Canadian Delegation at Geneva endeavoured to obtain an exception from the rule against quantitative restrictions which would have permitted the continuation of the present prohibition against the importation of oleomargarine. The Canadian Delegation argued that such a prohibition should be permitted in cases where the domestic manufacture of the product concerned is prohibited. In spite of repeated efforts to secure the adoption of this proposal, the Canadian Delegation was unable to obtain the support of any other delegation represented at Geneva. Canada was a minority of one in this matter. Delegations of other countries argued that if an exception, such as Canada proposed, were adopted, it would be impossible in logic and equity to refuse numerous other exceptions which would completely destroy the basic provision.

In the tariff negotiations, however, the Canadian Delegation refused to bind the Canadian tariff on oleomargarine. Therefore, when the Geneva Agreements are ratified, the Canadian Parliament will remain completely free to place whatever tariff it wishes upon the importation of oleomargarine into Canada. Canada could impose any restrictive tariff it wishes, either now or in the future, upon oleomargarine without contravening any obligation in the Geneva Agreements.

PARLIAMENT; GENEVA AGREEMENT; OLEOMARGARINE

1. The Government Leader in the Senate, referring to discussion at the meeting of February 5th, said that some indication of the government's attitude with regard to the importation and manufacture of oleomargarine would probably be necessary in relation to a bill which would come before the Senate at an early date.

2. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to the explanation given in the House of Commons the previous day, pointed out that the relevant provisions of the General Agreement were not yet in force and might not come into effect for some months. Although there was no indication of any substantial modification of the clauses affecting restrictions and prohibitions a final text might have to be considered following the conclusions of the current discussions in Havana of the I.T.O. charter.

Meanwhile, the Department of Justice had been asked to advise upon the legal position with regard to the legislative action which would be necessary when these provisions of the General Agreement came into effect.

3. The Prime Minister observed that, even if the existing prohibition of imports had to be repealed under the General Agreement, it was agreed that it would be necessary to maintain in some form a substantial measure of protection for the Canadian dairy industry in relation to oleomargarine.

4. The Cabinet, after further discussion, agreed that no declaration of policy on the subject be made for the present pending the coming into force of the provisions of the General Agreement with respect to prohibitions and restrictions and pending report by the Department of Justice on the legal question involved.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE; CONCESSIONS TO CZECHOSLOVAKIA

35. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that the Czechoslovakian government had recently adhered to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

As a consequence, Czechoslovakia would, in the normal course of events, receive the benefit of the trade concessions negotiated under the Agreement with other member countries.

The U.S. government had decided that present political conditions made it necessary to take special action to withhold from Czechoslovakia the concessions previously negotiated under the General Agreement. The United States proposed to call a special meeting of the contracting parties to request a waiver of rights under the Agreement so that this action could be taken.

Should the necessary two-thirds majority be obtained, any contracting party would be free to withhold from Czechoslovakia concessions under the Agreement. The U.S. government had requested Canadian support for this action.

Should the necessary waivers be not forthcoming, the U.S. government proposed in any event to proceed with unilateral action.

36. Mr. St. Laurent observed that the problem involved was primarily political. It had originally been intended that the General Agreement and the International Trade Organization should be primarily functional in nature and open to all nations. Recent major changes in international political relationships had, however, made it necessary to reconsider this attitude. The effect of the proposed U.S. action, if generally supported by other parties to the General Agreement, would be that satellite countries of the U.S.S.R. would in future be excluded from the benefits of the Agreement.

The U.S. government had pointed out that, unless this action were taken, Communist controlled countries would be able to demonstrate that, regardless of their opposition to the European Recovery Programme, they were still able to obtain economic benefits from the western democracies — an argument which might play an important part in forthcoming European elections.

The economic consequences of the withholding of concessions negotiated with Czechoslovakia would not be substantial for Canada. No special action to withdraw Canadian concessions was necessary since the Governor in Council had not as yet made effective concessions negotiated between Canada and Czechoslovakia.

The Cabinet Committee on External Trade Policy had recommended that Canada support the U.S. action in seeking a waiver of rights under the General Agreement and that no action be taken to put into effect trade concessions negotiated between Canada and Czechoslovakia.

(Minutes of Cabinet Committee on External Trade Policy, paras.1-3, Mar.31, 1948).†

37. The Cabinet, after discussion, approved the recommendation of the Cabinet Committee on External Trade Policy and agreed that External Affairs be directed accordingly.

My dear Ambassador,

It was with some surprise that I learned yesterday that your Government had taken action to extend the benefits of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade to Czechoslovakia. The Canadian Government, as you know, suspended consideration of the desirability of taking similar action because of representations made by the Government of the United States. In these circumstances we had, I think, some right to expect that we should receive a sufficient warning of any change in United States policy to permit of the question being reconsidered here before final action was taken in Washington. As it is the Canadian Government may now be placed in the position of extending a late and apparently grudging recognition of benefits to be conceded to Czechoslovakia under the General Agreement after those benefits have been extended by the government which requested us to postpone the action we had contemplated.

CIRCULAR DOCUMENT NO. A. 131

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my circular despatch No. A 149 of December 18, 1947 enclosing a memorandum on the International Trade Organization, and to give below a brief account of the Havana Conference, the first session of the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and other recent developments, particularly as they affect Canada.

2. The text of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and the Protocol of Provisional Application which was drawn up by the Preparatory Committee in Geneva and signed by Canada on October 30, 1947, was printed in Canada Treaty Series 1947 No. 27. This volume, and also No. 27A containing the Canadian tariff schedules annexed to the General Agreement, has already been referred to you. The draft Charter drawn up by the Preparatory Committee appeared as United Nations' publication 1947 II 4, but has not been circulated to our missions abroad.

3. At the Havana Conference, which lasted from November 21, 1947, to March 24, 1948, the representatives of fifty-six governments examined this draft Charter and made a number of revisions of varying degrees of importance. The text of the Charter agreed upon at Havana will appear in the Canada Treaty Series and will eventually reach you as part of the regular distribution.

4. Fifty-three of the participants at the Havana Conference became signatory to the Final Act and will now, it is to be expected, take steps, in accordance with their individual constitutional procedures, to secure approval of the Charter, which will enter into force when the majority of the signatories have deposited instruments of acceptance. On or after March 24, 1949, if a majority have not accepted the Charter, twenty instruments of acceptance will be sufficient to bring it into force. Pending entry into force, an interim Commission of the Organization has been set up with an Executive Committee of eighteen members of which Mr. L.D. Wilgress is Chairman.

5. The following brief account of the developments at Havana and the attitude of the Canadian Government towards them will be useful to you in dealing with any discussion that may arise regarding the proposed International Trade Organization. In return we shall be interested to receive all information that may reach you regarding the attitude towards the International Trade Organization of the Government to which you are accredited and any plans it may have for securing approval of the Charter and becoming a member of the permanent organization.

6. You will have gathered from press reports, and indeed from the very duration of the Conference, that the reconciliation of the divergent interests and points of view represented proved to be a difficult task. Many of the compromises finally accepted were reached after long and delicate negotiations which made heavy demands upon the participants and which were brought to a successful conclusion only because the latter were willing to subordinate certain minor individual interests to the achievement of a project which it was felt would, as a whole, be of infinitely greater benefit to them than any tactical victory on points of detail. If, in the discussion below, I sometimes seem to dwell on the Canadian contribution to this spirit of compromise, it is by no means my wish to imply that Canada gave up much for little, but on the contrary to emphasize the value which we attach to the successful establishment of an International Trade Organization, a value which far outweighs any minor concessions we may have offered.

7. There were many sections of the Charter which gave rise to prolonged debate before compromise could be secured, but I shall select only those which best illustrate the most important of the principles at stake. These principles were briefly the following:

- a) the eventual elimination of preferential tariff systems;

b) the partial elimination of quantitative restrictions, that is all except those recognized as necessary to adjust difficulties relating to members' balance of payments;

c) the eventual complete elimination of discriminatory quantitative restrictions;

d) the partial elimination and strict control of export subsidies;

e) the system of voting and control in the organization itself.

8. The first difficulty arose from the determination of the so-called "under-developed" countries to secure sanction for very broad relaxations of the Charter provisions regarding non-discriminatory quantitative restrictions (Articles 13 and 14) and preferential arrangements for economic development (Article 15). Another proposal, which would have led to the establishment of a Committee on Economic Development to "protect" the interests of the "under-developed" countries, was defeated in Committee. The price of this defeat was the abandonment of the Tariff Committee by the industrialized group. This Tariff Committee, which had been included in the Geneva draft, would have administered the General Agreement, on Tariffs and Trade with quasi-autonomous powers. Throughout the debates there was a tendency on the part of the "under-developed" group to regard the Tariff Committee as an instrument by which the industrialized nations might try to maintain economic dominance, and a corresponding tendency to play up the Economic Development Committee as their "protector". It was in this way that the two questions came to be related, and the disappearance of one committee thus entailed the disappearance of the other. The compromise finally reached on Articles 13 to 15 required the prior approval of the Organization to the adoption of new preferential arrangements or discriminatory restrictions, but specified certain "objective criteria" the existence of which would make such approval by the Organization automatic. A time limit was imposed on new preferential arrangements, which will require that they be reviewed at the end of ten years and at five year intervals thereafter. In addition an "Interpretative Note" was added to the Articles stating that "the Organization need not interpret the term 'economic region' to require close geographical proximity if it is satisfied a sufficient degree of economic integration exists between the countries concerned." These two latter provisions were welcomed by the United Kingdom, which had at first been inclined to oppose the sanction accorded to new preferential arrangements on the grounds that this constituted discrimination against the long standing preferential systems which under the Charter are destined to eventual elimination. Moreover, until the adoption of the "Interpretative Note" referred to, the United Kingdom had not been satisfied that the "objective criteria" specified would permit the adoption of new preferential arrangements within the British Colonial Empire. The United States had been prepared to make important concessions in this field in order to conciliate certain of the Latin-American countries which form a large and vociferous group in the "under-developed" bloc. The efforts of the Canadian Delegation were directed towards securing a compromise which would be acceptable to all the different interests mentioned above and would at the same time weaken the Charter as little as possible. From this point of view, the concessions made to the "under-developed" group admittedly go further than the Canadian delegation would have wished, but on the other hand the basic principles of the Charter are retained and affirmed and are subject to exceptions only for specific and stated purposes.

9. A second major conflict, and one of more immediate concern to Canada, arose over the exceptions to the rule of non-discriminatory administration of quantitative restrictions which were to be allowed on the grounds of balance of payment difficulties (Article 23). Since, from the United States' point of view, non-discrimination and the abolition of quantitative restrictions on trade were the two fundamental principles of the Charter, it was considered by the United States to be of the greatest importance that any exception to them should be limited as rigidly as possible. The Geneva compromise on Article 23 was regarded as the furthest they would choose to go in making concessions in this field. The United Kingdom, however, in view of its very precarious financial position, was anxious to push as far as possible the relaxing of restrictions on discrimination, and until the last two weeks of the Conference agreement was not finally assured. The text eventually accepted provided for two options, the Geneva and the Havana. The first gives members the option of being governed by the Geneva text of Article 23 (now incorporated as Annex K to the Havana draft); the second option makes special concessions to members who, before March 1, 1948, were "deviating" from the principle of non-discrimination by giving them the right to continue such deviations and to adapt them to "changing circumstances". The new article is not entirely satisfactory from the Canadian point of view, since it has the appearance of penalizing this country for having carefully observed the principles of non-discrimination in the emergency import restrictions which were introduced on November 18, 1947. Nevertheless, the Canadian delegation was unwilling to imperil the Charter as a whole by persisting in opposition to the new proposal and has accordingly accepted the Havana text.

10. A further point on which Canada made some concession was the draft of Article 27 on export subsidies. The Geneva text, to which the United States had entered a reservation, provided that, so far as primary commodities were concerned, if a member considered its interests seriously prejudiced by the provisions of Article 26 limiting the right to adopt export subsidies, that member should be entitled to apply to the Organization for exemption from these provisions. The Havana text, however, dispenses with prior approval and gives a member provisional exemption from Article 26 pending the conclusion of an agreement under the Articles relating to commodity arrangements. In our opinion it was undesirable to make an exception in favour of export subsidies on primary commodities. Moreover, from the specifically Canadian point of view, any advantages accruing to this country from greater freedom to impose such subsidies was more than off-set by the certainty that if the United States were to enter this field Canada would come off second best. The same considerations applied here, however, as are mentioned in paragraph (9) above, and in addition it appeared that the conclusion of the International Wheat Agreement would safeguard the position of our largest export commodity. The Canadian delegation therefore accepted the amendment.

11. The principle on which voting on the Organization should be based had not been decided at Geneva, though all the members of major economic importance favoured the system of weighted voting, on the grounds that the International Trade Organization was an organization similar to the I.L.O., in which those members called upon to play an important role should have a preponderant voice. At Havana, however, the pressure from the very great number of smaller countries was too strong to permit the adoption of any system other than that of one state one vote. Much was made of the claim that this was the only "democratic" method and the only one which fully respected the sovereignty of each member. When it became clear that insistence on the principle of weighted voting could result only in a deadlock, Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States gave up their support and accepted the system of one state one vote in both the Conference and the Executive Board. As compensation for this concession Article 78, clauses 2(c) and 3(a) on the composition of the eighteen member Executive Board, though it does not specifically prescribe that there shall be permanent members, is so worded as to require that the eight nations of major economic importance will always be represented. No detailed criteria of economic importance are adopted, but it is specially stated that "particular regard shall be paid to their shares in international trade," a formula which of course gives ample assurance that Canada's interests will not be overlooked. Since the Conference will meet only once a year, it appeared that the dominating voice in the policy of the Organization would be the Executive Board, and in these circumstances the provisions relating to membership appeared a sufficient safeguard of Canadian interests.

12. The Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, that is to say the countries which had signed the Protocol of Provisional Application and put the General Agreement into effect as of January 1, 1948, held sessions in Havana and amended the General Agreement for the purpose of making certain textual rectifications, bringing it into harmony with the new draft of the Charter, and providing for emergency supersession of certain General Agreement provisions by the Charter when the latter should come into force. These amendments are contained in four protocols and one declaration, the texts of which will appear in the Canada Treaty Series. In view, however, of the immediate interest of these documents to Canadian representatives abroad, I am enclosing a mimeographed copy of them with this despatch.

13. The first Protocol is devoted to textual amendments in the tariff schedules annexed to the General Agreement.

14. The second Protocol, modifying certain provisions of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, which went into effect on April 15, 1948, provides for:

(a) Additions to Article XXV, which will not become applicable till January 1, 1949.

(b) Additions to Articles XXXII and XXXIII. The latter amends the accession clause to permit any country that did not negotiate at Geneva to accede to the General Agreement after the approval of two-thirds of the Contracting Parties, rather than the approval of all Contracting Parties, for which provision was made originally.

(c) Addition of a new Article XXXV, which provides that "this agreement, or alternatively Article II of this agreement, shall not apply as between any Contracting Party and any other Contracting Party, if the two Contracting Parties have not entered into tariff negotiations with each other, and if either of the Contracting Parties, at the time either becomes a Contracting Party, does not consent to such application.”

15. A “Special Protocol Modifying Article XIV of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade” provides that on and after January 1, 1949, Article XIV — exceptions to the rule of non-discrimination — of the General Agreement shall be superseded by the corresponding article i.e. Article 23, of the Havana Charter, which is now in final form.

16. The “Special Protocol Relating to Article XXIV of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade” provides that, on or before June 1, 1948, Article XXIV, pertaining to territorial application, frontier traffic and customs unions, shall be superseded by the corresponding articles of the Havana Charter, i.e., Articles 42, 43 and 44.

17. Under the “Declaration Regarding Suspension and Supersession”, signatories declare that “they will not lodge any objection to the suspension and supersession of Paragraphs 1 and 2 of Article I and Part II of the General Agreement.” This declaration was signed by eighteen of the twenty-three countries participating in the Geneva negotiations. It means, in effect, that these countries will not avail themselves of the right provided for in Article XXIX of the agreement, whereby “they may lodge within sixty days of the closing of the Havana Conference an objection to any provision or provisions of this Agreement being suspended and superseded.”

18. Under Article 17 of the Havana Charter, some thirty-two countries represented at Havana, but not at Geneva, undertake to negotiate and become Contracting Parties to the General Agreement. This declaration was necessary, therefore, to give some assurance to those countries that the provisions of the Agreement would be replaced in due course by corresponding provisions of the Havana Charter.

19. You will of course realize that some of the details given above regarding the attitude of the different delegations on specific points should be considered confidential and used for your own background information. In general, however, I hope that this summary account may prove useful if discussion ever arises on this rather complicated subject. As I indicated in paragraph (6) it should be clear from what I have said that the Canadian Government has given its full support to the plans for an International Trade Organization and has demonstrated its readiness to accept compromise solutions on difficult points rather than endanger all the chances of the project as a whole.

Berne, July 13, 1948

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

REPORT OF THE CANADIAN DELEGATION TO THE UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE ON TRADE AND EMPLOYMENT AT HAVANA

PART I

I have the honour to report, as Chief of the Canadian Delegation to the United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment, that the Conference assembled at Havana, Cuba, on November 21st, 1947, and concluded its work on March 24th, 1948, with the signature of a Final Act by 53 out of the 56 states which participated in the Conference. Argentina, Poland and Turkey were the three countries which did not sign the Final Act. This Final Act authenticated the text of a Charter for an International Trade Organization. This Charter now awaits ratification by the legislatures of the different countries and will come into force sixty days after the twentieth government shall have deposited its instrument of ratification. It is anticipated that this will take place during 1949 and that the International Trade Organization will be set up towards the end of that year.

2. The Havana Conference took as its basic document a draft Charter that had been prepared by a Preparatory Committee of seventeen countries. These seventeen countries were Australia, Belgium-Luxembourg Economic Union, Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, France, India, Lebanon, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom and United States. This Preparatory Committee met first in London, England, during the months of October and November, 1946. On that occasion they drew up the draft of a Charter based upon a draft submitted by the Government of the United States of America, which in its turn had been the outcome of a set of principles agreed upon between the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom and embodied in the form of "Proposals for Expansion of World Trade and Employment", published by the United States Government in December, 1945.

3. The London draft of the Charter was referred to a Drafting Committee, which met at Lake Success, New York, during the months of January and February, 1947, and produced a revised draft of a Charter. This New York draft was used as the basic document for the deliberations of the Second Session of the Preparatory Committee, which met in Geneva during the months of May, June, July and August, 1947. It was the draft of a Charter that emerged as a result of this Second Session of the Preparatory Committee that became the basic document of the Havana Conference.

4. The Canadian Delegation to the United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment at Havana was composed as follows:

Chief Delegate:

*Mr. L.D. Wilgress, Canadian Minister to Switzerland

Delegates:

*Mr. F.A. McGregor, Chief Commissioner, Combines Investigation Act, Department of Justice.

Mr. C.P. Hébert, Counsellor, Department of External Affairs.

Mr. W.F. Bull, Chief Export Division, Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. A. Brown, Assistant Chief Appraiser, Department of National Revenue.

Mr. Neil Perry, Department of Finance.

Advisers:

*Mr. A.E. Richards, Department of Agriculture.

*Mr. L.E. Couillard, Department of Trade and Commerce.

*Mr. S.S. Reisman, Department of Finance.

Secretaries:

Mr. R. Rosenthal, Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Henry, Department of External Affairs.

(* indicates members of the Delegation who participated in the Second Session of the Preparatory Committee at Geneva.)

Mr. John Deutsch of the Department of Finance, who had taken the leading part in the work on the Charter of the Canadian Delegation at Geneva, visited Havana for ten days during the month of January and participated in the discussions on Subsidies as a member of the Canadian Delegation.

5. The members of the Canadian Delegation were assigned to cover the various committees and sub-committees of the Conference. There were six main committees, to each of which was allotted a section of the draft Charter, as follows:

Committee I	—	Employment
Committee II	—	Economic Development
Committee III	—	Commercial Policy
Committee IV	—	Restrictive Business Practices
Committee V	—	Intergovernmental Commodity Agreements
Committee VI	—	Organization

Each of these committees in turn set up a number of sub-committees composed usually of from fifteen to eighteen countries. The sub-committees in their turn referred particularly knotty problems to working parties, which usually were composed of from five to eight countries. The ground to be covered by each of the six main committees varied greatly. Thus Committee I was able to finish its work in December and Committees IV and V in January, while Committees II, III and VI were in session up to the very last days of the Conference.

6. To Mr. Hébert was assigned the chief responsibility for representing Canada on Committee I and to Mr. Reisman was assigned the Canadian representation on Committee II, except for the Article on Investment, which was handled by Mr. Perry. Mr. Reisman, before the Conference was over, became one of the recognized experts on the Charter.

7. Committee III had to deal with such a variety of topics that it was found necessary to allot the representation of Canada to a number of members of the Delegation. Thus Mr. Bull took charge of the Section of the Commercial Policy Chapter which deals with Tariffs, Preferences, and Internal Taxation and Regulations. He represented Canada on the important Sub-Committee dealing with Preferences. Mr. Reisman and Mr. Richards together handled the Section dealing with Quantitative Restrictions, Mr. Richards devoting particular attention to quotas on agricultural products. Mr. Perry was given responsibility for the important Section dealing with Balance of Payments Difficulties. Mr. Reisman took charge of the Section dealing with Subsidies, except during the period when Mr. Deutsch was in Havana. Mr. Richards covered the Section dealing with State Trading. The important technical articles concerned with questions of customs administration were assigned to Mr. Brown as his sole responsibility. He represented Canada on the Sub-Committee set up to consider these articles and his intimate knowledge of these technical problems soon made him a leading member of this Sub-Committee. The last Section of the Commercial Policy Chapter dealing with Special Provisions was handled jointly by Mr. Brown and Mr. Couillard.

8. On Committee IV Mr. McGregor was the Canadian delegate. He had taken an active part in the drafting of the Chapter on Restrictive Business Practices both at London and Geneva. Accordingly, he soon became one of the leading members of Committee IV and had a great deal to do with creating the co-operative spirit and friendly atmosphere that prevailed in that Committee. Canada can be considered as having made a major contribution to the Chapter on Restrictive Business Practices. Mr. Richards represented Canada effectively on Committee V, which dealt with the Chapter on Intergovernmental Commodity Agreements. Finally, Mr. Couillard, with only occasional help from other members of the Delegation, was the Canadian representative on the important Committee VI, which dealt with all questions pertaining to the setting up of the International Trade Organization.

9. Mr. McGregor, having completed his assignment, and Mr. Hébert, being wanted for other duties, were able to leave Havana in January. Mr. Bull, Mr. Brown and Mr. Rosenthal were able to get away in February. Mr. Richards left Havana at the beginning of March. Mr. Perry, Mr. Couillard, Mr. Reisman and Mr. Henry remained with me until the end of the Conference.

10. An excellent team spirit prevailed in the Canadian Delegation. Each member was keen to make the contribution of Canada to the framing of the Charter as effective as possible. The work was extremely arduous. The meetings were held in the Capitolio, the building of the Cuban Congress. The members of the Delegation seldom left the Capitolio until after eight in the evening. After that there were documents to read over after dinner, because seldom was it possible to read over all the documents during the course of the day. Work commenced each day at 9 a.m. with a Delegation meeting, at which were planned the tactics for the day, breaking up in time to be at the first Conference meeting at 10:30 a.m. Given the trying heat and noise of Havana, it is a testimony of their keen interest that the members of the Canadian Delegation were able to keep up this pace for four months without interruption. No Chairman of a Delegation could have received more loyal support and co-operation from the other members of his team.

11. The Canadian Delegation contributed its fair share to the officers of the Conference. I was elected Chairman of Committee III — the Commercial Policy Committee. Mr. Couillard was elected Chairman of the important Sub-Committee dealing with Chapter VIII of the Charter — Settlement of Differences. This young Canadian, without any legal training, presided over with ability and distinction a Sub-Committee composed mostly of lawyers, including a member of the French Parliament. Finally, Mr. Perry was elected Chairman of the Working Party set up to deal with the intricate questions of exceptions to the rule of non-discrimination in the case of balance of payments difficulties. This became one of the most important subsidiary organs of the Conference. The questions with which they had to deal were so technical that they used an esoteric language unintelligible to the average man or, for that matter, to the majority of delegates attending the Conference. Since the main controversy in the Working Party developed between the United Kingdom and the United States, the position became very delicate for a Canadian Chairman. Mr. Perry acquitted himself with credit and won praise for his handling of the most difficult of all the working parties set up at the Conference.

12. Trouble arose at the very outset of the Conference over the question of the election of a President. Most of the countries who had participated in the work of the Preparatory Committee wished to nominate Mr. Max Suetens, the Chief Delegate of Belgium, who had presided so ably and so tactfully over both the London and Geneva sessions of the Preparatory Committee. This proposal evoked pronounced resistance from the Latin-American delegations, who maintained that according to the custom of inter-American conferences the President should be the Chief Delegate of the host country. The difficulty in this case was that Mr. Sergio Clark, the Chief of the Cuban Delegation, although very popular with all those who had known him at Geneva, had no particular qualifications to serve as President of the Conference. The compromise was reached of electing Mr. Clark as President and Mr. Suetens as First Vice-President with the understanding that the President would preside over the plenary sessions of the Conference and the First Vice-President over the meetings of the General Committee.<sup>1</sup>

13. The General Committee was the steering committee of the Conference. It consisted of [eighteen] members, viz., the President, the First Vice-President, [six] other Vice-Presidents, the Chairmen of the six main committees, and four members at large. The last four were filled by representatives of the so-called great powers — China, France, the United Kingdom, and the United States. As Chairman of Committee III, I was automatically a member of the General Committee. This committee performed a useful function in planning the work of the Conference. There was resistance, however, whenever it was suggested that the General Committee should attempt to resolve difficulties of substance confronting the Conference. In such cases resort usually had to be had to a full meeting of Heads of Delegations, an organ of the Conference which had not been envisaged at the outset. The majority of delegations looked upon the General Committee as a packed body with overrepresentation of the developed countries. That is the reason why at a decisive stage of the Conference it was necessary to set up a Coordination Committee with membership different to that of the General Committee.

14. Throughout the discussions at Havana the Canadian Delegation adhered closely to instructions conforming to the policy formulated by the Government of Canada prior to the deliberations of the Preparatory Committee. This policy has been to support fully the setting up of an International Trade Organization upon the basis of the original United States "Proposals for Expansion of World Trade and Employment." Accordingly the Canadian Delegation consistently opposed efforts to weaken the rules designed to reduce trade barriers and to permit the restoration of international trade upon a multilateral basis as soon as possible. The successive stages in the elaboration of a Charter for the International Trade Organization did bring about a weakening of these rules. This arose through the progressive introduction of exceptional provisions or "escape clauses", necessary in order to secure the adherence to the Charter of as many different countries as possible. The Canadian Delegation, when finding that the inclusion of an exceptional provision was inevitable, directed its efforts to restricting the scope of the provision as much as possible. The result of all this has been that the Charter which finally emerged at Havana represents a bold compromise, flexible enough to take care of varying needs of different economic philosophies and of different stages of economic development, yet sufficiently true to the principles of multilateral trade to give rise to the hope that the Organization, when it is set up, will prove to be one of the most successful and most enduring of all the intergovernmental organizations established during the last few years.

15. At the First Session of the Preparatory Committee in London it became apparent that the chief division of opinion was between the highly industrialized countries and those countries aspiring to rapid industrialization. This latter group became known as "the under-developed countries". They stressed the need for freedom to use any measures that would promote more rapidly their economic development. In particular they wished freedom to use quantitative restrictions to attain this end. Concessions were made to this group at London in that a separate chapter was included in the draft Charter dealing with Economic Development and the Organization was required to authorize the use, for purposes of economic development, of quantitative restrictions, differential internal taxation, mixing regulations and other devices, when these were found likely to be less harmful to international trade than other measures.

16. Another feature of the London Session was the stress laid by Australia and other countries on the need for expansionist policies in regard to employment. This clearly reflected the new economic ideas associated with the name of Lord Keynes. It was maintained that the level of employment in important countries had a greater influence on world trade than any lowering or raising of trade barriers. It was pointed out, with a certain measure of justification, that the United States draft of a Charter was entirely negative. It contained a series of "dents" about what nations must not do in the way of maintaining barriers to trade, but little of a positive character about what nations should do to expand world trade. As a result, the chapter on Employment in the original United States draft of a Charter was expanded and recognition was accorded to the need of countries to take action to protect themselves against deflationary pressure in the event of a depression in one of the important industrial countries.

17. At the Second Session of the Preparatory Committee, held in Geneva, the under-developed countries continued their efforts to secure more latitude for themselves in using for their rapid economic development measures inconsistent with the basic principles of multilateral trade. These efforts concentrated on freedom to use for this purpose protective devices such as quantitative restrictions, differential internal taxation and mixing regulations and preferences between neighbouring states. At London, Australia had played the useful role of assuming leadership of the under-developed group and then, when concessions to their point of view had been obtained, of persuading the group as a whole to accept the compromise. It was not possible for Australia to repeat this performance at Geneva. India showed a desire for more concessions and became the chief spokesman of the under-developed group, although in respect of preferences for purposes of economic development the chief proponents were Chile and the Lebanese-Syrian Customs Union. As a result of protracted discussions the compromise was reached of providing for protective measures for purposes of economic development with the prior approval of the Organization (Article 13) and for preferences for purposes of economic development also upon prior approval of the Organization (Article 15). The requirement of a two-thirds vote for the latter, however, was left in square brackets to be decided by the Havana Conference.

18. Another phase of the draft Charter which caused difficulties at Geneva was the provision for exceptions from the rule of non-discrimination in the case of countries applying quantitative restrictions for reasons of balance of payments difficulties. The exchange situation became more critical while the Preparatory Committee was meeting in Geneva. The United Kingdom in particular no longer found it possible to maintain the convertibility of its currency. In consequence that country, together with other European countries, sought to elaborate more precisely the exceptions from the rule of non-discrimination. The result was the redrafting of this Article of the draft Charter which became Article 23 of the Geneva draft. The provisions permitting the use of quantitative restrictions on a non-discriminatory basis for balance of payments reasons were also expanded at Geneva in that a country could not be required to change its domestic policies if the Organization considered that these policies were responsible for its balance of payments difficulties (Article 21).

19. Finally, the Preparatory Committee were unable to resolve certain questions and had to present the Havana Conference with the choice between a number of alternative solutions. These questions were: weighted voting versus one state-one vote; the composition of the Executive Board; and relations with non-Members of the Organization.

20. Concurrently with the Second Session of the Preparatory Committee, there took place at Geneva a series of multilateral tariff negotiations. Altogether there were negotiations between 127 pairs of countries represented on the Preparatory Committee. Of these negotiations 123 were concluded successfully. The results of these negotiations were embodied in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the text of which was authenticated by the Geneva Final Act signed on October 30th, 1947, by the representatives of 23 countries (the seventeen members of the Preparatory Committee plus Luxembourg, Syria, Pakistan, Burma, Ceylon and Southern Rhodesia). The General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade included those provisions of the Geneva draft of the Charter which directly relate to the importation of goods, i.e., most of the Commercial Policy Chapter of the draft Charter. It was provided, however, that nearly all of these provisions would be superseded by the Charter agreed upon at the United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment (the Havana Conference) when that Charter entered into force. The General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade is now being applied provisionally by all of the signatories of the Geneva Final Act with the exception of Chile.

21. The same questions which had given rise to difficulties at Geneva confronted the Conference at Havana with its main problems. It had been hoped that, because the Preparatory Committee represented a cross-section of the different types of economies, agreement upon the basis of the Geneva draft of the Charter would be reached fairly speedily. It was hoped that a delegation such as that of India, which had accepted the Geneva draft subject to confirmation by the Indian Government, would use its influence with the delegations from the other under-developed countries to secure their acceptance of the compromise reached at Geneva. These hopes proved to be abortive. Just as Australia lost its leadership at Geneva because it had accepted the compromise reached at London, India was unable, and, as it turned out, unwilling, to assume the leadership of the under-developed group at Havana. The Indian Minister of Commerce came to Havana prepared to play this role, but, when he heard the speeches at the opening plenary meeting, he decided the best tactics for India would be to wait and see what further concessions would be granted to the Latin-American countries, all of whom were clamouring for more freedom for economic development.

22. The Latin-American countries dominated the first part of the Havana Conference. The fact that the Conference was being held in a Latin-American country gave them a great advantage. They were able to unite on the issue of the recognition of Spanish as one of the working languages of the Conference. They made full use of their numerical advantage. Except for the last four weeks of the Conference they were able to act as a solid bloc. This more than anything else threatened the success of the Conference which for three months was in jeopardy.

23. These three months proved that the Conference was held not only in the wrong place but also at the wrong time. The Latin-American countries had become disturbed over the implications for them of the Marshall Plan. They felt the fairy godmother of the North was deserting them in favour of Europe. Their acquaintance with socialist ideas had converted them to a form of international socialism in which the richer countries were under an obligation to the poorer countries to promote the economic development of these countries and to raise their standard of living up to that of the richer countries. Some of them even went so far as to deny the right of the richer countries to assist in the reconstruction of the European countries because these countries had once enjoyed prosperity at the expense of the under-developed countries.

24. The Latin-American countries had developed many new industries during the war. It became clear that they wished this process of rapid industrialization to continue. It also became evident that they feared the effect on their new industries of the revival of European competition. The concept of economic development became confused with the desire to use protective measures to support industries recently established. References were heard to the importance of some factory because it belonged to a relative of the President of the country. The Havana Conference was held on the eve of the Bogota Inter-American Conference, at which the Latin-American countries intended to press for "a Marshall Plan for the Americas." Thus much of what transpired at Havana was a dress rehearsal for Bogota.

25. Cutting across all these tendencies was the attitude of the Argentine Delegation, which was out to prevent the Conference from being a success. Their main theme was that the proposed International Trade Organization involved the creation of "a Super-State". The appeal to respect for State-sovereignty once again was being used to impede international co-operation. Professed socialists were being asked to be more nationalist than internationalist. Fortunately the Chief of the Argentine Delegation, Senator Molinari, impaired his effectiveness by an excess of demagogy. The other members of the Argentine Delegation, however, were distinguished by their erudition on technical questions. At first they appeared to have the full support of Chile, Uruguay and Bolivia, but at the end of the Conference Argentina was isolated.

26. The Brazilian Delegation endeavoured to disassociate themselves from the solid Latin-American bloc. As a member of the Preparatory Committee they had been co-operative at London and Geneva, but in general had grouped themselves with the under-developed countries. Their concern to maintain differential internal taxation and to protect their newly-established industries brought them closer to the other Latin-American countries than to the United States. Their efforts at conciliation were frustrated by the taunts of the other Latin-American countries that they were "a Yankee tool". They fulfilled a useful role, however, in the determined stand they took against the creation of new preferences.

27. The Mexican Delegation stood out from the other Latin-American delegations not only as regards the ability of their representatives, but also as regards their attitude towards quantitative restrictions. They were just as keen as the delegates from their sister republics on economic development and on protection of existing factories, but, because they had had little experience of quantitative restrictions and feared the administrative difficulties of such measures, they placed the emphasis more on tariff protection. They wanted freedom to impose higher tariffs rather than freedom to resort to other protective devices. It was the Mexican Delegation that introduced the proposal for an Economic Development Committee as a counterweight to the Tariff Committee, provided for in the Geneva draft of the Charter. This proposal caused a good deal of concern to the Canadian Delegation, who saw in it a means of converting the International Trade Organization into an instrument for promoting economic development rather than for expanding international trade. Eventually the proposals both for an Economic Development Committee and for a Tariff Committee were dropped as part of the final compromise which made possible agreement on a Charter.

28. Most of the other delegations from under-developed countries supported the Latin-American countries in their fight for more freedom to use exceptional measures for purposes of economic development. Each delegation, however, placed the emphasis on some phase of the problem of particular interest to its country. The Arab group of countries, for instance, were most concerned with the establishment of new preferences. They supported Chile, which was seeking international authority for its agreement with Argentina providing for new preferences contrary to the most-favoured-nation provisions of some of the existing treaties concluded by both countries. The New Zealand Delegation, ably led by the Right Honourable Walter Nash, sought to turn the Charter as much as possible into an international endorsement of the economic policies pursued by the New Zealand Government or rather by Mr. Nash himself. China was chiefly concerned with freedom to continue differential internal taxation. Ceylon, represented by their High Commissioner in London, Mr. Corea, became the most outright defender of quantitative restrictions. Reflecting the views of the extreme-left government now in power in Ceylon, Mr. Corea could see nothing bad in "Q.R.s". India had the ablest delegation of all of the under-developed countries. They played a masterly game of waiting to see what developments would bring forth. In playing this game they gave support as and when most required to the general line of attack by the under-developed countries.

29. Those resisting the under-developed countries were handicapped by the need of each country to take into account its own special requirements. Thus the United States Delegation was handicapped by the need of insisting upon freedom to use quantitative restrictions for the protection of agriculture under certain conditions, and this without being subject to the prior approval of the Organization. They were further prejudiced by their inability to agree to the renunciation of the right to use export subsidies under all circumstances.

30. The United Kingdom at first had supported the United States wholeheartedly in the efforts to set up an International Trade Organization upon a sound basis. At the closing stages of the Geneva discussions, however, the United Kingdom became more lukewarm in their support. Partly this was the result of the attacks made at Geneva upon the system of Imperial preferences and partly the reflection of the increasing balance of payments difficulties experienced by the United Kingdom. At Havana the attitude of the United Kingdom Delegation seemed to be dominated by the desire to have nothing in the Charter that would impede their programme of agricultural protection nor their freedom to discriminate for balance of payments reasons. The ink was hardly dry on the rules drafted at Geneva, largely by the United Kingdom representative, for revised exceptions to the principle of non-discrimination (Article 23), when the United Kingdom commenced at Havana to seek what amounted to absolute freedom to discriminate during the transitional period. Their experience with the Anglo-American Financial Agreement made them chary of accepting too binding commitments in respect of non-discrimination. In this they were joined by France and the other countries of Europe, who disliked the interpretation placed upon the Geneva text of Article 23 by the United States representative. They wanted more flexible provisions governing the exceptions to the rule of non-discrimination.

31. Finally, a disturbing note was introduced into the Havana deliberations by Switzerland. Mr. Stucki, the Chief of the Swiss Delegation, claimed that their position was unique and consequently deserved special treatment. A country poor in natural resources and dependent economically upon the export of highly finished goods. Switzerland is surrounded by countries who, under the Charter, are free to impose quantitative restrictions and other measures for balance of payments reasons. Unless permitted to use similar measures to defend what are her vital interests, Switzerland would be unable to subscribe to the Charter. At first, in arguing this thesis, Mr. Stucki seemed to be careful not to associate himself with the Latin-American bloc. However, he intervened to defend quantitative restrictions during the course of a debate in which ninety-five speeches were delivered, most of them in favour of the free use of quantitative restrictions under conditions which would permit their use by every country except the United States.

32. Thus it appeared at Havana that only the Benelux countries and Canada stood for the full acceptance of the basic principles of multilateral trade. Even Canada was not absolutely pure because we too had our balance of payments difficulties and were zealous in protecting our own position as regards that section of the Charter. Among the Benelux countries there were times when the Netherlands was in disagreement with its Belgian partner on account of Dutch concern over special measures to protect agriculture. The hope that the larger number of under-developed countries represented at Havana would accept the Geneva compromise was in part vitiated by this lack of unity in the ranks of the Geneva countries. When it was pointed out to the under-developed countries that the Geneva draft provided for the use of quantitative restrictions and of preferences for purposes of economic development, but subject to the prior approval of the Organization, they were able to reply that prior approval was not a prerequisite for the use of quantitative restrictions for balance of payments reasons or for the protection of agriculture under certain conditions.

33. The situation during the first month at Havana looked so hopeless that the practice grew up of having informal meetings from time to time of the heads of leading delegations from countries genuinely interested in establishing the International Trade Organization upon a sound basis. At these meetings the general situation of the Conference was discussed. At one of the meetings, held early in December and presided over by Mr. Clayton of the United States, it was decided to give up the fight then ensuing upon the question of weighted voting versus one state-one vote. It was felt that it would clear the air and help to create a better atmosphere at the Conference if the inevitable concession to the majority was made then rather than allowing the deadlock over this question to continue indefinitely. Accordingly the United States, United Kingdom and Canadian Delegations, the three chief proponents of weighted voting, declared their acceptance of the principle of one state-one vote, subject to the later decision regarding the composition of the Executive Board of the Organization being satisfactory to these delegations, i.e., that provision be made for permanent seats on the Executive Board to be allocated to the countries of chief economic importance. Instead of this move clearing the air and helping to create a better atmosphere, it had the reverse effect. It made the majority more conscious of their numerical strength and encouraged them to hope for more concessions.

34. In view of this situation, I proposed at one of the informal meetings, held shortly before Christmas, that the Conference should be adjourned to be called together again after the Bogota Conference had clarified the situation of United States financial assistance to the economic development of Latin America. I took this position in accordance with instructions from Ottawa that rather than attempting to frame a Charter flexible enough to fit the lowest common denominator, the leading trading nations should build up from the basis of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, concluded at Geneva on October 30, 1947, i.e., the selective rather than the universal approach. That Agreement contained a provision (Article XXV) for regular meetings of the Contracting Parties, in other words, for an embryo organization.

35. This proposal led to a searching discussion at informal meetings on the situation of the Conference. The United States Delegation telegraphed to Washington for instructions. However, it was decided to continue the Conference in the hope of hammering out a generally acceptable solution. It was felt that to adjourn the Conference would be to deal a fatal blow at the whole conception of an International Trade Organization. It might never be possible to call the countries together again to discuss a Charter. Overshadowing everything was the Soviet Union and the political capital they might make out of a breakdown of the Havana Conference.

36. The selective approach, instead of the universal approach, also was rejected on political grounds. The Head of the French Delegation referred to the opposition in France to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and affirmed that the only chance of securing French acceptance of that Agreement was to present it for ratification along with a Charter for the International Trade Organization approved by a large number of countries. Otherwise both the Communists and Socialists in France would make too much political capital out of the thesis that the General Agreement was an attempt by the United States to form an exclusive capitalist bloc. The Honourable [J.J.] Dedman, Chief of the Australian Delegation, also contended that Australia could not accept the General Agreement without a Charter. He had in mind particularly the Employment Chapter of the Charter, to which the Australians attach so much importance and which is not included in the General Agreement. Thus it was that no other approach than the universal one proved to be politically feasible. If there was to be a Charter at all, it had to be flexible enough to secure the adherence of as many countries as possible.

37. After the New Year the Conference continued to discuss the various sections of the Charter through the elaborate mechanism of the six main committees, numerous sub-committees and working parties. Progress was lamentably slow. The difficult problem of composition of the Executive Board was tackled and gave rise to endless debate and jockeying for position. The dangerous proposal for an Economic Development Committee commenced to meet with general acceptance in the form of a sub-committee of the Executive Board, to which status the Tariff Committee also was to be reduced. Resistance continued to be offered to the creation of new preferences, but the idea of "a Free Trade Area" as a new form of Customs Union, less rigid and therefore easier to attain than the old form of Customs Union, was thrown out and made an immediate appeal to the Arab group of States and to the Central American group. It served to make these two groups less insistent upon freedom to use quantitative restrictions for the purpose of economic development without prior approval of the Organization. On this latter question, however, the Conference continued to be deadlocked. In the meantime good progress was made with the less controversial parts of the Charter, such as the Chapter on Employment, the technical articles dealing with questions of customs administration and the Chapters on Restrictive Business Practices and Inter-governmental Commodity Agreements. On the organizational side, besides the composition of the Executive Board, difficulties still were being experienced in relation to the settlement of differences, relations with non-Members, boycotts for political purposes, and the treatment of areas under military occupation.

38. During the month of January considerable progress was made in the solution of the main issue that had been separating the Canadian and United States Delegations. This was the question of export subsidies. At London it had been agreed that export subsidies would not be permitted after a certain period, except in the case of a breakdown of negotiations for an intergovernmental commodity agreement. The Canadian Delegation had reserved its position on this exception, because it was felt that it would give the United States too much bargaining power in the negotiations for commodity agreements. At Geneva the Canadian Delegation succeeded, in the face of United States opposition, in making this exception subject to the prior approval of the Organization. Now it was the turn of the United States to enter a reservation. In this they were inconsistent since they had been insisting on prior approval in the case of exceptional measures for purposes of economic development. They felt, however, that in the case of export subsidies the prior approval of the Organization would never be granted and that, as the Subsidy Section of the Charter provided for stabilization schemes equivalent to export subsidies and for general production subsidies that tended to increase or to maintain exports, they could not defend at home the prohibition of the only price support action the United States could take in the event of a burdensome surplus. Thus it was that the whole issue had to be fought out again at Havana. The result was a compromise, whereby all forms of subsidization were to be subject to review by the Organization and in the event of any such subsidization acquiring for a Member more than an equitable share of world trade in the commodity concerned, the Organization can require the Member to alter its subsidy.

39. This was the general situation in the Conference, when, early in February, the Latin-American bloc proposed the setting-up of a Coordination Committee to resolve the outstanding difficulties. This proposal, submitted in the form of a resolution signed by nearly all the Latin-American delegations, was discussed in a formal meeting of Heads of Delegations. It was obvious that the main idea behind this proposal was to have an opportunity for "horse trading", whereby the Latin-American countries would obtain some of their pet objectives in return for some concessions on their part to the numerically weaker, but much stronger economically, group of important trading nations. It was felt, however, that it would be poor tactics to refuse the request of the Latin-American countries. The proposal did offer the only hope of breaking the deadlock and terminating the Conference within a reasonable period of time. Accordingly, the Coordination Committee was set up and deliberated for three weeks. As a result of these deliberations there emerged the final compromise which made possible agreement on a Charter.

40. The most important part of this compromise related to the highly controversial question of the use of quantitative restrictions and other protective devices for purposes of economic development (Article 13). The principle of prior approval of the Organization was retained, but in four carefully defined cases the prior approval would be automatic in that it would have to be granted if the criteria were met. Of these four cases, however, only two were really automatic. These two commenced with the words "is designed", which being objective does not permit of much discretion on the part of the Organization. Of the other two cases, one commenced with the words "is necessary" and the other with the words "is unlikely". In both these cases the subjective element is present and a great deal will depend upon how the Organization interprets these particular words. The two cases commencing with the words "is designed" are (1) for the protection of industries established during the war, i.e., the so-called "war babies" and (2) for promoting industries processing a raw material the market for which has become curtailed through new or increased restrictions imposed abroad. In both these cases the automatic prior approval of the Organization will be for a specified period and in any application for renewal the approval of the Organization will not be subject to the automatic provisions of Article 13.

41. Undoubtedly the concession of "the war-babies clause" had a great deal to do with securing the adherence of the Latin-American countries to the compromise. It had become evident that what many of them were most concerned about was the right to use quotas and other restrictive measures to protect their newly-established industries against the revival of European competition. Consequently this clause was chiefly at the expense of the European countries, a fact to which the United Kingdom Delegation were to call attention later on when they became hesitant about accepting the Charter that was emerging from the Conference.

42. The tussle over Article 13 led to a split in the ranks of the Latin-American countries. This split came over the issue that had been cutting across all the discussions on the Charter and dividing countries that were together on most other issues. It was the question of protection for agriculture versus protection for industry. Colombia, whose Chief Delegate, Mr. Lleras Restrepo, was a member of the Coordination Committee, wanted more freedom to use quantitative restrictions to protect agriculture as well as industry. This was stoutly resisted by Mexico and Peru, whose Chief Delegates were also on the Coordination Committee. They won out and, although the Colombian delegate accepted the compromise, he did so reluctantly. As one of the leading figures of the Liberal Party of Colombia he felt his position at home would be prejudiced as a result of the compromise.

43. On preferences, it was not necessary to make concessions to the views of the majority. In fact Article 15 of the Havana Charter represents an improvement over Article 15 of the Geneva draft, having regard to the fact that the two-thirds voting requirement was left in square brackets in that draft. If this question had been put to a vote at the Havana Conference, it is certain that the two-thirds voting requirement would have been reduced to that of a simple majority. The Arab group of countries and the Central American group having been won over by the conception of a "Free Trade Area", which also was made part of the compromise, Chile became more or less isolated in the fight for new preferences for purposes of economic development.

44. In Article 15 of the Havana Charter the Organization is required to grant approval of new preferences either by a two-thirds vote or when they meet certain criteria designed to assure that they will serve the purpose of the development of particular industries. At a later stage of the Conference, when they were becoming chary about accepting the Charter, the United Kingdom Delegation attacked Article 15 because its scope did not clearly permit new preferences with the colonies for purposes of economic development. They were met in part by an interpretative note defining "the same economic region" in such a way as it could be interpreted to include both the United Kingdom and certain of the colonies.

45. On this part of the compromise, Mr. W. Mueller, the aggressive Chief Delegate of Chile, was outmanoeuvred in the Coordination Committee. He did not realize until it was too late that the words "between Members" excluded from the scope of the compromise the preference agreement between Chile and Argentina unless Argentina became a Member of the Organization, which from the attitude of the Argentine Delegation could be seen to be highly unlikely. The Chilean Delegation later were able to some small extent to repair this mistake on their part when the question of relations with Non-Members was being discussed separately from the compromise by securing the right for approval, by a two-thirds vote of the Organization, of new preferences with non-Members.

46. Another part of the compromise agreed upon by the Coordination Committee was the decision to drop the proposals for the setting up both of an Economic Development Committee and of a Tariff Committee. The Canadian Delegation had taken an active part in proposing this solution of the problem presented by the Mexican proposal for an Economic Development Committee. The Tariff Committee had been intended to take over the functions performed at the meetings of the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement. It was felt that when the Charter came into force these functions could just as readily be performed by the Executive Board of the Organization.

47. As part of the compromise, the Contracting Parties agreed to amend, at their next meeting scheduled at Havana for the end of February, the General Agreement so as no longer to require unanimity in accepting the admission of new countries. This can now be done by a two-thirds vote and hence removed the Mexican objection to "a veto right". The Contracting Parties also agreed that they would endeavour to waive the right of complaint against supersession of Part II of the General Agreement by the corresponding provisions of the Charter, thereby meeting another Mexican objection to the tariff negotiations section of the Charter. They had argued that they otherwise would not know in advance the provisions of the General Agreement to which they were being asked to subscribe.

48. The last part of the compromise was that the Coordination Committee agreed to accept the solution of the vexed question of composition of the Executive Board then being worked out in main committee. This provides for a Board of eighteen countries or customs unions with permanent seats allocated to the eight Members of chief economic importance. It is specified that in determining the countries or customs unions of chief economic importance particular regard shall be paid to their shares in international trade. Moreover, an Annex to the Charter prescribes the rules to be followed in the first election to the Executive Board and one of these rules is that two of the permanent seats shall be allotted to the two countries in the Western Hemisphere with the largest external trade. These provisions assure the allocation to Canada of one of the permanent seats on the Executive Board.

49. For this satisfactory outcome, from the Canadian point of view, we are indebted to the unfailing support of Mr. C. Wilcox, the United States Deputy Chief Delegate and of Dr. Erik Colban, the Norwegian Chief Delegate and Chairman of Committee VI dealing with organization. At the informal meeting held early in December, at which it was decided to give up the fight for weighted voting, the question of the composition of the Executive Board was discussed. I outlined the reasons why Canada attached importance to permanent seats. I explained that, while Canada was recognized as an important industrial country, we could not be certain of election to the Executive Board because the majority of countries regarded us as closely associated with either the United Kingdom or the United States. The principle of geographical representation also worked against Canada in that North America always would be represented by the United States. Those present at the informal meeting, except the Australian representative, saw the force of these arguments. Mr. Clayton and Mr. Wilcox declared, on behalf of the United States Delegation, that they would press for permanent seats, stating that "we want Canada on the Board." Dr. Colban, on behalf of the Norwegian Delegation, pledged his support for the same reason. This was a very courageous stand for Dr. Colban to take because at Geneva he had opposed the proposal for permanent seats, arguing that in any election the countries of chief economic importance would be sure to be elected. Australia opposed the proposal for permanent seats to the bitter end.

50. The Latin-American countries, after much haggling, were won over to the proposal for the composition of the Executive Board by the inclusion of an Annex to the Charter giving the formula for the first election in order to assure equitable geographical representation. This assured the election of four Latin-American countries to the Board, provided a sufficient number of such countries had become Members of the Organization. It was surprising, in view of their numerical strength, that the Latin American countries attached so much importance to assuring the election of a certain proportion of their number to the Executive Board. An interesting sidelight on this struggle was the great anxiety of Brazil lest Argentina secure an advantage over that country in the formula for election to the Board. This led Brazil to ally herself with China and India in stressing that population should be a determining factor nearly equal in importance to the share of a country in international trade. Throughout the Havana discussions Dr. Wunsz King, the Chief Delegate of China, had directed his main efforts to securing the allocation of a permanent seat to China. He succeeded in this by having included in the formula for the first election the provision that three out of the eight permanent seats would be filled by the countries with the largest population.

51. With the acceptance at a formal meeting of Heads of Delegations of the final compromise worked out by the Coordination Committee, agreement was definitely reached on those parts of the Charter respecting which the Latin-American countries had taken the most determined stand. During the last few weeks of the Conference there was no evidence of a Latin-American bloc. In fact, some of the Latin-American delegations, who had been causing the most trouble, became the leading advocates for an International Trade Organization. For example, Mr. Chalone, the able Chief Delegate of Uruguay, who in December had been the principal spokesman of the critics of the Geneva draft, used his eloquence during the last few weeks to praise the Charter that was emerging from the Havana Conference. The Argentine Delegation continued their stand in opposition to the setting-up of any organization with extensive powers, but they were securing less and less support. Bolivia remained associated with them until the end, but even Bolivia signed the Final Act.

52. The cleavage of opinion in the concluding stage of the Conference, therefore, was not between the developed and the under-developed countries. Instead, it was among the developed countries themselves. The questions remaining for solution required bridging the gap between the views of the United States Delegation on the one hand and those of the delegations from European countries on the other hand. The chief of these questions was that of exceptions from the rule of non-discrimination in the case of countries experiencing balance of payments difficulties. There also remained for solution the difficult questions of the settlement of differences, relations with non-members, boycotts for political purposes, the treatment of areas under military occupation, and the problem of Switzerland.

53. A Sub-Committee, presided over by Mr. L.E. Couillard of Canada, succeeded after some twenty-five meetings in arriving at a satisfactory solution of the controversial question of the settlement of differences. Here the chief clash of views had been between the Anglo-Saxon or Common Law countries, who hesitated to permit references to the International Court of Justice of questions having an economic content, and France and the other countries of Western Europe, whose representatives were trained in the concepts of Roman Law. The Sub-Committee evolved a new text of Chapter VIII which represented a great improvement over the Geneva draft. It streamlined the various steps to be taken in the settlement of differences. The actual procedures to be followed for ensuring that advisory opinions of the Court on matters referred to it by the Organization should have binding effect were left to be confirmed by the Interim Commission after consultation with the Court.

54. Relations with non-Members were solved by the acceptance of weak provisions which bore little resemblance to any of the three alternatives presented to the Conference by the Preparatory Committee. Argentina, for understandable reasons, Switzerland for similar reasons, and Sweden and Czechoslovakia on account of their relations with the Soviet Union, had been irreconcilably opposed to any strong provisions governing the relations with non-Members.

55. The question of boycotts for political purposes proved to be one of the most delicate of all questions dealt with by the Conference. The Arab countries wanted freedom to boycott goods originating with Zionist-sponsored producers, and India wanted the right to continue their embargo on trade with South Africa. By clever manipulation the issue was made to appear chiefly one between India and South Africa. While this saved the Conference from undesirable publicity, it placed Dr. Holloway, the Chief Delegate of South Africa, in a most invidious position. He acquitted himself admirably and with great dignity. He had to submit to being outvoted in favour of a formula which removed from the scope of the Charter measures taken pursuant to a political question referred to the United Nations.

56. On the question of the treatment of areas under military occupation, the United States Delegation were unable to persuade the European countries that the Conference should provide for the reciprocal exchange of most-favoured-nation treatment with the occupied areas of Germany and Japan. The United States Government was left with the alternative of dealing with this matter in the agreements with the European countries for Marshall Plan aid, but a reference to the areas under military occupation was included in the Article of the Charter dealing with membership.

57. The problem of Switzerland had been referred to a Sub-Committee of Committee III — the Commercial Policy Committee — and this Sub-Committee had struggled with the question for weeks. It was agreed that Switzerland, with a strong currency and surrounded by countries in balance of payments difficulties, was in a unique position. However, it was not clear how Switzerland could be released from some of the obligations of the Charter without opening the door for other countries to take advantage of this exception. Uruguay and Venezuela were members of the Sub-Committee and made it clear that they had a direct interest in whatever solution was proposed for Switzerland. Mr. Stucki, the Chief Delegate of Switzerland, did not assist matters by his uncompromising attitude. The United States member of the Sub-Committee showed himself to be equally uncompromising. Finally, it was proposed that the whole question should be referred to the Interim Commission for further study and this solution of the immediate difficulty was adopted. It had the advantage of giving Mr. Stucki no excuse to crusade against the Charter, which, in view of the influence of the greatly-respected Swiss press, would have had unfortunate repercussions on European opinion towards the Charter.

58. Thus it became clear during the early part of March that one question after another was being solved with the exception of that pertaining to the exceptions from the rule of non-discrimination in the case of countries experiencing balance of payments difficulties. This was the question to which the United Kingdom Delegation attached the most importance. They became apprehensive that at the end of the Conference the United Kingdom might be the only country unable to accept the Charter. As already indicated, they had become dissatisfied with the solutions proposed for dealing with quantitative restrictions for purposes of economic development and with new preferences. It was these considerations which led the United Kingdom Government to propose to the other countries of the British Commonwealth of Nations a postponement of the Conference. They did not pursue this idea in the absence of support from these other countries, but they did take up with the United States Government, through diplomatic channels and therefore outside the Conference, the questions which were causing them concern, particularly that of the exceptions to the rule of non-discrimination.

59. After preliminary debate in Committee III — the Commercial Policy Committee — the balance of payments questions had been referred to a Sub-Committee. This Sub-Committee in turn set up a Working Party of eight countries to consider the question of exceptions to the rule of non-discrimination. Mr. Neil Perry of Canada was elected Chairman of this Working Party, which for two months wrestled with this highly technical and difficult question. For a long period the Working Party was able to make no headway. An impasse had arisen over differences of interpretation of that part of the Geneva text of Article 23 which requires countries in balance of payments difficulties to give priority to exports for hard currency. Some of the European countries also disliked the provision precluding higher prices for goods imported from countries in whose favour the discrimination takes place. The United Kingdom was out frankly for full freedom to discriminate throughout all or nearly all of the transitional period.

60. After several weeks of frustration the United States decided to break the deadlock in the Working Party by proposing a return to the basis of their original draft of a Charter. This meant that, in place of the criteria set forth in the Geneva draft, the justification for exceptions to the rule of non-discrimination would be the condition that they had equivalent effect to exchange restrictions permitted by the International Monetary Fund. A new draft of Article 23 on this basis, submitted by the United States Delegation, also provided that discriminatory measures already in force could be continued and adapted to changing circumstances for the duration of the transitional period as determined by the Fund. At first this new draft pleased all members of the Working Party except Canada. The Canadian Delegation had to point out that the new basis was more unfavourable for Canada than that of Geneva. Moreover, Canada would be penalized through the fact that an effort had deliberately been made to avoid discrimination in the Canadian import restrictions imposed on November 17, 1947. Accordingly, to meet Canada, it was proposed to permit any country then applying the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade to continue to be governed by the provisions of that agreement in respect of exceptions to the rule of non-discrimination. This meant adding the Geneva criteria to the other justifications for discrimination, but only during the transitional period to be determined by the Fund.

61. When the Brazilian Delegation realized the full implications of the proposal made to meet Canada, they protested because Brazil had not yet been applying the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and consequently this particular provision would not be applicable in their case. The United States Delegation, seeing the impossibility of confining the application of the additional provision to a few countries, then decided to fall back upon the choice of two options, one based on their original draft of a Charter — which henceforth became known as “the Havana option” — and the other on the Geneva draft. It was on this basis that Article 23 of the Havana Charter came to be drafted. This was not before, however, a number of difficulties had been ironed out. These difficulties chiefly arose through the natural reluctance of the United Kingdom Government to assume new obligations in respect of non-discrimination which they might not be able to fulfill.

62. When the United States first made the proposal to return to the basis of their original draft of a Charter for exceptions to the rule of non-discrimination, the United Kingdom Delegation, along with the delegations from other European countries, were pleased with this solution. When, however, the proposal was referred to London it became apparent that the United Kingdom Government liked neither the original nor the Geneva basis. The United Kingdom expert was recalled from Havana to London for consultation and no longer was available for participation in the meetings of the Working Party. Direct consultations were then undertaken between London and Washington and it was some little time before the Working Party could proceed with formulating a solution on the basis of the two options. The United Kingdom Government feared that the non-discrimination provision in the Anglo-American Financial Agreement would be interpreted to disqualify the discriminations they then had in force if they exercised the Havana option, whereas from the beginning of the Conference they had maintained that the Geneva option did not give them sufficient freedom for the period of the next four years. They also objected to the dual jurisdiction under the Geneva option whereby the period for discrimination was to be determined by the International Monetary Fund and the scope of discrimination by the International Trade Organization.

63. Agreement on Article 23 eventually was reached by making, under the Geneva option, minor concessions of a technical character to the United Kingdom point of view and by postponing until March 1, 1952, any effective surveillance by the Organization over discriminations. Needless to say, the solution of this question of exceptions to the rule of non-discrimination was reached only in the very last days of the Conference.

64. One of the last acts of the Conference, prior to the signature of the Final Act, was to approve the setting up of an Interim Commission for the purpose of making the necessary preparations for the holding of the first annual Conference (General Assembly) of the International Trade Organization. Certain unsolved questions, such as the relations with the International Court of Justice, the Swiss problem, and the avoiding of overlapping with other intergovernmental organizations concerned with economic development, also had been referred to the Interim Commission. Any country participating in the Conference was given the right of membership on the Interim Commission. All those countries who later signed the Final Act, with the exceptions of Bolivia, Ireland, Portugal and Switzerland, exercised this right. Mr. Max Suetens of Belgium was elected Chairman of the Interim Commission. Its sole task was to elect an Executive Committee of eighteen members composed on the same basis as that provided for the composition of the Executive Board of the Organization. Consequently, the election of the Executive Committee provided a useful test of the somewhat complicated formula agreed upon for the election of the first Executive Board. The formula survived this test with flying colours. Australia, Benelux, Brazil, Canada, China, Colombia, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, El Salvador, France, Greece, India, Italy, Mexico, Norway, the Philippines, the United Kingdom and the United States were elected members of the Executive Committee. The Interim Commission delegated all of its functions to the Executive Committee, which will report to the first annual Conference of the Organization. I was elected Chairman of the Executive Committee and the Vice-Chairmen are Mr. Jean Royer of France, Sir Raghavan Pillai of India, and Mr. Ramon Beteta of Mexico. The next meeting of the Executive Committee will take place on August 25, 1948, at Geneva.

65. This review of the difficult problems that confronted the Conference and of the manner in which they were solved will serve to explain why it was necessary to remain four months in Havana. The Charter that emerged as a result of these lengthy deliberations, while it represents some weakening from the Geneva draft, still maintains as the basic rules for the conduct of international trade those principles which must be respected if the world is to enjoy once more the benefits of multilateral trade. As we have seen, the concessions made at Havana in order to secure a Charter acceptable to the great majority of the countries participating in the Conference did not go very far beyond the concessions made at Geneva in order to smooth the way for the deliberations at Havana. If any harm had been done in the direction of watering down the rules embodied in the original United States proposals, this had been done at Geneva to an even greater extent than at Havana. Nor can we consider the additional concessions granted at Havana to be so serious as to represent "the straws that break the camel's back."

66. The Canadian Delegation, in considering the discharge of its responsibility of recommending to the Canadian Government the acceptance of the Charter emerging at Havana, had decided on the axiom that "no Charter is better than a bad Charter." They came to the conclusion that the Havana Charter is not a bad Charter. Its attainment can be regarded as a magnificent achievement when account is taken of the conditions prevailing at the time it was being framed. These conditions were much worse than those who conceived the original proposals had anticipated they would be, because recovery from the aftermath of war has proved to be slower than even the most pessimistic of prophets had predicted. The Charter is a good Charter in that it is flexible enough to take account of the varying needs of many different countries. It permits the setting up of an International Trade Organization whose eventual success may prove to be because of, rather than in spite of, what now seem to be flaws in the Charter.

67. The setting up of an International Trade Organization is very necessary if we are to have some meeting place where representatives of governments can gather to consider complaints and to endeavour to remove the obstacles impeding the free flow of world trade. Very often at such a meeting place a country pursuing a selfish policy can be shown that such a policy is not in the long-term interest of the country itself. If we lived in a "laissez-faire world" there would be no need for an International Trade Organization. Because we do not live in such a world and because governments are interfering with trade, there is need for an inter-governmental organization to deal with the problems of international trade. The Charter makes possible the setting up of such an organization upon a sound basis. That is the reason why the Canadian Delegation to the United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment recommends to the Canadian Government the acceptance of the Havana Charter and its presentation to Parliament for ratification.

68. Part II of this report† gives a complete analysis of the Havana Charter article by article. This will indicate in greater detail the deviations in that Charter from the Geneva draft. It will also afford more specific information regarding the attitude of the Canadian Delegation on the various issues that arose during the Havana Conference. This analysis has been prepared by those members of the Delegation who participated most actively in the debates on each of the articles of the Charter analyzed. It is hoped that Part II, along with Part I, will provide all the information necessary to indicate the participation of the Canadian Delegation in the Conference and to enable an appraisal to be made of the scope of the Havana Charter.

I have, etc.

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa], September 9, 1948

The Second Session of the Contracting Parties of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade which convened in Geneva on August 16, 1948, has now ended and a communication was received yesterday from Mr. Wilgress advising us of the modifications which have been made to the General Agreement and of the instruments which have been prepared for signature.

There are five instruments which will be open for signature as from early next week as follows:

(a) Protocol of Rectifications to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. This introduces certain minor rectifications principally of a typographical nature to the Schedule of the General Agreement.

(b) Protocol for the Acquisition of Signatories of the Final Act of October 30th, 1947. This document has been prepared pursuant to the request of the Government of Chile for an extension of time in which to sign the Protocol of Provisional Application.

(c) Agreement on Most Favoured Nation Treatment for Areas of Western Germany under Military Occupation.

(d) Protocol modifying Part II and Article 26 of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. This provides for the supersession of certain articles of the Geneva Agreement by the corresponding provisions of the Havana Charter, and in addition provides for certain minor amendments to three articles of the Geneva Agreement.

(e) Protocol modifying Part I and Article 29 of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. This Protocol makes some changes in the text of certain articles of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

A meeting was convened this morning of the officials most familiar with and directly concerned with the International Trade Organization consisting of Messrs. McKinnon, Canadian Tariff Board, Deutsch, Finance, Kemp, Trade and Commerce, Urquhart, National Revenue, and Moran of this Department. The submission from Wilgress was examined in detail and the following recommendations in which I concur were approved unanimously:

(a) That full powers be granted to Mr. Wilgress to sign the Protocol of Rectifications because none of the changes, almost all of which are typographical corrections, have any significance for Canada.

(b) That full powers be granted to Mr. Wilgress to sign the Protocol extending the time for signature of the Protocol of Provisional Application. When the request of the Chilean Government for a further six months to adhere to the General Agreement was submitted to us it was felt that no disadvantages would accrue from granting Chile this additional time and there was the very decided advantage of obtaining the maximum number of countries as signatories. This recommendation was included in the instructions to the Canadian Delegation which were approved by you.

(c) Although the exchange on a reciprocal basis of most-favoured-nation tariff treatment between Canada and Germany is in our interests and we would favour the conclusion of such an agreement it would not be possible for us to sign the agreement as drafted at this latest Geneva meeting of the Contracting Parties. It appears satisfactory in all respects except it states that each of the signatories shall accord most-favoured-nation treatment to the "merchandise trade" of each area. It is explained that the term "merchandise trade" has been used in preference to "products" because the latter term would exclude trade in goods produced elsewhere than in the area concerned. This suggests that we would be required to extend most-favoured-nation treatment to German goods which have entered Germany from some other source. Under existing Canadian legislation it is possible to authorize by Order-in-Council the conclusion of such an agreement. It does raise, however, a question of policy because in all our MFN agreements we have confined the exchange to "goods, the growth, produce or manufacture of" the area concerned. We have enquired of Wilgress the reasons for including in this agreement goods which are not of German origin and have suggested that for our purposes we would prefer in place of the term "merchandise trade" the word "products" or the phrase "goods, the growth, produce or manufacture of." Further consideration will be given to this matter and submission made to you when a reply is received from Geneva.

(d)&(e) The Protocols effecting changes in the text of the articles and providing for the supersession of certain GATT articles by the corresponding provisions of the Havana Charter require detailed study to determine their full implications for Canada and therefore Mr. Wilgress should be authorized to sign these two Protocols ad referendum. Such a procedure is possible under the regulations and a country signing in this manner is permitted to deposit its acceptance of the Protocols up to the 30th November, 1948. When the detailed study by the officials has been concluded a memorandum will be submitted to you for your decision.

Formal full powers for Mr. Wilgress to sign documents (a) and (b) referred to above are being prepared for your signature in the event that you approve these recommendations and will be forwarded to you later today.

Mr. Wilgress has apologized for not having furnished us with copies of the instruments before this date but explained that their final text was available only on September 3rd. As it is possible that signing may take place on Monday September 13th he has requested us to advise him by telegram on September 10th if possible of the decisions made concerning his signing powers. It would be helpful therefore if I could be advised whether you approve these submissions in order that I may send a telegram to Geneva sometime tomorrow.<sup>2</sup>

II. LEGISLATION; GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE AND INTERNATIONAL TRADE ORGANIZATIONS

7. The Minister of Trade and Commerce submitted a recommendation from the Interdepartmental Committee, that the International Trade Organization Charter and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade be submitted to Parliament for approval at the next session.

It was proposed that the Charter and the Agreement be presented in the form of a Bill to be introduced by the Prime Minister, unless he wished to designate another Minister for this purpose.

Major amendments to existing Canadian legislation which would result from Canadian acceptance were at present under detailed consideration by the Department of Justice and the other departments concerned. Some goods would have to be removed from Schedule "C" of the Customs Tariff (Prohibited Goods). Among the items involved were used automobiles, used aircraft, and oleomargarine. These goods were not bound at Geneva and could be subject to any tariff level. The present 10% discount in respect of goods imported into Canada under the British preferential tariff would have to be discontinued where the B.P. rate was the same as the M.F.N. rate. On one item, tin plate, the B.P. rate would have to be increased from 3 to 15%. This modification had been necessary in order to obtain agreement with the United States at Geneva, and the United Kingdom had raised no objection.

A memorandum had been circulated.

(CCETP Document 21, December 22, 1948).†

8. The Committee, after discussion, agreed to recommend to the Cabinet that the necessary legislation be proceeded with at the coming session of Parliament, and that a draft Bill be prepared accordingly.

III. GATT AND ITO CHARTER; EXERCISE OF OPTION

9. The Chairman reported that a memorandum had been received from the Interdepartmental Committee regarding the selection of the "Geneva" or "Havana" options governing the use of import discriminations. It was recommended that Canada should choose the "Geneva" option and should notify the responsible authorities that it desired to be governed, on and after January 1, 1949, by the provisions of Annex "J" of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and, insofar as the Interim Commission of the International Trade Agreement was concerned, by Annex "K" of the Havana Charter.

A memorandum had been circulated.

10. Mr. Deutsch explained that, under the "Geneva" option, Canada would have greater latitude in regard to any discrimination which might become necessary; the "Havana" option would be more restrictive for Canada.

11. The Committee approved the recommendation of the Interdepartmental Committee, and agreed that action be taken accordingly.

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

London, January 23, 1948

Dear Mike [Pearson],

Yesterday evening I entertained the Chancellor of the Exchequer to dinner as the result of a suggestion which he had made through Sir Percivale Liesching that it would be useful to have a general discussion about the problems of Anglo-Canadian finance. The Chancellor had also suggested indirectly those whom he would like invited — Sir Edward Bridges and Sir Wilfrid Eady of the Treasury, Sir John Henry Woods, Permanent Secretary at the Board of Trade, Mr. T.L.

Rowan, Chairman of the Overseas Negotiations Committee, and Sir Percivale Liesching. Unfortunately neither Bridges nor Eady could accept and I invited Mr. R.W.B. Clarke of the Treasury instead, so that the company consisted of Cripps, Woods, Liesching, Rowan, Clarke, Syers of the Commonwealth Relations Office and LePan.<sup>3</sup>

2. As soon as Cripps joined the company, he plunged into an urgent exposition of his concern. What worried him most was that there seemed to be no available device lying ready to be pressed into use at the end of this three-month period. He said that he recognized that the Canadian Government had shown great goodwill during the negotiations last December and had stretched themselves to the uttermost to find a solution. The Government here, he thought we would admit, had also placed themselves under real strain in order to come to an agreement. But what was to happen at the end of March? The United Kingdom could not continue to make United States dollars available to us at the same rate as they were doing at present. Even since the agreement had been concluded the seriousness of the deficit with Canada had been increasing. "Some of our friends," he said, "seem to find it impossible to be continent." By this I assume he meant that some of the other sterling area countries were not managing to limit their dollar deficits to the amounts which had been forecast when Liesching was in Ottawa. On the other hand, he realized that the Canadian Government very probably would also feel — and with reason — that they could not continue the present arrangement. By the end of March the Canadian Government, he imagined, might be unable to extend further credit; and the United Kingdom Government would be unable to continue their rate of payments of United States dollars. With the best will in the world, under those circumstances, it would be impossible to reach a new financial agreement. It would be quite useless to send out anyone to Ottawa or even to suggest that negotiations should take place. He and his advisers had been casting about desperately for some device which could provide a way around the impasse. They had not been able to light on any new ideas and he himself now felt sure that there were none, that there were no keys to unlock this intractable problem, at least so long as it was considered in isolation. The only creative approach, he thought, lay in changing the terms of the problem. It had been considered hitherto chiefly as a difficulty between Canada and the United Kingdom. He thought that now it would have to be transposed and considered as a problem affecting Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States. It was clear that the problem would temporarily disappear, or at least be made much less acute, once the Marshall Plan was in full operation. The brighter prospect in the future, however, would not of itself suffice to ease the position for the five or six months after the end of March, unless positive action were taken and concrete means were devised of bringing in the expectation of future favours to redress the present difficulties.

3. This exposition (in which I said that I generally concurred) led to an account of the prospects of the Marshall Plan as they now appear to the Government here. Material for this appreciation was provided by a number of individuals, notably by

D.V. LePan, First Secretary, High Commission in United Kingdom.

“Otto” [R.W.B.] Clarke, as well as by the Chancellor. But I think I may be able to give you a clearer idea of how the Marshall Plan now appears to the United Kingdom Government if I omit any reference to the contributors to the discussion and instead arrange the conclusions which emerged and which had general approval in a more summary form.

(a) It is not expected that effective aid will be forthcoming under the Marshall Plan until September at the earliest. The Foreign Office believe that the appropriations for the European Reconstruction Programme may be voted by June; but even this is held to be an optimistic forecast. After funds have been appropriated, however, considerable time must elapse before bilateral agreements can be made with the sixteen countries, an administrator appointed and his organization set up, and before the receiving Governments are actually in a position to procure needed supplies from the Western Hemisphere.

(b) Aid will be extended in the form of loans and gifts either of dollars or commodities to make possible an agreed import programme. If the receiving country decides that it does not wish to accept some of the commodities offered, then aid will be reduced by that amount. For example, if the United Kingdom does not wish to accept as large a quantity of tobacco as the United States Government offers, they will not be able to obtain the equivalent value in other commodities, of which in their view they have greater need. Sir Stafford said that the experience of the French under the Interim Aid appropriation had been instructive on this point. As a result of the increase in British coal production, the National Coal Board had been able to offer the French substantial quantities and the French had wished to accept these in place of American coal, expecting that they could obtain United States wheat in lieu. They had not been able to secure sanction, however, from the State Department for this switch. Sir Stafford thought that the accounting system in the United States Treasury and the influence of pressure groups would operate to prevent any such alterations in the European Reconstruction Programme as well as in the provision of Interim Aid.

(c) Congress will almost certainly make some cut in the sum of $6,800,000,000 for which the State Department is asking to meet the requirements of Western Europe for the fifteen months from the end of March. Since there are no pressure groups inside the United States to push the claims of off-shore purchasing, this end of the programme is likely to be the first to be scamped as the result of any cut in the appropriation. In fact, the United Kingdom may well find itself doubly squeezed. They would suffer from any reduction in the sums available for off-shore purchase and also from pressure on them to accept substantial quantities of commodities like tobacco, oranges and dried fruits, which have not a high priority in their own import programme.

(d) The Interim Aid for France will be completely exhausted, according to M. Mayer, on the 10th of February. In addition, Italy will be in almost as perilous a situation by that time. Consequently, some thought is now being given in the State Department to the possibility that there may have to be a fresh instalment of Interim Aid in order to provide a firm basis for the European Reconstruction Programme when it comes along.

4. Sir Stafford said that he thought the State Department were preoccupied with the pressing needs of France and Italy, and he added that in his opinion that present concentration of interest was right and proper. Obviously he had been deeply disturbed by what he had heard from M. Mayer, who was in London last Friday and whom he is seeing again in Paris today. M. Mayer had said that, according to close estimates made by the French Ministry of Finance, France's resources for financing essential imports would be entirely exhausted by the 10th of February. I imagine that the reason why interim aid has been eaten up so much more quickly than was expected is to be found in the loss of production caused by the Communist-inspired strikes of last November. The Chancellor felt that the present French Government was extremely insecure and he did not know what would follow if they fell from office. All the prognostics were very gloomy. If the Marshall Plan were to become a reality, the State Department could not afford to let either France or Italy collapse and their preoccupation with these two countries was therefore justified — or at least up to a point. They tended perhaps to take the United Kingdom's stability for granted. He did not complain of that. The United Kingdom was, as it were, the anchor of the Marshall Plan in Europe and, although in the long run its requirements must be met if the Plan were to be a success, its immediate needs were not so absolutely imperative as those of some other countries. The problem of the United Kingdom's deficit with Canada, however, was a sharp exception from that general rule. A solution for that must somehow be found, and found quickly. And here the assistance of the United States would be necessary.

5. The Chancellor and his advisers doubted whether even yet the seriousness of the problem of financing the United Kingdom's imports from Canada was fully realized in Washington. In the past they had too often made the mistake of not informing the Administration in good time of the difficulties they were facing. For example, when Mr. Clayton<sup>4</sup> was told last summer of the gravity of the exchange crisis which was then blowing up and which resulted only a few weeks later in the suspension of convertibility, he expostulated with them, saying that he wished he had known of the situation much earlier. Sir Stafford thought that the Canadian and United Kingdom Governments should take concerted action as quickly as possible to let the Administration know the acuteness of the difficulty. As he put it, it was necessary not only to tell the Americans, "but to tell all the right Americans." The problem should be broadened without delay and put on a triangular basis, and the Americans should be given as much time as possible to think of possible remedies and expedients. In an impasse of this sort it was necessary to look for a deus ex machina. In this case the only outside beneficent force which could intervene was the United States.

6. There was no very precise view of what form American action could take. It was frankly recognized that the existing lending capacities of the Administration were exhausted. Sir Stafford said that last year he had urged on Mr. Douglas the importance of replenishing the credit resources of the Export-Import Bank. He had even explored with the Ambassador the possibility that some of the United Kingdom's investments in the United States might be applied to this end. I am not sure that I fully grasped the scheme which he lightly touched on; but, unless I am mistaken, it was a plan for transferring the United Kingdom holdings which have been pledged against the R.F.C. loan to the Export-Import Bank and using them as collateral for additional credit. In any case, none of these schemes had proved acceptable and the Administration was now left without immediately available credit facilities and therefore found itself with limited room for manoeuvre.

7. What Sir Stafford was hoping for as the consequence of an approach by the Canadian and United Kingdom Governments was an informal commitment on the part of the Administration regarding the use to be made of Marshall aid for financing the United Kingdom's purchases in Canada, which would allow the United Kingdom to take some large risks before the Marshall Plan came into effect, perhaps in September. Such an informal commitment would involve an agreement with the Administration as to how much of the Marshall aid earmarked for the United Kingdom could be used in Canada. It would also involve permission to use moneys appropriated by Congress in June for the Marshall Plan to finance the deficit with Canada from the end of March. This would mean in a sense ante-dating the financial aid; but Sir Stafford did not think this was an insuperable difficulty, since, according to the State Department's plan, the first instalment of Marshall aid had been intended to cover the recipients' deficits from the 1st of April, 1948, until the 30th of June, 1949. Perhaps the crucial point would be to obtain the Administration's consent to use some of the Marshall dollars to replenish the United Kingdom's reserves by the amount they might have to be run down to cover the deficit with Canada for five or six months from the 1st of April. The Chancellor did not know whether there was any chance of the Administration agreeing to an informal commitment of this sort, and of course the United Kingdom Government would have to wait until a reply had been received from Washington before it could decide whether there was a sufficiently firm basis for taking this final risk with its last reserves. However, he felt considerable confidence that, if the Americans were made fully aware of the gravity and urgency of the problem, they could be relied on to respond with practical help. Although for the most part the United Kingdom's needs could be left until more pressing problems had been attended to, this particular difficulty of the deficit with Canada brooked no delay if the United Kingdom were to be kept in a position where it could continue to be an asset to the Marshall Plan and to the United States.

8. Sir Stafford hoped that the Canadian Government would agree that such a concerted approach to the United States would be desirable. The method of the approach would obviously have to be worked out with great care beforehand. And for that reason he strongly urged that you yourself should come to London for discussions. He thought that it was of the greatest importance that someone in Ottawa who was fully acquainted with the most recent Canadian scene and who was aware of the political as well as the economic considerations which this question inevitably raised should give them the benefit of his advice and in turn be able to sample at first hand the present European atmosphere. The Marshall Plan essentially was a plan for reconstructing Europe, and the Foreign Secretary only that afternoon had committed the United Kingdom more firmly than ever before to a European partnership. It was for that reason particularly that he suggested that in the initial stages of such an initiative, while it was being prepared for consideration by ministers here and in Ottawa you should be present in London, even if only for a few days.

9. Throughout this letter I have confined myself to recounting as fully as possible Sir Stafford's exposition of the situation and his proposals as they gradually took shape in the course of a round-table discussion. I have done so because in broad outline at least they strike me as sensible. As you know, I have been very worried from this end over what is to happen when the present financial arrangements come to an end in a little more than two months' time, and I have been baffled to suggest any way around the difficulty. This suggestion by the Chancellor has the advantage that it starts with a plain recognition of the facts of Anglo-Canadian economic relations and looks for relief from them in the only quarter from which aid can possibly come in time. No one can be sure, of course, that such a concerted approach to the United States would be successful. But I am convinced that it should be tried. It is for that reason that I have reported what the Chancellor had in mind as fully and sympathetically as possible and that I hope that the Prime Minister and Mr. St. Laurent may look favourably on the suggestion that you yourself should try to come to London to explore it further.<sup>5</sup>

Yours sincerely,
N.A. ROBERTSON

<sup>5</sup> Le 27 janvier, Pearson envoya une copie de cette lettre à Saint-Laurent qui écrivit dans une note de couverture :

On January 27, Pearson forwarded a copy of this letter to St. Laurent who minuted on the covering memorandum:

I am not convinced the Chancellor is approaching this problem from the angle from which I view it. They have reserves which they must husband for things which are indispensable. But I look upon food from us as such. Some they could perhaps do without but they are getting it for less than the saving on their wheat which they must have, and which if they do not carry out their contracts with us, will have to be paid for out of the same reserves. The matter of safeguarding their reserves is a matter for them to discuss with Washington and I do not like the idea of having us join with them as supplicants for the replenishing of their reserves. TELEGRAM 166

Following for Robertson from Pearson, Begins: Thank you for your important letter of January 23rd which Mackenzie, Clark, Towers, Moran and I discussed informally on Saturday. Cripps' analysis of situation and suggestions for meeting it will, I hope, be considered by Ministers later this week and I will report the results to you. Meanwhile, the preliminary view of above officials is that it might not, repeat not, be in best interests of either United Kingdom or Canada if we made a joint approach now to U.S.A. regarding our difficulties. We agree, of course, that there is a close relationship between our two problems and that the key to their solution lies in Washington, but we are doubtful about the wisdom of taking our own problem to Washington as an appendage to or as the main reason for the U.K. problem. You know, of course, the traditional American suspicion of Commonwealth "ganging up" tactics even when there is no real ground for such suspicion. At the same time, we naturally wish to keep in the closest possible touch with the British in these matters. Indeed we must do so. For one thing we don't want them to exaggerate or inadvertently misrepresent to the Americans either our difficulties or their relationship to their own difficulties.

In any event, it would seem that Cripps' wise insistence on the necessity for emphasizing to the U.S. Administration the acuteness of the emergency is met — at least to some extent — by the U.K. message to the U.S.A. contained in your telegram No. 113 of January 30th.† That, and the facts in your other recent telegrams on this matter, give a clear if depressing analysis of the situation. Incidentally, the U.K. forecasts of the E.R.P. timetable contained in your letter seem a shade too pessimistic to some people here, though personally I agree with them.

We may suggest to the Government, for their consideration, a Ministerial visit to Washington by Mr. St. Laurent or Mr. Abbott or both, in order to discuss, on the highest level, the gravity of the United Kingdom and western European financial picture. That picture would, of course, be even worse if we were forced, for financial reasons, to divert food products to the United States market. In this connection, any amendment to E.R.P. which would substantially modify its off-shore purchases provisions would, of course, have a bearing on such diversion and would be a damaging blow to our ability to assist in realizing E.R.P. objectives.

If our Government agree that some such visit to Washington would be useful, the consequent discussions could, I think, accomplish many of the things which Cripps suggests might be done jointly. But two separate approaches, rather than one joint one would, I think, be better for the purpose.

Those two approaches would, of course, be in a sense parallel, and might indeed converge, after the talks begin, if the request for this came from the Americans. Indeed, I personally see some advantage in this, more I believe than others here do. For one thing, it might prevent a repetition of Eady tactics of recent unhappy memory.

My own personal suggestion then would be this. Separate approaches to Washington as soon as possible. Close touch between London and Ottawa in respect of them but no special visit to London which might be misinterpreted in Washington and which in any event under this procedure might not be necessary. After the bilateral talks began in Washington, the Americans themselves, once they appreciated the inter-relationship of the U.S.-U.K. and U.S.-Canadian problems might suggest combined discussions.

What do you think of this? Ends.

UNITED KINGDOM DOLLAR SITUATION — EFFECT ON CANADA

The U.K. financial picture is even gloomier now than that painted for us by the U.K. delegates during the December food talks which we thought then had been somewhat exaggerated — possibly for bargaining purposes.

The difficulties of the situation are increased by uncertainties and delays in Washington regarding ERP and by the recent devaluation policies of the French government, which may force similar policies on other European governments and hence add to the U.K. financial problem.

All this is, of course, of great importance to us and may affect our whole economic situation. It will certainly affect our trade and financial relationships with the U.K. and U.S.A. The government will, no doubt, wish to give the matter careful consideration, especially in its bearing on the position of the U.K. food contracts after March 31, 1948.

The U.K. position on January 1, 1948, as ascertained from recent messages from London, was as follows:

U.S. Dollar and Gold Holdings
(including South African gold

Loan of 80 millions which is not yet approved by the S.A. Parl.)

678 million pounds

Estimated Drain in first half of 1948 (taking full credit for SA loan but leaving out of account further drawings on the International Monetary Fund which might amount to 20 million pounds)	225 million pounds

Reserves as of June 30th 1948	453 million pounds
Estimated drain for rest of 1948, rather less than	200 million pounds

Without ERP help, therefore, the U.K. position will be desperate at the end of the year.

The position may even be worse than estimated above because

- (1) Exports are running at a substantially lower rate than estimated;
- (2) The net item for invisibles in 1948 will, on a recent analysis of the 1947 figures, be less than estimated;
- (3) Cost of imports from countries outside the Western Hemisphere is increasing.

From the above, the vital importance to the U.K. — and to us — of not only ERP, but of an early ERP is clear.

What is the situation in respect of ERP?

The U.S.A. State Department have told U.K. government to plan on the assumption that ERP assistance would be available after July 1st, 1948, though the first 15 month period is still to begin on April 1st, 1948.

The U.K. consider it of vital importance to use ERP help somehow to cover the drain during this April — July period. If they were sure of this, they would not worry so much about going below the 500 million level of reserves. But they are not sure of it. In fact, their view is that ERP aid will not now be available until September at the earliest; that it will have limiting strings attached to it; that the Administration figure may be cut by Congress, the first cut being in the amount set aside for “off-shore” purchases. The British also think that the U.S. will feel, and not unnaturally, that the most pressing problem under ERP will be to satisfy the needs of France, Italy; to keep them from collapse. The relative stability of the U.K. will be more or less taken for granted.

From the above, two dangers are apparent:

- (a) Delays in bringing ERP into effect may be fatal to the whole programme. Such delays can be met only by some form of interim aid.
- (b) The U.K. position may be not sufficiently appreciated by the Americans so preoccupied will they be with the difficulties of France and Italy.

The U.K. point out to us that we are almost as interested as they are in this second danger (and indeed in the first) because of the difficulty after March 31st of financing U.K. Food purchases in Canada except through ERP aid. If this aid is not effective until September 1st, then, it is stated, positive action must be taken and concrete means devised to bring in the expectation of future favours to redress present difficulties.

The U.K. think that this might be done:

- (1) by an informal commitment on the part of the U.S.A. that X amount of ERP aid, earmarked for the U.K., could be used in Canada;

(2) that money appropriated by Congress by June, 1948, could be used to finance the U.K. deficit with Canada as from March 31st. This is in a sense antedating financial aid for a special purpose.

Sir Stafford Cripps feels that this is the only way of meeting the U.K.-Canadian situation and that if the Americans were made fully aware of the gravity and urgency of that situation they would respond with practical help along the above lines.

To drive home the urgency of this problem to Washington, Sir Stafford suggests a joint and concerted approach by our two governments to the U.S.A. and, to facilitate that, a visit to London immediately by a Canadian official who could work out the details with Whitehall. This suggestion was put in a personal letter from Norman Robertson, to which a personal and preliminary reply has been sent and is attached to this memorandum.

What will happen if the U.K. do not get some assurance from the U.S.A. of early and adequate assistance?

They have told us that in this contingency they might have to take the following protective measures:

(1) Reduction of certain rations and maintenance of others, which it had been hoped to increase, at the present low levels.

(2) Diversion of coal exports from Europe to hard currency countries like Argentina.

(3) Reduction of purchases of raw materials, with harmful results to employment and recovery in the U.K.

This seems to be the picture, though very inadequately sketched. I am sure that you will agree that it is a sombre one, and throws its shadows directly over our own country.

TELEGRAM 133

London, February 4, 1948

TOP SECRET. MOST IMMEDIATE.

Following for Pearson from Robertson, Begins: Reference your telegram No. 166 of February 2nd.

I have had a private word with Cripps and Liesching this morning on the subject of your message. The former feels it is important that United Kingdom and Canada should be very clear in their own minds as to what action they wish United States to take before any joint or separate démarche is made to Washington. There would be little value in bringing our troubles there if we had not thought out first the measures which United States could reasonably be asked to take to help solve them. For this reason he renewed his hope that you might be able to come to London, or failing that, that I might return for a quick visit to Ottawa.

2. If at all possible, United Kingdom do not wish to send Minister to Washington while the ERP programme is before Congress. This is in line with the advice they have always received from Lewis Douglas, and is confirmed by their feeling that the continental countries would be upset by anything that looked like a special British effort to get in front of the queue. If, therefore, there were to be separate approaches to Washington by Canada and United Kingdom in the near future, the latter would almost certainly have to leave the presentation of their position to Inverchapel and Gordon Munro.

3. In the meantime the Chancellor is worried about the passage of time. He feels the problem must be solved during this month. He is sensitive to American criticism that matters in the past have been allowed to drag until it was too late to mend them before American advice and assistance was asked for. With these considerations in mind, he wondered whether our Government might wish to authorize Wrong to tell Lovett exactly where matters stood. He might, for example, say something like this: Canada and United Kingdom had both been giving a good deal of anxious thought to the situation that would develop after March 31st, we did not see how it could be met without positive United States cooperation, we had been considering both what we would have to ask for and how we should ask for it, the issues involved seemed to both countries of critical importance to the success of the ERP programme, we did not want to prejudice those chances by an approach that could be construed from one angle as a Commonwealth ganging up, from another as an attempt at outside pressure during the course of a great Congressional debate, or from a third as an attempt on the part of United Kingdom to claim a priority for her needs above those of the European countries with which she was associated in the 16 Nations Conference.

4. Such a preliminary approach from us, following on United Kingdom memo quoted in my telegram No. 113 of January 30th,† might get the Americans thinking at once about the implications of the Canada-United Kingdom exchange position which Deutsch, I believe, explained to Nitze after the conclusion of the Liesching talks, prepare them for a visit such as Mr. St. Laurent or Mr. Abbott might make, and give them the opportunity of suggesting the kind of consultations which would cause them the least embarrassment and promise the best hope of success. Ends.

Washington, February 5, 1948

Following for Pearson from Wrong, Begins: With reference to your messages EX-281 of January 30th† and EX-329 of February 4th,† and your letter of January 29th† covering Robertson's letter to you of January 23rd, I have the following observations to offer:

(I) They seem to me to be taking in London too gloomy a view of the timetable for the passage of E.R.P. I asked Lovett yesterday when he expected the Bill to be adopted. He is usually not over-optimistic about Congressional behaviour, but to my surprise he answered that in his judgment it would be through by March 15th. This refers to the Authorization Bill which includes authority for the R.F.C. to advance funds (probably $500 millions) to start the programme before the Appropriation Bill is passed. Lovett thought that the Appropriation Bill might be through by the end of April. Vandenberg yesterday predicted that action would be completed in Congress on the main Bill by April 1st. Of course there are many who disagree, and the House Committee is lagging behind the Senate Committee, which is expected to report the measure in about two weeks.

(II) If things move as fast as Lovett and Vandenberg expect, the central cause of Cripps' anxiety will be removed, since there would be at worst only a small gap between the termination of our financial agreement with the United Kingdom and the beginning of Marshall Plan aid.

(III) The administration is still pressing strongly for the full sum of $6.8 billions for the first fifteen months, although the possibility of a cut in this remains. It is certainly their intention that the plan should take effect from April 1st; and I think it more likely than not that funds would later be made available to reimburse the cost of approved programmes from that date even if the passage of the Bill were delayed. In this connection, it is of interest that yesterday the French Ambassador received $31.4 millions from the State Department described by the New York Times as "a refund to France for the money that Government had spent in cash for supplies covered by the Interim Aid Law but before it became effective."

(IV) Should the appropriation be cut, I doubt that the reduction would be applied wholly or mainly to sums proposed for purchases outside the United States, as is suggested in paragraph 3(c) of Robertson's letter. Complaints about short supplies in the United States and about pressure on domestic prices of exports are currently more appealing to Congress and the public than the normal incentives to "Buy American".

(V) With regard to France, I asked Bonnet last night what they would do when Interim Aid ran out in February. He said that there would have to be a further Interim Aid appropriation and seemed fairly confident of getting it, although he exuded gloom about the Marshall Plan timetable and possible cuts in the funds. I have no confirmation of the prospects of more Interim Aid.

(VI) With regard to British fears about the inflexibility of E.R.P. (see paragraph 3(b) of Robertson's letter), I think Cripps may have drawn too gloomy conclusions from the French experience in failing to get permission to substitute wheat for some coal under Interim Aid, although I know nothing about this particular instance. Wheat exports have been fully programmed in advance and an increase in United States supplies to France may have been ruled out on that ground alone. The British surely have no difficulty in disposing of their export coal to other European countries, which need both the British and the United States exports.

2. I share your doubts about the wisdom of a concerted approach here by the United Kingdom and ourselves at the present time. Such an approach may prove desirable if in three weeks or so it looks as though E.R.P. legislation will be delayed into May or June. It will probably turn out in any event that the British will have to run down their exchange reserves somewhat before the programme gets started. Alternatively we may be pressed to assist them, even by drawing on the Export-Import Bank credit for this purpose. The availability of this credit is one of the reasons why I hesitate to recommend a joint approach, as an easy answer might turn out to be that we should use part of it to help the United Kingdom meet their Canadian deficit, on the understanding that the State Department would endeavour to see that the legislation permitted a refund to us by the United Kingdom later on.

3. As you suggest in your telegram No. 166 of February 2nd to Robertson, the United Kingdom reply to the United States Embassy's aide-mémoire places the United Kingdom — Canadian financial problem squarely before the State Department, and reduces whatever force there was in the suggestion of a joint approach. I said to Lovett yesterday that I might want to discuss the matter with him, but did not go into any details. Most of the right people in the Departments here have a fairly good idea of the financial relations between Canada and the United Kingdom.

4. Some months ago I reported that in London they appeared to me to be taking altogether too optimistic a view of the difficulties in the way of E.R.P. Then in December they sought to disregard E.R.P. possibilities entirely during their negotiations in Ottawa. Now it seems that, while counting on E.R.P. aid, they have become too gloomy about the date of adoption and the length of time it will take to get the programme started after adoption. There are still plenty of obstacles, but opinion has solidified in favour of the general programme to a degree that seemed unlikely four or five months ago.

5. I shall send a further message after talking with Munro, who is laid up today. He is leaving for London on February 12th, and I hope to get from him the line which he will take in discussions there.

6. What do you think of suggesting to London that they might approach the United States on behalf of the Paris Committee rather than on their own behalf or because specifically of the financial problem with Canada? All the participating countries will be affected if the programme is not dated to begin from April 1st should the appropriation be adopted considerably later. All will be concerned by the problem troubling Cripps, whether expenditures can be refunded for commodities included in the programme which they may have to pay for either because Congress fails to meet the target date or because the administrative machinery is slow in getting under way. Ends.

U.K.-U.S.-CANADIAN FINANCIAL DISCUSSIONS

I sent you a memorandum on this subject on February 3rd, giving the picture in respect of the United Kingdom dollar situation, and its effect on messages we had received. This memorandum, and certain points arising out of it, were discussed at the External Trade Advisory Committee meeting Thursday<sup>6</sup> when the following conclusions were reached:

It is quite clear that the drain on United Kingdom reserves is serious, and that their situation will become impossible without timely ERP assistance. It is equally clear that the deterioration of the U.K. position has a very important bearing on our own economic position. We are, of course, not in the same situation as the U.K., for developments which would be disastrous for them would mean, in our case merely a readjustment of our trade and economic relationships. This would be, of course, very serious and of far reaching importance, but it is not a matter of life and death. As a result of this difference in our positions — and there are other differences — we should be careful in not assuming that the problem which the U.K. wish to bring to the attention of the U.S. is a British-Canadian problem. There are two separate problems, even though they are related, and this fact, to some extent, determines the procedure which we should follow in meeting them.

The Committee felt Thursday that, while it was essential that we should keep in close touch with the British in these dollar questions, this did not necessarily mean that a joint approach to the U.S. on this matter was desirable. The reasons for this conclusion were given to you in the earlier memorandum, and our meeting Thursday felt that those reasons were valid.

It was also felt that a separate Canadian approach to Washington would be useful in not only calling the attention of the Americans to our own difficulties, but in emphasizing that those difficulties affect our relationship to the British European problem, and that there is only one satisfactory method of solving this whole position, through timely and adequate ERP action. It had been thought earlier that a mission to Washington, on a high political level, at an early date, would be useful, to go over the whole Canada-U.S. financial picture. The Government may, of course, desire to take this course, but we felt yesterday that such a mission would, in the circumstances, be somewhat premature, and might cause undesirable speculation. We felt that it would probably be better, at this stage, if no special approach were made from Ottawa to the U.S. Government, but that our Ambassador in Washington might be instructed to take this matter up with the Secretary of State, using for that purpose a brief which would be very carefully prepared in Ottawa. Sir Stafford Cripps has already indicated to our High Commissioner in London that a Canadian approach of this kind, to tell the State Department exactly where matters stood, might be of very considerable value to the U.K., as well as to ourselves. What he had in mind was that Wrong, in putting the Canadian position to the Americans would be able to touch on the U.K. difficulty as well. This he could do, of course, providing it were merely an incidental part of his Canadian message. It would have this value that it might help to ensure that there would be no misunderstanding in the minds of the Americans that our situation was either the cause of, or too closely connected with, U.K. difficulties.

If, on the other hand, the U.K. made their own démarche at Washington prior to ours, they might be tempted to put undue emphasis on the Canadian dollar difficulties as an important contributing factor to their own.

Telegram No. 133 of February 4th from the High Commissioner in London to me, a copy of which is attached for convenience, gives some interesting views from London on this procedural aspect of the question.

It had previously been suggested that a Canadian official might fly to London to discuss matters with the U.K. authorities, prior to any approach by either Government to Washington. We felt at our meeting that this was unnecessary and possibly undesirable. However, we did think it would be most useful if our High Commissioner in London could fly to Ottawa for a few days, so that in any discussion in which he participates in London he will have the latest Canadian information and be made aware of the Canadian position in a way which cannot be so effectively done by correspondence. If Mr. Robertson could be authorized to return, at once, Mr. Wrong could come to Ottawa for a day or so from Washington, and they could join the Canadian officials concerned in discussing the whole position, with a view to making a report to the Government. It might also be useful if Sir Alexander Clutterbuck, who is returning to London shortly for consultations, could sit in on some of these discussions, so that he also would be made familiar with the Canadian viewpoint.

P.S. After your telephone message yesterday afternoon, I telephoned Mr. Robertson in London and asked him to come by the first available plane. He should be here early next week.

Following for Pearson from Wrong, Begins: In continuation of my message WA-399 of February 5th about financial problems between the United Kingdom, Canada and the United States, after further reflection on Robertson's reports from London I have come to the following conclusions:

(a) Cripps and his advisers tend to over-rate the importance of the timing and method of an approach to the United States authorities on the Canadian-United Kingdom position. If it were possible to secure a binding promise from the Administration here on the refunding of United Kingdom expenditures for E.R.P. supplies from Canada incurred between April 1st and the effective beginning of E.R.P., and also on the amount of E.R.P. dollars which the United Kingdom might spend in Canada in the first 15 months, the timing and method of the approach would be of great importance. All that the Administration can now undertake is to use their best endeavours to persuade Congress that the legislation should be adopted in a form satisfactory to the United Kingdom on these points. In London they still do not fully appreciate the difference between the value of assurances from a Government with a Cabinet system and those that can be given here, especially those given when Congress is controlled by another party.

(b) It is likely that they could get an assurance on the first point (i.e. that relating to refunding) without much difficulty, for what it is worth. On the second point (the amount of dollars available for Canadian purchases) the answer must depend on the size of the appropriation and on the decision of the Administrator when appointed; and the Administration here would be loathe to suggest a specific sum.

2. Probably our end of the matter can be handled effectively here by my seeing Lovett, perhaps accompanied by someone from Ottawa who has the latest information about our exchange position and our estimated deficit in United States dollars for the balance of the year. This could be followed by a detailed discussion with the Interdepartmental Group under Tyler Wood which considers Canadian problems. The British could make their case by parallel methods. Munro is advising London against a concerted approach.

3. It looks now as though there would be some compromise over the E.R.P. funds to be appropriated. A possible compromise is that the Authorization Bill should include the $6.8 billions for the first 15 months but that the Appropriation Bill should only contain $4.5 or $5 billions, with the understanding that the Administrator would come to the new Congress for further funds in January, 1949, if it was then apparent that a larger sum would be needed before the end of the fiscal year.

The introduction of a Chinese aid programme has complicated the situation and reduced the chances that the full $6.8 billions will be voted. Ends.

Washington, February 12, 1948

TOP SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Following for Pearson from Wrong, Begins: With reference to my message WA-425 of February 9th, I secured last night some further information about ERP prospects in Congress which you may think it well to circulate in Ottawa to those who will be taking part in the meetings next week which will be attended by Robertson and myself. This information comes from an authoritative source in the Administration who asked me not to use his name. He is very closely in touch with the thinking in Congress.

2. He considers Lovett's estimate that the Authorization Bill should be passed by March 15th is a little too optimistic, but believes it can become law by April 1st. Efforts are now concentrated on getting a workable bill before the Senate, and the Committee draft is nearly complete. Vandenberg is standing firm that the Bill should authorize the expenditure of the full $6.8 billions sought by the Administration during the first 15 months of the program from April 1st. Vandenberg is ready to compromise on non-essentials, but does not intend to yield on what he regards as essential to make the program work.

3. My informant considers that the actual appropriation, however, will fall short of the $6.8 billions. What is most likely to happen, according to him, is that the sum of $4.5 billions will be appropriated to cover the period April 1st, 1948, to March 31st, 1949. If the $6.8 billions for 15 months was reduced to fit a 12-month period, the total would be $5.44 billions; expenditures, however, would probably be higher in the last three months, so that the actual cut suggested seems somewhat less than $940 millions. Later he said that the initial appropriation might be $5 billions. The suggestion is that appropriations for later years should not be voted on the basis of fiscal years, but for years beginning on April 1st, so that the 1949-50 vote would be considered immediately the new Congress convenes in January, 1949. Senator Bridges, Chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, is understood not to be opposed to a plan on these lines, and to be disinclined to yield to more drastic reductions which may be approved by the House.

4. Up to the last few days, the off-shore purchase aspect of the program had lost none of its popularity in Congress. The break in commodity prices, however, unless checked very soon, may have some effect on these provisions of the Bill.

5. I raised the question of the possible refund to the United Kingdom and other countries of expenditures for ERP supplies incurred between April 1st and the effective beginning of the program. I received a curious answer, which I do not profess to understand. It was that under the rules laid down by the Bureau of the Budget such refunds would be possible provided that the total amounted to more (repeat more) than $600 millions. I am trying to find out what this means. In addition, it is contemplated that after the Authorization Bill is passed, payment should be promptly undertaken for existing approved contracts, and the United Kingdom food contracts with Canada (or the more important ones, such as the wheat contract) would almost certainly be eligible. Such payments could be made even before the individual agreements with recipient countries have been negotiated. In short, the Administration and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, at any rate, are conscious of the dangers of a long gap before the dollars begin to flow and expect to find ways of reducing it. Payment for new projects, however, may be subject to considerable delay, since they could not be undertaken until the administration of ERP was set up and the agreements with participating countries concluded. I think that most of our exports to the United Kingdom and other participating countries are covered by contracts which might be eligible for prompt approval. Ends.

*Procès-verbal de la réunion du Comité du Cabinet

Minutes of Meeting of Cabinet Committee on External Trade Policy

Ottawa, February 17, 1948

A meeting of the Cabinet Committee on External Trade Policy was held in the Privy Council Chamber on Tuesday, February 17, 1948, at 11:30 a.m.

Present:

The Secretary of State for External Affairs, (Mr. St. Laurent), in the Chair,
The Minister of Reconstruction and Supply and Trade and Commerce, (Mr. Howe),
The Minister of Agriculture, (Mr. Gardiner),
The Minister of Finance, (Mr. Abbott),
The Minister of National Revenue, (Dr. McCann).

Also present:

The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson)
The High Commissioner for Canada in the United Kingdom (Mr. Robertson)
The Canadian Ambassador to the United States, (Mr. Wrong),
The Secretary to the Cabinet, (Mr. Heeney),
The Deputy Minister of Finance, (Dr. Clark),
The Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, (Mr. Mackenzie),
The Deputy Minister of National Revenue, (Mr. Sim),
The Deputy Governor of the Bank of Canada, (Mr. Gordon)
The Secretary (Mr. Baldwin), Privy Council Office.

1. The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs on the invitation of the Chairman, reported that the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy had discussed the Canadian position in regard to the European Recovery Programme and the continuation of U.K. purchases in Canada during 1948 and had subsequently met with U.K. representatives for a general exchange of views.

It had been made clear that, while the United Kingdom had not requested any further financial assistance from Canada during 1948, none should be expected.

Consideration had also been given to a joint Canada-United Kingdom approach to the U.S. government, to clarify the position of both countries in the hope of receiving some assurance that E.R.P. would be effective from April 1st. As a result of the discussions it had become apparent that a joint approach would serve no useful end at this stage; each country should, however, continue to keep its position before the U.S. authorities.

One problem that had been considered was the effect of the continuing demands of the sterling area (other than the United Kingdom and South Africa) on U.K. dollar reserves. This drain would not be covered by E.R.P. and would continue to be a serious factor in the U.K. reserve position.

2. The Deputy Governor of the Bank of Canada pointed out that, leaving E.R.P. out of consideration, it was expected that the U.K. dollar deficit for 1948 would be about £285 million. The deficit for the rest of the sterling area, not including South Africa, would be about £75 million and U.K. dollar payments to other countries would be slightly over £55 million. Taking into consideration certain offsetting gold payments the overall drain on U.K. dollar reserves would be about £405 million during the year. Reserves at January 1st stood at about £678 million.

Since E.R.P. would only cover the dollar requirements of the United Kingdom, the additional drain on U.K. reserves would be serious. In this connection the figure of £75 million for the sterling area, (covering India, Pakistan, Ceylon, Burma, Iraq, Palestine, Australia, New Zealand and Ireland) had been determined after offsetting expected dollar earnings (of £75 million) from the colonies; the actual requirements of the area would be about £150 million, an amount not substantially different from requirements during 1947.

3. The Canadian High Commissioner to the United Kingdom reported that the U.K. authorities were seriously concerned by a substantially increased rate of decline in dollar reserves over recent weeks and had been considering what action might be required.

Further reductions in imports, additional diversion of sterling area products to the dollar areas, added emphasis on U.K. exports and the possibility of obtaining the assurances in Washington to which Mr. Pearson had referred, were being considered.

The dollar losses of the United Kingdom to the sterling area described by Mr. [Donald] Gordon represented in large measure a stabilizing factor of political significance which could not easily be reduced although responsibility for meeting these demands might, in the course of time, be shifted.

4. The Canadian Ambassador to the United States reported on the progress of U.S. congressional discussions in regard to E.R.P. It seemed generally accepted that the programme, when approved, would cover purchases from April 1st onward. The necessity of providing immediate and urgent aid to certain European countries might, however, mean that reimbursements to the United Kingdom would be delayed until some action had been taken in regard to these urgent situations.

Rather than take over the purchasing of items for the United Kingdom of the type presently covered by the Canadian food contracts, the United States would probably provide the United Kingdom with funds to cover purchases of this type. In all likelihood the food contracts and Canadian base metals and lumber for the United Kingdom would present no difficulty as far as inclusion in E.R.P. was concerned.

5. The Chairman, referring to the financing of U.K. purchases in Canada after April 1st suggested that in view of Mr. Wrong's report the United Kingdom should assume responsibility for the financing in the expectation that in due course reimbursement would be made under E.R.P.

6. The Deputy Minister of Finance pointed out that while it had been made clear in London and Washington that Canada should not be counted on for further direct financial assistance to the United Kingdom and other European countries, U.S. authorities appeared willing to consider the difference between the prices charged for Canadian supplies and higher world prices as a Canadian contribution to the recovery programme. This situation would become more difficult if world price levels dropped substantially.

7. Mr. Pearson suggested that in the circumstances the only action required in Washington at present would be a full explanation of the Canadian position by the Canadian Ambassador to the appropriate U.S. authorities.

8. The Committee, after further discussion, agreed that the course suggested by the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs appeared desirable.

TELEGRAM EX-488

Ottawa, February 21, 1948

TOP SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

For Wrong from Moran. Your WA-528† concerning the line you should take in your discussions next week with Lovett.

2. It was not considered necessary to convene a meeting of the full Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy to discuss this matter, but yesterday Norman Robertson, Clark, Towers, Gordon, Baldwin, and myself met to consider the points which might be covered by you. Set out in the following paragraphs is the text of a memorandum for your guidance which has now been approved by all those present at yesterday's meeting.

TELEGRAM TO THE CANADIAN AMBASSADOR IN WASHINGTON

Your discussions with Lovett are not of course intended to cover any detailed description of what Canada expects the United States to do. Rather it was felt that you might proceed with some general discussion of the position in which Canada now finds itself and the problems which are causing us concern. It might be in order to commence with a general inquiry regarding the progress of the plans for E.R.P., to pass from that to some comments on the Canadian position and as a natural extension of this line, our relationship with the U.K. and its reserve position with particular reference to the sterling area demands.

Your remarks might be along the following lines:

Canada has been giving further thought to its position with regard to supplying of goods under E.R.P. and the extent of the assistance which is in its power to provide towards the recovery of Western Europe. Unrequited exports from Canada, mainly to the United Kingdom and western Europe were $860 millions during 1946 and $601 millions during 1947. This drain contributed in large measure to our adverse U.S. dollar position compelling us to adopt corrective measures in the form of widespread restrictions on imports.

While it is early yet to assess the results of our programme for conservation of exchange, it would now appear on the basis of a preliminary statistical study that, apart from drawings on credit, the severe restrictions which we have imposed will at best prevent further drain on our reserves which as you know are already at an unsatisfactory low level. We are about to begin drawings upon the $300 million loan from the Export-Import Bank which was arranged last autumn.

In this connection, after thorough review of all the factors involved, it would appear that Canada may find it possible in 1948 to permit other countries to go as high as $100 million in drawing upon credits already authorized. (This contribution to the recovery of western Europe would be additional to any recognition which we might get as a result of sales at prices lower than world levels.) Of this sum $45 million is represented by the $15 millions which we agreed to release monthly for use by the United Kingdom during the first three months of 1948, at the time when they agreed on the Canadian food contracts for the balance of the year. The remaining amount represents the extent to which we think the unused balances of credits granted by Canada to other countries might be allowed to diminish. (Complete information with regard to tentative estimates of our balance of payments for 1948 has been taken to Washington by John Deutsch who is in a position to brief you fully regarding the basis upon which it was prepared.)

We have considered the U.K. position and our relationship thereto informally in Ottawa with U.K. representatives. The United Kingdom is fully familiar with our position and we do not believe that any misunderstanding will arise with regard to the extent of our financial capacity to provide assistance during 1948. In these circumstances you will have in mind the importance of the situation which will emerge after April 1st when the U.K. will have used up the $45 millions of credit can not be overlooked.

We are at the same time gravely concerned over the general position of U.K. reserves. The depletion of these reserves which took place during 1947 is a matter of serious consequence. While their forecasts for 1948 are somewhat better they still leave grounds for anxiety and moreover it is quite possible that these forecasts may not be realized. In particular we have been concerned by a sudden increase over recent weeks in the drain on U.K. dollar reserves. (Tentative figures on this are available to you in the minutes of the Cabinet Committee on External Trade Policy.)

The large continuing drain of the sterling area ex United Kingdom and South Africa on U.K. reserves, will not be eased by E.R.P. We realize that this is a burden which the United Kingdom must for the present, at least, continue to assume and that it would be extremely difficult for the United Kingdom to achieve any radical reduction. The maintenance of general political stability and security in important large areas in both the Middle and Far East is related directly to this problem. Nevertheless, if this drain continues, the United Kingdom may at the end of E.R.P. be in a much worse reserve position than at present.

At the same time it is quite clear that E.R.P. will not be fully effective unless it operates in an atmosphere of confidence. It is apparent that a situation in which U.K. reserves continue to deteriorate and in which the position of sterling and the sterling areas becomes more dubious would be a very large obstacle to the development of that atmosphere of confidence which western Europe needs and which E.R.P. requires.

Even with E.R.P. becoming effective on April 1st there will, as the figures on the U.K. reserve indicate, be a substantial drain on U.K. reserves during 1948. While this is primarily a matter for the United Kingdom to discuss with the United States, it is a feature which we consider to be of considerable importance, bearing directly as it does upon the ability of the United Kingdom to maintain its own reserve position and that external confidence in its position which is necessary for a successful atmosphere in western Europe for the recovery programme. It would not be appropriate for us to suggest any specific course of action which either the United States or the United Kingdom could adopt in the face of this difficulty. Nevertheless it continues to cause us anxiety.

In this connection you may wish to mention in the course of the conversation if an appropriate opportunity presents itself that the decision with regard to allocation of any surplus dollar earnings from the U.K. colonies will be of some importance. If they must be credited against the United Kingdom's own dollar deficit the drain of the sterling area will be that much larger, while the assistance granted under E.R.P. will be proportionately smaller. On the other hand if they can be credited against the sterling area drain they will reduce somewhat the dimensions of that problem.

As agreed last week in Ottawa, I discussed our financial problems this morning with Lovett. Deutsch accompanied me, and Wood, Nitze, and Foster were with Lovett.

2. I began by talking on the lines of your message EX-488 of February 21st, seeking particularly to bring out the difficulties of the United Kingdom's financial position in the second quarter of this year and our own inability to extend credit during 1948 in excess of $100 millions. At the conclusion of my exposition, Lovett remarked that he could give me "little current comfort", and he later said that our talk had at least had the effect of sharing our misery with them. The results, in short, were depressing.

3. We explained fully the Canadian reserve position and the achieved and anticipated effects of the restriction program, emphasizing that our reserves were precariously low, even taking into account the Export-Import Bank credit, and that a poor crop this year might wipe out our estimated current account surplus for 1948 of $130 millions, which we counted on to balance our shipments on credit.

4. We then went into the United Kingdom position and the estimated drain on United Kingdom reserves in 1948 without allowance for ERP aid. We specially stressed the problem in the second quarter before ERP can begin to operate fully. Lovett said that if the R.F.C. clause stayed in the Bill, he thought little of the billion dollars would be used by the Administrator for the United Kingdom, since several other countries had no means of payment whatsoever and would have first call on this fund. It would be for the Administrator to decide and to weigh the disadvantages of a possible decline in confidence in sterling through a fall in the United Kingdom's reserves against the necessity of maintaining the flow of supplies to the countries without dollar resources. We then asked about replenishment of the United Kingdom's reserves for expenditures within the ERP program which they would have to make between April 1st and the passage of the full appropriation. We had previously formed the impression from other sources that the refunding of such expenditures was likely to be contemplated. Lovett, however, said that he greatly doubted whether Congress would pass legislation authorizing re-payment for supplies actually delivered and paid for. He added that even if this was feasible, the Administrator might not see his way to furnish funds for this purpose. Wood and Nitze both agreed that ERP funds were unlikely to be used for anything actually delivered before the funds were voted by Congress.

5. I may add that Donald Gordon yesterday got a more cheerful account on the prospects in this respect from Southard of the Treasury. I think that the Treasury is a good deal more sensitive than the State Department to the need for maintaining adequate reserves in London and probably also in Ottawa.

6. I remarked that this was primarily a question between the United States and United Kingdom, but Lovett said that it was really a tripartite matter in view of our deep interest. We also went into continuing drain on the United Kingdom reserves of the rest of the sterling area, saying that this might run to over 200 millions pounds during the lifetime of ERP, and that even if ERP operated to meet the entire dollar deficit of the United Kingdom, they would end up with seriously depleted reserves because of this drain. Lovett agreed that this was the case. We did not go further into this aspect, since it is a matter on which the United Kingdom can best take the initiative.

7. Nitze at one stage remarked that the extension by Canada of $100 millions of credit in 1948 was below their own estimates of the share that we could carry, quite apart from the indirect contribution contained in the lower prices in our United Kingdom food contracts. Although Lovett said nothing, I am not sure that we satisfied Nitze and Wood that it would be too risky for us to give a further credit to the United Kingdom. They pointed out that the United Kingdom would probably have to run a large risk in depleting their reserves at this time and that we might be expected to take a smaller risk, perhaps by continuing to make $15 millions monthly available for a period. We sought to counter this by emphasizing our precarious reserve position and our expectation that the restrictive measures would do no more than maintain this position. We shall, however, probably hear more of this suggestion.

8. Deutsch forestalled any mention of the possibility that we might improve our position by further restrictive measures by explaining the difficulties which were being encountered in giving effect to the November decisions and the conclusion that further restriction of imports would at once reduce our productive capacity. Lovett asked some questions about the United States dollar content of our current exports of manufactured goods to Europe, and he appeared satisfied with Deutsch's explanation of the composition of our export trade.

9. In conclusion, Lovett said that he was more optimistic than he had been last month about the passage of ERP, the timetable, and the sums that would be provided. He had no suggestions to offer, however, for meeting the United Kingdom's problem in the opening stages of ERP or coping with the continuing drain of the rest of the sterling area on the United Kingdom's reserves.

10. Will you please repeat this message to Norman Robertson in London, as he said yesterday that he hoped a report of this discussion would be there on his return.

CANADA-U.K. FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS; E.R.P.

I. E.R.P.; Canadian Relationship and Participation

The Committee has already received a report on recent conversations in Washington regarding certain features of the European Recovery Programme. The State Department officials were inclined to be pessimistic about the possibility of E.R.P. aid to the United Kingdom being retroactive to April 1st, and about the speed with which dollars could be made available to the United Kingdom after April 1st. They also suggested that rather more should be expected from Canada in the way of independent aid than we have contemplated. It may be that this pessimism was deliberately designed to push Canada to do more in the way of making Canadian credits available. Much more optimistic views, however, prevailed in Treasury quarters with regard to assistance to the United Kingdom. While there is still divergence of views among administration officials on these matters in Washington, on the whole the preponderance seems to be in favour of the less pessimistic approach.

U.S. estimates are that about $2 billion of E.R.P. funds are likely to be used during the twelve months commencing April 1st for purchases in the western hemisphere outside the United States. A substantial amount of this will be spent in Canada. The same figures indicate that $700 millions for assistance to the programme is expected from other countries in the western hemisphere. Canada as the most important is expected to make the most substantial contribution. Fuller explanation of the basis on which the $700 million was determined has been sought but has not yet been received, although it has been learned that U.S. sources in making this calculation expected that Canada would allow the United Kingdom to continue to draw on the Canadian credit after April 1st (about $240 millions).

It was earlier expected that the difference between Canadian export prices and higher world price levels, if accepted by the United States as a Canadian contribution to E.R.P., would be a substantial amount. At the peak prices of some weeks ago it might have reached $300 millions or more but that figure has substantially decreased as a result of the recent drop in U.S. commodity prices and will probably be further reduced or even wiped out. The International Wheat Agreement, for one thing, will eliminate the largest single figure, the allowance which we would have received for sale of our wheat at lower than world price levels.

The general view taken in Ottawa has been that the most that Canada should do in the way of direct foreign assistance during 1948 would be $100 millions. This would include the $45 millions made available to the United Kingdom during the first three months of the year (special arrangements with the U.S. may be required if we are to get allowance for this $45 millions as a parallel to E.R.P., which does not begin until April 1st). Of the remaining $55 millions the greater portion is already committed on contracts for France and other countries.

About $370 millions of the foreign credits extended by Canada remain unexpended and unencumbered; roughly two-thirds of this amount is in the U.K. credit. The credits extended to other countries expire at varying times during 1948. The use of all these credits has been virtually frozen by the present arrangement with the United Kingdom which permits drawings of $15 millions a month up to March 31st only, and by the Canadian policy of requesting dollars from the other countries in payment for any commodities which could normally be sold for U.S. dollars.

II. The U.K. Contracts

Directly related to the availability of E.R.P. funds after April 1st is the U.K. financing of Canadian contracts. U.K. officials have been informed that the pessimistic State Department indications described should not influence the United Kingdom to any course of action without further and much more definite confirmation. Nevertheless the United Kingdom is seriously concerned over these possibilities and is somewhat reluctant to proceed on the fixed assumption that funds to cover its needs will be made available on a retroactive basis to April 1st under E.R.P., both in time and quantity adequate to meet the U.K. situation.

The Chairman of the Cabinet Committee at the meeting on February 17th suggested that the United Kingdom should assume full responsibility for financing its Canadian purchases after April 1st in the expectation that in due course reimbursement would be made over E.R.P.; and that if E.R.P. should fail to meet the situation it would be time enough then to reconsider the position. These views have been made clear to the United Kingdom on a number of occasions. It has been indicated as well that, for the present, we neither expect nor consider necessary the despatch of a special U.K. mission to Ottawa to discuss this and the United Kingdom have accepted this position.

Nevertheless they now state that they do not wish to make full payment to Canada from their dwindling dollar reserves, and have requested that the present arrangements permitting them to draw to the extent of $15 millions per month on the Canadian credit be extended for one month to April 30th on the understanding that this amount will be repaid should E.R.P. assistance be made retroactive to April 1st.

Acceptance of this request would mean modification of the firm stand which Canada took in the last discussions, that $45 millions represented the limit to which Canada could go at present. Moreover, it seems very unlikely that E.R.P. assistance to the United Kingdom would permit the $15 millions to be repaid; the proposed E.R.P. legislation would not cover this sort of arrangement and in any event the United States would be unlikely to approve it. Finally, if provision of E.R.P. funds to the United Kingdom is further delayed after April 30th the United Kingdom might well request a further extension of the present arrangements beyond that date.

On the other hand a case may be made that our interest in the success of E.R.P., in maintenance of the U.K. financial position and in continued sale of our foodstuffs to the United Kingdom justifies Canada in taking this risk at the present time. There is always the possibility that the United States might enter the picture and exert considerable pressure on Canada.

The United Kingdom have not raised the question of revision or reduction of present contracts, which need not be considered in Ottawa unless there is some definite benefit in it for Canada (for example the scheme which has been discussed on some occasions previously for the diversion of beef to the U.S. market at an appropriate time).

Another alternative which has of course not been mentioned is cancellation of all the contracts. This was rejected in the course of the year-end discussions as being a drastic course which might produce unfortunate consequences both domestic and international. It could create additional inflationary pressures in Canadian domestic prices for some of the commodities unless some special device could be worked out for government-controlled export marketings; other of the foodstuffs might not easily find a market. Moreover the very announcement of cancellation, even though mutually agreed, would have unfortunate repercussions on the Congressional discussions of E.R.P. in Washington.

The possibility of cancellation of the wheat contract along with the other contracts in the last discussions proved of basic importance for the United Kingdom and played a major part in the solution which was eventually accepted. This situation may not be repeated since the acceptance of an International Wheat Agreement with long term guarantees of both price and supply means that the wheat contract with Canada becomes far less important; in fact the international agreement constitutes an alternative broader guarantee.

The Committee, after further discussion, agreed to suggest to the Cabinet Committee on External Trade Policy:

(1) that both the U.K. and U.S. governments be informed that the Canadian government did not find it possible at the present time to extend further assistance to the E.R.P. during 1948, and did not, accordingly, propose to authorize further extensions of credit;

(2) that since it would be much easier to assess Canadian ability to assist in this connection when the prospects for the 1948 Canadian crops were known, the Canadian government proposed to review the position in September with a view to deciding what further assistance, if any, could be made available by Canada; and

(3) that in the event that a better-than-average crop made it possible at that time, the assistance granted to the United Kingdom would cover the $15 millions now requested, and any additional amount that conditions made possible.

III. Machinery for Coordination

The problem of coordination in Ottawa of departmental activities relating to E.R.P. has been growing. To avoid overlapping, to ensure integration of various departmental activities and to provide a central office where all information can be collected, where planning can be carried on, and where responsibility rests for raising policy questions requiring decision, the Interdepartmental Committee has agreed that a single official be designated to act for this purpose; and that C.M. Drury of External Affairs be made available for this duty. He will be assisted by an appropriate interdepartmental committee which will operate as a sub-committee of the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy.

This action is reported for approval.

London, March 16, 1948

SECRET AND PERSONAL

Following for Pearson from Robertson, Begins: Thank you for your telegram No. 361 of the 15th March<sup>7</sup> with information concerning the current financial discussions.

2. In the meetings with Bridges<sup>8</sup> and the other Treasury advisers before Clutterbuck returned to Canada, I outlined forcibly the reasons why it was highly improbable that any of the Canadian credit over and above the 45 million dollars released during the first three months of this year would be made available to the United Kingdom after the end of March. In particular, I stressed that it was our view that, if reserves were to be run down during the period between the date on which the Administration had originally hoped Marshall aid would begin and the date on which it would in fact become effective, it would be much easier for the United Kingdom to recoup a drain on its reserves from funds appropriated under E.R.P. than for us to do so.

3. It seems to me, however, that the situation has now altered materially since I presented that case to Treasury officials here. The change of Government in Czechoslovakia and Masaryk's suicide have emphasized the gravity of the political dangers within which these financial problems must be considered. They have also produced a much higher temperature in the United States, I gather, which is likely to ensure a more rapid passage of the E.R.P. legislation than would have seemed likely even a fortnight ago.

4. In this altered setting, I feel strongly that it would be a mistake for us to urge too far our unwillingness to advance even a comparatively small amount of further credit. At a time when the United States is in a temper to grant aid to western Europe on such a large scale and when determined efforts are being made on this side of the Atlantic to make a western association a reality, I think that we have much to lose by an excess of financial caution. I can even imagine that reluctance to grant some small further credit accommodation to the United Kingdom might have an adverse effect on our chances of supplying a large volume of supplies to be paid for by E.R.P. funds. I realize the necessity of building up our reserves in order to provide us with some margin of safety and to regain some freedom of action. On the other hand, I believe that there are circumstances in which prudential calculations can be carried too far and that this is one of them. By September, when, according to your telegram, our decision will be taken, the dangers and uncertainties of the present situation will have been largely resolved for good or ill and we are likely to gain little credit or thanks for a belated gesture after the crisis has passed. In comparison either with the scale of the aid which the United States is now urgently preparing to grant or with the importance of the issues which face the whole eastern world within the next few weeks, I feel that what is being asked of us is not immoderate. I very much hope that those who are properly anxious about our financial position will feel at this critical moment that it is possible for us to share in this additional but comparatively modest way in the risks involved in attempting to safeguard western Europe from further encroachments and infiltration. Ends.

III. CANADA-UNITED KINGDOM FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS; EUROPEAN RECOVERY PROGRAMME

7. The Chairman, referring to discussion at the meeting on March 2nd, reported that the United Kingdom government had requested an extension for one month, to April 30th, of the present arrangements under which it was permitted to draw $15 millions monthly from the Canadian credit. A report had been circulated describing the factors involved.

Acceptance of the United Kingdom request would require modification of the stand which Canada took in the last discussions, that $45 millions represented the limit to which Canada should go at present. Moreover, it seemed unlikely that E.R.P. legislation would permit the $15 millions to be repaid to Canada; it would not cover this sort of arrangement. Finally, should provision of E.R.P. funds to the United Kingdom be further delayed after April 30th, the United Kingdom might well request extension of the present arrangements beyond that date.

On the other hand a case could be made that our interest in the success of E.R.P., in maintenance of the United Kingdom financial position and in continued sale of our foodstuffs to the United Kingdom justified Canada in taking some risk at the present time. There was also the possibility that the United States might enter the picture and exert considerable pressure on Canada to satisfy the United Kingdom request.

(Report, Chairman, Interdepartmental Committee, March 12, 1948, CCETP Document No. 3).

8. The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy after consideration of these issues had recommended:

(i) that both the United Kingdom and United States governments be informed that the Canadian government did not find it possible at the present time to make any decision on further assistance to the E.R.P. during 1948, and did not, propose to authorize now any further extensions of credit;

(ii) that since it would be much easier to assess Canadian ability to assist in this connection when the prospects for the 1948 Canadian crop were known, the Canadian government would review the position in September with a view to deciding what further assistance, if any, could then be made available by Canada; and

(iii) that should a better-than-average crop make it possible at that time, further assistance granted to the United Kingdom would cover the $15 millions now requested, and any additional amount that conditions then made possible.

Certain of the members of the Interdepartmental Committee, however, felt some concern over the possible results of this course and were inclined to feel that it might be wise for Canada at this point to meet the United Kingdom proposal and extend present arrangements for a further period of one month.

9. The Deputy Minister of Finance, referring to the figure of $100 millions in the circulated report, representing the extent of the credit which might be granted by Canada during 1948, reported that present commitments together with future commitments which it might be necessary for Canada to accept in the event of a reasonably good crop year indicated that this figure would be somewhat higher. Estimates of a very tentative nature showed that perhaps $75 to $125 millions should be allowed in this connection, in addition to the $45 millions already made available to the United Kingdom.

10. The Minister of Agriculture inquired whether the United Kingdom and United States would be likely to agree with the course recommended by the Interdepartmental Committee. Already substantial quantities of beef and bacon were gathering in Canadian storage because of the reluctance of the United Kingdom, based on financial uncertainties, to accept advance deliveries during the first quarter of the year against subsequent quarters.

Should this situation deteriorate further, and should any interruption in supplies to the United Kingdom take place, consideration would have to be given to opening the United States market. In this event it would be difficult to single out commodities; Canadian agricultural produce generally would have to be permitted to move freely to the United States.

11. The Committee, after considerable further discussion, approved the recommendations of the Interdepartmental Committee, it being understood that a reference to a better-than-average crop involved the assumption of disposal at reasonable prices.

TELEGRAM EX-708

Ottawa, March 17, 1948

IMMEDIATE

With reference to my teletype No. EX-488 of February 21st, the United Kingdom High Commissioner in Canada has recently returned from London and has informed us that the United Kingdom has been persuaded not to send any special mission to Ottawa at this time for discussion of financial arrangements after March 31st. It has, however, requested an extension for one month, to April 30th, of the present arrangements permitting drawings of $15 millions monthly from the Canadian credit; this additional $15 millions would be repaid to Canada if and when E.R.P. came into effect and was made retroactive to April 1st.

In effect this proposal involves sharing with the United Kingdom any risk in regard to the availability of E.R.P. funds on a retroactive basis. Should the provision of funds to the United Kingdom be substantially delayed they would probably request that the present arrangement be extended further to cover May or June as well.

We see serious difficulties in the U.K. undertaking regarding repayment of the funds provided by Canada after April 1st. The proposed E.R.P. legislation does not appear to cover repayment of this sort. The chances of getting E.R.P. funds to cover in full U.K. purchases in Canada during this period would be better if the purchases were completely financed out of U.K. reserves.

At the same time there has been no fundamental change of our own financial position since the end of 1947 when the last discussions with the United Kingdom took place. At that time it was felt that the agreement to extend $15 millions monthly to the United Kingdom for three months represented a risky undertaking on our part, the outside limit to which we should go at the time. Nevertheless, we are fully aware of the Canadian stake in E.R.P. and in the maintenance of the U.K. position and anxious to do what we can. Our ability, however, is dependent upon the position of our reserves and our balance on current account; in this connection the only substantial variable is the 1948 crop. It will be much easier for us to estimate what additional assistance we can provide when the prospects for the crop year are known.

Accordingly the government has decided that, while it does not find it possible at the present time to authorize further extensions of credit, since assessment of the Canadian position will be easier when prospects for the 1948 crop are known, the government will review the position in September with a view to deciding what further assistance may be made available generally as part of E.R.P. by Canada; should a better-than-average crop make it possible, (assuming, of course, reasonable prices), further assistance granted to the United Kingdom would cover the $15 millions now requested as well as any additional amount that conditions then made possible.

It was also agreed that in view of the direct interest of the United States in this matter to E.R.P. it would be desirable for us to bring this decision to the attention of the U.S. authorities ourselves. Please arrange to do this.

You will not need to present them with any further figures or information on the Canadian position generally since that has already been done. In informing them of our decision it should be emphasized that this, in the opinion of the Canadian government, represents the wisest course from the point of view of providing the maximum Canadian assistance to E.R.P. It is not a rejection of the U.K. proposal; it is, rather, decision on our part that in September, when crop prospects and our financial position will make it possible, we will reach a general decision on direct aid to the E.R.P. which we can not make at the present time. Underlying this decision is the intention of the government to do the most that it can at that time — as is indicated in the specific undertaking in regard to the United Kingdom.

Washington, March 18, 1948

Towers and I lunched with Douglas today and explained to him the decision of the Government against any further extension of credit to the United Kingdom until our position can be reviewed in September when crop prospects are known. Douglas asked a number of questions about the basis for this decision, but made no suggestion that the United Kingdom should be permitted to draw further on the Canadian credit while E.R.P. is getting under way.

2. Pearson informed me yesterday by telephone about information received by Clutterbuck from London concerning the prospects of early assistance from E.R.P., to the United Kingdom. We raised with Douglas the various points about the prospect of refunding to the United Kingdom the cost of approved supplies delivered before funds were available, and the possible share of the United Kingdom in the billion dollar advance from the R.F.C. to get the program started. He certainly did not take nearly as gloomy a line as that reported to Pearson by Clutterbuck.

3. As to retroactive payments, Douglas said that they could not pick up the cost of supplies delivered between April 1st and the passage of the Authorization Act. The present timetable, however, provides for passage somewhere around April 5th so that this interval will be briefer than was feared. The Administrator, however, (who, so far as Douglas knows, has not been selected) will take some time in building up his organization, during which he cannot be expected to deal with other than the most urgent needs. Douglas thinks it possible that refunds can be made for expenditures during this interval, which, in his judgment, might last from 60 to 90 days. No one can promise what the Administrator will do, but Douglas himself is well aware of the seriousness of a big drain on United Kingdom reserves on this count.

4. As to the availability to the United Kingdom of funds from the R.F.C. advance, Douglas said that the most needy countries would have first call, but that a substantial sum should be left for the United Kingdom. The United Kingdom should not expect to get its full proportionate share of the billion dollars, but Douglas intimated that it would be suggested to the Administrator that he should see that any early deficiency was later made up, so that the United Kingdom would secure its full measure of aid during the whole year.

5. It must be remembered that Douglas is only expressing an informed opinion on the matters mentioned in the previous two paragraphs. Neither he nor anyone else can give any undertaking on how the Administrator will act.

6. Douglas expressed great concern over the problem of the continuing sterling area drain on the United Kingdom's reserves. He thinks that the United Kingdom will have to be tougher with some members of the sterling area, notably South Africa and Australia, in order to abate this drain.

7. He thinks the chances are good that in one way or another the full amount of $5.3 billions will be both authorized and appropriated. He agreed with what Senator Lodge told me on Tuesday — that there should be little difficulty in the Senate Appropriations Committee.

8. I am seeing Tyler Wood of the State Department tomorrow, and I shall explain also to him the Canadian decision set forth in your EX-708, so that there should be no misunderstanding in the State Department of what we can be expected to do by way of financial aid during the next few months.

9. Munro also saw Douglas today. I have read him most of this message, and he says that Douglas spoke to him on identical lines.

CANADA—UNITED KINGDOM FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS

3. The Chairman referring to the decision at the meeting of March 16th reported that the U.K. High Commissioner to Canada had, at the instructions of the U.K. government, presented certain communications dealing with the financing of Canadian supplies to the United Kingdom after April 1st and with export of livestock to the United Kingdom during the first quarter of 1948.

(U.K. High Commissioner's memoranda; Financial arrangements after April 1st, 1948; † Exports of livestock products to the U.K.; March 22nd, 1948.) †

4. The United Kingdom High Commissioner to Canada explained that previous discussions with Canadian representatives had been based on the assumption that the United Kingdom would be able to obtain reimbursement from E.R.P. funds for expenditures after April 1st but before the date of the passing of the Act. It now appeared that this expectation would not be realized and that E.R.P. funds would be made available only for deliveries after the passage of the Act.

While it was hoped that the E.R.P. legislation would be passed by the U.S. Congress, early in April, the United Kingdom was concerned over the continued drain on its reserves between April 1st and the passage of the Act. It wished to draw on the Canadian credit at a rate of $3½ millions a week during the period from April 1st to the date of the passing of the E.R.P. legislation.

Moreover, the U.K. government wished to raise the question of the drain on U.K. reserves created by unusually high deliveries of Canadian livestock during the first quarter of 1948.

During the discussions in December, 1947, U.K. and Canadian officials had estimated that $30 millions would meet requirements for livestock deliveries during this quarter. In fact this figure would be exceeded by almost $23 millions in view of unexpectedly large deliveries, some $20 millions of which represented deliveries on uncompleted 1947 contracts.

5. Mr. St. Laurent pointed out that while the Canadian government might be prepared to consider the special circumstances resulting from the fact that E.R.P. funds would not be available on a retroactive basis, to April 1st, and resulting from the high level of livestock exports, nevertheless it was the Canadian government's understanding that any adjustment related to these special features would not involve change in the general arrangements for the 1948 contracts agreed during the December discussions.

6. The Minister of Agriculture pointed out that the large livestock supplies had resulted from heavy slaughtering during the period in question. While previous calculations with regard to the availability of hogs during 1948 now appeared to be conservative and supplies might remain rather above the figure originally estimated until mid-summer, the peak period with regard to beef slaughtering had now been passed and a substantial drop in supplies might be expected.

In view of this situation it was unlikely that the quantity of livestock provided to the United Kingdom over the whole of 1948 would be in excess of contract figures; rather it might easily be below estimates.

7. The Committee, after further discussion agreed that without affecting in any way the basis of the general arrangements which had been agreed between the United Kingdom and Canada in December 1947, in view of the special circumstances described by the United Kingdom High Commissioner and the Secretary of State for External Affairs the United Kingdom should be permitted to draw on the Canadian credit at the rate of $3½ millions a week during the first two weeks of April. It was understood that approval by the United States Congress of E.R.P. legislation prior to April 15th would not in any way effect this undertaking which would, however, be based on the assumption that no special discussions on livestock exports were necessary.<sup>9</sup>

Dear Mike [Pearson],

I have read Norman [Robertson's] cable No. 336 with interest and sympathy, but not with full agreement. The thought that immoderate prudence in financial matters on our part may keep us from making our proper contribution to the battle is, of course, a distressing one. But I wonder if Canadian policy can fairly be described in that way. I do not think that anyone would say that our actions in the past had been timorous from a financial point of view. Indeed it is likely that both the English and the Americans would agree that if we have erred it has been on the side of boldness.

What is the situation at present? We have been urged to make a further $15 millions available or, failing that, $3½ millions a week at a time when the United Kingdom knows that even after ERP commences to operate they have a continuing problem running into vast amounts which can only be solved — if it is solved at all — by one country. It seems to me that the importance of Canadian aid in April is being greatly exaggerated.

When we were having the talks in Ottawa before Clutterbuck and Munro took off for the United Kingdom, you will recall that we stressed the cost to the United Kingdom of supporting the sterling area in 1947, and referred not only to a dollar drain in that year but also to the quite substantial amount of unrequited exports. We then turned to the prospects for 1948, and were told that the dollar drain in respect of sterling area (ex U.K. and South Africa) dealings with the Western Hemisphere was expected to be of the order of £75 millions. No mention was made of the assistance which the United Kingdom expected to give in the form of unrequited exports although the “Economic Survey for 1948”, which appeared not long after, assumes that such exports will be very substantial. The Research Department of the International Monetary Fund, in a recent study of the external accounts of the United Kingdom, estimates that between unrequited exports and dollar payments for account of the sterling area (ex U.K. and South Africa) the burden on the U.K. in 1948 may be the equivalent of about $1 billion. I believe that the Fund has taken the U.K.’s own estimates for the first half of the year and approximately doubled them to cover the twelve months period. This situation is so alarming that I feel somewhat reassured. It reminds me of the latter half of 1940, and that in turn calls to mind the fact that the U.S.A. did not weigh in from a financial point of view seven years ago until U.K. reserves had disappeared. I do not suggest that the same procedure will be followed on this occasion if some help is to be provided in the end. But I am inclined to think that any small chips which we toss into the current at this time will vanish from sight before you can say “Jack Robinson” and make no difference whatever in the eventual position of the United Kingdom. I should feel happier about the whole thing if the U.K., in their talks with us, had been more forthcoming about their prospective position and plans, and in the light of those facts had told us why they felt it essential to keep up the pressure for additional amounts from us.

I sent you a copy of some notes I made on recent conversations in Washington.<sup>10</sup> These notes should be read in conjunction with this letter if you can find time to do so.

Yours sincerely,

Ottawa, March 25, 1948

Dear Sir Alexander [Clutterbuck],

The Canadian Government has reviewed the memoranda dealing with financial arrangements after the first of April, 1948, and with the export of livestock products to the United Kingdom which you left with the Acting Under-Secretary of State on March 22nd. Subsequently, you had the opportunity of discussing these matters with the Ministers directly concerned.

The Government has now agreed that in recognition of the special circumstances which are set forth in those memoranda, notably the fact that any assistance provided under E.R.P. will apply only to deliveries after the date of the passage of the Act and the unusually high level of exports of livestock products during the early months of 1948, the United Kingdom should be permitted to draw on the Canadian credit at the rate of $3½ million a week for the first two weeks of April. This arrangement will not in any way be affected should the U.S. Act be passed prior to April 15th. Nor does it in any way alter the general basis of the agreements reached last December between our countries on these matters.

Canada's financial position has not changed since the discussions in December and the drawing of an additional $7 million from the credit to the United Kingdom will represent an added and unforeseen drain on our resources. We do not find it possible to go further at the present time. We believe that it will serve to tide both of us over immediate difficulties and we have therefore agreed to this additional drawing, without condition as to the date on which the United States Act may be passed, on the understanding that it will not be necessary to pursue further the questions dealt with in your memorandum on the export of livestock products.

It remains our intention, as you were informed previously, to review our whole position in September when crop prospects for 1948 will be known and will make it possible to assess more clearly our own role in relation to E.R.P. and Canadian cooperation in regard thereto.

Yours sincerely,

LOUIS S. ST. LAURENT

Ottawa, March 25, 1948

Dear Mr. St. Laurent,

I thank you for your letter of the 25th March dealing with the financial matters raised in the two memoranda which I presented on the 22nd March and subsequently discussed with Ministers on the 23rd March.

Immediately after the meeting with Ministers I reported to London the very helpful offer which you authorized me to convey, and which is now confirmed in your letter, viz. that the United Kingdom Government should be permitted to draw on the Canadian credit at the rate of $3½ million a week for the first two weeks of April irrespective of the date on which the E.R.P. Act may be passed by the United States Congress.

I have now been asked by my Government to convey to you their acceptance of this offer, which they warmly appreciate. I confirm also the understanding between us that this offer, and its acceptance, will now make it unnecessary to pursue further the questions raised in my memorandum on the export of livestock products in the current quarter.

I note the statement in the second paragraph of your letter that this arrangement does not in any way alter the general basis of the agreements reached last December between our two countries on these matters. This also is my understanding. But I feel I should make it clear, in order to protect my Government's position, that just as the arrangements agreed in December did not commit the United Kingdom Government on the question of the financing of supplies from Canada after the 31st March, so the present interim arrangement does not commit them on the question of the financing of supplies after the 14th April and during the period in which it is hoped that E.R.P. will be in operation.

May I add in conclusion how much I appreciate what is said in the last paragraph of your letter? I reported to my Government the intimation conveyed to me by Mr. Pearson and Dr. Clark that the Canadian Government intended to review their financial position in the light of the outturn of the 1948 crop, with the hope that, given a crop higher than average, resumption of drawings on the Canadian credit from September onwards might then be arranged. My Government have received this intimation with great appreciation, and this further evidence of the uniformly helpful and constructive attitude adopted by the Canadian Government towards our mutual problems is warmly welcomed.

Yours sincerely,

ALEC CLUTTERBUCK

TELEGRAM WA-1039

Washington, April 10, 1948

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

European Recovery Program

I saw Tyler Wood, State Department, yesterday afternoon, to discuss with him (1) any developments in the preparation of their off-shore purchases program which would be of interest to Canada and (2) to make quite certain that the State Department officials fully appreciate the significance of the Canadian Government's decision on the extension of further credit at the present time.

Off-shore Purchases Program

2. Wood, who has been placed in charge at least temporarily of the State Department's planning for off-shore purchases and of the Western Hemisphere financial contributions, had nothing concrete to tell us at the present time on the off-shore purchases program. He and his assistants, particularly Spiegel, seemed to be exercising caution in making any commitments or even discussing the problems troubling them openly. Wood said that they are now just in the process of assembling all the facts on the basis of which they will soon have to prepare definite programs of off-shore purchases. Wood's idea seemed to be that when these programs were prepared the United States officials would, at that stage, wish to talk to us about the mechanics of the off-shore program. Wood said that they have practically no definite ideas on what procedures to follow and that on this count they would welcome our ideas. Later, when I said that Skelton and others who would be well prepared to discuss many of these details were anxious to come here as soon as possible, Wood said that their visit would be very welcome, but not for a few days yet. This weekend and the first few days of next week are ones which the ERP officials don't wish even to think about.

3. One of the very large problems which we gather is making life very difficult for the United States officials is that most of the countries have stated their full case right at the start. Just as the United Kingdom decided at the outset to throw in the sterling area and to make a determined issue of it, so, apparently, have other countries not been shy in finding ways and means of expanding their programs. Therefore, not only do the programs have to be understood and approved, they also have to be, in some cases, cut. There are also, in the sixteen countries many newcomers to the foreign assistance game who are having, for very understandable reasons, great difficulty in their home capitals in filling up form ERP-I.

Canadian Financial Contribution

4. We had heard that the Chairmen of the two Congressional Appropriations Committees have asked for a breakdown of the $700 million estimate of other Western Hemisphere contributions and that although the State Department were very anxious not to be forced to give the breakdown of this figure, which was prepared so many months ago, they would almost certainly be forced to do so. I went over again with Wood the figures on our actual and anticipated credits to the United Kingdom and ERP countries this year, as well as the decision of the Government to review our credit policy in September when, after the size of the crop is known, we will know if it is possible to extend any further credit. I emphasized to Wood the resentment which would be caused in Canada if the Congress were given a figure on the possible Canadian contribution in excess of what we had told them on so many occasions we would be able to do.

5. Spiegel, who was present, took a long time to acknowledge that the problem of what to tell the Appropriations Committees on this score was bothering them a great deal. It is not only the figure of $700 million dollars, since with a reasonable degree of frankness and ingenuity they should be able to have this figure dismissed and forgotten about. They have, however, to present to the Appropriations Committees the new programs showing, by commodity and by countries, what the United States intends to finance. It will not be possible to call these programs "illustrative" and ones containing "purely notional ideas". They do not intend in these programs to present to the Congress a breakdown of the financial contributions of other Western Hemisphere countries. Individual contribution figures, however, will have to be assumed in order to arrive at a total other Western Hemisphere figure.

6. The dilemma which confronts the State Department is that they have either to admit in a realistic way that the other Western Hemisphere countries will contribute very much less than they had been counted upon to do (and therefore submit a smaller total program) or go on pretending that they will eventually get some fairly large sized contribution (and, therefore, draw as large as possible a program). This same dilemma confronted the British in submitting their initial programs when they increased their initial ERP allocation from $375 to $420 millions, which, as escaped no one's notice, is $45 millions or $15 millions a month more than the United States said that they would approve. The United Kingdom's foot notes on the ERP funds which they propose to be expended in Canada describe the $100 millions as "gap to be filled by ERP and Canadian credit of $7 millions." If the gap is not fully filled by ERP then there will presumably be an attempt to have it filled by additional Canadian credit. Knowing as well as anyone should know that there is no further credit at this time from Canada, they either had to reduce their full programme accordingly or else transfer the additional sum to the United States. The United Kingdom clearly does not wish to admit now that they will get less than their $420 — similarly, the United States does not wish to admit now that they will get less than the fullest possible amount from the other Western Hemisphere countries. I think that we have not seen the end of the manoeuvrings at this time to obtain some additional credit from Canada.

7. We have, however, obtained the assurances of Wood that at least as far as the Congressional Committees are concerned they will try not to go beyond the information which we have given them. The United States officials said it would be most useful to tell the Congressional Committee that the Canadian Government would review its position in September. I said that I did not think we would have any objection to this. Please let me know if there are any contrary views in Ottawa.

Please pass yellow copy of this message to C.M. Drury immediately on receipt.

CCETP DOC. 8

Ottawa, April 10, 1948

E.R.P.; U.K. IMPORTS AND BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

The Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy has been giving further consideration to problems arising out of Canadian relationship with the E.R.P. programme and the countries receiving assistance under that programme.

In accordance with a request submitted some time ago the sub-committee on availabilities is forwarding to the U.S. government a statement of Canadian availabilities. This statement contains full information on commodities which could be made available from Canada during the second quarter of 1948 to E.R.P. recipient countries, prices, and an indication as to commodities and amounts already committed under government contracts or, where known, under private contracts. It indicates that supplies of all kinds to the extent of some $461 million could be made available if required during this quarter. Some $293 millions of this is already programmed under government or private contract.

The U.K. government has submitted to the U.S. government its proposed programme of imports for the second quarter of 1948, including imports from Canada, and statement on proposed methods of financing. Total U.K. requirements for financial assistance are indicated at $420 millions (including the $7 millions from the Canadian credit during the first two weeks of April) as compared with a suggested figure of $375 millions which the United States had earlier suggested might be made available.

The memorandum was noted with approval by Cabinet Committee on April 12 (DEA/50091-C-40)†

The U.K. proposals cover some $187.5 millions of imports from Canada during the second quarter and suggest that $100 millions of this amount be financed out of E.R.P. with the balance to be financed by other methods.

Review by Canadian officials has indicated that there appears to be a serious discrepancy in the U.K. estimates. Estimates of receipts from Canada during the quarter are too high and estimates of required payments are too low with the net result that the deficit with Canada requiring E.R.P. or other special financing would be closer to $150 millions than to $100 millions. (First estimates here set it at between $150 and $160 millions). This is a serious matter; unless corrected promptly the United Kingdom and United States in the middle of the second quarter might, having proceeded on a mistaken estimate, find themselves either pressing curtailment of Canadian supplies to the United Kingdom or urging additional financial assistance from Canada. Attempts are now being made at the official level to find out why the U.K. figures given to the United States were out of line with Canadian estimates.

While the U.K. presentation to the United States generally puts foods under E.R.P. financing, in the table dealing with imports from Canada wheat, cheese, canned and dried milk and eggs are included under E.R.P. financing at a cost of some $85 millions but meat, fats and oils are included under non-E.R.P. financing at about $25.5 millions. Further, the report stresses that if the U.K. requests for E.R.P. aid during this second quarter turn out to be greater than can be provided, the United Kingdom would wish to eliminate items which would not support increased production; they would sooner sacrifice less essential foods than raw materials.

The Interdepartmental Committee has also been considering a report from the Canadian High Commissioner in the United Kingdom to the effect that the U.K. government is likely to propose in the near future the establishment of a Commonwealth Committee in London for exchange of information in regard to E.R.P. activities and the work of the C.E.R.C. (the Committee of European recipient countries). While there is little harm in Canada participating in such a Commonwealth Committee providing it was strictly limited to exchange of information, on the other hand neither is there any material advantage in membership. Canada as a dollar country and the largest source of supply outside the United States is in a very different position from other Commonwealth countries. It might be difficult, however, to refuse Canadian membership should an invitation be received.

In view of the special position of Canada as the main source of supply for E.R.P. outside the United States, and the main source of additional assistance, a strong case exists for the designation of a senior Canadian official to act as an observer in Paris at the C.E.E.C. and to maintain contact as well with the work of the official group working in Brussels on a Western European Customs Union.

The Committee also felt that it would be useful if Canadian observers could be attached to the main E.R.P. allocating committees working in Washington. This is something that could be discussed informally with the Administrator. At present the United States is anxious to have the European countries agree on at least an initial allocation among themselves and present a coordinated programme to Washington. The United Kingdom is strongly opposed to this approach. If, however, a coordinated programme should be worked out it would be done under the auspices of the C.E.E.C. in Paris. Even in that event, however, final decision would presumably be taken in Washington and allocation machinery will be established there as well.

The Committee believes that a senior Minister, for example, the Minister of Trade and Commerce might usefully visit Washington to establish direct personal contact with the Administrator.

Ottawa, April 13, 1948

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Your WA-1039 of April 10, European Recovery Programme. The Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy this morning<sup>12</sup> agreed that it would be useful to authorize the State Department to inform the Congressional Committees that the Canadian Government will review sometime in September its position regarding the possibilities of extending further credits to C.E.E.C. countries.

2. In doing this, two points should be made clear. First, the Canadian record of assistance to Europe to date should be adequate evidence of our determination to provide all the assistance that is within our power. If this point is grasped by the United States authorities it is hoped that there might be less importuning than would be the case if they felt that pressure was all that was required in order to secure the granting of further credits by us.

3. In the second place, it should be emphasized that our credit arrangements for the year 1948 have been based on the assumptions that we will be able to dispose of our entire export surplus by sale abroad, and that, further, we will receive either U.S. dollars or freely convertible currency for all such sales, with the exception of transactions carried out under the credits already extant. If either of these assumptions fails, which could happen if the Administrator should not be able to effect a sufficient volume of off-shore purchases in Canada, then we will be in a position of having already over-extended ourselves in granting the credits now outstanding.

INTERVIEW WITH SIR ALEXANDER CLUTTERBUCK
RE ERP FINANCING OF U.K. PURCHASES IN CANADA

Sir Alexander called on me this morning to state that this afternoon Sir Gordon Munro expected to make representations, probably by letter, to Mr. Hoffman, Administrator of ERP, to the following effect:

(1) That the present U.K. financial arrangements with Canada will expire on April 14th.

(2) That any interruption of the supplies being purchased by U.K. from Canada would be very serious but that U.K. could not reasonably press Hoffman for a view before April 14th.

(3) The British are therefore continuing to get the supplies for the time being, even though they have to pay U.S. dollars until Hoffman has time to go into the matter.

(4) These supplies are covered by the European Recovery Programme which has been put to the U.S. Government and the British are hoping that the item suggested for ERP financing will be included in off-shore purchases and that they can look accordingly to the reimbursement of the U.S. dollars so expended.

Sir Alexander explained that they wished to make these representations in order that Hoffman later could not use as an excuse for reimbursement of such expenditures the fact that he was not familiar with the U.K.-Canada arrangements. I demurred to some extent in regard to the wording of item 3 but agreed that it was desirable to make these representations.

I also took advantage of the occasion to press the need for straightening out quickly the apparent inaccuracies and the limitations which we had pointed out in the figures which they had already presented to the U.S. Government in respect of their purchases in Canada and their deficit with Canada during the next quarter. Sir Alexander agreed with the urgency of making any required corrections in these figures and said he hoped to have a reply today to representations which both Munro and himself had made to their Government last Saturday.

London, April 19, 1948

SECRET AND PERSONAL. IMMEDIATE.

Following for W.C. Clark from Robertson, Begins: Reference my telegram No. 549 of today's date.†

After our talk with Goldman and Syers this morning about the revision of the United Kingdom estimate of its balance of payments with Canada for the present quarter, I saw Eady and put it to him that pending further reconciliation of the Canadian and United Kingdom estimates the United Kingdom should at once let the United States know that they now, from their own data, estimated their deficit with Canada at 130 million dollars instead of the 100 million dollars of which the United States had been advised. I also said that I thought it would be helpful if, in these circumstances, the United Kingdom took the initiative in asking if ERP finance could be found for meat imports from Canada, which item happened to be almost the size of the difference between the original and the revised United Kingdom estimates of their deficit with Canada. Both suggestions will be considered by the Treasury Policy Committee which is meeting later this afternoon.

2. The United Kingdom have undoubtedly been close hauling their estimates of dollar expenditure and giving themselves the benefit of every permissible doubt in estimating their dollar earnings during the current quarter. I am of the opinion, however, after seeing Goldman and Eady, that the differences between their forecast and ours are essentially statistical and do not conceal the introduction of any new policy considerations which might result in a deliberate curtailment of imports from Canada.

3. I believe that we can rely on the United Kingdom taking and paying for the quantities of agricultural products covered by the intergovernmental contracts. They will not, however, be in a position to take up the options contained in those contracts for deliveries in excess of their firm commitments. They will also, during the next few months at any rate, have to hold themselves and us to a pretty close maintenance of scheduled rates of delivery by weekly or monthly periods. This may make from time to time for inconvenient accumulations in Canada of some commodities, but in present straitened circumstances I do not see how this can be avoided and feel we should make every effort to see that it does not lead to complaints and recriminations.

4. In explaining and regretting their inability to square their balance of payments estimate with ours before communicating it to the United States, Eady complained that it was practically impossible to make any respectable estimate of earnings and requirements on the quarterly basis that the United States had requested. He appreciated that the ERP Administrator had to make his initial plans for a quarterly period, but he was very worried by the prospect of having to submit new and independent estimates for each successive quarter, which he understood was what Hoffman wanted. He hoped very much that when our Ministers were in Washington this week they might find it possible to put in a word for a long planning period which would permit both closer financial budgeting and some assurance of continuity of supply. Ends.

U.S. ECONOMIC CO-OPERATION ADMINISTRATION;
U.K. PROGRAMME OF IMPORTS

The Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy has been giving further consideration to the programme submitted by the United Kingdom to the U.S. Economic Co-operation Administration for imports into the U.K. during the second quarter of 1948 and methods of financing.

Original U.K. estimates were for a deficit of $100 millions with Canada during this period. Canadian estimates placed the deficit at a much higher figure, a fact which was brought to the attention of the U.K. authorities who subsequently reviewed their estimates and have revised the estimated deficit upward to $130 million. Further study of these later figures by Canadian officials has led them to the conclusion that the deficit for this quarter should be set at $157 million. This difference is chiefly attributed to a U.K. under-estimate of cost of imports ($8 million, chiefly wheat), and a U.K. under-estimate of the sterling area drain ($7 millions) and U.K. over-estimate of receipts from invisibles ($12 millions).

This discrepancy is a serious matter, particularly in view of the fact that there may be pressure on Canada from U.S. quarters to do more in the way of granting credits. While the Canadian decision that we cannot go beyond our present commitments although we would be prepared to review the position in September has been brought to the attention of the U.S. authorities on more than one occasion, it remains a matter of importance that this be accepted by the top U.S. authorities.

The Interdepartmental Committee also wishes to draw the attention of the Cabinet Committee to the following considerations:

(1) The U.S. Administrator in allotting ECA funds for financing import programmes of recipient countries may exercise a firm control over their total programme of imports including those imports which they finance with non-ECA funds. The reason for this is to limit the use of dollars by those countries to essentials in order to make E.R.P. go as far as possible. This type of control applied to both quantity and price might create a serious problem for Canadian exports to the United Kingdom.

It becomes all the more important, therefore, that the original programmes submitted by recipient countries be as accurate as possible. The difference between the Canadian and U.K. estimates should be brought by the United Kingdom to the attention of the U.S. authorities.

(2) A recent press conference given by the U.S. Administrator and his two principal assistants indicated that ECA funds are likely to be available only for programmes approved by the Administrator and may not include reimbursement for supplies delivered prior to the Administrator's approval. Delays in receiving this approval for the U.K. programme could raise serious difficulties for the United Kingdom in financing Canadian imports during the present quarter although there are indications that the U.S. authorities are aware of this situation and hope to act quickly so that early discussions may be held with the United Kingdom covering, among other things, the position of existing contracts.

(3) The original U.K. programme placed the Canadian egg contract under ECA financing and the meat contracts under non-ECA financing (to be financed out of dollars available to the United Kingdom from other sources). At U.S. request the egg contract has been shifted to non-ECA financing (the U.S. has a substantial surplus of eggs and would find it difficult to justify off-shore purchases). It is understood also that the bacon contract is to be shifted to ECA financing. This may, however, leave the egg contract in a vulnerable position in the event of any concerted attempt to curtail commitments to Canada.

(4) Quantities of meat available in Canada which are substantially greater than expectations, and particularly prospects for a considerable surplus of bacon during 1948, have led to certain forward deliveries to the United Kingdom against later quotas. This development could lead to serious difficulties, in view of the points outlined above, unless there is a clear understanding as to how such forward deliveries are to be paid for. The United Kingdom has already informed us that they will not have funds to pay for extra shipments. Without a clear understanding the result would probably be that Canada would have to advance credit to cover them.

(5) In the event that substantial quantities of Canadian foodstuffs are sold under ECA donations other than the United Kingdom, the question arises as to the price which should be charged, i.e., whether the world price or the U.K. contract price which in a number of cases would probably be somewhat below the world price. At the present it would appear that bacon is the only commodity likely to be involved in substantial quantities.

U.K. BALANCE OF PAYMENTS DISCUSSIONS IN WASHINGTON,
APRIL 22 AND 23, 1948

It was felt desirable to see what turned up at the Thursday morning meeting with Bissell et al before contacting the British, so that the Embassy did not call Figgures<sup>13</sup> until noon on Thursday. We were told that Figgures was away ill but that he would probably be available after lunch on Friday, which Murray<sup>14</sup> had arranged for him to have with us. I heard later that Figgures had seen Bissell on Thursday afternoon.

Jones<sup>15</sup> called during the afternoon to ask if he could substitute for Figgures. I left seeing him late enough so that only half an hour was available, and did not attempt to get down to details. However, in the course of a general conversation the question of the "Rest of Sterling Area" deficit with Canada came up. After looking up their record, which showed a deficit of 18 for January plus February, Jones agreed that their estimate of 8 for the second quarter was too low and said he would go back to London on it. I asked Jones specifically if the Americans had been informed of the British revision of their balance of payments estimate from 100 to 130. He said he had written to Lindeman (State Department) advising him of the revision. I also asked whether there had been any change in the allocation of 100 of ERP funds to Canada. Jones said the allocation of ERP funds to Canada remained at 100, after removing 11 for eggs and adding 11 for meat. Jones gave me a copy of the revised U.K. "Thirty Day Estimate" which showed 57.2 of ERP funds allocated to Canada for that period.

When we saw Spiegel (with Rosenson (State) and Delaney (Treasury)) next morning, he exhibited great interest in our balance of payments with the U.K. and did everything but ask us directly what the Canadian estimates were. I asked him if he had been informed by the U.K. of any revisions of the originally estimated balance of payments deficit of 100. Spiegel said he had not heard of any revisions (and in view of his interest in the subject and his position in the Department it is very unlikely that he would have failed to hear of any information the Department had received). I said we were certain the figure of 100 was far too low and were trying to reconcile our estimates with the British as rapidly as possible.

After this meeting I phoned Deutsch and suggested that we should give our estimate to the Americans late that afternoon almost regardless of what progress was made with Figgures. Since Spiegel was going to be away on Saturday it was desirable to provide our estimate in time for him to pass it on to others, and particularly to ECA, before the weekend. I said I would phone Ottawa for an answer after seeing Figgures.

The discussion at lunch and after was not very satisfactory. Figgures insisted on talking in terms of strategy and policy while I kept trying to bring him back to consideration of the facts with respect to the balance of payments between us.

Figgures said that beyond a certain point there was no use in increasing their estimated deficit with us because it could not increase their allocation of ERP funds from ECA. I said that that was presumably a matter for the Americans to decide, but that I could not see how either the British or ourselves could gain by failing to give ECA the most realistic appraisal of the facts. In any case, I said I assumed the U.K. would want the best possible balance of payments estimates as a basis for allotting their total ERP funds among supplying countries. Figgures agreed.

He then suggested that it would be dangerous for us to get too big an allocation of the U.K.'s ERP funds because in order to make up a total of 130 or more the U.K. would have to include all meat under ERP financing and that might preclude them taking any surplus meat which might be available. I pointed out that there were other bulk commodities which were eligible if the 100 was to be increased, and that in any case the 100 figure already included 11 for meat — if the inclusion of any commodity under ERP financing meant that it was also frozen with respect to non-ERP financing then we were already bound on meat. Figgures agreed.

He then said that we had no reason to worry about their estimate of the gap — if it turned out to be too low they would use their reserves if necessary to pay us.<sup>16</sup> I said that was indeed our understanding but that we could not see any advantage to the U.K. or ourselves in starting with any but the best possible estimate of what the deficit was in fact going to be. Figgures agreed.

Although Figgures agreed each time with the objections I raised to the above-mentioned lines of argument, he kept coming back to them (with other more or less irrelevant subjects interspersed) and did not seem interested in getting down to detailed consideration of the estimates. I raised the question of the "rest of sterling area" on which Jones gave Figgures the evidence supporting our estimate vs. the U.K. estimate. I also attempted to get some discussion of their "interest and dividends" and "oil" figures. It was clear, however, that Figgures did not feel it was

The document contains the following footnote:

On the point of looking after Canada in case the gap was under-estimated, Figgures later contradicted himself. He was stressing the desirability of Mr. Howe getting the matter of Canadian credit settled so that the U.K. could either go ahead and place orders, or cut their program. It seemed clear that the U.K. had taken the various State Department documents allocating the Western Hemisphere financial contribution by commodities and by participating countries as proof that Canada would be expected to extend appreciable credit to the U.K. in the present quarter, and were expecting the actual allotment of ERP cash to Canada would be considerably less than 100.

worthwhile to go back to London on anything but "rest of sterling area" and when I asked how long he thought it would take to clarify the latter point he said "perhaps the end of next week."

Several times during the conversation I mentioned that we were all puzzled by the sharp change in the distribution of the dollar drain on U.K. reserves between the first and the second quarter. The U.K. estimates indicated a very sharp drop in the gap vs. Canada and only a small reduction in the gap vs. the rest of the American account area. This was all the more surprising in view of the fact that the U.K. ascribed a large part of the total drop to two factors (India's drawing on IMF and unusually favourable colonial trade) which would have no appreciable effect on the gap with Canada. Figures admitted each time that this was puzzling and then changed the subject.

In the end Figures agreed, though without enthusiasm, that the occasion might arise when we would have to give the U.S. people our own estimates of the gap as compared with the latest U.K. estimate. He suggested that if this occurred we should lump the invisible items, presumably because they do not wish to spell out the amount of capital or quasi-capital payments included in what might well be taken to be a current account figure.

During the course of the conversation I asked specifically about circulation of the U.K. estimates. Figures said that the original balance of payments estimate had gone to Lindeman (State) with a copy to Wayne Taylor of ECA and that the revision to 130 had been sent to Lindeman. When I said presumably a copy of the revision had also gone to Taylor, Figures said "yes".

Obviously, the discussion with Figures only served to strengthen the impression that the U.K. were employing evasive tactics, and were seeking to minimize the allocation of ERP funds to Canada so as to maximize the amount of credit which we might be forced to extend in order to keep exports flowing. It may well be that the U.K. would look after Canada this quarter, out of reserves if necessary. They would indeed be foolish to do anything which would jeopardize several months of wheat deliveries at $1.55 per bushel. As July 31st approaches, however, we will lose a substantial amount of bargaining power, and the existence of an unjustifiably low ERP allocation in the past might be a serious handicap to us.

When I got through to Deutsch just before 5 o'clock he said Dr. Clark had decided we should give our estimates to the Americans immediately. I called Spiegel and gave him our figures as per the attached table. I said that apart from wheat, where there was room for legitimate difference of opinion, we were confident that we had, if anything, underestimated the gap.

Spiegel was pleased to get the figures and said he would pass them on at once to Lindeman and to Van Hyning, who is Bissell's chief assistant. Keith<sup>17</sup> was to confirm in writing and see that Treasury got a copy.

In the course of discussion with Figgures I referred to the U.K.'s confidential balance of payments estimates of last January which showed an over-all drain on their reserves in 1948 of £406 million. Figgures said that this had since been increased substantially but that they did not have any figures in sufficiently satisfactory shape to give us. We should probably ask Clutterbuck for their latest revision.

Figures confirmed our impression of the way they intended to finance the "rest of the sterling area" deficit. After getting their ERP allocation they would cut U.K. imports enough to save the amount necessary to cover the deficit. If ECA then correspondingly reduced their allocation of ERP funds, the U.K. would again cut its imports, and so on until the United States acquiesced in the policy or the British starved!

Washington, April 30, 1948

Dear Mr. Pearson:

We have not attempted to prepare a general report of the discussions which took place during the visit to Washington this week of Mr. Howe and Mr. Mackenzie or of the preliminary discussions in the latter part of last week in which some or all of Messrs. Skelton, Deutsch, Drury, and Beattie took part. We have passed on already various pieces of information secured in the course of these discussions. I understand, however, that those from Ottawa who participated are themselves reporting on what transpired. It may be useful for purposes of record if I give you an account of the arrangements and my own conclusions on the value of these talks.

Our first direct contact with the Economic Co-operation Administration was at a meeting arranged by Tyler Wood on the morning of April 22nd, at which Deutsch, Skelton, Drury, and Beattie were present as well as Murray, Keith, and myself. We had been nervous about this meeting on the ground that it might prove to be premature. In the event, however, it turned out to be very satisfactory, largely due to Bissell of E.C.A. He came with a personal assistant, and the rest of those present were from the State Department. Bissell made a very good impression on all of us. He is frank, able, and articulate. Deutsch has already reported on the proceedings,† so I need say no more about what happened.<sup>18</sup>

At the meeting several further discussions were arranged for the next day. I have seen Beattie's report<sup>19</sup> of the financial talks which he had with the Americans and the British. Drury accompanied him for part of the time. On Canadian availabilities, Drury, Skelton, Murray, and Paterson<sup>20</sup> represented us at a long meeting that afternoon at which the Canadian estimates were discussed in some detail and requests were made for further information, which are, I think, being looked after by those who have returned to Ottawa.

Drury established some contacts with the British on shipping aspects of E.R.P., and also on Monday last he and Paterson had [Dennis] Fitzgerald, now head of the Food Division of E.C.A., to lunch.

Mr. Howe and Mackenzie arrived on Sunday afternoon, and the Canadians concerned met after dinner to go over the ground with them. Mr. Howe spent Monday morning at the Chancery and held a small press conference, to which were invited only those who had made enquiries about his visit. Your acquaintance, du Pury, as usual made a nuisance of himself at this conference by persistently asking silly questions.

On Monday afternoon, Mr. Howe, accompanied by Mackenzie, Stone, and myself, saw Foster, the Under-Secretary of Commerce, and Bruce, the Assistant Secretary, for a general discussion of export control. They were not able to give us details of the new policy they are adopting in order to permit them in effect to discriminate against the Eastern European countries. Foster emphasized the great complexities of the problem and said that their policy would have to be approved by the Cabinet. We now learn that it is to be taken up next week in the Cabinet by Sawyer, the new Secretary of Commerce.

We learned incidentally that both Foster and Bruce are moving to E.C.A. Foster is expected to become deputy to Harriman in Paris and Bruce is to be the representative of E.C.A. to the French Government. The representative in London had not been selected up to a day or two ago. I am not sure whether you know Foster. He is a very attractive person and most frank and friendly towards Canada. He told me later that day that Hoffman had wanted him as his deputy in Washington, but it is almost certain that he will be going to Paris instead.

Mr. Howe and the others from Ottawa who still were here attended a party late on Monday afternoon which we had arranged some time ago for the joint committee maintained by the U.S. and Canadian Chambers of Commerce. They were fresh from a discussion of the economic relations between Canada and the U.S. which had taken place at their meeting at Hot Springs.

To my surprise I succeeded in securing all the top people in E.C.A. for a small men's dinner at the house that evening. We had Hoffman, Harriman, Bissell, Foster, and Wayne Taylor, together with Mr. Howe, Mackenzie, and Stone. The occasion went very well. They were in no position to make any commitments. Mr. Howe had a long talk after dinner with Hoffman, Harriman, and Bissell, in the later stages of which I joined. He received most cordial assurances of their desire to work very closely with us. He was advised to make arrangements for effective Canadian representation in Paris to maintain contact with Harriman and the O.E.E.C. They are all emphatic on their desire to centre as much as possible of the task of allocation and programming in the O.E.E.C., while recognizing that during the current quarter and probably the third quarter of 1948 the decisions will have to be reached in Washington. They advised a delay before reaching any conclusions about the manner in which we should be associated with E.C.A. in Washington.

At this dinner the opportunity was taken of briefly reviewing our own financial position. At no time in the course of these meetings was any suggestion made that we should extend further credit to the United Kingdom unless we turned out to have a substantial increase in our current account surplus resulting from an unusually good crop. In short, all the senior people with whom we have dealt during the last two or three months in various departments and agencies appear to have accepted our own conclusions. I think that any impressions to the contrary which have reached Ottawa arise from the arguments of Figures of the British Treasury Mission, and I am pretty sure that Gordon Munro does not support him.

We have written separately about various questions that arose in the course of Mr. Howe's appointments last Tuesday, April 27th. He met at 10 a.m. a delegation urging the relaxation of our restrictions on the importation of fruits and vegetables. At 11 he went with Stone to see Barrows, the Under-Secretary of the Air Force, to impress on him our interest in securing a contract for Canadair for the overhaul of DC-4's. The State Department gave him a luncheon at Blair House at one, at which Willard Thorp acted as host. Garrison Norton, Wood, Hickerson, Foster, and Southard of the Treasury were present. In the afternoon before leaving I went with him to see Lovett and Garrison Norton, and I have written you separately about these calls.

On the whole, I think it was a useful visit and established the right sort of atmosphere at this end. There was no attempt on either side to secure commitments; and the effect will be, I hope, that our relations with E.C.A. will be cordial and understanding. Certainly the Canadian interest in E.C.A.'s operations should be uppermost in the minds of the Administrator and his senior assistants. Incidentally, we were, I believe, the first foreign government with which Hoffman had any direct contact. Lord Inverchapel, who for some time was seeking an appointment with him, only succeeded a couple of days ago.

Yours sincerely,
H.H. WRONG

[Ottawa, May 5, 1948]

REPORT ON CONVERSATIONS IN WASHINGTON REGARDING THE EUROPEAN RECOVERY PROGRAMME

The purposes of the recent trip to Washington by Messrs. A. Skelton, J.R. Beattie and C.M. Drury, were three in number:

- (1) To lay before the Americans, Canadian estimates of the balance of payments forecast for the second calendar quarter of 1948 as between Canada and the United Kingdom.
- (2) To present to the Americans, with suitable verbal comments, a list of Canadian commodities and services which would likely be available for purchase by the O.E.E.C. countries during the four months April-July, 1948.
- (3) To endeavour to develop some concrete form of association between Canada and the United States on E.R.P. matters.

Rather than deal with the visit under the headings of discussions in chronological order, an outline will be given of the information and impressions gathered in respect to each of the main topics discussed.

Direct Canadian Financial Assistance To O.E.E.C. Countries

As has been done continuously in the past, it was again made clear to the Americans that direct Canadian financial assistance to the O.E.E.C. countries in 1948 could not exceed our estimated surplus on current account, which was now forecast at about $150 million, but that this forecast and the whole position would be reviewed when the crop returns had been examined. Mr. Spiegel of the State Department provided us with a copy of a statement which had been made to Mr. Taber's<sup>21</sup> committee, outlining the Canadian position in this regard for 1948 in unexceptionable terms. It is now, therefore, in the Congressional record that, unless Canada realizes a better than average crop this year, no more than $150 million of credits will be forthcoming. However, at the same time, Mr. Spiegel had presented to this committee an estimate of possible non-U.S. grants and credits to O.E.E.C. countries from other Western Hemisphere countries during the fifteen months April, 1948 — June, 1949, totalling $700 million. Of this amount Canada is put down for $150 million, which would represent a rate of $10 million a month, whereas we now anticipate granting credits from April 1 for the remainder of the calendar year at a rate of about $8 million per month. Spiegel admitted that their estimate might have perhaps been optimistic, but it was hoped that it would be realized.

Also under the heading of credits from "other Western Hemisphere countries" is an item of $150 million entitled "Other" (in other words — unspecified). Mr. Spiegel indicated that this would include miscellaneous hoped for credits from other Latin American countries, Brazil, Uruguay and Cuba in particular. He also hinted that perhaps Canada might be able to cover a small part of this sum. It was of interest to note that Argentina was to put up $400 million, of which $300 million represented the credit to the United Kingdom arising out of the sale of the Argentine railways. It seems reasonable to argue now that our figure of $150 million for 1948 is now pretty generally accepted, although undoubtedly United States officials hope that in September or thereabouts more credits will be made available.

There was in this exposé to Mr. Taber's committee no figure set for the Canadian contribution as a result of sales abroad at less than world prices. However, the State Department intend to compute the figure which this represents, and to make use of it when any suggestions are made by Congressional or other people that either the United States is carrying too high a proportion of the load, or that Canada is not doing her share. This seems to be the form in which we will get "credit" for this action on our part, as it is clear that in the computations establishing the anticipated balance of payments deficits of the O.E.E.C. countries with the Western Hemisphere, the Canadian special contractual prices had already been discounted.

Second Quarter Balance of Payments Position With the United Kingdom

The U.S. representatives expressed great interest in our forecast of the second quarter balance of payments position with the United Kingdom, but unofficially were told that, while there was a difference of opinion as to the U.K. deficit, we did not feel entitled to reveal the figures until there had been further discussions with the U.K. representatives. Mr. Beattie did not succeed in arriving at an agreed deficit with the U.K. representatives, and our estimates were given to the U.S. authorities following this inconclusive discussion.

Supply of Commodities

At a meeting attended by representatives of the State Department, Agriculture and Commerce, Mr. Skelton went through the Canadian table of availabilities for the first four months of the Programme, and compared them with the figures shown against Canada in the Brown Book. Apart from demonstrating that Canada would have available a substantial unused capacity for the production of manufactured items, the major difference disclosed was a failure to take into account our availability of some $40 million worth of coarse grains. Mr. Craig of the State Department said that no mention of Canadian coarse grains had been made in the Brown Book because of higher Canadian prices. We are to elaborate on our availability of coarse grains and to examine the possibility of offering at prices more in line with United States prices. It was also disclosed that in some instances Newfoundland production had been included under the heading "Canada".

In regard to unused Canadian manufacturing capacity, Mr. Skelton stated that a study of the Brown Book showed clearly a tendency to allocate to the United States a high proportion of manufactured, and consequently high unit profit, items while the provision of raw materials and basic commodities was left to Canada and the other Western Hemisphere countries. He suggested that it would be in the best interests of all concerned in the European Recovery Plan to keep the Canadian economy operating at a high level and to this end greater orders for manufactured items would be helpful.

There was considerable discussion regarding the provisions of the Economic Cooperation Act, which enjoined the Administrator from making use of E.R.P. funds to purchase abroad agricultural commodities which are in surplus in the United States. Mr. Craig indicated that not only would the Administrator not authorize such purchases, but that he might discourage the O.E.E.C. countries from making use of their dollar earnings or reserves, over which theoretically the Administrator has no control, to purchase outside the United States agricultural commodities which are in surplus there. The following day, however, Mr. Dennis Fitzgerald stated that Canada need not be seriously alarmed over the surplus clauses. In his view, the Secretary of Agriculture would be cautious in informing the Administrator that any particular agricultural commodity was in surplus supply in the United States, because, insofar as he, Fitzgerald, could arrange it, the Administrator would demand that the Commodity Credit Corporation make available to the E.C.A. any such surplus commodity at the 50% discount provided for C.C.C. regulations. Indiscriminate declaration of commodities to be in surplus would, therefore, result in a heavy drain on C.C.C. funds which the Secretary of Agriculture is desirous of conserving.

United Kingdom-Canada Food Contracts

During the course of a short discussion Mr. Drury and Mr. Murray had with Sir Gordon Munro, Mr. Lee<sup>22</sup> and Mr. Figgures of the United Kingdom Embassy, Mr. Lee and Mr. Figgures expressed great interest in Mr. Howe's visit and its purpose, which they felt must be to persuade the U.S. authorities that Canada would not be able to make available any further credits to the United Kingdom. This, said Mr. Figgures, was in his view the most pressing Canadian problem. The Administrator, the U.K. authorities feel, was not coming to a final decision on the allocation of funds to the United Kingdom, as he was not satisfied that more Canadian credit to the United Kingdom was impossible. This was resulting in the United Kingdom having to continue to use their reserves in order to finance current purchases, and the British are fearful that at some future date the Administrator would not agree to reimburse them in the full amount spent. The British problem, therefore, was to force the Administrator to a decision. To a suggestion that a joint approach to the Administrator by Canada and the United States might be made, Mr. Drury replied that such an approach was not regarded with favour in Ottawa, and that we were not persuaded that it would be productive of a useful result. Mr. Lee then said that the United Kingdom was giving serious consideration to informing the Administrator that because of the uncertainty of the United Kingdom position, they would have immediately to revise their import programme, and eliminate some of the marginal items. As an example of a marginal item, Mr. Lee quoted meat. It was suggested by Mr. Lee that it is possible that the U.K. will find itself in a position where it is unable to accept and pay for any Canadian meat surpluses if, indeed, it is able to take the entire contractual amounts.

Canadian Association With E.C.A.

Following the lead given by Mr. Bissell of the E.C.A., it is now frankly admitted by nearly all United States officials that a close association between Canada and United States is desirable on E.R.P. matters. Mr. Bissell pointed out, however, that Mr. Hoffman's organization was still in the embryonic stage, and that they were not in a position to discuss with Canada even generalities. Mr. Bissell himself, although perhaps the one most directly concerned with the problem, had not yet been able to give any thought to the question of off-shore purchases. He hoped, however, that in about two weeks' time that they would be in a position to invite us to consider together specific problems. In the meantime, he welcomed any information regarding our financial and supply position which we care to make available. He emphasized that E.C.A. attached great importance to having as much of the planning and allocation of work as possible done in Paris, so that the Administrator's organization in Washington would merely act as an approving (or disapproving) body. In his view, it will be desirable for Canada to be strongly represented in Paris, if our interests were to be adequately put forward. As to the precise form of our association in Washington, he said that this question must be left until E.C.A. could see more clearly how they themselves were going to work.

Frank Lee, Head, United Kingdom Supply Mission in United States.

Mr. Bissell also emphasized that from the United States point of view, the greatest problem would be reconciling and meeting the European deficit with the Western Hemisphere and that in the initial stages, at any rate, considerable energy would be devoted in Washington to consideration of the balance of payments forecasts of the various European countries.

It is understood that Mr. Hoffman, likewise, assured Mr. Howe that close cooperation between Canada and E.C.A. was desired by him, and that he suggested in the meantime the appointment of a good man to keep in touch with E.C.A. in Paris.

It would appear that it might be desirable for Canada to be represented in Paris insofar as E.R.P. is concerned by a fairly high level representative with ability to keep in touch with Mr. Harriman and the O.E.E.C. He might perhaps be supported by a financial man and a commodity man.

How E.C.A. Might Work

As far as can be gathered from the recent discussions and previous information, it is the intention of the Americans (a) to shift from Washington to Paris the center of gravity of E.R.P., and (b) to make use of private trade channels insofar as possible. To what extent these aims will be realized, it is now difficult to say.

It seems likely that O.E.E.C. will be able to prepare a consolidated European import programme on an annual basis, or perhaps even on a quarterly basis, although there have been suggestions that E.C.A. in Washington would undertake the quarterly breakdown of the annual programme. There is also little doubt that the Paris organization will be able to accomplish in a large degree the allocation as between European countries of items in short supply, particularly in collaboration with existing international organizations which now allocate specific commodities. However, it is doubtful whether the Paris countries themselves, without some form of United States intervention, will be able to agree on a division of the total E.C.A. funds available, and it is, therefore, not out of the question that the consolidated import programme will exceed the total funds available, and the onus will be thrown on the Administrator to cut down where he considers it most equitable. On the basis of previous United States practice, it is unlikely that the Administrator will make more than purely tentative allocations of funds on more than a quarterly basis, so that an annual programme for any one country must necessarily be likewise tentative.

Once either a quarterly programme or items within it are approved, requisitions will be prepared by the European governments for approval by the Administrator, showing the commodity, quantity, quality, price, source of supply and expected delivery date. This document will serve as a basis for claiming reimbursement by the importing country or for payment by the supplier.

A draft United States document outlining the procedure for settlement of payment for E.R.P. purchases was made available, and has been circulated to those concerned in Ottawa. The State Department representatives have undertaken to advise of changes made in this draft.

Shipping

Unfortunately neither Mr. Granville Conway nor Mr. McCullagh were in Washington. It appears that Mr. Conway has been asked by Mr. Hoffman to assist him in devising a shipping policy insofar as E.C.A. is concerned and that he and Mr. McCullagh are currently giving thought to this. It is, however, understood that Mr. Conway is not willing to give up his association with the Cosmopolitan Shipping Company and that consequently he will not be joining E.C.A.

Mr. Magann and Mr. Drury had a short discussion with Mr. Cross of the U.K. Embassy on the E.R.P. shipping question, in which Mr. Cross pointed out that until the large scale bulk movement of United States coal to Europe declined substantially, there was no reason to be apprehensive of the 50% rule contained in the European Cooperation Act. Mr. Cross said that at present 58% of cargoes from the U.S.A. were moving in U.S. bottoms owing to lack of European tonnage. It is, however, likely that there will be an important decrease in trans-Atlantic coal shipments even during 1948 and this will alter the situation to the disadvantage of Canada.

The British are endeavouring to avoid having the 50% rule applied except in the loosest manner, and have proposed a continuation of the present joint shipping committees which allocate tonnage on a basis of availability and convenience. Mr. Cross feels that, in the face of a British threat to employ British tonnage, made surplus in the North Atlantic as a result of the application of the 50% rule, in the South Atlantic and other dollar areas, in competition with U.S. lines, American shipping interests will not press too strongly for giving the rule its full effect.

Mr. Magann will endeavour to secure informally Mr. Conway's views on this whole range of questions.

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Ottawa, May 6, 1948

Dear Norman [Robertson],

You will be interested in the attached letter from Hume [Wrong] regarding the recent visit of Howe to Washington, which seems to have gone off very well. Consideration is now being given to representation in Europe of Canadian interests in E.R.P. It is, as you know, the policy of the Americans to move as much of their E.C.A. to Paris as possible and to make that city the center of their liaison and programming work with the European governments. As you have pointed out, they may not be successful in this, but they are certainly going to try. For that purpose, Harriman and many of the top people concerned will be moving to Paris shortly.

Mr. Howe, therefore, feels that our representation in Europe should be on a somewhat higher level than that visualized previously. He is anxious to have someone in Paris senior and experienced enough to talk with Harriman and the top Americans. Mr. Howe suggested that Syd Pierce would be admirable for that purpose, and of course we all agree with him. I am, therefore, getting in touch with Pierce at once, to tell him that he is to move to Paris. In some ways this will be a disappointment to him, as he is settling down in Mexico very well. It also confronts us with the problem of finding someone to replace him there. On the other hand, the Paris job may be of such importance that we should have someone there of his standing. If, later, the Americans should be unsuccessful in their efforts to transfer the major part of E.C.A. activities to Paris, and the center of gravity shifts back to Washington, Pierce may have to shift with it.

It has been suggested that, in order to maintain close connections between Pierce and his work and the Embassy, he should be appointed Minister in Charge of Economic Affairs, under the Ambassador. This has been mentioned to Vanier, who thinks it would be a good arrangement, though he does not know yet that we have Pierce in mind. If it were done this way, Pierce would naturally have the right to report directly to Mr. Howe.

However, it may be desirable, in the first instance, not to formalise Pierce's position, but to keep him as Ambassador to Mexico until we are a little more certain how the job in Paris will work out. If this could be done, he would go to Paris on leave from Mexico and, after a few weeks there, we could formalise his position as Minister, if that were desirable or, if the Paris job turned out to be less important than we had thought, the way would still be open for retreat to Mexico. There may be some technical and protocol difficulties in the way of acting in this fashion, but we are looking into the matter.

All this will alter [A.E.] Ritchie's work to some extent, in that he will not have to spend so much time in Paris, though he should, of course, keep in very close touch with Pierce and his work there. He might, in fact, look after the London end of these matters. I think this will satisfy Ritchie, and I think it will be more satisfactory than the previous arrangement from your point of view.

Yours sincerely,

MIKE [PEARSON]

TELEGRAM WA-1614

Washington, May 29, 1948

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

Economic Cooperation Administration. Our meeting yesterday morning with Bissell, Tyler Wood and Strange of ECA was a most useful one in giving us a good impression of how some phases of the European Recovery Programme will operate. Pierce and [A.E.] Ritchie, who accompanied me (together with English,<sup>23</sup> Keith and Murray) found it particularly gratifying to see the easy, straightforward and friendly way in which Bissell and his associates approach the problem of Canada's association with the European Recovery Programme. Following is a resumé of the questions discussed:

(1) Canadian Budget and Canadian Financial Contribution. We mentioned the absence of any important tax reductions in the Canadian budget as an important indication of the Canadian Government's willingness to take politically difficult measures in order to curb inflationary pressures, thereby helping to create an export surplus. There was no suggestion that anyone, either ourselves or the ECA, should examine the possibility of our extending further credits before September, when the size of our crop will be known. Bissell said that he was aware that when we knew the size of our crop we would then better be able to forecast what part of our export surplus we would be able to finance. He referred in passing to the possibility of a considerable break in wheat prices, and showed that he appreciated how this would influence our current account surplus. We pointed out, of course, that since our reserves are still at much too low a level, our financial officials had not and could not undertake to make any commitments to make available, in the form of loans or grants, any additional overall surplus which they might see in sight as the result of a favourable crop.

(2) Programming. Strange described the functions of the newly created and rapidly expanding Trade Division. Three weeks ago (WA-1439 of May 13th†), Strange arrived from Boston to become the first member of what was soon to be called the Trade Division. This division is now rapidly expanding in scope, personnel, and title. Its new title, which Bissell cited as an example of the horrors of Washington bureaucracy, is "Trade Policy and Programme Coordination Division." This division, which we will continue to call the Trade Division, is headed, for the summer months only, by Lincoln Gordon of the Harvard Business School. The division will consist of 9 branches, with 5 branches concerned with various countries — one senior official for the United Kingdom and Ireland, one for the Scandinavian countries, one for Belgium-Luxembourg and France, one for the Mediterranean, and one for Germany, Austria and Trieste. There will be two area branches one dealing with intra-European trade and one with extra-European trade. There will also be two so-called staff branches, one dealing with the programming of capital goods, the other being responsible for programme co-ordination. This latter group will determine recommendations for the allocation of the ECA funds between the various countries and also the allocation of each country between food items on the one hand and industrial goods on the other. They are also to determine which commodities are put on a loan basis and which on a grant basis. The Trade Division, which is obviously much the most important division of the ECA will report to the Administrator through Bissell. It will be represented in Paris and in each of the ECA missions abroad.

In response to our queries about how far the ECA intended to go in examining into the numerous and complex private trade deals between a recipient country and a supplying country such as Canada, we received a somewhat vague reply that the ECA's aim is to "maximize" trade both ways between participating countries and supplying countries and that within two months the ECA will be able to make recommendations concerning "commodity flows and trade flows." One of the ECA's problems in this connection was described as "looking at total trade patterns." It would seem to be a fair conclusion, particularly as far as Canada is concerned, that the ECA could not and would not want to scrutinize every transaction between British and Canadian interests. The ECA must, however, reserve their right to look at the total programmes of the recipient countries with the Western Hemisphere countries; otherwise they could easily, in Bissell's words, "squander" ECA's money.

Strange and Wood both heartily agreed that there is no objection at all to getting any of the items on our availability list (provided that they are recovery items or essential food items) into the individual countries' programmes. With the example of mining machinery, which we mentioned, Wood said that this could be included in the recipient country's (say Sweden's) total programme. The Swedish importer could then go ahead and make the appropriate contract. If it turned out that the mining machinery is not financed by the ECA, then the Swedes could pay for it themselves out of their own resources. There appears to be absolutely no way whatsoever of obtaining any assurance, when a sale of Canadian item is being made in Sweden, or France, that it will eventually be financed by ECA funds. Wood and Strange were in complete agreement with Pierce's observation that a good deal will be left to the judgment of the recipient countries themselves; therefore, the course of action which we should adopt without delay is to make known our Canadian availabilities and get the country to nominate Canada as a source of supply in the development of their overall programme. Any such nomination having become part of the country's programme, would have to clear whatever obstacles might arise in Paris and later here. In programming the countries will be free to express their preferences. It is obvious that for certain classes of competitive goods it may be preferable for recipient countries when nominating Canada as a source of supply to indicate that financing will be achieved through earnings in Canada rather than placing dependency on ECA dollars for this purpose.

(3) Canadian Availabilities List. ECA officials will be eager to see our new list and will wish to have the Food Division (Fitzgerald) and the Industry Division (no one yet) make a thorough study of our list. Bissell suggested that it would be a good idea to have their officials in these two divisions separate the various items in our list into either food items or industry items. We said that someone from Ottawa would bring this list down, probably next week.

(4) Shipping. We expressed the concern which our shipping companies, Maritime Commission and Government officials feel about the possibility of a serious loss of business for the Canadian Merchant Marine as a result of the operation of the 50 per cent clause in the Foreign Assistance Act.

Bissell did not pretend to an intimate, first-hand knowledge of the shipping situation, and therefore could not discuss our particular problem in concrete terms. He did say, however, that he hoped we were "worried without good cause". He said it was his understanding from Conway that more than 50 per cent of the cargoes moving to Europe from the United States were now moving in United States vessels and that this should continue to be the case during the first programme year. Bissell suggested that we might find our merchant marine problem will be created much more by the shrinking of bulk movements than by the 50 per cent provision. He pointed out that if the European crops are as good as present indications suggest they will be and if the United Kingdom coal output continues to go up then bulk cargoes from the United States will fall off very sharply indeed. If the ERP is to succeed it is in these two items, particularly coal, that a great lessening of dependence on the Western Hemisphere must take place as rapidly as possible.

(5) Documentation. When we mentioned our concern with the documentation problem which seemed to be looming and which had already appeared in the case of Canadian bacon, Bissell said that he had been made well aware of the problem by Frank Lee. He said that he personally hoped that it would be possible to adopt the simple procedures which we had suggested. However, this was a question to be decided by the Comptroller in consultation with Howard Bruce, the Deputy Administrator. Further consideration of this problem will therefore be in the hands of the Comptroller and Tyler Wood as Bruce's Deputy.

(6) Functions of the O.E.E.C. Bissell told us of an important change in their thinking of the proper functions of the O.E.E.C. which has taken place since our first meeting with him a month ago. He said that they are now "increasingly of the view that the O.E.E.C. cannot go beyond programming in broad terms." It had become clear that the O.E.E.C. could not handle the volume of business which would develop if they had to come forward with very detailed commodity breakdowns etc. O.E.E.C. will be expected to deal in lists of broad commodities such as steel but they will not be required to go into the breakdown of scrap, strip, sheet steel and so forth. This change in their view (a change which he said is welcome by the O.E.E.C. countries, particularly the United Kingdom) did not represent any retreat from their oft-expressed view that "the basic economic decisions must be taken in Paris." (You will recall that this general point was made by Hoffman at his fourth press conference (WA-1520 of May 20th†). The presentation of ECA of actual purchase requests for the financing of specific commodities through ECA funds will be done in Washington. Bissell said that this led him to suggest that ECA may need to maintain closer relationships with us here in Washington than he had thought would be the case a month ago. We consider that this shows the wisdom of the decision to make Pierce's mission to Paris an exploratory one instead of proceeding precipitately to establish an organization there. Harriman confirmed this later at a luncheon discussion.

(7) Conclusion. Although many of the ECA's ideas on how the ERP will operate are much clearer than they were a month ago they are still very far from being fixed. Even on the question of their own headquarters in Washington, where one might expect clearer and more definite ideas than on the whole ERP itself, Bissell said, in speaking of the new trade division, that they didn't have a full understanding of their own organization themselves but that he wished us to have as good an understanding of it as they themselves had. In a broad way, we may now expect the programme to develop somewhat as follows:

The European countries and Paris will remain the centre of the very important basic programme work. The countries will come to Paris with their individual programmes (we hope having as large a Canadian content as we and the country can manage). There the great squeeze will take place as all the countries try to have the largest possible programme receive the concurrence of their fellow members on the O.E.E.C., and the blessing of roving Ambassador Harriman. In Paris we will be able to provide most useful information to the Americans on our availabilities so that problems arising from countries' programming say four times our nickel output could be quickly eliminated. When the Paris programming has been completed, the decision on the allocation of ECA funds will still very definitely remain in Washington with the Administrator. When he has allocated the ECA funds, it will then be the individual country's mission in Washington which will have to fill up the "Programme Requisition and Authorization Form." This is the step which produces ECA dollars. Individual countries will, of course, have different procedures in Washington leading up to this final step.

How Frank Lee, Head of the British Supply Office has handled the $300 million dollar grant and expects to handle future sums shows, in the United Kingdom case at least, how slender the connection is between the programming which has so far been done in Paris (and in the "brown books") and the translation of these programmes into ECA dollars. Having received the $300 million dollars, the British have put up for ECA financing those commodities on which the documentation hurdle would be the easiest. (Of the $300 million, they have asked ECA to finance purchases in Canada to the extent of $131 million dollars.) Ends.

Economic Cooperation Administration. Following for Pearson from Wrong, Begins: The question of how Canada should be more closely associated with the European Recovery Programme and with ECA will almost certainly be raised with us in the near future. The problem of fitting Canada into its proper place in the European Recovery Programme is one which is almost as old as Secretary Marshall's speech at Harvard. Last fall, when the State Department were working at full speed to draw up the European Recovery Programme, the question of Canada's association with ERP was brought up several times both by ourselves and by the officials from Ottawa who came here to discuss Canadian availabilities. At that time, about all that was required from Canada was information, so that there was no pressing concrete need for close association with the United States officials.

2. In the first three months of this year when this question was put to the State Department they were able to shy away from it, particularly when it became clear that the State Department would not be allowed to run the programme. They were able to say quite properly that this would be a question to discuss with the ECA. When Mr. Howe and Mackenzie saw Hoffman, Bissell and Harriman three months ago the problem of associating Canada with the ERP and ECA was postponed on the sensible ground that there was no need to rush into any precipitate action during the early days of ECA. The idea at that time was that there was no need to "formalize" Canada's association with the ECA. Bissell, in expressing this thought, did say that some time at a later stage they would undoubtedly wish to discuss this question. I understand that the ECA officials consider that the time for such discussions is rapidly approaching.

3. A memorandum is now being prepared in the Trade Division for Bissell, setting forth the reasons why, from the ECA point of view, it would be desirable to have Canada more formally associated with the ECA. The memorandum will suggest that talks be entered into with the Canadians as soon as possible preferably in July. It is realized in the ECA that it would be a disadvantage to have these talks before the annual programme has been presented to the ECA. We have, in informal discussion, reminded the ECA officials of our policy of reviewing in September the possibility of extending further credits, at the same time pointing out that it would be unsatisfactory to discuss this particular question before that date.

4. The question, however, which is uppermost in the minds of ECA officials such as Bissell and Strange is not how large a financial contribution they can get out of Canada and when — rather these officials are concerned with the difficulties which will face them if they continue to spend such a high proportion of ECA off-shore dollars in Canada (a proportion which is now in the neighbourhood of 50 per cent) without having some more formal agreement with Canada. We will find, I think, that they wish to fit us into the picture in order that we may be better able to continue to play a leading role in the European Recovery Programme. These officials already are entertaining fears that the provisions of the ECA Act on off-shore purchases, which are at present comparatively free of restrictions, may well become less and less liberal as United States surpluses of various commodities grow. If, at the same time, the total amount of funds available to the ECA is reduced, then the squeeze on the dollars available for off-shore purchases in Canada will be great.

5. The ECA may very well have other reasons in mind for wishing to move now to consider a formal and active association of Canada with the ECA. The closeness of the association which some of the ECA officials now have in mind is illustrated by Strange's comment that if a new association were to be worked out we would have officials working in the ECA headquarters who would participate in the work and decisions of the ECA.

6. As this will clearly be a most important question in our economic and political relationships with the United States, I am sending you this advance word on what the ECA officials have in mind before they request talks on this point with us. We do not know what ideas the ECA officials may have in mind on the mechanics of associating Canada with the ECA; all that we know they have in mind is the desirability of the principle of such an association. If the reaction in Ottawa is one of opposition to the principle of a formal association of Canada, we might be able to suggest the postponement of any talks until after September, when our credit position will have been reviewed. An additional reason for asking for the postponement of such talks could be the busy political situation in Ottawa next month, which would make it difficult to give adequate consideration to this question. If the ECA officials ask to have a meeting for this purpose we would, of course, have to meet with them. When we have their suggestions we could, if we so wish, ask to postpone fuller talks until later this year. Ends.

Washington, July 16, 1948

Dear Mr. Pearson:

A few days ago I sent you a message about ideas floating around in E.C.A. looking to the closer association of Canada with the operation of the Economic Recovery Program. It is impossible to say what, if anything, will come of this in the way of an approach to us. In the record of E.C.A. so far we have been well treated, and there is a very friendly attitude toward Canada on the part of the officials there. It is very important that we should preserve this position as best we can.

In this connection we are committed to review our own dollar position when the outturn of the grain crop is known in late September. I am aware that the crop prospects at present are no better than indifferent. On the assumption, however, that our position when the review is made will be considerably better than the forecast of last spring of our current balance of payments for 1948, because of improvement in crop prospects or for other reasons, we should give consideration now to the line which we should take.

Mr. Abbott's review of the increase in Canadian reserves which he gave in the House of Commons on June 25th has led to expectation here that we shall be able to make a further contribution to European recovery in one way or another. Also Mr. Howe said in the House on June 17th that in the first five months of the year the anticipated export surplus of $150 millions for the whole year had been already achieved. It appears from the figures given by Mr. Abbott that up to June 23rd, and leaving out capital transactions such as the drawings of $140 millions on the Export-Import Bank loan and certain non-recurring receipts amounting to $60 millions, our reserves increased from the low point on December 17th by about $80 millions despite the fact that drawings on the U.K. loan and other export credits amounted to $186 millions.

The statements made by Mr. Howe and Mr. Abbott are known to the people here who deal with the Canadian dollar position and are undoubtedly being taken into account by them. Using Mr. Abbott's figures alone, these people might make a calculation on the following lines:

	Millions of $
Reserves on June 23rd, 1948 .....	742
Reserves on December 17th, 1947 .....	461
Improvement.....	281
Deduct: Drawings on Export Import Bank loan .....	140
and
Certain non-recurring items.....	60
	200
	81
Add: Drawings in period by U.K. on 1946 loan .....	112
and
Drawings in period from other Canadian export credits .....	74
	186
Apparent change omitting government borrowings and non-recurring items .....	267

I am sure that, if this result were to be interpreted as meaning that we had acquired from the low point of December until June 23rd an additional store of $267 millions through normal visible and invisible transactions, the interpretation would be far from accurate. It might, therefore, be well for us to be put in a position in which we could correct any false impressions or expectations that might be derived from Mr. Abbott's figures. It will still appear, however, that we are now better off by a substantial amount than we expected to be.

The successful private borrowing in New York announced this week of $150 millions for fifteen years at 3% will also be noted here as evidence of a marked improvement.

We have not been under any pressure to resume a direct contribution to European recovery, but that is mainly because of our pledge to review the situation in late September. The suggestion for a closer association of Canada with the operations of E.C.A. (sometimes referred to by E.C.A. officers as a "partnership") has not been put forward in conversation with members of the Embassy in terms of Canadian financial participation. Other grounds have been adduced, mainly that the establishment of a more intimate relationship with Canada will help E.C.A. to resist pressures, such as demands from the farmers to force on Europe with E.C.A. funds surplus U.S. foodstuffs which receiving countries may not want, or may not want nearly as much as other goods. I have doubts whether any form of partnership with Canada would abate such a pressure as this. I cannot myself think up any practical scheme for such a closer association which would be politically defensible here and of direct advantage to us, unless we became again a financial contributor in one way or another to European recovery. I think that at the very least we should have to pledge ourselves more concretely than hitherto to make as large a financial contribution as we could just as soon as our reserve position permitted.

If our exchange position does turn out to be better than our forecast, there are, of course, various things that we could do. These include some measure of relaxation of our import and travel restrictions, the increase of our reserves, the resumption of drawings on the U.K. loan, and the extension of grants or of new credits to some of the countries in O.E.E.C. These are in part alternative courses, although they could be followed simultaneously if we had the wherewithal.

With regard to the relaxation of restrictions, Mr. Hoffman remarked to Mr. English a few days ago that he hoped that because of the improved dollar position we would be able to ease the restrictions somewhat by the end of 1948; he added that such an action would, in his judgment, be helpful in Congress when next year's E.C.A. appropriation comes up for discussion. As I was surprised that he should express this view, we have made inquiries in E.C.A. to find out whether it was a considered judgment. We have learned that Mr. Hoffman's remarks were casual and were inspired by a discussion which he had had with an old friend of his shortly before he saw Mr. English. This incident, which Mr. English has reported to his own Department, should not therefore be taken as an indication of policy in E.C.A., since Mr. Hoffman had not considered the relative advantages of other possible courses.

Some relaxation of import restrictions is, I judge, in prospect especially with respect to vegetables and fruits in the winter and spring, and this would, I believe, cause no serious criticism here. The producers in this country are one group that does not benefit directly from E.C.A. dollars; and they would readily appreciate the argument that E.C.A. dollars spent in Canada should be used in part to re-open their Canadian markets. In my own view, however, — and I am sure that this view is widely shared in Ottawa — it would be a mistake to concentrate on the easing of the restrictions to a degree which would permit the entry to Canada of prohibited or restricted imports in substantial dollar volume from the United States. This would also apply to any considerable relaxation of the travel restrictions.

I think that use of all or most of any unforecast surplus to increase our reserves would, if the amount were substantial, be open to the same type of objection — that Canada, though in a position to resume some financial part in promoting European recovery, was devoting her resources to domestic uses, while continuing to benefit largely from E.C.A.

In my opinion, therefore, we are left with the renewal of some financial contribution as the best use to which we might put additional resources, except for minor relaxations in the import restrictions. The easiest way would be to concentrate on the U.K. by agreeing on a resumption of the drawings on the loan at whatever rate may be feasible. In the first instance it would doubtless have to be done in this manner, since no new legislation would be required. Alternatively we might devise some new means of giving financial aid by grant or credit, geared with the operations of E.C.A., and related to any project of closer Canadian association with E.C.A. which might emerge. It would help here in maintaining the volume of off-shore purchases in Canada if, in these circumstances, we were to substitute grants for loans, at least in part.

I should perhaps mention another factor as influencing our policy in these respects. As you know, hitherto Argentina has not received any E.C.A. dollars in payment for her exports to Western Europe, and it has been stated that she will not figure in the E.C.A. program before the last quarter of this year at any rate. This has not caused difficulty to the U.K. as yet because of the agreement whereby Argentina is paying for part of the British interest in the railways by her exports of meat and other essentials. It will, however, soon become important to the U.K. as well as to Argentina that E.C.A. should finance a considerable part of Argentine exports to the U.K. I suspect that, unless E.C.A. changes its policy of its own volition, we shall before long find that the British are bringing pressure to bear for the adoption of a more lenient attitude towards Argentina. The U.K. undoubtedly has to have Argentine meat, and, if they can only get it by using their reserves or by reducing other imports or by E.C.A. financing, it is in our interest that E.C.A. should carry the load. Canada may, therefore, be joined by Argentina as a major supplier in the Western Hemisphere of E.C.A. financed foodstuffs. However necessary this may be in the general interest, the financing by E.C.A. of a large volume of Argentine exports would be quite likely to produce a squeeze on purchases in Canada, since otherwise the proportion of off-shore purchases in the total program would rise substantially. A renewal of Canadian financial aid would help in coping with this.

It may, of course, turn out that we shall have so little to play with that we shall have to go on as we are far into 1949. That would, I expect, be the result of a really bad crop. Also as the summer is the season of heavy imports, especially of fuels, the satisfactory results of the last six months may not be maintained.

I should be glad to receive comments on the contents of this letter in order to guide us in our discussions with officers of E.C.A. As the staff there is built up and as the veterans in the organization (i.e. those who have been there for longer than three or four weeks) move from post to post, the education of those concerned with the Canadian aspects of the program is a constantly recurring problem. There is nothing novel in the suggestions put forward in this letter, but I have thought it well to set forth at this stage my point of view on how we can best maintain our favourable position.

Yours sincerely,
H.H. WRONG

TELEGRAM EX-1835

Ottawa, July 20, 1948

CONFIDENTIAL

Your WA-2017 of July 13, regarding discussions with E.C.A., and further EX-1790.†

You will readily appreciate that whether or not to engage in discussions with E.C.A. officials on the question of a more formal liaison between Canada and the United States regarding the operation of E.C.A., gives rise to a conflict of interest. From the strictly commercial point of view, every opportunity should probably be seized to establish and renew contacts with E.C.A. officials as a means of furthering the sale of Canadian products. On the other hand, such discussions might lead to pressure for the giving of financial undertakings by Canada, which would be difficult to resist.

With this in mind, our attitude to the American proposals to enter into discussions at this time would be governed by the nature of such discussions. If they are to concern merely the formulation of a declaration of joint intent to aid European recovery during the next three or four years, but without any specific commitments being given on either side, as was done in the case of the Hyde Park Declaration, there would be no objection in principle to commencing such talks immediately. If, however, it is the intention of the Administration to involve Canada in the assumption of defined commitments during the current and future years, then we would prefer that such negotiations be postponed until September, and form part of the review of our financial position at that time.

Regardless of the nature of the proposals, the timing of the letter I understand Mr. Hoffman is about to send to you is unfortunate in that nearly all those most concerned with E.R.P. will be out of Ottawa on holidays for two or three weeks more. These include Dr. Clark, Mr. Mackenzie and Mr. Towers. It is unlikely, therefore, that an early definite reply will be possible.

Washington, July 21, 1948

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Reference my WA-2017 of July 13th and my letter of July 16th — Question of the “Association” of Canada with ECA.

2. Yesterday, we were shown a draft of a proposed letter from Hoffman to myself, to be signed immediately, stating that the ECA believe the time has come to begin discussions with the Canadian Government, looking toward a “permanent contributing partnership” in the European Recovery Programme. The letter which the ECA officials had in mind would have become a public document. In substantial part, therefore, it was designed with a view to explaining to the United States public the merits of having Canada as a partner in the ERP. Accordingly, there were references to Canada's great interest in European recovery and to the extent and spirit of our assistance extended to Europe in the recent past, as well as a summary of the importance of our trade with the OEEC countries.

3. If this letter had become a public document, undoubtedly there would have been the undesirable reaction in Canada that we were receiving a gratuitous lecture from our neighbours on what was important to Canada. The suggestion was made to the ECA officials and accepted by them that it would be infinitely preferable, if a letter from Mr. Hoffman had to be sent, to receive one which was brief and which confined itself to suggesting conversations with Canadian Government officials to discuss any or all ERP or ECA problems of mutual concern. The position at the present moment is that, fortunately, Hoffman left Washington yesterday for Europe before the new brief letter could be sent in to him for signature. Hoffman will, however, be returning at the end of next week so we may expect to receive the “invitation to the waltz” not later than the first week in August.

4. Quite apart from the very important points of substance involved, there are also some rather important points of procedure in this matter which are, to our knowledge, by no means clearly straightened out. Section 116 of the Enabling Act, entitled “Western Hemisphere Countries”, says: “The President shall take appropriate steps to encourage all countries in the Western Hemisphere to make available to participating countries such assistance as they may be able to furnish.” The move which the ECA officials now have in mind seems to be much more than a step — It is a plunge into a full working, contributing partnership in the European Recovery Programme. In a matter of this nature and importance it is obvious that the State Department, which has been relegated to a back seat in the administration of the recovery programme, should play a leading role. Paul Nitze (who is at the moment, in the absence of Thorp at Geneva, the senior official on the economic side of the State Department) is, we understand, familiar with and in favour of the ECA's ideas for a Canadian partnership in the ERP. This is not at all surprising since Nitze has always been a great one for programming and planning. We told the ECA officials of the importance of seeing that the political side of the State Department, in particular. Hickerson, was consulted as well as the economic side.

5. In talking to the ECA officials we are taking the line that we are entirely willing to discuss with them any ideas or proposals which they may wish to put forward. We have, however, at the same time pointed out the very great attractions from the Canadian point of view of having informal working arrangements with the United States. The fact that the arrangements might be informal does not in any sense mean that the closeness and effectiveness of our association would be diminished. The main ECA argument which has been advanced, so far, of the importance to Canada of being a definite partner in this operation is that if we are not partners the amount of off-shore purchases in Canada will inevitably drop off a great deal. We gather that United States commodities are forcing their way to the front in such a manner and at such a pace that those who are concerned with the long-term outcome, as well as the more immediate problems of the programme, fear that Canada will be more and more left out. They would argue that if we are not fitted into the picture as a partner it will be next to impossible to protect our legitimate trade interests. We cannot, however, begin to assess the seriousness of the prospect of a sharp dropping off of ECA dollar expenditures in Canada until we have had thorough conversations with all the United States officials concerned. On page 2 of the report of the meeting of the Trade and Commerce representatives with Pierce in Paris it is stated that: "The point which, above all else, must be remembered was that the ECA itself gave complete freedom to ERP countries to nominate Canada as a source of supply if price and other conditions of sale were comparable. The practice of the ECA administration gave countries the same complete freedom." It is this "practice" which some ECA officials suggest is now in jeopardy unless we are able to proceed on a partnership basis.

6. Our dilemma, the importance of which we cannot fully estimate unless we have had official conversations with the ECA, is whether we would get more burned by going in than frozen by staying out. Ends.

Ottawa, July 26, 1948

My dear Colleague:

Mr. Hume Wrong's letter to Mr. Pearson of July 16, and his telegrams WA-2017 of July 13 and WA-2104 of July 21, which have been referred to my Department, indicate that the Economic Cooperative Administration in Washington is endeavouring now to press us into some degree of "contributing partnership" with them in their program of aid to Europe, and to secure some undertakings or at least indication of view from us before the review of our own position and policy which we told them we have planned to make in September when our situation can be better appraised.

I continue to believe we should not enter into any undertakings in this field, however informal or tentative, until we have been able to review the situation in September. If our officers in Washington must discuss the matter with Mr. Hoffman on his return early in August, it would seem to me at present they should simply point out the necessity of Canada being able to review the outlook after the crop is known and to decide upon what can be done at a time when Ministers can give proper consideration to the matter. However, the appropriate attitude to be taken in such talks early in August is a subject that should be discussed carefully here early next week by both officials and Ministers concerned, preferably in the Interdepartmental and Cabinet Committees on External Trade Policy. I would prefer such discussion next week, as Dr. Clark and Mr. Towers will not be back until that time.

The considerations which Mr. Wrong raises in his letter regarding the policy that should be followed in deciding whether and to what degree we can provide further credits or grants to European countries are, of course, some among the various questions which must be carefully considered by the Government before any statement of our views on the matter is given to the United States or other countries. His arguments must be considered in the light of the best forecast that can be made of our situation, and in the light of what the Government feels can reasonably be done in regard to consumption and capital investment in Canada, as well as in regard to exports and imports.

I must confess I find it hard to understand the reasons Mr. Wrong has transmitted for the American desire to have us associated in partnership with them, apart from the contribution we might make to the financing of the program (or the provision of items in short supply). How does it help them resist pressures urging the concentration of more European purchases in the United States to have Canadian officials working in their own organization? Surely it would be just the reverse; the Canadians would be accused of lobbying from within. Mr. Wrong himself expresses doubts as to whether such an association would abate the pressure, and indicates that the only real point in a partnership such as the E.C.A. is proposing would be a Canadian financial contribution to the program. It is wholly understandable that they should press us to share the cost of the scheme; indeed, they have a legislative direction to do so. I think we should assume, even if they do not tell us, that this is the real purpose of any partnership they propose.

I think the Ambassador and his staff did well in heading off the letter which the E.C.A. were proposing to send to us, urging Canada to participate. I hope they can continue this good work in persuading Mr. Hoffman and his officers that August will not be an appropriate time for us to come to any decisions on this matter. If the American authorities feel they must divert trade away from Canada unless we can agree in August to enter into a partnership, which they have apparently indicated to our Embassy is a possibility, then we shall have to consider the matter seriously in August, but it will clearly not be under circumstances likely to bring about the best decision. I find it hard to believe they will wish to force matters in this way. We are not asking or expecting favours from them, or assistance for ourselves. All we ask and expect, as I understand it, is that Canada be used as a normal source of supply for European trade under ERP, where and to the extent that we can supply on competitive terms or better. The high proportion of "off-shore" E.C.A.-financed purchases going to Canada may focus attention on us and create the impression that we are being favoured, but our share of total European purchases is much more modest and not the result of any special favours granted to us. In helping Europe, the United States inevitably helps Canada indirectly, but surely this fact is not justification for putting pressure on us to do more than our circumstances warrant in adding to the large-scale assistance we have already provided.

I would be glad to know if you yourself feel it important to adhere to our original decision to review this whole matter in September, and not to enter into any understandings or partnership until that time (except, of course, the usual technical cooperation in furnishing information and assistance in regard to Canadian supplies).<sup>24</sup>

Yours very truly,

CONVERSATION WITH ECA OFFICIALS

The Ambassador, accompanied by Murray, saw Richard Bissell, Assistant Deputy Administrator, ECA on Thursday afternoon, July 29th. The meeting, which took place in Mr. Bissell's office, lasted forty minutes. ECA officials present in addition to Bissell were: Arthur Smithies, Acting Director of the Fiscal and Trade Policy Division and Robert Strange, the official in Smithies' division who deals with extra-European trade problems.

2. The Ambassador opened the conversation by noting that he would be in Ottawa for a few days next week, at which time he thought it would be useful if the Canadian officials concerned with financial and economic matters could have as precise information as possible on any questions concerning Canada's relationship with the ECA and the ERP which the ECA officials might have in mind. The Ambassador said that we were aware from reports of Bissell's recent conversation with Pierce in Paris and from informal discussions in Washington that the ECA wished to arrange to talk to us at an early date on certain important points.

I do St. L[aurant]

3. Bissell replied that he welcomed the opportunity of telling us in broad outline some of the general policy considerations which they have in mind and which they would wish to discuss with our people more fully in the near future. Bissell began by saying that we should consider whatever approaches they made to us in this context in the light of ECA's general policy to encourage other countries supplying goods and services to the ERP countries to supplement whenever possible and to the extent possible the aid being supplied by the United States. He readily acknowledged that since the ECA were still in the early stages of their operations and had had so many pressing problems of organization and programming to attend to they were only just now getting around to working out their plans on this particular point. Bissell noted that although they had not yet entered into any agreement with other supplying countries on the question of contributions, nevertheless, from the beginning they had asserted their right to be able to look into the foreign exchange position of any supplying country before they approved the expenditure of ECA dollars in that country. He said that, to his knowledge, there had been only minor exceptions to this rule.

4. On this point the Ambassador recalled that we had from the outset expressed our willingness to provide the ECA with the information on our financial position and prospects as well as the availability of Canadian supplies. The Ambassador further recalled our undertaking to review our financial position in September, at which time, when the size of the crop was known, and the effect of other important factors such as the disturbing downward trend in the price of certain of our exports and the rising prices of imports could be better assessed, it would be possible for us to make some kind of a realistic forecast for the ensuing year.

5. Bissell, who had, of course, remembered our commitment to review our position in September, appreciated that it was quite impossible for us to make this review at an earlier date. He clearly wanted to dispel any fears which we might have that the ECA would wish in any way to "exert pressure on us" to make financial commitments of any kind before we had had a full opportunity to assess our own position.

6. Bissell did not hint at the idea that the ECA might set up an objective which they would ask us to agree to fill. There was no suggestion from him that we might carry a certain proportion of the load nor that there might be any predetermined ratio between the amount of ECA dollars spent in Canada and the amount of assistance which we extend. We may, however, expect to hear some suggestion of establishing a ratio between off-shore dollars and supplying countries' contributions from Smithies.

7. Bissell, several times, used the expression, "if, as, and when" we extend further financial assistance. His main concern seemed to be that if and when we were able to "supplement" the assistance being given by the United States, we should coordinate our efforts with those of the United States. He explained that the ECA would be concerned with programming and timing problems in connection with any assistance which we or other supplying countries might extend. The Andes Agreement was cited as an example (not as an example to be followed since Bissell who rarely allows his mind to be diverted from what is immediately at hand was, however, as usual, eager to take out a few minutes to let his very low opinion of the Argentine Government's practices be clearly known) of one type of credit or assistance extended by a supplying country which necessarily affects the amount of ECA aid which the United Kingdom receives. From the point of view of programming, since work on the first annual programme is now going on in Paris, and since the decisions of other supplying countries on the amount of financial assistance which they might extend materially affects this programming work, it is, from the ECA's point of view, very important to know in as much detail as possible and as far in advance as possible, the assistance plans of the important supplying countries. The Ambassador noted that if as a result of our review in September it was decided our financial position permitted the extension of further assistance (and there were many indications, e.g. the extremely small wheat crop; downward trend of prices on certain exports; upward trend of import prices; increase of demand generally as a result of the depletion of inventories accumulated before restrictions were imposed, which all pointed to the improbability of being able to extend further assistance this year) the most we could do without parliamentary approval would be to permit the renewing of the withdrawals on the British loan. Bissell said that any information of this nature which we could give them would be useful to them in their planning now and in the next few weeks. For instance, if they knew that there would be no Canadian assistance for any OEEC country except possibly the U.K., then their programming for these countries for the rest of this year could be done on a more intelligent basis.

8. Bissell never once referred to "partnership". Perhaps, as Mr. Pierce reported from Paris he slowed down Bissell on the partnership idea. If so, all that remains or, at least, all that was visible Thursday was the question of a contribution. Although Bissell did not mention formal partnership nor "close association", he readily agreed with the Ambassador that our joint war-time committees had been very useful and efficient in handling various problems, many of which were not unlike the ones facing ECA today. Although Bissell did not expand on the idea of a joint committee himself, it is fair to conclude that he would be receptive to the idea of establishing such a joint committee.

9. Strange, who must have been one of the principal proponents of the idea of a close working partnership, did not mention this idea yesterday when he was asked if he wished to expand on the remarks made by Bissell. Strange limited himself to saying that in his purely personal opinion it would be a disappointment if when we were in a position to grant further assistance we were to limit ourselves to renewing the withdrawals on the U.K. credit. Strange is definitely one of those persons who believe that a great deal of imagination and daring are essential in the other supplying countries as well as in the ERP countries and in the United States if the programme is to succeed. It was more natural, therefore, for someone like Strange to see, from an imaginative point of view, the advantages which would be gained by having us as a partner in the recovery programme.

10. Bissell, however, who is both fair-minded and very practical, seemed to be concerned in the first place with a contribution and thereafter with cooperation with ECA in the manner and timing of the contribution. He said that the cooperation required might well be limited to merely informing the ECA of what we were doing. The ECA could then act, in his words, as "the residual legatee", i.e., if we gave $100 million dollars to the U.K. they would take that into account and give correspondingly less to the U.K. Bissell also thought that it would be useful from our point of view, before we began appraising our position in September, if our officials knew in some detail of the problems which the ECA had in financing purchases in other supplying countries as well as some of their views on the form in which assistance supplied by the other supplying countries might be extended.

11. He said he would not be frank if he did not admit the ECA's definite interest in the amount and form of financial assistance extended by a supplying country if its foreign exchange position had been "significantly aided" by the expenditure of ECA dollars in that country. Since the ECA have spent something like half of their off-shore dollars in Canada, and since our exchange position has improved no matter how slowly nor how perilously, there can be no doubt but that they will regard Canada as a country whose foreign exchange position has been "significantly aided" by the ECA off-shore purchases. Bissell, who is obviously very hopeful that we will be able to resume extending further credits (including grants) and yet does not wish to give any appearance of trying to press us into taking any action, would warmly welcome any renewed assistance which we might extend for the affect which it would have in the United States quite apart from the material help which it would have in the recovery programme. Bissell said that a contribution from Canada, even though a modest one, would be "enormously helpful" in combating, to some extent the unfortunate opinion which is gaining ground here that the United States alone is carrying all the economic burdens. Bissell again showed his knowledge of the assistance which we have extended in the past by confirming what the Ambassador had said earlier, namely, that with Congress it is present virtue and not past performance which counts. He said he was well aware that on any basis which one might choose, we were well ahead of the United States in the aid which we had extended to Europe in the postwar period. This was so, he said, not only in the past but he imagined it would also easily be true until the end of this year.

12. Bissell and Smithies came out with one specific reason which explained their wish to have talks with us as soon as possible and their hope to get a commitment from us in September. They have had some very stand-offish negotiations with the Argentine. They realize, however, that they will have to solve this problem some time before the end of the year. They have had some talks and will be having others with Australia. Their position has been that they will not spend ECA dollars in these countries until they get some sort of contribution or agreement out of these countries. Since we are far and away the largest supplier of goods to Europe next to the United States, and are by all odds the largest recipient of ECA dollars, it causes the ECA some embarrassment in their talks with these countries not to have any agreement with us. On the question of which other supplying countries could be expected to "supplement" United States assistance with contributions of their own, Bissell noted that there were, in fact, only a very few countries which could be expected to make any such contribution. Only countries which had a standard of living equal to or higher than that prevailing in most areas of western Europe could, from a realistic political point of view, be expected to make a contribution.

Bissell noted that only Canada, the Argentine, the southern Dominions and possibly South Africa came within this category.

13. What Bissell undoubtedly wants to see from us more than anything else is a financial contribution. He is now satisfied that we cannot consider making any commitments in this direction until after the middle of September. Therefore, in the meantime he is content that we should have a day or a day and a half's discussions with some of their officials such as Smithies and Strange. There was some enthusiasm from Smithies and Strange that these talks should take place in Ottawa, perhaps in the second week of August, after the Liberal Convention is over. There was no disagreement that these discussions would be anything other than informative and exploratory. No commitments could be made by our side nor would they be expected.

14. Whatever it was that cooled Bissell's ardour from wishing to have a partnership to wishing merely to have the money we do not know; perhaps his recent talks with the wily Europeans have made him realize that it would be prudent, before offering us marriage, to see how large a dowry we could promise.

Ottawa, August 5, 1948

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Economic Co-operation Administration. At the meeting of the Inter-Departmental Committee this afternoon the question of Canadian association with E.C.A. was examined at length, and the general conclusion reached that the present relationship was satisfactory and required no change. In view of the difficulties which might arise out of a more formal relationship, it was not felt that such should be embraced with enthusiasm unless new factors came to light. However, a joint committee or committees were not ruled out for the future, if the U.S. pressed for this and if it could be worked out in a way agreeable to both governments.

2. Although it is appreciated that E.C.A. is not endeavouring to have us advance the time of the review of our financial position, it is nevertheless evident that financial considerations play a major role in this matter and, therefore, in the absence of decisions in this field, any discussions with E.C.A. officials could only be informal exploratory and inconclusive. We would, however, be glad to have a visit from Messrs. Smithies, Strange and Tyler Wood. In suggesting such a visit, it should be made quite clear that, while we will give them a cordial welcome, no one in Ottawa will be in a position to discuss our prospects in relation to further direct financial assistance to Europe, and that we will not be able to anticipate the review which is now planned for September.

3. It is hoped to learn from Smithies and Strange, E.C.A. policy, both short and long range if any, with regard to offshore purchasing and thus gain some indication of the significance and possible consequences of the mooted "joint approach".

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, August 6, 1948

Dear Mr. Pierce:

You will have seen from the copies of telegrams forwarded to you how talk of a partnership which was mentioned by Bissell to you in Paris and earlier discussions on a lower level to members of our Embassy in Washington has dissolved into a desire on the part of E.C.A. to learn what our intentions for the future are, and also of the proposal that E.C.A. representatives might come to Ottawa for exploratory discussions. Telegram No. EX-1943 to Washington, repeated to you as No. 336 of August 6 sets forth the conclusions on this question reached at a recent meeting of the Interdepartmental Committee, but it may be helpful to you to have in greater detail a summary of the deliberations of that meeting.

Mr. Wrong, who was present for the occasion, gave a short exposé of his views. He stated that it was important that, regardless of what decision was reached on the question of closer association, we should not in any way give offence to the E.C.A. by appearing to be standoffish and unwilling to enter into discussions. Since the inception of E.C.A. we, at all levels from Mr. Howe down, have represented to the Americans our desire for the most intimate collaboration possible and a reversal of attitude at the precise moment when offers of closer collaboration were being made could only lead to a loss of present goodwill which, to date, has stood us in excellent stead. He said that he was not sure what had prompted E.C.A. to propose at one point a "partnership". The offer might have been dictated partly by financial considerations and partly by idealistic ones. He pointed out that there were in E.C.A. a number of extremely capable, but at the same time idealistic, individuals who felt that an imaginative approach to the question of European recovery was essential if it were to succeed — an imaginative approach not only on the part of United States citizens but also on the part of the governments and peoples of other supplying countries. He had not been able to reach any definite conclusions as to the advantages which might accrue to Canada from a partnership with E.C.A. but was quite sure that if such a relationship with E.C.A. might be difficult, a partnership with the United States Congress would be impossible. Although it is impossible to compute statistically, Mr. Wrong was of the opinion that the goodwill and friendly relationship that we enjoyed with E.C.A. had resulted in a higher proportion of offshore purchases than would otherwise have been the case and that it would be entirely feasible for E.C.A., should they so wish in the event of our seriously displeasing the administration, to reduce very substantially the amount of E.C.A. money spent in this country. Although he admits that our more attractive prices, delivery dates and quality is a primary consideration in securing orders for Canada, there is no doubt that the willingness of E.C.A. to believe in and trust us has made the approval of purchases in Canada much more easy to obtain. Mr. Wrong also mentioned that E.C.A. officials have expressed the hope that a part at least of any further financial assistance that Canada might be able to provide would be in the form of grants as distinct from long term credits. Such action would serve to counter growing talk in the U.S.A. that Uncle Sam is carrying the entire burden of European aid.

Although the meeting reached no conclusions as to the motives which might have inspired E.C.A. at one time to have proposed a partnership with Canada, it was generally agreed that no definite arrangement could be concluded until the Canadian financial position and prospects for the future were ascertained. In this regard we should not allow the Administration to precipitate either the financial review or financial discussions until the date to which they had already agreed had been reached. There was some apprehension felt that, as soon as the Americans had obtained from us financial commitments to assist Europe in the future, their interest in Canada and a closer association with Canada might evaporate. This might well be the case if their sole purpose in making approaches was to secure from us the largest possible financial contribution. Some of the members of the committee also felt that association with E.C.A., no matter how close nor how formal, would not be of any use to this country when commodity surpluses in the United States began to accumulate and to exert pressure. If this is true we would have nothing to gain and everything to lose by a closer, more formal relationship.

Uncertainty as to the consequences of a more formal relationship in lieu of the present satisfactory arrangement tends to discourage the welcoming of any initiative leading towards a new setup. There is little doubt that a formal agreement entered into would limit seriously the freedom of action which we now enjoy.

One interesting point was made with regard to the possibility of our re-opening the United Kingdom credit. As things now stand, any credit which we provide directly to the United Kingdom would be almost automatically subtracted from the E.C.A. allocations to Britain. The net result of this would be to make Canada alone powerless to better the economic situation of European friends. Mr. Donald Gordon felt that in these circumstances the United Kingdom would probably not be at all keen on seeing drawings on this credit resumed at this time, but would probably prefer to allow the credit to stand as at present until the termination of E.C.A. Before deciding on such a course of action, however, the U.K. would have to consider whether or not the credit would still be a Canadian obligation so far in the future.

The meeting agreed that we should respond to the E.C.A. suggestion and consent to exploratory and non-committal talks in Ottawa. Ottawa is preferred to Washington for climatic reasons. While a visit here by E.C.A. officials will be welcome, it is being made quite clear to them that no one in Ottawa will be in a position to comment in any way on our financial situation.

As to the future, it was felt that the establishment of a joint committee or joint committees should not be ruled out as a possibility if the U.S. pressed for this and if it could be worked out in a manner satisfactory to both governments. It was agreed also that it may be necessary at some future date to indulge in window dressing if such be the desire of E.C.A. in order to assist them in their relations with Congress.

I am enclosing for your information a copy of a memorandum prepared by Drury for circulation to the members of the Interdepartmental Committee, in advance of this meeting.†

Yours sincerely,

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Minister of Finance

Ottawa, August 13, 1948

My dear Colleague:

I refer to your letter of July 26 regarding the proposals of the Economic Cooperation Administration in Washington to formalize their relationship with this country and to secure from us an indication regarding possible future direct Canadian financial assistance to Europe.

Although financial considerations probably loom large in E.C.A. thinking, I do not think that it would be correct to say that we are being pressed by the Americans either for a change in relationship or for financial commitments in advance of the agreed September review of our financial position. Since the despatch of Mr. Wrong's letter and the telegrams to which you have referred, there has been no further suggestion from E.C.A. that we should enter into a partnership either as a permanent contributor or otherwise. I am not aware at the moment of the reasons why this has not been again mentioned.

As far as I am able to learn, the purpose behind the recent approaches by officials of the Economic Cooperation Administration has not been to endeavour to secure from us, in advance of September, any financial commitments, but rather to endeavour to gain some inkling as to our possible intentions. There are, from the American point of view, good reasons for this. Decisions on the O.E.E.C. annual programme, which is expected to be received from Paris shortly, will have to be made and if they are to be soundly based, account should be taken in reaching such decisions of what, if any, Canadian participation can be expected. I understand that the Administration is also in the course of preparing their presentation for the next session of Congress and for this document also an indication of what it may or may not be possible for Canada to do would be most useful.

As you proposed, this question has been examined by the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy at a meeting at which Mr. Wrong was present. The Committee fully shares the view that it is important not to anticipate the review of our financial position planned for September and not to enter into any financial discussions with United States officials before that review is completed. It was also felt by the Committee that our present relationships with E.C.A. were satisfactory from our point of view and required no change at the moment, but that if E.C.A. desired to have informal non-committal talks with Canadian officials now, these overtures should not be rejected as such action on our part would be liable to lead to a dissipation of valuable goodwill. In accepting the suggestion that two or three E.C.A. officials pay a visit to Ottawa during the month of August, it will be made clear that any discussions which take place will be informal, exploratory and inconclusive and that no one in Ottawa can be expected to comment on our financial prospects.

The Committee felt that such talks, rather than being to our disadvantage, might enable Canadian officials in Ottawa to ascertain more of the intentions and policies of E.C.A. with regard to off-shore purchasing, and in view of its importance to the Canadian economy, it is desirable that as much as possible be learned in this regard.

Yours very truly,

L.S. ST. LAURENT

Memorandum

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa, September 2, 1948]

REPORT ON VISIT TO OTTAWA OF E.C.A. OFFICIALS

Following an E.C.A. suggestion, Mr. Arthur Smithies, Director of the Division of Fiscal and Trade Policy in E.C.A., accompanied by his assistant, Mr. Robert Strange, Mr. D. Glendinning of the Commonwealth Division of the U.S. Treasury, and Mr. W. Willoughby of the Economic Division of the State Department, visited Ottawa on August 16 and 17, for the purpose of exchanging views on the role Canada might play in the operations of E.C.A.

It was made clear to the Americans before their arrival that the talks would be exploratory and non-committal, and that we would not be in a position to discuss questions relating to the financial position of Canada or the possibility of future financial assistance. From the outset, however, it was clear that the intention of the Americans was to do as much preparatory work as possible in clearing the way for further Canadian financial assistance to Europe. Mr. Glendinning had been added to the party at the last moment. On the Canadian side those who took part at various times were Mr. Pearson, Mr. Drury and Mr. [P.M.] Towe of External Affairs, Dr. Clark, Mr. Deutsch and Mr. Perry of Finance, Mr. Skelton, Mr. Heasman and Mr. Beaupré of Trade and Commerce, Mr. Taggart and Dr. Richards of Agriculture and Mr. Beattie of the Bank of Canada.

During the discussions Mr. Smithies, who acted as spokesman for the U.S. group, pointed out that it was the fixed policy of E.C.A. to encourage all non-participating nations who could, to provide financial assistance to the O.E.E.C. countries, and indeed the Foreign Assistance Act enjoined the Administration to do this. He recognized, however, that it would not be realistic to expect many countries, other than the British dominions and perhaps Argentina, to be able to help. When other countries were able to render direct financial assistance, the role of the United States, which should not be expected to carry the entire load, would become that of financier of residual requirements. E.C.A. would not propose in any way to dictate the terms, mode or conditions of our direct aid to Europe; indeed they would not disapprove of arrangements similar to tied loans or grants, but they would like to be informed of any such action contemplated. If this were done, it would be possible to coordinate the total effort so as to achieve the maximum of effectiveness.

Mr. Smithies felt that there would be criticism in the United States of the off-shore purchasing programme in any instance where it could be shown that the result had been to augment the dollar receipts of a country to a point where its dollar reserves were unduly large, or where the importation of a large volume of luxury items from dollar areas had thereby been made possible. There should therefore, he felt, be a relationship between the volume of off-shore purchasing in any given country and its reserve position and dollar import programme. E.C.A. recognized that a certain volume of dollar imports were necessary in order to maintain productivity at a level sufficient to produce a surplus to meet European needs, and that E.C.A. should endeavour to stimulate the production of surpluses in supplying countries through the mechanism of off-shore purchases, provided that these surpluses were directed towards Europe. He felt that it would even be justifiable for E.C.A. to make off-shore purchases in higher-priced areas if the final result would be a net gain to the O.E.E.C. countries.

To achieve this would be not too difficult under the allocating and programming procedure now proposed. Although O.E.E.C. has been given responsibility for allocating the total available E.C.A. money amongst the O.E.E.C. countries on the basis of annual programmes prepared in broad outline, E.C.A. intends to programme specific shipments on a quarterly basis in consultation with the foreign missions in Washington. It seems to be intended that E.C.A. will do the actual programming and that the national missions will merely be asked for advice. Indeed it is entirely possible that little regard will be had for the desire of the importing country concerned to avail itself of a particular source of supply, if such happens to run counter to E.C.A. plans.

Mr. Smithies avoided suggesting that E.C.A., in authorizing large-scale off-shore purchases in Canada, had in any way been conferring a favour on this country. At the same time, he was not, however, prepared to accept the thesis that the bulk of Canadian exports financed by E.C.A. could easily have been sold for dollars in any event. He did think, nevertheless, that good relations with E.C.A. were of some value to this country, and conversely that it would be possible for E.C.A. to make serious difficulties for us if it wished.

During the talks it was emphasized that the rate of improvement of our financial reserves which had occurred in the first quarter of the year and to some extent in the second quarter had not by any means been maintained in the third, and that in fact our present holdings of gold and dollars was not substantially larger than the figure of $742 million announced by Mr. Abbott towards the end of June. An examination was made of a draft revision prepared by E.C.A. of our forecast of balance of payments, and although no specific figures were cited by the Canadian representatives, it was made clear in a general way that the U.S. forecast was altogether too optimistic. It was pointed out that no serious work had yet been done to review our financial position and prospects or, in fact, could be done until the outturn of the crop was ascertained. We did not expect to have this completed until towards the end of September. It was also pointed out to the Americans that, even should this review disclose a favourable financial outlook for Canada, the most that we would be able to accomplish at that time in the way of providing direct aid to Europe would be a reopening of the British credit. Until further authority from Parliament was received, no fresh credits or grants could be arranged, and Parliament would not normally be expected to meet again until sometime in January.

Mr. Smithies, at the final meeting, in summing up the E.C.A. position, said that he felt E.C.A. could with advantage explore the possibility of reaching some sort of understanding with Canada regarding future contributions. He regarded agreement as useful for the following reasons. Intimate cooperation in the matter of contributions would ensure maximum effectiveness in their application, and steps could be taken to ensure that full effect was given to the intentions of the Canadian Government. In the absence of full knowledge of our plans and intentions, E.C.A. policy might tend to render nugatory our specific aims. An agreement regarding a specific volume of off-shore purchases as a counterpart to a contribution would serve as an assurance regarding our reserves, and would enable us to set a lower figure as a safe minimum. On the Canadian side it was pointed out that agreement as to the volume of dollars for off-shore purchasing alone would not be entirely satisfactory. There would also have to be agreement covering the assured purchase of certain categories of marginal commodities. Reserves were in part necessitated by doubts regarding the likelihood of selling for dollars these marginal commodities, and not because of doubts regarding our ability to sell such basic commodities as wheat and base metals. Mr. Smithies thought that our contribution could be so arranged as to provide through it for the sale of these marginal items. Mr. Smithies was of the opinion that such an agreement would be good business for Canada in that it would help E.C.A. resist domestic United States pressure for the use of E.C.A. funds to finance large U.S. surpluses which were already looming in the agricultural field. He did not, however, contemplate seeking any amendments in this regard to the Foreign Assistance Act. Finally, it was clear that such agreement would be most helpful to E.C.A. in its future dealings with Congress and in negotiations with other supplying countries for direct contributions. He felt that in the event of any such agreement being reached, it should be publicly announced as a statement of policy.

It was agreed on both sides that these discussions had been useful. However, before any further action can be taken, it will be necessary to await the completion of the review of our financial position.

FORTHCOMING E.C.A. TALKS

Starting Monday next, discussions will be held with E.C.A. concerning further Canadian financial assistance to O.E.E.C. countries and the relationship of such assistance to the volume of off-shore purchasing in Canada.

Contribution by Canada

The Americans will expect us to be able to indicate how much further direct financial assistance we will be able to provide and to whom, it being understood that the choice of recipient lies entirely with Canada. From what has been learned from previous discussions, it is fairly certain that, if we are to avoid a deliberate endeavour to reduce purchases in Canada, we should be able to show a direct connection between financial assistance and our trade position and dollar reserves, both present and forecast. Related to future assistance is, of course, the direct financial assistance already rendered by Canada since April 1, 1948, both in the shape of financial credits and sales of commodities under contract at less than world prices.

It can be argued that the period for which undertakings by Canada may be given is that between now and June 30, 1949, the end of the U.S. fiscal year, at which time the current E.C.A. appropriation legally comes to an end. On the other hand, the Americans undoubtedly would like to have a commitment by Canada covering a longer period, as this would assist them in securing their next Congressional appropriation.

There have been strong indications that E.C.A. will press for future Canadian contributions to be all or at least partly in the shape of grants rather than loans, on the grounds that it is not realistic to expect repayment of further large loans to Europe. The view is also advanced in the United States that other countries, who are able, should not only render assistance, but should follow the U.S. practice of making a gift of at least part of the sum contributed. In view, however, of the conditions beneficial to the U.S.A. which are attached to their grants, this argument is not as persuasive as might first appear.

Is it desired to attach any conditions to be fulfilled by the recipient of a Canadian contribution, as a pre-condition to a loan or grant? In the exploratory talks conducted here with E.C.A. officials in mid-August, Mr. Smithies indicated that E.C.A. would not be opposed to the attachment of conditions, or even the tying of a grant or credit to certain commodities, by Canada.

Commitments by E.C.A.

In return for a contribution which will assist the United States and E.C.A. as well as the recipient, what commitments or assurances are desired from E.C.A.?

In the recent talks referred to, the American officials suggested that it might be possible to assure a certain volume of off-shore purchasing in Canada. Up to September 22, the total of authorized off-shore purchases in Canada is $224.6 millions which represents 14% of total E.C.A. authorizations of $1,576 millions, or 39.5% of total off-shore authorizations. In addition to receiving assurances regarding a dollar volume, are there certain marginal commodities, the sale of which we would wish to have guaranteed through the off-shore mechanism?

Procedure

As to the actual conduct of the talks in Washington, Mr. Wrong has suggested that Monday and Tuesday might be taken with talks at the official level and devoted to statistical comparisons, and perhaps some consideration of the suggestions E.C.A. might have to make regarding off-shore purchasing in Canada. The meeting between Mr. Hoffman and Mr. Abbott might take place Wednesday or Thursday. He thinks that the outcome of the top level meeting might require further talks at the official level.

The Americans, it seems clear from previous discussions, will expect the Canadian side to discuss in detail the forecast of the Canadian balance of payments, and probably expect some indication of the state of our dollar reserves. If we are unable to give them any information on either of these scores, they will probably feel that we are not being as co-operative as we have been in the past.

If our plans for future financial assistance can be determined in fairly precise terms before Mr. Abbott's departure to Washington, there might be some merit in having the conversations open with a meeting between him and Mr. Hoffman, at which Mr. Abbott would announce the Canadian plans and in broad outline the reasons why we are unable to do more. This meeting could be followed by discussions at the official level, in which detailed information could be exchanged and an examination made of the possible consequences of failure on the part of the United States to fulfil the assumptions on which our assistance is predicated. This approach would have the advantage of avoiding bargaining at the top level, and permitting the Americans to try and assess us for what they considered, in the light of information obtained, to be reasonable for Canada to contribute.

VISIT OF SIR STAFFORD CRIPPS AND
MR. ABBOTT'S MISSION TO WASHINGTON

In the light of the discussions during the past week, I have prepared the attached memorandum of September 24. In this memorandum I try to set forth in a very tentative and provisional way the draft of an outline of a program which relates to the various subjects which have been discussed during the past week.

2. Since I was not able to prepare this until last night, I have not had an opportunity to show it to Mr. Pearson. However, from the talks which I have had with him, I think it would be reasonable to assume that he would be in general agreement with most of the views set forth in the memorandum.

3. In view of the very considerable External Affairs interest in the issues to be discussed by Mr. Abbott in Washington next week, Mr. Pearson may try to have a word with you before tomorrow's meeting of the Cabinet.

4. As soon as Mr. Pearson returns to Ottawa tomorrow, I shall draw his attention to the attached memorandum and this covering note.

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures Memorandum by Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Summary

1. This is a tentative and provisional outline of a programme relating to Canadian credits to the U.K. and to E.C.A. offshore purchases in Canada. It also makes some suggestions on measures which might be taken to reduce the vulnerability of the Canadian economy. The various parts of the programme and the various suggestions are for the most part interdependent and should not therefore be considered in isolation.

Drawings on the U.K. Credit

2. The Canadian Government would inform the U.K. Government that a regular drawing of $10 million a month for the calendar year 1949 had been granted on one assumption and two conditions. The assumption would be that the U.K. Government would use its best efforts to increase to the greatest possible extent the flow to Canada during 1949 of exports from the United Kingdom and the rest of the sterling area. The first condition would be that a satisfactory token import scheme was continued in the U.K. and that a similar satisfactory scheme was adopted in U.K. colonial areas. The second condition would be that a satisfactory percentage (say 15%-20%) of Canadian exports to the U.K. was carried on Canadian ships.

3. The U.K. would also be permitted, during the last six months of 1949, an extra drawing to enable them to purchase surplus Canadian foods which they needed. A limit of $25 million would be placed on this extra drawing. This extra drawing would be granted on the following conditions:

(a) The U.K. Government would spend in Canada, during the calendar year 1949, on foods (other than wheat) $25 million more than contemplated in the programme presented by the U.K. on September 21, 1948. ("Foods other than wheat" include bacon, eggs, cheese, salmon, other fish, and apples.)

(b) The U.K. food purchases would be at the market price in Canada and the Canadian Government would permit the free flow of these commodities to the U.S.

Canada and E.C.A.

4. In return for this credit of up to $145 million during the calendar year 1949 (and for other assistance Canada has given to the reconstruction of the O.E.E.C. countries in the E.C.A. year of 1948-49), Canada would try to secure from the U.S. Government a promise (a) to make total "offshore" purchases in Canada during the year 1948-49 of not less than $ ____ million; and (b) to include in this total $ ____ million on ____, $ ____ million on ____, etc.

5. Canada would also try to secure from the U.S. Government an assurance that it would recommend to Congress that Canadian aid extended during the year 1949-50 would not diminish the aid to be granted by the U.S. under E.C.A. but would be additional to that aid.

Comments on the Above Proposals

6. In making commitments extending six months beyond June 30, 1949, Canada would be running the risk that its economic and financial position during the last six months of the year would not warrant its extending credits of up to $85 million during this period. For the following reasons, this would appear to be a calculated risk which it would be in Canada's national interest to take, in the light of the circumstances existing at present in Canada and abroad:

(a) The extension of the credit would increase our chances of getting satisfactory assurances from the U.S. Government on their offshore purchasing programme in Canada during the year 1948-49.

(b) The extension of the credit would enable the U.K. to continue throughout the whole of 1949 to take off the Canadian market surplus foodstuffs which could not otherwise be disposed of.

(c) The extension of the credit by Canada would strengthen the hand of the U.S. Government when it requests the second E.C.A. appropriation from Congress in January, 1949. If this appropriation does not go through, our economy would receive a staggering blow and our security against the threat of the Soviet Union would be gravely diminished by the shock to the political and economic stability of the O.E.E.C. countries.

(d) The extension of the extra credit of up to $25 million would enable the U.K. Government to secure bacon and eggs which are much needed by the people of the U.K. This supplement to their diet would improve their health, their productive capacity and their morale, and, since the people of the U.K. are our allies against the Soviet Union, this would indirectly strengthen our own security.

The Vulnerability of the Canadian Economy

7. The adoption of the proposals outlined in paragraphs 2 to 5 would help the Canadian economy in the fifteen-month period from now until the end of 1949. The Canadian economy would, however, remain extremely vulnerable. To reduce this vulnerability, the following measures could be taken:

(a) A continuing joint committee could be set up by the U.K. and Canada, charged with making recommendations from time to time to the two governments on the measures which each might take to increase the volume and improve the character of trade between the two countries, and to avoid, so far as possible, sudden or violent changes in the pattern of such trade. It would be hoped that, as a result of the establishment of this continuing committee, the two governments would be able to take steps to increase the flow of United Kingdom exports to Canada well above the figures given in the memorandum presented by Sir Stafford Cripps. A tentative goal might be set of an increase of the 1952-53 figure from $365 million to $465 million. It would be understood that measures would be taken by both governments. The Canadian Government might, for example, request the competent Canadian officials to study the effects on U.K.-Canadian trade and on the Canadian economy of a substantial lowering, or even an abolition, of the Canadian tariffs against United Kingdom imports. On the basis of the report of these officials, the Canadian Government might consider whether Canada's interest would be served by putting United Kingdom goods on the free list for a trial period of six months, and this period might be renewed from time to time.

(b) In order to increase the flow of Canadian exports to the United States, the Canadian Government could, as soon as possible, negotiate with Washington for a new long-term trade agreement which would substantially reduce the present United States barriers against the importation of Canadian goods.

(c) In order further to diminish Canada's vulnerability, the Canadian Government could announce, after thorough examination on the expert level, a two, three or four-year National Development Plan, the main purpose of which would be to develop within Canada sources of supply of goods which Canada now has to import from the United States — in particular, steel, coal and oil.

8. The effect of measures along the lines set forth in the preceding paragraph would reduce Canada's vulnerability by

(a) lessening Canada's requirements of U.S. dollars by substituting for imports from the U.S., imports from the U.K. or goods produced in Canada;

(b) increasing Canada's intake of U.S. dollars by increasing Canada's exports to the U.S.

The North Atlantic Community

9. The Canadian Government has been conducting a crusade for a North Atlantic Treaty of Defence, in the belief that the conclusion of such a treaty would increase Canada's security since it would enable the North Atlantic nations to create and maintain (a) an overwhelming preponderance of force over the Soviet Union and (b) the necessary unity for its effective use. The Canadian Government has stressed that this overwhelming preponderance of force cannot be built up unless all those concerned constantly remember that the force must be economic and moral as well as military. The Canadian Government has hoped that the North Atlantic Treaty would be the first step towards the creation of a real North Atlantic Community.

10. If the United Kingdom and the other O.E.E.C. countries find themselves compelled to adopt the kind of policy forecast in the United Kingdom memorandum, there will be a conflict between the trend which is now setting in towards the political and military unification of the North Atlantic countries and the trend towards the division of the North Atlantic countries into two groups economically — the North American group and the Western European group, with the European group building up a closed economic system. Clearly, in the long run it would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, for a North Atlantic community to develop if it is split economically. There seems to be little hope for a continuance of civilized life unless a strong and united North Atlantic community develops over the next decade. It is therefore in the national interest of Canada to do everything it can to diminish the possibility that economic developments in the North Atlantic countries may in the long run make impossible the success of those political and military developments which are today the main goal of Canadian foreign policy.

11. The proposals set forth in this memorandum would do something to diminish this danger. Canada would, economically speaking, be keeping one foot in the U.S. camp and one foot in the Western European camp; this would help to blur the sharp edges of the division between the two groups. Moreover, the greater the volume of U.K. exports to Canada, the less the danger that the U.K. would be able to make uneconomic bilateral deals with other members of the bloc. This would help to keep U.K. production costs down and thus bring nearer the day when the U.K. will be able to compete with the dollar countries on a multilateral trading basis.

DISCUSSION IN CABINET ON MR. ABBOTT'S VISIT TO WASHINGTON

As you know, the principal item on the agenda of the Cabinet meeting tomorrow, Saturday morning, September 25, is the visit of Mr. Abbott to Washington. The Interdepartmental Committee met this afternoon for an hour in order to draw up a brief memorandum on the questions which Cabinet will wish to consider. Mr. Baldwin is preparing this memorandum. There are some seven points.

2. In your absence I sent direct to Mr. St. Laurent today the attached memorandum of September 24 setting forth some suggestions on a possible outcome of our discussions with the United Kingdom and the United States on E.C.A., U.K. credits and related problems.

3. I think it would be useful if you could have a word with Mr. St. Laurent before the Cabinet meeting.

4. It seems to me that the chief obstacle which Cabinet will encounter in trying to decide what is in Canada's national interest is the insistence of Finance and the Bank of Canada that the question of the extent of the credit which we can extend in 1949 must be determined solely on our estimate of our reserve position in United States dollars.

5. This is clearly based on the erroneous assumption that government policy on so important a matter ought not to take into account other factors, some of which I have sketched in paragraph 6 of my attached memorandum.

6. I must say, after my experience this week with the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy, that I prefer the Chiefs of Staff Committee. The Chiefs of Staff Committee, when they are giving advice to the Government, are careful in their memoranda to make it clear that they are putting forward strategic considerations but that they do not assume that the strategic considerations are the only considerations which the Government must take into account. The Department of Finance and the Bank of Canada, on the other hand, seem to assume that the financial considerations which they put forward are the sole determining factors.

7. This hardly fits in with the remark made to you a few days ago by Mr. Donald Gordon that the Department of External Affairs was the Department primarily concerned in the discussions in Cabinet Committee with Sir Stafford Cripps.

Ottawa, September 25, 1948

A meeting of the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy was held in Room 123, East Block, on Friday, September 24th, 1948, at 2.30 p.m.

Present:

The Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Reid), in the Chair,
The Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Mackenzie),
The Deputy Minister of Finance (Dr. Clark),
The Deputy Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Sim),
The Deputy Governor of the Bank of Canada (Mr. Gordon),
The Chairman, Tariff Board (Mr. McKinnon)
The Secretary (Mr. Baldwin).

Also present:

Mr. J.G. Taggart, Department of Agriculture,
Mr. J.J. Deutsch, Department of Finance,
Mr. H.O. Moran, Department of External Affairs,
Mr. C.M. Drury, Department of External Affairs,
Mr. A. Skelton, Department of Trade and Commerce
Mr. T.N. Beaupré, Department of Trade and Commerce.

1. The Acting Chairman pointed out that during the coming week the Minister of Finance and senior officials would be visiting Washington for discussions with U.S. officials regarding the Canadian relationship with E.C.A., policy with regard to offshore purchasing in Canada, and the part Canada could play in assistance to European recovery.

A memorandum had been prepared indicating some of the questions which the U.S. representatives might be expected to bring forward.

(External Affairs memorandum, Sept. 24, 1948).

2. The Committee, after considerable discussion, agreed that the attention of the Cabinet might be directed to the following points in this connection:

(1) It was assumed that the discussions would in the first instance be carried on at the official level prior to direct discussion between the Minister of Finance and the E.C.A. Administrator.

(2) Full information should be given to the U.S. officials regarding the Canadian balance of payments and our forecast up to June 30, 1949, but no estimates with regard to our position after that date need be supplied.

(3) Some allowance should be made in the forecast for modification in our present programme of imports; it would be desirable for the government to agree on an approximate amount which might be made available for this purpose.

(4) No information should be given to any general meeting of U.S. officials on the present position of Canadian dollar reserves, although it may be necessary to convey this information in private to certain senior U.S. personnel.

(5) It may be suggested by U.S. representatives that Canada should make grants to western European recovery rather than loans. It should be made quite clear that no further grants can be contemplated at present and that, in fact, any assistance which Canada may make available must be provided without the introduction of new legislation.

(6) Some indication will have to be given to the United States regarding the extent of assistance which Canada can make available before June 30th, 1949. Sixty million dollars is an amount which Canada could reasonably justify in relation to its position and in comparison with the U.S. programme. It should be made quite clear, however, that any further Canadian assistance is contingent upon reaching satisfactory agreement with the United States which would ensure our ability to sell to the United Kingdom and other western European countries, with the assistance of E.C.A. funds, those commodities which we are in a position to supply and they desire to purchase.

(7) If inquiry is made as to whether Canada would propose to attach specific conditions to further financial assistance, it could be made clear that the principal condition involved is the achievement of the expected programme involving both offshore purchasing in Canada and the maintenance of the forecast volume and type of purchasing in Canada by the United Kingdom and other participating countries up to June 30th. Apart from that no other specific conditions appear to be presently contemplated in relation to this period.

(8) The question of Canadian assistance to western European countries other than the United Kingdom may arise. It should be pointed out in this connection that there are certain small credit balances still outstanding, particularly in the case of Belgium, but that these could not be extended beyond the end of the present year without new legislation, which is not contemplated. Some method may be found to allow the balance of these credits to be drawn before the end of the calendar year if the government so desires, although it is questionable whether any arrangements so made prior to the end of the year would do much to satisfy the U.S. desire to see further assistance to European recovery.

(9) The U.S. representatives are apparently prepared to discuss a method of giving assurances to Canada with regard to maintenance of offshore purchasing in Canada. The main requirement from the point of view of Canada is to make certain that an adequate volume of U.S. offshore purchasing in Canada would be continued to June 30th to permit the programme of exports to the United Kingdom and Western Europe during that period to be carried out. This would involve both a general assurance regarding the volume of U.S. purchasing in Canada and specific assurance with regard to the types of commodities which the United Kingdom and Western Europe propose to purchase from Canada, so that U.S. funds would be available for these types.

In this connection some agreement must be reached with the United States regarding the situation created when declaration that an agricultural commodity is in surplus in the United States prevents E.C.A. funds being used in Canada or elsewhere for purchase of that particular commodity. Some specific understanding will be needed, possibly involving a sharing of the market or conditions to be related to our own credit; otherwise expected purchases in Canada by the United Kingdom and other countries might not be carried out.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FINANCIAL RELATIONS; DISCUSSIONS IN WASHINGTON

6. The Minister of Justice and Acting Prime Minister observed that, during the coming week, the Minister of Finance would be in Washington during which time there would be occasion to discuss the general financial relations between Canada and the United States, with particular reference to Western European recovery and the continuation of E.R.P. offshore purchasing in this country. It was not unlikely that U.S. officials would take the opportunity of submitting proposals on the subject.

On the understanding that initial discussions at the official level would be followed by a meeting between Mr. Abbott and Mr. Hoffman, the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy had considered the issues which might arise and had submitted a report thereon.

Copies of the Interdepartmental Committee's report were circulated.

(Minutes, Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy, Sept. 24, 1948, ICETP-41).

7. Mr. St. Laurent pointed out that the Interdepartmental Committee suggested that full information be given to U.S. officials regarding the estimated Canadian balance of payments to June 30th, 1949; no estimates should be given of the position after that date. Nor should information be given in any general meeting of U.S. officials of our present reserve position; this information would probably have to be supplied privately to senior U.S. officers.

In this connection it was important that some allowance be made for modification of the present programme of import restrictions; a decision would have to be taken on the amount to be set aside for this purpose.

It should be made clear by the Canadian representatives that no outright grants could be contemplated by Canada at this time; any assistance which Canada might make available must be provided without new legislation. Moreover, any further Canadian assistance would be contingent upon satisfactory understandings with the United States to ensure our ability to sell to the United Kingdom and Western Europe. Given these conditions, $60 million would be an amount which, up to June 30th, 1949, the Canadian government could reasonably justify.

If enquiry were made regarding conditions to further financial assistance, it could be represented that the principal condition was the achievement of the programme as planned which involved both offshore purchasing in Canada and the maintenance of purchasing in Canada up to June 30th.

If the question of Canadian assistance to countries other than the United Kingdom were raised, some method might be found for making available, before the end of the year, certain small outstanding balances on other European credits. The principal of these related to Belgium. In view of the present position of Belgium, it was not likely, however, that the U.S. government would be particularly anxious to have further Canadian credit made available in this direction.

In discussions with the United States, it would be necessary to obtain assurances respecting the continued volume of U.S. purchases in Canada and the types of commodities for which E.C.A. funds would be made available. In particular, some settlement must be reached regarding certain agricultural commodities declared surplus in the United States and accordingly unavailable for purchase elsewhere by E.C.A. This situation could interfere seriously with the realization of Canada's export programme.

8. The Minister of National Defence suggested that, in his discussions in Washington, the Minister of Finance might keep in mind the importance of the following in relation to military supply:

(a) the desirability of repealing the present U.S. legislative ban on the export of arms and munitions; if continued, this prohibition would seriously affect Canadian forces;

(b) the desirability of U.S. purchases of war supplies in Canada; and,

(c) the desirability in the joint interest of exploring the possibility of sending U.S. type equipment to Canada for our forces and permitting us to supply from our stocks substitute arms and munitions to Western Europe.

9. The Minister of Finance said that, while the officials with him in Washington might reasonably mention the figure of $10 million a month for the first half of 1949, no figure should be suggested for Canadian assistance beyond June 30th; Canada had always done what was reasonable and within her capacity.

In relation to any alleviation in present Canadian import restrictions, it should be kept in mind that any surplus in dollar receipts would have to be used for three purposes: first, the restoration of Canadian dollar reserves to a satisfactory level, second, desirable modifications on present emergency economic and fiscal policies, and, third, assistance to Western Europe.

There was little useful that could be said in relation to the credits remaining to countries other than the United Kingdom.

10. The Cabinet, after considerable further discussion, agreed that the report of the Interdepartmental Committee be approved as indicating the lines to be taken by Canadian officials in their discussions in Washington the following week, subject to the observations thereon of the Minister of Finance.

[Washington], September 30, 1948

CANADIAN-UNITED STATES ERP DISCUSSIONS,
27TH TO 29TH SEPTEMBER

Discussions were held in the ECA Headquarters, Washington, on the 27th, 28th and 29th of September, between a group of Canadian officials headed by H.H. Wrong, M.W. Mackenzie and J.J. Deutsch, and U.S. officials representing the Economic Cooperation Administration, the Department of State, and the U.S. Treasury. The principal U.S. officials who participated were: C. Tyler Wood, Assistant to the Deputy Administrator, ECA; Arthur Smithies, Director of the Fiscal and Trade Policy Division, ECA; Paul Nitze, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, Department of State; and C.D. Glendinning, Chief, British Commonwealth and Middle East Division, U.S. Treasury.

The discussions, which followed upon preliminary talks in Ottawa in mid-August, were the most important which have been held to date with the United States concerning the whole question of Canada's participation in the European Recovery Program, the contribution which could be expected from Canada, and the offshore procurement policies of the United States. The immediate purpose of the three days' discussions was to agree on the essential facts and probabilities from which it was hoped (chiefly on the U.S. side) that an agreed recommendation could be made to Mr. Abbott and Mr. Hoffman at their meeting on Thursday, 30th September.

Agreement on the important facts and probabilities concerning the Canadian economic forecast turned out to be unexpectedly easy to achieve. The Canadian Balance of Payments forecast, which had been made in September for the calendar year '48 as well as for the fiscal year '49 (July, '48-June 30th, '49), was presented and explained by Deutsch. The Canadian figures were accepted by the Americans without dissension on any important point. This forecast for the fiscal year '49 showed that Canada could expect a current account surplus with the ERP countries of $787 million dollars, composed as follows:

Surplus with the United Kingdom.....	$454 millions.
Surplus with the U.K. Dependent Overseas Territories (United Kingdom estimate) .....	$ 16 " (approx.)
Surplus with other ERP countries .....	$317 "
TOTAL:	$787 millions.

The Canadian foreign assistance in the 1948 calendar year was approximately $325 million dollars, for the 15-month period April, 1948 to June, 1949 was estimated at approximately $260 million, and for the ECA fiscal period July, 1948 to June, 1949 was estimated at approximately $195 million dollars.

For the ECA fiscal period July, 1948-June, 1949 Canadian foreign assistance in the form of loans and relief grants would total $138 million dollars. The deduction of $138 million dollars worth of Canadian assistance from the anticipated surplus of $787 million left a deficit of the ERP countries with Canada of approximately $649 million dollars. This deficit would obviously have to be financed largely by ECA off-shore procurement in Canada except to the limited extent that the countries themselves would wish to and would be allowed to use their free dollars earned in countries other than Canada or to deplete their reserves.

ECA financing in the third quarter of this year has amounted to $140 million dollars. Therefore, of the $649 million dollar ERP deficit with Canada there remains at the beginning of the fourth quarter of this year, roughly $510 million. The U.S. officials energetic efforts to get Canada to underwrite a much larger share of this deficit than that which we proposed to do took many turns. All the main U.S. arguments which were advanced on why we should extend more assistance were fully countered on our side. It was made clear that $60 million dollars further drawings on the British credit was not a firm commitment but rather an undertaking which would, in all probability, be carried out provided there were no drastic changes in the basic assumptions underlying our forecasts for fiscal 1949, the vital assumption being that exports would be sold in the volume expected, making allowance for a comparatively few "soft" items.

Additional factors which made it increasingly difficult for Canada to undertake anything more than was now indicated were: (1) Canadian industries were now finding themselves, on very short notice, sometimes overnight shut out of traditional overseas markets. This was obviously hard to take when Canadian companies and tax-payers had been paying heavy taxes in the past three years in order to bring about European recovery and general multilateral trading. (2) Although there was no doubt that the improvement in our position was a factual one, it must also be remembered that it was to a certain degree an artificial one. If the improvement in our trading position with the United States had been wholly a natural one we would be in a much better position and able to take more risks. We had, however, always to remember that the improvement was in a large part based on the adoption of severe measures that could not be continued indefinitely. (3) Canada cannot look forward to permanent barriers against the United States. Anything tending in that direction is bound to be a difficult and, in the end, impossible course. To continue barriers at an intolerably high level in order to extend financial aid which we could not afford to do would be a disastrous policy for Canada and therefore for the United States.

The talks concluded, as they had been conducted throughout, in an atmosphere of goodwill. This was perhaps a particularly happy circumstance from our point of view since we had not given in on any of the ground which the U.S. officials were seeking. We had not undertaken to consider extending financial assistance to the European countries further to what we had proposed to do before talking to the U.S. On their side, of course, the U.S. had not given us any guarantee that the present level or any particular level of off-shore purchases in Canada would be maintained. Neither, however, had they used any direct threat that the level of off-shore purchasing in Canada would be reduced, although they did note that in view of the increasing number of "soft" items it was probable that there would be some falling off in the Canadian off-shore purchases during the fourth quarter of this year. Both sides, however, repeatedly expressed the hope that the high level of Canadian exports to Europe, which are required both for European recovery and for the attainment of the estimated Canadian current account surplus, would be achieved.

[Washington, n.d.]

NOTE ON DISCUSSION ON SEPTEMBER 30TH BETWEEN THE MINISTER OF FINANCE AND THE ADMINISTRATOR OF THE ECONOMIC CO-OPERATION ADMINISTRATION

The relationship of Canada to the E.C.A. program in 1949 was discussed during a conversation lasting about an hour and a half following a luncheon at the Canadian Embassy on September 30th. Those who took part in the discussion were Mr. Hoffman, Mr. Abbott, Mr. Bissell, Mr. Towers and Mr. Wrong. The discussion followed a series of meetings between officials of the two governments, which were held on September 27th, 28th and 29th. The course of these meetings is summarized in another memorandum.

Mr. Abbott began by outlining the political difficulties in Canada in the way of the continued extension of financial aid to Western Europe on the scale of recent years. He emphasized that Canada had relatively done more than any other country since the end of the war, that this had resulted in serious financial difficulties in 1947 which had made the adoption of drastic measures disliked by the Canadian people essential, and that it was necessary to avoid, if possible, any recurrence of a similar situation. It was, therefore, proposed to use the proceeds of the improvement to increase Canadian reserves, to permit some unfreezing of the loan to the U.K., and to relax in a minor degree import restrictions on products from the United States, particularly fresh fruits and vegetables. With an election probable during 1949 the Government could not be expected to adopt a program of new or very extensive assistance to Europe so long as the import and travel restrictions were maintained almost intact, especially so long as it was true that Canada had in the past done more than her share in relation to the effort put forth by the United States.

Mr. Hoffman began by emphasizing his belief that in the execution of E.R.P. lay the hope for the survival of the free nations on both sides of the Atlantic. It was essential, in his judgment, that Congress should continue appropriations on an adequate scale. It was very important in this connection that he should be able to represent to Congress that Canada was acting in concert on a comparable scale judged by the standard of relative national income. Taking into account the dollar savings to the United Kingdom because of the lower prices of Canadian export contracts as well as direct loans and grants, the Canadian record for the calendar year 1948 was sufficient for this purpose. What he was concerned with was what we would be able to do in the first six months of 1949.

Mr. Hoffman expected that E.C.A. would go to Congress early in the next session for a supplementary appropriation to cover the period April to June of 1949, and that they would use up the current appropriation in the twelve months ending in March '49. The battle over the appropriation for the next fiscal year would begin in April and was not likely to be concluded until the end of May at best. They could hope to be able to show very little aid from other non-European countries, but Canada stood in a special position and he was most anxious to be able to say that during this six months at any rate Canada was carrying her relative load.

He said that he was not suggesting that new legislative authority should be sought at the next session of Parliament as he knew that that was too much to ask, although it would be a good deal easier for him to satisfy Congress that E.C.A. grants should be continued if Canadian aid were given in the form of grants rather than loans. What he hoped was that the rate of permitted drawings on the U.K. loan would be such as to provide a fair comparison. He was certain that E.C.A. would be very closely examined on the contribution of other countries; although he recognized that the improvement in the Canadian position was due to the severe and unpopular restrictions which we had imposed, he would have difficulty in satisfying Congress if a very substantial proportion of this improvement was added to reserves.

At no time in the conversation was the question of the off-shore purchase policy of E.C.A. in Canada touched on by Mr. Hoffman or Mr. Bissell. There was no suggestion made by them that off-shore purchases would be reduced if the Canadian Government failed to do what E.C.A. considered they could reasonably do. It appeared from his remarks that the figure he had in mind would be in the neighbourhood of $125 or $150 millions between January 1st and June 30th.

At one point Mr. Hoffman remarked that he was concerned not so much with the addition of $100 millions or so of funds to European Recovery as the success of the program would not stand or fall on this. What he was concerned about was to be able to use the Canadian example during the hearings before Congressional committees. Later when it was suggested that this difficulty might in part be met by the form in which the release of $60 millions from the U.K. loan was announced he added that the Canadian program must, in his view, have substance as well as suitable timing.

Mr. Hoffman observed that he thought it likely that during the year 1949 to 1950 a total E.C.A. program in the neighbourhood of $4 billions might be sufficient because of the progress of European Recovery. If a serious effort were made to cut it drastically in Congress to perhaps a billion dollars, he would advise Congress to drop the program entirely on the ground that it would then become a modest relief program which would fail in its vital central purpose. He thought that if Mr. Dewey were elected and gave full support to an adequate appropriation Congress would go along with him.

Mr. Abbott undertook to give full consideration to Mr. Hoffman's position and to consult his colleagues. He said that he had no intention of making an immediate announcement that it was proposed to release $10 millions a month from the U.K. loan in the first half of 1949, although it might well be that this was all that Canada could properly undertake. He would be glad to consult Mr. Hoffman as to the timing and character of any announcement which might later be made.

The discussion was conducted in a very frank and friendly spirit, in the course of which Mr. Hoffman on several occasions expressed the view that the special regard for Canada in the United States was what gave such political importance to the Canadian contribution.

The discussion had the result that E.C.A. should no longer suggest that the U.K. loan should be unfrozen at once, since Mr. Hoffman expressed himself as satisfied with the prospective 1948 record on our own figures for the purpose of presentation to Congress. The problem was, therefore, narrowed to the form and extent of the action to be taken in the first six months of 1949 without any indication having been given on the Canadian side that much more could be expected than the release of $60 millions to the U.K., and on the U.S. side that Canadian failure to do more would result in the diversion of off-shore purchases from Canada.

MR. ABBOTT'S DISCUSSIONS IN WASHINGTON

Mr. Drury has just given Mr. Moran and myself a report on the Washington discussions which Mr. Abbott had. He will be preparing a note for you.

2. From what he has told me, it seems that the framework of an agreement has emerged as a result of the discussions between Mr. Abbott and Mr. Hoffman.

3. It would be that at the beginning of January the Canadian Government would announce that $85 million of the United Kingdom loan had been unfrozen and that the drawings per month would depend on how various things turned out. This announcement would have been preceded by Mr. Gardiner's discussions with the United Kingdom in December on their food purchases for the calendar year 1949, and in those discussions agreement would be reached that the United Kingdom spend in the calendar year 1949 $25 million more on agricultural products than they had estimated in the figures they gave us. This would enable us to export to the United Kingdom in the calendar year 1949 the agricultural products which we want to export.

4. So far, Mr. Abbott has not moved up to the $85 million figure, but he is apparently prepared to move to a $75 million figure.

5. From what Mr. Drury has told me, it would seem to me that a much more realistic way of approaching the discussions in Washington would have been for Mr. Abbott to have had a talk with Mr. Hoffman and not to have bothered with our officials having talks with the American officials or with either group of officials preparing elaborate statistical studies and forecasts, especially since the purpose of our elaborate studies was to support a proposition that we could not afford to give more than $60 million credit, and this figure of $60 million had merely been drawn out of the air by the United Kingdom when they were presenting their figures to the O.E.E.C. The Americans had had the figure of $60 million for about three months and their scepticism about the elaborate statistics which we used to substantiate that figure was fully justified.

6. The useful discussions in Washington, which were between Mr. Abbott and Mr. Hoffman, turned upon the political realities in Canada and the United States. The political reality in the United States, which our financial people have hitherto refused to accept as reality, is that the United States administration says that, when they go to Congress to get the second E.C.A. appropriation, they must be able to convince Congress that Canada is bearing its fair share. The political reality in Canada is, in large part, the Duplessis slogan in the last provincial election in Quebec.

7. The whole business even of a $85 million figure is, of course, utterly unrealistic, since it is perfectly clear that during the calendar year 1949 we will be extending credits to the United Kingdom and Western Europe much in excess of $85 million and one would probably make money if one were to bet today that the total credits for the calendar year 1949 would run between $150 and $250 million.

CANADA-U.S. FINANCIAL RELATIONS; DISCUSSIONS IN WASHINGTON

12. The Minister of Finance, referring to the report made at the meeting of September 25th, reviewed briefly the recent discussions in Ottawa with the Chancellor of the U.K. Exchequer and described the course of subsequent discussions in Washington with ECA officials and with the ECA Administrator.

It should be recognized that, within the limitations imposed by the programme which they regarded as necessary to their own recovery, the U.K. authorities had attempted to meet the conditions of the Canadian situation. They had shown a willingness to work out adjustments in their arrangements which would be satisfactory to both parties. It was of the greatest importance that, in the near future, agreement be reached with the U.K. government on a satisfactory schedule of Canadian exports to Britain during the calendar year 1949 and that a serious attempt be made to adjust the U.K. programme to take care of surplus Canadian production of bacon and eggs.

It was apparent that, in the long-term, Western Europe would afford no certain market for some Canadian products. The Department of Agriculture should, therefore, be taking steps to develop alternative outlets for these commodities, even though such alternatives seemed less attractive from the point of view of stability.

13. Mr. Abbott said that the talks in Washington at the official level had afforded an opportunity to discuss Canada's current account position and continued offshore purchasing by ECA in this country. U.S. officials were extremely anxious to have Canada make a direct contribution to ERP not only for the intrinsic value of such a contribution but for its influence on the U.S. Congress when, at the next session, it would be called on for further substantial appropriations for Western Europe.

In the discussions with Mr. Hoffman, attention had been drawn to the position in which Canada found itself as a result of large contributions to Europe since the war. Mr. Hoffman in turn had emphasized the importance of further large efforts to ensure the survival of the free nations. In relation to Congressional action, it was extremely important that Canada make a satisfactory contribution covering the first six months of 1949. A figure of between $125 and $150 millions had been hoped for by U.S. authorities.

Thus, the question before the government was what action could be taken, effective January 1st (and applicable particularly to the first six months of 1949) in the way of direct contribution to European recovery.

(Memorandum, Canadian Ambassador to the United States, Undated).

14. Mr. Abbott said that, on the assumptions of continued ECA appropriations and the maintenance of a satisfactory level of offshore purchasing in Canada, the present and forecast current account and reserve position as known to the United States would permit of somewhat larger contribution, if the government considered it desirable and necessary to take such a course.

In the circumstances, the first step should be to agree with the United Kingdom on a satisfactory schedule for 1949, with the necessary adjustments, particularly in bacon and eggs. On that basis the government could then decide on the amount of credit which could be released from January 1st. It might be necessary or advisable to make available small additional amounts (the figure of $15 million was suggested) for specific agricultural products.

15. The Secretary of State for External Affairs pointed out that the greatest danger to the Canadian economy was the possible decrease or diversion of ECA offshore purchasing in Canada. In view of anticipated difficulties in Congress and the recent development of certain surpluses in the United States, particularly in the agricultural field, it was of great importance that ECA and the U.S. government be satisfied that Canada was pulling her weight in European recovery.

16. The Acting Prime Minister felt that final decision on the release of further Canadian credit should be dependent on the carrying out by the United Kingdom of its expected programme of imports from and exports to Canada.

17. The Cabinet, after considerable further discussion, agreed that the Ministers of Finance, Trade and Commerce and Agriculture should consult together with a view to settling a tentative figure for release of the U.K. credit on the basis of which further discussions might take place with the U.K. government on the Canadian programme of exports for the calendar year 1949.

Reference your No. 1694 of October 1st.† The following is the text of a memorandum prepared in this Department for the Prime Minister at the Commonwealth discussions on the "Visit of Sir Stafford Cripps and Discussions in Washington relating to the European Recovery Programme," Begins:

The United Kingdom Chancellor of the Exchequer presented to the Canadian Government the United Kingdom's draft long-term programme and the United Kingdom Government's forecast of imports from Canada for the twelve month periods ending June 30th, 1949, 1950 and 1953.

The long-term programme in general substantiates the conclusions reached in a separate memorandum prepared for you on the "General European Economic Situation and the European Recovery Programme." A decrease in imports of some $400 million (from the already reduced 1948 level) from the dollar area is anticipated by the United Kingdom by 1952-53, the main incidence of which would fall on the United States; the net decrease relative to 1948 in imports from Canada is forecast at some $66 million and reflects mainly on the elimination of all egg purchases and substantially reduced bacon purchases after June 30th, 1949.

The United Kingdom long-term programme is based upon four assumptions:

- (1) That there will be a high level of business activity throughout the world.
- (2) The United States Government will provide sufficient funds until 1952 to permit the full development of the European Recovery Programme.
- (3) That substantial progress will be made in European cooperation.
- (4) That a reasonable amount of East-West trade within Europe is possible on commercial lines.

Based upon these four assumptions, the United Kingdom's programme anticipates economic viability by 1952. The threat of war in Europe and the consequent necessity of both the United Kingdom and the United States to devoting a large part of their resources to defence projects would, of course, place in jeopardy the success of the whole programme.

The United Kingdom's programme of imports from Canada for the year ending June 30th, 1949 is based on the assumption that drawing from the Canadian credits would be renewed at the end of 1948 at the rate of $10 million monthly. It was made clear to Sir Stafford that Canada's ability to unfreeze a portion of the credit was dependent on a satisfactory understanding being reached with the United States for the continuation of a high level of European Recovery Programme off-shore purchasing in Canada financed by the Economic Cooperation Administration. There were discussions between Canadian and United Kingdom officials on a number of the problems arising out of the United Kingdom proposals. These talks have been relatively satisfactory and it has been agreed that they should be continued. For this purpose the formation of a continuing joint Canada-United Kingdom committee was recommended in order to keep under review the commercial and economic relations between the two countries.

In subsequent discussions with United States officials it was revealed that the proposed Canadian financial contribution of $60 million for the period ending June 30th, 1949 was a considerably smaller contribution than they had hoped would be forthcoming. The Economic Cooperation Administration's principal concern appeared to be not with the actual need for Canadian dollars to aid European economic recovery, but rather with the necessity of satisfying United States Congress when further appropriations are sought that Canada was making a contribution commensurate with that of the United States. Discussions in Washington were characterized by frankness and friendliness and there was at no time any suggestion made by the United States representatives that the proposed level of authorized purchasing in Canada, at least for the period ending June 30th, 1949, would be reduced, in the event that Canadian financial assistance to Europe was not at all times commensurate with that of the United States. For the period following June 30th, 1949, however, with the easing of the supply situation for many of the agricultural commodities in the United States, the future of Canadian export trade in respect of agricultural products with Europe is uncertain. Ends. Telegram Ends.

Following for Drury from Wrong, Begins: Economic Cooperation Administration.

The following points arising out of our talks with the E.C.A. at the end of September which Strange discussed with Murray yesterday are of interest:

(1) Renewal of Withdrawals on the United Kingdom Credit

Before his departure for Europe, Mr. Hoffman asked Strange if he had heard anything further on the Canadian Government's intentions with respect to the partial unfreezing of the United Kingdom credit in January. He asked Strange to check up on what was happening and let him know on his return from Europe if anything had been decided upon. Strange was told that so far as we knew in Washington no decisions had been made, and that the question of the timing and the form of the announcement was still under consideration in Ottawa, furthermore, consideration of this problem had been unexpectedly delayed by the absence of key Ministers from Ottawa.

As you know Hoffman returned to Washington last night and will be leaving again for Europe at the beginning of next week. Would you let me know as soon as possible, therefore, if there is anything concrete which we can pass on to E.C.A. concerning the unfreezing of the United Kingdom credit?

(2) The "Partnership" Question

You will, I think, be as surprised as we were to hear that the United States side thought that during the official level conversations they had put forward that old but mysterious friend, the question of Canadian partnership with the United States in the European Recovery Programme. We have no recollection whatsoever of any such suggestion being made during the E.C.A. talks, although Hoffman did use the word in its broadest sense, i.e. the sharing of common aims, during his talk with Mr. Abbott. The intriguing point, however, is that according to Strange the partnership question was still actively being thought about on the United States side during the recent talks; in fact, a memorandum which was prepared for Mr. Hoffman on the talks reported that the idea had been twice brought forward by the United States side but had been discarded since the idea had not been picked up at all by the Canadians. Strange claims that Smithies and Nitze each brought up the partnership proposal and when they got no response from the Canadians they dropped it. I think the explanation of this phantom appearance of a phantom proposal is that it was referred to so gingerly by the Americans that we must have assumed that they were using the word in the ordinary every-day sense in the way that Canadian Ministers and officials have frequently done when referring to the fact that we have been "partners" in assisting European recovery since the end of the war and will continue to be "partners".

(3) Cripps Talks in Ottawa

I do not know whether the following story is entirely true or not and if it is I doubt whether it would amuse our financial people. The story as related by Strange is that the British came to Ottawa fully prepared to defend themselves on the attack which they expected to have made against them, i.e. Canadian pressure for devaluation of the pound with the aim of getting an increased flow of British exports to Canada and at the same time bringing down the prices charged to Canadians to more reasonable levels. The British said they were surprised that not only was this question not pressed at all — it was not even brought up.

(4) Strange said the United States officials had gained the very definite impression that the British had not sought for and did not wish to seek at this time credit from Canada beyond the $60,000,000. Similarly, the British were anything but anxious to seek credits from non-participating sterling area countries. The E.C.A. officials would not be at all surprised to hear the suggestion that the British wish to go easy on the Canadian credit during the present E.C.A. period so that the Canadian financial strength can be built up as a protection against the thin years which may follow.<sup>25</sup> Ends.

Following for Drury from Murray, Begins: Following is a draft memorandum on the ECA — Canadian talks, December 10th. Would you please have it sent to Deutsch so that the necessary revisions may be made in it before circulation. Text of memorandum begins:

A meeting was held at ECA Headquarters on Friday morning, December 10th, to discuss the changes in the Canadian "position" since the extensive September talks. ECA officials have periodically enquired when we would announce firm decisions on the financial assistance which we would be extending during the remainder of the ECA fiscal year. On November 23rd, Arthur Smithies told the Ambassador ECA would welcome an opportunity, at an early date, to review our position. Mr. Deutsch's trip to Washington for this purpose was accordingly very much appreciated by the United States officials. The following attended the meeting in Smithies' office, which lasted an hour and half:

Arthur Smithies, Director Fiscal and Trade Policy Division
Robert Strange, Extra-European Trade Section

A. European and Other Credits

2. Deutsch reviewed briefly the status of the Canadian postwar credits which still had unused balances in them. China and Czechoslovakia were cited as countries which, for obvious reasons, we were not anxious to push into using up the remainder of their credits. We had taken an entirely different attitude with Belgium, which was the only country other than the United Kingdom having a substantial unused

Canadian credit. A full account was given of our negotiations with the Belgians from the opening of the talks in Ottawa last October to the turn down by the Belgians in favour of a barter arrangement with the Argentine, which we had just learned about. It was made clear that the breakdown was not a result of the terms of our offer but rather the result of a determination of policy by the Belgians not to go further in debt to Canada at this time. The United States officials, who had had a good deal of experience with the enthusiasm of the ERP countries to take grants and their marked lack of enthusiasm to take loans, were not surprised at this result. Smithies and Southard enquired to see if there was any probability of having the date of the expiry of the credit extended or the terms of it changed so that the Belgians could use it for industrial goods or raw materials other than food stuffs. It was explained, and apparently accepted, why this was not possible. In these circumstances, Smithies asked if we had any objection to the one course which was open to the Americans, i.e., putting pressure on the Belgians. He was told that as far as we were concerned they were entirely free to do on their own initiative what they chose to do. It was noted that off-shore purchases for Belgium in Canada to date were approximately $3 million dollars and that this small figure did suggest that there was some validity to the conclusion that the Belgians did not anticipate serious difficulty in financing their Canadian requirements. Southard wondered if this conclusion which was to be drawn from their unwillingness to accept credit from Canada was "true fact or a contrived fact."

B. United Kingdom Credit

3. Deutsch noted that in our recently concluded food contracts with the United Kingdom there had been substantial cuts in the two principal items (bacon and eggs). He explained that the question of more credit beyond the $10 million dollars a month rate had not arisen from either side. The position therefore was that the United Kingdom had been told that they could definitely count upon $10 million a month for the first six months of 1949 and probably count upon the same amount for the remaining six months. The United Kingdom had been told, however, that the rate of $10 million a month could not be continued into the second half of 1949 if there was a sharp downward trend in our reserve position or if the volume of off-shore purchases declined seriously. In replying to the United States point that the amount of credit which we were envisaging would not fill the United Kingdom's deficit with Canada of from $400 to $450 million dollars Deutsch said we understood that the British were anxious to have the credit last the period which it was supposed to cover, i.e., for another 2½ years. The Americans were reminded that we had never said that the full amount of the credit would not be available to the United Kingdom.

4. Canadian Announcement on United Kingdom Credit. Deutsch said that the announcement on the United Kingdom credit would probably be made a few days before Christmas. The Americans, who were quite agreeable to this, were more interested in what we would say than when we would say it. It was suggested we say that we are "reopening" the credit rather than that we are limiting the British to $10 million a month, and, if possible, to give the $120 million dollar figure for 1949. It was also suggested that another statement of policy by the Government, similar to those made earlier this year by Mr. St. Laurent, Mr. Abbott and Mr.

Howe, that we would contribute to the ERP when and to the extent we were able to, would be most welcome.

C. Canada's Dollar Position

5. The Americans were keen to know the net effect of ECA's operations on Canada's dollar position. It was noted that ECA had authorized upwards of $555 million dollars for off-shore purchases in Canada during the first ECA year. This is the point at which some United States officials hope to hear us admit that we have been saved by their actions. They are, therefore, always a little piqued to hear that what they have done has been helpful but not indispensable. Deutsch gave a forceful explanation of how ECA's operations had had the principal effect of directing our exports. In spite of the large-scale authorizations our total exports to Europe were falling off. We had made an extraordinary increase of 40 per cent in our exports to the United States. It was this increase and not off-shore purchases which was the dominant factor in our improvement. Owing principally to the unexpectedly large cattle exports our over-all current account surplus which had been estimated in September by both United States and Canadian experts at $400 million dollars, might turn out to be as much as $475 million dollars. 1948 had been a year in which we had deliberately set out to improve our position because it had been essential to do so. In a picture which, everything considered, had been remarkably bright for Canada in 1948, we had to take account of the dangers which very clearly lie ahead. We were losing our market for manufacturers in the sterling area and our agricultural exports to Europe were falling off.

6. In response to this analysis of the improvement in our position, Southard remarked that the real effect of off-shore purchases had been to prevent a further decline in our exports to Europe. The question which was therefore in his mind was that if our dollar position becomes increasingly tolerable at the same time as there are less off-shore purchases in Canada would not that raise more insistently than ever the question of Canada extending increased financial assistance to Europe.

7. Smithies, having remarked that we were a little "touchy" about disclosing our reserve figure, said that he assumed that the increase in our reserves would probably be equal to the off-shore purchases. He was pleased to note that he had been careful to say that this increase was not due to off-shore purchases although Congress would undoubtedly take that attitude. Southard remarked that last year Canada had been a definite asset to the Administration in their successful efforts to obtain very broad authority for off-shore procurement. Our restrictions, the Ex-Im loan and the low level of our reserves made good arguments to Congress on the necessity of off-shore purchases. Now, he said, we could not be regarded as an asset but rather as something which would require explanation to Congress. Southard thought that at the very least the United States officials should know "what Canadians would say" in explanation of their inability to give more financial assistance than we now planned to do. This suggestion, which amounted to asking what we would say in our own defence, was vigorously countered by Deutsch with the statement that the Canadian record since the end of the war was one for which no one need apologise. Southard did not further pursue this line of enquiry.

D. Future United States Off-shore Purchase Policy

8. Smithies then made the most important point on the United States side. He said that we should understand that in the second ERP year off-shore purchase policy will be determined "exclusively by United States interests." This fact will probably be spelled out in the new legislation, presumably in the Appropriation Bill. It will also become apparent from the ECA's administrative practices. In other words, with a smaller ECA appropriation coming at a time when the United States will almost certainly be able to take care of an increasing amount of European requirements, particularly in the agricultural field, and with the reserves of the principal source of off-shore purchases (Canada) improving rapidly, it is not too difficult to see why the ECA policy will be determined exclusively in the United States interest. Smithies said that this reconsideration of the whole off-shore purchase mechanism does not "represent any criticism of Canada." He assured us that no such criticism was intended. Smithies, who throughout the meeting remained in a benign and cheerful mood, said that the United States understood some of our difficulties and that it was hoped on their side that we would understand the course of action which the United States would be following.

9. A particularly striking feature of the meeting was that although there were the usual number of searching questions on what we intended to do and on our ability to fill the gap of the ERP countries with Canada, there was less evidence than usual of United States pressure upon us to do more next year. Gone were the suggestions of last September of working out a "palatable bundle" by which we would finance the export of our soft items and the United States of our hard items.

E. Miscellaneous Points

10. Reserves. Southard asked if we had arrived at any fairly fixed target for our reserves. Deutsch replied that this was a question on which there was some difference of opinion in Canada and one which in any event, depended upon the outlook at that time. He said that some senior officials did think that a figure between $1 billion and $1.2 billion would be desirable in view of the size of our external transactions, which now total over $7 billion dollars. The United States officials were told that we had no intention of building up unwieldy reserves. They were also reminded that Mr. Abbott had made this point very clear to Mr. Hoffman.

11. Import Restrictions. The United States officials appeared to have no definite reaction when told that next year would, in all probability, find Canada going into a programme of relaxation of restrictions. The only response came from Southard, who wondered what a Congressman's reaction would be. He thought that the interests of the constituents in selling to Canada would more than balance the criticism of those who would be opposed to seeing Canada enjoy a higher standard of living at the expense of the American taxpayer through off-shore purchases.

12. Long Term Programmes. Considerable camaraderie arose when both sides confessed their misgivings about many features of the Long Term Programmes, particularly the British programme, and acknowledged the common interest of Canada and the United States in these programmes. Smithies and Strange were eager to have Deutsch discuss some of the initial Canadian reactions to the United Kingdom programme with ECA working level officials. An uninformative meeting for this purpose was held in the afternoon, but there was a useful discussion next day at a luncheon attended by Messrs. Bissell, Tyler Wood, Strange, Deutsch, Wrong and Keith. Bissell in particular showed that he was concerned about the United Kingdom programme for much the same reasons as Deutsch.

13. ECA London Mission. In discussing the Long Term Programme, Smithies acknowledged but asked us to regard as confidential their belief that the ECA mission in London has turned too pro-British. This thought was later echoed by other ECA officials. Ends. Teletype ends.

WESTERN EUROPEAN CUSTOMS UNION; CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS

A draft document summarizing developments in this connection was circulated at an earlier meeting of the Committee. Subsequently, the Sub-Committee has continued its review of the situation and is presently engaged upon consideration of preferences enjoyed in the U.K. market on specific commodities which might be seriously affected by a Western European Customs Union. This work results from an informal suggestion from U.K. officials that they would like to obtain information from Canada regarding the particular commodities for which Canada would be interested in retaining a preference in the United Kingdom in the event of the United Kingdom entering the proposed Customs Union.

Canada should not lend itself to any situation which would result in the United Kingdom at this stage suggesting that the necessity of consultation with Canada was a reason for delaying the European discussions on the Customs Union. There has been some indication that this situation might develop. The Sub-Committee believes that the U.K. government should be informed that the Canadian government looks generally with favour upon the broad purpose of achieving a Western European Customs Union and hopes that satisfactory progress in that direction can be achieved; and that, in this connection, we would not wish our preferential rights in the U.K. market generally to be regarded as an obstacle to the formation of a Union; while, in the event of modification or sacrifice of preferences we would naturally expect some compensatory adjustments, our position in negotiations would be sympathetic to the achievement of a Customs Union.

The Sub-Committee does not believe it would be desirable or useful at this time to indicate to the United Kingdom a list of specific commodities on which we would be interested in retaining a U.K. preference in the event of a Customs Union. Preparation of a definitive list at the present time when no information is available regarding the common tariff which may be worked out for the Union is difficult business and any decision taken now might prove wrong in the light of later developments. Any decision on the importance of retaining a preference for specific commodities must depend upon such matters as the general attractiveness to Canada of the Western European market in the event of a Union, the common tariff levels which would be established by the Union and the general policy pursued in regard to the relationship between that tariff and existing preferential arrangements.

While the Sub-Committee will proceed with study of these matters so that Canada will be in a position to offer comment without delay at a later stage, and while the Canadian High Commissioner in the United Kingdom should be informed that this work is going forward, no specific comments should as yet be made available to other countries.

The Sub-Committee recommends that Mr. Robertson be instructed along the foregoing lines.<sup>26</sup>

Dear John [Deutsch]:

<sup>26</sup> Bien que le Comité du Cabinet ait endossé cette recommandation le 12 avril, le Cabinet n'a pas confirmé ce rapport à sa réunion du 20 avril. Pearson a informé Robertson que Although Cabinet Committee endorsed this recommendation on April 12, Cabinet did not confirm the report at its meeting on April 20. Pearson informed Robertson that to you in Ottawa on the points which he raised and he said that he would do so. He was rather inquisitive about the degree of consideration given to their suggestion in Ottawa. I told him that we were treating it as though it were highly explosive and were handling it with the greatest care so that only three or four people knew about it. He was wondering whether Mr. Abbott might mention the project while he was in Washington. I told him that I had heard from you that Mr. Abbott had been briefly informed but we both agreed it would be unwise for him to mention it except possibly to Tyler Wood or to Willoughby himself. I shall speak to Mr. Abbott on his arrival in this sense.

Certain ministerial views were put forward in the course of discussion supporting strongly the maintenance of both our free entry in the U.K. market and the retention of the preferential arrangements which favour us; it was suggested that it would be unwise at this time to indicate to the U.K. that we would be prepared to make any sacrifice of the existing preferential arrangements.

The other question that was worrying Willoughby he doubtless explained to you — the fact that the arrangement they proposed is not covered by the definition in the I.T.O. Charter of a customs union so that it could not be brought into effect under the Charter without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members of I.T.O. The point was whether we should seek to alter the definition of a customs union at the Havana Conference.

TELEGRAM WA-73

Washington, January 8, 1948

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

I accompanied the Minister of Finance this afternoon when he called on the Secretary of Commerce. Mr. Harriman immediately opened the subject of the regulation of exports to Canada of commodities in short supply in the United States and summoned Mr. David Bruce, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, to take part in the discussion.

2. There seemed general agreement that the arrangements for limiting the imports of fuel oil during January ought to be satisfactory. Mr. Bruce questioned us about what the companies would be prepared to do in February and March, saying that it was desirable that some commitment on their part should be made soon. We stated that the companies hoped to be able to achieve a reduction in imports proportionate to that promised for January, but they had needed time to survey the position before making a definite offer. I hope that we can receive word on this before long.

3. The steel shortage was the main subject of discussion. Mr. Abbott explained the effect of Canadian restrictive measures, such as the prohibition on the import of automobiles and the refusal to issue permits for non-essential construction. Mr. Harriman and Mr. Bruce both expressed urgent concern over the domestic situation and the pressures brought to bear on the Administration by Congress and the steel industry. They had met representatives of the steel industry only this morning, and I judge that a considerable part of the meeting was devoted to the question of exports from the United States.

4. Mr. Harriman expressed the greatest friendliness for Canadian difficulties and his own belief that, as he said, the passage of ideas, people and goods across the border should encounter the least possible measure of restriction. He seemed anxious to work out by voluntary agreement some arrangement which would enable them to meet pressures and criticisms here. This would involve their being able to satisfy the critics about the end uses to which steel was being put in Canada.

5. He remarked that Mr. W.L. Batt had made available to the Department of Commerce on a part-time basis the services of Mr. Sykes, who had been associated with Mr. Batt on the War Production Board during the war and who is, he thinks, well known to Mr. Howe. He suggested that an informal liaison should be established, for which Mr. Sykes might be responsible, between the Department of Reconstruction and Supply and the Department of Commerce. He thought it unnecessary to use diplomatic channels for this exchange of information and experience. I am a little concerned lest this might sidetrack the State Department which is the only agency here that is in a position to take fairly into account all the difficult aspects of the Canadian economic programme. We agreed, however, that Mr. Sykes should have an initial discussion at the Embassy, after which he might visit Ottawa.

6. Mr. Bruce then brought up the question of streptomycin. We were able to inform him that Canadian production was now some ten times in excess of domestic requirements and that we hoped to be in a position to export this product to the United States to meet their urgent shortage.

7. Mr. Foster, the Under-Secretary of Commerce, yesterday briefly discussed their steel problems while at my house. As a result, Scott spoke this morning on the telephone to the Office of the Steel Controller in Ottawa and requested that information should be made available to us as soon as possible. A Congressional Committee will be going in detail into the steel situation next week and it is important that we should give the United States officials who will testify as convincing a story as possible.

8. Since dictating this message Mr. Sykes has made an appointment to visit the Embassy late this afternoon. We shall report on the discussion with him separately.

INTERVIEW WITH HON. D.C. ABBOTT — JANUARY 13, 1948

Abbott told me that on his last visit to Washington, where he had met Harriman, Lovett, and several others, the Americans themselves had brought up the question of complete reciprocity treaty with Canada. He and the officials of his Department, Clark and Deutsch, had been working on the extension of the present treaties, and the increase in the number of the articles there are in them. The question of a commercial union had come up. I do not know by whom. At all events, it was discounted at once. Certainly in Abbott's mind, and I told him would be equally so in mine. That the word "commercial" would soon be dropped in political discussions and the campaign be on the question of union with the States. However, as to a treaty of complete reciprocity, such as in Sir Wilfrid's [Laurier's] day, was before the country, would I told him I believe meet with a different kind of reception. The country had learned they had made a mistake in not accepting the treaty in Sir Wilfrid's day. What we had since achieved in reciprocity would have prepared the public mind for a complete reciprocity.

Abbott wanted to know if I would be agreeable to a discussion going ahead on the official level on complete reciprocity. I told him I would, but by all means to lose no time in furthering it. I think he said that Clark, of the Finance Dept., was very strongly for it, and would welcome negotiations, which I imagine [H.B.] MacKinnon would also share in. What Abbott emphasized was that the proposal was not his, but had come from the Americans themselves. He spoke of the talk with Harriman and of Harriman sending warmest remembrances to me. Abbott himself pointed out that this would be the answer to all our present restrictions. If we could get complete reciprocity, he felt we would no longer be dependent on uncertain markets of Europe, which are bound to be uncertain for some time and that this would give what was needed to maintain, as far as could be maintained, the prosperity in our country.

Abbott felt sure, of course, there might be opposition from manufacturers and especially in Ontario. I said he need not mind that. Our industries were holding their own pretty effectively with larger industries. Could expect one hundred per cent approval all along the line.

The real points were:

- (1) the matter having been suggested by the U.S.;
  - (2) his own discussion with leading men in finance; and
  - (3) strong feeling in Finance Dept. — Clark, Towers and Deutsch, who were all favourable;
  - (4) approval of proceedings on official level. My own approval strongly given.
- It is clear to me that the Americans are losing no opportunity to make their relations as close as possible with our country.<sup>27</sup>

<sup>27</sup> Dans son journal le 13 février, King rappelle une conversation avec Abbott plus tôt dans ce mois durant laquelle ils avaient tous deux envisagé la négociation d'un accord avant le milieu de l'été, qui serait suivi par la soumission d'un traité au Congrès et au Parlement.

In his diary for February 13, King recalled a conversation earlier in the month with Abbott, in which both contemplated the negotiation of an agreement by mid-summer, with subsequent presentation of a Treaty to Congress and Parliament.

Dear Hume [Wrong],

Thanks for your letter of January 7th concerning the points Willoughby raised with you regarding the suggestion for a new trade arrangement.

Since I received your letter, Willoughby has called me on the `phone, and spoke to me about the question of altering the definition of a customs duty in the I.T.O. Charter. He asked me also when we could give him the information on our reaction to their proposal, and said that it would be very helpful if they could receive it by January 15th so the preparations could be put under way for obtaining the required amendment in the I.T.O. Charter. I said that we would do our best to let him have our initial reaction by that date.

Yours very truly,

VISIT OF MR. HOWARD SYKES TO OTTAWA, JANUARY 19TH TO 21ST

Mr. Sykes, special part-time consultant to the Secretary of Commerce, and John Cassels, Chief of the British Commonwealth Division, Office of International Trade, Department of Commerce, both told me that they considered their three-day visit in Ottawa to have been, from their point of view, very successful indeed. Mr. Sykes saw Mr. Howe, Mr. Abbott, Dr. W.C. Clark, Mr. Pearson, Mr. M.W. MacKenzie, and Mr. V.W. Scully.<sup>28</sup> With Mr. Cassels and myself, Mr. Sykes also discussed export control and related economic subjects with Alex Skelton, Mr. Wilbur Uren, the Steel Controller, and Herb. Moran.

Mr. Sykes chief but by no means whole interest was with commodity questions which might lead to United States export controls being placed on Canada. He is very pleased with the quick and cooperative reaction which he obtained from Mr. Howe and his subordinates on the establishment of an informal but direct channel of information between the commodity experts in Ottawa on the one hand and John Cassels of Commerce on the other. Mr. Sykes himself did not attempt to make any detailed study of our import program of either steel or fuel oil, or any other commodity.

V.W. Scully, Deputy Minister of Reconstruction and Supply.

Steel

Cassels spent a full afternoon with the Steel Controller and Alex Skelton, during which he learned how we have controlled steel since the end of the war as well as something of our plans for 1948, and how our import restrictions may affect our total requirements for U.S. steel.

A fairly detailed study of our 1948 steel "budget" could not be made during Cassels' visit as the budget had not been approved by the Minister. When our 1948 steel requirements from the United States become definite it is probable that Mr. Uren will come to Washington to discuss our plans with the Commerce officials.

Fuel Oil

On the oil question, which was discussed several times, it was agreed that our side would come forward, as soon as possible, with the proposed Canadian imports of all light fuel oils for the three months of February, March and April.

Conclusion

The officials concerned in Ottawa went, I think, to a great deal of trouble in order to make Mr. Sykes' visit as successful and pleasant as possible. Although I know that he appreciated this very much, there is a possibility that some of our officials may have some doubts as to what will come from Mr. Sykes' visit. There is no way of predicting with any accuracy what will happen in the next few months in Washington on the export control question. We cannot guarantee nor can Mr. Sykes guarantee that we will remain free from export control as long as the present critical shortages as well as divided legislative authority continue.

There was very little enthusiasm for export control even as late as the summer of 1947; it was regarded as another Government control which should be dispensed with as soon as possible. In its actual operation during the latter half of last year it was almost the exclusive prerogative of a rather objectionable Department of Commerce official, Francis McIntyre. Now the situation in both these respects has greatly changed. In the Congress, the continuation of export control power received very strong support from both Republicans and Democrats. Its appeal to the Republican is logical enough if it is viewed as a 'tariff in reverse'. Those who favoured high tariffs in order to prevent cheap foreign goods from destroying the American Way of Life, and so forth, now regard export control as a method of protecting the American standard of living by stopping foreigners from obtaining scarce American goods. This attitude which would have been strong enough even if the rest of the world was able to pay its own way, gains strength by the increasing dependence of many important areas on the United States.

On the Administration's side important steps have been taken to strengthen and to improve the administration of export controls. It is of some considerable advantage to us that as a result of the recent reorganization Mr. McIntyre's authority will be somewhat curbed. It is, however, of very much greater advantage to have a special friend at court in the person of Mr. Sykes. There has been an increasing disposition in several quarters to write us down somewhat. Putting us under export control would be a concrete act in the direction of pointing out our dependent status. Mr. Sykes has expressed a strong determination to prevent this happening and to see that we are considered apart. He has said that if a showdown on this issue occurs in the Department of Commerce with McIntyre and his group on the one side, that he will fight it out with the Secretary of Commerce as a clear policy issue.

Some light on the importance of having someone who is willing to give us fullest support and to resist the present trend can be gained from the fact that only six weeks ago Cassels himself was saying that some type of control on oil, and later on steel, would be "axiomatic". Cassels' concern was that it should be done in as favourable and as gentle a way as possible. Mr. Sykes' position is that controls should not be imposed because they are not necessary provided full information on our programs is readily available. The liaison established between Cassels and Skelton should ensure that the necessary information is quickly available and that it will be considered by sympathetic officials. At this stage I doubt if we could do anything more than this. It may, however, be worthwhile informing Tyler Wood and Andrew Foster of this development, and perhaps also mentioning it to Mr. Hickerson.

Abbott called after 6 to give me further particulars of the progress being made in trade negotiations with the U.S. He said that today the U.S. officials are bringing the matter to the attention of the Under-Secretary of State, Lovett. The proposal now is that Lovett will bring the matter up to Marshall and it will later go to the President but the U.S. will try to secure the support of the leading Republicans in the Senate before giving publicity to what is proposed. [Robert A.] Taft of the Senate still holds to his father's view as to greater freedom of trade with Canada and will support a measure of the kind. From what Abbott told me, it now appears that the U.S. are prepared to make an agreement, if need be, for 25 years, abolishing all tariffs between Canada and the U.S. They, on their part, will reserve the right to fix a certain quota on cattle, fish, potatoes and on other commodities. But the quota in each case would be larger than those at present are that we would have under increased quotas under the Geneva Agreements.

We, on our part, would be given the right to restrict for a period of time certain of the commodities which we are now securing from the U.S. This would be for a transitional period.

As to wheat, there would be some special agreement. We would be free to offer the same conditions to the U.K. We might even consider were it not for butter, etc. offering similar conditions to all thenations of the Commonwealth. The Agreement represents a tremendous advance toward freedom of trade throughout a large part of the world. Instead of proceeding by resolution of both Houses, the Americans would probably proceed by the concluding of a Treaty. They would like to get the matter before Congress in April.

Abbott said he had mentioned the matter to no one in the govt. other than St. Laurent, and that but slightly. I told him it would be well for him to tell St. Laurent the whole situation before Abbott's officials, Deutsch and MacKinnon, return to Washington tomorrow.

I strongly advised Abbott to let us clear up all matters concerning the U.S. trade as rapidly as we can so as to have them out of the way before this new transaction comes up in Parliament.

pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*
Memorandum from Economic Division to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], March 18, 1948

The following are short notes on the various items concerning which we have had discussions with the United States during the past six months.

1. Corn for Distilling

In January 1948, in response to a request to Congress by the United States' President to extend his power to allocate grains to the distilling industry, the United States Senate passed a stop-gap measure which would continue the present program of allocations until February 29. Action in the House on this Bill was blocked by the Banking and Currency Committee. This Committee was influenced to a large extent by a publicity campaign which was being conducted by certain elements in the distilling industry, and which alleged that all of the corn sent to Canada from the United States was used in the distilling industry. The House felt that it was undesirable to continue to allocate grain in the United States, while grain shipped abroad could be used for making liquor.

As a result of Congressional pressure, the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. [C.P.] Anderson, informed the Canadian Embassy in the United States on January 30, 1948, that, unless Canada could provide satisfactory information as to the end use of corn imported into Canada from the United States, the United States Government would be forced immediately to place an embargo on exports of corn to Canada. The Secretary of Agriculture was informed by our Embassy that less than 50% of the corn imported from the United States in the calendar year 1947 was used by Canadian distillers, and that the general production of distilled liquors in Canada in the year 1947 was far below capacity. In addition, it was pointed out to the Secretary of Agriculture that Canadian distillers had been forbidden the use of wheat (except that unfit for human consumption) since March 17, 1947, a prohibition which partially explained the increase in Canadian corn consumption in 1947 as compared with 1945 and 1946.

In a further effort to cooperate with the United States, Canadian officials asked representatives of the beverage distillers to attend a meeting in Ottawa on February 6 to consider restrictions on the use of corn for distilling purposes. All of the representatives of the distillers present at that meeting agreed to voluntary restrictions with the exception of the representative of the Schenley Company, who explained that his parent company in the United States had been conducting a publicity campaign designed to change Government policy there with respect to distilling restrictions. It was reported to Cabinet that voluntary restrictions would not be satisfactory and that any required restrictions would have to be imposed by the Government, which could be done under authority of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board. Cabinet agreed that the State Department might be informed that if the United States Government applies restrictions on distillers in that country, the Canadian Government would be prepared to take concurrent action.

2. Fuel Oil

A critical shortage of fuel oil in the United States, which developed late last Fall, prompted the United States' Department of Commerce to request the Canadian Government to take steps to reduce Canadian imports of fuel oil. As a result of this request Mr. Howe convened a meeting of the principal figures in the Canadian oil industry and obtained from them an undertaking that imports into Canada from the United States of light fuel oil, diesel oil, kerosene and stove oil, during the month of January, 1948, would not exceed 50% of the monthly average for the first quarter of 1947. This was proposed to, and accepted by, the United States Administration, together with an undertaking on the part of Canada, to review the stock and consumption position with a view to ascertaining what further could be done to cover the first four months of 1948.

In the United States, during January and early February, there was considerable Congressional pressure to have export controls applied to commodities moving from the United States to Canada. This was, and continues to be, resisted by the United States Administration on the grounds that it would be contrary to the spirit of the Hyde Park Declaration, and that it would also impede the present working arrangements between the two countries for the most efficient use of commodities in short supply.

When, subsequently during February the undertaking of the Canadian oil industry to restrict its imports of the fuel oils mentioned above, during the first four months of 1948, to 50% of the quantities imported in a like period of 1947, was communicated to the United States Administration, the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce expressed itself as highly satisfied with the action of the Canadian authorities. For the time being, thought of applying controls to the export of oil to Canada is not evident. In view of the shortages of petroleum products which will continue in the United States throughout the rest of this year and part of next, it is possible, however, that requests will be received for the reduction of imports into Canada of gasoline.

3. Steel

Owing to a shortage of steel in the United States, suggestions have been made, both by the United States' Congress and by certain officials of the United States Administration, that exports of steel to Canada should be placed under export control. This led, in January last, to a visit to Ottawa of United States officials, who conferred with Canadian officials of the Department of Reconstruction and Supply, and an arrangement was agreed whereby the United States' Department of Commerce would be kept continuously informed of the Canadian steel position and plans. Officials of the United States Administration feel that with such information readily available, they will be able to forestall any legislative attempt to impose export controls on the movement of steel to this country.

4. Natural Gas in South-western Ontario

In May, 1947, it was pointed out by both the Ontario Government and the Union Gas Company that a very critical shortage of natural gas was in prospect for South-western Ontario during the winter of 1947-1948. The gas for this area was being supplied by the Panhandle Eastern Pipeline Company, but the export of gas to Canada, which was authorized by an order of the Federal Power Commission, had a very low priority.

Accordingly, the Union Gas Company applied for a hearing before the United States' Federal Power Commission, in order to raise their priority on the F.P.C. permit of the Panhandle Company. Simultaneous to this hearing, which took place in the early part of February, 1948, informal representations were made by the Canadian Embassy in Washington to the State Department. It was pointed out to the State Department that the Canadian Government could not, and does not, expect United States authorities to cause the United States to be deprived to any serious extent of a commodity which may be from time to time in short supply in the United States, in order to provide for the export of that commodity to Canada. Nevertheless, it was indicated that the Canadian Government is concerned with the possibility that when a commodity of prime importance to the economies of both countries becomes in short supply in one country, the result of such a shortage will be to reduce very drastically, or even to cut off entirely, the export of that commodity to the other country.

The results of the Union Gas Company hearing have not yet been announced, but it is reported from our Embassy in Washington that a note, on our behalf, has been passed by the State Department to the Federal Power Commission.

5. Export Restrictions Governing the Export of Logs to the United States from British Columbia

In July, 1940, the Canadian Timber Controller placed restrictions on the Export of Douglas Fir logs from British Columbia from Crown granted lands. These restrictions remained in effect until the end of 1940, at which time they were lifted, and the free export of Douglas Fir logs from British Columbia from Crown granted lands was again permitted, with the result that exports of Douglas Fir, together with the unrestricted exports of hemlock and balsam fir reached the point where the flow of logs of these three species to the United States in 1941 exceeded by nearly one hundred per cent the volume of exports in any of the previous 12 years. Restrictions on the export of Douglas Fir logs were, therefore, reimposed in August, 1941, and in 1942 the export of hemlock and balsam logs was also restricted. These restrictions were continued through 1943 and in 1944 a quota for exports to the United States was established at 17½ million feet of Douglas Fir and 32½ million feet of hemlock (including balsam or 50 million feet in total.) This quota has remained in effect since that time.

In April, 1947, the United States State Department made a formal request that the Canadian Government consider abandoning the export quota system in British Columbia or, if this could not be done, that the Canadian Government increase the quota of log exports to 150 million feet, of which 120 million would be hemlock and 30 million Douglas Fir. The following were the chief arguments used to support this request:

(1) the fact that the terms of the contracts under which United States interests had purchased standing timber on Crown lands provided for the free and uncontrolled export of this timber to the United States;

(2) the claim that wartime restrictions imposed on such exports were, under the terms of the contract, even in the emergency, difficult to justify and that their continued imposition could be described as a breach of faith;

(3) the claim that these continued restrictions were contrary to the spirit of the Hyde Park Agreement.

The United States' note mentioned three United States firms which, at present, have Crown grant lands in British Columbia, from which they desire to import logs. It was requested for 1947, that these three firms be permitted to import 75 million feet of logs from their own Crown granted territories and that, in addition, these three companies and other companies be permitted to import a further 75 million feet of logs from other Crown granted lands. Thus, half the log imports requested for 1947 would have come from Crown grant lands on which the standing timber had been purchased by three large United States' firms, and presumably the situation is similar for 1948.

The Canadian Government, in its reply, did not grant the United States request. Our principal arguments to support the present quota of 50 million feet were that on an overall basis of exports from all parts of Canada, the United States was receiving its fair share of pulpwood and pulpwood materials so that any commitment under the Hyde Park Agreement was being fulfilled, and that lumber was urgently required in Canada for housing purposes. In addition, the United States argument that there had been a breach of faith in regard to exports from Crown granted lands was not admitted since the Canadian Government has authority to restrict exports from Crown or Crown granted lands.

The United States request was repeated in August, 1947, this time without any detailed arguments, and more in the form of a frank request for Canadian cooperation to meet the needs of United States mills. In January, 1948, our Embassy in Washington was advised that the quota for 1948 would again be 50 million feet, but as a result of recent pressures which have developed in the United States linking this question with that of possible export control of steel and other products exported to Canada from the United States, it has been agreed that the export allocation of logs from British Columbia to the United States should be increased to 100 million board feet by releasing a further 50 million board feet of hemlock logs suitable for the production of pulp.

Although this concession has been granted the argument has been reiterated to the State Department (with supporting statistics) that Canada has not only maintained but increased overall pulpwood exports to the United States both during the war and post-war period, and the point has been made that our concession should be matched by a United States concession releasing for export to Canada steel of a type urgently needed here.

6. Negotiations With the United States Government to Obtain a Bill of Sale for the S.S. Empire Gangway

The S.S. Empire Gangway (S.S. Weserwehr) was one of three German vessels allocated to Canada as reparations on May 24th, 1946, by the Inter-Allied Reparation Agency. Unlike the other two vessels, the Empire Gangway was a United States prize of war, and it is necessary for the Canadian Government to obtain from the United States Government a bill of sale for this vessel before its sale to private operators can be completed.

Delivery of the vessel was taken in October, 1946, by Park Steamship Company, as agent for War Assets Corporation, and from that date until August 1947, Park Steamship Company endeavoured, without success, to obtain the necessary bill of sale from the United States Government. Their inquiries were met with the reply that transfer of title was being delayed pending a decision by the United States Department of Justice whether Prize Court proceedings were necessary before the United States Maritime Commission could transfer title to Canada. On August 27th, the Canadian Ambassador, Washington, addressed a note to the State Department, pointing out that this vessel had been allocated to Canada by the Inter-Allied Reparations Agency, and that the Canadian Government was anxious to secure title to the vessel at the earliest possible date.

This note has been followed by repeated informal requests that the United States decision be expedited, but to date the bill of sale has not been made available, although the State Department advised informally on January 28th, 1948, that the United States Attorney-General had decided to continue Prize Court proceedings to Decree on the S.S. Empire Gangway and that, when the Decree was issued by the Court, the Attorney-General would then make a decision as to the transfer of title. The State Department thought that the Court Decree would be issued within three or four days (from January 20th) and that the Attorney-General would then make a favourable decision granting title to the Canadian Government, but it remains uncertain how much additional delay will be involved before this decision is made.

7. Purchase of Oil Tankers from the United States Maritime Commission

In October, 1947, the United States Maritime Commission agreed to allot to Canadian buyers four of a total of one hundred T2 tankers allocated for sale to foreign flags. One of these tankers was to go to Acadia Overseas Limited and three to Deep Sea Tankers Limited, a wholly owned subsidiary of the Shell Oil Company of Canada. The Canadian Ambassador in Washington had supported these applications with the United States authorities on the grounds that sale of the tankers to Canada, rather than to other foreign flags, would contribute to North American security and also that the Canadian ownership of tankers would ease the drain on our United States dollar resources.

Delivery of these tankers was temporarily delayed because certain United States Senators, including Senators Vandenberg and Taft, protested against the sale of tankers to foreign buyers while applications of responsible United States citizens had not been granted. This protest was based upon a provision of the Ship Sales Act, 1946, to the effect that the U.S.N.A. may sell to foreign flags only those vessels for which there are not reliable United States buyers. However, following an investigation of the question by the Senate Small Business Sub-Committee, we were advised on December 15th that the tankers which had been sold, including those allotted to Canadian buyers, were being released for immediate delivery.

8. Use of Kindley Field, Bermuda, by Trans-Canada Airlines

Trans-Canada Airlines has been planning to inaugurate a service to Bermuda under the terms of the Canada-United Kingdom Air Agreement signed in July, 1947. This would mean that T.C.A. planes would operate to Kindley Field, Bermuda, which is one of the airfields leased by the United Kingdom to the United States for ninety-nine years. During discussions held in Bermuda in February, 1946 as a basis for the preparation and conclusion of the United Kingdom-United States "Basefields" Agreement, the United States negotiators made it clear to the United Kingdom Delegation that final approval and signature by the United States of any Agreement relating to the opening of the base airfields to civil aircraft would be conditional upon their reaching a satisfactory agreement with the Governments of Newfoundland and Canada regarding the use by civil aircraft of airfields in Newfoundland and Labrador.

Accordingly, negotiations opened on two agreements; one relating to the use of basefields in the West Indies (which would include an exchange of notes granting Canada permission to operate into Kindley Field), and the other relating to the civil use by the United States of the Newfoundland and Labrador airfields. Negotiations on the first Agreement proceeded favourably, but in September, 1947 the United States and Newfoundland Commission of Government reached an impasse in the discussion of the second agreement, even though both the United Kingdom and Canadian Governments had made clear to both parties the importance they attached to its conclusion. However, in October, 1947 the United States announced that they were willing to conclude the Agreement concerning the West Indies bases without waiting for the conclusion of the United States Agreement with Newfoundland. Since that date a number of minor drafting differences in the West Indies Agreement were cleared up, and this Agreement was signed on February 24 in Washington.

One other minor difficulty had been encountered by T.C.A. in their administrative planning for the inauguration of the Bermuda air service. This related to the arrangements for certain space at the airport, and the installation of certain equipment which T.C.A. desired to complete before the actual signature of the Agreement, in order to allow the service to begin immediately the Agreement was signed. However, following representations by our Embassy in Washington, a compromise was reached whereby the space on the airport was secured, and the communications equipment was flown in by Pan-American Airlines for the use of T.C.A. However, it was announced jointly by the United States and the United Kingdom, at the time of the signature of the Agreement, that airlines belonging to third party nations would have to use existing facilities at the field for the present, with July as the tentative date by which additional facilities could be made available.

9. United States Protests Against Scale of Landing Charges at Canadian Airports

In July, 1947, the United States Embassy in Ottawa in accordance with a request from the Air Transport Association of America, made certain informal representations to the Department of External Affairs requesting that Canadian authorities might reconsider the present schedule of airport charges. In these representations it was pointed out that the Air Transport Association felt the existing scale of charges was extremely high and discriminated against the use of four-engine aircraft.

Accordingly, this matter was discussed with the Department of Transport and the Air Transport Board, and a memorandum was sent to the United States Embassy which outlined the basis for the present scale of charges. It was indicated that this scale was established on the principle that the aviation user should make some reasonable payment towards the cost of providing and maintaining the facilities used. This payment, which takes the form of a landing fee, however, covers only a fraction of the total cost of airport maintenance. It was further pointed out that although the present scale of landing fees in Canada was felt to be an equitable one designed to encourage the optimum economic utilization of aircraft, the Canadian authorities were desirous of reaching an understanding with the United States, and they would co-operate on any future discussions which the United States might suggest. In November, 1947, a note was received from the United States Embassy suggesting that discussions be held between appropriate Government authorities and airline operators from both countries.

During the month of November, T.C.A. registered a protest against the scale of landing charges and a public hearing was called by the Air Transport Board on December 9 on the subject of landing fees and charges. The United States were notified of the hearing, and they were invited to make any representations which they deemed appropriate. The American suggestion that bilateral discussions be held on the topic of Canadian rates was discouraged because it was felt that this would constitute an unwarranted intervention in Canadian domestic affairs. The aircraft of eight other foreign scheduled operators fly into and over Canada and use Canadian airports. The charges are uniform for aircraft of all countries, including Canada. Although it is true that the airways systems of Canada and the United States are closely integrated, this still did not provide sufficient grounds for permitting foreign operators and Government authorities to review and pass judgment on Canadian rate structures.

Generally speaking, it was felt that although the United States request for this type of conference could not be granted, a considerable privilege had been extended in inviting the United States to attend and make representations at the public hearing, and it was doubtful if Canadian airlines would be granted as generous a treatment in the question of any revision of United States rate structures.

10. Ontario Government Restrictions on the Export of Raw Wood from Ontario Crown Lands to the United States

In October, 1947, Mr. George Drew announced a program to decrease the export of raw wood from Crown lands of Ontario by means of a progressive reduction, as follows, in the export of unmanufactured spruce and balsam fir and jack pine:

(1) Those who have built pulp mills in Ontario and have included in their contracts permission to export in connection with logging operations for their own production in Ontario will have their annual quotas reduced each year in order to bring their exports to an end in 10 years.

(2) Those who have export rights as a consideration for assisting in the erection of new pulp mills by vacating areas allotted to them will have their quotas reduced each year so as to bring their exports to an end in 4 years.

(3) Remaining exporters will have their quotas reduced each year at a rate calculated to bring exports to an end in 3 years.

Eighteen of the United States paper companies affected are in the third category, and only two or three of them come in the first category. Exports from privately owned lands will not be affected by this policy, but will come under the overall Federal Emergency Export Control on a quota basis.

WA-405 of February 6th† from Washington indicates that the United States paper companies concerned will certainly fight this program, probably by means of pressure to have export control placed on steel and oil shipments to Canada from the United States, and to have these controls so administered that they are directly discriminatory against Ontario. Note No. 31† of February 10th from the United States Embassy, Ottawa, points out that the Ontario program will cut off supplies of raw materials used by United States pulp and paper mills, and suggests that the program is contrary to the principles of the I.T.C.<sup>29</sup> and to the general spirit of cooperation between Canada and the United States, and asks for information on any action which the Canadian Government may be able to take. The note does not actually mention the Hyde Park Agreement, but refers to "economic cooperation . . . an outstanding factor in the relations of the two countries during and since the war."

On February 14th Mr. Pearson spoke by telephone to Mr. Michener, the Ontario Provincial Secretary, pointing out the possibility of discriminatory retaliation against Ontario by the United States unless this program is modified. In addition, Mr. Howe has agreed to write to Premier Drew in the same sense.

Extracts from Diary of Prime Minister

Ottawa and Washington, March 22-30, 1948

 After morning reading, looked over some mail that came in. Then went to my office where I had a most important meeting with Abbott and St. Laurent, Howe and Clark, MacKinnon and Deutsch. We met at 11 and were there until 1.20 p.m.

Deutsch outlined to myself and other Ministers what had taken place at Washington in the way of exploration of possibilities of further trade relations with the U.S. Abbott had referred to the possibility of further trade relations when he spoke on the Geneva Trade Agreements, the night I broadcast from London.

MacKinnon and Deutsch have been in conference with opposite numbers on the official level in the State Dept. They had worked out a tentative agreement along lines previously mentioned in part to me by Abbott. In a word, the picture was ultimate free trade between Canada and the U.S. During the interval in the next 5 years, Canada maintaining the restricted measures she has found it necessary to place to enable her gradually to get an equal financial balance in trade matters. The thought, however, was that there would be certain quota arrangements which the U.S. would retain but which would be larger than those granted us by Geneva and really larger than we would be able to fill. These quotas would affect such articles as cattle, potatoes, a certain kind of fish in the Maritimes, and other articles. One question over which there had been considerable difficulty was wheat, but now that the international wheat agreement had come into being, it could govern the question of wheat export. Canada was to be free to accord the same treatment to the U.K. as Canada was according to the U.S.

Deutsch made an excellent presentation. What I have recorded here is the barest outline. Other features where agreement could be for 25 years; also if Ministers agreed to what was proposed, the matter would then be put up to the Secretary of State and the President. Up to the present, it has not got beyond the Asst. Secretary of State. 2 or 3 of the U.S. Ministers would be brought into the secret first. The President would be the one to approach the Secretary of Agriculture Anderson who would be difficult person to deal with. The idea was to have agreement by Party in the U.S., that is to say Republican as well as Democrats would have to agree to it, or matters would not proceed further.

It was thought that Vandenberg and Taft of the Republicans would favour such an agreement. The U.S. would wish to have the matter made public by the 15th of May.

After listening carefully to the entire exposition, I said there were two important aspects I felt I should speak of: one was first the question of timing. I admitted that the agreement, if it could be brought into being, could be of tremendous benefit to Canada. The point to be considered still was the element of timing. That my experience in politics had taught me that no matter how good a thing might be, if the people were taken by surprise in its presentation, there was bound to be opposition to it. That they had to be led gradually into the appreciation of what it would mean. I felt perfectly sure that if this agreement were announced in the H[ouse] of C[ommons] something which had already been arranged, and had to be approved by Parl[iamen]t, there would be instant opposition from the Conservatives, and they would keep up that opposition very strongly. The cry would be raised at once that it was commercial union that we were after. So far as I was concerned, I would be a liability rather than an asset in the picture inasmuch as the Tories would say this is Mr. King's toy. He has always wanted annexation with the States. Now he is making his last effort toward that end. The press would not grasp the details. I doubted myself whether I had the mental energy and physical strength to make an explanation in the H. of C. such as had been made to us by Deutsch. If that explanation had to be gotten over to the public from the Commons, I did not know how that would be done with the details what they were. The size of the agreement what it was, etc.

It would be represented that we were seeking to separate from Britain. I said I would feel no matter what happened that we would have to offer Britain the same rights in our market as we were offering the Americans. All present agreed that it was so.

I concluded by saying that if the matter had to be settled in so short a space of time in relation to trade alone, I certainly felt it pretty doubtful that we should give our consent to it.

I then said I had something else, however, in mind which I thought was far reaching indeed and which might make not only possible but easy of realization what was being sought on this extension of trade — on the line of this increase in reciprocal trade. I said I would have to swear three members of the Service present to absolute secrecy and to tell them that, at the moment, negotiations were on at Washington for the establishing of an Atlantic Security Pact — negotiations between the U.K., U.S. and Canada. The stage, at the moment, was on exploration only. That I felt trade proposals might be made to fit as it were into the larger Atlantic Pact. That if, for example, the Atlantic Security Pact were agreed upon and were brought before Parl[iamen]t and be passed as it certainly would be, we might immediately follow thereafter with trade agreement as being something which still further helped to further the object of the pact, namely the removal of restrictions to trade within the area arranged by the Pact.

It might even lead to the U.S. and U.K. coming to more in the way of greater freedom of trade between them. I felt that both the U.S. and the U.K. would go very far in the direction of anything that would disclose a closer unity of interest between them. That, later, certain other countries, France, for example, might be brought into a larger, freer trade area, etc. All 3 — Clark, Deutsch and MacKinnon were strongly taken with the idea. They had not known of what is being considered in the nature of a security pact though Deutsch mentioned that the Americans had asked them if some security feature might not be added. They said they could not speak of this. On the other hand, the fact that the security had been mentioned seemed to suggest that the Americans who proposed it did have some knowledge of what was going to be worked out for security purposes and might be thinking of combining the two. Armour, Hickerson, Under-Secretary of State Lovett and one or two others would have a knowledge of both.

I suggested it might be well for Clark to get in touch with Pearson at once and have a word with him about possible consideration of the two matters in relation to each other as I had indicated them. All present agreed with that.

I then told those present that I felt I should make clear to them not only that I was likely to be a liability rather than an asset as I had indicated that the Tory attack would be that I had wanted annexation, and this could mean separation from Britain, etc. but that I was really not in any shape to aid a movement of the kind in Canada. That I had not the mental power. Was feeling fatigued and exhausted, now I was incapable of another general election campaign. That I could not do justice to the situation in the H[ouse] of C[ommons] and that this was a factor which would have to be taken into account. I said I was even beginning to doubt my own judgment on many matters. I found myself much too cautious and conservative in international matters to feel that my views were shared by some of the younger men around me.

I had great difficulty in being prepared to go the lengths they wished to go in the time they wished to take. I felt I should not be counted upon for a battle of the kind much as I believed in the wisdom of what was proposed. I simply had not myself what was needed to put it over. I said I might come to have a different view after a bit of a rest and change. Just at present, I was anything but equal to international negotiations of any kind. I said I thought I ought to say that I believed the 2Americans in their attitude were carrying out what I felt was really their policy and had been so over many years of seeking to make this Continent one. That I thought they had long seen that a conflict likely to come would be between Russia and themselves, and that they had felt that their position would be strengthened if they controlled all of North America. That I myself frequently felt I knew they did not want to bring this about by any conflict but that it was simply a farsighted view as to what would be wisest in the changes that would come with them. If I were an American, I might easily share that point of view. I said that while I had recognized it, I had never allowed it to gain any headway in my own dealings with public affairs. That personally I would rather have Canada kept within the orbit of the British Commonwealth of Nations than to come within that of the U.S. That all my efforts had been in that direction. It had always been said that any change that would come on this side in matter of political allegiance would be due to what happened here instead of other parts of the world. I thought we could keep all of this in mind in anything that was done at this time to see that all British considerations were taken into account.

Talking alone with Hector MacKinnon after the others had left, he told me that the Americans had said they did hope if the matter came to where it was one of political parties, that I would head the movement in Canada. That my name and long public career would give a lead to the situation; nothing else could. I mentioned to Hector that the President was coming to Williamsburg to say he was there to pay a tribute to me and my years of public life. That I had never allowed occasions of the kind to go to my head. That I knew the President was not coming to Williamsburg on my personal account. It was to help to further the larger ends which the U.S. had in view. That I thought my strength had lain in the fact that I had seen clearly the significance of moves of the kind in all my relations with the President and others. That that had really helped me in continuing to hold the position I have for so long. Hector said that he was sure the people realized that. He said that the trouble was that most of our men who got into new arenas, suddenly believed it was they, themselves, who were so important.

Later, this afternoon, I told Mr. St. Laurent quite frankly as I saw the proposal on the trade matter, it was certain once it was introduced in the House, Conservatives would block it steadily until the end of June when Parl[iamen]t would adjourn. If we came back at the end of the summer, they would block it again. That I did not think the gov[ernmen]t could use closure.

Also that I felt the blocking would go on until Parl[iamen]t would have to be dissolved and a general election take place. Mr. St. Laurent said that he thought so far as our chances and the electorate of Canada were concerned, we did not need this issue to help us win. The public felt we were the best government that Canada could have, and that the gov[ernmen]t would be returned on that score. To make a new issue was not necessarily going to be an aid to us as a gov[ernmen]t. This, I think, is very true. I told him, however, that if an election came, I would have to ask the G[overnor] G[eneral] to call on him to take office. I could not be induced on any score to go through a campaign. I mentioned having seen Tussig who was a strong man physically at Harvard come down suddenly and be in a wheel chair for one or two years after. I could not take risks of the kind. I made it quite clear that I could not take on these greater responsibilities at my age.

Earlier in the afternoon, I had had a talk with Williamson of the Financial Post of Toronto who also was anxious to get my views on greater freedom of trade or total freedom of trade between the U.S. and Canada. He was going to talk with a group in the States. I asked him whether he had been invited to talk to them or was going down to talk. He told me it was a group that was studying these matters. He was anxious to get my views as to the line the gov[ernmen]t would regard as most appropriate. I was most careful to indicate to him there were considerations such as the present condition of the world, the position of Britain at the present time. Her effort at rehabilitation. Many other considerations which will have to be taken into account in studying the tariffs. Gave him nothing in a final way but gave him to understand that I would not favour such a thing as commercial union, etc.

I now want to record a quite extraordinary experience which I took to be a perfect evidence of guidance from Beyond. This morning, à propos of nothing but feeling I ought to look at some book, I drew out from my shelves a volume entitled "Studies in Colonial Nationalism" by Jebb. A book I have not looked at in 20 years. Did not like the title — either Colonial or Nationalism and had forgotten having read it with care. Looked first at page 124 — reference to Sir Wilfrid. I found myself looking with interest to the last chapter of all which was entitled The Soul of Empire. Was amazed to see how completely the views there expressed accorded with my own. The desire for fuller independence of the Commonwealth, at the same time preserving the unity of the Empire, etc. See despatches. A true picture.

When I had read them, I had felt they were significant in reference to the proposals being made to me to support the programme of complete freedom of trade between the U.S. and Canada which I have felt to be exceedingly dangerous, specially at this time, as calculated to raise an issue that would be very serious. In the first place, I do not believe it could be successful but for me to be placed in the position of being the spearhead of furthering a commercial union was the last act of my career would be to absolutely destroy the significance of the whole of it. The Tory party would make out that from the beginning my whole vision had been to further annexation. I was really at heart anti-British, etc. Everything opposite of the truth. Strangely enough, this afternoon, thinking on the importance of this question, I began to discuss some phases of it with P[ickersgill] without revealing what has been under way. To my amazement, I found he had been giving a lot of thought to this question and had been terribly concerned about it. He volunteered the statement that he knew Clark of the Dep[artmen]t of Finance felt it was the only way we could come to balance our accounts with the States and was pressing very strongly for something of the kind. He used the expression that we would absolutely be selling the soul of the people, meaning the whole relationship with Britain and the Commonwealth. The use of that word brought at once the title of the chapter I had read in the morning. The fact that one of the men I talked with spoke of Cockshutt brought back to my mind that Abbott had referred to Cockshutt as evidence of how some of the big employers had completely to reverse their early position and were now favourable to freedom of trade.

Each thing that happened today in the interviews seemed to bring confirmation of what I had felt about the whole business when I read the article on Colonial Nationalism. I felt wholly convinced that the taking out of that book, and reading that chapter was no matter of chance but had been inspired from some source in the Beyond. I would no more think of at my time of life and at this stage of my career, attempting any movement of the kind than I would of flying to the South pole.

I went from the Chateau to talk with St. Laurent in his own office in the H[ouse] of C[ommons] about the suggestions of our supporting removal of tariff propositions. I gave him my views as I see them. Told him I thought the whole proposal had come from Clark of the Finance Dep[artmen]t but that while it might be sound economically, I believed it would be fatal politically. Quite impossible of carrying out at this time in the limited time that was being suggested. It was the sort of thing that would require months, if not years of education. It would be most unfortunate if an issue of that kind came in a year of the convention, such as the present — a year of threatening peril. I could think of nothing that would destroy my name and reputation more than to be made the spearhead of a political fight which would be twisted into a final endeavour to bring about economic union with the U.S. which would mean annexation, and separation from Britain. I said I doubted if Ilsley or Gardiner would support a proposal of the kind. St. Laurent said that he himself had felt when he learned of what was suggested, that the proposal was hardly likely to be feasible. That he had thought it might have been developed between now and the time of the Liberal Convention and make a plan for the platform there. He also agreed that Howe and Abbott were very strong for it because of the concrete problem they are dealing with, and as believing it to be the one and only solution. I am afraid they would create a still larger problem. He was not too sure how Quebec or some other parts would view giving Britain the same freedom of trade as the U.S. That there were sure to be misrepresentations there. I let him know I was giving him my views because I would be absent and did not wish anything settled on this matter without having a final say.

He [Pearson] told me that Deutsch has arrived the last day and had told him of what we were thinking on trade matters. He spoke to Hickerson who knows about other matters about including a paragraph in the proposed Atlantic Security Treaty to make clear they were aiming at economic, social and moral mutual advantages which would of course make it possible to develop out of the larger treaty, matters relating to Trade. This could not be better. It leaves the door open for further developments in the right way. I outlined to Pearson the talks already had with Abbott and others. Gave him my opinions as already recorded. On the whole, it seemed to me he shared pretty fully the views that I expressed as to this not being the time to attempt anything so vast. Also there would be great dangers of raising too large an issue at a time when other great issues were in existence. I felt relieved at his attitude.

Pearson came in shortly after luncheon. I was glad P[jickersgill] was present. It is apparent that he had come to arrange to have further explorations made of the trade matters at the instance of Clark and others, that negotiations at Washington might be further developed. I told him quite frankly I doubted very much the wisdom of attempting anything that had to be brought on within the next month. Did not think this matter should be brought before the public at this time with the situation what it was. To have that situation in American elections, proceedings in Parl[iamen]t and Canadian elections probably forced, my thought is it would be a terrible mistake and would defeat its very ends. I said I had a strong feeling I could not possibly undertake the kind of campaign that would be required nor, did I think it was in Britain's interests and our own at this time. The campaign to which it would give rise would be a vicious one. Not at all the kind I would wish to have to do with myself.

I pointed out that in the morning Citizen there was an editorial underlined regarding what was taking place while the question of commercial union with the States was coming up.

[Washington, March 30, 1948]

Wrong brought up the trade matter. Pearson evidently had given him the impression that I was not favourable to proceeding on account of the limited time in which decisions would have to be made. Conversation was kept for the most part on the matter of time. I pointed out my experience in Laurier's Cabinet re reciprocity; also the fears that would be aroused if the matter was sprung suddenly and would have to be settled within a limited time. I added if agreed to by both political parties in the U.S., fears would be greater than otherwise. Would have old questions of commercial union and annexation, etc. brought up again. With conditions in Europe what they are, that would be most deplorable if a matter like this added to the confusion of the present year and in the House as well. I referred to what would happen in the H[ouse] of C[ommons] where the Conservatives would hold up everything until the end of June, again in the Autumn and would force an election in which the Party might be badly defeated.

Wrong said the suggestion I had made about leaving a clause in the [Atlantic Security] pact for economic, social and other considerations had been agreed to. That Hickerson had gone over the draft and included something that was pretty certain to be agreed to at tomorrow's meeting. Wrong pointed out that the trade thing might evolve out of that in time. He said that he, himself, had been doubtful from the start about the possibility of getting anything of that magnitude through in so short a time. That '48 might be a better moment. But it was doubtful if conditions in the U.S. would ever be as favourable as they are at the moment.

Wrong said even if we did give England the same advantages, he could see where there might be difficulties in time. I pointed out that the issue was very large. That unquestionably came back to what the future of Canada either in the British Commonwealth or as a part of the U.S. will be. I said I felt sure that the long objective of the Americans was to control this Continent. They would want to get Canada under their aegis. If I was an American, I would have the same view specially considering Russia's position, etc. On the other hand, I did not feel we would be as well off in a State of the Union as we will be possibly as the greatest of the self governing portions of the British Commonwealth of Nations. At any rate, I would not want myself to take a position contrary to this. Wrong replied that certainly our form of gov[ernment] was much better than that of the U.S. But it seemed to me, however, in talking, as if both Wrong and Stone were a little disappointed that matters were not likely to be proceeded with. I had the same feeling in talking with Pearson. I am afraid most of E[xternal] A[ffairs] have become imbued with the attentions they have received from the Americans and the place the Americans have allowed them to take in the foreground of international affairs. I said quite frankly I thought the U.S. was using the U.N. as an arm of their foreign office just as the French Foreign Office had used the League of Nations for a similar purpose in their country. I spoke, too, of the U.N. Said that I hoped our people on no account would support the idea of trusteeship to be worked out by force. That it involved the same principle as the original American proposal. You could not sell a purple horse twice. I repeated what I have said about regarding passive resistance as a positive, not a negative act. Of Britain's position being the sounder in that she had seen the end from the beginning. I told them to keep in mind what they could expect the Canadian Parl[iamen]t to do and not to do.

TELEGRAM EX-846

TOP SECRET. MOST IMMEDIATE.

Following for the Ambassador only from Pearson, Begins: Yesterday afternoon our Minister and the Minister of Finance, with Clark, Towers, McKinnon, Deutsch and myself discussed the situation in regard to recent U.S.-Canadian trade and economic talks between officials that have been going on recently on an exploratory and non-committal basis. As you know, this matter had been previously discussed with the Prime Minister and Mr. Howe also, both of whom were not available for yesterday's discussions. Our officials felt that some guidance should be now received as to whether it was desirable to continue these talks, which had reached a point where they would have to be broadened. Since it was expected that U.S. officials concerned would visit Ottawa shortly, immediate action was required. It was felt that, if the Government were not in a position to take immediately a favourable political decision on this matter, then the official talks should be suspended, for the time being, as the broader and deeper those talks went, the more difficult it would be to withdraw later or to keep them secret. The whole question was gone into yesterday by the Ministers concerned, and it was decided that the United States officials should be asked to postpone their visit to Ottawa, as the Canadian Government did not wish to pursue the question further for the time being. The Ministers did not make this decision without a full understanding of the economic and general importance to Canada of the proposed arrangements. Trade arrangements between the United States and Canada along the lines that had been explored had great attractions and many advantages, especially in view of the delays and difficulties that had been and would be encountered in the restoration of trade to anything like the pre-war pattern between Canada and Europe. There was no disposition to underestimate the importance of the United States market for Canada and the desirability of removing, to the fullest possible extent, barriers in the way of trade between Canada and the United States. Indeed, the fullest development of this trade may, in certain circumstances in the future, be the only firm foundation for our economic stability and prosperity. Nevertheless, to decide in such a short space of time on a matter of such fundamental importance would be difficult in any circumstances; especially so in present circumstances. There must be, of course, adequate time for the preparatory educational work which would be required. Otherwise, uncertainty, confusion and possibly misunderstanding as to the real purpose of the policies recommended would follow. There is another reason why it would be difficult to meet the timetable involved if a decision to go ahead were made now. It is probable that the proposal for a North Atlantic Area Security Pact may be made public within a few weeks. This is a matter of such great importance in its relation to the present international situation, and will arouse so much attention and discussion in this country, as well as in the United States, that to confront the Canadian people at the same time with this issue and with the problems involved in the proposed economic arrangements would be of doubtful wisdom from the point of view of achieving both objectives with a minimum of controversy. It was felt, therefore, that the energy and attention of the Government here should be concentrated at the moment on the problems involved in the North Atlantic Security Pact and on the necessity of rallying the Parliament and people wholeheartedly around that Pact and the policy which it embodies. There is no disposition here, however, to forget for a moment the importance of the trade relationships between Canada and the United States, and the necessity of continuing to work toward freest possible trade between the two countries along lines already begun. In this connection, it was thought that trade discussions might begin again if and when a satisfactory North Atlantic Security Pact is signed. It would be natural for these discussions to be related to the Pact as they are concerned with measures for economic defence against aggression. It might also be desirable later to add the United Kingdom to such discussions. If, in fact, the discussions could be somewhat widened in this way, it would remove one of the political obstacles to bilateral arrangements at the present time for free trade between the two countries.

I would be grateful if you would explain the position to Hickerson along the above lines, emphasizing that we are very much aware of the importance of the work that has been done, and the desirability of continuing that work at the earliest possible opportunity. The position following the signature of the North Atlantic Pact might provide that opportunity for the two and possibly the three governments. Ends.

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, April 2, 1948

THE EXPORT OF NATURAL GAS TO SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO
BY UNITED STATES COMPANIES

In May 1947 it was pointed out to this Department by both the Ontario Government and the Union Gas Company that a very critical shortage of natural gas was in prospect for Southwestern Ontario during the winter of 1947-48. The gas for this area was being supplied by the Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Company of United States, but the export of gas to Canada which was authorized by order of the Federal Power Commission had a very low priority.

Accordingly in February 1948, the Union Gas Company applied for a hearing before the United States Federal Power Commission in order to raise their priority on the Federal Power Commission permit of the Panhandle Company. With a view to this hearing, informal representations were made by the Canadian Embassy in Washington to the State Department, who in turn passed a Note to the Federal Power Commission on our behalf.

However, since apparently every customer of the Panhandle Company has been complaining, the Federal Power Commission has decided to have a general hearing on April 7th. The Federal Power Commission is an independent agency of the United States Government before whom individuals or corporations normally appear. However they also grant permission for a government to appear as an interested party. It is therefore expected that all of Panhandle's main customers, and a good many of the states and cities served by them, will undoubtedly be making strong pleas to get their supplies assured or increased. Therefore it is possible that the supply to Canada, along with all those granted to United States sources, will be increased. There is also however a very strong possibility that in the face of the Union Gas Company's competition with United States' companies, we may get lost in the shuffle.

It is evident that to achieve any success for the Canadian company it will be necessary to bring every pressure to bear on the Federal Power Commission. Therefore the question arises of the desirability of having the Dominion Government intervene directly in the hearings before the Federal Power Commission in support of the Union Gas Company. This would involve the appearance before the Commission of some representative of the Canadian Government, probably from the Canadian Embassy in Washington, since it is not possible for the State Department to appear publicly before the Commission in support of the Canadian company's petition.

The chances for success in those hearings in respect to the Union Gas Company are not very high, but the possibility exists, that should we decline to appear, the Ontario Government which has followed the situation closely might itself intervene directly in the hearing. Should any increase in supply then subsequently be granted to Canada, the Ontario Government might take this opportunity to draw attention to the role played in this success by its own Government, vis-à-vis, that of the Dominion Government.

I therefore seek your guidance as to whether a representative of the Embassy or of the appropriate Department in Ottawa should appear before the Federal Power Commission as an interested party on behalf of the petition of the Union Gas Company.<sup>30</sup>

Following for Pearson only from Wrong, Begins: My WA-918 of April 1st† concerning postponement of our decision on the economic proposals.

I have had two or three brief discussions with Hickerson since I gave him the gist of your EX-846 of March 31st. They are disappointed, and at first he and Wiloughby advocated a meeting between Lovett and the Prime Minister when the latter is returning through Washington next week. He tells me now that he has had a long talk with Lovett this morning, at which Tyler Wood was also present. While Marshall, Lovett, and Harriman would all like very much to go ahead on the original timetable, Lovett recognizes the force of our reasons for delaying our decision for a while and considers it best that he should not seek to discuss the matter with Mr. King. I agree, on the ground that it would be preferable for Mr. King to consider the question again with the Ministers concerned in Ottawa before it is raised with him directly by the Acting Secretary of State.

2. Hickerson says that Lovett does not in the least like any suggestion of a direct connection between the Defence Agreement and the economic proposals, on the ground that this would create opposition to the Defence Agreement by some of the interests affected by the economic proposals and that it would be represented by them that the State Department was using the Defence Agreement as camouflage for furthering economic measures not directly concerned with defence. He added, however, that they intend to leave in the Defence Agreement general clauses on the lines of your draft looking towards economic co-operation between the parties. I said that if it was decided to proceed with both sets of proposals, there would be plenty of time for us to concert our tactics later on on the method of presentation of the economic arrangements. Ends.

Following for Pearson only, from Wrong, Begins: In a message to you yesterday morning I passed on information given me by Hickerson about the security talks. You will note that, as might have been expected, the timetable has already begun to lengthen. If a Presidential statement is not made for some weeks and if the Conference of the North Atlantic Powers either does not take place at all or does not meet until June or July, any prospect of going ahead with the economic proposals this year will disappear. Hickerson and Willoughby are both concerned that the party conventions may insert in the platforms planks of the usual character, especially about the protection of farmers, and that this would make it more difficult to take up the economic proposals again at a later stage. My own judgment is that if the security talks cannot be speeded up, we shall have to drop the economic proposals, at any rate until 1949, when the climate may have become far less favourable, unless we reverse our decision to await the outcome of the security negotiations before proceeding with the economic proposals. I do not suggest that we ought to reverse it, but that is the position as I see it. Ends.

Memorandum by Director, Economic Relations Division,

[Ottawa, April 21, 1948]

The arrangement under exploration — which probably would take the form of a treaty — has been explained orally. The purpose of this memorandum is not to assess pro and con the merits of the proposals in detail but rather to fill in the background from which they emerge and to develop briefly certain attendant considerations which, per se, are vital to an appraisal of the proposals themselves.

<sup>31</sup> Cette attribution et la date s'appuient sur le contexte et les commentaires contenus dans la lettre de Pearson à Robertson (document 654). La copie qui se trouve dans ce dossier porte la date écrite à la main du 26 avril 1948, mais ce n'est pas exacte.

The attribution and date are based on context and comments in Pearson's letter to Robertson (Document 654). The copy on this file has a handwritten date of April 26/48 added, but this is inaccurate.

The Nature of the Proposal

The proposal is to establish simultaneously a long-term free trade arrangement<sup>32</sup> between Canada and the United States and between Canada and the United Kingdom. Under the Canada-United States Free Trade Arrangement;

Canada would;

1. Remove immediately all customs duties against imports from the United States.

2. Retain for a period of 5 years transitional quotas on substantially the items (more than 300) now subject to balance of payments restrictions. The existing prohibitions would be replaced by quotas and all quotas would be progressively enlarged so that all restrictions against United States goods are completely eliminated at the end of 5 years.

3. Reserve permanently the right to impose seasonal quotas on imports of fresh fruits and vegetables.

The United States would;

1. Remove immediately all customs duties against imports from Canada.

2. Transform existing tariff quotas on 8 items into larger absolute quotas which are to be increased progressively. These are to be completely eliminated at the end of 5 years when all forms of restriction against Canadian goods will have been removed.

3. On the basis of the arrangements entered into in the International Wheat Agreement reserve the right under a special protocol to impose quotas on imports of wheat and flour.

Under the Canada-United Kingdom Free Trade Arrangement:

Canada would propose to the United Kingdom to;

1. Remove immediately all customs duties against imports from the United Kingdom.

2. Remove immediately all existing quotas and other balance of payments restrictions against imports from the United Kingdom.

3. Reserve permanently the right to impose quotas on the imports of woollen goods.

The United Kingdom

The United Kingdom would be asked to remove immediately all customs duties against imports from Canada. Obviously, the United Kingdom could not at this time remove the balance of payments restrictions against Canadian goods. Therefore, she would continue to impose these until her external financial position warranted their removal.

The proposed Free Trade Arrangements between Canada and the United States and between Canada and the United Kingdom would relate solely to matters concerning the importation and exportation of goods. They would not include commitments regarding political, constitutional, financial, or any other matters. Each country would retain full autonomy with respect to its own tariffs and commercial policy regarding third countries. In short, the proposed arrangement would be confined to matters which are ordinarily dealt with in traditional trade treaties; the essential difference being that instead of reducing import restrictions they would ultimately be completely removed. From the purely economic point of view, one of the outstanding difficulties in any scheme such as now proposed between Canada and the United States arises out of the problems of adjustment of Canadian industry to the initial impact of free competition from the United States. One of the particular features of the present proposal is that it would in large measure take care of this problem. Canada would, in effect, be given a five year transitional period during which adjustments can be made in a manner which involves the least amount of disruption and loss. The United States on the other hand would not have a transitional period except for a very limited number of items, and Canada would gain immediate free entry into that large market. The special circumstances which make this possible at the present time are set out below.

1. Canada's present weakness in respect of her balance of payments position is, ironically enough, the basis of her strength in trade negotiations with the United States at this moment. Quantitative restrictions have been applied to a very wide range of dollar imports and the impossibility of removing these (on balance of payments grounds) makes possible their use as a device to provide protection to many Canadian industries during the necessary period of transition. In no other way could such a transitional period have been attained for Canada.

2. The disparity in price and cost levels of the two countries becomes for the moment a very favourable factor from the Canadian standpoint. Because of the high prices prevailing in the United States for most, if not all, of the products Canada is equipped to export, and because of the overall scarcities in supply which give rise to those prices, the United States negotiators feel warranted in recommending concessions which in more normal times they would consider to be out of the question.

3. The price-disparity referred to in the preceding paragraph is particularly marked in agricultural products and is the basic reason why it is possible to obtain terms in the agricultural field of such nature as, in effect, to reverse as far as Canada is concerned the traditional United States policy in respect of the imposition of quantitative restrictions upon Canadian imports of farm products.

4. The unusual circumstances that may make possible what is from the United States viewpoint an unusual proposal have in themselves an unique feature; they may never again occur in combination. Moreover, their period of duration, even on a transitory basis, is uncertain. Improved supply will diminish the price differential as between the two countries; tomorrow's large-scale production in the United States will inevitably entail price reductions; a surfeited market may mean a recession — and with the threat of recession would disappear all hope of a renewal of today's offer. Indeed, it would seem that unless immediate final consideration can be given and a definitive reply forwarded within the next week or ten days, the opportunity will have passed in so far as concerns action during the present session of Congress.

SOME LONG TERM CONSIDERATIONS

1. The Re-establishment of Canadian Trade on a Self-supporting and Sound Basis

The present Canadian difficulties are due to the collapse of the United Kingdom-European leg of the traditional economic triangle upon which the Canadian economy has been built. In seeking to overcome these difficulties we must either (a) rely upon the possibility of restoring the financial ability of the United Kingdom and Western Europe to import from Canada upon a greatly enlarged scale, or (b) take positive steps by means of restrictions to substantially and permanently reduce the volume of imports from the United States and thereby endeavour to obtain our requirements from other sources at much higher costs; or (c) achieve a much higher degree of economic self-sufficiency; or (d) greatly expand our exports to the United States. The possibility of achieving the first alternative in an adequate way is doubtful, to say the least, and involves a very large measure of risk. The second and third alternatives would mean painful readjustments and a permanently lower standard of living. The fourth alternative, namely free access to the United States market, would mean a permanently greater economic integration with the United States. In assessing the implications of that greater integration, we must consider what would happen if the other alternatives fail. If they do, then economic dependence upon the United States is inevitable. The question, therefore, is, should our future economic relations with the United States be established as soon as possible on a self-supporting basis through unrestricted access to markets, or should we run the risk of becoming an economic suppliant when our bargaining position is weak.

In any case, at the present time, the maintenance of our large volume of external trade is very heavily and directly dependent upon the willingness of the United States Congress to vote money for large purchases in Canada. What would happen if that money should no longer be forthcoming, or if the United States should be able to obtain adequate supplies for its foreign assistance program from its own sources, which it could do in the case of a business recession? Even if the Congressional appropriations should continue to be forthcoming because of military necessities, etc., it would seem undesirable that the prosperity and development of our economy for an indefinite period should be determined so powerfully by the conditions and pressures that could easily and naturally be attached to the expenditures of United States money in Canada. This is the question that must be pondered in considering the matter of motives, Canadian sovereignty, and the safeguarding of our political identity in any meaningful sense.

We are asked, on the other hand, to consider what appears to be an unique opportunity at the present moment to establish our economic relationships with the United States on a self-supporting basis — the basis upon which nations must usually achieve the command of their own destiny. Should we seek to command our destiny on such basis or should we risk the great uncertainties involved in proceeding along the present course in the hope that the economic fabric which the war has torn apart will ultimately be re-established in its old forms?

2. The Possibility of Opportunities in the Future

It is possible that an opportunity may arise in the not too distant future under which wider trade arrangements may be worked out with the United States in circumstances which remove some of the difficulties from the Canadian standpoint that exist at present. Such an opportunity may arise in the event of some dramatic development in the economic relations between the United States and the United Kingdom, or between the United States and Western Europe. These possibilities, however, are matters of speculation and conjecture. Also, an opportunity may possibly arise in the event of some economic crisis in our relations with the United States in the future. While these possibilities may exist, it is the carefully considered conviction of those who have worked on the technical aspects of the present proposal that it is highly unlikely that such satisfactory terms, in both the economic and political sense, could again be obtained for Canada. Indeed, under the swiftly developing events of the present, this situation may be modified very quickly.

There is the further possibility that Canada might at some time again have a chance to make another, but less comprehensive, trade agreement with the United States along traditional lines. There is, however, a major difficulty inherent in this possibility which arises out of the fact the field has been pretty well exhausted by the three agreements that have been negotiated since 1935. Generally speaking, as a result of these three agreements, Canada has, with few exceptions, already gained favourable access to the United States market for primary products. On the other hand we have made virtually no progress with respect to manufactured goods and the rates against Canadian products remain high — for the most part prohibitive. In any further negotiations along the old lines, we would not be entitled, nor would the United States be in a position to give, significant concessions to Canada on manufactured goods under the most-favoured-nation rule because we have not been the principal suppliers. This will be the situation in the future as it has been in the past. If in the further development of our trade relations with the United States we rely upon the procedures which are possible under the MFN rule, it will take a very long time before we can achieve the outlets required for the full industrial growth of which our economy is capable — outlets which we may need most urgently should the optimistic and perhaps slender hopes in other directions not be fulfilled.

Following for High Commissioner only from Pearson: Regarding your telephone conversation yesterday, we had a two hour meeting with the Ministers concerned in the afternoon, when the whole question was gone into thoroughly. The great advantages to Canada of the arrangement in question are thoroughly appreciated, but after very careful consideration it is felt to be quite impossible to take the necessary action in Parliament here during the present session. The Parliamentary time-table and political circumstances are over-riding in this regard. However, it was felt that it may be most desirable to proceed with this idea before long, when circumstances will be somewhat different. It is recognized, of course, that whereas the circumstances may be better for us from one point of view several months hence, they may be much less advantageous from another point of view. However, it was felt that this risk had to be taken.

The other parties concerned are being told today in Washington very frankly of our difficulties which makes action at this time impossible. At the same time, it will be impressed on them that we greatly regret these difficulties and that it is far from the intention of the people concerned here to abandon the idea and it is their hope that it may be brought forward again possibly in the autumn, though more likely, early in the new year. We can only hope that the peculiar combination of circumstances which might have made the arrangement acceptable now to our friends below will still exist then.

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Ottawa, April 22, 1948

Dear Norman [Robertson],

I have just sent you a brief telegram reporting, somewhat cryptically, on the meeting which was held yesterday to discuss the United States-Canadian trade discussions which have been going on, as you know, for some time in a very secret, purely official and exploratory way.

As Graham [Towers] has no doubt told you, the Ministers concerned decided, some time ago, that it was impossible to decide to go ahead with this matter with a view to securing Parliamentary action this session. However, no final decision was conveyed to the United States officials, as it was felt that developments in other fields might change the position. The Prime Minister, for instance, thought that a major change in trade policy of this character might, in some way, be related to the deliberations and conclusions of the Atlantic security conference. In short, the matter was more or less left in the air until the situation in regard to the security talks in Washington became a little clearer. This lack of a final decision has recently become embarrassing to Deutsch, who is being pressed by Willoughby for information as to the Canadian attitude. He naturally wants some kind of a light from Ottawa, either red or green. If it is "green" they would then feel free to take the next step, an approach to the President and, presumably, Congressional leaders. In other words, the United States officials want rather more of a commitment from the Canadian Government at this time than their own Government is being called on to make. At least, that is how I interpret the position.

My own anxiety was that the matter should be allowed to drop without sufficient consideration being given to it by the Ministers. As you know, there could hardly be for us a more important or far reaching arrangement than that which McKinnon and Deutsch have been working out with their opposite numbers in Washington. It would be unpardonable if this proposal were dismissed without the Ministers being given an opportunity to understand all of its implications, and appreciating its full importance. For that reason, I have been trying to arrange, since the Prime Minister returned from Williamsburg, a meeting where the matter could be discussed seriously and at length. I also asked Deutsch and McKinnon to outline the proposals in a memorandum, and to develop on paper the considerations which would make possible a proper understanding of them. This has been done, and yesterday the opportunity arose of reading this memorandum, which was a very effective one, to the Prime Minister and Messrs. St. Laurent, Howe and Abbott, and of going over the whole question again with them. The meeting lasted for more than two hours, and I am satisfied that, whether the decision taken was the right one or the wrong one, it was at least taken after a pretty complete analysis of the whole position. It is, of course, true that only four Ministers were present, but it is equally true, I think, that the presence of the other Ministers would not have altered the decision reached.

Hector McKinnon and I emphasized, to the best of our ability, the very great advantages to Canada of the proposal as outlined, and the improbability that we would ever get, in the future, as valuable concessions from the Americans, because the circumstances which make it possible for them to give such concessions now are not likely to exist again, at least to the same degree and in the same combination. The Prime Minister then spoke very fully and very frankly about the whole business. He agreed with us that, from the economic point of view, there was everything to be said for the proposal and little against it. He also agreed that the situation which might make it possible for the present Congress to adopt free trade legislation might not exist a year from now. However, he did not think that there was any possibility of taking the necessary action in this session of Parliament and, indeed, he did not see how the present Congress could find time to take the necessary action in Washington. Free trade with the United States and the United Kingdom was a matter of such political importance that it could only be brought about after careful planning, long discussion inside and outside Parliament and possibly after a general election. Mr. King seemed quite emphatic that the Conservatives would seize on this issue, if it were placed before them, in order to force an early election. They would distort and misrepresent the proposal as an effort on the part of the Liberals to sell Canada to the United States for a mess of potage. All the old British flag waving tactics would be resurrected by the Conservatives. It would be no use trying to prove that free trade was quite a different thing from a customs union. The distinction would be blurred in the argument and lost in the heat of the resulting controversy. The Yankees would be taking over Canada, especially if both parties in Washington agreed (as we were told that they would) that this was a "good deal" for the U.S.A. The less controversy there, felt Mr. King, the weaker the Government's position here.

In short, a bitter political battle would ensue, and this at a time when he, Mr. King, was withdrawing from public life and a Liberal Convention was about to be held to choose a new leader and construct a new party platform. From the political point of view of the Government here, the timing could hardly be worse. If a new leader had been chosen last autumn, and a new Liberal platform then adopted, which included a plank for free trade, then the situation would be entirely different and it might be possible to push the matter through in the present session. However, that was not the case now, and it was idle to expect action to be taken at this time. Mr. King's colleagues were, I think, convinced by him that the timetable suggested by the Americans could not be met. They all felt, however that an election issue of this kind would be a magnificent one for the Liberals, and would sweep the country. They did not seem nearly as worried by the possible revival of the old annexationist cry as Mr. King was. Mr. Howe, in fact, almost gloated over the possibility of such an election campaign. He thought they could wipe the Conservatives out if the Government proposed free trade with the United States and the United Kingdom and the Opposition fought it. In any event, whatever might be the attractions or otherwise of an election on this issue, the four Ministers agreed that it was impossible to proceed with the matter in the present session. I felt that three of them felt particular regret at the necessity of coming to this conclusion.

This decision having been taken, it seemed to me of very great importance that it should be conveyed to the Americans in such a form as to remove any feeling in their minds that it had been turned down because the proposals themselves were not satisfactory; or that the Ministers concerned were lukewarm in their appreciation of their advantages to both countries. One difficulty in conveying this thought to the Americans was that certain members of the Cabinet, notably Mr. Gardiner, had not been kept informed of these preliminary developments, and therefore any information to Washington had to be kept very strictly confidential and attributed not to the Government but only to certain members of the Government. If Mr. Ilsley and Mr. Gardiner were told about the decision reached by the Prime Minister (there would be much reluctance to do this) and were to support that decision, this would make it possible for the Prime Minister to write a personal note to Mr. Truman, emphasizing the Government's great appreciation of the importance and value of the proposals and explaining the political difficulties that prevent their acceptance at this particular moment. Such a letter would make it difficult for the Americans in the future to say that their proposals were "turned down". At the moment, however, the decision has merely been to have the information conveyed to the Americans in such a form as to remove any misunderstanding on their part that the proposals themselves are objectionable or that their importance is not appreciated here. Also, it is to be conveyed to them that, at the earliest possible opportunity, the two Governments should take the matter up again. For the above purpose I have been in touch with Hume, by telephone, and he and Deutsch will deal with the matter at the Washington end.

I cannot help but feel that a very great opportunity has been missed. If only the Government had taken this matter actively in hand, two or three months ago! It is not less than tragic that other things were allowed to interfere and that the moment has passed when immediate action could have been taken. It is a sad reflection on our sense of comparative values that so much time has been spent on so many things during the last two or three months of infinitely less importance than these proposals. They now have to be suspended merely because of lack of time. Yet, if they could have been accepted by the Government and converted into law by the present Parliament, they might have had a decisive strengthening effect on the whole economy of the country against the day when such strength is bound to be needed. I think that "we have missed the bus", even if we have saved the timetable!

Yours sincerely,

L.B. PEARSON

P.S. I have just heard that John Deutsch has told Willoughby about the decision referred to above. It was taken very well, though with natural disappointment. Willoughby seems to understand the timing difficulties. Hume [Wrong] will be mentioning the matter (possibly with Mr. Howe) to Lovett and Hickerson on Monday.

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Washington, April 28, 1948

Dear Mike [Pearson]:

Yesterday afternoon I accompanied Mr. Howe on a call which I had arranged on Mr. Lovett. I had told Mr. Howe that the reason why I wished him to see Mr. Lovett was so that Mr. Lovett could get from him an account of the political difficulties which prevented the Canadian Government from pursuing at present the economic proposals developed by McKinnon and Deutsch on our side and Willoughby and some others on the side of the State Department.

When we reached this subject, Mr. Howe said in most explicit terms that the responsible Ministers in Ottawa were greatly attracted by the proposals and would be prepared to conclude an agreement on this basis when our domestic political conditions made this possible. He referred to the impending change of leadership in the Liberal Party and to the reluctance of the Prime Minister to undertake a project of such great importance on the eve of his own retirement. He said that what he would like to see would be for the negotiations to be resumed late this year or early in 1949 and implied that if they could then be successfully completed, the government would in all probability dissolve Parliament and appeal to the people on this as the primary issue. He touched on the relationship between the economic proposals and the security discussions, but based the objections to further progress at present primarily on the domestic political situation.

Mr. Howe also mentioned the intention to include in the platform to be adopted at the Liberal Convention a general resolution in favour of the abolition of customs duties over wide areas. In response to an enquiry from Tyler Wood, who was with Mr. Lovett, he made it clear that this plank would not refer directly to the United States but would be expressed in general terms. Wood was concerned lest a direct reference to the United States would result in the introduction of the issue in the election campaign here, but I think that he was satisfied by Mr. Howe's explanations, especially in view of the possible development by that time of the plans for the Customs Union or free trade areas in Western Europe. Mr. Howe mentioned that we should have to offer to the United Kingdom treatment similar to that offered to the United States, adding that the acceptance of this would, of course, involve the abolition of preferences between Canada and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lovett made no objection to postponing the matter and putting the proposals into cold storage for the present. Indeed, he went on to say that this would suit the domestic political conditions in the United States better than any effort to go ahead before the elections. He has clearly become concerned over the difficulty of securing congressional approval and has come round to the view that it would be best to wait for a newly-elected Congress before anything definite comes into the open. This should, I think, lay to rest any possible feeling here that the proposals have been turned down because they were not regarded as satisfactory by the responsible Ministers in Ottawa. It has been my own judgment for some months, in any case, that the political timetable here would in the event have made it impossible for the Administration to get any action from Congress in 1948. I am, however, relieved to know that this opinion is now shared by Mr. Lovett.

As he may have told you, Deutsch explained the position fully to Willoughby when he was here last Friday. Wood has now heard the story direct from Mr. Howe during the discussion with Lovett. I shall have a further word about it with Hicker-son when I next see him.

Yours sincerely,
H.H. WRONG

CANADIAN-UNITED STATES TRADE ARRANGEMENTS

You will recall that, after the meeting the other day in your office to discuss the above, it was agreed that every effort should be made to convey to Washington the decision regarding the suspension of informal discussions on the official level in such a way as to remove, if possible, any impression that the Canadian Ministers did not appreciate the importance of the matter or the economic advantage to Canada of the suggestions that had been made. The attached personal letter from Hume Wrong to myself indicates that there is little risk of Washington misunderstanding the situation. Mr. Howe seems to have had a very satisfactory talk with Mr. Lovett on the matter. Mr. Deutsch also reports that he had an equally satisfactory talk with the United States official in Washington with whom he had been dealing.

Dear Mike [Pearson]:

In continuation of my letter of April 28th, I have spoken to Hickerson today about our inability on political grounds to go ahead with the economic proposals, and told him what he had apparently not heard before, that Lovett had said to Mr. Howe and myself that in his judgment the State Department would for domestic reasons not have been able to go ahead now even if we were willing.

My dear Pearson:

RE CANADIAN-UNITED STATES TRADE ARRANGEMENTS

I thank you for your memorandum of the 3rd instant, enclosing a copy of a personal letter from Hume Wrong to yourself of April 28th, in regard to the above.

In your memorandum you say: "The attached personal letter from Hume Wrong to myself indicates that there is little risk of Washington misunderstanding the situation. Mr. Howe seems to have had a very satisfactory talk with Mr. Lovett on the matter. Mr. Deutsch also reports that he had an equally satisfactory talk with the United States official in Washington with whom he had been dealing."

When I read Mr. Wrong's letter to you setting forth Mr. Howe's conversation with Mr. Lovett, I felt at once that, far from there being no misunderstanding in this matter, there was evidence in what it set forth of the greatest possible misunderstanding, and that I should immediately have a word with Mr. Howe concerning the matter. This I had yesterday afternoon at which time Mr. Howe informed me that he had given Mr. Lovett no assurance whatever concerning any agreement being concluded, and that if such an inference were drawn, clearly it was wholly unjustified.

There has been some misunderstanding which it is obviously desirable to have cleared up just as soon as may be possible. Without seeking to unravel the situation one way or the other, I think I should let you have, for purposes of future reference, a statement of the situation as I myself have viewed and understand it.

As I may not be a member of the Administration when the subject may come up for further discussion, it is desirable, I think, that there should be no room for misunderstanding between my colleagues and myself as to what the position is, and equally no room for possible misunderstanding, if that can be avoided, between the United States authorities and our own, as to just what has thus far been considered. To this end, I attach, in very rough outline, a memorandum giving the essential features as I recall them.

Yours sincerely,
W.L. MACKENZIE KING

RE CANADIAN-UNITED STATES TRADE ARRANGEMENTS

My knowledge in regard to the above is limited to what has taken place at two or three conferences.

The first, a short conference between Mr. Abbott, Minister of Finance, and myself at which Mr. Abbott mentioned that certain of our officials had been talking over with certain American officials, in an informal manner, possible changes in tariffs between the two countries which, in the course of a certain time, would lead largely to their elimination, in whole or in part, the object being gradually to bring about a condition favourable to balancing of trade between the two countries.

A conversation at which one or two of the officials went over with Mr. Abbott and myself, and possibly one of the other Ministers, what was being considered.

Another conference at which officials went over matters, in a similar way, with Mr. Abbott, Mr. St. Laurent, Mr. Howe and myself.

A fourth conference at which you, yourself, Mr. Abbott, Mr. Howe, Mr. St. Laurent and one or two or three of the officials were present.

There was, I believe, one other conference at which either Mr. Abbott or Mr. St. Laurent or both were present — with Mr. Howe — while I was absent at Williamsburg.

At the different conferences, what was being thought of was reviewed in a general way, but with the exception of discussing the matter very broadly in principle, the discussion related mostly to what was alleged to be an all important aspect of the matter, namely, a decision in principle which would enable the United States officials to carry the matter to a higher level with the possibility thereafter, of an effort being made to secure the approval of the President, and to secure agreement between the two political parties in the United States, which would result in the matter being brought to Congress within a few weeks thereafter, at the latest.

From the very beginning, it seemed to me that, if the timetable suggested were an important factor, and we were told that the chance might never come again if we were not able to meet it, there was very little use pursuing the matter much further; that an agreement would involve legislation by our Parliament, and that it would be quite impossible to have legislation put through in the time suggested.

While the idea of tariff reduction or elimination made its appeal as being in accord with the policy of the Liberal Party, it was recognized that an agreement with the United States would involve negotiations with the United Kingdom as well; also consideration of the European situation and such debatable matters as preferences which would affect other parts of the Commonwealth. It was indeed out of the question to think of attempting to finalize a matter of the kind within weeks, or for that matter within months.

At the last meeting it was quite clear to the Ministers present that the conclusion of any agreement of the kind would have to be based on some general resolution. Seeing that a Party Convention was being held in August the conclusion of any agreement of the kind would have to depend, or should be based, upon an appropriate resolution respecting tariffs which would be included in the Liberal platform to be adopted at the conference; that it should be followed thereafter by a resolution in Parliament, and then when sufficient support had thereby been secured, negotiations might begin with the United States authorities.

I should stress that the purpose of all the meetings was to make sure at the beginning that the general principle would likely be acceptable to the Cabinet. It was recognized from the start that authorized negotiations could only proceed after the matter had been discussed in the Cabinet and agreed to by the Cabinet generally.

Since we have been led to believe that the timing element was so all-important that the chance of securing an agreement depended upon negotiations being concluded within a very limited time, it was felt that unless the few Ministers who had been spoken to in the matter were agreed that the objective should be accomplished in the time suggested, it would be a mistake to allow the officials to continue their preliminary discussions with a view to having any agreement effected in the course of the next month of two.

As all who had been taken into confidence including the Minister himself, were of the opinion that the possibility of concluding an agreement within a limited time was wholly out of the question, it was decided that it would be unwise, as well as unnecessary, to bring into conference even on the question of the principle, any other members of the government. It was decided that the United States officials should be so informed.

Let me make quite clear that the Ministers who had any knowledge of the matter were limited to those whose names I have mentioned. Other Ministers, even senior, were not spoken to about the matter.

The proposals were never discussed in detail. The general proposal was regarded as having much that was attractive about it, but it was recognized that what would have to be most carefully considered of all were its implications and the sort of political controversy to which it would give rise.

At no time was there, either directly or indirectly, an understanding that the Government would be prepared to conclude an agreement on the basis of what was proposed.

The question of possible further procedure was left wholly in abeyance. Nothing was decided one way or the other.

An important feature of one of the discussions was that a proposal of the kind might best be considered in connection with certain security discussions. The question of the possible abolition of preferences between Canada and the United Kingdom may have been mentioned, but was never discussed.

The second last paragraph of Hume Wrong's letter would seem to indicate that Mr. Lovett had come to see the whole question of timing in precisely the light in which it was viewed by our Ministers from the outset.

Dear Hume [Wrong],

With reference to your letter of April 28th and my telephone call of yesterday on Canadian-United States trade discussions, I would be grateful if you would ascertain from the State Department whether any record was made of the conversation on April 27th between Mr. Lovett, Mr. Howe and yourself. If that record should prove to be inaccurate in certain respects, or such that it might give rise to misconceptions in the future regarding any commitments which may appear to have been made on the Canadian side for future discussions or action, would you please have the necessary changes made.

Mr. Howe feels that, in one or two places, your report of the conversation gives an impression that more specific statements and predictions were made by him than he recalls as being the case. Particularly, he feels that the second paragraph of your letter should read as follows: "When we reached this subject, Mr. Howe said that the particular Ministers in Ottawa who had examined these proposals were attracted by them and, so far as they were concerned, would be prepared to consider the possibility of concluding an arrangement based on them, when domestic political conditions made this possible. He referred to the impending change of leadership in the Liberal Party and to the reluctance of the Prime Minister to undertake a project of such great importance on the eve of his own retirement. He said that he hoped that it might be possible to resume the negotiations late this year or early in 1949, and implied that if they could then be successfully completed, the Government might dissolve Parliament and appeal to the people on this as the primary issue. He touched on the relationship between the economic proposals and the security discussions, but based the objections to further progress at present primarily on the domestic political situation."

Similarly, in the penultimate paragraph, the words "responsible Ministers" in the sixth line from the bottom should read "Ministers in Ottawa who had considered them."

Yours sincerely,

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Ottawa, May 7, 1948

Dear Mr. King,

I received last evening your letter of May 6th with the top secret and personal memorandum attached on Canadian-United States trade arrangements. When, in my memorandum to you of March 3rd on this matter, I referred to Mr. Wrong's personal letter as indicating that there was little risk of Washington misunderstanding the situation, I am afraid that what I had primarily in mind was the misunderstanding that might arise if the United States felt that the informal and non-committal conversations that had been going on between certain officials of the two governments had been broken off in what seemed to be an abrupt and unsympathetic fashion, which would prejudice their renewal in the future, if this Government ever wished to take that course. I obviously had not given sufficient consideration to the other aspect of the matter; that Mr. Lovett, as a result of his talk with Mr. Howe and Mr. Wrong, might be left under a misunderstanding as to the policy of the Canadian Government in this matter, and the possible relationship to that policy of the discussions which had taken place between certain Ministers of the Government here and yourself.

I have asked Mr. Wrong to ascertain whether any record of the conversation between Mr. Lovett and Mr. Howe was made by the State Department. He will do this and, if the record should be inaccurate or such as to give rise to misconceptions in the future, he will have the necessary changes made.

I have also had a talk with Mr. Howe, who feels that Mr. Wrong's report, in one or two places, might be altered to give a somewhat more exact impression of the discussion as he, Mr. Howe, recalled it. I have written Mr. Wrong, pointing out the places where Mr. Howe thinks that changes might be made.

I am enclosing, herewith, a copy of my letter to Mr. Wrong.

I have not sent a copy of your letter to me to the Embassy in Washington but would, of course, be glad to do this if you so desire.

Yours sincerely,

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Ottawa, May 14, 1948

Dear Mr. King,

In regard to Mr. Howe's talk in Washington with Mr. Lovett on Canadian-United States trade discussions, Mr. Wrong has now reported that he saw Mr. Hickerson of the State Department on May 10th, who showed him the record which had been made of the conversation referred to above. This record was brief and, according to Mr. Wrong, not likely to prove misleading, though it contained one or two inaccuracies. It had been sent to only four officers of the State Department so that correction of these inaccuracies was not difficult. For this purpose, Mr. Hickerson and Mr. Wrong have agreed on a memorandum which is to be sent to those who had seen the earlier United States record. Mr. Wrong's memorandum, as agreed on by Mr. Hickerson, is as follows:

"I spoke to Mr. Hickerson today about the status of the economic proposals prepared for consideration by the Canadian and United States experts. I referred to the conversation between Mr. Lovett and Mr. C.D. Howe on April 27th, and said that I wished to be sure that it was clearly understood that these proposals had not been considered by the Canadian Cabinet; in addition to the Prime Minister they had been placed only before the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Ministers of Trade and Commerce and Finance. In informing the State Department that these Ministers had come to the conclusion that it was impossible to proceed with them at present for domestic political reasons it was not, of course, our intention to leave any impression that there was any commitment on either side to pursue the proposals at a later date. Furthermore, if the proposals were to be revived by agreement between the two Governments, it should not be inferred that the Canadian Government would necessarily make them an issue in a general election or adopt any other particular domestic political procedure.

Mr. Hickerson in reply assured me that no misapprehension had ever existed in the Department of State on this score. It was fully understood that the proposals were only known in Ottawa to the Ministers whom I had named and to a few senior officials; there could be no thought in the mind of Mr. Lovett or of the very few others in the State Department who knew about them that the Canadian Government had entered into any commitment with respect to their future treatment. He would, however, have a word with Mr. Lovett, and make a note for the record of what I had said."

Yours sincerely,

Ottawa, June 22, 1948

My dear Colleague,

I should be grateful if you would bring to the attention of the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario the desirability that the Ontario Government should now give favourable consideration to regulations permitting trucking in bond across southern Ontario. The reasons for my wishing to make these representations to the Ontario Government are as follows.

The provisions of Article V of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, which was put into effect by Canada on January 1st, 1948, lay down certain rules governing traffic in transit through the territories of the contracting parties to the Agreement. These rules are to the effect that "goods (including baggage), and also vessels and other means of transport, shall be deemed to be in transit across the territory of a contracting party when the passage across such territory, with or without trans-shipment, warehousing, breaking bulk, or change in the mode of transport, is only a portion of a complete journey beginning and terminating beyond the frontier of the contracting party across whose territory the traffic passes." The Article further provides that there shall be freedom of transit through the territory of each contracting party.

It will be clear to you that this Article would permit United States trucks in transit from Detroit to Buffalo to follow the short northern route and carry goods in bond through southern Ontario. The Federal Government, as a signatory to the General Agreement, has an obligation to do what it can to implement the Article and has already made the necessary amendments in the customs regulations. The matter, however, is one which falls under provincial jurisdiction, and it is my understanding that the Government of Ontario is at the present time maintaining traffic regulations which prevent the carriage of United States goods in bond across the peninsula of southern Ontario.

The importance of fully carrying out our obligations under Article V arises from the general Canadian interest in the restoration of a system of free multilateral trade and from the fact that this particularly was a concession made to the United States in return for certain other concessions of great value to Canada. I may cite in this connection the standardizing of valuations for customs purposes which is laid down in Article VII and should like to emphasize the substantial benefits to be expected for Canadian businessmen from the simplifying and modification of United States customs procedures. One such benefit has indeed already materialized with the recent announcement that in future the Canadian eight per cent sales tax will not be considered part of the value of goods for the purpose of calculating United States duty.

A continued refusal on the part of Canada to permit trucking in bond may well prejudice the reciprocal benefits we expect to secure under the General Agreement. Representations have already been made by the United States Government on this subject and I therefore wish to urge upon the Government of Ontario the desirability of giving weight to the above considerations in its present discussion of the question of trucking in bond.

Yours sincerely,

Ottawa, July 27, 1948

THE EXPORT OF NATURAL GAS FROM THE UNITED STATES TO SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO

The United States Federal Power Commission has now published the results of its hearing on the Panhandle Eastern Pipeline Company, and the Union Gas Company of Ontario has been refused its request for an increase in its quota granted under a previous permit of the Federal Power Commission to the Panhandle Company. This request was in reality not for an increase since Panhandle had delivered natural gas to Union on only a very few occasions since the issuance of a permit but rather for an assurance that definite deliveries of natural gas could be made to Union in the future. The only hopeful note given to the Union Gas Company by the Commission was in the intimation that further consideration would be given to Union's situation when certain additional facilities which are now in prospect become available to the Panhandle System.

You will recall in my memorandum of April 2, 1948, I traced the developments leading up to the filing of the petition by Union with the Federal Power Commission and you agreed that the Canadian Government might appear at the hearings as an interested party on behalf of the Union Gas Company. This was done with the knowledge of the Ontario Government with whom we were working in close cooperation on the overall problem of the natural gas shortage in southwestern Ontario. Accordingly members of the staff of the Canadian Embassy in Washington appeared before the Commission and read a statement on behalf of the Canadian Government in support of the Union Gas Company's request.

At the same time a note was sent to the State Department in Washington indicating the grave nature of the natural gas shortage in Ontario and pointing out that the Canadian Government hoped that when a commodity of prime importance to the economies of both countries becomes in short supply in one country the result of such a shortage would not be to reduce very drastically or even to cut off entirely the export of that commodity to the other country. I have since learned from our Embassy in Washington that this request did not receive much support from the State Department. This is in part believed to be attributable to the reluctance of senior State Department officials to become involved in the affairs of other departments of the Government which might lead to unpleasant situations similar to the newsprint case. However, it is also believed that the State Department's attitude has been influenced by activities of a pressure group in the form of the United States truckers who have made it clear that they see no reason why Ontario should get natural gas at the expense of United States consumers when Ontario will not allow United States trucks to proceed in bond across that province.

The State Department officials evidenced a certain embarrassment when referring to this particular point and they were most anxious to explain that they did not savour putting this issue on any such quid pro quo basis. However, I believe this is an example of the difficulties which the Ontario "trucking in bond" issue has created in our general relationship with the United States and that we may expect it to appear in various contexts which on the surface might appear to be unrelated.<sup>33</sup>

Would you care to give this information confidentially to anyone in the Ontario Gov[ernment]?
 St. L[aurant]

Early in 1948 as a result of discussions between representatives of the Canadian Department of Trade and Commerce, the Department of Reconstruction and Supply, and the United States Department of Commerce it was agreed that because of the increasing world shortage of steel a close watch should be kept over shipments of steel from the United States to Canada. In order to do this effectively steps were taken to bring Canadian statistical reporting into conformity with the United States practice with respect to steel items. Subsequently the Canadian authorities provided detailed statements on imports of steel each month from the United States and these were analyzed by the British Commonwealth Section of the Office of International Trade to ensure that disproportionately large supplies of steel were not flowing to Canada. At the time it was considered that such action might be sufficient to control the situation despite the fact that, with the exception of Canada, exports of United States steel to all other countries were under strict permit control and allocation.

By July 1948, however, the shortage of steel had become so acute that serious objection was taken by small business in the United States and by other foreign countries under allocation to the fact that exports of steel to Canada were not under the same control as were exports to other countries. The pressure finally became so great that the Department of Commerce, as indicated in my despatch of September 25th, requested discussions with Canadian representatives for the purpose of agreeing on a programme of Canadian steel imports from the United States for the fourth quarter of 1948 which would be appropriate in view of the stringency of the general steel situation.

These meetings took place on October 1st as indicated and were of an entirely friendly and cooperative nature. Subject to confirmation by the appropriate authorities in the two countries, it was agreed as follows:

1. The total amount of steel imported by Canada from the U.S. be limited to 200,000 tons — a reduction of 22% from the average quarterly level in 1947, and of 17½% from the level of the first half of 1948.

2. For the five items most difficult for the U.S. to supply, import target levels would be agreed on as follows:

(a) Structural:	35,000 tons	—	34% below 1947 38% below first half of 1948
(b) Plates:	17,000 tons	—	25% below 1947 3% below first half of 1948
(c) Galvanized sheets:	2,500 tons	—	23% below 1947 34% below first half of 1948
(d) Pipes, tubes and skelp:	30,000 tons	—	10% below 1947 10% below first half of 1948
(e) Wire:	8,000 tons	—	3% below 1947 23% below first half of 1948

3. Canada undertakes to institute immediately a program of voluntary limitation of imports; to cooperate with the United States in maintaining and exchanging data on steel; and if necessary, to apply promptly whatever further controls may be required to implement the agreed upon program. The Canadian Government now possesses full powers to take whatever action may be necessary in this field.

4. It would be understood that, in view of seasonal fluctuations, the existence of certain contracts already on the books, and the desire of both countries to avoid any unnecessary development of bureaucratic controls, the targets agreed on will be subject to reasonable margins of tolerance.

5. It was understood that separate consideration would be given to steel required for special projects of a national character in Canada and that any requirements so approved would be in addition to the tonnage set forth in the program.

This agreement if accepted by both the United States and Canada will it is expected meet the criticisms which have arisen within the United States, while at the same time it will not work any serious hardship on Canadian importers of United States steel.

When the proposals have been agreed to it is the intention to issue a joint statement in both Washington and Ottawa setting forth the details of the agreement.<sup>34</sup>

For Magann from Moran: Your teletype WA-3063 of December 2nd, to Johnson. †

On December 2nd the United States Embassy here raised with me again the question of trucking in bond in Ontario and advised that a communication from the State Department pointed out that the Truckers' Association was linking this question to the Ontario Hydro application for water diversion.

2. On December 3rd Saunders<sup>35</sup> was in Ottawa for an appointment with the Prime Minister. I saw him briefly and discussed with him the problem, telling him of the approach which had been made by the United States Embassy. Saunders' attitude was that there is no relationship between the two problems and from his standpoint he is seeking authorization in Washington for a water diversion to which, in his opinion, he is entitled, that if after his application has been satisfactorily dealt with the United States officials wish him to use his good offices with the Ontario Minister of Highways, he would be willing to do so.

3. I outlined fully to Saunders the background of the trucking in bond situation and explained that the Truckers' Association sends a delegation to Washington whenever it hears of consideration being given to policy covering United States exports to Canada which have importance for Ontario. I told him of the communications which had gone from Ottawa to the Ontario Provincial Government and suggested that it might be useful to both his own cause and the overall interest if, on his return to Toronto, he mentioned to the Provincial authorities that the Truckers' Association, which enjoys a certain amount of political strength, had appeared in Washington to oppose the Ontario Hydro application. Saunders said that he would bring the matter to the attention of the Ontario authorities although he did not propose recommending that they take any action in an effort to assist him. He considers his application to be one which should be approved and if it is not he feels he is now developing sufficient kilowatt hours to enable him, barring unforeseen circumstances, to carry on satisfactorily.

4. I reported to the United States Embassy that I had discussed the matter with Saunders and stated that he would tell the Provincial Government that his application was being associated with the Ontario trucking in bond problem, but that he would make no recommendation as to the action which ought to be taken by the Provincial authorities.

5. I think the United States Embassy here shares the view that there is little more that Ottawa can do at present. Our efforts consist of a letter from Mr. Howe to Mr. Drew, a letter from Mr. Pearson to Mr. Michener at the time he was Provincial Secretary, a telephone conversation between the latter two, a letter from Mr. St. Laurent to the Ontario Government through the normal channels.

6. It is perhaps worth mentioning, for your own information, that there is a feeling on the official level that the problem of trucking in bond should not be linked to wholly unrelated matters but should be argued on the grounds of a commitment under GATT, in which case we can point to undertakings given by the United States at Geneva which have not yet been fulfilled. Message ends.

Washington, December 21, 1948

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir:

I have the honour to enclose four copies of a memorandum prepared by Mr. J.R. Murray of the Embassy staff on the question of trade relations between the United States and Canada. The memorandum is divided into two sections. The first section deals with the extent to which the Canadian exports to Western Europe are currently dependent on financing by the Economic Recovery Administration and outlines the principal reasons looking to a marked decline in the financing of "offshore purchases" in Canada because (a) of probable reductions in the appropriation for E.C.A., (b) of the greater availability of domestic supplies, especially of agricultural products, (c) of the expected decline in European demand due to increased European production, and (d) of the improvement in the Canadian dollar position. The second section deals with the probable effects on Canadian exports of the agricultural price support program which was adopted at the last session of Congress, together with the possible application of import restrictions by the President under Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act in order to protect the program.

2. The conclusion is that there is a distinct possibility of a rapid decline in the volume of Canadian exports both directly to the United States and to Western Europe financed by the United States, for the three principal reasons of a sharp reduction in off-shore purchasing in Canada by E.C.A., of increased domestic supplies of agricultural products for export and domestic consumption, and of the possible application to Canadian agricultural products of special import restrictions. The conclusion points to the advisability of seeking to negotiate a new trade agreement with the United States on a broad basis.

I have, etc.

US-CANADIAN TRADE RELATIONS

Now that over one year has passed since the Canadian import restrictions were imposed and we have had eight months experience with ECA, it is interesting to consider the extent to which our international trade now relies on the U.S. market as well as the extent to which actions of the U.S. Government have assisted our position. It would be still more interesting, of course, to be able to predict with some degree of accuracy how much longer the actions of the United States will continue to be as favourable to Canada as they are at the present time. The following subjects seem to be of principal concern:

- (1) Canadian Exports and ECA.
- (2) U.S. Farm Policy.

Canadian Exports and ECA

The extent of the increasing dependence of our exports on the United States market has been expressed often enough since the end of the war. It is rather vividly illustrated in our Balance of Payments forecast for the first ECA fiscal year

(July 1st, '48 to June 30th, '49). The following figures on Canadian exports are either taken from or based on the September Balance of Payments forecast:

Exports to all areas —	$3,045,000,000
Exports to the United States —	$1,440,000,000
Exports to ERP countries —	$1,085,000,000
Exports to ERP countries requiring United States financing —	$ 649,000,000
Total exports to United States plus exports financed by the United States (ECA) —	$2,089,000,000

The United States are therefore counted upon either to take directly or to underwrite over $2,000,000,000 dollars of our total exports of roughly $3,000,000,000 dollars. Admittedly, it is not known for certain that the ECA will finance the full $649,000,000 dollar ERP deficit with Canada. However, the prospects of ECA doing so, based on their actions to date, seem very good. As of December 15th ECA have authorized procurement in Canada in the amount of $566,000,000 dollars. During ECA's first eight months, every time the European countries have been allotted six dollars to spend in the United States and abroad they have been given one dollar to spend in Canada. Naturally, arguments are produced on our side to suggest that if the volume of off-shore purchases was sharply reduced we could divert our ECA-financed exports elsewhere. For many of our major agricultural exports, this point is debatable. Its realization would certainly be painful. When we think, from our own point of view of the possibility of diverting our exports, it should be remembered that U.S. officials have already warned us of the inevitability of the diversion of their off-shore dollars away from Canada.

We certainly cannot assume that Canadian exports to Europe will continue to be subsidized by the United States at anything like the present rate. In the first place it is probable that the second ECA appropriation will be at least 25 per cent less than the present one. On the mathematical side alone, therefore, there should be considerably less money available for expenditure in Canada. Latin-American countries are also pressing hard to get an increased share of whatever off-shore dollars are available. There are some U.S. officials who believe that the Argentine problem in particular cannot continue to be ignored by the United States much longer.

Secondly, it seems highly probable that next year the United States will be able to take care of a larger share of European requirements than they are at present, particularly in the agricultural field. Owing to the policy which European countries are now energetically pursuing of cutting down their requirements from dollar areas and increasing their requirements from other areas, there should be, in the second ECA year, a noticeable falling off of European demands for North American supplies. When it comes to deciding who will take the reduction in the commodities which will hurt most, there is no need to have a Gallup poll to tell who will lose the contest. The U.S. will have a campaign fund of a little over $4,000,000,000, most of it available as a free grant. Ours looks as though it will be perhaps $120,000,000, all in the form of loans, not grants.

In the third place, if our reserve position continues to improve at anything like the present rate, the United States can be expected to adopt the attitude that we are in a position to provide financing for a much increased amount of our exports. Last week, Mr. Southard, Special Assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury, stated this point in the following terms: the problem in his mind was that if our dollar position becomes increasingly tolerable at the same time as there are less offshore purchases in Canada, would not that raise more insistently than ever the question of Canada's extending increased financial assistance to Europe?

Admittedly we can only speculate on what the year 1949-50 would hold for us in the way of assistance from the United States in financing a large portion of our exports. One great spectre on the horizon is the possibility of another huge U.S. wheat crop. The first forecast of the U.S. winter wheat crop, released December 20th, indicates that this possibility is a very real one. 61,370,000 acres have been seeded for winter wheat. This total, which is roughly 10 per cent more than that set by the Department of Agriculture's Goals Committee, is 5 per cent greater than the largest previous acreage. On the basis of the present forecast of 15.7 bushels an acre (which is two bushels lower than the average yield of the last two years) the U.S. winter wheat crop should be 965,000,000 bushels. With an average spring wheat crop, the total U.S. crop may be more than 1,250,000,000 bushels. Of the $600,000,000 dollars which had been authorized by ECA at the end of November for wheat and wheat flour $345,000,000 were for expenditure in the United States and $255,000,000 for Canada. If the world's wheat supply position improves as much next year, owing to another bumper U.S. crop, as it did during the past year, there would not appear to be any prospect whatever of substantial ECA spending for wheat in Canada.

The statement which we heard last week at ECA that the off-shore purchase policy next year "will have to be determined exclusively in the interest of the United States" is, I think, the first of the signs that the honeymoon of heavy ECA spending in Canada is shortly to come to an end.

U.S. Farm Policy

Some U.S. officials who are deeply interested in encouraging measures designed to bring about the greatest volume of international trade are becoming more concerned about the dangers to international agricultural trade which are inherent in the expanding U.S. farm support programme than they are with any other feature of United States economic policy. If responsible U.S. officials are concerned with this aspect of U.S. farm policy, it is only natural in Canada we should be more deeply concerned. At Geneva and again at Havana, our officials have already experienced some trying times in negotiating with the United States on the trade charter provisions dealing with the subsidization of agricultural exports. The Canadian Government, several months ago, were very loath to compromise with the Americans on this point. Nevertheless, they reluctantly did so on the ground that the charter would not have a ghost of a chance of getting through Congress unless the U.S. point of view was substantially met.

Since these negotiations took place Congress has enacted the most far-reaching farm support legislation, which is designed to make permanent the policy of supporting United States farm prices. The new legislation (Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1948 — Public Law 897) goes far beyond anything which the United States had before the war in its provisions for supporting farm prices. This legislation, when considered in the light of the most surprising political fact of the last election, — the extraordinary and crucial farm support which the Democrats received — poses beyond any doubt very serious problems for Canadian agricultural exports both to this country and to the rest of the world. The twin threats of exclusion of exports to the United States, such as potatoes, in order to protect an extravagant U.S. price support programme, and the dumping of U.S. surpluses in our traditional export markets, seem now to be potentially far greater than ever before.

Before the war, U.S. support programmes applied to six "basic" commodities: cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco, rice, and peanuts. Now it is mandatory to support the prices of these commodities at 90 per cent of parity throughout 1949, and from 60 to 90 per cent of parity thereafter, depending upon the determination made by the Secretary of Agriculture on the basis of the supply position. Price support is now also mandatory for two of the non-basic products (Irish potatoes and wool). After 1949 price support is permissive for all other non-basic commodities, e.g. eggs, poultry, milk, flaxseed, to name only a few in which Canada might be interested.

Whatever slight amount of cheer can be taken from the fact that the maximum level of price support will soon become 90 per cent is diminished by a provision that this maximum may be exceeded in any particular commodity whenever it is administratively determined after public hearing and finding that an increased level of support is necessary in order to increase or maintain production of the commodity in the interest of national security.

The infamous Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act was amended during the last session of Congress to give, for the first time, protection to price support programmes. The President now has the authority, which he did not have under any of the previous versions of Section 22, to impose import quotas or fees on any commodity which is interfering with the operation of any price support programme. This authority, which was used to prod us into our recent potato agreement, might quite possibly be used in a few years' time against livestock or any other important Canadian agricultural export to the United States. It is true that if the United States imposed Section 22 restrictions on any of our exports we would be entitled to impose some retaliatory restrictions. However, this sort of action would not do either of us much good.

The United States are not only equipped to protect their own market from the invasion of foreign products if the import of these products in the words of Section 22 "materially interferes with" any U.S. agricultural support programme, they are also very handsomely equipped to get their surplus agricultural products into foreign markets. At the moment their greatest instrument for this purpose is the European Recovery Program. All the powerful farm lobbies gave their wholehearted support to the Program. What international trade charter or ethics, written or implied, can prevent one country from giving away for nothing hundreds of millions of dollars worth of its products? If you dump on a small scale you are a mean fellow and get penalized — if you do it on a grandiose scale you are a grand fellow and win plaudits. The stage has not yet been reached at which the agricultural surplus provisions of the Foreign Assistance Act are materially interfering with any of our major agricultural exports. Today we are receiving strong financial support from the United States for some agricultural exports: tomorrow the very strength which makes it possible to subsidize Canadian products may be switched further to subsidize new United States surpluses, surpluses created in part by price support and other programmes. It has been estimated that United States grain exports may reach 700 million bushels in this crop year. If they do, that would be 14 times the average pre-war U.S. grain exports. These huge shipments are, of course, largely sustained by United States foreign aid dollars.

The length of the transition from having our exports handsomely supported by the United States to one of having them "materially interfered with" may be uncomfortably short. The last time we were faced with comparable competition from the United States the currencies in all our principal overseas markets were convertible. Now, as far as the ERP countries are concerned, 60 per cent of their deficit with Canada is being "converted" directly by the United States through the ECA.

If, as seems certain, this handsome percentage declines sharply what steps are we to take? There seems to be real and pressing merit in the Winnipeg Free Press's insistent editorial demand that every effort should be made to negotiate a new and much broader Trade Agreement between our two countries.

bleness but in the face of the Cabinet decision that no gold or dollars could be made available for such imports, there was really nothing they could do but report our representations to Ministers, and in the meantime hold up any further public statement on the subject.

2. This afternoon Cripps asked me to come down and discuss our difficulties with him. He had with him the file of Liesching's telegrams from Ottawa, from which it appeared that he had at an early stage of the discussions explained that the United Kingdom could not put up gold or dollars for token imports from any country. In agreeing that the question of how this would affect token imports from Canada in 1948 should be the subject of subsequent "negotiation" in London, the United Kingdom appear to have in mind possibility of negotiations about our holding sterling against token imports generally, or perhaps permitting individual exporting firms to do so. Our representatives on the other hand, appear to have envisaged these "negotiations" as an opportunity for reviewing the token import schedule item by item, in the expectation that we would at least be able to preserve the more important import licenses without especially concerning ourselves about methods of payment.

3. Cripps conceded that the cost of token imports was very small beer in the overall exchange account, but justified his Government's general position on the ground:

(a) That they could not defend the expenditure of even very modest sums of gold or dollars on quasi luxury goods and articles that could be dispensed with at time when imports of essential foods and basic raw materials were being radically reduced:

(b) That they could not afford to introduce a new discrimination against United States by cancelling token imports from that country while continuing them from Canada.

4. He wondered, however, whether it would be possible to work out some special arrangement which would permit them to continue token imports from Canada and suspend them from all other countries requiring payment in hard currency. Speculating along these lines, he wondered if we could agree to permit token imports from United Kingdom of goods otherwise prohibited, on the strength of which special concession they could justify a reciprocal arrangement here. Alternatively, could we make possible the importation of anthracite coal which price differentials might otherwise prevent.

5. Some arrangement of this sort he said, would probably enable them to continue taking such items as rubber footwear, though there were other items on the token import schedule which he did not think they could possibly continue to buy. I said that I thought people in Canada would recognize that in present circumstances, and especially in the context of recent financial negotiations between the two countries, that United Kingdom could hardly be expected to put up dollars for types of merchandise which we ourselves were prohibiting for exchange purposes and that a revision of the schedule in this sense could probably be given an acceptable explanation.

6. As matters now stand, I am to see Cripps and Harold Wilson<sup>38</sup> on Monday afternoon to explore the position further. I should be glad to have your comments on the points raised in this telegram, and any new suggestions you may be able to offer. It occurs to me that if United Kingdom stick to their present position and absolutely refuse to put up dollars for unessential imports, we might ask them to suspend the token import scheme generally, so that if they do in fact permit the importation of some unessential goods under bi-lateral arrangements with soft currency countries, they would not be doing so under the token import rubric which was clearly meant as an earnest of their intention of maintaining access to United Kingdom market for established trading interests. Ends.

Dear Mr. Pearson,

The attention of my Government has been drawn to a statement issued to the press by Mr. Gardiner on the 2nd January in which it was said that the United Kingdom had agreed to purchase Canada's surplus of beef, bacon, eggs and cheese for the years 1948 and 1949 and that the prices and quantities would not be affected by any further discussion of financial relationships at the end of the three months covered by the recent agreement.

As you know, while financial arrangements were recently reached between the two Governments to cover the period up to the 31st March next, no arrangements were made as regards the period thereafter. Thus while the Canadian Government entered into no commitment beyond the 31st March, 1948, as regards the provision of Canadian dollars, the United Kingdom Government entered into no commitment beyond that date as regards the provision of United States dollars.

My Government think it important that this statement of their position should be on record. They recall that their attitude was reflected in the statement made by Mr. Mackenzie King in the House of Commons on the 18th December that "the United Kingdom will itself decide how to dispose of its present limited financial resources in the way most effective for its recovery."

In this connection you will recall that when the exchange of correspondence was being drafted in order to record the agreement reached the fifth paragraph of your letter to Sir Percivale Liesching read:

<sup>38</sup> Président, ministère du Commerce du Royaume-Uni.
President, Board of Trade of United Kingdom.

"There is no credit commitment on the part of the Canadian Government for 1948 beyond the three months period."

In the reply to this letter as drafted by Sir Percivale Liesching the corresponding paragraph read as follows:

"I note from paragraph five of your letter that there is no credit commitment on the part of the Canadian Government for 1948 beyond the three months period. Equally under this settlement there is no commitment on the part of the United Kingdom Government to provide United States dollars in 1948 after the expiry of the three months in question."

On the 17th December there was prolonged discussion upon the second sentence of Sir Percivale Liesching's draft, in the course of which it was stressed from the Canadian side that the form of this second sentence would cause embarrassment if it were included in correspondence which might subsequently be made public. On his side, Sir Percivale Liesching made it clear that unless this sentence or a sentence of equivalent effect was included in the exchange of letters he would be unable to agree to the exchange of correspondence proposed. It was accordingly agreed that in order to meet the point of presentation raised on Sir Percivale Liesching's draft the sentence in question should read as follows:

"I note also the following words from the agreed statement made by Mr. MacKenzie King to-day: 'the United Kingdom will itself decide how to dispose of its present limited financial resources in the way most effective for its recovery'."

The letter was signed on the understanding that the text finally adopted had the same meaning as the original version, namely, that the United Kingdom Government, no less than the Canadian Government, were uncommitted as to the means by which payments for supplies from Canada after the 31st March would be financed.

My Government feel that it would be unwise in present circumstances for either Government to anticipate the results of the further conversations which are to take place before the 31st March regarding the means by which supplies of foodstuffs from Canada will be paid for over the longer period mentioned in Mr. Gardiner's statement.

Yours sincerely,

ALEC CLUTTERBUCK

Ottawa, February 6, 1948

Dear Sir Alexander [Clutterbuck],

I have received your letter of January 24th regarding a press statement issued by Mr. Gardiner on January 2nd concerning the recent United Kingdom-Canadian Food Agreement. I have shown a copy of this letter to Mr. St. Laurent, to Mr. Gardiner and to other Ministers. I am, therefore, now in a position to give you the Governmental viewpoint on the points which you have raised.

I note your statement that the United Kingdom Government entered into no commitment beyond March 31st, 1948, as regards the provision of United States dollars for the purchase of the Canadian surplus food commodities covered by those contracts between the two Governments which were referred to in my letter to Sir Percivale Liesching of December 18th. In this connection you mention the statement made by Mr. Mackenzie King in the House of Commons on December 18th that "the United Kingdom will itself decide how to dispose of its present limited financial resources in the way most effective for its recovery." It was your understanding that the inclusion of these words in Sir Percivale Liesching's letter, referred to above, meant that the Canadian Government accepted the position that there was no commitment on the part of the United Kingdom Government to provide United States dollars, for the purposes indicated above, after March 31st, 1948. I do not feel that any such interpretation of Mr. King's words is justified or is indeed required. It may be true that the United Kingdom has not entered into any commitment beyond the March 31st date as to the means by which supplies from Canada would be financed. The fact remains, however, as I am sure you will agree, that the United Kingdom has entered into a contractual obligation to accept certain livestock products at certain prices for the whole of 1948 and without prejudice to the renewal of these contracts for the later period of the wheat contract.

The inability of the United Kingdom to finance purchases under the contracts in question does not, I suggest, itself cancel the obligation which the United Kingdom Government have accepted. It would, moreover, be most unfair to Canadian agricultural producers, and indeed make their production planning practically impossible, if the fulfilment of these contracts becomes clouded with uncertainty or if the feeling becomes widespread that they might be dropped or abandoned at some date in 1948 after March 31st.

In the above connection it has, I think, been made abundantly clear that the failure to carry out one contract, for financial reasons, means the dropping of all contracts, including the wheat contract. I hope that no such contingency may arise, but, in case it does, it is essential to make the Canadian position in the matter quite clear.

Yours sincerely,
L.B. PEARSON

ANTI-DUMPING DUTIES; REPORT OF CABINET COMMITTEE
ON EXTERNAL TRADE POLICY

20. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that the Cabinet Committee on External Trade Policy had considered proposals for amendment of the Customs Tariff to modify the effect of present anti-dumping provisions.

The anti-dumping clause was automatic in its application in all circumstances. At present it operated as a serious impediment to the import of goods from the United Kingdom and other European countries at the very time when it was desirable to encourage such imports. Domestic ceiling prices in these exporting nations were abnormally high, often as a result of deliberate policy to discourage domestic sales; prices for export were held down to a substantially lower level. This lower export price was completely nullified, however, by the automatic anti-dumping duty collected in Canada.

Canada was reported to be the only country with an automatic anti-dumping duty of this kind; it was normal practice elsewhere to retain discretion in the application of such safeguards. Moreover, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade established a formula under which such duties would be applied only in cases of proven or threatened injury.

Accordingly, the Cabinet Committee recommended that, in connection with proposed changes in the Customs Tariff Act to be made in 1948 budget legislation, an amendment be added to provide that the Governor in Council might suspend or relax from time to time the operation of the anti-dumping duties provision in relation to any goods or classes of goods. It was understood that the Minister of National Revenue, in consultation with the Minister of Finance, would proceed with the preparation of this amendment.

(Minutes, Cabinet Committee on External Trade Policy, Apr. 12, 1948).†

21. The Cabinet, after further discussion, approved the recommendation of the Cabinet Committee on External Trade Policy and agreed that an amendment to the Customs Tariff Act be prepared accordingly.

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], July 7, 1948

Sir Alexander Clutterbuck came in to see me this morning about our cheese contract with the United Kingdom. He wanted to raise informally a number of questions which were rather delicate politically.

He said that, while our former contracts with the United Kingdom had set target figures which it was not expected would be met, our existing contracts on bacon, beef, eggs and cheese set figures which were considered on both sides to be firm and realistic.

There was no difficulty about the bacon, beef and eggs contracts, but there was difficulty about the cheese contract.

The figures set in the cheese contract were not being met by Canada and it seemed clear that they could not be met unless the Canadian Government exercised its powers of requisition. Sir Andrew Duncan<sup>39</sup> had had discussions with Mr. Gardiner and officials of the Department of Agriculture, and Sir Alexander Clutterbuck understood that it had been agreed by Cabinet that the cheese contract was a firm commitment and that the Government would exercise its powers of requisition in order to be able to meet the contract.

However, the prices under the contract were below the actual present selling price in the Province of Quebec. It would obviously be difficult, therefore, for the Canadian Government to requisition cheese below the market price. To do this before the provincial elections in Quebec would be particularly difficult.

He understood that Mr. Gardiner was going to discuss this with you.

He fears that perhaps it might be suggested that no action should be taken to requisition until after the end of this month. By that time so much cheese will have passed from the factories to the distributors that it will be extremely difficult to requisition the amount necessary to fulfill the United Kingdom contract.

There are two reasons why he considers this matter to be serious. The first is that cheese is a much more important item in the United Kingdom diet, particularly among heavy workers such as miners, than the other commodities for which contracts have been made, bacon, beef and eggs. The second is that, as we are aware, certain groups in the United Kingdom are not particularly keen on these food contracts; he has been insisting that the United Kingdom should not attempt in any way to evade its obligations under the contracts; these arguments would be weakened if Canada did not fulfill its obligations under the cheese contract.

Chairman, Executive Committee, British Iron and Steel Federation.

Though he said it was not for him to make any suggestions on what the Canadian Government might do, Sir Alexander himself thought that perhaps the best way out of our difficulties would be for the Canadian Government to requisition at the present market price and itself bear the difference between the present market price and the contract price.<sup>40</sup>

Your telegram No. 1286† visit of Sir Henry Wilson Smith. This visit went off very well and Sir Henry made a very favourable impression on those he met here. He emphasized that his visit was primarily for purposes of getting acquainted and that he did not wish to participate in formal interdepartmental conferences but to meet officials informally, individually or in small groups. On this basis several meetings were arranged. I did not attend all these meetings but a report of them will be sent you by airmail in a day or two. Sir Henry was frank and straightforward and we feel that we have received from him an honest picture of the United Kingdom situation. That picture, however, was a gloomy one and seemed to indicate that even though the Marshall Plan should run its full course successfully, the United Kingdom will not be in a strong enough position by 1952 to return to normal multilateral trading practices but will have to fall back on bilateral devices which are bound to affect us disadvantageously. We in turn with this prospect in view will certainly have to look south again and see what kind of arrangements are possible there. On the whole I should say that the visit of Wilson Smith, which, of course, was purely on an official level, encouraged that line of official thinking which feels that we should press forward as quickly and as far as possible in strengthening and broadening our trade relations with the United States.

Ottawa, August 12, 1948

Dear Norman [Robertson],

You will be receiving a memorandum prepared by the Finance Department of the informal discussions which took place with Sir Henry Wilson-Smith. The memorandum very properly omits some remarks made to Wilson-Smith expressing the personal views or feelings of some of those present. Some of us here felt, however, that you would like to know what these remarks were, and I therefore undertook to write you.

When Wilson-Smith had told us that the U.K. was counting on the necessity of balancing sterling area dealings with Canada by a substantial decrease in their imports from us, I took occasion to say that while his prognostications might be realistic they were none the less sad. Canada was a great consuming market, as evidenced by the tremendous volume of our imports from the United States. The United Kingdom, however, did not have sufficient faith in its productive possibilities to believe that they could sell to us on a scale which would enable them to buy the things they desire and for which we would be a good source of supply. They therefore contemplated obtaining more of these things from countries to which they could export more easily — countries which were likely to maintain restrictions and accept U.K. goods on a non-competitive basis. In a sense, it was an abdication in favour of the United States in so far as the Canadian market was concerned.

Deutsch then suggested that such a policy on the part of the United Kingdom was not theoretically inevitable: surely there were possibilities of improving the U.K. position to a greater extent than Wilson-Smith anticipated, by increases in efficiency, appropriate fiscal and exchange rate policies, and, in certain cases, longer hours of work. (Wilson-Smith had earlier admitted that the 40-hour week in certain key industries was hardly consistent with U.K. needs.) Without questioning the economic grounds for Deutsch's views, Wilson-Smith seemed to think that political considerations would not permit drastic action. In the short run, it was easier to go down hill, or at least not to make notable progress in the other direction.

Dr. Clark, in speaking about our position, referred to the fact that we had already made a big investment in the U.K. with the hope that the type of development which we were now discussing could be avoided. How could an increase in this investment be justified if post-ERP prospects were so poor?

I do not believe that Wilson-Smith was intentionally painting too gloomy a picture. I think he indicated the road down which he believes the U.K. will go, unless some drastic changes take place in policy. He probably believes that the prospect of such changes is extremely dim, but, for what it may be worth, is glad to have the opportunity of reporting to the Chancellor the views which he received from some Canadians, and would also be glad to have the Chancellor receive those views direct when he visits this country.

Yours sincerely,

INFORMAL DISCUSSIONS WITH SIR HENRY WILSON SMITH
OF THE UNITED KINGDOM TREASURY, AUGUST 2ND TO 4TH, 1948

Sir Henry Wilson Smith had come to Ottawa for a brief visit in order to make his acquaintance with the principal Canadian officials concerned with financial and commercial policy and to have an informal exchange of views with these officials on some outstanding problems between the United Kingdom and Canada. Sir Henry had only recently been appointed to the position in charge of overseas finance in the United Kingdom Treasury where he succeeded Sir Wilfrid Eady. At the discussions Sir Henry was accompanied by Sir Alexander Clutterbuck and Sir Gordon Munro.

In welcoming Sir Henry to Ottawa Dr. Clark explained that the discussions were entirely informal, that no commitments were involved and that it was not intended to reach conclusions at this stage. The talks were simply to be a frank exchange of views in which each side would have the opportunity to acquaint the other "how their minds were running."

At the outset Dr. Clark drew attention to the common purposes of Canada and the United Kingdom in a speedy reconstruction of Western Europe and the restoration of expanding multilateral trade. Since the end of the war Canadian policy had been consistently directed toward this end and Canada has made large positive contributions toward its attainment. In this connection he referred to the Canadian export credit program, the provision of foodstuffs and raw materials at reasonable prices, special efforts to assist the expansion of British exports to Canada, the preferred position given the soft currency countries in the emergency exchange conservation program, etc. Canada therefore had a very heavy stake in the restoration of multilateral trade both from the standpoint of her traditional position and because of the heavy investment she had made since the end of the war. We had been assured that the multilateral goal was also the objective of United Kingdom policy but recently there had been evidence that this might no longer be the case. In the first place it seemed to us that there have been tendencies in British policy, particularly since July 1947, which will cumulatively work against the attainment of a viable multilateral system. Secondly, it has been increasingly difficult to understand the United Kingdom attitude on a number of specific matters between us, such as British direct investment in Canada, Newfoundland cod-fish, Canadair, immigrants' capital, etc. The inflexibility and delays encountered in respect of these matters have caused us to wonder whether a policy of particular toughness has been adopted towards Canada because of her present and future position in relation to dollar exchange.

Among the "tendencies" in British policy which are disturbing us are the following:

(1) the continued serious drain upon British productive and export capacity resulting from over-generous or ineffective treatment of blocked sterling balances held by sterling area countries;

(2) the failure to cope with the enormous movement of capital to South Africa and elsewhere in the sterling area which has just contributed significantly to the depletion of the United Kingdom's reserves of dollar exchange;

(3) the increasing resort to bilateral trade agreements having characteristics which are contrary to the development of multilateral trade;

(4) the slow and disappointing increase in British exports to Canada and other parts of the dollar area;

(5) the concentration and direction of new British overseas investments into the sterling area for the reason that the United Kingdom could "more easily make payments" for imports from that area;

(6) the failure to deal energetically with the problem of raising productivity of British industries, particularly the export industry.

Dr. Clark invited Sir Henry to clarify insofar as he was able some of these tendencies in British policy and also to give his views as to whether the Canadian impressions in these respects were justified. Sir Henry was asked also to review, insofar as thinking in the United Kingdom had gone, the longer run dollar exchange position of the United Kingdom, say at the end of the E.R.P. period in 1952; and further to indicate through what steps and over what period a viable multilateral relationship would be established with the dollar area.

In reply Sir Henry stated that he could well understand Canadian concern over certain tendencies in United Kingdom financial and commercial policy. He said, however, that many of the developments which were disturbing Canadians were purely of an emergency or short run character which deviated temporarily from longer run objectives. Some of the tendencies, while clearly undesirable from the longer run standpoint, were unfortunately unavoidable in the present emergency conditions. Sir Henry said that one of the objects of his visit at this time was to learn, in an informal way, the Canadian viewpoint while prospective policies were still in their formative stage. Authorities in the United Kingdom would, during the next few months, be faced with the task of drawing up a four-year program of recovery which is to be submitted to the O.E.E.C. in Paris and to the E.C.A. in Washington. For this reason in particular it was most helpful to have this informal exchange of views.

The subsequent discussions with Sir Henry on significant issues may be summarized as follows:

UNITED KINGDOM FINANCIAL POLICY RESPECTING THE STERLING AREA

Sir Henry was not disposed to quarrel with the Canadian feeling that the relatively generous treatment of blocked sterling balances since the end of the war had imposed a disproportionate drain upon the United Kingdom's exchange reserves and productive capacity. However, the United Kingdom authorities were now doing everything possible to tighten up and to plug the leakages. While they had no definite plans for controlling capital movements within the sterling area, there were grounds for believing that this problem was becoming less important. Since the elections the large-scale movement of capital to South Africa had pretty well ceased.

With respect to the prospect of a further tightening up on releases from the blocked sterling balances, there were some very important considerations which the United Kingdom has necessarily to keep in mind. In the case of India and Pakistan, the largest holders of blocked balances, it has been felt that the restrictions imposed ought not to be pushed to the point where the maintenance of the Commonwealth connection and other political and strategical considerations were endangered. For obvious reasons similar matters had to be kept in mind with respect to South Africa in the present circumstances. For these and other reasons some further continued drain on the United Kingdom resulting from the release of blocked balances cannot be avoided. However, every effort will be made to keep that drain within manageable proportions.

BILATERALISM AND EXPANSION OF EXPORTS TO THE DOLLAR AREA

Canadian officials pointed out that the increasing network of bilateral trade agreements which the United Kingdom is now building up could be the cause of grave difficulty in the economic relations with Canada and the dollar area as a whole. The tendencies in these bilateral agreements, which are now becoming apparent, would more and more have the effect of freezing British trade into moulds which would prevent the ultimate establishment of true multilateral trade. As an increasing amount of British exports get tied up in bilateral deals, the smaller will be the amount of British goods that can be exported to North America for dollar exchange. If the goal of true multilateral trade is to be reached, the problem of dollar scarcity must be solved through a substantial increase in British earnings in North America. The development of bilateralism which would channel British exports in other directions could completely frustrate this objective. Furthermore there is evidence that the United Kingdom bilateral arrangements are having the effect of artificially supporting marginal and uneconomic industries. A number of the agreements specifically provide for the mutual exchange of non-essential goods with the result that labour and resources are held out of more essential production. Furthermore, prices at which goods are exchanged in some of these bilateral agreements are considerably higher than world market prices, with the consequence that the United Kingdom cost and price structure would get more and more out of line with that of North America. It was pointed out that all these tendencies in the United Kingdom bilateral agreements caused Canadian observers to question whether the United Kingdom is really endeavouring to work toward a viable system of multilateral trade or, indeed, whether this goal can ever be achieved if the measures now being used continue to be pursued.

Sir Henry said that he could understand how some of the tendencies referred to could cause apprehension from the Canadian viewpoint; he was not disposed to dispute the purely logical bases of these apprehensions. Rather, he took the point of view that what the United Kingdom is doing is forced upon her by the necessities of her situation. He said that the trade devices now being employed were short run expedients because no other alternatives were available. He was not inclined to speculate too much about the ultimate outcome of these expedients, merely that they were the only feasible way of dealing with immediate problems and that they would enable progress to be made toward the reconstruction of trade and production. He appreciated that the progress toward the ultimate goal of real multilateral trade might be much slower than had been hoped but there was no alternative in the present emergency conditions to the policy of working toward a somewhat more limited goal as the first step. As far as their preliminary thinking had gone, that first step consisted of the establishment of a self-supporting Western Europe with the greatest measure possible of multilateral trade within Europe and the sterling area. The attainment of a freely operating system of multilateral trade with North America and the dollar area as a whole must come later. As for the bilateral agreements as such, he said that they represented devices which enable the United Kingdom to obtain supplies which they could not pay for otherwise. While he deplored the circumstance that sometimes uneconomic transactions had to be entered into, they were an unavoidable result of the bargaining process. In certain cases they were forced to take a certain proportion of non-essential goods in order to obtain absolutely essential supplies, e.g. steel and flax fibre from Belgium, meat from Argentina, etc. In general he said it was not possible to deprive the British economy and British consumers of imports which could be obtained through bilateral arrangements merely for the sake of avoiding some of the evils of bilateralism. For the present and the near term future at least, he saw no possibility of expanding British exports to North America sufficiently rapidly to make it possible to dispense with bilateral arrangements. The expansion of exports to North America will continue to be a pressing and dominant purpose of British policy, but no dramatic results can be expected. Only as these exports grow over time and the circle of multilateral trade gradually widens through Western Europe and the sterling area can the scope of bilateralism be reduced. Rapid and dramatic increase of exports to North America is not feasible in the light of the relative productivity and limited competitive power of British industry and in the light of the artificial protective barriers which exist in the United States.

THE PRODUCTIVITY OF BRITISH INDUSTRY

Basically the British problem is one of productivity. Allied to this there is the problem of increasing the production of goods which can be sold competitively in dollar markets. Sir Henry agreed that if productivity could be increased significantly the whole picture would be brighter. He said that some rise in productivity could be expected as postwar reconstruction proceeded and as new capital and modern industrial equipment was applied in British industry. However, in replying to a question as to whether the rise in output which was required could not be obtained by an increase in the average working week, he said that any proposal to achieve an increase in the number of hours worked enters into the realm where social and political considerations are important. He did not know whether the political difficulties could be faced but he was inclined to be doubtful in the light of the political time-table for the next few years. Sir Henry agreed that the heavy program of domestic capital investment in the United Kingdom during the past few years added in an important degree to the already over-extended demands upon the British economy. He thought that from now on the investment program would be concentrated more completely on the expansion and renovation of industrial facilities rather than on the expansion of housing and other direct consumer needs. This would help in achieving increased efficiency but it may take some considerable time to produce large results.

Attention was drawn to the British effort to accomplish a substantial increase in agricultural production. It was pointed out that such expansion could only be attained at high cost which would adversely affect the productivity of the British economy as a whole. In this instance Canada had a double interest in that her agricultural markets were directly affected and that it would weaken the economic efficiency of the British economy in general. Sir Henry replied that the British agricultural policy was determined mainly on the grounds of security and immediate dollar shortage rather than by general economic criteria.

THE POSITION OF THE UNITED KINGDOM AT THE END OF THE E.R.P. (1952)

Sir Henry explained that the United Kingdom and each of the other participating countries in the European Recovery Program is expected to submit to E.C.A. this autumn a concrete program of recovery over the next four-year period. He said that the authorities in the United Kingdom would be very busy with this matter during the next few months. Sir Henry was asked to outline, as far as thinking had gone to this point, the general objectives of such a program for the United Kingdom, having in mind particularly the implications for Canada. He was asked, also, to indicate the overall exchange position of the United Kingdom and the sterling area which it is hoped will be reached at the end of the period (1952).

Sir Henry began by explaining that the decision had now been finally and definitely made that on no account must the central sterling area dollar reserves be allowed to fall below £500 million, which is approximately the present figure. This must be the bed rock of British external financial policy if the "ship" is to be safely afloat at the end of the E.R.P. period. Sir Henry was quick to make it clear, however, that he did not expect that the "ship" would, by 1952, be under full sail on the open sea of multilateral trade.

Assuming present trends and policies, preliminary thinking in London foresees the picture as follows: The goal to be sought at the end of 1952 is the achievement of dollar "solvency" in which the income and outgo of dollar payments would be in balance. The existing deficit in dollar payments (for the next twelve-month period) for the sterling area is of the order of £300. This is the gap which it is hoped the E.C.A. will fill during the coming year. By 1952 when the source of American dollars from the E.C.A. will have disappeared the gap must be brought down to zero. It is proposed that this gap be closed partly by a further gradual expansion of exports to the Western Hemisphere and partly by reduction of imports from dollar sources below the present level. Sir Henry said that it was not expected that the total production of the British economy or exports as a whole could be expanded in any significant degree beyond the level that will be reached at the end of this year. A further important increase in output could not be attained unless new policies of a basic character were inaugurated. At this stage he did not know how much, if anything, one could count upon the likelihood of a new approach. As for the United Kingdom's terms of trade, he felt that some improvement from the present unfavourable condition could be expected, but any such likely improvement could only go a limited distance toward providing a solution. The highly favourable terms of trade of the immediate pre-war years could not be expected to return.

If output as a whole over the next four years cannot be expected to rise significantly, and given the improbability of any large-scale shift of exports to the dollar area, then the closing of the gap must be accomplished to some degree by a reduction in imports from both Canada and the United States. With the reconstruction and integration of the European economy under E.R.P. and with the development of alternative sources of supply in the sterling area and other soft currency countries, it is hoped that the United Kingdom would be able to replace the imports which will have had to be dispensed with from the dollar area. Sir Henry thought that if E.R.P. continues throughout the four-year period along the lines originally intended that the dollar gap can be closed in the way suggested. It was hoped also that by that time (1952) European trade and payments will be built up to the point where a large measure of multilateral trade would exist inside Western Europe and the sterling area. He emphasized, however, that as far as could be seen now, the sterling area and Western Europe as a whole would continue to face the problem of dollar shortage. Freely operating multilateral trade with the Western Hemisphere would not be possible. As far as can be seen now the United Kingdom's imports from Canada and the United States would be materially reduced from the present level and would continue to be closely controlled. How long this situation could be expected to prevail after 1952 Sir Henry could not say but thought it might be for some time, depending upon developments.

Sir Henry did not need to be told that this was a bleak prospect for Canada. He was asked to indicate just where the impact on Canada might come. He thought that in the case of agricultural exports the United Kingdom might not be able to buy any significant amounts outside of wheat and that meats and other livestock products from Canada would have to be dispensed with. He thought that there might also have to be some trimming down on purchases of raw materials. As for manufactured goods, present severe restrictions would probably have to be continued. The same limitations upon markets would tend to prevail throughout the sterling area.

Some of the larger consequences of this prospect were exposed and frankly examined. On both sides it was appreciated that such an outcome could produce "economic and political strain" in relationships between Canada and the United Kingdom. The maximum effort will have to be made to achieve a more favourable result, and if that cannot be attained then great care will have to be taken to promote an understanding of the situation. Canada would have to undertake a reorientation in its external economic relationships. That was not impossible but it might have some important implications respecting Canadian external relations, both political and economic. Sir Henry said he appreciated all this and pointed out that it was particularly useful to have this informal and exploratory discussion before policy had been definitely formed. He said that during the next few months these matters would be thoroughly discussed by the United Kingdom ministers and he thought that when all the implications were realized that it was possible that some course might be found which might produce a more favourable outcome for Canada. He thought it right to give the picture as it was now seen from preliminary thinking, on the basis of present trends and policies. Any other assumptions entered into the realm of high policy about which he could not speculate. It was agreed that it was very important that both sides should thoroughly go over and think out the problem over the next few months so that no possibilities would be overlooked. Sir Henry referred to the prospective visit of the Chancellor of the Exchequer when there will be opportunities for discussion at the ministerial level.

You will, I think, read with interest the attached letter from Dr. Clark to me† with the report on the visit of Sir Henry Wilson Smith. This makes discouraging reading in so far as the long term prospects for Canadian trade with the United Kingdom is concerned. It is, however, all to the good that the talks with Wilson Smith were so frank and straightforward.

It seems to me that the lesson to be drawn from these talks — if that lesson is confirmed by Sir Stafford Cripps when he visits Ottawa, which I suspect will be the case — is that we should consider more seriously the possibility of some pretty far reaching trade arrangement with our neighbour to the south. Indeed, it may become in the future not a matter of choice but a matter of dire necessity. Of course, nothing can be done until the November elections in the United States, but I am wondering whether, as soon as possible after those elections, it would not be well to reconsider the questions which were discussed last spring within a very limited Cabinet circle.

Ottawa, August 25, 1948

Dear Norman [Robertson],

It has been suggested that it would be useful if you could come out a week or so before Cripps' visit, to talk to people here about problems that arise out of that visit, and take part in the discussions with Cripps. I think that this idea is a good one but, before taking it up officially with the Prime Minister and Mr. St. Laurent, I thought I should get your own reaction. Will you let me know how you feel about the idea?

We feel here that Cripps' visit is going to be an extremely important one, and that some pretty fundamental and far reaching discussions will take place. He will, I am afraid, find Ministers very worried indeed about the trade prospects ahead, and wondering whether there is much likelihood of the United Kingdom being in a position, at the end of the Marshall Plan, to put its trade with Canada on a satisfactory basis. Wilson Smith's visit underlined these fears. Mr. St. Laurent's feeling, at the moment, is that if fundamental changes to our trading and economic relationships will be required two or three years from now, shouldn't we begin to make arrangements to that end immediately? This means turning south as soon as the elections there have taken place. I wonder whether the United Kingdom's attitude toward Canada in these matters is conditioned, to some extent, by the feeling that we have no choice but to make the most satisfactory arrangement possible with them; that a far reaching deal with the United States is not in the cards. If they feel this way and base their policy toward us on that feeling, they are making, I think, an important mistake.

When you get this letter, will you cable me at once whether the idea of a visit to Ottawa appeals to you? If you come, I might be able to return with you, providing you could spend a week or ten days' leave here after the discussions with Cripps are finished. I have no doubt that you would welcome such a holiday.

Yours sincerely,

MIKE [PEARSON]

[Ottawa, September 1, 1948]

THE VISIT OF SIR STAFFORD CRIPPS, UNITED KINGDOM CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER

Sir Stafford is coming to this continent to attend the annual meetings of the Boards of Governors of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, which will take place in Washington during the week beginning September 27th. Before going to Washington Sir Stafford and Lady Cripps will visit Canada and will be in Ottawa for the greater part of the week beginning September 20th. Sir Stafford's party will include: Mr. Trent, Sir Stafford's private secretary; Sir Henry Wilson Smith, Second Secretary of the Treasury; Mr. Lesslie, Head of the Economic Information Unit; Mr. Grant, Head of the North American Division of the Treasury; a representative of the Board of Trade (as yet unnamed); and three lady secretaries.

In Sir Stafford's proposal to visit Ottawa no direct intimation was given of the matters he would like to discuss with the Canadian Government. It is obvious, however, that the discussions will centre upon questions concerning Canadian financial relations with the United Kingdom in the immediate future, and upon matters respecting general commercial policy and trade between the two countries now and in the years ahead. In particular it may be expected that Sir Stafford will, (a) raise the possibility of an early renewal of drawings upon the Canadian loan, and (b) explain the United Kingdom's four year programme for achieving reconstruction and economic viability under the European Recovery Programme.

RENEWAL OF UNITED KINGDOM DRAWINGS ON THE CANADIAN LOAN

Because of our own exchange difficulties it was arranged early in the year that drawings upon the loan should be suspended after the middle of April. No drawings have been made since that time. Up to mid April a total of $1,015 million ($540 mm in 1946, $423 mm in 1947 and $52 mm in 1948) had been drawn down leaving a balance of $235 million still available to the U.K. out of the $1,250 million originally provided for. When the drawings were terminated in April the United Kingdom, and authorities in Washington, were told that no further credit could be made available to the United Kingdom until the Canadian exchange position had improved sufficiently to warrant the extension of further aid. They were told also that the Canadian position would be re-examined during the latter part of September in light of the outturn of the 1948 crop. This attitude has been consistently maintained in response to the various queries that have been received during the past few months.

Recently two developments have occurred which have a bearing on the status of the remaining United Kingdom credit — one arising from the United Kingdom and the other from the ECA in Washington. In connection with the preparation of the programme of ECA assistance required for the year June 30, 1948 to July 1, 1949, the United Kingdom has been under pressure by the other European countries (OEEC in Paris) to indicate how much the United Kingdom expects to draw from their unused Canadian credit. Since the sixteen European countries are required to allocate the available ECA aid amongst themselves, the amount of help that may be expected from other sources is a matter of common interest. When the United Kingdom made informal enquiries on what amount of Canadian credit they might tentatively show in the programme for the year ending July 1, 1939 [sic], she was told that nothing ought to be shown. However, upon further prodding by the OEEC the United Kingdom has, on her own responsibility, apparently shown an "estimate" of $60 million for the period in question. It has been made clear that this estimate by the United Kingdom cannot in any way anticipate the decision of the Canadian Government.

A few weeks ago a number of officials of the ECA in Washington visited Ottawa for an informal discussion of Canadian-United States co-operation in the European Recovery Programme. In these discussions the United States officials said that the ECA was very anxious that Canada should renew the extension of credit assistance to Europe as soon as she felt able to do so. They stated that such action by Canada would be of great help in obtaining the necessary ECA appropriation from Congress next year. It would also strengthen the hand of the ECA in the attempt to secure contributions from a number of other countries. If further contributions could be obtained from Canada and other countries it would mean that the United States would not be left alone in financing European aid, and would thereby make it much more likely that Congress and the American people would be willing to carry on the European Recovery Programme on the scale required. The United States officials pointed also to the large "off-shore" ECA purchases being made in Canada this year. Nearly one-fifth of the entire ECA expenditures and almost one-half of the total "off-shore" purchases which have thus far been authorized will be spent in Canada. They felt that it would be difficult to justify to Congress the continued spending of such a large share of ECA money in Canada unless Canada herself was making an appropriate contribution to European aid.

In the discussions the Canadian position was fully explained. The United States officials were told that nothing could be said at the moment about what Canada might be able to do. They were reminded that the Canadian Government had undertaken to review the situation at the end of September. After that review had been made Canada would be prepared to discuss the whole matter of next year's arrangements with Washington. In order to establish the necessary degree of assurance and to make it easier for Canada to grant further assistance, the United States officials suggested the possibility that the ECA might be prepared to guarantee an over-all amount of off-shore purchases in Canada during the coming year. They felt that such a guarantee could be of very considerable importance to Canada in the light of the uncertainties that might arise. It was left that this proposal should be explored by both sides pending the discussions which are to take place at the end of September.

THE UNITED KINGDOM FOUR-YEAR PROGRAMME OF ECONOMIC RECOVERY

The sixteen participating ERP countries, including the United Kingdom, have each undertaken to submit to the OEEC in Paris by October 1st a four-year programme of recovery. The programmes are to be designed to achieve "as soon as possible and to maintain a satisfactory level of economic activity without extraordinary outside assistance." Each country is requested to explain its conception of "the general lines along which they intend to go in order to achieve viability in 1952-53, and how they anticipate the economy of their countries can be fitted into the pattern of a viable European economy." The various national programmes are to be combined by the OEEC into a composite European programme for submission to Washington by November 15th.

These four-year programmes, and the United Kingdom programme in particular, will inevitably have very far reaching implications for Canada. It is expected that Sir Stafford Cripps will be in a position to explain the United Kingdom's programme when he is here, especially those aspects which are of particular importance to Canada.

Thus far we have received very little direct official information on the nature of the United Kingdom programme which is still in early stages of preparation. In a circular telegram of August 11th from the Commonwealth Relations Office it is stated:

"4. The basic consideration in the formulation of our long-term programme will be that we must emerge after the E.R.P. period with gold and dollar reserves at no lesser amounts than they were at the beginning and it is in our common interest to resist any further drawing down of our reserves.

5. Each country will base its programme for submission to Paris on a tentative forecast of its balance of payments in 1952. In our own case certain conclusions which appear to emerge are that:

(a) We are likely to be in substantial deficit with the dollar area for some time to come (after 1952) and shall therefore still have to continue, and indeed to increase, our diversion of imports from the dollar area to other sources, and

(b) Even with considerably increased exports we might have to be content with a volume of imports lower than in 1938."

From information received through informal channels and through visits of British officials it is possible to indicate some of the basic objectives and assumptions on which the preparation of the programme of the United Kingdom and other European countries is proceeding at present. These may be summarized as follows:

(1) in 1952, and for some years thereafter, the Sterling area and Western Europe will continue to face the problem of a substantial dollar shortage. Consequently, during this period it will not be possible to establish a multilateral system of trade and payments with the Western Hemisphere; sterling and other European currencies will continue to be inconvertible to dollars.

(2) The attainment of Sterling area and European "viability" (i.e. doing without extraordinary U.S. assistance) by 1952 will require a material reduction in imports from the United States and Canada below the present levels. The loss of imports from the Western Hemisphere will be progressively replaced by the expansion of production in Europe and the colonies, and by diversion to soft currency sources.

(3) By 1952, the United Kingdom and other Sterling area purchases in Canada will be brought approximately into balance with the Sterling area earnings from the export of goods and services to Canada. While a determined effort will be made to expand earnings by increasing exports to Canada, the achievement of such a balance it is expected will entail, an appreciable reduction in present imports of Canadian agricultural products (particularly livestock products), probably some reduction in imports of raw materials, and continued close control of the imports of manufactured goods on the present restricted basis.

Sir Stafford Cripps will be in a position to give an authoritative elucidation of this picture which, as yet, is based on tentative thinking and preliminary information. Sir Stafford's visit will provide an opportunity for determining to what extent a more promising outcome could be achieved or hoped for. In particular, the discussions with Sir Stafford will provide the opportunity for bringing Canadian viewpoint to bear upon the United Kingdom's programme respecting those matters which are of such fundamental importance to Canada.

Ottawa, September 2, 1948

Between the two wars, Canada normally depended on a current account surplus with certain countries (notably the United Kingdom and Western Europe) in order to cover her deficit with certain other countries (notably the United States). This traditional, triangular pattern of Canadian foreign trade has been referred to so often that one almost apologizes for mentioning it. The "pattern" of course could only be maintained if the U.K. and Western Europe were able to obtain sufficient U.S. dollars (net) in their trade and other transactions with other countries to enable them to cover their deficits with Canada.

This triangular pattern of trade has been maintained. Indeed, it was exaggerated during the war and is still to some extent accentuated by abnormal export movements arising out of Canadian measures to speed European recovery. Whereas in 1938 we had a current account surplus with the sterling area (ex South Africa) and Western Europe of about $175 millions, and a current account deficit with the United States of $150 millions, for 1948 these two figures are expected to be something more than $800 millions and about $600 millions respectively.

While the pattern of trade remains what it was before the war, the pre-war pattern of financing broke down very early in the war and shows no sign as yet of being reconstituted. The United Kingdom, the sterling area and Western Europe have been unable to obtain sufficient dollars from their normal trade and other normal international dealings to pay Canada cash; what cash they have paid to us since the end of Lend-Lease has been made possible by:

- (a) Loans from U.S.
- (b) Use of the gold and dollar reserves of the countries concerned, and
- (c) ERP.

It is extremely difficult, indeed impossible, to assess exactly what will happen to Canada when ERP reaches its conclusion. Numerous questions come to mind:

(a) To what extent will recovery in the U.K. and Western Europe permit these countries to increase their exports to Canada on a competitive basis, and supply us with things which are presently coming from the United States?

(b) To what extent will the terms of trade move in favour of European countries, i.e., how far will raw material and food prices decline relative to those of manufactured goods? An improvement in the United Kingdom's terms of trade, for example, would not only tend to strengthen her U.S. dollar position and help to make U.S. dollars available to her for settlement of her trade with Canada, but would also reduce her deficit with Canada which needed to be financed in this way.

(c) What will be the level of business in non-European countries, particularly the United States, and therefore the opportunities for Canada to find alternative markets for some of the goods now going overseas?

These are not questions which can be answered. But a glimpse of the size and character of the problems we face can perhaps be obtained in another way.

Discussions which we have had with certain English officials in recent times indicate their belief that, post-ERP, the sterling area will have to balance its dealings with Canada. The English have not gone so far in bilateralism as to attach importance to achieving an exact balance with each country with which they deal. But they apparently see little prospect of achieving a significant U.S. dollar surplus in their dealings with countries other than Canada; and therefore expect to be unable to finance in U.S. dollars a large deficit with Canada. A cursory examination of the Western European situation, and a reading of the recent report of ECE, raises serious doubts as to whether most of our customers in that area will be able to find means of payment to permit them to cover a significant current account deficit with us.

The assumption that the sterling area will have to achieve a balance in its dealings with Canada may be too pessimistic. If the U.K. took really strenuous and painful measures to improve its competitive position in the world, a more optimistic attitude would be warranted. However, in appraising the situation we must naturally give great weight to the U.K.'s forecast of its own position at the end of ERP.

The dangers of our post-war position have been obvious since the commencement of the war, but there was reason for hoping that, with help from the U.S. and Canada, Europe would get back on its feet and be able to pay its own way without perpetuating severe import restrictions. Even before the end of the war, it was clear that when Lend-Lease came to an end the United States would extend tremendous credits to Europe; and when these credits were on the point of running out, it was equally obvious that the Marshall Plan would have to be adopted, because the alternative of no Plan would have produced a world debacle, and was therefore too horrible for the U.S. to contemplate. It may be the case that some form of U.S.

assistance to Europe will continue after ERP. But we cannot rely on such a development, certainly not on a basis that would provide a complete solution of our problems. The state of the world might be one which was extremely embarrassing and unfortunate for Canada, but not so calamitous that it produced further assistance from the U.S. on a substantial scale.

I revert to the fact that our current account surplus with the sterling area (ex South Africa) and ERP countries is likely to be more than $800 millions in 1948. Even after making allowance for a possible increase in the exports of these countries to Canada, a very serious gap remains.

It is difficult to know what the allowance for increased exports should be. Their exports to us in 1948 will be about $550 millions as compared with $220 millions pre-war. If one increases present exports by 50 per cent in value, the improvement over 1948 would be $275 millions. Even on the basis of this optimistic estimate, and after making allowance for their net earnings of "invisibles", sterling area and ERP countries would have to cut down the value of their 1948 purchases from us by about $525 millions to achieve a balance.

If one looks at the composition of our 1948 sales to the countries concerned, the following very important items are distinguished for their vulnerability: (This does not purport to be an exhaustive list, and contains only the very sizable items.)

Animal products of all kinds, particularly bacon.

Wheat flour, and to some extent, wheat.

Lumber.

Trucks and cars, and car parts.

It is not suggested that the need for a commodity such as lumber will be greatly reduced, but if the buyers have not the wherewithal to pay, they must do without. The same line of reasoning would apply in the case of base metals, although the reduction of purchases in this field would presumably be no greater than the buyers were absolutely forced to make.

Apart from the damage to Canadian export industries arising from a great decrease in sterling area and Western European purchases, the question arises as to how we shall be able to pay for a tolerable volume of imports from the U.S. It is true that reduction of overseas exports will lower national income and so reduce the demand for imports from the U.S. But we cannot contemplate such a drastic lowering of agricultural income, and such a degree of unemployment, as would produce a balance in our current account transactions with the United States. Government would fight such developments by price support measures in the farm field, and measures designed to minimize unemployment.

It does not seem possible to escape the conclusion that unless we find an alternative natural market or markets for a substantial portion of those commodities which the sterling area and Western Europe cannot afford to buy, then we are likely to be forced into the making of special deals with these countries on a bilateral basis. Such deals involve special arrangements for increasing imports from the countries concerned; and this in turn presumably involves more severe restrictions on imports from the U.S., and full-fledged discrimination.

Situation in the U.K. and Sterling Area in General

Bilateral deals are the order of the day so far as the U.K. is concerned. Up to this time, no other country has been seriously hurt, thanks to boom conditions and to the high level of U.K. buying, financed by credits and grants. Under more normal conditions, the extension of these deals throughout the sterling area and between sterling area and, say, Western European countries, is likely to have very serious effects so far as Canada is concerned. The process is going on all the time. In the August 30th clippings I read of a new Australian-Swedish trade pact. Australia is to send Sweden certain specified products, and to get in return timber, pulp, cardboard and various other paper products. These commodities may well be admitted into Australia at higher prices than she would be charged by Canada.

In the same bunch of clippings, I see that important changes have been announced by the East African import control authorities, consequent on the application of the recent British Government directive that the sterling dominions, namely South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, India, Pakistan and Ceylon, be placed on equality with the United Kingdom in respect to imports. Open general licences will be freely issued for a wide range of goods coming from these countries, and also from France, Holland, Norway and Denmark. Licences for importations from Canada will presumably be severely restricted.

Since the end of the war, the U.K. has been making great and indeed expansive efforts to maintain and develop the sterling area connection. She has permitted free movement of capital at heavy cost to herself, particularly in the case of South Africa. She has released war-time sterling balances to an extent which she can ill afford. At a time when goods are in scarce supply, she has favoured exports to sterling area markets. I believe that these efforts are based on a belief that the sterling area, plus some "like-minded" countries, represent the U.K.'s future trading partners and as such must be kept reasonably well satisfied with their U.K. connections. At a later date, when the sellers' market ends, U.K. expects to reap its reward.

I should think it likely that the U.K. would suffer a distinct impairment in standard of living if she has to rely heavily on development of a trading area by means of special arrangements. Her chances for a reasonable degree of success would, of course, be greatly improved if Canada's resources were thrown into the pot and she could obtain what she wanted from us on a basis of automatic lending in the form of sterling accumulations or bilateral balancing based on heavy increases in U.K. exports to us on a non-competitive basis. Such a prospect, however, is distinctly unattractive to Canada as an economic proposition.

It is hardly necessary to say that no one can guess accurately what Canada's foreign trade position or problems will be some years hence. International political developments will have a major influence on the situation, and such developments are presumably unpredictable. For example, friendly relations between the U.S. and Russia would greatly accelerate world recovery, and might well produce an atmosphere in which foreign investment of American capital would take place on a substantial scale. On the other hand, unfriendly relations might necessitate U.S. defence expenditures abroad to an extent which would ameliorate some of the dollar problems of U.K. and Western Europe. In the face of all these uncertainties, major decisions on policy are extraordinarily difficult to make. The great question to be resolved is whether or not deferment of major decisions involves greater risks than the adoption of new policies which, once initiated, could not readily be changed.

NOTES ON DINNER CONVERSATION WITH THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER AND INTERESTED UNITED KINGDOM OFFICIALS

Present:

Mr. N.A. Robertson
Sir Stafford Cripps
Sir Henry Wilson-Smith, Treasury
Sir James Helmore, Board of Trade
Sir Edwin Plowden, Central Economic Planning Staff
Sir Gordon Munro, United Kingdom Financial Minister in Washington
Mr. C.G.L. Syers, Commonwealth Relations Office
Mr. A.E. Ritchie

Importance of the Chancellor's Ottawa Talks

Mr. Robertson opened the conversation by stressing the importance attaching to the forthcoming talks of the Chancellor of the Exchequer in Ottawa, both politically and economically. He referred to the concern which was developing at the prospect of a division of the world into two blocs with only a minimum of trading relations between them. He observed that one of these groups, namely the sterling area, was apparently now expanding to include the other participants in the OEEC (as evidenced by the terms of the guidance paper regarding the assumptions to underlie the four-year programme), other countries with which members of the sterling area were making rather rigid and exclusive bilateral agreements, and possibly (if the proposals to be considered by ECE concerning the bases for expanding East-West trade were to be adopted, the countries of Eastern Europe generally. The prospect fore-shadowed by these trends was one which must create grave concern in the minds of those interested in promoting Commonwealth relations and in consolidating the "North Atlantic community". For Canada both the economic and political consequences of these developments appeared very serious. The immediate economic impact would be relatively harsher on Canada than on the United States, since such a relatively higher proportion of the Canadian national product goes into exports or is dependent on imports. Canadian international attitudes could not but be adversely affected by the results of such economic developments. Probably even more important from the point of view of international political relations would be the eventual reaction of the United States when their sensitive exports, even though those exports represent a relatively small percentage of the U.S. national product, suffer a reduction as a result of these events. Even though it might be expected that the U.S. reaction would be tempered somewhat by the realization that these tendencies had been encouraged by the U.S. Government through OEEC, it was not unlikely that, particularly if a recession were to occur, U.S. attitudes towards the Commonwealth and towards the North Atlantic union would be impaired. Both because of the direct effect on Canada of the further development of these present tendencies, and because of the indirect consequences for U.S. attitudes on matters of concern to us, the examination of these trends in U.K. and European policy seemed to us to be of prime importance and the Chancellor's visit to Ottawa would be expected to provide the opportunity for a thorough and basic discussion of these subjects with all of their implications.

2. Sir Stafford Cripps indicated his awareness of the importance of both the political and economic issues involved and asserted his intention to discuss these fundamental questions while in Ottawa. He expressed some doubt that the following out of present trends would result in the dichotomy which Mr. Robertson foresaw. While trade between the two groups would be temporarily reduced, it would still continue in substantial volume and there was hope that eventually the volume would increase. He recognized the importance of the eventual U.S. reaction and remarked that when the change in attitude would come could not be determined but he felt that some of the problems would come up in the Congressional discussions of future appropriations for ERP. He added that, while present planning had to proceed on the assumption that further appropriations would be forthcoming, it was by no means certain that such would be the case. He observed that it was largely as a result of American pressure that the U.K. was now doing the two things which the Americans found most offensive, namely planning and discriminating (presumably in connection with the latter Sir Stafford had in mind the insistence of the Americans on the premature period of convertibility and the unwillingness of the Americans in the Geneva tariff negotiations to offer import duty concessions as a means of stimulating dollar earnings and thus enabling the U.K. to avoid discrimination. Although, as is probably apparent from the above summary of his remarks, Sir Stafford was rather on the defensive, he did seem aware of the seriousness of the political consequences for the Commonwealth and for North Atlantic union of the possible U.S. and Canadian reactions to present and prospective policies and he seemed also to agree that such policies (even though they might be inevitable) were likely to evoke sooner or later the sort of unfavourable reaction foreseen by Mr. Robertson.

Agricultural Policies

3. Mr. Robertson then raised the general question of the extent to which present policies or proposals would involve the diversion of resources from the production of goods for export to dollar markets to the production less economically of goods for exchange within the group. He referred particularly to agricultural plans which would be of special concern to Canada. The Chancellor remarked that present agricultural plans might adversely affect trade with the Argentine but doubted that by themselves they would affect trade with Canada since it was envisaged that the limitations on such Canadian trade would be imposed not by domestic production but by the general inability to earn enough dollars. Sir Stafford felt that neither in terms of the commodities involved nor in terms of their effects on dollar earning capacity would the U.K. agricultural plans significantly affect future trade with Canada. Sir Edwin Plowden remarked that the U.K. programme of expansion was largely in respect of livestock, coarse grains, and poultry, rather than of cereals. Helmore observed that, of course, an expansion in coarse grains production implied an expansion in pig production as well. There might be some effect on the U.K. demand for these commodities from Canada but the effect would fall primarily on the sources from which these items were principally imported, such as the Argentine. Plowden stated that by 1952 the U.K. would still wish to import from Canada more agricultural products than it could finance from its export earnings. He intimated that present plans assume a continuation of rationing of principal foodstuffs beyond 1952. Accordingly, he supported the view of the Chancellor that the agricultural programme should not be regarded as responsible for any reduction in the demand for imports from Canada. Sir James Helmore felt also that the diversion of resources to the agricultural programme was not considered as reducing dollar earning ability, since those resources could not have been used effectively in any export industries of significance. Apparently Helmore was thinking primarily in terms of agricultural labour rather than in terms of materials for housing and for the manufacture of farm machinery or supplies.

4. Regarding the development within the sterling area of sources of supply for the U.K., Sir Stafford mentioned the African groundnuts scheme and remarked that while in comparison with pre-war prices this arrangement had been criticized as unsound, it was to be remembered that one of the principal sources of pre-war supply, namely India, was unlikely to produce exportable surpluses for a long time to come.

5. Concerning the agricultural policies of the other countries participating in OEEC, Sir Stafford felt that they would not go beyond the pre-war position when, he observed, Europe was not a regular net importer of food. Accordingly, he seemed to feel that these policies were not to be regarded as responsible for any difference between the present difficult trading relationships with Europe and the less unsatisfactory trading relationships existing before the war. He noted particularly that in the case of France the plans did not involve much of a change from the pre-war position. Mr. Robertson questioned whether even if present policies were limited to a return to the pre-war state of affairs we should necessarily regard them favourably since the ability of Europe as a whole to avoid net imports of food in that period had been based on Danubian preferences, arrangements aimed at varying degrees of national self-sufficiency, and other uneconomic practices resulting in a smaller volume of trade in agricultural products between Europe and the Western Hemisphere than would have been desirable.

6. The Chancellor and the U.K. officials referred, of course, to the strategic and political importance of developing local sources of food supply where possible and where reasonably economic.

Other Investment Programmes

7. Mr. Robertson recognized that certain proposed investments were necessary to deal with the present problem and could make a contribution to its solution but that apparently other investments were contemplated which would actually aggravate and lengthen the duration of the present difficulties, since they were absorbing resources which might have been available for current export and were themselves not likely to yield any return for many years to come — and even then their justification would appear to assume a continuation of the protection and discrimination of the present. He wondered whether it would not be desirable and feasible, in considering the advisability of capital investments within the sterling area and Europe, to separate short-run from longer-term considerations and not to regard all of the present short-run considerations as applicable to longer-term projects. He mentioned particularly rumours that new aluminium capacity was being contemplated for Borneo. Plowden remarked with reference to this particular project that in his judgment such an expansion of aluminium capacity might be desirable if the diversion of resources to it did not impede current dollar earnings since in the longer-term the demand for aluminium was likely to be great enough to keep all prospective capacity for aluminium production. On the more general question the Chancellor agreed on the desirability of separating short and long term considerations and felt that in most cases this separation was in practice being made.

U.K. Exports to U.S. and Canada

8. Mr. Robertson asked whether any attempt had been made to secure from the U.S. authorities the same cooperation in promoting imports from the U.K. as had been secured from the Canadians. The general answer was that such cooperation had not been secured and was unlikely to be given even if it were sought. Helmore felt particularly keenly that the U.S. Administration (even a Democratic one with its trading tradition) was not prepared to incur the unfriendliness of domestic producers by making a real effort to encourage imports. He referred to the Geneva tariff negotiations in which, in his view, the U.S. representatives had been quite unwilling to make reductions on items of genuine interest to the U.K. He mentioned the case of certain textiles on which the U.S. had agreed to substantial reductions for types not produced in the U.S. and not of the greatest interest to the U.K. but that the U.S. delegation was not prepared to grant concessions in respect of types produced in the U.S. which were of particular interest to U.K. exporters.

9. Both Sir Stafford and Helmore emphasized the potential importance to the U.K. of a change in the U.S. (and in the Canadian) practice regarding the proportions in which natural and synthetic rubbers are mixed in commercial rubber products. They indicated that while no statutory proportion had been established there apparently was an understanding between producers of synthetic rubber and manufacturers of finished products (such as tires) whereby the percentage of synthetic rubber would be kept at something like 25 to 30 percent. They felt that if this practice could be changed, the effect of this change in terms of the import demand (both as to quantity and as to price) for natural rubber from the sterling area would be more substantial than probably any one other action which might be taken to assist the U.K. in earning dollars. They appreciated that for strategic reasons it was desirable to keep synthetic rubber capacity in usable condition and to make improvements in the synthetic product but they felt that these purposes could be accomplished without requiring the commercial use of synthetic rubber on the present scale. On the subject of rubber and other strategic materials the question was asked whether the U.S. efforts to accumulate stock-piles would yield substantial amounts of dollars (after the available part of the five percent of local proceeds from ECA supplies had been exhausted). It was noted that already the U.S. had been reported to have purchased some 30 to 40 thousand tons of sterling area rubber. The Chancellor and Helmore doubted that this source would yield substantial dollar earnings, at least not in comparison with the earnings which would be possible — and which would be recurrent — from the more widespread commercial use of natural rubber in the U.S. and Canada.

Other European Exports to Canada

10. Helmore enquired whether the same efforts were being made to facilitate imports into Canada from other European countries. Both he and the Chancellor felt that something could be accomplished in this direction which would assist in alleviating our present common difficulties.

Encouragement of Tourist Traffic to the U.K., Sterling Area and Europe from the U.S. and Canada

11. In connection with the earlier discussion on the diversion of resources to capital investment Mr. Robertson had suggested that if such resources had to be diverted the diversion most likely to contribute to a solution of the shorter run problem and least likely to involve long-term dislocations might be to the tourist industry either for the improvement of tourist facilities and accommodations within the group of countries or for facilitating ocean transportation. Sir Stafford felt that both they and the European countries (particularly the French) were keenly aware of the desirability of catering to Western Hemisphere tourists. From the subsequent discussion, however (including uncertainty concerning present facilities and the air of novelty evident in their remarks concerning possible future arrangements) it appeared that the possibilities in expanding and facilitating ocean transportation of tourists might not yet have been fully considered. It appeared that no ocean-going passenger vessels are under construction and doubt was expressed that the construction of such vessels could be undertaken in the present state of the shipbuilding and steel industries. There was some suggestion (and apparently at least for those present this was the first occasion on which the possibility had been considered) that suitable passenger vessels might be diverted from the Australasian run or (with the change in immigration policy in South Africa) from the South African run. The advisability of the diversion from Australia seemed questionable in view of the probable unsuitability of the vessels and in view of the fact that these vessels, insofar as they are running on tours, are already earning more dollars than they might yield (either in terms of fares or in terms of subsequent tourist expenditure) on the North Atlantic route. The second possibility — a diversion from South Africa — was not ruled out. From the conversation on the subject it was apparent that the maximum yield from tourism (or even the pre-war yield when present fleets — except for the “Queens” — were larger and were supplemented by Italian and German ships) — and allowing for the continued expensiveness and inadequacy of air travel — is not likely to be realized for some time to come and it appeared questionable that much allowance for improvements in ocean transportation of tourist class passengers was being made in plans for the near future.

Freedom to Devalue Currencies

12. Mr. Robertson enquired whether some of the unsatisfactory aspects of the present and prospective situation might not be attributable in some part to the acceptance by the European countries of the exchange rate rigidity imposed by the Fund articles of agreement. He was not sure to what extent exports could be stimulated and imports reasonably impeded by devaluation but he wondered whether the mere fact that governments were regarding themselves as not free, to vary their exchange rates might not account in some degree for the alacrity with which they seemed willing to employ other devices, such as quantitative import restrictions. The Chancellor and Wilson-Smith doubted that reductions in European exchange rates would yield much result and doubted also that the obligation imposed by the Fund agreement (which was not an inflexible obligation in any case) had conditioned much of the thinking or policy making in all the OEEC countries. Sir Stafford felt that most European countries refrained from devaluation, not because of the Fund commitment, but because of a lack of evidence that imports and exports would be significantly affected and because of the pressure exerted by other countries in the group which might be involved. There was no discussion of a suggestion that a principal deterrent from devaluation is probably the unwillingness of governments to take action deliberately which would entail or imply a reduction in a standard of living. Sir Stafford volunteered the opinion that a really helpful adjustment in exchange rates might be an appreciation of the American dollar.

CANADA-U.K. FINANCIAL RELATIONS; DISCUSSIONS WITH U.K. CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER

18. The Minister of Finance reported that Sir Stafford Cripps, with a small group of U.K. officials, would be visiting Ottawa during the week of September 20th en route to Washington for meetings of the International Bank and the International Monetary Fund. Basic problems in Canada-United Kingdom financial and economic relations might be expected to arise in the course of this visit.

On the one hand the United Kingdom would be interested in ascertaining the government's intentions with regard to further drawings on the balance of the U.K. credit. On the other hand, we would be deeply concerned with the plans of the U.K.

government and other western European countries for the achievement of a viable economy and a stable payments position by 1952 when the present European Recovery Programme was expected to end.

The traditional pattern of triangular trade, with large Canadian sales to western Europe and heavy Canadian purchases in the United States, had been maintained during the war and immediate post-war period. During these years gifts and loans by Canada and the United States, Mutual Aid, Lend Lease and other temporary expedients, and most recently E.R.P., had taken the place of convertible currencies in permitting the continuation of large purchasing programmes in North America. Since the previous autumn, however, because of her own serious balance of payments position, Canada had found it impossible to continue extensive assistance to the United Kingdom and other European countries.

19. Mr. Abbott said that reports indicated that the four year programme being prepared by the United Kingdom (paralleled by those of other European countries) was intended to achieve a substantial reduction of imports from the dollar area by 1952, a diversion of purchases to soft currency areas and a considerable further increase in exports to dollar countries. This programme would be based on the retention of stringent controls over imports and foreign exchange.

As a result of these measures, the United Kingdom hoped to achieve a more or less stable balance of payments position by the end of the E.R.P. period. If the U.K. government's objectives were realized, the results to the Canadian economy would be extremely serious. Canadian exports to the United Kingdom, especially of agricultural products, would be substantially reduced. The traditional pattern of Canadian trade could no longer be maintained without artificial stimulus on a long-term basis. As a consequence Canada would be unable to maintain her normal level of purchases from the United States unless large alternative markets could be developed.

In this situation it was difficult to see what justification could be found for the extension of further credit. On the other hand, over the next three or four years, the maintenance of the Canadian economic position would depend on the continuation of offshore purchasing by the United States under the E.R.P. It was estimated, for example, that an expected U.K. deficit with Canada of some $600 to $700 million in the coming year would be largely met by such offshore purchasing by the United States. It was evident that, in the U.S. view, the continuation of such purchasing would be dependent upon Canadian willingness to assist in E.R.P. by further financial contribution. In this connection it might be necessary for the government to consider the release of a further $60 or $70 millions from the balance of the U.K. credit though no early decision need be taken.

The Canadian reserve position had improved somewhat since the imposition of the programme of restrictions in the autumn of 1947. Exclusive of proceeds of loans, reserves were now some $200 millions better than at December last.

20. Mr. Abbott said that the solution of these problems, both in the short- and long-run, depended upon the economic relations between Canada and the United States. It should be kept in mind that, in relation to any possible reductions in trade barriers between the two countries, the coming Presidential election and the attitude of the new administration would be of outstanding importance. Little benefit was likely to result from an immediate approach to the U.S. government.

These and related matters of material concern would be discussed with Sir Stafford Cripps and his party in Ottawa. It was proposed that, after preliminary meetings with the Minister of Finance and the Acting Prime Minister, the discussions be carried on under the auspices of the Cabinet Committee on External Trade Policy.

21. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted the Minister's report and agreed that discussions with the U.K. party be carried on as suggested under the auspices of the Cabinet Committee on External Trade Policy.

POSSIBLE POINTS FOR DISCUSSION WITH SIR STAFFORD CRIPPS

Officials from Finance, External Affairs, Trade and Commerce, Bank of Canada and the Privy Council Office yesterday discussed the following specific points (as distinct from the general trends and framework) which Sir Stafford Cripps may raise or which, alternatively, the Canadian representatives may wish to raise in the discussions next week.

(1) Canada-U.K. Wheat Contract and Settlement of the "Have Regard To" Clause

Chicago prices are presently running a little over $2.20 so that the $2.00 price to Canada this year will not offer much in the way of adjustment under the "have regard to" clause. The earlier U.K. offer of $2.00 for the last year of the contract was not accepted and was subsequently withdrawn so that the 1949-50 price remains to be negotiated. One possibility that has been considered is to earmark a portion of the outstanding balance of our credit to be used at the end of the contract period for making any adjustments considered necessary. The chief difficulty may be that the United States could take serious objection to this sort of arrangement and refuse to provide U.S. dollars for the offshore purchasing of Canadian wheat, on the ground that in effect the U.K. was being charged a price substantially higher than the world market price; further, the United States, which is extremely anxious to have Canada make a further contribution to European recovery, would scarcely consider that this sort of adjustment was a contribution.

(2) Continuation of U.K. Contracts

Indications are that the United Kingdom will continue to require Canadian wheat but may by 1952 curtail substantially its other food purchases here. The question of further U.K. purchases of wheat has, of course, a bearing on the settlement under the present contract.

If the U.K. market for agricultural products other than wheat is to be a dubious quantity, Canada's immediate interest would lie in a gradual tapering off, which would fit in with our ability to develop alternative markets; we would have a preference as to which things should be cut down first and which things should be carried on and cut down more gradually. Cheese, for example, probably represents a commodity which could and should be dropped now. Alternative markets for cheese can be found and milk products in any case could be diverted into domestic butter production. Bacon and possibly eggs offer greater difficulties.

(3) Newfoundland Fish Exports

The major problem in connection with the Newfoundland fish industry is the fact that a very substantial portion of its output is presently being sold in sterling markets and paid for in sterling, chiefly in Portugal and Greece. Some method of continued marketing must be found if a breakdown in the industry is to be avoided. While the actual details may have to be worked out in the Newfoundland discussions rather than in the talks with Sir Stafford Cripps, it will probably be necessary to get U.K. concurrence. One possibility would be to earmark part of the U.K. credit for fish sales although this might have to cover Maritime and B.C. as well as Newfoundland exports. Alternatively, we could permit the continued sale of Newfoundland fish for sterling, using the sterling so received to pay off the Newfoundland sterling debt which the Canadian government has agreed to assume. The U.K. objection to this might be that they would lose Canadian dollars which they would otherwise receive when Canada took over this debt, although we have never given them any assurance that the assumption of the Newfoundland debt would be on the basis of a direct dollar payment to the United Kingdom.

(4) Token Imports

The United Kingdom has accepted a scheme of token Canadian imports which, although negligible in terms of quantity or in terms of cost, does a great deal to relieve the complaints of Canadian industry. Recent discrimination against Canadian products in another traditional Canadian market, the British West Indies, has led to the suggestion, already forwarded to the U.K., that a similar system of token imports be adopted there. No reply has been received to this suggestion. It was understood that the matter might be raised again when Cripps was in Ottawa.

(5) Canadian Shipping

Difficulties which the Canadian merchant marine was experiencing and the extent to which these might be expected to increase as a result of the requirement that 50% of E.C.A. supplies from the United States should move in U.S. vessels and as a result of the desire of the U.K. and other Western European countries to improve their own comparative shipping position, had been considered several times over recent months. While the E.C.A. problem may not become serious for some time, there are continuing evidences of discrimination on the part of the United Kingdom against Canadian shipping. It has been suggested that it might be necessary to consider attaching some conditions in this regard to any further use of the Canadian credit.

I understand the Chairman of the Canadian Maritime Commission has prepared a brief on the subject.

(6) U.K. Immigrant Capital

U.K. immigrants to Canada have always been under a dollar restriction which has been a handicap in comparison with U.K. immigrants going to other parts of the Commonwealth or to the sterling area. This restriction has become burdensome with the reduction of the amount of capital which they may bring to Canada from £5,000 to £1,000, spread over a four-year period. This in effect means that the U.K. emigrants who are in a position to take capital abroad and the emigrants in whom the most money has been invested in specialized training are lost to Canada and that we get the least valuable class.

It has been suggested that, since we have made an arrangement under which U.K. industries can bring capital to Canada, a similar arrangement would be logical in regard to U.K. immigrants. Under this arrangement the additional capital might be offset against dollars realized in the U.K. on the sale of Canadian securities there, which otherwise would be set off against the interest-free loan. The argument on the other side is that we have already strained this sort of arrangement so far that to use it again would be in effect to open the door wide.

These are some of the points that were discussed. Underlying the whole discussion, of course, was the question of the extent to which, if further credits were allowed, we could earmark those credits in relation, for example, to the "have regard to" clause, livestock contracts, fish exports if necessary, token import schemes or shipping. It was also suggested that, while we might not find it feasible to earmark any further part of the U.K. credit as available for other sections of the sterling area, e.g., Australia and New Zealand, we should in future consider seriously the possibility of dealing directly with individual parts of the sterling area, making direct arrangements with Australia and New Zealand with regard, for example, token import schemes or trade arrangements, rather than treating the sterling area as a whole as hitherto.

It was suggested that future sales of Canadian lumber to the U.K. and price arrangements in this connection might be mentioned in view of reported arrangements being made between the U.K. and U.S.S.R. for U.S.S.R. lumber.

It was suggested that in certain specific fields it might be possible to increase U.K. exports to Canada, relieving both the Canada-U.K. and Canada-U.S. exchange position. For example, U.K. production of Hydro Electric machinery such as generators could be absorbed in substantial quantities by Canada but it was reported that we are compelled to buy instead from the U.S. because of cartel arrangements.

Further, the U.K. expects to realize considerable earnings from oil over the coming years. If part of the oil could be diverted to Canada, it would substantially improve our trade position with the U.K. and lessen our deficit with the U.S. As far as the U.K. is concerned, this might merely be a diversion from one dollar area to another but an attempt might be made to persuade the U.K. that this would be in its interest since it would help to solve difficulties with Canada.

to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

[Ottawa], September 18, 1948

At a meeting attended by members of the Cabinet and the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy held on Friday, September 17th, Mr. Abbott said that he would meet Sir Stafford Cripps on his arrival and have a preliminary discussion with him, and then on Monday morning take him to Mr. St. Laurent's office to arrange in greater detail the method in which the talks would be carried out. It was felt that he would not want to meet with the full Cabinet and that the best solution would be for the discussions to be under the aegis of the Cabinet Committee on External Trade Policy. Discussions on the official level would also take place between those accompanying Sir Stafford and the Canadian officials who were concerned with the matters on the agenda.

Attached hereto is a list of questions† circulated by Mr. Abbott which he thought the Ministers with their advisers would wish to discuss and perhaps arrive at conclusions. However the meeting when it terminated had not progressed beyond the second item and no firm decisions were reached on either of the two subjects which were discussed.

Mr. Abbott explained that he would not wish at this time to circulate any balance of payments forecast and he was especially anxious that the information which he would give out would not be discussed outside that room. He proposed giving only round figures and explaining generally the assumptions on which his calculations had been based. He told us it was anticipated that the trading surplus on current account for the calendar year 1948 would be about $400 million and that it would probably run to the same figure for the calendar year 1949. In making these calculations it was assumed that United Kingdom exports to Canada would reach the level of the forecast which they had made earlier this year that Canadian exports would continue at about the same figure and that the agricultural contracts with the United Kingdom would be abandoned except in the case of wheat.

Referring to our reserves of United States dollars he said that our position had improved since the beginning of the year by about $370 million which includes the loan from the Export/Import Bank. As our reserves at the beginning of 1948 totalled $500 million it meant that they now stood at $870 million which is the minimum figure which can be regarded as a safe reserve in these times.

In the matter of financial assistance to European countries during 1948 he felt that we could take credit for a total of about $316 million composed of:

$150 million under the price differential in our contracts with the United Kingdom. This applies almost entirely to the Wheat contract.

$148 million in credits.

$17½ million post-UNRRA relief.

As to the future he made it clear that what can now be described as a tough fiscal policy will have to be modified and in response to public pressure some relaxation in our Exchange Conservation Programme must be contemplated.

The interest of Mr. Howe was principally to find outlets for Canadian production and he also shared with Mr. Abbott the view that if our present standard of living is not to be affected between $500 million and $600 million United States dollars would have to be spent in Canada under ERP in addition to the United States dollars we will acquire from other sales.

Mr. Gardiner clung tenaciously to the view that the only long term market for his agricultural products is in the United Kingdom. He is not concerned about markets in the next two years because overall shortages will enable him to dispose of most of the commodities which in the past have been going to the United Kingdom under contract but he emphasizes that as agricultural productivity recovers throughout the world and surpluses develop in the United States our only continuing market will be the United Kingdom and it would be permanently prejudicial to withdraw for any reason from that market at this time. He favours, therefore, continuing financial assistance to the United Kingdom but with dollars earmarked for the purchase of bacon, eggs and cheese. He touched on certain agricultural surpluses which we have already encountered, like Flaxseed and apples, and explaining that agricultural production had reached its highest peak in our history predicted that in addition to what we can sell elsewhere during the coming year we will have approximately $150 million worth of agricultural products which we want to dispose of in the United Kingdom. The existing United Kingdom contracts, exclusive of wheat, total about $135 million. He also strongly argued the case of earmarking about $120 million of the unspent portion of the Canada-U.K. loan for settlement under the "have regard to" clause of the Canada-U.K. Wheat Agreement in the event that satisfactory arrangements cannot be made with the United Kingdom Government. He pointed out that the price differential between the contract and world market prices will have to be paid by the Canadian Government to the Canadian farmer and if his proposed earmarking is not accepted it may be that we will end up paying this amount twice, once to the Canadian farmer and once as part of our advances to the United Kingdom Government under the loan.

Mr. St. Laurent took a much broader view of the problem which is facing us and expressed the opinion that up until now we have regarded the United Kingdom primarily as a market in which we hoped our pre-war trade would continue to operate. It may now be necessary, however, to amend that view to a consideration of how, with the resources which we have available, we can best assist the economic recovery of the United Kingdom and Europe. We should perhaps now be regarding those areas not so much as a market but as a buffer between the Iron Curtain and the Western Hemisphere and directing our efforts to making it a self-supporting area.

Certain facts seemed to emerge clearly from the discussion:

(a) Sir Stafford Cripps will undoubtedly argue that the United Kingdom plan is not one which his Government wishes to adopt but is one made necessary by ECA because of the obligation implicit in ERP that each recipient country develop a four-year plan which will enable it to stand on its own feet after 1952. He will say that his Government had already made provisions to reduce expenditures in the dollar areas by some $500 million and now in order to meet the ERP obligation they propose to reduce these expenditures by another $400 million.

(b) The United Kingdom proposes to meet its food requirements by:

(i) Increased production in the United Kingdom. The plan provides for the direction of an additional 100,000 men into agriculture and the expenditure of several millions of dollars in its development

(ii) Reduced consumption in the United Kingdom of agricultural products

(iii) Increased purchases in the sterling area even if at prices in excess of Canadian prices.

(c) The attractiveness of lower Canadian prices will be disregarded in favour of sterling payments. Mr. Howe cited an example of this policy in the cancellation of the signed ten-year contract with Canada to purchase newsprint at $96 a ton and obtain it from Sweden at £45 per ton or almost double the Canadian price.

(d) A loan from Canada tied to agricultural products would not be in the United Kingdom interests because it would reduce on a pro rata scale the amount of ERP dollars which would be available and with which the United Kingdom could elect to purchase commodities which it considers more essential than some of these food items.

(e) The United Kingdom may not seek financial assistance from us because:

(i) The United Kingdom may fear that Canadian financial contribution would affect its allocation of United States dollars.

(ii) Knowing the United States' desire for Canadian participation in ERP the United Kingdom may decide that United States' pressure will achieve the desired result.

(f) Reduced United Kingdom consumption rather than United Kingdom productivity is the important factor because increased productivity over pre-war levels has been remarkable and further expansion would be extremely difficult. This is evidenced by the fact that the United Kingdom programme estimates an increase in 1952 production of only 10% above the 1948 figure. The results of the increased production of not only the United Kingdom but of the Western Hemisphere has made itself felt to such a limited extent because of the abnormal requirements of the United Kingdom caused by war devastation and heavy loss of invisible exports.

(g) Cripps will undoubtedly seek our views on ways in which the programme can be amended to assist us without prejudice to the United Kingdom.

(h) Economic developments between now and 1952 are so unpredictable, even a continuing of ERP is uncertain, that it would not be possible to establish at this time what help will be needed or what assistance we could give after that date.

From a purely Canadian standpoint we can probably reach these conclusions:

(a) That financial assistance in the form of a loan or grant at least to the United Kingdom and possibly to some other European countries must be made by Canada. Even the Minister of Finance has given an indication that this will be done if for no other reason than because of United States pressure.

(b) The form and amount of Canadian assistance should be decided at an early date in order that we may communicate our intentions to ECA who are already giving indications that offshore purchasing in Canada will be restricted if we cannot soon advise that Canada will participate financially in ERP.

(c) A loan to the United Kingdom tied to agricultural products will be neither practicable nor in the overall interests.

(d) Canadian financial assistance even if it means a tightening of belts in Canada can be explained satisfactorily to the Canadian public. In the first instance we justified our credit programme on the basis that by assisting the reconstruction of Europe we were ensuring future outlets for Canadian products. Although such a hope does not seem to be materializing we can now satisfy the Canadian public that it is in their long term interests to make expenditures to rehabilitate and strengthen our Allies in Europe against the growing threat of Communism.

(e) Some barter arrangements can perhaps be worked out with the United Kingdom under which they can pay for Canadian commodities with goods produced in the United Kingdom and which we need in this country. The Canadian Government has never approved this form of trade except in the Argentine newsprint, vegetable oil deal, but Mr. Howe on Friday indicated that Canada would have been interested in the deal which the United Kingdom finalized with the U.S.S.R. of grain for heavy machinery.

(f) A gift of agricultural products to the United Kingdom may be possible with payment to the Canadian farmer being made from our growing budget surplus. Already a Government decision has been made that our $8 million surplus of apples may be disposed of in this way. Politically it would be difficult to justify special treatment for one section of the Canadian economy.

[Ottawa], September 18, 1948

VISIT OF SIR STAFFORD CRIPPS

The meeting of the Cabinet Committee on External Trade Policy which took place on September 17 demonstrated, as was to be expected, the differences of opinion in the Cabinet. It also demonstrated how difficult it will be to keep constantly before the members of the Cabinet the fact that the determination of a Canadian policy which is in the interests of Canada will require the very careful balancing of political, economic, strategic and psychological factors. Some of those present were obviously thinking almost entirely in broad economic terms, such as the future of Canadian trade. Others were thinking in narrow economic terms and were concerned with the protection of a special economic interest in Canada — the agricultural community. Mr. St. Laurent, of course, on a number of occasions drew to the attention of the Committee that the considerations were political and strategic as well as economic.

2. There was also confusion between the problem of Canada's economic and financial relations with the United Kingdom up to 1952 and the problem of our relations from 1952 on, when special E.C.A. assistance comes to an end.

3. In view of all this, I have tried to put down in this memorandum some of the considerations which, it seems to me, would be useful if you could have in mind when you are participating in the discussions in the Cabinet Committee.

4. There is no necessity for argument about the fundamental basis of any decision which is to be reached. All the members of Cabinet are agreed that the policies adopted must be in the national interest of Canada. This is not a question of Canada giving charity, or of the Canadian Government recommending that Canada give assistance to the United Kingdom which it is not willing to give to its own people.

5. The argument mainly used by the Canadian Government in supporting requests for economic aid to Europe since the war has been that this economic aid would help, in the short run, to maintain the flow of Canadian exports, and, in the long run, would create an economy in Western Europe which, under a multilateral system of trading, could purchase Canadian goods. If the thesis put forward in the United Kingdom paper is correct, the second argument has no longer much validity. This does not mean that the aid hitherto given has not been in Canada's national interest; this aid, along with United States aid, has helped to keep Western Europe, including the United Kingdom, from relapsing into chaos. That chaos would have furthered the advance of the Soviet Union in Europe and would have made impossible any hopes that in the future Western Europe could be a substantial market for our goods.

6. If the thesis in the United Kingdom paper is correct, further financial assistance by Canada on any scale which is possible would not by 1952 enable the United Kingdom to resume multilateral trading. The United Kingdom is not intending to resume multilateral trading but is contemplating a substantial reduction in imports from dollar areas, together with a continuation of controls of dollar imports. This does not mean that it is not in Canada's interests to extend further assistance to Western Europe and the United Kingdom. It does, however, mean that the argument for that assistance is now mainly political and strategic rather than economic. In effect, the premise on which our past assistance was given has disappeared, but a new premise has emerged.

7. The Canadian Government has been engaged in a crusade for a North Atlantic Security Pact under which the member nations would pool their resources to resist aggression. The weaker economically that the Western European nations are the less they will be able to contribute to that pool and the more will be required from North America. The weaker economically the Western European countries are the more susceptible they will be to Communist penetration.

8. One reason why we have been engaged in a crusade for the North Atlantic Pact is that we cannot safely continue to live next door to a Western European firetrap. That Western European firetrap is now being rehabilitated with aid from North America into a relatively fire-proof house. By 1952 the erection of that house may, as Mr. Robertson has put it, close off some of our "ancient lights". That, however, does not mean that the rehabilitation of the firetrap is not in our interests.

9. In the kind of world in which we are living, it is impossible that the Canadian Government can adopt any policy with respect to assistance — economic, financial and military — to Western Europe which will not injure some special interest groups in Canada. Indeed, it is impossible that we can adopt any policy which will not injure the Canadian economy as a whole. The fantastically large military expenditures which we would be involved in if Western Europe should collapse would result in a violent fall in the standard of living of Canadians.

10. So far as the proposed United Kingdom policy will really serve to maintain the economic and military strength of the United Kingdom, it is in our interest, since we require a strong ally. The fact, therefore, that a specific United Kingdom proposal may damage Canada economically is not in itself an argument that it is not in the national interest of Canada.

11. It has been suggested that we should virtually force the United Kingdom to continue purchasing Canadian bacon, eggs and cheese, even though the United Kingdom does not consider that it can afford to purchase these goods. If we were to succeed in forcing the United Kingdom to continue to purchase these goods, it will presumably have to cut down on imports of goods which it considers are more essential for its recovery.

12. It seems to me that the discussions from our side should start with a tribute to the extraordinary accomplishments of the United Kingdom since the end of hostilities in building up its productive resources to the point where their volume of exports in 1948 is 145% of the pre-war volume. This has been accomplished in spite of the ravages which the war caused to their industrial machine.

13. Having started on our side with a tribute to the accomplishments of the United Kingdom, we should then, I think, make clear to Sir Stafford Cripps that we do not question his good faith when he says that the United Kingdom does not want to adopt the kind of policy set forth in their paper but that it feels it will be compelled to adopt such a policy. We should make clear, however, from the beginning that, though we accept Sir Stafford Cripps' statement in good faith, this does not mean that we believe that all the specific proposals set forth in the United Kingdom paper are necessary or are in the interests of the United Kingdom.

14. We might then suggest that the most fruitful course to follow would be for us jointly to examine the United Kingdom program in an effort to discover first whether all the assumptions the United Kingdom has made in its paper are sound, and secondly whether there are not changes which the United Kingdom could make in their program which would accomplish their purposes and at the same time not damage Canada as much as would their present proposals. They will undoubtedly be sympathetic to this since they, no more than we, desire that, as the result of their program, Canada's political relations with the United Kingdom will be subjected to a severe strain.

Assumptions in U.K. Paper

15. The United Kingdom has included in its balances for 1952 an annual payment of $190,000,000 on its loans from Canada and the United States. It is not inconceivable that both Canada and the United States might in 1952 agree to waive these payments for a further few years. Such a waiver would be equivalent to a continued annual grant of $190,000,000 from North America to the United Kingdom.

16. The United Kingdom paper appears also to be based on the assumption that there will be no flow after 1952 of private investment to the sterling area from North America. This assumption can be questioned. It is probably unrealistic, for two reasons, to expect that there will be any considerable flow of private North American investment to the United Kingdom and Western Europe. The first is that the North American investor would fear that the plant in which he invested might be destroyed in war. The second is that he probably fears that the trend towards socialism in Western Europe would result in his property being expropriated. These two considerations, however, are not applicable to investments at least in certain colonial and sterling areas, and this flow of investment would help the United Kingdom to maintain its balance of payments position without the extensive kind of discriminatory measures which it now contemplates.

17. A third assumption made in the United Kingdom paper is that E.C.A. aid and accompanying Canadian aid will cease in 1952. This assumption can also be questioned. If, as we hope, we get the North Atlantic Pact next spring, the North American public should, after three years' experience of that pact, realize more clearly than they do today that the Western European countries are our allies and that it is in our interests to support them economically. What may seem politically unrealistic in 1948 may be practical politics in 1952.

18. There also appears to be a fourth assumption which could be questioned. It is that North America will not by 1952 be providing munitions to Western Europe free of charge. North American assistance in the re-armament of the United Kingdom will lessen the need of the United Kingdom for dollars with which to purchase armaments and other materials for its armed forces. It will also make it possible for the United Kingdom (and other Western European countries) to divert men and resources from their armament industries to the production of goods for export to dollar countries. Another military development which might favourably affect the United Kingdom dollar position would be dollar expenditures by United States forces in the United Kingdom and other parts of the sterling area.

Measures Which the United Kingdom and Canada Might Take

19. I am not competent to suggest changes which the United Kingdom might make in its program which would accomplish its purposes but not damage us as much as the present United Kingdom proposals. Mr. Robertson suggested a number of possibilities at his dinner with Sir Stafford Cripps. (See memorandum of September 3.)

20. In addition to exploring these possibilities, it would be possible to explore the possible measures which Canada might take to diminish its need for United States dollars and to provide Canadian dollars for the United Kingdom.

21. One such measure would be the building up in Canada of sources of supply of goods which we now purchase from the United States. Another would be a switch from United States sources of supply to sources of supply in the sterling area and Western Europe. This might be done either by a lowering of the barriers which now exist against imports to Canada from the sterling area and from Western Europe, or, if necessary, by barter deals between Canada and those areas; these steps could only be taken after close examination of our commitments under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Peculiar Canadian Considerations

22. It would seem to me that there is a good deal to be said politically for our considering the problem not as one of aid to the United Kingdom but as one of aid to the sixteen O.E.E.C. countries. The war-time billion dollar "gift" to the United Kingdom caused the Government much more trouble in Quebec than the billions later granted under Mutual Aid. Another analogy is the airlift to Berlin, where it would be politically easier for the Canadian Government to accept a request for assistance that came jointly from the United States, the United Kingdom and France, than one which came only from the United Kingdom.

23. Our goal, of course, must be that any credit we give to the United Kingdom or to O.E.E.C. will add to their total resources, instead of lessening the resources to be given by the United States. It may be impossible for us to accomplish this but we should, I suggest, try. It is everywhere realized that the E.C.A. appropriations are the barest minimum. If we could supplement them by, say, 5%, this would provide an extra margin of safety.

24. It is politically unrealistic for us to proceed on any other assumption than that we are going to contribute further financial assistance to Western Europe. We are under heavy pressure from Washington to contribute; in fact, they are now beginning to subject us to a pretty tight squeeze. It would be better for us to give in quickly with good grace than to give in grudgingly later on. The Lord, and the United States, loveth a cheerful giver. If we give in grudgingly, we will endanger our good relations with the United States. If we give in as quickly as possible, we will not only better our political relations with the United States but we will make it easier for the incoming Republican administration to secure the necessary E.C.A. appropriations from Congress. The task of the new administration is going to be hard, particularly when the American public realizes the kind of economic trading system which the Western European countries are likely to set up in 1952. This they will realize when the sixteen O.E.E.C. countries present to the United States administration and the United States administration presents to Congress the report which O.E.E.C. will draw up of a long term program of the sixteen European countries. This program, which the United States has requested, will presumably be along much the same lines as the draft United Kingdom paper which we have now received. This O.E.E.C. paper is going to shock American opinion.

25. It is also, I think, politically unrealistic for us to think that we can get by with financial assistance to the United Kingdom which will be merely assistance on paper and which will not result in any real costs to the Canadian people. The United States administration and public will demand something more of us, for example, than a paper grant of a credit of, say, $100,000,000 to the United Kingdom which they will immediately use to discharge their "in regard to" obligations under the Wheat Agreement.

26. The United States administration and public will also look skeptically at a grant of credit by Canada which is hedged about with conditions under which the United Kingdom will not be able to purchase in Canada the goods which it needs but the goods which we want to get rid of.

27. One point which I think should be made clear to Sir Stafford Cripps is that we are very apprehensive, as he must be, about the effect on American public opinion when the news gets around that the goal of the United Kingdom and the other Western European countries in 1952 will be a closed economic system. We are ourselves worried about the effect on Canadian public opinion. United States opinion may react even more strongly than Canadian opinion. There may indeed be an outburst in the United States and the United States reaction will itself have an influence on Canadian opinion, thus making it more difficult for the Canadian Government to give financial assistance to Western Europe. Unless the matter is handled with extraordinary skill on all sides, there may be a mounting demand in the United States that Congress refuse to pass further E.C.A. appropriations. If, however, the matter is handled with the necessary skill, the effect of the shock on American opinion might be beneficial instead of the reverse. The American administration, Congress and the American public might realize that what is needed is not the negative act of stopping E.C.A. appropriations but the positive act of re-examining the nature, extent, duration, conditions and goals of the economic assistance which the United States is giving to Western Europe.

28. One specific Canadian aspect of the whole problem of the discussions with Sir Stafford Cripps must cause us grave concern. It seems to me from the discussions at the Cabinet Committee on September 17 that there is serious danger that the issues which are now up for discussion will be distorted into a simple choice for Canada between (a) complete alliance with the United States economy and separation from the United Kingdom economy, and (b) the maintenance of our traditional markets in the United Kingdom. This is a simple but a false way of putting the issue. I am convinced that it is possible for us, given good will, intelligence and creative imagination, to work out some middle course. We will not be able, however, to work out such a middle course if we either accept too readily all the projections, assumptions and conclusions of the United Kingdom paper or if, out of inertia and political cowardice, we refuse to accept the necessity of some readjustments in the Canadian economy.

29. I doubt whether we can intelligently examine the possibility of a middle way until Sir Stafford Cripps has presented to us the United Kingdom yearly programs for 1949, 1950 and 1951.

30. Though it is misleading and dangerous to think of the issues now before us in the simple terms of a choice between our allying ourselves completely with the United States economy and maintaining our traditional markets in the United Kingdom, there is, I think, one very simple and profound issue before us. It is that if the Western European countries are compelled to adopt the kind of policy forecast in the United Kingdom memorandum, there will be a conflict between the trend which is now setting in towards the political and military unification of the North Atlantic countries and the trend towards the division of the North Atlantic countries into two groups economically — the North American group and the Western European group, with the European group building up a closed economic system. Clearly, in the long run it would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, for a North Atlantic community to develop if it is split economically. There seems to be little hope for a continuance of civilized life unless a strong and united North Atlantic community develops over the next decade. It is therefore in the national interest of Canada to do everything we can to diminish the possibility that economic developments in the North Atlantic countries may in the long run make impossible the success of those political and military developments which are today the main goal of Canadian foreign policy.

UNITED KINGDOM-CANADA FINANCIAL AND TRADE RELATIONS

1. The Chancellor of the Exchequer presented the draft U.K. long-term economic programme to be submitted to the European Economic Co-operation Committee, and described the position, particularly in the matter of external trade and balance of payments, which the U.K. government hoped to achieve by 1952.

(U.K. Cabinet Memorandum, The Long-Term Programme, September 6, 1948).†

2. The Minister of Finance pointed out that, since the conclusion of the war, Canada had made a substantial investment in the economy of the United Kingdom through credits and other direct assistance. Special efforts had also been made to assist the expansion of U.K. exports to Canada. These policies had been directly related to Canada's interest in maintaining a substantial market in Britain for Canadian primary products and raw materials. It was hoped that this considerable investment would not prove fruitless and that, in the years ahead, traditional U.K. purchasing programmes in Canada would not be unduly curtailed or subjected to sudden and severe changes.

Further details of the U.K. annual programmes of imports from Canada between 1948 and 1952, — that is, of the methods by which the U.K. government expected to achieve the position forecast for 1952, would be helpful as would some indication of the nature of imports from Canada after that period.

The prospects for Canadian sales in U.K. markets after 1952 appeared dubious in view of the planned curtailments of purchases in the dollar area. It would be regrettable if the United Kingdom should embark on a programme which involved continued and substantial purchases of primary products and raw materials in other and more costly markets.

3. Sir Stafford Cripps emphasized that the objective of the U.K. government's programme was to achieve by 1952 a position of self-reliance, particularly as regards dollar supply, purchases and payments. This objective, shared by the other countries participating in E.R.P., could only be attained by substantially increased productivity which would enable western Europe to compete with and trade freely with the dollar area.

There were two stages in the process of recovery, during the first of which, the period up to 1952, deliberate steps required to be taken to achieve a viable economy and a stabilized balance of payments. After 1952 it was hoped that drastic restrictive policies would no longer be necessary and that there could be a gradual return to multilateralism.

If, during this first stage, U.K. purchases of certain Canadian products had to be curtailed, it should be kept in mind that the objective was an overall expansion in world trade which should provide a general increase in Canada's external markets even though certain transfers in direction might be involved. It would continue to be the desire and policy of the United Kingdom to concentrate as much purchasing in Canada as the U.S. dollar position would permit.

4. The Minister of Trade and Commerce referred to certain specific problems of concern to the Canadian government.

In the hope that, eventually, a return to freer multilateral trade would be possible, the government was anxious to maintain the Canadian position in traditional markets. Already a token import scheme for Canadian goods in Britain had been accepted by the U.K. government. This was proving very helpful. Similar measures for the British West Indies, long a Canadian market, and possibly other parts of the sterling area might be considered.

The U.K. government had recently embarked upon certain bilateral arrangements with other countries which involved, in effect, direct exchanges of goods. In some cases the goods received by the United Kingdom in such deals were of a type and kind which might have been provided by Canada, while the goods shipped by the United Kingdom could have been sold in this country.

5. The Committee, after further discussion, adjourned at 12.45 p.m.

The meeting was resumed at 3.00 p.m.

6. Sir Stafford Cripps submitted a detailed statement of expected U.K. imports from Canada in 1948-49, 1949-50, and 1952-53 (July 1 to June 30 in each case), together with an estimate of the balance of payments in those years between Canada and the United Kingdom and sterling area.†

Imports from Canada to the United Kingdom were expected to decline from $727 million in 1948-49 to $689 million in 1949-50 and $661 million in 1952-53, a decrease of some $66 million over the period.

7. Mr. Abbott remarked that apparently the most significant changes in the United Kingdom programme were the decreased purchases of agricultural products, notably bacon and eggs. These indicated a reduction from $427 millions during the present year to $367 millions next year and to $325 millions in 1952-53. Purchases of raw materials would rise from $282 millions to $303 millions next year and to $310 millions in 1952-53. The sharpest decrease would take place during 1949-50 when purchases of eggs would be reduced from $36 millions to zero and bacon from $73 millions to $40 millions.

The table also contemplated an increase in U.K. exports and re-exports to Canada from $310 millions in 1948-49 to $332 millions in 1949-50 and $365 millions in 1952-53; and a decrease in the net deficit for the rest of the sterling area over the same period.

8. Sir Stafford Cripps pointed out that, taking into account invisible payments and receipts, the total deficit with Canada was estimated at $542 millions during the present year, $456 millions during 1949-50 and $389 millions in 1952-53. All estimates of course were based upon 1948 prices.

It was hoped to be able to cover the estimated deficit with Canada in 1952-53 by dollars earned in other quarters. Should this not prove possible or should the United States refuse to permit the United Kingdom to use an expected dollar surplus with the United States to help cover its deficit with Canada, then the U.K. programme would have to be readjusted and substantial further reductions in Canadian purchases would have to be contemplated. Tentatively, it was estimated that, in this event, an additional $100 million would have to come off imports from Canada (down to $560 millions). This would mean the elimination of all livestock and dairy products and the reduction of wheat purchases while maintaining the level of raw material buying at about the present level.

9. The Acting Prime Minister observed that the U.K. government's programme appeared to involve the establishment of a large preferential grouping in western Europe; trade between that area and other parts of the world would be carefully controlled, restricted and in fact discouraged. Developments along this line offered little prospect for Canadian external trade unless it could be diverted to completely new fields other than the traditional western European markets. The programme proposed for western Europe would have an even more severe effect upon U.S. exports and the United States reaction might well be both strong and unfavourable.

10. The Minister of Agriculture pointed out that, to meet the wartime requirements of the United Kingdom, Canadian agriculture had embarked upon substantial programmes of expansion, particularly in bacon and eggs. If the U.K. market for these products was now to be lost, it would be a severe blow to Canadian agriculture.

11. It was agreed, after further discussion, that, before the next meeting, the detailed estimates of the Canada-United Kingdom balance of payments should be examined by Canadian and U.K. officials.

At this point, Sir Stafford Cripps and the U.K. officials left the meeting.

12. The Governor of the Bank of Canada pointed out that the U.K. programme as presented by the Chancellor was less serious in its long-term implications for Canada than might have been anticipated from earlier reports. So long as the United Kingdom was in a position to earn and use dollar earnings from other sources to cover its deficit with Canada after the cessation of E.R.P. aid, it seemed that a substantial level of Canadian exports of primary products to the United Kingdom could be maintained. The heaviest blow in U.K. reductions of imports both in the short and long-run would fall on the United States.

On the other hand, the U.K. programme, despite the apparent attempt to offer reasonable treatment to Canada, would place this country in a vulnerable position. Changes in circumstances, particularly the possibility that the United Kingdom (as a result of U.S. opposition) would be unable to use an estimated surplus of U.S. dollars to cover her deficit in trade with Canada, could have chaotic results for the Canadian economy. It was extremely important to urge the desirability of further attempts on the part of the United Kingdom to increase her exports to this country.

13. The Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs suggested that, while certain features of the U.K. programme did leave Canada in a vulnerable position, it was equally true that other circumstances could develop which would ease the Canadian position. For example, arrangements covering a continued flow of strategic and military materials to western Europe, supported by the United States, increased private U.S. and Canadian capital investment in the sterling area, or a change in favour of the United Kingdom in the present terms of trade might increase the U.K.'s capacity to purchase in the Canadian market.

14. Mr. Howe referred in this connection to the desirability of persuading the United Kingdom to make available even small quantities of steel for export to Canada.

15. The Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce said that, while the United Kingdom appeared to contemplate the maintenance of a substantial level of imports from Canada, it was also part of their programme that Canada's deficit with the rest of the sterling area would be substantially reduced, presumably in large measure by a decrease in Canadian exports to other sterling countries. Even allowing for the fact that a decrease, particularly in trade with South Africa, might be inevitable, this prospect raised serious problems.

16. Mr. St. Laurent observed that the U.K. programme involved by 1952 a net decrease in Canadian imports of $66 millions; in bacon and eggs, the decrease would amount to $89 millions. Such a severe cut would undoubtedly have a serious effect upon our economy and should be avoided if possible. If it were necessary to accept it, some programme on a large scale for development of Canadian resources should be explored as an offset.

17. The Committee, after further discussion, adjourned at 6.30 p.m. and re-assembled at 3.00 p.m. on September 22nd.

18. Mr. Deutsch reported that the U.K. statement on its Canadian import programme for 1948-49 and the balance of payments with Canada during that period had been examined jointly with U.K. officials. The overall result did not differ substantially from Canadian estimates.

Expected imports of bacon and eggs were based on maintenance of the present level of supply to June 30, 1949 (though the present contracts would expire at the turn of the year). U.K. estimates for purchases of cheese were slightly high in relation to current and prospective rates of delivery.

Estimates of other imports appeared reasonable for 1948-49 but perhaps rather high thereafter in base metals. The figure given for paper and board was larger than our expectations, while the figure for machinery and manufactures involved a decrease from about $19 millions to $11 millions.

The U.K. estimate of exports to Canada during 1948-49, $310 millions, was reasonable since the rate had expanded and the total was expected to reach $280 millions during the calendar year 1948.

No detail was available as to the deficit on capital transactions estimated by the United Kingdom at $13 millions annually. Probably continued U.K. capital investment in Canada was involved.

19. Mr. Reid reported upon meetings held earlier in the day between Canadian and U.K. officials and subsequent consideration of the result by the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy.

Under the U.K. programme as presented, Canada would continue to receive reasonably good treatment in the U.K. market up to June 30th, 1949. The fulfilment of this programme was based on the assumption, on the part of the United Kingdom, that drawings on the Canadian credit at a rate of $10 millions a month would be resumed on January 1st. U.K. officials expected certain conditions to be attached to the renewal of such drawings but no discussion had taken place on this subject.

U.K. officials had pointed out that the proposed method of financing their deficit with Canada in 1952 and, therefore, the extent of their import programme from Canada might have to be reconsidered in the light of the U.S. government's views. But the United Kingdom were proceeding on the assumption that, if the next Congressional appropriation for E.C.A. was forthcoming, there would be little difficulty with regard to subsequent appropriations. Nevertheless, it should again be emphasized that the U.K. programme was based on certain assumptions that might not be realized. If they were not, the United Kingdom would be forced to curtail sharply its intended programme of imports from Canada.

Canadian officials had urged upon the United Kingdom the desirability of taking further steps to increase their planned level of exports to Canada. It had been agreed that arrangements should be made for continuing discussions on this subject.

Canadian representatives had also made it clear to U.K. officials that, in their view, certain features of their draft programme were not in the best interests of the United Kingdom itself. They involved the development, in a separate compartment, of an artificial high-cost economy which by its very nature limited both the possibility of imports from other countries and the fullest flow of exports to other countries.

Canadian officials had also suggested that the United Kingdom could make better use of its techniques for direction of exports in order to increase its exports to Canada and the dollar area. These included moral suasion, export permits, allocation of raw materials and financial controls.

Canadian officials had drawn attention to the very serious effect on Canada of certain phases of the U.K. programme after June 30th, 1949. Imports of Canadian eggs would disappear and imports of Canadian bacon would be cut heavily. No allowance had been made for settlement of the "having-regard-to" clause in the wheat contract. Apart from a small "basket" item, no allowance had been made for possible purchase of other Canadian foodstuffs which might be in surplus supply, such as fish, apples and flaxseed. The heavy drop in Canadian exports to the rest of the sterling area could also involve serious consequences.

Some consideration had been given to the nature of continuing arrangements for U.K. purchases of Canadian food. While it was clear that the U.K. Ministry of Food contemplated further contracts, no details had been available on this subject. It would appear that from the Canadian point of view contracts for small quantities at fixed prices would not be desirable, though agreements for minimum quantities at market prices might be acceptable.

The attention of the U.K. officials had been drawn to the fact that proposed U.K. agricultural policies implied in their programme would not be in the best interest of either Canada or the United Kingdom. The reply had been that the U.K. officials present were not competent to discuss this matter.

It appeared that the U.K. representatives hoped not only to obtain Canadian consent for renewed drawings upon the credit but some expression of approval or acceptance of their draft programme. In the view of the Interdepartmental Committee, it would be undesirable for Canada to give any such approval; in fact, the vulnerable position of Canada under the U.K. programme emphasized the importance of seeking some method by which further drawings on the credit could be related to the achievement of higher U.K. export objectives to this country.

This situation would be an argument against any commitment regarding drawings on the credit after June 30th, 1949. Canada could not easily make promises as to that period until the economic position at that time could be more clearly foreseen. It would be necessary, as well, to have some knowledge of the success of the United Kingdom in reaching its export objectives and the attitude of the United States in regard to continuation of E.R.P. aid and offshore purchasing in Canada. Such an attitude on our part would also leave room for further discussion of unsatisfactory phases of the U.K. import programme from Canada for 1949-50.

Meanwhile, it was proposed that further discussions at the official level would take place. These would cover the possibility of increasing U.K. and sterling area exports to Canada including the difficulties created by U.K. preemptive buying, the extension of the token import scheme, U.K. food purchases and shipping matters.

20. Mr. Abbott suggested that it would be undesirable to make any commitment now regarding drawings on the credit after June 30th, 1949. However, in view of the relatively satisfactory nature of the U.K. import programme up to that date, and in view of the U.S. attitude, the government would have to give serious consideration to allowing drawings upon the credit for the six months beginning January 1st next, at a rate of $10 millions monthly. The position could be reviewed prior to June 30th in the light of developments.

It should be clearly understood that the United Kingdom would use its best efforts both to purchase the proposed total value of commodities from Canada and at least to reach its export target of $310 millions.

At 4.00 p.m. Sir Stafford Cripps and the U.K. officials re-entered the meeting.

21. Mr. St. Laurent said that Canada could not be enthusiastic about the apparent goal of the U.K. programme, the development of a closed area within which internal commercial relations would be deliberately stimulated and from which the trade of other parts of the world would be excluded or placed under heavy handicaps. The Canadian government was not in a position to propose any different course for the return of western Europe to economic stability or to decide whether the proposed course was the only one by which recovery could be achieved. Nevertheless this pattern of development emphasized the great vulnerability of the Canadian economy, particularly in the period after 1952.

The importance of its external trade made Canada anxious to maintain its position, even with reduced volume, in all its traditional markets in the hope of an eventual freeing of present restrictions on international trade. It was very much hoped that some extension of the token import scheme to other parts of the sterling area might be considered.

Further, the difficulties in the U.K. programme of food imports for 1949-50 placed Canada in considerable difficulty since at a very early date Canadian producers must be given some public indication of market expectations for the calendar year 1949.

22. Mr. Gardiner stated that the cessation of egg purchases by the United Kingdom on June 30th would have a disruptive effect upon a small specialized agricultural industry which in part had been built up by war veterans. Similarly, the severe cut in bacon purchases on that date would create a difficult problem. Canadian agricultural producers had been encouraged to build up production of these commodities during the war in order to assist the United Kingdom. They now found U.K. purchasers proposing withdrawal from the Canadian market. This must have its effect upon Canadian opinion in any future emergency which involved demands for increased Canadian agricultural production to assist the United Kingdom and western Europe.

23. Sir Stafford Cripps said that the United Kingdom was embarking with reluctance upon the programme under discussion. The long-term estimates represented honest guesses rather than elements in a hard and fast programme; aspects of the programme capable of adjustment might be found as a result of further examination of it in detail. For this purpose, a joint U.K.-Canada committee might be set up on our trade and financial relations.

The question of increased colonial markets for Canadian goods, on a "token" basis or otherwise, would also merit further detailed examination. As regards food purchases, however, any suggestion that U.K. purchases of Canadian cheese be ended and replaced by increased purchases of bacon and eggs would impair the U.K. dollar position since cheese would then have to be purchased in the U.S. market instead.

24. Mr. St. Laurent again pointed out that the maintenance of a healthy Canadian economy was of importance to the United Kingdom. The U.K. policy of returning to pre-war sources of agricultural supply outside Canada would not contribute to this end. The trend evident in the U.K. programme would have to be given thorough consideration by Canadian authorities in an effort to reduce the degree of vulnerability to which Canada was subject. The Canadian agricultural population would feel deeply the fact that, regardless of their wartime efforts, they had not been able to maintain the position which they had expected in the U.K. postwar market.

25. Sir Stafford Cripps observed that the U.K. programme was based on the assumption of renewed drawings upon the Canadian credit. The rate and extent of these drawings might have some effect upon the nature and extent of U.K. purchase in Canada.

26. Mr. St. Laurent remarked that Canada's capacity to permit further drawings on the credit depended on the policy of the U.S. government in the matter of aid to western Europe and their continued offshore purchasing in Canada. It would be difficult to reach any final decision on this subject until Canada had some clearer idea of U.S. intentions.

27. The Committee, after further discussion, adjourned, pending further discussions between Canadian and U.K. officials.

28. The Committee met again the following day, September 23rd, at 3.00 p.m., with the Canadian officials.

29. Mr. Mackenzie reported that further discussions had taken place with U.K. officials on a number of problems — increased U.K. exports to Canada, increased Canadian purchasing in the rest of the sterling area, difficulties created by U.K. pre-emptive buying and possible extension of the token import scheme (possibly in the first instance only to the British West Indies).

The results had been encouraging, though further discussion would be necessary before any definite agreements could be reached. For example, the U.K. representatives were optimistic regarding a substantial increase in anthracite exports to Canada and would give serious consideration to a small flow of steel exports.

30. Mr. Taggart reported that further discussions with U.K. officials on food supplies had made it evident that Canadian funds to the extent of, say, $20 to $30 millions additional for 1949-50 would be required to provide the increase in U.K. purchases during the period, July 1st to December 31st, 1949, sufficient to maintain a constant flow of Canadian food products at the 1948-49 level until the end of the calendar year 1949. This additional amount would include eggs and bacon at current volume.

Should the U.K. not find it possible to make available or obtain dollars to cover these additional purchases, the Canadian government would be confronted with a difficult choice. The current food contracts might be allowed to expire and the U.S. market opened to Canadian producers of hogs and eggs, leaving the U.K. to purchase at market prices in Canada without any fixed agreement. Alternatively, some agreement with regard to fixed quantities but without fixed prices could be suggested to the United Kingdom.

31. Mr. Gardiner pointed out that in order to achieve the level required by the U.K. programme during the first six months of the year, agricultural producers would have to plan in the near future their annual production for the whole of 1949. Farm programmes could not be planned on any other basis and purchase arrangements had to be related to the calendar year. Furthermore, the farmers would have to be given their production targets in December.

The United Kingdom should establish an overall figure for purchases of all Canadian farm produce, other than wheat, leaving detailed arrangements for quantities of individual foodstuffs within that amount to be worked out by subsequent agreement between the food authorities in each country.

32. Mr. Moran reported that the Chairman of the Canadian Maritime Commission had brought to the attention of U.K. officials certain problems of Canadian merchant shipping in relation to overseas shipments. One consideration raised was the importance of a continuing flow of cargoes for Canadian vessels in relation to the strategic importance of maintaining a reasonable Canadian merchant marine.

33. The Deputy Minister of Finance reported that there had been discussion with U.K. officials concerning drawings on the Canadian credit.

The U.K. officials had been anxious to obtain some firm commitment stating that they were counting on $120 millions from Canada during 1949-50, as well as $60 millions during the first half of 1949.

The United Kingdom hoped to obtain $920 millions from E.R.P. during 1949-50. There would be serious effects upon the U.K. import programme (and consequently for Canada) if this figure for E.R.P. aid were to be forthcoming.

34. Mr. Gardiner said that, if no acceptable arrangements could be reached covering U.K. food purchases for the whole of 1949 it would probably be necessary to open the U.S. market for Canadian hogs and eggs leaving the British to buy in the open market up to an agreed quantity. This course would allow Canadian production objectives to be forecast.

35. The Secretary of State for External Affairs suggested that it could be made clear to the United Kingdom that, in view of their proposals respecting food purchases after June 30th, 1949, any decisions to permit further drawings on the credit after that time would have to be related directly to purchase by the United Kingdom of any agricultural surplus available at and after that date, including particularly bacon and eggs.

36. Mr. Howe felt that U.K. estimates of purchases of other Canadian commodities, notably raw materials, in 1949-50 and thereafter were unduly optimistic; this being so the U.K. programme left room for substantial internal adjustment. It was unlikely that the expected quantities of raw materials could be made available; in this event the United Kingdom might be able to find dollars for additional foodstuffs.

37. Mr. St. Laurent said that any final decision respecting further drawings on the credit would have to be taken by the government as a whole. Further, the decision in this respect for the first six months of 1949 must depend on United States' intentions concerning the continuance of offshore purchases in Canada. What might be done after July 1st, 1949, must, in turn, depend as well on the action of the next U.S. Congress in relation to the continuation of E.R.P.

In the present situation, however, it might be reasonable for U.K. authorities, in their calculations, to include that their ability to draw on the Canadian credit during the first half of 1949 to the extent of $60 million was a reasonable assumption in all the circumstances.

Certainly any extension of credit beyond June 30th should be related in some fashion to arrangements for disposition satisfactorily of surplus Canadian foodstuffs developed primarily for U.K. use.

At 4.30 p.m. Sir Stafford Cripps and the U.K. party re-entered the meeting.

38. Mr. St. Laurent stated that, in spite of further serious and careful consideration, the Canadian authorities continued to find it difficult to adjust their thinking to certain tendencies inherent in the draft programme which the U.K. representatives had put forward. The Canadian attitude was based on a sincere desire to see the maximum progress at all times in reducing the restrictions which prevented free access to world markets and in eliminating closed and exclusive areas of trade.

As regards the U.K. programme of agricultural purchases during 1949-50, the abrupt reduction in imports from Canada in the middle of 1949 was not feasible in relation to necessary plans for agricultural production. It would be understood that agricultural programmes must provide for a stable rate of production throughout the calendar year. This aspect of our trading relations would have to be given further earnest consideration by both sides and it was to be hoped that some adjustments could be made which would enable Canadian producers to plan relatively constant programmes over the production year. It would not be acceptable to maintain a high rate for production for the first six months of 1949 without any assurance of markets for the second half of the year.

The matter of further drawings on the Canadian credit would have to be referred for decision to the government. It might be expected, however, that the views of the Committee would carry considerable weight and the members of the Committee realized that, if assistance were to be provided for the recovery of western Europe, it would be reasonable to expect that Canada, as a direct and indirect beneficiary, should play her part. The nature and degree of Canadian assistance must depend on U.S. purchasing policies and the means by which the necessary U.S. dollars were made available. Given reasonable arrangements with the United States, it was probable that the Canadian government could make available to the United Kingdom $10 millions a month for the first six months of 1949.

For the period after that date, it was to be hoped that the E.R.P. appropriation would be renewed and that the present U.S. policy of offshore purchasing would be continued. Obviously no decision could be reached by the Canadian government regarding credits after June 30th until the decisions of the United States in these respects were known. It might not be unreasonable, however, for U.K. authorities, in making their own plans, to proceed on the assumption that, if present U.S. policies of assistance to western Europe continued satisfactorily and in adequate measure, Canada would do what a reasonable nation should do in the circumstances. Any decision in this respect would of course be subject to the understanding that further discussions would take place on the actual U.K. import programme, particularly as regards foodstuffs which were wanted in Britain, the production of which had been developed for the U.K. market and for which no alternative market was available.

39. Sir Stafford Cripps expressed thanks for the attitude taken by Mr. St. Laurent and the Canadian Ministers with regard to further drawings on the Canadian credit. It was helpful to know that the Canadian authorities were disposed to take a favourable view with regard to the first six months of 1949. The difficulty of making any commitment beyond June 30th was fully realized. It was to be hoped, however, that Canada would not object if U.K. authorities included in their own calculations the sum of $10 million a month from Canada during 1949-50 as a reasonable expectation.

40. Mr. St. Laurent said that such an expectation would be as reasonable as the assumption that E.R.P. would continue at a steady rate and would provide enough dollars to make it feasible for Canada to extend further credit to the United Kingdom.

The Canadian representatives on their side would hope that the U.K. programme for the period after June 30th would not be taken to represent a rigid schedule on specific items but rather an overall target within which considerable adjustment might be made on a mutually advantageous and agreed basis.

41. Sir Stafford Cripps, expressing agreement with the attitude described by Mr. St. Laurent, said that the selection of June 30th for reducing certain agriculture purchases had been made as a result of previous indications from Canada that arrangements for food purchases should be from mid-year to mid-year rather than on a calendar year basis. If, however, the calendar year was preferable, there was no reason why requirements could not be adjusted to the calendar year. For example, the amounts estimated for the first half of 1949 and the last half of 1949 in the U.K. programmes for 1948-49 and 1949-50, could be treated as a unit and perhaps spaced differently so as to be related to production over the calendar year. Further discussions on these matters directly between the Canadian Department of Agriculture and the U.K. Ministry of Food might well be the next step in dealing with this problem.

It was hoped that favourable consideration had been given to the idea of a joint continuing committee which would, within the limits of the policies determined by the two governments, keep under constant review the elements of the trade and financial relations between the two countries. In the past, consideration of these matters had usually taken place only when a serious situation arose; more regular consultation through such a body might have prevented some of these former difficulties.

42. Sir Stafford Cripps again emphasized that, both for reasons of friendship and economic self interest, the U.K. government had no desire to embark on a course that would result in the exclusion of Canada from British markets. Any features in the present programme that appeared temporarily to interfere with Canada's exports should be regarded as short-term emergency measures which would disappear gradually as general economic conditions permitted.

43. Mr. St. Laurent agreed that a joint committee for review and discussion of trade, financial, and general economic relations would be desirable and raised certain questions regarding organization and membership.

With respect to any U.K. assumptions concerning drawings on the Canadian credit after July 1st, 1949, for purposes of report to the O.E.E.C., it was assumed that any reference made by U.K. authorities would be in general terms and without particularization.

44. The Committee, after further discussion, agreed that the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the U.K. High Commissioner be charged with the responsibility of preparing a draft press announcement (for approval of the Acting Prime Minister and the Chancellor of the Exchequer) on the present discussions; reference to be made therein to the proposed establishment of joint machinery for continuing consultation.

Ottawa, September 24, 1948

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Following personal for the Prime Minister from Heeney, Begins: The meetings with Sir Stafford Cripps and his advisers which have occupied almost the whole of the last four days concluded last evening. On the whole I think it can be said that they have been as satisfactory as possible in the difficult circumstances.

2. On the Canadian side the discussions with the Chancellor have been conducted by Mr. St. Laurent and the other Ministers who make up the Cabinet Committee on External Trade Policy. Mr. Abbott, Mr. Howe and Mr. Gardiner have of course been those most directly concerned. Meetings between Canadian and United Kingdom officials have also taken place and there have been several joint meetings, the last of which was held last night when a communiqué was agreed upon along the lines indicated in the immediately following paragraph.

3. The subject of discussion in general was the economic and financial relations between the two countries including particularly a review of ERP and its probable effects upon the trade of the United Kingdom and Canada. The difficult problem of the balance of payments was examined and consideration given to ways and means by which the gap could be reduced to manageable proportions. The U.K. government will do everything possible to increase exports to Canada above current figures. At the same time it is recognized that the recent pattern of British imports into Canada will have to be adjusted somewhat. Both sides will do everything possible to prevent dislocations in trade between the United Kingdom and Canada. Both sides believe that trade between the two countries in the future will be at a high level and that raw materials and foods from Canada are an important element in the rehabilitation of the U.K. economy. It is agreed to recommend to both governments that a continuing joint committee representative of the two countries will meet regularly in Ottawa and London. The object of this committee will be a review of progress and continuing consultation upon import and export programmes. It is expected that recommendations will be made to the two governments from time to time as a result of such meetings and it was pointed out that the exist-tence of the committee should assist in the fullest exchange of information of mutual interest on economic and trade matters.

4. This morning the final text of the statement referred to above has been settled by Mr. St. Laurent and Sir Stafford Cripps and it is to be released later today in Ottawa and London.

5. The joint committee referred to will be somewhat on the model of the many similar joint bodies set up by the Canadian and U.S. governments over recent years such as the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. It will of course have no executive authority of any kind and its primary purpose will be to ensure continuing consultation and prevent so far as possible spasmodic treatment of these questions. It is as yet undecided what type and level of membership will be appropriate. This is a matter for subsequent consideration by the two governments.

6. The figures presented by Sir Stafford for U.K. purchases in Canada during 1948 are much better in total than was anticipated. The central difficulty of course is the extent and nature of their agricultural imports from this country and this matter is not yet resolved. From June 30th next their plans call for the elimination of egg purchases and sharp reductions in bacon. These matters will be the subject of further discussions.

7. I shall be sending you later by bag a full report of the meetings. Meantime I am anxious to get this message off to you at once. Ends.

UNITED KINGDOM-CANADA JOINT COMMITTEE ON TRADE

18. The Minister of Finance, referring to discussion at the meeting of September 25th, reported that he had had further informal discussions in Washington with Sir Stafford Cripps regarding the proposed United Kingdom-Canada Joint Committee referred to in the joint communiqué issued at the conclusion of the discussions in Ottawa.

19. Mr. Abbott read a draft of the proposed communiqué to be issued in Ottawa, announcing the composition of the Committee as follows:

Canadian members —

- The High Commissioner in the United Kingdom,
- The Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce,
- The Deputy Minister of Agriculture and
- The Director of Economic Relations, Department of Finance.

U.K. members —

- The High Commissioner in Canada and

Three senior U.K. officials to be nominated.

The purpose of the Committee would be to ensure maximum trade between the two countries.

(Draft communiqué, Oct. 6, 1948).†

20. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said that it should be understood that, when a High Commissioner did not find it possible to attend a meeting of the Committee, he would be represented by an alternate.

21. The Cabinet, after discussion approved the draft announcement as submitted for communication to the U.K. government and joint release at a time to be agreed, noting with approval the suggestion of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

[London], November 2, 1948

I am anxious to get settled as quickly as possible procedure for forthcoming discussions about 1949 wheat price and other United Kingdom purchases of food from Canada in 1949. It is of course essential that talks should cover not only problems of supply and price but also availability of finance to meet any particular programme. You will, I am sure, agree that talks on products without regard to ways and means of payment would be largely meaningless and could only embarrass both Governments. I trust therefore that you and your colleagues will agree that representation on both sides must be settled on the basis that the discussions will cover finance as well as food. My own preference is for talks in London at an early date between senior officials in advance of any Ministerial meetings that may be necessary, and I hope that this will be acceptable to Canadian Ministers.

Dear Mr. Reid,

TRADE NEGOTIATIONS WITH RUSSIA

With reference to Commonwealth Relations Office telegram No. H 388 of the 15th September, I have now heard from London that these negotiations are continuing but that progress has been very slow. A list of Russian requirements from the United Kingdom has been received, and United Kingdom comments on this list were communicated to the Russian Delegation on the 2nd November. At the same time the Delegation was asked to seek agreement from Moscow to the negotiation of grain purchases in advance of a general settlement.

In the meantime the United Kingdom negotiators have placed contracts with Russia for 90,000 cases of salmon and 65,000 cases of crab from the 1948 pack, and for a comparable quantity from the 1949 pack, at a total cost of about £2,500,000. They have also received offers from Russia of 30,000 standards of softwood, 26,000 standards of mining timber and 4,000,000 cubic feet of hardwood.

I assume that the contracts for salmon and crab, and any resulting contracts for timber, will be conditional on the reaching of a general settlement covering the payments aspect. I am seeking confirmation of this and will in any case let you know of any further developments.

Yours sincerely,

ALEC CLUTTERBUCK

I regret that I am only now in a position to reply to your personal message of November 2nd in regard to the negotiation of contracts to cover the United Kingdom's purchases of food from Canada in 1949. You will understand, however, that this matter has had to receive the most careful consideration of Canadian Ministers and that in the recent past certain Ministers have had to be absent from Ottawa.<sup>41</sup>

I am now able to advise you that the discussions in respect of contracts for bacon, cheese and eggs can begin immediately and they could, I think, be carried on in Ottawa between your representatives here (I have in mind Sir Alexander Clutterbuck and Sir Andrew Jones<sup>42</sup>) and officials of the Departments of Agriculture and Finance. We have, I believe, a very keen appreciation of the various considerations that are important from your point of view and are prepared to go so far in accepting the proposals which you yourself made to us that I would be surprised if an agreement could not quickly be reached as a result of discussions between our two sets of officials here.

In regard to the wheat price, we are not yet in a position to discuss this matter but my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, intends, I believe, to visit London a little later for this purpose. I am, however, convinced you will agree that this should not delay the reaching of agreement in regard to the other contracts.

Thank you for your message of 10th November about the food talks. The proposals which we understand you have in mind should go a long way towards meeting our difficulties and I much appreciate the way in which you have kept them in mind. We are, therefore, very shortly sending instructions (covering prices, quantities, types, etc.) which will enable Clutterbuck and Andrew Jones to begin detailed discussions on bacon and eggs and cheese.

But Strachey<sup>43</sup> and I are still faced with a difficulty on wheat. Apart from our need to know the extent of our financial commitments, we cannot for obvious reasons reach any conclusion and still less have any announcement about bacon, eggs and cheese if we are unable to say at the same time what has been arranged about wheat, which is by far the larger and more important item.

We feel strongly therefore that the talks in Ottawa should cover wheat as well as the other products and we hope that you and Mr. Gardiner will agree that this is the best course.

[Ottawa], November 22, 1948

It may be helpful for you to have some background information on the item included on the agenda of this week's Cabinet meeting entitled "Report by Minister of Agriculture on United Kingdom Food Contracts."

At a Cabinet meeting some ten days ago, it was decided to advise the United Kingdom High Commissioner in Canada that if his Government could include in its purchase programme from Canada during the calendar year 1949 bacon, cheese and eggs to the value of $56 million, $15 million and $14.8 million, respectively, which would probably absorb Canada's estimated surplus of cheese and pork for 1949, it would perhaps be possible for the Canadian Government to permit drawings on the Canada-United Kingdom loan at the rate of $10 million monthly during the same period. The extension of such credit would be dependent on United Kingdom food purchases in the volumes indicated, and on the continuance throughout the period of a satisfactory ERP offshore purchasing programme in Canada. It was also decided that when detailed discussions took place with United Kingdom authorities, they would be urged to make, if possible, additional egg purchases to the extent of some $9 million.

It was the view of the Minister of Agriculture that wheat need not enter into these discussions but negotiations concerning price and deliveries of wheat for 1949, together with any settlement under the "have regard to" clause, could take place when he met with Mr. Strachey later in the year.

The Canadian proposal concerning the food talks between the United Kingdom and Canada was communicated to London, and a reply has been received from Sir Stafford Cripps in which he states that they will be prepared to begin detailed discussions on bacon, eggs and cheese in the near future, but no conclusions could be reached on these commodities unless the United Kingdom Government knew and could announce what arrangements had been made for wheat. Cripps suggests, therefore, that the best course is for the talks in Ottawa to cover wheat as well as the other products.

I can understand the United Kingdom adopting this attitude, because with them wheat takes a priority position and if they commit themselves now on bacon, eggs and cheese, they may find, when the price of wheat is negotiated later, that they are without funds to purchase their full requirements of this latter commodity.

FOOD CONTRACTS WITH THE UNITED KINGDOM

23. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, referring to discussion at the meeting of November 9th, reported that it had been proposed to the U.K. government that the amounts set aside in their programme for the purchase of Canadian foodstuffs (other than wheat) during the first six months of 1949 be spread over the whole of that year and that contracts be made on that basis; also that some supplementary arrangement might be agreed for the purchase of additional quantities of eggs. In the absence of arrangements of this sort, it had been made clear that the government could enter into no contracts and the United Kingdom would have to buy Canadian produce on the open market in competition with other purchasers. In this event restrictions on exports to the United States would have to be modified.

It had been indicated that the wheat contract would be treated separately. In any arrangement regarding price for the next crop year, the Canadian government could not waive any rights acquired under the "have-regard-to" clause.

The views of the U.K. government on these proposals were now being awaited.

24. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted the Minister's report.

Dear Mr. Gardiner,

1949 FOOD CONTRACTS

I reported to London the views which you had expressed to me in the course of our conversation on the 19th November, and these have since been carefully considered by United Kingdom Ministers.

My Government much appreciate the frank way in which you explained your attitude to me, and I have now been asked to inform you that, though for financial reasons they would have preferred that the wheat price for 1949-50 should be discussed with our other food purchases, they are prepared, in deference to your wishes, to fall in with the time-table you propose. Accordingly, they agree that negotiations for the conclusion of contracts for bacon, cheese and eggs should proceed at once in Ottawa in pursuance of the Canadian Government's offer of the 10th November, and that the question of the wheat price for 1949-50 should be left over for personal discussion with you in London immediately after the conclusion of the Agricultural Conference in Ottawa on the 9th December.

In accepting this procedure my Government feel bound, however, to ask that the contracts resulting from these negotiations should be regarded as provisional only pending the completion of discussions with you in London. They trust, therefore, that any announcement of the contracts which may be made at the Agricultural Conference will safeguard the position in this respect. They feel bound to make this request not merely from the standpoint of our overall dollar position but because of the obligation imposed on them to clear with E.C.A. their total expenditure on food purchases from dollar sources in 1949 before contracts can be made final.

I am sending copies of this letter to Mr. St. Laurent, Mr. Howe, Mr. Abbott and Mr. Brooke Claxton.

Yours sincerely,

My colleagues and I have discussed your message of November 18th to me and the message to Mr. Gardiner received through Sir Alexander Clutterbuck on November 26th regarding the food contract discussions.

We are anxious to proceed at once with the detailed discussion of the bacon, cheese, and egg contracts on the basis of our proposals of November 10. I regret that, as Gardiner explained fully to Clutterbuck, we cannot regard these contracts as provisional or in any way dependent on the outcome of discussions as to price under the wheat contract. The question of the wheat price for 1949-50 will have to be left over for discussion with Gardiner in London early in December.

Unless you are able to concur in this procedure, we shall be compelled, owing to the necessities of the time table regarding our own agricultural programme for next year, to proceed on the basis that we will have no contracts with the United Kingdom for bacon, eggs and cheese during the coming year and that you will be purchasing your requirements from us in the open market.

FOOD CONTRACTS WITH THE UNITED KINGDOM; BACON, CHEESE, EGGS

30. The Minister of Agriculture reported that, following the decision taken at the meeting of November 9th, discussions had been carried on with the U.K. Ministry of Food concerning arrangements for food purchases from Canada in 1949. The Prime Minister, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Finance had been kept informed as the discussions proceeded.

Negotiations with U.K. representatives had been completed the preceding day, when agreement had been reached to supply the United Kingdom with the following quantities of livestock products in 1949:

bacon	—	160,000,000 pounds,
cheese	—	50,000,000 pounds,
eggs	—	1,533,000 cases of shell eggs, or the equivalent in the form of dried whole egg or frozen whole egg.

British agreement to these arrangements had to be subject to approval by E.C.A.; no difficulty in this respect was anticipated.

The prices agreed for bacon and cheese were the same as those stipulated in the 1948 agreement; for eggs, the prices were slightly lower.

31. Mr. Gardiner observed that the quantity of bacon agreed would probably absorb all available for export. If there were any surplus, the United Kingdom would be able to purchase at market prices. Export controls on pork products would be maintained.

With respect to cheese, there would be no requisitioning from factories in 1949.

With respect to eggs, the agreement represented 46,000,000 dozen for eleven months from February 1st next, as compared with 74,000,000 dozen for the current twelve month period. It was hoped that the lower price would be offset substantially by operating and processing economies and compensated to a considerable extent by partial removal of restrictions on exports to other markets.

32. Mr. Gardiner said that these arrangements had been made public today in London and announced simultaneously in Ottawa to the Dominion-Provincial Agricultural Conference.

(Announcement re U.K. Contracts for Bacon, Cheese, and Eggs, 1949, Dec. 8, 1948).†

33. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted with approval the arrangements concluded with the U.K. government by the Minister of Agriculture.<sup>44</sup>

Dear Sir Alexander [Clutterbuck],

I refer to your letter of November 9th addressed to the Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, in which you provided some information about the current United Kingdom trade discussions with the U.S.S.R.

I have discussed these developments with those of my colleagues who are interested in this subject, and all of them were somewhat concerned to learn that your Government has placed orders with the Soviet for salmon and crab and are also negotiating for shipments of timber from that country. These commodities with the substitution of lobster for crab are available, as you know, in Canada, and we fear that our salmon industry and timber producers who have been supplying the United Kingdom in the past will find it difficult to appreciate the circumstances which have forced your Government to shift its source of supply from Canada to the U.S.S.R. It will not be an easy task for us to furnish a satisfactory explanation based on the information which is available to us, and I am wondering if it would be possible to let me have fuller details of the transaction which may reveal the necessity and desirability, from your Government's standpoint, of having completed this arrangement.

You will recall that Mr. St. Laurent, during the visit of Sir Stafford Cripps, expressed the apprehension of the Canadian Government about the increasing number of bilateral agreements being negotiated by the United Kingdom and their tendency to prejudice the restoration of a viable system of multilateral trade which is the aim of both our countries.

The prices of the salmon and timber which we could make available would, I am sure, be at least as reasonable as those at which salmon and timber can be supplied by any other country. It is quite possible that as a provision of the Agreement, your Government may be undertaking to export to the Soviet Union some items which could be readily marketed in Canada. If such be the case, it would seem to us unfortunate that special efforts were not made to sell such goods in Canada at competitive prices in order to obtain the dollars with which to purchase Canadian salmon and timber. For that reason I would be most grateful if you could obtain for me a list of the commodities which your Government is considering exporting to the Soviet Union. It would also be helpful if you indicate what goods, if any, you anticipate that the Soviet Union may purchase in other parts of the sterling area with the sterling proceeds of the salmon and crab sales.

INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT; CURRENT COUNCIL DISCUSSIONS

24. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, referring to discussion at the meeting of February 6th, reported that the Cabinet Wheat Committee had considered further developments in the current Washington discussions with respect to an international wheat agreement.

The U.K. government representatives had taken the position that such an agreement would automatically set a maximum price of $2.00 per bushel on any wheat purchased from Canada under the present bilateral contract.

It was possible that, in the very near future, an agreement would be ready for initialling by the three major exporting countries — Canada, the United States and Australia — and by about twenty importing countries.

In the circumstances the Cabinet Wheat Committee, after careful consideration, had agreed that the Canadian delegate be instructed that the government could not accept an international agreement along the lines contemplated without prior agreement with the U.K. government as to the terms and conditions of the consideration to govern in the Canada-United Kingdom contract. The head of the U.K. delegation to the Council was being invited to come to Ottawa for the purpose of discussing such prior agreement.

RE CREDENTIALS FOR SIGNING THE INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT

The current meeting of the International Wheat Council very suddenly and somewhat unexpectedly reached the point where all members were prepared to sign an International Wheat Agreement.

2. The Agreement is similar to that drafted last Spring in London, when, you remember, the only point unresolved was that of the price range. The price range requested by exporting countries in Washington is as follows:

1948/49	$2.00	—	$1.50
1949/50	2.00	—	1.40
1950/51	2.00	—	1.30
1951/52	2.00	—	1.20
1952/53	2.00	—	1.10

3. For a long time the United Kingdom continued to insist that in the final three years the ceiling price should be dropped as well as the floor. As a result of urgent Cabinet consideration in the United Kingdom over the last week-end, the British yesterday consented to the exporters' price range.<sup>45</sup>

4. It is now proposed that the Agreement be signed at 11.A.M., Saturday, March 6, and with a view to striking while the iron remained hot, Mr. Howe immediately telephoned Dr. Wilson<sup>46</sup> in Washington, authorizing him to sign on behalf of the Government of Canada. The State Department has, however, indicated a wish for some more formal authorization, even though it might arrive after the event. The attached Order in Council has accordingly been prepared, in order that we may meet the wishes of the State Department in this respect. The Full Power will be sent to you for signature after Council has approved of the Submission.

INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT

5. The Minister of Trade and Commerce reported upon the recent conclusion of the International Wheat Agreement at the Wheat Council meetings in Washington. The general terms of the Agreement had been stated to the House of Commons on March 9th, 1948.

This matter had been under consideration by the Cabinet Wheat Committee and the Canadian representative had been instructed to initial the Agreement, subject, of course, to final government approval.

(Minister's memorandum, Mar. 9, 1948†; Hansard, Mar. 9, 1948, pp. 2003-5).

6. The Secretary of State for External Affairs submitted a recommendation to authorize the chairman of the Canadian delegation to the International Wheat Council<sup>47</sup> to sign, subject to acceptance, the International Wheat Agreement on behalf of the government of Canada.

The Minister had made reference in the House of Commons to ratification by Parliament. As an international agreement of importance, it was probably desirable that Parliamentary sanction be sought in due course.

(Minister's recommendation, Mar. 5, 1948).†

7. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted the report of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, agreed that an Order in Council be passed authorizing signature of the International Wheat Agreement, subject to acceptance, by the Canadian representative, and agreed that, in due course, Parliamentary sanction should be sought in appropriate form.<sup>48</sup>

U.K. WHEAT CONTRACT; PRICE ARRANGEMENTS

4. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, referring to the discussion at the meeting on February 12th, reported that the Cabinet Wheat Committee had been considering price arrangements under the U.K. wheat contract, with particular reference to settlement of the "have regard to" clause.

A price of $2.00 per bushel had been agreed for the 1948-49 crop. The U.K. government had offered, in final settlement of their obligations, a price of $2.00 for 1949-50, the last year of the contract. These prices might not provide adequate compensation for low prices in the early years of the contract if world prices remained high over the next two years. It had, therefore, been suggested to U.K. authorities that the "have regard to" clause be operative for a further crop year. This proposal had not, however, proved acceptable to the U.K. government.

It was now proposed to inform the U.K. High Commissioner by letter that any difficulty in connection with U.K. financing of purchases in the crop year 1950-51 under E.R.P. might be overcome by providing that any excess over the then world price would be financed out of the outstanding balance of the Canadian credit; an appropriate amount of the remaining credit might be made available for that purpose.

In this connection a draft letter to Sir Alexander Clutterbuck was submitted and read.

(Letter, Minister of Trade and Commerce to U.K. High Commissioner in Canada, 2nd draft, Apr. 21, 1948).†

5. The Minister of Agriculture pointed out that should this proposal be put into effect it would be necessary to reserve some $100 millions from the outstanding balance of the Canadian credit which at the moment stood at slightly over $220 millions.

6. The Cabinet, after further discussion, approved the course proposed by the Cabinet Wheat Committee and approved the draft letter to the U.K. High Commissioner as submitted by Mr. Howe.

WHEAT CONTRACT WITH THE UNITED KINGDOM; 1949-50

34. The Minister of Agriculture, referring to the discussion at the meeting of November 9th, reported that he proposed to proceed immediately to the United Kingdom, accompanied by officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce, to discuss with U.K. authorities arrangements under the wheat contract for the next crop year.

Before entering into these negotiations, he wished to have the views of the Cabinet upon the attitude he should adopt with respect to price and with respect to settlement of the "have regard to" provision. Upon his return, recommendations would be made for government approval.

35. Mr. Gardiner said that the price for the next crop year might be agreed and settlement of compensation under the "have regard to" clause left over for negotiation the following year, when the 1950-51 crop was under discussion. Alternatively, final settlement of the "have regard to" clause might be sought at this time. A number of considerations were involved, including the probable movement of world prices, the attitude of the United States and the desirability of retaining the British market on a regular basis.

36. The Minister of Finance drew attention to the practical limitation imposed by E.C.A. upon the price which the U.K. government would be able to pay. In the circumstances, it might be advisable to defer settlement under the "have regard to" clause until the following year, provided that the United Kingdom were prepared to recognize their obligation thereunder to compensate Canada later on. The balance of the U.K. credit, after deducting $120 million for 1949 deliveries, could be retained until final settlement had been agreed.

37. The Minister of Trade and Commerce suggested that arrangements with the United Kingdom might be made henceforth on an annual basis, prices being negotiated each December in such a manner as to assure Canadian producers of a planned and regular outlet to the British market.

38. The Cabinet, after considerable further discussion, agreed:

(a) that it would be satisfactory if the price of Canadian wheat deliveries for the next crop year under the contract were fixed at $2.00 a bushel, provided that U.K. authorities recognized and re-affirmed their obligation under the "have regard to" clause (the extent thereof to be the subject of negotiation later on); and,

(b) that the Minister of Agriculture be authorized to proceed on this basis in his negotiations with U.K. authorities.

I. CANADA-UNITED KINGDOM RELATIONS; REPORT ON WHEAT CONTRACT

1. The Minister of Agriculture reported that, following the government decision that the price of wheat to Britain for 1949-50 should be $2.00, with final settlement of the "have-regard-to" clause to be left open, he had proceeded to London for discussions. The United Kingdom authorities had suggested various alternatives, none of which was acceptable.

Finally, the Chancellor of the U.K. Exchequer had made proposals to the effect that, for the last year of the present contract, the crop year 1949-50, the price would be $2.00 per bushel. If the average Canadian price to other countries in that year fell below $1.50, all obligations with respect to the "have-regard-to" clause of the agreement would be considered fully discharged. If the price fell below $1.75 but not below $1.50, the United Kingdom would undertake to purchase from Canada in 1950-51, 100,000,000 bushels at $1.40, at the option of the Canadian government. Should the outside price in 1949-50 equal $1.75, or higher, the United Kingdom would, in addition, undertake to purchase in 1951-52, at the option of the Canadian government, 100,000,000 bushels at $1.40.

A memorandum on the discussions in the United Kingdom was circulated.

(Memorandum, Minister of Agriculture, December 21, 1948).†

2. Mr. Gardiner stated that he had informed the Chancellor of the U.K. Exchequer that, although he considered these proposals unsatisfactory, he would take them back to Ottawa for the consideration of the government. The Chancellor indicated that it was thought that further discussions along the lines indicated in this U.K. proposal were advisable. U.K. representatives would be sent to Ottawa.

3. The Minister of Trade and Commerce suggested that, if a formula along these lines were generally acceptable, it might be possible to negotiate some modifications as regards both quantity and price.

4. The Chairman emphasized that if no agreement were reached it would create a difficult situation and would aggravate the problem of justifying any further release from the U.K. credit.

It might be suggested that Canada would accept the U.K. proposals if the price and quantity in the two optional years were $1.55 and 140 million bushels respectively.

This, of course, might not be accepted by the U.K. government, but would leave the way open for further negotiations.

5. The Secretary of State for External Affairs pointed out that there might be some difficulties in reconciling a future international wheat agreement with arrangements made with the United Kingdom.

6. The Committee, after further discussion, agreed to recommend to the Cabinet the proposal made by the Prime Minister.<sup>49</sup>

TELEGRAM 2149

Ottawa, December 24, 1948

TOP SECRET. MOST IMMEDIATE.

Following for Robertson from Pearson. Please convey with least possible delay following message to United Kingdom Government, Begins: The Canadian government has considered the proposal which the U.K. Chancellor of the Exchequer gave to the Minister of Agriculture immediately prior to his departure from England last week with regard to the price for the 1949-50 crop year under the wheat agreement and settlement of the "have-regard-to" clause of that agreement. The government is seized of the importance of finding some solution to this difficult problem in view of the serious effect on Anglo-Canadian financial and economic relations generally which would result from failure to find a solution. The government has reached the conclusion, however, that the U.K. proposal in its present form does not represent a satisfactory basis for agreement. Nevertheless, it represents an approach to the problem which, if suitable adjustment in its terms could be made, would provide a satisfactory agreement.

Two points in particular in the U.K. proposal have caused us difficulty. In the first instance the suggested price of $1.40 included in the options relating to the crop years 1950-51 and 1951-52 represent a figure which, considering the present position of the contract and the practicabilities of achieving a settlement under the "have-regard-to" clause on the basis of a $2.00 price for 1949-50, would not be satisfactory. A price of $1.55 a bushel in the options, however, would be acceptable and would in the opinion of the government represent a reasonable measure of protection for the Canadian wheat producer and would be an understandable arrangement in view of the fact that the initial price under the contract was also $1.55.

Similarly, we feel that taking into consideration the past history of Canadian wheat exports to the United Kingdom, the United Kingdom's future requirements and the actual forecast which the United Kingdom made in this regard in its long-term presentation to OEEC, a figure of 100 million bushels a year in the two optional years would not offer the possibility of adequate settlement under the existing contract or of continued security to the Canadian farmer. We therefore propose a figure of 140 million bushels in each of the optional years.

If the U.K. proposal were modified to provide that in the two optional years the amount involved each year would be 140 million bushels and the price $1.55, the U.K. proposal would be acceptable to the Canadian government. Ends.

I am sending you by immediately following telegram some supplementary notes which might be helpful to you in any discussion which you may have in presenting the above message.

Following for Robertson from Pearson. Wheat. Following are the supplementary notes referred to in my telegram, Begins: We consider that the U.K. proposal offers a possible basis for negotiating a satisfactory agreement, but some amendments to it are necessary, and every effort must be made to persuade the U.K. to accept those we have suggested in the message which I have just sent you.

Failure to reach agreement and consequent cancellation of the contract and opening of the market generally would have a very serious reaction in Canada, would disturb our general economic relations with the United Kingdom and prejudice any further assistance which we had contemplated or might be able to contemplate making available. We are anxious to make as early an announcement as possible with regard to the renewal of drawings on the credit but it would obviously be impossible to proceed with any announcement of this point while the arrangements under the wheat contract remain unsettled. In fact, in the absence of settlement the whole matter of further drawings on the credit would have to be reviewed again.

We consider our counter-suggestions fair and reasonable. The long term programme which the U.K. government presented to O.E.E.C. contemplated continued purchases of wheat from Canada at the rate of 140 million bushels annually. Moreover, the price throughout was $2.00 (although admittedly this was because current price levels were used generally in the forecast).

The Canadian government is faced with a difficult domestic situation. The easy arithmetical calculation may be made that, if in 1949-50 the price of wheat falls to $1.50, we would have accepted settlement of the "have-regard-to" clause on the basis of $70,000,000, i.e., 50¢ a bushel for 140 million bushels. While this is by no means the whole story, it will be the first figure seized upon and it therefore becomes important to ensure that the alternative security offered by virtue of the two additional optional years appears reasonably satisfactory to the farmer.

We could not justify our position vis-à-vis the farmer on the basis of the present U.K. offer of options of 100,000,000 bushels at $1.40. Surely it should be possible for the U.K. to realize that.

You will also appreciate that one of the advantages of the U.K. offer as amended by us is that while introducing the element of precision and finality into the hitherto undefined "have-regard-to" obligation, it does this in such a way as to keep open the specific results which may come from the arrangement agreed on.

It may conceivably result in a discharge of the "have-regard-to" obligation at 70 million dollars which would be an attractive result for the U.K. But we in our turn can argue here, if necessary, that it may result in two or three times that amount being returned to the Canadian farmer. This, if combined with the assurance of a continued and stable U.K. market, would make it possible to convince our farmers that they had been given a fair deal. We could not do this, however, on the basis of the unamended U.K. proposal.

Please put these considerations and any others which may occur to you in support of our position as strongly as possible to the U.K. Ministers concerned.

We hope that our amendments can be accepted without further discussions. If the U.K., however, desire to send a delegation to Ottawa for further talks, as Sir Stafford Cripps suggested to Mr. Gardiner in London, we would be glad to receive them at as early a date as possible. On the other hand, it may be as effective and give rise to less speculation, if any further discussions which may be required were conducted through you or through Clutterbuck here or both. Ends.

London, December 30, 1948

TOP SECRET. MOST IMMEDIATE.

Your telegram No. 2149 of December 24th† wheat negotiations. Following for Pearson from Robertson, Begins: I saw Wilson Smith, Feaveryear, Grant and Garner<sup>50</sup> yesterday and passed on the message contained in your telegram under reference. They had already received it from Clutterbuck and we were able to proceed immediately with the discussion. Wilson Smith seemed gratified that we were prepared to consider a settlement of the 'having-regard-to' obligation within the framework of the proposal the Chancellor gave to Mr. Gardiner. He mentioned however that apart from the substance of the matter, there were one or two questions of detail on which the United Kingdom would wish to seek clarification. These were, I believe, noted in a letter which Wilson Smith gave to Max Mackenzie before he left. In the first place, the United Kingdom would wish to be satisfied that the method of calculating the average price for Canadian wheat, outside the contract, in the crop year 1949-50 would be satisfactory. In the second place, they would wish some clarification as to the date of the exercise of the Canadian option for 1950-51 and 1951-52. They would hope that it would be possible for the Canadian Government to agree to exercise its option some time before the August 15th date having regard to the difficult position in which they would be placed with respect to future purchases, in the event that Canada decided at that late date not to exercise its option.

2. Wilson Smith again raised the question of consultation with ECA before United Kingdom signature of any agreement. I did not gather from his remarks that formal approval of ECA is to be sought but it is desired to avoid the possibility that ECA might subsequently be able to say that the agreement had been concluded without their knowledge and therefore might become ineligible for ECA financing unless renegotiated (as apparently happened recently on certain United Kingdom long-term bulk cotton contracts).

3. Coming to the substance of the matter (the quantities and prices for the years of option) I explained our position as set forth in your telegram No. 2156 of December 24th, pointing out that we were faced with not simply the necessity of reaching agreement on deliveries and prices, but with the serious problem of bringing to a mutually satisfactory conclusion an inter-Governmental undertaking of considerable political significance for both countries.

4. Wilson Smith was not enthusiastic about our counter-proposal and took the line that 100 million bushels was all the United Kingdom would require from Canada in the years of option, and that this was a reasonable amount having regard to the average consumption in the United Kingdom of Canadian wheat over the period prior to the war, and to the fact that total United Kingdom imports of wheat from all sources were not likely to exceed 200 million bushels per annum. He suggested that both Canada and the United Kingdom should now be moving towards some return to the more normal pattern which obtained before the war. In this connection, it was suggested that in its own interest, Canada should probably not have 140 million bushels tied up in the years of option and that we would benefit from a greater elasticity in selling. The Canadian proposal, he said, gave no evidence of any tapering off towards normalcy in wheat trading.

5. I pointed out that it was unrealistic to think that Canada could easily switch back into continental markets to the extent assumed in any suggestion of a return to the pre-war pattern, particularly because of convertibility difficulties. Furthermore, in the years of the contract, Canada had supplied the United Kingdom with its wheat requirements to the detriment of other European purchasers. There had undoubtedly been some loss of goodwill and it would not be an easy task for Canada to regain its position in these markets. The four-year contract had been entered into in the realization that the world would be faced with a period of trade and financial disequilibrium. I suggested that it was not practical to pretend that the pre-war pattern of wheat trading was a present possibility. From the domestic point of view I again argued that the Canadian Government had committed itself to a policy of securing a guaranteed market for Canadian wheat. It was not possible or desirable in present circumstances to reverse this policy or to divorce the negotiations for the years of option from their historical context since the war. Wilson Smith and his colleagues made no compromise proposal on our 140 million bushels suggestion but have taken note of the position and will lay it before the Chancellor tomorrow afternoon.

6. On price, I suggested that it was not possible to make any accurate assessment of how the world market would go in the absence of an international wheat agreement, but noted that from the Canadian point of view $1.55 would have something to recommend it as a way of balancing off the low price accepted in the earlier years of the contract. Thus, there would be two years in which $1.55 was paid, two years in which $2.00 was paid and two years when Canada would have the option to sell at $1.55. It seemed to me that this was the sort of arrangement which would be acceptable to Canadian public opinion. The United Kingdom officials thought $1.55 too high as a floor and that this figure resembled more a guess as to future prices than a judgement of an essential minimum price. What they were offering was a guaranteed floor price which would probably be better than that which would obtain under an International Wheat Agreement.

7. I think that both on the question of price and quantity they were left in no doubt as to the position of the Canadian Government and it now remains to see whether our proposal is acceptable at the Ministerial level, or what counter-proposal will be made. Presumably Wilson Smith will have another talk with me after he has seen the Chancellor and we may have another meeting at the official level. In any case, whatever the result of the official discussions, I will see Sir Stafford late tomorrow or Friday morning, and hope to obtain some definite information as to how far United Kingdom is prepared to go. Ends.

Following for Robertson from Pearson, Begins: Thank you for your telegram No. 2328 of 30th December. Wheat.

We will be sending you more considered views when we get the news of your talk with Sir Stafford Cripps. Meanwhile, there are some points in your telegram on which I would like to comment. It is discouraging and indeed irritating to hear Wilson Smith talk about the desirability of moving toward the more normal pattern of imports from Canada which obtained before the war. This was not the language used by United Kingdom representatives during the war years when we were urged to produce more and yet more food, and rosy and reassuring statements were made of stable and satisfactory postwar markets. Furthermore, the figures for average prewar consumption of Canadian wheat do not, I think, bear out the arguments that Wilson Smith makes. In the twenties, the United Kingdom several times imported more than 200 million bushels and only in three years during the last twenty-one did the figure fall below 100 million, and that because drought conditions made an abnormally small amount available for export. You will, I assume, have the figures at Canada House.

2. I agree that it is not unreasonable that E.C.A. should be informed before the United Kingdom sign any agreement, but I certainly do not think that any formal approval should be sought. Nor can I agree with the United Kingdom argument that $1.55 is too high as a floor. There is on the contrary, every reason for us to insist on this price. It would, in a sense, mean going back to the original suggestion of four years at $1.55, with a higher price of $2 for two years only. I do not see how the United Kingdom can reasonably object to this. Ends.

My telegram No. 2338 of December 30th. Wheat negotiations.

As anticipated in paragraph 7, I saw Sir Stafford Cripps this morning. Our conversation was rather general since the Chancellor was clearly not prepared at this stage to talk about quantities and prices. His remarks were directed primarily at the need for countries to accept adjustments in their trading patterns to take account of present conditions. He made much of the changes which the United Kingdom had accepted or induced in the direction and composition of its trade and felt that Canadian trade would have to undergo similar alterations. In his view, it was not realistic to suppose that the trading patterns of recent years could be maintained.

2. I agreed with the Chancellor that many adjustments on all sides would be required, but added that in the case of Canada a considerable shift had already taken place and was continuing. I noted that probably to a greater extent than most countries Canada had adjusted contracts and undertaken diversions to new markets. I felt that such adjustments as Canada had already made in respect of other contracts indicated that we were not insisting that the high level of recent trade with the United Kingdom in many products should be regarded as normal for the future. Where possible we had adjusted production and had sought new markets. In the case of wheat also I felt that our proposal did not represent unreasonable insistence on the maintenance of abnormal trade. In contemplating adjustments which might be made in Canadian wheat exports it was essential that full account be taken of trade during the recent past, of adjustments which had been made in production to permit of that trade, and of the existence or absence of alternative outlets for that production. In considering the special case of wheat it was necessary to recognize the importance of that commodity in the Canadian economy and the corresponding political importance, in terms of relations with other countries, of arrangements affecting Canadian wheat exports.

3. The Chancellor indicated that the wheat contract would be discussed at a Cabinet meeting on Monday and that instructions would be sent to Clutterbuck probably on Tuesday. It was agreed that I should be shown the contents of the proposed instructions to Clutterbuck before they are sent to him.

Following from Howe, Begins: Canadair Limited as you know, have been pressing the sale of fifty Canadair-4 aircraft to BOAC, who obviously desire to purchase the Canadair-4 as the aeroplane most suitable for service on Empire routes.

2. Political dispute about suitability of Tudor aircraft is delaying the transaction, and it would appear that Ministry of Supply are opposing the purchase.

3. Canada is at present purchasing all its military aircraft from the United Kingdom, and will continue to do so provided our small Canadian industry can be occupied with civilian type aeroplanes. Canada's defence requirements make it essential that Canadair Limited at Montreal be kept in production and that Victory Aircraft at Toronto be kept busy with development work, the latter being the responsibility of the Canadian Government.

4. It will be helpful if representations, bearing on the exchange of production between Canada and England on the above lines, can be made a matter of policy. The North Star-4 is recognized as competitive with any four-engine plane now in production, and the order from BOAC will provide work for this plant for the next twelve months. On the other hand, Canadian purchases of military type aircraft will probably be helpful to British production and will, in the long run, considerably exceed in value the civilian aircraft from Canada.

5. Anything you can do to assist the purchase of Canadair planes by BOAC will be most helpful in solving the problem of keeping Canadian aircraft production active. I understand that the matter has now reached a high Cabinet level, where a word to the Prime Minister and to the Chancellor of the Exchequer might throw the balance our way. Ends.

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Howe from Robertson, Begins: Reference my telegram No. 296 of March 11th.†

After the meeting with [Sir Harold] Hartley and [Whitney] Straight [of B.O.A.C.] yesterday, I think it might be useful if I were to send you an appreciation of the situation as it looks from London and some suggestions about the way the question might be advanced if you feel that it should be carried further.

2. I imagine that you will not consider the kind of proposal outlined by Nathan<sup>51</sup> on the 10th March acceptable, since it would have the effect of involving Canadair and presumably the Canadian Government in financial risks arising from service on routes on which Canadair IV's would be used, although Canadian interests would not be able to exercise an effective control over the operation of these routes. Moreover, I doubt whether this proposal, suggested personally by Nathan, would be considered by the Treasury authorities to be compatible with the responsible status of a United Kingdom Government corporation. No doubt if Nathan could secure Canadian approval for a plan of this sort he would feel that he had strengthened his position in the Cabinet here. My guess, however, is that an offer from the Canadian side of a schedule of payments closely related to probable earnings but with all financial risks assumed by the operator might still be sufficient to carry the day both in the Cabinet Committee on Civil Aviation Policy presided over by Lord Addison and also in the full Cabinet.

3. One of the chief drawbacks from the United Kingdom point of view of the original proposal made by Canadair to BOAC, was that it would necessitate a large dollar outlay before the dollar revenue which would accrue from these planes could be expected to come in. You will recall that in the first six months after the placement of the order Canadair would deliver only three planes in the same period, however, BOAC would be called on to pay 23 and one half per cent of the total cost of the ordered planes. A plan whereby the schedule of payments would be more closely adjusted to the estimated dollar earnings, I think, would be more likely to win acceptance.

4. I gather from Lewis that Canadair now feel that in their original offer they went as far as they properly could in the preliminary stages of the negotiations; that

Lord Nathan, Minister of Civil Aviation of United Kingdom; the proposal was to pay for the purchase from dollar earnings from operations.

Nathan's proposal is unacceptable to them; and that he should now make a firm offer undertaking to purchase the aircraft if the schedule of payments were perhaps adjusted in some such way as I have indicated in the previous paragraph. Lewis has spoken over the telephone to Oliver West and has learned that it would be impossible to make further progress with the banks in Canada unless Nathan can produce a firm counter-offer which is not manifestly unacceptable. He has suggested that, since negotiations now seem to be at a critical point, West should consider coming to London at the beginning of next week.

5. BOAC are not at the moment in a position to supply firm estimates of the dollar earnings which they think 25 Canadair IV's should bring in year by year over the next five years. However, this information should be available in a day or two and should be useful in case there seems a genuine likelihood that the proposal for financing which would approximate to the pay-as-you-earn principle would commend itself both to the Minister of Civil Aviation and to the Canadian interests concerned. Ends.

Following for Robertson from Howe, Begins: Thanks for your Secret cables Nos. 283† and 284,† reference Canadair. In my opinion, the last offer from the Canadian Government for financing these airplanes is as favourable as circumstances will permit and probably more favourable than any other manufacturer can offer. Therefore, it seems to me unlikely that decision of United Kingdom Government will be influenced by more favourable terms.

2. BOAC efficiency of operation to date would not justify Canadian Government in risking payment for planes on earnings from an operation which has in the past resulted in heavy deficits. While we hope forecast of net dollar earning from operation is accurate after all dollar costs involved in purchase and operation have been met, we think that this forecast is hardly first class collateral for bankers.

3. Because we believe that BOAC operation is extravagant, we are reluctant to enter into any partnership arrangement, but will consider any proposal that BOAC may offer in that direction.

4. It is most important that this order for airplanes be secured if possible, since otherwise future of Canadair may be jeopardized. Canada requires this industry for defence as well as for commercial purposes. Therefore, we greatly appreciate your interest in bringing about this purchase. Should negotiations be undertaken on an

SECRET AND PERSONAL. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Howe and Pearson from Robertson, Begins: My telegram No. 301 of March 12th and your telegram No. 350 of March 13th.

Discussions with Ministry of Civil Aviation and BOAC about the purchase of Canadair IV's are not, repeat not, making progress. The position is complicated by what appears to be a reciprocal lack of confidence between the United Kingdom Government agencies concerned, namely, the Ministry of Civil Aviation, BOAC and the Treasury. I suspect this lack of confidence extends to Ministry of Supply which has also a central interest and commitment in United Kingdom civil aviation policy, though we have not been in direct touch with it during the course of the Canadair negotiations.

2. Lord Nathan is sticking tightly to the point of view described in paragraph 3 of my telegram No. 284 of March 10th,† and has been pressing me to let him know this week whether or not Canada will make him a counter proposition which fits the conditions there set forth. He is a timid type of not-so-big business man turned Socialist who has been given an ungrateful junior post in the Government in which he appears to be anxious to impress his colleagues and subordinates with his efficiency and toughness. His predecessor, Lord Winstor, was dropped pretty summarily from the Government after the Ministry of Civil Aviation had landed it in quite an awkward position, and Nathan, who recognizes that he will have to take the odium of justifying another sharp turn in Government civil aviation policy, wishes to make sure that the corner is smoothed and cushioned before he takes it.

3. Meanwhile, the Cabinet Committee on Civil Aviation Policy of which Lord Addison is Chairman, is waiting rather impatiently for a firm recommendation from the competent Ministries. They have asked the Ministry of Civil Aviation to submit a full report next week for consideration immediately after Easter on the possibilities of the Canadair project which they would like to consider as an alternative to the maintenance of the present policy of flying United Kingdom built machines.

4. Within the last few days the United Kingdom Treasury have learned with some embarrassment that the Ministry of Civil Aviation were asking Canada if it could put up a proposition under which Canada would take over the financial risk involved in the operation of Canadair IV's by BOAC, at the same time that the Treasury was hoping the Canadian Government would see its way to share some of the general financial risks involved in waiting for E.R.P. I think they feared that these two sets of negotiations might collide in our Cabinet and sink each other and they have, therefore, suggested to Nathan that he should not press the financial side of any Canadair deal while Clutterbuck's representations are under consideration in Ottawa.

5. To sum up, the position seems to be that the technical and operating people would like to get Canadairs, and feel that they could meet their dollar costs out of dollar earnings. The Ministry is prepared to accept their conclusions but wants the risk that they may be wrong to be met by us, as the suppliers of the planes, while the Treasury will certainly not wish to see any part of their dwindling dollar reserves allocated for capital outlay which may well prove productive but which they simply do not think they can afford. 2. Pressurized North Star planes now in service on both domestic and Atlantic operations are exceeding our expectations and making an excellent impression on public. We are satisfied that they are a better commercial plane than the Constellation. Therefore we feel that there can be no technical reason for preference for Constellation.

3. Having in mind that North Star power plant is British built, that Canada is largest customer for Rolls Royce engines, we believe Canada is entitled to preference and would feel that we have a legitimate grievance if planes are purchased in the United States.

4. This would seem to be a critical stage of the negotiations and while I know that you have been pressing our case, I will appreciate any last minute effort on your part to help close the transaction.

CONFIDENTIAL

London, June 15, 1948

My dear Secretary of State:

I have been asked to let you know that the Government of Canada hopes that your Government, in determining its civil aviation policies, will give its sympathetic consideration to the merits of the Canadair/4 as a suitable plane for medium and long-range commercial aircraft operation.

The Canadair/4 is a 40 passenger pressurized medium and long range transport aircraft. Its distinguishing feature, i.e. the combination of the DC4—DC6 air-frame with the Rolls Royce Merlin power plant, was developed in Canada, and the aircraft are completely manufactured at the Canadair plant in Montreal. The aircraft is capable of carrying about 15,000 lbs. of payload at speeds approximately that of the best and latest American competitive types. Outstanding features of the aircraft are its low purchase price, low operating cost and low maintenance cost.

Chief of Air Staff of United Kingdom.

The price of a standard Canadair/4 aeroplane is $695,000 at the Company's field in Montreal, Canada. This is less special equipment and less radio, and corresponds to the standard price of $1,050,000 for the 749 Constellation. The Canadair dollar cost, however, would be reduced approximately $100,000 by reason of the fact that the aeroplane uses Rolls Royce power plants which are made in England and may be purchased for sterling.

Deliveries of fifteen Canadair/4 aircraft can be made in one year from date of order.

Earlier versions of the aircraft have been operating across the North Atlantic for more than a year, and pressurized types are now in services on Trans-Canada Air Lines, both across Canada from Montreal to Vancouver, and across the Atlantic from Montreal to London. Operation of the aircraft has been successful, and I am informed that arrangements are now under way for the supply of this aircraft to Canadian Pacific Air Lines for operation on Pacific services.

The manufacturing Company demonstrated these aircraft in this country in May 1947, and again in September 1947, at which time they were thoroughly tested by the technical personnel of the B.O.A.C. and B.S.A.A. Detailed route analyses to ascertain the performance and earning capacity of the Canadair/4 on the routes of the two Corporations have been made, with the assistance of technical personnel from Canadair Ltd., with the result, I am informed, that the Canadair/4 would appear to meet the operating requirements of the Corporations.

I am to add that the Government of Canada attach importance to the conclusion of sales agreements between Canadair Ltd., and the United Kingdom airways corporations, because they regard the continuing production in Canada of modern and efficient civil aircraft as highly desirable in terms of both war and peacetime potential. They would regret the suspension of further manufacture of a plane which is in successful operation on the national and intra-commonwealth services of Trans-Canada Air Lines and in use by the Royal Canadian Air Force.

For these reasons the Government of Canada are prepared to try to work out with the United Kingdom Government such special financial arrangements as might make it feasible for the latter, in present circumstances, to contemplate the purchase of Canadair aircraft for their overseas civil air operations.

Yours sincerely,

N.A. ROBERTSON

[Ottawa], July 2, 1948

Canadair Limited of Montreal has been negotiating for some months for the sale of North Star four-engine aircraft to the British Overseas Airways Corporation. This negotiation has become involved with a political dispute in England centred around the desire of the Department of Supply to force British Overseas Airways Corporation to use Tudor aircraft which the latter believed to be wholly unsuitable for the purpose. The United Kingdom Government had announced last year a policy to use British-made aircraft for all operations of United Kingdom civil airlines. However, the matter was re-opened early this year as a result of the financial losses suffered by British Overseas Airways Corporation which is in need of an economical and efficient aircraft to compete effectively internationally with American airlines.

The Lockheed Corporation, manufacturers of the Constellation aircraft, have also been negotiating with the British for the sale of their aircraft to British Overseas Airways Corporation. Through our High Commissioner we have offered the British more favourable terms should they purchase North Stars than they would receive should they purchase Constellations. We have agreed that payment for Canadairs could be made from the proceeds of sales or redemptions of United Kingdom owned Canadian securities which would otherwise be applied to reduction of the interest-free loan. This offer was qualified in that part of the United States dollar content of the planes, amounting to about 30% of the total cost, (i.e. the purchase price less the sterling cost of the engines) should be paid for in dollars. The payment of United States dollars would be in four equal instalments starting from the date of contract and at each six month period thereafter. Thus the competition from Constellations has been largely overcome. There is now the danger that Tudor aircraft, backed by the United Kingdom manufacturing industry and the Ministry of Supply with powerful support from the Beaverbrook Press, might be given another year to show what they could do in commercial operations.

The correspondence on this subject has been carried on between Mr. Howe and Mr. Robertson and this Department has not been directly concerned. This memorandum has been prepared therefore solely for your information.

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Following for the Right Honourable C.D. Howe from Robertson, Begins: Reference my telegram No. 1123 of July 16th.†

Following is text of letter I have now received from Sir Eric Machtig, Permanent Under-Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations, Begins:

I am glad to be able to inform you that the Cabinet yesterday authorized the purchase by the BOAC of 22 Canadair aircraft, subject to the provisions that no dollar expenditure is involved and that the BOAC undertake that the introduction on their service of new British types, as they become available, is not prejudiced. This decision is to be announced in the course of a speech by the Minister of Civil Aviation in the House of Lords on July 21st. An advance copy of the Minister's statement will be made available to you, in case the Canadian Government wishes to issue a simultaneous statement for their part. It is desired that the matter should be treated as confidential until then. We understand that the BOAC will be approaching Canadair direct in the near future. Ends. Message ends.

WEST INDIAN TRADE DELEGATION

A delegation from the British West Indies is expected to arrive in Ottawa about January 20th and to remain here for a week or ten days. The members are as follows:

Lt. Colonel A.O. Spencer — (Chairman), Economic Adviser, British Guiana.
Hon. Major Alan Storey, D.F.C. — Member of the Legislative Council of Trinidad.
G.G.R. Sharp, Jamaica, and will be accompanied by:

Mr. Stephenson of the Associated West Indian Chamber of Commerce.

2. The purpose of the visit is ostensibly to secure a contract for flour for the coming year on the same terms as the United Kingdom. Unless there are objections on political grounds, the Department of Trade and Commerce is likely to decline such a request. It is recognized that the West Indies may in that event turn to Australia for supplies.

3. It is anticipated, however, that the delegation may wish to raise as well the possibility of a loan and/or the renewal, and possible enlargement of the Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement. Officials of Trade and Commerce would not be favourably disposed to either course unless there are political reasons.

4. With respect to the Trade Agreement of 1925 which is still in force the following points may be noted:

(a) The Agreement extended certain preferences to the West Indies, notably for sugar and citrus fruits. Under the Geneva Agreements of 1947 the West Indies agreed to give up the preference on citrus fruits which were, in fact, of little real importance since we have imported little fruit from the West Indies. We agreed to continue preference on sugar which before the war resulted in a loss to the Canadian Treasury of about 5 to 6 million annually — i.e. we could have bought sugar at the same price elsewhere, e.g. Cuba, without granting preferences.

(b) The Canadian National Steamships agreed to provide scheduled passenger and freight service which until the war was carried at an annual deficit. During the war one ship was lost by enemy action and the service partly interrupted due to the necessities of war. The service has not been fully restored but it is understood that the service, when combined with the services provided with the Alcoa ships, is adequate for the freight offering. It is also understood that the C.N.S. would like to drop the passenger service. The West Indies would no doubt like to have it restored to the full.

(c) Under the Agreement, several West Indian colonies benefiting by the service provided an annual subsidy irrespective of the deficit incurred by the C.N.S. They have thus no inducement to restrict the carriage of freight to the C.N.S. and, in fact, a good deal of the sugar freight is carried by tramps. Several colonies have ceased payment of subsidies since the service has been curtailed.

(d) Notice of termination of the Agreement was given by Canada in 1939, but the war intervened and the Agreement has been allowed to continue, though the steamship service, as explained above, has continued on a reduced basis.

5. On a superficial examination there would not appear to be strong economic or financial reasons for continuing, and even less for enlarging, the West Indian Agreement. It does not appear that the West Indies can provide us with much more in the way of supplies than they are now doing. The Trade Agreement probably has helped to build up a market for Canadian exports, but for the present and the immediate future we are not likely to have a superfluity of goods for export. Nor would aid to the West Indies be likely to have much effect on our U.S. dollar policy.

6. Should the West Indian Delegation raise the question of continuing the Trade Agreement or extending its provisions, officials of Trade and Commerce are disposed to take the line that we have had no notice and that the matter would require extended study, especially in view of the Geneva Agreements, and possible developments at the Havana Conference. They would not be disposed to make any commitments. They would like our approval on this line of policy.

BRITISH WEST INDIES TRADE AND FLOUR DELEGATION

On Tuesday, January 27th, with Mr. Howe, I received a Trade and Flour Delegation representing the Governments of the British West Indies and British Guiana, in my office. Sir Alexander Clutterbuck accompanied the delegation and several Canadian officials were also present.

Lieutenant-Colonel A.O. Spencer (British Guiana), the Chairman of the delegation, presented an aide mémoire.† It emphasized the importance of flour in the economy of the Caribbean Area and the serious fiscal and political difficulties attendant upon its present price. He pointed out the relationship between the flour trade and exports of general merchandise to that area, relating his remarks to shipping difficulties and the present Colonial stringency of dollars.

He requested a long-term flour contract which should be flexible in its quantitative aspects and hoped that if such a contract could be arranged, Canadian exports to the British West Indies market might be given some special consideration.

I told him that I, with my colleagues in the Government, would give most serious consideration to the arguments which he had advanced and that on those arguments, together with a knowledge of our own position, we would hope to reach a decision appropriate to the circumstances. I referred to the attitude of our own producers and to the fact that we had a 5-year wheat pool. I suggested that, at least as far as the remaining portion of this year was concerned, we had almost no room to manoeuvre.

Mr. Howe pointed out that the position in its simplest terms was that, for this year at least, we were already over-sold.

EXTENSION OF TRADE WITH THE BRITISH WEST INDIES

The Department of Trade and Commerce is being subjected to an increasing amount of pressure to institute some action which will result in mitigation of the restrictions now being placed upon imports from Canada into the colonial areas and particularly the British West Indies. Briefs have been received from the Canadian Exporters Association, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the electrical goods manufacturers, and one is understood to be on the way from the pharmaceutical manufacturers. There have also been many individual complaints to the department and to trade commissioners. The matter has also been taken up by a number of members of Parliament and in newspaper articles.

2. The substance of the complaints is that in pursuance of balance of payments restrictions resulting from exchange difficulties of the sterling area, the Colonies have been assigned certain dollar ceilings (the amounts in most cases being unknown to us) as a result of which they are apparently excluding many types of Canadian manufactured goods and buying from this country in the main only the foodstuffs and construction materials which cannot be done without or obtained from sterling sources. This has resulted in eliminating sales by a number of firms and industries which have been active in the colonial market in some instances for 30 or 40 years. As a result of these developments, trade names built up by many years of advertising and selling effort are likely to disappear, dealers and agencies are being compelled to form other connections, employment in the Canadian industries affected is being impaired, and instead of any improvement in the situation being in sight, the prospects are that the situation will become worse. A list of individual complaints is attached. Among the outstanding articles on which such complaints have been received are paints and brushes, cotton textiles, fish (preference given to Newfoundland against Canada), milk, canned goods, coffee and spices, macaroni, confectionery, paper manufactures, footwear, soap and toilet articles, and a number of other items more fully set out in the accompanying list. It is widely believed and stated that the program of restrictions now in force goes beyond dollar saving measures and tends to a permanent diversion of trade from Canada to the United Kingdom which, it is suggested, is to some degree choosing the easier way of monopolizing trade in the sterling area rather than make adequate efforts to sell on world markets for hard currency. While this situation is regarded as existing in the colonial areas as a whole, complaints have been particularly frequent in connection with the British West Indies. We are seeing the development of a state of feeling adverse to the Colonies and to the United Kingdom such as was in evidence prior to the adoption of the token import scheme by the United Kingdom early in 1946.

3. While we have interests in most of the Colonies, we have special interest in the British West Indies. With them we have had a trade agreement which has been running for approximately 21 years, during most of which time its results were mostly in favour of the West Indies. Under this agreement they received and still receive preferences on their major products, especially sugar. Canada also undertook to maintain a shipping service which for many years operated at a deficit, met only to a small degree by contractual subsidies from the Islands. During the war these circumstances were changed. Imports from Canada increased from approximately $14 million a year prewar to something over $75 million in 1947. The steamship services were reduced, unprofitable runs eliminated, and operations for the first time produced a surplus. These conditions will not continue if the present policy of import restriction is carried on. Already the volume of southbound freight available for the Canadian National Steamships has been reduced by about one-third, and although the necessity for ship replacement is impending, the operators are unable to decide to what extent they would be justified in making commitments for the building or purchase of new ships. A reasonably good service is, however, still being maintained. The Colonies at present are paying reduced subsidies. Canada is also in process of providing a substantial air service to the West Indies.

4. The importance of the special relationship existing between Canada and the British West Indies is emphasized by the fact that no direct concessions of any importance were made to the British West Indies at Geneva by any other country. While Canada felt it necessary to reduce some of the less important preferences granted to them, it maintained its major preference on sugar and a number of the less important ones. With the prospective termination of the arrangements under which sugar for Canada is purchased in cooperation with the United Kingdom, the Canadian sugar preference will again become more important, and the Colonies will continue to have an interest in a guaranteed steamship service. On the Canadian side, the established West Indian market is of importance to a very large group of Canadian exporters. In the interests of both Canada and the Colonies, to say nothing of relations with the sterling area as a whole, it will be regrettable if a continuation and intensification of present restrictions results in impairing the relations that have existed for so many years.

5. Canada has a good case for special treatment in its trade relations, especially with the British West Indies. There is a general agreement in Article XII of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (Geneva 1947) that countries are not to apply restrictions to safeguard the balance of payments so as to prevent unreasonably the importation of any description of goods of minimum commercial quantities, the exclusion of which would impair regular channels of trade, and that restrictions applied under this article are to avoid unnecessary damage to the commercial or economic interests of any other contracting party. Apart from this general undertaking however it was acknowledged in the message from the Colonial Office to the Colonies in August 1947 that the British West Indies are particularly dependent upon imports from North America, and in a letter from the office of the United Kingdom High Commissioner to the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce (copy annexed), it was agreed that Canada was entitled to special consideration and the Canadian Government was invited to make special representations where its particular interests might be detrimentally affected.

6. What specific concessions should Canada seek in connection with the British West Indies? A token import scheme based upon prewar trade as in the case of the United Kingdom would probably not be sufficiently extensive to meet the case and would omit a number of the interests which have developed during the past nine years. It is understood that the dollar quotas allotted to the West Indies are based on trade in 1946 and it is suggested that the token import scheme based upon 1946 trade might form the minimum basis of a new arrangement. The situation has been examined in the light of communications received from Canadian exporters and discussed with the Canadian Trade Commissioners from Trinidad and Jamaica, and a tentative list of commodities on which concessions might be sought has been drawn up along with statistics showing 1946 imports of these commodities into the principal colonies from Canada, the United States, the United Kingdom, and all other countries. A scheme of token imports amounting to 20% of 1946 trade with Canada would cost the sterling group approximately $2½ million to which a further $800,000 might have to be added if the identical concessions were extended to the United States. This proposal will not go very far towards maintaining the volume of trade at the present time but it might help to meet the most vigorous criticism on the part of Canadian export interests which foresee the loss of their markets not only in the immediate future but for a very long time to come.<sup>54</sup>

7. In considering an approach to the sterling area authorities in this connection, it may be anticipated that certain objections would be raised.

(a) Cost to sterling area. A cost of about 2½ millions a year for Canada or about 3.3 millions if the United States were included is not large in relation to the value of the good-will involved, and some portion even of this cost might be recovered through a reduction in the purchases from Canada of some of the articles in short supply for which we are less dependent upon the British West Indies market.

(b) While it would be necessary in principle to extend this concession to the United States, the cost of doing so, even if the United States decided to take advantage of the situation, would be limited to some $800,000 a year. If as in the case of the United Kingdom the sterling authorities insisted that the exporting country should carry the responsibility for determining and allocating quotas, it is quite possible that the United States might not in practice insist upon exercising its acknowledged rights.

(c) Would a request along these lines by Canada involve this country in the obligation to give up its own current prohibitions and replace them by a system of token imports? The fact that we now benefit by the United Kingdom token import scheme has not had this effect. Many of our present import restrictions are on a quota basis or stop short of complete prohibitions. It might be argued that we are in general already operating a system of token imports.

(d) Would representations such as those suggested involve a demand for concessions in connection with tomatoes, pineapples, okra, subsidies, preferences and credits? This would very likely be the case but we are already faced by such demands or may expect them. From the opposite point of view, since we are likely to be faced by such demands, it is desirable that we should have a list of concessions to ask in return for whatever we may consider it possible to concede.

Possible Methods of Presentation

We understand that it would be time-consuming and useless to present requests along these lines to the authorities of the Colonies themselves and that the decision would in fact be made in London although in the event of a direct approach to London, it would be courteous to inform a few of the more important import authorities in the British West Indies of the action being taken. The first step in representations along these lines would probably be a conversation with Sir Alexander Clutterbuck after which presentation of the case to the Colonial Office might be made through the Canadian High Commissioner with the assistance of a memorandum and probably one or two representatives from Ottawa. It is probable that any representations of this sort would be supported by the United Kingdom High Commissioner. As for the timing of such representations, there is much to be said for making them as soon as possible, before the damage done to our connections in the British West Indies becomes any worse, and before the probable approach to Canada for additional credits in September.

RELAXATION OF IMPORT RESTRICTIONS IN THE WEST INDIES

RECORD OF CONCLUSIONS REACHED AT DISCUSSIONS HELD BETWEEN CANADIAN AND UNITED KINGDOM OFFICIALS IN LONDON
ON THE 13TH TO 17TH DECEMBER 1948

The officials examined in detail the lists furnished by the Canadian authorities of imports into the British West Indies, which for the purposes of this paper include all British Colonies in the Caribbean, Bermuda, and the Bahamas,<sup>55</sup> about which complaints have been received from Canadian exporters on the grounds that import licences were being refused. The following conclusions were reached.

Bermuda, Bahamas, Jamaica, Barbados, Leeward and Windward Islands, British Guiana and British Honduras.

2. Attached as an annexure is a list of items to which the Canadian authorities attach special importance, including some new items to which attention has recently been called. The list also includes some goods which the West Indies Governments themselves have suggested should be included.

3. The Canadian officials expressed the view that the cost of a relaxation of restrictions, in terms of additional dollar expenditure, should bear a reasonable relation to total Canadian imports into the West Indies in 1946. At the same time it was pointed out by the United Kingdom officials that the pre-war level of trade was very substantially lower than the 1946 level and that from the U.K. point of view this severely limited the amount of any concession which the U.K. would feel able to justify in relation to the cost of the token import scheme operated by the U.K.

4. The U.K. officials agreed to recommend to their Government that a scheme should be adopted with a maximum cost of 3½ million dollars annually to cover additional imports into the British West Indies from hard currency areas. In comparing this figure with the actual imports in 1946 of the goods in question it has to be remembered that many of these are not totally excluded at present, and that the 3.5 million dollars would be additional to the volume of trade in these goods which is currently being licenced.

5. It was proposed that the scheme should operate in the following manner. It was not considered practicable to lay down fixed quotas for each type of goods because of the number of import control authorities in the West Indies and because each of these authorities applies somewhat different methods of import control. The sum of 3.5 million dollars would, therefore, be subdivided between the Colonies in question by the Colonial Office on an equitable basis. Each Colony would be notified by the Colonial Office of its share and would be furnished with the list of goods in the annexure. Each Colony would be invited so to operate its import licensing controls as to permit the spending of the sum mentioned above on additional imports of these goods from hard currency areas. They would be asked to allocate 10% of the total sum for textile piece goods and other items not specifically mentioned in the list. They would be invited to spend 90% of the sum on the imports in the annexure, spreading the sum as widely as possible over the items in the list. In respect of these additional goods, importers would be left freedom of choice as to sources of supply.<sup>56</sup>

6. The U.K. representatives stated that the proposals could not become operative until they had been communicated to the W.I. Governments, and these Governments had had the opportunity to comment. This would be done immediately and it was agreed that if no objection to the scheme were raised by the Colonial Government concerned an agreed statement would be released for publication after 12 o'clock noon Ottawa time on December 30th, 1948.

I. EXTERNAL CREDITS; USE OF UNCOMMITTED BALANCES

1. The Chairman reported that consideration had been given in the Departments of Finance and Trade and Commerce to the despatch of letters to those countries with unexpended balances of Canadian credits still available, informing them that Canada's present foreign exchange position would require that in future certain goods be sold only for U.S. dollars or their equivalent. These goods would include

According to reports by M.W. Mackenzie to both the Interdepartmental and the Cabinet Committee on External Trade Policy on December 22, the sum allocated ($3.5 million) would not be publicized, the relaxations would nominally apply to imports from all hard currency countries, but the instructions from the Colonial Office would favour Canada, the goods selected having been chosen with Canadian interests in mind. The respective reports are on DEA/50092-G-40 and DEA/50091-C-40. The press release agreed by the United Kingdom and Canadian governments linked the agreements to Cripps' visit to Ottawa and made no reference to the value of the concessions.

the main primary export commodities, wheat and grains, flour, copper, lead, zinc and items containing a substantial amount of steel.

In effect this limitation would result in a virtual freezing of the outstanding credits. Countries involved were Belgium, China, Czechoslovakia, Netherlands (including Netherlands East Indies) and Norway. Since certain restrictions on expenditures by China already existed and the amount outstanding for Czechoslovakia was relatively small, only Belgium, Norway and the Netherlands would be substantially affected.

Commodities such as wheat, other grains and flour would not be available in any quantity before the next crop year and control of articles with steel content could be maintained through export permits. It might therefore be desirable to seek the objective of restricting the use of the credits without the despatch of formal letters which might have an unfortunate effect upon the U.S. congressional discussions of the European Recovery Programme, as well as giving the impression of revocation or cancellation of credits.

An explanatory note on the external credits has been circulated.

(Secretary's Note, March 1st and attached memorandum, Department of Finance, February 28, 1948, CCETP Document No. 1).†

2. The Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance explained that a formal letter had been contemplated because Norway and Belgium were accustomed to buy directly in Canada through private channels, and not through any Canadian government agency. It might be possible to arrange informally with those countries for consultation with appropriate governmental representatives before placing orders in Canada.

3. The Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce inquired whether cash purchases made by the countries concerned as a result of the proposed limitation on the use of credit should be credited towards the proportion of cash purchases which the countries concerned had undertaken to make in relation to the use of the credit.

4. The Minister of Finance raised the question of the attitude to be taken towards further use of the credit extended to Czechoslovakia in view of recent developments in that country.

(Memorandum, Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance to Minister of Finance, February 25, 1948).†

5. Mr. Bryce reported that a special proposal had been received from the Netherlands Government which was anxious to be permitted to make use of the balance of its credit, some $20 millions (excluding Netherlands East Indies), before expiry of the loan.

Netherlands representatives had suggested that if permitted to draw on the balance of the loan they would be prepared to meet their parallel commitments to make a given percentage of cash purchases through the purchase of Canadian dollars with U.S. dollars.

6. The Committee, after considerable further discussion agreed:

(a) that it would not be desirable to proceed with the despatch of a formal letter to representatives of countries with outstanding credits in Canada restricting the use of those credits, but that the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance should seek to achieve this end through informal conversations with representatives of the countries concerned, particularly Belgium, Norway and the Netherlands, and should suggest that those countries consult the appropriate governmental representatives in Ottawa regarding the placing [of] orders in Canada;

(b) that no special restriction be placed upon the use of the outstanding credit to Czechoslovakia apart from the general restriction applying to all countries contemplated in (a) above; and

(c) that while it did not appear desirable to make special arrangements to facilitate use of the credit to the Netherlands, the Minister of Finance should discuss the matter further with Netherlands representatives and report.

II. FOREIGN CREDITS; FURTHER USE

3. The Minister of Finance, referring to decision at the meeting of March 2nd, reported that certain additional questions had arisen with regard to the further use of external credits granted by Canada.

4. The Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance explained that the unused portion of the credit to the Netherlands, amounting to a little over $20 millions, would lapse at the end of April. While the Netherlands government was somewhat behind in the proportion of cash purchases which it had undertaken to make in connection with the use of the credit it had now requested that it be permitted to draw the unexpended balance of the credit prior to May 1st and hold it for future payments on Canadian purchases, in return for making up its full proportion of cash purchases.

The French Government had requested permission to cancel a contract for certain barges ordered in Canada to be paid for out of the credit to France; and to use the funds so released for the purchase of certain agricultural machinery now available and manufactured especially for European use.

5. The Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce referred further to the question of continued drawings on the outstanding balance of the credit to Czechoslovakia, amounting to something over $1 million.

While under the policy generally agreed at the meeting of March 2nd Czechoslovakia could obtain certain primary commodities only in return for United States dollars, nevertheless a number of other items, chemicals, for example, would probably be purchased by the Czechoslovakian government on the expectation that they could be paid for out of the credit. Direct repudiation of the balance of the credit by the Canadian government might, however, raise serious questions of policy.

6. The Committee, after further discussion, agreed:

(a) that the Netherlands government be permitted to draw funds from its credit prior to the date of expiry, for subsequent use against commitments made in Canada before the date of expiry, it being understood that prior to any drawings the full amount of the proportion of Netherlands cash purposes would be made up;

(b) that the French government be permitted to cancel contracts placed for the construction of barges and use the funds so released for purchase of agricultural machinery; and

(c) that consideration be given by the Department of Trade and Commerce to extending, in the case of Czechoslovakia, the list of commodities which could be purchased in Canada only in return for dollars.

EXPORT CONTROL

Recent amendments passed by Parliament, when they have received Royal assent will allow a considerable extension of export controls. These at present are limited to specific commodities on a basis of supply, but under the new statute the Governor in Council may authorize the Minister to exercise control by destination, i.e. once a country is designated, the export control authorities will exercise control over all goods exported to that country.

The U.S. government is giving consideration to extension of its own export control system, — partly as a method of seeing that the movement of essentials to ERP recipient countries is maintained and the movement of non-essentials limited, but in large measure as well, based upon strategic and political considerations, to prevent the leakage of vital materials to "satellite" countries either by direct trade or by trans-shipment. This involves the elaboration of a rather complicated policy which has not yet been finally determined. It will, however, be in Canada's interest to integrate its own policy in this respect with U.S. policy and informal assurances have been given that this course will be followed.

Meanwhile, the Department of Trade and Commerce has been pursuing a policy of limited control and no direct efforts have been made to sever trade relations or restrict substantially trade with satellite countries and particularly with Czechoslovakia. Proposed exports of arms or munitions are of course reviewed in each case by the government. Apart from this, normal commercial transactions are allowed to go forward although in specific instances where it is clear that the United States might not grant an export permit in similar instances or where a case is obviously open to some doubt, a permit may be refused or an exporter told there would be little point in applying for a permit. This has happened recently in the case of a proposed order of machine tools for the U.S.S.R.

On the other hand, while an informal arrangement has been worked out by which base metal interests in Canada consult the government before accepting any commitments to, for example, Czechoslovakia, nevertheless there are a substantial number of small orders being placed, particularly by Czechoslovakia for a variety of goods which are being permitted to move forward, — wireless sets, temperature controls and similar technical material as well as certain metals.

One type of case may be fairly easy to deal with, that of the Canadian Council of South Slavs, an organization sympathetic to Yugoslavia which has been collecting funds in Canada and using those funds for purchase of goods in Canada from steam shovels to soldering irons for export to Yugoslavia. Since these exports do not produce foreign exchange and are really purchased with funds supplied by Canadians they could be held up for the present under Foreign Exchange Control Board regulations and in future under the general control of destination of exports.

It will in due course be necessary to consider the extent to which the present measures of control over goods other than direct munitions and arms should be extended to place more limitations upon exports. It should be remembered in this connection that it is exceedingly difficult, outside the direct field of arms and munitions, to determine what is vitally strategic material and what is not. Foodstuffs have now become virtually weapons of war and many other types of goods, both manufactured and unprocessed, can be used for either civil or military purposes. It should also be kept in mind that E.R.P. recipient countries in preparing their programmes, with the knowledge and consent of the U.S. government, based their estimates upon maintenance of a steady flow of trade with the Eastern European satellite countries.<sup>57</sup>

I. EXTENSION OF EXPORT CONTROL POLICY

1. The Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce pointed out that legislation recently approved by Parliament would permit the establishment of export control by area as well as by commodity. The United States had extended its export control policy substantially, on an area basis, and it would be desirable for Canada to undertake similar action.

It was recommended that export controls be extended to cover every area in Europe and North Africa with the exception of the United Kingdom and Northern Ireland. This coverage would be similar to that adopted by the United States with the important difference that the United Kingdom and Northern Ireland were included in the U.S. control areas. For Canada, however, the amount of detailed work involved in a system of permits for all exports to the United Kingdom would be excessive and it would appear appropriate to rely on the effectiveness of U.K. import controls to achieve the same general objectives.

In addition, the Canadian, unlike the U.S. list, included Palestine and Egypt in view of present difficulties in Palestine and the possible use of Egypt as a point of trans-shipment to Palestine.

In dealing with applications for permits, the Department of Trade and Commerce would be governed by the following policy:

(a) Permits would be refused on supply grounds, as at present, and borderline cases, which might be granted for E.R.P. countries, would be refused in respect of Eastern European countries;

(b) Arms, ammunition and implements of war, electronic equipment and radio-active products were already under close export control and the procedure now followed would be continued;

(c) All products of U.S. origin designated by the United States under strict control to Eastern Europe would be refused export permits unless clearance was arranged with Washington.

(d) Permits would not be issued for new contracts covering the sale of nickel, copper, zinc, aluminum or other base metals.

It was not intended to interfere with the movement of reasonable amounts of materials, machine tools or other goods, although the steel shortage would probably lead to a refusal of a permit for any article requiring a substantial amount of steel. Nor was it intended that existing base metal contracts be interfered with; most of these were close to termination in any event.

In any case of any application requiring general interdepartmental consideration in view of problems of policy involved, the Department of Trade and Commerce would rely for consultation on the existing machinery and membership of the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy.

These proposals had been approved by the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(Secretary's note, June 18th, 1948, CCETP Document No. 15).†

2. The Secretary of State for External Affairs suggested that if Palestine and Egypt were to be included in the list of areas designated for export control the remaining Arab states of the Middle East should also be included.

3. The Committee, after further discussion, approved the proposed extension of export controls, subject to the following modifications:

(1) all Arab states of the Middle East to be added to the list of areas designated for control;

(2) in reviewing applications for permits on supply grounds, Finland to be treated somewhat less rigidly than other Eastern European countries; and agreed that an Order in Council be passed accordingly.

TELEGRAM EX-2841

Ottawa, December 13, 1948

SECRET

Your despatch No. 2358 of October 25th† concerning export controls.

The Sub-Committee of the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy has reviewed this problem and has concluded that while there are advantages to be found in close consultation with the United States regarding lists of prohibited and controlled articles it would be unwise to give a hard and fast undertaking to report periodically on the operations of our control of exports.

2. In view of past experience, which has demonstrated that, even with the best will in the world, the State Department is unable to keep Canada informed of changes in U.S. control policy, it is felt that an undertaking to follow absolutely the lists prepared by the U.S. might well lead to refusals of permits by Canada when permits for similar articles were being granted by the United States. Such a situation would be both prejudicial and embarrassing.

3. It is, however, not considered advisable to advance this argument with the U.S. in declining to undertake to be governed by their commodity lists as we might find ourselves asked to accept their assurance that things would be improved in the future if we would agree to be so governed.

4. It has, therefore, been agreed that we will be glad to exchange lists with the U.S. and consult in advance concerning changes but we would not wish to render a report either periodically or otherwise. We would prefer to continue to be governed by the Canadian lists, which are substantially the same as the U.S. ones.

SALE OF MILITARY SUPPLIES TO INDIA AND PAKISTAN

The Deputy High Commissioner for the United Kingdom has left with us, informally and confidentially, the attached memorandum outlining the United Kingdom policy regarding the sale of arms and ammunition to India and Pakistan. Since it contains several queries regarding Canadian policy, a reply appears to be desirable.

The proposed British course is to sell reasonable quantities of military supplies to the Governments of both India and Pakistan out of either production or surplus, and in each case to notify the Government not purchasing of what has been sold to the other. India and Pakistan have agreed to this. Small exports, chiefly of sporting ammunition, will be allowed to private purchasers, both Governments being informed of export licenses granted. No sales to any Government, dominion, provincial or state, in India or Pakistan, will be allowed unless channelled through the military authorities concerned.

Mr. Garner asked whether Canada would (a) consider adopting a similar policy (b) wish to inform India and Pakistan in advance of this decision.

I suggest a reply to the effect that the position in Canada differs from that in the United Kingdom, since we do not regularly manufacture for export and since under the authority of Order-in-Council P.C. 1838, July 30th, 1937, each separate item of export must have specific Government approval. In the circumstances, our taking the initiative in informing the Pakistan and Indian Governments of our policy might well give the impression that we were anxious to secure orders from them for military supplies. If and when we are approached on the subject we could reply that our regular practice is to require a separate authorization for each shipment, and at that time might well consider following the United Kingdom course of notifying each Government of the purchase made by the other.<sup>58</sup>

MANUFACTURE OF ARMS IN CANADA FOR EXPORT

Your division has been informed that the Netherlands is interested in purchasing 10,000 barrel assemblies for 9mm. Sten guns for shipment to Holland; these barrels can be obtained from Canadian Arsenals Limited for $20,000 and the Netherlands Government is prepared to make payment in United States dollars.

2. I understand that this proposed sale is from current production and not from surplus war assets, and that this would be the first export from Canada of arms from current production.

3. It is therefore clearly necessary that the matter be referred to Cabinet, so that Cabinet may have an opportunity to decide whether Canada wishes to embark on a policy of manufacturing arms for export (a) from government plants, (b) from privately-owned plants.

4. A strategic-economic argument for so doing is that it will make it easier for us to maintain the basis of an armaments industry in Canada which can be rapidly expanded when necessary. This aspect of the problem should be carefully examined by the government's advisers in other departments of the government. Presumably, a peace-time Canadian armaments industry would be relatively small and should concentrate on certain types of arms. The decision on which arms to concentrate should be made by the Canadian authorities in the light of Canadian requirements in war. Therefore, if we accept orders from abroad, we should accept them only for such arms as we have decided to manufacture in Canada. Otherwise our armaments industry may become unplanned.

5. An economic argument is that sales of arms in return for hard currency will help our foreign exchange position. This argument is valid only in so far as

(a) the foreign countries are not diverting to arms U.S. dollars which they otherwise would have used for other Canadian purchases (possibly with a smaller U.S. dollar content);

<sup>58</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:
Agreed. St. Laurent

(b) the manufacture of arms in Canada is not at the expense of diverting men and materials from the manufacture of other goods for export in return for U.S. dollars.

6. The political argument in favour of our manufacturing arms for export is that this will enable us to provide our friends with arms, and thus strengthen them against the Soviet Union.

7. The political argument against our manufacturing arms for export is that by so doing the Canadian Government will deliberately be creating for itself a series of new and difficult problems in foreign relations which we have hitherto been able to avoid: since we would presumably not be willing to sell to all comers, we would from time to time be faced with the necessity of deciding whether to accept or reject orders from countries A, B, C, etc. Decisions will be relatively easy if the countries are the Netherlands, Belgium, France and the members of the Commonwealth on the one hand, or the Soviet Union, Roumania, Bulgaria, etc. on the other hand. The marginal countries in Europe and the Latin American countries with their dangers of civil wars will create difficulties. It is easier for a great power to decide between such claimants than for a power of the size of Canada. Since our exports of arms from current production would presumably be small, I doubt whether on political grounds it is on balance in Canada's interests to engage in the traffic.

8. I am attaching two extra carbons of this memorandum since I assume you will wish to place one copy on a general policy file on the export of arms (225-S) and another copy on the file on this Netherlands request.

ESCOTT REID

P.S. If the decision is made to accept the Netherlands order I would assume that we would make the usual condition that the arms are not to be used in Indonesia.

EXPORT OF ARMS FROM CURRENT PRODUCTION

Hitherto all arms and ammunitions actually exported from Canada have been from surplus war material and not from current production. Cabinet had approved a sale for export from current production on June 27, 1946, but the actual sale did not take place, as the price quoted was considered too high by the applicant state, the Netherlands.

The United States Government has been selling arms to China and, in view of recent political developments in China, the United Kingdom have recently decided to do likewise.

According to the Minister of National Defence, we now have large stocks of arms and ammunition in Canada and until these are used up or until new weapons are designed and adopted there will not be much occasion for the manufacture of arms in Canada for the use of our own forces. However, the Minister feels that it is of great importance to us to maintain in Canada the facilities and the skills suitable for producing arms so that we will have in Canada the nucleus of a munitions industry which can be expanded in emergency. In his opinion, it would be very difficult to maintain such a nucleus merely on the basis of Canadian purchases.

If the export of arms from current production is to be used to help build up the nucleus of a Canadian munitions industry, it would appear essential to accept only those orders which fit with our own plans for a munitions industry. Otherwise, the acceptance of foreign orders might result in our building up a munitions industry which would not be of the type best suited for our national defence.

It would seem that, in the light of the present international situation, the sales of arms from current production should be permitted and encouraged to countries which are potential allies and whose regimes are on the whole democratic, provided that,

(a) The order is on behalf of a government. This will minimize possible black market operations.

(b) The arms requested are of a kind which, if manufactured in Canada, would serve to develop the Canadian munitions industry in the way in which the Canadian Government wishes it to develop. This will ensure the best use of our economic resources, such as manpower, steel, etc.

If this principle is approved, it is suggested that the sale of arms from current production be put on the same basis as the sale of arms from surplus stocks, that is to say, each request, on recommendation of the Department of External Affairs, will be submitted to Cabinet for approval.

We have two requests for the purchase of arms from current production, there are:

(1) A request from the Netherlands Purchasing Commission in New York for 10,000 barrel assemblies for 9mm sten guns, mk. 2 and mk. 3, for shipment to Holland. These barrel assemblies might be obtained out of new production from Canadian Arsenals Limited at a price of approximately $2.00 each. The Netherlands is prepared to make payment in U.S. dollars.

(2) A request from the Chinese Government Supply Agency for 100,000 rounds of 7.92 ammunition for shipment to China. This ammunition can also be produced by Canadian Arsenals Limited at a price of approximately $53.00 per thousand rounds. The Chinese Government Supply Agency is prepared to make payment in U.S. dollars.

I would recommend approval of each of these sales.<sup>59</sup>

CIRCULAR DOCUMENT NO. A.115

Ottawa, May 1, 1948

SECRET

Sir,

During the past six or eight months the progressively worsening international situation has led an increasing number of foreign governments or their agents to evince considerable interest in the purchase of Canadian arms, ammunition and military supplies. In the circumstances, you will understand that such matters must be handled with considerable discretion. I suggest, therefore, that if you receive a direct approach, or learn indirectly of any enquiries regarding Canada as a source of military supplies and materials capable of being turned to a military use, you should take particular care to keep the Department promptly and fully informed. In this way, it should be possible to avoid commitments which, upon fuller examination, prove to be undesirable or embarrassing. For your guidance in this matter, I give below a comprehensive account of the present arrangements for controlling the export of arms and military supplies from Canada, and of some considerations which have guided us.

2. Since the passing of Order in Council P.C. 1838, July 30th, 1937, amended by P.C. 2488, April 8th, 1941, the export of goods with a potential military use has been possible only under permit, issued at the present time by the Export Permit Branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce. After the end of the war, an exception was made in favour of surplus equipment in the hands of War Assets Corporation, to which a general export authorization has been given. Canadian Commercial Corporation is exempt from export permit requirements. In the spring of 1946, however, the Government decided that all exports of materials of potential military value, except those to the United States and the countries of the British Commonwealth, should be subjected to a very careful scrutiny, and gave the Department of External Affairs the responsibility of examining each case on its merits. Recommendations for Cabinet consideration were to be prepared when it appeared to the Department that a request might be granted; unsuitable export sales the Department was authorized to refuse at the official level.

3. There are three ways in which requests for the export of military materials, whether from surplus or from current production, have been brought to our attention. War Assets Corporation refers any such proposals to us for consideration at the outset of negotiations; applications for export permits reaching the Export Permit Branch are sent to this Department for examination before they are approved; and when a prospective foreign market for military supplies has come to the attention of the Canadian Commercial Corporation, the latter requests policy guidance before proceeding further.

4. There have been times when the exact degree of military significance to be attached to certain items, for example radar sets, parachutes, or obsolete training planes, was not easy to decide. In such cases, the political acceptability of the proposed recipient and the probable use to which the goods were to be put were frequently the factors which determined whether the sale should be authorized. Until very recently, all export sales had been from Government surplus or, in the case of private companies, from stocks existing at the close of the war. Within the last month, however, it has been decided to authorize the export of arms and ammunition from current production, subject to the safeguards described above. There were further provisos that orders would be accepted only on behalf of foreign governments and only for types of equipment which would serve to develop the Canadian arms industry in a manner useful to our own defence plans and to sustain the minimum potential considered necessary.

5. One consideration which led to the decision to permit exports from current production was the fact that the United States and United Kingdom Governments had recently somewhat relaxed their control on the sale of arms, notably to the Chinese Government. In the light of this decision by the two major powers, it appeared that the Canadian Government, though it might lose much by an embargo on the export of arms, could not hope, by adopting such an embargo, to make any major contribution to world peace.

6. It will be obvious to you that in a matter of this kind it is impossible to lay down hard-and-fast rules governing the relative eligibility of prospective purchasers of Canadian military equipment. The political position is apt to change at short notice and requires careful study as a preliminary to a decision in each individual case. Moreover, when large sales of valuable equipment are in question, it is necessary to consider also the probable reaction of Canadian public opinion. Nevertheless, the following remarks may serve as general guidance.

7. In certain cases we have required an inclusion of an undertaking in the sale contract that the goods would not be resold. It has nevertheless been our experience that neither this nor any other expedient is really effective in controlling the end use made of Canadian equipment sold abroad. It is not our view that we can accept responsibility for the end use. Nevertheless, in view of the likelihood that certain types of buyers will divert supplies to international trouble spots such as Palestine, Indonesia, or some of the Central American republics, it is our practice to take all reasonable precautions to ascertain ahead of time the proposed use to which equipment will be put. We also try to co-ordinate Canadian policy with that of the United Kingdom and the United States, to the extent at least that similar considerations of interest apply.

8. I do not propose in this despatch to attempt either an assessment or a description of the broad political considerations which must guide the Canadian Government in making decisions on the export of military equipment. My purpose has been only to offer you a working knowledge of the system which has been developed for the control of such exports, and to indicate the importance of your giving careful attention, in the light of the information I have supplied, to any requests for Canadian equipment which may come to your notice.

A request has been received from the Chinese Supply Agency for 5,071,000 rounds of .30 calibre ammunition. These stores are held by War Assets Corporation and will be sold for $50,710. If purchased by the Chinese Government the monies would come out of that portion of the Canadian loan which is earmarked for purchases of stores from War Assets Corporation. Under the provisions of the Loan Agreement we would obtain from this transaction not more than $10,000 in U.S. currency.

I would normally recommend that this sale be not approved for the following reasons:

- (a) The internal political situation in China shows no signs of improving.
- (b) It is probable that there will be objections from Canadian citizens to this sale in much the same manner as the Canadian public reacted following the sale to China in August 1947 of Mosquito aircraft.
- (c) The small amount of U.S. dollars which will accrue to Canada from the transaction.

However, Mr. Roy Peers, who acts in Ottawa on behalf of the Chinese Supply Agency, is at the present time in China and has been communicating direct with Mr. Howe concerning availabilities of Canadian arms and ammunition for shipment to China. He has enquired concerning:

- 2,044 Bren guns
- 18,000 9mm Browning pistols
- 250,000 Sten guns
- 9,000,000 rounds 9mm ammunition

The price for the above items has been quoted at approximately $3,000,000 U.S. and Mr. Howe has given an indication that insofar as he is concerned he would be agreeable to such a sale being made to the Chinese Government. It is obvious that if the larger deal is to be approved there would be little useful purpose served in turning down this present request for some 5,000,000 rounds of ammunition. It is possible, therefore, that before making a decision on this present submission you may wish to discuss with Mr. Howe the whole question of sales of military equipment to the Chinese Government.

We have received a despatch from London to the effect that a Mr. Wijkander, Director General of the Bofors Armament Works in Sweden, is interested in establishing a branch of the Bofors Company in Canada. What the Company has in mind to begin with is to find a manufacturer, either Government sponsored or private, who would produce in Canada ammunition and perhaps later, weapons, under contract for the Bofors Company. In other words, they would send the necessary drawings and specifications and a few technicians to Canada, the Bofors Company would make the contracts for the sale of their products and then the products would be produced in Canada by the above mentioned manufacturer.

The reasons put forward by Mr. Wijkander for the establishment of a Canadian plant were:

- (a) The generally deteriorating international situation.
- (b) A very pronounced fear on the part of European countries which normally purchase weapons and ammunition from Bofors, that continuing supply, including spare parts and replacements, in the event of hostilities would be threatened because of the danger of the European plant being quickly overrun from the East.
- (c) Preference for Canada over the United States because of difficulties that his Company has had with the United States Government in the past over the interpretation of contracts.

The advantage to Canada in authorizing such a project can be summed up in the acquisition by this country of superior technique. We see no political objection to the project unless there is objection to the whole idea of expanding armament facilities at this time. On the other hand the increase of such facilities would increase the value of the contribution that Canada could make to collective democratic action in war against an aggressor.

The disadvantage lies mainly in the fact that virtually all the production of the proposed plant would be for export, and we are not sure what effect this might have upon the export business of Canadian Arsenals. Bofors exports would, of course, be subject to the usual conditions of control.

Perhaps you would like to discuss this matter with Mr. Howe and indicate your views in order that we may advise Mr. Robertson what sort of reply should be conveyed to Mr. Wijkander.

Ottawa, July 8, 1948

We have become involved recently in several enquiries on the subject of export of arms and ammunition. You will recall that in my memorandum of June 29th, I brought to your attention two separate requests from the Chinese Government and since then there have been enquiries from Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, India and Pakistan.

We were rather embarrassed over the weekend by telephone calls from the Press in connection with a press release issued by Dominion Arsenals in Quebec City which announced in somewhat florid terms that production for an order of the Chinese Government had commenced which would provide work for more than twelve months. This particular order is one which was approved by Cabinet as early as last April and amounts to 100,000 rounds of 7.92 ammunition. We feel strongly that the Department must exercise some guidance in the issuance of press releases which involve matters of such importance internationally and where public reaction is as vocal as it is on the subject of arms traffic. This matter has been discussed with General MacQueen, President of Canadian Arsenals, and the principle established that press statements from his Company on this subject should invariably come before us prior to release.

You will remember in the larger of the two Chinese Government orders specified in my memorandum of June 29th, the negotiations leading up to the final application for Cabinet approval were conducted direct between Roy Peers and Mr. Howe. You may feel that a discussion between yourself and Mr. Howe on the advisability of somewhat earlier reference to this Department would be desirable in large orders where public reverberations might be expected.

SALE OF ARMS TO INDIA AND PAKISTAN

12. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that a decision was required as to whether or not sales of arms to India and Pakistan should be permitted. An agent of the Indian government had been discussing with Canadian Arsenals Limited the placing of an order for 100,000 rifles and 100,000,000 rounds of .303 ammunition. Preliminary enquiries had also been made by the Pakistani and Indian governments as to the availability of small arms and small arms ammunition. No reply had as yet been given.

The arguments for and against granting permission were reviewed: Apart from the material advantages of such sales to Canada, it was to be noted that refusal would probably be resented in both India and Pakistan and might well be interpreted as discriminatory. On the other hand, Pakistani troops were now being employed against Indian troops in Kashmir and both governments were now considering a proposal from the UN Commission for a "cease fire". Further, the situation in Hyderabad might result in fighting between Indian and Pakistani troops. In these circumstances the sale of arms to either or both might be considered an encouragement to war between two members of the Commonwealth. The old principle of equality in treatment to all members of the Commonwealth might be regarded as no longer applicable.

It might be argued that the small arms and ammunition which were requested were primarily for use in maintaining internal order; their acquisition might be differentiated from that of heavy equipment suitable for extensive military operations.

13. Mr. St. Laurent said that there were two main questions upon which direction was required at present:

(a) whether Canada should sell arms and ammunition to both India and Pakistan, to one of these countries or to neither; and,

(b) if it were decided to sell, whether some limitation should be placed on the types to be supplied, e.g., arms and ammunition in quantity and kind which seemed appropriate for police and military training purposes.

(External Affairs memorandum, Sept. 1, 1948). †

14. The Prime Minister drew attention to the political difficulties involved in any general policy of indiscriminate sale of weapons of government manufacture. No ground should be given for the charge that the government were engaged in the manufacture and sale for profit of armaments for aggressive purposes. On the other hand, discriminatory treatment between members of the Commonwealth afforded real difficulty. Each individual request should be dealt with on its merits.

15. The Cabinet, after further discussion, agreed:

(a) that requests for the purchase of arms and ammunition should continue to be dealt with on an individual basis and on their merits in each case;

(b) that the governments of India and Pakistan should be dealt with on equal bases; and,

(c) that, considering the quantity and nature of the order which the government of India desired to place with Canadian Arsenals Limited (small arms and ammunition), its acceptance be approved.

SALE OF ARMS TO CHINA

The Chinese Government Supply Agency has approached the Canadian Commercial Corporation to purchase and export to China the following military material, on their behalf:

(a) 2036 Bren guns. These would be paid for in United States Dollars, and the selling price would be approximately $412,000.00.

(b) 5,071,000 rounds of .30 calibre cartridges. These would be charged against the Canadian loan to China which is earmarked for the purchase of stores from War Assets Corporation. The approximate selling price would be $50,710.00.

(c) 126,000 rounds of 7.92 ammunition. This item would be charged against the Canadian loan to China and the approximate selling price would be $3,780.00.

Under the provisions of the Loan Agreement not more than twenty per cent (approximately $11,000.00) in United States currency would be obtained from items (b) and (c).

Within the past year we have sold to the Chinese Government 200 surplus Mosquito bombers with accompanying ammunition; 100,000 rounds of 7.92 ammunition; 125 Pratt-Whitney aircraft engines; and 200 Harvard trainer aircraft.

There are several considerations which I feel should be brought to your attention in considering the present request:

(a) The internal political situation in China continues unsettled. It is becoming less and less likely that the Chiang Kai-shek Government will ever be able to bring northern China under its control.

(b) Canadian missionary and commercial interests in Northern China may suffer if it becomes known that Canada is exporting large quantities of arms for the use of the National Government of China.

(c) There was strong objection raised by some members of the Canadian public following the sale to China of Mosquito aircraft a year ago. Since that time there has been a considerable amount of adverse comment regarding Canadian support of the National Government.

It will be possible to avoid the criticism mentioned in the previous paragraph if we take a negative position and turn down the present application on its own merits and not as an instance of a general policy not to export arms to China.

On the other hand, the practical effect of refusing the application would be to make more difficult the task of the Chinese National Government, which we recognize and with which we exchange diplomatic representatives.

Considerations in favor of permitting the sale and export are:

(a) By refusing permission to export quantities of arms and ammunition to the Nationalist Government indirect aid would be extended to the Communist forces in northern China.

(b) The Chinese Ambassador in Ottawa has made special representation with respect to the supply of Bren guns. He states that these guns are urgently needed by the Provincial Government of Kwangtung in connection with the suppression of local disorders and of smuggling in and around the Canton area. Having in mind the internal police problems of the area, I feel that the present request is reasonable, and that the weapons are not intended for offensive purposes. As Kwangtung is in southern China it is not likely that this equipment is intended for use in the civil war taking place in northern China.

(c) The United States is supplying large quantities of arms to China, and is even financing the sale to a large extent. The United Kingdom has also supplied some items of military equipment. By comparison, the quantity of arms and ammunition included in the present application is insignificant.

On balance, therefore, I recommend that the export of the above-mentioned items be approved.<sup>62</sup> equipment to the United Kingdom and United States, the policy of Cabinet has been to review each individual proposal for sale of arms to foreign governments on its own merits.

The phrase which has been used from time to time in the Cabinet conclusions on this subject has been "arms and ammunition". The phrase "military equipment" has been employed in the present memorandum as being more comprehensive of the items with respect to which approval for export should be sought.

The responsibility for the issuing of export permits lies with the Department of Trade and Commerce. However, insofar as applications are received requesting permission to export military equipment, the Department of External Affairs is consulted. Likewise, the Canadian Commercial Corporation and War Assets Corporation which have the authority to export without obtaining export permits, consult this Department before authorizing exports of military equipment.

It would, of course, be necessary to continue our present policy of maintaining a distinction between military equipment for use in continental Europe and in colonial areas such as the Netherlands East Indies and French Indochina. Where military equipment is destined for colonial areas we should continue to seek Cabinet decision in each instance.<sup>63</sup>

EXPORT OF MILITARY EQUIPMENT TO INDIA AND PAKISTAN

Applications have been received for permission to purchase in Canada and export to India and Pakistan large quantities of military equipment.

2. Requests for some quantities of small arms and ammunition have already been approved by Cabinet, but permission to export major items of military equipment has been refused because of the danger of a full-scale war growing out of the disputes concerning Kashmir and Hyderabad. The likelihood of such a conflict now appears considerably less.

3. The following points are pertinent in considering the present applications:

(a) Because of the heavy initial costs of tooling-up Canadian manufacturers of military equipment require export sales in order to reduce the cost of similar equipment for the Department of National Defence.

(b) Export orders would provide a nucleus of manufacturing capacity which could be expanded in the event of hostilities.

(c) There has been no resolution of the Security Council of the United Nations which would require Canada to forbid the export of military equipment to these countries, although items concerning Kashmir and Hyderabad have been on the Security Council agenda for some time and final disposition of them has not yet been made. The United Kingdom has been supplying military equipment to both India and Pakistan since the partition in August, 1947.

(d) During the recent meeting of Prime Ministers in London the representatives of both India and Pakistan stressed the importance of maintaining military strength in their respective countries in order to provide a defence against Soviet expansion and Communism at home. Adequate defence arrangements for the Indian sub-continent are strategically of great value to Canada and the Western Powers. Should China be overrun by the Communists the whole of south-east Asia might come under Communist influence.

4. The problem is one of weighing the relative merits of two alternative courses of action:

(a) Abstention from any act which might be construed as contributing to warfare between India and Pakistan.

(b) The adoption of measures to increase the military strength of these two countries both of which are opposed to Communism, and provide what may be the only secure base of operations available in the area to the south of the Soviet Union.

On balance, it would appear that the Canadian strategic interest lies with the granting of permission to export all types of military equipment to India and Pakistan. Pakistan is likely to require a greater variety and larger quantities of military equipment than India as the latter has an armament manufacturing industry.

5. The representative of India here, when approached informally, made it clear that he considers that Canada should, as a matter of course, sell arms to another member of the Commonwealth. If we decided to sell we might tell both India and Pakistan that we were going to do this.

6. An application has been received from the High Commissioner for India for permission to export 289,000 4.2" Mortar Bombs. A similar application was previously refused by Cabinet on October 12th, 1948 when it was received through other channels.

7. Representatives of the Government of Pakistan have inquired whether permission would be granted for export of small arms ammunition, artillery ammunition, mortar bombs, engineer explosive stores, small calibre guns, wireless equipment, military vehicles and Army medical equipment. Some of these items have not been ordered in firm quantities, but if permission is granted for their export firm orders will undoubtedly be placed as soon as estimates of cost can be supplied by the Canadian manufacturers. As the preparation of estimates of cost requires much time and expense, the manufacturers desire, in this instance, to ascertain in advance whether there will be any objection to the export.

8. Therefore, I recommend that the representatives of the Governments of India and Pakistan be informed that firm orders for military equipment of the nature mentioned above will be entertained, subject to review in the event that conditions change. I further recommend that approval be given at this time for the export of the following specific quantities of military equipment:

(a) For export to India:

289,000 4.2" Mortar Bombs.

(b) For export to Pakistan:

20,000 PIAT Bombs

24 OQF 40-mm Bofors guns with mountings and authorized spares.

12 40-mm Bofors Guns Mark III with mountings
and authorized spares.

Small arms ammunition as shown in items 1-8 and 87-89 of Annex "A" hereto.

Mortar Bombs as shown in items 9-23 of Annex "A".

Engineer Explosive Stores as shown in items 24-51 and 86 of Annex "A".

Artillery ammunition as shown in items 52-85

I. PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF A BOFORS FACTORY IN CANADA

1. The Minister of National Defence, as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that an informal approach had been made to the Canadian government by Norwegian [sic: Swedish] interests concerning the establishment in Canada of a Bofors munitions factory.

While the Canadian Armed Forces might use some of the production from such a factory, the quantities needed by the peacetime forces of Canada alone would not be sufficient to ensure profitable operation.

2. The Minister of Trade and Commerce pointed out that Canadian Arsenals Limited were capable of producing the equipments in question, and it would not be good policy to assist in establishing a competitor. If the Norwegian [sic] interests were interested in granting a manufacturing license to Canadian Arsenals Limited, this might be considered.

3. The Committee, after further discussion, agreed that the Canadian government should not now assist in the establishment of a Bofors factory in Canada, but that if the company wished to discuss arrangements whereby Bofors equipment would be manufactured in Canada by Canadian Arsenals Limited, proposals of this kind would be considered.

MERCHANT SHIPPING POLICY

The Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy has considered problems relating to merchant shipping policy brought forward by the Chairman of the Canadian Maritime Commission and submits the following report:

The Canadian merchant marine is affected detrimentally by certain provisions of the U.S. Economic Cooperation Act, and by the shipping policy of European and other countries. While Canada will have approximately 1.2 million tons of shipping available for the carriage of E.C.A. cargoes, recipient countries are now using every means in their power to ensure movement of goods in their own vessels.

The E.C.A. statutory provision that, as far as practicable, 50 per cent of E.C.A. supplies purchased in the United States shall be carried in U.S. vessels will probably draw back into trade a considerable number of inactive U.S. vessels. Other ships, owned by European nations and now occupied in trade with the United States will turn to alternative trade routes, and, — since Canadian costs are higher than those of European nations although lower than those of the United States, Canadian shipping will be placed at a competitive disadvantage. In carriage of E.C.A. supplies in other than U.S. ships, recipient countries will prefer to use their own ships, because of their desire to conserve limited supplies of dollars and to make the maximum use of resources at their disposal.

Instances of discrimination against Canadian shipping are already evident. In the carriage of timber, for instance, the United Kingdom is offering Canadian companies a charter rate of $32.50 per M, as against $40.00 per M or its equivalent being paid to British liner companies. It is understood, also, that the British Ministry of Food has in some cases refused to charter Canadian ships from Montreal. Not only the United Kingdom, but practically every foreign government is taking active steps to protect its national shipping.

The Canadian government has already decided that the maintenance of a small but efficient Canadian merchant marine is in the national interest. In line with this policy, the government is encouraging reduction of the total number of vessels and replacement of existing ships by faster and more economical units. Although at present private owners are operating 1,263,000 tons of dry cargo vessels and, in addition, some seventy vessels chartered to the U.K. government will be returned during 1948 and 1949, the ultimate size of the Canadian merchant marine will likely be about one million tons, a fleet small in relation to the total volume of Canadian trade and to Canada's position in the world. During the present period of transition before the fleet is fully modernized and able to compete without special assistance, it remains necessary to find employment for a substantial number of vessels.

Special arrangements connected with any further use of Canadian credits or sale of Canadian goods, designed to ensure use of Canadian vessels are not because of their discriminatory nature, desirable in the long run, and are inconsistent with multilateralism; nevertheless the policies of the United States and other maritime countries in protecting their merchant fleets leave Canada no alternative. Canada's ability to bargain in this connection relates only to commodities in short supply and in regard to which the government can exercise some control over exports, formal or informal. These would include mainly wheat, lumber and base metals. The bargaining position is clearly strongest where Canadian credits to foreign countries are involved.

In the circumstances, the Committee recommends:

(a) that in any future consideration the government may give to further drawings on Canadian credits to the United Kingdom or other countries, or in any new arrangements for major purchase by other countries of basic Canadian commodities, the government should seek to ensure reasonable use of the Canadian merchant fleet — reasonable use being suggested as the 1947 basis, when 14 per cent of total Canadian exports were carried in Canadian ships;

(b) that the special Canadian representative appointed to maintain contact with the operations of E.C.A. and recipient countries in Europe be directed to assist, wherever possible, the utilization of Canadian vessels in the carriage of goods purchased in this country;

(c) that the Canadian Ambassador to the United States be asked to explain to the appropriate U.S. authorities the difficulties presently confronting the Canadian merchant marine in carrying a reasonable proportion of Canadian trade, as a result of the shipping policies adopted over recent months by other countries.<sup>65</sup>

Ottawa, September 30, 1948

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir:

During the visit to Ottawa last week of Sir Stafford Cripps and a party of United Kingdom officials, the subject of a Canadian mercantile fleet was raised and was discussed in some detail with Sir Henry Wilson-Smith by Mr. Clyne, the Chairman of the Canadian Maritime Commission, and Mr. Moran of this Department.

It was explained that Canada has developed a large ship-building industry and has built a fleet of ships far beyond anything which we had attempted to maintain prior to 1939. We are now experiencing increasing difficulties in obtaining cargoes for carriage in Canadian flag bottoms and are approaching the time when we must decide whether we should continue the operation of these vessels. It is the belief of the Canadian Government that it should have a reasonable merchant fleet not only because of Canada's position as an exporting nation but also in the common interests of North Atlantic defence. This latter argument carried some weight with Sir Henry and he undertook to discuss the question with the appropriate United Kingdom authorities on his return to London and ascertain whether it would be possible to arrange for a percentage of exports from Canada to the United Kingdom to be carried in Canadian ships. He pointed out, of course, that the United Kingdom Government would be unwilling to accept substitute shipping services in the North Atlantic which would have to be paid for in dollars, nor would it wish to transfer dollar earners from this route.

It was agreed that the Chairman of the Maritime Commission would prepare a memorandum on the subject which would assist Sir Henry in his discussions with the Ministry of Transport and other appropriate officials in the United Kingdom. I am enclosing herewith two copies of this memorandum† which you might be good enough to hand over to Sir Henry Wilson-Smith. It is my own view that although the memorandum refers to the defence aspects of the problem it does not, in its present form, emphasize sufficiently the important relationship of a sizeable merchant fleet and ship-building industry in Canada to the establishment of a strong North Atlantic community. It might be helpful, therefore, if, when delivering this memorandum, you could find the opportunity of supplementing it with some observations on these points.

I have etc.,

ICAO HEADQUARTERS AGREEMENT

The Secretary General of the International Civil Aviation Organization<sup>1</sup> has requested that negotiations be entered into between this Department and the ICAO Secretariat concerning a Headquarters Agreement between Canada and ICAO.

The Secretary General has suggested that the Canadian authorities enable him to place a draft agreement before the January meeting of the Council in preparation for approval by ICAO Assembly in Geneva in June.

It is assumed that by "Headquarters Agreement" ICAO means a "site" agreement similar to that made by the United States Government with the United Nations for the establishment of the seat of the United Nations in New York and the granting of various privileges and immunities.

The Legal Division, which until recently was the Division dealing with United Nations privileges, suggests that the request for negotiations is a reasonable one in principle. But, in view of the many complex questions which a Headquarters Agreement will raise not only in connection with federal law, but also with provincial and municipal law, it seems likely that the negotiations will, of necessity, be protracted and that it would not be possible for this Department to prepare a satisfactory draft in time for the January meeting of the ICAO.

An interim reply has been sent to the Secretary-General of ICAO to the effect that his request was under consideration.

I should be glad if you would indicate your approval, or otherwise, of the following points:

1. That an official reply be sent to the Secretary-General of ICAO that the Canadian authorities are willing to enter into negotiations for a Headquarters Agreement. That, however, the Canadian Government will not be ready to submit a draft agreement this month as requested in Dr. Warner's<sup>2</sup> letter.

2. That the negotiations should consist of three phases:

(a) A draft Agreement, to be prepared by the Department. This draft to conform as closely as possible to the United States theory and practice; to outline the privileges which the Canadian Federal Government is prepared to extend, and to be approved by you and by interested Federal Departments.

(b) Consultations might then be held by the Department of External Affairs with the Province of Quebec and the City of Montreal (in two stages) on the basis of the draft agreement.

(c) Negotiations might then be undertaken by the Canadian Government with ICAO.

3. That a written reply be sent to the Secretary General of ICAO informing him that the Canadian Government agrees in principle to his Organization's request for a Headquarters Agreement, but that a draft Agreement will not be ready this month.<sup>3</sup>

DIPLOMATIC STATUS FOR ICAO COUNCIL MEMBERS

Since our letter last month† to Dr. Edward Warner, President of the Council of ICAO, conveying the Canadian Government's agreement in principle to the discussion of a Headquarters Agreement, Dr. Warner has, with increasing persistence, pressed for the granting to the members of the Council of what he calls "full diplomatic status" apart from, and in advance of, the conclusion of the Headquarters Agreement negotiations.

Yes. St. L[arent]

2. There is no doubt that Dr. Warner, who has full taxation exemption privileges himself, is under considerable pressure from the Council members, (who have not) and that he is aware, as we are, that negotiations or discussions between the Department and the Province of Quebec, and between the Department and the City of Montreal, are bound to take time.

3. I suggest for your consideration that we might grant to the Council members as soon as we can arrange it with the Department of National Revenue, exemption from federal Customs and Excise duties. This action would have the advantage of assuring ICAO that we are doing everything we can to expedite matters; on the other hand, it might deprive us of a good bargaining point in the forthcoming Headquarters Agreement negotiations. In view of Dr. Warner's urgent requests for early action, his "concern at the delay" and "particular anxiety", I suggest that we inform Dr. Warner that we will at once, as a gesture of good will, grant exemption from federal Customs and Excise Duties. This action does not include all the privileges which ICAO Council Members want under the umbrella of "full diplomatic status".<sup>4</sup>

4. Item 706 of the Customs Tariff provides that articles for the personal use of "representatives of foreign countries" and for the personal use of their families, suites or servants may be admitted to Canada free of Customs duty provided that the Governor in Council may withdraw any of the privileges when reciprocity is refused by a country. Thus, if the Department of National Revenue were so minded, it might be possible to enlarge the privileges which Order in Council P.C. 94/2595 of July 4, 1947 granted to the president, secretaries-general and representatives of Council members at that time in order to meet the requirements of the interim arrangements made on April 30, 1947 with ICAO. It might also be possible, should the Department of National Revenue be so minded, to grant further exemptions from Excise duties and taxes by amending P.C. 93/2595 of July 4, 1947. This, however, would require careful examination by National Revenue if you agree that the policy should be to extend such privileges now to representatives of Council members of ICAO.

5. In view of Parliament's attitude on the subject in 1947, it would seem important that the question should be brought to the Minister's attention. It is just possible that Mr. St. Laurent is not fully aware of the privileges which it is suggested should be granted. They are:

- (a) exemption from customs duties at all times
- (b) exemption from excise duties and taxes on certain items, including liquor and tobacco products.

6. The persons for whom ICAO requests privileges would total about 60. They are included in the term "Representatives of Members" and consist of the following categories: Delegates, Deputy Delegates, Advisers, Technical Experts, Secretaries of Delegations.

I agree. L.B. P[earson]

7. There is nothing in the Privileges and Immunities (United Nations) Act 1947 nor in the Special Agencies Convention on Privileges and Immunities, to prevent the Canadian authorities from making this unilateral arrangement with ICAO.

8. The granting or withholding of the privileges which Dr. Warner requests is a matter of policy.

9. Dr. Warner and Dr. Pépin are coming to see me at 11.00 a.m. Wednesday morning, March 31. I should be grateful for an indication of your views, if possible before I see him.

W.H. MEASURES

This memorandum has been drafted in consultation with Legal Division. I have asked Mr. Côté who participated in U.N. privileges discussions in New York to attend one meeting with Dr. Warner.

JOINT SUPPORT OF AIR NAVIGATION SERVICES IN ICELAND

On the recommendation of the Interdepartmental Committee on Civil Aviation the Minister of Transport will seek Cabinet approval for Canadian participation in a plan of the International Civil Aviation Organization for joint support of air navigation services in Iceland.

2. In May, 1947, the Government of Iceland made a request to ICAO that it be reimbursed for expenditures already incurred by the provision of navigation services for aircraft engaged in North-Atlantic operations, and in addition that it be paid for such services in the future. Accordingly, ICAO despatched a group of technical experts to study the navigation facilities in Iceland at first hand and their report was submitted to ICAO at the beginning of this year. This report was studied by interested member States of ICAO which, in addition to Canada, include the United Kingdom, the United States, Belgium, France, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Denmark. Canada was represented at these discussions by Mr. Booth,<sup>5</sup> the Canadian Council Member on ICAO, and technical experts from the Department of Transport.

3. As a result of these discussions by representatives from interested States, the following is now proposed by ICAO:

(a) That the request of Iceland be met by offering a lump sum for services which have been provided in the past and which will be provided down to the end of 1948, and that future services, commencing on 1st January, 1949, be paid for in accordance with an Agreement to be prepared by the Organization. This lump sum will amount to slightly less than one million dollars.

(b) It is proposed that the proportions to be paid by the States concerned should be based, in the case of the amount to be paid for the period down to 31st December, 1948, on the number of schedules on the North-Atlantic operated by airlines of the States concerned. Contributions would then be on the following percentage scale:

Belgium	—	1.0
Canada	—	10.6
France	—	5.4
Netherlands	—	3.9
Scandinavia	—	6.5
United Kingdom	—	9.4
United States	—	63.2

The scale for the year 1949 would be as follows:

Belgium	—	1.0
Canada	—	7.2
France	—	7.2
Iceland	—	20.0
Netherlands	—	6.2
Scandinavia	—	6.2
United Kingdom	—	7.2
United States	—	45.0

You will note that Canada's proposed contribution for the past period is relatively higher than that for the future, primarily because of the proposal that Iceland absorb 20% of the total cost, and partly because of some of the States were making less use of these facilities in the earlier part of the period.

(c) To bring this arrangement into force, it was agreed that three documents should be prepared: A Final Act which would contain only recommendations, but which would in effect contain all the proposed rights and obligations of ICAO and the contributing States; an Agreement between ICAO and Iceland and a form of consent by contributing States to assessment in accordance with the terms of the Final Act.

It is proposed to prepare and offer for signature the Final Act at the General Assembly of ICAO, which opens in Geneva on June 1st, 1948. This Final Act will not constitute any legal commitment by States to participate in the scheme. It will, however, fix the proportion of contributions to be borne by the respective States, provided they later agree to participate. The formal Act binding the States will consist of the filing with ICAO by each State of its consent to assessment.

4. The maintenance of these navigation services is essential to the operation of safe and orderly Trans-Atlantic services and Iceland has stated that without the help of ICAO it could not continue to operate these services. In addition to this general value to all operators using the North-Atlantic, Trans-Canada Airlines have stated that they make a special use of Keflavik Airport, the operation of which would fall within this scheme. Although the cost to Canada is considerable, amounting to approximately $100,000 for the initial payment and approximately $46,000 annually thereafter, I believe the demands of our Trans-Atlantic service warrant our participation. We are, as you know, one of the prime operators over these routes and it is the intention to make every effort to increase our volume of traffic between the European Continent and America. It appears fairly certain that, in view of the essential nature of the Icelandic services, ICAO will be forced to bear their maintenance cost. As one of the most interested States, I do not feel that Canada can refuse participation in the plan now tentatively proposed.

5. I am sending this to you now so that it may serve as useful background material when the Minister of Transport makes his recommendation to Cabinet.<sup>6</sup> If this recommendation receives approval, I will prepare the signing powers for Mr. Booth.

THE ACHIEVEMENTS OF ICAO

Prior to the last war, Canada's main aviation concern was with the expansion and regulation of domestic flying. Effective international machinery for cooperation in flying was at this time largely non-existent. During the last war Canada rapidly became a world air power. Her strategic geographical location mid-way between the old world and the new resulted in Montreal being chosen the permanent headquarters of ICAO. The International Air Transport Association (IATA), the rate-making cooperative of more than 70 world airlines, followed ICAO's example in setting up permanent headquarters at Montreal to easier collaboration with it. Montreal, Canada has thus become the air capital of the world.

Since its inception, ICAO has probably made more progress settling differences between countries than any other of the post-war international agencies. Mutual cooperation between countries is typified by the ICAO sponsored agreement of North-Atlantic countries which provides for the establishment of 13 weather observation stations in the North-Atlantic. The H.M.C.S. St. Stephen of the R.C.N.<sup>7</sup> is specially equipped for these duties at a station mid-way between Labrador and Greenland jointly operated with the United States. The political and economic advances are noteworthy when consideration is given to the youth of the Organization. However, ICAO successes in the political and economic field have been overshadowed by its technical achievements. The First Assembly initiated research on the limitation of runway requirements with the objective of curbing the increasing cost of airport construction. It instructed the Council to adopt as quickly as possible technical standards and recommended practices for use on the world's airways.

International flying has long been complicated by differences in aeronautical regulations and charts in different countries by different rules of the air; by different meteorological codes and by different dimensional measurements. Most of such complications should soon disappear.

In Montreal late last month the International Civil Aviation Organization Council formally adopted five categories of standards which will have the effect of law in 51 countries. The codes adopted were the result of almost four years study and work by the Technical Committee which originated in the Chicago Civil Aviation Conference of 1944.

They provide for: International rules in the air; uniformity of licencing in key positions in international operations; uniformity of aeronautical charts; standardization of meteorological codes; and standardization of dimensional practices.

Probably the most important standards adopted are those for the airlines "Rules of the Road" for air traffic conducted in such zones as is necessary, and for blind landing aids and radio and radar aids to navigation.

Note:

The International Civil Aviation Organization has not been too successful in the guidance of economic practices, and most traffic agreements have been made bilaterally between the various countries. However, ICAO has worked very closely with IATA and has contributed markedly to the success of that Organization in the economic field.

HEADQUARTER'S AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND ICAO

In January you gave your approval to the commencement of negotiations and I have now received a working draft of the proposed Headquarters agreement, a copy of which is attached.† Attached also are a copy of the Canadian Privileges and Immunities (United Nations) Act, 1947,† which embodies the General Convention on Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, and a copy of the Convention on Privileges and Immunities of the specialized agencies.

2. I also attach a brief analysis of the Headquarters agreement.†

3. I think the attached working draft of the proposed Headquarters agreement is satisfactory in principle and I suggest that you authorize us to discuss it with the various interested departments of the Canadian Government.

4. The question of discussion of the draft agreement with the Province of Quebec and the City of Montreal will be submitted to you later.

5. I.C.A.O. have pressed us for exemption from customs and excise taxes for Council members. In view of the long time which must elapse before conclusion of the Headquarters agreement, I have told I.C.A.O. that we will grant these privileges as soon as possible; the Department of National Revenue have stated that this action can be taken by Order-in-Council, and if you approve, I will ask National Revenue to proceed at once.<sup>8</sup>

I am attaching, for your consideration, a reply to the International Civil Aviation Organization's letter of December 10,† concerning the rental of space for the headquarters of the Organization. I am also attaching a letter from the Deputy Minister of Public Works on this subject.†

When ICAO first asked us to intervene in the negotiation for this lease and to endeavour to obtain a rental below that proposed by the Canadian National Railway, we asked Mr. Howe for his comments. He advised us that he would not be inclined to offer too many concessions, as he considered that we had treated the Organization well in the matter of accommodation.

Since that time, we have constantly refused to absorb any part of the rental of the headquarters accommodation. This letter, which is submitted for your approval, follows the same line.†

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC WEATHER SHIPS

The Cabinet on January 28th, 1947, as part of a comprehensive meteorological programme, approved the provision and operation by Canada of one weather ship in the North Atlantic as Canada's share of the operation of Ocean Weather Station "B". Weather Station "B" is a part of a network of North Atlantic Weather Stations established by ICAO agreement and is the joint responsibility of Canada and the United States. Accordingly, the Royal Canadian Navy has provided one frigate, the St. Stephen, especially converted for the purpose, with the meteorological staff on board supplied by the Department of Transport. This ship has been in operation since November, 1947, and has been able to maintain a schedule of approximately 21 days out of each 50 on station.

2. The United States has not yet contributed a ship toward the operation of Weather Station "B" and has expressed the opinion that one ship cannot be considered to constitute 50% of the operation. It is the U.S. view that three ships are required to operate one Station.

3. As indicated, the St. Stephen has not been able to spend the full 50% of the time on station, though if time en route within the general area is taken into account, the period is not far short of the full 50%. However, when necessity for periodic refits and major repairs is taken into account, the Royal Canadian Navy is of the opinion that approximately 2.5 ships are required to man each Weather Station. It is apparent that, on either basis, this effort cannot be divided equally between the two countries without financial adjustment.

4. At the time Cabinet approved a Weather Ship for the North Atlantic, approval was given also to the provision of a Weather Ship in the Pacific, west of Vancouver Island, on the understanding that the United States would be asked to contribute a similar ship; the two ships to comprise one complete Weather Station. This proposal was conveyed to the United States, who have not yet agreed to provide the second ship; though there have been indications that, from a meteorological point of view, it would be looked on with favour.

5. A report of the Interdepartmental Meteorological Committee on this matter was considered by the Cabinet Defence Committee on November 21st, 1947, at which time it was agreed that the Canadian contribution to the operation of a North Atlantic Weather Station continue to be one ship but be reviewed in the light of further experience. The Interdepartmental Meteorological Committee is now informed that a Regional ICAO Conference, to deal with requirements in the North Pacific, will be held in July next. It is noted that a Weather Station in the Pacific, west of Vancouver Island, would be of much more direct value to Canada than the Atlantic Weather Station. It is noted, further, that the operation of a complete station in one ocean would be more economical and efficient than the operation of two half-stations in two oceans.

6. The Interdepartmental Meteorological Committee therefore recommends that the Canadian representative at the Northern Pacific Regional ICAO Conference be empowered to propose:

(a) that an ocean Weather Station be established in the Pacific in a position approximately 500 miles west of Vancouver Island; and

(b) that Canada undertake the operation of this Pacific Weather Station on the understanding that the United States would undertake the full operation of Weather Station "B" in the North Atlantic and that Canada's obligations toward the operation of both the North Atlantic and North Pacific Ocean Weather Stations would thereby be fulfilled.<sup>9</sup>

I. NAVY: ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC WEATHER SHIPS

1. The Chief of the Naval Staff reported that by an ICAO undertaking the Canadian government were now participating with the United States in the operation of a North Atlantic weather station to the extent of providing one weather ship. Canada had also undertaken to provide a weather ship in the Pacific, on the understanding that the United States would make a similar contribution — the two to comprise one weather station.

The Canadian weather ship in the Atlantic was operated by R.C.N. and, having regard to the existing manpower shortage, and to the fact that the operation had little or no training value to the Navy, the question was raised as to whether responsibility for the operation of weather ships might be transferred in peacetime to the Department of Transport.

2. The Minister of National Defence indicated that the Canadian representatives to a regional ICAO meeting had sought to secure U.S. agreement to an arrangement whereby Canada would operate a complete weather station in the Pacific rather than half-stations in both oceans. Until their reaction to this proposal was known, the status quo should be maintained.

3. The Committee after discussion, agreed that decision on the question raised by the Chief of the Naval Staff be deferred, and that arrangements for the operation of a second Canadian ship be delayed, pending a reply from the United States.

PROGRESS REPORT ON AIR AGREEMENTS

Up to the present, Canada, in a hope that a satisfactory multilateral civil aviation agreement might be achieved, has not concluded any bilateral aviation agreements providing for the exchange of so-called Fifth Freedom rights. However, in view of the failure of the recent Conference of International Civil Aviation Organization in Geneva to agree on a satisfactory multilateral document, the Canadian Government has now embarked upon the negotiation of a number of bilateral agreements, including Fifth Freedom rights. In these circumstances, Canada desires to conclude, as a first step, agreements with those countries in which Trans-Canada Airlines plans to make use of Fifth Freedom rights. Until the majority of these agreements have been concluded, the Canadian Government is reluctant to enter into agreements covering Fifth Freedom rights with countries in which Trans-Canada Airlines does not wish to make use of Fifth Freedom rights in the immediate future. For the present at least, agreements with countries in the second category must normally be limited to an exchange of Third and Fourth Freedom rights.

2. This has been the general policy which has governed the discussions on the various agreements currently under negotiation. These may be reviewed in two groups;

I. Those countries with whom Canada is willing to conclude Fifth Freedom Agreements. These include:

(a) Argentina—In November, 1947, the Argentine Government approached the Canadian Government on the question of an air agreement. It was indicated that Canada was willing to negotiate an agreement, and that a draft might be forwarded by Argentina for study. However, as yet, no draft has been forthcoming. If there is any urgency on this Agreement, it might be advisable to submit one of our draft Bilateral Agreements to the Argentine Government.

(b) Belgium—In December, 1947, a note was forwarded to the Belgian Ambassador, suggesting that negotiations might open on an Agreement. This proposal was forwarded by the Belgian Ambassador to his home Government. It has been learned, through the Canadian Ambassador in Brussels, that this draft is under consideration. However, Belgian air policy is in the process of being re-formulated, and it may be some time before any concrete action is recommended.

(c) Brazil—The Brazilian authorities have been studying a draft Agreement submitted by Canada since October, 1947. Several informal enquiries have been made at the Brazilian Embassy in Ottawa, but as yet no comments have been received on this draft.

(d) Cuba—The Cuban authorities have also been studying a draft submitted by Canada for some months. It has been learned indirectly that a number of modifications to this draft will be required before Cuba could agree. However, a direct request has now been made to the Cuban Government that their comments be forwarded as soon as possible on this draft. When these have been received, it is planned that a Canadian negotiator, presumably Mr. McKim of T.C.A., will visit Havana to conclude discussions.

II. Those nations with whom Canada, for the present, can conclude only a Four Freedoms Agreement:

(a) Iceland—A draft Agreement was originally forwarded to Iceland through the United Kingdom in February, 1947. For nearly a year there was a negative interest evidenced by Iceland in any discussions on this Agreement. However, at the beginning of 1948, it was learned that this attitude was attributable to the state of air relations between the United States and Iceland, and that these relations were now being improved. On this basis, a new draft was prepared and forwarded to Iceland through their Minister in Canada.

(b) Norway and Denmark—In the latter part of 1947 both of these countries submitted draft Five Freedoms Agreements to the Canadian authorities for study. On the receipt of these drafts it was indicated that for the time being Canada could grant only Four Freedoms in their particular cases. This was modified to the extent that Fifth Freedom would be granted at points in other Scandinavian countries to facilitate the operation of Scandinavian air services, a pooled airline made up of companies representing each of the three Scandinavian countries. There has, as yet, been no indication by Norway and Denmark that they would desire to negotiate on this basis.

(c) Netherlands—In the Spring of 1947, discussions were held between Canadian and Netherlands authorities, and it was indicated at this time that Canada could only grant a Four Freedoms Agreement. On that occasion, it was very clear that the Netherlands were only interested in a Five Freedoms Agreement. However, it has now been indicated that they are willing to proceed on the discussion of a Four Freedoms Agreement, and desire to arrange, in the near future, discussions between a visiting Netherlands delegation, currently in the United States, and Canadian authorities. It is expected that these discussions may take place in the last week of March or the early part of April, and it would be useful to decide immediately who will represent Canada in these discussions.

(d) Peru—In September a draft Agreement was forwarded by the Peruvian Government, which embodied what they termed Four and One-Half Freedoms. This, in reality, granted Peruvian carriers one way Fifth Freedom traffic, that is, the right to pick up in the United States and put down in Canada. There were a number of other disagreeable clauses in their draft, and we forwarded our comments through our Ambassador in Lima. Although our whole tone in these discussions has been pessimistic, the Peruvian authorities still eagerly pursue the Agreement, and they have now requested that oral discussions be held in Ottawa. It is planned that these discussions will be held this month. Mr. Baldwin of the Cabinet Secretariat and members of External Affairs will represent Canada.

3. In addition to the Agreements outlined above, a note has been forwarded to the French Government granting Third and Fourth Freedoms to an airline owned and operated by the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon to fly on a route between St. Pierre and Sydney, Nova Scotia, and St. Pierre and Halifax, Nova Scotia. The reply of the French Government to this note will thereby constitute the Agreement.

4. Attached to this memorandum are copies of the types of bilateral Air Agreements presently in use by Canada in these negotiations.†

CIVIL AVIATION; CANADA AND FIFTH FREEDOM TRAFFIC

Over the next six months Canada will for the first time start entering into bilateral civil aviation agreements providing for the exercise of fifth freedom traffic rights. This will mean a change in the policy followed hitherto, and it is desirable to avoid hasty or ad hoc decisions in this matter and to proceed with care in establishing the basis on which these traffic rights may be granted and exercised.

The first two freedoms cover the right of transit and non-traffic stop and are generally accepted by almost all countries. The third and fourth freedoms are the "home" traffic of any nation, i.e. the traffic travelling to and from that nation. The fifth freedom is the additional traffic on the air service of any nation, i.e. travelling between points on the service other than the country of origin of the service. Thus, any one nation's third and fourth freedom traffic is the fifth freedom traffic of other nations and vice versa.

The position of fifth freedom rights has been the obstacle to achievement of a multilateral air agreement. The nations which are concerned chiefly with the operation of long through air lines insist, quite rightly, that the economics of through air line operation require fifth freedom traffic to be carried; no long air line covering half the globe could live on third and fourth freedom traffic alone, which dwindles rapidly as the line moves outward from the point of origin. Lesser states have placed a heavy emphasis upon third and fourth freedom traffic and have feared that unlimited granting of fifth freedom rights would mean that the major through operators would pick up so much fifth freedom traffic that there would be no third and fourth freedom traffic left for the intermediate states on a route. A good example of this is the substantial traffic moving from France to Switzerland, Italy and Germany, which for U.S. air lines is, of course, fifth freedom traffic. The through U.S. air lines have been carrying most of this traffic from France to neighbouring points in Europe, leaving very little for the French air lines, — a situation which may well cause trouble when the French services become better equipped and can run more frequently.

Nations primarily interested in the fifth freedom have, of course, tried to get unlimited freedom of the air so that any air line could carry any traffic it wanted to without restriction, — a situation which would in many instances result in the through operators killing off the smaller operators. Some of the smaller countries, on the other hand, have tried to exclude fifth freedom traffic completely in order to protect their local interests. Obviously, neither of these attitudes is conducive to the development of international aviation. What needs to be found is a reasonable balance between the two positions so that third and fourth freedom traffic of each nation will have reasonable protection yet there will still be enough fifth freedom traffic available to make it worthwhile for the longer operators to keep going.

This has been the fundamental issue in discussion of a multilateral agreement. No final solution has yet been found although the so-called "Bermuda formula", which was subsequently clarified and improved at the ICAO discussions in Geneva last autumn represents a reasonable working formula.

Although no formula has been accepted multilaterally, general agreement exists on the part of most nations that any country has a primary interest or primary right to its own third and fourth freedom traffic and may protect this right so that fifth freedom operations of other services in its territory do not unduly harm its own lines. At the same time it has been to a lesser degree accepted that the importance of fifth freedom traffic to the major lines must be recognized by allowing it reasonable scope.

Canada's interest is not only the general desire to achieve a multilateral agreement but arises also from the fact that Canada is primarily a transit country. We are not a heavy traffic-generating nation but we live next door to the greatest air traffic market in the world, the United States. Most of the larger international air lines wish to cross our country to get access to the U.S. traffic market, including the heavy Canada-U.S. traffic.

Further, a large number of the international routes also cross the North Atlantic and in so doing follow the other main traffic flow in which Canada is interested, that between Canada and Europe and particularly the United Kingdom. Complete opening of fifth freedom rights by Canada would allow foreign air lines to carry so much of this fifth freedom traffic between Canada and the United States, and Canada and the United Kingdom that little third and fourth freedom traffic would be left for Canada to carry. On the other hand we have limited ambitions and apart from the U.S.A. and a few other cases are not much interested in getting for ourselves fifth freedom rights in other countries.

We have always taken the position that we want a multilateral agreement which would open up all traffic rights including fifth freedom but which must include principles or rules which would safeguard the position by establishing a reasonable balance between protection of the third and fourth freedom rights and permitting a reasonable fifth freedom traffic as well. We have stated that we would not proceed with bilateral agreements covering the fifth freedom until we were quite sure that there was no hope of achieving a multilateral. In only one case have we allowed fifth freedom traffic to be carried to and from Canada. That case is Australia and New Zealand on the South Pacific run; even there we told those two countries that while we would permit fifth freedom traffic to be carried and would eventually write it into the necessary bilateral agreements we could not formally write it in at present.

More recently we have concluded a bilateral agreement with the Netherlands which would grant the Netherlands fifth freedom rights in Canada but have also said that the agreement must be accompanied by a supplementary exchange of notes stating that the fifth freedom rights may not be exercised until both parties mutually agree at a later date. This is a new formula for dealing with the problem which we had earlier met in the case of other countries by stating that we could not grant fifth freedom rights as yet and would not write them into any agreement. We have turned down approaches by a number of countries, including France, Norway, Denmark and Sweden, — and even the United Kingdom although we have always let it be understood by the United Kingdom that when we open up fifth freedom rights we will negotiate again with the United Kingdom.

We have further made it clear that the first bilateral agreement covering fifth freedom which we wish to conclude will be with the United States since fifth freedom traffic rights there on our Bermuda, South American and Pacific runs are of vital importance to us. After reaching agreement with the United States we will be in a position to determine what additional fifth freedom rights we can exchange with other countries.

We tried tentatively over a year ago to make an agreement with the United States without success. The atmosphere is somewhat better now and it is understood that in the late summer or early autumn we will open this question up again; plans are now being made for these discussions. Once a new agreement has been made with the United States we will find ourselves in the position of having to deal with other nations as well. It is important that we should reach a clear understanding of the basis on which we are to proceed.

One possibility is a straight discriminatory approach in which we would, without giving any particular reasons, turn down virtually all fifth freedom requests except in a very few cases where we want fifth freedom rights ourselves in return. I feel, however, that while we should move slowly in granting fifth freedom rights, we should have a set of principles on which we can base our actions and which can be explained in part to other nations permitting us to say that we are consistent within the framework of an established government policy operating in a non-discriminatory fashion. I have suggested that the Interdepartmental Committee consider this matter and it plans to do so although little progress has been made as yet.

My own thinking so far as it has gone has been that, once agreement has been reached with the United States, our next objective should be a conclusion of fifth freedom traffic agreements with other nations where we wish to exercise fifth freedom rights ourselves. We should, if possible, try to defer any agreements providing for exercise of fifth freedom rights in Canada by nations in which we do not wish to exercise similar rights until at least we have agreements with those where we do wish to exercise the fifth freedom. On this basis the next agreements we should conclude would be with Brazil and possibly Cuba for the South American run, with such countries as are concerned in the Pacific routes, presumably Australia, New Zealand and China and the British colonial territories involved, and on the North Atlantic with the United Kingdom and whatever European country TCA may ultimately set as its objective. Tentatively this has been put down as Belgium, and we have indicated to Belgium that we would be prepared to open negotiations on a fifth freedom bilateral with them. (This, incidentally, has also been done with Brazil and Cuba).

It may not be possible to hold up agreements with other countries where we do not wish to exercise the fifth freedom until all this has been accomplished but I would hope that it might be the case. However, when the time comes for negotiations with other countries, whether before or after conclusion of the bilaterals as I have referred to, we should in addition have some set of principles on which to judge whether or not we can allow them fifth freedom rights. The same principles could, subject to the elasticity that any mutual bargain requires, operate in the bilaterals with Brazil, Cuba, the U.K., etc. Here the principles could be based upon the traffic potential on each route in relation to the number of air services already operating. Most of the European nations will want to operate on the North Atlantic run through Montreal and Toronto to Chicago. We might establish the rule that we would assess the traffic potential on that Canadian segment concerned in relation to the service provided by existing carriers and then decide whether or not we are justified in letting any additional carrier in. If in any particular route we are so justified, we should give it in the first instance to a country from which we wish something in return. In the second instance we will have to decide whether, if there is nothing we wish in return and we are going to let someone else in, we do it on the basis of first come first served, or on a more general basis of external relations.

Another point will come up in the case where a request is made for fifth freedom rights on a given route and we decide that we cannot let an additional carrier in on that route; the applicant then suggests an alternative route (usually this would happen between Canada and the United States). We would have to decide whether the alternative route could be granted and what principles should govern this sort of situation. An example is the recent discussions with Peru where, when told they could not have the New York—Montreal run, they suggested as an alternative the Washington—Montreal run. Here I think the basis on which we might proceed is assessment of whether or not the alternative route will involve carriage of traffic to a degree which would injure the existing position of Canadian and U.S. carriers on reasonably competitive but not exactly parallel routes. In the cases where we are asking for nothing in return, I am inclined to think that we should follow a firm line and turn down even alternative routes of this sort if there is any likelihood that they would divert traffic from existing Canadian or U.S. routes.

In order to follow the general principles suggested above, it will be necessary for the Air Transport Board and TCA to work out mechanism which would provide for continuous survey of existing traffic movements, not only on existing run but to adjacent points on these alternative routes which might be competitive. Thus, in each case there would be statistical data on which to assess the position.

One further point. In the case of Peru we suggested that we would grant fifth freedom rights between points outside the United States to Canada where such points are not served or are not going to be served by TCA and are not competitive with TCA operations. This principle too might usefully be considered in relation to our general policy.

Finally, I would like to sum up the present position, so far as I know it, with regard to the existing and proposed bilaterals. As I indicated, a new agreement with the United States will be sought shortly. We may also have to proceed with agreements with Cuba, Brazil, China, New Zealand, the United Kingdom (British Pacific colonies) and a revision of our present agreement with Australia. On the North Atlantic we will probably wish to conclude an agreement with Belgium and to revise our existing agreements with the United Kingdom, Ireland and Newfoundland. This should cover the areas where we wish fifth freedom in return.

We may also be requested by Sweden to renegotiate our existing agreement to include fifth freedom; this is a case where we wish nothing in return. Norway and Denmark have asked us for fifth freedom agreements and have been told that we could not contemplate them for the present, but they may be expected to approach us again once we open the fifth freedom up. Here again we wish nothing in return. France will undoubtedly approach us too. This may cause a little more difficulty since, even though we wish nothing in return, our general political relations with France may make it hard for us to refuse them fifth freedom rights if we grant them to countries such as Belgium, Brazil and Cuba. The Netherlands will undoubtedly come back and ask us to amend the supplementary exchange of notes to allow them to use the fifth freedom rights provided in their agreement.

Finally, Peru has been pressing Canada for some time for a fifth freedom agreement and, having been told they could not have New York to Montreal, they have exerted pressure to get Washington—Montreal. At one stage I believe Mr. Howe was disposed to grant this to them. I know that the officials hope that whatever our decision may be, at least it could be deferred until we have a new agreement with the United States and possibly with some of the other countries where we wish something in return before committing ourselves to Peru. If we give Peru, at this stage, fifth freedom rights when we are asking nothing in return, it will be hard for us to find an answer for some of the European countries that are in a similar position.

POSSIBLE MATTERS FOR DISCUSSION IN UNITED KINGDOM; INTERNATIONAL AVIATION

It has occurred to me that the following are some of the matters which U.K. aviation authorities may enquire about or may be interested in learning about should you have any discussions with them in London this autumn.

(1) Newfoundland

The question of what happens to existing traffic rights in Newfoundland after union will, of course, affect the United Kingdom. I believe all that could be said at the moment is that we are reviewing the whole situation and that in all probability all existing traffic rights granted by the Newfoundland government will disappear either on the date of union or as soon as the required period for notice of termination has passed. In these cases new traffic rights will have to be negotiated with the Canadian government and will have to conform with the existing policy of the Canadian government in this matter. We hope to complete our preliminary review of the situation in time to give adequate notice of our intentions to any other governments concerned; certainly in the case of the United Kingdom there should not be any serious difficulty although the main problem will be whether we are to grant the U.K. two traffic stops in Canadian territory, i.e., both at Gander and at Montreal.

(2) New Canada-United States Agreement

The United Kingdom is aware that our whole policy in relation to fifth freedom is pretty much dependent on a satisfactory new bilateral with the United States. I think they may be told that we are still waiting for the U.S. to indicate its willingness to proceed with discussions; that we do not believe we will hear from them until after the Presidential election; and that in any case a new agreement would not become effective before April 1st, the expected date for union between Canada and Newfoundland, so that it would cover Newfoundland territory.

(3) Designation of C.P.A.

You may be asked for the reasons for the Canadian decision to designate C.P.A. for Pacific operations. These have already been given in your press release and cover the following main points:

- (i) T.C.A. feeling that it would be uneconomic for them;
- (ii) C.P.A. desire to enter the field and willingness to operate without subsidy; existing C.P. facilities at C.P.A. disposal;

(iii) government reservations in designation, i.e., (a) no subsidy; (b) traffic rights not to be obtained at expense of reciprocal concessions which would hurt T.C.A.

(4) C.P.A. Plans

They will undoubtedly be interested in the routes and stops which C.P.A. contemplates. Full information on this was contained in the memorandum which I sent you earlier. It may be important to point out that we fully expect a considerable time lag ranging from a minimum of a year to an indefinable maximum before operations begin.

(5) Co-operation in Pacific Area

If mention is made of co-operation on the South Pacific run, it might be pointed out that we will be willing to consider a type of arrangement which was contemplated in the Montreal discussions in 1944, i.e., parallel operations with agreed schedules and pooling of traffic and revenues but not deficits. We would not be interested in a joint company unless there is some completely new approach on their part which has never been brought to our attention, and I do not think that we would be interested in dividing the operation and meeting it at a half-way point. It is important, moreover, to point out that in any system of co-operation the use of the same type of plane for both parties is important, if not essential.

On the question of direct co-operation with B.O.A.C. on trans-Pacific traffic which Cribbett apparently wishes to discuss, I think the most important thing is to find out what they have in mind. We could scarcely make any commitment at this stage until we are much closer to the actual time of operation. On the other hand, there may be some benefits in the way of interchange of traffic that could be obtained. Moreover, it should be kept in mind that we will have to get traffic rights from the United Kingdom in Hong Kong and some sort of co-operative arrangement in setting up the round-the-world route might be the easiest method of granting a concession in return. The thing T.C.A. wishes to avoid is the development of a British service across the States to a Canadian terminal, e.g., Vancouver, which would cut heavily into existing T.C.A. traffic between Canada and United States.

As I mentioned in a separate memorandum, I am puzzled over the U.K. wishes since the latest communication from Cribbett, while mentioning the earlier talks which related to the North Pacific, now brings in the South Pacific.

(6) T.C.A. Caribbean Route

The U.K. may wish to know when we will initiate service as contemplated by our agreement with the Bahamas, Jamaica and Trinidad. You may wish to check with Mr. Howe on this point. Our last word on this was that he proposed to tell T.C.A. that they should plan to commence operations around November 1st but I do not know whether this instruction was ever given.

[London, November 18, 1948]

NOTE OF AN INFORMAL DISCUSSION HELD AT 3 P.M. ON MONDAY, 1ST NOVEMBER, 1948, IN ROOM 405, ARIEL HOUSE, WITH
MR. CHEVRIER, CANADIAN MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

Present:

Mr. L.J. Dunnett, Ministry of Civil Aviation (In the Chair)
Mr. L. Chevrier, Canadian Minister of Transport
Mr. J.H. Tudhope, Canadian Civil Air Liaison Officer in London
Major H. Jones, Ministry of Civil Aviation
Mr. J.W. Ivimy, Ministry of Civil Aviation
Mr. J.R. Madge, Ministry of Civil Aviation

The Chairman welcomed the opportunity of meeting Mr. Chevrier and of discussing informally with him questions of mutual interest in civil aviation. In subsequent discussion on the various topics raised the following points were made:

1. Services between North America and Australia and New Zealand

(a) B.C.P.A.,<sup>10</sup> a joint operating company, was now operating services on the South Pacific route. The possibility of Canadian participation in a joint company had been raised at an earlier date but Canada had felt unable to come in. It had been hoped as an alternative that some pooling arrangement would be possible between B.C.P.A. and the company designated by Canada.

(b) The Canadian Government had designated Canadian Pacific Airlines, a private company and subsidiary of C.P.R., for the South Pacific route. This choice had been made largely because T.C.A. were fully occupied on current and proposed services and because C.P.A. would be able to utilize the facilities of C.P.R. in the area and were willing to operate the route without subsidy.

(c) It would be difficult, in view of the designation of C.P.A. to provide for any pooling arrangement at the Government level. The Canadian Government favoured parallel operations. This course would not however preclude some arrangement on schedules and use of facilities between the airlines concerned.

(d) C.P.A. were unlikely to begin operating within one year at a minimum in view of the need for the negotiation of agreements and other preparatory work.

(e) The traffic on the South Pacific route was not heavy and the Australian and New Zealand Governments could only be expected to look for justification of

Canadian services on 3rd and 4th freedom traffic with only pick-up traffic from San Francisco.

(f) It would be desirable to consider the question of rights for C.P.A. as soon as practicable.

(g) While the Canadian Government would not send an official delegation to take part in discussion at the 3rd S.P.A.T.C.<sup>11</sup> they proposed to send observers to the meeting.

2. Services Across the North Pacific

(a) There had been earlier discussion on the possibility of joint B.O.A.C./T.C.A. operations on N. Pacific services.

(b) The Canadian Government had designated C.P.A. for services on the route; the same time factor applied as for S. Pacific services and the route was expected to be between Vancouver and Hong Kong and Shanghai.

(c) Any discussion on arrangements for joint operations would have to be between the airlines concerned once the question of traffic rights had been agreed at Government level.

3. Canada-U.S. Agreement

(a) Discussion of an agreement had been postponed until the American Presidential Elections were over. Failing any American approach the Canadian Government would propose to raise the question in the near future. When agreement had been reached with the U.S. they would be able to consider the question of U.K. rights.

4. Fares on T.C.A. Government Service

(a) The Americans had recently shown some anxiety over the fares charged on the T.C.A. services on behalf of the Ontario Government. These services had previously been operated by Transocean, a U.S. Charter operator, but their operations had been stopped by the U.K. on the grounds that they were on frequent and regular schedules and were not, therefore, properly charter operations. The same argument applied to the T.C.A. services and the U.K. was therefore in an embarrassing position since the fares charged by T.C.A. on the services were below I.A.T.A.<sup>12</sup> rates. The question had been raised with the Canadian Government and it might be necessary to have further discussions on the line to be taken to justify the lower fares.

(b) It was possible that this question might be raised at the forthcoming I.A.T.A. meeting in Bermuda.

5. Airports and Facilities in Canada

Mr. Chevrier stated that the cost of provision of facilities in Canada was high, a large proportion being in respect of Aeradio facilities. A programme for installation of I.L.S.<sup>13</sup> equipment was now in hand; some six sets had already been installed and a further 15 to 20 were planned.

RE TRANS-PACIFIC AIR SERVICES

The question of Canada's position in relation to trans-Pacific air services has been under consideration for some time, and it has been contemplated that, at an appropriate time, certain trans-Pacific air services would be inaugurated.

2. Up to the present time, it has been contemplated that such services would be undertaken by Trans-Canada Air Lines but, by virtue of the fact that Trans-Canada Air Lines have been fully occupied in inaugurating the Canada-United Kingdom, Canada-Bermuda, Caribbean, and possibly South American services, no serious attention has been given yet to the trans-Pacific services.

3. In the meantime, United States air lines have been active in this field and have inaugurated the under-mentioned trans-Pacific services:

(a) Pan American World Airways

(i) from San Francisco and Los Angeles via Honolulu to Japan, the Philippines, Shanghai, French Indo China, Calcutta and onwards

(ii) via Honolulu to New Zealand and Australia

(b) Northwest Orient Airlines

from Chicago or Seattle via Anchorage to Tokyo, Korea, Shanghai, China and the Philippines.

Note: These two lines carried 51,142 passengers in the period January to August, 1947, at a passenger load factor of 62 percent.

4. Not only has Canada no trans-Pacific air services as yet, but it does not have any trans-Pacific steamship services, as the steamship services formerly performed by Canadian Pacific Steamships have been discontinued due to the fact that the vessels utilized on this service were destroyed during the war.

5. As the provision of a trans-Pacific steamship service cannot be realized for some time and may not be possible on the same scale as formerly because of the prohibitive cost involved, consideration of the early inauguration of a trans-Pacific air service would appear appropriate at this time.

6. If such an air service were provided it would tend to protect Canada's trade position in the Pacific to some extent before American air lines operating in this area have become too strongly entrenched. If and when a steamship service is re-established, the air service inaugurated would be complementary thereto and it probably would avoid the provision of expensive passenger vessels formerly in this service.

7. Under date of June 11, 1946, Canada entered into a bilateral agreement with Australia for air services between Canada and Australia. Under the annex of this agreement, on air line designated by the Government of Australia was to operate on a route as follows:

Sydney to Vancouver via Fiji, Canton Island, Honolulu, San Francisco or other intermediate stopping places as may be mutually agreed upon in both directions. Under the same agreement, an air line designated by the Government of Canada was to operate a return service originating in Canada and terminating in Australia. The route to be operated by the designated air line of the Government of Canada was to be Vancouver to Sydney via such intermediate stopping places as may be mutually agreed in both directions.

8. The Government of Australia designated British Commonwealth Pacific Airlines Ltd. to operate this service, which service has been operated since May, 1947.

The Government of Canada has not yet designated an air line to operate the Canada-Australia service.

9. No agreement has yet been reached between Canada and New Zealand regarding a trans-Pacific air service to New Zealand, but Air Transport Board Licence No. 225, dated May 31, 1947, to British Commonwealth Pacific Airlines specifies that British Commonwealth Pacific Airlines Ltd. may operate an international scheduled commercial air service for the transport of passengers, goods and mail as follows:

(a) between the terminal Vancouver, Province of British Columbia, Canada, and the terminal Sydney, Australia, serving the intermediate points New Caledonia (optional), Fiji Islands, Canton Island, Honolulu and San Francisco, U.S.A.

(b) between the terminal Vancouver, Province of British Columbia, Canada, and the terminal Whenuapai (Auckland), New Zealand, serving the intermediate points Fiji Islands, Canton Island, Honolulu and San Francisco, U.S.A.

subject to the proviso that:

“As and when an Agreement for Air Services is concluded between the Governments of Canada and New Zealand, this licence will be revised insofar as may be necessary to conform with the provisions of such Agreement.”

10. The United Kingdom is pressing Canada to help it by providing a service to China.

11. The Minister is in receipt of a letter from Canadian Pacific Air Lines requesting that consideration be given to the designation of that company to operate 2 trans-Pacific services as follows:

(a) The service specified in the Canada-Australia Agreement dated June 11, 1946 (referred to in paragraph 7 above)

(b) A service between Vancouver and Hong Kong via Kodiak Island, Shemya, Tokyo, Japan and Shanghai, China.

12. Canadian Pacific Air Lines, Limited suggest that as the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, through the Canadian Pacific Steamships, have been in the Pacific transportation business since 1886 and have established agencies in connection with their steamship services throughout the Orient, Australia and New Zealand and as these agencies have been maintained in the hope and expectation that they sooner or later would be again in a position to operate steamships in the Pacific that Canadian Pacific Air Lines, Limited,

(a) would be in a better position to establish a transPacific air service at lower development cost than could be performed by any other interest;

(b) are willing to undertake this service as soon as the necessary formalities are completed and the necessary equipment for the service has been acquired;

(c) the establishment of such an air service would permit Canadian Pacific Railway Company to recover a considerable part of their lost position in the Pacific.

13. Canadian Pacific Air Lines, Limited now have agents at twenty points in the Pacific (see Schedule A)† and they estimate that the cost of maintaining such agencies is $200,000. per annum.

14. Canadian Pacific Air Lines, Limited are not requesting any subsidy for such service.

15. Canadian Pacific Air Lines, Limited summarize their reasons for believing it would be in Canada's national interest to designate Canadian Pacific Air Lines, Limited to operate the two Pacific routes above named as follows:

(a) The Canadian Pacific have been providing transportation to the Orient since 1886 and are well established throughout the whole Pacific area.

(b) The Canadian Pacific have an extensive traffic organization already in existence throughout the Orient, as well as in the United States and Canada, which no air line could afford to duplicate.

(c) At the present time, American steamships and American air lines are making rapid inroads into the traffic formerly handled by Canadian carriers but neither the air lines nor the steamships in the United States can offer the complementary services which Canadian Pacific would be prepared to operate, combining steamship and air line transportation in the Pacific area.

(d) Because the Canadian Pacific traffic organization is already established throughout the Orient, we would be in a position to commence operations with a minimum of delay, which is felt to be essential if Canada's position in the field of Oriental trade as well as international air transport is to be developed and maintained.

(e) Canadian Pacific Air Lines has, on its flight staff, a number of crews who have had considerable over-ocean experience and presently employs the necessary trained personnel to operate the Pacific routes.

(f) In order that the expenditure of Canadian funds in foreign countries may be held to a minimum, it is essential that established facilities be used to the best advantage. In line with this policy, it is felt that the combined services which Canadian Pacific could offer would constitute an ideal transportation organization in that high speed cargo and passenger traffic would be handled by air, heavy cargo and leisurely tourist traffic by ship, and the same agency could arrange combination passenger trips, one way air and return ship.

(g) With the close co-operation which exists between Canadian Pacific Air Lines and Trans-Canada Air Lines, it would be possible to turn over to T.C.A. at Vancouver air passengers for New York and Europe. T.C.A. would thus benefit indirectly from the services of all Canadian Pacific agents throughout the Pacific who would book air traffic over Trans-Canada's lines to the Eastern United States and Europe.

(h) In the event of a third world war, Canada would have two air lines operating internationally, with personnel trained in international and overseas operations. This would be a distinct advantage in aiding and augmenting the armed forces for purposes of national defence.

[Ottawa], May 17, 1948

I understand that one of the questions before Cabinet at its next meeting is whether there should be a change in the policy of the Government that Trans-Canada Air Lines should be the sole Canadian agency which may operate international air transport services.

2. This policy, as you know, was announced by the Prime Minister in the House of Commons on April 2, 1943. The announcement of this policy was preceded by discussions in the Interdepartmental Committee on International Civil Aviation.

3. The Committee spent most of its time working out the Canadian proposals for an international civil aviation organization, which were later put forward by Canada at the Chicago Aviation Conference in November, 1944. The Government at that time was in favour of a monopoly of international services for the publicly-owned line. The Committee therefore did not feel it necessary to develop the arguments for this position, the wisdom of which the Committee did not doubt.

4. An indication of the Committee's line of thinking, however, is given in its report of September 28, 1943, which was approved by the Cabinet War Committee on October 6, 1943. In this report the Committee said:

"Because of the close connection between air transport and security, the international problems of air transport are more political and security problems than commercial problems. Any proposed international agreement on air transport will have to help solve the political and security problems of the post-war world and be

On Mr. Pearson's instructions this was not sent formally to the Minister but I discussed the question informally with him and left him this document as a sort of aide mémoire. E[scott] R[eid] judged by its contribution to the establishment of a permanent system of general security."

5. This consideration is related to that mentioned by the Prime Minister in his statement to the House on April 2, 1943, paragraph 7, which reads as follows:

"T.C.A. has by its charter the right to operate international air transport services and has already been designated as the instrument of the Canadian Government in air transport service across the North Atlantic, and in Canadian services to the United States. The fact that international negotiations of great importance must shortly take place confirms the wisdom of Government policy under which its freedom of action in international negotiations is not limited by the existence of private interests in international air transport services."

6. It seems to me that these two statements indicate clearly the relevant international political considerations. If Canadian air lines engaging in international air transport are publicly owned, the freedom of action of the Canadian Government in international negotiations on international air transport is not limited by the existence of private interests in international air transport services. This means that the government can base its policy on the over-riding political and security factors. Certainly the Prime Minister's announcement of April 2, 1943, on this subject made the position of Canada at the Chicago Aviation Conference a good deal easier than it otherwise would have been. The Canadian delegation, unlike delegations from many other countries, especially the United States, was not subjected to heavy pressure from privately-owned air lines. This meant that the Canadian Government had less difficulty than did other governments in pursuing consistently that policy which it considered to be in the long-run national interest of Canada, even though it might not be in our short-run commercial interest.

7. Once the Government permits the Canadian Pacific Air Lines to run international air transport services from Canada to the Far East and to Australia, a private Canadian interest will be created in the maintenance of those services. This may mean that at some time in the future it will be more difficult for the Canadian Government to pursue in respect of Pacific services that policy which at that time is in the long-run general national interest of Canada, taking into account the over-riding political and security considerations, as well as the purely commercial considerations.

TRANS-PACIFIC AIR SERVICES

23. The Minister of Transport reported that it had been earlier contemplated that Trans-Canada Air Lines would operate an air service across the Pacific to Australia and New Zealand and that a bilateral agreement had been entered into with Australia accordingly.

This service had not yet been initiated and would require substantial financial assistance. Nevertheless Canadian air services across the Pacific would serve useful purposes both economic and strategic, and should reduce requirements for Canadian steamship passenger service in that area.

Canadian Pacific Air Lines had requested that it be designated by the government to operate two trans-Pacific air services, the first to Australia and New Zealand and the second by way of Alaska and Japan to China and Hong Kong. The Canadian Pacific Railways had long experience in passenger operations and possessed agencies throughout the region which were being maintained and which could serve trans-Pacific air services. No subsidy was requested. The proposed operations would co-operate closely with T.C.A. in interchange of traffic.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

24. Mr. Chevrier added that while economic considerations indicated the desirability of approving the request of C.P.A., this action would involve a reversal of announced government policy. In 1943, the Prime Minister had stated that T.C.A. would be the sole Canadian agency to operate international air service and this policy had been confirmed in subsequent years by the responsible Minister.

25. The Minister of Trade and Commerce and Reconstruction and Supply pointed out that both the government and T.C.A. had in recent years received full co-operation from C.P.A. In view of the fact that T.C.A. was not in a position to proceed immediately with development of Pacific operations and would require heavy financial assistance for this purpose, and in view of the established position and facilities of the Canadian Pacific system it would be desirable to modify the policy of the government to permit C.P.A. to operate these services.

26. The Prime Minister pointed out that any such decision should be based on the understanding that no subsidy would be provided to C.P.A. and that, in the event of a subsidy being requested, the government would reconsider its approval of the operations.

27. The Secretary of State for External Affairs referred to considerations of external policy which had led to the decision announced in 1943.

28. The Cabinet, after further discussion, deferred decision.

RE PACIFIC AIR SERVICES

As you know, when the matter of granting the C.P.A.'s request to be allowed to operate as a designated Canadian airline two trans-Pacific air services was up previously, it was indicated that T.C.A. was not interested at present in either of these operations and accordingly had no objection to the C.P.A. proposal. It was also pointed out at that time, however, that approval of the request would require a major change in announced government policy and that, although C.P.A. had agreed to initiate operations without any subsidy guarantee from the government, the opinion was held in certain quarters that neither service could be operated without subsidy and that after initiation, the government would be faced with either letting the services drop or providing at a later date a subsidy to keep them going.

Last week, I had a lengthy meeting with the Chairman of the Air Transport Board and with the President (and Vice-President) of T.C.A. to discuss problems related to the expected renegotiation of our aviation agreement with the United States, at which time both countries will wish to obtain certain new concessions regarding air services.

In the course of the discussions, another problem in relation to the suggested C.P.A. operation came to the fore and upon examination seemed to disturb the T.C.A. representatives at the meeting considerably.

In short, the situation is that, in order to obtain the necessary traffic rights for the two Pacific services, we will have to negotiate agreements with a number of other countries, the most important of which, in this connection, will be the United States. We would have to ask for certain traffic rights which we could only obtain by granting in return traffic rights in Canada to the airlines of the other countries concerned. Any such traffic rights granted in Canada would be at the expense of T.C.A., i.e. would provide more competition within Canada for our international traffic which is not overly large in any case. Any extensive development in this direction would seriously affect T.C.A.'s economic position.

In other words, it would appear that in order to get the necessary concessions from other countries in order to make C.P.A. operations in the Pacific area possible, we would have to make substantial concessions in return, all of which would be at the expense of T.C.A.'s position.

The most important negotiations would, of course, be with the United States. We would have to ask for traffic rights in Alaska, in Hawaii and possibly in San Francisco for the two Pacific operations. We would not get these substantial concessions without granting substantial concessions in return, and the only concessions in which the United States is likely to be interested in Canada are ones which relate to traffic points presently served by T.C.A. If, on the other hand, when we enter upon new negotiations with the United States we do not have to ask for any rights for Pacific services, our requests in regard to international traffic stops in the United States will be relatively limited, covering an Atlantic Coast stop on the way to Bermuda and an Eastern stop on the way to the West Indies. It is to be hoped that these concessions could be obtained without giving up very much to the United States in return. If, on the other hand, we also have to ask for the rights relative to the Pacific which are indicated, we will have to be prepared to offer a great deal more.

The situation is similar although less serious with regard to the other countries with which we would have to negotiate for the Pacific services. These are the United Kingdom (Hong Kong and Fiji), China, Australia, New Zealand, Japan (U.S. government as occupying authority) and possibly the Netherlands East Indies. The concessions we want would have to be offset by concessions we gave in Canada, and although the importance of these might vary considerably, they would virtually all be at the expense of T.C.A.

These factors may not be sufficient to offset other considerations in favour of the proposal, but since they had not been reviewed carefully before by the officials concerned, and since T.C.A. officials have expressed anxiety in this connection, I thought they should be drawn to your attention.

TRANS-PACIFIC AIR SERVICES; CANADIAN PACIFIC AIR LINES

18. The Minister of Transport, referring to discussion at the meeting of May 20th observed that no decision had been taken upon the request of Canadian Pacific Air Lines to be designated as the Canadian line to operate two services in the Pacific, one to Australia and New Zealand and the other to Asia.

Two difficulties had been foreseen. In the first instance, in order to obtain the necessary traffic rights for these services from other countries through the usual medium of bilateral negotiations, it would be necessary to grant reciprocal rights in Canada. Reciprocal rights in Canada might be sought at the expense of Trans-Canada Airlines. In the second place, designation of Canadian Pacific Air Lines for these international operations would involve a reversal of the principle of government policy announced by the Prime Minister some years previously and pursued ever since, namely, that Trans-Canada Airlines would be the only air line designated for international operations. The government would undoubtedly be asked for a new statement of policy in relation to private air lines should the C.P.A. request be approved.

19. The Minister of Trade and Commerce and Reconstruction and Supply pointed out that Trans-Canada Airlines was not in a position to operate Pacific services at present and in any event could only operate such services in the foreseeable future at a substantial financial loss.

On the other hand, Canadian Pacific Air Lines already had an extensive network of communications and agencies in the Pacific area and, therefore, might reasonably be expected to undertake these operations more economically. C.P.A. had not requested any government financial assistance. As for the traffic rights which would have to be obtained to make the Pacific operations possible, it should be understood that it would not be necessary to seek traffic rights for C.P.A. which would require in return Canadian concessions detrimental to T.C.A. operations.

20. The Prime Minister pointed out that, should the proposed C.P.A. services be approved, it should be on the clear understanding that no government subsidy was required or would be asked. Should a subsidy be required at any time in the future, the government would find it necessary to reconsider the whole position respecting designation of a private air line for these services.

21. The Cabinet, after further discussion, agreed that, in the circumstances, designation of Canadian Pacific Air Lines to operate the international air services requested in the Pacific be approved subject to the conditions indicated by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply.

AIR SERVICES TO THE PACIFIC

In Telegram No. 9, August the 7th, from the Minister for External Affairs in Australia,† it is suggested that the Canadian Government should send representatives to the South Pacific Air Transport Council to be held in Wellington, New Zealand, about August 24th with a view to discussing the position of Canada in Pacific air services. I believe it would be useful to trace for you a brief summary of the developments in respect to these Pacific air services.

On July 21st, following a Cabinet decision to designate Canadian Pacific Airlines to operate to the Pacific, Mr. Chevrier released a statement to the Press‡ which indicated that Canadian Pacific Airlines would operate two trans-Pacific routes. Unfortunately there was no prior notification of this statement given to this Department and it was feared that the nature of the statement was such as to arouse a certain amount of apprehension on the part of New Zealand and Australia. Accordingly, telegrams† were despatched on July 22nd to our High Commissioners in New Zealand and Australia explaining that Mr. Chevrier's statement was really an indication of Government policy and that no immediate services into the Pacific would be inaugurated. One year was estimated to be the probable time required to complete the administrative planning and necessary air agreements to facilitate this service. Despatches were also sent to these two missions outlining further background data concerning Mr. Chevrier's statement.

This information, however, did not allay the apprehensions of New Zealand and Australian authorities. Our High Commissioner in the former country was notified that Sir Leonard Isitt, the Director of Civil Aviation, would probably visit Canada in October to discuss these matters, and in the meantime New Zealand suggested that Canada should send representatives to the South Pacific Air Transport Council meeting who would be in a position to explain the Canadian position. It had originally been planned that Canada would be represented at this meeting by an observer and on receipt of this invitation to be fully represented the matter was referred to Mr. Chevrier. We are at present awaiting a decision. The Australian authorities have now reaffirmed the New Zealand invitation in their Telegram No. 9.†

On August the 3rd Mr. Chevrier gave to this Department a further statement explaining some of the reasons behind the decision to operate into the Pacific and the text of his statement, which is attached to this memorandum, was forwarded by despatch to our High Commissioners in Australia and New Zealand.†

I have recommended to Mr. Chevrier that there would be certain advantages in restricting our representation at the South Pacific Air Transport Council meeting to an observer and delaying discussions until the Fall when Sir Leonard Isitt will visit Canada. However, the general attitude to be assumed in our discussions on this question is a matter of Government policy which you may care to discuss with Mr. Chevrier.

RE PACIFIC AIR SERVICES; TRAFFIC RIGHTS
FOR CANADIAN PACIFIC AIR LINES

This matter has been discussed by the Interdepartmental Committee on Civil Aviation, which recommends the following procedure.

1. Northern Pacific Route

(a) Transit rights in Alaska and the Aleutians are required; i.e., the first two freedoms. These are already available under the International Air Transit Agreement so that all that is necessary is notification to the U.S. government at the appropriate time together with a request for permission to use specific airports. This should be taken up at a later date after we have made the necessary arrangements with other governments concerned on this route.

(b) It was understood that C.P.A. wishes full traffic rights in Japan. These would have to be obtained from the Supreme Allied Commander of the occupation forces, i.e., General MacArthur, and preliminary investigation has indicated that there may be great difficulty in getting them. A telegram will be sent to our representative in Tokyo asking him to explore the situation and report.

(c) It is understood that C.P.A. wishes full traffic rights in China (including fifth freedom). As a first step it is proposed that we notify the Chinese government that we would like to enter into a bilateral agreement and will, if they are agreeable, forward a draft agreement for their consideration. Pending receipt of a reply from the Chinese government, we will explore through our Ambassador the general position regarding Chinese aviation so that we will be in a position to decide whether to ask for a four freedoms agreement or a five freedoms agreement. While we might be able to make a satisfactory five freedoms agreement under which any reciprocal rights granted to a Chinese air line would not do us much harm, on the other hand some uncertainty existed with regard to the ownership and operation of the major Chinese international air service, and we would be well advised to obtain information regarding the capital behind it, among other things, before reaching any final decision.

(d) It is understood that C.P.A. wishes full traffic rights in Hong Kong. We lack information on the policy presently being followed in respect of traffic rights in Hong Kong and the nature of the concessions which might be asked of us in return by the U.K. government. As a first step, before making any formal approach, we propose to request our High Commissioner in London to obtain full information regarding air lines presently serving Hong Kong and the policy followed in the matter of granting traffic rights there.

2. Southern Pacific Route

(a) It is understood that, while C.P.A. wishes full traffic rights in Hawaii, ministerial decision had been taken that we should ask the United States for only the third and fourth freedoms, not the fifth freedom. This presumably would be taken up during our next bilateral discussions with the United States. If at that time it appears that fifth freedom rights could also be obtained without difficulty from the United States and without any offsetting disadvantageous concessions by Canada, there would, of course, be no reason why we should not seek fifth freedom rights as well.

(b) Fiji, Canton and Christmas Islands. No difficulty should exist with regard to transit rights in Canton and Christmas Islands. The Department of External Affairs is checking on this point and is also investigating the question of traffic rights on Fiji which has already been dealt with in part by an exchange of notes some time ago.

(c) Agreement with Australia. Our present agreement with Australia is a four freedoms agreement and by informal arrangements we have allowed Australia to carry fifth freedom traffic as well into Canada. It is recommended that the present agreement be allowed to stand without amendment and that C.P.A. operate under it. If, however, we should obtain fifth freedom rights in Hawaii, we would then request Australia to amend the agreement to include fifth freedom rights in Australia. Otherwise no fifth freedom agreement with Australia is needed since there would be no fifth freedom traffic to carry to it.

(d) It is recommended that an agreement be entered into with New Zealand similar to the Australian agreement.

It is suggested that, if you approve the foregoing proposals, an appropriate communication be forwarded to Canadian Pacific Air Lines indicating the action which the Canadian government is undertaking. The main points which might be made in this communication are:

(1) On the Southern Pacific route no difficulty exists with regard to Australia and New Zealand but detailed plans for operation must wait upon our next negotiations with the United States which may take place some time during the autumn or winter.

(2) Arrangements regarding the Northern route have been initiated and preliminary exploration has already revealed that a lengthy period may elapse before the necessary traffic rights can be obtained.

3. Cooperation in Pacific Services

I attach a note on this subject which I have today forwarded to Mr. Howe for his use in discussion with a New Zealand representative. This note represents the conclusions of the committee and, if you approve them, will be used by the officials for their future guidance.

PACIFIC AIR SERVICES; COMMONWEALTH COOPERATION

There have been recent rumours that Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom jointly or separately wish to raise the question of cooperation in the Pacific air service again, and exert further pressure on us. Since Sir Leonard Isitt is, I understand, coming to see you tomorrow morning and may mention this matter, I consider it desirable to indicate to you the outcome of certain general conclusions on this subject which resulted yesterday from discussions at the Interdepartmental Aviation Committee. These conclusions were:

(1) In 1944 we indicated that we were not interested in participating in a joint company in the Pacific. There has been no change in the situation to indicate that it is any more in our interest to do this now than it was then. C.P.A. was designated to operate a Canadian air service in the Pacific and not to be a participant in a joint operating company. The idea of participation in a joint Commonwealth company does not offer any attraction at present.

(2) There are some indications that the idea of two separate operations meeting at a halfway point may be revived, i.e. B.C.P.A. operating up to Honolulu and there meeting Canadian Pacific which would operate only from Honolulu to Vancouver. The Committee felt that this should be rejected. Canadian Pacific's own interest in keeping its name before the various Pacific countries and in working through its own travel offices would probably require that it operate all the way to Australia and New Zealand, not just to a halfway point.

Moreover, the President of Trans-Canada Air Lines stated that while TCA did not wish to operate to Australia and New Zealand, its attitude would be different if the Canadian operation was only one from Vancouver to Honolulu, i.e. TCA might have been interested in a limited service of that sort, particularly if traffic rights in the United States were available.

Further, this type of cooperation would mean that Canada would have to obtain some traffic rights in the United States to satisfy the requirements of Australia and New Zealand for trans-shipment of passengers and, for the present at least, it is desirable to avoid raising this issue with the United States. Accordingly the Committee felt that there would not be any benefit to be gained from discussion of this sort of cooperation.

(3) Indications have come from Australia and New Zealand and they believe the Canadian government is committed to the type of operation discussed in 1944-45, i.e. pooling of traffic and revenues but not of deficits, with inter-company arrangements regarding schedules, etc. The Canadian government does not believe that it is committed formally and finally to this cooperation, but rather that its attitude in 1944-45, as indicated in the records, is that it had no objection to a scheme of this sort, provided satisfactory arrangements could be worked out; these details would be primarily a matter of concern to the two airlines involved. This, the Committee felt, should continue to be our attitude.

It is worth noting that the Montreal discussions were based on the assumption that B.C.P.A. would use the Canadair 4 and as long as this is not the situation, one of the basic assumptions underlying the scheme of cooperation discussed in Montreal is lacking.

RE PACIFIC AIR SERVICES; TRAFFIC RIGHTS
FOR CANADIAN PACIFIC AIR LINES

Thanks for handing me a copy of your memorandum to Mr. Chevrier. I wish to comment as follows:

(1) The North Pacific Route. Canadian Pacific has commercial rights at Fairbanks, Alaska, although these do not carry the 5th freedom. If we could get 5th freedom rights at Fairbanks without paying too high a price, this might be worth doing. Aside from this, 1st and 2nd freedom rights, which we now have, should be sufficient.

We are pressing for full traffic rights in Japan. We have nothing to lose by granting reciprocal rights to Japanese owned airlines and should go all out to obtain full rights.

The same applies to full traffic rights in China. We can insist that China shall own, or control, any airline that exercises these rights on a reciprocal basis. I cannot for a minute think that our people would fly on a Chinese airline and can see no loss of traffic from this.

I presume that the U.K. controls traffic rights in Hong Kong but we are pressing for this. On my last visit to England, B.O.A.C. was anxious to work out an arrangement covering an airline between Hong Kong and Canada. This proposal will probably be taken up again but these should be ways and means of working out the situation.

(2) The Southern Pacific Route: So far as the Southern Pacific route is concerned, the first step will be to straighten out our situation with Australia and New Zealand. Both countries are worried about possible loss of traffic to C.P. Air Lines operating via the southern route. My guess is that C.P.A. will not be able to tackle the southern route for some time.

It seems to me that 4th freedom rights in Australia and New Zealand are sufficient and I see no difficulty about routes at Fiji, Canton and the Christmas Islands.

We can again take up 5th freedom rights for Hawaii at an appropriate time. I would judge that we could obtain these rights by the time C.P.A. are ready to exercise them.

My discussion with Air Marshal Isitt indicated that there would be no difficulty insofar as New Zealand is concerned, provided C.P.A. do not intend to operate the southern route immediately.

AIR SERVICE TO THE PACIFIC

In my memorandum of August 9th, I traced for you some of the developments that had occurred following the recent Government decision designating Canadian Pacific Airlines to operate into the Pacific region. On the advice of the Minister of Transport, we have declined an invitation jointly extended by the Governments of Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom to send an official delegation to the next meeting of the South Pacific Air Transport Council. We have indicated that our plans are as yet at a relatively early stage and are not sufficiently formulated to make it worth while to send an official participant to the Council meeting. However, it is planned that a Canadian observer will attend and report fully the nature of the discussions at this meeting.

The Governments of Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom, which comprise the British Commonwealth Pacific Airlines, have indicated that they might feel that Canada was committed by earlier Commonwealth discussions to enter British Commonwealth Pacific Airlines as a partner. At these earlier discussions the question of co-operative services was informally discussed, and Canada clearly indicated that she was not interested in entering a joint ownership and operation company although we were willing to consider some sort of co-operative pooling in the operation of the services. These discussions, moreover, were based on the assumption that B.C.P.A. would use the Canadair 4 aircraft. The latest information appears to indicate that Australia and New Zealand are anxious to use such aircraft, but under a plan where these aircraft would be contributed as Canada's share in a single co-operative Commonwealth company.

The policy of the Canadian Government, as indicated by Mr. Chevrier, clearly suggests that Canada plans to operate a separate company to the Pacific, and although we are willing to consider the question of the pooling of services, it is not felt that Canada's participation as a partner in B.C.P.A. is warranted on economic grounds. This view was recently given by Mr. Howe directly to Sir Leonard Isitt, Director of B.C.P.A., during a recent visit in Ottawa.

The other Commonwealth Governments have now raised certain political arguments which they feel have some bearing on the establishment of a Commonwealth airline: namely, they have expressed the desire for the development of a strong united Commonwealth round-the-world air service with all parts of the Commonwealth taking part. The United Kingdom, by virtue of her war effort, is at least temporarily behind the United States in air development, and they have suggested that the Commonwealth and the Empire should work to develop a great and official world air service. A single Commonwealth Pacific Air Service is seen as a step towards this goal. They have suggested that, should an additional airline of a Commonwealth country operate an entirely independent service, the position of all the Commonwealth airlines would be weakened without physically affecting the competitive strength of the United States airlines. In addition, the other Commonwealth countries have stressed the importance in defence of a unified Commonwealth service.

These political arguments are in a sense valid but I doubt if they are of sufficient weight to warrant a reversal of our policy by which we have normally resisted any attempts to form Commonwealth economic blocs. However, I am drawing them to your attention in the event that you may care to discuss this question with your Colleagues.<sup>15</sup>

MEETING OF THE SOUTH PACIFIC AIR TRANSPORT COUNCIL

You will recall in my memorandum of August 9th I informed you that Canada had been invited by Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom to attend the meeting of the South Pacific Air Transport Council with a view to discussing the whole question of Canadian Air Services to the Pacific. You consulted with the Minister of Transport on this question and it was decided, since the meeting was to take place the latter part of August, and since our plans for Pacific air services were at a relatively early stage, that we should not send an official participant to the Council meeting. However, it was planned that a Canadian observer would attend and report fully on the nature of the discussions.

The meeting of the Council has now been postponed until November 29th, and both of our High Commissioners in Australia and New Zealand have indicated in personal letters that they feel strongly that a full Canadian Delegation should attend the meeting. In their letters, both Mr. Rive and Mr. Greene have expressed concern lest the misunderstanding between Australia and New Zealand and Canada, arising out of the designation of Canadian Pacific Airlines as the Canadian carrier, might prejudice the relationship between Canada and the other Commonwealth countries.

It was felt that Mr. Howe himself would be an excellent man to attend this meeting and clarify the Canadian position. However, in view of his heavy Cabinet responsibilities, he has felt his attendance at this meeting would not be possible, and he has suggested that Mr. Rive should head the Canadian Delegation, which would also include Air Vice Marshal Ferrier, a member of the Air Transport Board, and Mr. Rau of the Office of the Canadian High Commissioner in Australia.

I would be pleased to learn if you concur in this suggestion that Canada should be represented by a full delegation at this meeting, and if you would agree that Mr. Rive might serve as the head of the delegation.<sup>16</sup>

[Ottawa, n.d.]

FOR THE USE OF THE CANADIAN DELEGATION TO THE SOUTH PACIFIC AIR TRANSPORT COUNCIL MEETING IN WELLINGTON, NEW ZEALAND,
NOVEMBER 1948

This memorandum applies to the operation of an air service between Canada and Australia and New Zealand by Canadian Pacific Air Lines Limited. This is a matter for discussions between the representatives of the Canadian Government and the representatives of the Australian and New Zealand Governments and is not a matter for general discussion by the South Pacific Air Transport Council.

1. Commitments to the Governments of Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom

It is possible that the representatives of Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom may refer back to the Commonwealth Air Conversations of 1944, in particular Document No. CAC (Dec.) 6, Annex No. II, and take the stand that this involves a moral commitment on the part of the Government of Canada. A study of this document will indicate, however, that the language used throughout by Canadian representatives is in effect non-committal. For example, such language as:

“Mr. Howe stated his willingness to consider . . . ”

Then again —

“It was accordingly agreed that, subject to satisfactory arrangements with the U.S. on this matter, the following possible basis of operation should be further examined.”

In the light of the non-committal language used, the changes of circumstances that have since taken place, and in view of the lack of completion of traffic arrangements with the U.S.A., Canadian authorities feel that the conversations of December 1944 involve Canada to no commitment as to the Canadian method of operation of the Canadian share of the trans-Pacific segment of the Commonwealth air routes. The Canadian Government therefore accepts the bilateral agreement between Canada and Australia signed on June 11th, 1946, as the basis to govern all discussions and transactions respecting the route in question. It follows that any agreement between Canada and New Zealand should be modelled upon and consistent with the agreement with Australia.

2. In Respect to Australia and New Zealand

(a) In discussions with the representatives of the Australian and New Zealand Governments, it should be admitted that there was a lack of customary courtesy on the part of the Canadian Government in failing to communicate with the Governments of Australia and New Zealand respectively prior to the public announcement that Canadian Pacific Air Lines Limited had been designated by the Canadian Government to operate a trans-Pacific air service between Canada and Australia-New Zealand. The Canadian Government sincerely regrets this omission.

(b) In regard to a pooling arrangement, the Canadian Government would welcome any arrangement which could be made between Canadian Pacific Air Lines Limited and British Commonwealth Pacific Airways that would be within the scope of the bilateral agreement and which would result in improving the Canada-Australia-New Zealand service, or result in a more economical operation of such service.

(c) If British Commonwealth Pacific Air Lines desires to purchase aircraft of a type similar to those proposed to be used by Canadian Pacific Air Lines so as to improve the service presently performed and to reduce the cost of operation, the Canadian Government would use its best efforts to facilitate the purchase. However it would not be possible to discuss any details of finance involved in such purchase without complete consultation with all of the Canadian authorities so concerned. In addition details of delivery would have to be discussed with Canadair and probably B.O.A.C. and C.P.A.L.

(d) The Canadian Government is not yet prepared to enter into a formal Fifth Freedom Agreement with Australia or New Zealand as its position relative to the United States has not yet been clarified in this respect. The present working arrangement under which both Australia and New Zealand (through B.C.P.A.) exercise Fifth Freedom rights will remain for the present undisturbed.

3. In Respect to Australia

The Canadian Government is desirous of co-operating with the Australian Government in every possible manner short of financial participation in any Canada-Australia service, and it would be useful to indicate this attitude at an early stage. It might also be pointed out to the Australian Government that Canadian Pacific Air Lines Limited is not being subsidized nor given any financial support either directly or indirectly by the Canadian Government in the trans-Pacific service. The Canadian authorities would be anxious to learn of any representations that may then be made by the Australian Government relating to the services referred to in the bilateral agreement. It will then be possible to review the situation and transmit further instructions to the Canadian Delegation.

4. In Respect to New Zealand

As previously stated, the Canadian Government is willing to enter into a bilateral agreement in terms similar to that already executed with Australia, in which agreement, for Canada's part, Canadian Pacific Air Lines would be the carrier designated.

Report of the Delegation to the Third Meeting of the South Pacific Air Transport Council, Wellington, New Zealand, November 29 to December 7, 1948<sup>17</sup>

[Wellington, n.d.]

The Canadian Delegation consisted of Mr. A. Rive, High Commissioner for Canada in New Zealand, leader of the delegation; Air Vice Marshal Ferrier of the Air Transport Board, Ottawa; and Mr. G.A. Rau, Second Secretary of the Office of the High Commissioner for Canada in Australia. Mr. G.W.G. McConachie, President of Canadian Pacific Airlines, was attached to the delegation for consultation.

2. This was the first time that Canada was represented at a meeting of the Council by a full delegation, Canada having joined the Council just prior to the meeting. At previous meetings Canada had been represented only by observers.

3. The membership of the Council now comprises the Governments of Australia, Canada, Fiji, New Zealand and the United Kingdom. All member governments of the Council were represented at this meeting. The Australian Delegation was led by the Honourable A.S. Drakeford, Minister for Civil Aviation and Permanent Chairman of the Council; the Fiji Delegation by Mr. J.F. Nicoll, Colonial Secretary; the New Zealand Delegation by the Honourable F. Jones, Minister in Charge of Civil Aviation who chaired the Council's meetings; and the United Kingdom Delegation by Sir Patrick Duff, High Commissioner for the United Kingdom in New Zealand. A full list of delegates and advisers is attached as Appendix A to this report.†

4. At the first Plenary Session of the Council on November 29th the various delegations were warmly welcomed by the Acting Prime Minister of New Zealand, the Right Honourable Walter Nash. The Canadian Delegation received a particular welcome from Mr. Nash and other members of the Council. The texts of the addresses of welcome and of the replies will be published in the final papers.

5. Following the first Plenary Session the Conference resolved itself into the following committees:

(1) Special Committee to deal with matters pertinent to the operation of British Commonwealth Pacific Airlines and Tasman Empire Airways.

Heretofore matters relating to these companies were dealt with by the Policy Committee, all members of that Committee being partner governments in the companies. With Canada's participation in the work of the Council it became no longer appropriate for the Policy Committee to deal with questions relating to internal matters of these companies and it was therefore suggested by the leader of the Canadian Delegation that a Special Committee of partner governments should be formed to deal with them.

(2) Policy Committee, which appointed a Fiji Airport Sub-Committee and a Pool Account Sub-Committee.

(3) Technical Committee.

(4) Constitutional Committee.

It was recognized that, as a result of Canada's entry the constitution might require some amendments whereby the business of British Commonwealth Pacific Airlines and Tasman Empire Airways could be segregated from the Council's functions. This recommendation was also put forward by Canada.

(5) Steering Committee.

6. In addition to matters concerning the British Commonwealth Pacific Airlines and Tasman Empire Airways which were dealt with in the Special Committee, a number of subjects which came before the Council were of little or no interest to Canada; for example, discussion of regional services in the South Pacific which was of interest only to the partner and directing governments. The Canadian Delegation therefore, in order to avoid embarrassment, abstained from attendance at committee meetings dealing with these matters.

7. The following are the main items dealt with which were of interest to Canada and in the discussion of these the Canadian Delegation took an active part:

(1) Proposed operations in the South Pacific by a Canadian designated airline (Canadian Pacific Airlines Limited).

(2) Canadian contribution to the Pool Account.

(3) Canadian attitude toward the question of landing fees to be imposed at Fiji Airport and Canadian approach to the question of landing fees generally.

(4) Review of constitution of the South Pacific Air Transport Council and amendments necessitated by Canada's entry to the Council.

PROPOSED OPERATIONS IN THE SOUTH PACIFIC BY A CANADIAN DESIGNATED AIRLINE (CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINES LIMITED)

8. At the first meeting of the Steering Committee held on December 2nd at which the Agenda was examined, the head of the Canadian Delegation informed the Committee that the delegation was not prepared to discuss in Policy Committee Item 2(d) of the Agenda entitled "Proposals for Additional Services — Canada." As a result it was suggested that, in view of Canada's attitude, it might be possible to arrange for Item 2(d) of the Agenda to be discussed by the delegates to the conference at an informal, "off the record" meeting. The Canadian Delegation accepted this suggestion and prepared a statement concerning the proposals for additional Pacific services by the Canadian designated airline, which was presented by Air Vice Marshal Ferrier to the informal meeting of the delegations. By previous arrangement the chairman of the meeting called upon Air Vice Marshal Ferrier to give a brief outline of the legislation and organization for the control and regulation of civil aviation in Canada. Air Vice Marshal Ferrier in addition reviewed briefly the history of the Canadian Government's designation of Canadian Pacific Airlines to operate a trans-Pacific service and referred the delegates to Mr. Chevrier's announcement on the subject, explaining that no further comments were needed.

9. At this informal meeting the Canadian High Commissioner took the opportunity to express regret to the Governments of Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom that they had not received prior notification of the Canadian Government's intention to designate Canadian Pacific Airlines for the Pacific route. He also expressed the opinion that the designation of Canadian Pacific Airlines would not create a situation materially different from that which would have existed had Trans-Canada Airlines been designated.

10. The leaders of the Australian and New Zealand Delegations in their remarks, while admitting the Canadian Government's right to designate any airline it wishes, nonetheless regretted the decision to designate Canadian Pacific Airlines, an action which the leader of the Australian Delegation regarded as a complete reversal of policy. They also expressed fear that the result of the designation of Canadian Pacific Airlines would intensify competition, rather than result in co-operation with the services operated by the other Commonwealth countries, competition which was already keen between B.C.P.A. and Pan American. The addition of another competing operator, they felt, would result in serious loss of revenue to B.C.P.A.

11. The leader of the Australian Delegation also expressed anxiety regarding the possibility that Canada might subsidize Canadian Pacific Airlines. At this point the Canadian Delegation referred to Mr. Chevrier's statement that no federal subsidy would be given, and Mr. McConachie, President of Canadian Pacific Airlines, assured Mr. Drakeford that his company would operate without any sort of financial aid from the Canadian Government.

12. Mr. McConachie assured the meeting that his company would do everything practicable to co-operate in all matters which might be mutually advantageous to the Commonwealth countries operating air services in the South Pacific area. He also informed the meeting that it was his company's intention to join the International Air Transport Association. In conclusion the other delegations, speaking for the British Commonwealth Pacific Airlines, promised Canadian Pacific Airlines co-operation to the fullest extent possible under the circumstances.

13. Following this informal meeting the Canadian Delegation presented a statement concerning proposed operations by Canadian Pacific Airlines to be included in the record of proceedings of the Council. Copy of the Canadian Delegation's statement is attached as Appendix B to this report.† It will also be included in the final papers of the meeting.

CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION TO THE POOL ACCOUNT

14. On December 1st at a meeting of the Policy Committee to consider the international airport at Fiji, the chairman, Mr. Jones, referred to "the commitments made by the then High Commissioner for Canada in New Zealand at the 1946 Wellington meeting that Canada would contribute to the Pool Account which provides for facilities in the South Pacific, including Fiji airport." As the Canadian Delegation was not authorized to accept any financial obligation of this order on behalf of the Canadian Government, instructions were immediately requested by cable and duly received by the Delegation. In accordance with them the leader of the Canadian Delegation informed the Policy Committee that the Government of Canada agreed in principle to contribute towards the operating and maintenance expenses in the Pool Account, and made the following points for the record:

(a) that the Canadian Government expressly reserved its position in regard to contribution to capital costs, in particular those involved in the construction of an international airport at Fiji.

(b) that the Canadian Delegation had been instructed to put before the Council the possibility of securing joint support for such an airport from ICAO under the terms of Chapter 15 of the Convention.

(c) that the Canadian Delegation thought that Canadian contribution to the operation and maintenance costs in the Pool Account should be limited to Canada's fair share of the facilities essential to the trunk route, to the exclusion of expenses properly attributable to regional services.

(d) that as the determination of the expenses to which Canada might properly contribute could not be made without a careful study of the details and consultation with Canadian Treasury and technical officers, and as Canadian Pacific Airlines did not plan to start its services until later in 1949, the basis of contribution for the next financial year be left as it was for the present among the original contributors, and

(e) that any contribution made by Canada in respect of the 1949 financial year be treated as "receipts" by the present contributors in the Pool Account.

15. In conclusion the Canadian delegate took the opportunity to remind the Council of the contribution that Canada was already making to Commonwealth air routes and cited the various weather ships, facilities and international airports whose standard of development was in excess of Canada's own domestic needs and the revenue from which was less than the annual recurring cost to the Federal Government.

16. Following the Canadian Delegation's statement on this matter, great satisfaction was expressed by the other members of S.P.A.T.C. at Canada's willingness to contribute to the Pool Account.

CANADIAN ATTITUDE TOWARDS THE QUESTION OF LANDING FEES TO BE IMPOSED AT FIJI AIRPORT AND THE CANADIAN APPROACH TO THE QUESTION OF LANDING FEES GENERALLY

17. When the question of landing fees at Fiji airport was brought before the Policy Committee, the Committee unanimously agreed that some system of imposing such landing fees at Fiji should be adopted as early as possible. When this item was being considered, Air Vice Marshal Ferrier of the Canadian Delegation delivered a statement on landing fees at Government owned airports in Canada and on the Canadian approach to the question of landing fees. The text of his statement is attached to this report as Appendix C.† The Policy Committee decided to appoint a Sub-Committee to enquire into the scale of landing fees that might be imposed at Fiji. Mr. Rau was appointed as the Canadian representative on this Committee.

18. When the Sub-Committee met the United Kingdom Delegate said that although his delegation had previously contemplated suggesting that the Gander scale of landing fees be adopted at Fiji, the paper presented by Air Vice Marshal Ferrier on the subject had "knocked the bottom out of their argument." He then presented to the Committee a proposal for a new scale of fees which were as follows:

For aircraft not exceeding 20,000 lbs —
5/6d (Fiji) per 1000 lbs

For aircraft over 20,000 lbs and not exceeding 40,000 lbs —
5/6 per 1000 lbs for the first 20,000 lbs
11/- per 1000 lbs exceeding 20,000 lbs

For aircraft exceeding 40,000 lbs —
5/6 for the first 20,000 lbs
11/- for the next 20,000 lbs
8/3 per 1000 lbs over 40,000 lbs.

19. The Canadian Delegation noted that, although this scale favours smaller type planes used for regional services in the South Pacific area, it is a fraction higher for heavier planes than the fees imposed at Gander. The Sub-Committee recommended this scale to the Policy Committee and it was subsequently adopted at a later meeting of the Policy Committee at which A/V/M Ferrier recorded the disappointment of the Canadian Delegation that a lower scale for trans-oceanic aircraft had not been recommended, as such a lower-scale was, in the Canadian Delegation's opinion, in the greater interest of civil aviation as a whole.

[CONSTITUTION] AND AMENDMENTS NECESSITATED BY CANADA'S ENTRY TO THE COUNCIL

20. It was suggested by the Canadian Delegation in the early days of the Conference that in view of Canada's accession to the Council the constitution of the South Pacific Air Transport Council should be amended to exclude from the Council's agenda items relating to the "policy of operation, development and finance of air services operated or controlled jointly by the Governments of the United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand and the regional trans-Tasman and Trans-Pacific routes." (See South Pacific Air Transport Council Constitution, Functions, Item 3). A Constitutional Committee was therefore set up and as a result of its report appropriate amendments were made in the Constitution. The text of the new Constitution is attached as Appendix D to this report.†

21. The conference, which had opened with a definite air of tension on the part of all delegations because of the uncertainty of the effect of the Canadian Government's designation of Canadian Pacific Airlines ended in a somewhat easier mood. The Canadian Delegation, following instructions from the Canadian Government, repeatedly assured the partner governments in B.C.P.A. of Canada's intention to co-operate with them. The President of Canadian Pacific Airlines likewise strove to convince those connected with B.C.P.A. that his company would do their utmost to co-operate wherever practicable. His assurances were accepted with expressions of hope that they would be implemented in practice.

22. At the close of the conference the leader of the Australian Delegation, who had been the strongest critic of the Canadian Government's action in designating Canadian Pacific Airlines said in Plenary Session that he did not wish to leave any bad impression with the Canadians and that if, during the meeting, he had done so by his "frank" and perhaps aggressive manner, he wished to correct this impression. The leader of the Canadian Delegation thanked Mr. Drakeford for his gracious act and assured him that his final statement, although pleasing to hear, had not been necessary. He also again assured the member countries of Canada's willingness to co-operate and assist in all matters relating to South Pacific Air Transport Council activities.

23. The final session terminated at one o'clock on the morning of Tuesday, December 7th, with the usual resolution of thanks to the chairman and to the Secretariat and with a general exchange of expressions of thanks and goodwill by the various delegations.

24. The final act of the conference comprised the resolutions and recommendations which were signed for all the delegations on Wednesday afternoon, December 8th. The Honourable F. Jones, Chairman of the Conference, signed first on behalf of New Zealand. The High Commissioners for the United Kingdom, Canada and Australia signed for their delegations and the High Commissioner for the United Kingdom signed also on behalf of the Colonial Secretary for the Fiji Delegation. The resolutions and recommendations were signed also by the Permanent Secretary of the Council, Mr. Winston H. Burchett.

CONTROLS OVER THE ENTRY OF PERSONS TO CANADA
AND THEIR EXIT FROM CANADA

I have discussed with Mr. Crean your memorandum of April 16† on the control of aliens in Canada and I now return it to you.

2. What has happened during the past few months is that various developments are beginning to merge and are becoming inextricably intertwined. The problems raised by the request of certain Western European countries that we enter into agreements for the mutual abolition of non-immigrant visas have become tangled with the wider problem of establishing more effective controls at our borders over the movement of persons. The impetus to the establishment of these more effective controls at the borders was first given by the organized movement of Yugoslavs from Canada. The pressure for more effective controls has been increased by the apprehension of the Canadian Government over the activities in Canada of fifth-column groups, directed to some extent at least by the Communist diplomatic and consular missions in Canada.

3. I had been somewhat concerned by the failure of this Department to pursue more vigorously the questions raised at the Interdepartmental meeting of June 17, 1947, since that meeting was held on the direction of the Minister, and he has legitimate grounds for complaint against the Department for not having brought the matter to a head. You will recall that my comment on the Consular Division's memorandum of October 11, 1947, was that we should have the next Interdepartmental meeting "soon". Owing, I assume, to the pressure of work on the Consular Division at the time, no action was taken by that Division.

4. However, it is probable that this delay has actually been advantageous since it now makes it possible for us to bring the whole host of related problems together and to give Cabinet a comprehensive memorandum on the whole question.

5. The valid concern in Canada over the activities of Communist agents in this country clearly makes it necessary for the Government to take action. Unless the Government can demonstrate that it is taking wise and useful action, public opinion may force it to take action which would not, at least in my opinion, be wise or useful. The kind of action I have in mind is the banning of the Communist Party, forbidding the use of the mails to Communist publications, and the breaking off of diplomatic relations with Communist states in order to prevent them from using their missions here as centres for subversive activities.

6. It seems to me, therefore that it is the duty of the Government's advisers to put before Cabinet a well-considered programme.

7. I would therefore suggest that your Division should undertake the task of preparing a draft memorandum to Cabinet which would first be considered by an interdepartmental group and then be submitted to Cabinet by the Ministers concerned — the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Mines and Resources and the Secretary of State.

8. The draft memorandum to Cabinet might begin with an explanation of the reasons which have led to a study of the problem by the Departments concerned. It would probably begin by mentioning the organized emigration of Yugoslavs and the statement made by our Minister in the House of Commons on this subject, in which he said that the Departments concerned would investigate what action could be taken by the Government to minimize the danger to the State which might result from such movements.

9. Mention might then be made of the necessity of taking all practicable measures to exclude Communist agents from Canada or to hinder their activities if they are already here and cannot be deported. Two steps have already been taken to exclude Communist agents from Canada: refusal of immigration visas to Communists; refusal to admit certain known Communists as non-immigrants. The memorandum might then point out that the Immigration Act and the Citizenship Act are deficient in their present form and explain that there are a number of related problems: control over the exit of aliens and naturalized Canadians; registration of aliens in Canada; registration of the agents of foreign principals in Canada; more effective provisions for depriving naturalized citizens of their citizenship for cause; more effective provisions for providing for loss of domicile by naturalized Canadians.

10. Mention might be made of the fact that citizenship may now be revoked and resident aliens may be deported if they commit certain criminal offenses. It may be that the criminal code should be amended in order to add to the list of offenses constituting grounds for revocation or deportation. Mr. Ilesley has promised to consider this matter (Hansard, April 26, page 3348).

11. This consideration has, I am told, been carried quite far by the Department of Justice. One proposal which they are studying is the strengthening of the paragraph in the criminal code on sedition.

12. The Conservatives in the House of Commons, in the debate on the R.C.M.P. Pensions Bill, also raised the question of the registration of agents of foreign principals. This proposal is, to some extent, tied up with our desire to exercise control over Communist propaganda in Canada which is sent out from the diplomatic and consular missions of Communist countries here (see Hansard for April 26, page 3341, speech by Mr. A.L. Smith).

13. Somewhere in your memorandum you should refer to the proposals by various Western European countries to abolish non-immigrant visas, pointing out the additional loss of control of the entry of non-immigrants to Canada which would result if these agreements were entered into unless action were taken along the lines set forth below in the memorandum.

14. The memorandum might then point out that there are certain steps which could be taken within the limits of existing legislation and would put forward for the consideration of Cabinet a series of recommendations. (These are outlined in your present memorandum but they should be developed).

15. The last part of the memorandum would point out that the problem, however, cannot be fully met without new legislation and would put forward a series of recommendations on new legislation. (These are likewise outlined in your existing memorandum but should be developed).

16. This draft memorandum would then be sent to the Deputy Ministers of the Departments concerned, referring back to our letters of August 25, 1947, apologizing for the delay in carrying this matter forward, requesting the Departments to study the memorandum and to send a representative to a meeting at which it would be revised for presentation to Cabinet.

17. After revision, it would then be submitted to the Ministers concerned for their approval, and then submitted to Cabinet.

18. One of the points in the file which is obscure is that there seems to have been no reply ever received from Washington to our despatch No. 2863 of October 23, 1947, on the proposal that the United States cooperate with us in making it necessary for persons leaving Canada to take up permanent residence in another country to produce at the border a certificate indicating that they are not indebted to the Canadian Government for income tax.

19. The presentation of the draft memorandum which we suggest will, I am afraid, be a big job, but perhaps you could get Mr. Horne<sup>1</sup> to do it. I would suggest that, before Mr. Horne's draft is sent outside the Department, it be sent to the Legal Adviser and to Mr. Crean for revision.

20. In view of the magnitude of the problems concerned, it seems to me that you were right in the suggestion you made a couple of weeks ago that we should now advise the Western European countries which have asked for visa agreements with us that we cannot, for the present, give them a definite answer but that we hope to be able to take the matter up again with them in a few months' time.

The merits of a system of exit and entry control at the Canadian border were emphasized last year by the mass emigration of persons of Yugoslav origin on the S.S. Radnik, at a time when the advisability of modifying Canadian non-immigrant visa regulations by reciprocal agreement with certain countries of western Europe was already being considered.

Subsequent events have led us to go into the whole question and to try to relate it to the control of subversive activities. The attached secret memorandum, "Controls over the entry of persons to Canada and their exit from Canada," dated June 9, 1948, looks at the existing controls and makes a number of recommendations designed to strengthen them.

We have in the process inevitably taken into consideration a number of measures that are the primary concern of a number of other departments. For this reason I would be very grateful if you would take up the enquiry at this point.

Ten copies of the memorandum are enclosed. If more are needed, they can be made in very short order.

SECRET

Ottawa, June 9, 1948

CONTROLS OVER THE ENTRY OF PERSONS TO CANADA
AND THEIR EXIT FROM CANADA

This memorandum examines methods of exit and entry control and alien registration and relates them to:

(a) The securing of the state against the entry of foreign agents and against subversive activities in Canada;

(b) The administration of the Immigration Act and the Canadian Citizenship Act insofar as they pertain to departure from and return to Canada.

2. During 1947 the governments of several European countries proposed the conclusion of mutual agreements with Canada whereby visas for non-immigrant entry would be virtually abolished. The principle of removing restrictions on travel had been accepted at the Meeting of Experts concerning Passport and Frontier Formalities held at Geneva in January, 1947. The countries concerned are, apart from Czechoslovakia, still under democratic government, namely, Belgium, Denmark, France, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland. Nevertheless the agreements would result in a loss of entry control abroad.

3. The necessity for a careful examination of the whole question of entry and exit control has become increasingly apparent as a result of the following developments:

(a) The organized return to Yugoslavia of persons of Yugoslav origin on the S.S. Radnik during 1947 emphasized the need for methods of keeping track of such persons for purposes of security, revocation of naturalization certificates, and change of domicile. It led to assurances to Parliament by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on May 23, 1947 that means of countering the abuse of Canadian passports taken to Yugoslavia would be examined, and that action would be taken wherever possible against improper methods of persuading residents of Canada to return to Yugoslavia or to contribute to the funds raised for such repatriation. The Yugoslav government, the host of the Cominform, intends to effect another large-scale return during 1948. There is also evidence that similar movements are being organised amongst other groups of Slav origin in Canada.

(b) Two Cabinet decisions regarding the exclusion of Communists as immigrants or non-immigrants have been taken.

(c) United Kingdom visa officers were instructed on March 16th to refuse United Kingdom non-immigrant visas to all holders of passports of the U.S.S.R. or of Soviet-satellite states, except for urgent compassionate reasons or business purposes; even these exceptions can be made only by the authorities in London.

(d) A Subversive Activities Control Bill is now before the United States Congress. One of its chief draftsmen has outlined its purpose as follows:

“This bill would outlaw the Communist party as a secret organization tied up with a foreign connection. If it wants to operate openly, it can . . . This bill is intended to turn the spotlight on the hard core of knowing and wilful conspirators and on all the subversive aspects of Communism.”

(e) Much attention is being given in the House of Commons to subversive activities in Canada. The Minister of Justice has stated that consideration will be given to the following suggestions made in the debate on the Bill amending the R.C.M.P. Act:

(i) Protection of persons of foreign birth in Canada from intimidation calculated to force them to contribute to large-scale migrations to countries under Communist influence.

(ii) Registration of agents of a foreign country spreading Communist propaganda.

(iii) Redefinition of diplomatic immunities.

(iv) Bringing the law of sedition to bear on alien residents engaged in Communist activities.

(f) On May 3rd the Member for Kamouraska advocated:

(i) Breaking off diplomatic relations with Communist-dominated states in order to remove their missions as sources of subversion, and avoid the expense of maintaining representation with governments that offer no collaboration.

(ii) The outlawing of Communist organizations.

(iii) Strengthening of the Criminal Code in order to "guarantee the safety of our nation" by prosecution of Communists.

(g) The unsuccessful Bill introduced by the Member for Quebec-Montmorency would have made the Communist Party of Canada and the Labour-Progressive Party "illegal organizations" and have imposed a heavy penalty for any advocacy or defence of the acts, principles or policies of such organizations.

4. The existing controls over persons of foreign birth, whether visiting, resident or naturalized, operate at three points:

(a) In Canada (other than at the border); namely, the Criminal Code, the Immigration Act and the Canadian Citizenship Act.

(b) Border control by Canadian immigration officers.

(c) Security screening by Canadian offices abroad.

These controls will be examined in turn.

In Canada, Other Than at the Border

5. (a) The Criminal Code provides for 2 years imprisonment for sedition, and a $100. fine or 3 months imprisonment for intimidation.

(b) The Immigration Act, section 42(3) provides for the deportation of aliens, (and in one case of British subjects also) who are or become one of the undesirable or prohibited classes (Annex A, footnotes.)†

(c) The Canadian Citizenship Act, section 21(d) provides for the revocation of naturalization certificates on conviction of treason or sedition in Canada, (or on proof of disaffection and disloyalty to His Majesty when abroad.)

6. Canada has no system of alien registration.

Border Control

7. No method of exit control exists, other than the outward manifests of the previous voyage that the Immigration Act requires of ships returning to Canada.

8. The following methods of entry control for security purposes are at present followed by Canadian immigration officers at ports of entry:

(a) Scrutiny of passports for Canadian immigrant visas granted abroad after security screening and for non-immigrant visas in so far as they are required.

(b) Reporting to Immigration Branch and thence to the R.C.M.P. of persons entering on U.S.S.R. passports.

(c) Scrutiny of the list of designated Communists to be refused non-immigrant entry under subsections (n) and (o) of section 3, Immigration Act (Annex A, footnote iii).†

9. Further methods of entry control at the southern border seem unnecessary, for the following reasons:

(a) The list of designated Communists includes the known undesirable United States citizens or residents;

(b) United States transit visas are granted to persons with Canadian visas only after a separate screening by the United States office abroad (at any rate as regards U.S.S.R. passports).

(c) A United States transit visa will not be granted until a Canadian visa (which requires screening) is granted.

(d) In general, Canada and the United States can usefully be considered one area for security purposes. If each country exerts effective control over its seaports and airports, and the United States government controls effectively its border with Mexico, entry controls at the United States – Canada border become relatively unimportant.

Controls at Canadian Offices Abroad

10. Security screening by Canadian offices abroad is based upon the visa system. It is supplemented by the recent Cabinet decision concerning would-be visitors who are designated or suspected Communists. Any visa granted on a U.S.S.R. passport is reported by cable to Ottawa.

11. All aliens visiting Canada directly or indirectly from Europe must obtain a Canadian visa in Europe. Other alien visitors coming by way of the United States also in practice require a Canadian visa and some ask for a visa even though they are coming direct to Canada. Apart from these cases, Canada has no general visa control over visitors.

Recommendations

12. Having regard, therefore, to the existing means of control, consideration of the following measures is suggested:

(a) a strengthening of the law of Sedition and Intimidation;

(b) the registration of aliens in Canada;

(c) a system of entry and exit control at the border;

(d) restrictions on visits by any national of a Communist or Communist-dominated state.

In Canada, Other Than at the Border

13. Annex "A"† considers the relation of Sedition and Intimidation to the deportation of aliens, whether or not domiciled in Canada, and to the revocation of certificates of naturalization.

14. For the administration of the Immigration Act in Canada an alien registration system recording the date and port of entry would provide a control over non-immigrants who over-stayed the period for which they had received permission to stay in Canada and also over persons who did not enter at a port of entry. It is suggested that to section 33 of the Act a new subsection 17 be added requiring registration ostensibly for the better administration of section 33. The subsection might declare that no alien shall after entry remain in Canada for more than one week without registration, nor for more than six months after any registration, unless he registers again. Failure to show reasonable cause why he had not registered would constitute a ground for deportation.

At the Border

15. A system of entry and exit control at the border would be useful for security purposes, since it would record the time and place of entry and exit of:

(a) Persons concerning whom adverse information was received after a non-immigrant visa had been granted abroad.

(b) Persons who are not required to have non-immigrant visas but become listed or suspect after entry (United States citizens and British subjects excepted).

(c) Persons of Eastern European origin who left Canada with large-scale movements, so that they would be identified on return.

(d) All persons travelling on passports of Communist states and Communist-dominated states.

The controls would also help to trace defaulters under the alien registration provision, and enable Canada to cooperate more effectively with other countries in following the movement of agents.

16. Apart from security the system would provide an accurate means of administering the following legislation:

(a) Canadian Citizenship Act

Section 10 (1) requires a lawful entry and a check on continuous residence for naturalization purposes. Sections 20 and 21 cannot be effectively enforced unless we are certain of dates and periods of departure.

(b) Immigration Act

The regulations relating to changes of domicile would be more effective than the present system based on ships' manifests that are not delivered, if at all, until the ships return to Canada on another voyage.

(c) Any agreements that might be made in the future for the reciprocal modification of non-immigrant visa requirements, would require a system of checking on persons who entered Canada without visas under such agreements.

(d) An alien registration system, based on half-yearly registration would require proof of the lapse of the prescribed period after the date of entry.

17. Annex "B"† gives the administrative measures that can be taken at once without further legislation, and the legislative changes that might be desirable, for instituting border control.

18. Annex "C"† examines the difficulty of establishing an exit control at the United States – Canada border.

19. There appear to be no means of checking the abuse of Canadian passports, as discussed in the House in May, 1947, other than the following administrative measures now in effect:

(a) Sending the numbers of passports of Canadian citizens who join mass migrations, to Canadian immigration officers at ports of entry;

(b) Persistent diplomatic representations for the return of confiscated passports. (This resulted recently in the return of 125 passports by the Yugoslav government.)

(c) The examination of further security precautions in the composition of passports.

At Canadian Offices Abroad

20. It is recommended that we should issue visa instructions to Canadian offices abroad similar to those issued by the United Kingdom on March 16th regarding visitors from Communist states and Communist-dominated states. Since the number of applicants will not be large, neither great hardship to offices abroad nor undue expense would be incurred. Any applicant not refused at once would be required to state his destination and the purpose of his visit to Canada, so that investigations could be made in Canada before approval. This method might prove to be also a useful supplement to a system of entry and exit control and alien registration. No legislation would be necessary.

21. Applications for "returning resident" visas could be dealt with speedily and accurately by reference to the border control records. For our Missions in such Eastern European countries as Yugoslavia, which are encouraging large-scale return movements, it is important to know whether the applicant left Canada with such a movement. Ships' manifests are unsatisfactory since special chartered ships are used at long intervals, and the would-be returning resident will often be returning on the very ship bringing the manifest that bears his own name, or even on an earlier ship.

22. Canadian offices abroad faced with the difficult task of dealing with automatic loss under section 20 of the Canadian Citizenship Act from 1953 onwards would have a firm administrative basis in a border control record.

IMMIGRATION; SPECIAL DEPORTATION CASE

9. The Minister of Mines and Resources, referring to discussion at the meeting of February 10th, reported that the Department of Justice had reviewed the evidence available in the case of Reid Robinson and had advised that it was sufficient to support a finding by a Board of Inquiry that this individual was a prohibited person subject to deportation.

10. Mr. Glen added that it was anticipated that Robinson would apply for the extension of his temporary permit, which would expire on 24th of the month. Such extensions were normally granted.

11. The Cabinet, after considerable discussion, agreed:

(a) that, unless in the opinion of Justice there were legal objection, the Minister should direct the appropriate Immigration authorities to refuse extension of Robinson's temporary permit; and,

(b) that, unless in the opinion of Justice there were legal objection to this course, in future Immigration authorities should refuse entry to other similar persons known to be intending to enter Canada for subversive purposes.

IMMIGRATION; DEPORTATION AND REFUSAL OF ENTRY; LABOUR ORGANIZERS

15. The Minister of Mines and Resources, referring to discussion at the meeting of February 13th, reported that the alleged Communist organizer, Reid Robinson, had since left the country. It would not, therefore, be necessary to consider any legal difficulties which might arise from refusal to extend his permit. His case might better be dealt with in accordance with a general policy relative to the admission of Communists and other subversive persons.

It was felt that the application to Communists, as such, of paragraphs (n) and (o) of Section 3 of the Immigration Act was open to some doubt. For this reason, consideration might be given to amending the statute so as to provide, in terms, for the prohibition of entry of persons who were members of or affiliated with any Nazi, Fascist or Communist party or other organization professing similar beliefs or doctrines. Such an amendment would facilitate the Department's disposition of cases similar to that which had been under discussion and would place on a firmer basis the policy followed in "screening" D.P.'s and other applicants for admission to Canada.

(Departmental memorandum, undated, "The Immigration Act and the Admission of Communists").†

16. The Cabinet, after considerable discussion, agreed:

(a) that an amendment to the Immigration Act to provide expressly for the exclusion of Communists would be inadvisable;

(b) that the provisions of paragraphs (n) and (o) of Section 3 of the Act were sufficient to justify instructions to Immigration Officers to exclude known Communists seeking to enter Canada as labour organizers; and,

(c) that the Ministers of Mines and Resources and Labour confer with the object of having the Labour Department compile a confidential list of approved U.S. labour organizers with a view to having Immigration Officers instructed that only such individuals as were on this list (and such others as were cleared on specific reference to Ottawa) were to be admitted to Canada as labour organizers; others seeking entry, as such, were to be refused.

IMMIGRATION; SPECIAL CASE; LABOUR ORGANIZERS

5. The Minister of Mines and Resources reported that the Cabinet Committee on Immigration Policy had considered the decision taken at the meeting of February 19th, relating to the entry of Communist labour organizers into Canada and had now agreed to recommend:

(a) that all known Communists seeking admission to Canada be considered as coming under the provisions of paragraphs (n) and (o) of Section 3 of the Immigration Act and that they be refused admission to Canada; and

(b) that a list of all such persons be compiled by the Labour Department, the Immigration Branch and the R.C.M. Police, it being understood that the Police would be able to provide, when necessary, evidence to prove that the persons on such list were known Communists.

An explanatory note was circulated.

(Cabinet Committee's report, Feb. 26, 1948 — Cabinet Document 619).†

6. Mr. Glen explained that the Commissioner of the R.C.M. Police had expressed the opinion that it would be proper to refuse entry to known Communists under the authority of paragraphs (n) and (o) of Section 3 of the Immigration Act. With reference to preparation of the proposed list of such persons, considerable information was available, including the names of individuals and organizations reported upon by the U.S. Congressional Committee on Un-American activities and those named by the U.S. Attorney General.

If these recommendations were approved, admission to enter Canada would have to be refused to the Secretary of the U.K. Communist Party [Harry Pollitt] who was known to be contemplating a visit to this country in the near future. Consideration would also have to be given to four other known Communists, aliens, presently in Canada on temporary permits.

7. The Secretary of State for External Affairs observed that the Cabinet Committee's recommendations went substantially beyond what was contemplated in the Cabinet decision of February 1948 which had been concerned with persons seeking to enter Canada as labour organizers. Adoption of these recommendations would involve refusal of admission to known and accepted public figures from certain countries; it might also compel refusal of admission to any U.S.S.R. national. It might raise the issue of the status of the Communist Party in Canada.

8. The Minister of Justice said that the legality of prohibiting the entry of Communists into Canada under paragraphs (n) and (o) of Section 3 of the Immigration Act was open to question. If cases were taken to the Courts, the decision might well go against the government.

9. The Minister of National Defence pointed out that it was obviously desirable to prevent entry into Canada of known Communist trouble-makers. Nevertheless, care should be taken as to the means employed. If the matter got into the Courts and decision went against the government, the question of amending legislation would arise.

10. The Cabinet, after further discussion, deferred decision upon the Cabinet Committee's report until the Prime Minister were present.

IMMIGRATION; SPECIAL CASES; LABOUR ORGANIZERS

1. The Prime Minister referred to the report of the Cabinet Committee on Immigration Policy upon which decision had been deferred at the meeting of February 27th.

2. The Minister of Mines and Resources said that there were three questions upon which decisions were required:

(a) whether administrative action should be taken to refuse admission to Canada of "all known Communists", as suggested by the Cabinet Committee, or whether refusal of admission should be confined to such as sought entry as labour organizers;

(b) whether admission should be refused in the special case of the Secretary of the British Communist Party who proposed to visit Canada at the beginning of the following month; and,

(c) whether steps should be taken to bring before a Board of Review, with a view to deportation, four known Communists who had entered Canada as labour organizers, or whether upon expiry their permits should not be renewed.

Each of these questions involved the interpretation of Section 3(1) (n) and (o) of the Immigration Act upon the effect of which in relation to Communists there was difference of opinion. If the proposed administrative steps were taken thereunder, interpretation of the law would be left to the Courts.

With regard to (a) above, attention had been drawn to the administrative difficulty of distinguishing between Communist labour organizers and other known Communists.

3. Mr. King drew attention to the fact that adoption of the Cabinet Committee's proposal to exclude all known Communists involved new policy which would inevitably affect the treatment to be accorded the Communist Party in Canada. There were two methods of dealing with Communism, the traditional course which entailed no interference with freedom of speech and suppressive measures which could only be justified by serious emergency. The question for consideration was which of these methods was best to deal effectively with present circumstances.

4. Mr. Glen observed that no visas were required for entry to Canada from the United Kingdom or the United States. The Secretary of the British Communist Party, having referred to Canada House in connection with his proposed visit to this country, had been informed that there would not appear to be anything in the regulations to prevent his doing so.

5. The Minister of National Defence felt that there was an important distinction between British subjects and non-resident aliens who sought admission to Canada.

6. The Cabinet, after further considerable discussion, agreed to defer decisions until a later meeting.

IMMIGRATION; SPECIAL CASES; REFUSAL OF ADMISSION

13. The Prime Minister referred to the discussion at the meeting the previous day (March 1st).

Decisions had still to be made upon the questions raised by the Minister of Mines and Resources upon the submission, at the meeting of February 27th, of the report of the Cabinet Committee on Immigration Policy.

14. The Secretary of State for External Affairs pointed out that the reply given to the Secretary of the British Communist Party, as indicated by Mr. Glen at the meeting of March 1st, had been made by Canada House on Ministerial authority after previous approval by the Director of Immigration.

If it were now decided to refuse admission in this case, the High Commissioner would require to be instructed to that effect.

15. The Cabinet, after considerable discussion, agreed:

(a) that known Communists seeking admission to Canada for the purpose of engaging in subversive propaganda be considered as coming within the provisions of paragraphs (n) and (o) of Section 3 (1) of the Immigration Act;

(b) that persons considered to fall within the above category (and so designated) by a Cabinet Committee, after review of available evidence, be refused admission to Canada [The Minister of Mines and Resources, the Minister of Labour and the Secretary of State for External Affairs were constituted a Committee for this purpose]; and

(c) that, in present conditions, it would be inadvisable for the Secretary of the British Communist Party to enter Canada and that the High Commissioner in the United Kingdom be directed to inform him that, in the circumstances, his admission to Canada could not be permitted.

Ottawa, March 12, 1948

PROCEDURE FOR REFUSAL OF ADMISSION TO CANADA
UNDER IMMIGRATION ACT SECTIONS 3(1), (N) AND (O)

I. Administrative Policy; Cabinet Decisions

1. Government policy with respect to refusal of admission to Communists seeking to enter Canada has been the subject of two Cabinet decisions.

2. On March 5th, 1947 (in connection with immigrants from Continental Europe), it was agreed that where, as a result of security investigation, it was demonstrated that a prospective immigrant was a Communist, admission should be refused. This decision is in practice applicable only in cases of Displaced Persons or where visas are required. Arrangements for carrying out this policy have been made and, subject to the limitations imposed by inadequate screening facilities, are working satisfactorily.

3. The second decision was taken on March 2nd, 1948, when Cabinet agreed:

(a) that known Communists seeking admission to Canada for the purpose of engaging in subversive propaganda be considered as coming within the provisions of paragraphs (n) and (o) of Section 3(1) of the Immigration Act;

(b) that persons considered to fall within the above category (and so designated) by a Cabinet Committee (composed of the Minister of Mines and Resources, the Minister of Labour and the Secretary of State for External Affairs), after review of available evidence, be refused admission to Canada.

4. This recent decision in effect supplements rather than restricts that taken earlier. It is designed principally to deal with those seeking to enter as visitors or for a temporary period, and provides additional authority for the disposition of cases where visas are not required.

II. Reports to Cabinet Committee; Designation of Individuals

5. The Immigration Branch, in consultation with the Department of Labour and External Affairs, and with the advice of the R.C.M. Police,<sup>3</sup> will submit for consideration by the Cabinet Committee appointed for the purpose individual reports

<sup>3</sup> Cette instruction et la note en renvoi suivante fut notée sur le document :

This and the following footnote were noted on the document:

The R.C.M. Police point out that information provided in a report upon any individual will be limited to "open evidence" available. It cannot include information of a strictly confidential character obtained from special sources which would be compromised if it were divulged. In cases where they have information in this special category, it will, in appropriate cases, be communicated by the Police to the Minister of Justice so that he may take it into consideration in relation to any case before the Cabinet Committee.

upon any known Communists considered to be within the category established by the Cabinet decision of March 2nd, i.e., such as are likely to seek admission to Canada for the purpose of engaging in subversive propaganda.

6. Such reports, including supporting evidence in each case, will be sent by hand, under Secret cover, to the Secretary of the Cabinet Committee (E.W.T. Gill, Privy Council Office).

7. The Secretary will refer such reports immediately to the Ministers concerned for decision whether admission to Canada should be refused under Section 3(1), (n) and (o) of the Immigration Act.

8. The Secretary will notify departments concerned of decisions taken so that action thereunder may be instituted without delay.

III. Action by Immigration Branch

9. The Immigration Branch will, on being informed of the Cabinet Committee's decision, instruct their port authorities to refuse admission to persons designated by the Cabinet Committee as coming within the inadmissible class.

(It is to be borne in mind that any person refused entry has the right to have his case heard by a Board of Inquiry, of appealing from the decision of the Board to the Minister, and of instituting Habeas Corpus proceedings.)

10. If, however, a person thought to be a Communist arrives at a port of entry and his name is not among those designated, no special steps will be taken to prevent his entry without express instruction on authority of the Cabinet Committee.

IV. Action by External Affairs

11. External Affairs, on being informed of decisions by the Cabinet Committee, will notify the appropriate Missions abroad of the persons designated as coming within the inadmissible class in order that:

(a) Missions in certain British countries<sup>4</sup> and the United States, if consulted in advance with respect to the admission of any person so designated, may inform applicants that entry of such persons would be denied; and

(b) Missions in countries other than those in (a) may refuse applications for visas for such designated persons.

12. External Affairs will, at the same time, instruct all Missions abroad to refer to Ottawa for specific instructions with respect to any person who makes enquiries concerning entry to Canada or applies for a visa if they have reason to believe that such person is a known Communist and comes within the Cabinet decisions in I above, even though his name is not among those designated by the Cabinet Committee.<sup>5</sup>

[Ottawa], June 9, 1948

In reading over the oral judgment delivered by Chief Justice McRuer in the case of H.R. Robinson,<sup>6</sup> it has occurred to me that the definition of “prohibited persons” in sub-section (n) and (o) of Section 3 of the Immigration Act, is considerably outmoded, having regard to the subtler techniques now being employed by Communists and their sympathizers. I wonder if some attention should not be given to a study of these techniques with a view to rephrasing the relevant sections of the Immigration Act and also the relevant sections of the Criminal Code of Canada?

2. For instance, is what we should really aim at “a person who disbelieves in or is opposed to organized government!” This definition, of course, only covers the pure anarchist, who I should think is a rara avis. Again is it “a person who believes in or advocates the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of Canada?” Perhaps this might be true of the typical active Communist from an extreme Marxist point of view. It does not, however, accurately describe one who seeks subtler ways of overthrowing or subverting the Government of Canada. Further, is it “one who advocates the unlawful destruction of property?” That seems to me to be a description of a saboteur or a teacher of saboteurs. But really, when it gets to the point of sabotage, the real damage has probably been done.

3. I make these preliminary observations because it seems to me that, quite apart from the desirability or otherwise of “outlawing” the Communist Party as such, the text of the law of Canada lags considerably behind both political reality and public opinion in this country. It would be unfortunate if the Canadian conception of a “prohibited person” remains that of a “Bolshevik” in its earliest and most lurid connotation — namely, a furtive, cloaked figure, carrying a time-bomb in one hand and the Manifesto in the other, the while advancing with baleful but obvious intent on the Parliament Buildings.

ADMISSION TO CANADA OF KNOWN COMMUNISTS

22. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that the special Cabinet Committee, appointed at the meeting of March 2nd, had under consideration a proposal for excluding known Communists from Canada on the basis of unions known to be Communist dominated.

The members of the special Cabinet Committee had agreed that a procedure on the following lines should be recommended:

(a) that permission to enter Canada be withheld, pending review of the matter by a Board of Inquiry, in the case of any person whose card when presented at the boundary showed that he was an officer of one of the following unions:

International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers,
 American Communications Association,
 United Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers of America,
 Office and Professional Workers of America,
 International Fur and Leather Workers Union of the United States and Canada,
 United Electrical Radio and Machine Workers of America;

(b) that, before a Board was constituted to hear the case, the matter be referred to Ottawa and the R.C.M. Police asked to indicate whether they had evidence against the person to show that he was a Communist or fellow traveller, and that their findings be made available to the Board. In the event that the R.C.M. Police report was positive, the person would be considered as coming within Sections 3(1) (n) and (o) of the Immigration Act, and be denied permission to enter.

The term "officer" was taken to apply to members and officials of the international head office, board, or administration of the union, and did not include minor officials such as district and local organizers.

The R.C.M. Police had been consulted and they indicated that the unions mentioned were, according to their records, Communist dominated. Mines and Resources had also been consulted and they did not see any particular obstacles in the way of dealing with the problem along the lines indicated. Mines and Resources pointed out, however, that the delay in awaiting the R.C.M. Police report before setting up a Board of Inquiry might on occasions cause some difficulty.

(Privy Council Office memorandum, July 8, 1948).†

23. The Cabinet, after discussion approved the procedure recommended by the Minister on behalf of the special Cabinet Committee and agreed that officials of the departments concerned take the necessary steps to put it into effect forthwith.

DESPATCH 399

Ottawa, September 23, 1948

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my despatch No. 507† of May [n.d.] enclosing a memorandum of April 22nd explaining the Cabinet decision of March 2nd to refuse admission to known Communists seeking to enter Canada for the purpose of engaging in subversive propaganda.

2. In the light of experience with the operation of the new procedure to date, it now seems desirable to clarify one or two points in the memorandum.

Non-Immigrants

3. I shall deal first with non-immigrant cases. It is not the intention of the Cabinet Committee dealing with this subject to have referred to them each and every case of a person who might be suspected or presumed to be a Communist applying for a non-immigrant visa or, in cases where visas are not required, seeking entry to Canada for a temporary purpose. As defined in section 3(a) of the memorandum of April 22nd, the Cabinet Committee are interested in those Communists who are seeking entry for the purpose of engaging in subversive propaganda. You should therefore not interpret paragraph 6 of the memorandum as instructions to refer to Ottawa all requests for temporary entry from presumed Communists.

4. In the case of our Eastern European Missions, this would mean in effect referring to Ottawa the case of every applicant holding valid travel documents from the Communist governments in those countries and therefore presumably at least well disposed to those governments, if not a Communist. In those countries where direct and indirect compulsions lead so many to accept Party membership as possibly the only means of survival, a distinction must be made between what may be called "active" and "passive" Communists. You must try to come to a decision, on the basis of the best information you are able to get, as to the probable intentions of the applicant. If you decide that his past record clearly shows that he is an undesirable sort of person to have in Canada at the present time, you should refuse him a visa without giving a reason. On the other hand, if an applicant appears to have a clear record and you consider that it may safely be presumed that he intends to come to Canada for some relatively harmless reason, you may grant him a visa. It was, for example, decided at the time of the Trade Fair in Toronto to grant non-immigrant visas to satellite Communist and non-Communist business men alike in cases in which our Missions were reasonably satisfied that they would not be likely to engage in propaganda activities but were bona fide business men.

Business Men

5. It is recognized that it may be difficult for you to decide locally on the bona fides of business men coming from Communist-dominated countries. In most cases, these people are more likely to be officials or agents of the State than business men in our sense of the word. You should refer to the Department all cases in this category in which you are in any doubt as to whether:

(a) the applicant is in fact a business man or a person competent to represent his country's commercial interests abroad;

(b) the commodities which he wishes to buy in Canada are either of strategic importance, or that he would not be able to obtain them here because of short supply or our export control regulations.

When you refer to the Department a case of this kind you should state as precisely as possible the nature of the business in which the applicant alleges he is engaged, his business or commercial connections in Canada with the names and addresses of the firms with which he has been in correspondence or with which he hopes to deal in Canada, together with a list of the commodities which he is trying to purchase or sell in this country. Upon receipt of this information in Ottawa, it would be passed to the Economic Division of the Department which, in conjunction with the Department of Trade and Commerce, will be responsible for carrying out the necessary investigations. It is not desired to impede legitimate business between Canada and the satellite countries except in so far as it might be necessary to do so in the interests of security in accordance with the decisions of the Government.

Co-operation With U.K. and U.S. Screening Authorities

6. In order to assess the security risk of an applicant, Missions will follow the instructions contained in the memorandum of April 22nd concerning the co-operation which they should enlist from the Passport Control Office of the United Kingdom Embassy or from the Security Section of the United States Embassy. The State Department have now agreed informally to instruct their Missions to assist Canadian Missions in this field and you should therefore find this channel open to you as an alternative to the longstanding arrangements we have had with the United Kingdom Passport Control Offices. Both the United Kingdom and United States Embassies will probably consult their central records in London and Washington before replying to most of your enquiries but this is a more direct channel than referring each case through Ottawa where in most instances we should then have to consult London or Washington, as our records in Ottawa cannot possibly be as complete. In principle, our understanding with both United Kingdom and United States services is that the exchange of information will be reciprocal, although in practice it is recognized that our contribution will be very small.

7. In the April 22nd memorandum, the case of Harry Pollitt was cited as an example of the sort of case which the Cabinet Committee wished to have referred to them for disposition. They are also interested in any person whose activities while in Canada would be primarily propagandist and subversive. Clearly, organizers from Communist-dominated Trade Unions in the United States fall in the same category and you will have seen the judgment given by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Ontario on the Reid Robinson case which was tried on April 30th and resulted in the vindication of the competence of the Immigration Branch to deport such Communists as coming within the provisions of paragraphs (n) and (o) of Section 3(1) of the Immigration Act.

8. A number of individuals (mostly U.S. Trade Union organizers known to be Communists) have been designated by the Cabinet Committee as inadmissible. Their names have been circulated to our Embassy in Washington and our Consulates in the United States, as well as to Immigration Officers along the border. It has also been decided to exclude in the same manner the officers of certain international Labour Unions known to be Communist dominated.

Immigrants

9. I have up to this point been discussing non-immigrant cases. The Cabinet decision of March 2, 1948, excluded from visiting Canada only those Communists who would come to engage in subversive propaganda. On March 5, 1947, the Government decided to refuse entry to all Communists as such when they are seeking to come to Canada as immigrants. The security screening arrangement for checking these applicants should therefore apply with still greater force to all applicants for immigrant visas. You should, in present circumstances, grant an immigrant visa to a Soviet national only in most exceptional circumstances. In practice, we are now regarding all satellite nationals as presenting more or less the same security problems as Soviet nationals.

10. You are now reporting by telegram the issuance of visas of any kind to Soviet nationals. While we do not yet consider it worth while asking you to telegraph similar information when you issue a visa to satellite nationals, you should make an immediate report by air bag when you issue an immigrant or a non-immigrant visa to a satellite national, specifying the name, nationality, passport number and date of issue. A form for this purpose is being prepared by the R.C.M.P. but, in the meantime, you may report in the form of a memorandum or despatch in duplicate so that it may be passed to the Commissioner of the R.C.M.P.

11. The security risk of a national of one of the Eastern European countries is obviously much greater if his passport has been issued since his country came under Communist domination. As a guide for this purpose, it may be considered that the following countries came under Communist domination as from the following dates.

Albania	20 October, 1944
Bulgaria	2 April, 1946
Czechoslovakia	20 February, 1948
Hungary	1 June, 1947
Poland	19 January, 1947
Rumania	6 March, 1945
Yugoslavia	29 November, 1945

12. The names of those persons whose applications for visas you have refused on security grounds will be reported in your monthly visa returns as a matter of course. In addition, you will advise the Department by telegram of any undesirable person whom you may learn intends to seek entry to Canada at the border, not requiring a visa.

Official Visas

13. Soviet or satellite officials other than diplomats or special couriers, wishing to visit Canada on government business or with the blessing of their government should normally not be granted visas without reference to Ottawa. In referring such cases you should pass on any information you have been able to glean from local security enquiries and also state as precisely as possible the purpose of the visit.

General: Refer to The Department When in Doubt

14. There will undoubtedly be borderline cases not precisely covered in your instructions and other cases in which you may not be satisfied with the adequacy of your local enquiries or as to the character and bona fides of the applicant. All such cases of which you are doubtful should be referred to the Department as in the past.

I have, etc.

ADMISSION TO CANADA OF COMMUNISTS; SPECIAL CASE

12. The Solicitor General reported that the special Cabinet Committee set up at the meeting of March 2nd last had had under consideration a proposal to refuse admission to Canada of a well known United States singer [Paul Robeson] on the ground that he was a known Communist. The individual in question had accepted concert engagements in Toronto.

It was known by the Police that this artist had active Communist connections. On a previous occasion he had engaged in Communist activities while in Canada.

(Privy Council memorandum to special Cabinet Committee, Nov. 29, 1948).†

13. The Prime Minister suggested that the Department of National Revenue should take care to collect from such foreign artists the income tax payable upon their earnings in Canada.

14. The Cabinet, after further discussion, agreed that, in the circumstances, admission to Canada should not be refused to the individual in question; the Department of National Revenue to be instructed to take appropriate steps to see that the earnings in Canada of such foreign entertainers were subjected to the tax payable under Canadian laws.

CIRCULAR DOCUMENT NO. B.4

Ottawa, January 8, 1948

Sir,

The question of the admissibility to Canada of persons who served during the last war in the armed forces of His Majesty's enemies, has recently been under examination at a high level. Consideration is now being given to the legislative changes that may be necessary in connection with the procedure required for the revocation of citizenship of such persons, both Canadian-born and naturalized.

2. Meanwhile I wish to inform you that the following decisions have been reached with regard to applications from persons who served in enemy forces:

(a) The re-entry of Canadian citizens by birth and naturalization is not to be facilitated and they are not to be advised that they are admissible to Canada as a matter of right. Final action to be taken on this class is under review and further instructions will be issued in due course.

(b) Persons who possessed Canadian domicile and served in the Armed Forces of His Majesty's enemies during the war are to be considered as having relinquished domicile by such action.

(c) Immigrants who are citizens of Finland, Hungary, Italy and Roumania, who served in the Armed Forces of their own country during the war are not to be refused admission to Canada on account of such service unless recorded in the official list of war criminals.

(d) Immigrants of neutral or allied nationality who have served in the Armed Forces of His Majesty's enemies are to be refused admission unless they can establish that such service was rendered under physical compulsion.

3. These decisions will be incorporated in the next supplement to "Instructions to Canadian Visa Officers".

4. It should be borne in mind that persons who are not Canadian citizens or who do not possess Canadian domicile may not enter Canada as a matter of right. The Orders-in-Council recently made under the Immigration Act do not confer a right of admission upon the classes named in them, but merely define the groups or individuals who may be admitted. The terms of the Act itself and of previous Orders-in-Council, save insofar as they may be revoked or modified, must still be applied to each application.

5. The first two decisions cited above call for no comment. The third decision should be read in conjunction with P.C. 2908 which applies to those ex-enemy countries with which Canada has concluded treaties of peace. Applications coming within the scope of the fourth decision will in the first instance be refused, but the applicant may appeal and submit evidence of physical compulsion for the consideration of the Immigration authorities.

RE-ADMISSION OF CANADIANS; SERVICE IN ENEMY FORCES

12. The Secretary of State for External Affairs pointed out that the Cabinet, on December 12th, 1947, had agreed that legislative action should be taken to provide for the revocation of citizenship of Canadians who had served with enemy forces during the recent war; the Citizenship Act, in due course, to be amended accordingly. It had subsequently been decided, however (on May 26th, 1948) that amendments to the Act would not be proceeded with during the present session.

The Immigration Branch were taking no action to inform such persons that they were admissible to Canada as a matter of right but a number of specific cases had been the subject of representations as a result of the return to Germany of the last prisoners of war in the United Kingdom.

These persons could not be prosecuted for treason if re-admitted because of the lapse of the statutory three year limitation since commission of the offence.

(External Affairs memoranda, April 9 and May 27, 1948)†

13. The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that the entry of such persons to Canada was undesirable and that instructions to the Immigration Branch that their admission was not to be facilitated should be confirmed.

RE RE-ADMISSION OF CANADIANS; SERVICE IN ENEMY FORCES

Attached is a copy of a summary of a Cabinet discussion and decision dated June 2nd, 1948. By memorandum dated 27th May, 1948, copy attached, the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs was drawn to this matter. He minuted this memorandum "Canadians who served against us must have done so because they also had German nationality. As such, they are to be regarded either as enemy aliens or as traitors, and as enemy aliens we cannot deal with them until peace has been achieved."

You will recall that difficulties have arisen in this matter because of a certain reluctance and inconsistency on the part of the Department of the Secretary of State in revoking the citizenship of Canadians on the grounds of service in the enemy forces. You may remember that during discussion in the Sub-Committee of Cabinet, Mr. Gibson took the line that he was powerless because the Commission for Enquiry set up to deal with these cases was a quasi-judicial body; that the Secretary of State could only accept its decisions. Mr. St. Laurent at that time pressed Mr. Gibson to discuss with the Commission for Enquiry the possibility of a firmer attitude in these renegade cases.

On the 8th January 1948, pursuant to an earlier Cabinet decision, this Department had issued Circular Document B.4, copy attached. The instructions it contains are explicit. At that time, however, it was thought that they would be no more than interim instructions; that legislative action would shortly be taken to deprive Canadian traitors and renegades of their citizenship. In the months between January and June no legislative action was taken and when Cabinet considered the matter again on the 2nd of June, it was in the general atmosphere that no legislative action could in any case be taken at the then current session of Parliament.

This has led to an undesirable situation. When naturalized Canadians, who have served in the enemy forces, seek re-admission to Canada, it is the practice to institute revocation proceedings on the grounds of their residence outside of Canada over the statutory period, and also, on the grounds of disloyalty and disaffection to His Majesty.

In several recent cases, however, the Commission of Enquiry has refused to revoke the certificate of renegades despite what appeared to be adequate evidence of disloyalty and disaffection to His Majesty, and at the same time has taken what seems to be a very lenient view of the factor of residence outside of Canada over the statutory period.

In these cases, we have been advised that the Commission "has considered this matter and has not found grounds for revocation of the Certificate of Naturalization . . . It has been decided, therefore, that revocation proceedings will be discontinued."

The persons concerned have, of necessity, been informed of the findings of the Commission. In some instances they have subsequently asked for certificates of proof of Canadian citizenship and after considering these applications, the Secretary of State has issued such for transmission to the persons concerned.

You will observe the difficulty of reconciling these events with the directive of the Cabinet. We seem to be in the inevitably difficult position of those who would blow hot and cold. On the one hand is the directive of the Cabinet that the re-entry of these persons be not facilitated and on the other is the fact that after they have been examined in accordance with the law as to their right of Canadian citizenship, they have been confirmed in it by the constituted authority.

If there had been a simple legislative act by which all Canadians who had served in the enemy forces had been automatically deprived of their citizenship, it would have put this whole question on the right footing. The onus would then have been on the person deprived to show that he was entitled to reinstatement. However, that action was not taken and we now find ourselves in the position of trying to carry out the wishes of the Cabinet and in doing so denying to Canadians who have been confirmed in their status as Canadians by the lawful authorities, the ordinary rights which Canadian citizens should enjoy.

Despite the obvious political dangers which are inherent in permitting Canadians who have served in the enemy forces to return to Canada, I fear that we will continue to be on very thin ice, if we refuse facilities to those who, having had their cases examined by the Commission of Enquiry, have been maintained in their Canadian citizenship. It is possible that you may wish, with a view to obtaining a firm attitude in this Department toward traitors or renegades to (a) discuss this question with the Secretary of State, or (b) raise the issue once more in Cabinet.<sup>7</sup>

[Ottawa], August 28, 1948

Two cases of French collaborators now living in Canada, [Georges Benoît] Montel [alias Gaston Ringeval] and [André Charles] Boussat [alias Alfred Bordes], have recently been brought to your attention, as the question of their deportation to France, where they have been sentenced for collaboration, has arisen. You will recall from Mr. Reid's memorandum to you of July 8th† that Montel and Boussat were condemned in absentia to forced labour for life, confiscation of all property, and national degradation. We have asked our Embassy in Paris whether they think that Montel and Boussat were guilty of more than ordinary support of the Petain regime. We have not yet had a reply to our despatch of August 12th.†

2. A third and much worse case is that of Jacques de Bernonville. He has been sentenced to death in absentia for a whole series of crimes of collaboration, including giving information to the enemy which led to the death of Frenchmen engaged in the Resistance, and there has even been a suspicion that he was involved in the murder of a Canadian paratrooper — at any rate he entered Canada illegally with the papers of a Canadian paratrooper who was killed in France before the liberation.

3. The French Embassy has confirmed the desire of the French Government to have him returned to France if the Canadian Government decided to deport him, and the French Ambassador has offered the assistance of the French Vice-Consul in Montreal where de Bernonville is now living.

4. In spite of the circumstances of the case with which they were fully familiar, the Immigration Branch told de Bernonville early in July that he could leave this country voluntarily any time before the 2nd of September. So far as we know, he has not left and may be hoping to appeal for permanent landing. In a letter of August 9th,† I suggested to the Acting Deputy Minister of the Department of Mines and Resources that he might like to review his decision in this case in view of the French and Canadian interests involved. I think that de Bernonville should have been arrested and deported to France rather than allowed to leave the country voluntarily before September 2nd.

5. Mr. Keenleyside has now replied† that he does not see his way clear to changing their decision but if de Bernonville has not left the country he will be arrested on September 2nd. The French, at the same time, conveniently proposed that de Bernonville be placed on board the French frigate, l'Aventure, which will be in Quebec and Three Rivers between the 7th and 17th September.

6. Do you agree to the course of action proposed by Mr. Keenleyside to effect de Bernonville's arrest on September 2nd, the date on which his permission to leave the country voluntarily expires, and to deport him to France by placing him on board the French frigate l'Aventure, which will be at Quebec and Three Rivers between the 7th and 17th September? It was the French Embassy in Ottawa that proposed that de Bernonville be placed on board this French ship.<sup>8</sup>

THE BERNONVILLE CASE

You will have heard on the radio and seen in the press the statement regarding this case which I issued on Saturday evening, the 4th of September, 1948, at 6.15. An exact copy is appended hereto.† The story behind my action in releasing this statement is as follows:

2. At 12.20 p.m. on Saturday, the Secretary of State for External Affairs telephoned to say:

(a) that La Presse had published a statement alleging that the government had decided to deport Bernonville and that he was to be started back to France during the long holiday week-end in the hope that no one would notice and then, in any case, it would be difficult to arrange for a writ of habeas corpus or other legal intervention.

(b) that Mayor Houde<sup>10</sup> and others were making political capital out of the situation alleging that Bernonville was an anti-Communist refugee who was being persecuted by the government and, particularly, of course, by Mr. St. Laurent.

(c) that British United Press (Norman MacLeod) had reported that Mr. Smith of the Immigration Branch had said that the French government had not asked for Bernonville to be returned.

<sup>8</sup> Le document porte l'annotation suivante :

The following was noted on the document:

The Minister returned the memorandum with the following note: "Council discussed these cases and decided that Montel and Bousat should be allowed to remain and de Bernonville be returned to France.<sup>9</sup> St. L[aurant]"

<sup>9</sup> Le Cabinet a pris cette décision le 1<sup>er</sup> septembre.

Cabinet reached this decision on September 1.

3. I promised Mr. St. Laurent that I would check on the alleged statement of Mr. Smith at once and would prepare a release for the press which would indicate:

(a) that Bernonville was no martyr

(b) that his case was being handled by this Department and not by the Secretary of State for External Affairs

(c) that he had been ordered deported because he had entered Canada illegally and because of his generally bad record

(d) that he was not being hustled off on the holiday week-end.

As Mr. St. Laurent and I were both lunching at the French Embassy I arranged to take the proposed statement there in order to have it checked by the French officials and approved by Mr. St. Laurent himself before it was released.

4. This was done.

5. There are certain points, including subsequent developments which require further notice. The first has to do with the statement made by Mr. Smith. He informed me that he did not deny that the French government had asked for Bernonville; he followed the regular custom of refusing any details except to say that Bernonville was being deported in accordance with the immigration law. In this case, as in response to other similar enquiries it was indicated that any further information would have to come from higher authority. Mr. Smith's action seems to me to have been correct.

6. Shortly after 3 o'clock I telephoned to Norman MacLeod and told him the facts. He put me in touch with the B.U.P. officer on duty and when my statement was formally cleared by the French Embassy at 6 p.m. B.U.P. accepted it, gave it general press distribution and put it on the radio over all stations that carry their news. In Ottawa it was heard over CKCO and CFRA at 11 p.m.

7. The Canadian Press handled the release much less efficiently. Their local office remained open at my request until the statement was ready and they then transmitted it at once to their headquarters in Toronto who had been warned that it was coming. Although it was received in Toronto at 6.30 p.m. it did not reach the C.B.C. newsroom until 8.50 and then only in garbled form. When it was not carried on the 9 o'clock broadcast I telephoned to C.B.C. in Toronto and was told what had happened. They promised to get the whole statement and to put it on the national summary at 11 p.m. I reported the Canadian Press bungling to Mr. Carnegie, their local representative. He promised to check up on what had happened and to see that the statement was given full newspaper distribution.

8. The delay from 3 to 6 p.m. in releasing the statement was due to the desire of the French Embassy to have it checked by M. Basvedant (Counsellor) who had to be brought back from the country for the purpose. It was the French Embassy officials who suggested the inclusion of the statement about Bernonville having been responsible for the deaths of "members of the Allied forces probably including Canadians from the R.C.A.F." They stated that their records fully justified these statements.

9. There is one point on which Mr. St. Laurent questioned me that should be mentioned to you. He said that when the Cabinet considered this case they were under the impression that the French government had formally requested the return of Bernonville. This, according to the Embassy officials, was not strictly accurate. I have now examined the file again to see precisely what was said on this point and on what we based our statements.

10. In my memorandum addressed to you on the 1st of September, 1948,† I wrote:

“The French government has taken this case very seriously and the Department of External Affairs has requested that we agree to his deportation.”

This statement was based in turn on a letter from the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, dated the 8th of August, 1948, which read in part as follows:

“The French Embassy have shown considerable interest in this case, as the charges against de Bernonville for collaboration are most serious . . .

“I am enclosing a copy of Note No. 118 of the 6th August from the French Ambassador from which you will see that the French Government are anxious for de Bernonville to be embarked on a ship leaving Montreal directly for France. The Ambassador offers the services of the French Vice Consul in Montreal, in order to prepare the necessary papers for de Bernonville’s return to his country.

“In view of the particular interest of the French authorities in this case and because of the very unfavourable reports on de Bernonville’s record which we have received from authoritative sources, I wonder if you would care to review your decision to permit de Bernonville to leave the country voluntarily and possibly to consider the action suggested in Mr. Jolliffe’s<sup>11</sup> letter of June 26th for arresting him and deporting him on a ship sailing for France, so that he will be turned over to the French authorities.”

This letter from Mr. Pearson came to us before I returned from Europe and in order to make certain of my ground I telephoned to the Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs on the 23rd of August and asked whether Mr. Pearson’s letter still represented the views of the Department and, in particular, whether Mr. St. Laurent had agreed. My note of this conversation on our file reads as follows:

“Confirmed by Mr. E. Reid (Ex.Affrs.) that Mr. St. Laurent has no desire to assist this man. Ex. Affrs. would like to see him returned to France by Immigration. (Sgd.) K[eenleyside] — 23/8/48.”

11. As far as this Department is concerned the question as to the interest of the French Government has been carefully covered, and that the statements made by us and by External Affairs were fully justified is indicated in the sentence which was incorporated in my press release with the approval of the French Embassy. The sentence read:

“The French government has informed the Canadian Government of the gravity of the crimes by Bernonville and has indicated their wish to have him returned to France . . .”

12. Last evening I received a telegram from Mayor Houde. A copy is attached.† Unless you and Mr. St. Laurent consider it advisable, I shall not reply, although it would be easy to make an effective answer.

13. Bernonville has, as you know, now been covered by a writ of Habeas Corpus. The case will probably drag for some time — certainly until after the departure of the French warship on which it was intended to send him back to answer for his crimes.

RE BERNONVILLE CASE

Mr. Keenleyside has, I believe, sent you a copy of a memorandum on the above case. That memorandum plus our memorandum to you of August 28th (copy attached) seem to give the relevant details in this matter.

2. The facts are:

(i) The Department of Mines and Resources informed us on June 26th that they were endeavouring to complete arrangements for the return to France of Bernonville and his wife and two daughters under deportation proceedings, in view of the rejection of their application for a permanent landing in Canada. In this letter we were informed that according to a confidential source Bernonville is alleged to have actively collaborated with the German occupational troops in France subsequent to that country's capitulation. He was stated to have been the brain behind the German plans for large scale attacks on the French Underground, and to have been responsible for the massacre of Frenchmen and Allied servicemen working behind the German lines.

(ii) In fact Bernonville was accused of treason and was condemned to death and was ordered to be shot in accordance with French Ordinance No. 77 of 28th November, 1944, by a Court of Appeal of Toulouse on October 8th, 1947. It appeared from the evidence taken at his trial that:

“attendu que des pièces de la procédure reconnue régulière et de l'ensemble de l'information il résulte la preuve que Duge de Bernonville s'est rendu coupable d'avoir en France et en Afrique du Nord, notamment à Paris, Lyon, Rabat, de 1940 à 1944, en tout cas depuis un temps non prescrit et en temps de guerre, entretenu des intelligences avec une puissance Étrangère en l'espèce l'Allemagne ou ses agents, en vue de favoriser les entreprises de cette puissance contre la France en entrant en rapport avec des agents du S.D. (Sicherheitsdienst) en organisant le corps des volontaires français et la phalange africaine, en introduisant en Afrique du Nord des missions de sabotage et en livrant aux Allemands deux Français détenus dans une Maison d'Arrêt."

An extract from the minutes of the Court of Appeal at Toulouse on this case is attached.†

(iii) Bernonville has admitted that at the time of his entry into Canada he was travelling under an assumed name on a false French passport which he obtained from friends in France. A review of his case by the Department of Mines and Resources gave him the privilege of effecting voluntary departure from Canada provided he and his family did so prior to September 2nd, 1948.

3. Mr. Basdevant of the French Embassy told Mr. Reid that he was writing to Paris to seek confirmation of a story that he had heard that Bernonville had entered Canada on false papers, which had been taken from the body of a Canadian Officer who had been killed in the campaign in France. He did not know whether this Officer had been killed in action or shortly after being taken prisoner. Confirmation on this point has not been received.

4. Mr. Basdevant informed Mr. Reid yesterday, September 7th, that a retrial would be automatic in the case of Bernonville who was convicted in absentia.

5. It is quite clear that Bernonville has been shown every consideration, and that he is fortunate in having been allowed to remain in Canada at all. This is not the case of an ordinary political refugee, but of a person in direct touch with the German Intelligence Service whose deportation would appear desirable from every point of view.

6. My general conclusions are:

(a) that there would be some danger in making official statements on this matter, while it is sub judice, in the sense that habeas corpus proceedings are pending;

(b) that any official statement which may be made ought to be limited to facts which are demonstrable. I should think it dangerous to make statements, based upon suspicion or "confidential sources" which may not be capable of substantiation.

(c) that any statement made should be by Mines and Resources, the Department primarily concerned. A statement (copy attached) has already been made, as you know by Mr. Keenleyside. Should it be regarded as necessary to reply governmentally to some of the wild charges that have been made in Quebec, a statement might issue from the leader of the Government after consultation with Mines and Resources;

(d) It would be helpful if the French Government could be induced to make a statement about this man. If you agree, the French Embassy could be approached. However, I do not think the approach would be fruitful.

7. Pending a decision on whether a further statement is to be made, and by whom, I have asked Mines and Resources for (a) a copy of the record on the deportation proceedings and (b) a copy of the judge's order in the habeas corpus proceedings (which has not yet arrived from Montreal).

8. Attached is a teletype from Washington† which indicates the lengths to which Bernonville's champions are prepared to go. This, so far as I know has not been made public.

Ottawa, le 14 septembre 1948

Cher monsieur Massé,

J'ai bien reçu votre lettre du 12 septembre<sup>12</sup> me demandant d'intervenir pour faire admettre légalement au Canada le comte de Bernonville et d'autres réfugiés politiques français. Il n'est question pour le moment que du comte de Bernonville. Je regrette qu'il ne me soit pas possible de partager votre manière de voir à son endroit.

Il ne s'agit pas d'une décision basée sur "l'acharnement de ses ennemis à poursuivre le comte jusqu'au Canada." Au contraire, il s'agit de l'application normale de nos règlements et, votre lettre le fait voir, vous vous rendez compte qu'il faudrait un arrêté-en-conseil spécial pour l'autoriser à demeurer ici. Les renseignements que nous avons jusqu'à présent ne me permettent pas d'insister auprès de mes collègues pour l'adoption d'un tel arrêté-en-conseil.

Le comte de Bernonville avait été prévenu, il y a déjà plusieurs semaines, qu'il devait quitter le Canada avant le 2 septembre et comme il n'a pas jugé à propos de le faire, le Département de l'Immigration a dû avoir recours à la procédure de déportation. La légalité de cette procédure est contestée devant les tribunaux et c'est à ceux-ci qu'il appartiendra de l'apprécier à ce point de vue.

On m'affirme que si le comte de Bernonville retourne en France il aura un nouveau procès et l'avantage de se défendre contre toutes les accusations extrêmement graves et précises que le gouvernement français, qui n'est pas un gouvernement communiste, retient contre lui. Ce n'est pas à nous qu'il appartient de nous prononcer sur ces accusations et à moins de pouvoir démontrer nous-mêmes qu'elles sont toutes mal fondées, nous ne pourrions justifier l'adoption d'un arrêté de faveur comme celui que vous me suggérez.

Votre bien dévoué,

RE PRESS RELEASE ON THE BERNONVILLE CASE

I have read the attached draft<sup>13</sup> and it seems to me there are serious objections to it on two grounds.

(1) The Courts are in process of deciding whether there are legal grounds for deportation. That question should surely be argued before the Courts, and not in a press release.

(2) The question of Bernonville's alleged crimes in France is a matter for the French Courts. Since he is to have a new trial if he is returned to France, that question could most appropriately be decided there.

I feel all the government of Canada needs to say is that:

(1) Bernonville is being deported because he is not legally admissible to Canada.

(2) The French authorities allege he has committed certain serious crimes.

(3) The French government has assured the Canadian authorities that he will receive a new trial.

(4) France is a friendly country with free institutions and the same fundamental conceptions of justice as our own, hence there is no injustice in returning Bernonville to his own country.

Finally, it seems to me the time to make such a statement is not the present, while the case is before the Courts, but after the legal proceedings have been completed, and then only if the agitation is revived and a factual statement is required.

RE PRESS STORIES ON VICHY COLLABORATORS

Shortly before Mr. St. Laurent left for London, word was received that Time Magazine was about to publish an article criticizing the Government for harboring Vichy collaborators. Mr. McConaughy, Canadian correspondent of Time Magazine, apparently had discussed this with Mr. St. Laurent and had made known that he proposed to refer to an Order in Council granting permanent landing to four French citizens<sup>14</sup> who had been convicted in absentia of collaboration with the Vichy Government.

2. Mr. St. Laurent spoke to the Acting Under-Secretary about this and suggested that if the article appeared to warrant such a course, a short statement might be made along the following lines:

"Canadian Immigration Laws require the deportation of persons who are in Canada illegally unless the Governor in Council is convinced that a man is a bona fide political refugee and makes a special order in his case. Such orders have been made from time to time but there were no such reasons as would have led to the making of a special order for de Bernonville."

3. When the article actually appeared,<sup>15</sup> its tone seemed bantering and did not seem to warrant any formal statement. Accordingly, in the absence of Mr. St. Laurent and yourself, my Department drew to the attention of the Department of Mines and Resources, the formula suggested in advance by Mr. St. Laurent. That Department replied that it seemed desirable to avoid comment if at all possible, but that if questions were asked it might be said that these cases were examined along with hundreds of others in the course of the departmental activity of Mines and Resources and that it was the Government's view that "affirmative action should be taken in these particular instances." If any statement were considered necessary, that Department was anxious that it avoid the use of the expression "bona fide political refugees" since this expression (a) would not accurately describe the persons involved and (b) might prejudice the position of Mines and Resources vis-à-vis de Bernonville, whose case is still "sub judice".

4. In the last day or so, however, numerous stories have appeared in the Canadian press which seem to me more damaging than the article in Time. The Globe and Mail has headlined "Canada Opens its Doors to Vichy Fugitives." Reference has been made to the "embarrassment" of the officials. The matter of the non-publication of the relevant Orders in Council has been raised. It has been emphasized also that the Cabinet decided to land these persons "as a result of strong pressure from Quebec." These comments have been attributed in part to Government sources. However, it may well be that these are speculative and based largely on the Time article.

5. The matter is of course one primarily for Mines and Resources. However, there are certain international implications as well as a governmental interest which has suggested to me that I might draw the foregoing to your attention.

6. I have not been able to devote much time to considering this matter and am indeed leaving Ottawa after the week-end. I think it possible to draw a distinction between Bernonville and the others who were not involved with the Security Police though the distinction is not immediately apparent or easy to draw while the Bernonville case is unsettled. However, it seems to me that it might be wise not to make any formal statement but to follow the generally cautious line indicated by the Department of Mines and Resources; we ought perhaps to avoid becoming involved in discussions of the details concerning these individuals. At this time it might also be wise to undertake the preparation of a considered statement of the Government's position for use on the floor of the House.

7. Attached are the following:†

- (a) The Time article which seems to have started the ball rolling;
- (b) Short statements on the three principal French citizens who were granted permanent landings.

Ottawa, May 19, 1948

RE REQUEST OF MRS. MEYER TO VISIT HER HUSBAND
AT DORCHESTER PENITENTIARY

General-Major of Waffen-SS Kurt Meyer was convicted and sentenced by a Canadian Military Court, pursuant to the War Crimes Regulations (Canada) passed by virtue of the "Act respecting War Crimes" (Chapter 73 of the Statutes of Canada, 1946). The Court's sentence of death was commuted to one of life imprisonment and the accused was transferred to Dorchester penitentiary in New Brunswick where he is serving his sentence.

2. Kurt Meyer has made application to the Commissioner of Penitentiaries, through the Warden of Dorchester penitentiary, requesting that his wife be permitted to come to Canada, at her own expense, in order to pay him a temporary visit. Attached, marked "A", is a letter received from the Department of Justice enclosing a copy of this application.†

3. Mrs. Kurt Meyer has made her own application to the Canadian Government, through the Canadian Military Mission in Berlin, for permission to make a temporary visit to Canada for the purpose of seeing her husband. She asks for permission to pay only a short visit with her husband and is willing to abide by all the restrictions that might be imposed upon her. With her application she also encloses an affidavit by Mr. Lichtenberg of Moncton, N.B., a distant relative of hers, according to which Mr. Lichtenberg undertakes to pay all expenses and assume the responsibility in connection with her visit. Attached, marked "B", is a despatch from the Canadian Military Mission enclosing Mrs. Meyer's application and Mr. Lichtenberg's affidavit.†

4. The Consular Division has expressed the view that, under existing Canadian Immigration Regulations, enemy aliens are not allowed to enter Canada even for the purpose of a temporary visit. Consequently, Kurt Meyer's wife, being a German citizen, could not enter Canada. That Division also points out that, in view of the objection raised in some quarters of Canada at the time of the commutation of Kurt Meyer's sentence from death to life imprisonment, it may not be politically expedient to comply with the request of Mrs. Meyer to visit her husband at this time.

5. Although existing Canadian legislation prohibits the entry of enemy aliens into Canada, there have been some persons who were, technically, enemy aliens and who have been admitted, the law being waived in their favour because they were able to show that they actively supported the Allied cause during the war.

6. The majority of international war criminals, who have been convicted by military tribunals, have been imprisoned in Germany, and I understand that they are allowed to see their immediate relatives and friends from time to time. It seems that the reason Mrs. Meyer has not been able to see her husband is due to the fact that he has been imprisoned in Canada rather than in Germany. By permitting Mrs. Meyer to visit him in Canada, the government would not be giving him treatment any more favourable than that accorded to international war prisoners serving their sentences in Germany. In fact, such treatment would be less favourable considering that he would be able to see her only during her brief visit to this country.

7. There does not seem to be any doubt that the present application is deserving of consideration on compassionate grounds in view of the failing health of Mrs. Meyer, which apparently has been caused mainly by the separation from her husband and her anxiety to have her husband see their three year old son whom he has only seen once before for a period of about fifteen minutes. There are four other children in the family.

8. In view of the fact that hostilities ceased some three years ago and that the sentence which Kurt Meyer is serving will confine him to prison for the remainder of his life, and also taking into consideration the failing health of Mrs. Kurt Meyer, it seems that this request is deserving of consideration on compassionate grounds. In fact, it may be considered in the larger field of fundamental human rights, the recognition of which is of concern to the Canadian Government.

9. The decision with respect to this request is fundamentally a political decision. For this reason you may wish to consult with your colleagues in the Cabinet concerning this matter.<sup>16</sup>

ADMISSION OF UKRAINIAN DISPLACED PERSONS

At its meeting on November 7th, 1947, the Cabinet Committee on Immigration Policy considered the admission of certain Ukrainian Displaced Persons. Two main groups were under consideration:

(a) Approximately 8,000 who had been captured in Italy in German uniform and who had been subsequently transferred to the United Kingdom.

(b) Approximately 26,000 who were held in Displaced Persons camps in Germany.

Both groups were said to be very largely, if not entirely anti-Fascist and anti-Communist.

Group (a) undoubtedly had served in the forces of the German Enemy against the Russians. Representation was put forward on their behalf in a memorandum submitted by the Ukrainian Canadian Committee and the Ukrainian Canadian Relief Fund that these people had consented to serve in the German Army in order to free the Ukraine from Russian-Communist domination but that when moved to the Western Front they had surrendered almost en masse.

Group (b) was said to consist of persons who had been conscripted for forced labour in Germany and who had subsequently become Displaced Persons within the meaning of the I.R.O. definition.

After discussion, it was decided that External Affairs and Immigration Branch should make further enquiries and secure such additional information as might be available concerning the two groups.

Enquiries have been made through the High Commissioner for Canada in the United Kingdom and the Canadian Military Mission, Berlin. Replies indicate that:

(i) All of the 8,000 now held in the United Kingdom were in the German Army.

(ii) The 26,000 held on the Continent were very largely persons who had been moved to Germany for forced labour. They are Displaced Persons within the I.R.O. definition. Relatively few of them were in the service of our enemies. It is reported that a very large number of these persons were transferred to Germany to work on farms where they were welcomed and did extremely good work. They are on the whole reticent about their past and few would admit having served in the Enemy Forces even if that were true.

The effect of the above is to confirm the impression already formed regarding group (a). As to group (b) indications are that reasonably good agriculturist immigrants could be selected from among them.<sup>17</sup>

IMMIGRATION; REFUGEES, SPECIAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

3. The Minister of Mines and Resources reported that special arrangements were required for the substantial number of admissible immigrants from Europe of German origin who were not eligible for assistance from the International Refugee Organization. For the most part these were relatives of Canadian residents.

A vessel had been specially set aside by the Immigration Branch for movement of these immigrants but, since IRO facilities were not available, some organization was necessary to assist in their handling. The Canadian Christian Council for the Resettlement of Refugees had been functioning successfully in this field but now required financial assistance if an adequate number of persons were to be moved.

Accordingly, it was proposed that a grant of $50,000 be made to the Council for this purpose with an undertaking that the government pay the balance of the cost of the operations up to a maximum of $100,000 on the understanding that 5,000 immigrants be moved during 1948, no service charge be required and that the Council provide an audited statement of expenditures from such grants.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

4. The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that the amount recommended be made available to the Department of Mines and Resources for assistance in the movement to Canada of admissible immigrants from among displaced persons who were not eligible for IRO assistance; such funds to be made available for this purpose on the conditions recommended to such agency as the Minister might approve.

REPORT OF THE INTERDEPARTMENTAL IMMIGRATION – LABOUR COMMITTEE

This Committee established pursuant to Cabinet decision of March 27, 1947 to advise the Cabinet Immigration Committee on group immigration of displaced persons and other selected group immigration projects and the interested departments consists of representatives of Department of Mines and Resources (Immigration Branch), Labour, External Affairs, Health and Welfare.

2. The Committee has held 37 meetings since April 22, 1947.

3. Following Committee recommendation, 20,000 D.Ps have been authorized for entry to Canada and tentative quotas fixed for occupational groups based upon labour requirements in the particular industry. It has been necessary to revise quotas from time to time in the light of a changing labour market.

4. The procedure established by the Committee for selection of occupational groups is illustrated by the procedure followed in the woods industry:

Employer organizations were invited, in the summer of 1947, to canvass their member companies as to their D.P. labour requirements and to have these companies submit individual applications specifying the number they required. The applicant company gave a written undertaking to the Department of Mines and Resources to give ten months' employment at prevailing wages and working conditions, to pay transportation costs from port of entry to place of employment. These costs could be charged back by the company to the immigrant but would be written off by the company if the immigrant worked his ten months with the company. The Committee satisfied itself by reports from the Employment Service that Canadian labour would not be reasonably available to fill the employer labour needs and that the applicants were reliable.

Representatives of the companies were sent overseas at company expense to assist Government selection teams in the selection of D.Ps to fill the quotas fixed.

The D.Ps selected gave a written undertaking to the Minister of Labour to take employment in the woods industry at prevailing wages and to work in this type of employment for ten months following arrival in Canada.

The I.R.O. paid passage and provided transportation to port of entry in Canada.

Following arrival and placement in Canada, it has been necessary to provide for a follow-up service to adjust employer-employee difficulties, emergency cases of accident, illness and a limited amount of educational and welfare service; also to take care of seasonal spring lay-offs of D.P. employees in the industry.

5. This procedure has been followed through with appropriate variations in case of workers for the clothing industry, fur workers, metal miners, heavy labourers, construction workers and smaller groups for other industries.

6. In the case of domestic workers involving applications from individuals and institutions, the prospective employers are asked to complete an application guaranteeing twelve months' employment and specifying working conditions which will apply to the D.P. worker and guaranteeing going wages with a minimum of $35.00 per month. Applications are screened through the National Employment Service as to suitability.

The D.Ps selected overseas by the Government selection teams are matched up on arrival in Canada with the screened applications and are moved from a hostel centre at Montreal to place of employment. The Dominion Government pays transportation from port of entry to employment. Local welfare voluntary committees have been established at some 40 centres to provide a follow-up welfare and recreational service for these girls.

While all placements to date have been urban, it is proposed to proceed with the selection and placement of domestics (D.Ps) in farm homes. This will be done using the Dominion-Provincial Farm Labour Committees which handle farm labour in each province, to screen applications from farm homes for domestic help and to make placement.

7. The Committee proposes that the Dominion Departments work closely with the Provincial Agricultural Departments through the Dominion-Provincial Farm Labour Committees in each province in fixing quotas of D.Ps for farm employment, for handling applications from farmers and for placement. As far as possible, family placement on farms will be promoted. Provinces are asked to share placement costs within the Dominion.

One of the present difficulties in farm placement arises out of the fact that there are several voluntary nationalist organizations engaged in bringing in farm groups from various parts of Europe without reference to this Committee. The result is that no orderly planning is possible in the matter of farm placement either by or through the Committee or by the provinces, all of whom have expressed the desire to have this type of placement handled through the Dominion-Provincial Farm Labour Committee.

8. Of necessity, D.Ps who have been selected have been workers, either single persons or those willing to come ahead of their families. It is evident that a plan should be developed to bring dependents out as soon as there is reasonable evidence that the family will not be a public charge and that accommodation is available for them.

9. To date there has been a substantial time lag between the time of selection of D.Ps overseas for employment and their embarkation on board ship due to lack of shipping facilities. This is being remedied as more shipping space has become available.

10. The attached statement sets forth the tentative quotas of D.P. and other selected immigrant groups set by the Committee, the number of workers covered by the applications recommended for approval and the number of workers who have arrived in Canada under the group movement plan as at April 8, 1948.<sup>18</sup>

REPORT OF THE INTERDEPARTMENTAL IMMIGRATION – LABOUR COMMITTEE

This is the third progress report of this Committee, established pursuant to Cabinet decision of March 27, 1947 to advise the Cabinet Immigration Committee on group immigration of displaced persons and other selected group immigration projects, and the interested departments consist of representatives of Department of Mines and Resources (Immigration Branch), Labour, External Affairs, Health and Welfare and Secretary of State (Citizenship Branch).

2. The Committee has held 51 meetings since April 22, 1947.

3. Following Committee recommendation, 30,000 D.P.'s have been authorized for entry to Canada and tentative quotas fixed for occupational groups based upon labour requirements in the particular industry. It has been necessary to revise quotas from time to time in the light of a changing labour market.

4. With regard to citizens of Czechoslovakia who have fled that country to Occupied Territory in Europe, Order-in-Council P.C. 3371 was passed on July 28, 1948 extending the authority to admit to Canada persons from D.P. camps in Europe to include these Czech refugees. The Committee has recommended that, for the present, a special selection team proceed immediately to interview and select 1,000 of these Czech refugees to come to Canada under the present occupational group movement.

5. The Committee has recommended the admission to Canada of an additional 10,000 Displaced Persons from Europe for a total of 40,000.

6. The Committee has also recommended the admission to Canada of a tentative quota of 500 Estonian refugees in Sweden.

7. The attached statement† sets forth the tentative quotas of D.P.'s and other selected immigrant groups set by the Committee, the number of workers covered by the applications recommended for approval and the number of workers who have arrived in Canada under the group movement plan as at August 26, 1948.<sup>19</sup>

APPLICATION FOR THE ADMISSION OF DISPLACED PERSONS OF ARMENIAN ORIGIN FROM GERMANY AND AUSTRIA

The Canadian Armenian Congress representing the people of Armenian origin in Canada has requested the admission to Canada of 500 Armenian displaced persons from occupied territory in Europe.

The organization approached several industrial concerns in Hamilton, Ontario, including the International Harvester Company, the Glendale Spinning Mills Limited, the Chipman Halton Knitting Company, and were assured that employment would be available for some of these prospective immigrants. Mr. Y. Karsh of Ottawa, on behalf of the organization, has submitted further representations to the effect that the Canadian Armenian Congress is prepared to give financial and other assistance towards the transportation, housing and employment of those whose admission may be approved.

There are approximately 2,300 Armenians in occupied territory, and according to information obtained from the Canadian Representative of the International Refugee Organization in June last, 1,700 of this number had been processed and declared eligible for maintenance and migration under the mandate. It is anticipated that there would be additions to this number as the examination of cases progresses. I.R.O. will process and pay the transportation to Canada of immigrants selected by Canadian Teams from those eligible.

As Armenians belong to one of the Asiatic races they are inadmissible to Canada under the terms of Order-in-Council P.C. 2115 of the 16th September, 1930, which regulation prohibits the admission of immigrants of any Asiatic race other than the wife or child under 18 of a Canadian citizen.

Approval of the application filed by the Canadian Armenian Congress will necessitate the waiving of the provisions of P.C. 2115 by Order-in-Council, and this is recommended.<sup>20</sup>

IMMIGRATION OF DISPLACED PERSONS TO CANADA

On the 6th of June, 1947, the Canadian Government approved the entry into Canada of 5,000 Displaced Persons not otherwise admissible. This number was raised by subsequent Orders-in-Council to 30,000.

2. The reasons for the Canadian action were both humanitarian and pragmatic. The Government desired to make a contribution to the solution of a sad human problem both directly and by setting an example for others. It also wished to add a new and valuable element to the Canadian economy.

3. Both these results have been attained. Over 20 thousand persons from the D.P. camps have been added to the labour supply of Canada. (Over 13 thousand D.P. relatives of Canadian residents have also been admitted.) Other countries, following the Canadian lead, have admitted, or are admitting, large numbers of selected D.P.'s. Most important among these is the United States of America, which has agreed to accept 205,000 refugees. Canada has still, however, by far the best record of any overseas country in its handling of the D.P. movement. This fact is admitted and praised by everyone concerned with the refugee problem and, in particular, by the officials of the International Refugee Organization.

4. Recent developments have made it desirable to review the Canadian position and to consider the questions of policy arising from the current situation.

5. Canada's example of enlightened self-interest has been established, and some ten other non-European countries are now admitting Displaced Persons. Concur-

The question was referred by Cabinet Committee on Immigration Policy to Cabinet along with a related question on whether Syrians, Armenians and Lebanese were appropriately categorized as "Asiatics" under P.C. 2115. Rather than change the Order in Council, Cabinet decided on September 29 that rently, the Canadian demand for additional imports of labour has declined to relatively minor proportions. (It may or may not rise materially in the spring and summer of 1949). At the same time the Canadian teams are experiencing increasing difficulty in finding new candidates for admission to Canada of the same quality that has marked the previous immigrants. This difficulty will increase still further when the United States begins to accept applications, and the concentration of United States security personnel on the processing of immigrants to America will add materially to the task of the Canadian screening officers.

'the Immigration Branch should treat all cases involving admission of these nationals as exceptions requiring special orders.'

6. Up to the present time, Canada has occupied the first place in the minds of those D.P.'s who wished to escape from Europe. As a result, Canada has been able, on the whole, to obtain the best of the groups that have gone overseas. The entrance of the United States into the field will at once end this satisfactory situation. Rightly or wrongly, to most D.P.'s, as to most Europeans generally, the United States is still the Promised Land and Canada only a second choice. Most of the D.P.'s who wish to emigrate will now apply first to the United States officials and come to the Canadian teams only if they are not accepted by the United States. These rejected applicants would not in general make good Canadians, as their ultimate objective would remain the United States. For practical as well as prestige reasons, it would be inadvisable for Canada to accept refugees rejected by the United States.

7. In view of the considerations outlined in paragraphs 5 and 6, it would seem appropriate to revise the Canadian programme in relation to the movement of Displaced Persons. It is suggested that the emphasis be changed — temporarily at least — from a bulk labour movement to a movement of relatives of persons already in Canada. The objectives of a new Canadian policy might be set out as follows:

(1) To move to Canada as rapidly as possible all admissible relatives of residents of Canada for whom application has been made — this to include the dependants of D.P.'s who have already arrived and who are in a position to receive and care for their families who were left behind.

(2) To provide for the admission of trade and other specialists, of domestics, and of whatever bulk movements may be required to meet the diminished demand of Canadian industry.

Except under special circumstances, no applicant who has applied to and been refused by the United States should be accepted for admission to Canada. It is estimated that a policy of this kind would result in the movement of something between 30,000 and 45,000 refugees to Canada during the year ending the 31st of August, 1949.

8. If this policy is adopted, it will be possible to reduce and improve the Canadian screening organization on the European continent. As at the 1st of August, 1948, that organization was comprised of:

13 Immigration Officers

11 Security Officers

10 Medical Officers

9 Labour Officers

2 Interpreters

and an office and house staff totalling 26 persons.

These are divided into nine teams, and are directed from a permanent administrative headquarters at Karlsruhe. A staff of this size will not be required to handle the prospective movement from Germany, Austria, and Italy during the next twelve months.

9. It is proposed that, if the policy outlined above is adopted, the Canadian establishment in Germany should be revised in the following manner:<sup>21</sup>

(a) The Immigration Mission should be abolished and the Headquarters closed.

(b) Mr. Cormier, head of the Mission, should be reassigned to his permanent post at Brussels.

(c) Canadian consulates should be established at Hamburg (British Zone), Heidelberg or Frankfurt (U.S. Zone), and Salzburg (Austria).

(d) General Pope, head of the Canadian Military Mission, should be given general supervision over the Consulates, but each establishment shall be directed by an Acting Consul to be appointed from the staff of External Affairs or the Immigration Branch.

(e) The staff of each consulate to consist, under the Acting Consul, of the following:

- 2 Immigration Officers
- 2 Security Officers
- 2 Medical Officers
- 2 Labour Officers
- Suitable clerical staff.

This number to be increased if conditions in the spring of 1949 make this necessary.

(f) The I.R.O. to be asked to bring all prospective immigrants to Canada to the assembly centre closest to one of the Consulates. These centres to be visited from time to time by the Consulate teams. Individual immigrants who can make their own way to the Consulates to be processed there.

(g) Mr. Cormier to be available to visit Germany to assist the Consulates as occasion may require.

10. This arrangement should result in the immediate reduction of the Canadian establishment on the Continent by approximately 16 officers and certain supplementary staff. It is suggested that not more than 5 of these surplus officers should be offered to I.R.O. to assist in the locating of relatives of Canadian residents who are in the D.P. areas — the five officers in question to be nominated by Mr. Cormier in the light of his experience with the personnel concerned, subject to confirmation by their respective Ministers.

11. This arrangement does not provide for such special tasks as the handling of the proposed Estonian immigrants from Sweden. This and similar movements would, however, in any case, require separate provision.

<sup>21</sup> Approuvée par le Cabinet le 29 septembre./Approved by Cabinet on September 29.

12. The policy outlined above has been discussed with and approved in principle by:

- The Head of the Canadian Mission (Mr. Cormier)
- The Chief Security Officer (Mr. Syron)
- The Senior Representative of the Department of Labour (Mr. Phelan)
- Three senior officials of I.R.O. (Mr. Tuck, Mr. Innes, Mr. Jacobsen)
- The Canadian Ambassador to Switzerland and delegate to I.R.O. Conferences (Mr. Wilgress)
- The Chief of the Canadian Military Mission (General Pope)
- The Canadian High Commissioner in the United Kingdom (Mr. Robertson)

13. Finally it is recommended that the whole question of refugee policy be again formally reviewed in six months' time.

As you know, displaced persons of German ethnic origin brought to Canada from Occupied Territory in Europe are located, processed, presented to our inspection officers and provided with transportation by the Canadian Christian Council for the Resettlement of Refugees, this procedure having been adopted because the aliens described do not come within the mandate of the International Refugee Organization. At the commencement of the movement representatives of the C.C.C.R.R. sent to Germany were successful in obtaining the use of part of the Refugee Camp at Muehlenberg, Germany, for the reception and holding of these immigrants awaiting transfer to vessels for movement to Canada.

From time to time complaints have reached the Department of the conditions in the Camp and in July last we asked the Senior Immigration Officer in Germany to conduct an investigation and submit a report. I am enclosing herewith a copy of the report dated August 23rd,† which gives a very clear picture of the most unsatisfactory conditions in the Muehlenberg Camp, and I am sure you will agree that prompt action should be taken to improve the living conditions therein.

The Canadian Christian Council for the Resettlement of Refugees are now geared up to move about 700 immigrants per month and these all have to be processed through Muehlenberg. The Organization named is thus contributing in a very material way toward solving the problem of displaced persons in Occupied Territory, and I am sure all concerned will agree that everything possible should be done to assist in carrying this work forward in a proper and efficient manner. The conditions in Muehlenberg have undoubtedly retarded the work and the purpose of this letter is to request that the matter be placed before the proper authorities with a view to having the camp put into a reasonably good condition. We are informed that the Camp at Muehlenberg had been abandoned by the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees about June, 1947, it being considered unsuitable for D.P.'s within the mandate of the International Refugee Organization. When the C.C.C.R.R. agreed to handle displaced persons of German ethnic origin they obtained the use of part of this Camp from the C.C.G. as no other assembly centre was available.

I would suggest that copies of the enclosed report be forwarded to the Canadian High Commissioner in London, directing that the same be transmitted to the British Foreign Office and a request made that the appropriate organization in Germany be asked to immediately improve the conditions of the Muehlenberg Camp so that the displaced persons using the same may be afforded reasonable living conditions.

I should appreciate being informed in due course of the result of the representations made in this matter.

TELEGRAM 260

Berlin, October 7, 1948

IMPORTANT

My telegram No. 254 of 29th September,† CCCRR Muehlenberg camp.

Conditions at Muehlenberg have not improved much since Bird of Immigration Branch made his report which PW<sup>22</sup> and DP Division officials in the zone admit gave a fair picture of the situation. A few additional buildings have been rendered barely habitable by the installation of doors and windows. The camp will now accommodate 1000 CCCRR Volksdeutsche which is the figure guaranteed by Kenchington and reported in my telegram No. 148 of 10th June.† This seems to be the upper limit, while CCCRR camp population increases during the week before each sailing of the Beaverbrae from 800 to approximately 1300 persons, Chief of PW and DP Division asserts that no more space can be made available. Quite apart from accommodation, facilities such as washrooms are woefully inadequate.

Before he first moved in, Erdmann was apparently told by PW and DP officials that Muehlenberg was a poor camp. Unfortunately, alternative accommodation was scarce, and in order to get on with the job he took what was readily available, particularly as it was located near a good railway centre such as Hannover. Since then, of course, CCCRR scheme has expanded rapidly. Molson<sup>23</sup> is of opinion that even if PW and DP Division could spend more out of their meagre deutsche mark budget and even if materials could be obtained more easily, it would require a lot of work and some time substantially to improve conditions at Muehlenberg. At that they might well not be up to standard.

In the course of the next few weeks PW and DP Division are transferring to Manpower Division their commitments in respect of displaced persons outside the mandate of IRO. The recruitment of displaced persons for the United Kingdom Westward Ho scheme is now small, and PW and DP Division are, therefore, handing over to Manpower Division certain former German army barracks in Munster which were used for this purpose. The Munster barracks were examined a few days ago by PW and DP and Health officials who reported them to be in a very good condition. The capacity of the several buildings is 4700. According to calculations made by officials of PW and DP and Manpower Divisions in Molson's presence, they should be able to house all those for whom Manpower Division will need accommodation, including the CCCRR.

Having regard to conditions at Muehlenberg, it would seem best for CCCRR to take advantage of this opportunity. It would be necessary first to secure approval of appropriate British authorities, and Molson is endeavouring to ascertain how long this would take. He was informed by Manpower officials that it might be difficult to arrange for the move, if it were approved, after the next sailing of the Beaverbrae scheduled for 19th October. It might have to be deferred until immediately after the November sailing. This might not be inconvenient for CCCRR. I understand they are now working principally on the November rather than the October sailing, that is to say, one sailing in advance.

Meinsen of CCCRR, who is now in charge at Muehlenberg, advised Molson that he is not anxious to move because the camp is near a railway centre and because he now has suitably trained locally employed German personnel whom he would otherwise lose. In view of the fact that policy considerations are involved, PW and DP officials were not anxious to discuss the possibility of Munster in detail while he was there. However, Munster is well served by railway transportation and Molson was given to understand that if CCCRR were moved, efforts would be made to transfer, at the same time, at least some of the German personnel whom Meinsen wishes to retain. His objections, it seems, might, therefore be met.

Briefly, there appears to be two possibilities if CCCRR are to be afforded more adequate facilities without charge. They can remain in Muehlenberg, which is not likely to be really satisfactory for them for yet a few months, if then. Alternatively, we can press the appropriate British authorities to accommodate them at Munster, the move to be completed by the beginning of December at the latest. The second plan appears definitely to be the better and the prospects are that it could be arranged, provided always that the local CCCRR representatives wish to take it up.

GRANTING OF "SAFETY VISAS" BY CANADIAN LEGATION IN CZECHOSLOVAKIA

I attach a copy of a letter of December 10 from the Canadian Chargé d'Affaires in Prague.† Mr. Macdonnell has suggested that the least Canada can do to bolster democratic forces behind the Iron Curtain is to grant Canadian visas to democratic leaders when their continued stay in their own country would be at great personal or family risk. Mr. Macdonnell would help sustain their courage by the promise of a visa "as a last resort if things get too tough."

2. Mr. Macdonnell makes it clear that no emergency situation exists at present in Czechoslovakia but he asks for departmental guidance in case he should have to meet such a situation on short notice.

3. He suggests that he be empowered to grant non-immigrant visas, valid for a year and which might be later extended. I think we shall have to point out to Mr. Macdonnell that he already has the power under paragraph 904a of the Department's Consular Instructions to issue six-month non-immigrant visas on his own discretion and without previous consultation with the Department. This authorization is, in fact, so broad that it may be necessary at a future date to issue a supplementary instruction, limiting and defining it.<sup>24</sup>

4. Certainly, if Mr. Macdonnell were to issue "safety visas" he would have to proceed with the utmost caution.<sup>25</sup> The bona fides of the non-immigrant would need establishment and I do not think that visas could be issued on any great scale. Mr. Crean has suggested that we should learn something about the potential, underground means of escape from Czechoslovakia before a decision is taken. It would, no doubt, be wise to find what present procedure and future plans the United Kingdom have in this regard. If you agree Mr. Crean will investigate this matter through his channels in the United Kingdom.<sup>26</sup>

5. Mr. Crean has raised the further point that we should ascertain whether the Government would wish to give entry to Canada to a number of people with no automatic right to the status of landed immigrant and who might wish to carry on from Canada with the domestic political struggle in their own country.

6. There is a danger that if a future Czech Government were to discover that we were issuing visas on a political basis, they could designate this as Canadian interference in Czech domestic affairs. I think this charge should be avoided, if possible, but I think it would be difficult for them to maintain successfully that the issuance of a permit to visit Canada constitutes a breach of diplomatic propriety.

7. Unless the greatest discretion were used, there would be a further danger that the Canadian Legation in Prague would be flooded with visa applications if the word were to get around.<sup>27</sup>

8. I think the political desirability of giving what small comfort we can to Czech democrats is clear. We shall have to try to indicate to Macdonnell what practice he should adopt, with any necessary directions and cautions as to procedure.

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I have at last been able to find a minute to reply to your letter of the 29th of January† and to the copy of a letter from Mr. Robertson which was enclosed with it. † You will recall that in his letter the High Commissioner referred to the plight of ex-diplomats and other political refugees in Eastern European countries who wish <sup>28</sup> Les renseignements obtenus de Londres et de Washington indiquèrent que ni les britanniques ni les américains n'offraient des visas de cette façon. Une réponse intérimaire fut envoyée à Macdonnell le 16 janvier à l'effet que la situation en Tchécoslovaquie n'était pas encore de nature à justifier un recours à des «visas de sécurité». Apparemment, l'envoi d'une réponse dûment considérée fut devancée par le coup dans ce pays.

Inquiries in London and Washington indicated that neither the British nor the Americans offered visas in this way. An interim reply was sent to Macdonnell on January 16 which indicated that the situation in Czechoslovakia did not yet require the use of "safety visas." Apparently a more considered reply was overtaken by the coup there.

Mr. Chance (Consular Division) concurs [E. Reid]

to emigrate to Canada. Mr. Robertson was anxious to ascertain whether it might not be possible to relax the immigration regulations in connection with some of the most deserving cases of this character. He made this suggestion on the grounds that such persons would provide valuable additions to the Canadian community, and that in assisting them we would be performing a humanitarian act.

I am in full agreement with Mr. Robertson with regard to the undoubtedly deserving character of many of the persons that he has in mind. I also agree that if they could be admitted to Canada and given suitable employment here they would be valuable national assets.

There is, however, this very real and practical difficulty to be overcome. Most of the people in question are without financial resources, or very thinly supplied. They are, moreover, not of the type that can be relied upon to rustle for themselves. Professional men, and particularly ex-diplomats, do not readily find or easily accept the kind of jobs that are commonly available for immigrants. As you know we have had already a number of cases of foreign ex-diplomats who have been rather serious problems here in Ottawa.

As an ex-member of the profession, I may perhaps be forgiven if I suggest that the average diplomat is not likely to be very much use at anything else — particularly at the kind of initial jobs that are commonly available for immigrants.

Some of the professional men that Mr. Robertson has in mind will undoubtedly find a place in their professions in Canada, but I am a little afraid that a good many of the most humanly “deserving” cases might also turn out to be the most difficult to provide for after their arrival in Canada.

With the foregoing considerations in mind I would suggest that you inform Mr. Robertson that if he will forward the details surrounding specific cases we will look them over here, and if we think that there is any reasonable hope of the individuals concerned being able to look after themselves following arrival in Canada, we will be prepared to submit them for special action by Order-in-Council. In making his submissions Mr. Robertson should be careful to indicate just how the individuals concerned can be expected to find their places in Canadian community.

It will, of course, be essential, as the High Commissioner has himself indicated, that each case should be screened with considerable care on political or security grounds. In this connection I would not consider a recommendation by Sir Robert Craigie<sup>30</sup> an endorsement of great value.

Yours sincerely,

[Ottawa], March 22, 1948

The Prime Minister telephoned me this afternoon to mention a matter which he had intended to take up with you and which he may bring up at Cabinet tomorrow.

Mr. and Mrs. [Frantisek] Nemeč<sup>31</sup> called on him today and asked whether there was anything that the Government could do to help them, and the other two members of the mission who resigned, to find work.

Dr. Nemeč told the Prime Minister that he was doing his best to do or say nothing that would embarrass the Canadian Government, and that he was biding his time for the present and remaining pretty silent. The Prime Minister said that he thought this was wise.

The Prime Minister said that the Government would look about to see whether there was any way they could help Dr. Nemeč, Dr. [Karel] Moudry and Dr. [Karel] Bala to find work.

Mr. King said to me that he wondered if something might not be found in the Immigration Branch for Dr. Nemeč. Dr. Nemeč suggested that perhaps the Department of Trade and Commerce might be able to help Dr. Bala find work in some Canadian business firm. Mr. Moudry has academic training and Dr. Nemeč hoped that something might perhaps be found for him in a Canadian university.

I said to the Prime Minister that perhaps it would be better if work could be found for them outside the Government Service. If they took jobs in the Canadian Government Service, this would be played up against them by the propagandists at home.

We have been giving some consideration in the Department to the whole problem of what can be done by the Government and by individual groups in Canada to help the democratic anti-Communist refugees. It has occurred to us that it ought to be possible to enlist the interest of an unofficial group of humanitarians, supported by some of the outstanding refugees themselves. Perhaps Senator Hugessen or Senator Wilson could be persuaded to take an active part in the formation of such an unofficial group. The communists and fellow-travellers did a magnificent job in the thirties in organizing public sympathy and support for anti-fascist refugees. If liberalism is to demonstrate that it is a dynamic creed, liberals should show at least the same degree of enthusiasm and ability on behalf of democratic anti-communists.

THE ADMISSION TO CANADA AND SUBSEQUENT SETTLEMENT OF DEMOCRATIC ANTI-COMMUNIST REFUGEES

By Order in Council P.C. 1108 of March 16, 1948, three former Czech diplomats stationed in Ottawa, together with members of their families and some members of the Embassy clerical and domestic staff, were admitted to Canada. In addition, non-immigrant visas for periods ranging from three to twelve months were granted to five other Czech diplomats and their families. One of these is serving in Italy,<sup>32</sup> two in Turkey<sup>33</sup> and two in Belgium.<sup>34</sup> After their arrival in Canada, all these persons will undoubtedly seek permanent landing, which will be difficult to refuse. None of these persons come within the classes at present admissible to Canada. Little is known of their qualifications which might fit them to earn their livings in Canada.

2. So far, the number of such persons is not sufficiently large to create a serious problem. However, if the Soviet Union were to secure complete control of Finland, we would probably receive a large number of applications for admission to Canada from democratic anti-Communist Finns.

3. The problem has been considered by officers of the Department of External Affairs, Department of Mines and Resources (Immigration Branch) and the R.C.M.P., and they have made the following recommendations to their respective Ministers.

4. Democratic anti-Communist refugees can be divided for the purpose of this memorandum into three groups: (a) those who are in countries which have fallen under Communist domination, e.g., Czechoslovakia, and whose lives are in danger; (b) those who are in countries where the danger of Communist domination may become imminent, e.g., Greece and Finland; (c) those who are in other countries.

5. It is recommended that persons falling within the above categories should be admitted to Canada under the following conditions:

Group (a). It is unlikely that prominent democratic anti-Communist leaders in a Communist-dominated country would wish to be seen entering the Canadian mission in that country nor could they hope to leave the country legally. Should, however, such a person apply to a Canadian diplomatic mission, he should be told to apply for a visa in the country to which he flees. The mission in the country concerned should submit the application for a visa to Ottawa, where favourable consideration would be given to any bona fide applicant.

Group (b). Applications for admission to Canada of anti-Communist democratic refugees from countries where Communist control may be imminent should be referred to Ottawa before visas are granted. Each application could be considered on its merits by a small interdepartmental group, consisting of representatives of the Department of External Affairs, and Mines and Resources (Immigration Branch) and the R.C.M.P. The general principle to be followed in making recommendations on the applications could not be laid down in advance, e.g., as long as there is a possibility of effective internal resistance it might be unwise to encourage democratic leaders to leave their country.

Group (c). Applications for admission to Canada from countries other than those mentioned in (a) and (b) could be dealt with in accordance with the existing immigration regulations. A careful security investigation will be required in each case, in view of the danger of infiltration of groups of refugees by Communists. Such persons would also have to fulfil the requirements of the health regulations under the Immigration Act.

6. Official responsibility can scarcely go further than to arrange for the admission to Canada of the persons concerned. It cannot extend to guaranteeing support and suitable settlement for them. An unofficial committee consisting of a few leading Canadians and a few selected refugees could be invaluable not only in finding suitable employment but in advising officials regarding the worthiness or otherwise of applicants for admission.

7. The following names of Canadians whose interest might be enlisted have been suggested:

Messrs. J.W. McConnell, Victor Sifton, S.J. McLean, N.J. McLean, Sydney Smith, F.R. Scott, Sir M. Ellsworth Flavelle, Senators Hugesson and Wilson.

8. Perhaps the Minister of Mines and Resources and the Secretary of State might be asked to urge one of these men to make himself responsible for calling a meeting to organize an unofficial Canadian Association for assisting anti-Communist refugees.<sup>35</sup>

IMMIGRATION; ADMISSION OF SPECIAL SMALL GROUPS OF REFUGEES

31. The Minister of Mines and Resources, referring to discussion at the meeting of August 25th, 1948, submitted a recommendation to authorize the admission of an additional group of 145 refugees, principally Baltic, who had arrived at Canadian ports from Sweden.

These persons had not undergone health examination or security screening prior to arrival. However, they represented a desirable type of immigrant and the only alternative to their admission was to return them to Sweden at government expense. It was unlikely that many similar movements by small vessels would take place in the future. Full examination and screening to the extent possible would be conducted before they were landed.

It was suggested that, in future, some discretionary power be given to the Minister to act in cases of this sort without specific government approval. Detailed arrangements would be considered in the near future by the Cabinet Committee on Immigration.

(Letter, Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources, Sept. 1, 1948 and attached submission of Minister, Sept. 1, 1948 — P.C. 3963).†

32. The Cabinet, after further discussion, agreed:

(a) that the Minister's recommendation regarding admission of the 145 refugees in question be approved and an Order in Council passed accordingly; and,

(b) that, in future, admission of similar small groups be granted in the Minister's discretion subject to detailed arrangements to be approved by the Cabinet Committee on Immigration; reports upon such admissions to be made to the Cabinet.

IMMIGRATION OF ESTONIAN REFUGEES IN SWEDEN

The Cabinet Committee on Immigration Policy, at a meeting held on September 9, 1948, considered the possible admission to Canada of some Estonian refugees presently living in Sweden.

It is estimated that some two to three thousand would like to come to Canada, 500 as domestics, the remainder as artisans, fishermen or farmers, and a smaller number of the professional or "white collar" class. Each family, on the average, would have about $2,000 which the Swedish Government would allow them to bring out.

The Swedish authorities would not help the emigration of these persons in any way and would not permit the use of a Canadian "Immigration Team" in Sweden. They would have no objection, however, to the appointment of from two to four additional "attachés" or "secretaries" to the staff of the Canadian Legation.

It was proposed:

(a) that the Canadian Government permit the admission of not more than 5,000 Estonian refugees (families included) from Sweden; terms of their admission to be recommended by the Immigration-Labour Committee subject to approval by the Minister of Mines and Resources;

(b) that arrangements be made for the attachment of an immigration officer, a security officer, and a labour officer to the staff of the Canadian Legation in Stockholm, each to be designated in such a way as to avoid embarrassment to the Swedish Government;

(c) that the work of these officers, subject to the general supervision and final authority of the Head of the Mission, be directed by the immigration officer concerned; and,

(d) that an effort be made to arrange for the I.R.O. to provide transportation for these refugees to Canada; and, if this fails, that the Canadian Government provide the means of transport.

The Committee, after discussion, agreed to recommend to the Cabinet that the proposals of the Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources referred to above be approved, on the understanding that if I.R.O. fail to provide and pay for the transportation of these refugees to Canada only those Estonians who could provide and pay for their own transportation be allowed to come to Canada.<sup>37</sup>

FRENCH IMMIGRATION

The Cabinet Committee on Immigration Policy, at a meeting held on September 9, 1948, considered a proposal that, for immigration purposes, French citizens be considered to be in a preferential class similar to British subjects and United States citizens. This might not greatly increase the number of French immigrants coming to Canada, due to certain restrictions imposed by the French Government upon the emigration of its citizens, but it might help to mitigate certain Canadian criticisms.

The Committee, after discussion, agreed to recommend for consideration by the Cabinet:

- (a) that French citizens coming to Canada as immigrants be considered on a similar basis to British and United States immigrants; and,
- (b) that an Order in Council be passed accordingly.<sup>38</sup>

Ottawa, October 15, 1948

My dear Colleague,

FRENCH IMMIGRATION TO CANADA

Since the promulgation of Orders in Council P.C. 4186 of September 16, 1948, and P.C. 4468 of October 5, my officers have been considering some aspects of this question in which the Department of External Affairs is interested.

<sup>38</sup> Approuvée par le Cabinet le 16 septembre./Approved by Cabinet on September 16.

The first of these is concerned with security. The problem is to ensure that in carrying out the new decision concerning citizens of France, our representatives abroad are able to observe Government policy on the admission of subversive elements. The organized strength of the Communist Party in France, the wide use of false Cartes d'Identité in that country, and the known fact that the Soviet Union is using France extensively as a point of despatch for its agents, raise special difficulties in relation to the suspension of the passport and visa regulations.

Secondly, consideration has been given for some months to the possibility of entering into reciprocal arrangements with various European countries for the mutual abolition of visas for bona fide non-immigrants, such as business men and tourists. Recently we advised the countries concerned, including France, that it did not seem possible at this time to make further progress in this direction.

Finally, there is the problem of interpreting the phrase "a citizen of France," as it appears in Order in Council P.C. 4186.

The foregoing matters were discussed with Mr. St. Laurent, in his capacity as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, prior to his departure for England. At that time Mr. St. Laurent expressed the following views:

"The principle that citizens of France should have the same rights to enter Canada as citizens of the United Kingdom and the United States should remain untouched. This means that a citizen of France, who is not a Communist, can enter Canada in the same way that a citizen of the United Kingdom or a citizen of the United States, who is not a Communist, can enter Canada. He may, without any previous examination abroad, present himself at a Canadian port of entry, but at that port of entry, he will, of course, have to demonstrate that he is entitled to the privileges of the recent amendments to our Immigration Regulations; i.e., that he is a citizen of France and that he is not a Communist. If he has not in his possession a passport or visa, it may be very difficult for him to convince our officers at the border of his right to enter Canada. In his own interests, therefore, he would be well advised to secure a passport and a visa before he leaves for Canada."

Mr. St. Laurent expressed the further view that the phrase "a citizen of France" means for the purpose of Order in Council P.C. 4186 a citizen of metropolitan France and if there were any practical difficulty in giving this interpretation to this Order in Council, consideration might be given to its amendment.

Mr. St. Laurent further felt that we might suggest to the Government of France that it consider conferring reciprocal privileges on Canadian citizens; that France might amend its rules to provide that Canadians do not require passports or visas to enter France but that they are required to present at the French border, satisfactory proof of their identity (so that it would be in their interest to secure passports and visas before leaving for France).

Since you will, no doubt, be anxious to instruct your officers abroad, I am taking the liberty of bringing Mr. St. Laurent's views, with which I agree, to your attention.

It seems to me dangerous, from a security aspect, to consider French Cartes d'Identités as being valid documents. This aspect of the matter and the desirability of French immigrants being in possession of passports and visas, is perhaps a matter that might be discussed by the officers of our two departments with a view to ensuring that proper information is disseminated in France on this subject.

I would be most interested in having your views on this whole matter.

Yours sincerely,

L.B. PEARSON

FRENCH IMMIGRATION TO CANADA: ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE
TO IMPLEMENT P.C. 4185 OF SEPTEMBER 16, 1948
AND P.C. 4468 OF OCTOBER 5TH

In accordance with your instructions, the administrative problems in implementing the policy of the Government with regard to French immigration have been considered by officers of the Immigration Branch, the R.C.M.P. and the Department of External Affairs.

2. The crux of the difficulty lies in the fact that the Immigration Branch is charged with keeping Communists and other undesirable immigrants out of Canada. As Communism is so much more widespread in France than in the United Kingdom and the United States and as the problem of collaborators does not exist in the latter countries, it is necessary to devise a way of administering the new Orders-in-Council so that the essential requirements of security are not neglected. These aspects are not developed here since they were set out in the letter from Mr. Pearson to Mr. MacKinnon of 15th October, 1948.

3. The following proposals are recommended for consideration:

(a) That instructions should be issued to administering officials at home and abroad along the following lines:

While under the new Canadian regulations, citizens of France require neither passports nor visas to enter Canada as immigrants, they must nevertheless satisfy the Immigration officials at the port of entry that they comply with the following requirements:

(i) They are in possession of satisfactory documentary proof of identity and that they are citizens of France, born in France.

(ii) They are of good character and in possession of sufficient funds to maintain themselves until employment has been found.

(iii) They comply with the health regulations and are in possession of X-ray plates of the chest and radiologist's reports certifying that they are free from tuberculosis.

In view of the above, intending immigrants are advised to take advantage of the Canadian Immigration facilities which exist in Paris where both civil and medical officers are available for their assistance.

Moreover, just as a clear certificate of health from the Canadian Government medical officer in Paris is required to facilitate admission at the Canadian port of entry, so will admission be facilitated by possession of a valid French passport, since this is much the most acceptable proof of national status. Although visas are not required, the endorsement of a Canadian visa on a valid French passport will be found to be of great assistance as indicating that satisfactory preliminary examination as to character has been conducted in France.

Intending immigrants should further be warned of the French Government regulations regarding the export of funds.

(b) The great majority of applications come first to attention through the media of transportation companies. It is therefore recommended that the companies be informed of the regulations in terms somewhat similar to the above. The effect will almost certainly be that the companies, in their anxiety to avoid carrying passengers who may be denied entry at Canadian ports, will refuse to issue tickets to persons not in possession of valid French passports and Canadian visas, in view of their liability to return rejected passengers to their country of origin.

(c) Confidential instructions to Canadian representatives in Paris should specify that Canadian Government Medical Officers will refer applicants for examination to the Civil Examination Staff, who will institute immediate enquiries with the assistance of the R.C.M.P. attached to the Paris office for that purpose. By these means a check can be made in Paris of those immigrants who do not choose to request visas as well as those who do. The names of any who are not clear for security will be forwarded to Ottawa so that information may be available at the intended port of entry if possible before the arrival of the immigrant in Canada. French cartes d'identités will not be accepted as proof of identity.

(d) A public announcement should be made through the Embassy in Paris and concurrently a similar statement might be issued here. A draft of such statement is attached.†

(e) The security aspects of applying the new policy to persons naturalized in France are so grave that further recommendation is made that the relevant Orders-in-Council should be amended to make clear that the new regulations apply only to citizens of France born in France.<sup>39</sup>

FRENCH IMMIGRATION TO CANADA

On October 15 last Mr. Pearson wrote a letter on this subject to Mr. MacKinnon; a copy is attached (Annex 'A'). Subsequently and by agreement between the two Ministers, discussions took place at the official level between officers of the Immigration Branch, R.C.M.P. and this department. They resulted in a memorandum (Annex 'B') signed by Mr. Jolliffe, Director of Immigration and Mr. Chance, Chief of the Consular Division of this department.

2. It had been hoped that further discussions might take place between Mr. MacKinnon and Mr. Pearson, before the latter left for Paris. This proved impossible. Mr. Pearson therefore asked that you would be so good as to continue the discussions with Mr. MacKinnon. He, at the same time, expressed his general agreement with the memorandum.

3. You will observe from Annex 'A' that this matter was discussed with Mr. St. Laurent in his then capacity of Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. He made then certain suggestions for meeting the problems which had arisen. Annex 'B' follows the general line suggested by Mr. St. Laurent with one important exception. He felt that the new orders-in-council could be interpreted as meaning "Citizen of metropolitan France." On examination it was found, however, that this would not entirely meet the needs of the case but that "Citizen of France, born in France," would be much more effective.

4. Metropolitan France embraces technically the Department of Algeria and possibly other French North African possessions. More important than that, however, is the doubtful security position of many French citizens by naturalization. Naturalization papers are far too easily obtained.

5. A point which was not, I think, discussed with Mr. St. Laurent was the acceptability of French Cartes d'Identité. There is ample evidence that these are utterly unreliable. Many thousands were issued during the resistance in false names and it is said that even prominent Frenchmen still carry false Cartes d'Identité. There is every justification for refusing recognition of these documents.

6. Detailed discussion of the problems demanding solution has been avoided in Annex 'B' but the appropriate officers will hold themselves in readiness to wait upon Mr. MacKinnon and yourself should further information be desired.

7. You will perhaps feel that effect should not be given to the recommendations of Annex 'B' without approval of Cabinet. Should this be so, it would seem to rest with the Department of Mines and Resources to prepare the necessary Cabinet paper for submission for final approval through the Security Panel.

8. I have sent copies of these papers to Mr. Heenev and Mr. Pickersgill.

IMMIGRATION; ADMISSION FROM FRANCE

17. The Minister of Mines and Resources submitted recommendations to Council to clarify the decision taken at the meeting of November 16th so that the new regulations governing admission of French citizens would apply only to those born in France. This would require amendment of Order in Council P.C. 4186 of September 16, 1948.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(Secretary's memorandum, Dec. 6 — Cabinet Document 813; Minister's submissions to Council, Nov. 24, 1948 — P.C. 5593 and 5594).†

18. The Prime Minister explained that this proposal resulted from further consideration of the administrative problems connected with the implementing of the new government policy with respect to French immigration.

It was considered desirable in the interests of security to restrict the scope of the new regulations to native born French citizens.

While neither passports nor visas would be required under the new regulations, in fact admission would be facilitated by possession of such documents and it was expected that the amendment proposed would permit of reasonably adequate scrutiny of intending immigrants.

(External Affairs memorandum, Dec. 7,† and attached memorandum, Oct. 28, 1948).

19. The Cabinet, after discussion, approved the Minister's recommendation and agreed that Orders in Council be passed to amend the regulations accordingly.

RE EAST INDIAN IMMIGRATION

Dr. D.P. Pandia, on behalf of the East Indians in Canada, requests the Government to amend existing Immigration Regulations to provide for the admission to Canada of their close relatives on the same basis as those of European races, and for the fiances of Canadian born East Indian women. As East Indians belong to one of the Asiatic races admission is restricted to the wife and unmarried child under 18 years of age of Canadian citizens (P.C. 2115).

With this submission Dr. Pandia requests consideration of the following facts:

(1) Under restrictive regulations the East Indian population of Canada has declined from 5,438 in 1911 to 1,465 in 1941 and as 25% of those now in Canada are over 60 years old there will be a further decrease during the next 10 years.

(2) That there are members of the East Indian Community established as successful farmers and businessmen who have no children or relatives in Canada to carry on their business now that they are approaching old age, or in case of their demise.

(3) The Canadian born males choose their women in India with the result that the Canadian born females must remain spinsters.

(4) The East Indians have contributed to the development as pioneers of the two basic industries of British Columbia, i.e., lumbering and agriculture, having supplied capable and skilled labour, and invested millions of dollars in the same; they are reliable, thrifty, hard-working and law-abiding.

(5) There are no restrictions on the admission to India of Canadians, but at present Canada discriminates against East Indian British subjects as compared with the citizens of the other dominions. To remove this discrimination at this particular time would be of importance in the friendly relationship between the two countries.

Existing regulations provide for the admission of the following classes provided they do not belong to any Asiatic race:

(a) British Subjects having such status by reason of birth or naturalization in Canada, Great Britain, Northern Ireland, the Irish Free State, Newfoundland, New Zealand, Australia, the Union of South Africa.

(b) United States Citizens

(c) Relatives of Residents of Canada, i.e., Husband or wife, son, daughter, brother or sister, together with husband or wife and unmarried children if any. The orphan nephew or niece under 21 years of age.

(d) Agriculturists, Farm Labourers, Persons Experienced in Mining, Lumbering or Logging

(e) Persons Entering for Marriage to a Legal Resident

The only immigrants of Asiatic races admissible are the wife and unmarried child under 18 years of age of a Canadian citizen.

To effect any change in the admissible classes of East Indians would require a modification of P.C. 2115, and would result in requests for similar treatment of other Asiatic races who are not admissible under present regulations. The majority of the 1400 East Indians in Canada are Canadian citizens and the admission of their first degree relatives would not mean any large movement. The effect in regard to other Asiatic races would be different. There are in Canada over 16,000 persons of Asiatic races (other than Chinese, Japanese and East Indians), the majority of whom are believed to be Canadian citizens. The Chinese would present the most serious problem. While the proportion of naturalized and native born Chinese to the total Chinese population is small, naturalization would within a few years result in a formidable movement of Chinese immigrants. About 2000 Chinese have applied for naturalization since January 1st, 1947. A similar situation would develop with regard to Japanese subsequent to the revocation of the regulations prohibiting the admission of enemy aliens.

Dr. Pandia believes that the East Indian should be considered as being in a preferred position in his relationship to Canadian Immigration regulations, in that he is a natural born British subject and as such should be given the same privileges as British subjects native to and naturalized in Britain and the Dominions. This view, however, would not appeal to Canadian citizens of alien origin who would naturally claim discrimination as between Canadian citizens of different Asiatic races.

As a change in the regulations applicable alike to all Asiatic races along the lines advocated for the East Indians would within a few years materially increase Asiatic immigration, it is the opinion of the Department that such action would not be warranted. It is, however, recognized that there are cases where the regulations impose definite hardships as described in submission No. 2 on page one of the memorandum, and it is suggested that these could be dealt with individually by Order in Council waiving the provisions of P.C. 2115 where investigation established such action to be warranted.<sup>40</sup>

INDIAN IMMIGRATION TO CANADA

Our High Commissioner in New Delhi suggests in despatch No. 168 of May 27, † that our immigration policy might be revised by allowing a "token" quota of at most 100 immigrants a year from India, provided they meet our general requirements regarding financial means, good health and good character. The Indian authorities would probably arrange to select the best type of emigrants available. Mr. Kearney suggests that we might make some reciprocal arrangement with the Indian Government for the admission of Canadians to India.

2. Present Immigration Law

I think Mr. Kearney is under some misunderstanding regarding our present immigration regulations. After referring to Order-in-Council P.C. 2115, in conjunction with the Australian dictation test, he remarks that these laws are "poorly concealed devices for keeping Indians out." Actually our law is quite straightforward and clearly discriminates against persons of Asiatic race. I think that Mr. Kearney probably had in mind Order-in-Council P.C. 23 of January 1914 (based on P.C. 27 of January 8, 1908, and Section 38 of the Immigration Act, 1910) which prohibited the entry of an immigrant who did not come by "continuous journey from the country of which he is a native." This at the time was definitely directed against immigrants from India and was designed to discriminate against them without specifically declaring that British subjects of Indian race or origin would not be permitted entry to Canada for permanent residence. It was apparently not actually found necessary to invoke this Order-in-Council, at least in recent years and in any case it was abolished by P.C. 4852, November 26, 1947. The device of "continuous voyage" therefore no longer exists.

3. P.C. 2115 dated September 16, 1930, prohibits the landing of immigrants of any Asiatic race with the exception of wives and unmarried children under 18 of persons legally resident in Canada and in a position to take care of them. It is under this provision that the Sikhs in British Columbia can bring wives and minor children to this country.

4. Order-in-Council P.C. 4849 of November 26, 1947 (which replaced P.C. 695) is essentially the governing law on immigration to Canada at the present time and in effect sets forth our policy. After enumerating the classes of persons who may be admitted to Canada, it adds a final proviso that they do not include immigrants of any Asiatic race.

5. The "Gentlemen's Agreement" with Japan

There is a proviso to P.C. 2115 which states that it does not apply to nationals of a country having a special treaty or agreement with Canada regulating immigration. This, I believe, was intended to make provision for the working arrangement which operated between Canada and Japan from the "Lemieux Agreement" of 1908 to the outbreak of war with Japan in 1941. In terms of correspondence of 1923 with some minor modification in 1928, it was agreed that a maximum of 150 Japanese nationals would be admitted to Canada annually. This figure was to include not only domestic servants and agricultural laborers but also wives and children of Japanese resident in Canada. The Japanese authorities took certain administrative measures to control this emigration. I am not very familiar with the manner in which "gentlemen's agreement" worked out in practice but it should be fairly easy to get a clear picture. Apart from political considerations, our Immigration Branch should be able to tell us how the machinery operated and the difficulties which may have been experienced.

6. Australian System

In effect, the Australian policy of "White Australia" is not very different from ours though the method used is not the same. Shortly after the Commonwealth of Australia was created, the National Parliament in 1901 adopted an Immigration Act containing the famous dictation test. This was derived from a statute of the colony of Natal of about 1885. It provides that an immigrant may be given a test of a minimum of 50 words in any prescribed language. This is the only legal foundation of the "White Australia" policy. It gives a completely arbitrary and wide discretion to immigration officers to prevent the entry of any person of whatever race or nationality whom it is desired to exclude. Nowhere in so many words does Australian law exclude or restrict the entry of Asiatics. This device is clearly a subterfuge and the actual results are well known to the whole world, including all government authorities in Asia. Our law is more frankly discriminatory. It is arguable which, from a diplomatic viewpoint, is better.

7. From time to time in Australia proposals have been made that the policy of excluding persons of Asiatic race might be modified slightly to permit the admission of a "token" quota. A few liberals, intellectuals and churchmen think that this might satisfy the sensitive feelings of Oriental peoples. However, public opinion in Australia seems to be quite determined to avoid even a slight revision in the traditional immigration policy.

8. United States System

The Indian Immigration and Naturalization Act, which became law in July 2, 1946, provides for the admission of a maximum of 100 persons per year who were born in India. The quota system, which since 1924 has been an essential feature of American immigration regulations, is I believe, based not on race or nationality but on country of birth. The quota of 100 a year for India therefore includes persons of European race born in India. I know that some white persons from India have gone to the United States under this quota. There is nothing, I gather, to prevent American consular offices from selecting the entire quota from among white applicants for visas born in India, though it would seem undiplomatic to do so. I recall that much publicity was given in India after the quota of 100 was established and this has no doubt been a factor in improving relations between India and the United States.

9. Dr. Pandia's Proposal

The line of argument used by Sir Girja Bajpai to Mr. Kearney is very similar to that which Dr. Pandia has advanced to me and I think to both yourself and Dr. Keenleyside, though his actual proposal is somewhat different. Dr. Pandia contended to me that it might be a strong inducement to India to stay in the Commonwealth if Canada should in the near future modify her policy regarding the entry of Indians. The present position, he argues, is the only disability of or discrimination against the Indian community in Canada. The proposal which he has made in writing (letters of February 28† and March 16,† 1948, to Dr. Keenleyside) as well as verbally, is that the Indians (Sikhs) resident in Canada should be permitted to bring members of their families to this country, other than those already covered by the provisions in P.C. 2115. More specifically, Dr. Pandia tells me he would like Indians to be included in paragraphs 3, 4(b) and 5 of P.C. 4849. This change would permit the entry of brothers and sisters of the applicant, as well as husbands and wives and unmarried children of any age, orphaned nephews and nieces; and farmers coming to join uncles, nephews, fathers-in-law; sons, sons-in-law, brothers-in-law, etc. It would also permit a Sikh to bring a bride to Canada from India and marry her here. At present he must go to India from Canada and get married there and subsequently try to bring his wife to Canada with him and have her follow him to this country. Likewise, under Dr. Pandia's proposal, a Sikh girl in Canada can have a man come to Canada from India to marry her here.

10. Dr. Pandia also rather vaguely referred to the necessity for allowing some of the older Sikh men in B.C. to adopt sons in India and bring them to this country to carry on their businesses.

11. Pandia states that the number involved in the proposal would be very small. There would seem, however, to be no way to assess accurately the effect of his proposals. One should bear in mind the strength, size, extent and fertility of Indian families. The family system is one of the basic social institutions of India and there is a closely observed obligation of mutual aid. The suggestion to allow adopted sons to enter Canada would in the case of a country like India, where there is an ingenious capacity to make use of legal loopholes, probably result in a considerable number of persons coming forward.

12. India as a Member of the Commonwealth

I am not very impressed with the argument that a minor change in Canadian immigration law would have considerable influence on India's decision whether to remain in the Commonwealth group or to proceed with the establishment of an independent republic unassociated with the Commonwealth. The treatment of the Indian minority in South Africa, especially under the new Government of Dr. Malan, is likely to be a much more important factor. Australia and New Zealand also exclude Indians. One should also bear in mind that there are serious restrictions on the entry of Indians to Ceylon, which, of course, is a self-governing dominion, Burma, which is now an independent republic with no British constitutional connection, and some British colonial possessions, such as Kenya and Trinidad, where the established Indian population has created many difficulties and suffers various forms of discrimination. Any inducement which Canada might offer to India to remain in the Commonwealth could have little or no influence in comparison with the major problems of Indian immigration and residence in South Africa, Ceylon and the colonial empire.

13. Precedent for Other Countries in Asia

I do not see how it would be possible for Canada to adopt Mr. Kearney's proposal for India without doing the same or something very similar for not only the other new dominions in Asia, namely Ceylon and Pakistan, but also for any other Asian country sufficiently powerful and influential to protest effectively against our policy of excluding immigrants of Asiatic race. I have in mind at present particularly China, which can argue for the treatment which we gave Japan under the pre-war "gentlemen's agreement". The same may apply, at least theoretically, to Burma and possibly some other countries in Asia.

14. Reciprocity

If it were decided to put Indians on a "token" quota of 100 a year, I do not think we could have any objection to a reciprocal arrangement for the entry of Canadians to India. The total resident Canadian community in India at present seems to be about 400. Most of these are missionaries and their families who, while they may wish to live in India for many years, have no desire to settle permanently from generation to generation in the way that Indians would in Canada. Likewise, the Canadians who are resident in India for business purposes normally wish only to stay there for a few years though presumably most of them would have to be classified as immigrants. Under the Reciprocity Act of 1943, I think the Indian Government can make rules placing the same restrictions on the entry of Canadians to India as are imposed on persons of Indian origin by Canada.

15. Administrative Aspects

There would no doubt be many administrative difficulties in carrying out Mr. Kearney's proposal and new duties would have to be assigned to our Office in New Delhi. Apparently the Indian authorities, through their control over the issue of passports and of emigration, would wish to pre-select the persons who would go forward to Canada. These persons would presumably have to satisfy our Office in New Delhi regarding bona fides, identity, relationship to persons in Canada, good health, etc. The record of the entry of persons from India does not seem to be very good and certain traits of the general Indian character must be borne in mind. Many Indians seem to be quite skilled and subtle in practices of forgery, substitution of persons, false declarations, "fake" medical reports, etc. A quota system which resulted in constant incidents, arguments and irritation, between our officials both in New Delhi and at Canadian ports of entry, and the Indian authorities, would scarcely result in goodwill and friendly relations.

16. Public Opinion

Finally, it may be seriously doubted whether Canadian public opinion especially in British Columbia would be prepared for a proposal such as Mr. Kearney's. Residents on the Pacific Coast would immediately think of the operation of the "gentlemen's agreement" with Japan.

17. I have indicated above some of the principal objections and difficulties that have occurred to me in connection with Mr. Kearney's proposal. They seem to point to a rejection of his scheme. At the same time we must, for international reasons, give serious consideration to any suggestions which might remove the sting of discrimination against Orientals in our immigration policy.

Dear Mr. High Commissioner:

This letter is to confirm the information which I gave to you on the telephone yesterday.

The Canadian Government has decided that it would not be advisable to alter the terms of the Immigration Act and Regulations insofar as these apply to the admission of persons of Asiatic race. (The term "Asiatic", as you know, is used in the Immigration Regulations with a geographical rather than a racial significance.)

The Government has also decided, however, that sympathetic consideration will be given to applications for the admission to Canada of persons from India who fall within the following categories:

- (a) Young men seeking to enter Canada for the immediate purpose of marrying girls of Indian racial origin legally resident in this country; and,
- (b) Relatives of persons of Indian racial origin legally resident in Canada when the said Canadian residents have reached an advanced age and require assistance not otherwise available in the management of their properties in this country.

While I realise that these decisions of the Government do not entirely meet the wishes that you have expressed in connection with the admission of Indian nationals to Canada, I trust that the modifications in present practice which are indicated above will meet with your approval.

Yours very truly,
H.L. KEENLEYSIDE

Dear Dr. Keenleyside:

I am sorry that on account of my absence from Ottawa your kind letter of June 25th has not been replied to earlier.

I have noted the information contained in your letter and, while I realize that the decision of the Canadian Government to give sympathetic consideration to applications for the admission to Canada of persons from India falling within the two categories mentioned will give a certain amount of relief to those of our people who are resident in Canada, I would of course have felt very much happier if our people could have been put on the same basis for this purpose as Canadian citizens originating from other countries. When I was in British Columbia last month I had the opportunity of discussing these questions very fully with many of our people there and I found them all most appreciative of what had been done for them recently in the matter of facilities for the admission of their wives and minor children to Canada. At the same time, there was a strong feeling that, since they were Canadian citizens, they should enjoy the same rights and privileges as Canadian citizens originating from other countries, particularly as they are, of course, prepared in every way to shoulder the same responsibilities and to play their full part in the development and welfare of their country of adoption. I expect that in due course my Government will be taking up officially with the Canadian Government the whole question of the future admission of people from India to Canada, but I only felt it right at present to let you know how much our people appreciate what has already been done for them and at the same time what their hopes and aspirations are with regard to the few points about which they feel that there is still some deficiency.

Yours sincerely,

SECRET

Ottawa, August 12, 1948

Dear Mr. Kearney,

We were interested to receive your despatch No. 168 of May 27th† in which, in the interest of India's continued membership in the Commonwealth, you made a vigorous plea in favour of a modification in our immigration policy to permit the entry for permanent residence of a small annual quota of Indian citizens. We appreciate your initiative in putting forth this suggestion and have given it careful consideration.

There are a number of major difficulties which would appear to prevent action being taken in the near future along the lines which you propose. Unlike the United States, we have never followed a practice of immigration quotas for various countries. The one exception to this was the so-called "gentlemen's agreement" with Japan which operated, with some modifications, from 1908 to Pearl Harbour.

The greatest difficulty, however, is that it would not seem possible to accord special treatment to a small group of immigrants from India without granting similar treatment to immigrants from other Asian countries. It would seem that we would have to put the other dominions of Pakistan and Ceylon on a similar basis. Furthermore, I do not think that in the matter of immigration from Asia we can distinguish in any important respect between persons who are and persons who are not British subjects. The Chinese, for example, and possibly the Burmese, could be expected to request that any concessions that we might accord to Indians should also be extended in some similar fashion to themselves. Thus it will be seen that your proposal has some wide implications and I do not think we can give serious consideration to altering our immigration laws and regulations regarding Indians without reviewing our fundamental policy on the entry of persons of all Asiatic races.

Finally, it may be questioned whether public opinion on the Pacific Coast would be prepared to go very far at the present time in removing the existing barriers against immigration from Eastern countries.

I do not think that we told you about a proposal which Dr. Pandia advanced with some persistence prior to his departure for England early in June, and this would seem to be a suitable occasion for doing so. He put up a scheme, for the admission of first degree relatives, to Dr. Keenleyside, the Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources, and Mr. Jolliffe, the Director of Immigration, as well as informally and by conversation only, to several officers of this department. Copies of his letters to Dr. Keenleyside of February 28th† and March 16th,† which give only a general outline of his scheme, are attached. More specifically, he has explained that he hoped that our Immigration Regulations would be amended so that the Sikhs resident in Canada would be permitted to bring to this country not only their wives and children under the age of 18, as provided in P.C. 2115 but also relatives coming within the definitions in paragraph 3, 4(b) and 5 of P.C. 4849, which is the Order-in-Council governing the general nature of our immigration policy. If you will examine it, you will see that his suggestion would include quite a wide range of relatives. He even went further and suggested rather vaguely that it would be desirable to permit some of the older Sikh men in British Columbia to adopt sons in India and bring them to this country to carry on their business enterprises.

He indicated that he thought the number involved in his suggestion would be quite small but that the change would be of great value as it would, in his opinion, remove the last disability of or discrimination against, the Indian community in Canada. He thought that action along the lines suggested might serve as an inducement to India to remain within the Commonwealth.

Before his departure for London en route to India, Dr. Pandia left the impression with officers of this Department that he had persuaded our immigration authorities of the merits of his plan and that he expected his suggestion to be carried out. However, Mr. Jolliffe has recommended against it in his memorandum to the Cabinet Committee on Immigration Policy, IMP Document No. 25 of which copy is attached. His principal objection was that, while Pandia's proposal might involve the entry of only a small number of Indians to Canada, this would by implication lead to a similar demand on behalf of the Chinese community here. In the latter case, the number of relatives who could be expected to come forward would be quite considerable.

Dr. Keenleyside wrote to Sardar Malik on June 25th and indicated that sympathetic consideration would be given to the entry from India of young men for the immediate purpose of marrying girls of Indian racial origin, and of the relatives of persons of Indian racial origin to assume the management of their properties in this country. A copy of this letter is attached. Mr. Malik had apparently taken up the matter where Dr. Pandia left it at the beginning of June. You will note that the decision communicated in Dr. Keenleyside's letter was in line with the suggestion of Mr. Jolliffe made in the final paragraph of his memorandum that in certain cases where definite hardship was established, individual Orders-in-Council might be made waiving the provisions of P.C. 2115.

Mr. Malik acknowledged receipt of Dr. Keenleyside's letter in a reply of July 2nd which is also attached.

The concession which has been made should go some distance to satisfy the representations made both by Dr. Pandia and the Indian High Commissioner, but, as indicated in the latter's reply, the matter will probably not be allowed to rest where it stands at present and we may be hearing in due course from the Indian Government on the whole question of the future admission of persons from India to Canada.

We would appreciate it, therefore, if you would continue to give us the benefit of your views and observations. We will endeavour at this end to keep you informed of any developments and I hope this will be done with less delay than in the present instance.

Yours sincerely,
L.B. PEARSON

SECRET

[New Delhi, October 26, 1948]

Dear Sir:

I wish to acknowledge receipt of Mr. Pearson's kind and interesting letter of August 12th, together with the enclosures therein referred to.† I rather think that my secret Despatch No. 168 of May 27th, though I qualified it by saying that it should not be regarded as my considered opinion, was looked upon as being more vigorous than was my intention. My hasty draftmanship, no doubt, lent itself to this interpretation, but I was anxious speedily to put some observations on record in view of the then impending Prime Minister's Conference and the seemingly wavering attitude of the Indian Government with respect to membership in the Commonwealth. Thus, full advantage of a quick decision might be obtained, provided the Canadian Government was disposed to modify our immigration regulations insofar as Indian citizens were concerned, and provided the matter was susceptible of a quick decision. In accordance with the invitation contained in the concluding paragraph of Mr. Pearson's letter, I make the following observations which you might care to take into account if and when the question of immigration from Eastern countries again arises.

2. I do not know whether at the Prime Ministers' Conference just concluded, Mr. Nehru raised the question of Indian immigration within the Commonwealth, and I would be glad to know what, if anything, was said on the subject. In any case, I think the attitude of at least the Indian Department of External Affairs and Commonwealth Relations is one which recognizes that on the grounds of non-assimilability alone, restrictions on Indian immigration are to be expected. The Indian Government does not seem much concerned about the number of Indian immigrants who may be admitted to Canada, and if a way could be devised which would not increase the number of Indians entering Canada, but which would be a balm to Indian pride and sensibility, it would be wise, I think, to take advantage of the present frame of mind of the Indian Government. Appeasement apart, I think the pages of modern history are filled with instances of how catastrophes could have been avoided if small concessions had been made quickly instead of allowing demands to grow until they could not be met.

3. The rapid increase in the Indian population is a subject of growing importance in this country. In my recent travels through India, I noticed with what envy the large uninhabited spaces of Canada and Australia are being regarded, and if public opinion on the subject continues to grow, I fear that immigration will, at least in the eyes of the over-populated countries, cease to be considered a domestic matter, and one which is to be left for decision unilaterally by each country concerned. So far, Indians seem content to accept restrictive immigration regulations which do not hurt their feelings, but so long as the hurt remains, I feel over-populated countries will be encouraged to regard it as an injustice if their people are not allowed to fill up the vacant spaces in under-populated countries. In other words, I believe insofar as Indian immigration matters are concerned, we are dealing with a case of "Dear Brutus". Compared to fellow Commonwealth countries, however, such as South Africa and Australia, Canada in Indian eyes is regarded almost as a paragon of virtue, especially since the granting to Indians of the federal and provincial franchise, and the concessions which have been made to the 1500 Canadian Sikhs to enable them to bring to Canada some of their relatives. If a reciprocal agreement were made a feature of our Immigration policy it would be held up, I believe, by the government of India, as an example of Canadian fairmindedness and good neighbourliness, and a model to be followed by other members of the commonwealth.

4. If the obstacles are not too formidable I think we have an opportunity if not a duty to take the lead, because the Indian population of our country, numerically at least, is not a major problem. In Mr. Pearson's letter he mentioned the repercussions insofar as other Asian countries are concerned, which might ensue if the suggestions contained in my letter under reference were put into effect. These objections are both numerous and formidable. However, the following quotation from Mr. Pearson's letter rather surprised me:

"Furthermore, I do not think that in the matter of immigration from Asia we can distinguish in any important respect, between persons who are and persons who are not British subjects."

5. I would rather be disposed to take the view that if being a British subject or a Commonwealth citizen has any advantages, then they should be looked for in the field of preferential treatment insofar as immigration is concerned. I would be inclined to say that instead of fearing criticism from Asians or others who are not members of the Commonwealth, we should boast of the fact that membership in the Commonwealth confers favourable immigration treatment which is not granted to those outside it.

6. The foregoing, of course, rests on the important presumption that India remains in the Commonwealth, but even assuming that the yardstick of say one hundred Indians per annum based on a population of three hundred million, were invoked by other Asian nations, whether members of the Commonwealth or not, as a justification for seeking entry into Canada, then their numbers if admitted would be more or less inconsequential due to the precedent established with respect to India. I admit that this argument is much like that of the girl who said even if her child was illegitimate, it was only a small baby. Japan, of course, as an ex-enemy country and because of the trouble which arose in respect of Canadians of Japanese origin during the war, would no doubt have to be looked upon as a case apart. China, I grant, in a comparative sense, with its large population, would stand to benefit which might not be inappropriate.

7. With the possible unwillingness of British Columbia to admit more Asians even if the flow were but a trickle, I have every sympathy, and even the Indian Government should not be surprised by it. Judging by myself, I fear that those of us who come from other provinces fail to realize that practically all Asian immigration to Canada finds its resting place on the West coast. Since under the British North America Act, immigration is not solely a federal matter but one in which the provinces have a say, it seems to me that if provinces other than British Columbia had no objections to receiving a small number of Asians, perhaps Asian immigrants could be legitimately restricted to those provinces. Administratively such a solution might present theoretical difficulties but from the practical point of view, I doubt if they would arise. I think that the main reason nearly all Asians choose British Columbia is because climatically the other eight provinces have no appeal for them. Machiavellian as the thought may appear, I think you would find that very few Indians would go to Canada if the West coast were not open to them.

8. I was interested in reading the memorandum prepared for the Cabinet Committee on Immigration which contained Dr. Pandia's suggestions. One of the facts which Dr. Pandia mentions is:

"Canadian born males choose their women in India, with the result that Canadian born females must remain spinsters."

9. It would be hard, I think, to find a clearer admission of the non-assimilability of Indians in Canada, and a justification for the Canadian Government in permitting very few of them to enter our country. What I am about to say is perhaps looking too far into the future, but I believe that Indians going to Canada under the scheme which I propose would be no more numerous, and would be more likely and might very well, in fact, assimilate with the indigenous population, while the chances of the Sikhs who are going out under the existing scheme, of ever assimilating are, to my mind, practically nil. (Sir Girja Bajpai once pointed out to me that if a small number of immigrants were permitted to enter Canada they could be hand-picked from among the wealthier and educated classes.) If the better class Indians went to Canada I do not think it would be very long before one would find them marrying Canadian men and women. Speaking from my own experience, I am entirely unconscious of any colour complex when in conversation with cultured Indians.

10. Under the existing scheme whereby relatives of Sikhs are admitted, in point of numbers, we have given seventy-six emigrant visas since Jan. 1st, 1948, and from the types I have seen in our office I do not think these additional immigrants can ever be an advantage to Canada, and I regard them as a poor advertisement from India's point of view. Sooner or later, I believe that existing prejudices on grounds of race and colour will diminish and I think that the better types of Indian if given the opportunity would be the first to bring this about, and it might not be a bad thing if Canada had some hand in its accomplishment.

11. I could not help but notice during my trip in Southern India that both publicly and privately, Canada was complimented on the extent to which we have gone in meeting Indian views on our immigration policy. If the Indian Government is prepared to let the matter rest for the moment, probably the wisest thing for us to do would be to allow things to remain as they are until India's attitude to the Commonwealth is known. Frankly, I am a little jealous of the way the Government of the United States has handled the Indian immigration problem. It has succeeded in preventing large numbers going to the United States by a method which seems completely satisfactory and praiseworthy to India, and it is something which I think we might usefully keep in front of us.

I have, etc.

PERSONAL

For some time I have had in mind to suggest to my fellow Prime Ministers of the Commonwealth that we should hold a meeting in London next Autumn. It has seemed to me that the world situation is such that it is most important that we should meet together at this time to exchange ideas and thus to get to know how each of us is thinking on the grave problems which confront us. I have particularly in mind the relations between Russia and the rest of the world, the problems of Germany and Japan, the general world economic situation and the implications of Western Union and E.R.P. Though some of us have met during the past two years it has not been possible for all of us to be together at the same time and to have those frank talks on these world problems which are so valuable, indeed so essential, an element in our co-operation.

There are, however, at least three questions of the greatest importance to us all on which full consultation is essential and cannot wait until then. I feel sure that we ought to meet very soon for an exchange of views on developments in relation to Germany, the question of an early Peace Conference on Japan and the implications of Western Union. On these urgent questions the present situation is so complex that we cannot confer adequately by telegram.

I know how difficult it is for Prime Ministers who bear such heavy burdens to be away from their posts even for a short time. But the need for a meeting is now so great that despite the difficulties and the short notice I feel I must urge my colleagues to consider the possibility of our gathering together in London in the latter part of next month (June). I would not expect that this preliminary meeting need last more than a few days. We could discuss when we meet what further meetings could be arranged to deal with subjects which call for fuller consideration. In June our discussions would be concerned primarily with the most urgent problems mentioned in paragraph 2. On economic matters we could have a preliminary talk on how best we can arrange for the fullest consultation and collaboration between ourselves on the world economic situation and the development of Western Union and E.R.P.

At this meeting we should not be concerned to take formal decisions (for that is not our way) nor to discuss specific problems in detail (for this can better be done through the usual channels) but rather to review the world situation and exchange views on these questions of common interest in the light of the most recent information. Informal and personal discussion of this kind would not only be valuable to myself and my colleagues here but would provide me with the only fully satisfactory means of giving my fellow Prime Ministers an adequate picture of the situation as we here see it.

I should be grateful if I might have your views at the earliest possible moment. I very much hope that it will be found possible to adopt my suggestion. We here should of course expect our visitors to be our guests and would naturally be glad to see the official staffs whom Prime Ministers would wish to bring with them. I would suggest, however, that such staffs should be kept small.

We should greatly welcome it if it were possible for your Minister for External Affairs to accompany you in spite of the difficulty which we recognize of your both being away from Canada at the same time. We should hope in any case to see your Minister for External Affairs over here later in the year if, as we think, he may be going to Paris in September for the United Nations Assembly. But I would emphasize that for my part I attach the greatest importance to the meeting being at the Prime Minister level. The absence of even one Prime Minister would, I feel, weaken its value not only in relation to the matters to be discussed but in relation to its effect on world opinion.

Ottawa, May 25, 1948

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Following from Prime Minister for Mr. Norman Robertson, Begins: Clutterbuck brought me yesterday personal message from Mr. Attlee urging me to consider the possibility of attending a Prime Ministers' meeting in London in the latter part of June. Message states this would be a preliminary meeting and need not last more than a few days. Two or three urgent matters are mentioned for consideration. Reference is also made to preliminary talk on economic matters. Attlee says, Quote: I would emphasize that, for my part, I attach the greatest importance to the meeting being at the Prime Ministers' level. Unquote. I think I understand from your Message Number 675, significance of this statement.<sup>1</sup>

2. Since my personal and confidential message to you Number 691† was sent, and your reply Number 675† was received, situation here has become more difficult and, in some respects, critical. Budget is far from popular even with our own Party. Amendment now before the House declaring that government has lost confidence of public, will be supported by all members of parties opposite. There are, at present, three by-elections: Yale, 31st instant; Ontario and Vancouver, June 8th. All are uncertain. Tucker, member for Rosthern, has resigned to lead Liberals in provincial elections in Saskatchewan. With our majority over all so greatly reduced, and dissatisfaction among members what it is should we lose by-elections, we shall risk a defeat in the Commons in June. Ontario provincial elections come on June 7th, Saskatchewan, on June 24th, New Brunswick, June 28th, Quebec, probably same month. Results of these Provincial elections may have further unsettling effect on our following in House.

3. I have announced that if Federal House not through with its business by end of June, Parliament will be adjourned until September. Much important business remains to be concluded before then; also far reaching decisions have still to be made by Cabinet on such problems as railway rates, regional pacts, trade and the like. These and other matters vitally affecting position of Party in Parliament and country will make it, I fear, quite impossible for me to be absent between now and end of session.

4. The National Liberal Convention is fixed for first week of August. During early July, policies to be adopted at Convention will have to be carefully studied with colleagues. It is imperative I should also be available for conference with members of Parliament and delegations coming to Ottawa to discuss Convention matters including question of Party leadership.

5. Except with St. Laurent today, I have not discussed possible absence with colleagues in Cabinet. He and I agree that all will be deeply concerned if I even broach possible absence between now and end of session, and will protest vigorously against my going abroad until after Convention. I cannot see how parliamentary programme can possibly be concluded by end of June, if I am not here continuously from now till that date. If not concluded by end of June, Parliament will have to reassemble in September, and I shall have to be here till Session ends in the autumn.

6. Having in mind possible meeting of Prime Ministers in September or October, I took occasion, at the annual press dinner, a few nights ago, to announce that I did not intend to resign office of Prime Minister immediately after the Convention; that

Robertson's message† made it clear that the British hoped that Australia would be represented by Chifley, not Evatt.

I would continue to hold office for some little time thereafter, would probably pay a visit to different parts of Canada to thank people for the confidence they had given me over so many years, and was even considering a possible trip to Italy and Greece during Autumn months before asking His Excellency to accept my resignation as Prime Minister.

7. In conclusion, I doubt if, in my present state of fatigue, I could stand, in addition to all that has to be covered between now and the Convention and its three days sessions the further strain which would be involved in a Prime Ministers' meeting late in June, and without more than is now possible in the way of preparation, discussion of the important questions and issues raised by subjects mentioned in Mr. Attlee's memorandum to me. The doctors have counselled me very strongly against permitting further pressures of any kind. The condition of my health during the present session has made only too apparent the importance of following their advice. Ralston's<sup>2</sup> sudden passing at the age of sixty-six is only too clear an indication of the after effects of war strain where further strain is indefinitely prolonged. On no condition would I undertake to travel by air. To travel by sea, with time necessary in London to make conference worth while, would mean a month's absence from Canada. I wholly agree with last sentence of paragraph 12 your despatch Number 892, 13th of May.<sup>3</sup>

8. I have just returned from attending Ralston's funeral in Montreal and have called on Clutterbuck to give him views of St. Laurent and myself. Perhaps you would have a personal word with Attlee or Addison<sup>4</sup> at once and cable me their reaction before I take up matter with colleagues which would be a necessary further step before I could give a final word. I would naturally much prefer not to have colleagues' minds disturbed unless this should be absolutely necessary. Message Ends.

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Prime Minister from Robertson, Begins: The development of plans for a Prime Ministers' meeting has taken a bad twist in the last day or two. The Cabinet, under the leadership of the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary, decided yesterday — despite my representations, which were made through the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations — to push for a meeting in mid-July of those Prime Ministers of Commonwealth countries who would be able to come to London at that time, though they know that this would mean that Canada would not be represented at it, nor in all probability would South Africa. They hopefully talk about a July meeting as "preliminary" to a main meeting which would be arranged for October or perhaps even later in the year.

2. I lunched with Noel-Baker yesterday after the Cabinet meeting, which had come to the conclusion summarized in the preceding paragraph, and before a meeting of the Cabinet Advisory Committee on Commonwealth questions, which did not modify the decisions taken in the forenoon. I have just seen Noel-Baker again this morning, and am seeing Mr. Attlee at four o'clock this afternoon. Noel-Baker thinks that the principal reason why the Prime Minister is so wedded to the idea of a mid-summer meeting is that he thinks it the only opportunity of getting Nehru to London for private and separate discussions with the United Kingdom Ministers prior to the meeting of the Indian Constituent Assembly which is scheduled to take what may prove to be a final decision regarding the relationship of India to the Commonwealth of Nations. Bevin's chief argument for an early meeting is his belief that even a preliminary meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers at which Canada and South Africa were not present would be better than nothing, as a means of impressing the Soviet Union and perhaps in a different sense the countries of Western Europe. I think he is also anxious to have a talk with Chifley about Australian interest in the Japanese settlement. Cripps for his own reasons, I believe, isn't very keen on the idea of a meeting at all, whether in mid-summer or later in the year.

3. Machtig and Gordon-Walker<sup>5</sup> of the Commonwealth Relations Office completely share my misgivings about the plan which the Government presently seems intent on pursuing, and have advised as strongly as they can the abandonment of any further effort to get a meeting before September or October.

4. Pending my talk with Attlee, the Commonwealth Relations Office is holding up preparation of messages to the other Commonwealth Prime Ministers which they had been instructed to draft in conformity with the decisions in yesterday's Cabinet. I think that if I cannot do anything more, I should at least be able to make them see that they must get their position straight with Canada before sending out another circular communication to other Commonwealth Governments which would in fact present us with a fait accompli.

5. I shall telegraph again after I have seen the Prime Minister. Ends.

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Prime Minister from Robertson, Begins: Reference my telegram No. 771 of today's date.

I found the Prime Minister very keen on the plan for an early meeting. He is persistently hoping, despite what you had said to Clutterbuck and I had said to him, that it might somehow, in spite of everything, be possible for you to come. I again went over the points made in your messages, making it quite clear that you could not come in June or July and pointed out as best I could the disadvantages I saw in having a meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers at which Canada and South Africa would not be represented. He had on his desk a draft message to you, arguing afresh the desirability of an early meeting, stressing the acceptance already received, urging in particular the importance of Nehru's presence in London which he did not think could be brought about unless he were invited to a Prime Ministers' meeting, and hoping that if it was not possible for Canada to be represented, satisfactory arrangements could be made to explain to press and Parliament in both countries why circumstances had prevented this. I said, and he agreed, that there was not much point in his sending such a message. He hung on tenaciously, however, to the idea of a conference, and asked suddenly whether it might not perhaps be possible to have a meeting in Ottawa instead of London. He, for his part, would be ready to go, though he would of course have to explore this suggestion with his Cabinet. I said I thought it might be better if I first ascertained privately from you whether this counter-suggestion seemed feasible before he mentioned it to his colleagues. He agreed, and I undertook to send this enquiry at once.

2. In passing on the Prime Minister's enquiry, I think I should emphasize that it was a spur of the moment suggestion, and that he had not had an opportunity to examine the practical difficulties which would stand in its way even if the suggestion itself were, in principle, acceptable to the Government of Canada. I think it would be very difficult for Attlee, Bevin, Cripps, Noel-Baker, and probably Alexander,<sup>6</sup> who would make up the United Kingdom team at such a meeting, all to be absent from London together at a time like this. Secondly, if they were to have the contemplated side discussions with Chifley on economic and financial questions, and Nehru on Indian Constitution question, they would have to have a battery of technical advisers, whom they could hardly transport to Ottawa. A third objection is really that the initiative for this conference rests with United Kingdom, which would have to be responsible for most of the preparatory work and for initiating most policy discussions. This would make the role of the host Government somewhat anomalous. The foregoing are, I think, the kind of objections which would very quickly occur to the Ministers over here when they looked twice at the suggestion. There is also, of course, the question of whether other Commonwealth Prime Ministers would find it as easy and convenient to come to Ottawa instead of to London.

3. My first reaction, which may be wrong, is that if you welcomed the idea in principle, and on the assumption that it would be agreeable to all the other Commonwealth Prime Ministers, United Kingdom might find that from their own point of view it was not feasible and would also recognize a little more clearly than they do now that they should not think of having a Prime Ministers' meeting without Canada, and that we might get back to what was in fact the original idea of a meeting in October. Ends.

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Following for Robertson from Prime Minister,<sup>7</sup> Begins: I should be deeply sorry to disappoint Attlee or other United Kingdom Ministers in anything. I have done my utmost throughout the years I have been in office, in times of war and peace alike, to assist British Governments in meeting difficult and embarrassing situations, and in an endeavour to effect on all matters as large a measure of unity as possible between all parts of the Commonwealth. I hope a like measure of understanding and consideration may be accorded my present position by the Government of the United Kingdom.

2. The public of Canada are well aware of what my position is, and will be quick to appreciate what it involves so far as I and the Government are concerned. I announced in January my intention to retire from the leadership of the Party this year, and at that time issued a call for a National Convention to be held in the summer. The Convention was arranged almost immediately after for the first week of August. Some months ago, having in mind, amongst other things, what would be required of myself and colleagues in preparation for the Convention, I announced that if the present session were not concluded by the end of June, Parliament would be adjourned until September. The reasons which caused the Government not to have Parliament continue its sittings in July apply with even greater force to my not being able to attend a Conference over in London in that month. To ensure the work of the session being terminated by the end of June, leaders of different parties in the House have been conferring today as to the possibility of arranging shortly for morning as well as afternoon and evening sittings of the Commons.

3. You know something of the strain which the concluding weeks of the session will place on me. Quite apart from all else, to face an even greater strain (which is what a meeting of Premiers in Britain would involve), between the prorogation of Parliament and the meeting of the Convention is just more than I can contemplate, and more than I know the doctors whom I have consulted would countenance. If notwithstanding all I have represented through Clutterbuck and yourself, as to the impossibility of attending a Premiers' meeting in London in July, I am pressed to do so by an official communication, I shall be compelled to decline and to make these and other reasons known alike to Parliament and the press.

A subsequent message from Robertson (No. 784, June 2), indicated that he gave Attlee the exact text of this telegram.

4. Nevertheless if, because of my inability to go to London, the situation appeared to demand a meeting here in July, and this were concurred in by Premiers of the Commonwealth, I would of course seek to arrange matters accordingly, though personally I should greatly doubt the wisdom of attempting anything of the kind in preference to a meeting in London in the autumn. Having found it necessary to plan for prorogation of our Parliament at end of June because of imperative demands upon colleagues and myself that month, I doubt very much if it would be feasible to arrange for a meeting of Prime Ministers of the Commonwealth in Ottawa during July. I shall, however, be pleased to confer with my colleagues respecting this suggestion, should Mr. Attlee wish to have it considered. Message Ends.

[London], August 6, 1948

Mr. Attlee, who is having a short holiday, has asked me to get in touch with you and with other Commonwealth Prime Ministers with a view to fixing more closely the date for the proposed Prime Ministers' Meeting in London. In an earlier message Mr. Attlee suggested that the Meeting should be held in October. Past experience shows that it is always difficult to choose a date which is equally convenient to all concerned. But one of the subjects which we shall wish to discuss with Commonwealth Prime Ministers will be the long term programme which the United Kingdom, along with all other O.E.E.C. countries, will have to draw up between now and the 1st October. This must attain its final form by the middle of October by which time it will be under discussion in Paris. We feel, therefore, that we should aim at starting the Prime Ministers' Meeting by the 11th October and we should like now to suggest this as a firm date.

Mr. Attlee very much hopes that the 11th October will not be inconvenient for you and that you will be able to let me know that you can come to London for that date.

If the 11th October proves generally acceptable as a date, a further message will be sent a little later about the agenda for the discussions. We shall also be communicating with you at an early date about keeping Commonwealth Governments in touch with our arrangements for drawing up the long term program.

MEETING OF COMMONWEALTH PRIME MINISTERS

3. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that it was proposed that Mr. King should attend the meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers which was to be held in London early in October. For the present it was not intended that he (Mr. St. Laurent) would attend though it would be possible for him to go to London at short notice if in the event this were found to be necessary or advisable.

4. The Prime Minister explained that the meeting had originally been proposed for June or July. Discussions would have to do with matters of concern to the Commonwealth. The meetings would be for the purpose of exchanging views and no decisions would be reached without government and if necessary subsequent Parliamentary approval.

5. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted that the Prime Minister would attend the Commonwealth meeting in London and that if it were later found advisable or necessary arrangements might be made for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to join him in London.

PRIME MINISTER'S RETIREMENT; COMMONWEALTH MEETING, LONDON

12. The Prime Minister stated that he had had under consideration with Mr. St. Laurent the question of the precise time of tendering his resignation as Prime Minister.

The matter of his attendance at the meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers in October had been discussed at the meeting of August 11th. Mr. St. Laurent felt that it would be unfortunate were he obliged to be away from Canada for some weeks at a time when many important matters required consideration at home. A great number of these related to preparation of business for the next session. Mr. St. Laurent had, therefore, expressed the wish that Mr. King represent Canada in London and also head the Canadian delegation at the United Nations Assembly.

13. Mr. King added that, during his absence, Mr. St. Laurent would be Acting Prime Minister and consideration of all matters of policy and preparation of the session's programme would be under his immediate direction. If at any time during the course of the London meetings Mr. St. Laurent's presence appeared desirable he would endeavour to join Mr. King there.

It was Mr. King's intention to seek retirement from office as soon after his return from London as might serve to meet his successor's convenience.

A draft statement to the above effect, prepared by Mr. King and Mr. St. Laurent, was submitted and read.

(Press release, Office of the Prime Minister, Aug. 25, 1948.)†

14. The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that the course described by the Prime Minister was the most appropriate and that the draft statement should therefore be made public forthwith.

PRIME MINISTERS' MEETING

I have now had replies from all Prime Ministers to the personal message sent on my behalf by the Acting Prime Minister on the 6th August. I am glad to say that most Prime Ministers hope to be able to be present. Mr. Chifley, who was so recently with us, is unable, however, to make a second visit to this country so soon and Australia will therefore be represented by Dr. Evatt. Dr. Malan has been giving the most careful consideration to the meeting in the hope that his attendance will be found possible but he now fears that pressure of domestic and Parliamentary affairs is so great that he could not absent himself from South Africa without considerable embarrassment. I hope, however, that if he is unable to be present himself South Africa will be represented by a Minister. For your personal information there has been informal contact with the Eire Government, but the Prime Minister is not yet able to say whether or not they will be represented at the meeting.

2. It is clear from the replies I have had that 11th October would be generally convenient as the opening date and I now propose that we adopt this as a firm date. I greatly hope that we shall be able to conclude our discussions within a fortnight.

3. I hope to telegraph separately in the immediate future a provisional list of subjects which we might talk over at our meeting.

4. The United Kingdom Government hope that you and your advisers will be their guests during the period of the meeting. Our accommodation problem is as always acute. It will be a great help if we could be given as soon as possible an indication, however provisional, of the maximum staffs for which arrangements should be made.

5. I think it will be well now to make an official announcement and, if you and the other Commonwealth Prime Ministers agree, this might be in the terms of the attached draft. Once I have had all the replies I will suggest a date for simultaneous announcement.

6. I hope that my draft announcement makes clear, as you kindly suggested to Brook, the nature and purpose of our meeting and also that there is no question of formal decisions being reached for ratification. I am also bearing in mind your wish to reduce the number of plenaries and to keep public engagements to a minimum.

[London, September 3, 1948]

The Prime Minister announced in the House of Commons on the 28th June that it was hoped to hold a meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers to discuss broad general questions of common interest in October. Arrangements have now been made for a meeting to take place in London on the 11th October.

2. It is hoped that most Commonwealth Prime Ministers will be able to be present. Mr. Chifley, who visited this country so recently as July, will, however, be unable to leave Australia again after so short an interval and Australia will therefore be represented by Dr. Evatt. Dr. Malan, owing to pressure of domestic matters and Parliamentary business in South Africa, will also be unable to be present and South Africa will be represented by _____.

3. As is customary on these occasions the meeting will be a private one at which there will be confidential discussions and exchanges of view on matters of common concern between Commonwealth Prime Ministers. It is not the practice on these occasions to take formal decisions for subsequent Parliamentary approval.

AGENDA FOR PRIME MINISTERS' MEETINGS

I have been considering subjects which we might talk over at our meeting and now suggest the following provisional list:

- (i) International Relations with particular reference to the Soviet Union.
- (ii) The future of Germany.
- (iii) Japanese problems and the future of the Pacific.
- (iv) Commonwealth interest in collaboration with Western Europe.
- (v) General economic situation and the European Recovery Programme.
- (vi) The development of economic resources of the Commonwealth.
- (vii) Defence questions.
- (viii) Machinery for consultation between Commonwealth Governments.

If there are any items which you wish added I would be grateful if you would let me know as early as possible.

2. I need not say that, apart from the matters on the list, I greatly hope that we shall be able to take the opportunity to have less formal gatherings and informal discussions between individuals, and it may well be also that there will prove to be advantage in keeping the number of plenary meetings down.

4. I am telegraphing in similar terms to the other Commonwealth Prime Ministers.

Following for Pearson from Robertson, Begins: I had a brief glimpse this afternoon at the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff paper on aspects of Commonwealth defence which is being prepared for consideration at the Prime Ministers' meetings. I understand that the Australian and New Zealand Governments had asked for a preliminary statement of the United Kingdom views on Commonwealth defence which could be examined by their Governments prior to the departure of their representatives for the London meetings. The present draft, which might provide a reasonable working paper for discussions between the United Kingdom on the one hand and Australia, New Zealand, and perhaps South Africa, on the other, would, I think, be pretty objectionable if put up as purporting to apply to defence discussions between Canada and other parts of the Commonwealth.

2. I had no opportunity of going through it carefully, and in the circumstances in which I saw it no locus standi for commenting on it officially. I did suggest, however, that if the United Kingdom Cabinet, which is to examine the paper later this afternoon, concluded that it reflected their views of the ways in which they could best organize defence cooperation with other Commonwealth countries, and that it was the kind of document the Australian Government was hoping to receive from them, then I saw no objection to their sending it to Australia and other countries in a similar position as a working paper which they could discuss between themselves during the Prime Ministers' meetings, and that they might send us a copy with the rider that discussion of defence arrangements with Canada arising out of the North Atlantic Pact talks, etc., obviously made the pattern of approach proposed in the Chiefs of Staff paper inappropriate for the consideration of defence questions of special concern to Canada and the United Kingdom. Whether the Commonwealth Relations Office will succeed in getting the Chiefs of Staff paper altered into a form which they could hope would be acceptable to us, or whether they will press for the alternative course which I suggested, I do not know. I shall try to keep you informed of developments. Ends.

[Ottawa], September 21, 1948

DISCUSSION ON PRIME MINISTERS' CONFERENCE TO BE HELD IN LONDON
ON OCTOBER 11, 1948

The following are informal notes made after a meeting in Mr. Pearson's office at 10:00 a.m., September 14, attended by Messrs. Wrong, Robertson, Heeney, Reid, MacKay and [A.J.] Pick, at which some of the points which are likely to come under discussion at the meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers in London were considered.

(1) Constitutional Changes

There was considerable speculation as to whether constitutional questions might not be raised during the forthcoming meetings, even though they were not included in the list of subjects suggested by Mr. Attlee for discussion. It was noted that, following discussions with Sir Norman Brook, it was generally felt, both at official and political levels, that discussion of constitutional issues at plenary sessions of the Conference should be avoided in view of the delicate questions which might be raised. This seemed to be the view of the United Kingdom authorities as well.

The visit of the Prime Minister of Ireland, however, appeared to have altered the situation somewhat. When in Ottawa, Mr. Costello made it quite clear that Ireland intends to go the whole way in removing the existing link with the Crown. The External Relations Act would not only be repealed, but henceforth Irish diplomatic representatives abroad would be accredited by the President or some other person in the Irish Government. He indicated that Ireland would be prepared to remain in some kind of association, which he left undefined, with the other members of the Commonwealth, but only in a half-hearted way and only if the others were determined to retain some form of association. As for Ireland itself, he intimated it would be quite prepared to go the whole length of dissolving any type of association.

The position taken, or to be taken, might raise the whole issue of the nature of the Commonwealth. Again, certain Prime Ministers might feel called on to help solve the issue by a new formula as a substitute for the Balfour formula of 1926. It was generally felt, however, that such a course might be dangerous and should be avoided if possible. On the other hand, it was felt desirable to give some thought to the problem should it be precipitated in the meetings of Prime Ministers.

There is a distinct possibility that the problem will come up for discussion in the meetings of Prime Ministers since, though Ireland will not be represented, Mr. Nehru will be at the meetings and it is probable that he will raise, either formally or informally, the issue of India's future relations with the Commonwealth. He may be thinking in terms of India remaining a member of the Commonwealth on the existing Irish basis, i.e. an External Relations Act under which the Crown would continue to be used as an instrument in external relations. Alternatively, he might suggest that India be associated in some looser way with the Commonwealth. The members of the Commonwealth have continued to regard Ireland as a member of the Commonwealth so that they could not object to India remaining a member on the same basis as the present Irish basis. Some doubts were expressed, however, about the value of agreeing to some vague formula under which India would remain "associated" with the Commonwealth. The general feeling, nevertheless, was that it is important at the present time to maintain some link however tenuous between India and the Commonwealth in the hope that this may make it more likely that India will remain attached "to the Western World", or at least, not drift into the Soviet camp.

It was thought that there was less desire in Pakistan to weaken or alter the Commonwealth link. Consideration was given to whether it would be possible or desirable to have Pakistan stay in the Commonwealth if India went out, or whether we would have to take the attitude that either both should remain in the Commonwealth or both should go out together. It was mentioned that the strategic importance of Pakistan to the Western world was even greater than that of India because of her geographical location.

A possible clash at the meeting between India and Pakistan on the one hand, and South Africa on the other, regarding the treatment of the Indian community in South Africa, which includes Pakistani Moslems, was raised. We might be forced to indicate our attitude to this, though no suggestion was made as to what this might be.

The uneasiness of Ceylon as a member of the Commonwealth, because of the Soviet veto of her application for membership in the United Nations, was referred to, but not discussed.

(2) Subsidiary Constitutional Issues

After the general discussion on the possible changes in the basic structure of the Commonwealth, there followed at different times during the meeting, brief discussions on the following points:

(a) Status and Designation of High Commissioners

There was some criticism of the limited approach made in Mr. Attlee's telegram of August 4, which proposed a change in the precedence of High Commissioners in London but no change in their titles. There was a feeling of uncertainty as to the importance and urgency of this matter in the different capitals of the Commonwealth. It was thought that the issue might become a practical matter by action in the near future by Ireland and possibly India, in changing the designation of their representatives to other Commonwealth countries, and giving them a new formal kind of accreditation similar to that of ambassadors.

(b) The King's Style and Titles

There was an inconclusive mention of the suggested change in the King's title which Sir Norman Brook brought with him from London.

(c) Title of the Governor-General

Mr. Pearson stressed the importance of early action to change the title of the King's representative in Canada, particularly because of the misunderstanding of the term "Governor-General" in the United States. The titles, "Viceroy" or "Regent", were thought to be suitable alternatives. It was felt that this matter need not be discussed at the general meeting in London and that it might be taken up directly by Canada herself with Buckingham Palace.

(d) Canadian Privy Councillors

At the conclusion of the meeting, Mr. Pearson mentioned the need for giving members of the Canadian Privy Council the style "Right Honourable" rather than simply "Honourable". This change of appellation was, however, essentially a domestic issue for Canada to determine, and would not come up at the London meeting.

(3) Economic Questions

Regarding the discussion which could be anticipated on the European Recovery Programme, Mr. Robertson pointed out that the members of the sterling area had special interests inter se which were not shared by Canada. As far as Canada was concerned, the visit of Sir Stafford Cripps to Ottawa before the London meeting would be much more important. Cripps would no doubt be taking part on his return to England in this aspect of the Prime Ministers' meeting.

(4) Strategic and Defence Questions

It was expected that the United Kingdom would wish to consult with the Dominions on the question of her closer political and military relations with the countries of Western Europe. At the moment, the United Kingdom authorities seem to be holding back in the development of the project for Western Union in order to determine the attitude of the Dominions. After the London meeting, the United Kingdom might wish to indicate publicly in some form the position which the Dominions would take on her membership in the Western Union scheme.

It was thought that enquiries might be made at the London meeting, particularly by Dr. Evatt and possibly by others, regarding the discussions which have taken place and will continue to take place in Washington on the project for a North Atlantic Regional Pact. Evatt might even wish to participate in such discussions. While there had been certain "leaks" in London and Washington recently, stress was laid on the secrecy and the security aspects of these talks.

(5) Arrangements

It was hoped that Mr. Robertson would be able to be present at most, if not all, of the discussions at which Mr. King might participate in London. In view of the informal nature of the meeting, and of the fact that there was no clearly defined agenda and that careful records and minutes would not be made, it was thought that it would be difficult to keep Ottawa fully informed about the discussions. It was also thought that there would not be time and opportunity to consult with Ottawa and obtain instructions on many matters which would come up spontaneously in the discussions. Nevertheless an effort would be made to keep the Acting Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs fully advised of the progress of the talks.

While in Paris, Mr. Robertson would devote much of his time to preparing for the London meetings by consulting with Nehru, Evatt, Eric Louw, and others who would be present later in London. We now lack information regarding subjects which the other Commonwealth representatives would like to raise in London and their attitude to delicate and controversial issues.

It was proposed that while in Paris, Mr. Robertson might suggest to the Prime Minister that he should request Mr. Heeney to be on hand for the London talks.

Mr. MacKay said that some of the papers prepared for the Prime Minister on some subjects might have to be amended in the light of the discussions at this meeting.

COMMONWEALTH PRIME MINISTERS' MEETING

In the message which I sent to the Prime Minister on the 4th September I suggested that one of the items on the agenda for our meeting should be defence questions. In order to focus these problems as we see them my colleagues and I have prepared a paper which we should like other Commonwealth representatives to study before we meet. This paper which is of a general character seeks to analyze the present international situation and, on this analysis, to indicate the problems in the sphere of defence which seem to us to arise. It is highly secret, but you are of course at liberty to show it to those colleagues and advisers that you think necessary. I hope, however, that you will keep it to as restricted a circle as possible.

I am therefore arranging for a copy of the paper to be sent out at once by air bag to our High Commissioner who will be instructed to hand it to you as soon as he receives it.

I shall of course hand a copy also to Mr. Mackenzie King.

TOP SECRET

Following personal for the Prime Minister from Mr. St. Laurent, Begins: My immediately following message contains the text of a Memorandum on Defence Co-operation within the Commonwealth prepared by the Chiefs of Staff and External Affairs and approved by Mr. Claxton and Mr. Pearson.

2. This Memorandum is the result of careful examination and consideration by our Military and Civil advisers of the proposals contained in the United Kingdom Memorandum of September 23rd on "The World Situation and its Defence Aspects" and the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff Memorandum on "Commonwealth Defence Co-operation" attached thereto as an Appendix. Copies of these documents had been sent to you in Paris and to me here for consideration prior to the London Meeting of Prime Ministers.

3. The Memorandum by our advisers deals with certain especially secret aspects of our joint planning with the United Kingdom and the United States. For this reason reference thereto cannot be made in any general Commonwealth meeting. We thought, however, that it would be of assistance to you in any private discussions you may have on the subject with Mr. Attlee or United Kingdom Ministers.

4. A second paper has been prepared here which would in our view be suitable as a basis for any remarks which you may wish to make when defence questions are discussed at full sessions of Commonwealth representatives. This is attached as an Appendix to the Memorandum referred to in the preceding paragraphs and the text is contained in a third message going forward to you separately today.

5. We trust that these papers will be of assistance to you in the London discussions as representing the views which we hold upon Canadian defence arrangements. If there is any point upon which you wish to have further information please let me know. Ends.

TELEGRAM 1609

TOP SECRET

Following personal for the Prime Minister from Mr. St. Laurent, Begins: The following is the text of our Memorandum on Defence Co-operation within the Commonwealth referred to in paragraphs 1, 2 and 3, in my immediately preceding message.

DEFENCE CO-OPERATION WITHIN THE COMMONWEALTH; RECENT DEVELOPMENTS; U.K.-U.S.-CANADA EMERGENCY PLAN

At approximately the same time as political discussions leading towards an Atlantic Security Pact were taking place in Washington, the Joint Planners of the United Kingdom, the United States and Canadian Services met to draw up an Emergency Military Plan to provide for joint military action by the three countries should war occur in the period ending July 1st, 1949. This Emergency Plan was intended to be an effective Plan for joint action, based on the resources (forces and equipment) immediately available and those capable of being provided by the three countries within one year of the outbreak of war. It was to be formulated upon an agreed strategic appreciation.

2. It was the joint conclusion of the Service authorities of the three countries that resistance to a Russian offensive in Europe during the period covered could not successfully continue for long. For this reason the Plan which resulted from the tripartite meetings referred to above has been guarded with the utmost care, for it would, of course, be fatal to current discussions with Western European countries if they knew of its existence and the assumptions upon which it was based.

3. In the preparation of this Emergency Plan, Canadian officers, with the authorization of their Governments, were full participants with an independent voice in the discussions with United Kingdom and United States officers.

Western Union Military Discussions

4. In July, 1948, the Canadian and United States Chiefs of Staff were invited to send representatives to attend discussions in London of the Military Committee of the Brussels Powers (Western Union). The instructions to the Canadian representative who has since attended these meetings were that he was to act as an Observer, take no part in discussions on major policy, and avoid making any commitments on behalf of Canada. The United States representative was given somewhat broader terms of reference, which inferred that, under certain conditions, the United States would be prepared to consider assisting Western European countries by providing military equipment and supplies. Nevertheless the United States and Canadian representatives have had equal status insofar as the Western Union Military Committee is concerned.

5. When consideration was being given to the formation of a Western Union Chiefs of Staff Committee, the Canadian representative learned that the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff were about to propose that the United States accredit a representative to this new organization; no provision, however, was to be made for the Canadian position, it being intended that the United Kingdom provide the link with the "machinery for Commonwealth Defence." This obvious misunderstanding of the Canadian relationship to the whole project was taken up by the Canadian representative and the Canadian High Commissioner with the Chairman of the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff Committee. As a result an undertaking was given that the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff proposals would be amended to provide for separate Canadian participation on the same basis as that of the United States. Subsequently the Canadian representative has attended meetings of both the Western Union Chiefs of Staff Committee and of the Western Union Defence Ministers on the same basis as the United States representative. The Defence Ministers have agreed that this arrangement (i.e., attendance at Chiefs of Staff Committee meetings) should continue.

United Kingdom Commonwealth Defence Proposals

6. Though this difficulty of our relations to Western Union has been resolved, it is another indication of a familiar line of thinking in Defence circles in the United Kingdom. The doctrine that the United Kingdom should be enabled to speak for the Commonwealth as a whole in defence negotiations with other countries (e.g., in the Combined Chiefs of Staff of Western Union and the Combined Chiefs of Staff — U.K. and U.S.) still persists in these quarters. It is based on the concept of an integrated Commonwealth Organization for Defence.

7. Hence it is not surprising to learn that the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff (as in 1946) are putting forward for consideration at the forthcoming Meeting of Prime Ministers in London further proposals for more closely knit Defence machinery within the Commonwealth. Copies of their Paper on the subject, which has been approved by the United Kingdom Defence Committee as a basis for discussion in London, have been communicated to the Prime Minister in Paris and to the Acting Prime Minister.

8. The United Kingdom proposals may be summed up as follows:

- (a) An agreed strategic concept by the countries of the Commonwealth and co-ordinated Commonwealth plans (these would be both overall and regional);
- (b) Balanced and immediately available armed forces;
- (c) Commonwealth defence plans co-ordinated with those of Western Union and the United States through the respective Combined Chiefs of Staff Organizations; and
- (d) Co-operation between all members of the Commonwealth in all aspects of defence.

9. The United Kingdom Paper proposes that discussions on general issues would be conducted by the present Service Liaison Staffs in Commonwealth capitals. Regional plans would be settled through the present methods of consultation, together with exchanges of visits between the different Planning Staffs. All of this planning would be carried on with close co-ordination at the political level and with prior authorization from political authorities. It would be understood that there would be no commitment without approval by each Government. Arrangements for Commonwealth liaison would obviously require further extension to make such a programme fully effective.

10. In essence, the present proposals of the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff differ very little from the proposals that they put forward at the Meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers in 1946. Again it is proposed that the Commonwealth defence machinery should be more closely knit and co-ordinated. Again it is implied that the United Kingdom would provide the link between the "Commonwealth Defence Organization" and the Western Union and the United States. There is, however, some recognition given this time to Canada's special position in defence planning vis-à-vis the United Kingdom and United States insofar as the North American continent and approaches thereto are concerned.

11. Having regard to the very secret Emergency Plan with the United States and Canada, referred to in paras. 1-3, it is recognized that the position of the United Kingdom in defence planning is very difficult because of the United Kingdom Government's special relationship to several different groups:

- (a) Other signatories to the Brussels Treaty;
- (b) Canada and the United States;
- (c) Other countries which may be involved in an Atlantic Security Pact, and

(d) Other countries of the Commonwealth.

The United Kingdom feel that they must find some way to relate their defence arrangements within the North Atlantic grouping to the activities of the Commonwealth as a whole. The United Kingdom Government is under pressure from Australia to bring about some kind of Central Commonwealth Organization in the defence field. They are also under some political pressure at home to the same end.

12. Canada has at no time in recent years favoured proposals for centralized arrangements for Commonwealth defence. Recent developments leading toward the conclusion of a North Atlantic Security Pact make such proposals even less realistic from the Canadian point of view. Canada is now taking her part in Atlantic Security discussions, and if a North Atlantic Pact is concluded, Canada will presumably be a full partner therein. Such an alliance would appear to serve Canada's interest most fully and directly. Certainly Canada's efforts and resources in defence will be fully required in meeting her obligations and commitments within such an Atlantic Group. Therefore it is most unlikely that Canada could, even if she wished, participate effectively in any Commonwealth defence arrangements of the type contemplated. Further, it would certainly be most unsatisfactory if any impression were to be given that the United Kingdom, because of such arrangements, could speak for the Commonwealth as a whole, including Canada. So far as any emergency is concerned, Canada is again participating as a full partner with the United Kingdom and United States.

13. There would, presumably, be no objection to the United Kingdom making such Regional Arrangements with other Commonwealth countries as might be considered desirable, and Canada would be interested in keeping in touch with such arrangements in which we are not a full partner. Such liaison could be effected by our Service Liaison Officers in the United Kingdom. Similarly, perhaps the other Commonwealth countries, such as Australia and New Zealand, could be apprised of North Atlantic developments by the United Kingdom through their Liaison Staffs.

14. In summary, the Canadian position is as follows:

(a) A joint U.K.-U.S.-Canadian Emergency Military Plan has already been prepared and arrangements have now been made for further discussions between the joint planners of the three countries to take place in Washington later this month;

(b) Canadian and U.S. Military Observers are now attending meetings of the Military Organs of Western Union, at which plans for Western European defence are being formulated;

(c) The next stage will presumably be to broaden Western Union military discussions and arrangements to those required under a North Atlantic Security Pact; and

(d) Canada's immediately available military contribution to international security forces would not be substantial; even if Canadian resources of men and materials were increased as rapidly as possible, they would be fully committed under a North Atlantic Security Pact.

15. Therefore, it would only be confusing and contribute nothing for Canada's military planners to enter into any discussion on the basis of a concept of Commonwealth defence; nor would it be desirable to extend the responsibilities of our Liaison son Officers in the United Kingdom in any way. The present arrangements for liaison serves Canada's purposes adequately and any change would be inadvisable.

16. It will be appreciated that much of the information contained in this Memorandum cannot be used at the Meeting of Prime Ministers, though any or all of it could be discussed quite freely with the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom. It is particularly important that no one other than those directly concerned in the United Kingdom and United States should know anything of the existence of the Emergency Plan concerted between those two countries and Canada. Any such disclosure would, of course, completely compromise the United Kingdom in her discussions and military arrangements within Western Union.

17. For the above reason, a separate Memorandum has been prepared (and is attached). This indicates the line which might be taken in any general Commonwealth meeting without any reference to emergency arrangements between the United Kingdom, the United States and Canada.

Note: Memorandum referred to in paragraph 17 above as being attached is contained in our immediately following telegram No. 1610. Ends. Message ends.

TELEGRAM 1610

Ottawa, October 6, 1948

TOP SECRET

Following personal for the Prime Minister from Mr. St. Laurent, Begins: The following is the text of the Appendix to the Memorandum referred to in my immediately preceding message — the second paper referred to in paragraph 4 of my message to you No. 1608, Begins:

APPENDIX TO CHIEFS OF STAFF COMMITTEE MEMORANDUM

Canadian authorities have examined with interest the U.K. Government's Memorandum on "The World Situation and its Defence Aspects." With the general conclusions set out in this appreciation we find ourselves in agreement. In particular, as has already been indicated by members of the Canadian Government on a number of occasions, we agree that, in the present grave circumstances, it is of paramount importance that all like-minded Governments should cooperate in building up collective security on a regional basis within the Charter of the United Nations.

2. It is noted that emphasis is laid on the U.K. Government's Memorandum on the necessity for prior political agreement between Governments to enable long-term and emergency military planning to be undertaken. It is also stated that such pre-requisite political agreement has already been reached by the U.K. Government with the Governments of the United States and of the countries of Western Europe.

In this connection, it should be noted that Canada is now participating in military discussions with representatives of the United Kingdom and the other signatories of the Brussels Treaty on the same basis as the United States. This is directly related to the preliminary political talks on North Atlantic Security which have taken place in Washington between representatives of the Brussels Treaty Powers, the United States and Canada.

3. We have also examined the proposals for "Commonwealth Defence Cooperation" contained in the Memorandum by the U.K. Chiefs of Staff attached as an Appendix to the Ministerial Paper.

4. As indicated in the U.K. Chiefs of Staff Paper, "where it is necessary to prepare plans involving the provision of forces for the undertaking of commitments, cooperation can only be on a regional basis." With this principle we are in full agreement. In fact, Canada has, during and since the last war, concerted plans with the United States for common defence measures. The United Kingdom has also been kept fully informed in respect of this planning. Furthermore, as pointed out previously, Canada is now represented, on the same basis as the United States, at military discussions being conducted by Western Union countries.

5. So far as Canada is concerned, therefore, defence planning on a regional basis is already accepted policy. At the same time, we recognize that other members of the Commonwealth may wish to concert their military planning in relation to other areas in which Canada has a less direct concern and toward the defence of which she cannot at the present time make an effective direct contribution.

6. The U.K. Government's Memorandum, however, goes farther than to propose planning on a regional basis. It suggests that, as a preliminary to regional planning, it is necessary to reach agreement among all the countries of the Commonwealth on the fundamental principles of a policy and strategy. To this end, the U.K. Chiefs of Staff propose that, if agreement can be reached on a closer measure of cooperation within the Commonwealth, certain initial joint studies might be undertaken by a "slight adjustment to the present Service Liaison Staffs."

7. It is our view that such studies conducted jointly by all countries of the Commonwealth are not a necessary pre-requisite to regional planning. Indeed they might well serve only to complicate if not confuse the natural and obvious lines of development. Our present plans, concerted with the United States, may develop into broader security arrangements under a North Atlantic Pact. But these plans will still be regional, will provide the most suitable basis for Canada's defence contribution, and will assuredly fully commit our military resources. We see no objection, however, and possible advantages in the United Kingdom joining with other Commonwealth countries and perhaps others outside the Commonwealth in similar regional developments.

8. We fully support the desirability of continued exchanges of views and value our continued close contact with other countries of the Commonwealth. The United Kingdom, of course, has been the focal point for these exchanges of information and will no doubt continue to be so. This function, however, can be carried on efficiently by our present Liaison Staffs and we see no necessity for any changes in this system, at least until such time as an Atlantic Security Pact is concluded. Ends.

Message ends.

TELEGRAM 1646

Ottawa, October 9, 1948

For Robertson from Reid.

1. Your telegram 1752 of October 8th† concerning Cripps' presentation of the United Kingdom's economic position. Pearson is visiting his constituency and will not return before October 15th. Abbott is also absent from Ottawa but is expected back on Tuesday October 12th.

2. Last Thursday we sent to Ritchie a draft copy of the minutes of the meetings held here and these contain reasonably full statements by both Abbott and St. Laurent. It was my thought that from these you might be able to brief the Prime Minister adequately for the London talks. However in consultation with Finance we will prepare a summary of Canada's view point as we understand it on the United Kingdom long term economic programme and will place it before Abbott for his comments immediately on his arrival in Ottawa. Because of the limited time the memorandum could not of course be as comprehensive as that on defence sent in our telegram No. 1610. But perhaps such detail will not be essential because I should think that discussion will be very general on a subject like the United Kingdom's Four Year Plan. Further it was agreed that many of the Canadian observations made during Cripps' visit should be matters for study by the continuing Joint Committee and it is unlikely that the Chancellor will expect from Mr. King anything additional to what was said here.

3. Insofar as the other Commonwealth representatives are concerned the Prime Minister may consider it desirable to refer to the magnitude of the Canadian contribution to European recovery which matches the record of any other country in the world and has resulted in a serious depletion of our own reserves. He could say that both the United Kingdom and the United States authorities, after examining our balance of payments forecast and being apprised of the general Canadian situation regard as reasonable our estimate of the financial assistance which we can give to the United Kingdom during the first six months of 1949.

4. Unless you feel that the United Kingdom Government will have any objection I see no reason why he should not mention:

(a) Our concern at the increasing U.K. purchases in sterling area countries of commodities of which Canada has been the traditional supplier.

(b) The numerous barter agreements negotiated which require the U.K. to provide materials which would find a ready dollar market in Canada.

(c) The adverse effect on our economy of the present U.K. policy of pre-emptive buying in the other countries of the Commonwealth.

(d) We recognize the necessity in the short run for replacing imports from dollar countries by purchases from soft currency countries but we observe in the U.K. plan a trend towards a closed trading area from which to some extent we will be excluded. We hope that the European countries within this area will realize what the Western Hemisphere did for them over a long period when they were not in a position to assist one another and that a determined effort will be made to return to a multilateral system of free and full trade at the earliest possible date.

(e) It is in the interests of both countries that the U.K. increase substantially its exports to Canada in the period 1948-52 and it is our understanding that the United Kingdom Government will employ its best endeavours in this connection.

5. Pending a statement from Mr. Abbott on the line which he thinks Mr. King might usefully adopt it would perhaps be helpful if I indicated to you some of the views which Mr. Abbott has expressed in Cabinet meetings during the past ten days and which received Cabinet approval.

6. He has consistently taken the stand that any further Canadian financial assistance would be contingent upon satisfactory understandings with the United States that off-shore purchasing in Canada by ECA would continue at the present rate both in volume and types of commodities.

7. His stand is that in giving financial aid Canada has always done and will continue to do what is reasonable and within its capacity and that any surplus in our dollar receipts would have to be used for three purposes:

(a) The restoration of Canadian dollar reserves to a satisfactory level.

(b) Modification of our fiscal policies and some relaxation in our Exchange Conservation Programme.

(c) Assistance to Western Europe.

8. He has stressed the importance of reaching agreement on a satisfactory schedule of Canadian exports to the United Kingdom for the calendar year 1949 and in particular an adjustment in the United Kingdom Programme to take care of surplus Canadian production of bacon and eggs. He has added that if such arrangements could be made with the United Kingdom and the necessary understandings reached with ECA a somewhat larger amount of credit than $60 millions could be released during the first six months of 1949 if the Government considered it necessary or advisable. He has mentioned a figure of $15 millions for specific agricultural products.

1. OPENING OF MEETING

Mr. Attlee extended, on behalf of the United Kingdom Government, a warm welcome to the representatives of the other Commonwealth countries. He hoped that their stay in London would be happy and fruitful. He offered a special welcome to the Prime Ministers of India, Pakistan and Ceylon whose countries were for the first time being represented at a meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers. All would share his very great regret that Mr. Mackenzie King would be prevented by indisposition from attending the meeting; and he suggested that a message should be sent to Mr. Mackenzie King in the following terms:

"We wish to extend our sincere sympathy to the Prime Minister of Canada in the unfortunate illness which is preventing him from joining us during this meeting. His counsel and advice will be very greatly missed from our deliberations. We all join in wishing him a speedy return to good health and take this opportunity of congratulating him on the great part which he has played in the affairs of the Commonwealth for so many years."

This proposal was unanimously approved.

Mr. Norman Robertson read the following message from Mr. Mackenzie King:

"I wish to express to Prime Minister Attlee, his colleagues, and the Prime Ministers and representatives of the other nations of the Commonwealth, my great regret at not being able to be present this morning at the opening meeting of the Conference to which I have been much looking forward for the past few months. I should like, however, through Mr. Robertson, to convey to all present my warmest of greetings. I send a special word of greeting to those whom I have met at previous conferences in London and in Canada, and wish particularly to extend a word of greeting to the representatives of India, Pakistan and Ceylon, who for the first time are seated around the table at No. 10 Downing Street.

"The first meeting of Prime Ministers and others which I attended was the Imperial Conference of 1923. Since that time I have been present at a number of other conferences and meetings. Each occasion has helped to widen and extend my appreciation not only of Commonwealth but of world affairs, and to confirm more strongly than ever my belief in the great value to be attached to co-operation between the different nations of the Commonwealth, and to the larger co-operation which our unity has made possible with the peoples of other nations. While I shall not be able to be present at the meetings, I am arranging for a member of the Canadian Cabinet to be present in a day or two. Meanwhile, Mr. Robertson, who has been associated with me in the work of government over many years, will, I feel confident, be able to represent my views accurately and adequately.

"I hope, though confined to my room and at present to bed, I shall in the course of the Conference be able to meet the representatives from the countries of the Commonwealth who are attending the present meetings."

ARRANGEMENTS DURING ACTING PRIME MINISTER'S ABSENCE

1. The Acting Prime Minister reported that, upon learning of the Prime Minister's illness, which would prevent his participation in the Commonwealth meetings commencing this week, it had been agreed, after consultation with other members of the government that he should leave immediately for London to take Mr. King's place.

U.K. authorities had been informed that, because of the pressure of affairs at home, it would not be possible for Mr. St. Laurent to remain in London for long; he would expect to be back in Ottawa by October 25th.

Meantime, with the concurrence of Mr. King, it was proposed that the Minister of Trade and Commerce assume the functions of Acting Prime Minister and that the Minister of National Defence be appointed Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs.

2. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted with approval the Acting Prime Minister's report and agreed that the appropriate Orders in Council be passed forthwith.

TELEGRAM 1780

London, October 12, 1948

SECRET. URGENT.

Reference Prime Ministers' meetings introductory discussion on economic matters.

The second meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers which was on the subject of economic affairs was held this afternoon.

2. Sir Stafford Cripps outlined very ably the contents of the U.K.'s four-year programme or forecast, of which you have already had copies and which the Chancellor discussed with you while in Ottawa. In his exposition this afternoon the Chancellor confined himself to a summary of this programme, supplementing it with the most recent information on the gold and dollar deficit of the sterling area, and with observations regarding the effect on Commonwealth countries of bilateral trade agreements entered into by the United Kingdom.

3. He noted with satisfaction that, as you will have seen from earlier telegrams regarding the Sterling Area Statistical Committee, the total gold and dollar deficit of the sterling area before taking into account receipts under the European Recovery Programme, amounted to only £76,000,000 in the third quarter of the present year as compared with £147,000,000 in the first quarter and £107,000,000 in the second quarter. Concerning E.R.P. assistance he reported that of the £183,000,000 allotted to the U.K. in loans and grants for the first six months of 1948, the U.K. had received during the second quarter £22,000,000 and during the third quarter £41,000,000 in reimbursement of dollar expenditure already incurred by the U.K. He noted that since in the third quarter £41,000,000 of the £76,000,000 deficit had been met by those receipts under E.R.P., £35,000,000 remained to be met by a temporary reduction in U.K. holdings of gold and dollars to £437,000,000. If allowance is made for amounts due under E.R.P. in respect of expenditures made by the U.K. the reserves can be regarded as in excess of £537,000,000, which is slightly more than the essential minimum.

4. Regarding the bilateral agreements and their effects on Commonwealth countries, Sir Stafford considered that such agreements as they had entered or were entering into, were unavoidable in the circumstances. They were attempting to keep the term of each agreement as short as possible and were desirous of avoiding rigid commitments regarding specific commodities. He defended the agreements as being in the interests of the sterling area, and of trade expansion generally in present circumstances, and expressed the view that these agreements had not deprived Commonwealth countries of supplies which they needed. (In this connection it might be noted parenthetically that according to one of the information papers circulated in advance of the Chancellor's talk, it was indicated that the U.K. expects to export to Western European countries in 1948/49, machinery, ships, tractors, vehicles and other capital equipment to a value of $585,000,000; 330,000 tons of steel; 10,000,000 tons of coal and coke; 15,000,000 tons or $425,000,000 of crude oil and petroleum products; and shipping services to a value of $200,000,000. Some of these transactions would be under separate bilateral agreements while others would be under the general understanding arrived at through the O.E.E.C. in Paris.)

5. Sir Stafford considered it to be apparent from the picture which he had presented that import controls would have to be continued on goods from the dollar area and that the production of goods, particularly raw materials and foodstuffs, within the sterling area would have to be expanded for the purpose of saving and earning dollars. He felt that the close relationship, or even interdependence, between the sterling area and the countries participating in E.R.P. was also apparent. For many countries, including those in the sterling area and those in E.R.P. as well as others with whom sterling payments arrangements existed, the importance of ensuring the strength and stability of sterling would be recognized. He reminded the meeting that the prosperity of the U.K. and of the sterling area was dependent upon the eventual achievement of expanded many-sided trade. In such bilateral agreements as they find necessary the U.K. would endeavour to emphasize the expansionist aspect (presumably that represented by increasing transferability of sterling) rather than the contractionist aspect (presumably that represented by rigid barter transactions.) He felt that all members of the Commonwealth would recognize the need, politically as well as economically, to build up Western Europe. Even with support from outside the maintenance of Western Europe on its present basis could not be guaranteed, but without such support the collapse of Western Europe could almost be taken for granted.

6. In his remarks Sir Stafford did not discuss the particular position of Canada in any detail since, as he noted at the beginning, he had only recently had a full discussion on this subject with Canadian Ministers. He did however stress the importance which the sterling area must attach to Canada both as a source of essential supplies, in the future as well as in the past, and as a link with the dollar area. In the course of his remarks he indicated that the U.K. would in practice give preferential treatment to Canada over other parts of the dollar area.

7. Following Sir Stafford's statement Mr. Attlee invited representatives of other Commonwealth countries to comment. Since it was known that the principal discussion on economic questions would take place on Wednesday the comments at this meeting were not extensive.

8. I indicated that I would prefer to reserve any comments from the Canadian point of view until the later meeting on this subject.

9. Dr. Evatt of Australia spoke of the effort which his country was making to conserve dollars and indicated that for the year 1948/49 the gross figure for import licenses to be granted in terms of dollars was £56,000,000 Australian (or £42,000,000 sterling). Representatives of all of the sterling area countries in the Commonwealth expressed their admiration for the achievements reported by the Chancellor and assured the U.K. of their desire to contribute to the strength of the sterling area, although as mentioned below, certain of the representatives indicated, that if they could not get from sterling sources the capital equipment which they needed they might have to resort to dollar sources. Mr. Louw of South Africa had some doubt as to whether his country was inside or outside the sterling area. He mentioned however that when the gold loan to the U.K. was under discussion his Party, which was then in Opposition in Parliament, had supported the measure. He mentioned that controls had not yet been imposed in South Africa on imports from dollar sources, and that the present Minister of Finance did not look with favour at this stage of the imposition of such controls, but that if the situation so required they would probably have to restrict such imports.

10. Several of the representatives spoke of the need to strengthen economic co-operation in the interest of avoiding conditions in their countries and abroad which might encourage "upsets" (to use Nehru's expression) or the spread of Communism (to use the expression more generally employed.)

11. From the few comments which were made at this meeting it would appear that among the questions which will arise in the later discussion the most prominent are likely to be:

(a) The Need for Under-developed Countries in the Commonwealth to Secure Capital Equipment

On this subject Mr. Louw of South Africa indicated that for the purpose of expanding gold production in the Orange Free State it was essential that South Africa should secure steel, hoisting machinery and other equipment. He hoped that such equipment could be supplied from the U.K. since otherwise they would have to import from the dollar area. Mr. Nehru, Mr. Liaqat Ali Khan of Pakistan, Mr. D.S. Senanayake of Ceylon and Sir Godfrey Huggins of Southern Rhodesia also emphasized in varying terms the need of their countries for assistance in agricultural and industrial development. Clearly it is going to be argued that if these "under-developed" countries are to maintain effective restrictions on dollar imports and if they are going to make their maximum contribution to the dollar earning capacity of the sterling area, more attention will have to be given by the U.K. to their needs for capital equipment from the U.K.

(b) The Effect of U.K. Bilateral Agreements on the availability of Supplies to Commonwealth Countries

Dr. Evatt and Mr. Fraser indicated that this was a subject which they would particularly wish to see examined during the talks.

(c) The Present Position and Future Prospects of the Project for a European Customs Union or Similar Arrangement

Mr. Fraser indicated that this was a subject of some concern to him. In this connection the U.K. has circulated an information paper regarding the Customs Union project which gives substantially the same information as that contained in my despatch No. 1864 of September 27th.† In addition, as you will have seen from my telegram No. 1767 of October 9th‡ it is expected that the question of Most Favoured Nation treatment for Japanese trade will also come up.

12. Another point which I understand may be raised by the Australians is the problem of enabling Western Europe to finance its deficit with the sterling area when the E.R.P. tapers off. In other meetings in London recently Dr. Evatt's principal adviser has raised this question and has suggested tentatively that it may be necessary for the sterling area to encourage deliberately an import surplus from countries (e.g. those in Eastern Europe) with which Western Europe might have, or be able to develop, an export surplus if the sterling area itself is not able to absorb Western European exports in sufficient volume.

13. In order that the discussion on Wednesday might proceed satisfactorily it was agreed that representatives of the various Commonwealth countries should indicate during tomorrow (Tuesday) the particular economic questions which they feel should be included. In view of the recent exhaustive discussions with the Chancellor in Ottawa, and in view of the fact that the Continuing U.K. – Canadian Committee has been established, I assume that it is not desirable to emphasize at these meetings questions referring particularly to relations between Canada and the U.K. Of the points mentioned above I understand the Canadian position to be briefly as follows:

(a) We should generally oppose the use of the dollar shortage as an excuse for diverting to sterling area countries capital equipment and other supplies which might yield greater immediate returns elsewhere and which, if installed in sterling area countries, would create a further vested interest in the continuation of a closed economy in the sterling area and related countries. Concerning the encouragement of economic development generally we should base our position on the provisions of Article XVIII of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade as modified in Geneva.

(b) We should welcome an examination of the bilateral agreements with a view to determining the extent to which supplies which are badly needed, or which could be disposed of at least equally advantageously, in Canada are being exchanged with other countries for commodities available from Canada.

(c) We should not oppose the formation of a European Customs Union if such a Union were to be regarded as economically and politically desirable. In the event of the establishment of such a Union or any similar arrangement, we should of course expect to negotiate with the participants regarding any of our rights which might be affected. If the Study Group on the Customs Union is absorbed into O.E.E.C. in Paris we assume that arrangements will be made to ensure the right of Canada to have an observer at the principal discussions.

(d) Regarding Most Favoured Nation treatment of Japanese trade I indicated in my telegram No. 1767 of December [sic] 9th my understanding that Canada was prepared to negotiate such treatment through the G.A.T.T. subject to certain assurances and safeguards. In explanation of any difference between the Canadian attitude and that of the sterling area members of the Commonwealth it might be noted that the sterling area countries have themselves virtually completed a general trade and payments agreement with S.C.A.P. whereby special treatment is accorded to trade between them and Japan in specified commodities until July, 1949.

(e) Regarding the possible discussion of the future Western European deficit with the sterling area, we should not be opposed to any solution which did not result in the sterling area giving preference to imports from those other sources over imports of similar commodities from Canada.

14. The present meetings might provide an appropriate occasion for a reminder to the other sterling area countries in the Commonwealth that Canada is interested in increasing imports not only from the U.K. but also from them, to the extent that they may be able to meet the requirements of our market in terms of price, delivery, etc. In this connection, what you describe as "preemptive buying" in para. 4(c) of your telegram No. 1646 of October 10th [sic] might be touched upon. For this purpose I should be grateful if you could cable immediately some details regarding the nature of the Canadian complaint on this score.

15. One aspect of the position expected in 1952/53 which no one is likely to raise formally but to which it might be advisable to draw attention is the possible effect on U.S. attitudes and policies of the reduction in U.S. exports which is envisaged. According to the U.K. forecast U.S. exports will decline by some 20 to 25% from 1948 to 1952/53. Such a decline coming on top of the reduction which has already taken place might have some unfortunate repercussions for various international political projects to which we all attach importance. It might be desirable to consider the extent to which the disequilibrium in the U.S. balance of payments can be remedied by Commonwealth countries (and European countries) expanding their exports to the U.S. rather than reducing their imports.

16. To the extent that the above subjects are covered in your communications I believe that the approach which I have outlined is consistent with the substances of your telegram No. 1646 and of the draft minutes of the meeting of the Cabinet Committee on September 21st† (the latter of which arrived here late today).

TELEGRAM 1664

Ottawa, October 12, 1948

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Reference your Telegram No. 1780 of October 12th concerning economic matters to be discussed at Prime Ministers' meetings.

The Canadian position on the various points raised in Paragraph 13 of your telegram is substantially as you describe it. The only comments which I might make are as follows, in each case referring to the corresponding lettered sub-para of your Paragraph 13: (a) The only point to note here is that Article XVIII of GATT as modified at the recent Geneva meeting has not yet been approved by Cabinet but it is expected that approval will be given when the Protocol is submitted later this month. (c) Concerning the formation of a European Customs Union, you might also include two specific qualifications from our standpoint: (i) We would not view with favour any arrangement that involved the raising of new tariffs against Canada and (ii) if Commonwealth preferences are to be affected we should wish to consult with the United Kingdom concerning those preference margins which are of particular importance to Canada.

On the subject of pre-emptive buying referred to in your Paragraph 14, we have in mind the large bulk purchases which are being made by the United Kingdom Government in Sterling area countries which have been traditional suppliers of such commodities to Canada. A specific example is the recent purchase in New Zealand of 140,000 calf-skins at a price of eighty-eight cents compared with the then market price of fifty-five cents in New York. Other commodities which in the past have been purchased in bulk lots by the United Kingdom to our prejudice are goat skins and sisal in British East Africa, tallow in Australia, vegetable oils and fats in all Colonial sources. We can participate in such arrangements by negotiating through the British bulk purchasing agencies but it requires us to contract in advance instead of purchasing the items in a free market and this involves a departure from our normal patterns of trade. A striking example is the United Kingdom commitment to the colonial areas to take all exportable sugar offered up to 1952. If we wish to continue procuring sugar through the United Kingdom Government, it seems we will have to commit ourselves far in advance for amounts from the colonial areas.

This whole problem was discussed in some detail with Sir John Henry Wood when he was here with Sir Stafford Cripps and it was thought that this might be one of the items to which the continuing Joint Committee would give early consideration. With this in mind, a survey of the problems associated with the United Kingdom method of purchasing is under preparation and the question which is being posed is how far the United Kingdom Government will go in an effort to accommodate our purchasing practices within their own bulk purchasing arrangements. I am of the opinion, therefore, that it would be undesirable to embark on any detailed discussion of the matter tomorrow but reference might profitably be made to the issue in order to keep it alive and to obtain, perhaps, the reaction of other Commonwealth representatives.

I agree with your thought that it might be advisable to draw attention to possible United States reaction when it is discovered that the long-term economic programmes of the European countries will result in reduced imports from the United States. ECA officials, during informal discussions with us, have said that they anticipate difficulty with some Congressmen who will undoubtedly point to this trend when future appropriations for ERP are being sought.

TELEGRAM 1809

London, October 14, 1948

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Reference my telegrams No. 1798† and No. 1800† in which mention is made of proposals to establish further Commonwealth consultative machinery on economic questions.

This subject is to be discussed at the official level by Commonwealth representatives tomorrow morning, October 15th in preparation for its consideration by the Prime Ministers' meeting on Monday, October 18th.

2. My inclination is to discourage the establishment of further permanent committees in this field. Insofar as there are general economic matters to be discussed I think they could properly be dealt with by the existing Commonwealth Economic Committee which was established by an Imperial Conference. The reference of such questions to this Committee would probably involve some change in the emphasis and tempo of its activities but could be done, I feel, within its present very broad terms of reference. Insofar as there may be specific economic questions affecting all Commonwealth countries to be discussed it would appear to me that the existing Sterling Area Statistical Committee (of which we are an observer) and the Commonwealth E.R.P. Liaison Committee are adequate for any proper discussion of such questions relating to balance of payments or Western European economic matters. To the extent that there are specific economic questions involving pairs of Commonwealth countries, I feel that they can probably best be dealt with by ad hoc consultation or, if there are persistent or recurrent questions, through bilateral committees along the lines of the joint United Kingdom-Canada Trade Committee.

3. Not only do I feel that further consultative machinery would probably be redundant but I fear that it might also be dangerous. In the first place, such machinery would probably tend to place the emphasis on increasing trade within the Commonwealth rather than expanding trade generally, in much the way that the OEEC appears to be doing in respect of western Europe. In the second place, it would seem to me that the creation of this machinery (which has already been forecast in the London press) would evoke an unfavourable reaction outside, particularly in the United States. I see no reason why this sort of reaction should be invited, particularly since I fail to see what useful purpose this new machinery could serve.

4. From the discussions at the Prime Ministers' meetings it is clear that a number of countries will press for the establishment of a permanent Commonwealth committee which would concern itself with a great range of matters relating to intra-Commonwealth trade and to industrial or agricultural development within the Commonwealth. While I doubt that the United Kingdom itself can be really enthusiastic over this proposal, there is a possibility that they will find it impracticable to resist. In addition, on manpower grounds, they may feel that it would be easier for them to service one general committee (along with the existing Sterling Area and ERP Committees which could then become sub-committees) than to service separate bilateral consultations with every other Commonwealth country.

5. If the weight of opinion turns out to be in favour of the establishment of this machinery, as I fear it may, I think we should insist that:

- (a) The committee should be purely advisory;
- (b) The committee should be at the official rather than the Ministerial level;
- (c) The establishment of this committee should not affect any existing arrangement for consultation between pairs of Commonwealth countries, such as the joint United Kingdom-Canada Trade Committee;
- (d) The terms of reference of the committee should include the making of recommendations designed to facilitate the revival or expansion of trade between the sterling area and hard currency countries.

6. If this committee is established, despite the fact that we may not favour it, the question arises whether we should accept full membership in it, or content ourselves with observer status on the ground that it is likely to be concerned primarily with sterling area questions. My own feeling is that if the committee is set up we should accept full membership provided that the committee's terms of reference take somewhat the form I have suggested above. As members we might be able to influence the direction of its activities substantially. If we are not members the committee may get into all sorts of mischief.

7. In the event of the establishment of such a committee the question also arises whether or not it should have a permanent secretariat drawn from the several Commonwealth countries, or whether the servicing of it would be left to the United Kingdom. I should favour the latter alternative so long as the committee is purely advisory in its functions.

8. I should be grateful for your views as soon as possible.

TELEGRAM 1706

Ottawa, October 17, 1948

Your telegram No. 1809 of October 14 concerning Commonwealth consultative machinery on economic matters.

2. We do not see the need of consultative machinery along the lines suggested but if the proposal comes up for consideration we realize you will be asked to comment. It is for this reason the subject was placed before the Sub-Committee on External Trade Policy last Friday whose conclusions, as cleared with the Deputies yesterday, are set out below.

3. Because of the resistance, with which you are familiar, to the forming of additional Commonwealth Committees, we would favour having general economic questions dealt with by the existing Commonwealth Economic Committee, if such arrangement is possible within its present terms of reference. You will no doubt be discussing with Mr. St. Laurent the political implications surrounding the formation of another Commonwealth Committee so our comments are confined to the economic aspects. You may wish to mention to Mr. St. Laurent some of the conclusions reached by the Skelton Committee of 1933.

4. The establishment of the Sterling Area Statistical Committee and the Commonwealth ERP Liaison Committee as Sub-Committees would appear to be a satisfactory organizational arrangement.

5. We would hope that this new Committee will not overlap the functions of the Continuing UK-Canada Joint Committee.

6. If the creation of a Permanent Commonwealth Committee is desired by the representatives at Monday's meeting we would want it, if we participated at all, to take the form suggested in paragraph 5 of your telegram No. 1809. In this connection we are in complete agreement with the views you have expressed in that paragraph and in particular we attach a great importance to the point you make in subparagraph (d).

7. It seems to us that until we know the exact terms of reference of the Committee it will be impossible to decide whether we should accept full membership or be represented solely by an observer. If our indecision is questioned you could remind the representatives at Monday's meeting that Canada's position is different from the other Commonwealth countries all of which are members of the Sterling Area.

8. In any event it is our understanding that no final decisions will be made at the London meetings but that all matters which carry general approval will be referred to the various Commonwealth Governments. We can at that time give fuller consideration to the proposal. Ends.

1. ATTENDANCE

Mr. Attlee, on behalf of all the Commonwealth Ministers, extended a warm welcome to Mr. St. Laurent.

2. STATUS OF HIGH COMMISSIONERS

Mr. Attlee said that there seemed to be general agreement among all Commonwealth countries that Commonwealth High Commissioners should be accorded a high place in the order of precedence in the countries to which they were accredited, and in his paper P.M.M. (48)9† he had put forward certain specific suggestions for giving effect to this object. If these suggestions could be accepted in principle each Commonwealth country could work out their detailed application in its own territory.

Mr. St. Laurent said that Canada accepted these suggestions in principle.

3. COMMONWEALTH CONSULTATION

Mr. Attlee said that there appeared to be a general desire to examine the existing methods of consultation between Commonwealth Governments, in order to see whether they met the requirements of the present situation or whether they could be improved. The situation had been changed by the increased tempo of affairs and the need for rapid action. There had also been some change in the degree of common interest between Commonwealth countries. Although there was still much of common interest to all, there were now many questions which concerned certain Commonwealth countries or groups of countries much more directly than others. Thus, members of the sterling area had common financial interests which were not shared in the same degree by Canada. There were questions of security in the South Pacific in which Australia and New Zealand had a closer interest than other Commonwealth countries. The economic development of South-East Asia was of particular interest to Australia, New Zealand, India, Pakistan and Ceylon. Atlantic security affected Canada and the United Kingdom more closely than other Commonwealth countries. And African questions were of special concern to South Africa. It would be wrong, therefore, to apply a rigid and uniform pattern of consultation to all subjects. Future arrangements must be more flexible, and it was natural that on certain matters there should be fuller consultation between some Commonwealth countries than between others. It followed that there was not always a "Commonwealth view" on every subject: it might often be a matter rather of ascertaining the Canadian view or the Australian view or the Indian view. It also followed that there would be increasingly frequent need for regional discussions between the Commonwealth countries specially concerned with a given problem. The composition of these groups would naturally vary according to the nature of the subject.

Mr. Attlee next emphasised the need for supplementing written communications by more frequent personal contacts. Meetings of Commonwealth Prime Ministers were of great value in providing opportunities for the free exchange of views and promoting greater understanding of common purposes, and he suggested that such meetings should be held more frequently, possibly at intervals of two or three years. He appreciated the practical difficulties of gathering Prime Ministers together, particularly now that nine countries were involved, but he again emphasised the value of these meetings and suggested that the aim should be more frequent informal meetings rather than the old-style formal meetings with elaborate agenda and many committees, held at infrequent intervals.

In the intervals between the meetings of Prime Ministers, there might be meetings of Commonwealth Ministers responsible for foreign affairs, economic affairs, and defence. Ministers attending such meetings would not be expected to commit their Governments to decisions, and here again regional conferences of the countries most directly concerned might often be the right way of dealing with particular points. These meetings need not always be held in London. For the secretarial services at such meetings he would be glad to place the experience of the United Kingdom Cabinet Secretariat at the disposal of any Commonwealth Government which might desire to use it.

These meetings could be held only at relatively long intervals and the need remained for arrangements to enable Commonwealth representatives in London to establish even more regular personal contacts with Ministers and officials concerned in the formulation of policy. This also applied, of course, to capitals other than London.

Turning to the three main subjects on which closer consultation was required, Mr. Attlee dealt first with foreign affairs. There could be no question of trying to frame a uniform foreign policy for the Commonwealth as a whole. Each member country must continue to form its independent judgment on matters of foreign policy. At the same time members of the Commonwealth had many common interests, and it was most desirable that they should be able to form their judgments with a full knowledge of the views and interests of other members. The United Kingdom Government were particularly anxious to be seized of the views of Commonwealth countries at an early stage, so that when a crisis arose they should not be deprived of the advantages of those views for want of time to obtain them.

In reply to a question by Mr. Louw, Mr. Attlee said that he had particularly in mind closer and more regular personal contacts between Commonwealth High Commissioners in London and the Foreign Secretary. Mr. Bevin had recently invited High Commissioners to approach him directly on matters of foreign policy, and he hoped that they would take full advantage of this. The Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations would be kept informed of such meetings and would normally be present at them. In addition to these continuing contacts in London, Mr. Attlee suggested that there should be frequent meetings of Ministers of External Affairs, perhaps once or twice a year. Here again, all Commonwealth countries need not necessarily be represented at every meeting, and the meetings need not always be held in London. It would perhaps be convenient if some of them could be timed to be held just before or after a meeting of the United Nations Assembly.

The Political Secretaries of the Commonwealth High Commissioners also had a right of direct access to the Foreign Office, mainly for the purpose of collecting factual information, and he hoped that fuller use would be made of this facility.

As regards economic affairs, discussion at meetings in the previous week had shown a general desire for more regular consultation. There was need for more regular exchange of information about the future intentions of Commonwealth Governments in the economic field, though here again it was important to bear in mind that final decisions could only be taken by Governments. Much the same procedure might be followed as for foreign affairs, e.g., there should be meetings of Ministers or senior officials, not necessarily in London, and not necessarily including all members of the Commonwealth. For example, problems of economic development in South-East Asia might well be discussed by representatives of the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, India, Pakistan and Ceylon. It was also important that there should be closer contact between the central organisations dealing with economic planning in London and the senior economic advisers of the other Commonwealth Governments. But meetings, which at best could only be periodical, must be supplemented by a regular flow of information, week by week, on economic subjects, and it might be useful for this purpose if some central focus could be established in London for the exchange of information between Commonwealth Governments on all economic subjects. There might be a Standing Committee for this purpose, through which the economic advisers attached to the Commonwealth High Commissioners in London could maintain direct and regular contact with the appropriate officials of United Kingdom Departments. There were already in existence two such official committees: first, the Sterling Area Statistical Committee, which met at regular intervals to review dollar expenditure and, second, the Commonwealth Liaison Committee for the European Recovery Programme, which was designed to keep Commonwealth countries in close touch with the development of the European Recovery Programme. Neither of these Committees was, however, designed to provide regular information on subjects such as bilateral trade agreements and the supply of capital goods, which had been mentioned in the discussions in the previous week. It might, therefore, be advisable to reconstitute these two Committees as one Committee with broader terms of reference, which should serve as a focus for the exchange of information between Commonwealth countries on all economic questions of common interest. Such a Committee would work, in a wider field, on the same model as the two existing Committees, which had proved their value in practice. It would comprise official representatives of all the Commonwealth High Commissioners in London and representatives of all the economic Departments of the United Kingdom Government. It might also be possible to set up parallel Committees in some of the other Commonwealth capitals.

Mr. Attlee emphasised that no such Committee could be a medium for formulating Commonwealth policy on economic questions, still less for reaching decisions, which must remain in the hands of Governments. It would, however, provide a forum for the exchange of information, a general background of knowledge and common understanding, and advance information of probable future developments, which would give Commonwealth Governments a chance of making their views known early enough to enable them to be taken into account in the formulation of economic policy.

In conclusion, Mr. Attlee said that he did not wish to put forward any specific proposals for closer consultation on defence until the general problems of defence had been discussed at the meeting arranged for 20th October.

Mr. St. Laurent said that Canada was in a somewhat special position. She had, however, greatly appreciated all the opportunities for contact with other Commonwealth countries in the past and would certainly try to send representatives to any meetings which might be arranged for the future. He agreed that a meeting of Prime Ministers every two or three years was a reasonable aim, but doubted whether any fixed interval should be rigidly prescribed. Meetings of the United Nations Assembly would offer a suitable opportunity for meetings of Ministers of External Affairs. Canada appreciated past endeavours to keep her well informed on foreign affairs, and she had done her best to reciprocate. Where personal meetings were required, these could no doubt be arranged, if necessary on a regional basis. Canada would be glad to have such meetings held in Ottawa, when appropriate. The object of such meetings would be discussion and the exchange of views: final decisions must be reserved to Governments. Close and continuing contact between High Commissioners and the Government Departments in capitals where they were stationed was most important; and it was Canada's experience that this was secured under existing practice both in London and in other Commonwealth capitals.

As regards foreign relations, Canada was in a special position as a country of the North American continent. Many of her problems concerned herself and the United States exclusively, but she had always striven, in dealing with those problems, to avoid doing anything which might embarrass other Commonwealth countries. The work of the North American Defence Board, for example, had not caused any embarrassment to any Commonwealth Government.

On the economic side, Mr. St. Laurent said that, although he looked forward to the ultimate restoration of multilateral trading, international trade was at present very largely on a bilateral basis and could most conveniently be discussed bilaterally. Canada and the United Kingdom, for instance, had recently set up a Committee to keep under review their common economic problems and the progress of the measures taken to ease them. No doubt the work of this Committee could, if desired, be integrated with the larger Committee which had been suggested; but for the moment it was concerned largely with matters of detail which would not be suitable for discussion by a larger Committee. The problems of Anglo-Canadian trade, with their dollar implications, were primarily a matter for those two countries, but he appreciated that they would have repercussions on other sterling countries.

Speaking generally, he felt that what was required was, not so much to set up a new and elaborate organisation for Commonwealth consultation, as to ensure that the existing organisations functioned more effectively.

DISCUSSIONS ON ECONOMIC MATTERS AT THE COMMONWEALTH PRIME MINISTERS' MEETINGS

At the meetings of the Commonwealth Prime Ministers now being held in London, Sir Stafford Cripps outlined the proposals of the United Kingdom long-term programme which has been approved by the United Kingdom Ministers and submitted to the Organization for European Economic Cooperation in Paris with the reservation that it is subject to amendment following discussions at the Commonwealth Prime Ministers meetings.

2. Representatives from various Commonwealth countries made general remarks concerning the United Kingdom long-term programme.

3. Dr. Evatt of Australia pointed out that it should be made clear to O.E.E.C. that discussions on the long-term programme by Commonwealth Prime Ministers did not imply approval by Commonwealth countries. With respect to trade he felt that the United Kingdom might adopt a more expansionist approach in its transactions, particularly with the sterling area. While he felt that Australia would be willing to increase its commodity contribution to alleviate the dollar shortage, it would be unwilling to embark on long-term projects unsuited to competition in conditions of freer trade. Dr. Evatt stressed the need of fuller information within the Commonwealth, particularly with respect to timing, in United Kingdom plans for the revival of trade between the sterling and dollar areas.

4. Mr. Robertson, speaking for Canada, referred to the fact that much of Canadian industry had been developed on the basis of markets in the Sterling Area. While Canada appreciated the United Kingdom and Europe's immediate dollar problem, he felt that the O.E.E.C. should be encouraged to emphasize plans for dollar earning rather than dollar saving. A reduction of imports from Canada and the United States might have serious political as well as economic effects, particularly if a recession of business activity were to occur. The present economic pattern would not provide the best foundation for the political cooperation necessary in the future.

5. Mr. Fraser of New Zealand emphasized New Zealand's reservations concerning the proposed European Customs Union. He felt that it would be unwise for Europe to embark on a Customs Union until it appeared more certain that some sort of political union would not be feasible.

6. Dr. Louw of South Africa felt that while his country was not in favour of the Commonwealth becoming an economic union, it was prepared to cooperate in return for favourable United Kingdom consideration to South African commodity needs and the easing by the United Kingdom of import restrictions against South African exports. He felt further that South Africa was entitled to full membership in any organization of countries concerned with the development of African territories.

7. Mr. Nehru of India felt that industrialization of India was vital to the maintenance of stability in other economies such as the United States. His country did not intend to be either Communist or capitalist in its economic organization but rather the present Government was planning to adopt the mid-road approach of the United Kingdom.

8. Mr. Liaqat Ali Khan of Pakistan also spoke of the need for economic development in his country. He suggested that a Commonwealth Committee should be established which would concern itself with the industrial and agricultural development and mutual trade of the Commonwealth countries.

9. Mr. Senanayake of Ceylon spoke briefly on the desirability of increasing trade within the Commonwealth in preference to trading with outside countries.

10. The Chancellor of the Exchequer then spoke on each of the principal points which had been raised by the various Commonwealth representatives. He agreed with Dr. Evatt that the long-term programme would be presented to O.E.E.C. solely as the responsibility of the United Kingdom. He felt that no estimate could be made as to when multilateral trade could be restored except that it would not generally be feasible until some years after 1952-53. Concerning the export of capital goods by the United Kingdom, Sir Stafford admitted that the Commonwealth share had relatively decreased. He felt, however, that United Kingdom assistance to Western Europe was not only a political necessity but would in the long run increase the availability of capital goods from both the United Kingdom and Western Europe. The Chancellor expressed his agreement with Mr. Robertson's suggestion to emphasize the need of dollar earning rather than dollar saving and reiterated a statement made at an earlier meeting to the effect that between sources of dollar earning the United Kingdom would continue to give preference to the Canadian market. The Chancellor referred to the proposed European Customs Union and indicated that the United Kingdom was not particularly enthusiastic in pushing the project at the present stage. Public opinion in the United States he felt would become less enamoured with the scheme as O.E.E.C. continues to cooperate effectively on practical economic problems. The Chancellor felt that Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan's suggestion for a Commonwealth Committee might be further considered on October 18th.

PRIME MINISTERS' MEETING, LONDON: PROGRESS REPORT<sup>8</sup>

The meetings of Commonwealth Prime Ministers or their representatives were opened in London on the morning of October 11 at a formal session, which dealt with arrangements for the conference, and the timetable for dealing with the list of subjects for discussion.

2. That afternoon the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave a statement on the economic situation. This was discussed at the morning and afternoon plenary sessions on Wednesday, October 13. The consideration of the economic problems is being reported separately to Cabinet.

3. The plenary sessions on Tuesday, October 12, were concerned with a statement by the Foreign Minister on United Kingdom policy with reference to the Middle

East, Far East and South-East Asia, and discussion thereon. The subjects considered were of principal interest to the Dominions in the Pacific and Indian Oceans and not of such immediate concern to Canada. Mr. Bevin suggested that there would be considerable advantage in arranging for closer consultation between the countries concerned in this whole area. He said that his idea had not been presented to the United Kingdom Cabinet. Dr. Evatt and Mr. Nehru were sympathetic to Mr. Bevin's idea of regional consultation. It was not clear whether they were thinking solely of Commonwealth countries or of other nations in the area as well. Mr. Fraser said he would approach the idea of regional consultation with considerable caution since all important questions were also world problems and European questions were of as great importance to New Zealand as those of South East Asia. He did not like the concept of sectionalism. Mr. Louw said that while South Africa was interested in the problems of Asia, he did not think it was an area where they all had a "common concern" and that he thought his country would not be prepared to make any definite commitments as regards South East Asia consultation. In concluding the discussion, Mr. Bevin hoped that his suggestion would not be rejected out of hand.

4. Mr. Fraser declared that the Commonwealth should strive to arrive at some basis for standing together for democratic principles and to build up a third force in addition to the United States and the Soviet Union. He thought the time was ripe for re-examining the proposal for a Commonwealth secretariat, but he said New Zealand would want assurance that any suggestions made by the Commonwealth countries would be seriously considered. In his conclusion, when dealing with this point, Mr. Bevin said that he hoped consultation could be improved but that he did not think the fault lay entirely with the United Kingdom. He suggested that the Commonwealth countries should at least have consultation on the general trend of policy. He did not want to speak for the Commonwealth, but in fact he very often did and this thought was continually at the back of his mind. Therefore, he would like the conference to suggest a way by which it would be possible to arrive at decisions that would summarize the views of all.

5. On Sunday, October 17, a meeting was held at Chequers, attended by Mr. Attlee, Mr. Noel-Baker, Viscount Jowitt, Mr. St. Laurent, Mr. Fraser, Dr. Evatt, the Irish Minister for External Affairs, Mr. MacBride and the Irish Minister of Finance, Mr. McGilligan, to consider the future status of Ireland, following the expected repeal of the External Relations Act. Ireland is not represented at the plenary sessions of the Prime Ministers. The abolition of the External Relations Act will mean the severance of the last remaining constitutional link with the Crown, and Ireland will become a foreign country, unless some formula can be devised to give it a special kind of association with the Commonwealth such as by treaty arrangement. If Ireland becomes a foreign country, serious legal problems will arise regarding the position of Irish citizens in Commonwealth countries and the granting of imperial preferences to Irish exports.

6. Plenary sessions were scheduled for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week. At the Monday meeting consideration was given to the machinery of consultation and the status of High Commissioners. These two questions were referred to committees for further examination. Tuesday's meeting was to commence with a statement by Mr. Bevin on the international situation with special reference to Western Europe and the Soviet Union, to be followed by discussion. On Wednesday, Mr. Attlee is to give a statement on defence problems, likewise to be followed by discussion.

7. If this timetable is adhered to, all the main subjects listed for discussion will have been dealt with in some manner at the conclusion of the plenary sessions on Wednesday.

8. Reports have not yet been received from London on the special meeting on Sunday, dealing with Ireland, and the plenary sessions of yesterday and today.

Mr. St. Laurent said that Mr. Bevin's statement had confirmed Canadian opinion on these difficult problems. Canada had recognised the expansionist tendencies of the Soviet Government, and the weakness of the continental Powers of Western Europe in resisting such aggression. The Slav peoples were realists, and it was improbable that they would contemplate policies which did not promise success. But the prospect, if they gained control of the resources of Western Europe, would be formidable indeed. In order to build up an organisation able to demonstrate that, though unaggressive, it held the preponderance of force, it might be necessary to contribute only a small fraction of what would inevitably have to be sacrificed if war came. If possible aggressors realised that they would have to meet the productive power of the Western Hemisphere, they would take account of it in reaching their decisions. Canada felt that the task now was to convince France and the other continental Powers of Western Europe that it would be worth while resisting aggression from the beginning. As soon as the Brussels Treaty was announced, President Truman and Mr. Mackenzie King had made public statements welcoming it as the germ of a wider scheme of regional security to provide some of the advantages which had been hoped for from a fully effective United Nations. There had been other favourable pronouncements in the United States and Canada, and it seemed that public support was assured.<sup>9</sup>

<sup>9</sup> Les affaires étrangères furent de nouveau discutées au PMM (la réunion des premiers ministres) (48) 10ème session, le 19 octobre (après-midi). Comme il n'y a pas eu d'intervention canadienne durant cette réunion, le compte rendu n'est pas reproduit ici.

There was further discussion of foreign affairs at P.M.M. (48) 10th meeting, October 19 (afternoon). Because there was no Canadian statement in that session, the record is not reproduced here.

CONFIDENTIAL ANNEX<sup>10</sup>

DEFENCE

Mr. Attlee said that the discussions on foreign affairs had been an essential preliminary to the consideration of defence problems. At the outset of the Meeting, the United Kingdom Government had circulated a paper (P.M.M. (48)1) in order that all members of the Commonwealth might be informed of their views on the defence aspects of the world situation. They recognised that the facts set out must be seen in a different light and approached from a different angle by each of the Commonwealth countries. Principles of policy might be generally agreed, but their practical application must vary with the special interests, status and geographical position of each country. The Meeting should by this time be well informed as to United Kingdom views. The United Kingdom Government in its turn was now seeking the views of the Commonwealth countries, so that, if possible, a common view might be established.

P.M.M.(48)1 took as its starting point the Charter of the United Nations, which had, as the first of its purposes, the maintenance of international peace and security. In the course of their discussions, Ministers had displayed their overriding concern with the maintenance of peace. The task was now to consider how this could be achieved. In the past, the peace of a large part of the world had rested mainly on the British fleet. This was widely accepted because of the general recognition that the interests of the British Commonwealth were fundamentally pacific. Some countries were only now beginning to realise what that situation meant: for instance, the United States had for long failed to recognise the extent to which their security had rested on the maintenance of a strong British fleet. But in recent years there had been great changes, due to the development of new weapons, and to the growth of air power, and the effect upon the United Kingdom had been profound. Formerly, it had been a secure island base: now these Islands were probably the most exposed portion of the whole Commonwealth. A large population and great industrial resources were concentrated in a small area highly vulnerable to air attack.

For these reasons, the United Kingdom Government had in recent years sought security through the establishment of a system of collective defence. Every effort had been made to achieve this first through the League of Nations, and subsequently through the United Nations; but these efforts had not been successful. Similarly, between the wars, continuous efforts were made to secure a reduction of armaments; and similar discussions were in progress at the present time. But experience showed that such reductions, whether qualitative or quantitative, could not be achieved in an atmosphere of insecurity. If, then, security could not be achieved under present circumstances, on a comprehensive basis through the United Nations, it must be sought through regional arrangements; and this consideration lay behind the efforts which were being made by the United Kingdom Government to make effective regional arrangements covering Western Europe and the Atlantic. But Western Europe was not the only point of danger; each member of the Commonwealth must wish to consider when and how danger might threaten it. The most striking and tragic conclusion which had emerged from the discussions on foreign affairs was that there was one Power which was not interested in reaching a settlement of international differences by peaceful means. The Soviet Union had a vested interest in chaos.

There were two distinct dangers which must be taken into account: first, direct war-like attack, against which it was necessary to maintain strong defensive forces; secondly, that, owing to the economic weight of those defensive forces, living standards would be so lowered as to open the way for Communist infiltration. It was, therefore, important to remember that the best foundation of an effective defence policy was a sound industrial economy. Action must therefore be twofold: negatively, defensive forces must be built up; positively, the peace loving Powers must offer a better way of life than the aggressor. Pandit Nehru had rightly spoken of the danger that a moral position might be forfeited in grasping what seemed to be a material advantage.

P.M.M. (48)1 set out what the United Kingdom Government had done in the light of these considerations. It explained the steps taken to secure the recovery of the United Kingdom's own economy; the United Kingdom Government's participation, with the United States and with the Western European countries in the European Recovery Programme; and the first stages in the establishment of Western Union. The aim had been to restore the war-shattered economy of Europe, and to provide the basis of security against aggression. The United Kingdom Government was anxious to extend this system of co-operation in defence consultation to the Commonwealth generally. No doubt, defence co-operation must in the first instance be on a regional basis. Commonwealth countries had their special interests in their own areas, and it was logical that they should be primarily concerned with those interests. But the way in which the interests of the different areas interacted had been brought out in earlier discussions, and there was need to ensure co-ordination between the defence policies of the different regions. That did not mean subordination, but a free partnership for mutual help.

Mr. Attlee said that the United Kingdom war effort could be measured by the fact that, at the end of the war, there had been over 5 million men and women in the Armed Forces. The first post-war task was their orderly demobilisation; the economic situation demanded that they should be freed urgently for productive employment. The scheme of release by age and service groups was put into force and worked smoothly. The mistakes of the years 1918-21 were avoided, and in particular the amount of unemployment during the transitional period was very small. In 1946 the United Kingdom spent £1,100 millions on defence; the Service estimates for 1947-48 amounted only to £653 millions. But this meant that the Forces would have to be run down to 715,000 by the end of March 1949. Against this, it might be noted that the Soviet Defence budget for 1948 had made provision for 66 billion roubles, which was only 6 billion roubles below the expenditure in 1946. That contrast exposed the fantastic nature of the Soviet suggestion that an equitable reduction in armaments might be achieved by an all-round cut of one-third. The rapid run-down of the Armed Forces in the United Kingdom had created serious difficulties because of the wholesale exodus of skilled and experienced men. The consequent unbalance of the Forces had created a grave problem for United Kingdom Service Ministers.

In 1947 two events had affected demobilisation. The financial crisis had made it necessary to exercise the most drastic economy on defence expenditure, and thus to reduce the Forces to the absolute minimum. At the same time, the international situation made it increasingly difficult to liquidate overseas commitments. It became clear that for some time large occupation forces must be maintained in Germany, Austria, Trieste and Greece. There was also the additional strain on the Forces caused by events in Palestine; great gratitude was due to the Australian and New Zealand Governments for making it possible to withdraw substantial numbers of United Kingdom troops from Japan.

The United Kingdom Government were thus faced with a paradoxical situation. On the one hand, they were continuing to uncoil the spring of their strength in order to assist economic recovery. On the other hand, there was the need to provide forces capable of backing diplomatic policy and of providing a measure of security in the event of war. Because of the economic straits of the United Kingdom and of the occupational burdens arising from the war, and because the first objective necessarily had to be economic reconstruction, it was not possible for her to re-form, re-equip and maintain forces to guarantee her own safety and that of others at the present time. It was necessary carefully to weigh the priorities under which resources should be allocated to defence. High priority had to be given to research and development, because the United Kingdom's disadvantage in man-power increased the need to maintain a technical ascendancy; to maintaining deterrent weapons in readiness and efficiency; to safeguarding the security of sea communications and overseas garrisons; and to the training of National Service men with a view to establishing a substantial trained reserve capable of rapid mobilisation.

In recent months, the state of international affairs had become serious enough to warrant a survey of the policy governing the size and shape of the Forces. It was decided that it was still necessary to concentrate on the economic recovery of the country, but that a beginning should so far as possible be made with remedying the deficiencies in the Armed Forces and their supplies. The following decisions had been taken as a result of this survey:

- (a) To suspend releases from the Armed Forces for a period of three months at least.
- (b) To review the National Service Act.
- (c) To review the pay and conditions of the members of the Armed Forces.

(d) To institute a drive for recruits for the Regular, Territorial and Auxiliary Services.

(e) To start again the production of small and heavy army ammunition, to repair and overhaul reserve equipment, to provide additional constructional materials for accommodation and for the preparation of airfields, and to accelerate the production of fighter aircraft and the refitting and overhaul of naval vessels.

The United Kingdom Government's wide commitments overseas had created a difficult man-power problem. The forces in Germany, Austria, Trieste, Greece, Tripoli, Cyrenaica, Egypt, Transjordan, Iraq, Singapore and until recently, in Palestine and Japan, had imposed a very serious strain on United Kingdom resources, and the rapid running down of service manpower had materially affected the administrative efficiency of the three Services. The United Kingdom Government had no wish to shirk the tasks before it, because they believed that the only way to peace was to undertake them. They proposed therefore to carry them out to the best of their ability within the limits set by their economic resources. Mr. Alexander was glad to note that all Commonwealth countries had welcomed the stand taken by the United Kingdom against Soviet aggression and had approved the policy followed in regard to Berlin. This had only been made possible by means of the air-lift. This had been a most formidable undertaking, and its difficulties would increase during the winter months. It had been estimated that Berlin could be sustained on a daily air-lift of 5,500 metric tons. If this were in fact sufficient for the purpose, it should be possible to maintain it. But the strain on the staff and aircraft engaged was very great. He therefore welcomed the offers of help which had been forthcoming from Commonwealth countries.

The United Kingdom Government had entered upon the policy of Western Union with a determination to build up Western Europe. The Military Committee had two purposes; short-term — to create the confidence necessary to make economic recovery a reality; long-term — to provide the solidarity and security necessary to show that aggression would not pay. All the Governments concerned participated on a basis of equality of status, and of a common pooling of resources. On this understanding the United States and Canada co-operated in the work of the Committee. The results already achieved had increased confidence in Western Europe. Further bodies had also been set up; the Chiefs of Staff Committee; the Commanders-in-Chief Committee, of which Field-Marshal Viscount Montgomery had recently been appointed Chairman; and the Supply and Resources Board. The United Kingdom Government hoped that these efforts towards co-operation in the defence field in relation to Western Europe could now be matched by a determined attempt to improve the system of consultation between Commonwealth Governments. This did not, of course, mean that valuable co-operation in various aspects of defence had not already been achieved. In certain directions, substantial progress had been made. First, the Commonwealth Advisory Committee on Defence Sciences performed a valuable function in exchanging information on scientific data. Secondly, the Joint Intelligence Bureau collected statistics essential for defence purposes. It was satisfactory to note that the Governments of Canada, Australia and New Zealand had set up similar Bureaux. The Joint Intelligence Bureau in London had been instructed to render freely to other Commonwealth countries all the help and assistance which they might ask of it. He hoped that those Commonwealth countries which had not yet set up such a Bureau would consider it worth while to enquire into the possibilities of this aspect of co-operation. Thirdly, there were the Service Liaison Officers. The United Kingdom Government had now appointed Service Liaison Officers in four Commonwealth countries and they were performing valuable services.

At the moment there was a tendency for the United Kingdom to disseminate a great volume of information to other Commonwealth countries and to receive little information in return. This was understandable and natural, but the United Kingdom Government hoped that the reciprocal flow of information inwards to the United Kingdom would increase in due course.

In conclusion, Mr. Alexander said that, if the spirit of co-operation were lacking, it would make no difference what machinery for consultation were devised. The first essential was to secure general agreement on the principles and objects of defence policy, and then to give freedom to staffs to consult and to discuss, within the scope of the principles agreed, the plans which Commonwealth Governments might consider appropriate to the safety of their peoples. He hoped that other Commonwealth Prime Ministers would express their views on the methods of defence consultation, especially on the suggestions contained in paragraphs 14 and 15 of P.M.M. (48)1.

Lord Tedder, on behalf of the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff, said that though the world to-day was not formally at war, it could not be said to be enjoying a real peace. In countless parts of the world the hand of the Soviet Union could be seen — in Czechoslovakia, Greece, Burma and Indonesia, in the infiltration of Nazis into Eastern Germany, and in the Communist-provoked strikes in France. Under such conditions, the risk of open conflict could not be ignored. The democratic countries everywhere should face the fact that a ruthless and unprincipled "cold" war was being directed from Moscow and was probing the weak spots of each country. Its main object was to sap the power of Governments in democratic countries and to create the conditions of economic chaos in which Communism flourished. The "cold" war was worldwide; it compelled the United Kingdom to disperse its resources and it laid an increasing strain on the national economy. Its effect therefore was to weaken the capacity to resist in the event of open aggression. The war against Germany had left many military commitments which were in themselves sufficient to hamper economic recovery; but the "cold" war had imposed heavy additional burdens of which the most recent were the Berlin air-lift and the operations in Malaya. In the light of these considerations, the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff view was that the "cold" war was a very real insidious war which might, unless it was effectively countered, prove more dangerous than open war.

There appeared to be general agreement that an essential part of any effective reply to Soviet aggression was the building up of the political, economic and military strength of the democratic countries. Commonwealth Governments should be aware that the Soviet Union was maintaining very large land forces and was making strenuous efforts to modernise her Air Forces. Further, she was making full use of German scientists on the production of submarines. But so far as information was available — and it was admittedly not complete — there was no direct evidence of preparations specifically attributable to an intention to make actual war in the immediate future. It was in any event arguable that the Soviet Union was not in an economic position to contemplate war; and that she would be unwilling to do so until she possessed atomic weapons, which did not appear to be the case at present. The United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff view was that, for the present, the Soviet Union would not incur serious risk of war and that, faced with such a risk, she would decide to withdraw.

It was clearly impossible, on economic grounds, for the United Kingdom to attempt to maintain in peacetime forces comparable to those maintained by the Soviet Union. This meant that the latter's aggressive tactics could be countered only by the maintenance of available forces in the highest state of technical efficiency and readiness.

As regards the nature of modern war, the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff did not regard so-called "push-button" warfare as a practical possibility in the immediate future. Any war within the next six or seven years would be fought with equipment which was already on the drawing boards; but that included the atomic bomb and possibly some form of bacterial weapon. The last war showed the danger of sudden attack; this danger had been immeasurably increased by the advent of the atomic weapon. The power of the offensive had increased enormously, and it was difficult at present to see how it could be overtaken by the development of defensive power. The conclusion, therefore, became inevitable that, in order to provide a deterrent to war, the Armed Forces of the democratic countries must be maintained in a state to enable them to strike hard and rapidly. If war came, the United Kingdom would have to rely on immediate help from the United States. Neither the United Kingdom nor the other Western European Powers could themselves maintain in peacetime forces adequate to cope with the power of the Soviet Union. It was no longer possible for the United Kingdom to expect, during a war, to have time to build up its forces behind the barrier of sea power. The blitzkrieg with atomic weapons was a far more real and dangerous threat in the future than any form of attack during the recent war.

Lord Tedder then discussed the broad outlines of strategy in a possible war. The conclusion had been reached that the fundamental basis for United Kingdom strategy must rest on the defence of the United Kingdom; on the maintenance of sea communications between the United Kingdom and the Commonwealth and the United States; and on the defence of the Middle East. The strategy of a world-wide war would have many facets. Each country would have problems of its own; groups of countries in various regions would have their different regional problems. The United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff thought that these regional problems might be discussed and worked out amongst those immediately concerned so that they might be fitted into the world-wide problems with which all Commonwealth countries were concerned. In Western Europe some progress had been made in this direction; the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff would like to feel that similar progress was being made in other fields, especially as regards the defence of the Middle East in which so many members of the Commonwealth were more or less directly concerned. If, without setting up any complicated organisation, Ministers could give authority for their military advisers to consult on this specific problem and to draft concerted plans, without committing their Governments, an advance would have been made towards filling a very dangerous gap in the armour against aggression.

Mr. St. Laurent said that he had been impressed by the indications given by Lord Tedder of the dangers of the situation. Canada realised that she would not be faced with a war against a single opponent of comparable size, and that she must fit her resources into the general plan for resisting aggression. Hence, she had welcomed the establishment of the United Nations as a means for ensuring, by collective action, the peace of all countries. When it became clear that, under present conditions, this hope could not be realised, the Canadian Government had concentrated their attention on devising arrangements for regional defence and, with the knowledge of the United Kingdom Government, had developed further the system of co-operation with the United States Government which had worked so successfully in the recent war. Substantial progress had already been made along these lines. Until there was some prospect of the fulfilment of the intentions of the United Nations Charter, the right course clearly was for like minded Governments to co-operate in building up security on a regional basis in accordance with the provisions of Article 51 of the Charter; and it was on this basis that Canada was participating in the military discussions under the Treaty of Brussels and was entering into political discussions regarding the establishment of an Atlantic scheme of defence. The Canadian Government were, therefore, in agreement with the proposals contained in the Chief of Staff memorandum annexed to P.M.M. (48)<sup>1</sup> regarding the need for preparations of defence plans on a regional basis; the Canadian Government accepted this as the basis of their policy, and were in fact already giving effect to it. In other regions of Commonwealth defence, the Canadian interest was less direct; moreover, her resources were likely to be fully committed by her own regional plans. Agreement on defence policy and general strategy by all the Commonwealth Governments was not in his view a prerequisite for regional planning. It could not be suggested that the consultations on regional planning in which the Canadian Government was already engaged should be interrupted for a general study of Commonwealth defence problems. Any plans for North American defence could easily be fitted into any arrangements that might be made with regard to the North Atlantic area as a whole; and Canada's part in these plans would be her contributions to general defence based on her available resources which would be fully deployed for the purpose. Nevertheless, he did not wish to deny the value of a continual exchange of views and information on defence matters between Commonwealth countries. Up to now the United Kingdom had been the focal point for such information, and he had hoped that this would continue; but he felt that this exchange of views could best be carried on by the existing Military Liaison Staffs, and the Canadian Government could not see the need for any substantial modification of the existing arrangements. It should be possible, through existing machinery, to secure the adequate co-ordination of regional arrangements.

Mr. Attlee said that a note (P.M.M. (48) 13),† prepared by the Secretary after consultation with officials of all the Delegations, had been circulated covering a detailed statement of the suggestions made in the discussion on 18th October. A further note by the Secretary (P.M.M. (48) 15),† covering a statement on Commonwealth consultation, prepared by Dr. Evatt, had also been circulated. He suggested that Dr. Evatt's draft, which seemed more suitable for publication, might be taken as a basis for discussion with a view to reaching an agreed statement which could be included in the final communiqué about the Meeting.

Mr. Liaqat Ali Khan suggested that, before Dr. Evatt's draft was considered, it should be revised to cover consultation on defence.

Dr. Evatt said that his draft had been designed to set out in more specific terms the main results of the discussion on Commonwealth consultation. He believed that an announcement on the lines that he proposed would be helpful. He agreed that the statement should cover consultation on defence.

Mr. St. Laurent said that, to a considerable extent, the arrangements set out in Dr. Evatt's draft were already in operation and that it would therefore be misleading to announce them as though they were new developments agreed on at the Meeting. For example, it would be wrong to imply that the Canadian High Commissioner in London had not in the past had direct access to the Foreign Secretary.

Mr. Louw said that he had no authority to agree, on behalf of the South African Government, to the arrangements proposed in the draft.

Mr. Noel-Baker said that, in general, he preferred Dr. Evatt's draft to the draft annexed to P.M.M. (48) 13. It would, however, be desirable to amend it so as to indicate to what extent it was a declaration of arrangements already in force, and to make it clear that it was subject to endorsement by the Governments of the Commonwealth countries.

Mr. Attlee proposed that the draft should be revised by officials in the light of the discussion, and that a revised version should be circulated for consideration at a Meeting at 12 noon on 21st October.

2. COMMONWEALTH CONSULTATION

(Previous Reference: P.M.M. (48) 12th Meeting, Minute 2.)

The Meeting had before them a note by their Secretary (P.M.M. (48) 16)† covering a revised draft of the proposed statement on Commonwealth Consultation.

Mr. Louw said that, if it were intended to publish a document purporting to contain the agreed conclusions of the meeting on this subject, he would have specifically to reserve the position of the South African Government. The paper proposed the creation of new machinery for consultation, or the extension of existing machinery. He could not commit his Government to public acceptance of these proposals at the present stage. He did not wish to suggest that his Government were opposed to consultation and co-operation where suitable, but he would urge the unwisdom of hasty publication. If, however, it were merely a question of making recommendations for consideration by Governments, he would be able to assent to much of the contents of this statement.

After discussion, it was agreed to consider the statement on the basis of a recommendation to Commonwealth Governments and not as a document for publication. It was also agreed that the communiqué to be issued to the Press at the conclusion of the Prime Ministers' Meeting should incorporate a passage stating in general terms that recommendations on the subject of Commonwealth consultation had been drawn up for submission to Commonwealth Governments.

In the ensuing discussion of the draft statement the following were the main points raised:

(a) Paragraph 2. — Varying views were expressed about the frequency with which Ministerial meetings could be held on foreign affairs. Stress was laid on the physical difficulty of arranging as many as two such meetings a year, in view of the many other commitments falling upon a Minister of External Affairs — especially when he might also be Prime Minister.

Dr. Evatt said that if it were proposed to recommend only one meeting a year the recommendation was scarcely worth making, since one such meeting was usually held at the time of the United Nations Assembly. Mr. Bevin made it clear that he was prepared to agree to another such meeting in addition to any which might take place at the same time as the Assembly. Thus, in effect, two meetings a year were contemplated, though for tactical reasons it might be unwise to state publicly an intention to hold one regularly at the time of the United Nations Assembly since this might be taken to imply a "ganging-up" of Commonwealth countries in connection with United Nations business.

It was accordingly agreed that the recommendation should be for Ministerial meetings on foreign affairs to be held at least once, and, if possible, twice, a year.

(b) Paragraph 3. — It was pointed out that, although Commonwealth High Commissioners in London had direct access to the Foreign Secretary, it would not always be practicable for the Foreign Secretary at short notice to give personal interviews. It was agreed that on such occasions High Commissioners should see other Foreign Office Ministers or senior officials.

(c) Paragraph 6. — There was a general discussion of the question whether this paragraph should recommend consultation and co-operation, as envisaged in the draft before the Meeting, or consultation only. Mr. Louw thought the latter sufficient in itself, and stated that the Union Government could not be committed to any co-operation necessarily developing out of the consultation on defence matters which she was willing to undertake.

Mr. Fraser said that all Commonwealth countries must take account of the facts. Speaking for New Zealand, he would say that if the United Kingdom were defeated in war, it would only be a question of time before New Zealand fell too. He therefore regarded New Zealand's defence interests as being closely linked with those of the United Kingdom, and was anxious to enter into the closest co-operation as well as consultation with the latter on defence matters. Dr. Evatt agreed with Mr. Fraser and emphasised that consultation which did not lead to co-operation could be positively dangerous.

There was also considerable discussion whether paragraph 6, which made specific mention of regional security, laid sufficient stress also on the prior necessity of drawing up an overall strategic plan into which regional plans could be dovetailed. Dr. Evatt and Mr. Fraser were anxious that regional co-operation should not be over-emphasised to the exclusion of general co-operation, whilst Mr. Louw advocated limiting the application of the paragraph more strictly to regional defence.

Lord Tedder referred to paragraph 6 of the memorandum by the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff attached to P.M.M. (48)1, which stated that, before regional planning could take place or be put effectively into practice, it was necessary to reach agreement on the fundamental principles of defence policy and strategy. He said that it was necessary to be practical, and to base one's plans on what was reasonably likely to happen during the next ten years. As things stood at present, it must be admitted that the United Kingdom had made further progress in co-operation in planning with the Western Union countries than it had with the other Commonwealth countries. The United Kingdom and the Western Union countries had started by trying to plan the defence of Western Europe on a purely regional basis, but it had soon been found that this was not practicable and that it was necessary to consider the problems of Western European defence in the broader context of the world-wide commitments of the countries taking part. As part of this it was necessary for the United Kingdom to have defence discussions with the other members of the Commonwealth.

Mr. Bevin said that the defence of Africa was of the greatest importance in world strategy, and it was difficult to see how it could be a matter of regional concern. On the wider question of Commonwealth co-operation in defence matters, it ought to be recognised that the other members of the Commonwealth would be placed in a position of considerable difficulty if they were left in doubt as to the intentions of any individual Commonwealth Government.

Mr. St. Laurent was anxious that paragraph 6 should be so drafted as not to make it appear that consultation and co-operation in defence matters was necessarily confined to British Commonwealth countries. It would be quite unrealistic for Canada to agree to any arrangement which precluded her from concerting defence measures with the United States, and the same applied also in the economic sphere. This point found general acceptance, Mr. Bevin pointing out that the United Kingdom already had such consultation and co-operation with, for instance, other members of the Western Union.

Mr. Fraser also supported Mr. St. Laurent's view and said that consultation and co-operation on defence matters which might be contemplated also with, for instance, the United States, made it all the more imperative to achieve agreement inside the Commonwealth first.

Mr. Nehru, Mr. Liaqat Ali Khan and Mr. Senanayake also made the point that their Governments were anxious for close consultation in defence matters. Mr. Attlee said that this was also the desire of the United Kingdom Government.

Various amendments were made to the text of P.M.M. (48) 16 in order to meet the points made in the course of the discussion.

A revised text of the statement incorporating the amendments approved in the discussion is reproduced in the Annex to these minutes.<sup>12</sup> The Meeting agreed that the statement should be submitted in this form to all Commonwealth Governments for approval.

<sup>13</sup> À cette réunion, il y eut une discussion peu concluante sur le statut des hauts commissaires des pays du Commonwealth.

At this meeting, there was an inconclusive discussion of the status of Commonwealth High Commissioners.

Mr. St. Laurent said that he thought it necessary to make an explanatory statement in connection with the recommendations on Commonwealth consultation which the Meeting had agreed earlier in the day. In agreeing to recommend consultation between Commonwealth Governments to arrange co-operative action in matters of defence, he wished to make it clear that, in view of her historic position, it would be unreal for Canada to regard as effective either general or regional plans of defence which would comprise Commonwealth countries exclusively, and which did not also include other peace-loving countries prepared to co-operate in resisting aggression. He asked that a note to that effect should be circulated with the statement which the Meeting had approved for submission to Commonwealth Governments. The Meeting agreed to this proposal.

1. FINAL COMMUNIQUÉ

(Previous Reference: P.M.M. (48) 14th Meeting, Minute 2.)

The meeting had before them a revised draft (P.M.M. (48) 17 (Revised)) of the final communiqué for the Press, which had been prepared by representatives of the Delegations in the light of the criticisms and suggestions made at the previous meeting.

The meeting considered the revised draft paragraph by paragraph and various suggestions for amendment were discussed.

The final text of the communiqué, incorporating the amendments approved in the discussion, is reproduced in the annex to these minutes.

2. COMMONWEALTH CONSULTATION

(Previous Reference: P.M.M. (48) 13th Meeting, Minute 2.)

Sir Stafford Cripps said that a clear understanding should be reached that there would be no publication in any Commonwealth country of the detailed recommendations on Commonwealth consultation until all Governments had approved them and agreed to their publication.

Mr. Fraser said that Governments might soon be pressed to give information about these recommendations in their Parliaments; and all Governments should, therefore, undertake to reach decisions on them with the minimum of delay. If ultimately no general agreement could be reached, each Government would be at liberty to disclose the views on this subject which had been expressed on its behalf at the meeting.

There was general agreement that all Governments should reach decisions on these recommendations as quickly as possible, and in any event by the end of November; and that meanwhile there should be no publication of the recommendations in any country.

3. CONCLUDING SPEECHES

Mr. Attlee said that at the conclusion of the plenary sessions of the Meeting he would like to express, on behalf of himself and his colleagues in the United Kingdom Government, their pleasure as hosts in having had the opportunity of welcoming the Delegations. They were impressed with the value of the exchange of views which had taken place, with the high level of the discussions and with the great measure of agreement which had been reached. He thought that all present could regard the Meeting as having been highly successful.

Mr. St. Laurent said he would like to express, on behalf of the representatives of the other Commonwealth Governments, their sincere thanks to Mr. Attlee for presiding over the meetings and for giving his constant and valuable help, which had contributed so much to the success of the discussions.

Pandit Nehru, in associating himself with Mr. St. Laurent's remarks, expressed the great pleasure of the Indian Delegation at having been able to participate in the Meeting.

Mr. Louw asked to be associated with what had been said about Mr. Attlee's chairmanship. A word of thanks was also due to the officials of the Commonwealth Relations Office and to the members of the Secretariat for the assistance which they had given to all Delegations. The South African Delegation were most grateful for the hospitality they had received during their stay in London.

Mr. Liaqat Ali Khan joined in the tributes to Mr. Attlee's chairmanship. He was particularly happy to have had this opportunity of closer contact with his Commonwealth colleagues. He hoped that the ties between the Commonwealth countries would be strengthened by this Meeting.

Mr. Senanayake expressed his great pleasure at having been able to attend the Meeting as the representative of Ceylon.

Mr. Beasley said that the Meeting had been of great educative value for all taking part in it. It had provided for each Commonwealth Government an opportunity to gain a clearer understanding of the problems and viewpoints of the others.

Mr. Fraser said that Mr. Attlee's fair and forbearing chairmanship had done much to ensure the success of the Meeting. He himself had been much impressed by the spirit of mutual accommodation shown throughout the proceedings. He had derived great pleasure from the presence of the representatives of India, Pakistan and Ceylon. This had been an inspiration to them all, and he hoped that these countries would derive from their Commonwealth membership strength and confidence in facing the great tasks before them. He himself believed that the world had rarely seen anything finer than the courage and enlightenment shown by Mr. Attlee's Government in recognising the rights of these peoples who had so long been struggling to achieve their independent destiny. This indeed was an example which had been an inspiration to the world.

Mr. Attlee, in concluding the conference, expressed his gratitude for the assistance given to him by his colleagues in the United Kingdom Government and for the spirit of helpful co-operation shown by all the representatives of Commonwealth countries throughout the discussions.

ANNEX

FINAL COMMUNIQUÉ

The Final Plenary Session of the Meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers was held at No. 10 Downing Street this morning. At the end of the meeting the representatives of the other Commonwealth Governments placed on record their sincere thanks to the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom for presiding over the meetings and for his constant and valuable help.

The purpose of these informal meetings of Commonwealth Prime Ministers is to provide opportunities for a free exchange of views on matters of common concern.

The meetings held during the past two weeks have covered many such matters of common concern, including international relations, economic affairs and defence. The discussions have shown a substantial community of outlook among all the Commonwealth Governments in their approach to present world problems. Fundamentally, this approach is based upon their support of the objectives of the United Nations as an instrument for world peace and their determination to make its work fully effective. All the Commonwealth Governments are resolved to work together and with other Governments to establish world peace on a democratic basis.

In furtherance of these objectives, the representatives of Commonwealth Governments affirmed their purpose to build up the economic strength of their countries and to take all appropriate measures to deter and resist aggression. At the same time they will do their utmost to encourage an increased production of wealth so as to achieve higher standards of living, especially for the peoples of the less developed countries of the world, as a constructive contribution to the preservation of world peace.

The economic forecast for the coming years made by the United Kingdom Government for the Organisation for European Economic Co-operation was considered in order to give the other Commonwealth countries an opportunity to examine its implications for their own economies. The conference re-affirmed the desirability for all the Commonwealth Governments, in formulating their policies, to consult with one another, so far as practicable, so that each can co-operate by taking into account the needs and policies of the others.

The United Kingdom Government outlined the nature of its association with other Western European nations under the Brussels Treaty, as a regional association within the terms of the United Nations Charter. There was general agreement that this association of the United Kingdom with her European neighbours was in accordance with the interests of the other members of the Commonwealth, the United Nations, and the promotion of world peace. It was agreed that other Commonwealth Governments should be kept in close touch with the progress of this co-operation with Western Europe.

The Conference was impressed by the value of the discussions which had taken place at the Ministerial level and expressed a general desire to maintain and extend methods of consultation between the Governments of the Commonwealth. Recommendations for improving Commonwealth consultation on foreign affairs, economic affairs and defence are being submitted to the Governments for consideration and decision.

The Meeting recorded its support for Ceylon's application for membership of the United Nations. The representatives of all the other Commonwealth Governments took note of the constitutional documents published by the Ceylon Government in Ceylon Sessional Paper XXII of 1947 under the title "The Independence of Ceylon" and in Ceylon Sessional Paper III of 1948 under the title "The Constitution of Ceylon." They agreed to take this opportunity of their meeting in London to place on record their recognition of Ceylon's independence and to affirm that Ceylon enjoys the same sovereign independent status as the other self-governing countries of the Commonwealth which are members of the United Nations.

This meeting included for the first time the Prime Ministers of India, Pakistan and Ceylon. Their presence symbolised the extension of the bounds of democratic freedom which reflects the spirit and steadfast purpose of the Commonwealth. These new representatives of sovereign nations brought to the deliberations of their colleagues from the other free countries of the Commonwealth the wisdom of their ancient civilisations vivified by the dynamism of the modern age. This blending of the West and the East in the lofty task of building a lasting peace on the foundations of freedom, justice and economic prosperity provides a new hope for harassed mankind.

PRIME MINISTERS' MEETINGS, LONDON

1. The Acting Prime Minister made a preliminary report upon the Commonwealth meetings which had concluded the preceding week with the issue of an agreed communiqué. The full report of proceedings would be reviewed and considered by the Cabinet at a later stage.

Meantime, it was to be noted that it was being proposed that meetings of Commonwealth Prime Ministers be held every two years and meetings on foreign affairs annually at the Ministerial level.

2. Mr. St. Laurent said that, at the meetings, he had taken the general line which had been agreed upon by Cabinet at the meeting of October 12th.

It was evident that Ireland was determined to sever the remaining link with the Commonwealth though the Irish Ministers wished to maintain some form of association with Commonwealth nations. The Prime Minister of India had made it clear that his country would have to take a somewhat similar line.

The Canadian position had been that Canada would take no initiative to change the present position. The link through the Crown was satisfactory for our purposes. The Canadian government would not, however, raise any barrier to any other form of association which might be worked out by others. Any new arrangements proposed would be considered on their merits.

It had been agreed that as a matter of practice, though without formal action, the word "British" would be dropped from "British Commonwealth of Nations."

With respect to defence policy, it had been requested that the Canadian view be circulated to those participating in the meetings, viz., that it would be unrealistic to enter into exclusively Commonwealth arrangements on a regional basis; further, that defence arrangements between Canada and the United States had to remain the exclusive concern of the governments of those two countries.

It was hoped that Commonwealth governments would be able to reach decisions upon the recommendations resulting from the conference within a comparatively short time.

3. Mr. St. Laurent added that, with respect to the status of High Commissioners, it had been agreed that these officials would take precedence with Ambassadors according to their dates of appointment. No change in their titles was being recommended for the present.

4. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted with approval the Acting Prime Minister's report.

MACHINERY FOR CONSULTATION BETWEEN COMMONWEALTH GOVERNMENTS

The question of machinery for consultation between Commonwealth governments has been proposed by the United Kingdom Prime Minister for inclusion in the agenda for the meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers which is to open in London on October 11.

2. The present system for Commonwealth consultation is complex, varied, and flexible, and preserves the principle that decisions on major questions of policy are, in the last resort, the responsibility of the Government and Parliament of each of the Commonwealth nations. The methods at present available for Commonwealth consultation are:

(a) Communications between governments, by telegram or despatch, through the channel of the Commonwealth Relations Office and the External Affairs ministries.

(b) Communications from Prime Minister to Prime Minister, either through the same channel or directly by telegram, telephone, or letter.

(c) Meetings of Prime Ministers.

(d) High Commissioners.

(e) Conferences and committees on special subjects.

3. There have been frequent suggestions that this system would be improved by the formation of a permanent Commonwealth secretariat. The latest of these was made by Viscount Bruce<sup>14</sup> of Melbourne, speaking in the House of Lords on February 17. In addition to the secretariat, Bruce proposed a Council of British Nations, composed essentially of the Prime Ministers of the great self-governing parts of the Empire. This body would hold plenary meetings, replacing the Imperial Conferences; meetings on special questions such as finance or transport, attended by the cabinet ministers concerned; and monthly meetings in London under the presidency of the United Kingdom Prime Minister, at which the Dominions would be represented by their High Commissioners, supplemented by any Dominion cabinet ministers who might happen to be in London. The Commonwealth secretariat, besides handling the business of this Council, might assume the task of arranging and giving continuity and coordination to the numerous ad hoc meetings of experts on special subjects.

4. While the Australian Government has not appeared to favour this plan unreservedly, it has been under considerable pressure from an Opposition campaign for Empire unity, led by the former Prime Minister, R.G. Menzies. Attached is a copy of a recent article by Mr. Menzies in the Listener,† which will show the line he takes. Dr. Evatt, in a broadcast on September 6, referred approvingly to Mr. Curtin's wartime proposals and declared that Australia would support "any progressive step designed to strengthen the system of cooperation within the Commonwealth." Mr. Fraser, the Prime Minister of New Zealand, has shown some tendency to favour permanent machinery for Commonwealth consultation, but appears to be keeping an open mind. The line which may be taken by United Kingdom supporters of a somewhat closer Commonwealth organization is indicated in an editorial in the Economist of September 18, of which a copy is attached†: it urges closer coordination in foreign policy and defence, and looks upon the growth of Commonwealth committees on special questions as the main opportunity "for evolving a joint Commonwealth policy and for ensuring that the Dominions speak with one voice when the need arises."

5. Annexed is a survey of the principal minor Commonwealth bodies in which Canada participates,† which may be of interest in this connection.

<sup>14</sup> Le haut-commissaire de l'Australie au Royaume-Uni.
High Commissioner for Australia in United Kingdom.

6. Extracts from the Imperial Conference reports of 1923, 1926, and 1930 dealing with Commonwealth consultation are also annexed.†

7. Any Australian pressure for a more formal organization of the Commonwealth would doubtless be based on the rather questionable assumption that such an organization would enable them to ensure that United Kingdom policy would in future subordinate the special interests of the United Kingdom to those of other Commonwealth countries, and particularly of Australia. The experience of the last war does not appear to confirm this assumption. While the United Kingdom will no doubt always defend Australia's interests when she can do so without detriment to her own, the fact remains that in the crisis of the war she was forced to choose between defending her own coasts and those of Australia, and made the same choice that any other country would have made in the same position. No Commonwealth machinery would have made any difference to this choice.

8. If, however, some members of the Commonwealth insist upon integrating their own government machinery with that of the United Kingdom to some extent, with the hope of achieving greater influence on United Kingdom policy, it might become desirable to recognize that, in view of the growing regional interests of Commonwealth members and of their different attitudes towards Commonwealth association, it may not be possible to lay down any general rules as to consultation. It might be better to have the principle accepted that consultation between governments is a matter for those governments themselves to determine in each case, and that it may happen to be desirable, in any given case, to have much closer consultation between certain members of the Commonwealth than with others.

9. If, following the recognition of this principle, some inner-circle organization was set up in which Australia and New Zealand participated with the United Kingdom, while Canada, South Africa, India, Pakistan, and Ceylon remained outside, there would of course be a certain amount of domestic pressure within Canada which might make it difficult for the Canadian Government to maintain a policy of non-participation. Much would depend on the impression which would be given as to the nature and purpose of the inner circle, and it would obviously be to the interest of the Australian Government to magnify its importance and value. The present set-up seems, on the whole, to meet more adequately the dual requirements of cooperation and flexibility.

London, November 2, 1948

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to enclose the text of recommendations on the subject of Commonwealth consultation which, as all Commonwealth Governments will no doubt have been informed by their representatives there present, it was agreed at the 13th

Meeting on Thursday, 21st October, of the recent Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Meeting in London, should be submitted to all Commonwealth Governments in this form for approval.<sup>15</sup>

2. At the 14th Meeting on the same day, Mr. St. Laurent, speaking on behalf of Canada, said that in view of the historic position of Canada he wished to make it clear, so far as Canada was concerned, that in agreeing to arrange co-operative action in matters of defence, it would be unreal for Canada to regard as effective either general or regional plans of defence which would comprise Commonwealth countries exclusively, and which did not include other peace-loving countries who are prepared to co-operate in resisting aggression.

3. At the 15th Meeting on the 22nd October it was also agreed, having regard especially to the possibility that Commonwealth Governments might soon be pressed to give information about these recommendations in their Parliaments, that Commonwealth Governments should be invited to reach decisions on them as quickly as possible, and in any event by the end of November. It was further agreed that in the meanwhile there should be no publication of the recommendations in any country.

4. The United Kingdom Government for their part are giving urgent consideration to the recommendations, and I shall not fail to inform you of the result of that consideration as soon as possible. In the meanwhile it would be appreciated if other Commonwealth Governments could also be considering their attitude in the matter and would advise me, and other Commonwealth Governments, of their decisions as soon as they are available.

I have, etc.

The text of the recommendations is included in the Canadian commentary (enclosure to the following document). Those proposals were preceded in the original document by the following preamble:

"Discussions during the meeting have demonstrated the value to Commonwealth Governments of consultation with one another on foreign and economic affairs, defence and other matters of common concern. Although the exchange of information is fuller at the present time than it has ever been, it is especially important that consultation should take place early while policy is still in the formative stages. The meeting recommend, subject to endorsement by the respective Governments, the following arrangements for Commonwealth consultation, which in part reflect existing practice: —"

RE PROPOSAL FOR COMMONWEALTH CONSULTATION — REQUEST FOR CANADIAN APPROVAL

At the meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers, held in London on October 21, 1948, it was agreed that certain proposals relating to Commonwealth consultation should be submitted to the Governments concerned "for approval". These proposals were reproduced in an Annex to the minutes of the meeting.

2. The approval of the Canadian Government has now been sought by the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations. Presumably, you would wish to send an early reply, at least of an interim character. I understand that an item relating to this matter has been included on the Agenda of the Cabinet meeting planned for Thursday, November 4.

3. Attached is a Commentary which reproduces the text of, and discusses in order, the several proposals contained in the Annex.

4. It would appear desirable, at any rate on the basis of the attached Commentary, to provide the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations with an interim reply indicating that:

(a) The proposals in the form in which they appear in the minutes of the meeting of October 21, other than Proposals 2 and 6, are acceptable in principle to the Government of Canada, although a further opportunity may be taken of making some observations;

(b) Proposals 2 and 6 are not acceptable to the Canadian Government in their present form and that a separate message in respect of these proposals will be sent shortly, setting out whatever modifications suggest themselves.

5. I have been given to understand that the meeting of October 21 was hurried by the imminent departure of Dr. Evatt and that, in fact, the revised text of the Annex to the minutes was not subsequently submitted to a meeting of the Prime Ministers. If this is correct, it might be possible to reserve the Canadian position on Proposals 2 and 6 in the manner suggested until the text can be further studied and the Cabinet has been provided with a later opportunity of considering the modifications which might usefully be suggested.

6. I enclose a draft interim telegram to Canada House for your consideration.† If this is approved, a further telegram will have to be sent forward shortly.

PROPOSALS FOR COMMONWEALTH CONSULTATION

The present Commentary reproduces the text of, and discusses in order, each of the proposals for Commonwealth consultation contained in the Annex to the minutes of the meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers held at 10 Downing Street, S.W.1, on Thursday, October 21, 1948.

PROPOSAL 1

Text: "Meetings of Commonwealth Prime Ministers will be held as often as is practicable."

Comment: This proposal seems acceptable. Such meetings have in fact been held every two years since 1944, but it would no doubt be undesirable to formalize this practice.

PROPOSAL 2

Text: "In the intervals between those meetings Commonwealth meetings on foreign affairs will be held at the Ministerial level at least once a year and twice a year if possible. These meetings will normally be held in one or other of the Commonwealth countries. The first of these meetings will be held in Ceylon."

Comment: This proposal seems to require some modification. It is, of course, useful to have close contact among the Commonwealth Ministers concerned with external affairs. However, it is felt that it would be undesirable to enter into a definite agreement to participate in formal meetings held annually or twice a year in the Commonwealth countries in turn. There would be serious political difficulties in securing adequate attendance at such peripatetic gatherings. Such meetings, would, moreover, give the impression that the Commonwealth was speaking with one voice in external affairs.

It need not be added that the value of conferences of the kind proposed must be measured carefully in terms of the cost in time and money to the governments concerned, and of the likelihood or otherwise that practical results will be achieved which could not be achieved in other ways.

It is, however, common practice to hold informal discussions among the heads of Commonwealth delegations at international meetings, in particular during the regular annual sessions of the General Assembly of the United Nations. It is agreed that it would be undesirable to advertise this, since it would be construed as a "ganging-up". It might, nevertheless, be possible to arrange to hold formal meetings, annually, immediately following the regular session of the General Assembly. This would not suggest a "ganging-up" for Assembly purposes. Moreover, it would go some distance toward meeting the proposal arrived at in London. At any such meeting the necessity or desirability of holding a further meeting of Ministers, whether formal or otherwise, during the year could be discussed. Certainly, while the desire implicit in the Ceylon proposal — to suit the convenience of the “new” members of the Commonwealth — is appreciated, there may well be practical difficulties in the way of the Secretary of State for External Affairs undertaking to attend a meeting in Ceylon during the next six months. Consideration might therefore be given to re-expressing Proposal 2 as follows:

“A meeting on foreign affairs will be held by the Heads of Commonwealth delegations to the General Assembly of the United Nations immediately following the conclusion of each regular annual session of the Assembly. At such meetings the necessity or desirability of further meetings on foreign affairs at the Ministerial level will be discussed.”

PROPOSAL 3

Text: “Greater use will be made of facilities in London for consultation and the exchange of information. In addition to their contacts with the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations and his staff:

(i) Commonwealth High Commissioners in London have direct access to the Foreign Secretary. Meetings between the Foreign Secretary and individual High Commissioners will be held more frequently. Meetings between the Foreign Secretary and two or more High Commissioners will also be arranged from time to time, as occasion requires, for the discussion of matters of common interest.

(ii) Political Secretaries (or comparable officials) attached to the staffs of Commonwealth High Commissioners in London also have direct access to the Foreign Office. Meetings between them and officials of the Foreign Office, either individually or in groups, will be arranged as required.

Other Commonwealth Governments will endeavour to make comparable arrangements in their capitals.”

Comment: These suggestions seem acceptable. The Canadian Government is already making the fullest use of the facilities in London for consultation and exchange of information. The Commonwealth Relations Office, the Foreign Office, Treasury and other Government Departments have been ready to discuss matters of common interest at any time with Canadian Ministers and officials. In Canada, the Secretary of State for External Affairs deals with Commonwealth relations as well as with foreign affairs. Accordingly, no additional arrangements seem to be required in Ottawa to ensure ready access by the High Commissioners of other Commonwealth countries, and the members of their staff, to the Minister and officials dealing with these subjects.

PROPOSAL 4

Text: “(a) Commonwealth meetings on economic and financial questions of common concern will be held at the Ministerial level when required and practicable. These meetings will normally be held in one or other of the Commonwealth countries, according to circumstances. Where a particular problem directly concerns only some of the Commonwealth countries, the meeting might be confined to representatives of those countries.

(b) For the discussion of matters affecting only two Commonwealth countries meetings of Ministers or officials will also be held as necessary; and, where appropriate, formal machinery could be established for this purpose on the lines of the recently constituted continuing Canada-United-Kingdom Economic Committee.

(c) The existing contacts between officials of Commonwealth Governments concerned with financial and economic matters will be maintained and extended, and in particular there will be more frequent interchange of visits."

Comment: Proposal 4 is generally acceptable. It describes the type of consultation which now takes place between Commonwealth countries on economic and financial questions.

PROPOSAL 5

Text: "(a) To meet present needs the existing Commonwealth Liaison Committee for the European Recovery Programme, which includes officials of all Commonwealth countries, will under the title "Commonwealth Economic Information Committee" serve in London as a clearing-house for economic information generally to provide the basis for informed consultation between Governments.

(b) Other Commonwealth Governments will endeavour to make comparable arrangements in their capitals."

Comment: There would be no objection from the Canadian standpoint to making use of the existing Commonwealth Liaison Committee for the European Recovery Programme under the new title of "Commonwealth Economic Information Committee" as a clearing house for economic information and to provide the basis for informed consultation between governments.

It would be hoped, of course, that the establishment of this Committee will not affect or duplicate any existing arrangement for consultation between pairs of Commonwealth countries, such as the continuing Joint United Kingdom-Canada Trade Committee.

PROPOSAL 6

Text: "In furtherance of the general aim of co-operation between all peace-loving nations to deter and to resist aggression there will be close consultation between Commonwealth Governments to arrange co-operative action in matters of defence, including those matters which arise from a common interest in the security of a particular region. The military advisers of those Governments will consult together to frame proposals and plans for submission to their respective Governments.

Meetings will be arranged on the Ministerial level, as the occasion demands to discuss defence problems, whether general or regional.

In the system of Commonwealth Service Liaison Officers there already exists machinery for the exchange of military information of general interest, and Commonwealth Governments will consider how that machinery can be improved to render it fully effective as a means of exchanging information about the progress of the defence plans, whether general or regional, and securing the maximum appropriate degree of defence co-ordination."

Comment: This proposal should be read with the reservation circulated by Mr. St. Laurent following the Prime Ministers meetings; in this it was stated that "general or regional plans of defence" to be realistic would have to include other countries as well as the nations of the Commonwealth. This is particularly true of the United States.

There can be no objection to "close consultation between Commonwealth Governments to arrange co-operative action in matters of defence." Indeed the Canadian Government has always been ready and willing to have such consultations with other Governments. On the other hand the text of the proposal can be taken to mean that the "military advisors" of the Commonwealth nations will "frame proposals and plans" of a joint character for what is still known in some circles as "Commonwealth defence". This would be quite unrealistic. Further, it would cut across the consultation and planning which is taking place at present.

It is understood that the text of this recommendation was formulated in a hurry because Dr. Evatt had to leave immediately for Paris; in its revised form it was not submitted to a meeting of the Prime Ministers.

For these reasons it is suggested that a modification of the first paragraph of this recommendation be proposed by the Canadian Government. It would probably be best from the Canadian point of view if the last sentence of the first paragraph could be dropped altogether. This may not be regarded as feasible at this stage in which event a new form of words should be suggested in which reference is made to Mr. St. Laurent's reservation concerning participation by non-Commonwealth countries.

If this course is agreeable to the Cabinet, a draft provision along these lines could be submitted for consideration.

PROPOSAL 7

Text: "The arrangements summarized above will supplement but will not supersede the existing channels of communication between Commonwealth Governments. In London the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations will continue to be responsible for relations with other Commonwealth Governments."

Comment: No comment seems to be required other than that the proposal is acceptable.

COMMONWEALTH PRIME MINISTERS' MEETING; RECOMMENDATIONS ON CONSULTATION

6. The Acting Prime Minister, referring to discussion at the meeting of October 27th, submitted and read the text of the proposals on Commonwealth consultation resulting from the recent meeting of Prime Ministers in London.

(Annex to Minutes of meeting of Prime Ministers, Oct. 21, 1948, attached hereto).†

7. Mr. St. Laurent explained the circumstances in which these proposals had been formulated and gave some account of the discussions on certain of the recommendations submitted.

It had been made clear that the Canadian government were satisfied with existing arrangements for consultation; these were working well so far as Canada was concerned. We felt no need for these arrangements being formalized.

In particular, with respect to proposal 6 (defence co-operation), the Canadian position had been reserved. A minute had been circulated to the representatives of all Commonwealth governments with the minutes of the meeting to the effect that the Canadian government regarded as unrealistic joint defence planning exclusively between Commonwealth nations.

The representative of South Africa had also demurred to certain of the proposals. On the understanding, however, that they were going forward merely for consideration by governments, Mr. Louw had agreed to the draft document.

8. The Minister of National Defence and Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs submitted a memorandum for the Acting Prime Minister and a draft commentary upon each of the proposals from the Prime Ministers' meeting. It was suggested that an interim message be sent to other Commonwealth governments to the effect that proposals 2 and 6 were not acceptable to the Canadian government in their present form; the other proposals did not appear to offer objection from the Canadian point of view since they merely described existing practice.

(Minister's memorandum for the Acting Prime Minister, Nov. 4, 1948, and attached draft telegram† and commentary on proposals for Commonwealth consultation).

9. Mr. Claxton drew particular attention to proposal 2 recommending meetings on foreign affairs at the Ministerial level at least once a year and twice a year if possible; also to proposal 6 respecting consultation and co-operative action in matters of defence.

The proposal for Ministerial meetings on foreign policy was open to objection on practical and political grounds. Suitable revision would avoid certain of these difficulties; alternatively the government might consider it preferable to refuse approval.
