Proposal 6 on defence should be related to the reservation circulated by Mr. St. Laurent following the London meeting. General regional plans for defence to be realistic would have to include other countries as well as nations of the Commonwealth. While the Canadian government were ready and willing to consult with other Commonwealth governments, the text of the proposal could be taken to mean that "the military advisers" of Commonwealth nations would frame joint plans. This would be quite unrealistic and would cut across planning which was now taking place. Proposal 6 would have to be modified substantially or approval should not be given on behalf of Canada.

The other proposals were not intrinsically objectionable but, in the circumstances, it might be advisable for the government to state in general terms the Canadian viewpoint on consultative arrangements, rather than to deal with them textually in a message to other Commonwealth governments.

10. Mr. St. Laurent observed that it was probably inevitable that the proposals would be made public after they had been considered by the various Commonwealth governments.

11. The Cabinet, after considerable discussion, agreed that the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs prepare for consideration at a meeting the following day a draft message to Commonwealth governments along the following lines:

(a) The Canadian government were fully satisfied with present arrangements for consultation between governments of the Commonwealth; these arrangements had proved in practice to be workable and effective as had been indicated by the Canadian representative at the Prime Ministers' meeting.

(b) The Canadian government did not favour any attempt to formalize these arrangements; such formalization was unlikely to strengthen or improve the present situation which facilitated the exchange of information and consultation on a continuing informal basis at Ministerial and official levels;

(c) In particular, the Canadian government were opposed to the formalization of arrangements for consultation and cooperative action in relation to defence; as had been clearly indicated by the Canadian representative at the Prime Ministers' meeting, it would be unreal for Canada to regard as effective either general or regional defence planning on an exclusively Commonwealth basis; for these reasons, the Canadian government could not approve of the proposal of the Prime Ministers' meeting on this subject.

(d) The Canadian government, as was well known, were opposed to the establishment of machinery which would create the impression that the Commonwealth nations were being organized in order that one of them might speak for others in external affairs; in the Canadian view, the solution of present difficulties lay in the first instance in realistic regional arrangements in which Commonwealth nations would play their part; this had been made clear by the Canadian representative at the Prime Ministers' meeting.

...

858.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], November 5, 1948

...

COMMONWEALTH PRIME MINISTERS' MEETING; RECOMMENDATIONS ON CONSULTATION

1. The Acting Prime Minister submitted and read a draft circular telegram to Commonwealth governments prepared by the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs following the discussion at the previous meeting.

(Text of proposed circular telegram, Nov. 5, 1948).

2. The Cabinet, after considerable discussion approved (with certain revisions), for immediate despatch, the draft circular message as submitted by the Acting Prime Minister, subject to final settlement of the terms of paragraph 7 by Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Claxton.

...

859.

DEA/50024-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in United Kingdom*

TELEGRAM 1872

Ottawa, November 5, 1948

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

My immediately following telegram gives the text of a communication from the Canadian government to the United Kingdom government and other Commonwealth governments on the subject of the proposals on Commonwealth consultation recited in the Annex to the Minutes of the meeting of Prime Ministers held in London on October 21.

2. I should be grateful if you yourself would give this communication in writing to Mr. Attlee or Mr. Noel-Baker. We are giving similar instructions to our High Commissioners in Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and India and are sending the communication direct to the Prime Ministers of Pakistan and Ceylon.

3. In transmitting the communication please add orally that we understand that the "proposals on Commonwealth consultation" are not to be made public for the present at all events. Presumably they would be published only by common consent. If they are published, we would of course make public our own views as set out in our communication to other Commonwealth governments.

4. Naturally you will report to us any observations you may wish to make on the reception accorded the statement of our views.

5. I am repeating to Mr. Pearson in Paris this telegram and the immediately following one and am asking him in his discretion to give copies of the text of our communication to the heads of Commonwealth delegations in Paris. I am suggesting to him that before doing this he have a word with you in view of your having been present throughout the Commonwealth discussions. Ends.

860.

DEA/50024-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in United Kingdom*

TELEGRAM 1873

Ottawa, November 5, 1948

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Following is the text of the message referred to in my immediately preceding telegram. Text begins:

The Cabinet has given consideration to the proposals on Commonwealth consultation recited in the Annex to the minutes of the meeting of Prime Ministers held in London on October 21.

2. For the most part, this document describes certain of the existing arrangements for consultation among the nations of the Commonwealth. As the document itself says, "the exchange of information is fuller at the present time than it has ever been" and in this observation the government of Canada fully concurs.

3. As was emphasized by Mr. St. Laurent at the recent meetings in London, the present arrangements for consultation have proved in practice to be workable, flexible and effective. Consultations are daily taking place in London and elsewhere at ministerial and official levels.

4. While it is true that, so far as Canada is concerned, most of the proposals restate existing practices in Commonwealth consultation, the fact of their being stated formally might create the impression in some quarters that they represent something new or different.

5. The proposal contained in paragraph 2 is to the effect that regular meetings of ministers to discuss foreign affairs should be held once or twice a year. No doubt occasions will arise, in the future as in the past, when it will be desirable for Ministers of Commonwealth governments concerned with external problems to meet together. We regard as impracticable, however, any attempt to fix definite timetables for regular meetings of ministers who have to carry heavy responsibilities at home, particularly if all Commonwealth countries are to be represented at every meeting. It is our view that such meetings should and will be held among ministers when it is desirable and practicable for them to take place. The value of all conferences must be measured carefully in terms of the likelihood or otherwise that practical results would be achieved which might not be achieved in other ways. Moreover, definite provision for regular meetings at fixed intervals might create the impression in certain quarters that the nations of the Commonwealth were being organized in order that some one of them might speak for the others. Such a situation would be as unacceptable as it would be unworkable.

6. The proposal contained in paragraph 6, which relates to matters of defence, must be considered in the light of the definition of Canada's attitude by Mr. St. Laurent which was circulated with the document under review:

"In view of the historic position of Canada, I wish to make it clear, so far as Canada is concerned, that in agreeing to recommend consultation between Commonwealth governments to arrange cooperative action in matters of defence, it would be unreal for us to regard as effective either general or regional plans of defence which would comprise Commonwealth countries exclusively, and which did not also include other peace-loving countries prepared to cooperate in resisting aggression."

7. Canada is ready at all times to exchange information and consult with the nations of the Commonwealth in order that each may be in a position to decide how its resources may be used most effectively in the defence of peace. However, as was clearly stated by Mr. St. Laurent at the meeting of Prime Ministers, it would be unreal for us to contemplate military planning on any basis that would not extend to other than Commonwealth nations. It is our understanding that the suggestion that the "military advisers" of the Commonwealth nations "will consult together to frame proposals and plans for submission to their respective governments," refers to the existing or similar arrangements for liaison and exchange of information and consultation. Any other interpretation of this proposal would, as Mr. St. Laurent indicated at the meeting, be completely unrealistic, especially in view of the consultation and planning which must be expected to take place in connection with the proposed North Atlantic Security Pact and possibly other similar regional arrangements capable of expansion to include all freedom-loving nations.

8. The other proposals, as we have said, generally describe existing machinery for consultation and cooperation. We see only danger ahead in any effort either to formalize or to change substantially procedures which are already working satisfactorily. This does not mean that such procedures must always remain the same. Arrangements are constantly developing to meet changing needs and circumstances and this has been the traditional pattern of development within the Commonwealth.

9. We believe that the system of responsible and representative government worked out over the years is the best system yet developed for the government of our people. Under that system, decisions on major questions of foreign policy and defence are not made by military officers or by individual ministers or by representatives in another country; they are made by the Cabinet which is responsible through Parliament to the people. We have always insisted on this principle.

10. The Canadian government cannot accept any proposal or any interpretation of these proposals which could be regarded as a departure from this principle. Ends.

861.

DEA/50024-40

*Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1980

London, November 8, 1948

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Reid from Robertson, Begins: Reference your telegrams Nos. 1872 and 1873 of November 5th.

I have today given Mr. Noel-Baker the text of the Canadian Government's comments on the Prime Ministers' Meeting's paper on Commonwealth Consultation. He confirmed my understanding that that paper is to remain confidential until November 30th in any event, and preferably until general agreement is reached on the desirability of it being made public. Noel-Baker understands that if the original paper is published, the Canadian Government would wish to publish its memorandum of comment and interpretation simultaneously.

2. No other comments on the Prime Ministers' paper have yet been received from any other Commonwealth Government. Pearson to whom I spoke this morning, was disinclined to circulate copies of our memorandum to the other Commonwealth delegations in Paris, but agreed that it might be advisable to let Evatt and Peter Fraser know the tenor of the Canadian comments. Ends.

862.

DEA/50024-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

[Ottawa], December 8, 1948

COMMONWEALTH CONSULTATION: PROGRESS REPORT

As I informed you in earlier memoranda,† the Prime Ministers of both India and South Africa indicated that they were in general accord with Canada's views on the proposals on Commonwealth consultation drawn up at the meeting of Prime Ministers in London. The Prime Minister of Australia had said to our High Commissioner that he was in substantial agreement with our viewpoint and the Acting Prime Minister of New Zealand had said that Canada's position was fully understood by New Zealand and that there had been no expectation that it would be changed. Formal communications have now been received from the United Kingdom, India, New Zealand and Ceylon. As yet we have received nothing formally from Australia, South Africa or Pakistan.

2. In a circular telegram the United Kingdom Government stated that it had carefully considered the recommendations and approved them, and will be ready to give full effect to them. At a meeting of High Commissioners in London on December 3, Mr. Noel-Baker said to Mr. Hudd that the United Kingdom Cabinet had been considering the Canadian comments. He intimated that they were a little disappointed at "the rather negative reply". Noel-Baker said they fully appreciated the traditional Canadian viewpoint but now felt that Commonwealth consultation no longer remained in the realm of theory and that it had in fact progressively assumed practical shape in some form and was operating in certain directions and under certain conditions. The United Kingdom Cabinet view was, therefore, that to the extent that consultations had proved practicable, they could usefully be recorded to our mutual advantage.

3. Mr. Kearney informed us that when Mr. Nehru received the statement of Canada's views on the subject, he indicated his general accord and said that he was satisfied with present arrangements for consultation. We have now received a formal communication from the Indian High Commissioner here, which has already been referred to you, and which is remarkable for the fact that it not only agrees with our views but follows the Canadian statement very closely on a number of points.

4. The New Zealand Government has sent out a circular telegram to the countries concerned, stating that it has considered and approved the London recommendations on Commonwealth consultation in foreign affairs, economic affairs and defence.

5. The Government of Ceylon has also sent out a circular telegram indicating its general agreement with the London recommendations as a basis for consultation with a view to co-operation among Commonwealth countries.

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

863.

DEA/50024-40

*Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2234

London, December 16, 1948

SECRET

Following from Pearson, Begins: Prime Minister of New Zealand, Dr. Evatt and I dined last night with Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations, the Lord Chancellor and Sir Norman Brook. They wished, among other things, to discuss Commonwealth consultation in the light of the replies received to the recommendations made on this matter at the recent Prime Ministers' meetings. I found myself very much in a minority of one, Dr. Evatt and Mr. Fraser pressing me especially hard to do what I could to persuade the Canadian Government to adopt a more positive attitude than that contained in our reply. I pointed out that we thought the specific recommendations on this subject from London were unwise because they involved commitments which would not in fact be kept, and that it would be much better merely to state that meetings should be held whenever desirable or practicable. Both Fraser and Evatt objected to this point of view, and felt that it would be interpreted as meaning that there would be no more consultation in the future than there had been in the last ten years. It was clear from the way they spoke that they were pre-occupied primarily with domestic aspects of this problem, on which they are apparently being continually criticized by their oppositions. They also felt, I think, that while we stressed the impracticability of meetings at stated times, we were really lukewarm to the whole idea of consultations through such meetings. I tried to dispel this feeling by emphasizing that we were always anxious to consult both within and without the Commonwealth on matters of common interest, but that we did not wish to undertake commitments to that end that we would not be able to keep. I added that we were no longer so worried, as we had with reason been worried in the past, about pressures toward institutionalizing such consultation and building up machinery for it. We felt that it was accepted on all sides now that this process was not possible or desirable. Our attitude was determined purely by practical considerations, and on the basis of such considerations I felt that our position was a reasonable one.

2. We afterwards adjourned to 10 Downing Street and joined Mr. Attlee and Sir Stafford Cripps in discussions about India, on which I am reporting separately. Ends.

864.

DEA/50024-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], December 18, 1948

COMMONWEALTH CONSULTATION PROPOSALS: ATTITUDE OF COMMONWEALTH GOVERNMENTS

It may be convenient for you to have a brief summary of the position taken by the other Commonwealth governments on the proposals as to Commonwealth consultation which were made at the meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers.

2. The Governments of the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, Pakistan, and Ceylon have approved the proposals.

3. The position of the Government of India is practically identical with that of the Canadian Government.

4. The Government of South Africa has not yet replied; but the Prime Minister of South Africa told the High Commissioner for Canada on November 11 that the views of the South African Government were in agreement with those of the Canadian Government.

5. As soon as the replies of all the Commonwealth countries concerned have been received, the United Kingdom Government will communicate with us again.

6. It may, I suppose, be assumed that Southern Rhodesia is not one of "the Commonwealth countries concerned." There seems to be some haziness in London as to the status of Southern Rhodesia, judging by the King's reference to "the nine members of the Commonwealth" in his Buckingham Palace speech of welcome.

7. The decision of Australia to support the proposals, without any reservations or comments, is surprising, in view of Mr. Chifley's statement to Mr. Greene on November 8 that he was substantially in agreement with the Canadian view. However, a close examination of his written reply to Mr. Greene, dated November 23, indicates that the apparent inconsistency may have been due to a certain vagueness in his complete statement, or else that he later decided to expand this oral statement in such a way as to imply that the Australian Government, while agreeing with the Canadian view that present methods of consultation are satisfactory, felt that the new proposals constituted no departure from present practice and should be accepted. The text of this letter follows:

"I acknowledge with thanks the receipt of your letter dated 8th November setting out the views of the Canadian Government regarding the proposals made at the London Conference concerning Commonwealth consultations.

"I am in general agreement with the views expressed and I believe the present methods of consultation are satisfactory. The suggestions put forward at the Conference constitute no real departure from existing practice, but rather an endeavour to ensure regular consultation at a ministerial level. The real question is whether the proposals will prove practicable, and experience alone will tell."

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

3<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 3

STATUT DE L'INDE DANS LE COMMONWEALTH STATUS OF INDIA IN COMMONWEALTH

865.

DEA/50023-40

*Le haut-commissaire du Royaume-Uni
au premier ministre*

*High Commissioner for United Kingdom
to Prime Minister*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], August 2, 1948

My dear Prime Minister,

MEETING OF COMMONWEALTH PRIME MINISTERS

I have received a telegram from Mr. Attlee asking me to inform you that, subject to your convenience, he is proposing to arrange for Sir Norman Brook, Secretary to the Cabinet, who will be in charge of the secretarial arrangements for the meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers in October, to pay a flying visit to Ottawa in the near future, for the purpose of conveying to you a personal communication from himself.

He would propose that after delivering this communication to you Sir Norman should then fly on to Canberra and Wellington with a view to conveying a similar communication to Mr. Chifley and Mr. Fraser.

I understand, very confidentially, that the reason for Sir Norman's proposed visit is that Mr. Attlee thinks that it may be desirable on the occasion of the October meeting of Prime Ministers (though not in full conference) to discuss certain questions affecting the constitutional development of the Commonwealth, and he would like to consult you, and also Mr. Chifley and Mr. Fraser, on the point with a view to your turning these matters over in your mind before October. For reasons which you will appreciate, Mr. Attlee attaches extreme secrecy to the suggestion and is most anxious that there should be no outward indication that any such ideas are in mind.

Should it be possible for you to receive Sir Norman Brook in the near future Mr. Attlee would propose that he should visit Ottawa from the 13th – 17th August, proceeding thence to Wellington (24th – 27th August) and Canberra (31st August – 2nd September). Mr. Attlee is most anxious not to disturb you at a time when you will be wishing to take a rest after the strain of the Parliamentary Session and the Liberal Convention, but he would be most grateful if you would consent to receive Sir Norman as his emissary, and in that event perhaps you would be so kind as to say whether the dates proposed for his visit to Ottawa would be convenient to you.

It is hoped that Sir Norman's visit would not attract publicity, but if explanations have to be given it is proposed to say that he is visiting Canada and other Commonwealth countries in order to discuss procedure for the October meeting of Prime Ministers — since as Secretary of the United Kingdom Cabinet he will be in charge of the secretarial arrangements for the meeting.

Yours sincerely,

ALEC CLUTTERBUCK

866.

DEA/50023-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in United Kingdom*

TELEGRAM 1242

Ottawa, August 4, 1948

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Robertson from Pearson, Begins: In a top secret and personal letter, Mr. Attlee has asked Mr. King if he could receive Sir Norman Brook between 13th and 17th August to discuss certain questions affecting the constitutional development of the Commonwealth which will probably come up at the Prime Ministers' meeting in October. Brook would fly from Ottawa to New Zealand and Australia and discuss the same subjects with the Prime Ministers there. Mr. King has indicated that he will receive Sir Norman between the dates in question. They are extremely anxious in London to keep this visit secret.

2. We have no knowledge of what the constitutional questions are, but I suspect they may be pretty far-reaching in character, having to do with Commonwealth organization in the light of the possible admission of Asiatic Dominions. Defence questions may also be in Mr. Attlee's mind. You will, of course, realize Mr. King's difficulties and our own unless we can receive more definite knowledge of the questions which are to be discussed. I was wondering whether you could see Brook personally and confidentially and secure some information on this. I have not told Mr. King that I am asking you to do this and I hope that Brook will likewise not have to inform Mr. Attlee: but I think it would be most helpful if you could see Brook at once and cable whatever information you can get.

867.

DEA/50023-40

*Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1291

London, August 5, 1948

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Pearson from Robertson, Begins: Reference your telegram No. 1242 of 4th August.

1. Machtig had spoken to me about the plans for Brook's visit but had asked me not to say anything about it until Clutterbuck had delivered Attlee's message to the Prime Minister. Brook is not to embark on any discussions but is merely to explain that certain issues may be raised by Mr. Attlee on the occasion of the Prime Ministers' meeting, but not in full conference, and to suggest that some consideration might be given to them beforehand.

2. Brook's visit is not connected with defence questions, but does reflect the United Kingdom Government's concern about problems of Commonwealth relationships arising out of the creation of the three new eastern Dominions. These problems, which Attlee wants to put privately to the Prime Ministers of Australia, Canada, and New Zealand before the Prime Minister's meetings in London in the autumn, are of two kinds. First there is the question of the form of association of the eastern Dominions with the Commonwealth. Pakistan and Ceylon would probably be prepared to accept the crown and the principle of common allegiance to it as sufficient basis for the continuing membership but India, though for reasons of a political and strategic nature anxious to maintain its association with the countries of the British Commonwealth of Nations, may not be prepared to accept the political symbols which the other countries of the Commonwealth use as the sign and instrument of their special relationship with each other.

3. When Nehru comes to London in October or November, he may ask the other Commonwealth countries whether they are prepared to try to devise some new formula for "external" association with the British Commonwealth of Nations which would meet Indian difficulties about the Crown and about a monarchical form of Government, and at the same time would enable India and other countries which might share its political viewpoint to retain some, at any rate, of the advantages of membership in the Commonwealth. (There are some interesting analogies between these Indian aspirations and earlier Irish efforts to invent a plausible formula for external and intermittent association with the Commonwealth. In this connection you might find our despatch No. 406 of March 11th† worth looking at.)

4. I think the disposition here is to go some distance to meet Indian susceptibilities of this sort, cf, their prompt acceptance of Indian preference for the term "Commonwealth citizen" in the new Nationality Act. In doing so, however, they will wish to be careful:

(1) not to weaken or alter the present basis of association with other Commonwealth countries.

(2) not to create two "classes" of membership in the Commonwealth. Whether it is possible to find an answer conforming to these two conditions is, I suppose, the real problem which Mr. Attlee wishes to discuss with the other Commonwealth Prime Ministers.

5. Underlying these more or less superficial and legal problems of technical sovereignty and the forms of external association is a second set of problems which seem even more intractable. The difficulties of a formal constitutional order referred to in the preceding paragraphs are, I think, made fundamentally more formidable than those faced and overcome in 1926, because the group of countries which currently constitute the British Commonwealth of Nations are no longer a "community" in the historic and sociological sense in which the group of countries last defined their relations inter se in 1926 could for some purposes at least, be regarded as a community. In this respect the Commonwealth today suffers and shares the essential weakness and strain of the United Nations, in the sense that for the time being at least, political organization is tending to outrun the sense of community which it may help to create but upon which it must also rest.

6. This lack of a real sense of community within the Commonwealth is most serious as between the eastern Dominions and the rest, though there are inevitably differences in the quality and kind of relationships between any two pairs of Commonwealth countries. There is however, a major and disturbing difference between the kind of relationships based on the community of understanding, interest and tradition that exists between the United Kingdom and Canada and, in degree, between the United Kingdom and each of the other "old line" Dominions, including Ireland, and the relationship with the new Dominions created out of the Indian Empire. This difference is apparent in many ways and makes it increasingly difficult to preserve even the appearance of the pattern of exact equality and mutuality of treatment which was, I suppose, envisaged by the framers of the 1926 declaration. Under present security considerations, for example, set a limit on the exchange of confidential political and defence information between the Government of the United Kingdom and the Government of India. These considerations are unobtrusively present even at routine meetings of High Commissioners, and will certainly complicate the order of business at the next meeting of the Prime Ministers. They are also apparent in the limitations which have had to be adopted in communicating secret information from the Government of the United Kingdom to the new Commonwealth Governments.

7. I think it is against this general background that Mr. Attlee has decided to send Brook out to Canada, Australia and New Zealand in advance of the Prime Ministers' meeting to talk privately and in a preliminary way about these questions which are bound to overhang the Prime Ministers' meeting, but which cannot without great danger be opened up within those meetings themselves. Ends.

868.

DEA/50023-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum by Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], August 17, 1948

MEETING OF COMMONWEALTH PRIME MINISTERS IN LONDON

The Prime Minister, Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Pearson met Sir Alexander Clutterbuck and Sir Norman Brook on 13th August. Sir Norman stated that he had been asked by Mr. Attlee to discuss with Mr. King in a preliminary and informal way some of the matters which might come up at the above meeting.

The first question, the importance of which would be appreciated, was the possibility that some serious reexamination of the whole nature of the Commonwealth would be required. The United Kingdom were certainly not anxious to put this matter on the agenda and would take no initiative in bringing it up, but circumstances might force their hands. This might result from an effort by Nehru to establish membership in the Commonwealth for India on a much looser basis than that which is presently required. In this connection, the Indian leaders have no doubt been carefully watching developments in Ireland where the government has stated that it is not a formal member of the Commonwealth, though it remains in association with the members of the Commonwealth.

If the question has to be discussed in London in October, the United Kingdom will be willing to consider the following criteria for establishing membership in the new Commonwealth (on the assumption, of course, that formal membership goes along with practical and friendly association):

(1) The maintenance of the present position by which membership is determined by the Statute of Westminster.

(2) If countries like India and Ireland and South Africa are unable to accept the above, then the United Kingdom will be willing to accept a form of association by which the separate members have complete control of their own domestic affairs, including the form of their government, but with someone at the head representing the King. In other words, they would accept something along the lines of the Irish External Relations Act, though amended to make it less offensive to the dignity and prestige of the Crown. Under this arrangement, it would be possible, for instance, for India to become a republic with the President of that republic acting also as the King's representative. The United Kingdom see no reason why the title Governor General should be used by the representative in question. This is a matter for determination by the separate members who could call the representative of the King by any name they chose.

The United Kingdom think that the above form of association would be sufficient to maintain the position regarding preference, diplomatic protection, Commonwealth citizenship, etc. There would still be a bond of allegiance between all the King's subjects.

(3) The association with the King might be established by having the head of the member state in the Commonwealth made an Imperial Privy Councillor. This obviously clumsy solution, which seems to have been discussed between Sir Stafford Cripps and Krishna Menon, was not put forward very seriously by Sir Norman Brook and was dismissed by us as being unsatisfactory and unrealistic.

A fourth form of association was mentioned (though not by Sir Norman Brook) by which the nations would be associated, not necessarily through the Crown (though this would be desirable) but as members of a group bound together by common interests which might be expressed in some declaration of intention to work together and to give certain special privileges to the citizens of all members of the group. This would, in fact, be nothing more or less than an association based on an alliance or arrangement of some kind. It would mean, for instance, that three or four members of the group might maintain their allegiance to the Crown while other members of the group would not. All members, however, irrespective of the position of the Crown, would be bound together by common ties.

Sir Norman Brook did not think much of this idea as it would give no formal basis for association; make no concession to the special historical character of the Commonwealth states under the Crown and would, in fact, mean the end of the Commonwealth as we know it now.

On the other hand, it might be argued that to insist on the shadow of a formal link while rejecting the substance of friendly association would be unwise and quixotic.

There was some discussion of the possibility advanced in certain academic circles in the United Kingdom of drawing up a new written constitutional declaration, a new Balfour statement, which would explain the new British Commonwealth. Sir Norman said that the United Kingdom would discourage any such idea, and this met general approval.

Mr. King said that both the difficulties and the advantages of including Asiatic Dominions in the Commonwealth were appreciated in Canada, but that great care would have to be taken in dealing with this matter. He felt that it would be advisable to do away, if possible, with certain expressions which seem to imply a subordination which no longer exists: such words as "British subject", "our Dominions", "Dominion status", "my subjects", or "our subjects". He thought also that the title Governor General was not appropriate and that consideration should be given to changing it. It would be unwise even to discuss proposals for centralization of the Commonwealth, for any Commonwealth secretariat, or "imperial" defence mechanisms. Mr. King also hoped that the forthcoming discussions would be conducted in a very informal and confidential manner without publicity, that there would not be too frequent meetings, and that Prime Ministers could be relieved of all outside public activities in London while they were participating in the discussions.

It was generally agreed that the inclusion of Asiatic Dominions did represent a far-reaching development in Commonwealth affairs, especially in present circumstances when two Dominions, India and Pakistan, have been on the verge of war and had taken their dispute to the United Nations. It was felt that possibly some consideration might be given to some form of Commonwealth tribunal to which Commonwealth disputes could be referred in the first instance. It was also realized that Asiatic Dominions would not have the same sentimental ties with the Commonwealth as certain other Dominions; might not have the same common interests or the same friendly relationships which would inspire confidential discussions.

Sir Norman Brook, while admitting all these difficulties, felt it would be a very great mistake not to take every possible step to keep India and Pakistan in the Commonwealth. The political situation in the future might improve, which would make their association with other members closer and more intimate than appeared to be the case at present.

He frankly admitted that in practice all Dominions could not at present be treated on the same basis in regard to consultation and cooperation. This caused a real difficulty which might, however, be minimized, though not completely removed, by doing away with the idea that all Dominions were on exactly the same basis in this regard; that all meetings had to include all Dominions and that all telegrams and despatches from London had to go to all Dominions. It would be much better frankly to admit that in some cases more limited meetings and more limited consultation was desirable and necessary. If this could become the practice, then the omission of certain Dominions from certain meetings would not be noticeable. There would, in fact, be established certain circles of consultation. But there could not, however, be different circles of membership in the Commonwealth. Status would have to be uniform even if function varied.

Sir Norman Brook also mentioned certain other matters to be discussed at the London meeting as follows:

- (1) The international position generally
- (2) The future of Germany
- (3) The future of Japan
- (4) A review of the strategic position (though this would not involve defence talks)
- (5) Economic questions arising out of the requirements of the United Kingdom long range planning required for E.C.A.

L.B. P[EARSON]

869.

W.L.M.K./J4/Vol. 237

*Note du secrétaire du Cabinet
pour le premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Secretary to Cabinet
to Prime Minister*

SECRET

Ottawa, August 30, 1948

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONSHIPS; ATTITUDE OF U.K. GOVERNMENT

Following the talk which you and Mr. St. Laurent had, on August 13th, with the Secretary of the U.K. Cabinet (Sir Norman Brook) and the U.K. High Commissioner, Pearson, a number of other officials and I had conversations with them on August 16th and 17th.

2. Probably the most significant single impression with which we were left concerning the U.K. government's attitude was their desire to avoid, if possible, any attempt at the forthcoming meetings to devise a new "constitution" for the Commonwealth.

While the main purpose of Brook's current tour is to seek informally the views of the Prime Ministers of the "older members" on possible redefinition of Commonwealth relationships, it is evident that U.K. authorities have come to the opinion that, in present circumstances, the prospects of satisfactory agreement are so remote that it would be better all round if formal discussion of the subject in London can be avoided. At the same time, it is recognized that the Indian situation (or possibly an initiative on the part of the Irish) may make it necessary for something to be done. In any event, the U.K. government propose that the subject be explored while you are in London, but informally and not at sessions of the Prime Ministers' meetings.

3. Having in mind the distinct possibility that the Indian situation or some move by the Irish (or both) may render it necessary to consider some changes of general application in Commonwealth relationships, U.K. Ministers have been examining in a preliminary way a number of proposals. In this connection, Brook gave us the opportunity of looking at two papers prepared in London by a committee of officials for consideration by Ministers. These had been discussed but not approved and Brook had not been authorized to give them to us. (For that reason, the fact that they have been shown to us should be kept particularly confidential).

These papers, while they contain nothing of importance that Brook did not mention, either in conversation with you and Mr. St. Laurent or with the officials whom he met here, confirm our principal impression indicated in paragraph 2 above, namely that the U.K. government are anxious, if at all possible, to avoid at this time any formal redefinition of the nature of the Commonwealth.

4. In the event that it does not prove possible to avoid a general discussion in London on the nature of the Commonwealth, the various suggestions which are being considered by U.K. authorities are of great interest. Some of these are the same or similar to proposals which have been discussed in Ottawa at various times; most of them, I think, are in line with developments which Canadian government representatives have favoured in recent years.

5. Of the suggestions mentioned by Brook (and apparently considered but not decided upon by the U.K. Ministers), the following are among the more significant:

(a) The change, as a matter of practice, from the expression "British Commonwealth of Nations" to "The Commonwealth of Nations".

(b) Introduction of the term "Commonwealth citizen" as alternative to "British subject". (This has already been provided for by the new British Nationality Act.)

(c) Discontinuance of the expressions "Dominion", "Dominion government", etc., and substitution of such phrases as "Commonwealth country", "Member of the Commonwealth", etc. (Apparently no "legal" change is proposed here, but merely a change in practice.)

(d) Use of the term "Commonwealth Prime Ministers" to include the Prime Ministers of all Commonwealth countries, including the United Kingdom.

6. The U.K. government take the position that there is no need for relations between all members of the Commonwealth to be identical; there is scope for a wide variety.

7. As you know, the United Kingdom are even prepared to agree that a "republican" form of government for India is not inconsistent with membership in the Commonwealth, provided that the President is the representative of the King. In fact, the U.K. view is that the title of the King's representative in any member nation is a matter for that nation's own discretion. (This is directly relevant to the question which has been raised here from time to time of a change in the style of the Governor General.)

If it is necessary to consider any change in the King's title, the United Kingdom would probably suggest some such formula as follows:

"George VI King by the Grace of God, Head of all countries of the Commonwealth of Nations, and Defender of the Faith."

8. It became evident in our conversations with Brook that U.K. authorities are inclined to consider the present status of Ireland as the "irreducible minimum" beyond which it would be impossible for any member state to go without terminating completely the Commonwealth relationship. In this connection, the U.K. government are quite anxious to know the intentions of the present Irish government. They are also inclined to think that something should be done to "warn" the Irish that if they go farther they will have to take the consequences of complete separation at least in the eyes of other nations; for example, it would be difficult to continue extension of Imperial preference to Ireland.

9. After examining the possibility of having a "two-class" Commonwealth of British and "associated" nations, U.K. officials conclude that this would afford no satisfactory solution to present problems. It would on the other hand raise a good many new questions of great difficulty.

Another alternative is a "Union of British Commonwealth and Other Nations", a plan which would also involve two classes of members, of which the inner ring would be "British" and the outer, for all practical purposes, "foreign" in rather shadowy alliance.

10. The United Kingdom recognize that the courses mentioned in the preceding paragraph are full of difficulty from the "constitutional" point of view. U.K. Ministers are also acutely conscious of the domestic controversy which would be raised by suggestions for "weakening" the Commonwealth connection. Nevertheless, if the issue is forced, the U.K. government would be willing to consider the proposals for changing the character of the Commonwealth along the lines indicated in the hope of finding a solution which would be generally acceptable. They hope that this will not prove necessary.

11. What the reactions of Australia and New Zealand may be can only be conjectured. Certainly they will find little comfort in the attitude of U.K. Ministers if Dr. Evatt or Mr. Fraser contemplate renewing any of their earlier suggestions such as those for a central secretariat or closer defence arrangements on a Commonwealth basis.

From the Canadian point of view, there are perhaps four principal conclusions to be drawn from Brook's mission:

(a) The United Kingdom will seek to avoid any general discussion of Commonwealth relationships at the London meetings and, so far as possible, will resist any attempt to produce any new "constitutional" declaration.

(b) The U.K. government have no intention of proposing any tightening of the "Imperial" connection, nor have they in mind suggesting any new "centralized" mechanisms such as a Commonwealth secretariat, joint staff, or the like. On the contrary, their present attitude in this respect is much closer to that of the Canadian government than it has ever been.

(c) If the issue is forced by the Indian situation (or by Ireland), the proposals which the United Kingdom would favour are not, in general, of a character which would afford particular difficulty from the Canadian point of view.

(d) The U.K. government will wish to have informal conversations on these questions in London with the representatives of Canada, Australia and New Zealand in anticipation of it proving necessary to have them dealt with at the Prime Ministers' meetings by all members of the Commonwealth.

12. External Affairs are preparing for you detailed memoranda on the various particular questions which may arise in London.

A.D.P. H[EENEY]

870.

DEA/50023-40

Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire du Cabinet

Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary to Cabinet

SECRET

[Ottawa], October 2, 1948

I have received a personal note from Norman Brook which reads as follows:

I promised to let you know how my conversations went in Australia and New Zealand on the constitutional question. There is, in fact, very little to tell. You presumably got a message through Ken Greene to the effect that nothing emerged in Canberra which added anything to the upshot of our conversations in Ottawa: and the same was true of my subsequent talks in Wellington. All seemed to be in full agreement with the provisional conclusions we had reached in Ottawa. The only "development" of any kind occurred — after my conversations were completed — in your country, when Mr. Costello chose to make his announcement about the repeal of the External Relations Act — contrary to the political predictions of all the Prime Ministers whom I had seen, all of whom thought it most unlikely that Eire would in fact take this step! We are now working on a statement of the practical consequences which will follow if Eire becomes a foreign country; and this, we hope, will be put before the meeting in October.

I have also prepared a short statement of the conclusions on the general constitutional issue which we reached in our conversations in August. I had hoped to be able to send that out to the three Governments in advance of the October meeting. But the other pre-occupations of the Ministers in London are such that it seems unlikely that we shall do better than get authority to hand it to you and others immediately upon your arrival in London.

[L.B. PEARSON]

871.

DEA/6133-40

Note du chef de la Direction du Commonwealth Memorandum by Head, Commonwealth Division

SECRET

[Ottawa], October 6, 1948

CONSIDERATIONS ON THE NATURE OF THE COMMONWEALTH<sup>16</sup>

While it might be considered preferable to avoid any fundamental discussion on the nature of the Commonwealth during the forthcoming meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers, it is possible that the question may be raised and that some discussion of it will be unavoidable.

<sup>16</sup> Pearson lut un extrait d'un projet antérieur de cette note (daté du 13 août) lorsqu'il rencontra Brook le 16 août.

Pearson read an extract from an earlier draft (dated August 13) of this memorandum when he met with Brook on August 16.

2. The present structure of the Commonwealth is based on a tacit understanding reinforced by tradition and practice, rather than on constitutional documents. So far as it has a written basis, that basis is to be found in the declaration on inter-imperial relations made by the Imperial Conference of 1926, and in the Statute of Westminster, 1931, which was drafted as a result of discussions arising from that conference.

3. The formula agreed upon in 1926 was, it will be recalled, a compromise between the lingering conception of the Commonwealth as a close-knit group of countries under the leadership of the United Kingdom, and the more realistic view of it as a device by which several governments, independent but closely related in outlook, tradition, and interests, could discuss common problems. In defining the position and mutual relations of Commonwealth members, as existing at that time, the Imperial Conference declaration pointed out that they were "united by a common allegiance to the Crown." Further statements by the Conference assumed a high degree of common interests in external affairs, and in consequence close association through the provision of information and the practice of consultation and cooperation between Commonwealth governments in matters of high policy. Implicit in the formula reached was the assumption that the nations of the Commonwealth were united not only in a constitutional sense but by a common culture and common ideals, which provided an environmental basis for a common political morality among the member nations. It is perhaps not going too far to say that the Balfour formula, while paying lip service to the constitutional basis, recognized that the unity of Commonwealth nations now rested primarily on tradition, common interest, and a common political morality.

4. The international situation during the period undoubtedly influenced thinking on the Commonwealth. There was good reason to suppose that a new and peaceful order had come into being by the establishment of the League of Nations, the reconciliation with Germany which seemed to have been effected by the Locarno settlement, and the widespread disillusionment with war which had resulted from personal experience of its effects. No member state of the Commonwealth was menaced by the possibility of external aggression. Consequently it was not felt desirable or necessary to be explicit about problems which might arise in a more disturbed and chaotic era; e.g., the possibility of one member being neutral while others were at war, and the desirability of regional agreements in which particular members might cooperate, for purposes of security, as closely with foreign states as with other Commonwealth nations, or even more closely. Agreement on the 1926 formula was greatly facilitated by postponement of the consideration of such questions as these.

5. Profound changes have occurred since 1926 both within and without the Commonwealth. The Dominions then in existence have developed and strengthened their position as international units and have established a wide network of diplomatic relations with other states, as well as a quasi-diplomatic service inter se. Dissatisfaction with the settlement of 1921 has impelled Ireland to weaken greatly the formal association with the Crown, which is now, so far as Ireland is concerned, merely an instrument for conducting external relations, and may soon cease to be even that. Three new member states, India, Pakistan, and Ceylon, which had acquired only a thin veneer of the Western democratic political experience common to the older members, have come into existence. The climate of world politics in 1948 is profoundly different from that of 1926; one consequence is that member states are impelled to think of security in terms of regional arrangements with foreign states, especially the United States. Both the United Kingdom and Canada are now thinking in these terms, as witness the development of Western Union and the North Atlantic defence treaty.

6. If the problem of the constitutional basis for the Commonwealth arises during the present meeting of Prime Ministers, it will probably be raised by some one of those member governments which desire a looser arrangement: and their proposals will encounter strong opposition from representatives of these governments which incline to think even the present arrangement too loose.

7. The question therefore arises whether we may not be obliged to recognize that, while it is desirable to keep the present marginal members of the Commonwealth associated with it in some way, it is undesirable to dilute the relationship between the non-marginal members to the same extent that is likely to be necessary for the marginal members. The conclusion to which we may be forced is that there can be no common pattern in the relationships between the members of the Commonwealth. This principle has, in fact, been tacitly accepted for some time: our relations with the United Kingdom are different from our relations with South Africa, and the United Kingdom's relations with Canada are different from their relations with South Africa, New Zealand, or India.

8. Keeping this probability in mind, we may briefly consider the questions of status, the formal constitutional connection, consultation and cooperation, and admission of new members.

A. Status

9. The term "Dominion status", which was useful in earlier stages of Commonwealth development and which even recently has been found convenient to define the position of India, Pakistan, and Ceylon upon the removal of United Kingdom control, is increasingly felt to be inapplicable and even objectionable. It is too frequently taken to imply a status somewhat less than independence, though it should be obvious that some formally independent states, e.g., Egypt, have in fact less independence than, say, Canada. Irish nationalism has found the term unacceptable, and it seems unlikely that Indian nationalism will continue to accept it indefinitely.

10. It may be, therefore, that the term "Dominion status" should be dropped and some new phrase, such as "independence within the Commonwealth" substituted. Such a phrase would be more in line with the facts, and might be more generally acceptable psychologically and politically.

B. Formal Constitutional Connection

11. As the Commonwealth has been a gradual historical development rather than a new contractual association of nations like the United Nations, it has been felt in the past that some historic links must be maintained. Certainly the people of some of the older nations of the Commonwealth would not be prepared to forego these links entirely. The major surviving one is the Crown (or perhaps more precisely the monarchy), which is still an instrument of external association for all member states, even Ireland, and which is regulated as to succession and title by joint legislative procedure of the member states of the Commonwealth. It would not appear to be impossible to adjust the concept of the monarchy to permit of republican institutions for internal purposes. While this might not satisfy Ireland, it may be that India and Pakistan would be prepared to agree to such an arrangement. The link of a common monarchy has some practical importance, as it is difficult to see on what grounds the argument against foreign demands for the abolition of imperial preferences could be based if there is no formal constitutional link whatever between countries granting these preferences to each other.

12. A further link, embodied in United Kingdom law and apparently recognized by the laws of all other Commonwealth nations except Ireland, is that of common citizenship, so-called, though in a very qualified sense. The tendency appears to be for Commonwealth countries to accord to Commonwealth citizens, other than their own citizens, privileges which are not substantially greater than those conceded to aliens, or to certain groups of aliens. Each member nation will no doubt eventually have to decide how far, if at all, it will recognize the common "citizenship" for its own internal purposes, or in external relations.

C. Consultation and Cooperation

13. The declaration of 1926 on the subject of consultation and cooperation were designed to allay the misgivings of those who feared that if each Commonwealth member developed a foreign policy of its own, the result would be confusion. These declarations assumed that there would in future be a considerable measure of exchange of information on high policy and consultation on external policy among Commonwealth members. While it was of course realized that the amount of information to be imparted, or the degree of consultation to be undertaken, must be decided on the responsibility of the initiating government in the light of the general principles laid down at the Conference, and while there was no specific commitment not to discriminate between different governments in these respects, it was nevertheless the practice for some years to include all Commonwealth members when sending out information or requesting views. The 1926 formula also assumed a high degree of cooperation among member nations in matters of high policy. As time went on, however, and the international situation developed in a way to which different Commonwealth governments had different reactions, the policy of non-discrimination became less and less practicable. With the neutrality of Ireland during the Second World War, that policy was abandoned by tacit consent. Following the war there appeared to be some tendency to revive it. However, the deterioration of relations with the Soviet Union and the uncertain attitude of some of the new Commonwealth members, combined with their different cultural backgrounds and many different interests, have reversed this tendency.

14. A division of Commonwealth members into two or more categories, the higher to provide one another with more complete information on external policy, to consult more closely among themselves, and to cooperate more consistently, than the group as a whole, might well be taken to reflect on the principle of equality of status. No doubt the question of status should be kept distinct from the practice of exchanging information, and the habits or methods of consultation and cooperation. Nevertheless, the establishment of different categories of members for these purposes alone would rightly be considered to imply different kinds of membership within the general group. To prevent such a development it will be essential to preserve the understanding that it is for the initiating government to decide to what other governments it will transmit any given piece of information, and which other governments it will consult about any given question, and that there is no obligation to include all Commonwealth members at all times, though this should continue to be regarded as the normal practice.

15. In deciding what governments to inform or consult, two factors will have to be considered: (1) the degree to which the other government has an interest in the matter, and (2) the degree of confidence which may reasonably be felt that the interests of the initiating government will not be endangered by disclosure of the matter to the other government. It is clear that, on some matters, certain members will have a wider common interest than others. For instance, members in the sterling bloc have a common financial interest which is not shared in the same degree by Canada. The interests of Australia and New Zealand in South Pacific security impels a much closer association between them on this matter than among the group as a whole. Similarly, there are the special interests of the United Kingdom and Canada in North Atlantic security arrangements.

16. The distribution of information among members, therefore, and the extent of consultation and cooperation among them, must be determined by members on an empirical, which will at times mean a bilateral, basis. General principles of right or obligation in this regard can scarcely be made to apply to the group as a whole.

17. The present pattern of world politics, and the changed position of the United Kingdom as a world power, clearly indicate that the Commonwealth association can no longer be regarded as the major instrument of its members for their security. Nor has the place of the Commonwealth in this connection yet been filled by the United Nations, however important this organization may become in the future. Under these circumstances, the Commonwealth association must not be permitted to stand in the way of the security of any particular member. In other words, each member state of the Commonwealth must be left free to make whatever security arrangements with foreign states it deems essential. One consequence of this may very well be that individual Commonwealth nations may develop much closer relations in matters of security with a foreign state or with foreign states than with other members of the Commonwealth. The United Kingdom already has closer relations on defence with France and Benelux than it has with any Commonwealth country. This is a further condition limiting the possibility of applying general principles to the exchange of information, and to the practice of consultation and cooperation among Commonwealth nations.

D. Admission of New Members

18. It may be that in the course of the next few years areas now colonial will desire a status of membership within the Commonwealth. Since such areas are now under the control of the United Kingdom Government, the decision whether to grant any particular colonial area the degree of self-government which would give it a claim to be "an independent nation within the Commonwealth" inevitably rests with the United Kingdom. It has never been the practice to have any admission ceremony, whereby member nations as a whole would take collective responsibility for the admission of a new member, as happens in the United Nations; and it seems unlikely that such a development would be favoured. It does, however, seem necessary for each member to decide, in so far as it is concerned, whether the new entity is entitled to membership and hence to the privileges incident thereto. That is, the admission of new members to the Commonwealth would in fact, though not in form, depend on recognition by other members just as does membership in the family of nations. Members might conceivably differ as to whether a new political unit was in fact a member of the Commonwealth, just as occasionally do members of the family of nations as to whether or not a new entity is a state. The difference of opinion would likely be merely a temporary condition, again as is normally the case in the family of nations. It is, however, obvious that it might lead, even so, to much embarrassment: suppose, for example, that a country had been invited to be represented at a meeting of Prime Ministers, on the assumption that it was now a member of the Commonwealth, and that when the meeting convened, only one-third of those present recognized it as a Commonwealth member. The only solution to such a situation would appear to be by a vote, which in Commonwealth meetings would be a revolutionary step.

19. The likelihood of such a situation arising is greatly lessened by the practice, initiated by the United Kingdom in the case of Ceylon, of letting the existing Commonwealth members know beforehand what is proposed, and thereby enabling them, if they so desire, to state any difficulty they might feel about recognizing the new member. Such a safeguard would work effectively only if negotiations between the United Kingdom and the dependency in question were not commenced until it had been made clear that none of the present Commonwealth members would find difficulty in accepting the self-government granted to that dependency as sufficient for the purpose of Commonwealth membership. In a time of international tension, such as existed when negotiations with Ceylon were undertaken, it may be hardly practicable to hold up action till all present Commonwealth members have had the opportunity to decide their attitude. But preliminary advice to present members seems to be the only means that can be suggested to avoid difficulties in recognition.

872.

W.L.M.K./J4/Vol. 237

Note du premier ministre
Memorandum by Prime Minister

PRIVATE AND PERSONAL

[London], October 10, 1948

RE PROBLEM OF CROWN AND COMMONWEALTH

In order to preserve the Crown as a symbol of all nations now or in the future belonging to the Commonwealth, it might be agreed that those countries which, in 1931 or since, have at one time or another recognized the Crown as their head under the Statute of Westminster or those that do so today, and those which may do so in the future, may all be regarded as members of the Community of Nations which constitute the Commonwealth of Free Nations.

Today they may, as independent countries, be considered members of the Community of Free Nations referred to in the Statute of Westminster, and free to determine their own form of government as, for example, whether it is to be republican or monarchical.

In settling the question of a substitution for "British Commonwealth of Nations", account must be taken first of the expression "United States"; next, "United Nations", and next, "British Commonwealth of Nations".

To keep free of the words "Empire" and "British" I would suggest "Commonwealth of Free Nations". "Commonwealth" preserves all that is essential to express unity and to distinguish from "United States" or "United Nations". It also contrasts with countries under Communistic influence. "Free" recognizes complete independence, whether republic or otherwise. "Commonwealth" preserves all that is essential in the British Commonwealth of Nations.

[W.L.M. KING]

873.

DEA/50023-40

Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au chef de la Direction du Commonwealth
High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Head, Commonwealth Division

TOP SECRET

London, November 9, 1948

Dear Mr. MacKay:

I have read with interest and the usual edification Miss [M.] McKenzie's memorandum on the official title of the Commonwealth.† Her note was admirable, though despite the statutes quoted, I doubt whether it is profitable to look too long for a "complete designation". I am writing, however, to add another bibliographical reference, which may not yet have reached you, but which you should be able to get from Gordon Robertson,<sup>17</sup> for the secret Departmental file. He should have a copy of the Top Secret United Kingdom print entitled "Commonwealth Relationship", with the sub-head "Statement of General Principles", dated London, October 1948.† Single copies of this paper, to which a very high degree of secrecy is attached, were given by Mr. Attlee to Mr. Peter Fraser, Dr. Evatt, and to me for Mr. Mackenzie King. I do not think it received any wider circulation during the Prime Ministers' Meetings, and was, of course, not referred to in them. This paper, which was I believe approved by the United Kingdom Cabinet, is a formulation of their approach to some of the major constitutional aspects of the Commonwealth relationship, and is the upshot and end product of the earlier papers† on this subject which you saw during Sir Norman Brook's visit to Ottawa in August.

Against the background of the thinking in this paper, the tacit and undiscussed decision to drop the word "British" from references to the Commonwealth in the final press statement issued by the Prime Ministers' Meeting is, I think, clear and quite reasonable. You will note that this paper suggests that the word "British" might be dropped, leaving the phrase "The Commonwealth of Nations". As sometimes happens in the better crosswords, beheading was followed by curtailment, and "of Nations" was dropped too. This I do not think was in any sense deliberate.

Changes in usage like this cannot be successfully decreed. They are bound to come gradually, with much overlapping. I see no harm myself in a deliberate looseness of language in official statements, just as in Ottawa we formerly used "Commonwealth" and "Empire" as more or less interchangeable terms, though never officially echoing [Winston] Churchill's attempt to couple them.

Here again there are some parallels with the status of the word "Dominion" in our own shifting idiom. I see by the press that Mr. St. Laurent has now said publicly that the name of our country is Canada, and not the Dominion of Canada. I don't imagine this statement will make much splash, but that is largely because during the last ten years the term "Dominion" has been gradually dropped, first in our departmental and subsequently in general official usage. If anybody had made a public issue of the matter a dozen years ago, when Loring Christie<sup>18</sup> first drew my attention to the controlling wording of the British North America Act, we might have had a first-class controversy such as the flag question has been allowed to arouse.

Yours sincerely,

N.A. ROBERTSON

<sup>17</sup> R.G. Robertson, secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet.

R.G. Robertson, Assistant Secretary to Cabinet.

<sup>18</sup> L.C. Christie, ancien conseiller juridique et ancien ministre aux États-Unis.

L.C. Christie, former Legal Adviser and former Minister in United States.

874.

DEA/50017-40

*Le haut-commissaire en Inde
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in India
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 287

New Delhi, November 10, 1948

SECRET

1. India and the Commonwealth.

2. A secret caucus of the Congress Party of the Constituent Assembly was held on November 7th, and as far as I can learn it was decided adoption of a Constitution, and India's future Commonwealth connection should be regarded as separate matter. On November 8th, in the course of a public address to the Constituent Assembly, Mr. Nehru said he favoured an easily amendable Constitution because of a feeling that the present Constituent Assembly is not sufficiently representative to frame a rigid Constitution and to afford a Legislature, elected on a basis of adult suffrage, every facility for amending the Constitution if it thought fit. There are now high hopes that the Constitution may be adopted within two or three months. Press comment has been less unfavourably inclined to continue Commonwealth connection than previously, though still divided. Kingship is unpopular with the press.

3. In an interview which I had today with Mr. Nehru, he told me that he expected that Constitution would be passed substantially as it is, clause by clause, and this without reference to India's future relationship with the Commonwealth. He hoped that, concurrently, a formula based on Commonwealth citizenship would be worked out in such a manner as to constitute an effective Commonwealth tie, and one which would enable India to remain a member of the Commonwealth. If the foregoing transpired, he thought that an appropriate section might be added to the existing Constitution dealing with citizenship or, alternatively, that a separate citizenship act to enable India to remain in the Commonwealth would be prepared and adopted simultaneously with the adoption of the Constitution. Nehru said that he had discussed with Mr. Attlee the substitution of Commonwealth citizenship for Kingship as it presently exists as a Commonwealth tie, and that since his return to New Delhi he had written Mr. Attlee on the same subject. He gave me to understand that a group of Commonwealth legal experts were at work on the matter and he seemed confident that a satisfactory formula would be arrived at. Despatch follows.†

875.

DEA/50017-40

*La délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies à Paris
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to United Nations General Assembly in Paris
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 429

Paris, November 19, 1948

TOP SECRET

Reference India: The United Kingdom Ministers who have been in Paris this week for the discussion of the Irish position took advantage of their meetings with the other Commonwealth Ministers who were attending the United Nations Assembly to report on developments with regard to the relationship of India to the Commonwealth.

2. Pandit Nehru, before his departure for India, had worked out, with the assistance of Sir Stafford Cripps a "Ten Points" memorandum on which he thought it might be possible to base India's continuing membership in the Commonwealth. Nehru took the only copy of this paper with him to Paris on his way back to New Delhi and it was all of a week after his departure before a copy was available in London for study by the Law Officers.

3. Nehru's points included:

(1) Reciprocal arrangements under which Indian nationals would be considered Commonwealth citizens in Commonwealth countries and nationals of Commonwealth countries as Commonwealth citizens when they were in India;

(2) "The King, as the first citizen of the Commonwealth, would be the fountain of honour so far as the Commonwealth as a whole is concerned";

(3) In any new legislation or new treaties entered into with foreign countries other Commonwealth countries would not be treated as foreign states and their citizens would not be treated as foreigners;

(4) "For the purpose of fulfilling the obligations of the Crown towards Commonwealth citizens other than Indian nationals, the President of the Indian Republic may, at the request of the Crown, act on behalf of the King within the territories of India. A similar arrangement on a reciprocal basis would apply to Indian nationals in the rest of the Commonwealth."

4. The United Kingdom Cabinet concurred in the feeling of the Law Officers that these "points" provided a pretty frail and tenuous basis for Commonwealth membership. In particular they saw no merit, constitutional or otherwise, in the suggestion that the King and the President of the Indian Republic might exchange consular functions for the protection of various classes of Commonwealth nationals in Commonwealth countries, and were dubious of the political and constitutional value of the suggestion that the King as "first citizen" would continue to be the fountain of honour. They did, however, feel that the preservation of the concept of Commonwealth citizenship, coupled with a declaration of intention to remain within the Commonwealth would go a considerable distance to support in international law the contention that India was still a member of the Commonwealth.

5. The gist of the foregoing views are being communicated orally to Pandit Nehru by Sir Archibald Nye, the new United Kingdom High Commissioner to India. They were also conveyed in a general way to Sir Girja Bajpai, the Indian Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, at a meeting held in Dr. Evatt's office in the Palais de Chaillot, at which Robertson and I were present, together with Peter Fraser, Lord Jowett<sup>19</sup> and Noel-Baker. Evatt and Fraser impressed on Bajpai the importance their countries attached to India continuing as a full member of the Commonwealth and indicated that they did not think the points made in the Nehru memorandum would be sufficient for this purpose. They hoped that the Indian Government might consider supporting the argument from Commonwealth citizenship, which they felt had substantive value, with some more definite link with the Crown as the symbol of Commonwealth association. They recognized that India was committed by the terms of last year's objectives resolution to the establishment of a sovereign democratic republic, but they wondered whether arrangements could not be worked out whereby the King, as the symbol of association of the members of the Commonwealth, could delegate, perhaps in perpetuity, to the President of the Indian Republic, his prerogative functions in respect of the designation and acceptance of Ambassadors, issue of full powers, etc. Such a step could be regarded as a not unnatural development of the delegation of similar powers to our Governor-General in the last revision of his Commission, and might, it was thought, constitute an important supplement to the Commonwealth connections created by the citizenship provision which Pandit Nehru already had in mind and by the declaration of intention to remain within the Commonwealth which he was prepared to make. Bajpai undertook to put this suggestion up to his Prime Minister for consideration.

6. I supported the views of the others as to the desirability of India remaining in the Commonwealth but emphasized to Bajpai that we recognized, of course, that this was entirely a matter for India to decide. I pointed out to him that our discussion with him arose out of the talks we had had with the Irish and which had brought some of us together to consider Commonwealth constitutional questions. I also underlined the fact that our suggestions to him were made on an informal and entirely non-committal basis, at least so far as Canada was concerned, and did not mean that any concerted policy or approach had been worked out by our Governments for presentation to the Government of India. Bajpai quite understood this and felt, I think, that our talk had been helpful. Among other things, it cleared up a confusion which seemed to exist in Evatt's and Fraser's mind that in a talk with them in London, Nehru had definitely come out in favour, of the retention of the monarchy in India for formal external purposes. Bajpai felt pretty certain that this was not in Nehru's mind.

7. Could you repeat this message to Kearney. It would be helpful to get his views on the suggestions made above.

---

<sup>19</sup> Grand chancelier du Royaume-Uni/Lord Chancellor of United Kingdom.

876.

DEA/50017-40

*Le haut-commissaire du Royaume-Uni
au premier ministre*
*High Commissioner for United Kingdom
to Prime Minister*

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Ottawa, November 23, 1948

INDIA

As I think you know, Pandit Nehru, when in London for the Prime Ministers' meeting, had some informal talks with United Kingdom Ministers about the future relationship of India with the Commonwealth. At the end of his stay, Pandit Nehru handed to Mr. Attlee certain very provisional proposals which might possibly form the basis for India's future relationship with the Commonwealth, if they were acceptable to the Government and Parliament of India and to other Commonwealth Governments. These proposals were known as the "ten points".

The United Kingdom Cabinet invited the Lord Chancellor, in consultation with the Law Officers, to consider whether these proposals would

(i) constitute an adequate legal basis for India's continued membership of the Commonwealth;

(ii) provide an adequate basis for resisting claims by foreign countries under the most-favoured-nation provisions of existing treaties.

The Lord Chancellor and his colleagues considered the matter and submitted an opinion on 3rd November to which were annexed four Appendices dealing with separate aspects of the matter.

With the authority of the United Kingdom Cabinet, the Lord Chancellor and Mr. Noel-Baker, as you will no doubt have heard from Mr. Pearson, discussed these matters with Mr. Pearson, Dr. Evatt and Mr. Fraser in Paris on 17th November and handed them copies of the documents. The representatives of Canada, Australia and New Zealand then expressed the provisional view that Pandit Nehru's "ten points" were not likely to afford a satisfactory basis for India's continued membership of the Commonwealth; and it was agreed that a meeting should be held in Paris at which representatives of the four Governments could express their views to Sir Girja Bajpai for transmission to Pandit Nehru.

The United Kingdom Cabinet desire that, as Prime Minister of Canada, you should have the text of Pandit Nehru's "ten points" and the text of the opinion of the Lord Chancellor and the Law Officers upon them. I have accordingly been asked to give you the enclosed print of these documents for your top secret and personal information. At the same time, I have been asked to emphasise that the opinion of the Lord Chancellor and the Law Officers related solely to the legal issues involved.

Yours sincerely,

ALEC CLUTTERBUCK

877.

DEA/50017-40

*Le haut-commissaire en Inde
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in India
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 290

New Delhi, November 25, 1948

TOP SECRET

Repeat to London as No. 10.

Your telegram No. 241 of November 22nd.<sup>20</sup> Part 2 received yesterday.

2. Though individually the elements are weak, I think the idea of combining a declaration of intention to remain in the Commonwealth, Commonwealth citizenship and an arrangement whereby The King, although empowered to designate and appoint Ambassadors, etc., would delegate these prerogative functions to the President of the Indian Republic, is as strong a link as can be hoped for under the circumstances.

3. In my conversation with Mr. Nehru on November 10th, I casually suggested to him that if it were found that Commonwealth citizenship was not a sufficiently satisfactory link, he might bear in mind idea of The King delegating to the President of India the prerogative functions above mentioned.

4. I do not know latest developments from Irish point of view, nor whether situation in regard thereto is beyond recall. However, should India accept proposed new links, might it be worth while formally putting up the same suggestion to Ireland, and in such a way as almost of necessity to bring a debate in the Dail.

5. I have just seen Sir Archibald Nye, United Kingdom High Commissioner, and he tells me that, as mentioned in paragraph 5 of your telegram under reference, he has communicated verbally to Mr. Nehru the view as outlined in your telegram. I understand from him that Sir Girja Bajpai and Krishna Menon<sup>21</sup> are being consulted by Mr. Nehru and Sir Archibald does not expect a reply from Mr. Nehru before a week. Mr. Nehru did not say anything which would lead Sir Archibald to believe that Mr. Nehru was opposed to additional suggestions, and he anticipates that Mr. Nehru's answer, when it is given, will be favourable. I am inclined to share Sir Archibald's optimism, but anticipate that Mr. Nehru may encounter some difficulty in convincing the Congress Party caucus which he must consult.

6. In my despatch No. 446 of November 18th,† I expressed a fear that Indians might regard Commonwealth citizenship as something which would entitle them to additional immigration privileges. In saying so I was speaking more truly than I knew, because I have just been interviewed by a representative of the Indian News Chronicle who is writing up, by turn, Heads of foreign Missions and publishing his interview with each. One of the questions he asked me was: "Would conception of dual nationality as is now mooted as a link to bind Commonwealth affect immigration policies towards Indians?" I am sending you and London by air mail a copy of what I expect my interview will look like when it appears in the November 28th edition of Indian News Chronicle and I will forward clipping as soon as it is published.

<sup>20</sup> Voir le document 875./See Document 875.

<sup>21</sup> V.K. Krishna Menon, haut-commissaire de l'Inde au Royaume-Uni.

V.K. Krishna Menon, High Commissioner for India in United Kingdom.

7. Sir Archibald and myself are keeping in close touch with each other. Supplementary despatch with copy for London follows.†

878.

DEA/50017-40

*Le secrétaire d'État des Relations du Commonwealth du Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations of United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

London, November 26, 1948

My dear Mike [Pearson],

I think that you will wish to know the progress that has been made in discussions with the Government of India about India's future relation to the Commonwealth since our talk with Sir G.S. Bajpai in Paris on the 17th November.

2. The Prime Minister has authorised communication of the gist of the Law Officers' Opinion to Pandit Nehru. (It was thought better not to communicate the Opinion as it stood, lest the Indians might lose sight of the fact that it was a purely legal document and regard it as unsympathetically worded). But the digest of it that has been communicated to Pandit Nehru appears to have been accepted by him as setting out the position adequately.

3. The Prime Minister has also telegraphed separately to Pandit Nehru, telling him that he knows that he will agree that, from both our points of view, it is necessary to find some solid ground<sup>22</sup> on which to base our arrangement with one another, and which will stand any challenge in international law, asking him to consider the situation disclosed by the Law Officers' Opinion and to say if any further factor or factors can be added so as to strengthen our legal position. Mr. Attlee emphasised that our objective remains exactly as it was — that we want India to remain in the Commonwealth and believe in the light of the talks that there have been that India herself shares that view, provided an acceptable basis can be found.

4. In addition to the tentative suggestion made in Paris as to a particular way in which the link might be found (on the principle of which Mr. Attlee has asked

<sup>22</sup> Sur une copie de cette lettre, Reid a écrit dans la marge à côté de cette phrase :

On a copy of this letter, Reid minuted in the margin opposite this phrase that "It is now unrealistic to expect that India will maintain any closer connection with the Commonwealth than Ireland."

(Voir DEA/50017-40 — Reid, note marginale, le 8 décembre).

(See DEA/50017-40 — Reid, marginal note, December 8).

Pandit Nehru to let him have his view as early as possible) he has also asked him to consider the two following suggestions as likely to be both helpful and very material from both our points of view:

(a) declarations to be made by all the particular States of the Commonwealth (including India) that they wish to be and regard themselves as still bound in a special form of association within the Commonwealth;

(b) the Commonwealth citizenship; that the existence of this would be strengthened as an argument if, on the assumption that India legislates to adopt the provisions of the British Nationality Act, 1948, there could be included in the constitution or in such legislation a provision that such legislation would remain in force "for such time as India remains a member of the Commonwealth."

5. Mr. Attlee expressed the view further that if, together with the link, whatever its nature, which would have real substance in it between India and the Commonwealth by way of The King, we could get something on the lines referred to in the preceding paragraph, it would enable us:

(a) to put up a strong case for the general acceptance by all civilised nations of the existence of the Commonwealth as a unit composed of nations bound together by a factual association of long standing and still continuing;

(b) to put forward a case strong enough to have a good chance of success if challenged in an international court over most favoured nation treatment, whether in respect of nationality or of trade.

6. Mr. Attlee added that we should of course welcome any proposals that Pandit Nehru might himself put forward as practical and likely to help, and that they can be sure of the most speedy and sympathetic consideration, and he has suggested that it would be well if Pandit Nehru agrees that our difficulties should be kept completely secret at this stage.

7. The High Commissioner reports that at first glance Pandit Nehru did not seem to think that difficulty would be presented by the proposals in paragraph 5 above. As regards the link with The King, he said that this would take him some little time to consider, and that he readily agreed to examine it and to let us know his views on the principle involved.

8. We have suggested to Pandit Nehru that it is of the very greatest importance to keep entirely secret both the line which discussions have taken and the existence of any difficulties, since otherwise serious embarrassment may be caused to him as well as to all of us. We understand that he fully appreciates this, and I know you also will agree as to its importance. We are not, in these circumstances, making any communication to Commonwealth Governments at present. I am sending similar letters to Evatt and Fraser.

Yours ever,

PHILIP NOEL-BAKER

879.

DEA/50017-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], November 29, 1948

INDIA

Pandit Nehru, before leaving London after the meeting of Prime Ministers, left with Mr. Attlee a "ten points" memorandum setting forth proposals which might form the basis of India's future relationship with the Commonwealth. This document was examined by the Lord Chancellor and the Law Officers and discussed at a meeting in Paris on November 17 attended by Mr. Pearson, Dr. Evatt, Mr. Fraser, the Lord Chancellor, and Mr. Noel-Baker. A further meeting was held by this group with the Indian representative, Sir Girja Bajpai.

2. The "ten points" and the Opinion of the Lord Chancellor have been sent to the Prime Minister by Sir Alexander Clutterbuck.

3. The Nehru proposals contain the following main points:

(1) The declaration of the status of India as "a sovereign, democratic republic" will be left as at present in the draft constitution, and the Indian people and their representatives (such as the President of the Republic) will exercise all the functions of sovereignty.

(2) Either in the new constitution or in a separate statute passed at the same time, it will be arranged that Indian nationals will be Commonwealth citizens and the nationals of any Commonwealth country Commonwealth citizens when they are in India, on a reciprocal basis.

(3) In any new legislation or treaties Commonwealth countries will not be treated as Foreign States, in particular for the purposes of the "most-favoured-nation" clause, and their citizens will not be treated as foreigners.

(4) Two novel and obscure references to the Crown:

(a) "The King as the first Citizen of the Commonwealth will be the fountain of honour as far as the Commonwealth as a whole is concerned."

(b) "For the purpose of fulfilling the obligations of the Crown towards Commonwealth citizens other than nationals the President of the Indian Republic may at the request of the Crown act on behalf of the King within the territories of India. A similar arrangement on a reciprocal basis will apply to Indian nationals in the rest of the Commonwealth."

4. The memorandum concludes: "These proposals represent a sincere desire to continue the Commonwealth association and what is practicable and adequate at present."

5. The Opinion states that the legal effect of the adoption of the draft constitution will be to extinguish the King's sovereignty in India, which will no longer be part of His Majesty's dominions under either Indian law or United Kingdom law. If the United Kingdom does not wish to admit that India is a foreign country, amending legislation will be necessary to give preferential treatment to India and Indians. The continued membership of India in the Commonwealth might be justified in international law if all members made declarations that they regarded themselves as "still bound in a special form of association", coupled with a real common citizenship, giving rise in practice over substantially the whole of the Commonwealth to a special position in regard to those who enjoyed it. The Opinion observed that while this was essentially the case in the United Kingdom, it was not so elsewhere in the Commonwealth where most Commonwealth citizens are treated only slightly differently from aliens. It pointed out that it was technically inappropriate to refer to The King as "the first citizen", and saw no merit in the suggested scheme for the exchange of consular functions for the protection of Commonwealth citizens in Commonwealth countries.

6. Mr. Pearson reports that the United Kingdom Cabinet concurred in the feeling of the Law Officers that the Nehru "points" provided a frail and tenuous basis for Commonwealth membership. Evatt and Fraser did not think they would be sufficient for India to continue as a full member of the Commonwealth. They hoped the Indian Government might consider supporting the argument from Commonwealth citizenship, which they felt had substantive value, with some more definite link with the Crown, such as an arrangement whereby the King could delegate, perhaps in perpetuity to the President of the Republic, his prerogative functions in respect of the designation of ambassadors, et cetera.

7. Mr. Pearson supported the views of the others as to the desirability of India remaining in the Commonwealth, but emphasized to Bajpai that we recognized this was entirely a matter for India to decide.

8. Mr. Kearney observes that, though individually the elements are weak, he thinks that the idea of combining a declaration of intention to remain in the Commonwealth, Commonwealth citizenship and an arrangement whereby the King would delegate his prerogative functions of appointing ambassadors to the President, is as strong a link as can be hoped for.

9. The term "Commonwealth citizen" no doubt refers to a general principle or concept with no defined content, but at the same time it implies that Commonwealth citizens will be in a special position in some way different from that of aliens. It must be borne in mind that at present Indians, though British subjects in our law, are excluded as immigrants to Canada in exactly the same way as other persons of Asiatic race, such as the Chinese, while United States citizens and French citizens are placed in a preferred category with white British subjects (and Irish nationals). Rights and privileges are thus accorded to some aliens which are denied to some Commonwealth citizens.

10. The Legal Adviser of the Department has expressed the tentative view that, in the absence of some less tenuous relationship with the Crown than is contemplated in the Nehru "points", it would be difficult to maintain that India, under the new constitution, will remain in the Commonwealth. He is inclined to agree with Messrs. Evatt and Fraser that if His Majesty were to delegate to the President of the Republic all his prerogative powers (as was done in the new Letters Patent relating to the office of the Governor General of Canada), India would remain in the Commonwealth. Failing this, or a reasonable facsimile thereof, it seems to him that India will be in a position comparable to that of Ireland (that is, not a member of the Commonwealth but in a special relation with the Commonwealth) and that we would have to examine carefully our existing legislation in order to determine what the Parliament of Canada (a) could do, and (b) would wish to do to promote this special relationship.

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

880.

DEA/50017-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Paris, November 30, 1948

Dear Mr. Reid,

I am enclosing for your information the copy of a top secret and personal letter which I have received from Mr. Philip Noel-Baker concerning the relations of India with the Commonwealth.

You will notice that this letter contains a somewhat optimistic account of the possibility that the Indian Government may be prepared to retain some connection with the Commonwealth through the Crown. I have, however, recently had conversation with Sir Girja Bajpai on this subject. Bajpai told me confidentially that Nehru, on his return to India, had found that the retention of a connection with the Commonwealth through the Crown, however tenuous, would be unacceptable to certain elements in the Government. It is probable, therefore, that the Indian Government will not be able to give favourable consideration to plans of this kind, and it will be more likely to fall back on the kind of relationship which is being worked out with Ireland.

Sir Girja said that he was giving us this information privately, and that it was not yet being given to the Australian or New Zealand Governments.

I am sending copies of this letter to the High Commissioner for Canada in London, and to the Canadian High Commissioner in New Delhi.

Yours sincerely,

L.B. PEARSON

881.

DEA/50017-40

*Le premier ministre du Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*
*Prime Minister of United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET

London, December 12, 1948

Dear Mr. Pearson,

My colleagues and I look forward to an opportunity of further discussions on Wednesday, 15th December with Fraser, Evatt and yourself about the future relation of India to the Commonwealth. Meanwhile, you may like to have an opportunity of studying the enclosed copies of an Aide-Mémoire and a revised version of Pandit Nehru's Ten Points which I have received from the High Commissioner for India. I am also sending copies to Fraser and Evatt.

Yours sincerely,
C.R. ATTLEE

[PIÈCE JOINTE 1/ENCLOSURE 1]

Le premier ministre de l'Inde au premier ministre du Royaume-Uni
Prime Minister of India to Prime Minister of United Kingdom

London, December 11, 1948

My ten-point memorandum dated twenty eight October, 1948 should be revised, being reduced to 8 points as follows:

(1) The declaration as to the status of India will be left as at present in the draft constitution.

(2) In a Nationality Act, to be passed by the Indian Legislature, contemporaneously with the coming into effect of the new constitution, there will be incorporated the substance of the relevant provisions of the British Nationality Act, 1948, which will have the effect of making Indian nationals Commonwealth citizens and the nationals of any Commonwealth country Commonwealth citizens when they are in India. This arrangement will be on a reciprocal basis. 'Commonwealth' in this connection does not mean a super-State but stands for an association of free and independent States which accept this concept of Commonwealth citizenship.

3. As soon as the constitutional changes are settled, or at such other time as may be agreed upon, the Prime Minister of India and the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom will make declarations announcing the changes and their nature and results.

4. In any new legislation, or new treaties entered into with other countries, the Commonwealth countries will not be treated as foreign States and their citizens will not be treated as foreigners.

In particular, in any new commercial treaties it will be made clear that for the purpose of the 'most favoured nation' clause the Commonwealth countries are in a special position and are not regarded as foreign States.

5. In foreign States where the Indian Government has no representation, it will be at liberty to make use of any other Commonwealth country's ambassador or minister; and the Indian Government will be willing to provide reciprocal facilities for any Commonwealth Government that so desires.

6. For the purposes of fulfilling the obligations of the Crown towards Commonwealth citizens other than Indian nationals, the President of the Indian republic may at the request of the Crown act on behalf of the King within the territories of India. A similar arrangement on a reciprocal basis will apply to Indian nationals in the rest of the Commonwealth.

7. So far as the United Kingdom is concerned, the position is that generally speaking the King waived all functions of sovereignty in relation to India in favour of the people of India in pursuance of the Act of 1947. Under that Act there would be no further legislation on India by the Parliament of the United Kingdom, and after India's new Constitution comes into force there can be no such legislation. The Indian people and their representatives, including the President of the Republic, will thus exercise all functions of sovereignty.

8. These proposals represent a sincere desire to continue the commonwealth association and what is practical and adequate at present. No doubt as the relationship is not a static arrangement, further development by way of association may take place.

[PIÈCE JOINTE 2/ENCLOSURE 2]

Aide mémoire

London, December 11, 1948

I send you herewith a revised version of the ten point memorandum on our future relations with the Commonwealth which Pandit Nehru asked to be given to you. I have already discussed this with you.

2. This memorandum and my talk with you is by way of my Prime Minister's reply to your communication accompanying your lawyers memorandum on this subject.

3. Panditji has also asked me to continue such informal talks with you or other ministers as you may consider necessary or desirable. I shall be glad to do this as hitherto.

4. I am to say in reply to your communication of views of lawyers, while he is grateful to be put in possession of this expression of opinion neither he nor his colleagues consider that the problem is one of legal formalities and arguments. It is essentially a political problem and is based upon our mutual desires and interests. On our side therefore we do not think it necessary or appropriate to pursue the legal arguments or find answers to them. If legal difficulties arise they would have to be met in such ways as may be open to either or both of us. I am asked to make clear to you our approach in this matter and to proceed on that basis.

5. As I have already mentioned to you, the basic features of our future relationship are:

(a) Commonwealth Citizenship

(b) Our express assertion that we are a Commonwealth country.

(c) Our genuine desires as set out in the last paragraph of my Prime Minister's note.

6. The nationality provisions will be enacted by a separate statute, while the reciprocal arrangements envisaged in paragraph 6 will not require legislation.

7. We do not envisage the Commonwealth as a Super-state, but the voluntary association of free and equal nations which it has always maintained itself to be. For this and for other reasons, we are abandoning the conception of the King as "first citizen" to which we have been informed the Commonwealth countries have also objections. We have no desire to interfere with the relationship of the Crown with other Commonwealth States and therefore no question of repudiation or any express statement about the King arises. Panditji accepts both your proposals (a) and (b) of paragraph 4 of your telegram 3109 of the 20th November, communicated through your High Commissioner in India. He does, however, see the necessity of the latter part of (b).

8. If paragraph 8 in the original ten point memorandum (which is paragraph 6 in the new draft of eight points) is not acceptable to you or is considered as not requiring to be expressly stated, it can be omitted.

9. As I mentioned to you we would be willing to make any minor alterations to suit you. I shall be glad to be available for any clarification or discussion.

V.K. KRISHNA MENON

882.

DEA/50017-40

*Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2238

London, December 16, 1948

TOP SECRET

Following from Pearson, Begins: India.

Mr. Fraser, Dr. Evatt and I discussed the recent Indian proposals for association with other Commonwealth countries, at a meeting last night at 10 Downing Street attended by Mr. Attlee, the Lord Chancellor, Sir Stafford Cripps and the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations. It was understood that Mr. Fraser, Dr. Evatt and I were acting in our personal capacities as we had had no opportunity to discuss this matter with our Governments. We all agreed that though the Indian proposals were not satisfactory as a basis for full membership in the Commonwealth, nevertheless nothing should be done to discourage the Indian desire to work out some form of association with Commonwealth States. Dr. Evatt and Mr. Fraser were particularly emphatic in this regard because of the importance they attach to India's position as a stabilizing force in the east. It was recognized however that some new form of association short of full membership, would introduce a new principle into Commonwealth relations and would in fact mean the acceptance of two categories of association among the States concerned; one, de jure membership under the Crown, and the other, de facto association without any allegiance to the Crown but with the important features of common citizenship and a declaration of desire to maintain close and friendly association. Those present last night were willing to accept this form of association, but reluctantly, as the best that could be arranged in the circumstances. It was realized that it might mean that other countries now in the Commonwealth might prefer a newer and looser association. It was also realized that if Pakistan retained membership while India adopted a looser association, some embarrassment might develop. However, all these difficulties were considered to be less important than the paramount necessity of doing nothing at this time to discourage what is obviously a desire on the part of the Indian leaders, to maintain some form of Commonwealth association. After much discussion and a great deal of drafting it was decided that the telegram in my immediately succeeding message would be suitable for the purpose desired. Ends.

883.

DEA/50017-40

*Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2239

London, December 16, 1948

TOP SECRET

Following from Pearson, Begins: Reference my telegram No. 2238, India, the following is the message addressed last night from the Prime Minister to Pandit Nehru, Begins:

I have had an opportunity tonight to discuss with Mr. Fraser, Dr. Evatt and Mr. Pearson your message of December 11th.

Your proposals in their present form do not seem to us to be satisfactory as a basis for continuing the full degree of association within the Commonwealth through the nexus of the Crown. We hope that you may be able to give this matter further consideration. If, however, you are unable after much reconsideration to alter your position in this matter, we nevertheless earnestly trust that a close Commonwealth association can still be maintained, and we welcome and share the view which you express in this regard in paragraph 8 of your message. We must, however, have time in which to work out some of the main implications of this form of Commonwealth association.

Commonwealth citizenship must, in any event, be a main feature of any such association, and we hope that you will proceed with the action contemplated in your paragraph 2.

This message represents the views of Mr. Fraser, Dr. Evatt and Mr. Pearson, as well as my own. You will realize, of course, that my Commonwealth colleagues have not had an opportunity of consulting their Governments. Ends.

884.

DEA/50017-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], December 17, 1948

INDIA

A draft telegram<sup>23</sup> was prepared in reply to your most immediate telegrams Nos. 2206† and 2207† of December 13, concerning the future relationship of India with the Commonwealth, which was submitted to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs late on Tuesday, December 14. As it was not possible for him to give the matter careful consideration immediately, the telegram was not approved in time to be of any use to you at your meeting with Messrs. Attlee, Fraser and Evatt in London on the evening of Wednesday, December 15. The draft reply contained observations along the following lines.

2. Your attention was drawn to a Departmental memorandum of November 29 on this subject,<sup>24</sup> which was sent to you in Paris with a letter of December 3.† This had also been sent to Mr. Robertson in London. A copy of the memorandum is attached. You will note from it that we have some misgiving about having the Commonwealth link with India based on the common status of Commonwealth citizenship on a reciprocal basis, in view of our immigration policy. You will also note the tentative view of the Legal Adviser that, in the absence of some less tenuous relationship with the Crown than was contemplated in the Nehru "Ten Points", it would be difficult to maintain that India, under the new constitution, would remain in the Commonwealth.<sup>25</sup>

3. Mr. Nehru's revised "Eight Points" proposal is substantially the same as his earlier scheme, and goes no further in providing a more definite link with the Crown. He apparently is not prepared to accept the suggestion made to him that the

<sup>23</sup> Ce télégramme ne fut pas envoyé./Not sent.

<sup>24</sup> Voir le document 879./See Document 879.

<sup>25</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

I agree [L.B. Pearson]

prerogative functions of His Majesty might be delegated to the president of the republic. It, therefore, appears that there may well be an inadequate legal basis for India's continued membership in the Commonwealth, and it may be doubted whether there will be a satisfactory political basis.

4. The opinion of the Legal Adviser is that as the revised Nehru scheme goes no further than that envisaged in the "Ten Points", it would be difficult to maintain successfully in any International forum that India was not essentially a foreign country vis-à-vis Canada or other members of the Commonwealth.

5. It seems to us that the new position of India will not be very dissimilar to the position of Ireland under the Republic of Ireland Act.<sup>26</sup> India will be a full republic with sovereignty residing in the Indian people, and India expects to be recognized as a republic by other members of the Commonwealth.

6. The two differences between the position of Ireland and India are:

(1) While Irish citizens will technically in most Commonwealth countries be in an intermediary position between British subjects and aliens, and will enjoy on a factual basis the privileges of British subjects, Indian citizens will be declared to be Commonwealth citizens (this term of course being equivalent now to British subject). It is doubtful whether this distinction will in fact mean very much, if anything.

(2) While Ireland has declared that it is no longer a member of the Commonwealth, India will make an express declaration that it will remain a member of the Commonwealth. India will look upon the Commonwealth as a free and voluntary association of independent states, in which the basic link will be Commonwealth citizenship and in which the Crown will not be considered to play an essential role.

7. It is open to question, I think, whether these two distinctions will make the position of India very different from that of Ireland. It was suggested that in discussing the subject of India's future relationship with the Commonwealth with Messrs. Attlee, Fraser and Evatt, you might bear in mind the public statement on Ireland issued by the Prime Minister on November 25 and our difficulties both in regard to citizenship and trade relations, in meeting the wishes of the Irish Government, as set out in a telegram of December 1 sent to you in Paris,<sup>27</sup> which was repeated to Canada House.

8. It was added that, if you were speaking to the Indians, you would no doubt wish to assure them that, in the same manner as we had assured the Irish, it was the desire of the Canadian Government that close and friendly relations between Canada and India should be maintained and strengthened.

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

---

<sup>26</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Except that they may declare that they are associated with the Commonwealth. [L.B. Pearson]

<sup>27</sup> Voir le document 904./See Document 904.

4<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 4L'IRLANDE ET LE COMMONWEALTH IRELAND AND THE COMMONWEALTH

885.

DEA/50023-40

*Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1831

London, October 21, 1948

SECRET

On Sunday last, October 17th an informal meeting was held at Chequers at which the Ministers of External Affairs and Finance of Ireland were present. In addition to Mr. Attlee the Lord Chancellor and the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations for the United Kingdom attended. Also present in addition to Mr. St. Laurent were Dr. Evatt and Mr. Peter Fraser.

2. The Irish Ministers made it perfectly clear at the outset of the discussion that there could be no question of reconsidering the decision to repeal the External Relations Act and that it was the firm view of the Government of Ireland that the establishment of genuinely friendly relations with the United Kingdom depended upon the removal of every vestige and every appearance of the former state of dependency. At the same time the Irish Government desired to maintain a special relationship or association with the Commonwealth.

3. Mr. Peter Fraser took exception to any course which might cast any reflection on the present Royal Family.

4. The United Kingdom Ministers in turn pointed out that the repeal of the External Relations Act, without any new link replacing it, would automatically make Ireland a foreign country, and would appear to make it difficult not to regard Irishmen in England as aliens. The United Kingdom Ministers, however, recognized that there were important reasons on both sides for seeking to preserve the special relationship.

5. Mr. St. Laurent suggested that the initiative in seeking a special form of association would presumably have to be taken by the Irish Government, that a special relationship might, in the first instance, be established with the United Kingdom, and that it might prove to be a pattern for special relations with other Commonwealth countries. Mr. St. Laurent also pointed out that a special relationship based upon reciprocal citizenship, while it might meet the Irish situation, might also cause embarrassment with the "newer Dominions". The United Kingdom Ministers indicated that they felt the newer Dominions would prove ready to retain the Crown as the instrument for the conduct of their external relations and that in so doing they might be considered to be preserving an adequate link which would constitute membership in the Commonwealth. The Lord Chancellor expressed the view that it would be preferable if the new link with Ireland could be constitutional rather than contractual. The United Kingdom Ministers hoped that the retention of the Crown for external purposes by India, Pakistan and Ceylon would be considered an adequate link. Mr. St. Laurent pointed out that he felt Canada would be prepared to accept "any kind of internal arrangement which suited the newer Dominions," and that we would almost certainly take the view that we had no more right to interfere in their domestic relations than we would be willing to give them to interfere in ours. He felt that an arrangement by which the Crown was regarded as the Head of State for external purposes would be considered adequate. Dr. Evatt concurred in this view and the impression was left that Mr. Fraser reluctantly did so too.

6. The Irish Ministers said that they would discuss with other members of the Government what kind of initiative might be taken to find a satisfactory principle of association with other nations of the Commonwealth. It was, however, apparent that little careful consideration had yet been given to the development of a constructive policy.

886.

DEA/50021-40

Le haut-commissaire de l'Irlande au Royaume-Uni au premier ministre par intérim

High Commissioner for Ireland in United Kingdom to Acting Prime Minister

London, October 20, 1948

Sir,

I have the honour to hand to you the accompanying Aide Mémoire from my Government on the subject of its intention to repeal the External Relations Act.

I am, etc.

JOHN W. DULANTY

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Aide mémoire

London, [October 20, 1948]

The Irish Government has had under consideration the report from Mr. MacBride and Mr. McGilligan of the informal discussions which took place on Sunday, 17th October, at Chequers, between them and representatives of Britain, Canada, Australia and New Zealand. The Irish Government welcomes the frank and friendly nature of the discussions.

The Irish Government notes with deep appreciation the desire of the Commonwealth representatives who participated in the discussions to maintain the close relations of friendship with Ireland and to continue the exchange of citizenship and trade preference rights that have hitherto existed between Ireland and the Nations of the British Commonwealth. As already indicated, it is the earnest desire of the Irish Government to continue this relationship.

The position of the Irish Government is that, while Ireland is not a member of the British Commonwealth of Nations, it recognises and confirms the existence of a specially close relationship arising, not only from ties of blood and kinship, but from traditional and long established economic, social and trade arrangements based on common interest between Ireland and the Nations that form the British Commonwealth.

The Irish Government takes the view that this relationship can and should be maintained on the basis that the rights and privileges involved, in so far as they are not covered by international agreements, are dependent upon long established custom and tradition and do not, therefore, involve the creation of new rights and privileges entitling other nations to raise objections under "most-favoured-nation" clauses in any existing international agreement.

It is the view of the Irish Government that a relationship with the countries of the Commonwealth firmly based on these factors of tradition, custom and common interest, rather than on forms implying dependence or limitation of sovereignty, offers the best assurance of those relations of mutual understanding and fruitful collaboration which the Irish Government, for its part, is anxious to bring about.

While this Note is addressed primarily to the British, Canadian, Australian and New Zealand Governments by reason of the special interest these Governments have displayed in relation to the intention of the Irish Government to repeal the External Relations Act, it is, of course, the desire of the Irish Government to maintain a like relationship with the other members of the British Commonwealth of Nations.

887.

DEA/50021-40

*La délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies à Paris
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to United Nations General Assembly in Paris
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 381

Paris, November 12, 1948

TOP SECRET. MOST IMMEDIATE.

Repeated to London as No. 105.

Relations of Ireland with the Commonwealth:

Shawcross of United Kingdom delegation saw Evatt and myself late this afternoon and handed us a copy of a note which United Kingdom Government proposes to give to the Government of Ireland tonight. Text of this note is given in my immediately following telegram.

2. As you will see, note has the effect of drawing to the attention of the Irish Government legal consequences which will result from the repeal of the External Relations Act, 1936, by the Irish Parliament. Irish Government has decided to introduce Bill to this effect on Wednesday next, and Shawcross said that United Kingdom Government was determined that full legal consequences should be made known both to the Irish Government and to the Irish people before action was taken in the Irish Parliament.

3. After hasty reading of document, Evatt and I were both asked for our views by Shawcross. Evatt took strenuous exception to reference in first paragraph to Chequers Conference of October 17th stating that position had been misrepresented. He said that he had expected action to be taken to preserve Irish link with the Commonwealth and that this had been the conclusion of the discussions. He said, in any case, that he did not wish reference made to Australia in the first paragraph or to Commonwealth countries in the second paragraph. He went on to question, with occasional acrimonious references to attitude of the Commonwealth Relations Office, the decision which United Kingdom Government had taken to force the Irish out of the Commonwealth before the possibility of keeping them in had been fully explored.

4. I told Shawcross that I understood it to be Mr. St. Laurent's attitude that the United Kingdom Government would have to work out its own relations with Ireland. I said that we also would wish to consider our position in relation to Ireland and that it was not certain that we would come to the same conclusion as the United Kingdom have. We would therefore not wish to be associated in a statement which seemed to define the relations of Ireland with the Commonwealth, and I asked that the reference to Canada in the first paragraph and to other countries of the Commonwealth in the second paragraph should be omitted. As far as the general question was concerned, without attempting to give Shawcross advice in the same vigorous and unequivocal terms as Evatt was using, I let him know that I had some doubt as to the wisdom or necessity of taking precipitate action in defining the relations of Ireland with the Commonwealth as a result of the repeal of the External Relations Act.

5. Since the United Kingdom Government intends to dispatch this note immediately to the Irish Government, there was little that I could do except to request that the references to Canada and the Commonwealth in the first two paragraphs be removed.

6. I have informed Robertson by telephone of my interview with Shawcross. Robertson had heard nothing of proposed note to Irish Government and was most perturbed to learn of its contents generally and of specific reference to Canada. He said that he would get in touch with Noel-Baker at once. I am repeating this and subsequent telegram to London.

888.

DEA/50021-40

*La délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies à Paris
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to United Nations General Assembly in Paris
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 382

Paris, November 12, 1948

TOP SECRET. MOST IMMEDIATE.

Repeated to London as No. 106.

Reference my immediately preceding telegram relations of Ireland with the Commonwealth, following is text of memorandum which was handed to me by Shawcross this afternoon. This memorandum was accompanied by a more extensive statement of the legal position, copy of which we will forward by bag.† Text begins:

When Mr. Costello announced in Canada that it was the intention of the Eire Government to procure the repeal of the Eire Executive Authority (External Relations) Act, 1936, it seemed to the United Kingdom Government that it would be useful if a frank discussion could take place as to the possible implications of such a repeal. Subsequently, at the invitation of the United Kingdom Government, Mr. McBride and Mr. McGilligan met at Chequers on October 17th with representatives of the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia and New Zealand and a preliminary and informal discussion took place as to the possible implications of the repeal of that Act. Since that date your aide mémoire of the 20th October has been received and considered by the United Kingdom Government.

2. The United Kingdom Government has been glad to learn that the Eire Government welcomed the frank and friendly nature of these discussions, and desires to continue close relationship between Eire and the countries of the Commonwealth. For their part, the United Kingdom Government would also greatly welcome the continuance of such relationship.

3. At the meeting at Chequers, it was stated on behalf of the United Kingdom Government that preliminary consideration had been given to the legal implications of the repeal. Since this meeting the United Kingdom Government have obtained formal advice from the Lord Chancellor and the law officers as to the consequences which would ensue in law if Eire repealed the External Relations Act. The effect of the advice which has been received may be summarily stated as follows:

4. The repeal by the Eire Government of the Eire Executive Authority (External Relations) Act, 1936, would have the result that Eire would become, for the purpose of "most-favoured-nations" treaties, a foreign country.

5. The most important of the practical consequences which follow is that other foreign countries, whose commercial treaties with the United Kingdom include a "most-favoured-nation" clause, would be able to claim and to make good their claim before the International Court of Justice, that the United Kingdom should extend to them and their nationals any special invitations or privileges which the United Kingdom accorded to Eire or her citizens. This claim would be made in respect of trade relations and treatment of nationals.

6. As regards trade relations, the United Kingdom has treaties with a large number of other foreign countries in which it has undertaken to accord to those countries treatment not less favourable than that accorded to any other foreign country. If Eire became a foreign state, such countries could claim that they should be treated not less favourably than Eire. The United Kingdom would therefore either have to withdraw trade preference which she now accords to Eire; or, if she made no change in her treatment of Eire, the consequence would be that, except for a few protective and revenue duties, the United Kingdom Government could have virtually no tariff, because every important country would have to be granted the almost universal free entry now enjoyed by Eire. For these reasons it would be difficult to avoid the consequence that the United Kingdom Government would be compelled to take action to terminate its commitments to accord preferential treatment in customs matters to Eire goods.

7. As regards the treatment of nationals, if Eire became a foreign state, any attempt to continue to treat Eire citizens in the United Kingdom otherwise than as aliens might provoke demands from numerous foreign countries under their treaties with the United Kingdom that their nationals should enjoy similar privileges in the United Kingdom. If such demands were conceded, it would be impossible to operate in anything like its present form the whole of the United Kingdom system of aliens control. The United Kingdom Government would therefore have no alternative but to bring Eire citizens under the ordinary aliens control applicable to foreign nationals.

8. There are other respects as well in which the special relations between the two countries might have to be adjusted to take account of the changed status in terms of international law.

9. The United Kingdom Government think it right to inform the Eire Government at once of the advice which they have received as to the legal position and of the difficulties which are likely to flow from the repeal of the External Relations Act. If the Eire Government take a different view of the legal implications of the step which they propose to take, they might think it useful if discussions were arranged between the United Kingdom Government's legal advisers and any legal advisers whom the Eire Government might desire to appoint for this purpose. The Lord Chancellor and the law officers would willingly take part in any such discussion. Text ends.

889.

DEA/50021-40

*La délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies à Paris
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to United Nations General Assembly in Paris
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 389

Paris, November 14, 1948

TOP SECRET. MOST IMMEDIATE.

My telegram No. 382, Ireland.

On Saturday, November 13th, I learned from United Kingdom authorities that their plans had been changed in regard to memorandum, text of which was sent with my telegram under reference. As result of report by Shawcross on his conversation with Evatt and myself, and particularly because of view expressed strongly by Evatt that undertaking made at Chequers had not been fulfilled, United Kingdom Government had decided not to send memorandum under reference. Instead, they had sent interim reply to communication from Government of Ireland, stating that legal position was under consideration and that they hoped Irish Government would not issue Orders in Council putting proposed Act into effect before opportunity had been given for further discussion.

2. The United Kingdom authorities asked whether meeting with Evatt, Fraser and myself could be arranged to take place in Paris today (Sunday). I agreed to this meeting and asked Robertson to attend. United Kingdom delegation which arrived this morning consisted of Noel-Baker, Jowett, Brook (Cabinet Office), Machtig and Laithwaite of Commonwealth Relations Office, Brass and Newsam of Home Office, Rowlatt and Holmes of Treasury and Board of Trade. Meeting was held in British Embassy at 11:00 a.m. I was accompanied by Robertson and Riddell. Evatt and Beasley represented Australia and Fraser was accompanied by Mackintosh.

3. In the course of a long discussion, Jowett and other United Kingdom Ministers and officials stated problems which would arise for United Kingdom when Irish Parliament repealed the External Relations Act. For the most part, questions raised were of a technical and legal character with which we were already familiar. Jowett seemed genuinely concerned lest United Kingdom would be found in default, in any action which might be initiated in International Court of Justice, in regard to its treaty obligations if it did not henceforth regard Ireland strictly as a foreign Power. He quoted from United Kingdom commercial agreement with Denmark which provides a special position for countries of the Commonwealth, and said there could be no shadow of doubt that, since Ireland had declared itself no longer a member of the Commonwealth, continuation of preferences for Ireland would constitute a breach of this treaty.

4. Jowett appealed at frequent intervals to United Kingdom officials present, who gave accounts of practical difficulties which would arise, particularly in regard to foreign trade and nationality, as a result of proposed Irish legislation. From what was said, it seems clear that United Kingdom desire to clarify the legal position arises in large measure as a result of administrative problems which are being put forward by various branches of the Civil Service. Jowett also indicated that clarification of the position would be demanded in the House, and he did not think it possible to satisfy the opposition for long with temporizing answers.

5. Evatt, Fraser and myself all questioned the necessity or expediency of taking immediate action to define the new legal relationships between the United Kingdom and Ireland. Evatt referred to desire which Irish representatives had shown at Chequers to find some new form of association and questioned whether continuation of present trade and nationality arrangements for Ireland would, in fact, be challenged in international law. He pointed out that United Kingdom legislation now stated that Irish, though not British citizens, were, nevertheless, not aliens. If Irish would pass similar legislation, this in itself would constitute differentiation which might be used to justify special position for Ireland as distinct from other foreign countries. In any case, this possibility should be explored. Fraser, with unusual cogency, urged United Kingdom Government to avoid action which might greatly weaken the Commonwealth. If Ireland were read out of the partnership, it might soon be necessary to follow a similar course with India and South Africa. Little would then be left of the Commonwealth, and public opinion in New Zealand would certainly view proposed action in regard to Ireland as a first step in this direction.

6. While I did not make as strong a case against proposed United Kingdom action as Evatt and Fraser, I suggested that position might not be as urgent and critical as Jowett suggested. Position of Ireland in the Commonwealth had been equivocal for over a decade. In spite of External Relations Act, which could be interpreted primarily as a measure to reduce association with the Commonwealth, and in spite also of neutrality during the war, relationship of Ireland with Commonwealth had never been challenged. It might not now be challenged immediately, and there might be time to work out some new formula. Robertson added that, with special reference to trade agreements, Irish themselves would have to provide some answer to problem which was being created for them as for United Kingdom. In regard to Geneva and Havana Agreements, a number of signatories would have to face up to special difficulties arising from particular trade arrangements, and legal consequences of proposed Irish legislation might not be as precise as United Kingdom authorities were suggesting.

7. It was finally agreed that, in reply to an aide mémoire which had been given by Irish Government to Commonwealth representatives who attended meeting at Chequers, Irish should be asked if they would take part in further consultations with Evatt, Fraser, Jowett and myself, preferably before Wednesday. They were also to be offered choice of Dublin, London or Paris for this meeting. Object of this consultation is not to persuade Irish from repealing External Relations Act, but to see if they will not take some complementary action which will make it possible to distinguish them from other foreign States.

8. My immediately following teletype contains text of message which was sent by Mr. Noel-Baker to United Kingdom representative in Dublin today.

9. I have informed Mr. Turgeon by telephone of substance of this message and I am sending him a copy of the telegram by air bag. I have also given a copy of the telegram to Mr. Robertson.

890.

DEA/50021-40

*La délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies à Paris
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to United Nations General Assembly in Paris
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 390

Paris, November 14, 1948

TOP SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

My immediately preceding teletype. Following is text of message from Mr. Noel-Baker to the United Kingdom representative in Dublin referred to in my immediately preceding teletype, Begins: Please deliver the following message immediately to Mr. Costello or Mr. McBride in continuation of our aide mémoire of yesterday.

The Lord Chancellor and the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations have today discussed the position further with the Prime Minister of New Zealand, Deputy Prime Minister of Australia and Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs. It was the unanimous view of all those present that it would be most desirable if, in continuation of the talks at Chequers on 17th October, further discussion could be held with Eire Ministers at the earliest possible date and if possible before the introduction of the Bill for the repeal of the External Relations Act. They earnestly hope that the Eire Government will be willing to join in such discussions with representatives of the Governments of Canada, Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom either in Paris, London or Dublin. Ends.

891.

DEA/50021-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], November 16, 1948

RELATIONS OF IRELAND WITH THE COMMONWEALTH

You are aware that the Irish Government has declared its intention of repealing the External Relations Act, which provides the last remaining constitutional link between Ireland and the Crown. The Irish Government proposes to give notice of the necessary legislation in the Irish Parliament tomorrow but the text of the bill will not be published for a few days.

2. The United Kingdom Government informed us last week that they intended to send a note to the Irish Government to warn it of the full legal consequences which would follow from the repeal of the Act, particularly in regard to the preferential tariff treatment of Irish goods and the privileged status of Irish nationals. This was to have been in reply to the Irish note of October 20, which was also handed to Mr. St. Laurent in London. Mr. Pearson and Dr. Evatt were shown the draft United Kingdom note in Paris on November 12 and both objected to the references in it to Canada and Australia, as well as to Commonwealth countries generally. They also made certain other observations on it. As a consequence the United Kingdom note was not delivered and instead an interim reply was sent to the Irish Government stating that the legal position was under consideration, and that it was hoped Orders-in-Council putting the repeal into effect would not be issued before opportunity had been given for further discussion.

3. On Sunday, November 14, a further meeting was held in Paris with representatives of the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia and New Zealand. Mr. Robertson went to Paris to be with Mr. Pearson for this meeting. The United Kingdom representatives gave a full account of the practical and legal difficulties which would arise, particularly in regard to foreign trade and nationality, as the result of the proposed Irish legislation. These would arise primarily out of the "most-favoured-nation" clauses in a number of commercial agreements. Dr. Evatt, Mr. Fraser and Mr. Pearson all questioned the necessity or expediency of taking immediate action to define the new legal relationships between the United Kingdom and Ireland. Dr. Evatt recalled that at the meeting at Chequers on October 17 it was hoped that the Irish would propose some new form of association. Mr. Pearson observed that the new relationship of Ireland with the Commonwealth might not be challenged immediately by foreign governments and that there might be time to work out some new formula.

4. The meeting agreed that the Irish Government should be asked if it would take part in consultations further to the meeting at Chequers, either in Dublin, London or Paris, and preferably before today. The object of this consultation would not be to persuade the Irish Government from repealing the External Relations Act but to see if they would not take some complementary action which would make it possible to distinguish Ireland from other foreign states.

5. The Irish High Commissioner has handed to us today a copy of the proposed bill. Apart from repealing the External Relations Act, it declares that the description of the State shall be "the Republic of Ireland". This will also be the name of the Act which will come into operation at a date to be fixed by order.

6. It will be recalled that at the meeting at Chequers Mr. St. Laurent suggested that the initiative in seeking a special form of association would probably have to be taken by the Irish Government, and that a special relationship might, in the first instance, be established with the United Kingdom. This might prove to be a pattern for special relations with other Commonwealth countries.

7. A special Inter-Departmental Committee has been examining the question of continuing to exchange trade preferences with Ireland after the repeal of the External Relations Act. It has reached the conclusion that the existing preferences could be legally retained under the relevant provisions of the Geneva Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, as against the Contracting Parties, though this could perhaps be attacked on the grounds of the intent of the relevant provisions of G.A.T.T. There would be legal difficulties with non-contracting countries which have most-favoured-nation clauses in trade agreements with Canada.

8. It is thought that our customs tariff would have to be amended in view of the fact that at present British preferential treatment can be extended to "British countries only". Although no definition is given of a "British country", allegiance to the King is an implied condition. Thus, irrespective of the provisions of G.A.T.T., it appears that we could not continue to grant British preferential tariff treatment to Ireland without amending legislation.

9. The report of this Committee is now being studied by the External Trade Policy Committee and will go forward to the Cabinet Committee in due course. An initial examination of trade statistics indicates that the preferences received from and granted to Ireland are relatively unimportant to both countries. The report to the Cabinet Committee on External Trade Policy will develop this point in greater detail.

10. The question of the treatment of Irish nationals as British subjects, after the repeal of the Act, is under examination. Under our present law Irish citizens are British subjects and Ireland is listed in the First Schedule of the Citizenship Act as a "country of the British Commonwealth".

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

892.

DEA/50021-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies à Paris

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Delegation to United Nations General Assembly in Paris

TELEGRAM 261

Ottawa, November 17, 1948

SECRET

Repeat to Dublin No. 58; London No. 1944.

Following for Pearson. Your telegram No. 389 November 14. Relations of Ireland with the Commonwealth.

An interdepartmental sub-committee has been examining the effect on our trade and tariff relations with Ireland of the repeal of the External Relations Act, and has expressed the following tentative views and conclusions:

(a) The existing preferences could legally be retained under the Geneva Agreement on Tariffs and Trade as against the Contracting Parties of G.A.T.T., not members of the Commonwealth, though they might be attacked on the ground that the intent was to permit preferences between territories which are members of the Commonwealth. We feel we could meet such an attack.

(b) Some modifications would have to be made in our trade agreements with countries which are not parties to G.A.T.T. insofar as these agreements provide preference exception to the most-favoured-nation clause in respect of "countries under the sovereignty of the King . . ."

(c) The customs tariff would have to be amended by Act of Parliament in order to continue to grant preferences to a country which is not a "British country".

(d) The preferences received and granted by Canada are relatively unimportant and the trade in these items is small. There is, however, some value in their retention, particularly for bargaining purposes, if Canada is called upon in the future to negotiate such preferences under G.A.T.T.

2. The question of the treatment of Irish nationals after the repeal of the Act is under examination. As you know, under our present law, Irish citizens are British subjects and Ireland is listed in the First Schedule of the Citizenship Act as a "country of the British Commonwealth."

3. Mr. Hearne handed us today a copy of the bill which will be introduced in the Dail tomorrow, but may not be published before November 24. Apart from repealing the External Relations Act, it declares that the description of the State shall be "the republic of Ireland". The President on the advice of the Government will exercise executive functions in connection with external relations. The Act will come into operation on a date to be fixed by Order. It is to be called the "Republic of Ireland Act." This telegram is being repeated to Mr. Turgeon and Canada House.

893.

DEA/50021-40

*La délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies à Paris
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to United Nations General Assembly in Paris
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 420

Paris, November 19, 1948

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Reference my telegrams No. 389 and No. 390, November 15th. Ireland.

Discussions with Irish Ministers, who were accompanied by Boland, Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, began on November 16th and were concluded in the afternoon of November 17th, with agreement on the terms of the press statement transmitted to you as our telegram No. 405, November 16th.

2. McBride argued that Ireland had in fact and in law been out of the Commonwealth since 1937 and contended very plausibly that impending repeal of their External Relations Act should not, and need not, alter the de facto position under which Irish nationals are not treated as aliens nor Irish goods as foreign goods in the countries of the Commonwealth. If the Commonwealth countries found this thesis too much for them to accept and should feel compelled to treat Irish goods as foreign goods and Irishmen as aliens, the Irish Government would regretfully accept these consequences of the repeal of the External Relations Act but they would not be deterred from their decision to proceed with repeal nor could they regard their country as a member of the Commonwealth. At the same time, he insisted very earnestly that his Government and people felt themselves in a very special relationship to the countries of the Commonwealth, and that if this relationship is external, but very friendly, association could be recognized and accepted by the members of the Commonwealth there could be foundation laid for closer and friendlier co-operation than had ever existed before.

3. So far as the maintenance of trade preferences was concerned, the Irish Government was confident that it could continue to accord them to Commonwealth countries. A standard clause in all their commercial treaties reserved the position of preferences extended to countries of the British Commonwealth. Their position had been fully protected by the language of the Preferences Section of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and was further fortified by the opinion which the United States Department of State appears to have recently expressed to the effect that the repeal of the External Relations Act would not of itself permit the United States to share in preferences exchanged between Ireland and the countries of the Commonwealth.

4. With respect to treatment of nationals, the Irish argued, less convincingly, that they were not in fact treating British subjects as foreigners since exceptional orders made under the authority of their Aliens Act freed British subjects from most of the substantial disabilities to which aliens in Ireland were ordinarily subject. The general sense of the discussions from which the Irish Ministers did not dissent was that the existing legal status in Ireland of nationals of Commonwealth countries was not in fact consistent with the Irish statement that they did not, and did not wish to, regard nationals of Commonwealth countries as foreigners. It was however agreed that if Ireland undertook to accord to nationals of Commonwealth countries in Ireland a legal status similar to that given to Eire nationals in the United Kingdom under the new United Kingdom Nationality Act, where they are expressly declared not to be aliens although not Commonwealth citizens or British subjects, then there would be reasonable legal ground for arguing that although Ireland was out of the Commonwealth it had not become a foreign country. At this point the Irish Ministers indicated that it had been their intention to take steps to place the legal status of British subjects in Ireland on a more satisfactory footing. They had power to do so by Order-in-Council under their Citizenship Act and would take interim action under this authority pending the statutory amendment of their Citizenship Act which they hoped to bring in quite shortly.

5. The upshot of the argument, which was protracted but friendly, was that the representatives taking part in the discussions should recommend to their respective Governments that they recognize that, while Ireland was no longer a member of the Commonwealth, neither was it a foreign country, and that on these assumptions all the Commonwealth countries should try to protect and preserve the special relationships in respect of trade and the treatment of nationals that at present exist as between Ireland and the countries of the Commonwealth.

894.

DEA/50021-40

*La délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies à Paris
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to United Nations General Assembly in Paris
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 421

Paris, November 19, 1948

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Reference my immediately preceding telegram No. 420, November 19th, and your No. 261, November 16th, which was received after our talks with the Irish Ministers had ended.

2. I fully share your view under point one of paragraph 1 (a) that we should have no real difficulty in maintaining the preferences we presently give Ireland as against other signatories under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and am hopeful we could defend them against claims from countries with most-favoured-nation rights which are not signatories to the Geneva Agreement. Since we are likely to have to negotiate new commercial arrangements with countries which do not accede to the Geneva Agreement, it should not be too difficult to secure agreement on a revised form of preferential exception clause which would protect our exchange of preferences with Ireland.

3. To do our part in completing the system of exchange of citizenship rights which is required to support the thesis that Ireland though out of the Commonwealth, is not a foreign country, I think we should consent to consider amending our Citizenship Act so as to schedule Irish nationals in a separate category — not British subjects and yet expressly not aliens. In other words, we should have to bring our Act in this respect into substantial conformity with the relevant provisions of the new United Kingdom Nationality Act.

895.

DEA/50021-40

*Le haut-commissaire du Royaume-Uni
au premier ministre*

*High Commissioner for United Kingdom
to Prime Minister*

SECRET

Ottawa, November 22, 1948

My dear Prime Minister,

EIRE

You will no doubt have received from Mr. Pearson an account of the discussions in Paris with Eire Ministers on 16th November, in continuation of the discussions at Chequers on 17th October, in which you yourself took part. I enclose a note on the situation as it was left, according to the understanding of the United Kingdom Government, at the close of the Paris discussions.

Since then, the Eire Government have informed the United Kingdom Government that they are prepared to go forward on the basis outlined in paragraph 3 of the enclosed note. The United Kingdom Government are replying that they will be prepared to do the same on the assumption that the other Commonwealth Governments, with whom the United Kingdom Government are in urgent communication, are for their part agreeable.

I have accordingly been asked, in communicating the enclosures to you, to enquire urgently whether the Canadian Government would agree for their part to go forward on the basis described in paragraph 3 of the enclosed note, and, if so, whether they, like the United Kingdom Government, would be prepared to make a public statement corresponding to the United Kingdom statement. The draft United Kingdom statement, which is enclosed, is being considered by Ministers in London today, and it is intended that the final text should be agreed with the Eire Government. I will inform you of any amendments.

Since the United Kingdom Government feel it necessary to state their position on 25th November, that is, the day after the debate in Dublin, they would greatly appreciate it if they could be informed of the Canadian Government's views before 24th November. If the Canadian Government decide to make a corresponding statement, they will no doubt similarly wish to do so after, rather than before, the Dublin debate.

Yours sincerely,

ALEC CLUTTERBUCK

[PIÈCE JOINTE 1/ENCLOSURE 1]

Note du haut-commissariat du Royaume-Uni

Memorandum by High Commission for United Kingdom

SECRET

Ottawa, November 22, 1948

EIRE: POSITION RESULTING FROM PARIS DISCUSSIONS
ON 16TH NOVEMBER, 1948

Discussions took place in Paris on 16th November between Eire Ministers and Mr. Fraser, Mr. Pearson, Dr. Evatt, Lord Jowitt and Mr. Noel-Baker to consider the position which would result from the coming into force of the Act to repeal the Eire External Relations Act. These were in continuation of the similar discussions at Chequers on 17th October. The Eire Act, entitled the Republic of Ireland Act, was given a first reading in the Dail on 17th November, and the second reading is to be taken on Wednesday, 24th November.

2. The discussions at Paris were broadly on the question whether it would be possible for Eire and the Commonwealth countries to continue to grant privileged treatment inter se in respect of trade and nationality, having regard to the terms of the most-favoured-nation clauses of commercial treaties between the various Commonwealth countries and foreign countries. All those present at the meeting appreciated the international difficulties which might result from the removal of Eire's link with the Crown. The Canadian, Australian, New Zealand and Eire representatives were, however, confident as to the possibilities, under international law and practice, of continuing the status quo as regards the exchange of privileges after the coming into force of the Republic of Ireland Act. The United Kingdom representatives were particularly concerned in relation to the large amount of United Kingdom export trade to foreign countries which might be affected.

3. The following is a summary of the position as it was left at the conclusion of the Paris discussions on 16th November. These proposals were ad referendum to the Governments.

(i) In speeches in the Dail on the Republic of Ireland Bill, the spokesman of the Eire Government will be careful to avoid saying anything which would increase the legal and political difficulties which Commonwealth Governments will have in explaining the position which will result from this legislation.

(ii) For their part Commonwealth Governments will refrain from public statements which will make it more difficult for them to maintain that, despite the repeal of the External Relations Act, Eire is not a foreign country.

(iii) When the British Nationality Act, 1948, comes into operation on 1st January, 1949, the Eire Government will make an order under Section 23(2) of their Citizenship Act providing that, in view of Section 3 of the United Kingdom Act, citizens of the United Kingdom and Colonies shall enjoy comparable rights and privileges in Eire. As and when other Commonwealth countries bring into effect legislation corresponding to Section 3 of the British Nationality Act, 1948, the Eire Government will extend to them, by orders made under Section 23(2) of their Citizenship Act, corresponding rights of citizenship.

(iv) At a later stage, and possibly within the next six months or so, the Eire Government will undertake a comprehensive revision of their citizenship laws; and they will then take the opportunity of making a direct statutory provision conferring citizenship rights comparable with those conferred by Section 3 of the British Nationality Act, 1948, on the citizens of all such Commonwealth countries as have enacted legislation corresponding to that Section.

(v) The intention to take the action summarised in sub-paragraphs (iii) and (iv) above will be announced in the course of the debates on the bill for the repeal of the External Relations Act.

(vi) The Eire Government will collaborate with the United Kingdom Government, and any other interested Commonwealth Governments, in resisting any claims which may be made by foreign countries, on most-favoured-nation grounds, to share the special privileges which Eire and those countries will continue to accord to one another and to one another's citizens, whether in matters of trade or in the treatment of nationals.

4. The Eire Government have informed the United Kingdom Government that they are prepared to go forward on this basis. The United Kingdom Government will be prepared to do so, provided that the other Commonwealth Governments are in agreement.

5. The matter is very urgent as the Eire Government must state their position when the second reading of their bill is taken in the Dail on 24th November. Moreover, the United Kingdom Government regard it as essential to make a corresponding statement in Parliament as to their attitude on Thursday, 25th November, i.e. the day following the Dail second reading debate.

6. As regards the statement to be made by the Eire Government in the Dail on 24th November, it was suggested to Mr. McBride at Paris that this might be in the sense of the text attached. The Eire Government are now considering this text (which, it has been pointed out, would in any case need amendment to cover all the countries of the Commonwealth).

7. As regards the statement to be made by the United Kingdom Government in Parliament on 25th November, a first draft has been prepared on the official level, the text of which is also attached.

[PIÈCE JOINTE 2/ENCLOSURE 2]

Projet d'une déclaration du gouvernement du Royaume-Uni

Draft Statement by Government of United Kingdom

SECRET

[London, November 22, 1948]

TEXT OF STATEMENT TO BE MADE BY EIRE GOVERNMENT IN THE DAIL, 24TH NOVEMBER, 1948

From the point of view of Ireland the factual relationship between it and the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia and New Zealand is clear. Ireland does not and, when the External Relations Act, 1936, is repealed, will not regard the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia or New Zealand as "foreign" countries or treat their peoples as "foreigners". On the contrary the fact is that the citizens of Ireland while resident in the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia or New Zealand are treated by law or practice not as "foreigners" or aliens but as entitled to the rights and privileges of nationals or citizens of those nations. Similarly, while in Ireland, the nationals or citizens of the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia or New Zealand are treated not as foreigners or aliens but as entitled to the rights and privileges of citizens of Ireland. These facts not only negative the view that Ireland and the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia and New Zealand are to be regarded as "foreign" countries, but they also evidence the fact of a special association which it is the firm desire and intention of Ireland to maintain and strengthen.

896.

DEA/50021-40

*La délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies à Paris
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to United Nations General Assembly in Paris
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 455

Paris, November 22, 1948

SECRET

Repeated to London as No. 119.

The United Kingdom delegation in Paris has told us that they have informed you concerning the approach which the United Kingdom High Commissioner in Ottawa has been instructed to make to you in connection with the repeal of the Irish External Relations Act. I understand that United Kingdom Government are prepared to go forward on the basis which has been agreed with the Government of Ireland, provided that other Governments of the Commonwealth are for their part agreeable.

2. As you will have gathered from my previous communications, our conversations here with members of the Irish Government were friendly and helpful, and there was general agreement that we should make some effort to meet the situation created by the repeal of the Irish External Relations Act in some way which would not fix upon the Irish the designation of foreigners. I hope, therefore, that it will be possible for the Canadian Government to issue some statement along the general lines of that contained in the text of the proposed statement by the United Kingdom Government without, of course, going into the same detail. I should hope also that some examination could then be made of our own legislation in order to determine whether the status of the Irish in Canada will in fact be altered by the repeal of the External Relations Act, and that consideration will be given to suitable amendments in this legislation if that should be necessary to prevent the Irish in Canada from being regarded as "Foreigners" or to prevent Ireland from becoming a "Foreign" country.

897.

DEA/50021-40

Le premier ministre au haut-commissaire du Royaume-Uni Prime Minister to High Commissioner for United Kingdom

SECRET

Ottawa, November 24, 1948

Dear Sir Alexander [Clutterbuck],

I have discussed with my colleagues the questions raised in your letter of November 22, 1948, concerning the repeal by the Government of Ireland of its External Relations Act.

The proposals contained in paragraph 3 of the note dated November 22, which was enclosed with your letter, appear to be generally acceptable although the question of bringing into effect in Canada legislation corresponding to Section 3 of the British Nationality Act 1948 will have to receive further consideration.

The Canadian Government intends to make, on November 25, a public statement along the lines of the draft which I am enclosing with this letter.†

With regard to the proposed United Kingdom Government statement, I would like to suggest a few modifications which I think would make it more generally acceptable:

(a) In the second paragraph it would appear desirable to delete from the first sentence the words "during a visit to Canada." This would also necessitate deletion of the words "on his return to Eire" in the second sentence of the same paragraph.

(b) In the third paragraph presumably the word "and" should be inserted between the words "Australia" and "New Zealand" and the expression "and other Commonwealth countries" should be deleted.

(c) The last sentence of paragraph 6 should be deleted. The views of the Canadian Government are being made known in the enclosed draft statement.

(d) In the final paragraph the expression "and legislation on similar lines has been passed or is in contemplation in other Commonwealth countries" should be deleted. An indication that measures are under study by the Canadian Government is given in the enclosed draft statement.

Yours sincerely,

L.S. ST. LAURENT

898.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], November 24, 1948

...

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS; POSITION OF IRELAND

3. The Prime Minister reported that, following discussions at Chequers during the meeting of Prime Ministers, members of the Irish government had met in Paris with Ministers of the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand and Canada (Mr. Pearson) to consider the position which would result from the repeal of the Irish External Relations Act.

It was recognized that upon the enactment of this bill (the Republic of Ireland Act), Ireland would no longer be one of the nations of the Commonwealth. At the same time the government of Ireland wished to recognize the existence of a specially close relationship with the Commonwealth countries and desired that this relationship be maintained. Representatives of the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand and Canada also wished to continue to have close and friendly relations with Ireland.

4. Mr. St. Laurent read a communication from the U.K. High Commissioner setting out the U.K. government's understanding of the situation at the close of the Paris discussions:

Both the Irish and Commonwealth governments would refrain from statements which would increase legal and political difficulties pending repeal of the External Relations Act. Upon passing of the Act, the Irish government would take the necessary steps to continue for citizens of Commonwealth countries the special position they now enjoyed. The Irish and Commonwealth governments would resist claims by foreign countries on most-favoured-nation grounds to share the special privileges which Ireland and those countries would continue to accord one another in respect of trade.

It now appeared that the Irish legislation was to be enacted forthwith and the U.K. government proposed to have a statement made in the House of Commons the following day describing the situation which would follow. The effect of this would be that Ireland would cease to be a nation of the Commonwealth, but would continue in a special relationship with the Commonwealth nations.

(Letter, U.K. High Commissioner to the Prime Minister and attached note and draft statements, Nov. 22, 1948).

5. Mr. St. Laurent then submitted and read a draft reply to Sir Alexander Clutterbuck's communication with which was enclosed a draft public statement concerning Canada's relationship with Ireland in the new situation.

The letter proposed certain modifications in the U.K. government's draft statement on the subject.

(Letter, Prime Minister to U.K. High Commissioner and draft statement enclosed, Nov. 24, 1948).

6. Mr. St. Laurent read the draft statement referred to in the preceding paragraph:

After referring to the meetings which had taken place in Paris with representatives of the United Kingdom, Australian and New Zealand governments, the statement went on to say that the government had been giving consideration to the position which would result when the Republic of Ireland Act came into force.

The Prime Minister of Ireland had now stated that Ireland recognized and confirmed the existence of a specially close relationship with the countries of the Commonwealth; this relationship should be maintained and strengthened.

The Canadian government also desired that close and friendly relations between Canada and Ireland be maintained and strengthened. They were studying the measures which might be necessary and possible to give effect to that desire.

7. The Minister of National Defence, as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, drew attention to the legal difficulties involved in having Ireland accorded the same position as she enjoyed prior to enactment of the pending Irish legislation.

Nevertheless for political reasons the governments of the Commonwealth countries were all satisfied that, while Ireland would no longer be a nation of the Commonwealth, she would not be treated as a foreign country.

8. Mr. St. Laurent added that it had not been thought that the government should give any commitment regarding any amendment to the Citizenship Act. That was a matter which would have to be considered later on.

9. The Cabinet, after further discussion, approved the draft communication to the U.K. government on the subject of relations with Ireland and, with certain amendments, the draft statement submitted by the Prime Minister; the statement to be made public by Mr. St. Laurent on November 25th.

...

899.

DEA/50021-40

*Le haut-commissaire suppléant du Royaume-Uni
au premier ministre*

*Deputy High Commissioner for United Kingdom
to Prime Minister*

TOP SECRET

Ottawa, November 25, 1948

Dear Prime Minister,

EIRE

In the High Commissioner's absence from Ottawa, I am writing, on instructions from the Secretary of State, to explain that the United Kingdom Government's view of their declaration today about Eire is that the United Kingdom Government will do their utmost to maintain the status quo of trade and citizenship privileges, but that, if, despite their efforts, a foreign country successfully challenges the grant of these privileges in whole or in part, there will be no alternative to their amendment or discontinuance.

Yours sincerely,

G.B. SHANNON

900.

DEA/50021-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in United Kingdom*

TELEGRAM 1998

Ottawa, November 26, 1948

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Robertson from Heenev, Begins: From what I could make out in our telephone conversation yesterday I gather that U.K. authorities feel that in dealing with the new Irish situation we have given undue emphasis to the difficulties involved and that they have the impression that we are not disposed to do what we can to provide for the special relationship with Commonwealth countries which the Irish desire and the U.K. government are prepared to facilitate.

2. This impression may have arisen from reports of Clutterbuck's conversations here in which, quite naturally, we have tried to make clear the differences between our legal situation and that of the United Kingdom, particularly with respect to the position of Irish citizens.

3. The legal position here is really very complicated. It was for this reason that our Ministers did not feel that they could include in our press release a reference similar to that in Mr. Attlee's statement to the effect that it would not, repeat not, follow from the new Irish legislation that Ireland would have to be treated as a foreign country and Irish citizens as foreigners. This omission did not arise from any lack of desire on our part to meet the wishes of the Irish government as best we could.

4. I expect to be able to send you a second telegram shortly stating the essentials of the legal situation as we understand it both with respect to citizenship and trade arrangements. Reference is being made to Justice for clarification of the more obscure questions.

5. Meantime, however, there is no reason why you should not assure U.K. authorities that the Canadian government have no, repeat no, desire to treat Ireland as a foreign country or to treat Irish citizens as foreigners. The government cannot say now precisely what steps they will take to meet the situation. Further the government may not be able to introduce legislation at the coming Session. Nevertheless my own view is that we will be able somehow to achieve an arrangement similar to that which has been accepted by the U.K. government.

6. This is a personal telegram to you. I have, however, read it to Mr. Claxton and he agrees that it should go forward and that, in your own judgment you may use what it contains for any oral explanations you may think it wise to make to authorities in the United Kingdom. Ends.

901.

DEA/50021-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in United Kingdom*

TELEGRAM 2000

Ottawa, November 26, 1948

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Robertson from Heeny, Begins: Reference my telegram 1998 of today on Ireland.

2. The following seems to Gordon [R.G.] Robertson and myself to be the legal position with regard to nationality.

3. The Canadian Citizenship Act gives Irish citizens no special status as such, but those who had the status of British subject under the Naturalization Act in effect in Canada up to January 1st, 1947, retain that status. Specifically, the effect of our legislation has been interpreted in practice to be that Irish citizens who became such under Irish law before 1935 were British subjects and have retained that status under Canadian law. Irish citizens who became such after the Irish Citizenship Act of 1935 and who were in Canada before January 1st, 1947, had the status of British subject under our Naturalization Act and this status they retain under the Citizenship Act. With regard to Irish citizens who acquired that status on or after January 1st, 1947, the position also seems to be clear (disregarding cases of dual nationality). Such persons do not, repeat not, have the status of British subject under our law, nor is there any special status for them as Irish citizens. The doubtful group are those persons who became Irish citizens after the Irish Citizenship Act of 1935 and who were not, repeat not, in Canada before January 1st, 1947. It is not clear whether such persons would, on coming to Canada, be deemed to have the status of British subject under our law.

4. It is this complicated and doubtful legal position which led the government to feel that they could not say categorically that Irish citizens as such are not "foreigners" under Canadian law. A reference is being made to the Department of Justice for a ruling to clarify the entire position.

5. Our Act contains no provision similar to Section 3 of the United Kingdom Act. To give Irish citizens, as such, a special position would require amendment to the Citizenship Act.

6. Any federal legislation for the purpose of according to Irish citizens, as such, the same rights in Canada as British subjects would be limited to rights under Federal law. Federal legislation could not of course guarantee that Irish citizens as such would for Provincial purposes be treated by the laws of the Provinces in the same way as British subjects.

7. As indicated in our release yesterday, the government intend to study the measures which may be necessary and possible to meet the new situation. It is, however, very doubtful if any amendment to the Citizenship Act will be feasible at the forthcoming session.

8. The practical situation for Irish persons in Canada at present is that they will continue to be treated as British subjects because of the status they acquired as such before January 1st, 1947, when the Citizenship Act came into effect. This surely gives the Irish the substance of what they want (though not for the reasons they want it).

9. With regard to preferential trade treatment, a committee here has examined the legal and other aspects of the position. Doubtful points of law have been referred to the Department of Justice for opinion and are at present under consideration. The possibility of claim by a third country for most favoured nation treatment is recognized. The position is, however, being considered to determine what action may be necessary and desirable in an effort to meet the Irish position. Ends.

902.

DEA/50021-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in United Kingdom*

TELEGRAM 2009

Ottawa, November 27, 1948

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Following for Robertson from Reid, Begins: Republic of Ireland Bill.

My conversation with Clutterbuck on Tuesday evening, November 23. This took place between 7:10 and 7:30 p.m. and Clutterbuck was leaving Ottawa that night, so that his report to London of the conversation may possibly have suffered from hasty drafting.

2. Moran, who took part in the interview, has prepared for me a memorandum which I summarize below.

3. On Tuesday, November 23, a meeting took place in the Prime Minister's office from 4 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. to discuss the text of a proposed statement by the Canadian Government on the Republic of Ireland Bill and the proposed United Kingdom statement on the same subject. The meeting was attended by Messrs. St. Laurent, Claxton and Gibson, Coleman,<sup>28</sup> Reid, Moran, Hopkins and R.G. Robertson. Mr. St. Laurent stated at the conclusion of the meeting that he would wish to consult his colleagues in Cabinet next day before authorizing a reply to Clutterbuck's letter to him but instructed me to communicate informally to Clutterbuck immediately a provisional statement of the Canadian views and to add that following the Cabinet meeting a formal reply would be sent to Clutterbuck.

4. I gave Clutterbuck the text of the provisional Canadian suggestions for modification of the proposed United Kingdom statement. I said that it was probable that the formal reply the next day would inform Clutterbuck that the proposals contained in paragraph 3 of the note enclosed with his letter to the Prime Minister of November 22 appeared to be generally acceptable although the question of bringing into effect in Canada legislation corresponding to Section 3 of the British Nationality Act 1948 would have to receive further consideration. (I was speaking on the basis of a draft of our formal reply. The formal reply was identical with the draft except for drafting changes.)

5. I further said that the Prime Minister would be putting before Cabinet the next day a draft of a statement which he would issue on November 25. The essential part of the present draft of the statement was that the Canadian Government "fully associates itself with the desire expressed by the Government of Ireland that a special association between our two countries be recognized and that close and friendly relations should continue and be strengthened" and that "the Canadian Government is studying the measures which may be necessary to that end in the light of our understanding that, following the coming into force of the proposed Irish legislation, Ireland will no longer be a member of the Commonwealth.”

<sup>28</sup> E.H. Coleman, sous-secrétaire d'État./E.H. Coleman, Under-Secretary of State.

6. Clutterbuck said that the United Kingdom Government would be disappointed by our reply since it would not, repeat not, enable Attlee to say:

“Accordingly the United Kingdom Government will not regard the enactment of this legislation by Eire as requiring them to treat Eire as a foreign country or Eire citizens as foreigners. They have ascertained that the other members of the Commonwealth share this view and will follow the same policy. ”So far as Eire citizens are concerned the position in the United Kingdom will be governed by the British Nationality Act, 1948, and “legislation on similar lines has been passed or is in contemplation in other Commonwealth countries.” (We asked for the deletion of the second sentence and the second half of the third sentence and our draft statement did not, repeat not, go as far as Attlee’s.)

7. I explained that one difficulty in drafting a Canadian statement was that we still did not know exactly what the Prime Minister of Ireland was going to say the next day about the relationship of Ireland to the nations of the Commonwealth. All we had was a draft statement submitted to the Irish Government by the United Kingdom Government and one difficulty with this statement was that the third and fourth sentences contained, at least so far as Canada was concerned, misstatements of fact.

8. A second difficulty was that the Canadian position in respect of citizenship rights and trade preferences, after the Republic of Ireland Bill had come into force, would not be clear until we had received a legal opinion from the Deputy Minister of Justice.

9. You will note that the Tuesday evening draft referred to in paragraph 5 above goes somewhat farther than the final text issued on November 25.

10. I am repeating this telegram to Mr. Pearson and Mr. Turgeon. Ends.

903.

PCO/I-11

*Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2135

London, December 1, 1948

SECRET

Repeated to Paris as No. 204.

For Heeney from Wershof, Begins: Your telegrams No. 1998 and No. 2000 of November 27th addressed to N.A. Robertson were forwarded to him in Paris. On his instructions I called today on Norman Archer of the Commonwealth Relations Office and gave him orally the substance of your telegram No. 1998.

2. His personal understanding which cannot of course be taken as an official statement by the United Kingdom Government, is that the United Kingdom Government does not necessarily expect Canada to go as far as Section 3(2) of the British Nationality Act, i.e., to legislate to the effect that laws relating to British subjects shall continue to apply to citizens of Eire who are not British subjects. He thinks that the NUB of the understanding reached in Paris was that citizens of Eire are not to be aliens and he assumes that Canada will so legislate; in addition, it is desirable that each country of the Commonwealth should go as far as possible in the direction of assimilating the status of citizens of Eire to the status of British subjects, in order to strengthen the legal argument which may some day have to be made before an international court to prove that Ireland is not a foreign country.

3. Although Archer is not distressed by the failure of the Canadian Government, to date, to say that Canada will legislate along the lines of Section 3(2), he is surprised that the Canadian Government's published statement did not at least say flatly that Ireland will not be regarded as a foreign country and that legislation will be enacted to ensure that citizens of Ireland are not aliens. I was not able to enlighten him on this point because I do not myself understand why the Canadian statement did not go that far. When Mr. Robertson returns from Paris he may consider it desirable to have a further word with Archer on this point.

4. If you have not already seen it you may be interested in looking at my telegram No. 2120 of November 27th† addressed to the Legal Adviser in Ottawa, containing some draft amendments to the Canadian Citizenship Act. I prepared them at the request of the High Commissioner. Ends.

904.

PCO/I-11

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire en Irlande*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in Ireland

TELEGRAM 64

Ottawa, December 1, 1948

SECRET

Repeated to London and to SSEA in Paris.

Republic of Ireland Bill. The following information about the Canadian Government's attitude on the problems arising out of the Republic of Ireland Bill may be useful to you if the Irish Government initiate discussions with you on this question. You should not (repeat not), however, initiate discussions yourself at this time and you should not (repeat not) communicate in writing to the Irish Government on this question.

2. The two main problems concern citizenship and trade relations.

3. So far as citizenship is concerned our situation here is more complicated than the situation in the United Kingdom. The Canadian Citizenship Act has been interpreted in practice to mean that persons who became Irish citizens on the date on which the Irish Nationality and Citizenship Act went into force in 1935 by reason of birth, naturalization etc. before that date, together with persons who became Irish citizens after 1935 and were in Canada before January 1, 1947, have the status of British subjects under the Canadian Citizenship Act. Irish citizens who acquired that status on or after January 1, 1947 (disregarding cases of dual nationality) do not have the status of British subjects under Canadian law, nor is there any special status for them as Irish citizens. It is not clear whether those persons who became Irish citizens after the Irish Citizenship Act of 1935 and who were not in Canada before January 1, 1947, would on coming to Canada, be deemed to have the status of British subjects under Canadian law.

4. Because of this complicated legal position, the Canadian Government is unable to state categorically that Irish citizens as such are not now "foreigners" under Canadian law. A reference has been made to the Department of Justice for a ruling to clarify the entire position on citizenship.

5. The Prime Minister was therefore unable to include in his statement of November 25, a reference similar to that in Mr. Attlee's statement to the effect that it would not follow from the new Irish legislation that Ireland would have to be treated as a foreign country and Irish citizens as foreigners. This omission did not, however, arise from any lack of desire on the part of the Canadian Government to meet the wishes of the Irish Government as far as possible.

6. There are two aspects of this problem which increase our difficulties. The first is that the Canadian Citizenship Act contains no provision similar to Section 3 of the United Kingdom Act; the result is that Irish citizens, as such, could not be given a special position without an amendment to the Canadian Citizenship Act. The second is that any federal legislation for the purpose of according to Irish citizens, as such, the same rights in Canada as British subjects, would be limited to rights under federal law since federal legislation probably could not give Irish citizens a status in Canada that would ensure their being treated for provincial purposes in the same way as British subjects under the laws of the provinces.

7. As stated in the Prime Minister's statement of November 25, the Canadian Government intends to study the measures which may be necessary and possible to meet the new situation. It is, however, very doubtful whether any amendment of the Citizenship Act will be feasible at the forthcoming session of Parliament.

8. The trade problems, which arise out of the Irish desire that the nations of the Commonwealth continue to grant Ireland, on a reciprocal basis, preferential trade treatment, are perhaps even more difficult than the citizenship problem. An Interdepartmental Committee which examined the legal and other aspects of our trade and tariff relations with Ireland reached the following tentative conclusions:

(a) The Customs Tariff may conceivably have to be amended by Act of Parliament in order to continue to grant preferences to a country which is not a "British country", although the point is doubtful. It has been referred to the Department of Justice for an opinion and is at present under consideration by that Department.

(b) The existing preferences could legally be retained under the Geneva Agreement on Tariffs and Trade as against the contracting parties of G.A.T.T. (not being members of the Commonwealth). They might be attacked on the ground that the intent was to permit preferences between territories which are members of the Commonwealth, but the Committee thought that this attack could be met.

(c) Some modification would have to be made in our trade agreements with countries which are not parties to G.A.T.T. insofar as these agreements provide, as an exception to the most-favoured-nation clause, for preferences in respect of "Countries under the sovereignty of the King . . ."

9. Regarding point (c) above, the possibility of a claim by a foreign country for treatment not less favourable than that accorded by Canada to Ireland is recognized. This might, for example, be made by a Soviet satellite state, such as Poland, with which we have exchanged most-favoured-nation treatment under a convention of commerce of 1935, or Yugoslavia, since we adhered in 1928 to a clause in a United Kingdom convention providing for the exchange of most-favoured-nation treatment on a basis of reciprocity. Such action might of course be taken solely to embarrass the Canadian Government and in the hope of exposing Canada as a violator of international agreements.

10. Preferences received and granted by Canada are relatively unimportant, and the trade in items entitled to the preferential rates is small. Canada does not, for example, receive preferential tariff treatment on its main exports to Ireland, namely, wheat and flour. On the basis of 1947 figures which, as you know, were abnormally high, Canada enjoyed preferential treatment on six or seven Canadian export classifications in which the trade was over $150,000.

11. The preferences would, however, have a certain "bargaining value" if we were called upon in the future to agree to their reduction or elimination. This situation might arise as a result of Ireland's participation in tariff negotiations with Contracting Parties to GATT with a view to its accession to that Agreement. In the event that a Contracting Party (e.g., U.S.A.) should request a reduction or elimination in the preferences (e.g., lumber preferences) which Canada enjoys in Ireland, Canada, as well as Ireland, could expect compensatory tariff concessions from the Contracting Party requesting the reduction or elimination of preferences.

12. In conclusion, the Canadian Government has no desire to treat Ireland as a foreign country or to treat Irish citizens as foreigners. The Government cannot, however, say now precisely what steps it will take to meet the situation which will be created by the coming into force of the Irish Bill. Further, the Government may not be able to introduce legislation in the coming session of Parliament. Our hope, however, is that we will be able in some way to achieve an arrangement which will be similar to, though not necessarily identical with, that which has been accepted by the United Kingdom Government.

905.

DEA/50021-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], December 14, 1948

STATUS OF IRISH CITIZENS IN CANADA

Following the consideration given by Cabinet to the position of Ireland after the enactment of the Republic of Ireland Bill, Dr. E.H. Coleman and officers of this Department have been giving consideration to possible amendments to the Canadian Citizenship Act, in order to deal with the special status of Irish citizens. Dr. Coleman will be submitting this matter to the Secretary of State who will no doubt bring it before Cabinet at the appropriate time.

2. The proposed changes follow closely the new Nationality Acts of the United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand, and will cover the following points:

(1) A definition of "alien" will be added. This term will mean a person who is not a Canadian citizen, a British subject or a citizen of Ireland.

(2) It will be declared that Canadian laws will continue to have effect in relation to Irish citizens in the same manner as they have effect in relation to British subjects.

(3) A new list of the countries of the British Commonwealth in the First Schedule will be drawn up. For the first time it would appear in alphabetical order rather than the historic order of precedence which is observed in the United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand Acts. Southern Rhodesia will have to be included in this list, which is a list for citizenship purposes.

(4) It is not proposed to suggest any amendments which would call for dropping the word "British" in the expressions "British Commonwealth" or "British Commonwealth of Nations".

(5) The occasion is being taken to adopt the expression "Commonwealth citizen" as an equivalent or alternative to "British subject". This change follows closely the equivalent provision in the United Kingdom Act.

(6) The present submission will be primarily concerned with the position of Irish citizens and will not deal with any changes in the Citizenship Act which may be called for to cover the case of Newfoundland, or other minor amendments which, I believe, may be considered necessary to clarify some sections of the Act.

3. The discussions referred to above in this memorandum took place before you informed me that you hoped it would be possible to find a formula under which the desired objective could be secured without mentioning in the amendments Ireland or the Republic of Ireland by name. The Legal Adviser of the Department now has under consideration a formula which might accomplish this desired objective.

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

906.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], December 15, 1948

...

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS; IRELAND; CITIZENSHIP;
TRADE PREFERENCES

28. The Minister of National Defence as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meeting of November 24th, reported that official of the departments directly concerned had been giving consideration to the two principal questions arising as a result of the enactment of the Republic of Ireland bill, viz. "citizenship" and trade.

With respect to citizenship, the departments of the Secretary of State and External Affairs had under examination possible amendments to the Canadian Citizenship Act to deal with the special status of Irish citizens. It was expected that proposals on this subject would be ready for Cabinet consideration before long.

(External Affairs memorandum to the Acting Minister, Dec. 14, 1948).

29. Mr. Claxton said that, in the matter of preferences, the Deputy Minister of Justice had now advised that there would be no alteration in the effect of Canadian law when the Republic of Ireland Act came into force in Ireland.

The international legal aspects of the situation were still under examination by External Affairs. A full report on the trade position would shortly be available to the Cabinet Committee on External Trade Policy. The latter would deal with the position under the Canada-Ireland Trade Agreement, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and the Canada Customs Tariff Act.

(External Affairs memorandum to the Acting Minister, Dec. 14, 1948, and annexes thereto).†

30. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted the Minister's report.

...

907.

DEA/50021-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

Ottawa, December 21, 1948

RELATIONS WITH IRELAND: PROGRESS REPORT

The Republic of Ireland Act has now been signed, but as you are aware will come into force on a date to be fixed by proclamation. The United Kingdom Government thinks that the Act may be proclaimed on January 21, 1949, but hopes that the Irish Government will not find it necessary to announce a date at present. You will, of course, have seen the statement issued by the Prime Minister on November 25 indicating our attitude on the proposed constitutional changes in Ireland, and the telegram of December 1 to our High Commissioner in Dublin, which was repeated to you in Paris. For your convenience a copy of each of these is attached.

2. You may wish to be brought up to date on developments here in connection with Ireland which have occurred since the beginning of December. There are two principal aspects in our future relations with Ireland, namely citizenship and trade.

Citizenship

3. Some consideration has been given to possible amendments to the Canadian Citizenship Act in order to provide a special status for Irish citizens following the bringing into force of the Republic of Ireland Act. It was thought that these changes might be made along the lines of the United Kingdom Nationality Act, 1948, which has served as a model for similar nationality legislation in Australia and New Zealand and under which Irish citizens are placed in a special category, are not included in the definition of alien and are declared to enjoy the rights and privileges of British subjects. However, Mr. Claxton expressed the view that it might be best to avoid amendments which would make specific reference to Ireland and Irish citizens, as this might provide the occasion for debate in the House of Commons, and he hoped it would be possible to find a formula for this purpose. The Legal Adviser of the Department in conjunction with the Department of the Secretary of State, is now considering a formula under which the benefits of British subjects would be conferred on citizens of all countries listed in the First Schedule of the Canadian Citizenship Act, which went into force on January 1, 1947. This would cover Ireland which appears in the original First Schedule. (As the position of India may not be very dissimilar to that of Ireland it may be desirable to have India covered in some similar fashion, although it does not appear in the list of the First Schedule.)

Trade Relations

4. The attached memorandum which is being examined by the Inter-departmental Committee on External Trade Policy tomorrow, and which, if approved by it, will be submitted to the Cabinet Committee on External Trade Policy, sets forth the present position regarding the continuation of the existing preferential tariff arrangements with Ireland.

5. Recently the United Kingdom High Commissioner here informed us that the United Kingdom Government had mentioned to the Irish Government the importance which it attached to avoiding, in accordance with the agreement reached in Paris, any action which might prejudice internationally the agreed policy. In particular they had in mind any proposals for changes to forms hitherto regarded as appropriate to foreign countries inter se. In the United Kingdom view such changes would be undesirable at the present time when the United Kingdom Government is cooperating to establish vis-à-vis foreign countries that Ireland is not "foreign" to the United Kingdom. The questions of forms refer to such matters as the designation of Irish representatives in Commonwealth countries and the question of letters of credence. In the opinion of the United Kingdom Government it is important that any changes which the Irish Government considers necessary should be made gradually over a period of years and not introduced at this stage when international opinion is likely to be closely studying the implications of the new arrangements.

6. Incidentally you may be interested in a remark made by the Lord Chancellor during the debate in the House of Lords on December 15 on the status of Ireland. He said, "If we had taken a different line from the one we decided to take, we should have acted in the teeth of the advice of the representatives of Canada, Australia and New Zealand.”

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

908.

PCO/Vol. 193

*Note du secrétaire du Cabinet
pour le Cabinet*

Memorandum from Secretary to Cabinet to Cabinet

Ottawa, December 31, 1948

CANADA—IRELAND TRADE AND TARIFF RELATIONS

Under the provisions of the Republic of Ireland Act, which has been passed and is expected to come into effect early in 1949, Ireland is an independent republic outside the British Commonwealth. However, the Irish government has recognized the existence of a “specially close relationship”, which it wishes to maintain. One of the most important aspects of this is the continuation of the special tariff relations with Commonwealth countries.

At present Canada’s tariff relations with Ireland are governed by a Trade Agreement signed at Ottawa on August 20, 1932, and brought into force on January 2nd, 1933. The Agreement is a simple arrangement stipulating that Canadian products imported into Ireland shall not be subject to duties higher than those imposed on imports from any other country (including the United Kingdom). Irish products imported into Canada are guaranteed duties not higher than those paid on products of the United Kingdom. The agreement may be terminated by either party on six months’ notice.

The Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy, which examined the implications of the new Irish position, found as follows:

(1) On a legal interpretation of the relevant provisions of GATT Canada can continue to exchange existing preferential treatment with Ireland as against contracting parties to the General Agreement.

(2) According to the ruling of the Department of Justice there is nothing in the Customs Tariff to prevent the continuation of preferential treatment to Ireland.

(3) The preferences received and granted by Canada are relatively unimportant and the trade in these items is small. There is, however, some value in their retention. Part of that value lies in the “bargaining value” which such preferences might have if Canada were called upon in future to negotiate such preferences under GATT.

(4) In the event that Canada should decide to continue to extend preferential treatment to Ireland, some modifications may have to be made in Canada’s agreements with non-Commonwealth countries that are not contracting parties to GATT, but with which Canada has Most Favoured Nation Trade agreements. Such countries might claim under the terms of its Most Favoured Nation agreement with Canada that they should receive the same treatment as Ireland since the preference exception contained in our agreements are in respect of countries "under the sovereignty of the King." A claim on this basis might be brought before the International Court of Justice and would probably be sustained.

(5) The continuation of preferences to Ireland might to some extent prejudice the argument that Commonwealth preferential trade arrangements are unique in character.

The Cabinet Committee on External Trade Policy considered the question on December 22. It was felt that there was no certainty that a case would be brought before the International Court and that, in any event, the present arrangements could at least be allowed to continue until a test case was brought and an adverse decision handed down. The Committee decided that it would not be advisable to alter the existing arrangements at present, and that the position could be reconsidered at a later date as circumstances might require.

A.D.P. HEENEY

5<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 5

STATUT ET DÉSIGNATION DES CHEFS DE POSTE DU COMMONWEALTH

STATUS AND DESIGNATION OF COMMONWEALTH HEADS OF POST

909.

DEA/3011-A-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

Ottawa, November 29, 1948

PRECEDENCE AND TITLES OF HIGH COMMISSIONERS

London Meeting Recommendations

The meeting of Prime Ministers in London in October made the following proposals:

(1) That High Commissioners should rank with Ambassadors (except with the Dean of the Diplomatic Corps); and that High Commissioners should rank amongst themselves according to the date of arrival and not, as heretofore, according to the seniority of Commonwealth countries.

(2) That each Commonwealth Government would decide whether to give the style Excellency to High Commissioners.

(3) That some form of credentials for High Commissioners be considered.

(4) That visiting Cabinet Ministers would not be mentioned in official Tables of Precedence but would continue to have courtesy precedence as distinguished visitors.

(5) That a proposal, favoured by Australia, South Africa, Pakistan and Ceylon but opposed by the United Kingdom and New Zealand, to change the designation High Commissioner to Ambassador should be postponed for discussion at a subsequent meeting.

Action by Other Governments

2. The King has approved a submission made by the United Kingdom Government putting into effect in the United Kingdom the new precedence of High Commissioners and granting the style Excellency to High Commissioners in London; a circular letter has been sent on November 24 by the United Kingdom Foreign Office to the heads of foreign missions in London, and the new precedence of High Commissioners will be gazetted.

Protests against the new precedence of High Commissioners have been made by the Diplomatic Corps in Wellington, New Zealand. If similar protests are made in London, the United Kingdom authorities propose to say that the recent decision has done nothing to disturb the order of relative precedence of ambassadors, ministers plenipotentiary and chargés d'affaires agreed upon at the Congress of Vienna of 1815, "but has simply given formal recognition to what has long been the rightful place of High Commissioners as representatives of ambassadorial status exchanged between the countries of the Commonwealth."

Action by the Canadian Government

Precedence

3. It is recommended that the Canadian Government should now put into effect in Canada a change in the precedence of High Commissioners whereby they will have the same courtesy precedence in Canada as Ambassadors; that is to say,

(a) Ambassadors and High Commissioners will rank with each other according to the date of the presentation of Letters of Credence of Ambassadors and the date of arrival in Ottawa of High Commissioners, except that the position of Dean of the Diplomatic Corps will continue to be held by the senior foreign Ambassador.

(b) Ministers Plenipotentiary and Chargés d'Affaires ad interim, who had courtesy precedence in Canada next below Ambassadors, will continue in that place and under the new arrangement will come below the new combined category of Ambassadors — High Commissioners.

(c) The relative rank of High Commissioners amongst themselves will in future be based on the date of their arrival in Ottawa and not, as heretofore, on the seniority of Commonwealth countries.

(d) The new precedence of High Commissioners will be retroactive; i.e., the High Commissioner for Ireland who came to Ottawa in 1939 will precede all ambassadors except the Dean of the Diplomatic Corps.

A newly appointed ambassador or High Commissioner will take his place at the end of the proposed Ambassador — High Commissioner category; thus, if the Irish Government were to appoint a new High Commissioner or were to ask the Canadian Government to agree to the appointment at Ottawa of an Ambassador, such as appointee would take his place according to the date of presentation of his credentials, at the end of the list.

Style "Excellency"

(e) Canada was alone in giving, some years ago, the style Honourable to Commonwealth High Commissioners, and Canada has therefore been in the forefront in honouring High Commissioners. At the present time the style Excellency is reserved in Canada for the Governor General and his wife, foreign Ambassadors and Ministers Plenipotentiary, and the Apostolic Delegate. It is recommended that no action be taken to give the style Excellency to High Commissioners but that the Canadian Government should:

- (i) continue to give High Commissioners of other countries the title Honourable,
- (ii) inform the Commonwealth governments that Canada does not desire the style "Excellency" to be given to Canadian High Commissioners.

Credentials

(f) It is recommended that no action is necessary in Canada concerning the London recommendation that some form of credentials for High Commissioners should be considered, for the reason that for some years Canadian High Commissioners have been provided with suitable credentials.

Precedence of Visiting Cabinet Ministers

(g) As mentioned below under Procedure, no action is necessary here regarding the precedence of "visiting Cabinet Ministers" because they have never been included in the Canadian Table of Precedence. They will, of course, continue to be treated as distinguished visitors.

Procedure

(h) In the United Kingdom, a Submission to the King is necessary because High Commissioners and visiting Cabinet Ministers were included in the official United Kingdom Table of Precedence. In Canada, Ambassadors and High Commissioners, and other representatives from abroad, such as Ministers Plenipotentiary and Consuls General, have had a courtesy precedence and not a precedence by right of inclusion in the Canadian Table of Precedence.

It is therefore recommended that no formal Submission to the King is required for the proposed change of precedence of High Commissioners in Canada, and that the Secretary of State of Canada, who is responsible for questions of precedence, should be asked to take whatever action he considers appropriate to effectuate the above recommendations. The concurrence of the Governor General could be signified by His Excellency's approval of an Order-in-Council, if this procedure commends itself to the Secretary of State of Canada.<sup>29</sup>

<sup>29</sup> Après discussion au Cabinet, il fut décidé de ne pas passer un décret. Au lieu de cela, le secrétaire d'État informa le secrétaire du gouverneur-général. DEA/3011-A-40 : Heeney à Gibson, le 3 décembre; Gibson à Letson, le 6 décembre.

After discussion in Cabinet, it was decided not to pass an Order-in-Council. Instead, the Secretary of State informed the Secretary to the Governor-General. DEA/3011-A-40: Heeney to Gibson, December 3; Gibson to Letson, December 6.

Publicity

(i) Announcements in London and in other Commonwealth capitals will probably be made. It is recommended that the Secretary of State for External Affairs should notify other Commonwealth Governments of Canadian action, before an announcement is made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

E. R[EID]

910.

DEA/3011-A-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], December 11, 1948

PRECEDENCE AND STYLE OF HIGH COMMISSIONERS

Since our circular telegrams, describing the Canadian position in this matter, were sent to other Commonwealth Governments last weekend, messages have arrived from all but Australia, Ceylon and Pakistan. I attach copies of these messages.† I also attach a statement tabulating the replies.†

2. All the governments which have replied have agreed to treat High Commissioners, for purposes of precedence, as if they were Ambassadors. The Secretary of State of Canada has notified Government House of the decision of the Cabinet in this matter. It seems evident that all Heads of Mission in Ottawa should be notified of this decision, and that an appropriate press release be issued,<sup>30</sup> without delay.

3. The Secretary to the Governor General and the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod are preparing printed forms for use in connection with the Governor General's Levée on January 1 and the Opening of Parliament. The Chief of Protocol will marshal Heads of Mission and their staffs for the former occasion.

4. It is still not entirely clear whether other Commonwealth Governments intend to have the new order of precedence operate retroactively; that is, to accord precedence to High Commissioners as if they had been Ambassadors since the date of arrival at their posts. It is my understanding that the Government has decided that High Commissioners should, for purposes of precedence, rank as if they had been Ambassadors since their arrival in Ottawa.

5. As to the question of according the style "Excellency" it appears that discussions with other Commonwealth countries may have to continue. However, it might be helpful if the United Kingdom Government were to delay an announcement on its own policy with respect to this style until the discussions have been concluded.

6. In the light of the foregoing, I have attached for your consideration the following:

<sup>30</sup> Communiqué de presse du ministère des Affaires extérieures N° 94, le 20 décembre.
Department of External Affairs, Press Release, No. 94, December 20.

(a) A draft circular note to Heads of Mission in Ottawa informing them of the Government's decision;†

(b) A draft press release to be issued simultaneously with or shortly after the sending of the circular notes referred to in (a);†

(c) A draft telegram to Canada House asking the High Commissioner to endeavour to have the United Kingdom Government delay an announcement on the style "Excellency" until the present Commonwealth discussions have proceeded further;†

(d) A draft telegram to our High Commissioner in New Zealand instructing him to advise the New Zealand Government of the substance of (c) above. (See the summary in paragraph 1 above.†)

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

6<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 6

DÉFENSE

DEFENCE

911.

DEA/50255-40

Résumé du compte-rendu d'une réunion du Comité de la défense du Cabinet

Summary of Minutes of Meeting of Cabinet Defence Committee

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], March 3, 1948

COMMONWEALTH ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON DEFENCE SCIENCE;
REPORT OF 1947 MEETING

At a meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee on March 3rd, the Chairman, Defence Research Board submitted the report of the 1947 meeting of the Commonwealth Advisory Committee on Defence Science.†

The report was concurred in by the Defence Research Board and the Chiefs of Staff. The main conclusions were that:

(a) steps designed to increase the flow of fully trained scientific graduates and to promote post-graduate training in research should be encouraged in an effort to overcome the serious shortage of scientific and technical manpower;

(b) applied research and development effort on guided weapons should eventually be concentrated mainly in Australia;

(c) importance was attached to extension of research relating to the comfort and efficiency of personnel, e.g. clothing and general stores;

(d) the governments of the Commonwealth be urged to resume research and investigation into the production of dry and compacted foods.

The governments were asked to endorse these conclusions and to note that the Advisory Committee proposed to hold their next meeting in Canada in February, 1949.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated that there appeared to be no objection to the next meeting being held in Canada, and presumably a formal request would be received in due course.

To avoid undesirable publicity, it might be treated as an ordinary meeting of scientists and be held under the auspices of the National Research Council.

The Committee, after further discussion, approved, on behalf of the Canadian Government, the report of the 1947 meeting of the Commonwealth Advisory Committee on Defence Science and agreed that the governments of the other countries of the Commonwealth be so informed.

912.

DEA/220-A (S)

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures pour le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni<sup>31</sup>

Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in United Kingdom<sup>31</sup>

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], September 15, 1948

COMMONWEALTH ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON DEFENCE SCIENCE

The Cabinet Defence Committee, at its meeting on September 14, decided that you should be asked to take up very informally, on your return to London, with the Chairman of the Working Party of the Commonwealth Advisory Committee on Defence Science, the question of changing the name of the Committee. It is felt that since the present name was approved, in 1946, there have been changes in the composition originally proposed for the Committee which make it scarcely appropriate to include the word "Commonwealth" in its name. India, Pakistan, and Ceylon have not been invited to become members; and United States representatives normally attend the meetings on an informal basis. In view of these considerations, as well as of the anomalous situation at present existing as regards the basis of Commonwealth membership, and of the precarious position of international relations, the Canadian Government is inclined to think that it would be better if the forthcoming meeting were held informally and under some other name than that originally approved.

2. You might let the Chairman of the Working Party know that, while the Canadian Government will welcome having the 1949 meeting of the Committee in Canada and will meet the necessary expenses, it believes that it would be inexpedient to have the discussions described as a meeting of the Commonwealth Advisory Committee on Defence Science, and suggests that during the discussions consideration should be given to permanently changing the name of the Committee to some description more suitable to the present set-up.

<sup>31</sup> N.A. Robertson était à Ottawa lorsqu'il reçut cette note.

N.A. Robertson was in Ottawa when he received this memorandum.

3. The present name of the Committee was accepted on the recommendation of the Informal Commonwealth Conference on Defence Science, held in June, 1946. This Conference also recommended that the member Governments of the Advisory Committee should be those represented at the Conference: the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, and India. These recommendations were approved by the Canadian Government (Note No. 82 of Oct. 12, 1946, to United Kingdom High Commissioner), and by the other Commonwealth Governments concerned. But by a letter of May 2, 1947, from the United Kingdom High Commissioner, the Canadian Government was informed that, in view of the uncertainty as to the relationship of India to the Commonwealth after June, 1948, it was not proposed to invite India to become a member of the Committee. Since that time India has been partitioned into India and Pakistan, and Ceylon has become a Dominion; but none of these Commonwealth members has been invited to take part in the proceedings of the Committee.

4. During the correspondence preliminary to the 1946 Conference, in a letter of March 16, 1946, to the United Kingdom High Commissioner, the Canadian Government stressed the desirability of avoiding phraseology which might appear to contemplate "the adoption of a single programme of defence research for the British Commonwealth, directed and coordinated by central machinery yet to be established," and expressed the view that "an attempt so to formalize arrangements for secret defence research and development might result in inflexibility and prove to be less effective than a looser and less formal system of coordination and liaison." It now appears that the Committee has been given a title too formal for the nature of its real work.

5. The previous meeting of the Committee was held in London in November, 1947.

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

913.

DEA/50255-40

*Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1813

London, October 16, 1948

TOP SECRET

Reference your memorandum of September 15th regarding Commonwealth Advisory Committee on Defence Science:

I have discussed the matter with representatives of the Commonwealth Relations Office and the Chairman of the Working Party who agree that the Defence

Research meeting proposed to be held in Canada in 1949 should not be described as the Commonwealth Advisory Committee on Defence Science, and that consideration should be given to changing the title, form and constitution of that body when the representatives of the Commonwealth countries interested meet in Ottawa.

2. It is recommended, after consultation with the Commonwealth Relations Office and the Working Party that Canada should issue invitations to the United Kingdom, Australia, South Africa and New Zealand to send Defence Science representatives to meet in Ottawa on February 14th, 1949, to continue the work of the 1947 Conference including discussions on the future of that body. If the invitation is issued in this form there need be no use of the word "Commonwealth".

3. The reasons for changing the procedure will be explained by the Chairman of the Working Party to the Defence Science representatives in London of the countries who participated in the 1947 Conference, for transmission to their home authorities concerned.

4. The Working Party will place an item on the agenda for the 1949 Conference instituting a full discussion at that Conference of the future title, Constitution and Terms of Reference of the Committee and also of the Working Party.

5. Defence Science representatives here feel strongly that the Working Party should continue in one form or another and will place this on the agenda for discussion at the Ottawa meeting.

6. Defence Science representatives here suggest that decision as to United States participation in the Ottawa meeting should [be] left entirely to Canada.

914.

PCO/Vol. 244

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion
du Comité de la défense du Cabinet*

*Extract from Minutes of Meeting
of Cabinet Defence Committee*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], December 21, 1948

. . .

VII. SECURITY ARRANGEMENTS WITH AUSTRALIA

19. The Minister of National Defence reported upon certain breaches of security which had occurred in Australia and which had prompted the U.S. and U.K. governments to withhold from them information of a classified nature.

In the light of this situation, and having regard to the importance of protecting information from U.S. and U.K. sources, it was desirable to consider whether the meeting of Commonwealth representatives on defence science should be held in Canada next February as planned and whether arrangements for the exchange of officers between Canada and Australia should be continued.

20. The Chairman, Defence Research Board reported that invitations had already been sent out to the United States and to Commonwealth countries to participate in the forthcoming meeting on defence science. The problem was to weigh the potential value of the conference against the risk of cutting of U.S. sources of information. On balance, it appeared that the risk was not worth taking. If the meeting were postponed the reasons would be obvious to all concerned. It might transpire that the United Kingdom would offer to hold it there.

21. The Chief of the General Staff indicated that steps had already been taken to ensure that the Australian officers attached to the Canadian Army for duty were allocated to directorates such as training where there would be no access to information of a secret nature. This arrangement seemed preferable to terminating the exchange.

22. The Committee, after further discussion:

(a) agreed that in the circumstances the forthcoming meeting on defence science be postponed, and that participating countries be so informed, it being understood that future arrangements would be a matter for consideration after informal consultation with U.K. authorities;

(b) noted with approval the arrangements outlined by the Chief of the General Staff for the employment of interchange officers from Australia.

...

7<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 7

TÉLÉCOMMUNICATIONS TELECOMMUNICATIONS

915.

DEA/7767-40

Décret

Order in Council

P.C. 2103

Ottawa, May 11, 1948

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report dated May 7th, 1948 from the Secretary of State for External Affairs, submitting:

(1) That the Cabinet at its meeting of January 19, 1948, approved the recommendations of the Interdepartmental Committee on Telecommunications to the effect that Canada should sign an over-all Commonwealth agreement for the nationalization of external telecommunications services provided that the protocol to the agreement indicate that this agreement does not commit governments to the financial arrangements described therein and that the said protocol clarify the clause relating to the procedure for acquisition of local companies;

(2) That the conditions stipulated by the Cabinet have been met;

(3) That the United Kingdom government has proposed that the partner governments formally authorize a representative in London to sign the Agreement and Protocol on May 11, 1948;

(4) That it is expedient that such a representative be appointed.

The Committee, therefore, on the recommendation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, advise that Norman Robertson, Esq., the High Commissioner for Canada in the United Kingdom be authorized to sign an over-all Commonwealth Agreement for the nationalization of external telecommunications services together with a Protocol as aforesaid.

916.

DEA/6231-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

Ottawa, July 2, 1948

Attached, for your signature if you agree, are two Submissions to Council, proposing the appointment of Mr. J.H. Tudhope, formerly Operations Manager of Trans-Canada Airlines, as Canadian Member of the Commonwealth Telecommunications Board and as Civil Aviation Adviser to the High Commissioner for Canada in the United Kingdom. The Commonwealth Telecommunications Board will be established under the terms of a Commonwealth Telecommunications Agreement signed on May 11th, 1948, by Mr. Norman Robertson, on behalf of Canada, and by representatives of the other Commonwealth Governments.

In his capacity as Canadian Member of the Commonwealth Telecommunications Board, Mr. Tudhope will be paid by the Board, from funds obtained through the receipt by the Board of the net revenues of the National Bodies to be established under the Agreement, a salary of £1000 per annum and a subsistence allowance not exceeding £500 per annum.

Mr. Tudhope's duties, as Member of the Board, will not require his full time. It is, therefore, considered desirable that, in addition to his position on the Board, he should be made Civil Aviation Adviser to the High Commissioner in London. An increasing number of problems are arising in Canada House which could best be solved by a person acting in this capacity. It is recommended that Mr. Tudhope be paid an allowance by the Department of External Affairs of $2500. per annum in his capacity as Civil Aviation Adviser.

The appointment of Mr. Tudhope was approved by Mr. Howe while he was the Minister responsible for air services and telecommunications, and I understand that Mr. Howe has cleared the appointment with Mr. Chevrier, who is now the interested Minister.<sup>32</sup>

L.B. P[EARSON]

<sup>32</sup> La nomination fut approuvée par le Cabinet le 13 juillet.
Cabinet approved the appointment on July 13.

8<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 8
RELATIONS AVEC DES PAYS PARTICULIERS RELATIONS WITH INDIVIDUAL COUNTRIES

SECTION A

AUSTRALIE

AUSTRALIA

917.

DEA/5475-DG-2-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire en Australie*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in Australia

SECRET

Ottawa, December 27, 1948

Dear Mr. Greene:

I found your interesting letter of November 15† waiting for me here on my return from Paris. I am particularly grateful to have your comments on the observations which Burton has made concerning relations between our Delegation in Paris and the Australian Delegation.

2. It is quite true that these relations were not as amicable as they might have been, and we were often perplexed to know what we should do in order to put ourselves on a more friendly basis with our Australian colleagues. I do not recall, however, that we were subjected to any open criticism by the Australians to which we might object, except on one occasion when, in the discussions in the Political Committee on Palestine, the Australian representative said that we tended to follow uncritically the policies of the Great Powers. You have probably already seen in the Financial Post for December 18, a series of comments by representative Canadians on this allegation.

3. It is difficult to analyze adequately the reasons for our difficulties with the Australians, but I think probably their source may be found in the attitude of Dr. Evatt. He was anxious that he and his Delegation should play a leading role in the Assembly, and we often had the impression that in the interests of this ambition he was willing to follow an independent line for its own sake. Without reference to the consequences.

4. At a meeting of Commonwealth Delegations called by Mr. Bevin at the opening of the Assembly, Dr. Evatt complained about the fact that the United Kingdom often agreed on policy with the United States before it had consulted other members of the Commonwealth, and he suggested that a working group of Commonwealth countries should be set up at the Assembly to formulate Commonwealth policy. This meeting was attended by representatives of India, Pakistan and South Africa, and for this reason alone Dr. Evatt's suggestion was embarrassing to Mr.

Bevin. The suggestion was never taken up, but I think it very doubtful if it could have produced any satisfactory result, even if other members of the Commonwealth had not been unwilling to participate in any arrangement as formal as that suggested by Dr. Evatt.

5. On a number of questions which were discussed at the Assembly, the Canadian Delegation found itself much closer to the United States and the United Kingdom than did the Australians, not simply because we were following the dictates of these Great Powers, but because, on the merits of the case, we tended to come to the same conclusions as they did. In regard to atomic energy, for example, we were concerned that the Assembly should give approval of the Majority Reports of the Atomic Energy Commission in as clear-cut a manner as possible. The Australians, on the other hand, supported a movement amongst the smaller Powers to evade the issue in regard to atomic energy, and to direct the Atomic Energy Commission to continue its work by drafting a treaty, in spite of the evidence that this course of action would have been useless and even harmful. Since we took a very active part in the atomic energy discussions, this was one of the questions on which we found ourselves opposed by our Australian colleagues.

6. The debates on the Balkan question also brought out divergencies between the Australians and other members of the Commonwealth. The Australians were critical of the fact that the Balkan Commission had not exercised its function of mediation as fully as they thought possible, and statements by Australian representatives, both at the Assembly and on the Commission, were often quoted by Soviet representatives as evidence of the ineffectiveness of the Commission. On the main issues in regard to the situation in the Balkans, the Australian Delegation was in full accord with the attitude of both the United States and the United Kingdom. They were so anxious, however, to demonstrate their independence of judgment on the question, that they developed their criticisms in regard to the minor aspects of the operations of the Commission, to the point where they sometimes seemed to be at complete variance with their colleagues on the Commission.

7. Palestine was a further subject concerning which we differed from the Australians. The basic element in our policy in regard to Palestine has been to encourage the United Kingdom and the United States to agree. Our Delegations, both in New York and at Paris, have frequently made proposals for this purpose, and when they found that the United States and the United Kingdom had agreed on some aspect of the Palestine problem, we have generally been ready to support them. Conversely, we have been very cautious about any proposed course of action concerning which the United Kingdom and the United States seriously disagreed. The Australians, on the other hand, have taken a much more vigorous line in support of the November 29 resolution, and they have been much more openly critical of United Kingdom policy. At the General Assembly in Paris, the United States and the United Kingdom agreed to take, as a basis of their policy, the Bernadotte Report. As the Assembly progressed, it became clear that this position would have to be modified. It seemed to us, however, that no useful purpose would be served by openly challenging the United Kingdom and the United States policy, and that it would be preferable to do what we could to make certain that these two Delegations kept in step as policy developed. The Australians, on the other hand, from the beginning, advocated policies very different from those upon which the United States and the United Kingdom had agreed, and introduced an alternative resolution which they supported with great determination. On a number of occasions during the debate, the United Kingdom representative was defending himself against Australian criticisms, and, as I have already indicated, these criticisms were made applicable to us also before the debate was over.

8. As far as Germany was concerned, there was no direct disagreement between ourselves and the Australians in regard to policy. Dr. Evatt, however, considered that the Berlin question should be taken up in the Assembly, and that the President of the Assembly should be given the opportunity to play some part in its solution. When the informal Committee of six members of the Security Council first met to consider the Berlin question, Dr. Evatt offered to join this group, but his suggestion was not taken up, and he was given no occasion to participate in the consideration which the Security Council was giving to the question. The announcement which he and the Secretary-General made, appealing to the four interested parties to use the machinery of the United Nations to settle the question, had little effect, for it was pointed out that the matter was already under consideration in the Security Council. Dr. Evatt may well have felt that he was being deliberately excluded from the Berlin discussions, and may also have attached some blame to us for this situation. The subject was not one, however, on which we had any direct communications with the Australian Delegation.

9. I understand also that Dr. Evatt considered in Paris that the United Kingdom Delegation showed greater confidence in the Canadian Delegation than it did in him and his colleagues. I do not think that he had any real reason for complaint in this regard, but I am told that he sometimes referred to what he called the "Most Favoured Nation Treatment" which the United Kingdom Delegation accorded to us. His personal relations with Mr. Hector McNeil were not good, and there were a number of occasions on which he was rude in public to Mr. McNeil. It was not surprising, therefore, that there was some restraint in the relations between the leaders of the two Delegations, but as far as I could see, the United Kingdom Delegation was scrupulously careful to make certain that ourselves, the Australians and the New Zealanders were treated on a basis of equality, and as far as circumstances permitted, this applied also to India, Pakistan and South Africa.

10. I have put down these impressions concerning our relations with the Australians at some length, in the hope that they will be helpful to you in your contacts in Australia. I do not think we should in any way make an issue of the differences which have arisen, and I hope that on future occasions we may get along much more happily with one another. Even during the Assembly in Paris, working arrangements on the official level were always very cordial, and on some questions such as Korea, we were able to work together in a very friendly and co-operative manner. I feel sure that in better circumstances, we shall be able to overcome the kind of difficulty which we encountered in Paris.

Yours sincerely,

L.B. PEARSON

P.S. I am sending a copy of this letter to the Canadian Ambassador in Washington and Paris, and to the Canadian High Commissioner in London, Wellington and New Delhi.

SECTION B

IRLANDE ET LA VISITE DU PREMIER MINISTRE IRELAND AND VISIT OF PRIME MINISTER 918.

DEA/9908-T-1-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum by Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], June 8, 1948

VISIT TO CANADA OF THE PRIME MINISTER OF IRELAND

Mr. [John J.] Hearne, the Irish High Commissioner, mentioned to me today the forthcoming visit to Canada of the Prime Minister of Ireland, Mr. [John A.] Costello. He had previously discussed this with Mr. St. Laurent and with Mr. Pearson.

He tells me that the history of the invitation is as follows. When Mr. John Hackett was elected President of the Canadian Bar Association in June, 1947, Mr. Hearne suggested to him that the Canadian Bar Association might invite a distinguished Irish lawyer to their next annual meeting. He mentioned Mr. George Gavan Duffy, the Chief Justice of Ireland. Nothing was done about this letter at the time, but later, following the elections in Ireland, Mr. Hackett suggested to Mr. Hearne that perhaps the invitation might go to Mr. Costello.

Mr. Hearne sounded out Mr. Costello not really thinking that he would accept; but he replied saying that he would accept an invitation.

The acceptance by Mr. Costello of the Canadian Bar Association's invitation is now, I understand, public property. No reference, however, has yet been made by the Press to his visiting Ottawa as the guest of the Canadian Government.

It is probable that Mr. Costello will spend about two weeks in Canada, fairly well equally divided between Montreal, Ottawa, Quebec and Toronto. He will go to Montreal first, and will probably then stay with the Governor General either in Quebec or in Ottawa. The Prime Minister will no doubt give a dinner for him at the Country Club while he is in Ottawa, and when he goes to Toronto, he will, I assume, be staying with the Lieutenant Governor.

So far, no official invitation has been issued by the Canadian Government. Mr. Hearne will be seeing the Minister about this very soon and it may be that we should shortly regularize the invitation in the usual way.

Meanwhile, there is nothing to be said to the Press on the subject.

I understand that Mr. Costello will be spending the last week in August and the first in September in Canada.<sup>33</sup> 919.

ESCOTT REID

W.L.M.K./J4/Vol. 283

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

SECRET

[Ottawa], September 2, 1948

It may be that Mr. Costello, on his visit to Ottawa, will bring up the question of the constitutional position of Ireland in the Commonwealth. In this connection, it would be interesting to find out from him whether he has any intention of attending the Prime Ministers' Commonwealth meeting in London. In London they do not anticipate that he will attend. I suspect that they are right.

In view of the visit, I thought you might be interested in a memorandum which I have had prepared on the status of Ireland, with particular reference to the External Relations Act. We also sent you, some time ago, a very interesting and comprehensive despatch from our High Commissioner in Dublin, Mr. Turgeon, on the political situation in Ireland. I am attaching another copy of that despatch,† and of the memorandum.

L.B. PEARSON

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

SECRET

[Ottawa], September 1, 1948

THE STATUS OF IRELAND; THE EXTERNAL RELATIONS ACT

In December, 1936, at the time of the abdication of King Edward VIII, the Irish Parliament passed the Executive Authority (External Relations) Act under which the King was authorized to act on behalf of Ireland "for the purposes of the appointment of diplomatic and consular representatives and the conclusion of international agreements." Section 3(1) of the Act reads in full:

<sup>33</sup> Selon une note de Reid pour Saint-Laurent, en date du 17 juin, qui se trouve dans le même dossier, le premier ministre fut mis au courant et la suggestion lui fut faite d'inviter Costello à rendre visite à Ottawa à titre d'invité du Gouvernement canadien.

According to a memorandum from Reid to St. Laurent (June 17) on the same file, the Prime Minister was advised and the suggestion was made that Costello be invited to visit Ottawa as the guest of the Canadian Government.

"It is hereby declared and enacted that, so long as Saorstát Eireann is associated with the following nations, that is to say, Australia, Canada, Great Britain, New Zealand, and South Africa, and so long as the king recognised by those nations as the symbol of their co-operation continues to act on behalf of each of those nations (on the advice of the several Governments thereof) for the purposes of the appointment of diplomatic and consular representatives and the conclusion of international agreements, the king so recognised may, and is hereby authorised to, act on behalf of Saorstát Eireann for the like purposes as and when advised by the Executive Council so to do."

2. The present constitution of Ireland was adopted in 1937. It declared Ireland to be "a sovereign, independent democratic state" (Article 5). No reference was made to Ireland being made a republic, but the constitution substituted an elected President in place of a Governor-General representing the King. The King's name did not appear in the Constitution; nor was any mention made of the British Commonwealth. While the President was not described as the head of the state, he was to "take precedence over all other persons in the State" (Article 12(1)).

3. It provided (Article 29(4)(1)) that "Executive power of the State in . . . its external relations, shall . . . be exercised by, or on, the authority of the Government." The following sub-section regularised and continued the position created by the External Relations Act. It reads as follows:

(Article 29(4)(2)) "For the purpose of the exercise of any executive function of the State in or in connection with its external relations, the Government may to such extent and subject to such conditions, if any, as may be determined by law, avail of or adopt any organ, instrument, or method of procedure used or adopted for the like purpose by the members of any group, or league of nations with which the State is or becomes associated for the purpose of international co-operation in matters of common concern."

4. This would seem to mean in effect that for external purposes at least, though not for internal affairs, the King must be regarded as the head of the Irish State, though this has been denied by Irish political leaders.

5. When the constitution came into force, the United Kingdom Government declared (December 30, 1937) they were prepared to treat it "as not affecting a fundamental alteration in the position of the Irish Free State, in future to be described under the new Constitution as "Eire" or "Ireland" as a member of the British Commonwealth of Nations," and added that they had ascertained that the Governments of the other member states were prepared to do likewise. This referred to Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa.

6. Mr. de Valera's Position

In July 1945, the Prime Minister of Ireland, Mr. de Valera, used the word "republic" for the first time in describing the constitution. On one occasion he declared, "We are today an independent republic," and on another he said that Ireland is "a sovereign independent republic associated as a matter of external policy with the states of the British Commonwealth." He repeated this view a number of times during the remainder of his tenure of office. He frequently used the term "external association" to describe the relationship with the Commonwealth. The United Kingdom authorities considered that his statements in 1945 did not mark or involve any change from the position formally accepted in 1937.

7. Mr. Costello's Position

Mr. Costello replaced Mr. de Valera as Prime Minister on February 18, 1948, following a general election, with a coalition government consisting of five political parties. On July 28, in answer to questions in the Dail he said: "The constitutional position is that Ireland is a sovereign, independent, democratic State associated with the members of the British Commonwealth. The process by which Ireland ceased formally to be a member of that Commonwealth has been one of gradual development." . . . "It has ceased to be formally a member, but is associated with the other members."

8. Mr. MacBride's Position

Mr. MacBride, the leader of the Clann na Poblachta Party, became Minister for External Affairs when Mr. Costello formed his cabinet. In the months preceding the general election, his Party stressed its determination "to break the last link with Britain," to repeal the External Relations Act and generally to take all measures necessary to set Ireland up as a free, sovereign state having no further connection inside or outside its borders with the head of any "foreign" country. After the defeat of the de Valera government, Mr. MacBride said he was prepared to place his Party's main objectives "in abeyance" for a time and to accept the portfolio of Minister of External Affairs, with the administration of the External Relations Act, in a coalition government led by Mr. Costello.

9. On July 21 in the Dail, Mr. MacBride in replying to a question said, "The answer is that we are certainly not a member of the British Commonwealth of Nations."

10. Mr. Norton's Position

Mr. Norton, the leader of the Labour Party, and Minister for Labour in the Costello Government, spoke against the External Relations Act in the Dail on August 6 and was supported by Mr. de Valera when he suggested it should be abolished. Mr. Norton said:

"They (the de Valera Government) had a President and a Minister for External Affairs, but these were by-passed, and they used the British King to accredit their representatives abroad.

"Does Mr. de Valera claim that this is a sovereign independent republic?"

"Mr. de Valera — I do.

"Mr. Norton — Does he know of any other country which uses a foreign monarch to accredit its representatives to other countries? Does any other republic deliberately pick out the king of another country to accredit its representatives? It does not. This is one of the unique constitutional somersaults of Deputy de Valera.

"I think it would do our national self-respect good, both at home and abroad, if we were to proceed without delay to abolish the External Relations Act.

"That was my view then, and it is my view today. Our national honour would be all the higher if it were to go."

11. Mr. de Valera replied as follows:

"You can appoint An Ceann Comhairle (Speaker of the Dail), the Chief Justice or the Minister for External Affairs. The Taoiseach could act in that particular way if other Governments are prepared to accept it.

"If the present administration wanted to bring in a Bill which would authorise the President to sign letters of credence, they would find no opposition.

"If a measure were brought into the House to clear up any doubts or difficulties that might exist, he felt that not a single member of his party would vote against it. If there was a doubt about their present position as a Republic, then he would say to those on the opposite benches — let us resolve that doubt."

12. Mr. Turgeon's Conclusions

Our High Commissioner in Dublin, who has written full, analytical despatches on the recent developments in Ireland, has formed the opinion that it was with reluctance that Mr. Costello declared Ireland to be out of the Commonwealth and that he dislikes being forced into the making of definite statements about Ireland's complete separation for all purposes from the United Kingdom. But Mr. Turgeon also thinks that, despite Mr. Costello's efforts to the contrary, the spirit of the legislature is more anti-British than previously and he has predicted that when the Dail meets again in November the External Relations Act will be repealed and thus will be severed the "last link between this country and the United Kingdom."

13. United Kingdom View

Sir Norman Brook, the Secretary of the United Kingdom Cabinet, when in Ottawa recently, indicated that the United Kingdom authorities were inclined to consider the present status of Ireland as the "irreducible minimum" beyond which it would be impossible for any member state to go without terminating completely the Commonwealth relationship. The United Kingdom Government was anxious to know the intentions of the present Irish Government.

920.

DEA/50021-40

Note

Memorandum

[Ottawa, n.d.]

NOTES OF CONVERSATION BETWEEN THE PRIME MINISTER OF CANADA AND THE PRIME MINISTER OF IRELAND, AT KINGSMERE,
THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 9TH, 1948

Also present were Mr. J.J. Hearne, the Irish High Commissioner; Mr. L.B. Pearson; Mr. N.A. Robertson.

In response to Mr. King's invitation to Mr. Costello to speak his full mind about the position of Ireland and its relationship to the other countries of the Commonwealth, the Irish Prime Minister proceeded to explain why he and his colleagues had come to the conclusion that they must repeal the External Relations Act of 1936. To put this decision in its historical context, Mr. Costello reviewed events in Ireland since the coming into force of the Treaty of 1921. He himself had been a supporter of Arthur Griffith and Michael Collins in the negotiations for the Treaty, and of Kevin O'Higgins and of Cosgrave in their long effort to maintain it loyally despite the unrelenting opposition of the Sein Fein Party, headed then as now by Mr. de Valera. He felt that the Treaty had won the substance of freedom and independence for Ireland, but in important respects it had represented a difficult and distasteful compromise on a number of points to which Irishmen of all parties attached great importance. Cosgrave and his supporters had maintained an unequal struggle on two fronts for a dozen years, defending the Treaty settlement against its Irish critics, and striving to secure its modification by consent through negotiations with the United Kingdom Government. Those negotiations had not led to any significant recognition of the Irish point of view. His failure to secure agreed amendments to the Treaty regime resulted in Mr. Cosgrave's defeat in the General Election of 1931, and Mr. de Valera's accession to office.

Once in power de Valera proceeded to accomplish by independent action almost all the things which Cosgrave had tried to do by friendly negotiation. He abolished the Oath of Allegiance, which had been required by the Treaty; abolished the right of appeal from Irish courts to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; re-wrote the Constitution of Ireland in such a form as to exclude the Crown completely from its internal structure. All these radical changes in the relationship of Ireland to the United Kingdom and the rest of the Commonwealth had been accepted meekly by the United Kingdom and the Commonwealth. To cap the process, the United Kingdom had agreed to hand back to Mr. de Valera the control of the Irish ports which had been reserved by the United Kingdom for purposes of naval security under the Treaty of 1921. Having successfully repudiated almost all the obligations of the Irish Treaty which Cosgrave and the Fine Gael had felt bound in honour to defend as part of a substantially fair bargain, de Valera then put through the External Relations Act. It is perhaps worth quoting for reference at this point the following excerpt from the Act:

"It is hereby declared and enacted that, so long as Saorstát Éireann is associated with the following nations, that is to say, Australia, Canada, Great Britain, New Zealand and South Africa, and so long as the king recognised by those nations as the symbol of their cooperation continues to act on behalf of each of those nations (on the advice of the several Governments thereof) for the purposes of the appointment of diplomatic and consular representatives and the conclusion of international agreements, the king so recognised may, and is hereby authorised to, act on behalf of Saorstát Éireann for the like purposes as and when advised by the Executive Council so to do."

Costello and those of his Cabinet colleagues who had been members of the Opposition in the Dail at that time had voted against this measure, which they regarded as a rather shabby subterfuge by which de Valera had tried to combine complete independence with a nominal use of the Crown as an instrument or agent for the conduct of the purely formal and diplomatic aspects of Irish external relations.

Now that Mr. de Valera had been defeated, and the coalition of all his opponents was in office — made up of Fine Gael (the Cosgrave party who had supported the Treaty); the Labour Party, which had generally taken a Republican line on constitutional questions; and [Clann] na Poblachta, which carried forward the completely uncompromising revolutionary Republican tradition of the IRA<sup>34</sup> — the one constitutional measure on which they were immediately agreed was that the External Relations Act had to go. For different reasons it was not only distasteful but completely unacceptable to all the elements which made up the Irish Government.

As Mr. Costello put it, "the Harp without the Crown" was a settled objective of Irish policy. He recognized that other parts of the Commonwealth with different histories might cherish quite different and friendly feelings towards the monarchy and the political symbolism of which it was part, but for Irishmen such an attitude was impossible. On this issue all parties were agreed. If it was not dealt with now and finally, there might well be a relapse into the habits of political violence from which Ireland had suffered so much and from which she was now happily free. Since Ireland was now already in fact outside the Commonwealth, the repealed External Relations Act would only formalize what for some time had been the de facto situation. This formal political separation, however, was not, he thought, incompatible with some special association with the countries of the Commonwealth, towards which the Irish Government and people would like to maintain especially close and friendly relations. It seemed to him that the real bases of Commonwealth association did not lie in formal political symbols, but in their sharing of a common way of life and loyalty to the ideals and values of Christian and Western civilization, and their attachment to democratic liberties and representative systems of government, etc. If their association could in fact be based on the recognition of these concepts, and if the question of Partition was satisfactorily settled, then there would be a firm base established for Ireland's continuing association with the other countries of the Commonwealth. This was of concern not only to intra-Commonwealth relations, but was important to the peace of the world, because once really friendly and confident relations were established between the United Kingdom and Ireland, then one would find that relations between the United Kingdom and the United States would become much easier and friendlier than they were now. It was true that hostile outside pressures, first from the Nazis, now from the Communists, were forcing the United Kingdom and the United States to work together in many political fields, but this cooperation was, he thought, seriously limited by the mistrust of England which so many Americans inherited from their Irish forebears. If Anglo-Irish relations were finally cleared up, Ireland could not only make her own contribution to a North Atlantic Defence Pact and Western Union through her resources, geographical position and population, but could make a much greater indirect through peoples of Irish extraction, who, as citizens of other countries all over the world, but of course principally the United States, would then feel free to put their hearts and minds into unreserved support of the closest military and political cooperation between the United States and the countries of the Commonwealth.

---

<sup>34</sup> Irish Republican Army.

921.

DEA/50021-40

*La délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies à Paris
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to United Nations General Assembly in Paris
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 8

Paris, September 20, 1948

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Following for Pearson from N.A. Robertson, Begins: Reference: Ireland.

In accordance with your suggestion, Turgeon came to see me in London over the weekend. He will come to Paris to see the Prime Minister before his departure for Canada if the latter thinks it necessary. In the meantime he has given me the following appreciation of the Irish political situation for Mr. King's information:

Appreciation begins:

(1) Fear of war is becoming great; the desire to maintain neutrality is reaching dominant position.

(2) Costello's speech stating Eire would fight on Canada's side, and, by inference, on Britain's side, in a war against Communist Power had a very bad effect.

(3) Costello's denial of having made this statement is not accepted by the people.

(4) Costello's further declaration that Eire would join pact for western union and defence if partition removed is considered as a bargain he had no right to propose. Opposition says Ireland's right to territorial integrity is absolute and must be insisted upon without pledging country's future.

(5) Complete severance from Commonwealth and setting up of a Republic under leftist pressure is not looked upon with favour in upper Catholic circles, and the people in general are uneasy about it.

(6) A plebiscite to decide whether Eire to retain the King (External Relations Act) or to form a Republic would probably give a majority against the change in the 26 counties. It would certainly show a large majority in favour of the status quo if the whole 32 counties were consulted.

(7) Costello will probably find the political situation in a bad mess within his own Cabinet when he returns. Personally he cannot recede from the position he took in Canada, and his colleagues Norton and MacBride have been making even more advanced anti-King declarations during his absence.

(8) I should not be surprised to see Dillon resign. He is the only pro-British member of the Government and belongs to no party. His constituency, Monaghan, has a large Protestant, Loyalist, vote which has always supported him.

(9) All this is playing into De Valera's hands. His two strong cards will be: (i) He preserved Eire's neutrality during the last war, and (ii) The country's position in the next war must not be involved in a bargain about the removal of partition.

(10) The Government's normal majority is now only 3 in a legislature of 147 members.

(11) The use of the radio for anti-English broadcasting has assumed what I believe to be dangerous proportions. My British colleague is grieved and alarmed at it.

(12) Verbal exchanges regarding north and south between only semi-responsible parties are becoming more and more violent.

All considered, I would not advise an official visit to Eire at this time by an eminent Canadian statesman and leader. Such a visit would be deemed to have some political purpose, perhaps the approval of Eire's assertion of freedom from the King by repeal of the External Relations Act and its far-reaching consequences, perhaps an attempt to stem the movement.

One thing is certain: the External Relations Act will be repealed at the coming session, this autumn, of the Irish Parliament, and Eire's last link with the King will be broken.

I would fear the effect of all this among certain elements of Canada's population if the proposed visit were made now. Appreciation ends. Ends.

922.

DEA/50021-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire en Irlande*

Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in Ireland

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, October 14, 1948

Dear Mr. Turgeon:

It was thought that you might find useful a summary of Mr. Costello's public statements made during his visit to Canada. In a separate despatch an account has been given of the various functions that Mr. Costello attended and the visits that he made to various personages in Ottawa, Quebec and Toronto.

I assume that you have already read Mr. Costello's speech before the Canadian Bar Association in Montreal. A copy was received here with your despatch No. 139 of September 8th, 1948.† A reading of the speech has left with me three main ideas: first, that Mr. Costello in recounting the evolution of Ireland's status from the Treaty to the present day seems strongly to suggest that Ireland throughout has been in the vanguard of Commonwealth development; second, that Mr. Costello wishes to regard persons abroad of Irish origin as part of an empire, albeit a spiritual one, as constituting now a source of strength to the mother country and for the future the source of a much greater population; third, that the External Affairs Act, "full of infirmities and inaccuracies" could only be suitably dealt with by repeal. I cannot, of course, give you any idea of the attitude of the press towards this and the later statements since the newspapers confined themselves during the visit to factual reporting; nor can it be said that either the general public or ourselves were startled in any measurable degree.

Looking at Mr. Costello's statements as a whole one can see three main subjects. These were (a) the External Affairs Act and "association"; (b) aid to Canada in an attack from communist quarters; and (c) partition.

Having prepared the ground at Montreal, Mr. Costello declared at a conference for the Press Gallery on September 7 that Ireland was in fact preparing to repeal the External Affairs Act. One can hardly say that this move was entirely unexpected, whatever its implications. The strongest and quickest reaction was the blast from Sir Basil Brooke<sup>35</sup> that you will have already noted: "Ulster has no use for a merely external association with the British Commonwealth of Nations . . . Mr. Costello has revealed more clearly than ever the yawning gulf that separates Ulster from Eire. He has underlined the permanence of what he calls 'partition' and has shown how impossible is the united Ireland of his dream." The announcement of Mr. Costello was no doubt the one important statement of policy made during his visit. He could hardly fail to make it out of the context of what the Irish are pleased to call "association". The first lines of this context had already been sketched in Montreal where Mr. Costello observed that "association" depended upon the "factual situation".

From these words one might infer that "association" would not be in any sense a constitutional relationship. This inference is the stronger by reason of the intention to repeal the External Affairs Act. On the day before the intention to repeal was announced Mr. Costello emphasized to press representatives that what counted was the practical association with the Commonwealth. "Whether Eire is a member of the Commonwealth is just a phrase." In the days that followed in Ottawa after the announcement, Mr. Costello developed the conception of a great new Ireland constructed with the aid of a Marshall Plan loan of $85,000,000.00 and which, once united and independent of its Commonwealth ties, could repatriate its people from the United Kingdom, Canada and the United States and thus build up its depleted population. This new Ireland would be independent of the Crown yet "friendly and working in association with Commonwealth nations," and willing, despite its serious dollar shortage, to co-operate in the maintenance of the sterling area. Mr. Costello cited the four-year trade agreement with the United Kingdom as an indication of friendly "association" and he repeated Ireland's readiness to enter into a trade agreement with Canada. (A few days earlier he had expressed the hope that Ireland could negotiate a basic trade agreement with Canada. Ireland could export to Canada such items as tweeds, linens, blankets, rugs, luxury goods, whisky and stout, and take in exchange Canadian farm machinery, fertilizers, capital goods for industrial development, and corn for feeding hogs.)

In what appears to be yet a further attempt to dispel the vagueness that hangs about the word "association" Mr. Costello, in his last public address in Canada, spoke of bonds of friendship between Canada and Ireland and of the way of life common to both countries. "In Ireland we claim in a particular way to understand Canada . . . It is evident that the bonds of friendship which united our two peoples in the past are not merely historical facts; they are the results of a firm and ever growing partnership in the uneasy, fretful world of the Twentieth Century. As we in Ireland survey the world and seek to find the nations with which we wish to be associated freely in our common endeavours, it is natural that we should turn to Canada . . . Let us broaden the basis of our association so that other nations may find it a model on which they, also, may base the method of their co-operation and the form of their relations with their neighbours and friends." The association should be a "special relationship based, not on constitutional forms, but on the more solid and lasting ground of the way of life for which we have been known."

<sup>35</sup> Le premier ministre de l'Irlande du Nord./Prime Minister of Northern Ireland.

We are led naturally to think of the "factual situation" as between Canada and the United States and there is at least one sign that press representatives had this in mind. At a press interview after his broadcast over the C.B.C. National Network on the evening of September 5, Mr. Costello announced Ireland's readiness to come to the aid of Canada if Canada were ever threatened by war from a Communist quarter. Some observers, contrasting the role of Canada with that of Ireland in the world wars, dubbed this assurance "rather weak". At the interview itself one reporter asked the rather pointed question whether Ireland was spending much money on defence. Mr. Costello replied that not much money was being spent since the government was trying to improve its system of social security. I have no doubt that the questioner was thinking largely of the arrangements for defence co-operation between Canada and the United States.

Mr. Costello appears undoubtedly to have come to Canada anxious to express the willingness of the Irish people to take a part in repelling the advance of materialist concepts of life, to help check "the ever-spreading virus of Communism." He referred again in this particular context to Ireland's spiritual empire throughout the world, which fortifies with its support the opposition of Ireland to the attempts to overthrow our common civilization. I must admit that I cannot altogether grasp the implications of this idea. It might on the one hand be a roundabout way of speaking to those in Canada and elsewhere who are of Irish descent. It might, on the other hand, appear to Mr. Costello to be an important element, even though intangible, in "association".

On the question of partition, Mr. Costello fired the first shot in the Transatlantic duel after the broadcast that I have just mentioned. He had been announced by the C.B.C. as Prime Minister of Ireland. He said that this designation was the proper one and that no matter what the six northern counties said, he was "to all intents and purposes" prime minister of the whole of Ireland. Continuing in the following days on this subject, he believed that there was a growing feeling among the northern Irish favourable to union. He repeated, the stipulation that before Ireland could join the defensive arrangements of Western Europe, partition would have to be brought to an end. By this time the Deputy Prime Minister of Northern Ireland had arrived in Canada and was telling the Royal Empire Society at Montreal that his country was "not for sale". He said that Ulster would have liked for some time past to help bring about a unity of Ireland. The attitude of the people in the south, he declared, was making it impossible to do so. Simultaneously the Grand Orange Lodge of Northern Ireland was echoing Sir Basil Brooke's statement that Ulster had no use for a merely external association with the British Commonwealth of Nations, and was protesting against "the audacious and preposterous claim" of Mr. Costello that he had any control over the affairs of Northern Ireland.

As I think you know, Mr. Costello had a long private session with the Prime Minister. Mr. [N.A.] Robertson was present and has probably told you about it. We have no very full record on our file about this meeting but we may be able to give you some account of it later. On the whole Mr. Costello was very cordially received by the Canadian public and no doubt those who heard him and probably those who read accounts of his addresses acquired a more vivid impression of the Irish political situation. But I am not sure that people's minds were entirely free from scepticism about tangible results, however earnest the motives may have been, and this feeling cannot have been removed by the statements of Mr. Costello on his return to Dublin or by the suspicion that fresh ammunition has been supplied to Mr. De Valera to let fly at a coalition government in which Mr. Costello's voice does not go unquestioned.

Yours sincerely,
ESCOTT REID

SECTION C

NOUVELLE-ZÉLANDE : VISITE DU MINISTRE DES FINANCES
NEW ZEALAND: VISIT OF FINANCE MINISTER 923.

DEA/5909-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

[Ottawa], February 12, 1948

RE PROPOSED VISIT OF MR. WALTER NASH, NEW ZEALAND MINISTER OF FINANCE, TO OTTAWA

In a telegram from our High Commissioner in New Zealand last November,† we were informed that Mr. Walter Nash, New Zealand Minister of Finance, was concerned about New Zealand's Canadian dollar position and that he would like to arrange to visit Ottawa to discuss trade relations between this country and New Zealand. In a reply† to our High Commissioner it was said that we would be pleased to have discussions with Mr. Nash in Ottawa on trade arrangements and other related matters if his schedule at Havana would enable him to proceed here. This information was transmitted to Mr. Nash in a letter dated November 17th from our High Commissioner,† and in a reply of the same date Mr. Nash stated that, if time should be available, he would be anxious to make a short visit to Ottawa.†

In a telegram dated January 30th,† our High Commissioner in New Zealand informed us that when in Ottawa Mr. Nash would endeavour to arrange a short term credit for the purchase of certain commodities required by New Zealand and that he would also wish to discuss a proposed agreement between Canada and New Zealand for the avoidance of double taxation. The draft text of the proposed agreement prepared by the New Zealand authorities has been received here and is being considered by officials of the Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue. We have also received a list of the commodities which New Zealand is interested in obtaining from Canada, and this information has been given to the Department of Trade and Commerce. Officials of these interested departments are preparing for discussions when Mr. Nash arrives in Ottawa.

The exact date when Mr. Nash will come to Canada is not yet known, but in a letter of February 5th to the Prime Minister† Mr. Nash stated that proceedings in Havana would probably be concluded between the 20th and the 29th of this month and that he then planned to spend not more than three days in Ottawa. Mr. Nash pointed out that he was booked to leave San Francisco by plane on March 5th. In a subsequent message,† we were informed that Mr. Arms, Land and Income Tax Officer, was leaving Auckland on Wednesday of this week and that after a short time in Washington he would proceed to Ottawa to assist in negotiations on the subject of double taxation.

The Prime Minister has sent a message to Mr. Nash† stating that he is looking forward to seeing him in Ottawa, and the Office of the New Zealand High Commissioner has been requested to let us know as soon as an exact travel schedule has been arranged.

The Departments of Finance, Trade and Commerce and National Revenue have been kept informed of developments and have no doubt advised their Ministers of this proposed visit.

[L.B. PEARSON]

924.

DEA/5909-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

[Ottawa], February 25, 1948

PROPOSED VISIT BY NEW ZEALAND MINISTER OF FINANCE

On Monday afternoon Mr. G.J. Schmitt, of the New Zealand Treasury, and Mr. J.A. Malcolm, New Zealand Trade Commissioner in Canada, called on Mr. Moran of the Economic Division. Mr. Schmitt came from Havana at the request of Mr.

Walter Nash, to hold preliminary official conversations preparatory to Mr. Nash's visit to Ottawa at the end of the Havana Conference. Representatives of the Departments of Finance and Trade and Commerce were present at the conversation.

2. Mr. Schmitt said that the United Kingdom Government had requested the Government of New Zealand to try to reduce its unfavourable trading balance to zero. This would mean an overall reduction in imports from about £140,000,000 N.Z. to £102,000,000. Within this overall picture they had also been requested to make a special effort to reduce their unfavourable dollar balance as far as possible.

3. They had, after careful and detailed study, reduced their proposed imports from Canada for the calendar year 1948, from £10½ million N.Z. to £7 million. Mr. Nash would be interested in discussing with the Canadian Government any suggestions which might be made on either side to minimize this proposed slash in imports. It was Schmitt's opinion that the Government of New Zealand would not ask for a direct loan. They would, however, wish to explore the possibility of arranging for the Government of Canada to hold inconvertible sterling against exports to New Zealand, for the calendar year 1948, to an amount representing the difference between imports of, say, £7 million (an irreducible minimum of essential imports) and, say, £10½ million.

4. We suggested to the New Zealanders that it would be useful for both sides to study the trade figures to discover what prospects there might be:

(a) to divert New Zealand exports, other than food, from the United Kingdom to Canada;

(b) to try to find in New Zealand sources of supply of commodities which Canada is presently buying from the United States or other dollar sources.

5. Mr. Schmitt and Mr. Malcolm are going to pursue these studies with representatives of the Department of Trade and Commerce, and I will report to you the results of this trade analysis.

6. With regard to the suggestion that Canada might hold inconvertible sterling, we explained that this was, of course, a matter of government policy. We were very pessimistic as to the possibilities of reaching such an arrangement. We emphasized our current credit difficulties, including our present problems with regard to the unused portion of the Canada-U.K. loan, and the fact that we had recently had to borrow from the Ex-Im. Bank. They wished to know whether there might be at least "a gleam of hope" which they could pass on to Mr. Nash before he left Havana. We said that we could hold out no hope, but would seek instructions from the Government as soon as possible. We got the impression that Mr. Nash's plans to visit Canada might be largely determined by whether or not the "gleam of hope" was visible to Mr. Schmitt in Ottawa.

7. When we, on our side, pressed them for details of their proposed cuts in imports from Canada, we could not get any exact information from them. They had in mind further reductions in imports of automobiles and parts, electrical machinery, newsprint, rubber-soled shoes, canned fish, aluminium sheets and other items. They pointed out that if there were, in this list, any items which Canada could not sell, and which they would like to have, it might be mutually advantageous for us to reach some agreement as to interim financing.

8. Dr. Clark has a copy of this memorandum and will discuss this matter with his Minister. You may wish to have a word with Mr. Abbott.

9. Schmitt is anxious to have some indication of Ministerial reaction to his suggestion. Perhaps you would indicate, please, whether you wish to have any message transmitted to Schmitt at Havana.<sup>36</sup>

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

925.

DEA/5909-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire en Nouvelle-Zélande*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in New Zealand

DESPATCH 115

Ottawa, March 27, 1948

Sir,

With reference to previous correspondence concerning the proposed visit of Mr. Walter Nash, New Zealand Minister of Finance, to Ottawa, Mr. Nash arrived on Friday, March 12th and left again on Saturday, March 13th.

2. During the time Mr. Nash was in Ottawa, he had discussions with the Prime Minister and various Ministers on matters of mutual interest. I have asked the Departments concerned to be good enough to let me know whether any matters of interest were discussed by their Ministers, and I thought that you might care to have a summary of the replies received from the Department of Transport and from the Department of Finance.

3. Mr. Nash informed the Minister of Transport that New Zealand is anxious to transfer the registration of four Canadian Park vessels which are now operating under the Canadian flag. The Minister of Transport advised Mr. Nash that for the present at least it would not be possible to acquiesce in this request. It was indicated to Mr. Nash that, provided the undertaking were given that funds received from the sale of these vessels would be left in escrow in Canada for the construction of new vessels in Canadian yards, then the Government would be prepared to give further consideration to the New Zealand request.

4. Mr. Nash said that his country was also anxious to find out if Canada would give favourable consideration to the re-establishment of the Canadian-Australasian Line, provided the United Kingdom were interested in the re-establishment of such a service. The Minister of Transport advised Mr. Nash that Canada would give favourable consideration to such a proposal.

<sup>36</sup> Notes marginales :/Marginal notes:

Only indicated commodity we might be able to sell on blocked sterling or credit terms would seem to be certain quantity of canned fish. Otherwise cannot see any "gleam of hope".
St. L[aurant]

Decision of Mr. St. Laurent passed on verbally to Mr. Malcolm. 3 Mar 48. H.O. M[oran]

5. The Agreement for the Avoidance of Double Taxation was signed on March 12th by Mr. Nash on behalf of New Zealand and by the Minister of Finance for the Government of Canada. In a brief discussion with the Minister of Finance, Mr. Nash explored in very general terms the possibility of New Zealand buying certain Canadian products in excess of current purchases. The method of paying for these additional goods was the subject of some discussion, but no specific plan for payment was examined in detail. Mr. Nash insisted that it was not his idea that Canada should extend direct credits to New Zealand. Furthermore, he insisted that it would not be proper from the point of view of his Government to direct the current flow of New Zealand exports away from the United Kingdom to Canada. The Minister of Finance emphasized that there was practically full employment of manpower and resources in Canada at the present time and that it was difficult to see how additional exports could be made to New Zealand without causing a loss in Canada's dollar resources.

6. Mr. Nash concluded his discussion with the Minister of Finance by suggesting that the Canadian Government bear in mind the possibility of what he had suggested concerning further New Zealand purchases in this country. Mr. Nash said he would submit a list of items in respect of which New Zealand would like further supplies from Canada. The Minister of Finance assured Mr. Nash that our Government would consider this matter, but he did not express any hope that much could be done.

7. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce have indicated that their talks with Mr. Nash were of a general nature and that nothing of importance was discussed.

8. A copy of the Double Taxation Agreement will be forwarded to your office when it has been received from the King's Printer.

I have, etc.

H.O. MORAN
for Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECTION D
AFRIQUE DU SUD
SOUTH AFRICA

926.

DEA/1617-40

*Note du ministre de la Défense nationale
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Memorandum from Minister of National Defence
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

Ottawa, December 15, 1948

Mr. Charles te Water, Ambassador-at-Large for South Africa, called with Dr. P.R. Viljoen, who represents South Africa in Ottawa, with, as he said, the object of paying his respects and explaining his Government's views on a number of questions which were of vital importance to South Africa.

2. As the talk developed, it became evident that his one purpose was to try to secure the support of Canada for South Africa's "white supremacy" policy.

3. He said that British and European interests had been liquidated in the Far East. The East had been returned to the East. The world struggle between Communism and other nations made Africa as a whole a place of the utmost strategic importance. White South Africans were among the most conservative peoples in the world, entirely opposed to Communism. Africa had a total population of 175,000,000, of whom about 5,000,000 were white and half of these were in South Africa. If we wanted Africa to remain a solid base for future operations, we must support the South African policy. If we had no interest in the survival of South African culture, then we should let them know and they would act accordingly.

4. He said that the Indians were endeavouring to make Africa Indian. They would not go home to India. To the contrary, they wanted to bring in more so as to swamp the white population.

5. Though he dealt mainly with the Indian problem, he also touched on the black situation.

6. On several occasions he said we in Canada did not understand the situation or else we would have a greater sympathy for his country's position. He referred to our participation in the "nefarious" South African war.

7. Asked whether his Government would respect the "entrenched clauses" by which certain rights are guaranteed to the native population under the constitution, he became at once evasive. I judged that they had no intention of respecting these rights.

8. Asked also what they intended to do about the constitutional position, he said that they would continue to be in the Commonwealth. Again he appeared to resent this question. He said that while his Party was a republican party, they would be a republic within the Commonwealth with the King as King of republican South Africa!

9. In trade South Africa was becoming more and more aligned with the United States.

10. South Africa is in an extremely difficult situation and we must be most careful to help in every way possible. But for me at least, Mr. te Water made the worst of the present government's bad case. If he talks to others as he did to me, I would think that South Africa would lose such little support as she has for her present policy.

B[ROOKE] C[LAXTON]

SECTION E

ROYAUME-UNI
UNITED KINGDOM

927.

DEA/277 (S)

*Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieuresHigh Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

DESPATCH 713

London, April 21, 1948

Sir,

I have the honour to report that the increasing continentalization of the United Kingdom's policy is causing concern in those parts of the Commonwealth which do not fit easily into a continental grouping, notably Australia and New Zealand.

2. It is perhaps unnecessary to point out that there are two separable causes of this new orientation of the United Kingdom's outlook. Towards the end of December of last year the Foreign Office presented to the Cabinet a long conspectus of Soviet policy throughout the world, in which Communist pressure at all of the critical points was analyzed and its danger estimated. This review led to the conclusion that, unless firm action were taken, the situation would deteriorate further and important positions would be lost one by one and almost by default. As a result of the submission of this paper, the Cabinet authorized Mr. Bevin to make his speech of the 22nd of January in the House of Commons in favour of Western Union. The bases of that speech were diplomatic and strategic rather than economic. But for many months previously the United Kingdom had been forced by economic necessity to move in the same direction; and indeed it may be doubted whether Mr. Bevin's initiative would have taken the form it did of calling initially for a closer association of the democratic states on the Atlantic seaboard of Europe if a continental pattern had not already been laid down by the European Recovery Programme.

3. Although the main lines of the United Kingdom's foreign policy have been dictated by the knowledge that the values of Western civilization are under grave attack, many of its features cannot be explained except by reference to the dollar problem. This continuing preoccupation has led to a more ready acceptance of the United States lead in most diplomatic spheres than would have been likely otherwise and to a progressively greater awareness that manpower must be drawn from the Services in order to increase production for export. There have been very few aspects of the United Kingdom foreign policy which have not been affected by one or other of these constant influences — the shortage of United States dollars, the necessity of working closely with the United States, and the need to economize in the use of manpower. The dollar problem has had its effect on great things and small. It led to the precipitate withdrawal from Greece and Turkey and so to the formulation of the Truman Doctrine. It was responsible for the dusty answer which the Newfoundland Delegation received when they came to London last spring. It accounts for the increasingly marginal role which the United Kingdom is playing in the Japanese settlement. Without the sharp spur of the dollar drain, the United Kingdom would not have agreed to form the Bi-Zone in Germany and to give up sole control of the Ruhr, for which both Mr. Churchill and Mr. Bevin fought so stubbornly. All around the globe the United Kingdom's foreign policy has been influenced by the exigencies of the dollar problem.

4. Although these withdrawals altered substantially the comparative responsibility of the United Kingdom and the United States, for the most part they did not produce any marked or permanent changes in political geography. The United States moved in as the guarantor of many areas from which the United Kingdom had moved out; but the size and shape of the areas which could be considered in a more or less unitary way remained constant. With Mr. Marshall's offer of a European Recovery Programme, it was different. These developments seem likely to produce a lasting change in the world's political configuration. They have imposed a continental pattern and also show promise of giving back to Western Europe the inner cohesion it has lacked for so long.

5. The critical period in the development of this new pattern, to my mind, came in the four weeks between the speech by Mr. Dean Acheson<sup>37</sup> at Cleveland, Mississippi, on the 8th of May last year and Mr. Marshall's speech at Harvard on the 5th of June. In a masterly survey Mr. Acheson had explained to the American people the nature and causes of the world's economic difficulties. But he had not prescribed a specific remedy. Indeed, his diagnostic examination could have served as the basis for any one of a number of different remedies. For example, the worldwide shortage of United States dollars which Mr. Acheson discussed might conceivably have received some global treatment; and I have recently learned that in those critical few weeks the United Kingdom Treasury urged on the Administration in Washington an approach of that kind. But the die was cast differently, and when Mr. Marshall spoke at Harvard he suggested a continental solution which would concentrate first on the problems of Western Europe.

6. The reasons for that decision, I imagine, are to be found in Mr. Marshall's appreciation of the strategic situation and in Mr. Acheson's analysis of the domestic political scene in Washington. Only a few months before, Mr. Acheson had experienced the difficulty of selling to Congress the programme of aid to Greece and Turkey. He had discovered that it could be done only by giving the programme a strong anti-Soviet twist. A programme of aid to Western Europe would have the advantage that it could be commended to Congressmen, at least privately if not in public, as a promising counter-attack at a critical point on Soviet pressure and Communist infiltration. This argument could be re-inforced by strategic considerations. The United States had twice fought in order to deny the Western seaboard of Europe to an unfriendly power. But as a result of the Second World War the countries of Western Europe were left impotent and open to attack. The balance of power had been destroyed, and between the Elbe and the Atlantic there was little more than a vacuum.

---

<sup>37</sup> Ancien sous-secrétaire d'État des États-Unis.
Former Under-Secretary of State of United States.

“Now Europe’s balanced, neither side prevails
For nothing’s left in either of the scales.”

That couplet was much more applicable to Europe after the last war than when Pope wrote it. No doubt economic aid to Western Europe commended itself to Mr. Marshall as a way of pouring in cement to strengthen the chief overseas bastion of United States security.

7. Whatever the reasons for the decision, as soon as it had been taken it began to enforce a continental grouping. On the one side, the sixteen countries of Western Europe, united as prospective recipients of United States aid and pledged to economic cooperation among themselves. On the other side, the United States, as the chief fount of benefits, along with other American countries, in which it became increasingly clear that a considerable amount of the necessary purchasing would be done. Against that pattern the reasons for the anxiety of the antipodean Dominions become clear. The new grouping cuts across the old maritime organization of the Commonwealth and threatens to leave the already isolated members in the South Pacific entirely out in the cold.

8. Just as this new pattern has been evolved in the process of attempting to solve economic problems, so the difficulties it is creating for Australia and New Zealand are first showing themselves in economic forms. Two illustrations have recently come to our attention.

9. The first has arisen in the course of discussions concerning the project for a European Customs Union. It will be remembered that this was strongly advocated by Mr. Clayton last summer as an essential part of the economic cooperation enjoined on the sixteen Marshall countries by the terms of the offer of further United States assistance. At the meetings of the European Customs Union Study Group which Mr. [D.V.] LePan of this Office has attended the observers for Australia and New Zealand and in private conversation have both taken the line that, of course, the United Kingdom would not enter a European Customs Union. Extinction or even partial extinction of preferences which Australia and New Zealand enjoy in the United Kingdom market would lead automatically to retaliatory action; and no conceivable benefits which the United Kingdom might gain from participation in a European Customs Union could compensate it for the loss of its preferences in these two Commonwealth countries. This threatening and truculent attitude may not express the considered policy of the Australian and New Zealand Governments; but behind it lies the genuine fear that industries which have been developed in order to supply the United Kingdom market, such as the dairy industry in New Zealand, may suffer when all the implications of the United Kingdom’s new continental orientation have been worked out. At a meeting of Commonwealth representatives at Havana on the 4th of February Mr. Walter Nash, the New Zealand Minister of Finance, put the same view more temperately but hardly less forcibly. He is reported in the minutes as having said:

“The erection of a customs union on the basis that substantial elimination of preferences would be required involved entry into the political arena. Without that requirement it would still be difficult to create enthusiasm in New Zealand for the idea of Western European Customs Union; with it, it would be impossible to obtain cooperation. The idea of political union with Western Europe which had been put forward in the recent speech by the Foreign Secretary would be popular in New Zealand. But if there were any suggestion that such a political union was a first step towards a customs union, a necessary condition of which was the elimination of preferences, that popularity would immediately vanish."

10. My second illustration comes from the meetings of the Sterling Area Statistical Committee. At the meeting on the 11th March Mr. R.W.B. Clarke, of the Treasury, attended at the invitation of the Chairman in order to speak about the European Recovery Programme. In the course of his remarks, as you might expect, he took occasion to stress the two chief anxieties of the United Kingdom's financial policy now that ERP has become a reality:

(a) Even when ERP comes to an end the United Kingdom will not be able to finance its current programme of imports from the Western Hemisphere.

(b) Although the net deficit of the United Kingdom Colonies and Eire with the Western Hemisphere will be substantially covered by ERP financing, the net dollar deficit of the rest of the sterling area will still be a drain on the central reserves, so that over the period of ERP the reserves will continue to decline, since there will be no conceivable way in which they can be replenished.

Mr. Clarke ended by drawing the moral that the other countries in the sterling area, as well as the United Kingdom, must do everything they can in the way of dollar-earning and dollar-saving.

11. When he had finished, Mr. G.W. Clinkard, the Secretary of the New Zealand Department of Trade (in our terms Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce) who has been here for some months as head of a New Zealand supply mission, asked a number of questions which tended to suggest that, if New Zealand were to divert some of its exports from the United Kingdom to dollar markets during the period of ERP, the drain on the central reserves could be checked without any harm being inflicted on the United Kingdom. New Zealand might sell butter in the United States, for example, while the United Kingdom would make up its supplies from the United States under ERP. Mr. Clarke quickly demolished this suggestion by pointing out that it rested on the assumption that the ERP Administrator would foot the United Kingdom's deficit with the Western Hemisphere whatever happened. This was, of course, not the case. ERP funds were limited, and the net result of such a diversion would almost certainly be a reduction in the United Kingdom's total supplies. It may be doubted, however, whether Mr. Clinkard's question was really so naive as it sounded. The inward purpose of it was, I think, to stress the way New Zealand and Australia were being squeezed by the form which ERP had taken and to serve notice on the Treasury here that if New Zealand were pressed too hard to restrict dollar imports, it might adopt an entirely new line and attempt to balance its dollar accounts by re-directing its exports. Essentially he was making a negotiating point. But the sense of grievance which Australia and New Zealand feel at being excluded from ERP breathed through everything he said. New Zealand would get no relief from ERP either directly or through off-shore purchases; and throughout the duration of the Programme it would have to meet its dollar deficit from central reserves to which it had contributed in the past, which would be diminishing and which could not be allowed to drop below a minimum level. Under these circumstances New Zealand might have to reconsider its position radically.

12. During this discussion the Australian representative, Mr. J.F. Nimmo, of the Department of the Treasury in Canberra, who has come to London specially for the meetings of the Committee, said nothing. But the incident was not closed with the end of the meeting. In the course of his reply to Mr. Clinkard's questions, Mr. Clarke (who has the great merit of being frank) said that, although the suggestion which Mr. Clinkard had made could not be put into effect without injury to the United Kingdom, he personally would not rule out the possibility that other sterling area countries over the long run might have to redirect their exports. Although Mr. Nimmo made no comment at the time, he was alarmed by this remark, since he inferred that Mr. Clarke meant that the day might come when the United Kingdom would decide that it could no longer let other sterling area countries have any convertible sterling at all. If that happened, of course, they would be forced to balance their dollar accounts directly. After consulting with his Government by telegram, Mr. Nimmo on instructions saw Mr. A.T.K. Grant, who is the Chairman of the Sterling Area Statistical Committee, in order to place his fears squarely before the Treasury here.

13. Mr. Nimmo has told us that he was reasonably satisfied by what he learnt in his interview. Mr. Grant explained that, although there were individuals in the Treasury, including Mr. Clarke, who thought that in the long run at least it might be necessary to deny to the other sterling area countries any convertible sterling from their accumulated balances and so virtually break up the sterling area, this was by no means the ruling view. The Chancellor, Sir Edward Bridges<sup>38</sup> and Sir Wilfrid Eady, all believed that arguments both of equity and of expediency led to the conclusion that efforts should be made to keep the sterling area functioning, even if this involved continued, although it was to be hoped diminishing, drawings on their accumulated balances by other sterling area countries. I might add that this account of the difference of opinion in the Treasury about the use to be made of the sterling balances tallies with my own impression. Moreover, the division coincides, I think, with the split in the Treasury over the importance of restoring the international position of sterling. The majority who feel that at all costs the sterling area must be maintained also set a very high value on restoring sterling's position. The minority who believe that it would pay to be tougher with other sterling area countries are also not so convinced that the revival of sterling as an international medium of exchange is essential for this country's recovery.

14. Shortly before Easter the Australian High Commissioner here, Mr. Beasley, called on Sir Stafford Cripps and received from him assurances similar to those which Mr. Grant had given to Mr. Nimmo. Notwithstanding these assurances, however, the Australian authorities are still worried by the possibility that the United Kingdom may cease to grant them any convertible sterling from their accumulated balances. They now know that at least one influential official in the Treasury believes that such a move may be on the cards. They also know that there is considerable pressure for it in Washington. You will be acquainted with the article by Mr. Michael Hoffman, which appeared in The New York Times for the 18th of March under a Paris dateline, in which it was reported that, "Britain may be forced by pressure from her Western European neighbours and the United States to abandon her efforts to maintain her position as banker for the British Commonwealth and other sterling area countries." The article went on to state that "American and Continental experts" had arrived at the conclusion that "There is a basic inconsistency between Britain's participation in ERP and Britain's position as banker for the sterling area," and that, "Among steps the British may be asked, urged and eventually forced to take are definitive blocking of existing sterling balances to reduce the ability of India, Egypt and other non-European countries to buy British goods that might otherwise go to Europe; cessation of conversion of sterling into dollars for sterling area countries; and extension of sterling loans to France and other Continental countries." This article, which elucidates many of the issues very clearly, (I have attached a copy for convenience of reference)† is no doubt too categorical to be taken as an expression of the prevailing view in Washington. In particular, it leaves out of account a conviction which I gather is almost as strong in many circles in Washington as it is here that destruction of the United Kingdom's long-established commercial and financial relationships throughout the world would be calamitous for everybody. But Mr. Hoffman, who served in the United States Treasury during the war, still enjoys exceptional access to many important officials in the United States Government service; and I have no doubt that this article represents the view of at least a considerable body of opinion in Washington.

<sup>38</sup> Sir Edward Bridges, secrétaire permanent, ministère des Finances du Royaume-Uni.
Sir Edward Bridges, Permanent Secretary, Treasury of United Kingdom.

15. Since the Australians are apprehensive that they may have to face a situation in which they will no longer be able to convert into dollars any of their sterling balances in London (which constitutes the most important part of their reserves), they are guarding closely the few other reserves over which they have independent control and which would provide their last line of defence in such an event. The reserves which the Australians can dispose independently are of two kinds — their quota in the International Monetary Fund and their gold reserve in Australia. The exact amount of the second item is kept secret; but Mr. Nimmo has told us that it is "a little over £20 million." Both of these reserves have recently been under pressure from London. When Sir Stafford Cripps saw Mr. Beasley before Easter he urged that over the next four years Australia should draw its full quota from the IMF in order to diminish the drain on the central reserves of the sterling area. A few days previously Mr. Grant had suggested to Mr. Nimmo that the gold reserve in Australia should be transferred to London and sold to the United Kingdom for sterling. Neither of these transactions is likely to take place, Mr. Nimmo has given us to understand. So long as the Australians are worried that the form of the European Recovery Programme, which provides a means of covering the deficit with the Western Hemisphere of part of the sterling area but not of the rest, may lead to the dissolution or impairment of the central reserve system, they will insist on trying to keep intact the marginal reserves over which they have independent control.

16. You will not have failed to notice that for this examination of the current anxieties of Australia and New Zealand I have provided as a preamble a perhaps over-long essay on the new political geography. My justification is that, when I consider these countries' problems against the emerging continental pattern, I am more than ever impressed by our own good fortune. I am not thinking only of the relief which Marshall aid seems likely to bring almost at once to our balance of payments with the United States. I am thinking as well of the way in which the new pattern imposed by the European Recovery Programme provides a context in which many of the difficulties which have beset our external policy for so long can be resolved. Ever since we have been in a position to shape our own policy abroad, we have had to wrestle with the antinomies created by our position as a North American country and as a member of the Commonwealth, by our special relationship with the United Kingdom and at the same time, although in less degree, with other countries in Western Europe as well. A situation in which our special relationship with the United Kingdom can be identified with our special relationships with other countries in Western Europe and in which the United States will be providing a firm basis, both economically and probably militarily, for this link across the North Atlantic, seems to me such a providential solution for so many of our problems that I feel we should go to great lengths and even incur considerable risks in order to consolidate our good fortune and ensure our proper place in this new partnership. This is the reason why in the past few weeks I have argued, perhaps intemperately, that in this changed situation, which is both hopeful for the world and congenial to our own national aspirations, it would be a mistake for us to allow our policy to be shaped too much either by financial caution or by a regard for our diplomatic status which might hamper the encouraging developments which are now on foot.

I have, etc.

N.A. ROBERTSON

CHAPITRE XI/CHAPTER XI
RELATIONS AVEC LES ÉTATS-UNIS RELATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES

PREMIÈRE PARTIE/PART I
COOPÉRATION EN MATIÈRE DE DÉFENSE ET DE SOUVERAINETÉ
DANS L'ARCTIQUE
DEFENCE COOPERATION AND SOVEREIGNTY IN THE ARCTIC

SECTION A

COMITÉ CONSULTATIF SUR LE DÉVELOPPEMENT DU NORD ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

928.

PCO/Vol. 57

Note du ministre de la Défense nationale et du ministre des Mines et Ressources pour le Cabinet

Memorandum from Minister of National Defence and Minister of Mines and Resources to Cabinet

SECRET

[Ottawa], January 16, 1948

NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT POLICY

The Cabinet and the Cabinet Defence Committee have from time to time in the past two years approved various projects in northern Canada. Some of these have been undertaken in co-operation with the United States as part of the continental defence scheme. Others are part of the government's normal programme for development of northern Canada; these, too, usually have some importance from a defence standpoint. The programmes include such measures as the establishment and operation of weather stations, low frequency Loran stations, air photography for mapping purposes, and Arctic research, including the operation of ionospheric experimental stations.

2. Responsibility for the initiation and administration of civil developments in the north falls primarily — under government direction — on the Northwest Territories Council. The Department of Government chiefly concerned is the Department of Mines and Resources. Other civilian departments, however, also have direct interests, particularly the Department of Transport in respect of the weather station programme, and the Department of Health and Welfare. In many civilian undertakings in the area, the Department of National Defence also has some interest.

3. Responsibility for defence projects in the north, on the other hand, falls primarily on the Department of National Defence. Many of these projects, however, have important civilian implications and involve some responsibility on the part of one or more civilian government departments.

4. There is, therefore, a need for close and continuous interdepartmental coordination to ensure that all responsibilities are discharged effectively and in accordance with overall government policy. Moreover, it is in the national interest to ensure that problems of administration — particularly those involving United States participation in joint undertakings — are known to and dealt with by all the departments directly affected.

5. As an example of the kind of problem that is a recurring phenomenon in northern administration, reference is invited to a recent report from the Interdepartmental Meteorological Committee, which deals with the present status of the weather station programme. The United States are still operating eight weather stations in northeast Canada and the Canadian Arctic. The present programme as approved by the Cabinet calls for the assumption of full operating responsibility by the Department of Transport over a three-year period (1947-50). It is expected that two stations will be taken over next year, but it is undoubtedly desirable to accelerate the process. This problem was, in fact, discussed at the August 12th meeting of Cabinet Defence Committee, when it was decided that the attention of the Department of Transport be directed to the importance attached by the government, on grounds of policy, to the introduction of Canadian personnel to all stations on Canadian territory as soon as might be practical.

6. In conjunction with the establishment of Arctic weather stations, the United States have constructed air strips for supply purposes. Some of these are of a rudimentary character, but it has recently been learned that the United States Air Force has plans for the extension of at least one of these to a length greater than that required for weather station purposes. At present there is no adequate provision for Canadian control of these air strips except that exercised indirectly through the operational control of the related weather stations being vested in a Canadian meteorological official. Again, as has been previously reported, the United States is still operating three aerodromes in Canada — at Mingan, Fort Chimo and Frobisher Bay. Although an R.C.A.F. officer is stationed at each of these aerodromes, no plans have yet been made for their operation by Canada.

7. There are other factors in the overall problem, including transportation, communications, general administration and development, etc. For instance, the United States is at present providing all transportation, both air and sea, for these new Arctic projects. This tends, in practice, to give them a good deal of control over the operations.

8. The tendency has been for new Arctic projects to be considered separately. No provision has been made for any comprehensive review which would inter-relate all Arctic activities, presenting for the government a composite picture of the Canadian position in the Arctic and joint advice from the responsible departments on the general policies to be adopted.

9. It appears, therefore, that some joint advisory and co-ordinating body, representative of the departments primarily interested, should be formed for this purpose. The Northwest Territories Council, in spite of the breadth of its local and general responsibilities, is not adequately informed nor is it vested with the powers which would be required to undertake this task. A new committee composed of senior officials of the interested government departments appears to be the best solution. The membership of such a committee should include a member of the Northwest Territories Council.

10. It is accordingly recommended that an "Advisory Committee on Northern Development" be established with the following terms of reference and composition:

(a) Terms of Reference

To advise the government on questions of policy relating to civilian and military undertakings in northern Canada and to provide for the effective co-ordination of all government activities in that area.

(b) Composition

The Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources (Chairman)

The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

The Deputy Minister of Transport

The Secretary to the Cabinet

The Chairman, Canadian Section, Permanent Joint Board on Defence

The Chief of the General Staff

The Chief of the Air Staff

The Deputy Ministers of Health and Welfare, the Deputy Minister of Public Works, the Chief of the Naval Staff, the Chairman, Defence Research Board, and the Commissioner, Royal Canadian Mounted Police, would be invited to attend when items of direct interest to them were being discussed; other officials would attend when appropriate. The Secretary would be provided from the Privy Council Office.<sup>1</sup> 929.

DEA/50197-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], January 19, 1948

INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE ON ARCTIC DEVELOPMENT

I note that this matter is to be considered by the Cabinet this afternoon and that a memorandum has been submitted outlining the purposes of the proposed Committee. This memorandum was prepared, I believe, in the Cabinet offices. External Affairs is represented on the Committee, but there is no particular reference in the memorandum to the External Affairs interest in the questions which will come before the Committee. It seems quite clear that this Committee, if set up, will deal with subjects which are of considerable importance to Canadian-United States relations. Those relations in the future will, to a considerable extent, be concerned with Arctic questions. In the handling of these questions, the proposed Committee will become an instrument of external policy. We should, therefore, maintain very close contact with it.

<sup>1</sup> Approuvée par le Cabinet le 19 janvier./Approved by Cabinet on January 19.

The discussion in Cabinet this afternoon may provide another opportunity for emphasizing the importance of directing our defence and development activities northward. There is no doubt that the United States is going to take a very great and increasing interest in this part of the world, and will be proposing plans of one kind or another for that area. It seems obvious that we should ourselves accept responsibility, as far as possible, for carrying out such of these plans as are practicable and necessary. If we cannot carry them out ourselves, we should participate in them, as joint operations, to the greatest possible extent. Otherwise, we will be in the position either of holding up necessary activities because of our inability to undertake them, or of permitting the United States to carry them out alone on Canadian soil. Either course is undesirable, which makes it all the more essential that we should, I think, divert our energies, so far as possible, to that part of the world. This would have two results. It would hold off the Americans and it would emphasize the importance and the potentialities of our "last frontier". Frontiers are of great significance and value in the development, materially and psychologically, of a nation. The Arctic frontier promises to be almost as significant in this connection as our western one has been.

L.B. P[EARSON]

930.

PCO/Vol. 57

Note pour le Comité consultatif sur le développement du Nord
Memorandum for Advisory Committee on Northern Development

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], January 28, 1948

NORTHERN AND ARCTIC PROJECTS

Outlined briefly below are the principal projects, mainly of a joint Canada-U.S. character, which are now being undertaken in Northern Canada or are contemplated. These include both civilian and military undertakings.

1. Weather Stations

(a) North-eastern Weather Stations

The Cabinet on 28th January, 1947, approved the taking over by Canada of stations in North-eastern Canada, operated by the United States, on a progressive basis over a three-year period commencing 1947. The present position is as follows:

Stations already taken over by Canada

Cartwright, Labrador
Hebron, Labrador

Stations to be taken over by Canada in 1948

Clyde River, Baffin Island

Mecatina, P.Q.

Indian House Lake, P.Q. (if possible)

Stations to be taken over 1949-50

Mingan, P.Q.

Upper Frobisher, Baffin Island

Fort Chimo, P.Q.

Padloping Island, Baffin Island

Indian House Lake, P.Q. (if not taken over in 1948)

Canada has also established stations at Fogo, Newfoundland, and Hopedale, Labrador, at the request of ICAO.

The United States are operating stations at Stephenville, Newfoundland, and Cape Harrison, Labrador, presumably by agreement with the Newfoundland Government.

(b) Arctic Weather Stations

Cabinet on 28th January, 1947, approved a three-year programme for the establishment of nine weather stations.

During 1947, two stations were established; one on Ellesmere Island (Eureka Sound), the other on Cornwallis Island (Resolute Bay). The 1948 programme envisages the establishment of stations on Prince Patrick Island and Isaachsen Island.

Overall responsibility and control are vested in Canada who provides half of the staff; the officer in charge being Canadian. Canada also pays for permanent installations, including those at adjacent air strips. The United States is to bear all other costs, including equipment, transportation; also half the personnel.

2. Low Frequency Loran Programme

Low Frequency Loran stations can be classified into two categories: (a) Northern Loran Chain; and (b) Southern Experimental Chain.

(a) Northern Loran Chain

Cabinet on 25th February, 1947, approved Canadian participation in the establishment of a chain of six northern loran stations to be operated jointly by Canada and the United States. Three of the stations were to be in Canada, one in Alaska and two in Greenland. Canadian responsibilities were to be confined to the stations located in Canada. For these, Canada would provide the construction and materials, the U.S. would supply the loran towers and equipment. The Canadian stations will be manned by the R.C.A.F. It is expected that sufficient personnel for this purpose will be available by 1st October, 1948. The United States is providing technical supervision, and in the meantime, assisting in the operation.

The station in Alaska and two of the stations in Canada are now nearing completion. The Canadian transmitting stations are located at Kittigazuit (near Aklavik) and Cambridge Bay on Victoria Island. A small monitor station at Sawmill Bay (at Great Bear Lake) has also been established.

The eastern half of the chain has not yet been started and may be delayed or may require re-location due to the uncertainty of the future status of U.S. military installations in Greenland.

(b) Southern Experimental Chain

Experimental transmitting stations are located at Hamlin, Saskatchewan; Gimli, Manitoba; and Dawson Creek, B.C. In addition, a number of monitor stations are operated in Canada by Canadian Services and the Department of Transport. These stations are to continue to operate until the northern chain becomes completely operational. The R.C.A.F. provides the housing for the stations, radio communication, messing and transportation for U.S. personnel. U.S. participation consists of technical supervision and assistance, including provision of the majority of the technical personnel at the transmitting station. The United States has also provided a detachment of B.29 aircraft, which have been based at Edmonton, for experimental and test flights in conjunction with the operation of this chain.

3. Northwest Staging Route

In June, 1944, Canada reimbursed the United States for all expenditures toward permanent installations on the Northwest Staging Route and its associated facility, the Edmonton-Alaska Landline Communication System. Subsequently, the R.C.A.F. took over operation of the Northwest Staging Route and the Landline Communication system; and the Army took over operation of the Alaska Highway. The Army continues to operate the Highway and the R.C.A.F. to operate the Staging Route, but the Landlines have now been made the responsibility of the Department of Transport, with the Canadian Telegraphs acting as the operating agency.

Since the end of the war, the Permanent Joint Board on Defence has affirmed the necessity for the continued operation of all these facilities, which are considered an indispensable link between the United States and Alaska in providing for the defence of Canada and the United States. In addition to the military requirements, there is of course a civil requirement for these air bases and ancillary facilities. Because of the training value and opportunity provided for co-operation between the Services of the two countries, and in the interests of rapid and uninterrupted expansion in time of emergency, there are distinct advantages in having the Route maintained by a military agency during peacetime.

U.S. participation, other than the use of the Route by military aircraft, is limited to the provision of small staging detachments at Edmonton, Fort Nelson and White Horse, to facilitate maintenance and transit arrangements for their aircraft en route. The United States also leases certain of the circuits on the Landline, for which an annual minimum rental of $271,000. will be paid. This, of course, is a substantial contribution toward the overall cost of the operation of the communication system. Canada has taken title to all U.S. buildings and equipment on the Route.

4. Aerodromes Generally

(a) Goose Bay

The present agreement between Canada and Newfoundland does not provide for continuing post-war use of Goose Bay by the United States. There is however an understanding with Newfoundland that the U.S. Air Force can remain at Goose Bay, at least until the peace treaty with Germany is signed.

The U.S. have asked for long-term military rights at Goose Bay. They have, however, agreed not to make a formal approach to the Newfoundland Government for the time being.

The station is operated by the R.C.A.F., but upwards of five hundred U.S. personnel, military and civilian, are stationed there. Permission was given recently to the U.S. to construct married quarters for some of their personnel, on the understanding that this was not to be construed as any guarantee of long-term rights.

(b) Frobisher Bay, Fort Chimo and Mingan

These bases and associated weather stations are operated by the U.S. under no formal authority, but with the knowledge of the Canadian Government. Canada has reimbursed the U.S. for expenditures as well as for items of permanent value; i.e., immovable property. Movable property has never been purchased by Canada. At the present time, the U.S. are rehabilitating these airfields and married quarters are being constructed for U.S. personnel at Fort Chimo and Frobisher with Cabinet approval at U.S. expense. However, it has been clearly indicated to the United States that they do not acquire any long-term rights by these authorizations.

R.C.A.F. Liaison Officers are stationed at Frobisher and Fort Chimo.

(c) Air Strips at Arctic Weather Stations

Two air strips have been constructed in conjunction with Arctic weather stations, both at present of a rudimentary character. These are located at Eureka Sound (Slidre Bay) on Ellesmere Island and at Resolute Bay on Cornwallis Island. The U.S. Air Force has put forward proposals for the extension of the strip at Resolute Bay to 10,000 feet and the conversion of this strip (at present usable only in the winter) to an all-weather facility, with suitable associated installations. This aerodrome, therefore, in addition to providing a main base for the air supply of Arctic weather stations generally, will have a potential military value.

The Chiefs of Staff considered this matter and recommended to the Cabinet Defence Committee that the air strip along the lines proposed be constructed jointly by Canada and the United States, respective Canadian-U.S. responsibilities to be similar to those accepted for the weather station programme; the operation of Resolute Bay to be undertaken by Canadian (R.C.A.F.) personnel under the control of a Canadian Commanding Officer. It was pointed out, however, at that time, that Canadian control of these projects would be nominal only if Canada did not contribute substantially to the water and air transport required for the supply of Arctic installations generally.

Cabinet Defence Committee agreed that the course proposed by the Chiefs of Staff serve as a basis for further discussion with the United States. They agreed also that any other alternative, such as the development of the air strip by the United States without Canadian participation, would be unacceptable.

In respect of the important question of Canada taking over more responsibility for supply and transportation services (including air and water transport), it was directed that this be the subject of further study by the Department of National Defence in consultation with civilian departments.

It is anticipated that the United States Air Force will wish to further develop the air strip at Eureka Sound, though not on as extensive a basis as at Resolute Bay. It is probable also that further development of existing aerodromes such as Frobisher Bay will eventually become a military requirement. The question of Arctic air installations is therefore likely to become increasingly important.

5. Joint Winter Experimental Station, Churchill

The establishment of the Joint Winter Experimental Station at Churchill with U.S. participation was authorized by Cabinet on September 18, 1946. This station, including the aerodrome, is operated by the Canadian Armed Forces for the testing of Service equipment under cold weather conditions. Last year the U.S. made financial contribution of $350,000. for the building programme but has not acquired title to any of the buildings or installations thereby.

It is estimated that on completion of the 1947-48 programme there will be 515 Canadian and 300 U.S. personnel stationed at Churchill.

6. Arctic Ionospheric Recording Stations

Canada presently operates a number of ionospheric recording stations. Of these, the Department of Transport operates the stations at Clyde River on Baffin Island and at St. John's, Newfoundland; the Navy at Churchill, Manitoba, and Chelsea, Quebec; the Army at Prince Rupert, B.C.; and the Air Force at Portage la Prairie, Manitoba. Co-ordination and technical supervision is provided by the Radio Propagation Laboratory of the Defence Research Board, Department of National Defence.

Cabinet Defence Committee recently approved the establishment of additional stations at Baker Lake, Cornwallis Island, Fort Chimo, Moosonee, Cambridge Bay and The Pas, and the expansion of the facilities now available at Portage la Prairie and Churchill. It was considered that the Department of Transport would be the most suitable organization to operate these new stations. The Defence Research Board and the Canadian Radio Wave Propagation Committee were instructed to proceed with the implementation of the plan.

All these stations are operated for purposes of scientific investigation, mainly in respect of Radio Wave Propagation in northern latitudes. The Canadian stations are, in effect, part of an international chain covering the desired latitudes. Canadian efforts are co-ordinated by the Canadian Radio Wave Propagation Committee, reporting to the Defence Research Board.

931.

DEA/50197-C-40

Extrait du procès-verbal de la première réunion du Comité consultatif sur le développement du Nord
Extract from Minutes of First Meeting of Advisory Committee on Northern Development

SECRET

Ottawa, February 2, 1948

. . .

TERMS OF REFERENCE — FUTURE PROCEDURES

1. The Chairman [Keenleyside] described the purpose for which the Committee had been formed and drew attention to the terms of reference, which permitted consideration of any aspect of northern development. It was hoped, accordingly, that overall co-ordination and some comprehensive programme of northern development could be worked out. The defence aspect was important, in particular the relationships with the United States involved. It was apparent that developments in this sphere would be mostly of a joint character and every effort should be made to provide for the maximum possible Canadian effort, particularly in respect of operating personnel. Only in this way could Canada retain control and a reasonable degree of independence.

In regard to Committee procedures, it was suggested that it would not be necessary to hold many meetings so long as adequate documentation on the various subjects was available in advance and the various subjects had been studied in detail by working groups where required. Since the Committee would be advising on overall policy rather than on matters of detail, it would be desirable for the principals to attend meetings themselves rather than send representatives. This would save time in arriving at decisions. It was hoped also that those officials named to attend only for items in their particular field of interest would be able to come at those times and thus materially assist the work of the Committee. In this connection the attendance of the Chief of the Naval Staff [Grant] and the Deputy Minister of Public Works<sup>2</sup> at this first meeting was appreciated.

(Memorandum of 28th January, 1948, from the Secretary).†

2. Mr. Heeney stated that he was in agreement with the views expressed by the Chairman and would like to stress also the importance of the work to be done by the Secretariat. It was his hope that a number of matters might be settled by telephone between the Secretary and various members of the Committee and that the Secretariat might act generally as a clearing house for information.

3. The Committee noted with approval the procedures proposed.

. . .

REVIEW OF NORTHERN PROJECTS UNDERWAY OR CONTEMPLATED

14. The Chairman observed that two explanatory memoranda in this regard had already been circulated; one by the Secretary, the other a review of United States military activities in Canada prepared by the Chief of the Geographical Bureau, Department of Mines and Resources.<sup>3</sup> In his view, both of these papers were very useful but it would also have been of value to include a statement on the normal activities of the various government departments principally concerned.

<sup>2</sup> E.P. Murphy.

Dr. Keenleyside, continuing, asked if, arising from these reports, any fields for study or particular activities suggested themselves. He had in mind subjects such as wild-life conservation, studies of native populations, etc. In particular, it would be useful if departments such as the Department of Transport could give consideration to the suitability for employment of native peoples inhabiting these northern areas.

(Memorandum of 28th January, 1948, re "Northern and Arctic Projects", from the Secretary. Memorandum of 22nd December, 1947, re "U.S. Military Activities in Canada," prepared by the Chief of the Geographical Bureau, Department of Mines and Resources†)

15. Mr. Heeney stated that he had read the memorandum on U.S. military activities with considerable interest and had found it stimulating and useful. He had, however, received the general impression from the memorandum that the United States authorities were consciously attempting to carry on activities in Canada without seeking proper authority or fully informing the Canadian Government. This was a view which might be held by others but his experience would indicate that there was no underlying design of this sort in the United States; rather the condition arose from lack of co-ordination in Canada and failure of departments to keep other interested departments fully informed both in Ottawa and Washington. To his mind, therefore, the memorandum as a whole pointed to the necessity for fuller co-ordination in Canada and was a conclusive argument in support of the requirement for the present Committee.

Additionally, however, he had noted a few inaccuracies in the report. For instance the weather station at Goose Bay was not entirely U.S. operated. It was primarily a Canadian weather station, for which the U.S. Services supplied the Rawinsonde observations. Further, the construction of air strips at the Arctic weather stations was not purely the result of U.S. policy but had been agreed jointly and made known to the government when the present weather station programme was approved by Cabinet in January 1947. Similarly other details of the programme were agreed jointly. Also "Operation Nanook" (Task Force 68) had been authorized by the government.

The memorandum gave the impression too that the construction of airfields at Frobisher Bay, Fort Chimo and Mingan, and their present operation by the United States, had not been authorized by and known to the government. This was certainly not the case as the airfields had been constructed with full Canadian authority and paid for by Canada. Their present operation by the United States was known to the government.

Perhaps a greater effort should have been made to get full information on the details of Operation "Nanook" & possibly some of the undertakings indirectly connected therewith, such as the scientific investigations on the part of U.S. personnel, were objectionable. The problem here, however, seemed to have arisen mainly because full exchange of information between the Services and the Department of Mines and Resources was lacking.

---

<sup>3</sup> Trevor Lloyd.

17. Mr. Pearson stated that he had been shocked by the report and felt that, if true, it should go forward to the responsible U.S. authorities by way of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. Since, however, there appeared to be some inaccuracies, it was suggested that all interested departments study the report and forward any comments with regard to its accuracy or otherwise to the Secretary. These comments could then be consolidated and the report revised accordingly. At that time, it might again be studied by the Committee, and if not substantially modified, should go forward to the Permanent Joint Board on Defence.

In his opinion, there was no intention on the part of the United States to conduct these activities in any clandestine fashion; rather these problems arose from a lack of co-ordination both in the United States and in Canada. It was apparent, therefore, that greater co-ordination in both countries should be encouraged. Certainly, also, the Canadian effort in the north should be on as large a scale as practicable in order to minimize dependence on U.S. assistance.

18. The Chief of the General Staff [Foulkes] suggested that, pending its review, circulation of the memorandum in question be carefully restricted and in particular every precaution be taken to ensure that it was not seen by any U.S. officers or officials.

19. Mr. Heeney observed that the memorandum did indicate that consideration should be given to the basis on which the aerodromes at Frobisher Bay, Fort Chimo and Mingan might be taken over and operated by Canadian personnel. This was presumably a problem for the Department of Transport and the Air Force to consider jointly.

20. The Chairman stated that he was sure that Dr. Trevor Lloyd had not intended that his memorandum should constitute an attack on U.S. activities in Canada. It had been prepared merely as a factual report and other departments, including External Affairs and National Defence, had been consulted to ensure accuracy. The report was therefore as accurate as it had been possible to make it at the time; though developments since that date might have altered the situation in certain respects. It would be most helpful, in any case, to have it carefully reviewed by the interested departments. In general the report did indicate the necessity for increased Canadian participation in these joint projects.

21. The Committee agreed, after further discussion:

(a) that the memorandum on United States Military Activities in Canada be examined by each member of the Committee, any comments or proposals for revision thereof to be forwarded to the Secretary as soon as possible; and

(b) that the memorandum, in the light of the comments made, be reviewed by the Committee and at that time consideration be given to forwarding it to General McNaughton for tabling at the next meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence.

932.

DEA/50197-C-40

Extrait du procès-verbal de la deuxième réunion du Comité consultatif sur le développement du Nord

Extract from Minutes of Second Meeting of Advisory Committee on Northern Development

SECRET

Ottawa, June 1, 1948

. . .

REPORT OF TRANSPORTATION SUB-COMMITTEE

1. The Committee had for consideration the report of the Transportation Sub-Committee outlining arrangements made for transportation of essential personnel and supplies to northern posts during the summer of 1948. In general, the requirements of all departments concerned had been co-ordinated and satisfactory arrangements made, though some difficulty had been experienced in the case of the Air Force requirements for Cambridge Bay. However, a contract had now been let for this operation. The next step in the work of the Sub-Committee would be to forecast the long-range requirements of all departments concerned, and based on these estimates, to make recommendations as to the manner in which they might be met. It was anticipated that the report on this aspect would be available in September, 1948.

(Report on "Transportation Requirements for 1948" from Transportation Sub-Committee — Memorandum of 17th March from the Secretary).†

2. The Chairman reported on arrangements made to provide additional air transport facilities in the Mackenzie River area. These arrangements had not been the responsibility of the Transportation Sub-Committee but had been concluded by the Department of Mines and Resources in consultation with the Department of Health and Welfare and other interested branches of the Government. When this had been discussed at the first meeting of the Committee, it had been anticipated that the aircraft to be based at Fort Smith and Aklavik would be provided and operated by the Northern Transportation Company. It had proven impossible, however, to make suitable arrangements with the Northern Transportation Company. Arrangements had, therefore, been made with private operators for the establishment of a Norseman or a Beaver aircraft at Fort Smith immediately and for the provision of a second aircraft at Aklavik in the near future. The cost involved was approximately $36,000.00 per annum for the aircraft at Fort Smith and $50,000.00 per annum for the aircraft at Aklavik. The newly-appointed Administrative Officer of the Northwest Territories Administration at Fort Smith would co-ordinate the requirements of all government departments for the use of the aircraft based there and would assign priorities as necessary. No administrative officer was yet available at Aklavik for this purpose. A position had been established but had not yet been filled. Meanwhile the Medical Officer at this point would provide co-ordination and assign priorities as required, but it was hoped that an Administrative Officer would be appointed in the near future.

It should be noted that the sea transport arranged for the current year involved the use of a number of small vessels. With the loss of the Nascopie no larger vessel would be available until the new ship being built for the Department of Transport was completed. It was therefore a matter of some urgency to put this ship in commission.

3. Mr. J.C. Lessard<sup>4</sup> stated that the contract for the construction of a new ship called for its completion in September, 1949. It would not be available for use, therefore, before the 1950 season. The shortage of steel was one of the main factors in preventing its completion at an earlier date.

4. Vice-Admiral Grant reported that government approval had been given for the construction of an ice-breaker for the Royal Canadian Navy. This would be similar to the U.S. Edisto class. It was not anticipated, however, that this ship would be completed before 1951. As with the Department of Transport ship, non-availability of steel was the limiting factor.

5. General McNaughton pointed out the importance to Canada, in maintaining control over Canadian Arctic areas and supporting claims for sovereignty, of being in a position to provide access to these areas independently of the United States. In view of the importance of these considerations, it would appear reasonable that the government should allocate a priority for the steel required in the construction of the two ships. With the consent of the Committee, he would be prepared to raise the matter and make this recommendation at the meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee to be held the following day.

6. Mr. Heeney asked if consideration had been given recently to the question of continued operation of the Alaska Highway by the Canadian Army. This had been a contentious point earlier but the issue had not been raised for some time. It might be useful to have this question discussed by the Committee.

7. The Chairman reported that the Department of National Defence (Army) and the Department of Mines and Resources had been in consultation and were co-operating on this matter. At present a report from the Army was being awaited which would set forth in some detail plans for the next five years. When this plan had been discussed by the two Departments directly concerned, he would arrange to have it considered in the Committee.

8. The Committee, after further discussion:

(a) noted with approval the report of the Transportation Sub-Committee and the arrangements made for transportation during 1948;

(b) noted with satisfaction the arrangements made by the Department of Mines and Resources for additional air transportation in the Mackenzie River area;

(c) noted with concern the long period which was likely to elapse before suitable Canadian ships would be available for Arctic transportation; and

(d) agreed that the desirability of hastening construction of the Department of Transport supply ship and the Naval ice-breaker, by allocation of priorities for steel or otherwise, be brought to the attention of the Government, it being understood that this action would be taken by General McNaughton at the next meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee.<sup>5</sup>

---

<sup>4</sup> Sous-ministre des Transports./Deputy Minister of Transport.

...

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY IN THE ARCTIC

23. The Chairman reported that consideration had been given over a long period to the desirability of preparing an authoritative article covering the Canadian position in regard to Arctic sovereignty. Recently the need for such a paper had been emphasized by a request for material for an Arctic Encyclopedia being prepared by Mr. Vilhjalmur Stefansson. Included in this material was to be an article on this subject.

It was felt that the preparation of such an article demanded the services of a recognized authority on international law. It was proposed, therefore, that the services of such a person be obtained and that the cost be borne by the departments most directly concerned, possibly shared between the Department of Mines and Resources and the Department of External Affairs.

(Memorandum of April 23rd, 1948, from Secretary, Advisory Committee on Northern Development)†

24. Mr. Pearson stated that he had referred this problem to his Legal Officer, who suggested that the initial work in preparation of the article might be divided into two phases. The first would be the theoretical arguments in support of the sector principle, this principle not having been universally accepted in international law. The second would be the preparation of a detailed history of Canadian Government-sponsored activity in the Arctic, which would support the claims to sovereignty on the principle of effective control and actual administration. The latter would be factual in character and would constitute a solid and unquestionable basis in international law. When the work on the two phases had been completed, the material might be synthesized by some recognized authority.

25. Dr. Solandt observed that the facts in support of Canadian exploration and settlement would be brought out by other articles in the Encyclopedia.

26. General McNaughton pointed out that a paper supporting the sector principle had been prepared for the Imperial Conference of 1930 and should be available from the papers for that Conference.

27. The Committee agreed, after further discussion:

(a) that the basic material for the article be prepared in two parts, as suggested by Mr. Pearson, the factual record of Canadian exploration and administration to be prepared by the Department of Mines and Resources, the theoretical arguments supporting the sector principle to be prepared by the Department of External Affairs;<sup>6</sup>

<sup>5</sup> Voir le document 945./See Document 945.

(b) that, when these papers were completed, the two Departments concerned would consult together to decide upon the best method of preparing the final memorandum; and

(c) that, if considered desirable by the Departments concerned, it would be appropriate to employ an outside authority for preparation of the final article.

U.S. ACTIVITIES IN CANADA

28. The Committee had for reconsideration a memorandum prepared by the Chief of the Geographical Bureau, Department of Mines and Resources, which had been revised and brought more nearly up to date since the previous meeting, together with a memorandum prepared by the Secretary, indicating the authority for various projects undertaken by the United States in Canada.

(Memorandum of April 23rd from Chief, Geographical Bureau, Department of Mines and Resources† — Memorandum of April 23rd from Secretary, Advisory Committee on Northern Development†)

29. Mr. Pearson stated that the memorandum by the Secretary had set at rest some, but not all, of the fears which he had entertained as a result of the original memorandum by Dr. Lloyd. In his opinion, the U.S. authorities had not attempted to evade Canadian authority in the projects undertaken in Canadian territory, but rather the authority had sometimes been loosely drafted and had been, therefore, somewhat ambiguous. Both memoranda pointed to the difficulty of obtaining accurate information on U.S. activities in Canada. He was glad to note that something was being done about obtaining an accurate return of U.S. personnel in Canada since this was essential.

30. General McNaughton observed that the difficulties in providing complete co-ordination and complete Canadian control were known and understood but in some cases were almost impossible to avoid. Sometimes projects would be undertaken by U.S. Services in Canada on the authority of some comparatively junior officer in Washington, who was not familiar with the proper procedures. It was not so much a matter of bad faith on the part of U.S. authorities as it was a question of lack of knowledge of proper procedures at lower levels. Consequently the U.S. authorities needed constant reminding that, when operating in Canadian territory, proper authority must be obtained for every project undertaken and the Canadian authorities kept fully informed at all times.

31. The Chairman pointed out that the Secretary's memorandum had been distributed before he had seen it and that he was by no means in complete agreement

<sup>6</sup> Dans une note pour Johnson en date du 11 juin, Reid observa :

In a memorandum for Johnson dated June 11, Reid commented:

From my recollection of conversations with the former Legal Adviser, Mr. Justice Read, I have the very strong impression that he contended vigorously that it was most unwise for us to use the sector principle. As I recall, he said that the United States would find it impossible to accept an argument based on the sector principle in the Arctic since they are opposed to the application of the sector principle in the Antarctic and they are concerned lest the support of the sector principle in the Arctic would weaken their claims in the Antarctic. (DEA/9057-40).

with it. In his view, both the paper prepared by the Chief of the Geographical Bureau and that prepared by the Secretary suffered from somewhat the same faults in that they were not sufficiently objective. He would like to state, however, in respect of the paper prepared by Dr. Lloyd, that this had been prepared on his own instructions and not on Dr. Lloyd's individual initiative. Unfortunately the heads of departments and of the Services concerned had not been fully informed at the start as to the basis on which the paper was being prepared and he regretted any misunderstanding caused through his failure to obtain proper clearance for the investigations undertaken.

In his view, there would be no advantage to be derived from a detailed re-examination of these papers at this stage. Accordingly he had prepared a short paper bringing out the conclusions which he felt should be drawn. It was felt, because of the disparity in power and material and human resources between Canada and the United States, that it was inevitable that the latter would have to play the major role in many phases of the co-operative activity between the two countries. The necessity of continuing co-operation in the field of defence had been recognized by the establishment of the Canada-United States Permanent Joint Board on Defence in 1940. Because of the inclusive character of modern war and because of the present international situation, this co-operation has been greatly widened in scope and increased in activity.

Senior officials of the U.S. Service Departments had been consistently careful to avoid any infringement of Canadian rights in their undertakings. It was apparent, however, that there had been instances of a disregard, at lower levels in the U.S. Services, of Canadian rights or susceptibilities. These could be divided into three general types:

(a) the boastful or ignorant talk of comparatively junior officers or enlisted personnel, which was inevitable and relatively unimportant;

(b) the disregard of established procedures by field officers, either through the lack of knowledge of the proper procedures or through an impatient effort to "get things done". This still represented a problem, though as a source of trouble it was decreasing; and

(c) the publication by U.S. Services or other official agencies, or under their authority, of material relating to Canada without prior clearance with Ottawa. Constant attempts were being made by senior U.S. officers to remedy this situation and it appeared that it was improving.

Other difficulties arose as a result of loosely worded authorizations and inadequate interdepartmental co-ordination in Washington and Ottawa, particularly the former.

The conclusion to be drawn from this situation was that it was essential to keep a continuous and detailed record in Ottawa of all U.S. activities in Canada. This would aid in ensuring that no projects were undertaken without prior authority or knowledge. As an initial step in this regard, he had had compiled in short form a list of all known activities, together with numbers of personnel involved where these were known, and whatever authority existed for the undertaking concerned.

(Memorandum prepared by the Chairman on "United States Activities and Official Personnel in Canada," distributed at meeting)†

32. Mr. Pearson stated that he was in general agreement with the points brought out in Dr. Keenleyside's memorandum.

33. Air Vice-Marshal Cowley<sup>7</sup> stated that, in his opinion, certain statements in the report by the Chief of the Geographical Bureau were inaccurate and reflected unfairly on the Department of Transport; these statements had not been answered in the memorandum by the Secretary. He enquired, therefore, as to the propriety of leaving these statements in the record in their present form.

34. Dr. Solandt suggested that too much effort should not be expended in keeping track in detail of everything being undertaken by the United States in Canada. It appeared to him that nothing had been done which had not been authorized or would not have been authorized if authority had been sought.

35. Mr. Heeney pointed out that it was important to keep a continuous record of some sort showing numbers of U.S. personnel in Canada and their activities. This information should be available to the Government at any time. Probably a standard form of report should be worked out and this should be circulated monthly to all members of the Committee and of the Cabinet Defence Committee. It might also be sent to the Canadian Secretary of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. Possibly, since more than one department was involved, the Secretaries of the Committee should undertake this task.

36. It was agreed, after further discussion;

(a) to note the reports submitted;

(b) that no further action need be taken at this time with regard to the U.S. activities listed; and

(c) that a monthly report covering U.S. personnel and activities in Canada should be prepared by the Secretaries and circulated to all members of the Committee, to members of Cabinet Defence Committee, and to the Canadian Secretary of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence.

...

---

<sup>7</sup> Directeur des services aériens, ministère des Transports.
Director of Air Services, Department of Transport.

933.

DEA/50197-C-40

Extrait du procès-verbal de la troisième réunion du Comité consultatif sur le développement du Nord

Extract from Minutes of Third Meeting of Advisory Committee on Northern Development

SECRET

Ottawa, November 23, 1948

. . .

REPORT OF TRANSPORTATION SUB-COMMITTEE

10. Air Vice Marshal [A.L.] James<sup>8</sup> submitted an interim report of the Transportation Sub-committee on Surface Transportation Requirements for the Eastern and Western Arctic, and outlined its main features.

Since complete information on this summer's operations was not available, and tonnage requirements were not yet firm, the report should be regarded only as an interim study. It was intended that the final report of the Sub-committee would be available within the next six weeks.

In the Eastern Arctic, the supply of joint Canadian-U.S. weather stations could not satisfactorily be carried out without the use of two icebreakers. It appeared, therefore that, until the recently approved RCN icebreaker was available, supply arrangements for Northern weather stations would have to be similar to those undertaken in 1947 and 1948 (U.S. Task Force).

With the exception of proposed RCAF stations and the joint weather stations, the supply of existing and planned government posts and stations could be met by already authorized Canadian shipping. With the increased tonnages to be supplied to Eastern Arctic posts, there was an urgent need for charting and navigation aids. The importance of proceeding as rapidly as possible with the Northern work of the Hydrographic Survey was emphasized.

In the Western Arctic, the supply of Cambridge Bay presented a difficult problem. On the recommendation of the Sub-committee, the L.S.M.<sup>9</sup> Snowbird II (owned by the Yellowknife Transportation Company) had been used for this operation in 1948 and it had been successful. At the present time, however, this vessel, which was needed for next year's operations, was frozen-in at Cambridge Bay. The operating company had accepted considerable risk in undertaking this contract and were in financial difficulties. There was a moral obligation on the part of the government to provide some assistance.

(Secretary Transport Sub-committee Memorandum, dated October 6th, 1948. Document N.D. 10).†

11. The Chief of the General Staff reported that information had been received through the Air Attaché in Paris, to the effect that a French icebreaker was available for disposal. It might be well to explore the possibility of purchasing this ship in view of the steel shortage in this country.

<sup>8</sup> RCAF.

<sup>9</sup> Landing Ship Medium.

12. Mr. [A.] Watson<sup>10</sup> expressed the opinion that two icebreakers were required, but doubted the suitability of the French ship for use in the Canadian Arctic. On the basis of information available so far, the extensive modification required would render the purchase of this ship impracticable.

13. The Committee, after further discussion, noted the interim report submitted by the Transportation Sub-committee, and agreed:

(a) that the RCAF would initiate arrangements with the Yellowknife Transportation Company for the operation of the L.S.M. Snowbird [II] next summer; and

(b) that the feasibility of purchasing the French icebreaker for use in the Canadian Arctic be further examined by the Transportation Sub-committee.

...

SECTION B

STATIONS MÉTÉOROLOGIQUES ET PISTES D'ATTÉRISSEMENTS WEATHER STATIONS AND ASSOCIATED AIR STRIPS

934.

PCO/Vol. 244

Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion du Comité de la défense du Cabinet

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Cabinet Defence Committee

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], January 8, 1948

...

WEATHER STATION PROGRAMME; REPORT BY INTERDEPARTMENTAL METEOROLOGICAL COMMITTEE

5. The Secretary submitted a progress report from the Interdepartmental Meteorological Committee on the implementation of the approved weather station programme.

In co-operation with the United States, two Arctic weather stations had been established in 1947; one at Eureka Sound on Ellesmere Island, and one at Resolute Bay on Cornwallis Island. The latter, it was proposed, would be developed as a main administrative base. The programme for 1948 provided for the establishment of two more stations; one on Prince Patrick Island, and the other on Isaachsen Island. With regard to weather ships, one Royal Canadian Navy ship had been allocated to the station in the North Atlantic which was to be operated jointly by Canada and the United States. No arrangements had been made for the joint operation of a weather station in the Pacific, pending advice from the United States as to their plans for this undertaking. (They have since reported that they are not prepared to participate in the establishment of a Pacific station for the time being.)

<sup>10</sup> Surintendant des affaires maritimes, ministère des Transports.
Marine Superintendent, Department of Transport.

With regard to the Northeast stations, it was reported that Canadian technical personnel would not be available in sufficient numbers to permit the taking over of these stations at a faster rate than planned (three years), and at the same time meet the commitment to provide half of the personnel for the Arctic stations. Planning was proceeding on the basis that the final objective in respect of the joint Arctic stations was the provision of half the operating personnel.

(Memorandum re weather station requirements from Interdepartmental Meteorological Committee, November 19th, 1947 — Cabinet Document D157†).

6. The Committee, after discussion, noted with approval the report of the Interdepartmental Meteorological Committee.

ARCTIC AIR STRIPS

7. The Minister of National Defence read a memorandum from the Chiefs of Staff concerning United States plans for the development of a main airbase at Resolute Bay — the site of one of the weather stations established jointly in 1947.

Under agreed arrangements for implementing the weather station programme, the United States provided the transportation and supply services, and a temporary airstrip had been constructed at Resolute Bay for the accomplishment of this task. It had recently come to light, however, that the United States Air Forces' plans for the development of the airbase called for construction of a permanent strip 10,000 feet in length, together with ancillary facilities on a substantial scale. While this development could possibly be justified on supply grounds alone, it was known that the United States strategic air forces had a particular interest in the base and that this had been taken into consideration in the formulation of the plans. An airbase of the type proposed would be of great importance from a military point of view, both for offensive and defensive operations against a potential European enemy. If the United States were, as seemed likely, denied long term military rights in Iceland and Greenland, proposals for the development of other bases along similar lines would no doubt be forthcoming.

If the Resolute Bay airstrip were to be constructed on a joint Canadian-U.S. basis, only nominal control would be exercised if Canada took no part in the supply of this base either by air or water. Therefore, the financial implications of maintaining effective Canadian control were substantial, while the implications, from the Canadian point of view, of allowing this control to pass into the hands of the United States were, perhaps, equally serious.

In the interests of North American security it would be desirable, in the Chiefs' of Staff view, to develop Resolute Bay along the lines proposed, and, if this were to be done, the following alternatives appeared open:

(a) Canada and the United States to construct the base jointly — the division of responsibility to be similar to that accepted for the weather station programme, (six officers and fifty-two men were estimated to be required for the operation of the base);

(b) The United States to be permitted to develop the base without Canadian participation; and,

(c) Canada to build and operate the base as a purely Canadian project. (This would involve the purchase and operation of an icebreaker, the operation of merchant ships, and would take some time to accomplish.)

It was estimated that the project would involve a capital expenditure of about $12 million and annual recurring charges of $800,000.

The Chiefs of Staff recommended that alternative (a) be adopted.

(Chiefs of Staff memorandum, January 7th, 1948 — Cabinet Document D159)†

8. General McNaughton reported that at the recent meeting of the Joint Defence Board, the opportunity had been taken to discuss this matter informally with United States representatives, and it seemed apparent that the United States intended to proceed with their plan as part of the approved meteorological programme.

9. The Chief of the Air Staff stated that the United States Air Forces' plans envisaged a larger airstrip and more extensive facilities than would be required by R.C.A.F. standards purely for the supply of the weather stations.

They did not, however, contemplate a large permanent military establishment there, nor storage facilities, other than for fuel. Accommodation would be provided, however, for housing transient aircraft crews and training detachments.

10. A general discussion ensued and the principal points that emerged were:

(a) General McNaughton observed that the United States were likely to be denied long-term military rights in Greenland and the construction of airbases in Canadian territory therefore became a matter of considerable interest to them. In these circumstances, they were likely to exert increased pressure on the Canadian government for the development of such bases.

The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated that as a result of a recent conversation he had had with the Danish Ambassador to the United States, he was less pessimistic about the possibility of the United States and Denmark reaching agreement with regard to the operation of military installations in Greenland. One year's notice was required to terminate the present agreement and this had not yet been given. There was a reasonable possibility that some system of joint operation, similar to Canadian-U.S. arrangements, would be worked out by the United States and Denmark for Greenland.

(b) The Prime Minister enquired whether the United Kingdom and other Commonwealth countries were being kept informed of Canadian-U.S. defence arrangements. From time to time, questions were likely to be raised on aspects of Commonwealth co-operation vis-à-vis Canadian-U.S. co-operation in defence, and any discussions of these matters with other Commonwealth countries should be recorded for reference purposes. Obviously Canada needed outside help in defence, and consideration should always be given to whether this could be furnished from within the Commonwealth.

The Chief of the General Staff reported that, in accordance with an earlier decision of the Cabinet Defence Committee, he and Air Marshal Leckie had informed the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff in general terms of the defence arrangements that were being developed with the United States. At that time, the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff had indicated that, while they were unable to make a contribution to further such arrangements, they regarded them as sensible.

(c) The Secretary of State for External Affairs concluded from the report submitted that control of airbases and other installations in northern Canada was purely nominal unless Canada could undertake a greater measure of responsibility for supply and transportation services. This being the case, could not the Canadian Navy be adapted to operate in Arctic waters and assist in this work?

The Chief of the Naval Staff agreed that it was desirable for the Navy to gain experience in Arctic waters, but at present this could best be done by operating an ice-breaker or two, rather than fighting ships. In his view, it was too early to develop Arctic units (which would not be serviceable elsewhere), because of the continuing R.C.N. responsibility for protecting vital lines of communication in coastal waters and possibly farther afield.

The Director General of Defence Research reported that the Arctic Research Board had been concerning themselves with questions of transportation in the Arctic. They had reported that, during the period of open navigation, a system of water transport, based on the employment of commercial river boats on the MacKenzie and small boats in the Arctic (which would have to be provided), could serve stations in the northwest area. On the eastern side, bigger ships, of the type now employed, and an icebreaker could reach most stations in the northeast area. Stations on the border of Hudson's Bay could be serviced by small craft operating from Fort Churchill.

The Chief of the Air Staff observed that some of the northern stations could not be reached regularly except by air, and in his view this was the most reliable means of supplying these stations.

11. The Committee, after further discussion, agreed:

(a) that alternative (a) in the memorandum submitted, i.e., the joint development of the airbase at Resolute Bay, serve as a basis for further discussions with the United States;

(b) that alternative (b), i.e., the development by the United States without Canadian participation, be rejected as unacceptable; and,

(c) that the important question of Canada taking over more responsibility for supply and transportation services (including air and water transport) to northern installations be the subject of further study by the Department of National Defence in consultation with civilian departments.

...

935.

PCO/Vol. 60

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Comité de la défense du Cabinet*

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Cabinet Defence Committee

SECRET

[Ottawa], April 13, 1948

ARCTIC WEATHER STATION PROGRAMME

On January 28, 1947, Cabinet approved a programme for the joint establishment, by Canada and the United States, of 9 weather stations in the Arctic during the period 1947–1949. At the 30th meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee, on March 31, 1947, I reported and there were approved the plans made on February 26, 1947, with the United States, at the official level, for the carrying out of the 1947 portion of the programme.

2. At the 40th meeting of the Committee, on January 8, 1948, there was submitted and approved, a memorandum from the Interdepartmental Meteorological Committee reporting the work completed during 1947. Briefly, it was indicated that joint weather stations had been established at Slidre Fjord (Eureka Sound), Ellesmere Island, and Resolute Bay, Cornwallis Island. An automatic weather station, serviced occasionally by the R.C.M.P., was also set up at Dundas Harbour, Devon Island.

3. At a meeting of Canadian and United States officials held in Ottawa recently, it was agreed that arrangements for the carrying out of the 1948 programme in accordance with Cabinet's decision of January, 1947, would be as follows:

(a) initial establishment by air, after detailed reconnaissance, of weather stations on Prince Patrick Island and in the vicinity of Isaachsen Peninsula, Ellef Ringnes Island (this is now taking place);

(b) full establishment and supply of these two stations, together with re-supply of the stations at Slidre Fjord and Resolute Bay by sea during the coming summer;

(c) sea and air reconnaissance this summer to determine the most suitable locations for the establishment, in 1949, of a station in the vicinity of Winter Harbour, Melville Island, and one on the north-east coast of Ellesmere Island; if opportunity permits, some supplies might be landed at these two points;

(d) possible improvement of the air facilities at Slidre Fjord (especially in order to facilitate the air reconnaissance of North Ellesmere Island) by landing, next summer, aviation fuel, a hut and radar beacon to be provided temporarily by the United States;

(e) possible temporary provision of similar facilities by the United States for the Prince Patrick and Isaachsen air supply strips;

(f) grading and marking of an emergency air strip in the vicinity of Winter Harbour this summer, to facilitate flights between Resolute Bay and Prince Patrick Island, if time and terrain permit;

(g) division of responsibility between Canada and the United States during 1948 to remain as already approved — i.e. Canada providing the officers-in-charge, half the staff the pay and subsistence of the Canadian staff and permanent installations at stations and connected airstrips, with the United States assuming all other costs, including the provision of air and sea transport by the U.S. Air Force and Navy.

(h) up to 20 Canadian Service and scientific observers to accompany the U.S. Naval and Coast Guard Task Force entering the Arctic this summer in support of the programme;

(i) the State Department to request authorization for the Task Force, outlining the nature and scope of all intended activities of the ships and associated aircraft;

(j) all publicity regarding the 1948 programme and the Task Force to be subject to the approval of both Governments.

4. The U.S. request for authority for the Task Force (which, owing to a misunderstanding, first came forward through Naval channels) has now been received in the form of the attached letter from the State Department to the Canadian Embassy in Washington.† The request indicates that the Task Force:

(a) will consist of two ice-breakers and a transport; plans to spend August and September in the Canadian Arctic; and has the primary purpose of supporting the weather station programme by supplying existing stations and reconnoitering sites for the two 1949 stations;

(b) has the secondary purposes of personnel training, testing of ships and materials and minor hydrographic, meteorological and other scientific investigations.

5. In addition to meeting the Canadian and U.S. needs outlined in paragraphs 3 and 4 above, the Task Force is expected to be of assistance to Canada by performing such tasks as facilitating selection by the R.C.A.F. of a Loran site on North Ellesmere Island, transporting a complete, Canadian-manned ionospheric station to Resolute Bay, and carrying fuel for the R.C.A.F. to Pond Inlet, Baffin Island.

6. While the State Department's letter gives a good general picture of the plans and purposes of the Task Force, the State Department are being requested to provide further information on the following lines when plans have become more definite:

(a) the approximate number of U.S. personnel who will participate in the Task Force;

(b) a brief outline of the probable routes to be followed by the ships and associated aircraft in the Canadian Arctic;

(c) a summary of any activities (other than reconnaissance ahead of the ships) that associated aircraft plan to carry out;

(d) clarification of the term "personal training" if it involves military operations such as landings at sites not included in the weather programme;

(e) clarification of the nature and scope of the minor hydrographic, meteorological and other scientific investigations to be carried out;

(f) an outline of any significant changes in or additions to the expedition's plans.

7. The U.S. authorities have, of course, undertaken to request the appropriate licenses for any civilian scientists whom they may wish to have attached temporarily to the weather stations or the Task Force and to make available to the Canadian Government all information about the Canadian Arctic obtained while carrying out the 1948 programme and the related sea expedition.

8. Accordingly, the Cabinet Defence Committee is invited to:

(i) take note of the arrangements in hand for the 1948 Arctic weather station programme; and

(ii) give approval to the U.S. request for authorization of the U.S. Naval Task Force, on the understanding that the further information being requested of the State Department (see para. 6) will be reported to Cabinet Defence Committee in due course.<sup>11</sup>

L.B. PEARSON

936.

DEA/50197-D-40

Note du sous-ministre par intérim des Transports pour les services aériens pour le Comité consultatif sur le développement du Nord

Memorandum from Acting Deputy Minister of Transport for Air Services to Advisory Committee on Northern Development

SECRET

[Ottawa], May 19, 1948

NORTHEASTERN WEATHER STATIONS

When Cabinet, in January 1947, approved the overall meteorological programme proposed by the Interdepartmental Meteorological Committee it authorized (and later directed) the Department of Transport to take over and operate the U.S. operated weather stations in Northeastern Canada which constituted a requirement of the International Civil Aviation Organization. These stations are located at:

Clyde River, Baffin Island
 Padloping, Baffin Island
 Mecatina, Quebec
 Indian House Lake, Quebec
 Frobisher Bay, Baffin Island
 Fort Chimo, Quebec
 Mingan, Quebec

The Department of Transport had reported that a minimum of three years would be required for the takeover. It was understood, therefore, that it would be completed by 1950.

2. During 1947 the personnel resources of the Department of Transport were devoted to the establishment of new Arctic weather stations (jointly with the U.S.) to the expansion and re-activation of weather reporting stations in Labrador

<sup>11</sup> Approuvé le 15 avril./Approved on April 15.

(required by ICAO and provided by Canada by agreement with the Newfoundland Government) and provision of essential additional domestic facilities.

3. During 1948 the Department of Transport plans to take over Clyde River and Mecatina from the U.S. and if possible Indian House Lake also. When these three stations are taken over, the only pure weather station remaining under U.S. operation will be Padloping. This will be taken over during 1949-50.

4. It will be noted that three of the stations; namely Frobisher Bay, Fort Chimo and Mingan, are not merely weather stations but are operating aerodromes of which the staff for weather reporting duties constitutes only a minor part of the whole establishment. These aerodromes are operated by the U.S. Air Force.

5. The Department of Transport does not consider that a sufficient civil air requirement exists to operate these aerodromes for civil purposes. Therefore, the Department of Transport would propose, when it took over operation of the weather stations at these points, to discontinue the operation of the aerodromes and ancillary services until such time as a civil air requirement developed.

6. It is understood, however, that the U.S.A.F. and the R.C.A.F. consider it important that these aerodromes be maintained and kept in operation. Consideration has been given, therefore, to the taking over of the weather reporting services only at these points but the following serious difficulties are inherent in such a course of action so long as the U.S.A.F. operates the aerodromes:

(a) The main objective; i.e., to avoid having U.S. controlled and operated installations in Canada, would not be achieved.

(b) The division of responsibility and control between the U.S.A.F. and the Department of Transport would be difficult to establish; it would be impossible to operate completely independently and it would be undesirable to be in a subordinate position to the U.S. commander.

(c) A morale problem would arise due to differences in the amenities provided for U.S. and Canadian personnel.

(d) There would probably be differences in view as to the meteorological services to be provided; the Department of Transport would expect to provide weather reporting services only, whereas the U.S.A.F. would undoubtedly require forecasting services for aircraft operation as well; this might result in the U.S.A.F. retaining its present meteorological staff with unnecessary duplication resulting.

7. It will be apparent that these problems make it very difficult for the Department of Transport to carry out instructions and take over these weather stations. The difficulties arise mainly because the aerodromes constitute a military requirement. It would appear, therefore, that if these aerodromes are to be taken over and kept in operation, this responsibility should be assumed by the Department of National Defence (R.C.A.F.). If and when this takes place, arrangements can be concluded between the R.C.A.F. and the Department of Transport for such meteorological services as are required.

8. Accordingly, it is considered the following questions of policy should be decided before any action is initiated by the Department of Transport to take over the weather stations at Mingan, Fort Chimo and Frobisher Bay:

(a) Is there a continuing military requirement for the operation of all these aerodromes and ancillary facilities?<sup>12</sup>

(b) If so, does the R.C.A.F. plan to take over and operate these aerodromes and when is this likely to occur?

(c) If the answer to (a) is yes and to (b) is no, is it considered appropriate and desirable for the Department of Transport to take over the weather reporting services at these points while the U.S.A.F. continues to control and operate the aerodromes and other ancillary facilities?

A.T. COWLEY

SECTION C

VOYAGES DU EASTWIND ET DU ÉDISTO VOYAGES OF EASTWIND AND EDISTO

937.

W.L.M.K./J4/Vol. 318

Extrait du journal de la Commission permanente canado-américaine de défense

Extract from Journal of Permanent Joint Board on Defence

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], June 3-4, 1948

...

22. Navy Task Force to Re-supply Arctic Weather Stations. The U.S. Navy member<sup>13</sup> informed the Board concerning the arrangements which had been made to send a Navy task force from Boston in the middle of July 1948 to re-supply the Arctic weather stations at Thule, Greenland; Resolute Bay, Cornwallis Island; and Slidre Bay on Eureka Sound. The task force will include two ice-breakers and a cargo vessel. Secondary purposes of the operation are: ice-breaker reconnaissance; training of personnel; testing of ships and material; observations of geographic, navigational and aviation interests; and recording detailed hydrographic meteorological and electro-magnetic propagation data. One RCN liaison officer and four Canadian observers will accompany the task force. The Secretary of the U.S. Section [A.B. Foster] informed the Board that a press release would be issued on June

<sup>12</sup> Le procès-verbal de la réunion du 1<sup>er</sup> juin rapporte que le Comité consultatif sur le développement du Nord :

The minutes of the June 1 meeting record that the Advisory Committee on Northern Development: (a) noted that there was a continuing military requirement for the operation of these aerodromes; (b) noted that the Royal Canadian Air Force was preparing plans for the taking over of these aerodromes from the US Air Force; (c) agreed that the take-over of both aerodromes and Weather Stations should be completed at the earliest practicable date in view of previous Government direction in this regard; and (d) invited the Department of Transport and the Department of National Defence (Air Force) to prepare in consultation the necessary plans to accomplish this aim, and to report thereon at the next meeting of the Committee. (DEA/50197-C-40)

<sup>13</sup> Le vice-amiral C.B. Momsen./Rear Admiral C.B. Momsen.

4, 1948, simultaneously by the Department of External Affairs in Ottawa and the Department of State in Washington concerning the expedition.

...

938.

DEA/9061-H-40

Note pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Memorandum for Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, September 23, 1948

PRESS RELEASE ON THE SEA SUPPLY MISSION TO THE ARCTIC WEATHER STATIONS

The ice-breaker Eastwind has already returned from the Arctic to Boston and the ice-breaker Edisto and the Transport Wyandot are due back immediately.

2. On this occasion we will be under special pressure for the release of details regarding the work done by the Supply Mission because its activities included three historic developments which are outlined in the attached draft release.† To what is said in the draft in this connection I need only add that it will be a matter of wide interest that Edisto and Eastwind are the first ships that have penetrated (some 6 miles) to the west of Cape Sheridan along the north coast of Ellesmere Island (see attached maps).† This event is, you will see, partly 'buried' in the draft release simply because it appears dangerous, from the sovereignty point of view, to make an official announcement to the effect that the ships went further afield than did that of the British explorer Nares (who went much further himself by sled).

3. There would be some possible embarrassment for the Canadian Government, vis-à-vis the Canadian public, in issuing a statement indicating that the U.S. Navy has accomplished these feats on Canadian territory. After consulting with the Embassy in Washington and the Geographical Bureau, I am, however, rather afraid that these accomplishments of the U.S. Navy may leak out, either through the 700-odd U.S. Navy personnel who took part in the Mission, or through learned journals or societies. In the circumstances, I am inclined to believe that the Government risks far greater embarrassment if it remains silent about these matters and that it is therefore desirable for it to ensure that the facts are presented in the best possible light from the outset. I would therefore suggest that the attached draft be submitted to the Departments of National Defence, Transport and Mines and Resources with a view to enquiring whether they would be agreeable to its issue in Ottawa and Washington (after consultation between the two Governments).

4. The scientific activities of the Supply Mission were excluded from the joint release of June 4, as they might be interpreted as warlike. Also, in order to remove as much as possible of the military flavour of the Mission, the June 4 release was issued by Transport and the State Department. I think that if a release is to be issued at this time, the same policies should be followed regarding scientific activities and issuing authorities.

5. If the foregoing proposals are satisfactory to you, I will be glad to take up the matter with the other three Departments concerned in Ottawa.<sup>14</sup> I might add that it is our present belief that the U.S. authorities would probably be agreeable to a joint release drawn up along the lines of the attached draft.

6. A copy of the June 4 release is attached.†

939.

DEA/9061-H-40

Conseiller de l'ambassade aux États-Unis au directeur adjoint de la Direction des affaires du Commonwealth du département d'État des États-Unis

Counsellor, Embassy in United States, to Assistant Chief, Commonwealth Affairs Division, Department of State of United States

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, September 27, 1948

Dear Mr. Snow:

I enclose three copies of a draft press release on the return of this summer's sea supply mission, prepared in Ottawa and approved by all the relevant Government departments and by the Minister of National Defence, the Honourable Brooke Claxton. The press release which was prepared by the United States Navy reached Ottawa after Mr. Claxton and the other Ministers had approved the enclosed press release. I feel sure that if we were to try to modify the attached release by incorporating in it some features of the United States Navy release, substantial delay would result. No mention of the scientific side of the sea supply mission has been included for the same reason for which it was left out of the release of 4th June, 1948, namely that emphasis should be kept on the meteorological nature of the trip rather than on the collection of information which is of a potentially military nature.

2. The Government of Canada has asked that this release, like the release of 4th June, 1948, and in accordance with the agreement on which the Arctic weather programme is based, should be issued simultaneously by civilian agencies in both countries, namely the State Department or the United States Weather Bureau in the United States and the Department of Transport in Canada.

3. Finally, the Department of External Affairs wishes me to raise with you the question of the passage of Edisto and Eastwind through Hecla and Fury Strait. The route to be followed by the sea supply mission was arrived at by agreement between the two governments, and did not provide for passage through Hecla and Fury Strait.

4. The correspondence which arranged this summer's sea supply mission indicated that the Canadian Government wished the United States authorities to indicate the routes the ships would want to follow and implied that it was expected that

<sup>14</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:
Approved by Mr. Pearson C.E[berts]

the United States would consult Canada before any significant departure from such routes was made. I should be grateful if you would draw to the attention of the United States Naval authorities the difficulties which we may experience in securing approval for United States proposals for projects in Canada as a result of variations from previously agreed plans.

Yours sincerely,
G.L. MAGANN

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Projet d'un communiqué de presse

Draft Press Release

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, September 27, 1948

It was announced in Ottawa and Washington on June 4 that three U.S. Navy and Coast Guard vessels, with Canadian representatives aboard, would shortly be sailing to Canadian Arctic waters in support of the Joint Weather station programme which is being carried out by the governments of Canada and the United States.

These three ships — the U.S.S. Edisto, icebreaker, the U.S.C.G. Eastwind, icebreaker, and the U.S.S. Wyandot, cargo vessel, have now returned to Boston.

During the summer they resupplied the Joint Weather stations established in 1947 at Eureka Sound, Ellesmere Island and at Resolute Bay, Cornwallis Island. They also made a preliminary investigation of the possibility of establishing a further joint station in the vicinity of Winter Harbour, Melville Island. In the course of reconnoitering a site for an additional joint station on Ellesmere Island, the U.S.S. Edisto and the U.S.C.G. Eastwind managed to reach, via Robeson Channel, the Cape Sheridan area at the north of that island. This area in the extreme north of Canada was the scene of the activities of the British explorer, Sir George Nares, in 1875-6, and of the subsequent activities of the United States explorer, Admiral Peary, in 1905-6. The supply mission came across Nares' and Peary's cairn and, as is usual on northern expeditions, Peary's notes found in the cairn were replaced by appropriate documents. The U.S.S. Edisto and the U.S.C.G. Eastwind returned to the Atlantic coast through Fury and Hecla strait, between the Melville Peninsula and Baffin Island.

The ships which participated in the supply mission were under the command of Captain George J. Dufek, U.S. Navy, embarked in the U.S.S. Edisto. The Edisto was commanded by Commander E.C. Folger, U.S. Navy; the Wyandot by Captain J.D. Dickey, U.S. Navy; and the Eastwind by Captain J.A. Flynn, U.S.C.G. Among the principal Canadian representatives who participated in the supply mission were Mr. J. Ivor Griffiths of the Meteorological Division, Department of Transport, and Captain Albani Chouinard, master of the Department of Transport icebreaker Saurel.

940.

DEA/9061-G-40

*Le directeur adjoint de la Direction des affaires du Commonwealth du département d'État des États-Unis
au conseiller à l'ambassade aux États-Unis*

Assistant Chief, Commonwealth Affairs Division, Department of State of United States, to Counsellor, Embassy in United States

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, October 11, 1948

Dear Mr. Magann:

Permit me to refer to your letter of September 27, 1948 regarding this summer's sea supply mission to Arctic waters, in numbered paragraphs 3 and 4 of which you raise the question of the passage through Hecla and Fury Strait of the vessels Edisto and Eastwind on their return voyage. You brought this to our attention at the instance of the Department of External Affairs, and pointed out in so doing that the route to be followed by the expedition had been arrived at by agreement between the two Governments and did not provide for passage through Hecla and Fury Strait.

The point is further made in your numbered paragraph 4 that the correspondence which arranged for the mission implied the expectation that the United States would consult Canada before any significant departure from the agreed routes was made.

In looking up the prior correspondence to which you refer,† I find in your letter of April 26, 1948 to Mr. Foster that the Canadian Government wished among other things to be informed "in brief outline of the probable routes to be followed by the ships and associated aircraft in the Canadian Arctic." Mr. Foster passed your letter on to the Navy Department for comment. In furnishing such comment under date of May 19, 1948, Vice Admiral A.D. Struble of the Navy made the following statement (conveyed to you with Mr. Foster's letter of May 25, 1948):

"The probable routes to be followed by the ships and associated aircraft in the Canadian Arctic are the same as last summer's operation. In addition, attempts will be made to reach Prince Patrick Island, Isachsen Peninsula and Grant's Land on Ellesmere Island. The routes to be followed in attempting to reach the latter destinations will depend upon the seasonal ice conditions prevailing."

If we may judge from these examples of the correspondence which arranged for the expedition, wherein the phrase "probable routes" is prominent, I think it a fair conclusion that neither Government looked upon the routes as rigidly prescribed or as leaving out of account such hazards as seasonal conditions, gaps in the charting, etc.

The second factor I should like to mention is that according to the Navy Department, the decision for the Edisto and Eastwind to take passage through Hecla and Fury Strait was an operational decision of the expedition commander which was approved and sponsored by the senior Canadian representative present, Captain Albani Chouinard, R.C.N. (R.). Presumably the United States commander felt that Captain Chouinard's concurrence provided any authority which might be needed from the Canadian side.

My third point bears upon the phrase "operational decision", used just above. I gather from the interested officials of the Navy Department that the commander of any such expedition would necessarily need and expect to have a reasonable amount of operational latitude in selecting his course at any given point in the voyage, having in mind both the success and the safety of his mission. It is considered that Captain Dufak as commander of the expedition was acting within such latitude in deciding to pass through Hecla and Fury Strait.

I trust that the foregoing will help to clarify the question under discussion.

Very sincerely yours,
WILLIAM P. SNOW

941.

CEW/Vol. 2121

Conseiller de l'ambassade aux États-Unis au chef de la Direction de l'Amérique et de l'Extrême-Orient

Counsellor, Embassy in United States, to Head, American and Far Eastern Division

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, October 13, 1948

Dear Mr. Johnson:

With my letter of 27th September† I enclosed copies of my letter of the same date, addressed to Mr. Snow, containing inter alia a protest concerning the passage of Edisto and Eastwind through Fury and Hecla Strait this summer. I have now received a reply from Mr. Snow, of which I attach three copies.

I think there is a great deal of merit in Mr. Snow's implied criticism of the relatively loose way we tie up affairs of this nature. I think that the next time there should be an exchange of letters setting forth the most explicit conditions we intend to have followed. Mr. Snow's letter also says that Captain Chouinard "approved and sponsored" the passage of these two vessels through Fury and Hecla Strait. This is a point, of course, which could be checked only through reference to Captain Chouinard. In any case, I think that if we wished to do so we still have grounds to complain against the "operational decision" referred to in the penultimate paragraph of Mr. Snow's letter as, if the decision was necessary, it would have been only common sense on the part of Captain Dufek to send telegraphic notice that he had found it necessary to change the route for operational reasons. As a matter of fact, it is plain from the information already available that the change was made not for operational reasons but because Captain Dufek wished to do so and because he had forgotten the instruction which said he was not to change his route without permission.

Yours sincerely,
G.L. MAGANN

942.

DEA/50197-40

Extrait d'une note de la Direction de liaison avec la Défense pour le chef par intérim de la Direction de liaison avec la Défense

Extract from Memorandum by Defence Liaison Division for Acting Head, Defence Liaison Division

SECRET

[Ottawa], November 19, 1948

ITEM NO. 3. [ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT, AGENDA FOR MEETING OF NOVEMBER 23] JOINT ARCTIC WEATHER STATIONS; TASK FORCE 80; AND U.S. NORTH EASTERN AIR FIELDS AND WEATHER STATIONS — DOC. N.D.11<sup>15</sup>

A. Joint Arctic Stations and Task Force 80

You can spare yourself the trouble of reading this long report since the only important points it contains are the following:

(1) Joint weather stations have been established at:

- (a) Eureka Sound, West Central Ellesmere Island (by air, spring 1947);
- (b) Resolute Bay, Cornwallis I., (by Task Force 86, summer 1947);
- (c) Mould Bay, Prince Patrick I. (by air, spring 1948);
- (d) Deer Bay, Isachsen Pen., Ellef Ringnes I. (by air, spring 1948).

(2) In addition to re-supplying stations (a) and (b), Task Force 80 last summer reconnoitred sites for further stations at (e), Cape Belknap, Northern Ellesmere I. and (f) at Bridport Inlet, south Melville I.

(3) It is planned next year to establish station (e), in the spring, by air, and possibly station (f) in the summer, by Task Force.

2. The exchange of notes on the programme has not yet been completed, the U.S. at present having our final draft under consideration. The arrangement forming the basis of the programme is that Canada provides, at each station, the officer in charge, half the staff, the pay and subsistence of the Canadian personnel, and permanent installations (including those at the air strips), with the U.S. assuming all other costs including transportation.

3. When Cabinet approved a 9-station programme in January 1947 on the basis just outlined, it agreed that the details of the programme should be worked out at the official level. The result is that, early each year, a meeting is held in Ottawa of Canadian and U.S. officials, at which all aspects of the current year's programme are thrashed out and understandings set forth in detailed minutes. The next meeting of this kind is due shortly. The one thing that the officials cannot approve on their own authority is the annual U.S. Task Force expedition in support of the programme. The U.S. have to make a formal request through diplomatic channels for permission for each sea expedition.

<sup>15</sup> C'était une parmi plusieurs notes à Reid portant sur les points à l'ordre du jour d'une réunion du Comité consultatif sur le développement du Nord le 23 novembre.

This was one of a series of memoranda to Reid about items on the agenda for a meeting of the Advisory Committee on Northern Development on November 23.

4. Considering everything, the Task Force went off well last summer. While we have had no complaints, you may possibly hear at the meeting a certain amount of grumbling to the effect that some of the 19 Canadian observers with the Task Force were unable to see or do everything in which they were interested. This is, of course, quite inevitable as long as the situation obtains in which the U.S. Navy is unquestionably doing us a favour in agreeing to accommodate a number of Canadian civilian and other scientific observers. There were only three unfortunate incidents connected with the Task Force of which I am aware.

(1) As soon as the Task Force returned to Boston, there appeared extensive leakages in the U.S. press regarding the activities of the sea mission, together with suggestions emanating from the information offices of some of the U.S. Government departments to the effect that they were in a position to issue plenty of information, photographs, etc., but that Canada was holding up further publicity. You will recall that the Embassy took the State Department to task in this connection at the time, and that an interdepartmental meeting agreed that there would be no further publicity regarding Task Force 80. No formal protest has gone forward to the State Department, largely because it was felt that, as one or two leakages on other matters occurred in Canada at the time, it would be unwise for us to make further protests regarding the Task Force leakages.

(2) Capt. Chouinard, D.O.T.<sup>16</sup> ice breaker captain who was with U.S.S. Edisto, radioed from the north of Ellesmere I. to his Minister, through U.S.N. channels, the suggestion that two places in that region be named after U.S. officers. We got out of this incident by having Mr. Pearson reply that it was our understanding that the Geographic Board, which has full powers regarding place names in Canada, had a policy of not normally using names of living persons. Before the next expedition leaves, this is the sort of problem that will have to be gone over carefully with the Canadian observers in order to avoid similar incidents.

(3) The Task Force was authorized on the understanding that, inter alia, it would stick to certain routes while sailing in the Canadian Arctic. The Government, of course, did not want the U.S.N. to feel that they could sail far and wide as they pleased. During the summer, when officers from Edisto took up with our C.N.S.<sup>17</sup> the possibility of their going through Fury and Hecla Strait, the U.S.N. were informed, through the Joint Staff Mission in Washington, that permission for a departure from agreed routes would have to be sought if there were any desire to travel through that strait. Despite this Edisto, preceded by the U.S.C.G. Eastwind, eventually returned to Boston via the Strait mentioned. At our request, the Embassy in Washington informed the State Department, in a letter dealing with other matters, that this unauthorized departure from agreed routes was the sort of thing that made it difficult for us at times to obtain serious consideration in Ottawa for proposals for U.S. activities in Canada. The State Department eventually replied, in effect, that the decision of the Task Force C.O.<sup>18</sup> to go through the Strait had been supported by one of our observers, and that he, therefore, felt it to be in order. The Operational Plan, the instructions to observers and other documents relating to the Task Force, of course, made it perfectly clear that the Task Force C.O. was in complete command of the whole operation. We must, therefore, hold the U.S.N. responsible for the departure made, and it is our intention to ask the Embassy to merely state orally to the State Department in reply that we do not wish the matter to be treated as a serious incident but that it would seem that the C.O. was in complete command of the expedition and should have arranged for Ottawa to be consulted, especially in view of the action taken by our C.N.S. during the summer. At the next meeting with the U.S. officials, on the 1949 programme, we can, of course, make it quite clear that there must be no further excursions into areas that are quite irrelevant to the weather station programme.

<sup>16</sup> Ministère des Transports/Department of Transport.

<sup>17</sup> Chef d'état de la Marine/Chief of Naval Staff.

5. A decision will have to be reached on one further point before next summer's expedition, and that is whether the Northwest Territories are to remain an area in which "explorers" are free to remove documents from cairns left by earlier expeditions — you will remember that the U.S.N. removed the Nares and Peary papers from the North Ellesmere cairn this summer with the intention of placing them in some naval museum. When consulted at the time, Mines & Resources did not raise any objection. This is, however, quite clearly, a matter requiring review.

...

943.

DEA/226 (S)

Note du chef par intérim de la Direction de liaison avec la Défense pour le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Acting Head of Defence Liaison Division to Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], December 3, 1948

ITEM ON CHIEFS OF STAFF COMMITTEE AGENDA FOR TUESDAY, DECEMBER 7, AT 10:30 A.M.; WINTER EXERCISES BY THE U.S.N. ICE BREAKER EDISTO IN THE CANADIAN ARCTIC

By letter of November 15, Mr. Snow informed Mr. Magann that the U.S.N. wished to have Edisto operate in January and February, 1949 along the east coasts of Baffin, Bylot, and Devon Islands (and the west and east coasts of Greenland) with the primary purpose of investigating ice conditions and the practicability of operations in the area under winter conditions. Snow went on to list the purposes of these exercises as follows:

- (a) To determine the limits of operations by "Arctic" type vessels.
- (b) To test the practicability of unloading cargo over the ice.
- (c) To train personnel and test equipment and material.

<sup>18</sup> Commandant/Commanding Officer.

- (d) To record ice conditions.
- (e) To observe geographical, navigation, and aviation conditions.
- (f) To record hydrographic, meteorological, and electromagnetic propagation data.
- (g) "To conduct . . . such other scientific investigations and services as desired by other Government agencies."

2. Snow also pointed out that in addition to requiring permission for the above listed activities, the U.S.N. required authorization to enter Canadian Arctic Territorial waters and make landings on Canadian Arctic territory at such points as ice conditions permit.

3. External passed this request to Chiefs of Staff Committee for consideration by the latter and by Cabinet Defence Committee. At the same time Mr. Keenleyside was asked by External whether he would have any objections to the proposed exercises.

4. Mr. Keenleyside has now replied making the following points among others:

(a) Landings on the islands will probably prove difficult but, if effected, there should be no taking of game or interference with the Eskimos.

(b) It is highly desirable for a representative of the Geographical Bureau to accompany the Edisto since it is concerned with ice studies and Arctic geography.

(c) The R.C.N. and Transport might also wish to send observers (We had already pointed out to the Secretary, Chiefs of Staff Committee, that the Government might wish observers to be present despite the fact the U.S. request contained no invitation with respect to Canadian observers.).

(d) Copies of all reports resulting from the exercises should be provided to the Canadian Government by the U.S.N. and would be of considerable interest to Mines and Resources.

5. It would seem difficult to turn down the U.S. request and the expedition will doubtless produce data of interest to both countries. If it is decided to recommend its authorization to the Cabinet Defence Committee, authorization should presumably be recommended subject to the conditions suggested regarding game, non-interference with Eskimos, presence of two or three Canadian observers, provision of reports by the U.S.N. and, on the understanding that if any U.S. civilian scientists or explorers are to accompany the Edisto, application will be made on their behalf through diplomatic channels for N.W.T.<sup>19</sup> licenses in the usual way.

6. At the June 1 meeting of the Advisory Committee on Northern Development Mr. Pearson suggested that future authorizations of U.S. activities in Canada should be as specific as possible so as to avoid controversy as to what has and has not been authorized. In the circumstances, before the U.S. request goes to Cabinet Defence Committee it might be advisable if we requested Washington to clarify projects (c), (e) and (g) listed in paragraph No. 1 above. We should doubtless know whether (c) will include firing practice, other use of munitions, or other military exercises on land or at sea; what aircraft are involved in item (e); and what additional investigations and services are contemplated in item (g).

<sup>19</sup> North West Territories.

G.G. C[REAN]

944.

DEA/17-E (S)

Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion du Comité des chefs d'état-major

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Chiefs of Staff Committee

SECRET

[Ottawa], December 7, 1948

. . .

ACTIVITIES IN CANADIAN ARCTIC WATERS; U.S. NAVY ICEBREAKER
U.S.S. EDISTO

3. The Committee had before them a memorandum from the Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs enclosing a set of papers outlining the proposed activities of the U.S.S. Edisto in Canadian Arctic waters during the months of January and February, 1949.

(Memorandum of November 22nd, 1948, from the Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs — CSC 5-1-7 of November 27th, 1948)†

4. The Chief of the Naval Staff observed that the United States should be encouraged to carry out similar cruises in northern waters but it was essential that they carry Canadian observers and forward copies of all reports to the relevant Canadian authorities. More information was also desirable on the scope of the proposed scientific projects.

5. The Chief of the General Staff recommended that the Committee should now decide the priorities to be allotted Canadian observers so that, if such allotments were limited in number, the selection of observers could be made without further reference to the Committee.

6. Mr. Reid considered that, in future, proposals for the movements of U.S. ships in Canadian waters should be as specific as possible in order to avoid any possible misunderstandings. In this particular case, more information should be secured regarding the proposals to "train personnel and test equipment and material in winter Arctic conditions", to "observe geographical, navigation and aviation conditions" and to "conduct, as practicable, such other scientific investigations and services as desired by other government agencies."

7. It was agreed that:

- (a) the proposed cruise of the U.S.S. Edisto be approved in principle;
- (b) the Department of External Affairs would reply to Mr. Magann's letter;
- (c) such a reply would include the following points;
  - (i) landings on the islands will probably prove difficult and, if effected, there should be no taking of game or interference with the Eskimos;

- (ii) the Canadian Government considers it highly desirable that Canadian observers be included in the personnel taking part in the cruise;
- (iii) copies of all reports resulting from the exercises should be forwarded to the Canadian Government by the U.S. Navy;
- (d) the priority of allocation of Canadian observers should be as follows:
  - (i) Royal Canadian Navy.
  - (ii) Royal Canadian Air Force.
  - (iii) Department of Mines and Resources (Geographical Bureau).
  - (iv) Department of Transport.

SECTION D

BRISE-GLACE CANADIEN
CANADIAN ICEBREAKER

945.

PCO/Vol. 66

*Note du ministre de la Défense nationale
pour le Comité de la défense du Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Minister of National Defence
to Cabinet Defence Committee*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], February 20, 1948

PROVISION OF ICE-BREAKERS

At the 40th meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee (8th January, 1948) the question was raised of Naval participation in Arctic activities in relation to North American security, and specifically to ensure a greater measure of Canadian participation in the development of northern projects as might be approved as a result of the Canada-United States Basic Security Plan. The proposal that the Royal Canadian Navy should operate one or more ships capable of being used as ice-breakers was favourably received.

At the present time the Fleet does not include any ice-breakers or ships strengthened for ice navigation. The Department of Transport operates only four vessels which were designed primarily as ice-breakers. Of these only one, the N.B. McLean, can be classified as a seagoing ice-breaker and even this vessel has not the strength or endurance for other than the most limited Arctic operation.

The Naval Staff, after careful consideration, discussed the problem informally with representatives of the Department of Mines and Resources and Department of Transport. The officers of these Departments agree that there is a requirement for ice-breakers expressly designed for the special conditions of Arctic operation and for use in connection with our growing commitments in that area.

Consideration has been given to the characteristics and relative merits of the different types of ice-breaker — Russian and United States. It is believed that the United States Edisto class which incorporates experience gained with the successful North Wind class, represents the culmination of ice-breaker design to date and that plans for a Canadian ice-breaker should be based on that vessel. Construction could be undertaken in a Canadian shipyard experienced in such work and it is tentatively estimated that such a ship would take about two years to build at a cost of approximately $6,000,000.

The major peacetime use of an ice-breaker would be to secure greater Canadian participation in the development of northern projects. At present it is necessary to rely upon United States assistance for all supply arrangements for these installations.

In war, the scale and tempo of such activities would be greatly increased and, in addition, Canada-U.S. Defence planning envisages a requirement for Arctic amphibious operations entailing the use of Canadian Naval task forces for which ice-breakers will be essential.

There are no provisions in existing estimates for 1948-49 for the planning or building of this vessel and, in addition, personnel for the ship's complement would have to be over and above the authorized Naval ceiling.

If this proposal is acceptable, it is recommended that the necessary steps should now be taken to start construction on an ice-breaker to meet the requirements as set out in Appendix "A" hereto.<sup>20</sup>

APPENDIX "A"

STAFF REQUIREMENTS FOR AN ICE-BREAKER

1. Functions

(a) To force a passage through the ice for any amphibious operation in the Arctic.

(b) To force passage through the ice for Supply Ships required to replenish or install Government operated stations in the Arctic, i.e. Weather, Loran, Air Stations, etc.

(c) Familiarization of Naval Personnel with Arctic conditions.

2. Secondary Functions

(a) To clear passage into Naval Operational Ports as required.

(b) Search and rescue work in the Arctic.

3. General Equipment

The ship to carry equipment standardized with U.S.N. Ice-breakers as far as possible.

4. Speed

(a) To be not less than 16 knots, clean bottom in the deep condition.

(b) To have Diesel Electric propulsion.

<sup>20</sup> La recommandation fut approuvée par le Comité de la défense du Cabinet (CDC) le 3 mars et par le Cabinet le 11 mars.

The recommendation was approved by CDC on March 3 and by Cabinet on March 11.

5. Endurance

To be capable of 10,000 miles at full speed. Arrangements to be made for the maximum additional fuel to be carried within the constructional limits imposed by the remaining Staff requirements.

6. Size

- (a) The draught not to exceed 29 feet fully loaded.
- (b) The beam to be 60–65 feet.

7. Armament

The maximum number of multi-barrelled close range equipments to be carried. The outfit of ammunition to be double that allowed to similar weapons in a Destroyer.

8. Radar

To carry a pilotage radar set.

9. Communications<sup>21</sup>

- (a) LF
- (b) HF
- (c) VHF, for short range intercom with ships and aircraft.
- (d) MFDF. No beacons are available north of Belle Isle.
- (e) HFDF and/or UHFDF for SAR duties.
- (f) Space allocation for a "Y" office.
- (g) Radio homing aid for aircraft.

10. Provisions

The ship to carry 3 months' fresh provisions and 6 months' dry provisions.

11. Special Features

- (a) Bow propeller not required.
- (b) To be capable of carrying an Aircraft.
- (c) To be fitted with heeling and trimming tanks which are capable of carrying oil fuel.
- (d) To be capable of towing a ship hauled close up astern.

12. Boats

- (a) To carry two power boats of strong construction suitable for transporting stores and for beach landings.
- (b) To carry two life boats and necessary life rafts.

13. Miscellaneous

To have the following:

- (a) Degaussing equipment.

<sup>21</sup> Les abréviations dans cette section représentent les termes suivants :

The abbreviations in this section stand for:

low frequency; high frequency; very high frequency; medium/high/ultra high/ frequency direction finder; search and rescue; wireless

- (b) Standard and LF Loran equipment.
- (c) Gyro compass.
- (d) Echo sounder and Kelvin sounder.
- (e) Chernikeef type log for use in open water.

SECTION E

AIDES À LA NAVIGATION PAR RADIO EN ONDES KILOMÉTRIQUES
DE LONGUE PORTÉE (L.F. LORAN)
LOW FREQUENCY LONG RANGE RADIO NAVIGATION AIDS (L.F. LORAN)

946.

W.L.M.K./J4/Vol. 318

Extrait du journal de la Commission permanente canado-américaine de défense

Extract from Journal of Permanent Joint Board on Defence

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], February 19-20, 1948

* * *

31. Low Frequency Loran: Northeastern Chain. With reference to Paragraph No. 24 of the Board's meeting of November 20-21, 1947, the U.S. Air member reported concerning the modifications which the USAF had decided were required in the establishment of the northeastern chain of Low Frequency Loran stations. It will be recalled that the original plan was for one station on the eastern shore of Baffin Land, one on the western shore of Greenland, and one on the eastern shore of Greenland. It was pointed out that in view of the great difficulty at the present time of obtaining the approval of the Danish Government for the establishment of the stations in Greenland, if the chain is to be established it would have to be established in Canada. The Chairman of the U.S. Section and the Secretary of the U.S. Section corroborated the U.S. Air member's<sup>22</sup> understanding that it was not anticipated that the Danish Government could be persuaded during the next several years to agree to the establishment of Low Frequency Loran stations in Greenland.

General O'Donnell explained that a northeastern chain in Canada might be operated by using the easternmost station of the western chain as the westernmost station of the eastern chain, thus reducing the total number of stations involved. The chain previously discussed involved a station in Canada, the survey for the western end of which had been approved by the Canadian Government. In view of the change now made necessary, General O'Donnell expressed the hope that the question might now be reviewed by the appropriate Canadian authorities with a view to giving approval for the location and establishment of the northeastern chain in Canada as outlined above. The Canadian Air member said that a study of this question was now being made and that when this study is completed and the military requirements of LF Loran known, a decision on the question raised by General O'Donnell would no doubt be made.

<sup>22</sup> Dean Acheson était président, A.B. Foster, secrétaire et le major-général E. O'Donnell représentant de l'armée de l'air, Commission permanente canado-américaine de défense (CPCAD).

Dean Acheson was Chairman, A.B. Foster was Secretary and Maj-Gen E. O'Donnell was Air Member, US Section, PJBD.

The U.S. Air member then referred to the second serious difficulty which had caused modification of the original plans: The Atlantic City agreements of 1947, agreed to (but not yet ratified) by both Canada and the U.S., had been construed as making unavailable 180 kcs. frequency in new Lf Loran stations and as imposing an obligation to convert existing stations to 90-110 kcs. frequency. He added that the U.S. Air Force therefore planned to establish the modified northeastern chain on the basis of the frequency agreed to at Atlantic City, 90-110 kcs. No equipment exists for this frequency, however, and it would be perhaps three years until it could be constructed and operational. Moreover, the use of this different frequency would mean that planes would have to be equipped with new type receivers. Again, whereas towers approximately 600 feet high are used in the LF Loran operations at 180 kcs., towers of approximately twice this height would be required for the frequency of 90-110 kcs. He noted that the additional equipment for the planes and the construction and installation of the 1200 foot towers would involve greatly increased costs and extraordinary difficulty in construction. Nevertheless, the USAF was at the moment in the process of placing contracts for construction of new equipment for the 90-110 kcs. frequency.

The Chairman of the Canadian Section expressed his misgivings over the modifications which it was suggested should be made in the equipment and towers, and inquired concerning the details of the commitments made at Atlantic City and the present status and future implications of these commitments. He suggested the possibility that the Canadian and U.S. delegations at Atlantic City might in good faith, but without fully appreciating the military necessity of LF Loran on the 180 kcs. frequency as presently planned, have made commitments involving the two Governments in great difficulty and expense. The Chairman of the U.S. Section stated that he shared these misgivings.

At the request of the Chairman of the U.S. Section, Mr. John S. Cross, Assistant Chief, Telecommunications Division, Department of State, kindly visited Patuxent<sup>23</sup> and explained to the Board in detail the background of the problem from the international and civil point of view and narrated the course of events at Atlantic City which resulted in international agreement for the band 90-110 kcs. for use by a pulse-type radio navigation aid. (A summary of Mr. Cross' remarks is attached hereto as Appendix No. 5.)†

The Board, deeply concerned by the effect of the Atlantic City commitments on the LF Loran programme in the north, recommended that the military Loran committees of each country should as soon as possible determine the requirements, from the military point of view, of LF Loran in the north and should assess the effect of the Atlantic City commitments on present plans and operations. The Board further recommended that if the military Loran committees should find that efforts should be made to modify the commitments made by the two Governments at Atlantic City, the matter should be put before the highest telecommunications authorities in the two Governments for their consideration. The Board regards this as a matter of urgency and requested a full report to be made at its next meeting by the Air members.

<sup>23</sup> La réunion de la Commission permanente canado-américaine de défense (CPCAD) eut lieu au centre d'essai aéronaval de Patuxent.

The PJBD meeting was held at Patuxent Naval Air Test Centre.

...

947.

W.L.M.K./J4/Vol. 318

Extrait du journal de la Commission permanente canado-américaine de défense
Extract from Journal of Permanent Joint Board on Defence

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], June 3-4, 1948

...

15. Low Frequency Loran: Northeastern Section Low Frequency Loran Chain. With reference to Paragraph No. 31 of the Journal of the Board's meeting of February 19-20, 1948, the Canadian and U.S. Air Force members reported to the Board concerning the developments of the last several months with respect to the Northeastern Section of the Low Frequency Loran Chain of the Low Frequency Loran Programme. Both the RCAF and the USAF have determined that there exists a continuing requirement for a long range air navigation system which will provide accurate and dependable navigation fixes in the northern areas of Canada, Alaska and Greenland. The Air Navigation Aids Subcommittee of the Military Cooperation Committee (to which has been transferred the planning responsibility of the dissolved Combined Low Frequency Loran Committee) has determined, from the military point of view, the requirement of LF Loran for this purpose.

Although the effect of the commitments made at the Atlantic City Conference in 1947 have not been finally determined, it is presently considered that, inasmuch as the "Beetle Chain" of six stations as originally projected was commenced before the Atlantic City Conference, the completion of the three northeastern stations on the basis of 180 kcs operation is fully justified. Such operation will be continued on a basis of non-interference with European stations until the time when 100 kcs equipment is developed, installed and placed in operation.

The U.S. Air Force member stated that USAF siting parties are now engaged in determining the best sites for the three northeastern stations and are including in their survey an examination of the USAF base at Bluie West 8, Greenland. The Secretary of the U.S. Section said that from the diplomatic point of view it was reasonable to hope that the Danish Government might be persuaded to agree to the establishment of the station on the existing USAF base at Bluie West 8, while the State Department considered that there would be great difficulty in gaining Danish agreement to stations at any other point in Greenland.

...

948.

DEA/5138-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-2273

Ottawa, September 28, 1948

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

PART I

Following for Magann from Johnson, Begins: Reference WA-2564 of September 25.† Below is information required for Thursday's meeting on L.F. Loran.

After the war, Cabinet agreed to temporary establishment of an experimental chain of stations in Alberta and Saskatchewan equipped with L.F. Loran (Low Frequency Long Range Radio Navigation Aids). This chain still operates but appears likely to close down shortly as half of a northern chain has now been established. Establishment of the northern chain, to consist of one station in Alaska, three in Canada and two in Greenland was, as you know, approved by Cabinet early in 1947, the U.S. to supply the necessary towers and Loran sets. In the Spring of 1947 work commenced on the stations at (a) Pt. Barrow, Alaska, (b) Kittigazuit (near Aklavik), N.W.T., and (c) Cambridge Bay, Victoria Island, N.W.T. These (and monitor stations at (a) Barter Island, Alaska, and (b) Sawmill Bay, Great Bear Lake), were subsequently brought into full operation.

2. Action on the eastern portion of the new chain (one station in Canada and two in Greenland), has been delayed pending clarification of the U.S. position in Greenland and resolution of the problem of frequencies. Briefly this problem is that, while all the stations in the training chain and the western portion of the northern chain are operating on 180 kcs and 100 kc. equipment will not be available until 1953-55, 180 kcs is in the middle of the band allocated to European stations and the U.S. and Canada incurred at least a moral obligation at the Atlantic City Conference last autumn to operate any new stations only on a frequency of from 90 to 100 kcs (usually referred to as 100 kcs.)

3. This Spring Chiefs of Staff Committee considered recommendations from the Canada-U.S. Combined L.F. Loran Committee that the need for the northeastern stations be confirmed; that, owing to the U.S. position in Greenland, the three eastern stations be located in Canada; and that, as 100 kc equipment is not yet available, they be operated temporarily on 180 kcs. The Committee decided that the need for the northeastern stations should be reviewed by the Canada-U.S. M.C.C.<sup>24</sup> Subcommittee on Air Navigation Aids, which should be informed of the opinion that the door to Greenland was perhaps not entirely shut; and that External should consult State on the possibility of using 180 kcs in the northeast.

<sup>24</sup> Le Comité de coopération militaire./Military Co-operation Committee.

4. The Sub-Committee has not yet reported back on the question of need, although we understand that the Air Forces of both countries agree that the need exists and that they favour operation on a frequency of 180 kcs in the northeast, if possible, until 100 kc equipment is available.

5. You will recall that it was not possible for the Embassy to obtain State's views for the Chiefs as [J.S.] Cross and others were away. At an informal meeting here, on August 31, Cross indicated that, if he had anything to do about it, the State Department's view would be that the western stations (which were established before Atlantic City), could remain in operation until any complaint of interference is received from abroad but that, owing to the developments at Atlantic City (see below), no 180 kc stations should be established in the northeast. As it was therefore clear that the State and U.S.A.F. views were in conflict, he undertook to endeavour to have the matter reviewed by a high policy Committee, the Telecommunications Coordinating Committee, and their decision reported to your office for transmission to the Canadian Chiefs.

6. Since then, however, Ankenbrandt<sup>25</sup> (see EX-2245, September 24)† has asked for a State-U.S.A.F.-R.C.A.F.-External meeting to discuss the frequency question and also possible sites for the northeastern stations which were surveyed by a Canada-U.S. team this summer. Hutton<sup>26</sup> was at first reluctant to take the time to attend, feeling that the first requirement is a united U.S. Government view on the matter. Ankenbrandt, however, felt that a meeting would serve that end.

PART II

7. The "treaty position" seems to be as follows:

(a) Until January 1, 1949, both countries are governed by the International Telecommunication Convention (Madrid, 1937) and the Radio-communication Regulations (Cairo, 1938). There is no provision in these Regulations for L.F. Loran because it was not developed until the war. We are therefore operating the existing stations under Article 39 of the Madrid Convention which reads:

Installations for National Defence

"1. The Contracting Governments reserve their entire liberty . . . especially with regard to military stations of the land, sea or air forces.

2. (1) Nevertheless, these installations and stations must, so far as possible, . . . observe the provisions of the regulations regarding the types of waves and the frequencies to be used, according to the class of service which such stations perform." Thus, it appears that we are justified in operating these military stations and that we are only required to ensure, so far as possible, that they do not interfere with stations abroad.

(b) Both Canada and the U.S. will have completed the formalities of ratification of the International Telecommunication Convention, signed at Atlantic City on

<sup>25</sup> Le major-général F.L. Ankenbrandt, directeur des communications, USAF.
Maj.-Gen. F.L. Ankenbrandt, Director of Communications, USAF.

<sup>26</sup> Le lieutenant-colonel E.A.D. Hutton, directeur des transmissions, RCAF.
Wing Commander E.A.D. Hutton, Director of Signals, RCAF.

October 2, 1947, by January 1, 1949, when the new Convention (replacing Madrid) will go into force in respect of our two countries at least. The new Convention contains a similar military provision — Art. 47 — which appears to give us exactly the same sort of “out” for operating military stations on a frequency of 180 kcs. It reads as follows:

Installations for National Defence Services

“1. Members and Associate Members retain their entire freedom with regard to military radio installations of their army, naval and air forces.

2. Nevertheless, these installations must, so far as possible, observe regulatory provisions relative to . . . the measures to be taken to prevent harmful interference, and the provisions of the Regulations concerning the types of emission and the frequencies to be used, according to the nature of the service performed by such installations.”

(c) From the strict legal point of view, therefore, we seem to be in a fairly strong position, prior to and after January 1, to operate 180 kc stations. The main difficulty is that, at Atlantic City, faced with the fact that 180 kcs was in the middle of the European broadcasting band of about 125 to 300 kcs, the U.S. delegation led a move for (1) allocation on a world-wide basis of a frequency for long distance radionavigation aids and for (2) a frequency below the European band. As it only induced the Europeans to agree to the allocation of 90 to 110 kcs for such Services after considerable debate, Cross now feels strongly that the U.S. would be in a very poor moral position in agreeing to temporary establishment of the northeastern stations on 180 kcs. As the Canadian delegation supported the U.S. in this matter, Canada would seem to be in much the same moral position.

At the same time, however, I should point out that the Allocation Table that is included as item No. 109 in the Atlantic City Regulations and shows 90 to 100 kcs as allocated to long distance radionavigation systems, will not come into effect until about mid-1951 before which time the Provisional Frequency Board and an Administrative Conference are not expected to have completed further examination of the allocation of a number of frequencies for various types of services and for various countries. This fact does not, of course, materially improve our moral position, nor does the fact that, as yet, there are apparently only 2 stations in Europe on 180 kcs and they are so far away that our stations would be unlikely to interfere with them.

8. Clearly, therefore, the problem is one of judgement as to whether military necessity or our moral position is going to be the more important factor to consider during the next few years while awaiting 100 kc equipment. If the U.S. take the view that the latter is the more important, obviously the northeastern stations will not be built for some time as they have the towers and sets. If they consider military necessity the paramount factor, I think it is a reasonable assumption that our Chiefs and Cabinet Defence Committee would agree to temporary establishment of the northeastern stations on 180 kcs, subject to non-interference. They would probably also consider any complaint of interference in the light of the world situation at the time it was made. You can express these opinions, making it clear that Chiefs have not reached any decision on the matter and that it is not possible to anticipate definately what Cabinet Defence Committee's reaction would be. You might add that ultimately, Cabinet Committee will, of course, have to approve both establishment of any new stations required in Canadian territory and what frequency it is prepared to allocate to them. You could also press for an early formal indication of the U.S. Government's view on the matter as, if any 180 kc stations are to be set up, planning of shipments will probably have to begin shortly.

9. I will not go into detail on the pros and cons of the sites surveyed this summer since, this matter is quite secondary to the frequency question. About a dozen possible sites were examined in the Baffin-Ungava region and Hutton can show you where they are. The only point I need mention is that the survey party recommends location of one station at the U.S. base, Blue West 8, near Christianshaab in Greenland. If the frequency question is ever settled favourably, it will, of course, be up to the U.S. to endeavour to obtain Danish consent to use of B.W. 8. The point about the towers is simply that 180 kc stations, which use 625-foot towers, are effective 700 miles apart: whereas 100 kc stations, which would have 1200-foot towers can be 1000 miles apart. A decision on frequencies would therefore influence the locations of the stations and their total number. Ends.

949.

DEA/5138-40

Extrait de projet d'une note de l'ambassade aux États-Unis<sup>27</sup>

Extract from Draft Memorandum by Embassy in United States<sup>27</sup>

SECRET

[Washington], October 1, 1948

MEETING ON LF LORAN, SEPTEMBER 30, 1948

General Ankenbrandt opened the meeting by outlining the U.S. position that it is absolutely necessary for a change from 180 kc to 100 kc operation of the LF Loran system as soon as possible, in accordance with the Atlantic City allocations. Mr. Cross verified this view and gave some of the background of the Atlantic City agreements on the subject of Loran frequencies. He indicated that the U.S. Government, as a signatory power at the Atlantic City conference, was morally committed to the frequency allocation tables laid down at Atlantic City. General Ankenbrandt then pointed out that because of the present international situation, the USAF did not feel justified in waiting until 100 kc Loran equipment was available for installation before completing the Eastern half of the present LF chain. Accordingly, the USAF recommends the completion of the chain without delay, using 180 kc Loran equipment at the selected sites, and converting to 100 kc operation as soon as possible when that equipment is available. The antenna towers to be installed at the new sites would be of sufficient height to provide operation on 100 kc as well as 180 kc.

<sup>27</sup> Inclue avec la Note N° 313 du 12 octobre (chargé d'affaires des États Unis au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures). Cette note aussi bien que la réponse (N° 302 du 19 octobre) soulignait le point développé dans le dernier paragraphe de ce document.

Enclosed with Note No. 313 of October 12 (Chargé d'Affaires of United States to Secretary of State for External Affairs). Both that note and the reply (No. 302, October 19) emphasized the point made in the final paragraph of the memorandum.

Upon the recommendation of Mr. Cross and General Ankenbrandt, and with the approval of the Canadian representatives,<sup>28</sup> it was agreed that the operation of the 180 kc equipment would be limited to testing at minimum power and that the details, including scope, extent and power, of the 180 kc testing program for the Eastern half of the chain would be deferred until such time as the equipment is in place and ready for test. At that time, a mutually agreed test program would be conducted.

General Ankenbrandt and Major Lafrenz<sup>29</sup> then outlined the status of 100 kc equipment. Briefly, the status is that a 2.2 million dollar contract was let in June 1948 for the procurement of Loran equipment itself. In addition, 1.3 million has been let with various concerns for auxiliary equipment such as masts, antennas, etc. This makes a total of 3.5 million dollars which has been allocated by the U.S. for the 100 kc Loran program. USAF laboratories estimate that June 1950 is a delivery date which has reasonable expectancy of being met. Since it was agreed that it would be desirable to test this 100 kc equipment prior to its installation, it would appear that installation during calendar year 1951 is probable.

The group then discussed the details of installations to complete the Eastern half of the LF Loran chain. It was recommended that this chain consist of three stations, with a double master located at Finnie Bay and slaves located at BW-8 and Resolute Bay. In addition, the RCAF may require a fourth station at Great Whale River for operation on 180 kc until such time as the Eastern section of the chain is converted to 100 kc equipment. It was the opinion of Mr. [John O.] Bell of the U.S. Department of State that the political situation at this time would not permit the installation of Loran station at BW-8. Accordingly, installation of this station will be deferred until such time as the political situation will permit such an installation to be made.

It was emphasized by Mr. Magann of the Canadian Embassy and by the U.S. representatives that all decisions reached at this conference were tentative and, of course, subject to further consideration at higher governmental levels.

<sup>28</sup> G.L. Magann; Air Commodore W.A. Orr; Wing Commander E.A.D. Hutton; Wing Commander G.M. Fawcett (Canadian Joint Staff).

<sup>29</sup> Le major W.A. Lafrenz, Direction des communications, USAF.
Major W.A. Lafrenz, Directorate of Communications, USAF.

SECTION F

SURVOLS AMÉRICAINS ET AIDES À LA NAVIGATION AÉRIENNE
DANS L'ARCTIQUE CANADIEN
AMERICAN OVERFLIGHTS AND AIDS TO AIR NAVIGATION IN CANADIAN ARCTIC

950.

DEA/50220-40

*Note du Comité des chefs d'état-major
pour le Comité de la défense du Cabinet*

Memorandum from Chiefs of Staff Committee to Cabinet Defence Committee

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], February 7, 1948

TRAINING FLIGHTS IN POLAR NAVIGATION OVER CANADIAN ARCHIPELAGO

Certain flights are made by the United States Air Force over the Canadian Archipelago for navigational training and indoctrination in polar flying. This work has been combined under the project known as Polaris, which is the current authority for the United States Air Force to overfly Canadian territory. This project is nearing completion and flights associated with it will be of decreasing frequency. In order to obtain the necessary training, the United States Air Force has requested that they be authorized to clear aircraft from Alaskan bases for flights over the Canadian Archipelago at an average estimated at two flights a week. These flights are for the express purpose of:

- (a) navigational training;
- (b) operational experience in the Arctic;
- (c) determine navigational difficulties and procedures for overcoming same;
- (d) further investigate the reliability of communications;
- (e) further our knowledge of polar air masses; and
- (f) continue study of air mass circulation in polar regions.

2. The ultimate objective of the U.S.A.F. Training Programme is to train the maximum number of air crews in conditions to be encountered while flying in the Arctic areas. To achieve this training, units of the U.S.A.F. are deployed to Alaska on temporary duty for periods varying in duration from two weeks to six months throughout the year. One of the primary differences between high latitude flying and flying in the tropical and temperate zones is the method of air navigation in the area where the effects of magnetic variation are most pronounced. This area, of course, centres over the Canadian Archipelago.

3. It is understood from United States sources that the U.S.A.F. would be most happy to have Canadian observers accompany any or all such flights over Canadian territory and that photographs and other data collected as a result of these flights would be available to Canada.

4. The principle of reciprocal flights over each other's territory has been recognized by the governments of both countries in the public announcements of the Prime Minister and the President, based on the Permanent Joint Board on Defence recommendation of November 20th, 1946. We feel, however, after consultation with the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Secretary to the Cabinet, that the proposal to carry out these particular flights on a regular basis should be reported to the Canadian Government.

5. We therefore recommend that authorization for these flights be given to the Armed Forces of the United States with the proviso that Canada reserves the right to include its observers on any or all flights that cross Canadian territory and will require duplicate negatives of all photographs taken and copies of other data that may be collected as a result of such flights.<sup>30</sup>

O.M. SOLANDT

Chairman, Defence Research Board

VICE-ADMIRAL H.T.W. GRANT

Chief of the Naval Staff

AIR MARSHAL W.A. CURTIS

Chief of the Air Staff

LIEUT.-GENERAL C. FOULKES

Chief of the General Staff, Chairman

951.

DEA/50220-40

Représentant de l'armée de l'air, état-major interarmes canadien, au chef d'état-major de l'armée de l'air

Air Member, Canadian Joint Staff, to Chief of Air Staff

TOP SECRET

Washington, June 24, 1948

REQUEST FOR USAF AERIAL OPERATIONS

ARCTIC ARCHIPELAGO

The Operations branch, Headquarters United States Air Force, have requested that authority be given for the USAF to operate a B.29 aircraft out of Resolute Bay, Cornwallis Island, during October and November, 1948, for the purpose of carrying out reconnaissance duties in the Arctic archipelago. In all probability, to assist the B.29 in carrying out this operation, a C.54 aircraft will also have to be provided to supply ground crew and equipment required for the operation.

2. The reason for the above request is that USAF Intelligence indicate that the USSR is operating a weather station in Peary Land at the northern end of Greenland and the USAF are very anxious to confirm and ascertain its exact location. In order to do this, they are proposing to use a B.29 to monitor this station, which will necessitate the aircraft being in the area for five or six hours at a stretch. Resolute Bay is considered by the USAF as the most logical strip from which to operate in preference to the bases the USAF operate in Greenland. The B.29, fully equipped for this purpose, will weigh approximately 143,000 lbs. The USAF are delaying this operation until the airstrip at Resolute Bay is frozen and able to sustain the weight of this aircraft. It is anticipated that the operation might last for a period of thirty days and, in all probability, to fit in with weather conditions at Resolute, will involve part of October and the early part of November.

<sup>30</sup> Approuvée par le CDC le 3 mars.
Approved by CDC on March 3.

3. It would be appreciated if an early decision by the Canadian Government could be made on this request and the USAF advised accordingly.<sup>31</sup> It is assumed that if authority is granted for the operation the only requirement by the USAF would be to notify AOC, NWAC,<sup>32</sup> at take-off and that NWAC would, in turn, notify Department of Transport air traffic control.

R.C. GORDON

952.

PCO/Vol. 60

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion
du Comité de la défense du Cabinet*

*Extract from Minutes of Meeting
of Cabinet Defence Committee*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], July 29, 1948

...

IV. AIR FORCE; U.S.A.F. RADIO AIDS TO AIR NAVIGATION IN CANADIAN TERRITORY

12. The Chief of the Air Staff reported that the increased operations of U.S. military aircraft in the Canadian Arctic resulted in numerous requests being received from the U.S. Air Force for additional navigational aids. A number of these requests resulted from the difference in U.S. and Canadian navigational techniques, and they frequently sought permission to install special navigational aid equipment to supplement that employed here. These additional facilities were of some benefit to R.C.A.F. and civil aircraft, and their usefulness would tend to be greater in the future.

It was the practice to examine such requests in conjunction with the Department of Transport. When installations were made, they were normally operated by Canadians. To develop an agreed procedure for dealing with these matters, it was recommended that:

<sup>31</sup> Gordon fournit une copie de cette lettre à l'intention de Wrong; il informa Wrong le 9 juillet que Gordon provided a copy of this letter for Wrong; he informed Wrong on July 9 that Air Marshal Curtis has advised that the USAF request has been granted unofficially and that the attachment [Document 950] is not to be considered in an official category.

<sup>32</sup> Le Commandant des forces aériennes, Région du Nord Ouest.

Air Officer Commanding, North West Air Command.

(a) Wherever navigational facilities were required in conjunction with projects already approved, such installations be permitted on the basis governing the whole project without the necessity of seeking further governmental authority. This would be dealt with on a service-to-service basis.

(b) Where the navigational aid requested was related to a new project, it would be dealt with on the government-to-government level, between the Department of External Affairs and the U.S. Department of State.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(Chief of the Air Staff's memorandum, 30th June, 1948 — Cabinet Document D185).†

13. The Committee, after discussion, approved the policy proposed by the Chief of the Air Staff on the understanding that the installation of any such facilities would have the concurrence of the Department of Transport and, if they were manned temporarily by U.S. personnel, they would be under Canadian control.

...

SECTION G

ZONE NORD D'ENTRAÎNEMENT AMPHIBIE NORTHERN AMPHIBIOUS TRAINING AREA

953.

DEA/703-AS-40

Note du chef de la Direction de l'Amérique et de l'Extrême Orient pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Head, American and Far Eastern Division to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], April 14, 1948

At a meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee to be held tomorrow the Secretary intends to make a brief report regarding the proposal of the U.S. Government to conduct amphibious training exercises in Newfoundland.<sup>33</sup>

2. I thought it would be useful for you to have the following background information:

(a) This question was first raised at a meeting of the P.J.B.D. in Dayton, Ohio, on May 21, 1947. The Board expressed the view that combined amphibious training exercises would be of great value and that as a first step in preparing for them, the two naval services should study the problem of locating the most suitable area.

(b) At the meeting of the Board in Toronto on November 20, 1947, the Canadian Naval Member reported that the two naval services had not succeeded in agreeing upon a suitable area. It was then recommended that an ad hoc committee should be set up consisting of representatives from the Canadian services, External Affairs and from the U.S. Navy.

<sup>33</sup> Le rapport fut fait par Pearson.

The report was made by Pearson.

(c) This ad hoc committee met in Ottawa and discussed three possible areas within Canadian territory: one near Churchill, one on the north shore of the St. Lawrence River, and the other on the south east shore of Anticosti Island. For various reasons none of these localities was entirely suitable. The U.S. Naval Member indicated that an area on the coast of Labrador would appear to be the most satisfactory. The Canadian representative at the meeting did not feel that they were in a position to discuss possible sites for Canadian participation in joint exercises in Newfoundland territory. At the same time they observed that the U.S. authorities were free to take up the matter with the Newfoundland Government if they wished to do so.

(d) The views of the ad hoc committee were reported to the meeting of the P.J.B.D. held on February 19. The U.S. Naval Member said he appreciated the Canadian position and that it would be taken into account when the matter was given further consideration by the U.S. authorities. The U.S. Naval Member did, however, undertake to keep the Canadian authorities informed.

(e) In fulfilment of this undertaking to keep us informed, Mr. Foster on March 25 wrote to me enclosing a copy of an instruction which had been sent to the U.S. Consul General at St. John's, Newfoundland. I attach a copy of the instruction.† It will be seen that the U.S. Consul General is to ask Newfoundland for permission to conduct a limited hydrographic and topographic survey of the coastal area of Labrador from Sandwich Bay to Brig Harbour Island with a view to selecting a suitable area for amphibious training. The Consul General is also to ask for permission to conduct amphibious training exercises in the area selected. The exercises which would probably be held in 1949 would involve the landing of troops and their maintenance ashore for periods up to a month, the use of artillery and the support of naval gun fire and air bombardment. The instruction to the Consul General specifically says, "The Canadian Government will not participate in the proposed exercises and the officer-in-charge may so inform the Newfoundland authorities if he considers it appropriate to do so."

3. I do not think that we should question the action which the U.S. is taking. As appears from the foregoing, the U.S. were anxious that we should cooperate with them in selecting an amphibious training area in Labrador. We refused to do this on political grounds and in effect said it would be in order for them to make their arrangements with Newfoundland.

4. When the political situation in Newfoundland clears we then might consider whether we should approach the U.S. and Newfoundland with a view to joining with the U.S. in the selection of an appropriate area and in the exercises themselves.

5. I have discussed this question with the British Commonwealth Division. They see no objection but suggest that the Department of National Defence might be interested in the following two or three points:

(a) The area in which the proposed exercises would take place is a section of the Labrador coast between Brig Harbour Island and Sandwich Bay. This section traverses the entrance to Hamilton Inlet. As the area is to be investigated with a view to establishing a cold weather amphibious training area, the question of possible interference with navigation in the approaches to Goose Bay probably does not arise. Perhaps, however, National Defence might wish to make sure of this point.

(b) The Department of National Defence might also wish to consider whether there was any objection to the approaches to Goose Bay being turned into an amphibious training area and of the likelihood of the terrain being severely damaged.

(c) That the Canadian Government does not maintain any installations in the area likely to be selected.

D.M. JOHNSON

2<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 2

AUTRES QUESTIONS MILITAIRES
OTHER DEFENCE ISSUES

SECTION A

POLITIQUE RELATIVE À LA DÉFENSE COMMUNE DU CANADA
ET DES ÉTATS-UNIS ET PLAN CENTRAL DE SÉCURITÉ POLICY ON CANADIAN-AMERICAN JOINT DEFENCE AND BASIC SECURITY PLAN

954.

DEA/226 (S)

Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion du Comité des chefs d'état-major et le ministre de la Défense nationale

*Extract from Minutes of Meeting
of Chiefs of Staff Committee and Minister of National Defence*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], January 22, 1948

CANADA—U.S. JOINT DEFENCE ARRANGEMENTS

1. The Minister of National Defence stated that, during his recent visit to Washington, in discussion with Mr. Forrestal, Mr. Symington and others, he had discovered that there was very little real understanding in the United States of the respective responsibilities in the formulation of defence policy of the various Canadian agencies; in fact, no two people in Washington seemed to have the same concept of the role and function of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. He had therefore prepared, in memorandum form, a review of the roles and responsibilities of the Canadian agencies concerned, and felt that some statement of the Canadian position along these lines should be forwarded to the responsible U.S. authorities to eliminate any possible misunderstanding. At the same time, it would be desirable to carefully review the roles presently assigned to the Canadian agencies to ensure that these were in fact clear-cut and suitable. A third point which should be given serious thought at this time was the extent to which Canada was being involved with the United States in joint defence planning. Despite conditions already placed on acceptance of these plans to date, it was undoubtedly true that the U.S. authorities interpreted these acceptances as involving tacit, if not complete, approval on the part of the Canadian Government. It would be difficult, therefore, at a later stage to reject implementation programmes, even though they were greatly increased in scope, on the basis that the Plan itself had been approved, not by the Government but by the Chiefs of Staff and for planning purposes only.

On the United States side, it was evident that the Secretary for Defence and the Secretary for Air, to name two of the civilian defence authorities, were quite unfamiliar with the Canada-U.S. Basic Security Plan, and the implementation programmes which it involved. The U.S. Chiefs of Staff had apparently proceeded in this matter on their own authority without reference to the responsible Ministers. This situation, of course, had not arisen in Canada, but it made it all the more necessary that the U.S. authorities be made fully aware of the Canadian position.

The increased measures of air preparedness recommended by the U.S. Finletter<sup>34</sup> committee, if accepted by the U.S. Government, would seem certain to call for a much more extensive and rapid programme in Canada. This, of course, had important implications insofar as Canadian participation was concerned and made it essential from the Canadian point of view that we know how this fitted into the overall strategic plan. These enquiries could best be carried out on the military level.

Mr. Claxton, continuing, asked if the Canadian planning representatives on the Military Co-operation Committee did not in fact allow the U.S. Services, because of their greater resources, to initially prepare most of the Plan, Canadian participation thus being confined to acceptance or rejection and whatever modification seemed desirable from the Canadian point of view. Further, did the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff take a substantial interest in this Plan, or did they leave it mainly to their junior staffs? This would be understandable in view of the comparatively small part which this planning played in their overall responsibilities.

2. The Chief of the Air Staff observed that he had been very closely associated with this planning prior to his present appointment and that it was his experience that the Canadian Planners had, in most cases, contributed at least as much to the Plan as the U.S. Planners. It was therefore a joint plan in every respect. Also, he knew that the U.S. Chiefs of Staff did have a full knowledge of the planning taking place. This had been demonstrated in discussions on the Sea Lines of Communication Appendix when, during disagreement between the U.S. Service Planners, each had stated that he was bound by instructions from his own Chief of Staff on that particular aspect. In Canada, each of the Planners was also guided by the views of his own Chief of Staff.

---

<sup>34</sup>

The U.S. Services undoubtedly placed more emphasis on the importance of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence than did the Canadian Services. It had a particular value in the United States in that it provided a direct channel to the President which was not otherwise available.

3. The Secretary, Cabinet Defence Committee, reported that, though the U.S. members of the Military Co-operation Committee and the Permanent Joint Board on Defence were fully aware of the distinction made between plans and implementation programmes, they had, as far as he knew, taken no action to acquaint higher authorities with this distinction. It might therefore be desirable to now ensure that they did take it up with the responsible authorities.

It appeared, further, that the U.S. Services were making more direct use of the Plan for budgetary purposes, whereas in Canada budgetary requirements resulted only from implementation programmes. It had also been proposed by the U.S. authorities that they circulate the Plan to Area Commanders in order that detailed area plans might be worked out with their "opposite numbers" in Canada. This did not seem reasonable from the Canadian point of view since the Plan was prepared without any relation to existing resources. If detailed area plans were desirable at this stage, they should presumably be based on an interim plan, utilizing resources currently available.

4. The Secretary to the Cabinet observed that it appeared that the U.S. was attempting to make use of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence for purposes other than those for which it was intended. Certainly, in respect of joint defence planning, the Canadian Government had assigned the responsibility, directly and exclusively, to the Chiefs of Staff and it was not therefore within the responsibilities of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. It seemed, however, as though the U.S. authorities had not fully recognized this fact and were attempting to use the Permanent Joint Board on Defence as an alternative direct channel to the Government. The direct channels of communication between the U.S. and Canadian military members of the Board seemed also to be the cause of some confusion. Probably the holding of Board meetings less frequently would be a step in the right direction.

5. The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs pointed out that the Board had a very positive political value. It seemed, however, that its practical value was diminishing. As far as the respective functions and responsibilities of the various agencies in planning were concerned, it would probably be impossible to devise perfect machinery which would meet equally well the requirements of the constituted authorities on both sides of the border. Probably it would be possible only to make sure that our representatives in these joint groups fully understood the Canadian position, the particular Canadian problems and the position to be taken. It was evident that they would spend a good deal of time on the defensive, resisting U.S. pressures, but this was unavoidable.

The distinction made between planning and implementation and approval thereof, though perfectly valid from the Canadian point of view, might not appear valid in the United States, and it would be difficult to convince the U.S. authorities that the Canadian Government was not committed by the acceptance of these joint plans by the Chiefs of Staff.

6. The Chief of the General Staff observed that the chief value of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence seemed to be in providing another direct channel to the two Governments. Certainly the Permanent Joint Board on Defence had no responsibility for planning. In order to avoid any action on the part of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence (in particular its military members) which would conflict with recognized policy, it was suggested that two courses of action be followed:

(a) the military members of the Board be carefully briefed by the Chiefs of Staff before their meetings; and

(b) discussion at the Board be restricted to those items which had been previously circulated on the agenda (this would prevent discussion and decision on items for which the military members had received no briefing).

Insofar as present responsibilities were concerned, it seemed perfectly reasonable for the Chiefs of Staff to be directly responsible for plans. This was normal in that it had always been the practice in the Services to prepare a number of plans which were not normally submitted to the Government for approval unless and until they required implementation. A similar situation existed in respect of the Canada-U.S. defence planning and this was the basis on which the Chiefs of Staff had been directed to proceed. Nevertheless, the Chiefs of Staff had advised the Government of the principles which were being applied in preparing the implementation programmes, including the conditions placed on acceptance of the planned period of implementation to provide flexibility in accelerating or decelerating implementation programmes. Since the Canadian responsibilities seemed clear it should be necessary only to reiterate these for the benefit of the U.S. authorities.

7. The Chairman, Defence Research Board, pointed out that it would be important, in delineating responsibilities of the various agencies, to ensure that the Military Co-operation Committee and the Permanent Joint Board on Defence fully appreciated that they did not have any executive responsibilities or authority in respect of the implementation of the Plan. Any executive action required to implement the Plan should be taken through normal staff channels. It did not appear that this restriction on their responsibilities was at all times clearly understood.

8. During discussion on the third point raised by the Minister (namely, the extent to which Canada was being involved with the United States in joint defence planning, which necessarily involved the part which this plan played in the overall U.S. strategic plan, the implications of the Finletter report, etc.), the following comments were made.

9. The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs remarked that he had heard references made to a "master plan" and that, in his opinion, the United Kingdom had some knowledge of and perhaps some part in this plan.

10. The Chief of the General Staff stated that, so far as he knew, there was no allied strategic plan as yet. In fact, the only joint strategic concept so far evolved had been developed in standardization discussions in Washington between United Kingdom, United States and Canadian Service representatives. Undoubtedly, however, our present joint plan with the United States was unrealistic in that it was concerned only with defensive measures. These would need to be related to possible offensive measures and a broad strategic concept.

11. The Chairman, Defence Research Board, observed that planning seemed to be proceeding along two separate lines, based on two distinct assumptions. These assumptions were:

(a) that the use of forces outside Canada would, in general, follow the pattern of the last war; and

(b) that the peacetime defensive/offensive arrangements in Canadian territory alone would be beyond Canada's capacities to provide by herself, even if she diverted all her efforts and resources to this one task.

It would, of course, be for the Government to decide whether Canada should confine her efforts to defensive preparations on Canadian soil, towards which she could probably make a substantial contribution, or divide her efforts, in which case it appeared unlikely that she could make a substantial contribution in either field.

Regardless of the Government decision made on the course of action to be followed, it would appear that a meeting between the Canadian Chiefs of Staff Committee and the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff would be useful. It would not only ensure that the United States understood the Canadian position, but would provide a means for the Chiefs of Staff to have knowledge of the overall U.S. strategic plan.

12. The Chief of the Air Staff stated that the Air Force had consistently held the view that it would be beyond Canadian resources to make an effective contribution in peacetime to a strategic bombing force in view of the tremendous cost now represented by strategic bomber aircraft, both in respect of initial outlay and continued maintenance. Furthermore, the defensive/offensive installations required in Canada would undoubtedly be of such a scope that they would require the full efforts of the Canadian Services and economy to maintain. It was nevertheless important that Canada be fully aware of and a participant in the overall strategic plan.

In his opinion, the war would not be fought on the same basis as the First and Second World Wars. It would be impossible for the United States and Britain initially to conduct effective land operations in a European theatre. The war would therefore be won or lost in its very early stages by direct air attacks on the vital centres of the countries concerned.

13. The Chief of the General Staff stated that, in his view, the air attack would undoubtedly be important in the early stages, but that there was nothing to indicate that the war otherwise would not follow much the same course as all wars had previously. The teachings of military history confirmed the view that wars were eventually won or lost on the ground.

14. The Chairman, Defence Research Board, stated that he was in general agreement with the views expressed by the Chief of the Air Staff and was firmly of the opinion that the war would be won or lost in the early stages by direct attacks on the vital centres of the countries concerned. These attacks might be with atomic bombs, biological weapons or some other weapon, but the tremendously increased destructiveness of these weapons made it virtually certain that, unless war occurred within the next two or three years, they would be determining factors and the war would be either won or lost before any substantial conflict on the ground developed.

15. The Chief of the Naval Staff indicated agreement with the concept that the war in the air would be important in the early stages, but that this would be followed by naval and land action in a similar way to previous wars.

16. The Secretary to the Cabinet observed that, despite any views which were held in Canada on the subject, our relatively small size in comparison to the United States might result in our conforming in general to whatever overall strategic plan the United States wished to follow.

17. It was agreed, after further discussion:

(a) that, in general, the respective responsibilities of the Canadian agencies concerned in defence planning, as presently assigned, were satisfactory, though care should be taken to ensure that the Military Co-operation Committee and the Permanent Joint Board on Defence did not undertake functions outside their present terms of reference; but

(b) that these arrangements, together with any proposals for their improvement, be reported on by the Chiefs of Staff to the Cabinet Defence Committee and at that time consideration be given to further steps which might be taken to ensure that the United States authorities are fully aware of and in agreement with the procedures being followed.

955.

DEA/226 (S)

Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion du Comité des chefs d'état-major

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Chiefs of Staff Committee

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], February 12, 1948

...

CANADA—U.S. BASIC SECURITY PLAN — DIVISION OF RESPONSIBILITY FOR IMPLEMENTATION

7. The Committee had for consideration a memorandum from the Canadian Section of the Military Co-operation Committee recommending that the Permanent Joint Board on Defence consider and make concrete recommendations as to the most suitable division of responsibility for implementation of the Basic Security Plan. The responsibility of the Military Co-operation Committee would be confined to completion of the appendices and making a general summary of the measures required for their implementation in order that total cost in manpower, materiel and finance might be estimated.

(Memorandum of 3rd February, 1948, from Canadian Section, Canada-U.S. Military Co-operation Committee — CSC 5-1-2 of 9th February, 1948)†

8. The Chief of the General Staff stated that, since plans and implementation were not considered a responsibility of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, this did not appear to be a suitable subject for the Permanent Joint Board on Defence to discuss. In any case it would be preferable to leave discussion on this point between Canada and the United States until such time as Canada was unable to undertake by herself those measures required in Canadian territory. The eventual division of effort between the two countries need not be on the basis of a financial formula; it might rather be along the lines of the arrangement accepted for the weather station programme.

9. Mr. Pearson stated that he was in general agreement with the remarks of the Chief of the General Staff; namely that it would be premature to discuss division of responsibility at this stage, it being preferable to meet each situation as it arose.

10. The Chief of the Naval Staff pointed out that the officers in charge of planning felt that their work in the preparation of the implementation programmes was to some extent handicapped by lack of any direction as to division of responsibility between the two countries.

11. It was agreed, after further discussion:

(a) that this matter was not properly a subject for discussion by the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, the Canadian Section to be asked, therefore, to omit it from the agenda for the next meeting;<sup>35</sup> and

(b) that it would be desirable to defer Canadian-U.S. discussions in this field until such time as Canada was unable to accept full responsibility for implementation measures in Canadian territory.

...

STRATEGIC CONCEPT

26. The Chairman, Defence Research Board, pointed out that recent discussions with the Minister and the conclusions of the Finletter report highlighted the necessity for early consideration of the broad strategic concept. Following this, the whole Canada-U.S. Basic Security Plan should presumably be reviewed. The predominant view at present was that purely defensive measures should form only a very small part of any overall plan.

27. The Committee agreed that discussions between the individual Chiefs of Staff and the United Kingdom and United States Chiefs of Staff on this point should be held as soon as possible.

...

<sup>35</sup> Une semaine plus tard, Acheson souleva la question de la répartition des coûts de réalisation des plans de défense canado-américaines à la réunion de la Commission permanente canado-américaine de défense (CPCAD). (Voir journal de la CPCAD des 19-20 février le paragraphe 13, volume 54 des archives de Howe.)† McNaughton répondit que l'examen de cette question par la CPCAD était prématuré, d'autant que la responsabilité de planifier et de proposer les mesures de mise en œuvre du côté canadien relevait des chefs d'état-major.

Acheson raised the question of division of costs of implementation of Canada-US defence plans at the meeting of PJBD one week later. (See PJBD Journal, February 19-20, paragraph 13 — Howe Papers, Volume 54.)† McNaughton replied that consideration by PJBD was premature, particularly as responsibility for planning and proposing implementation measures on the Canadian side lay with the Chiefs of Staff.

956.

W.L.M.K./J4/Vol. 421

*Note du Comité des chefs d'état-major
pour le Comité de la défense du Cabinet*
Memorandum from Chiefs of Staff Committee to Cabinet Defence Committee

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], February 13, 1948

CANADIAN—U.S. COLLABORATION IN DEFENCE

On August 12th last the Cabinet Defence Committee met with the Canadian Section of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence and reviewed Canadian-U.S. defence arrangements.

2. On that occasion, some consideration was given to the role of the various agencies concerned with this subject. As a result, it was confirmed that the P.J.B.D. was a purely advisory body whose recommendations were submitted to their respective Governments, but that they were not to concern themselves directly with the preparation of a defence plan. The Chiefs of Staff, with certain civilian officials, had been designated as the agency responsible for Canadian participation in planning; the Military Co-operation Committee and their sub-committees were responsible to their respective Chiefs of Staff for drafting such plans.

3. Previously, on February 28th, 1947, the Cabinet Defence Committee agreed to a distinction being made between "plans" and "implementation programmes" as follows. The former are "war plans". They set forth the resources required for the defence of this continent in the event of war but involve no commitment on the part of either government to provide these resources. Consequently they are not submitted to the Government for approval but are agreed between the Canadian and United States Chiefs of Staff. The implementation programmes, on the other hand, contain the measures which the Chiefs of Staff consider necessary to take in any one fiscal year to make the plan capable of operation in due course. These are submitted for Government consideration and authorization and thus provide the means by which the Government exercises control.

4. At the August 12th meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee, the Chairman of the Canadian Section of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence was asked to make sure, through the medium of the Board, that the United States held similar views on these questions. This was done at the meeting of the Board held September 11 and 12, and is so recorded in its Journal.

5. Within these agreed principles, and in consultation with the designated civilian officials (the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Secretary to the Cabinet), we have accepted the appreciation and plan and seven of the detailed appendices. Decisions have in each case recorded that acceptance is for planning purposes only, subject to review in the light of the completed plan, and that any implementation requires separate consideration and approval. Notices of these decisions are given to the United States through the Canada-U.S. Military Co-operation Committee.

6. The appreciation and all component parts of the plan are reviewed (and revised as necessary) not less often than once each year. This re-appreciation and review provide the basis for preparation of the annual implementation programmes, which can be accelerated or decelerated as seems necessary.

7. In our opinion, the responsibilities assigned to us in respect of the plan are reasonable and necessary. It is the normal function of the Chiefs of Staff to prepare military plans of various kinds to meet various contingencies. Such plans are not normally submitted to the Government except as background information or in support of proposals for implementation. The Government decides on the manner and degree of implementation. At that stage the Chiefs of Staff advise on the risks involved in accepting alternative courses of action. This is precisely the procedure followed with the Canada-U.S. Basic Security Plan.

8. On his recent visit to Washington the Minister of National Defence gained the distinct impression from conversations with senior government and Service officials there that U.S. authorities at the top level do not regard these matters in the same way as we do. Specifically, the Minister felt that they are inclined to attribute to the Permanent Joint Board on Defence functions which it does not possess. Furthermore, the Minister concluded that the U.S. authorities tend to look upon the Basic Security Plan as having been formally approved by both governments and as a document which should be used as a basis for procurement and area planning. It appears, therefore, that the Canadian understanding has not been fully reported by the U.S. sections of the Military Co-operation Committee and the Permanent Joint Board on Defence to senior authorities, and this has caused misunderstanding. To remove this, it is suggested that a letter along the lines of Appendix "A", together with the annexes attached thereto, might go forward from the Minister of National Defence to the United States Secretary for Defence.

9. In addition to the necessity for a full understanding on the United States side of Canadian procedures and principles, we feel that there is a requirement for a fuller understanding of the overall strategic concept and plan on which the United States is working. The Canada-U.S. Basic Security Plan, as so far developed, deals principally with purely defensive aspects and, as much, must be related to and form part of the overall strategic plan. The whole plan must be known if defensive installations such as those to be developed in Canadian territory are to be properly established to undertake alternative functions; also if we are to plan our eventual forces intelligently. It is certain that Canada will not fight a war by herself. It is essential, therefore, that a proper balance be achieved between the U.S. and Canadian forces and that our role in the broad strategic plan be understood. It is our view that this should be considered at the top military level between the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff and ourselves.

10. We feel that, in general, our present arrangements for collaboration in defence with the United States are adequate. It is apparent, however, that procedures and the division of responsibilities within the United States are not in all cases the same as in Canada. Discussions such as the Minister of National Defence recently had with Mr. Forrestal and other U.S. officials are of great value in reconciling such differences as inevitably arise as a result of the different forms of government and other factors. A closer and more direct relationship between the Canadian Chiefs of Staff and the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff might also help in this regard, and informal meetings might be held for this purpose.

11. It is evident, too, that care must continue to be taken to ensure that each agency does not exceed its particular responsibilities and that Canadian representatives on Canada-U.S. bodies are instructed as to the Canadian position and policies on matters under discussion.

12. Our conclusions, reached in consultation with the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Secretary to the Cabinet, are as follows:

(a) that the existing machinery for defence collaboration with the United States is satisfactory, though it should be kept under constant scrutiny to ensure that it discharges its designed function and Canadian representatives must be kept in close touch at all times with relevant government policy;

(b) that it would be desirable to forward a communication along the lines of Appendix "A" to the U.S. Secretary for Defence in order to confirm a common interpretation of procedures and a full understanding of the Canadian position;

(c) that planning has now reached the stage where discussions between the United States and Canadian Chiefs of Staff on the overall strategic concept would be desirable; and

(d) that the policy to govern Canadian participation should be considered again as soon as the plan has been completed and reviewed in its relation to the overall strategic concept.

O.M. SOLANDT
 Chairman, Defence Research Board
 VICE-ADMIRAL H.T.W. GRANT
 Chief of the Naval Staff
 AIR MARSHAL W.A. CURTIS
 Chief of the Air Staff
 LIEUT.-GENERAL C. FOULKES
 Chief of the General Staff, Chairman

APPENDIX "A"

DRAFT LETTER FROM THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE TO THE U.S. SECRETARY FOR DEFENCE

Dear Mr. Forrestal:

Since my return to Ottawa from my visit with you in Washington, I have reviewed with the authorities here the arrangements in existence for our joint collaboration in defence matters. I discovered that I had been under certain misapprehensions which have now been removed. It seems to me, however, that it would be useful to make known to you fully our particular Canadian procedures and my government's views on certain aspects. To this end, I am attaching a paper which covers the subject in some detail and this short personal letter will touch only on a few of the main points.

The only real difference in procedure appears to arise from constitutional differences. In Canada, the Chiefs of Staff approve plans but our constitutional practice makes it necessary for Cabinet approval to be obtained, not only for policy decisions but even for relatively minor expenditures on implementation programmes. The final authorization for budgetary requirements rests, of course, with Parliament as with your Congress. The Chiefs of Staff, therefore, approve plans only with the provision that any expenditure involved through implementation thereof will be subject to review and authorization by the Cabinet.

Other factors which contribute to differences in the Canadian approach to joint defence problems are, of course, that a large proportion of our mutual defence operations and installations must of necessity be on Canadian soil and defence expenditures which are relatively small in your country are relatively large in Canada. I am sure that you fully appreciate the importance of these factors here.

I sincerely hope that the attached outline proves useful. It is my own feeling that these frank exchanges of views are most helpful in keeping fresh that mutual understanding which has always been such an important aspect of our friendly relations.

With kind personal regards, I remain,

Yours sincerely,

ANNEX "A"

CANADIAN-U.S. DEFENCE COLLABORATION

Outlined below are the procedures which are followed in Canada and the functions which the Canadian Government understands as being assigned to each agency concerned in joint Canada-U.S. defence planning.

The joint Canada-U.S. agencies involved are as follows:

(a) The Permanent Joint Board on Defence

The P.J.B.D. was formed to "consider in the broad sense the defence of the north half of the Western Hemisphere" and make recommendations thereon to the two Governments. It is therefore an advisory and not an executive body, and even in respect of its advisory function, it is normal procedure in Canada for the opinion of the Chiefs of Staff to be obtained on recommendations of the Board before they are considered by the Government.

Applying this principle to the Canada-U.S. Basic Security Plan, one sees that the revision of A.B.C. 22, the wartime plan, was recommended by the Board. In Canada, when this recommendation was accepted (on the advice of the Chiefs of Staff), the responsibility for conducting the Canadian share in this Plan was assigned to the Chiefs of Staff Committee and their Joint Planners. The Permanent Joint Board on Defence is not, therefore, considered in any way responsible for the preparation of the Plan or its implementation, despite its obvious interest in seeing that such a plan is in fact produced.

(b) The Canada-U.S. Military Co-operation Committee

As indicated above, the Canadian Joint Planners, together with two civilian officials (a representative of External Affairs, who is also Secretary, Canadian Section, Permanent Joint Board on Defence; and the Secretary, Cabinet Defence Committee) as observers, were appointed as the Canadian Chiefs of Staff representatives responsible, jointly with U.S. representatives, for drafting the Canada-U.S. Basic Security Plan. Subsequently, in order to conform with action taken on the United States side, the Canadian military members of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence were added. The U.S. Section was the same as the Canadian Section except that there was no counterpart of the Secretary, Cabinet Defence Committee. The Military Co-operation Committee is therefore responsible for preparation of draft plans for submission to the appropriate authorities of each country. It is also responsible for making recommendations as to the amount and kind of implementation which should be carried out each year. The preliminary work is done in each country by the Joint Planners and a number of specialist sub-committees. At each stage, these groups meet together as a combined Canadian-U.S. body, as required. It is apparent that, as the senior members of the Military Co-operation Committee are also the military members of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, there is closer liaison between these two agencies than would otherwise be the case. It is emphasized, however, that there is, properly speaking, no direct link between the Military Co-operation Committee and the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, though the dual membership held by the military members does closely relate the two groups and lead at times to some misunderstanding. The Military Co-operation Committee reports to and is responsible to the Chiefs of Staff of each country. The Permanent Joint Board on Defence does not issue instructions to or have any responsibility for the work of the Military Co-operation Committee, and normally receives progress reports of a general nature only. The Board would, however, report its views to the two Governments if it considered the progress of the planning or the implementation thereof to be unsatisfactory in any way.

The purely Canadian agencies involved are the Chiefs of Staff Committee and the Government (represented by Cabinet or Cabinet Defence Committee as appropriate). The Chiefs of Staff Committee is, of course, the Canadian counterpart of the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff. It is charged with the responsibility of preparing defence plans (including the Canadian share of the Canada-U.S. Basic Security Plan) and of implementing these in such a manner as may be approved from time to time by the Government.

The distinction between "plans" and "implementation programmes" is important. The proposal that this distinction be made was first put forward by the Military Co-operation Committee along the following lines:

(a) that the appreciation and Basic Security Plan (with appendices) should not be treated as documents which require acceptance (or rejection) by the governments; the Basic Security Plan to be regarded as a joint defence plan designed to ensure the security of the North American continent, agreed between the Canadian and United States Chiefs of Staff; and

(b) that the Chiefs of Staff of each country be responsible for recommending the degree, sequence and rate of implementation of the agreed plan, such "implementation programmes" to be submitted from time to time for decision by the government.

This distinction was based on the following understanding:

(a) The Basic Security Plan (with appendices) is a war plan which may be put into effect by decision of the two governments upon the outbreak of hostilities or in anticipation of such an event. As such, it sets forth in detail the manpower and facilities which should be available and the organization that should be provided to meet an emergency. The resources shown as necessary are, in some cases, considerably in excess of those presently available but it should be noted that acceptance of the plan by the Canadian and U.S. authorities involves no commitment to provide such resources.

(b) Implementation Programmes. Because of the time factor, however, certain measures must be undertaken in peacetime if the plan is to be capable of being put into effect when required. The particulars of such measures are embodied in "implementation programmes". Such programmes are, of course, related to the overall plan and contain recommendations as to the portions of the overall plan which should be implemented. These programmes should normally be submitted annually; if approved, provision would be made for the Canadian share of the cost involved to be included in defence estimates. The scale of these programmes or, in other words, the extent to which the overall plan would be implemented at any time would depend on the world situation and would be a matter for decision by both governments in the light of both military and political considerations.

The Canadian Government agreed that the distinction between "plans" and "implementation programmes" was both valid and necessary. Accordingly the Chiefs of Staff Committee was given full responsibility on the Canadian side for the plan and only annual implementation programmes are submitted for Government approval. (Annex "B" attached shows in detail the various steps involved.)

ANNEX "B"

PROCEDURES FOLLOWED IN CANADA IN PREPARATION OF CANADA-U.S. BASIC SECURITY PLAN AND IMPLEMENTATION PROGRAMMES

Indicated below are the various agencies concerned in Canada-U.S. joint defence planning, and in each case, their particular function. The order in which these are shown demonstrates the sequence which preparation of plans usually follows through the various levels.

Sub-Committees of Joint Planning Committee

[These sub-committees are, properly speaking, sub-committees of the Military Cooperation Committee. Since, however, in practice, they report through the Canada-U.S. Joint Planning Committee, they are shown as sub-committees of the Joint Planning Committee.]

Consider particular appendix for which they are responsible — meet with U.S. counterpart to produce agreed combined draft and make recommendations to the Planning Committee in respect of its implementation.

Joint Planning Committee

Considers individual appendices and plan as a whole — directs the work of its sub-committees — meets with U.S. Joint Planners to produce for Military Co-operation Committee agreed combined plans and proposals for implementation programmes.

Canada-U.S. Military Co-operation Committee

Prepares appreciation used as basis for plans and implementation programmes — directs the work of all subordinate groups — considers individual appendices and plan as a whole — produces agreed appreciations, combined plans and proposals for implementation programmes.

Chiefs of Staff Committee

Considers draft appreciations, plans and proposed implementation programmes put forward by Military Co-operation Committee. If in agreement:

- (a) approves (on behalf of Canada) the appreciation and plan; and
- (b) recommends to the Government (Cabinet Defence Committee) approval of the implementation programme.

Cabinet Defence Committee (or Cabinet)

Considers implementation programmes (the Canadian share) put forward by the Chiefs of Staff Committee. If in agreement, approves the Canadian commitment involved subject to the necessary funds being voted by Parliament.

Permanent Joint Board on Defence

While having no direct responsibility for these plans or their implementation, is kept advised of progress made and reports to the Government if this progress is, in its opinion, in any way unsatisfactory.

Note: The same procedures indicated above for initial preparation of the Plan are followed in the review (at least once yearly) of the appreciation and Plan.

957.

PCO/Vol. 244

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion
du Comité de la défense du Cabinet*

*Extract from Minutes of Meeting
of Cabinet Defence Committee*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], March 31, 1948

CANADA—UNITED STATES COLLABORATION IN DEFENCE; REPORT OF CHIEFS OF STAFF

13. The Chairman, referring to previous discussion at the January 27th meeting, reported that the Chiefs of Staff had reviewed the present arrangements for Canada-U.S. collaboration in defence and had concluded:

(a) that the existing machinery for defence collaboration was satisfactory but that it should be kept under constant scrutiny to ensure that the agencies concerned carried out their designated functions and that Canadian representatives were at all times kept in touch with government policy;

(b) that the Minister of National Defence address a communication to the United States Secretary for Defence with a view to reaching a common interpretation of procedures and a full understanding of the Canadian position;

(c) that planning had now reached a stage where discussion between the United States and the Canadian Chiefs of Staff on the overall strategic concept would be desirable;

(d) that the policy governing Canadian participation should be re-considered when the basic security plan had been completed and reviewed in relation to the overall strategic concept.

The terms of a draft letter from the Minister to Mr. Forrestal was appended as Appendix "A", and Annexes "A" and "B" outlined Canadian procedures and the roles of the various agencies concerned with Canada-U.S. defence planning.

(Chiefs of Staff memorandum, February 13th, 1948 — Cabinet Document D165).

14. Mr. Claxton stated that since the receipt of the report he had consulted the Chairman of the Canadian Section, Permanent Joint Board on Defence, who had reported that he had had satisfactory talks with the Chairman of the United States Section. In the circumstances he was not inclined to communicate formally with the United States Secretary for Defence.

The annexes to the Chiefs of Staff report could be regarded as a comprehensive statement of the Canadian position, and as such they would be useful to guide Canadian representatives on joint planning agencies in their dealings with United States representatives.

15. The Secretary of State for External Affairs agreed that it was preferable to handle this matter informally as suggested by the Minister of National Defence. The annexes, in addition to being useful as instructions to the Canadian representatives, might also be communicated informally to United States representatives of the Joint Defence Board and planning committees.

16. The Committee, after further discussion, noted the report submitted by the Chiefs of Staff and agreed that, subject to approval of the texts by the Minister of National Defence, Annexes "A" and "B" be used for the purpose suggested by the Ministers.

...

958.

PCO/Vol. 74

Note du ministre de la Défense nationale pour le Comité des chefs d'état-major

Memorandum from Minister of National Defence to Chiefs of Staff Committee

TOP SECRET

Ottawa, March 15, 1948

Attention: Group Captain Bean [Secretary]

You will recall that the Cabinet Defence Committee approved the main lines of the statement of Canadian-U.S. defence collaboration, which is Annex A to your memorandum of 13 February, 1948. It was intended that subject to textual approval by me, this might be used as a note for the guidance of our own people who were concerned with this work.

I have just gone over this and have one change to suggest. It seems to me that the position of the basic security plan might be better understood if the following was added at some appropriate place, possibly after the word emergency in the 8th line of paragraph (a), on page 3:

"It represents simply the best view of the military advisers of the governments of the two countries on the defence strategy of North America. The plan is, of course, subject to review and change by the Chiefs of Staff in the light of the circumstances existing from time to time."

Further consideration of this whole subject points to the very strong desirability of our having a clear idea of the general lines of the military strategy of the United States.

As you know, I hold the view that static defence means defeat; that anything in the nature of a Maginot line of the North would be unsound militarily, impossible financially and unacceptable politically; that the temperament of the Canadian people would lead them to refuse to confine their national war effort to a defensive role even though that might be the best way in which to use our resources; that the defence plans of North America must take factors like these into account; that our defence planning must also take into account national traditions and habits of thinking as well as factors of population and economic resources.

Work on this should obviously be accelerated. The following points of attack appear obvious:

- (1) The Chiefs of Staff should review the basic security plan and appendices;

(2) Without making any formal approach, the Chiefs of Staff through one of their number, should ascertain as much as can be found out about the general plans of the United States and the United Kingdom;

(3) The Industrial Defence Board when set up should consider industrial planning;

(4) Work on civilian defence should be accelerated;

(5) A small private inter-departmental committee of officials should consider manpower and economic questions in relation to defence, discuss these with the Chiefs of Staff and with them recommend any further action that should be taken in connection with such matters.

B[ROOKE] C[LAXTON]

959.

PCO/Vol. 244

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion
du Comité de la défense du Cabinet*

*Extract from Minutes of Meeting
of Cabinet Defence Committee*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], April 15, 1948

VI. REPORT BY THE CHIEF OF THE GENERAL STAFF ON WASHINGTON CONVERSATIONS

15. The Chief of the General Staff reported upon recent discussions with United States and United Kingdom military authorities in Washington, the main purpose of which had been to secure some idea of their overall strategic concept so that the Canada-U.S. Basic Security Plan could be related thereto.

The talks revealed that no common concept had in fact been developed, but satisfactory arrangements were made for a full exchange of information between Service officers of the three countries with a view to reaching some general agreement along these lines.

It was evident that the U.S. military authorities were now more concerned about the possibility of war within the next eighteen months. On the other hand, the estimate of the time at which other countries would have the atomic bomb had, in the view of many authorities, been extended. These authorities held that the potential enemy was more likely to devote greater effort to the development of other forms of mass destruction, such as bacteriological warfare.

The Canada-U.S. Basic Security Plan had been discussed with the Army Chief of Staff and others. On the whole, they seemed unfamiliar with it, but from what knowledge they had, they were inclined to regard it as unrealistic. They showed no inclination to press for further implementation measures in Canadian territory for the time being, and they seemed very pleased with Canadian co-operation in the field of defence.

The talks had served to re-emphasize the importance of standardization. If developments led to a resumption of war manufacturing in Canada, the question of whether equipments should be U.S. or U.K. type should be settled. Possibly U.S. designs should be followed in the ammunition consuming equipments. This would be the subject of recommendations later.

16. The Committee, after discussion, noted the remarks of the Chief of the General Staff.

...

960.

W.L.M.K./J4/Vol. 249

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion
du Comité de la défense du Cabinet*

*Extract from Minutes of Meeting
of Cabinet Defence Committee*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], June 2, 1948

...

II. DEFENCE PLANNING; REVIEW

8. The Chief of the Naval Staff, as acting Chairman of the Chiefs of Staff Committee, reviewed the progress of defence planning.

The Canada-U.S. Basic Security Plan was complete and had been accepted for planning purposes by the Canadian and United States Chiefs of Staff, except for four appendices. Implementation measures to date had in the main been what would have been necessary anyway in the normal build up of the three Services. The plan itself was now due for revision and proposals for further implementation measures would be submitted to the government in due course.

In addition to the Canada-U.S. defence plan, a short-range plan was being prepared in consultation with United Kingdom and United States officers. This was designed to meet any emergency between now and July, 1949. This plan was based upon an agreed appreciation and was related to existing resources. It would shortly be considered by the Chiefs of Staff.

Apart from these, there was a requirement for a long-term plan which would incorporate the short-term as well as the Basic Security Plans. An essential preliminary was the development of a common overall strategic concept, or at least assumptions as to what the concept should be, in order to determine the most suitable role for Canadian forces, and plan accordingly. The Joint Planning Committee were now concerning themselves with this aspect of the problem.

9. The Minister of National Defence observed that on the basis of information received from all sources it was reasonable to assume:

(a) That the U.S.S.R. were unlikely to provoke a planned war in the near future, but the possibility of either a planned or an "accidental" war due to Russian miscalculation must be taken into account. While it would be wrong to regard war as inevitable, the attitude of Russia made it necessary to plan defence measures as if it were.

(b) If war occurred soon the best military estimate was that the U.S.S.R. could overrun all of Europe in under six months, but with strengthening of the Western will to fight and of Western defences, this period would be extended. Time was not necessarily on the side of the U.S.S.R.

(c) In the near future there was little possibility of attack on this continent except as a diversionary "one-way" attack designed to panic our people and to keep a disproportionate part of our forces employed on defence. If this last assumption was not well-founded, then our forces as presently constituted, were quite inadequate.

Anything in the nature of passive defence he regarded as wrong and unreal. In the circumstances, the Canada-U.S. Basic Security Plan should be examined freshly by the Chiefs of Staff and the Cabinet Defence Committee, so that North American defence could be considered as part of the broad picture and not as an isolated problem.

10. The Chief of the Air Staff mentioned that the Canada-U.S. Basic Security Plan was designed to meet the long-term threat. Because of the lengthy time required to provide adequate defences for securing the home base, recent world developments had not necessarily diminished the soundness of the plan.

11. The Acting Chief of the General Staff stated that in accordance with the Canadian and U.S. Governments' direction, the plan dealt only with the defensive aspects of a war and these could only be viewed in their proper perspective when related to an overall war plan.

12. The Chairman, Canadian Section, Permanent Joint Board on Defence, expressed the view that an important feature of Canada-United States defence planning to date had been the establishment of planning machinery. The review that was now underway would no doubt lead to the emergence of a sensible defensive plan placed in appropriate relationship to overall plans.

13. The Committee, after further discussion, noted the statements made and noted with approval that arrangements were in hand for the revision of the Canada-U.S. Basic Security Plan.

...

961.

DEA/226 (S)

Rapport du Comité mixte du renseignement
Report by Joint Intelligence Committee

JIC 5/48 (Final)

[Ottawa], June 12, 1948

TOP SECRET

REPORT ON THE ACCEPTABILITY OF THE AMERICAN REVISIONS TO THE APPRECIATION OF THE REQUIREMENT OF CANADA—UNITED STATES
SECURITY DATED 23RD MAY, 1946

As directed by the Chiefs of Staff at their 422nd Meeting and amended at the 423rd Meeting held the 26th May 1948, we have reviewed the revisions proposed by the United States JIC in Sections I to VI of the Appreciation of the Requirements for Canada—United States security.

2. We report on the acceptability of the American revisions as follows: (A tabulated comparison of main points is given in Appendix "A")

(a) The form of the paper is left untouched. In our view Sections I to VI contain superfluous material, questionable generalizations, and on the whole are not suited to the subject.

(b) The American paper estimates that the earliest date by which a potential enemy may have exploded his first atomic test bomb is mid-1950, but the probable date by which he will have exploded such a bomb is mid-1953. The Canadian opinion was that the possibility that the USSR might be capable of a token atomic attack during 1948 was very remote but could not be completely dismissed. For planning purposes we recommend that the American dates be accepted.

(c) In our paper we did not consider that the USSR was capable of materially impairing the war-making potential of Canada and the United States at the present time. This was stated in the conclusion: "The USSR is not considered capable at the present time of endangering, by direct action, the security of Canada and the United States." The impression gained from reading the present American paper is that the threat to the security of Canada and the United States is greater than this. Air attacks, the Americans consider, would no longer be "of limited strength", whereas we have no intelligence which indicates an increased enemy capability in this regard. Further, the present American paper leaves unrevised the statement that from about 1950 a potential enemy could seize objectives in Canada, Alaska or Labrador from which by air or airborne attack he could operate against vital strategic targets. We can not agree that the USSR will be capable of this type of offensive operation by 1950.

3. It is in many instances difficult to compare the American paper which estimates specific enemy capabilities for future periods, with our own paper which deals in the broadest terms only, for the period after 1948. While it is not possible to arrive at definite conclusions on these points we feel that the general tendency in the American paper is to credit a potential enemy with greater capabilities than we consider reasonable.

4. In general then, with the exception of 2(b) above, we do not find the appreciation as presently proposed by the United States JIC acceptable.

APPENDIX "A"
DIFFERENCES BETWEEN APPRECIATIONS

Canadian	American	Remarks
1. Enemy is named—USSR.	Not named.	This does not affect the conclusions, but appears more realistic.
2. The possibility of a token atomic attack in 1948 though very remote can not be completely dismissed.	Earliest date by which potential enemy may have exploded first test bomb is mid 1950, but probable date by which he will have exploded such a bomb is mid 1953.	American dates acceptable for planning purposes.
3. Air attacks "on a limited scale" on the North American Continent.	The phrase "of limited strength" when referring to air attacks has been deleted.	We do not consider the American deletion justified.
4. Airborne troops in small units against Western Alaska and the Aleutian Islands.	Occupation in limited strength of outlying positions in Alaska, Northern Canada and Greenland.	"Occupation" not acceptable to Canadian appreciation.
5. USSR not capable at the present time of endangering by direct action the security of Canada and the US.	From about 1950 a potential enemy could seize objectives in Canada, Alaska or Labrador, from which by air or airborne attack he could operate against vital strategic targets.	On present intelligence we can not agree that the USSR will have this capability by 1950.

962.

PCO/Vol. 74

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States to Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Washington, June 22, 1948

Dear Mr. Reid:

Thank you for your letter of June 11th† describing the line taken by Mr. Claxton at the meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee on June 2nd. I am glad that he is taking up so vigorously his objections to too great a concentration on static defence. I think it was Lord Salisbury who once remarked that if the soldiers had their way they would seek to fortify the moon. It is, however, quite natural when groups of officers are established to prepare detailed plans for giving effect to a general defence plan such as the Basic Security Plan that they should propose safeguards against even very remote contingencies, for it is part of their duty to draw attention to such contingencies and to propose means whereby they might be met. I imagine that in all countries who occupy themselves with defence planning the normal process is for the elaborate proposals prepared at a fairly low level by the services to be cut down as they progress upwards, and to receive their final and often drastic trimming when they get into the hands of the responsible minister and his colleagues. When planning is being done on an international basis the process of cutting proposals down to a practicable size becomes both more difficult and still more important.

This discussion illustrates how much easier it would be to deal with the planning of the joint defence of the continent if a larger security system spanning the Atlantic were in existence.

Yours sincerely,
H.H. WRONG

963.

DEA/226 (S)

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion du Comité des chefs d'état-major
Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Chiefs of Staff Committee*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], July 8, 1948

...

CANADA—U.S. BASIC SECURITY PLAN — REVIEW OF APPRECIATION

2. The Committee had for reconsideration a report from the Joint Intelligence Committee on the acceptability of the revisions proposed by the U.S. Joint Intelligence Committee to the Appreciation of the Requirements for Canada-U.S. Security, dated 23rd May, 1946. Decision on this item had been deferred from the 425th meeting.

3. Mr. Reid stated that, in his view, the Appreciation prepared by the Canadian Joint Intelligence Committee was better than the original Appreciation as revised by the U.S. Joint Intelligence Committee, in that it was more realistic and up-to-date and appeared to be more in accord with the thinking of the Chiefs of Staff. It was particularly important at this time, when discussions were taking place in regard to the security of Western European and North American countries, that the requirements for the defence of North America be seen in proper perspective. In his opinion, the U.S. revisions to the Appreciation did not alter the original over-emphasis on the dangers of attack from the north.

The Secretary to the Cabinet hold similar views.

4. The Chief of the General Staff pointed out that the U.S. revisions were merely amendments to the original document rather than a full re-appreciation of the situation, as had been carried out by the Canadian J.I.C. The differences in substance of the two documents were not great, though there was some difference in degree and emphasis. In any event, assessments by different groups would be certain to differ in certain respects.

5. It was agreed, after further discussion:

(a) to approve the Appreciation prepared by the Canadian Joint Intelligence Committee;

(b) to note the differences between the Canadian Appreciation and the Canada-U.S. Appreciation as revised by the U.S. Joint Intelligence Committee; and

(c) to request the Canadian Section of the Military Co-operation Committee to bring to the attention of the U.S. Section the differences in the Canadian view.

...

SECTION B

VISITE À WASHINGTON DU MINISTRE DE LA DÉFENSE NATIONALE VISIT TO WASHINGTON BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

964.

PCO/Vol. 244

Note du secrétaire du Comité de la défense du Cabinet
Memorandum by Secretary, Cabinet Defence Committee

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Ottawa, January 7, 1948

OFFENCE VERSUS DEFENCE — U.S. POSITION

During initial discussions in the Canada-U.S. Military Cooperation Committee, when the Canada-U.S. Basic Security Plan was first under consideration, the Canadian Section questioned whether a defensive plan could be evolved without relating it to potential offensive measures. At that time, however, and subsequently during discussions, the U.S. representatives took the view that they were empowered only to discuss measures for North American defence and that the Basic Security Plan must be confined to this field. It has, however, been generally recognized, in the preparation of detailed plans, that defensive measures should be kept to an absolute minimum. It has also been recognized that certain of the installations and facilities required for defence under the plan are equally useful for offensive purposes. This is particularly true of air navigation facilities, such as low frequency loran, and of air bases. It is quite obvious that the U.S. are very conscious of offensive potentialities when they express interest in air bases in Canadian territory and they wish to see these developed in such a manner as to be readily adaptable for this purpose.

2. The Canadian Chiefs of Staff like the United States Chiefs consider the most effective means of defence to be offensive strength which will include the ability to strike retaliatory blows and to destroy any potential enemy's ability to launch an effective attack against this Continent. The advent of the high-speed, long-range aircraft, coupled with more destructive offensive weapons such as the atomic bomb, has accelerated acceptance of this strategic concept.

3. Though these theories are held by the military authorities of both countries, Canada has as yet no detailed knowledge of American strategic plans, of how offensive and defensive plans are integrated, and in what proportions the effort is to be divided. Moreover, the United States have understandably shown reluctance to discuss their overall plans. Since, however, Canada provides the essential areas for the establishment of the military installations required by the United States for her ultimate security, it is important that the Canadian Government should have fuller knowledge of U.S. plans. The only way in which this can be obtained is orally and at a high level.

E. G[ILL]

965.

PCO/Vol. 244

Note du secrétaire du Comité de la défense du Cabinet
Memorandum by Secretary, Cabinet Defence Committee

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Ottawa, January 7, 1948

RE CANADA—U.S. DEFENCE PLANNING

The Chiefs of Staff have delegated the responsibility for preparing draft plans to their planning officers, who, with their U.S. counterparts, service members of the Joint Defence Board, and civilian officials, comprise the Canada-U.S. Military Co-operation Committee.

2. The plans that are being developed consist of an appreciation and outline plan, with 12 appendices, (5 of which have been accepted for planning purposes by the Chiefs of Staff of both countries).

3. The basic document is a military war plan setting forth the resources required for continental defence in the event of an emergency. Preparatory measures which must be undertaken in peace time, if the plan is to be capable of implementation when required, are covered in annual "implementation programmes" which are subject to government approval, thus providing government control over planning generally. These programmes have been of modest proportions — that for the coming fiscal year includes research and mapping on an accelerated scale, and the establishment of an experimental chain in the early warning and air interceptor system. Canada's share will cost in the neighbourhood of $11,000,000. These programmes, however, will tend to become larger and will involve expenditures, both capital and recurring, on an increasing scale.

4. The status of the appendices to the Basic Security Plan is shown below.

(a) Accepted by the Chiefs of Staff of both countries for further planning purposes:

Meteorological; Hydrographic Survey, Mapping and Air Photography; Air Interceptor and Air Warning; Strategic Information; Anti-aircraft Ground Defence.

(b) In course of preparation, or awaiting consideration by Chiefs of Staff:

Strategic Air Reconnaissance; Air Navigation Aids; Sea Lines of Communication; Mobile Striking Force; Communications; Command Relations; Military Intelligence.

The most important from the standpoint of manpower and equipment requirements are:

(i) Air Interceptor and Air Warning, which envisages the installation and operation of some 44 radar stations in Canadian and Newfoundland territory;

(ii) Sea Lines of Communication, which does not state the force requirements because the U.S. planners could not agree. The number of escort and anti-submarine units in the planning paper was very large.

(iii) Communications, which envisages the establishment and operation of an extensive network of radio and cable communications in Canadian territory, designed to serve the military installations which are required under various parts of the Plan.

5. You may wish to discuss with Mr. Forrestal the rate of progress on planning; the type of plan that is being evolved; the implications of large peace time implementation programmes; and, whether a meeting of the Canadian and U.S. Chiefs of Staff, if this could be arranged without publicity, would be profitable.

E. G[ILL]

966.

CEW/Vol. 829

Note de l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis

Memorandum by Ambassador in United States

TOP SECRET

Washington, January 15, 1948

I accompanied Mr. Claxton when he called on President Truman at noon on January 14th. After the usual politenesses Mr. Claxton said that there were three questions which he would like to raise with Mr. Truman.

The first of these was the likelihood of the passage by Congress at this session of the bill authorizing the construction of the St. Lawrence Waterway. Mr. Truman said that he hoped that the Senate would act on the bill soon, and that he intended once the Senate had acted to send a special message to the House of Representatives urging the passage of the bill by the House. It might have a difficult time there, but he proposed to do what he could to get it through. He added that he had been a strong supporter of the waterway since he had first listened to the arguments in 1935 shortly after he entered the Senate.

The second question was whether the Inter-American Defence Co-operation Bill was likely to be adopted shortly. The President did not appear to be as well informed about this measure as about the St. Lawrence Waterway, but he indicated that it was the intention of the Administration to continue to press its adoption on Congress.

The third question was the largest and most difficult. Mr. Claxton asked the President whether he thought that relations with the Soviet Union had so deteriorated as to lead to the danger of war in the fairly near future. The President, who seemed to have weighed this matter many times, answered immediately that he thought there was little early danger of war, adding that in his view the danger now was less acute than it had been some eighteen months ago during the troubles in Northern Iran. He went on to state his hope that in time some sort of settlement with the Soviet Union would be developed. He said that he was confident that the United Nations would and could succeed. It was necessary, of course, for the United States to remain strong and to collaborate with Canada and other countries.

After some general discussion of service matters and the co-operation in defence between the two countries we took our departure for a luncheon with Mr. Forrestal, the Secretaries of the three Services and the Joint Chiefs of Staff. While Mr. Claxton did not so far as I am aware repeat in the same form at this luncheon the third question that he had put to the President, it seemed to me from the general discussion at the table that those present were by no means as confident as Mr. Truman that war would be avoided.

967.

CEW/Vol. 829

Note de l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis

Memorandum by Ambassador in United States

TOP SECRET

Washington, January 16, 1948

Mr. Claxton and I were invited following the luncheon in Mr. Forrestal's office on January 14th to attend a "briefing" on joint defence arrangements with Canada in the office of the Secretary of the Air Force, Mr. Stuart Symington. There were present Mr. Symington, General Spaatz<sup>36</sup> and the members of the U.S. Section of the P.J.B.D. (except Mr. Acheson).

<sup>36</sup> Carl Spaatz, chef d'état-major, USAF.

Carl Spaatz, Chief of Staff, Air Force of United States.

Colonel Deerwester<sup>37</sup> produced a chart showing the P.J.B.D., the Military Co-operation Committee and its various subcommittees, together with the methods used by these bodies for reporting to the Authorities of each country. He then read a paper which briefly summed up the activities of the P.J.B.D. and the Military Co-operation Committee.

The only question of importance that was raised at this stage was when Colonel Deerwester quoted an extract from the instructions given some months ago to the subcommittees of the Military Co-operation Committee. This concluded as follows: "It is considered that planning should proceed on the basis that the entire plan is capable of execution with one month's notice, if required, by 1st July, 1957." Mr. Symington questioned both the date of 1957 and the suggestion that a plan that then took one month to put into execution would be adequate.

On the first point it appeared from his comments and those of one or two of the officers present that the "safe period" before a serious attack on the North American Continent might take place in process of being shortened so that it will end in 1955 instead of 1957. (I understand that the report of the President's Air Policy Commission, just published, suggests the date of 1953.) This question is being subjected to a thorough study by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, which is near completion. The shortening of the period would obviously increase the annual implementation programs needed to give effect to the basic security plan.

On the second point Mr. Symington rather angrily asked what use was, for instance, an early-warning system which would not come into operation until a month after the first guided missiles might have been directed at North America. He was told that the month's grace to bring the plan into operation would not apply to all its aspects but only to some of them, and that the early-warning system would be operating on a twenty-four hour a day basis. In any event for all aspects of the joint plan the month would not begin from the date of the first attack, but from the date at which it was judged that an attack might be impending.

Mr. Symington then sought to end the meeting without any further discussion, but Mr. Claxton asked that it should continue for a few minutes and explained briefly some of the difficulties of a political nature on the Canadian side. We had hoped that a longer discussion could take place, if possible with some other senior officers both civil and military, but Mr. Symington was summoned to give testimony before a committee of Congress and had to leave for the Capitol. The discussion was, however, continued the same evening after a dinner at Blair House.

This dinner was given by the U.S. Section of the P.J.B.D with Mr. Acheson presiding. In addition to him there were present Generals Arnold and O'Donnell, Admiral Styer,<sup>38</sup> and Mr. Norman Armour and Mr. Foster of the State Department. The discussion was resumed with this partially different group for about an hour, after the men had left the ladies.

---

<sup>37</sup> Le colonel C.H. Deerwester, groupe de liaison avec les forces étrangères, ministère de la Défense des États-Unis.

Colonel C.H. Deerwester, Foreign Liaison Section, Department of Defense of United States.

<sup>38</sup> Représentants de l'armée, de l'aviation et de la marine de la section américaine de la CPCAD. Respectively Army, Air and Navy Members, US Section, PJB.D.

It was not an orderly discussion, partly due to the persistence of Admiral Styer in pushing his views and in interrupting others. He did not make at all a good impression on Mr. Claxton and myself, and I think that some of his colleagues were also displeased. General O'Donnell, who has just joined the P.J.B.D. as the representative of the Air Force, did not say very much, but what he had to say was sensible and restrained. General Arnold likewise did not take an active part.

Mr. Claxton's main concern was to impress on the Americans the need for close and tactful discussion with the Canadian authorities in connection with all joint defence activities. He pointed out that because of the differences of scale between the forces and resources of the two countries something which might seem almost trivial in Washington would have a very different appearance in Ottawa. The proposed installations at Resolute Bay were cited as a case in point.

As a result of a conversation which at times became almost heated, the views put forward by Mr. Claxton appeared to be accepted by all those present with the possible exception of Admiral Styer. Mr. Acheson and his colleagues now have, I think, a clearer conception of the reasons for caution and for careful clearance in dealing with Canada on these matters. From this talk and others during Mr. Claxton's visit it is apparent that we shall be subjected to strong pressure to agree to annual implementation programs in the North which will constitute a very considerable drain on our budget and resources unless we permit the United States to assume a very large proportion of the cost.

Mr. Claxton will, I hope, revise and expand this brief record of an important part of the discussions during his visit in Washington.

968.

PCO/Vol. 244

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion
du Comité de la défense du Cabinet*

*Extract from Minutes of Meeting
of Cabinet Defence Committee*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], January 27, 1948

* * *

CANADIAN—U.S. COLLABORATION IN DEFENCE; REPORT BY MR. CLAXTON ON HIS RECENT VISIT TO WASHINGTON

1. The Minister of National Defence presented an oral report on his recent visit to Washington. While the main purpose had been to see the Canadian Joint Staff, the National War College and the U.S. Naval Academy, an opportunity had been afforded to exchange views with senior government and service officials on the world situation, and on Canadian-U.S. defence arrangements.

With regard to the international situation, General Eisenhower and others felt real apprehension about developments in the eastern Mediterranean. Two alternative courses appeared open to them at this time — to do nothing, in which case the Arabs would probably wipe out the Jews in Palestine; or to provide forces for the maintenance of peace in that area, in which case charges of anti-Semitism would no doubt be raised in the United States and the antagonism of the Moslem world would be aroused. In either eventuality, it was not unlikely that the United States would lose control of their oil properties in the area. Furthermore, the provision of an international force, including Russian participation, might conceivably create a situation that would cause an accidental war to break out. It was of interest to observe that the United States were reviewing the eastern Mediterranean situation and assessing their responsibilities there in much the same way as the United Kingdom had done formerly.

With regard to Canada-U.S. defence arrangements, it was found that the United States point of view on some aspects differed materially from the Canadian. It was important that these differences be reconciled so as to eliminate the possibility of misunderstanding at a later date. Some of the points at issue were the result of the different methods of government in each country. For instance, it was apparent that once defence appropriations were approved by Congress, the services had a much greater margin of freedom in planning and carrying out their programmes than was the case in Canada. As a result, the Secretaries of the War Department were less familiar with details of Canada-U.S. planning than the Minister of National Defence or the government were here. Another factor was that Canada-U.S. planning represented a relatively small part of their whole strategic picture, while in Canada it naturally bulked much larger.

When these differences had been revealed, an opportunity had been taken to outline the Canadian position and to point out the different constitutional methods that prevailed, and also to explain that, although the arrangements were perhaps not of primary importance to them, they were of paramount importance to us, particularly since many of the joint projects would be undertaken in Canadian territory. One specific question brought out by these informal discussions was the extent to which the Canadian government was committed by the Chiefs of Staff being the approving authorities for the Basic Security Plan. While legally it was evident that the Canadian government were not committed to this plan, in practice it might prove very difficult to reject or modify implementation programmes on the basis that they were part of an "approved plan".

On his return, the Chiefs of Staff had been acquainted with this general situation, and they had been asked to report upon the role of the various agencies concerned with Canada-U.S. planning, and the implications of government and Chiefs of Staff decisions in connection therewith. It was proposed that the matter be then reviewed by the Cabinet Defence Committee which might, if they saw fit, ask the Chairman of the Canadian Section, P.J.B.D., to communicate a statement of the position to his colleagues, so that by this or some other appropriate means, it might be communicated to the United States Secretary for Defence. It was very important that this be done now, since joint defence measures were likely to increase, particularly if the recommendations contained in the Finletter Committee's report were acted upon. That committee had concluded that the United States should be prepared to defend themselves against large scale attack by January 1st, 1953, and to this end a large strategic Air Force should be ready to mount an attack against any country which broke the peace.

The President was perhaps more sanguine than his senior officials regarding the possibility of achieving a greater measure of co-operation with Russia.

2. The Chief of the General Staff, as Chairman of the Chiefs of Staff Committee, stated that their report on the questions raised by the Minister would be ready for consideration by the Cabinet Defence Committee within two weeks.

At first glance, it did not appear that any radical changes would be suggested in the organization for Canada-U.S. defence collaboration, but they would have some opinions to express on the interpretation to be placed on Canada accepting "plans" at the military level, and "implementation programmes" at the government level.

3. The Committee, after further discussion, noted with interest the Minister's report and approved arrangements made for an early review of Canada-U.S. defence collaboration.

...

969.

DEA/14-D (S)

*Note du secrétaire de la section canadienne
de la Commission permanente canado-américaine de défense*

Memorandum from Secretary, Canadian Section, Permanent Joint Board on Defence

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], February 17, 1948

General McNaughton gave me a brief account of a long conversation which he had with Mr. Brooke Claxton this morning. They touched on the following topics:

(a) Mr. Claxton's visit to Washington

Mr. Claxton found that Mr. Forrestal and the Secretaries of each of the three Service Departments had little knowledge of the functions or role of the P.J.B.D. Mr. Claxton did not, however, propose to write direct to Mr. Forrestal as suggested by the Chiefs of Staff. He prefers to rely on the Canadian members of the P.J.B.D. to make our views known to the U.S. members of the P.J.B.D.

(b) Implementation

Mr. Claxton thought that the P.J.B.D. should not become involved in implementation programmes or formulas for the division of responsibility. The P.J.B.D. would, of course, make recommendations to the Cabinet if they thought that the rate of implementation was not sufficiently rapid.

(c) Industrial mobilization

The Minister and the General agreed that on industrial mobilization there might eventually be a joint committee similar to the M.C.C.

(d) Arsenals

Mr. Claxton is hopeful that Dominion Arsenals could obtain contracts from the U.S. for the manufacture and sale of guns and aircraft, etc.

[D.M. JOHNSON]

SECTION C

VISITE À OTTAWA DU SECRÉTAIRE DE LA DÉFENSE DES ÉTATS-UNIS
VISIT TO OTTAWA OF UNITED STATES SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

970.

DEA/7-DA (S)

Note du secrétaire du Comité de la défense du Cabinet pour le Comité de la défense du CabinetMemorandum from Secretary, Cabinet Defence Committee, to Cabinet Defence Committee

TOP SECRET

Ottawa, August 11, 1948

CANADA—U.S. DEFENCE COLLABORATION; JOINT PROJECTS
IN CANADIAN TERRITORY<sup>39</sup>

Last year several joint projects were initiated in Canadian territory which were of importance for both defence and civilian purposes.

2. The current year's developments in connection with these projects are summarized below:

(a) Weather Station Programme

In the Arctic Archipelago, four weather stations are being operated jointly by the United States and Canada, two of which were established last year (Resolute and Eureka Sound) and two this spring (Ellef Rignes Island and Prince Patrick Island). This summer reconnaissance is being conducted for the sites of two more stations, one on North Ellesmere Island and another in the vicinity of Winter Harbour, Melville Island.

Two weather stations in the northeastern chain, Clyde River on Baffin Island and Mecatina, Quebec, are now being taken over from the United States Air Force by the Department of Transport, and this transfer will be completed next month. Plans provide that the station at Indian House Lake presently operated by the U.S.A.F. will be taken over by Canada in 1949.

A new weather station in northern Quebec will be in full operation this month and arrangements for the establishment of another are near completion. Operations at two stations on the Labrador Coast are being expanded to meet current requirements.

(b) Joint Experimental Station, Churchill

This station has operated for two winters as a Canadian-U.S. experimental and training establishment. At present a construction programme is underway to provide additional accommodation (capacity 825) including some married quarters. Next winter platoon training will be carried out and cold weather tests will be continued on clothing, equipment, general and technical stores, and railway equipment. U.S. participation in these tests will involve the employment of about 250 men.

<sup>39</sup> La note fut préparée pour la visite de Forrestal.

The memorandum was prepared for Forrestal's visit.

(c) Mapping and Charting Programme

The Royal Canadian Air Force, who are responsible for air photography in connection with the mapping and charting programme, have taken steps to speed up their operations by the acquisition of new equipment and training of personnel.

So far this year they have completed some 271,000 square miles of air photography required for medium and large scale maps and some 700,000 square miles of the reconnaissance photography suitable for small scale aeronautical charts. Field surveys, which are necessary before effective use can be made of this photography, have been initiated and it is anticipated that by next year the rate of photography and mapping will conform to programme requirements.

Complementary to this regular programme, the U.S. Air Force were authorized to carry out some air photography operations in the Canadian Archipelago and Newfoundland waters.

(d) Loran Programme

The experimental chain of five stations is now being used to train operators and technicians. It is scheduled to cease operations as a chain next October but three sites (Hamlin, Gimli and Regina) are to be retained temporarily for training purposes.

The main chain in northern Canada is now ready to undergo preliminary testing before it is declared operational. A team composed of Canadian and U.S. Air Force personnel is conducting the preliminary checking, using specially equipped aircraft (one B-29, one C-54 and one C-47). The data is being analysed by a civil agency and it is anticipated that the chain will be declared operative by November next.

A joint Canadian and U.S. Air Force survey party is now reconnoitring in north-eastern Canada for possible sites to be used in extending the LF Loran system. The siting and surveying of the sites is being done by two separate parties. The "siting party" performs air reconnaissance and subsequent preliminary ground reconnaissance, while the "survey party" follows up with a detailed survey of the sites selected, including mapping, core boring, etc. The air reconnaissance is about complete and surveys of the various sites will be advanced.

3. About 1,000 U.S. Service and civilian personnel are employed in these and other similar projects in Canada.

E.W.T. GILL

971.

DEA/7-DA (S)

*Note du secrétaire du Comité de la défense du Cabinet
pour le Comité de la défense du Cabinet*

Memorandum from Secretary, Cabinet Defence Committee, to Cabinet Defence Committee

TOP SECRET

Ottawa, August 11, 1948

CANADA—U.S. DEFENCE COLLABORATION; OTHER JOINT PROJECTS

In addition to the defence projects which are being undertaken jointly by the United States and Canada, arrangements exist for close co-operation between the Armed Services and research agencies of both countries.

2. The current year's developments are summarized below:

(a) Defence Planning

Canada-U.S. planning under the auspices of the Chiefs of Staff of each country has resulted in their acceptance, for planning purposes, of:

(i) An Appreciation of the requirements for Canadian-U.S. security.

(ii) A Basic Security Plan.

(iii) Some 9 out of 12 appendices to the Plan, covering various aspects of hemispheric defence.

Planning officers have drawn up programmes covering those measures which they recommend should be undertaken next year to implement the Plan. These will shortly be considered by the Canadian Chiefs of Staff and, when concurred in, submitted to the Cabinet Defence Committee.

Recently, the planning officers of both countries met to review the basic documents — the Appreciation and Plan — and any suggested revisions will be submitted to the U.S. and Canadian Chiefs of Staff in due course.

(b) Defence Research

Progress has been made in developing liaison arrangements between the Canadian Defence Research Board and U.S. defence research agencies. While mutually satisfactory arrangements have not been completed with all three Services in the United States, it is hoped that this will soon be achieved.

Several chemical warfare and biological warfare projects are underway with provision for exchange of personnel and information. Tests on Existence in the Arctic are being conducted at Churchill. Research in propellants, and explosives and armaments is being carried out on a tri-partite basis with the United Kingdom, United States and Canada participating. Collaboration on medical research, guided projectiles and electronics is now being initiated.

(c) Exchange of Personnel on Courses and Attachment

One hundred and nine Canadian Service personnel are reported to be undergoing training or taking courses in the United States, and about 5 U.S. personnel are similarly employed in Canada.

About 41 Canadian personnel are attached for duty to U.S. Services, against about 29 U.S. Service personnel similarly employed in Canada.

3. The general arrangements are subject to periodic review by the Canada-U.S. Permanent Joint Board on Defence.

E.W.T. GILL

972.

W.L.M.K./J4/Vol. 239

Procès-verbal de la réunion du Comité de la défense du Cabinet
Minutes of Meeting of Cabinet Defence Committee

TOP SECRET

Ottawa, August 31, 1948

A special meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee with the U.S. Secretary of Defense was held in the Privy Council Chamber, East Block, Ottawa, Canada, on Monday, August 16th, 1948, at 10:30 a.m.

Present:

- The U.S. Secretary of Defense (Mr. Forrestal),
- The U.S. Ambassador to Canada (Mr. Atherton),
- The Secretary of State for External Affairs and Acting Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), in the chair,
- The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton),
- The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe),
- The Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott),
- The Secretary (Mr. Gill)
- The Chief of the General Staff (Lieutenant General Foulkes),
- The Chief of the Air Staff (Air Marshal Curtis),
- The Chief of the Naval Staff (Vice Admiral Grant),
- The Chairman, Defence Research Board (Dr. Solandt),
- The Acting Secretary, Chiefs of Staff Committee (Lieutenant Colonel Rutherford).
- The Secretary to the Cabinet (Mr. Heeney),
- The Under Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson).
- The Chairman, Canadian Section, Permanent Joint Board on Defence (General McNaughton)

1. The Acting Prime Minister welcomed Mr. Forrestal on behalf of the Canadian government. Informal visits between Washington and Ottawa such as Mr. Forrestal's, although they aroused interest and speculation in the press, afforded an opportunity for members and officials of the U.S. and Canadian governments to exchange views on mutual problems in a truly democratic and informal manner.

2. The U.S. Secretary of Defence recalled Mr. Claxton's visit to Washington earlier this year and expressed pleasure at being able to pay a return visit here. His association with Canada had always been an intimate one and because he was made to feel so much at home he would find it difficult to be anything but informal in Canada.

Meetings such as this were not only agreeable but were useful in developing joint solutions to current problems of defence. A full exchange "organizationally" between the two countries was to be encouraged.

I. GENERAL SITUATION

3. The Minister of National Defence, on being asked by the Acting Prime Minister to proceed with the business of the meeting, explained that the Cabinet Defence Committee (composed of the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Defence), met on an average of about once a month to discuss defence problems.

In answer to inquiry by Mr. Forrestal, Mr. Claxton stated that the Cabinet Defence Committee was advisory to the Cabinet on all matters of important policy, but on problems involving no departure from settled policy it was customary for the Cabinet Defence Committee to make decisions for the government. Twice-yearly the Chiefs of Staff presented a joint appreciation of the military situation, one of which (usually presented in the autumn) was accompanied by proposed Service programmes for the ensuing fiscal year. These were reviewed by the Defence Committee as a preliminary to their consideration by the Cabinet and to Parliament being asked to vote the necessary funds to carry out the approved programmes.

The government's assessment of the international situation, which formed the basis of current defence planning should be summarized briefly so as to make sure that there was no important divergence in the general appreciations by Canada and the United States which were the basis of action in the two countries.

In our view, there were no limits to the aggressive intentions of the Soviet Union, but for the time being they would attempt to achieve them short of war. While war was not regarded as inevitable, it was prudent to plan as though it were. In the event of an accidental war in the near future, it was considered that it would not be the "push-button" type but rather that it would be fought with improved designs of the last war's weapons and that any attack against this continent would be diversionary in character.

Recently individual Chiefs of Staff had visited western European countries and had come to somewhat pessimistic conclusions as to their capabilities for effective resistance in the near future without substantial outside assistance. As was known, The Canadian government had, of late, taken a position in support of measures designed to strengthen Western Union.

4. The U.S. Secretary of Defense expressed himself as being in general agreement with the assessment of the international situation as outlined by Mr. Claxton. He would be inclined perhaps to attach greater importance to the atomic bomb and to the political reorientation of European countries. (Mr. Claxton said that in his reference to weapons he had intended to express the view that neither the possession nor the lack of the atomic bomb would be a determining factor in Russia going to war or not, with which Mr. Forrestal agreed.) Mr. Forrestal had been impressed with the way the Russians respected such countries as Finland and Turkey, who had shown a firm attitude towards the Soviet Union. If this attitude of firmness could be developed in Western European countries, it would be of incalculable benefit. One reason for the fact that Western European countries were not equipped with modern weapons was, in his view, the lack of planning during wartime for the post-war disposal of surplus war equipment.

5. The Minister of National Defence, referring to Canadian Armed Forces, said it was realized that Canada could not maintain in being forces of a sufficient size to act as a deterrent to war. It was the objective, therefore, to maintain, in addition to relatively small forces in being for local defence, efficient and up-to-date nucleus organizations (with a balanced relationship between the three Services) which could be expanded readily if the need arose. The main roles of the Canadian Services were likely to be:

Navy—the provision of an escort fleet to work in co-operation with the United Kingdom and United States navies in the North Atlantic;

Army—the provision of a highly mobile brigade group to deal with isolated raids on Canada and the build up of the reserve units initially to two divisions in the event of war;

Air Force—the provision of first-line fighter forces for interception and of other well balanced forces for training and for use in conjunction with those of other countries.

As part of the Air Force programme a jet-propelled two-seater fighter having long-range and special navigational features was being developed and if this proved successful it would be hoped that the plane would be useful to the United States and the United Kingdom.

Canada had demobilized somewhat faster than some of her allies and had at a relatively early date organized her Services on a post-war basis. The post-war organization provided for a considerable degree of unification and included provision for officer training at two joint service colleges — Royal Roads on the West Coast, and Royal Military College at Kingston as well as in the universities with well developed officer training programmes in successful operation. In addition staff training was provided at army and air force staff colleges and at National Defence College.

In reply to an enquiry from Mr. Forrestal, Mr. Claxton indicated that the present strength of the Active Forces was in the neighbourhood of 37,000, and the Reserve Forces (similar to the U.S. National Guard) about 35,000.

6. The U.S. Secretary of Defense said that the very large requirements for defence in the United States under present conditions placed a strain on the country's economy. There were two possible solutions to the problem — either a falling off of the civilian demand for goods which would permit larger allocations to the Services, or, alternatively, an improvement in the international situation which would permit a reduction in defence expenditures.

7. The meeting took note of these remarks.

II. CANADA-U.S. COLLABORATION IN DEFENCE; JOINT PROJECTS IN CANADIAN TERRITORY

8. The Minister of National Defence outlined briefly the current position in respect of joint projects in Canadian territory.

Within the approved meteorological programme, four weather stations were now being operated jointly in the Canadian Arctic and the sites of two more were being reconnoitred. Replacement of U.S. by Canadian staffs in the northeastern chain had been initiated, and responsibility for manning two of these stations would be transferred this year.

The installations at Churchill, which had been constructed by the United States during the last war, had been purchased by the Canadian government in 1945. Since then these facilities had been operated as an experimental and training establishment with the U.S. Services participating. Some 600 Canadian and 200 U.S. personnel would be stationed there next winter and would continue various cold weather tests on clothing, equipment and ionospheric data. The co-operation between the Services of both countries at this station was impressive and might serve as a model for all joint activities.

With regard to the Loran programme, the five station experimental chain in western Canada would be discontinued but three stations would probably be retained temporarily for training purposes. The main chain in northern Canada would shortly become operational. Canadian-U.S. parties were presently reconnoitering sites for additional stations in northeastern Canada.

Some 1,000 U.S. Service personnel were employed on all projects in Canada.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(The Secretary's memorandum, August 11th, 1948 — Cabinet Document D188).

9. The Chairman, Canadian Section, Permanent Joint Board on Defence spoke of the problem that had been created through the assignment of frequencies by international agreement at the world telecommunications conferences last year. This had resulted in a reallocation from 180 kilocycles to 100 kilocycles for Loran purposes and this necessitated the use of 1200 feet towers instead of 600 feet.

At the instigation of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, the appropriate agencies in both countries were exploring the possibility of negotiating a different arrangement.

10. The U.S. Ambassador to Canada asked if developments in aircraft and the construction of a chain of air bases in northern United States would reduce the strategic importance of air bases in Newfoundland and Labrador.

11. The U.S. Secretary of Defense indicated that while it would be feasible to operate from bases in northern United States, adequate air coverage was conditioned by distance and, in his opinion, the development and operation of air bases in Newfoundland and Labrador would continue to be strategically important.

12. The Minister of National Defence referred to the importance of some bases for anti-subversive activities.

13. The meeting, after further discussion, noted these remarks.

III. CANADA-U.S. COLLABORATION IN DEFENCE; ORGANIZATION AND GENERAL ARRANGEMENTS

14. The Minister of National Defence reviewed, with the aid of charts, the organization developed to promote Canadian-U.S. collaboration in defence. The keystone of this was, of course, the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, which, though it possessed no executive functions and was not responsible for planning per se, kept under review and advised the respective governments on general arrangements for defence co-operation between the two countries.

Defence planning, which was under the auspices of the Chiefs of Staff of each country, had so far resulted in the preparation and acceptance for planning purposes by the Chiefs of Staff of each country of an Appreciation, a Basic Security Plan, and some 9 out of 12 appendices to the Plan. The Canadian government had not considered the individual appendices. The implementation programmes for each year were subject to express government approval. Steps had been taken to ensure that the Canadian officers engaged in this planning reflected the views of their Chiefs of Staff and were aware of government policy.

In the important field of defence research, close liaison arrangements had been established between Dr. Solandt and Dr. Bush,<sup>40</sup> and between the interested agencies of both countries.

In the exchange of service personnel, considerable progress had been made. At present there were some 41 Canadian officers attached for duty to the U.S. Services and 29 U.S. officers similarly employed in Canada. In addition, there were over 100 Canadian Service personnel undergoing training or taking courses in the United States, against 5 U.S. personnel in Canada. With the establishment of the National Defence College and other training establishments, some increase was looked for in the latter figure.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(The Secretary's memorandum, August 11th, 1948 — Cabinet Document D189).

15. The meeting noted these remarks.

IV. INDUSTRIAL CO-OPERATION; STANDARDIZATION; PROCUREMENT BY CANADA OF U.S.-TYPE WEAPONS AND STORES

16. The Chief of the General Staff, at the request of the Minister of National Defence, outlined briefly the progress made in standardization. Initially the problem had been approached on a joint service basis between the United States, United Kingdom and Canada, but it was now proceeding on an individual Service basis.

Fair progress could be reported in standardizing operational and logistical techniques but progress on material had been slow. It was important to realize that unless a common equipment policy was evolved the strategical plans which were being made might be incapable of effective implementation.

In the Canadian Army military equipment was now being classified in three groups — those items normally manufactured in Canada; those which could be manufactured here by conversion of existing facilities; and, those which must be procured outside. Great importance was attached by the Chiefs of Staff to the completion of arrangements for the procurement by Canada of certain items of U.S. equipment.

17. The Chief of the Air Staff pointed out that prior to June 30th last Canada had been able to procure military equipment from the United States, if it had been declared surplus, but on that date Public Law No. 862 had been signed prohibiting this. Unless some means were found for Canadian Services to procure equipment from U.S. Services, the related objectives of standardization and joint defence co-operation would be seriously handicapped.

<sup>40</sup> Vannevar Bush.

18. The Minister of National Defence observed this matter was one of immediate concern. For example, the Canadian government had recently made sales of small arms ammunition to Greece and Turkey, financed by the United States. If further sales of this kind could be made and stocks replenished with .300 Rimless, an important step towards standardization would have been taken.

19. The Minister of Trade and Commerce suggested that the objective was the revival of wartime arrangements for rationalizing war production of both countries. This would permit war equipment to be made available on a trading basis. Such an arrangement would not cause a drain on Canada's reserve of U.S. dollars and would not aggravate shortages of steel and other strategic materials in the United States.

20. The U.S. Secretary of Defense agreed that the solution of this problem should be found jointly by the United States and Canada. It should be given further study with this end in view.

21. The Chairman, Canadian Section, Permanent Joint Board on Defence reported that one of the most important achievements of the Board since the war had been the impetus it had given to the standardization of screw threads between the United Kingdom, the United States and Canada. This development, which was regarded as the key to the standardization problem, would be brought to a successful conclusion this autumn.

22. The meeting were in general agreement that the problem described by the Chiefs of Staff should be examined further on a joint basis.

V. STOCKPILING

23. The Minister of Trade and Commerce mentioned that some thought had been given to the question of stockpiling strategic materials. In a few cases contracts had been made between Canadian producers and the U.S. government under which sales were being made for stockpiling purposes. Canada had not yet taken similar action but the productive capacity of non-ferrous metals had been greatly increased and might be further expanded in an emergency. Co-ordinated or joint action in the stockpiling of strategic metals would be facilitated by the recent U.S. decision to discontinue their tariffs on base metals and thus permit sales of these materials from Canada to the United States.

24. The U.S. Secretary of Defense observed that joint action in this field appeared to offer the best solution.

25. The meeting were in general agreement that this subject should be further explored jointly by the United States and Canada.

VI. ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

26. The Minister of Trade and Commerce brought up the question of the likelihood of Congress approving the St. Lawrence waterways scheme (both power and navigation) at their next session.

If the Ontario and State of New York power authorities were granted permission to proceed with the power portion of the project as they had applied to do, the navigation part of the project might be jeopardized. An important strategic consideration in support of the navigation scheme was the means it would provide for transporting iron ore from the Labrador deposits to the upper lake region.

27. The Chief of the Naval Staff added that the deepening of the St. Lawrence waterway would increase building facilities for both war and merchant ships by permitting the use of the dockyards in the upper lakes.

28. The meeting took note of these remarks.

VII. U.S. BASES IN NEWFOUNDLAND

29. The U.S. Secretary of Defense asked whether Newfoundland's entry into confederation with Canada would involve a renegotiation of the bases Agreement. If any discussions were contemplated, would they be conducted between the United Kingdom and the United States, or Canada and the United States.

30. The Minister of National Defence indicated that any talks on this subject would properly be between Canada and the United States. It was hoped and expected that these talks would result in satisfactory arrangements being reached.

31. The meeting noted these remarks.

E.W.T. GILL

973.

DEA/52-N (S)

Le secrétaire de la Défense des États-Unis au ministre de la Défense nationale

Secretary of Defense of United States to Minister of National Defence

[Washington], August 31, 1948

My dear Brooke [Claxton]:

This is an informal letter, copies of which I am not putting into my official records.

The three subjects which remain in my mind as the matters of principal substance in our conversations this month in Ottawa are:

- (1) The St. Lawrence Seaway.
- (2) Standardization of procurement, which will enable reciprocal orders to be placed across the border.
- (3) The American bases in Newfoundland.

There is a fourth subject — the question of the radar screen for the North — but technical considerations, particularly the question of whether or not we now know the advanced forms of apparatus which we should buy probably make this subject one for exploration rather than any joint action. I am having a presentation on 9 September which deals with this subject and while strategic considerations enter into it, its principal aspect is the question of the rate at which production will reflect new technical, and even some basic scientific, developments.

I am reciting these matters because I thought it would be useful if we both had in mind the objectives toward which policy and actions might be directed.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES FORRESTAL

974.

DEA/325 (S)

Le ministre de la Défense nationale au secrétaire de la Défense des États-Unis

Minister of National Defence to Secretary of Defence of United States

Ottawa, September 9, 1948

Dear Jim [Forrestal],

Thanks very much for your letter of 31st August, 1948, which I was glad to get. You put very well the points brought out in our discussion.

I had the Secretary of the Cabinet Defence Committee prepare a note of the discussion as if our meeting had been a regular meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee, which in point of fact it was. This note is being sent to Hume Wrong for transmission to you. You will see that the three points you mention are dealt with there.

It strikes me that a step of primary importance which should be taken just as soon as possible is to work out arrangements whereby orders for equipment on the same designs can be placed on both sides of the border so as to develop in peace the same rationalization of the industrial strength of the two nations that we had following the Hyde Park Declaration of April, 1941.

This involves,

(1) the enactment of legislation by Congress along the lines of the bill introduced at its last session;

(2) the adoption of common patterns, a matter on which the armies of the two countries have made very great progress and our army is ready to present complete schedules once the question of policy has been settled;

(3) the development of a procedure for handling orders for equipment, so that a Canadian order would be added to one made by your services and vice versa.

You will recall our discussing in passing the possibility of our shipping to friendly European countries equipment we now have of British designs and replacing this with equipment of American patterns. Unless some such procedure could be followed it would take years for us to get over to American designs.

Under our system the subject of procurement is the direct responsibility of Mr. Howe as Minister of Trade and Commerce, acting through the agency of Canadian Commercial Corporation which does all the purchasing for the services. It occurred to me that it would be desirable that the useful talks we had here should be followed up by Mr. Howe or some of his officers discussing with you or the appropriate officials in Washington what further steps should now be taken along the lines raised here.

Mr. Howe has to go to Washington fairly soon on other business and it might be possible that this could also be dealt with without raising in the press the kind of excited speculation which is so common these days.

I have discussed this with Mr. Howe and he agrees that it would probably be the best course to follow. If you concur, he would proceed to make the necessary arrangements.

Meanwhile, as you know, representatives of your National Security Resources Board and Munitions Board have met with representatives of our Industrial Defence Board and they have recommended the formation of a committee consisting of the chairmen of the three boards to plan cooperation in industrial organization. This suggestion is still under consideration here. It may be that some such committee would be useful for long term and general planning, whereas specific questions of standardization and procurement should be dealt with directly between the services and their purchasing agencies. Our Cabinet Defence Committee is meeting officers of the Industrial Defence Board here next Tuesday to discuss this. It would be of great assistance if you could let me know what your own view is on this.

Yours sincerely,
BROOKE CLAXTON

SECTION D

COOPÉRATION CANADO-AMÉRICAIN EN MATIÈRE DE PRODUCTION
ET D'APPROVISIONNEMENT MILITAIRES
CANADIAN-AMERICAN COOPERATION IN DEFENCE PRODUCTION AND SUPPLY

975.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], April 19, 1948

INDUSTRIAL DEFENCE BOARD

14. The Minister of National Defence reported that the Cabinet Defence Committee had considered and decided to recommend to Cabinet the establishment of an advisory body on industrial defence.

The functions of the board would be to advise the government on matters relating to industrial war potential, to plan for production in the event of emergency, to ensure adequate coordination with agencies interested, to encourage standardization, and generally to go into such related matters as the government or the Minister might request.

The board would consist of a chairman, a vice-chairman and members chosen from within the government service and from industry.

(Departmental memorandum, Industrial Defence Board, undated;† Cabinet Defence Committee minutes, Apr.15, 1948, paras. 26-30)†

15. Mr. Claxton submitted recommendations for the officers and members of the Board if and when its establishment were approved by the Cabinet.

16. The Cabinet, after discussion:

(a) agreed to the establishment of an advisory board to be known as "The Industrial Defence Board" along the lines indicated by the Minister and as recommended by the Cabinet Defence Committee; an Order in Council to that effect to be passed forthwith; and,

(b) approved the Minister's recommendation for the appointment of officers and members of the Board and agreed that an Order in Council be passed accordingly.

976.

DEA/50006-40

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

Washington, July 14, 1948

Dear Mr. Pearson:

During your absence in the West I wrote to Mr. Johnson on June 17th† concerning the visit to Washington earlier last month of the Executive Committee of the Industrial Defence Board. In the course of this letter I mentioned a proposal which had been tentatively agreed on between those directly concerned, that a small, high level committee be established to co-ordinate the planning of industrial mobilization in the United States and Canada. The suggestion was that the committee should consist of the Chairman of the I.D.B. and the Chairmen of the Munitions Board and National Security Resources Board here.

A few days ago Colonel Denney, the Executive Secretary of the I.D.B. asked my advice, on Mr. Carmichael's request, about clearing the proposal for the establishment of this committee. I said that I thought that it should receive governmental sanction on both sides, probably by a Cabinet decision in Ottawa and perhaps by agreement between the Secretaries of Defence and State in Washington. In view of the probability of a change of Administration here, it would be desirable to have high-level sanction for the committee's activities. If the proposal is approved, the terms of reference might be set out in an exchange of notes or in an agreed press statement at the appropriate time.

We have just forwarded to Mr. Johnson a letter from the Secretary of the U.S. Section of the P.J.B.D. on this subject.† (See Mr. Magann's letter to Mr. Johnson of July 13th).† This encloses a proposal emanating from the staff of the National Security Resources Board, and sets forth a number of comments and criticisms of this proposal put forward by the U.S. Section of the P.J.B.D.

As we get deeply into the planning of industrial and economic mobilization, we shall, I think, find that the activities of the responsible planning agencies in both countries touch on the functions of almost every branch of government, and also that there is an ever present need in many fields for co-ordinating planning between Canada and the United States. In the event of war Canada would be saved a lot of trouble, anxiety and hard work if joint plans prepared in advance which would look after our interests were promptly applied. I therefore favour close and continuous liaison.

The main planning agencies in both countries — the N.S.R.B. and the I.D.B. — are newly created and have still to get themselves established fully. There has already been some controversy here about the extent of the mandate claimed by the Chairman of the N.S.R.B., and the relationship between that Board and the Munitions Board is not clearly defined.

The U.S. Section of the P.J.B.D. is proposing that the P.J.B.D. should discuss the problem at its August meeting in New York. They suggest, as I understand Mr. Foster's letter to Mr. Magann of July 9th, that instead of the high-level committee of the three Chairmen there should be a lower level committee which would exercise in the field of industrial mobilization functions comparable to those of the Military Co-operation Committee in the military field. The P.J.B.D. would be left with over-all responsibility for supervising joint defence planning in both its military and its civil aspects.

I am not sure that I like this proposal, but the subject is extremely complex and I have no pat suggestion to offer in its place. It seems to me to need a good deal of thought before we commit ourselves to a form of organization, and it would be desirable that the matter should be considered in Ottawa before the August meeting of the P.J.B.D. so that the Canadian Section could then take a positive line. Some Ministerial guidance might be sought when the Cabinet Defence Committee meets later this month.

Both the N.S.R.B. here and the I.D.B. in Canada have wide terms of reference. Those of the N.S.R.B. are more explicit in that they specify its responsibility for planning the protection of the needs of the civil economy in matters such as manpower, allocation of materials, rationing, fiscal policies and so on. There is, however, a basket clause in the I.D.B.'s terms of reference which would permit them to explore these subjects if it is so desired although they are not charged directly with this responsibility.

One aspect to be considered in relation to the problem is the planning of civil defence in both countries. This is just beginning to get under way. Mr. R.J. Hopley has recently been designated to head the newly formed Civil Defence Authority in Washington, and the Department of National Defence in Ottawa is beginning to work on this subject. Dr. Solandt had some discussions on this matter during his recent visit to Washington. As planning of civil defence includes such questions as the dispersal of utilities, town and city planning and the organization of emergency services, it clearly cannot be separated from the planning of industrial mobilization.

Yours sincerely,

H.H. WRONG

977.

DEA/50014-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire du Cabinet*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary to Cabinet*

SECRET

Washington, July 16, 1948

Dear Mr. Heeneey:

I have read with interest the conclusions enclosed with your letter of July 7th of the meeting held on July 2nd to discuss economic defence planning.<sup>41</sup> Just before your letter reached me I had despatched a letter to Mr. Pearson commenting on a proposal for the establishment of a high-level co-ordinating committee made up of the Chairman of the Canadian Industrial Defence Board and the Chairmen of the U.S. National Security Resources Board and Munitions Board. I expect that a copy of this letter will have gone to you. If not, I hope you will secure one together with a copy of the comments on the proposal of the U.S. Section of the P.J.B.D. which were forwarded with Mr. Magann's letter to Mr. D.M. Johnson of July 13th.† You will note that it is intended that the question of co-ordinating the planning of industrial mobilization in the two countries is to be discussed by the P.J.B.D. in a month's time.

It seems to me that it would be desirable as one result of the examination this summer in Ottawa of economic defence planning that the functions of the Industrial Defence Board should be more exactly defined. In doing this, it should be borne in mind that the National Security Resources Board here covers the whole field of economic defence planning in its activities, not only the planning of industrial mobilization — a function which it shares with the Munitions Board. I notice from the conclusions of the meeting of July 2nd (page 6) that primary responsibility for planning in Ottawa in a number of very important fields which are here covered by the N.S.R.B. has been allocated to various civil departments. Many of these subjects are interlocked with the problems of industrial mobilization, which is the responsibility of the I.D.B.

<sup>41</sup> Le but principal de cette réunion avait été de donner un briefing au Dr. W.A. Macintosh de l'université Queen's (qui avait travaillé aux ministères des Finances et de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements) avant qu'il ne commence à écrire les parties économiques du nouveau livre de guerre du gouvernement ainsi qu'à préparer un rapport sur l'organisation et le contrôle des ressources économiques en temps de guerre. Un rapport détaillé de cette réunion se trouve sur DEA/50014-40.

The main purpose of that meeting had been to brief Dr. W.A. Macintosh of Queen's University (who had served in the Departments of Finance and of Reconstruction and Supply) before he commenced work on the economic sections of a new Government War Book as well as the preparation of a report on organization and control of economic resources in wartime. There is a detailed record of this meeting on DEA/50014-40.

In paragraph 23 of the conclusions of the meeting of July 2nd it is said that Dr. Mackintosh understood that I wished inquiries on U.S. planning to be funnelled through External Affairs rather than to be taken up directly with U.S. agencies. I do not recall ever having expressed such an opinion. Dr. Mackintosh's impression may have been based on my message WA-1817 of June 22nd† which concluded with the observation, "I am sure that we should settle our channels of communication and define more exactly what we need before approaching the U.S. authorities." As the context showed, what I had in mind was that, in view of the liaison established between the I.D.B. and the N.S.R.B., we ought not to approach the civilian departments concerned in Washington or make a series of unrelated approaches to the N.S.R.B. until we had settled our own plans more firmly. I doubt that it would be practicable to put all inquiries through a single channel. Indeed, the representative here of the Defence Research Board has recently been in contact with N.S.R.B. on certain questions concerning civil defence. Various aspects of economic defence planning also fall within the general responsibilities of the Joint Staff Mission.

Economic defence planning is an untidy subject because it touches on all phases of economic activities. By establishing the N.S.R.B. the United States Government has created what looks like a tidy plan for dealing with it, but we can be sure that in this untidy system of government it will not work out that way. I hope that Dr. Mackintosh will be able to develop this summer a Canadian method of operation which will be both tidy and efficient.

Yours sincerely,
H.H. WRONG

978.

DEA/50014-40

*Le secrétaire du Cabinet
au ministre de la Défense nationale*
*Secretary to Cabinet
to Minister of National Defence*

SECRET AND PERSONAL

Ottawa, July 19, 1948

Dear Brooke [Claxton]:

This is a purely personal letter.

I was disturbed last week to learn first from Max Mackenzie and then from others that members of the executive and staff of the Industrial Defence Board were taking into the Board's territory almost every conceivable function which might be described as economic and that they were putting up to you a most elaborate plan for the purpose.

Mackenzie told me that the Board's secretary (who has recently returned from a course in the United States) had been working over-time to produce a scheme based on the American model which divided up under the Board everything from munitions production to manpower.

In view of the responsibility which had been put upon Mackintosh and the steps taken since the meeting in your office, I felt quite sure that this conception of the Board's functions was quite wrong, and that, if it were not corrected at an early stage, confusion all round and soreness in several quarters would be the inevitable result.

In a brief conversation with Harry Carmichael<sup>42</sup> and Geoff. Notman<sup>43</sup> before the Board meeting, I intimated to them tactfully that, in my view, it was important that the Board's plans should be related pretty closely to those of the principal departments concerned. I suggested (and Carmichael at once agreed) that it would be useful if Mackintosh and Gill were to attend the Board's meeting so that what was being done by others could be explained. Fortunately, Mackintosh was in town and did attend and I understand from Gill that, as you would expect, he handled the situation with great finesse. I gather that there were a number of the members of the Board who were very sceptical of the plan produced by the secretariat and put forward by the executive. The decision, I think, was to put forward the scheme to you in order that you might indicate clearly the government's intentions.

My concern is added to this morning by a letter which I have from Hume Wrong referring to the "high level coordinating committee" (of which Carmichael told me) to be made up of the Chairman of the Industrial Defence Board and the Chairmen of the U.S. National Security Resources Board and Munitions Board. No doubt this is a good idea and much can be accomplished by early coordination on this level between Canadian and U.S. industry. But the Americans have got themselves into a state of complicated duplication of organization and it seems to me very important that, before the government agree to this new high-powered mechanism, definitions of function should be precise and Carmichael should know just what is expected of his Board.

In this whole business I have vivid recollections of the difficulties we had in the last war because of the gap between those responsible for war production on one hand and those responsible for civilian supply and manpower on the other, to say nothing of the difficulty of coordinating the former group with the requirements of the Armed Services. Before the war was over, fairly satisfactory arrangements were <sup>42</sup> H.G. Carmichael, vice-président de la compagnie Conroy Manufacturing de St. Catherines en Ontario, et Président de l'IDB (Commission sur la défense industrielle).

H.G. Carmichael, Vice-President of Conroy Manufacturing Company of St. Catherines, Ontario, and Chairman, IDB.

<sup>43</sup> J.G. Notman, directeur général de Dominion Engineering Works Ltd. de Montréal et membre de l'IDB.

J.G. Notman, General Manager of Dominion Engineering Works Ltd. of Montreal and Member, IDB.

hammered out by direct contacts between controllers, administrators and the rest. But next time we should try hard to anticipate the difficulty and provide against it in our planning.

I realize that it is of the greatest practical importance to retain and extend to the maximum measure the interest and support of industrialists. But I believe this can be accomplished without friction and without duplication and inefficiency in organization provided that all of the key people are brought along together and step by step. This is a difficult process, requiring constant attention and a number of good people. Mackintosh is very widely experienced on both sides and can be of great value.

Perhaps we could have a chat on the subject before you deal with the Board's report. Afterwards, I think it would be profitable for you to see Max Mackenzie, Mackintosh and one or two others. There is plenty of experience available and it should be tapped to the full.

I am enclosing a memorandum which I dictated last week in the hope that it might be of some help to you. I am also enclosing a copy of the letter from Hume Wrong to which I refer above.

Yours ever,

A.D.P. HEENEY

979.

DEA/50014-40

*Note du secrétaire du Cabinet
pour le ministre de la Défense nationale*

*Memorandum from Secretary to Cabinet
to Minister of National Defence.*

SECRET

Ottawa, July 19, 1948

RE INDUSTRIAL AND ECONOMIC PLANNING FOR DEFENCE

You will be receiving shortly after you return a report from the Industrial Defence Board who have been meeting in Ottawa this week. Their report will include an elaborate scheme for the organization of defence planning in all sectors of the industrial and economic life of the nation.

2. Planning responsibility has already been assigned tentatively in fields other than that of war industry as a result of the meeting which you arranged under Cabinet Defence Committee auspices between Dr. Mackintosh and senior officials of External Affairs, Finance, Trade and Commerce, Labour, Agriculture and other departments. Departments and agencies of government are now actively coordinating plans in consultation with him. A preliminary report will be available in the early autumn.

3. The Industrial Defence Board has a small permanent staff, but it differs essentially from the agencies referred to in the preceding paragraph. The latter form part of the regular machinery of government and, in each case, would have immediate administrative responsibility in the event of their plans having to be put into effect.

4. There is confusion in many quarters concerning the extent and nature of the Industrial Defence Board's responsibility. It became evident at this week's meetings that some members of the Board conceive this task to be no less than the preparation of emergency plans for the whole economy; others have in mind the more limited field of advice on the planning of war production.

5. It is not too late to settle this question without serious friction. An occasion arises immediately for precise definition and delimitation of the Board's functions upon submission of their current report which, I understand, will ask for direction in this respect.

6. The Board consists for the most part of industrialists whose good-will, experience, enthusiasm and advice are of great importance to the government against an emergency. The "non-official" members of the Board can themselves be of great assistance in the event of war and they are capable of inducing a most desirable element of cooperation on the part of industry as a whole. For this reason, determination of the Board's functions will have to be made tactfully as well as precisely.

7. The aim should be to bring the Board's planning at once into direct and effective relationship to the coordinated planning being done by departments and agencies under the Cabinet Defence Committee. This can be accomplished by a precise definition of the Board's functions and assisted by some changes in the Board's executive committee and readjustment of the Board's permanent staff.

8. The problem is a complicated one and it will almost certainly require continuing attention. The following are suggested first steps:

(a) An interpretation of the Board's terms of reference by letter from the Minister to the Chairman as relating to organization and methods of industrial production for war; the Board should be asked to relate their recommendations in this field directly to planning of the Armed Services and the government agencies responsible for civilian supply, manpower, food production and so on.

(b) The Board might be asked to collaborate with government officials in the drafting of a satisfactory interpretation of functions; for this purpose the Board's executive committee might be asked to meet with Dr. Mackintosh and four or five of the senior officers of the principal departments concerned.

(c) Definitions are not in themselves enough. The addition to the Board's executive committee of the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce might help materially. This department is responsible for the Canadian Commercial Corporation which is the probable nucleus of a future Department of Munitions and Supply.

(d) A strengthening of the Board's permanent staff is probably necessary and their direct relationship to the Cabinet Defence Committee and the Department of Trade and Commerce is essential.

A.D.P. H[EENEY]

980.

DEA/50006-40

*Le secrétaire du Cabinet
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary to Cabinet
to Ambassador in United States*

SECRET

Ottawa, July 22, 1948

Dear Mr. Wrong:

I was interested to get your letter of July 16th, commenting upon the record which we sent you of the meeting held on July 2nd to consider economic defence planning. At that time, I had been unaware of the extent and precise nature of the proposal which is to come before the P.J.B.D. at their August meeting for the establishment of a high level Canada-U.S. committee for the coordination of industrial mobilization in the two countries.

There is no question that the functions of our Industrial Defence Board should be defined precisely at the earliest possible moment. I heard before their meetings last week that they would have before them an ambitious scheme prepared by the Secretary of the Board (Mr. Denney) which, from all accounts, seemed to take in the organization of the whole economy of the country for war. I had an opportunity of speaking to Carmichael before the full Board met and arranged for Mackintosh to attend the meeting in order that members of the Board might be aware of what economic planning was being done by various branches of the government. I am not sure that all members of the Board were satisfied that the Board's functions should be confined to the planning of war production, but I think that the atmosphere was prepared for an appropriate delimitation of the Board's responsibility.

When the Minister of National Defence returned on Monday, I drew the matter to his attention and suggested that the occasion of the Board's report should be taken for an interpretation of the Board's terms of reference in the more limited sense. I suggested that the Board should be asked to relate their recommendations in their own field to planning of the Armed Services and to the planning of government agencies responsible for civilian supply, manpower, food production, and so on. I am hopeful that, before long, the situation will be satisfactorily clarified.

With respect to the proposal for a Canada-U.S. coordinating committee, you will have heard that the U.S. Section of the P.J.B.D. have distinct reservations. For our part, we are inclined to think that the Cabinet Defence Committee should examine the proposal pretty carefully before any decision is taken. The proposal seems to have been conceived on the basis of U.S. organization and confusion of function, and it appears to me to be related directly to the elaborate Industrial Defence Board's plans to which I have referred, without much regard to the fact that the Cabinet is at the centre of the Canadian system of government.

In the matter of channels of communication, this must be a constant source of concern to you. I well remember the difficulties which we ran into in Washington during the last war particularly. However, there is not much that we can do to straighten this out in the economic defence fields until, as you say, our own situation is a good deal clearer.

I will try to keep you in touch with developments.

Yours sincerely,

A.D.P. HEENEY

P.S. Since this hurried letter was dictated, it has been arranged that the proposal for the high level Canada-U.S. committee will not be discussed by the P.J.B.D. at their next meeting. With the approval of the Minister of National Defence it will be examined first by the Cabinet Defence Committee.

Incidentally, I was talking to Mr. Claxton this morning and he intends to settle the Industrial Defence Board's functions on the pattern of the old Department of Munitions and Supply. This, I think, will be satisfactory and will have the advantage of giving familiar precedents to members of the I.D.B.

A.D.P. H[EEENEY]

981.

PCO/Vol. 246

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion
du Comité de la défense du Cabinet*

*Extract from Minutes of Meeting
of Cabinet Defence Committee*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], July 29, 1948

. . .

II. PROPOSED ARRANGEMENTS FOR LIAISON WITH THE UNITED STATES ON INDUSTRIAL DEFENCE MATTERS

5. The Minister of National Defence reported that at a recent meeting between representatives of the Canadian Industrial Defence Board and the U.S. National Security Resources Board and the Munitions Board, it had been agreed that joint committees be established to promote the exchange of information between the two governments and co-ordinate their activities in connection with industrial mobilization planning. The senior committee would consist of the Chairmen of the three Boards mentioned.

This proposal was scheduled to be discussed at the August meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. According to reports, the U.S. Section of the Board had some reservations about the desirability of setting up a high level committee such as that contemplated. From the Canadian point of view, it was questionable whether liaison should be established through the medium of the Industrial Defence Board, whose functions were purely advisory.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(The Secretary's memorandum, 26th July, 1948 — Cabinet Document D183)†

6. The Secretary to the Cabinet suggested that a decision on this matter might be deferred pending the outcome of current planning in the economic defence field. This, it would be recalled, was proceeding under the guidance of Dr. W.A. Mackintosh, and a report could be expected in early September. This report, it was hoped, would lead to a more precise definition of responsibilities and functions as between the government departments and agencies concerned.

7. The Committee, after further discussion, agreed that, while it was desirable to have the maximum exchange of information and co-operation with the United States in industrial mobilization planning and for this purpose to develop appropriate joint arrangements, decision as to the nature of such joint arrangements be deferred pending consideration by the Committee of preliminary plans for economic defence planning generally and decision upon allocation of responsibilities in this field to departments and agencies of the Canadian government; Canadian representatives on the Permanent Joint Board on Defence to be instructed to indicate the government's attitude in this sense.

...

982.

DEA/50014-40

*Le secrétaire du Cabinet
au ministre de la Défense nationale*

*Secretary to Cabinet
to Minister of National Defence*

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, September 13, 1948

Dear Mr. Claxton:

RE INDUSTRIAL DEFENCE BOARD; FUNCTIONS

The Executive Committee of the Industrial Defence Board are submitting to Cabinet Defence Committee, tomorrow proposals for:

- (a) "Organization and Industrial Preparedness Planning; and
- (b) "A Joint Canadian-U.S. Committee on Industrial Mobilization."

In this connection there has been circulated a memorandum setting out their proposals in some detail.

The "Organization" proposed by the officers of the Board (as will be seen from the chart attached thereto)† is elaborate and, superficially at least, complicated. The submission in support of it gives no clear indication of how the Board would be fitted into the ordinary machinery of government. There is no mention of the planning being done by other agencies of government in the economic field. There is confusion between executive and advisory functions.

It seems to me that it would be a mistake for the Cabinet Defence Committee to approve this plan at this stage — whatever the merits of the plan may be. Economic emergency planning in other sectors is proceeding in connection with the preparation of the government War Book and these plans are being brought together later this month at a meeting with Dr. Mackintosh. Arrangements for industrial mobilization planning should be coordinated with this work.

It seems to me that there is confusion as to the functions of the Industrial Defence Board and that a clear understanding of the nature of the Board is essential to its effective operation. I suggest that its primary functions are four-fold:

(1) Statistical

Surely the Board's first duty is to compile detailed statements of the war requirements of our own Services and relate these to existing and potential industrial capacity. This is a large job in itself, requiring competent and adequate staff and authority to obtain information from all departments of government and from industry.

(2) Planning

On the basis of the statistical data obtained and analyzed by the Board, plans will have to be made in co-operation with industrialists with a view to having the industrial mechanism prepared to undertake the production which will be demanded upon an emergency. This again is a large undertaking but it requires no "executive authority".

(3) Information

The Board should be the government's contact with industry and on the basis of the statistics compiled and the plans made it should be their duty to keep industry informed of the nation's emergency requirements, the methods and so on by which these requirements can best be met and the sources from which materials, etc., can be drawn.

(4) Advice

Finally, the Board is essentially advisory and not executive — no matter what it is called. It cannot be otherwise unless Parliament clothes it with executive powers. Here again there is a wide field which it can till. It can advise the government upon preparatory measures in relation to industrial mobilization. It can advise industry, on the other hand, as to the nature of the facilities which they should try to have on hand against an emergency. The Board can take the initiative in advising and it can act upon specific references from the government.

Altogether, there is quite enough for a very active and able organization to do along the lines indicated above, without their having to take in the whole field of the nation's economy.

If the Board is to operate effectively it must recognize these realities and in the second place it must devise a continuing link with the government which can prevent it getting out of step with other agencies who are engaged in planning and preparations.

I would suggest that action by the Cabinet Defence Committee upon the Board's proposals be deferred, that the Board's primary tasks be emphasized somewhat as indicated above and that the Board's secretariat be integrated with the Defence section of the Cabinet Secretariat at once so that the Board's work may fit in with what is being done in production of the government War Book.

Yours sincerely,

A.D.P. HEENEY

983.

DEA/302 (S)

*Résumé du procès-verbal de la réunion
du Comité de la défense du Cabinet*

*Summary of Minutes of Meeting
of Cabinet Defence Committee*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], September 14, 1948

INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATION FOR DEFENCE

At a meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee on September 14, the Minister of National Defence reported that, under the Order-in-Council by which it was set up, the Industrial Defence Board had been formed and had held its inaugural meeting on 5th May, 1948. Subsequently the Executive Committee had met on 15th July and had carried plans for organization a stage further. The Executive Committee had also visited Washington and had established liaison with U.S. agencies in this field.

The Board had now put forward proposals for its organization.<sup>44</sup>

Insofar as the Department of National Defence was concerned, the fundamental importance of industry and industrial organization in any plans for war mobilization was fully appreciated. This importance had, of course, also been recognized by the government in the formation of the Board. The Services were presently preparing schedules of deficiencies against supply and equipment requirements for the first year of a possible war. These requirements were based on the needs of the forces which it was thought could be organized during that period. At present large stocks of equipment were held in certain items and the Services were deficient in others. It was hoped that the Industrial Defence Board would review the schedules of requirements and advise the government on such matters as the feasibility of producing these materials in Canada, the capital equipment which would be needed for this production, the materials which would need to be stock-piled in advance and the special skills and manpower required for the purpose.

It was hoped that the Armed Forces could soon give some indication of the equipment requirements of other countries.

The Chairman, Industrial Defence Board, explained the proposals submitted by the Board, stressing the importance to the country of plans for industrial organization and citing the recognition which had been given to this importance in other countries, such as the United States. If the country generally were kept informed of the facts, there would be no lack of widespread and enthusiastic support for any sound programme in the national interests, including adequate plans for industrial mobilization.

<sup>44</sup> PCO/vol. 60: Commission sur la défense industrielle, 'Note du 14 septembre pour le Comité de la défense du Cabinet relative à la préparation de la mobilisation industrielle.'

PCO/Vol. 60: Industrial Defence Board, 'Memorandum for the Cabinet Defence Committee on Industrial Mobilization Planning,' September 14.

The Board was convinced that the task was of such a magnitude that it could not be handled on a purely voluntary basis. A permanent staff was therefore proposed, to be under the executive direction of the Board. In addition, there would be industrial preparedness committees working on a voluntary basis, many of which had already been formed, under the auspices of the Canadian Ordnance Association. These committees represented specialized groups of industries in various fields, and additional committees would be formed as the need arose.

It was essential that there be a single industrial mobilization planning agency and that this have necessary executive powers beyond purely advisory functions in order that the planning might be successfully carried out. The establishment of overlapping and conflicting agencies should be avoided.

The basis of any industrial mobilization plan must be to meet the requirements of the Armed Forces and essential civilian needs, together with the requirements of our Allies. It was proposed therefore that the Board, through liaison with the United Kingdom and the U.S.A., assist in estimating possible requirements from these sources. Accordingly it was recommended that a joint U.S.-Canadian Industrial Mobilization Committee be formed. It was understood that U.S. approval had already been obtained for this joint committee and that Canadian approval only was now required.

In conjunction with its planning, the Board was giving careful consideration to the stock-piling of certain strategic materials. Plans in this respect were now being discussed with industry. Recognised critical materials included manganese, chrome, tin, antimony, quartz crystal and rubber. Eventually specific recommendations would be put forward.

It was estimated that $100,000.00 would be required to cover the Board's operating expenses up to the end of the present fiscal year.

In view of the importance of labour in any programme of industrial preparedness, it was proposed that the Deputy Minister of Labour be made a member of the Board. As and when still broader representation was required, this would be recommended.

Mr. Notman dealt in some detail with the proposed organization of the Board and of the industrial preparedness committees. He had recently had the opportunity of studying the economic and fiscal sections of the preliminary draft of the Government War Book. This was helpful in attempting to establish the place of the Industrial Defence Board in the overall government war plan.

In this connection the organization and responsibilities of the relevant government departments were of great importance. In the past war, the Department of Munitions and Supply had operated very successfully and presumably the organization of a similar department would be required in any future war. However, in the early stages of its operation in the past war, the Department of Munitions and Supply had been hampered and delayed by the lack of any prepared plan or statement of requirements. This could be avoided in future by the preparation of detailed industrial mobilization plans by the Industrial Defence Board. If this concept were correct, the allocation of certain responsibilities in the draft War Book would seem to require re-examination. In his view, the Industrial Defence Board would do the necessary industrial planning required in peacetime, but implementation in the event of an emergency would be the responsibility of a Department of Munitions and Supply. In this event, many of the key personnel for a wartime Department could be found from the organization of the Industrial Defence Board, including the industrial preparedness committees.

The permanent staff proposed was required to collect and co-ordinate for the Board all the necessary information, both from the various departments and agencies of government and from the specialized groups of industries represented in the industrial preparedness committees. This staff would provide continuing liaison with all agencies concerned. A co-ordinator would be appointed in each major field of activity.

The Secretary to the Cabinet pointed out that the Government War Book was still in the preliminary draft stage and would not be ready for submission to the Committee for some time. Nevertheless primary responsibility for the production of plans to meet an emergency had been accepted in the different fields by various agencies and departments of government. These included subjects related directly to industrial planning and involved all phases of economic mobilization. The draft sections dealing with economic and fiscal measures had been sent to Mr. Carmichael and Mr. Notman so that they might be aware of what was being done.

The method followed in preparing the War Book had been to assign primary planning responsibility to the department or agency having the largest interest; it in turn was expected to consult with other departments and agencies having related responsibilities so that a co-ordinated result could be achieved.

The War Book had been prepared on an interim emergency basis and departmental planning responsibilities were in general assigned as in the last war. Dr. Mackintosh was advising the Minister on the economic side with the object of co-ordinating the work done in different quarters. The officers of the Industrial Defence Board would undoubtedly find that the discussions upon revision of the economic sections of the War Book would be of direct interest to them. Mr. Claxton and Dr. Mackintosh were to meet shortly with senior officials having responsibilities for economic planning and it was hoped Mr. Carmichael and Mr. Notman could attend this meeting. These draft sections of the War Book would then be reviewed in some detail and there would be opportunity for fitting in with the overall plan the work of the Board in planning industrial preparedness. It was important that all planning in the economic field be co-ordinated continuously so that overlapping could be avoided and maximum efficiency achieved.

Mr. Claxton observed that the War Book was primarily designed to outline the measures which the government would need to take in time of an emergency of war. It was not intended to provide the detailed machinery for wartime government organization.

Insofar as the joint Canada-U.S. Industrial Mobilization Committee was concerned, his information was that this matter had been considered in the United States only by the U.S. Section of the Canada-U.S. Permanent Joint Board on Defence and that no U.S. approval had been given. In fact, it was not known what the U.S. view was, and he had written Mr. Forrestal to ask his opinion on the way in which the matter should be handled.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce observed that industrial mobilization planning along the lines indicated by the Chairman of the Industrial Defence Board would be an important step in preparedness for war. However any planning for increased industrial production would be meaningless unless provision were made initially for an increase in pig iron and steel production. At the present time there was insufficient steel for all civilian needs; these demands and added defence requirements could certainly not be met within capacity. If the government were to decide that additional equipment was required by the Armed Services, corresponding reductions would have to be made in supplies produced for civilian purposes. The scope of the Industrial Defence Board's proposals might be somewhat more extensive than necessary at present. However, undoubtedly, the preparation of advance plans for wartime industrial mobilization would be useful and should be proceeded with.

The Minister of Finance queried the use of the word "executive" in connection with the authority of the Board. It must be understood that executive powers could be exercised only by the government and through the Ministers of the Crown. Insofar as the funds required for the current year's operations were concerned, this amount seemed reasonable in relation to overall expenditures for defence and having regard for the importance of industrial mobilization planning.

Mr. Carmichael pointed out that any necessity for increased steel production would undoubtedly emerge from the Board's plans. It would then be for the government to decide what should be done.

Insofar as the expression "executive" was concerned, what was intended was that the Board be given sufficient authority to carry out its planning function. This meant, for instance, that it must be able to go to other government departments and agencies and obtain from them the information essential to the preparation of plans. It was not intended that the Board should be executive in the sense of having authority to implement its plans. Any implementation would be a matter for a regular department of government such as the wartime Department of Munitions and Supply.

Mr. Claxton suggested that, when the schedule of Service requirements was passed to the Industrial Defence Board through the Canadian Commercial Corporation, it might be useful to have Service Officers concerned with various aspects of the requirements available for discussion as to possible substitutions, etc.

The Acting Prime Minister expressed the appreciation of the Committee and of the government for the time and energy which had been and was being expended by Mr. Carmichael, Mr. Notman and their associates in the Industrial Defence Board and the Canadian Ordnance Association. The government was impressed and gratified by the widespread response of industry.

The Committee, after further discussion:

(a) noted the recommendations submitted by the executive of the Industrial Defence Board; and

(b) agreed:

- (i) that industrial mobilization planning proceed along the general lines indicated in the memorandum submitted and in close co-ordination with the emergency planning in the economic field being done by other government departments and agencies;
- (ii) that submission be made to the Treasury Board for the necessary funds for the Industrial Defence Board's requirements for the current fiscal year;
- (iii) to recommend to the Cabinet the addition to the Board of the Deputy Minister of Labour;

(c) noted that officers of Industrial Defence Board would discuss with officials concerned the detailed relationship of the Board and other departments and agencies in the preparation of emergency plans in the economic and industrial field; and

(d) deferred decision as to the formation of the Joint Canada-U.S. Industrial Mobilization Committee pending further advice as to U.S. views.

984.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], November 24, 1948

...

CANADA—U.S. INDUSTRIAL DEFENCE COOPERATION

12. The Minister of Trade and Commerce reported upon his recent visit to Washington where he had discussed with the U.S. Secretary of Defence and others problems of industrial defence co-operation, particularly in relation to the manufacture of military aircraft and other equipment.

The requirements of the Canadian forces, in particular the R.C.A.F., had been explained and the potentialities of Canadian industry described. Generally speaking, U.S. authorities had shown a willingness to cooperate in this field. Negotiations would now be carried on with U.S. aircraft manufacturers concerning manufacture in Canada of U.S. types for the R.C.A.F. and possibly for the U.S.A.F.

13. Mr. Howe said that, with respect to the proposed Canada-U.S. Joint Committee on Industrial Mobilization Planning, it was felt that this should be related more directly to the government than had been contemplated when the Cabinet Defence Committee had considered the proposal.

This result would be accomplished at once by appointing government representatives on the Joint Committee and on all of its sub-committees. Mr. Forrestal had agreed to this and officers of the Industrial Defence Board were also satisfied. For the present, it was proposed that the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, with possibly two officers of the Industrial Defence Board, would constitute the Canadian side of the Joint Committee. Appropriate government representatives would also be named to the sub-committees on specific items. The sub-committees would get to work immediately.

14. Mr. Howe added that the possibility of further U.S. military orders in Canada was being explored. The U.S. government's attitude was sympathetic but it would take time before any substantial volume could be expected.<sup>45</sup>

15. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted with approval the Minister's report and approved constitution of a Canada-U.S. Joint Committee on Industrial Mobilization Planning with membership as proposed by Mr. Howe.

...

985.

DEA/50006-40

*Note du secrétaire du Comité de la défense du Cabinet
pour le Comité de la défense du Cabinet*

Memorandum from Secretary, Cabinet Defence Committee to Cabinet Defence Committee

SECRET

Ottawa, December 8, 1948

CANADA—U.S. CO-OPERATION IN INDUSTRIAL MOBILIZATION

The establishment of liaison with the U.S. government in the planning of industrial mobilization has been the subject of recent consideration by both Cabinet Defence Committee and Cabinet.

2. On October 8th, the formation of a joint committee for this purpose was approved in principle by Cabinet Defence Committee, on the understanding that the terms of reference, composition, etc. would be subject to further consideration.

3. The Minister of Trade and Commerce took the opportunity on his recent visit to Washington to review with U.S. authorities the proposals which had been put forward, and on November 24th he reported to the Cabinet that, in his view, the Joint Committee should be related more closely to the government than had originally been contemplated. This, he said could be accomplished by making provision for government representation on the main committee and on any sub-committees which were formed. It was agreed by Cabinet that the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce should be added to the membership of the main committee. (The original proposal had been that this committee be composed of the Chairmen of the Canadian Industrial Defence Board and the U.S. National Security Resources Board and Munitions Board). The Minister also reported that he had made prelimi-

<sup>45</sup> Lors d'une réunion du Comité du CDC le 14 décembre, Howe rapporta également qu'il

At a meeting of CDC on December 14, Howe also reported that he had gained the impression that the United States might be interested in purchasing the all-weather jet fighter aircraft now under development in Canada, if and when it was available, and of purchasing any U.S. types manufactured in Canada if satisfactory arrangements were completed to this end.

PCO/vol. 244: Compte-rendu du Comité de la défense du Cabinet, le 14 décembre, paragraphe 8.†
PCO/Vol. 244: Cabinet Defence Committee, Minutes, December 14, paragraph 8.†

nary arrangements for informal meetings of sub-committees or working groups (organized by industry) to be held early in the new year, pending conclusion of an agreement between the two governments as to the formal establishment of the Joint Committee.

4. The Canadian Ambassador in Washington recently received a communication from the U.S. State Department containing proposals which are modified somewhat from the original, and he has indicated that in their present form they are acceptable to the various agencies of the U.S. government concerned with this matter. These proposals are as follows:

(1) That the proximity and mutual objectives of Canada and the United States, and the complementary characteristics of their resources — human, natural, and industrial — clearly indicate the advantages of coordination and the exchange of information in connection with industrial mobilization.

(2) That the present existence in Canada of the Industrial Defence Board, and in the United States of the National Security Resources Board and the Munitions Board, suggests the use of those presently constituted Boards for the co-ordination of United States-Canadian industrial mobilization planning.

(3) Be it therefore agreed, by the United States and Canadian Governments:

(a) That the two governments will exchange information with a view to the coordination of their activities in connection with industrial mobilization planning;

(b) that for this purpose, the following United States Canadian Committees are hereby constituted:

(i) A Joint United States-Canadian Industrial Mobilization Committee consisting of the Chairman of the Canadian Industrial Defence Board, the Chairman of the National Security Resources Board, and the Chairman of the Munitions Board;

(ii) A Steering Committee of the Joint United States-Canadian Industrial Mobilization Committee, consisting of appropriate planning representatives from the United States and Canadian member boards, to direct and review for the principal committee the specific activities of such Ad-hoc Working Groups, to be appointed by the Steering Committee, as may be required in the exchange of information and coordination of activities in connection with industrial mobilization planning.

(c) That the above Principal Committee and its Steering Committee be considered as permanent committees;

(d) That the Principal Committee meet at least semi-annually and that the Steering Committee and Ad-hoc Working Groups meet as often as may be necessary in the performance of their duties;

(e) That the Principal Committee be responsible for appropriate coordination with the Joint Canadian-United States Defence Board.

5. In asking the Canadian government to consider the foregoing proposals, the U.S. State Department raised the question as to the most appropriate way of confirming the arrangement. In their view this might be done informally by an exchange of letters or in a more formal fashion by diplomatic notes. Which of these courses is adopted depends to some extent on the Canadian government's view regarding the publicity which should be given to the arrangements. On this question, the U.S. government agencies concerned see no objection to the issuance of a press release at the proper time announcing the Committee's establishment and defining its terms of reference. If the Canadian government hold the same view, an exchange of notes would seem feasible. If, on the other hand, the desire is to avoid publicity, a suitable working basis could be provided by an informal exchange of letters. Either of these procedures would be acceptable to the U.S. government.

6. In the light of recent discussions on this subject in Cabinet and Cabinet Defence Committee, it would appear that the U.S. proposals are acceptable, subject to the following modifications:

(a) that the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce be added to the membership of the Joint U.S.-Canadian Industrial Mobilization Committee, and that para. (2) of the U.S. proposal be deleted and para. (3)(b)(i) be amended accordingly;

(b) that a representative of the Department of Trade and Commerce be added to the membership of the Steering Committee, and that the relevant section of the U.S. proposal be amended to read: "A Steering Committee of the Joint U.S.-Canadian Industrial Mobilization Committee consisting of appropriate planning representatives from the U.S. and Canadian agencies represented thereon to direct and review . . . ."

(c) that the Canadian government be represented directly on any Ad-hoc Working Groups which are set up by the Steering Committee.

7. It is understood that if liaison is established along the lines indicated, the Canadian representatives on the principal committee will be instructed to keep the Canadian Ambassador in Washington and the Department of External Affairs fully informed of the committee's proceedings. It is understood, too, that any Canadian staff employed for Joint Committee purposes in Washington would be brought into close relationship with the Canadian Embassy there. (Mr. Wrong, in forwarding the proposals of the U.S. State Department, has drawn attention to the importance he attaches to tying closely the planning of industrial mobilization with the day-to-day activities of the regular departments of government.)

8. This matter is referred to the Cabinet Defence Committee for decision as to how the Canadian Ambassador in Washington should reply to the proposals made by the U.S. State Department.<sup>46</sup>

E.W.T. GILL

<sup>46</sup> À sa réunion du 14 décembre, le CDC réaffirma son accord de principe pour constituer des comités mixtes sur la planification de la mobilisation industrielle; référé les mandats de tels comités pour approbation à Pearson et Howe; et fut d'accord que la meilleure façon de mettre en place ces arrangements serait de procéder à un échange de notes avec publicité adéquate. (voir extrait: DEA/50006-40)

At its meeting of December 14, CDC reaffirmed their approval in principle of joint committees for industrial mobilization planning; referred the terms of reference of such committees for approval to Pearson and Howe; and agreed that an exchange of notes, with appropriate publicity, would be the most satisfactory way to conclude such arrangements. (See extract on DEA/50006-40) 986.

PCO/Vol. 82

*Note du secrétaire de la section canadienne
de la Commission permanente canado-américaine de défense*

Memorandum by Secretary, Canadian Section, Permanent Joint Board on Defence

SECRET

Ottawa, December 10, 1948

PROCUREMENT IN THE UNITED STATES BY THE CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

At its meeting on June 3-4, 1948, the Board recorded its "unanimous and strong conviction that the difficulties preventing Canada from procuring weapons, munitions and material from the United States constitute the greatest single obstacle obstructing satisfactory progress in the implementation of U.S.-Canada defence arrangements." The Board, therefore, "recommended that no effort should be spared to ensure, with the minimum delay, that the barriers to the procurement by the Canadian Services of weapons, munitions and materiel from the United States are removed."

2. At its meeting on August 19-20, the Board recalled this recommendation, reiterated the unanimous conviction that had led to its being made and decided that its members should study the problem further with a view to considering, at its next meeting, the formulation of a recommendation to the United States Government urging the early enactment of the necessary legislation. To this end the Canadian Section agreed to prepare a statement setting forth the reasons why it is imperative that the Canadian Government should be enabled to procure weapons, munitions and materiel from the United States Government and the reasons why it is impracticable, in this matter, to deal directly with manufacturers in the United States.

3. In accordance with this undertaking, a statement of the Canadian position is given in paragraphs 4 to 10 below.

4. From the time of the recent war, up to the signing of U.S. Public Law 462 on 30th June, 1948, the Armed Forces of Canada were able to procure military equipment from the U.S. Services whenever the latter declared such equipment surplus to their requirements. With the passing of the above Law, however, this source of supply has been cut off.

5. At the present time United States legislation prevents the procurement by Canada of any military equipment from the United States except by direct negotiation with commercial firms — and then only for ordinary stores.

6. On the one hand, very considerable progress has been made by the United States and Canada in the planning of measures for full co-operation in the defence of North America. These arrangements envisage the need for our respective Armed Forces to work closely together and to have maximum interchangeability in employment and equipment.

7. On the other hand, the inability of Canada to procure military equipment of types used by the U.S. Armed Forces is the greatest single obstacle to satisfactory implementation of our joint plans. Standardization of equipment is being hampered and the vital need for the Canadian Armed Forces to become familiar with, and trained in, the use of U.S.-type equipment is not being met. Also, the maintenance of certain important equipments obtained by Canada from the United States immediately after the war is now becoming impossible because spares can no longer be purchased. These various difficulties are having an adverse effect on the efficiency and development of the Canadian Armed Forces and are creating some doubt as to the practicability of carrying our mutual defence arrangements into effect in peacetime.

8. There is no similar Canadian restriction preventing the United States Armed Forces from obtaining military equipment from Canada. It is realized that our contribution in this regard is at present not as important to the U.S. Armed Forces although, since the war, there have been several instances of Canadian equipment being provided to the U.S. Armed Forces without difficulty.

9. In some instances the United States is the only available source of supply for certain specialized Service equipment. Where this is the case, purchase through U.S. Government sources is necessary for the following reasons:

(a) Where the equipment is manufactured in arsenals or workshops of the U.S. Services, the U.S. Government is the only possible channel of supply.

(b) It would frequently be impossible for Canadian requirements to be met by direct purchase from the U.S. manufacturer until the full requirements of the U.S. Services had been met. This would seriously affect any standardization of training or operations considered necessary by the PJBD.

(c) In the case of direct purchase from the manufacturer, the latest modifications required by the U.S. Armed Forces would not necessarily be known to the Canadian authorities or applied to Canadian orders. As a result, Canada might frequently obtain equipment that is already obsolescent or below the standards used by the U.S. Services. This, again, would seriously affect the program of standardization.

(d) There is the added possibility that, in view of later developments, a manufacturer might cease production of equipment or parts on short notice. Under direct purchase, there might be a considerable time-lag before the new production would be available for the Canadian Forces.

Purchase through U.S. Government sources would have the following additional advantages:

(a) Integration of Canadian requirements with those of the U.S. under one contract would result in somewhat larger orders being placed. The unit cost might be accordingly reduced in some cases to mutual advantage.

(b) Inspection would be carried out by U.S. Government inspectors, ensuring an equal standard.

(c) Modifications would be automatically applied to all equipment, again ensuring a standard and interchangeable product.

10. Thus, if the United States proposes to change its legislation to enable Canada to procure military equipment in that country, it is very important that the main procurement channel be through the U.S. Department of Defence rather than direct to industry. Otherwise, much unnecessary duplication of effort as well as confusion, and even interference with U.S. Armed Forces procurement, might occur.<sup>47</sup>

SECTION E
VOIES DE COMMUNICATION CHANNELS OF COMMUNICATION

987.

DEA/5475-AR-1-40

Note
Memorandum

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, April 1, 1948

POLICY WITH RESPECT TO PUBLICITY ON CANADA—UNITED STATES DEFENCE ARRANGEMENTS

(Note: As the Department of Reconstruction & Supply is at present responsible for the Arctic Weather Station Programme, the references in this memorandum to the Department of Transport should be construed as applying to the first-mentioned Department until further notice.)

The following policy for handling publicity on plans, training and operations jointly conducted by Canada and the United States, or conducted by either country in the territory of the other, has been approved by the Minister of National Defence, the Minister of Transport and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and is in line with a directive which was issued in the United States, on November 28th, 1947, by the Secretary of Defence and the Secretary of State.

Directive

1. As undue secrecy has led in the past to highly speculative and sensational stories in the press which have been embarrassing to the two Governments and harmful to the defence programme, it is considered a fundamental principle that Canada-United States defence arrangements should always be publicized in so far as the requirements of Government policy, military security and the international political situation permit. Moreover, secrecy is counter to the traditions of the

<sup>47</sup> À sa réunion des 16 et 17 décembre, la CPCAD examina ce rapport et fit les recommandations suivantes :

At its meeting of December 16-17, the PJBD considered this report and made the following recommendations:

That long-term arrangements be effected which will:

(1) Permit the military services of Canada to purchase military supplies, arms, equipment and weapons of war direct from or through the U.S. Armed Services at cost price if the item is new and at an agreed depreciated value if used.

(2) Provide that funds in payment of such supplies, arms, equipment of weapons of war so purchased revert to the appropriations of the U.S. Services concerned.

(Voir copie du journal de la CPCAD dans les archives de C.D. Howe, volume 54)

(See copy of PJBD Journal in Howe Papers, Volume 54)

United States and of Canada and the desired objective is to reach the position where the press and public alike recognize that joint undertakings in Canada, and particularly in northern Canada, are normal and sensible developments.

2. Each project must therefore be examined on its own merits in so far as press publicity is concerned, and a brief statement of a factual nature will be issued at an early stage in the development of each project to the extent that military security, the international political situation and Government policy permit. Every opportunity will be taken to emphasize to the press the importance of their quoting releases verbatim rather than publishing stories based on these statements.

3. The primary responsibility for such public announcements rests with the country whose territory is utilized in connection with the projects in question. Such announcements must always have the approval of the United States Government, as well as that of the Canadian authorities referred to in paragraphs 4 and 5 below.

4. To implement the foregoing policy and procedure, the Departments of National Defence and External Affairs will work closely together in matters concerning the defence projects and exercises of the two countries. Except as provided in paragraph 5 below, the Department of National Defence is responsible for drafting press releases and its drafts will be submitted to the Department of External Affairs through the Public Relations Staffs of the two Departments. If the Department of External Affairs is satisfied that a release should be issued in connection with a project, and agrees with the terms of the relevant draft statement, the latter will be passed by the Canadian Embassy in Washington to the Department of State through the Secretary of the United States Section of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. The appropriate United States authorities will then come to a decision both on the policy involved and the text of the statement. When a final text is agreed upon by both Governments, the release will be issued in Canada by the Minister of National Defence or the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as may be desired.

5. As the Department of Transport bears the principal responsibility for the Arctic Weather Station Programme, it will prepare and issue the press releases relating to that programme. The Department of Transport will, of course, issue them only after clearances have been obtained from the Departments of National Defence and External Affairs and after the latter Department has obtained the approval of the United States authorities.

6. Whenever publicity is contemplated in connection with Canada-United States defence projects in the Northwest Territories or the Yukon, the Department of Mines and Resources will be kept advised, by the drafting Department, of the nature of the statements under preparation.

7. Any other publicity matters concerning Canada-United States defence arrangements (e.g. visits of newspaper men to the Far North, the furnishing of "background" information to the press, etc.) will also be handled in accordance with the procedure outlined in paragraphs 4 to 6 above. This procedure will, of course, not be followed when there is only a question of giving the press or other enquirers details already officially released by the competent Canadian or United States authorities.

8. The only personnel of the Departments of National Defence, Transport and External Affairs who, without special authority from their respective Minister or Deputy Minister, as the case may be, may deal directly with the representatives of the press in connection with any matters of publicity relating to Canada-United States defence arrangements, are the Public Relations Staffs of those Departments.

9. Up to the present time, the releases and statements made by the Canadian and United States authorities on Canada-United States defence matters have, for security reasons, contained a minimum of detail. At the same time, extensive and accurate reports on these joint developments have appeared in the Canadian and foreign press from time to time. A wide range of details have thus been made public without either Government acknowledging their accuracy. In the circumstances, and in order to avoid all possible confusion, the procedure outlined in paragraphs 4 and 5 above, for obtaining approval for the release of information, must be followed with respect to all details of defence projects that it may be desired to release in any manner but which have not already been made public in official releases or statements of the competent Canadian and United States authorities. Arrangements will be made with the Canadian Embassy in Washington to ensure that, as in the past, the Canadian and United States authorities receive the texts of official releases and statements made in the United States and Canada.

10. The foregoing paragraphs look, primarily, to the preparation and ultimate issue of unilateral releases or statements by the Canadian authorities mentioned. Steps will be taken to ensure that, in cases where it is desirable for the Canadian and United States authorities to issue simultaneous releases or statements on the matters referred to, the publicity will be issued in both countries at exactly the same hour on all such occasions. In each instance of this kind the Department of External Affairs will work out with the appropriate United States authorities the arrangements necessary to ensure appropriate timing of simultaneous releases.

11. Whenever the United States authorities submit proposed publicity on Canada-United States defence activities to the Department of External Affairs for the consideration of the competent authorities in Ottawa, the Department of External Affairs will transmit the proposed publicity to the Department of National Defence for approval. The United States authorities will be advised that their draft statements are acceptable only after they have been approved by the Departments of National Defence and External Affairs. If, however, the proposed United States publicity relates to the Arctic Weather Station Programme, the Department of External Affairs will submit the draft statements to the Department of Transport (in addition to the Department of National Defence) for approval. The Department of External Affairs will also be responsible for keeping the Department of Mines and Resources informed of the character of proposed United States publicity on Canada-United States defence activities in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

988.

W.L.M.K./J4/Vol. 318

Appendice 3 du journal de la Commission permanente canado-américaine de défense

Appendix 3, Journal of Permanent Joint Board on Defence

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], June 3-4, 1948

RECOMMENDED RULES CONCERNING CHANNELS OF COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN THE U.S. AND CANADIAN GOVERNMENTS IN CONNECTION WITH DEFENCE MATTERS<sup>48</sup>

The subject matter of the communication determines the channels.

2. If the subject matter relates primarily to the detailed administrative or technical implementation of plans or policies previously agreed upon, or exploratory discussions, the service-to-service channel may be utilized. In this case, however, interested officers in other agencies should be informed.

3. The Department of External Affairs-State Department channel should be used whenever the subject matter involves:

- (a) The determination of government policy;
- (b) Proposed U.S. projects or exercises in Canada or the extension or modification to a significant degree of such projects or exercises already authorized;
- (c) Proposed Canadian-United States projects or exercises or extension or modification to a significant degree of such projects or exercises already authorized;
- (d) International or third-country aspects;
- (e) The United Nations;
- (f) Public relations as prescribed by the publicity directives in effect in both countries;
- (g) Clearance with other agencies and especially other civilian agencies;
- (h) Notification to other interested officers or agencies.

<sup>48</sup> Ce texte fut approuvé par la CPCAD à sa réunion des 3 et 4 juin et par le CDC au nom du gouvernement à sa réunion du 29 juillet.

This text was agreed upon by PJBD at its meeting of June 3-4 and approved by CDC on behalf of the government at its meeting of July 29.

SECTION F

UTILISATION AU CANADA PAR LES ÉTATS-UNIS DE MILITAIRES
DE RACE NOIRE
USE OF BLACK TROOPS BY UNITED STATES IN CANADA

989.

DEA/11681-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieuresMemorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

Ottawa, April 30, 1948

As you know, Cabinet Defence Committee has authorized the U.S. authorities to perform the necessary maintenance work at certain eastern airfields and weather stations that they are still using temporarily.

2. Recently, a request was received from the U.S. authorities for permission to use negro Engineer troops temporarily for this work, during the period May 1-October 1, 1948, since it is not expected that white troops will be available.

3. The localities and numbers involved are as follows:

	Officers	Enlisted Men
River Clyde, Baffin I., N.W.T.	2	35
Frobisher Bay, Baffin I., N.W.T.	6	146
Fort Chimo, in the extreme north of Quebec	6	146
Mingan, P.Q., on the St. Lawrence opposite Anticosti I.	3	100

4. The N.W.T. Administration, who are interested in the Eskimos at the first three of these stations, are agreeable to the proposal provided we request the U.S. Government to ensure that the personnel selected have no contagious diseases and that they have adequate medical supervision. The Directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare concerned with the health of Eskimos have also been consulted. They are agreeable if the troops concerned are medically examined before they are sent to these posts and if they are periodically inspected afterwards.

5. Mr. Claxton, to whom the request has also been referred, has approved it except as regards Mingan. I assume that he feels that there might be criticism if negro troops were introduced to the lower St. Lawrence.

6. In view of the fact that it is desired to send the necessary personnel to the locations mentioned in the very near future, the U.S. authorities are anxious to have a decision as soon as possible. I should be grateful if you would let me know whether you are in agreement with Mr. Claxton that we may inform the U.S. Government that their proposal is authorized as far as River Clyde, Frobisher Bay, and Chimo are concerned but not as regards Mingan. If you approve this proposal, we will, of course, inform the U.S. authorities of the medical requirements referred to above. My own view is that the request not to use coloured troops at Mingan should also extend to Chimo, as both these places are in the province of Quebec, where the presence of U.S. coloured troops in peace-time might be misunderstood and misrepresented.<sup>49</sup> The danger would not apply to posts in the Northwest Territories, which is under Federal jurisdiction.

7. Attached is a map† showing the stations in question.<sup>50</sup>

L.B. P[EARSON]

990.

DEA/11681-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-1206

Ottawa, May 4, 1948

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Please transmit, at your earliest convenience, following message to [A.R.] Foster of the State Department from Johnson, Begins: I should like to refer to your letter of March 31† and my acknowledgment of April 5,† regarding the possibility of posting coloured U.S. Engineer troops at Frobisher Bay and River Clyde, N.W.T., and at Fort Chimo and Mingan, P.Q., during the period May 1 to October 1, 1948.

This proposal has now been considered by the appropriate Canadian authorities and I am authorized to inform you that there will be no objection to it, in so far as it relates to Frobisher Bay and River Clyde, provided the troops in question are found to be free of contagious diseases before embarking for the latter stations and are examined periodically during their stay in the north.

I regret that the proposal is not acceptable in so far as Fort Chimo and Mingan are concerned as it is felt the posting of U.S. coloured troops to those stations in peacetime might be misunderstood in the Province of Quebec. Ends.

2. It should be explained to Foster orally that our conditions regarding medical examinations are dictated by the fact that the native population in the north is very susceptible to white men's diseases and the incidence of venereal disease in the Mackenzie District, N.W.T., following the assignment of coloured troops to the Canol project, was very discouraging.

<sup>49</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

I agree. St. L[aurent]

<sup>50</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

I fully agree that the presence of coloured troops of U.S. in any part of Quebec would expose us to undesirable criticism especially in the light of present relations between us and the government of Quebec. St. L[aurent] 3-5-48

991.

DEA/703-K-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-1369

Washington, May 6, 1948

SECRET

Your EX-1206 of May 4th, employment of coloured troops in the Canadian North.

The Department of State has accepted a letter containing the message quoted in the first paragraph of your teletype under reference and is transmitting it to the appropriate Air Force authorities. In doing so, however, they raised with us the question of the desirability of avoiding confusion of channels of communications.

A most unhappy situation has arisen as a result of such confusion in this particular instance. We have been informed that A.V.M. Morphee<sup>51</sup> about three weeks ago, after a meeting in Ottawa, telephoned direct to Colonel [C.H.] Deerwester of the Foreign Liaison Section in the United States Department of Defence to say that there would be no objection to the employment of coloured troops in Northern Canada except at Mingan, P.Q. On the basis of this conversation, the Air Force authorities went ahead with the proposal for the employment of coloured troops at Frobisher Bay, River Clyde and Fort Chimo. These plans had gone a long way towards completion by the time our letter to Foster containing your message reached the State Department. The State Department has suggested to us, and I am sure you will agree with the suggestion, that in future it would be well to ensure that communications on matters of policy should pass through civilian channels only and that any conversations between military officials in Ottawa and military officials in Washington should be confined to technical details designed to implement the policy decisions.

From our own point of view, we should much prefer that communications between yourself and Mr. Foster should be handled as was your message in EX-1206. We take this view for the reason that it greatly assists in keeping us informed of what is happening without infringing upon the freedom of the secretaries of the respective sections of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence to communicate one with another. It ensures that we shall automatically have a copy of all correspondence and thereby allows us, when we receive enquiries from the State Department, to lend assistance without the need for trying to brief ourselves before-hand especially for the occasion or, in the alternative, to work in the dark.

I should be grateful to learn whether you agree with the suggestions contained in this message that the armed forces should confine their conversations to non-policy matters and that, wherever possible, exchanges of correspondence in relation to defence matters between secretaries of the respective sections of the P.J.B.D. should pass through this Embassy.

---

<sup>51</sup> Représentant des Forces aériennes, section canadienne, CPCAD.
Air Member, Canadian Section, PJBD.

992.

CH/Vol. 2154

*Le ministre de la Défense nationale
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
Minister of National Defence
to Ambassador in United States*

PERSONAL

Ottawa, May 13, 1948

Dear Hume [Wrong],

Dick Wright showed me your letter of 12th May.<sup>52</sup> I appreciate what you say about the necessity for keeping to proper channels of communication. I doubt, however, that the difficulty here is in any way due to a failure in this regard.

What happened was that the Air Force asked me if I had any objection to the use of coloured engineers at the four places involved. I spoke to Mr. St. Laurent and he agreed with me that they certainly should not be put at Mingan. He saw no objection to the other places. I communicated this to the Air Force and they passed on the word to their opposite numbers at Washington.

Later, Mike spoke to Mr. St. Laurent about the possibility of Chimo being in the same category as Mingan. Mr. St. Laurent spoke to me and I told the Air Force to add Chimo to the restricted list.

Of course in the meantime they had acted on my first word.

You will appreciate that there are many matters of a routine character which should be cleared at the Service level. There are questions of movements of personnel, delivery of equipment and the like.

I assume that any operation involving considerable troop movements or construction operations in Canada should be cleared through External. Once, however, the operation is agreed to, is it necessary that details should be cleared in the same way? I should think that this was a border-line case.

Anyway it is only fair to say that the confusion was not due to the Service people on either side, but to the fact that upon reconsideration your Minister added Chimo to Mingan.

Perhaps I had better send Mike a copy of this so that when the matter comes up at the P.J.B.D. his people have a note of it.

. . .

Yours sincerely,

BROOKE CLAXTON

<sup>52</sup> Comme l'explique le document suivant, Claxton a confondu une note pour Saint-Laurent de Pearson transmettant l'opinion de Wrong, avec une lettre de Wrong.

As the next document explains, Claxton confused a memorandum for St. Laurent from Pearson conveying Wrong's views, with a letter from Wrong.

993.

DEA/703-K-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au ministre de la Défense nationale*

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Minister of National Defence

Ottawa, May 24, 1948

Dear Mr. Claxton:

Thank you for your letter of May 13, enclosing a copy of your letter to Hume Wrong of the same date, on the general question of the channels of communication to be used in informing the United States Services of policy decisions arrived at in Ottawa with regard to joint defence matters.

Dick Wright will have explained to you that the paper sent to you on May 12 was a copy of my memorandum of May 8 to Mr. St. Laurent under cover of a note from Hume Wright of my office, rather than a letter from Wrong. We have told the latter that we were considering your letter to him as a reply to me. I am sorry that we did not make the situation clearer when my memorandum went forward to you on May 12.

I am grateful to you for clearing up the question of the United States negro troops who are going to the Northeastern stations. I had, of course, not known that Mr. St. Laurent had originally agreed with you that the United States request regarding these men should be accepted except in the case of Mingan, P.Q.

I think that, with a view to avoiding any complications, the State Department, who raised the points mentioned in my memorandum of May 8, would welcome it if we were now to reply to them that the following classes of United States requests for Canadian authorization or approval should come forward and be answered through civilian channels:

(a) Requests regarding proposed new U.S. defence projects and exercises in Canada, Labrador and Newfoundland or with regard to the extension or significant modification of already authorized or approved projects and exercises in those areas;

(b) Requests regarding new joint Canadian-United States projects and exercises in Canada or anywhere else, or with regard to the extension or significant modification of joint projects and exercises already authorized.

(In addition to seeking the Canadian Government's authorization for projects in Canada, the United States authorities also ask for Ottawa's approval of proposed United States activities in Labrador and Newfoundland.)

The procedure outlined has, of course, long been normal practice, and it is therefore really only a question of confirming that we feel that it should be continued. It would not prejudice direct communications between the Canadian and the United States Services, for the purpose of detailed implementation of approved projects and exercises or of preliminary discussion of proposed projects before requests for their authorization are put forward to the Canadian Government. I gather from your letter to Hume Wrong that you would be agreeable to our sending a reply to the State Department along the above lines but, before I do so, I should appreciate your confirming that it will be satisfactory to you and the Canadian Services.

Yours sincerely,

L.B. PEARSON

SECTION G

DÉFENSE DU CANAL ET DES ÉCLUSES DE SAULT STE. MARIE DEFENCE OF SAULT STE. MARIE CANAL AND LOCKS

994.

DEA/50196-40

*Chef adjoint de la Direction du Commonwealth du département d'État des États-Unis
au conseiller à l'ambassade aux États-Unis*

*Assistant Chief, Commonwealth Division,
Department of State of United States to Counsellor, Embassy in United States*

TOP SECRET

Washington, September 23, 1948

Dear Mr. Magann:

I should like to bring to your attention for the informal consideration of the Canadian Government a question related to the defense of the Sault Ste. Marie Canal and Locks.

The vital importance of this waterway to the industrial structure of the continent, and hence to our joint strategic planning in defense of the continent, is I believe quite fully appreciated on both sides of the border. Even if all of the Sault installations were situated in Canada, or in the United States, any threat to their unhampered operation would be of direct concern to both countries, but the fact that they actually straddle the border makes our joint interest even more obvious.

The Department of the Army (General Staff) has recently completed a staff study on the defense of the Sault, emphasizing its significance, analyzing its vulnerability, and pointing up various conclusions from the military point of view. Based upon that study, the Secretary of the Army, Mr. Royall, has suggested to the Department that informal conversations might be begun with the Canadian Government looking toward prior authorization for United States Federal or National Guard troops to enter and operate upon Canadian soil in the vicinity of the canal and locks if, in a war emergency, such action should become necessary for the prevention of damage to these installations. The proposed arrangement would, of course, be reciprocal, so that Canadian forces would have the same privilege in regard to the American side.

My first reaction to the problem was that it should come before the Permanent Joint Board on Defense, and that it could not as appropriately be taken up in any other way. It has been pointed out to me, however, that the next regular Board meeting is not until December 1948, and that a firm decision or recommendation would probably not be forthcoming from the Board until the next meeting after that, say in March or April 1949. Considering the importance of the issue, and the disturbed state of world affairs at this time, it has therefore seemed best to make the proposal now. At the next Defense Board meeting, it should be possible not only to discuss the matter, but to hear a report of progress as well.

As the staff study I have referred to goes far to confirm, the most immediate and probable threat to the Sault is deemed to be sabotage. It might take any one of various forms; there would be little or no warning; and it could happen at almost any time. If it should occur, any troops on the site or which might hurriedly be brought there, whether American or Canadian, would need to be able to move as freely and quickly as possible in the vicinity to be effective in the performance of their duty. There might also be duly accredited civilian guards at some future time who would need to have the same freedom of motion in the event of emergency.

Army officers have told me that four of the locks are distinctly on the American side of the line, whereas the fifth lock is in Canadian territory. This fact, if taken by itself, might lead to the conclusion that with sufficient U.S. troops posted on our side, and Canadian troops on yours, there would be no compelling need for either to cross over. That argument is nullified, in my opinion, by the way in which the regulatory works run across the frontier in one piece, as well as a nearby railroad trestle which does likewise. On broader grounds, any such lack of flexibility in the defense plan would be a hazardous condition, and in view of the cordiality of U.S.-Canadian relations, an unnecessary one.

A possible way of handling the problem might be this: to have the appropriate military officer commanding the Sault area on each side of the border empowered to issue orders permitting his troops and/or other accredited guard personnel to cross over during an emergency if requested to do so by the other side, for the specific purpose, of course, of preventing damage to the waterway. If that were agreed to and concurrent orders gotten out, it should be a relatively easy matter for the two nearest local commanders (U.S. and Canadian) to arrange the working details between themselves. One side should not, it seems to me, have to await an engraved invitation via Washington and Ottawa from the other in order to move a short distance across the line if an emergency started to develop or seemed imminent.

If you should desire any further information regarding the Sault defense, such as for example a description of World War II defense arrangements, or an estimate of the joint military strength required to protect the waterway under various conditions, I feel sure that the Department of the Army would be glad to cooperate in making it available to us.

Awaiting your reply with great interest, I am,

Very truly yours,
WILLIAM P. SNOW

995.

DEA/50196-40

Le secrétaire du Comité des chefs d'état-major au secrétaire du Comité mixte de planification

Secretary, Chiefs of Staff Committee, to Secretary, Joint Planning Committee

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], November 29, 1948

PROTECTION OF VITAL POINTS; SAULT STE MARIE

At the 433rd meeting of the Chiefs of Staff Committee held on October 4th, 1948, consideration was given to a proposal received from the U.S. State Department (on behalf of the U.S. Department of Army) that informal conversations be held between representatives of the two governments with a view to giving prior authorization for U.S. Federal or National Guard Troops to enter and operate upon Canadian soil in the vicinity of Sault Ste Marie in a state of emergency or war.

2. The Committee agreed to recommend to the Cabinet Defence Committee that representatives of the Chiefs of Staff enter into the proposed discussions on the understanding that the wider problem involved would be considered at the same time.

3. As no convenient opportunity presented itself to place this matter on the agenda of the Cabinet Defence Committee, it was referred by the Secretary of that Committee to the Minister of National Defence. The Minister has signified that he has no objections to Canadian officers participating with U.S. officers in a general discussion of the plans which should govern arrangements for the protection of important installations on the international boundary provided the specific question raised by the U.S. authorities in connection with Sault Ste Marie is not dealt with individually but only as a part of the broader question. The Minister also signified that he is in agreement with the military proposals whereby these arrangements should be reciprocal in order to ensure that each country has similar rights.

4. The Chiefs of Staff have been advised concerning the above. I am advising the Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs along the lines of this memorandum. No doubt in the near future your Committee will be contacted by U.S. military authorities concerning the proposed conversations. In any discussions which may take place, your Committee will be guided by the provisos of the Minister of National Defence outlined in para. 3 above.

J.D.B. SMITH

996.

DEA/50196-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-3066

Washington, December 2, 1948

TOP SECRET

Your EX-2757 of November 30th†, protection of installations on the international boundary.

I think there would be some advantage in postponing an approach to the State Department until we have got a little further into the question of the extent of the jurisdiction to be exercised by the United States in the Newfoundland bases. If, as is likely, we are going to have difficulty in securing any modification of United States rights after the Union of Newfoundland with Canada takes place, there may be some tactical advantage in delaying discussions about the position at Sault Ste. Marie and related matters touching on the possible use of United States forces within Canadian territory. In a week or two we should know better what the chances are of securing agreement about the Newfoundland bases. Do you agree that it is desirable to delay the beginning of discussions between United States and Canadian officers for the time being? Ends.

997.

DEA/50196-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-3123

Washington, December 9, 1948

TOP SECRET

My WA-3066 of December 2nd concerning protection of installations near the international boundary.

I note that the United States Section has placed on the agenda of next week's meeting of the P.J.B.D. the protection of the canals at Sault Ste. Marie. I suggest, therefore, that the proposals contained in your EX-2757 of November 30th<sup>53</sup> should be discussed at that meeting rather than taken up with the State Department separately before the meeting.

2. You might consider whether it would be appropriate for the Canadian Section to mention in this connection that the prospect of the Union of Newfoundland with Canada introduces new considerations affecting the activities of United States forces in Canadian territory, and that these considerations had already been the subject of preliminary discussions with the Department of State. Although the P.J.B.D. is not an appropriate agency to consider the problems of the Newfoundland bases, there would be some advantage in relating to these problems of protection of installations along the international boundary. I should hope, however, that the Canadian Section would indicate that they were not in a position to discuss the Newfoundland position if the United States Section sought to go into the matter.

<sup>53</sup> Voir le document 995/See Document 995.

998.

DEA/50196-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-2837

Ottawa, December 10, 1948

TOP SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Following from Reid. Reference your teletypes WA-3066 of December 2 and WA-3123 of December 9 regarding proposed discussions with the U.S. Army on the protection of Sault Ste. Marie and other vital points along the international boundary.

2. Our feeling is that, if we were to withhold our reply regarding the proposed discussions on these important installations, we might be inviting criticism and might not be acting in our own interests since a not-too-distant decision regarding protection of border vital points is, of course, of as great interest to Canada as to the U.S. We also consider that a security problem of this kind should be fully explored by the competent experts before being discussed at any length by such a high-ranking body as the PJBD. Further, the discussions would probably not start for a fortnight at least and the conclusions reached would not commit Canada in any sense and, when put forward to Chiefs of Staff, can be considered in the light of the bases problem.

3. In the circumstances, we feel that communication of a reply through diplomatic channels at the present time would (a) not prejudice the possibility of linking the matter to the bases question, and (b) should appreciably reduce U.S. discussion of border vital points at the PJBD at a time when the experts have not formulated any proposals for cooperation in this field.

4. I would be grateful if you would let me know how the foregoing suggestions appeal to you.<sup>54</sup>

<sup>54</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Note U.S. Sec[retary], PJBD, at the Board's Dec. 16-17 meeting, indicated the Embassy had informed State Dep[artmen]t of our reply (in EX-2757 of Nov 30). C. Eberts 999.

C.D.H./Vol. 54

Extrait du journal de la Commission permanente canado-américaine de défense
Extract from Journal of Permanent Joint Board on Defence

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], December 16-17, 1948

...
4. Defence of Sault Ste. Marie Canal and Locks. The U.S. Army member reported that, in connection with defence planning, it had been deemed of the greatest importance to make timely and adequate provision for the defence of such key installations as the Sault waterway. In consequence, the U.S. Military Establishment had proposed in September that the Canadian Government be approached in regard to joint security planning for the Sault system.

The Secretary of the U.S. Section stated that a proposal had accordingly been submitted to the Canadian Government in this sense and that the latter's reply had recently been received. The U.S. proposal had envisioned authorization of an informal arrangement whereby local commanders on each side of the border would be authorized to enter into liaison and to cross the line in the event of emergency at the invitation of the commanding officer on the other side. The Canadian reply had expressed a willingness to discuss the question, but on the basis of a general discussion looking to the joint protection of important installations along the entire frontier rather than the Sault waterway alone.

After some discussion, the Board came to the conclusion that defence of the Sault was so vital to continental security as to warrant early and special consideration. Consequently, while it was agreed that the proposed discussion of the general problem was highly desirable, the Board expressed the hope that planning for the defence of the Sault would be given high priority.

...

3<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 3DÉVELOPPEMENT DES RESSOURCES ET DE TRANSPORT DEVELOPMENT OF RESOURCES AND TRANSPORTATION

SECTION A

PÊCHERIES FISHERIES

1000.

DEA/5134-A-40

NoteMemorandum

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], May 19, 1948

INTER-DEPARTMENTAL MEETING TO DISCUSS A UNITED STATES DRAFT CONVENTION FOR THE CONSERVATION OF FISHERIES IN THE NORTHWEST ATLANTIC, HELD IN THE OFFICE OF THE DEPUTY MINISTER OF FISHERIES, 2.30 P.M., MAY 19, 1948

The meeting was held to discuss the draft Convention† which was submitted with the United States Embassy's letter of March 19,† and a subsequent proposal that a preliminary technical meeting should be held between representatives of Canada, Newfoundland and the United States in St. John's Newfoundland, sometime in June. There were present:

Fisheries:

Dr. Bates, Deputy Minister
Dr. Neelder, Assistant Deputy Minister
Mr. Ozere, Solicitor

External:

Mr. Johnson, Chief, American & Far Eastern Division
Mr. Eberts
Mr. Cook

2. Dr. Bates opened the discussion by making the following points:

(a) The Department of Fisheries considers that there is no immediate need for conservation measures. In fact, the areas fished by Canadians are under-exploited rather than depleted.

(b) It is possible that conservation measures may be required in the next 15-25 years, but the emphasis at present should be placed on scientific investigation.

(c) The banks off the New England Coast, which are fished almost exclusively by U.S. fishermen, are depleted — and for this reason the United States may be pressing their proposal in order to secure their position in the other areas.

(d) Halibut stocks are decreasing throughout the whole area, but the necessary conservation measures would interfere with the cod fisheries, (cod gear catches small halibut) and, as the latter are more important commercially, it would be undesirable to do anything about halibut.

3. In view of the above, it was agreed that the main purpose of the U.S. proposal is probably to ensure the U.S. position on the Canadian and Newfoundland banks by attempting to establish the principle that the North American countries, because of contiguity to the area, have a special claim to, and responsibility for, the development and conservation of the fisheries in the Northwest Atlantic. Dr. Bates stated that his Department also would like to see this principle adopted, and that they would be unwilling to join in the establishment of any Northwest Atlantic Fisheries organization in which the influence of the North American countries was outweighed by that of Europe.

4. It was recognized that the U.S. draft would constitute implementation of the policy outlined in the Presidential Declaration of September 28, 1945 — regarding the establishment of conservation zones in the high seas, and agreed that further consideration should be given to the need for making a similar Canadian declaration (agreed to by Cabinet on May 9, 1947) as a preliminary step to negotiation, some years hence, of an agreement giving regulatory powers to the Commission. In other words, if Canada followed the U.S. lead in the near future and made a similar Declaration regarding conservation zones the European countries might come to accept the special position of Canada and the U.S. in the Northwest Atlantic fisheries and be more prepared to accept, ultimately, the idea of a regulatory Commission in which our position would be predominant. For that matter a Declaration prior to negotiations for an investigational Commission might make the latter more acceptable to Europe.

5. With regard to the proposed technical meeting it was agreed that, as the need for comprehensive conservation measures has not been proven, the discussion should be confined to the broad principles involved, and that, for the present, it should be our aim to press for consideration of all possible methods of securing international cooperation for scientific research. It was suggested that the U.S. reaction to a proposal that an organization be established with investigational, but not regulatory, powers might indicate whether they are really concerned with conservation or primarily interested in establishing a predominant position in the control of the Northwest fisheries.

6. If it is decided that an organization should be set up in the near future — which would assure the North American countries the balance of power over participating European countries — the Department of Fisheries would be willing to include, in addition to investigational powers, the regulation of mesh sizes as a token power for an International Commission. In addition, although omitted in the United States draft, it was felt that provision should be made in any agreement for (a) rules of navigation to be observed by all fishing vessels in the area — and, (b) for the welfare of fishermen.

7. When necessary at a later date the contracting parties could reshape the International Commission so as to give it regulatory powers for conservation, based on the results of its investigations. Dr. Bates pointed out that, while the U.S. Government can readily be in favour of giving power to an international fisheries organization, since that only entails a loss of power by the individual States, in Canada the Department of Fisheries is loath to transfer powers which it possesses to an international organization. For this and other reasons, it is considered undesirable that any international Commission should have power to make regulations, such as outlined in the United States draft, without subsequent approval of the contracting Governments.

8. The possible effect of the forthcoming election in Newfoundland on the proposed technical meeting at St. John's and the implications of Newfoundland joining Canada were then discussed and agreement reached on the following points:

(a) Dr. Bates would inform Mr. Gushue (Newfoundland) that the Canadian representatives would be pleased to meet in St. John's or Ottawa, or Washington during the third week in June. This should give us sufficient time to reconsider the time and place for a meeting if Newfoundland votes clearly for Confederation.

(b) In the event of Newfoundland becoming part of Canada it would be necessary to reconsider the basis of representation and voting power in view of the greatly increased area which would be contiguous to Canadian shores. Under the U.S. proposal, the disappearance of Newfoundland as a voting member would shift the balance of power to the European countries. In addition, it was suggested that the Gulf of St. Lawrence might, in that event, be considered territorial waters — or at least an area developed and maintained exclusively by Canadian nationals within the meaning of the U.S. Declaration of September 28, 1945. (The U.S. have not been fishing in the Gulf for some time).

(c) As the meeting would be preliminary and technical, it would not be necessary for a representative from External to attend, although the Acting High Commissioner might be asked to sit in on the discussions.

9. Following the above general discussion and conclusions, the U.S. draft was considered section by section and the following additional points covered:

(a) In general the United States paper would require a number of textual clarifications as to intent and in order to avoid ambiguity;

(b) Permanent Panel Membership on the Basis of Contiguity (Art. IV) — there is no clear indication as to whether the United States, Canada and Newfoundland are considered contiguous to all the sub-areas, or whether Denmark and France would be given a permanent seat on the appropriate Panels, because of the contiguity of Greenland to sub-area 1 and of St. Pierre and Miquelon to sub-area 2.

(c) Voting Procedure (Art. III & IV) — it was questioned whether the proposed voting procedure would adequately protect North American interests, since the test proposed is the number of votes actually cast. In theory, a measure might be approved by one man if everyone else abstained. However, if regulations were made subject to subsequent approval by the contracting Governments, this objection would have less weight.

(d) Finances (Art. III) — It was agreed that it would be unfair to those countries deriving only small benefits from the fisheries if joint administrative expenses were to be divided equally between all members, and it was felt that costs should be apportioned according to each member country's share of the catch.

(e) Advisory Committees (Art. V) — In view of the recent problem over immigration regulations in connection with "Communist" members of the Pacific Salmon Advisory Committee, it was agreed that it would be wise to insert a qualifying clause to the effect that the right of the members of the Advisory bodies to attend meetings of the Commission and panels does not imply a waiver of the immigration laws of the host country.

(f) Regulatory Powers (Arts. 11 and 12) — It was agreed that there is a conflict between the residual powers of the Commission and the Panels. They could not both have the same possible range of powers.

(g) Violations by Non-member Countries (Art. 14) — It was agreed that that clarification of the term “appropriate action” would have to be sought — since, under International law, it would be impossible actually to compel non-participating countries to comply with regulations if adopted by the member countries for areas in the high seas.

(h) Relationship to Other International Organizations — This would require clarification.

1001.

DEA/5134-A-40

*Le sous-ministre des Pêcheries
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Deputy Minister of Fisheries
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], June 8, 1948

Dear Sir,

ATTENTION MR. D.M. JOHNSON

In answer to your letter of June 4th† regarding the proposed technical meeting of Canadian, United States and Newfoundland fisheries officials, this Department will be represented by Dr. A.W.H. Needler, Assistant Deputy Minister, and myself. It is understood that the expenses will be covered by this Department. We have no definite information regarding the representatives of the United States and Newfoundland but expect that Mr. R. Gushue, Chairman of the Newfoundland Fisheries Board and that Dr. Florry and Mr. Tyson of the United States State Department will be present. I understand Mr. Bridle, or someone from our High Commissioner's office may also be present to represent Canada.

We plan to leave Ottawa on the morning of June 11th, arriving in St. John's in the early morning of June 12th. It is realized, however, that air travel to Newfoundland is somewhat uncertain at this time of year.

I am returning copy of your memorandum on the discussions held recently on the United States proposal for the conservation of fisheries in the Northwestern Atlantic with suggested corrections.

As a background for the proposed technical discussions in which, of course, no commitments can be made, the Canadian position is understood to include the following points:

(1) It is not considered to be in the Canadian interest to establish a commission which would have regulatory powers without further authority from the participating governments. No need is seen for the immediate regulation or restriction of fishing, although serious need might arise in the early future.

(2) It is, on the other hand, important to bring about international cooperation in scientific investigations of the fisheries of the northwestern Atlantic area, in order to make such investigations more effective, and to recognize the need for regulatory measures, should it arise, and to provide a sound basis for formulating such measures.

(3) It is also desirable to take steps in the immediate future to provide through international agreement, a mechanism for a settlement of differences between fishermen of different nationalities, arising from destruction of gear or interference with fishing.

Various means have been proposed for achieving international cooperation in scientific investigation of international fisheries. In the present instance it is believed desirable to consider at this meeting a formula close to those of the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea in Europe and of the regional councils of FAO. In these instances the participating countries agree to form a council, and, through it, to the full exchange of scientific investigation of the fisheries concerned, and to the common planning of fisheries investigations. The actual investigational work is carried out by research agencies of the participating countries to which various parts of a common program are allotted. Provision is made for investigations by the council, if found to be necessary, but subject to further approval by the participating countries.

I trust that this conception of Canada's position outlined above agrees with your own. If there is any difference of view, please call me for discussion on Wednesday or Thursday.

Yours very truly,
STEWART BATES

1002.

DEA/5134-A-40

*Le sous-ministre des Pêcheries
au chef de la Direction de l'Amérique et l'Extrême-Orient Deputy Minister of Fisheries
to Head, American and Far Eastern Division*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], June 18, 1948

Dear Mr. Johnson,

RE DISCUSSIONS IN NEWFOUNDLAND

I returned this morning from Newfoundland and for your information I am enclosing a very short memo prepared for our Minister covering the discussions held there between United States, Newfoundland and Canadian officials on the proposed treaty for the Northwest Atlantic.

The discussions were, I think, fully satisfactory from Canada's point of view since basic changes were made in the draft along the lines we had discussed with you at Ottawa during the past month. The enclosed memo outlines this.

You will be receiving a fuller report from our Acting High Commissioner in Newfoundland who was present at all the sessions and I think became conversant with the whole problem.

During my few days in St. Johns I became greatly aware of the volume of European fishing. There were there sixty Portuguese vessels with 3,000 fishermen, which means that country will take much more fish in the Western Atlantic than we do and almost half that of Newfoundland. Yesterday morning in St. Johns, an Italian trawler arrived, the first since 1938. The volume of foreign fishing and the problem of securing due weight to North American control is therefore somewhat more acute than it appeared, and if Newfoundland enters Confederation serious consideration may have to be given to our representation. I have discussed that matter fully with Mr. Bridle.

My attention was directed also to the fact that this current fishing is taking place quite largely on the west coast of Greenland inside the Davis Straits. Defence considerations may have to be taken into account in the final formulation of the treaty since many European countries are entering this fishery. The problem of policing the convention had apparently received inadequate consideration by the United States. But I think we may have to consider the rights of boarding European craft not merely from a convention point of view but perhaps from others and possibly some thought might be given to the policing provisions since defence as well as fisheries conservation may be a factor to be borne in mind.

Yours very truly,
STEWART BATES

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note du sous-ministre des Pêcheries pour le ministre des Pêcheries

Memorandum from Deputy Minister of Fisheries to Minister of Fisheries

Ottawa, June 18, 1948

RE DISCUSSION IN NEWFOUNDLAND (14—17 JUNE) ON ATLANTIC TREATY

A treaty for the conservation of certain species of fish in the North-West Atlantic (from Greenland, south to Long Island, New York and West of 42° meridian) has been under discussion for some time. The United States government has prepared such a treaty, and intends to have a conference with the North American and European countries interested in these fisheries, probably in October, 1948. But as a preliminary, the United States asked Canada and Newfoundland to review the draft, as to acceptability. This was the reason for the Newfoundland conference between officials of the three countries.

The proposed treaty was extensive in its powers, and in original form not acceptable to Canada, nor as it turned out, to Newfoundland. Our objections to the draft were

(a) that the proposed International Commission was to have powers of regulation without reference back to the governments: in short we were being asked to transfer to an international body the powers to regulate our vessels on all waters except territorial — regulation of nets, catch, departure for fishing grounds, etc.

(b) that the proposed Commission would have too much discretion over scientific investigation and research, Canada preferring to retain a significant part of her research mechanism, but being ready to co-operate with other countries on joint investigational programmes.

(c) that the proposed Convention took no cognizance of the need for international agreement on the conduct of fishing — rules of the road, prevention of destruction of Canadian set-gear by foreign trawlers, etc. — a matter of annual concern with the Portuguese and Spanish trawlers.

The whole draft treaty was reviewed against this background, and the above changes were incorporated — that is the Commission may propose regulations but the government will legislate and administer them — that research will proceed by joint investigation wherever possible, and not through the establishment of any extensive research mechanism under an international commission — and that the rules of the road adopted for Europe should be incorporated in the treaty. In short the draft was modified along the lines thought to be in our interest, and will probably be submitted to all governments concerned by the United States in the new form.

Should Newfoundland vote (22 July) for Confederation, and should they be accepted by our government, we should then have to review our representation on the International Commission, since North America would then lose one vote on the panels (i.e. groups recommending action in the 4 sub-areas into which the Western Atlantic has been divided), and might be outweighed by European influence.

1003.

DEA/5251-40

Note du ministère des Pêcheries
Memorandum by Department of Fisheries

[Ottawa], June 23, 1948

RE INFORMAL MEETING BETWEEN REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES AND CANADIAN GOVERNMENTS AND THE INTERNATIONAL FISHERIES COMMISSION — OTTAWA, JUNE 23RD, 1948

Following are the various proposals submitted by the International Fisheries Commission to the two Governments which were discussed at the informal meeting held in Ottawa on June 23rd, the comments and decisions respecting each proposal following the listing in each case.

Present at the meeting were the following:

- Mr. G.W. Nickerson, Member, International Fisheries Commission.
- Mr. M.C. James, Member, International Fisheries Commission.
- Mr. E.W. Allen, Member, International Fisheries Commission.
- Mr. H.A. Dunlop, Director, International Fisheries Commission.
- Mr. Wm. Flory, United States State Department.
- Dr. W.M. Chapman, United States State Department.
- Dr. H.J. Deason, United States Fish and Wildlife Service.
- Mr. Wm. M. Dale, United States Embassy.
- Mr. C.C. Eberts, Department of External Affairs.
- Mr. S.V. Ozere, Department of Fisheries.
- Mr. G.R. Clark, Department of Fisheries.

Proposal No. 1

To make regulations for the control of the rate of landings of halibut and to establish a Control Board to administer such regulations.

Decision: In commenting on this proposal Mr. Dunlop suggested changing the word "landings" to "catch". During the discussion it was pointed out by the representatives of the United States State Department and the Canadian Government that this was a legal question and the legal authorities would have to be consulted to ascertain whether or not the Commission presently has the required powers under the existing Treaty. It was agreed that the Commission should draft a sample regulation so it could be examined to see if the Commission presently has the power to implement this particular proposal.

Proposal No. 2

To divide the fishing season in any area into two or three open periods and to assign a portion of the area's annual catch limit to each open period.

Decision: Here again this involves the matter of legal interpretation of the terms of the present Treaty and it was the feeling of the representatives of the United States State Department that the Commission presently has the necessary powers if it wants to use them. The Canadian representatives advised they would be prepared to have a sample regulation prepared by the Commission submitted to the Department of Justice for a ruling.

Proposal No. 3

To control the landings of the halibut caught by vessels fishing primarily for other species during the open season, as well as during the closed season.

Decision: It was agreed that the Commission would prepare and submit a sample regulation on this point in order for both Governments to obtain legal rulings.

Proposal No. 4

To determine the amount of halibut allowed to be landed by vessels fishing for other species on such basis as the Commission determines proper and not inconsistent with the conservation objective.

Decision: Following a discussion the Commission agreed to delete this proposal in view of the fact that it could not be justified on the grounds of conservation.

Proposal No. 5

To apply control of the landings of halibut caught by vessels fishing primarily for other species by regulatory areas or parts of regulatory areas.

Decision: This proposal is in effect a supplement to No. 3 above and the Commission agreed to submit a sample regulation.

Proposal No. 6

To prohibit on closed halibut nursery grounds fishing with types of gear whose use for the capture of other species of fish the Commission shall determine to be destructive of small halibut.

Decision: It was felt that this point is not covered by the present Treaty, but in the case of Canada it could be covered under the Fisheries Act and by the United States within the three mile limit and possibly beyond. The Commission stated that this particular point was not of sufficient importance to amend the Treaty, but if the other items required Treaty amendment then this proposal should be included. It was decided that Mr. Dunlop should give further consideration and review to this point to see if there is some way in which the present Treaty could be stretched to take care of the proposal. It was agreed that in developing this point the Commission should be certain it was based on scientific justification. Also a statement as to what areas would be involved. It was, therefore, decided that Mr. Dunlop would submit a brief on this point including whatever scientific evidence is available.

Proposal No. 7

To make such regulations for the licensing of dealers, of vessels and of fishermen and for the suspension and cancellation of such licenses as it shall find necessary to carry out the terms of the Treaty and to make effective any regulation adopted thereunder.

Decision: The Commission claimed that this was an enforcement regulation and the representatives of the United States State Department suggested the possibility of a conference with the enforcement authorities. It was the view of the representatives of both Governments that this proposal would have to be fully explored since it appeared to be entering into an entirely different field than that contemplated by the Treaty. The United States State Department representative stated that if the Commission insists on the proposal his Department would consider the matter and give an answer as soon as possible, but that he would like to see the Commission take the matter up with the enforcement agencies.

The Commission representatives stated that the situation with respect to enforcement of the regulations was much better now on the Canadian side as a result of increased Department of Fisheries personnel and that violations were now chiefly on the United States side. It was suggested by the United States State Department representative that a meeting of the United States Commissioners and the Director of the Commission might be held in Washington for the purpose of discussing enforcement methods with the Customs Department and the State Department. It was agreed that Mr. Dunlop should develop the matter of methods of enforcement of the regulations insofar as the United States side is concerned and that the Commission, through Mr. Dunlop, would make representations to Canada with respect to enforcement of the regulations under the present Canadian agencies.

Proposal (a)

That the Commission be enlarged to six members, one of whom should be a representative of the American halibut fleet and one from the Canadian fleet.

Decision: Following discussion it was the opinion of the Commission that this proposal would not add to the efficiency of the Commission and accordingly the point was set aside.

Proposal (b)

That the Commission be authorized to undertake the regulation and preservation of all bottom fish in the north Pacific.

Decision: After reviewing this point at length it was agreed to delete it due to the difficulties involved in attempting to give effect to the proposal.

1004.

DEA/5134-A-40

*Note du chef de la Direction de l'Amérique et l'Extrême-Orient
pour la Direction économique*

Memorandum from Head, American and Far Eastern Division, to Economic Division

Ottawa, October 6, 1948

Earlier this year the United States Government submitted for our consideration a draft of a proposed "Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Convention." In June representatives of the Canadian, United States and Newfoundland Governments met at St. John's for a preliminary meeting, prior to a general meeting of all countries concerned which will probably be held in Washington some time in January, 1949. At the St. John's meeting the draft convention was discussed and a number of amendments were suggested. I attach a copy of the original draft as amended by the meeting at St. John's.†

2. The draft convention deals with questions of conservation only. The United States Government propose that the convention shall be considered as an "inter-governmental commodity agreement" as defined by Article 57(d) of the Havana Charter.<sup>55</sup> However, Article 70(d) would appear to exempt the proposed convention from the provisions of the Havana Charter dealing with "inter-governmental commodity agreements." I should be grateful if you would examine the draft convention and let me have your advice on the following points:

(a) If the convention is, in your opinion, an "inter-governmental commodity agreement" as defined by Article 57(d) of the Havana Charter.

(b) In the event that you do not consider it to be an "inter-governmental commodity agreement," and therefore not required to register with the I.T.O., do you think any useful purpose is served in bringing the projected "North-west Atlantic Fisheries Commission" into relation with the I.T.O.

3. For your information, there is another aspect which must be considered by this Division and it is essentially political. Recently we received an informal enquiry from the United States Embassy here concerning Canada's reaction if Spain were to be officially invited to attend the conference in Washington. We have replied that there would be no objection on our part to Spain receiving an invitation but, if Article XV of the draft were incorporated into the final form of the convention — Article XV provides for a relationship between the projected Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Commission and the I.T.O. — Spain would either (a) have to refrain from signing the convention, or (b) sign the convention and be put out when the commission actually was brought into relationship with the I.T.O.

4. However, the Department of Fisheries considers it desirable that Spain should be a signatory because Spanish fishermen come to the Northwest Atlantic in considerable numbers and, since their fishing manners are none too good, they should be governed by the same rules as fishermen of other nations.

DAVID M. JOHNSON

<sup>55</sup> Un projet révisé de la convention proposée par les États-Unis évitait toute référence à la Charte de La Havane ou à l'Organisation internationale du Commerce, et de ce fait les complications évoquées dans les paragraphes 2 et 3 de la note ne se posèrent pas.

A subsequent redraft of the proposed convention by the United States omitted any reference to the Havana Charter or the International Trade Organization, so the complications outlined in paragraphs 2 and 3 of the memorandum did not arise.

1005.

DEA/5134-A-40

*Le ministre de l'ambassade des États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Minister, Embassy of United States,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

NOTE NO. 331

Ottawa, November 3, 1948

Excellency:

I have the honor to inform Your Excellency that the United States Government is planning to convene an International Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Conference to be held at Washington beginning January 26, 1949. This Conference is being called in view of the evidence of current and potential depletion of certain commercially important species of fish in the Northwest Atlantic Ocean, and since international recognition has been given to the desirability of special treatment for this area. It is hoped that the Conference will provide a means for continuous international cooperation in the investigation and, where necessary, conservation and development of species of international interest in the area in question.

I am directed by my Government to extend an invitation to the Canadian Government to participate in the Conference. There are enclosed four copies of a Background Summary† which may be found of interest, and also four copies of a Draft of an International Convention† which it is proposed to submit to the Conference. It has come informally to the attention of my Government that as a result of recent incidents involving such questions as right-of-way and protection of lines and nets when fishing operations are being conducted, the question may arise at the Conference of the desirability of including in the proposed convention a provision concerning rules of the road.

It is expected that a draft of the agenda of the Conference and a draft of the rules of procedure will be received shortly and they will be submitted to you at once. My Government ventures to hope that the Canadian Government will be represented by delegates having full powers to sign the Convention, should it be adopted.

In the event the Canadian Government should care to be represented at the Conference I should be grateful if the names and designations of the Canadian representatives could be made known to me as well as the probable date of their arrival at Washington. I would also be glad to be informed should any of them plan to be accompanied by members of their families. My Government states that it would much facilitate the arrangements for accommodation, transportation and entertainment if the information about the numbers of the delegations to the Conference could be received as soon as may be practicable.

Invitations are also being extended by the United States Government to the Governments of Denmark, France, Great Britain, Iceland, Newfoundland, Norway, Portugal and Spain.

Please accept, etc.

JULIAN F. HARRINGTON

1006.

DEA/5134-A-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur des États-Unis*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador of United States

NOTE NO. 356

Ottawa, December 15, 1948

Excellency,

I have the honour to refer to your note no. 331 of November 3rd wherein you were good enough to inform me that your Government was planning to convene an international Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Conference to be held in Washington beginning January 26, 1949. At the same time you kindly extended an invitation to the Canadian Government to participate in this Conference.

Under the terms of the draft forwarded with your note under reference, it is proposed that the Convention will come into force when it has been ratified by four signatory powers, one of which must be Newfoundland. As you know, it is expected that Newfoundland will be united with Canada on March 31, 1949. If the Conference were to be held in January as planned and the convention signed at that time, Newfoundland could participate but might have ceased to exist as a High Contracting Party before it could ratify.

The Canadian Government also considers that it will take a considerable time after union has been effected before the appropriate Canadian authorities will have acquired a sufficient knowledge of the fishery problems of the areas around Newfoundland to be able to participate effectively in a conference designed to set up an international commission for these areas which are vital to the economy of Canada and particularly to that of the Maritime Provinces.

For the above reasons the Canadian Government requests that the conference be postponed for at least a year. I should be grateful if you would ask your Government to give sympathetic consideration to this request.

Please accept, etc.

ESCOTT REID
for Secretary of State
for External Affairs

SECTION B

DÉTOURNEMENT DE LA RIVIÈRE NIAGARA
NIAGARA RIVER DIVERSION

1007.

PCO/Vol. 59

Extrait du procès-verbal du Comité du Cabinet chargé du développement économique et industrielExtract from Minutes of Cabinet Committee on Economic and Industrial Development

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], August 4, 1948

...

II. NIAGARA RIVER; POWER DIVERSIONS; ONTARIO HYDRO REQUEST

5. The Secretary submitted a report from the Department of External Affairs on proposals from the Ontario Hydro Commission for water diversions from the Niagara River.

A number of temporary diversions in favour of both Canada and the United States had been authorized during the recent war, one of which at least had no firm legal basis. The Ontario Hydro had suggested a permanent arrangement based on 40,000 c.f.s.<sup>56</sup> to each country.

These arrangements appeared satisfactory from the point of view of the federal government nor did the matter appear to require any ruling by the International Joint Commission. Any formal agreement with the United States covering the diversions, however, would probably have to take the form of a convention or treaty.

As a first step it was proposed that the Ontario Hydro Commission seek to reach agreement with the principle agency on the United States side, the Niagara Hudson Power Corporation. Meanwhile no action by the Canadian government would be necessary.

An explanatory document had been circulated.

(Memorandum, Secretary of State for External Affairs, July 26, 1948, CCEID Document No. 19)†

6. The Committee, after discussion, noted with approval the report submitted.

...

<sup>56</sup> cubic feet per second.

1008.

DEA/1268-K-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs*

Ottawa, November 9, 1948

RE ONTARIO HYDRO STATEMENT ON NIAGARA POWER DEVELOPMENT

You will recall that I spoke to you on November 6 about a misleading report which had appeared in the press, purporting to be an account of an announcement by Robert H. Saunders, Chairman of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission. Briefly, the report indicated that the Hydro planned a $150,000,000 development at Niagara; that a treaty with the United States would be required; that Saunders had talked with the Acting Prime Minister and with External Affairs and had been told to "go ahead"; that the Hydro had to complete talks with the Niagara-Hudson Power Company, and that the "resulting agreement" would then "be forwarded to Ottawa and Washington for ratification by treaty between the two countries." You agreed that Mr. Saunders should be approached with the suggestion that he make a further statement to the press setting the record straight.

2. Mr. Saunders was reached by telephone on Saturday evening, November 6. He believed his statement to the press had been accurate and regretted that there had been any misunderstanding. He did not propose to make any further statement to the press but had no objections to our doing so. The attached brief statement was then read to him, and he agreed that it set out the true story.

3. You may wish to have this statement for your press conference tomorrow.

In March, 1948, Mr. Saunders called on Mr. St. Laurent, then Secretary of State for External Affairs, with proposals for a permanent settlement between Canada and the U.S. regarding diversions from the Niagara River for power purposes. Mr. St. Laurent told him that Government officials would do what they could to cooperate with his organization in this regard.

2. Mr. Saunders discussed the Hydro proposals with other Government officials. It was agreed that the first step should be an informal understanding between the interested agencies on both sides, and that the Hydro would seek to reach such an understanding with the U.S. agencies concerned — the Niagara-Hudson Power Corporation, the New York Power Authority and the Federal Power Commission. The next step would be for the Canadian Government to seek a formal treaty with the U.S. Government.

3. To date, we are not aware that any informal understanding has been reached between the Hydro and the U.S. agencies.

-E[SCOTT] R[EID]

1009.

DEA/1268-K-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

[Ottawa], December 20, 1948

RE NIAGARA DIVERSIONS

You may wish to bring the following information, in connection with Niagara diversions, to the attention of Cabinet at tomorrow's meeting.

On November 11, 1948, Robert H. Saunders, Chairman of the Ontario Hydro, addressed a letter to Mr. Claxton, requesting that arrangements be completed to permit Hydro to take an additional diversion of 2,500 cubic feet of water per second through the Welland Canal for the generation of power at the Commission's DeCew Falls plant near St. Catharines, during the closed navigation season. The Department of Transport had already indicated that it was prepared to permit the additional quantity of water to be taken through the Canal. Mr. Saunders subsequently discussed the question with Mr. Claxton and Mr. St. Laurent, both of whom informed him that the Canadian Government would regard the proposal favourably if United States approval could be obtained for an increase in total Canadian diversions from boundary waters in the Niagara area, and the proposal was also cleared with Mr. Howe, who was then in Washington.

The proposal was transmitted to the State Department by the Embassy, and Mr. Saunders discussed it personally with State Department and Federal Power Commission authorities. The State Department undertook to prepare a draft exchange of notes which would authorize the additional diversion.

On December 17, the Embassy forwarded the State Department's draft by teletype. The draft, which is annexed to this memorandum,† was promptly cleared with the officials concerned in the Departments of Mines and Resources and of Transport.

Hydro has been taking an additional 2,500 c.f.s. through the Welland Canal since navigation closed last week, while making a corresponding reduction at a plant at Niagara Falls itself. Mr. Saunders has only been restrained with great difficulty from announcing this fact to the press, and from stating that an exchange of notes was about to be signed. Since a premature announcement by Mr. Saunders would be embarrassing to the Canadian Government and disturbing to the U.S. Government, the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs emphasized on December 18, when authorizing Mr. Wrong to sign the Note on behalf of Canada, that it would be desirable for the exchange to be completed and the official announcement made by both Federal Governments at the earliest possible date. It is expected that the exchange of notes will be concluded and the announcement made on Tuesday or Wednesday of this week.

You will notice that the exchange refers to a diversion of 4,000 c.f.s. arranged by exchange of notes in 1944. This exchange was subject to Senate approval which was never given, but the diversion has nevertheless been used ever since by tacit agreement between the two Governments. This fact made it somewhat difficult for the State Department to deal with the request for an additional 2,500 c.f.s. diversion. The State Department officials concluded that the only solution was to include both diversions in the present exchange, making them both subject to Senate approval.

You will also note that the authorization for the diversions will terminate on April 15, 1951. It is anticipated that a permanent Niagara treaty, embodying the temporary diversions authorized as emergency measures during and since the war, will be concluded before that date.

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

SECTION C

PROJET DE VOIE MARITIME ET DE CENTRALES HYDRO-ÉLECTRIQUES
DU SAINT-LAURENT
ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AND POWER PROJECT

1010.

CEW/Vol. 2126

*Le directeur du Bureau des affaires européennes du Département d'État des États-Unis
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*
*Director, Office of European Affairs,
United States Department of State,
to Ambassador in United States*

Washington, January 8, 1948

My dear Mr. Ambassador:

I refer to discussions during recent months between officers of the Department and the Embassy concerning the developments in connection with the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project. As you know, the joint resolution approving the project is likely to be brought up on the floor of the Senate at the end of January, having been favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. Proponents of the project feel that the chances for favorable action by the Senate at this session are better than they have ever been. Meanwhile, Chairman Dondero of the House Public Works Committee plans to resume late in January the hearings on the joint resolution which were adjourned last July. There is some uncertainty about the prospects for the resolution in the House, but it is likely that it will be brought up in the House also during this session.

There are several aspects of the project which I know you agree should be the subject of exchange of information and discussion between the two Governments at this stage. It is not suggested that there should be formal negotiations or anything of the sort. That would come, as I see it, when the resolution is considerably further along. Meanwhile, however, the proponents of the project feel that they should be better informed concerning the Canadian point of view about various phases of the project and Canadian facts and figures relating to costs, traffic, tolls, et cetera. There is no doubt that questions will be asked on the floor of the Senate and also in the House Public Works Committee concerning the Canadian point of view and the Canadian facts and figures.

In the above connection I believe you may have transmitted to Ottawa copies of the study by the Department of Commerce entitled "An Economic Appraisal of the St. Lawrence Seaway Project" in the series headed "Industry Report: Domestic Transportation" for August-November 1947. As you know, this study examines the potential traffic of the seaway, particularly in terms of iron ore, grain, bituminous coal, and petroleum, and touches briefly upon the capacity of the seaway and the possible revenues to be obtained from tolls. The comments of your people on this study would be of particular value to us, and we feel that the study should offer your people a useful basis of approach to the traffic, capacity, and revenue aspects of the problem. I think the same thing might be said of the report of the Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations on Senate Joint Resolution 111, which followed the Subcommittee hearings of last May and June. This report, as you recall, contains a good deal of detailed information concerning costs and traffic and tolls. I should mention particularly in connection with the Senate report that our people brought the Canadian cost figures up to date on a somewhat rule-of-thumb basis in order that they should compare realistically with the up-to-date U.S. figures. I believe your people may wish to review this aspect and send us any corrections which ought to be made.

The following general questions are intended as of possible assistance to your people in Ottawa in developing the sort of information which would be useful to us here. The questions are not all-inclusive and I realize that it would be impossible to give an exact answer to everyone of them:

- (1) What are the present Canadian estimates for the Canadian share of construction costs and on what date are these estimates based?
- (2) What are the Canadian estimates for the traffic capacity of the waterway, especially, of course, from Lake Erie to Montreal?
- (3) What is the Canadian estimate of the traffic capacity of the Welland Canal for toll-paying traffic, bearing in mind the continued utilization of the Welland Canal by smaller toll-free vessels?
- (4) What are the present Canadian estimates concerning the nature and volume of the traffic utilizing the projected seaway?
- (5) Do the Canadian officials concerned with this problem have any comments or suggestions concerning the traffic estimates made in the above-mentioned study by the Department of Commerce and in the above-mentioned report of the Subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee?
- (6) Do the Canadian officials in question have any comments or suggestions concerning the U.S. estimates relating to the potential Labrador iron ore deposits?

(7) Are there any Canadian comments concerning the conclusion in the above-mentioned Department of Commerce report to the effect that wheat would be brought eastward over the waterway in lake vessels and transshipped at Montreal into ocean-going vessels for export?

(8) Have the Canadian officials any comments or suggestions in connection with the tolls aspects of the project as outlined in the Senate report and the Department of Commerce study?

(9) Do the U.S. toll estimates appear realistic? Are the rates for individual commodities fair? Does it appear to the Canadian officials that the rates suggested and the revenues anticipated therefrom would make the project self-liquidating? (We fully appreciate at this end that while your Government has agreed in principle to the imposition of tolls, providing arrangements can be made satisfactory to both Governments, it would be premature to expect any formal and definitive statements in answer to this question. Nevertheless we are hopeful that your people may find it possible to give an indication whether we are proceeding in the right direction and whether our estimates are generally well founded.)

In view of the imminence of the consideration of the project on the Senate floor and by the House Public Works Committee, we should be very grateful if you could get word from Ottawa for us at the earliest possible moment.<sup>57</sup>

Sincerely yours,

JOHN D. HICKERSON

1011.

DEA/1268-D-40

Procès-verbal d'une réunion
Minutes of a Meeting

Ottawa, January 16, 1948

INFORMAL MEETING TO DISCUSS THE ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY PROJECT

Present:

Chairman

- Mr. Léon Mayrand, Legal Division.
- Mr. Homer S. Fox, Associate Economic Counsellor, United States Embassy.
- Mr. R.A.C. Henry, Chairman, Air Transport Board.
- Mr. Guy A. Lindsay, Engineer in Charge, General Engineering Branch, Department of Transport.
- Mr. Norman Marr, Assistant Controller and Assistant Chief Engineer Department of Mines and Resources.
- Mr. Alex Skelton, Director General of Economic Research, Department of Reconstruction and Supply.

<sup>57</sup> La réunion non officielle rapportée dans le document suivant immédiatement a été substituée à une réponse détaillée écrite, parce que les études canadiennes requises n'étaient pas encore terminées. The informal meeting recorded in the immediately following document was substituted for a detailed written reply, as the appropriate Canadian studies were not yet complete.

Mr. W.B. Timm, Director of Mines, Forests and Scientific Services, Department of Mines and Resources.

Mr. W.J. Fisher, Director of Transportation and Communications Division, Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. D.M. Johnson, Director of American and Far Eastern Division.

Acting Secretary

Mr. I.C. Pollack, Legal Division.

The Chairman explained that the purpose of the meeting was two-fold:

(1) To permit Mr. Homer S. Fox, Associate Economic Counsellor, United States Embassy, to check some of the United States data concerning Canada with the Canadian experts present at the meeting.

(2) To obtain an expression of opinion from the competent Canadian authorities that their views are generally in agreement with those of the United States administration.

The Chairman observed that as regards the latter, only personal views could be expressed, and these views could not be considered those of the Canadian Government as we were still preparing reports in this connection for their consideration.

2. The Chairman proposed that the questions contained in the letter from Mr. Hickerson of the State Department to the Canadian Ambassador in Washington, of January 8, 1948, be answered in the order submitted.

3. Mr. Homer S. Fox thanked the Chairman for making possible this meeting and expressed his concurrence to proceed in the manner suggested.

Question 1

What are the present Canadian estimates for the Canadian share of construction costs and on what date are these estimates based?

Mr. R.A.C. Henry, Chairman of the Air Transport Board, replied that as regards the Lachine section, the estimate was still under investigation and a figure could not be given before March. Mr. Guy Lindsay, Engineer in Charge, General Engineering Branch, Department of Transport, said that there was an estimate for the Soulange-Lake St. Francis section as of November-December, 1946. It was pointed out that the method utilized by the American authorities to calculate costs as of May, 1947, by increasing the 1941 figure by some 53 or 54%, was not feasible since the estimate of 1941 is no longer applicable in view of the fact that the Canadian part of the St. Lawrence Seaway project has changed since 1941.

In part, the present scheme would call for a decrease in costs, but the amount is relatively higher because of increased construction costs. Mr. Henry and Mr. Lindsay were of the opinion that, as an outside figure, they would consider that the cost would not exceed the estimate made by General Wheeler in the study prepared by the Department of Commerce. The 1946 estimate for the Soulange-St. Francis section is 31 or 32 million dollars which is less than General Wheeler's estimate. His estimate of 84 million dollars for the Lachine section could also be considered a maximum figure. The Canadian estimate for the international section is not as high as the one prepared by American authorities. It was confirmed to Mr. Fox that the power project costs are not included in the estimates given in the discussion. It was also appreciated that the cost of power projects could be liquidated more quickly than the cost for the seaway project. However, if the power project only was undertaken in the International section, it would cost more than if progressed jointly with a Seaway Project.

Question 2

What are the Canadian estimates for the traffic capacity of the waterway, especially, of course, from Lake Erie to Montreal?

Mr. Lindsay estimated the practical traffic capacity of the waterway to be 30- to 35 million tons on the basis of present-day economic conditions and size of ships, which would utilize the seaway provided. It was pointed out that ships running east to west are very often without cargo. If iron ore should be shipped westward, the practical traffic capacity could be estimated at 70 million tons. He did not believe that the Welland Ship Canal would be a bottle-neck. Mr. Henry was of the opinion that the traffic capacity would be about 40 million tons, in view of the increased tonnage of the ships that would use the waterway. The term "practical" is considered to mean what ships are carrying in the light of present conditions, and not the theoretical maximum capacity which they could carry.

Question 3

What is the Canadian estimate of the traffic capacity of the Welland Canal for toll-paying traffic, bearing in mind the continued utilization of the Welland Canal by smaller toll-free vessels?

Mr. Henry agrees with the estimate contained in the report of the United States Department of Commerce. In his opinion 2500-ton boats would not be able to compete economically with the 20,000-ton ships and in the course of time would discontinue their operations. Therefore, the traffic would not be reduced below the estimate of 40 million tons which is the practical traffic capacity estimated for the project in general.

Question 4

What are the present Canadian estimates concerning the nature and volume of the traffic utilizing the projected seaway?

The volume of traffic in this case is considered to mean combined United States and Canadian traffic. Mr. Henry estimates the volume to be about 30 million tons. As for the nature of the traffic, the carriage of iron ore is an important consideration. He believes there would be a considerable increase in the volume of petroleum products and also cement, as far as Canadian shipping is concerned.

Question 5

Do the Canadian officials concerned with this problem have any comments or suggestions concerning the traffic estimates made in the above-mentioned study by the Department of Commerce and in the above-mentioned report of the Subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee?

Mr. A. Skelton, Director General of Economic Research, Department of Reconstruction and Supply, said that in the light of present information, he had no quarrel to make with the estimates contained in the American studies. Mr. Henry also said that he concurred generally in the American estimates. As regards grain, the estimate is perhaps a little too low, in view of present European requirements, but probably correct, having regard to normal traffic. The estimate for iron ore is probably a little on the high side, but considering that 60% of the iron products in the United States depend on ore carried through the waterway and that it is estimated that 51- to 80 million tons of ore are required yearly, perhaps the estimate is not too high, if the capacity of the canal will permit the traffic.

Question 6

Do the Canadian officials in question have any comments or suggestions concerning the United States estimates relating to the potential Labrador iron ore deposits?

Mr. Henry said that in the United States report, the estimate is that 5- to 10 million tons a year can be obtained from the Labrador deposits but that other people in the United States do not believe there is as much as all that.

Mr. W.B. Timm, Director of Mines, Forests and Scientific Services, Department of Mines and Resources, informed the meeting that he could not really state the extent of the deposits in Labrador, but that the drilling to date shows 150- to 250 million tons of proven ore and that the hope is that by the end of 1948 the amount will have been increased to 300 million tons. It can be affirmed that extensive reserves of high-grade iron ore exists. It is calculated that at least 10 million tons of iron ore must be mined yearly for an efficient and economical operation to be maintained, and that proven ore deposits of 300 million tons must be established to warrant the construction of a railway. It will be 1951 or 1952 before any iron ore is shipped out of Labrador, at which time the canal will also be ready if the seaway project is approved by the United States and Canada. Mr. Timm considers that the United States estimate of iron ore reserves in Labrador is reasonable.

Question 7

Are there any Canadian comments concerning the conclusion in the above-mentioned Department of Commerce report to the effect that wheat would be brought eastward over the waterway in lake vessels and trans-shipped at Montreal into ocean-going vessels for export?

Mr. W.J. Fisher, Director of Transportation and Communications Division, Department of Trade and Commerce, believes that wheat would be continued to be brought eastward over the waterway in lake vessels, and that trans-shipment for export would be made at Montreal, or perhaps at some point lower in the St. Lawrence. The reason for carriage by lake vessel as opposed to ocean going vessels, is that the former costs much less to construct and operate. There is also a considerable amount of wheat which is not carried to Europe in tramp steamers, but is shipped in small lots in liners. Liner requirements for New York would still go through Buffalo if this traffic was warranted, on the basis of rates. So long as it did not cost more to ship via New York as from Montreal, and New York was interested to get this traffic, wheat would be shipped through Buffalo. Liners were interested in carrying wheat as dead weight ballast. Mr. Henry and Mr. Fisher did not believe that ocean vessels would go up the seaway. A very small number of Norwegian and Greek ships did so and traded in the Lakes, but this traffic in 1946 was only  $\frac{1}{2}$  million tons.

Question 8

Have the Canadian officials any comments or suggestions in connection with the tolls aspect of the project as outlined in the Senate report and the Department of Commerce study?

In Mr. Henry's opinion tolls should not be based on the total cost of the waterways because part of the costs are actually improvements which cannot be depreciated and therefore should not be amortised, e.g. foundations. With regard to the tolls themselves, he considers them to be slightly unbalanced if one compares the tolls for iron ore and grain.

The value of a ton of iron ore is about $6.00 and the value of a ton of wheat is about $33.00. However, the tolls are respectively 50¢ and 25¢; in other words, twice as much for iron ore whose cost is five times less. In his opinion it would be more appropriate to charge 12½¢ per ton for iron ore if the toll for grain is to be 25¢. Provision will have to be made for petroleum products for which no toll is included and for cement which might be 50¢ a ton.

Mr. Henry furthermore considers that tolls should be based on:

- (1) Cost of operation (maintenance)
- (2) Depreciation of items entering into costs.
- (3) Interest, if it is to be included at all.

Generally speaking, the tolls are acceptable and the over-all estimate of 21- to 27 millions is very much in line with Mr. Henry's estimate of 20 million.

Question 9

Do the United States toll estimates appear realistic? Are the rates for individual commodities fair? Does it appear to the Canadian officials that the rates suggested and the revenues anticipated therefrom would make the project self-liquidation[sic]?

Subject to reasonable agreement on what should be included in the estimate of costs, as for example, interest, the tolls should make the project self-liquidating. The toll for coal, is perhaps a little too high. Mr. Fisher pointed out that Canada was a potential market for anthracite coal from the United Kingdom. If English coal costs could ever be brought into line with American costs, the volume of traffic of coal would be considerably increased. Mr. Lindsay was of the opinion that the figure for annual charges might be a little too high. Mr. Henry observed that the defence value of the seaway project was a very important factor in favour of the project.

-----

Having answered all the nine questions contained in Mr. Hickerson's letter, the Chairman asked Mr. Fox whether there were any further questions he would like answered. Mr. Fox did not propose asking anything else at the present time.

Mr. Skelton, however, brought up the subject of power and whether the increase in power would find a ready market. Mr. Henry was of the opinion that there was no question that the territories concerned required this additional electrical power, and would utilize it over a relatively short period of time.

-----

Before closing the meeting the Chairman thanked the representatives for attending and agreed to provide Minutes of the Meeting as soon as possible.

1012.

DEA/1268-D-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-622

Washington, February 27, 1948

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

After a month's intermittent but occasionally heated debate, the Senate by a vote of 57 to 30 recommitted this afternoon to the Foreign Relations Committee the Resolution authorizing the construction of the seaway. This method of dealing with the seaway, as I mentioned in my WA-417 of February 7th, 1948,† tends to remove the political consequences of its defeat as a national issue. It also appealed both to those who entertained sincere doubts about certain aspects of the seaway as presented, as well as to those who might have wished to vote against it for other reasons but could not do so without some risk. Without doubt the seaway will not be approved by the present Congress.

2. Apart from such basic arguments used by the opponents that the seaway proposal should have been submitted to Congress as a Treaty rather than an Agreement, that it will be ice-bound four months of the year, that the 27 foot depth as proposed is too shallow, genuine sentiment exists that certain aspects of the seaway require further study and clarification. These include disputed contentions as to anticipated traffic, capacity, cost and self-liquidation. The debate showed that widely varied estimates on these matters can be supported which are very difficult to prove conclusively in either extreme. Clearly, many contentions about the seaway are matters of judgment rather than fact which cannot be established until after the seaway is completed and used. On the other hand, a certain portion of the Congress will continue to vote against the seaway no matter how exhaustive and minute a study of all considerations connected with it is undertaken. Nevertheless a need does seem to exist for a basic and up-to-date study of such matters as traffic potential, cost, tolls, capacity and depth for modern shipping. According to the State Department, it is too early to be definite about what steps will be taken. Andrew Foster, however, says that further studies will probably be undertaken this year possibly with a view to reintroducing the Bill at the next session of Congress.

3. Many supporters of the Bill are convinced that the main and collateral considerations introduced by the opponents were merely a device to defeat the measure, which is in reality opposed for underlying and unsaid reasons and not through objective analysis of its merits and faults as proposed. Thus they state that the opposition springs from port, coal, railway, lake carrier and power interests.

4. Senator Barkley in the closing stages of the debate said that he supposed Hancock was right when he said that the tariff is a local issue. Mr. Barkley said that he thought that description applied to the seaway. Senator Barkley said, however, that he was as sure that the seaway would ultimately be completed as he was that the sun will rise tomorrow morning. Amongst the welter of debate, confusion, conflicting estimates and clashing interests which harry this proposal, Mr. Barkley's conclusions stand out as being apt.

5. One of the weaknesses in the case for the seaway was the vagueness of the toll proposal. The conclusion of an International Agreement providing for the toll arrangements in detail may be considered necessary before the proposal is submitted to Congress again.

6. I will, of course, keep you informed of further developments.

1013.

DEA/1268-U-40

*Note du président du Comité interministériel
sur le projet de voie maritime du Saint-Laurent pour le Comité du Cabinet chargé du développement
économique et industriel*

Memorandum from Chairman, Interdepartmental Committee on St. Lawrence Waterway Project, to Cabinet Committee on Economic and Industrial Development

SECRET

[Ottawa], May 8, 1948

THE ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY AND POWER PROJECT

The Interdepartmental Committee on the St. Lawrence Waterway and Power Project has been giving consideration to the situation existing as a result of:

(a) The action of the U.S. Senate in recommitting Senate Joint Resolution 111 — which would approve most of the Seaway and Power Agreement of 1941 — to its Foreign Relations Committee;

(b) Indications that the Governments of Ontario and New York State will press for action enabling them to proceed at an early date with the development — independently of the navigation scheme — of the power resources in the International Section of the St. Lawrence River.

Present Status of 1941 Agreement

2. The above-mentioned action of the U.S. Senate appears to have been taken not because the opponents of the seaway were believed to be definitely in the majority but in view of the fact that many Senators considered it inadvisable to vote for or against the seaway project in an election year. The effect, however, will be that of preventing final acceptance or rejection of the 1941 Agreement during the life of the present Congress. It is, nevertheless, not unreasonable to assume that the question will be considered by the next Congress, possibly within twelve months' time, and that there is still a possibility that the 1941 Agreement, incorporating both navigation and power development features, may receive the necessary approval.

Desirability of the Waterway

3. The navigation features of the 1941 Agreement are of as much importance to Canada as the power proposals. Since the beginnings of our history, transportation, in relation to the area and population to be served, has been the basic Canadian economic problem. The great natural advantage of the St. Lawrence-Great Lakes waterway system has done much to overcome our other handicaps and high costs in this field. This waterway system has been the basis of our historical economic development from the days of the fur trade and the timber trade to the 20th century integration of the grain-exporting west with the industrial east. There is every indication that the role of an improved St. Lawrence-Great Lakes system can be equally important in the future in view of the apparent potentialities of the Labrador-Quebec iron ore deposits and the rapid progress to industrial maturity of the contributory area. The Province of Ontario would be a major beneficiary of further improvement of its main transportation artery. The continued industrial development of the St. Lawrence-Great Lakes area has, of course, strategic as well as economic aspects.

4. Whatever can be done to eliminate bottlenecks and reduce costs of transportation for bulky, relatively low-valued commodities which must be moved long distances to markets, will be of particular advantage to Canada. Canada has a particular interest in pressing the navigation features of the seaway and in tying them in with the power development aspects in which the United States is now especially interested, and the financial arrangements embodied in the 1941 Agreement are admirably adapted to promote and protect Canada's interest.

Feasibility and Advantages of Separate Power Development

5. Separate development of power, as envisaged by Ontario and New York State, could be carried out in such a way as not to hinder eventual development for navigation. Also, it is arguable that, if the next Congress rejected the 1941 Agreement at an early date or delayed its approval for a further lengthy period, and the International Joint Commission decided in favour of separate power development within a reasonable length of time, such development could bring Canada in the near future an additional million horse-power for its present needs and for possible defence requirements. (Further comments are made below on the time factors involved.) Nor is it clear that the total cost to Canada and the United States would be substantially greater, if power were developed first and navigation subsequently. On the other hand, as will be shown in the following paragraphs, the financial loss to Canada — including Ontario — would be considerable, and it is in fact doubtful that the development of the waterway could be realized at all in the foreseeable future.

Financial Advantages of the 1941 Agreement

6. The 1941 Agreement was advantageous from the financial point of view in that it attempted, as far as possible, to divide the over-all cost of the proposed 27-foot waterway, from Montreal to the Upper Lakes, almost equally between Canada and the United States. To this end, under the Agreement, the United States undertook to bear the entire cost of the improvements in the Upper Lakes, and the cost of both the power and navigation works in the International Section with the exception of the land damage on the Canadian side, the rehabilitation of some of the displaced communities, and the installation of the electrical machinery for power production on the Canadian side, which were to be the responsibility of Canada. Canada also agreed to bear the expense of deepening the Welland Canal to 27 feet, and of the works in Lake St. Francis, the Soulange Section and the Lachine Section.

7. It was contemplated by both Canada and the United States that the former would make an arrangement with Ontario and the latter would make one with the State of New York, regarding the amounts which Ontario and New York would pay for the power works. The Canadian Government did in fact enter into an agreement with Ontario regarding the power works in the International Section. It was recognized that some of the works in the International Section were for navigation alone, some for power alone, and some were necessary for both navigation and power. According to the 1941 arrangement, Ontario was to pay the Federal Government for the power works, and for part of the cost of the combined navigation and power works.

8. The following table shows the financial arrangements under the 1941 Agreements with the United States and with Ontario, from which may be calculated the net cost to the Federal Government of the entire 27-foot waterway. The estimates, in round figures, are given both at 1941 prices and at 1948 prices. It may be noted, however, that the 1948 estimates are based on the assumption that a new agreement could be negotiated with Ontario on the same basis as the 1941 Agreement.

COST TO FEDERAL GOVERNMENT — 1941 ARRANGEMENTS

	1941 Prices	1948 Prices
Total cost to Federal Government (deepening of Welland Canal; all developments in purely Canadian Sections, i.e. Lake St. Francis, Soulanges, and Lachine; land damage and rehabilitation costs in International Section)	$106,000,000	$160,000,000
To be recovered from Ontario (value of all of Canada's share of works in International Section for power alone, and part of value of works for both power and navigation —virtually all to be constructed at U.S. expense)	$ 64,000,000	$ 95,000,000
Net cost to Federal Government for entire 27-foot waterway	$ 42,000,000	$ 65,000,000

9. The following table shows the cost to Ontario for full power development under the 1941 arrangements, the figures, being given, as above, at 1941 prices and at 1948 prices.

COST TO ONTARIO — 1941 ARRANGEMENTS

	1941 Prices	1948 Prices
Payment to Federal Government (see above)	$ 64,000,000	$ 95,000,000
Additional expenditures necessary for power machinery, etc.	$ 26,000,000	$ 40,000,000
Total cost to Ontario for development of a million horse-power	$ 90,000,000	$135,000,000

Disadvantages of Separate Power Development

10. The total cost to Ontario of power development under the 1941 arrangements, as shown above, would be $135,000,000 at 1948 prices. If, however, Ontario proceeded, in cooperation with New York State, with separate power development, Ontario would have to pay not only for the power works but also for the works common to power and navigation (although not for the solely navigational works), whose expense would have been shared with the Federal Government under the 1941 arrangements. If Ontario and New York carried out such a development with a view to obtaining the same amount of power as it was proposed to develop under the navigation and power scheme, the estimated cost to Ontario would then be $170,000,000 instead of $135,000,000. There is therefore an estimated financial loss to Ontario of $35,000,000 through the separate development of power in the International Section.

The Future of the Waterway Scheme with Prior Power Development

11. It seems evident that the 1941 Agreement would be a dead letter in the event of separate power development, and that a new Agreement on the question of the seaway alone would have to be concluded if there were to be cooperation between the two countries in this project. It is impossible at this stage to express a firm opinion as to whether a new Agreement could be obtained that would be acceptable to both countries. This would depend on the amount of backing for the project that existed on both sides of the border at the time. The amount of support in Congress for a seaway might, for instance, depend on bargains on other questions struck with sections of the United States that are at present opposed to the seaway. It is, however, perhaps reasonable to assume that, once a decision were reached to proceed with separate power development, the present New England Congressional supporters of the combined seaway and power scheme could no longer be counted upon to support a seaway project and that, while the traditional Mid-Western support for the waterway would remain, the opponents of the waterway outside the Mid-Western region would have an additional important argument with which to rally opposition. Thus, while the prospects of acceptance of the 1941 Agreement are uncertain those of a separate seaway Agreement appear decidedly more remote.

12. While it is impossible to forecast what form a subsequent seaway agreement with the United States might take, it is perhaps of some interest to consider what the cost to Canada would be if such an agreement incorporated the navigational features of the 1941 Agreement — even though Canada might be loath to consent to such a costly arrangement. On this assumption, it is estimated that, at 1948 prices, Canada's share of the navigation development would be $130,000,000, instead of the figure of $65,000,000 given in paragraph 8 above. This estimate of $130,000,000 represents the figure of $160,000,000, given in paragraph 8, minus the cost of land damage and rehabilitation works which would have been borne by Ontario in connection with the separate power development. The loss to both Ontario and the Federal Government can then be summarized as follows:

COST OF SEAWAY TO FEDERAL GOVERNMENT
Separate seaway development	$130,000,000
1941 arrangements	65,000,000
Difference	$ 65,000,000
COST OF POWER DEVELOPMENT TO ONTARIO
Separate power development	$170,000,000
1941 arrangements	135,000,000
Difference	35,000,000
Total loss to both Ontario and Federal Governments	$100,000,000

Additional Disadvantages

13. In addition to the financial loss to Ontario, mentioned above, there would be other losses to the Provinces. If the waterway project were indefinitely shelved, Ontario and Quebec would be among the principal losers as a result of the failure to secure a cheap means of transportation. Furthermore, Quebec — which has evinced interest in Dominion-Provincial development for power and navigation in the Lachine Section of the St. Lawrence — would lose the financial savings resulting from shared costs.

Canadian Objective

14. It is therefore apparent that it is very much in the interests of the Canadian Government to seek to realize the advantages of combined power and navigation development, and to avoid the disadvantages of allowing power development to proceed independently. Having progressed to the extent of committing the United States Government to the principle of combined power and navigation development in the 1941 Agreement, it would seem desirable for Canada to do everything possible to facilitate early ratification of that Agreement, and to try to prevent anything which might militate against eventual combined power and navigation development while any reasonable chance of ratification of the 1941 Agreement remains.

Possible Courses of Action Open to Ontario

15. With this conclusion in mind, the Interdepartmental Committee has given consideration to the form which Ontario's next move might take. The following possibilities have been considered:

(1) Request for Negotiation of a New Agreement

The Ontario Government might request the Federal Government to negotiate a new Agreement with the United States on the single question of power development in the International Section. This procedure could be followed by the two Federal Governments, but it would be unusual for them to adopt such a course of action without making a prior reference to the International Joint Commission. It could be argued, however, that a reference to the International Joint Commission had already been made in the 1920's, and that a further one would be unnecessary. The effect of the conclusion of such an Agreement would be to bring all the undesirable results enumerated above. It is assumed that Ontario is aware that such a result is inevitable. There is no indication however that either Ontario or New York wishes a new International Agreement on power negotiated. A new Agreement would require U.S. Senate approval, which might not be forthcoming any more rapidly than in the case of the 1941 Agreement.

(2) Direct Reference to International Joint Commission

Some of the recent public statements of Governor Dewey and Premier Drew indicate that they believe New York and Ontario could make a direct application to the International Joint Commission, without applying through their respective Federal Governments. Senator A.O. Stanley, Chairman of the U.S. Section of the International Joint Commission, has also been quoted in the press to that effect. Actually, such an approach is specifically ruled out by Rule of Procedure No. 6 of the International Joint Commission. While the Commission could, of course, change its Rules of Procedure, Article III of the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909 would, in that case, require the subsequent approval of the Federal Governments concerned, in addition to the Commission's approval, before any development could be undertaken affecting the level or flow of boundary waters. Thus it would, in the long-run at least, be impossible for Ontario to by-pass the Federal Government completely. It appears reasonably certain, as a matter of fact, that the Canadian Commissioners would not agree to such a change in the Rules of Procedure, and that a direct reference to the International Joint Commission would be turned back at once, with instructions to file it through the appropriate Federal Government. (Here, it should be mentioned that on October 1, 1942, the State of Washington did apply direct to the International Joint Commission, under Article IV, concerning water levels in Osoyoos Lake. It was apparently an oversight on the part of the United States Section of the Commission and it would not seem that this precedent could be seriously invoked against Rule of Procedure No. 6 and the actual terms of the Boundary Waters Treaty. This view was moreover confirmed, by analogy, by an opinion of United States Commissioner George Turner, dated October 9, 1913, in which it was held that, under Rules of Procedure 6, 7 and 8, plans accompanying the application of the Michigan Northern Power Company should have the approval of the United States Secretary of War as a prerequisite to the consideration of the said application by the Commission.)

(3) Request for Reference to International Joint Commission

If Ontario were instructed by the International Joint Commission to apply to the Canadian Government, or if, in the first instance, Ontario requested the Canadian Government to make a reference to the Commission, the reference could be made in one of two ways:

(a) It could be made under Article IX of the Boundary Waters Treaty, calling for recommendations only. Subsequent action by Parliament and Congress would probably be necessary to implement the recommendations of the International Joint Commission, and this, from Ontario's point of view, would doubtless raise the same objections as the negotiation of a new Agreement. It could also be argued that a reference under Article IX of the whole St. Lawrence question had already been made in the 1920's.

(b) Application could be made under Article III of the Boundary Waters Treaty, calling for a final and binding decision. This would probably not require further legislative action, and is understood to be the alternative favoured by Ontario.

International Joint Commission — Special Considerations

16: Since Ontario appears to favour a reference to the International Joint Commission (under Article III of the Boundary Waters Treaty), the Interdepartmental Committee has given special consideration to this possibility. The following points may be noted:

(a) The U.S. Government might be loath to agree to an application under Article III in such a politically contentious matter, since — if the Commission decided in favour of letting New York and Ontario proceed with the power development — the effect would be to by-pass Congress.

(b) It might take a considerable period of time for the Canadian and U.S. Governments and the other interested parties to reach agreement on the terms of the reference to the Commission. This delay would not occur, however, if a unilateral reference were made.

(c) It has been the usual practice in the past for the U.S. and Canadian Governments to make simultaneous and identical references to their respective sections of the Commission, and the invariable practice in the case of references under Article IX. There appears to be no legal obstacle, however, to a unilateral reference, either under Article IX or under Articles III or IV.

(d) No early decision could be expected from the Commission. Past experience indicates that two years might well elapse between the making of a reference to the Commission and the handing down of its decision.

17. It can thus be seen that a reference to the Commission — even if Canada decided to sponsor such a move on behalf of Ontario — could scarcely result in an early decision enabling Ontario and New York to proceed with their plans for power development. The indications are that Ontario is aware of this probable delay and is willing to accept it.

18. Any publicized move by Ontario or New York which gave the impression that the power question was before the Commission, or about to be placed before the Commission, would probably prove as effective as the conclusion of a new Agreement on power alone in preventing further Congressional consideration of the combined power and waterway project, since the opponents of the waterway scheme could argue that a portion of the project, at least, was thus sub judice.

Status of Ontario Agreement

19. Under Article III of the 1941 Agreement between Canada and Ontario, Ontario undertakes to do nothing inconsistent with the Canada-United States Agreement. Unfortunately, however, this undertaking would be of no value in attempting to dissuade Ontario from the contemplated course of action. Article I of the Agreement makes its operation conditional upon ratification of the Canada-United States Agreement, and Article XV provides that after March 19, 1944, the Canada-Ontario Agreement is subject to immediate cancellation on written notification by either party.

Conclusions and Recommendations

20. From the above considerations the following main conclusions emerge:

(a) It is undesirable, in view of the Canadian Government's interest in the whole St. Lawrence Waterway and Power Project, that any formal steps should be taken towards implementing the power project alone, unless and until it is clear that United States approval cannot be secured for the combined project — specifically until the next U.S. Congress had had an opportunity to consider the substance of S.J. Res. 111, perhaps within twelve months' time.

(b) The combined waterway and power project would be placed in serious jeopardy if Ontario and/or New York State transmitted a direct application to the Federal Governments or to the International Joint Commission.

(c) In these circumstances it appears desirable that consideration be given to the possibility of taking action to forestall a formal approach, by the Ontario Government, to the Federal Government or to the International Joint Commission.

(d) If it is not desired to take the action referred to in (c) or if such action is unsuccessful — and Ontario formally requests the Federal Government to facilitate separate power development — the Interdepartmental Committee is inclined to the view that such separate development should be deferred pending further Congressional consideration of the 1941 arrangements. The Interdepartmental Committee would, however, welcome an opportunity to review the question should a formal request be received.

21. The United States Government is, of course, faced with similar considerations. The Interdepartmental Committee, therefore, recommends that the Department of External Affairs be authorized to communicate to the United States State Department; in the strictest confidence, (a) the view that it is preferable for action looking to separate power development to be deferred pending further Congressional action (but not the financial estimates outlined) and (b) the substance of the comments made in paragraphs 15 to 18 above on the procedural questions that direct or indirect applications to the Joint Commission would raise. It further recommends that the Department mentioned be permitted to keep in close touch with the State Department on developments in the power question.

DAVID M. JOHNSON

1014.

DEA/1268-Q-40

*Note du président du Comité interministériel
sur le projet de voie maritime du Saint-Laurent pour le Comité du Cabinet chargé du développement
économique et industriel*

*Memorandum from Chairman, Interdepartmental Committee
on St. Lawrence Waterway Project, to Cabinet Committee on Economic and Industrial Development*

SECRET

[Ottawa], May 13, 1948

THE ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY AND POWER PROJECT

The Interdepartmental Committee on the St. Lawrence Waterway and Power Project forwarded a memorandum to the Cabinet Committee, on May 8th, 1948, outlining various considerations raised by the announced desire of Ontario and New York State to proceed with separate power development in the International Section of the St. Lawrence River.

2. Further information has today reached the Department of External Affairs, from the Canadian Embassy in Washington, which has an important bearing on certain of the points raised in the Interdepartmental Committee's Memorandum.

3. General Francis B. Wilby, Chairman, and Mr. Ralph Sucher, Executive Secretary and Counsel of the Power Authority of the State of New York, have conferred in Washington with the Army Engineers, the United States Section of the International Joint Commission, and the Federal Power Commission. They subsequently called upon the United States Secretary of State and left a letter with him, a copy of which has been shown to the Canadian Embassy.

4. The letter indicated that the New York State Power Authority understood that the Ontario Government would ask the Department of External Affairs for permission to apply to the International Joint Commission for authorization to work out, with New York, agreements on separate development of power in the International Section. It stated, further, that the Power Authority planned to make a similar application to the State Department, after Ontario's application had gone forward. General Wilby indicated orally to the State Department that New York's application might be in the hands of the State Department by the middle of June. The State Department understands that the application will be made under Article III of the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909.

5. The Embassy in Washington has been informed by the State Department that it is making a noncommittal reply to the New York State Power Authority, that will give no indication as to whether separate power development is favoured.

6. The following points are of particular interest in connection with this report from Washington:

(1) The New York Power Authority expects Ontario to make the first official move. It follows that there is less danger that an attempt to forestall a formal approach by Ontario — as suggested in paragraph 20(c) of the Interdepartmental Committee's memorandum of May 8th — would be nullified by precipitate action on the part of the New York authorities.

(2) If, as suggested, Ontario is to apply in the first instance to the Department of External Affairs, rather than to the International Joint Commission, the hazards foreseen in paragraph 18 of the Interdepartmental Committee's memorandum may be reduced.

(3) It is stated that Ontario would ask the International Joint Commission for permission to work out power development arrangements with the State of New York. The Commission gives rulings on specific applications from the two Federal Governments; it does not issue "blank cheques" of this sort. The projected approach to the Department of External Affairs might provide an opportunity to explain this point, also, to the Ontario authorities.

(4) If the New York Authority plans to have an official application in the hands of the State Department by mid-June, and to make its application only after Ontario has made the first move, the approach by Ontario to the Department of External Affairs may, presumably, be expected at an early date.

7. The information from the Canadian Embassy was not received in sufficient time to enable it to be placed before the members of the Interdepartmental Committee.

DAVID M. JOHNSON

1015.

DEA/1268-U-40

Note de la Direction de l'Amérique et de l'Extrême-Orient
Memorandum by American and Far Eastern Division

SECRET

[Ottawa], May 15, 1948

At the Seventh Meeting of the Interdepartmental Committee on the St. Lawrence Waterway, on May 5th, 1948, Mr. Henry told the members "off the record" that Mr. Saunders, Chairman of the Ontario Hydro, had intimated to Mr. Howe that Ontario's real motive in pressing for separate power development was to hasten the two Federal Governments towards implementation of the combined power-waterway project.

2. The Interdepartmental Committee agreed that if Ontario really had this motive it was under a grave misapprehension, since precipitate action at this time was likely to have the opposite effect. Mr. Eberts thought that some mention of this possible Ontario motive should be made in the Interdepartmental Committee's memorandum to the Cabinet Committee. Mr. Henry insisted, however, that this was not necessary, since Mr. Howe knew about it and was sure to mention it to the other Cabinet Committee members.

3. It is not possible to know what importance to attach to Mr. Saunders' alleged remarks. It is quite possible that he realized that the Canadian Government was reluctant to see the power scheme precede, and thereby jeopardize, the seaway scheme, and that, in making the above remarks, he was merely trying to put the Ontario application in a light that would make it palatable to Ottawa. If, of course, Mr. Saunders meant what he said, it might not be too difficult for the Canadian Government to dissuade Ontario from making an application regarding power to External Affairs or to the International Joint Commission.

DAVID STANSFIELD

1016.

PCO/Vol. 59

Extrait du procès-verbal du Comité du Cabinet
chargé du développement économique et industriel

Extract from Minutes of Cabinet Committee on Economic and Industrial Development

SECRET

[Ottawa], May 17, 1948

...

III. ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY AND POWER PROJECT

6. The Secretary submitted a report of the Interdepartmental Committee on the St. Lawrence Waterway and Power Project prepared in view of the possibility that the governments of Ontario and New York State might seek to proceed at an early date with power development independently of the navigation scheme.

The Committee had reached the conclusion that the introduction of a proposal to undertake power development apart from navigation aspects would seriously prejudice implementation of the whole scheme and might result in the abandonment of the 1941 Agreement.

In the event that power was developed separately the Canadian government would be involved in comparison with the 1941 Agreement in additional expenses of $65 million in relation to the whole project and the Ontario government of some $35 million in getting the power.

The Interdepartmental Committee had considered the possible courses of action open to the Ontario government. According to the latest information received from the Canadian Ambassador in Washington, it was thought likely that an application would be made by the government of Ontario to the federal government for a reference to the International Joint Commission under Article 3 of the Boundary Waters Treaty calling for a binding decision.

The Committee had concluded that it was in the Canadian interest that the navigation and power schemes be undertaken jointly. This would be prejudiced by the introduction of a proposal to proceed with power development separately. If, however, a formal request for a reference to the Commission could not be forestalled, action should at least be deferred pending further U.S. Congressional consideration of the 1941 Agreement.

Copies of the Committee's report and an additional memorandum had been circulated.

(Report of the Interdepartmental Committee on the St. Lawrence Waterway Project, May 8, 1948, CCEID Document No. 4; Memorandum, Chairman of Interdepartmental Committee, May 13th, CCEID Document No. 6).

7. The Secretary of State for External Affairs referred to practical difficulties in the way of dealing at once with any Ontario proposal. The Canadian section of the International Joint Commission had at present two vacancies and was in no position to deal with a question of this type. Moreover, if any application was made directly to the Commission they should unquestionably refer it to External Affairs for governmental consideration.

Decision as to the course to be followed in the event an application was received from Ontario should wait upon receipt of such application. Meanwhile it might be useful to inform the U.S. government of the government's views with regard to avoiding separation of power and navigation aspects of the St. Lawrence development, and of the complications which could result from the desire of Ontario and New York to proceed separately with a power project. No indication, however, need be given at this stage of Canadian views on the difficult legal procedural problems involved.

8. The Committee, after considerable further discussion, agreed:

(a) that Canadian interests would best be served by avoiding any separation of power and navigation aspects of the St. Lawrence Waterway project and that accordingly any action which might lead to this separation would be undesirable pending further opportunity for U.S. Congressional consideration of the 1941 agreement; and

(b) that the U.S. government be informed by the Canadian Ambassador to the United States, informally, of the Canadian government's views in this connection without reference, however, to legal procedural problems of methods of reference to the International Joint Commission.

...

1017.

DEA/1268-U-40

*Note du président du Comité interministériel
sur le projet de voie maritime du Saint-Laurent*

Memorandum by Chairman, Interdepartmental Committee on St. Lawrence Project

SECRET

Ottawa, June 14, 1948

RE ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY PROJECT AND THE ONTARIO—NEW YORK
POWER SCHEME

I wish to bring to your attention several items of information, in connection with the Ontario-New York plans for power development, which have reached the Department of External Affairs since the submission of the Committee's report to the Cabinet Committee on Economic and Industrial Development on May 8th, and since the drafting of the supplementary report I submitted to the Cabinet Committee on May 13th, copies of which were circulated to the Interdepartmental Committee.

Notification of State Department

2. On May 28th, in accordance with the decision of the Cabinet Committee at its meeting of May 17th, our Embassy in Washington told the State Department informally, and in confidence, that the Canadian Government held the view that the waterway would be of great mutual benefit to the two countries, and that action looking to separate power development might seriously prejudice the future of the waterway scheme. This statement was received with interest.

Views of the United States Government

3. We have learned that the views of the State Department on the legal and procedural questions involved in a reference to the International Joint Commission are entirely similar to our own. The State Department has not, however, given us any clear statement on the attitude of the U.S. Government towards the proposed New York application for permission to proceed with separate power development. Nevertheless, we have obtained some useful indications of the trend of thinking in Washington.

4. On May 31, we asked the Embassy in Washington to seek, confidentially, the best available opinion as to: (a) what chance there was of the 1941 Agreement receiving the approval of the next Congress, along the lines contemplated in S. J. Res. 111; (b) whether there is any likelihood that the idea of prior power development would find substantial backing in Washington; and, if so, (c) what chance there would then be of a new Canada-United States Agreement on navigation alone, with reasonable compensation to Canada for expenses already incurred in connection with the Welland Canal, being successfully negotiated and securing Congressional approval. Replies dated June 3 and June 9 have conveyed the views summarized hereunder.

Chances of Approval of 1941 Agreement

5. The State Department is not optimistic about the chances of the 1941 Agreement receiving the approval of the new U.S. Congress, some officials considering it unlikely that the vote in next year's Senate would be materially different from the 57 to 30 vote in the present Senate. The Canadian Ambassador, Mr. Wrong, who has been trying to arrange to have a private chat with Senator Vandenberg, infers from a letter he has received from the latter that the Senator also thinks it unlikely that the next Congress would approve the 1941 Agreement. Mr. Hickerson, a senior State Department official, is advising, however, that there should be no commitment by the U.S. Government, either for or against separate power development, until there is an opportunity of accurately estimating the fate of the 1941 Agreement at the hands of the next Congress. This, of course, would involve delay at least until after the elections in November.

Backing for Separate Power Development

6. Mr. Wrong states: "It is likely that there would be substantial backing in Washington for prior power development, since the opposition to the combined project centres almost wholly round the navigation feature of the 1941 Agreement." Nor does it appear that Senator Vandenberg would be prepared to assume responsibility for delaying the development of power alone, if such development were politically feasible. In his letter to Mr. Wrong, he said, in part: "I am frank to say that I do not believe we are entitled to hold up 'power' pending a determination of the great uncertainties involving 'navigation'." On the other hand, Senator Wiley, Chairman of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, has initiated a move clearly designed to delay separate power action and to keep the combined scheme open. He has introduced a resolution in the Senate calling for the appointment of a special commission to give further study to the combined scheme. (Army Engineers believe that the studies required would take at least a year to complete.) The Embassy in Washington says there is a possibility of Wiley's resolution passing the Senate, but that it is unlikely that there will be time for an appropriation Bill, providing the necessary funds, to pass Congress before its adjournment.

Prospects for a New Waterway Agreement

7. Senator Vandenberg's letter, quoted above, says that "'power' development might well proceed on the basis of a construction plan which can really be the first great step in the subsequent evolution of the 'navigation' plan." And the National

St. Lawrence Project Conference, a bitter foe of the waterway, has condemned the New York power plans on the grounds that they would facilitate later navigation development. Nevertheless, the general view in Washington — to which Vandenberg probably subscribes, in spite of his statement above — is that the chances of a new waterway agreement would be even slimmer than those of the 1941 Agreement.

Delaying Action Contemplated by U.S. Government

8. The Head of the Canadian Section at the State Department told me informally, a few days ago, that his Department was inclined to the view that, since the combined power and waterway scheme has had such a long Congressional history, it would be only logical for Congress to be given an opportunity to express its opinion on the New York application. He appeared to have in mind the possibility of Congress being given an opportunity to approve a Resolution favouring separate power development before the State Department would transmit a New York application to the International Joint Commission. This, of course, would serve to delay the filing of the U.S. application with the Commission, and would also save the Administration from the political embarrassment of having either to endorse or reject the application. Mr. Hickerson went even further and told Mr. Wrong that any development of the river on the U.S. side would have to be authorized by Act of Congress, even if the costs were to be met wholly by the State of New York. This view does not appear to be shared, however, by the legal advisers of the New York Power Authority.

Ontario Position

9. Some very interesting and highly confidential information has been received as a result of a visit which Mr. C.L. Carrick, head of the legal department of the Ontario Hydro, paid to Miss E.M. Sutherland, Acting Secretary of the Canadian Section of the International Joint Commission on June 9th. Mr. Carrick's visit was ostensibly for the purpose of obtaining advice on the procedural questions involved in an application to the Commission, and he brought copies of Ontario's draft application with him. He left one copy with Miss Sutherland, which she kindly loaned to this Department, and a copy of it is attached to this memorandum.

10. This draft has several interesting features. One is the date — July 1, 1948. Mr. Carrick told Miss Sutherland that he was waiting for the passing of an Order-in-Council before he could file the application. Although the application is addressed to the Commission, he apparently plans to send it to External Affairs in accordance with the customary procedure.

11. Although Mr. Carrick claimed to be seeking advice, he seemed strangely unwilling to accept any, or to make any changes in his draft application. "I got the impression," Miss Sutherland says, "that this entire application had been dictated by the New York State Power Authority, and that Mr. Carrick had no authority to deviate from the draft as agreed upon by both parties."

12. He did agree to delete the United States Section of the Commission from the address since it is an Ontario application. (He insisted that the Ontario and New York applications would be for "joint development" but that they were not "joint applications".) Also, while he agreed reluctantly to substitute "Article III" for "Article II" (as his draft originally read) in paragraph 10, he would not delete the reference to Article VIII which Miss Sutherland assured him was unnecessary.

13. Miss Sutherland told Carrick that it was customary to file plans with the application (50 copies being required) but that other documents, such as those referred to in the draft application, could more conveniently be presented as exhibits during the hearings on the application. He, however, insisted that the necessary copies would be produced with the application, and did not indicate that he would give any consideration to Miss Sutherland's suggestion for simplifying the procedure. He also declined to delete references to United States documents and reports which Miss Sutherland assured him were only necessary in the New York application if the two were not to be identical "joint applications".

14. Carrick indicated that the Ontario application would probably be submitted before the New York application. He referred in this connection to political difficulties in the United States, to opposition from private power interests, and to the difference which the election of Governor Dewey as President of the United States might have on the expediting of the New York application. In spite of the urgency indicated in the closing paragraph of the draft application, he seemed to feel that October (the time of the regular Fall meeting of the Commission) would be quite soon enough for the Commission to give first consideration to the Ontario application.

15. According to Miss Sutherland's account of the interview, Carrick showed a remarkable lack of enthusiasm for the whole scheme, giving the clear impression that all the pressure was coming from the New York side. He gave it as his personal opinion that other Hydro projects now under development would adequately take care of Ontario's power needs, and he referred sadly to the hostility which would be aroused by the projected flooding of historic Canadian landmarks to provide power for the United States.

16. Miss Sutherland has the impression that the New York authorities originally thought the plan would be good political capital in an election year, but have since changed their minds (because of opposition from private power concerns, Senator Wiley's move, the opposition of the National St. Lawrence Project Conference, etc.), and are now happy to let Ontario keep the ball rolling. Mr. Carrick's attitude may indicate that some of the Ontario authorities, at least, are not too happy about the role that has been assigned to them by New York.

Meeting of Interdepartmental Committee

17. The Cabinet Committee's decision of May 17th was that the action to be taken in connection with Ontario's application could be decided when the application was received. Since the application has not yet been received officially, there would seem to be no urgent reason for calling a meeting of the Interdepartmental Committee at this time. If you feel, however, that there are any questions which should be discussed before Ontario's application is received, I should appreciate it if you would let me know by telephone so that I can arrange to have a meeting convened.

D.M. JOHNSON

1018.

DEA/1268-Q-40

*Note du président du Comité interministériel
sur le projet de voie maritime du Saint-Laurent pour le Comité du Cabinet chargé du développement
économique et industriel*

*Memorandum from Chairman, Interdepartmental Committee
on St. Lawrence Waterway Project, to Cabinet Committee on Economic and Industrial Development*

SECRET

[Ottawa], July 30, 1948

THE ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY AND POWER PROJECT

PART I — ONTARIO HYDRO APPLICATION

On July 16, 1948, the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission submitted to the Department of External Affairs its application to the International Joint Commission in connection with the Ontario — New York plans for separate power development in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River.

2. An accompanying letter from the Hydro Chairman, Mr. Robert H. Saunders, to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, asked that the Government approve the construction of the works specified in the application, and that the application be transmitted to the International Joint Commission. A non-committal letter of acknowledgment, dated July 16 and signed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, informed Mr. Saunders that the material submitted would receive the careful consideration of the Canadian Government.

3. Several legal questions involved in the Ontario application are being studied by the Department of Justice. The Interdepartmental Committee considers that it might be undesirable to take any official action on the application, or to communicate further with the Ontario Hydro, until the legal position is clarified.

4. For the reasons given in its memorandum of May 8, 1948, the Interdepartmental Committee considers that it would be preferable for the filing of the Ontario and New York applications to be delayed until the U.S. Congress has had a final opportunity to consider, and possibly approve, the 1941 Agreement on both power and navigation, but that it would not be desirable or appropriate for the Canadian Government to take the initial responsibility for delaying filing on these grounds. If, on the other hand, the U.S. Government wished to delay filing the New York application pending further Congressional action, the Canadian Government could hardly be criticized for similarly delaying the filing of the Ontario application.

5. It has been suggested by some officials of the U.S. State Department that the long Congressional history of the St. Lawrence waterway and power project might make it desirable, if not essential, for Congress to be given an opportunity to consider the New York application before filing. This is not yet the official view of the U.S. Government. A reference to Congress along these lines would be desirable from the Canadian Government's point of view, since it would provide Congress with an opportunity to consider the joint power-waterway scheme once more, as well as the separate power scheme.

6. The Interdepartmental Committee therefore recommends that the U.S. State Department be informed, in confidence, that the Canadian Government would prefer to see the filing of the two applications delayed pending further Congressional consideration, but that it would not be appropriate for the Canadian Government to take the initial responsibility for this delay.

PART II — SENATOR WILEY'S SUB-COMMITTEE

7. At the end of the last session of Congress, Senator Alexander Wiley (Republican, Wisconsin) was appointed chairman of a sub-committee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee which is to give further consideration to the waterway and power project. During the next few months, the sub-committee wishes to have studies prepared on the costs of the combined project with waterway depths of 27, 30 and 35 feet, the sharing of costs between power and navigation and between Canada and the United States, plans for financing the project at various interest rates, and the sharing of toll revenues. The State Department and the U.S. Army Engineers have been asked to assist in these studies, and the State Department has transmitted to the Canadian Embassy in Washington a request from the Army Engineers for the cooperation of the Canadian Government in the preparation of cost estimates on the basis of the different channel depths. The Army Engineers would like to get in touch directly with the appropriate Canadian officials and have specifically mentioned Mr. Guy A. Lindsay of the Department of Transport.

8. The Interdepartmental Committee does not consider that the Canadian Government need make a final commitment on this subject until more is known about what the studies will entail in time and expense. It is recommended that the State Department be informed that the Canadian Government would wish to cooperate in any way possible, and will be pleased to have Mr. Lindsay and other appropriate officials confer with the Army Engineers with a view to determining what action could usefully be taken by the Canadian authorities.<sup>58</sup>

DAVID M. JOHNSON

---

<sup>58</sup> Le Comité du Cabinet a approuvé cette recommandation le 4 août.
Cabinet Committee approved this recommendation on August 4.

1019.

DEA/1268-U-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au président de la Commission de l'énergie
hydro-électrique de l'Ontario*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Chairman, Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario

Ottawa, August 11, 1948

Dear Mr. Saunders:

RE DEVELOPMENT OF THE INTERNATIONAL RAPIDS SECTION OF THE
ST. LAWRENCE RIVER UNDER THE NEW YORK—ONTARIO PRIORITY PLAN

The questions raised in your letter of July 14, 1948,† have been under consideration by the Canadian Government.

Before the Government can properly refer your application to the International Joint Commission, detailed study of the engineering, legal and other technical aspects will be required. This study is presently going forward. The appropriate officials of the Government will get in touch with officials of your organization regarding the additional technical information they will require in this connection.

The Government also considers that your application should not be filed with the International Joint Commission until the intentions of the United States Government have been ascertained. This decision results from Canada's commitments under the Great Lakes — St. Lawrence Basin Agreement of 1941. The Government would not wish to take the initiative in a course of action which might have the effect of nullifying an international agreement, without knowing that the United States Government had decided upon a similar course with respect to the application from the Power Authority of the State of New York. The Government has already initiated the necessary consultation with the United States authorities, and I shall, of course, inform you of the results of that consultation.

Yours sincerely,

LOUIS S. ST. LAURENT

1020.

DEA/1268-U-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*
*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-1992

Ottawa, August 12, 1948

SECRET

Following for Magann from Johnson, Begins: St. Lawrence Project; New York — Ontario power plans.

The Interdepartmental Committee's report of July 30, sent to you under cover of form despatch, was considered by the Cabinet Committee on Economic and Industrial Development on August 4. A report on this meeting is going forward to you by mail.

2. It was decided that Ontario should be informed that various aspects of the application required detailed study and that this study was going forward; that the application would not be filed with the International Joint Commission until the intentions of the United States Government had been ascertained. (Because of Canada's commitments under the 1941 Agreement, we would not take action which might have the effect of nullifying that agreement, without knowing that the U.S. Government planned similar action in connection with the New York application.)

3. A letter has been drafted which would inform Ontario to this effect, and which would state that the necessary consultation with the U.S. authorities was being undertaken. When this letter has been approved for despatch, copies will be sent to you, and it will be in order for you to pass a copy to the State Department.

4. Paragraph 6 of the Interdepartmental Committee's report of July 30 is not specifically mentioned in the report of the August 4 Cabinet Committee meeting. We understand, however, that the Cabinet Committee would be in favour of our keeping the State Department quite fully informed of our thinking in this connection.

5. I should therefore appreciate it if you would take the following action:

(a) Inform the State Department that the Canadian Government does not propose (for the reason given in paragraph 2 above) to file the Ontario application with the International Joint Commission without knowing that the U.S. Government similarly intends to file the New York application; and that the Canadian Government would therefore appreciate being informed in due course of the U.S. Government's intentions in this regard.

(b) Informally and in strict confidence outline to the State Department our attitude towards the New York — Ontario plans. Briefly our position is this. We favour joint development for both power and navigation and would like to see the relevant provisions of the 1941 Agreement enter into force. We fear that separate power development would jeopardize the chances of navigation development. Before separate power development is endorsed, therefore, we would like to see Congress given a final opportunity either to accept or reject the 1941 joint scheme, but we do not feel that it would be either appropriate or desirable for the Canadian Government to withhold its endorsement of the Ontario application on these grounds, unless the U.S. Government had previously signified that it intended to delay filing the New York application pending further Congressional action. If the U.S. Administration decided that the long Congressional history of the joint scheme made it necessary to refer the New York application to Congress before filing it with the Commission, the Canadian Government would delay filing the Ontario application pending the outcome of that reference. (This would, of course, be gratifying from our point of view, since it would automatically give Congress a further opportunity to consider the 1941 Agreement.) If, however, the U.S. Administration decided to file the New York application without further reference to Congress, the Canadian Government would find it difficult if not impossible to delay any longer the filing of the Ontario application. Ends.

1021.

DEA/1268-U-40

*Note de la Direction de l'Amérique et l'Extrême-Orient
pour le chef de la Direction de l'Amérique et l'Extrême-Orient*

Memorandum from American and Far Eastern Division to Head, American and Far Eastern Division

SECRET

[Ottawa], October 18, 1948

RE ENQUIRIES BY MR. BLAIR FRASER OF MACLEAN'S MAGAZINE
REGARDING ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

Late Friday afternoon, October 15th, Mr. Eberts received a telephone call from Blair Fraser of MacLean's Magazine. Fraser said he had been told that the Canadian Government was entirely opposed to the Ontario-New York application for St. Lawrence power development, and that Mr. Saunders had been informed by someone in the Government Service that the Hydro application had no chance of approval. Fraser apparently wanted this understanding confirmed and wanted estimates on comparative costs of separate power development and combined power-waterway development.

2. Mr. Eberts said that, as far as he knew, the Government had not reached any conclusions on the question of the Hydro application. The only accurate way to describe the present status of the Ontario request was to say that it involved a large technical matter which is receiving careful study, and that as no recommendations based on these investigations have yet been made to the Government, the latter has not yet had any opportunity to reach a decision as to its views. Mr. Eberts said he had been out of town for a couple of weeks, however, and would arrange to have me get in touch with Fraser regarding this point and also the question of estimates.

3. Mr. Eberts then asked me to call Fraser. He suggested that I be careful in talking to Fraser not to give the impression either that the Canadian Government was deliberately stalling, or that it was planning to follow whatever lead might be given by the U.S.

4. I telephoned Fraser immediately. He reiterated his story that Mr. Saunders had been told his application would never be approved by the Government. He attributed this information to a reliable informant in the Government Service, but did not identify his informant when I asked him to do so. I told him that I was not aware that the Government had reached any conclusions regarding the Hydro application, and I was certainly not aware that any such statement had been made to Saunders. I observed that the whole story seemed most improbable, since Saunders had told the Federal Power Commission in Washington, only a few days before, that he anticipated no difficulty in securing approval for the Hydro application from the Canadian Cabinet.

5. Fraser then asked if it were not true that the 1941 Agreement had guaranteed compensation to Canada for the Welland Canal, and that this would be lost because of the Ontario-New York action. I replied that neither in the 1941 Agreement, nor in any other agreement, had the U.S. undertaken to compensate Canada for the Welland Canal. The idea that Canada deserved some compensation had, however, been borne in mind by both parties to the Agreement in the negotiations leading to the conclusion of the 1941 Agreement. Fraser next asked if it were not true that the Ontario-New York action would kill any chances of approval of the 1941 Agreement by Congress. I replied that there was room for difference of opinion on this question and that in view of the uncertainties involved in political issues of that sort in the United States, I thought none but the most foolhardy would risk making a categorical statement on the subject. I pointed out that a sub-committee of the United States Senate Foreign Relations Committee had been set up to study the waterway project after the New York-Ontario plans were announced, that the sub-committee was still carrying on its studies, and that its findings would presumably be up for consideration at the next session of Congress. I certainly was not prepared to say that, because of the New York-Ontario action, the efforts of the sub-committee were doomed to failure from the outset.

6. Fraser then turned once more to the question of cost estimates. I suggested that he come to see me and I would give him what published figures I could. He said he would come to my office immediately.

7. Fraser arrived in my office a few minutes later. He said that after talking to me he had telephoned his informant once again to check on the apparent inconsistencies between his previous information and what I had said. His informant apparently had not confirmed the suggestion that Saunders had been told his application would be rejected. The informant had, however, repeated that the Government looked upon it with extreme disfavour. Fraser had asked him point-blank whether this view was held by the Government or by some individual. His informant had replied that it was Mr. Howe's opinion. Fraser continued, as nearly as I can remember his words: "And, in a case like this, isn't what Mr. Howe thinks the same thing as what the Government thinks? Transport would come into it I suppose, but of course Chevrier has to telephone Howe to find out what he is supposed to think on any subject." To all of this I replied merely that I was sorry but I was not in Mr. Howe's confidence and did not know what his private views were on the subject.

8. Fraser then said that he had just been talking with Mr. Skelton on the question of the Welland Canal and the 1941 Agreement. (He did not identify Mr. Skelton as his informant, but I received the impression that he had been talking to Mr. Skelton between his telephone conversation with me and his arrival at my office. It occurred to me that he had scarcely had time to conduct two telephone conversations during that short period.) Mr. Skelton had confirmed my statement that the 1941 Agreement did not contain any written undertaking regarding compensation for the Welland Canal. This had simply been a tacitly understood principle underlying the Agreement.

9. I reverted to Fraser's earlier statement about separate power development killing the waterway. To illustrate the possible differences of opinion on that point, I told him that the National St. Lawrence Project Conference, a pressure group bitterly opposed to the waterway, had opposed separate power development because it would be the thin edge of the wedge in developing the waterway, while the Mayor of Milwaukee, who favoured the waterway, had opposed New York's action because it would kill the waterway forever. Fraser said he thought the Mayor of Milwaukee was right. His understanding from his informant, he said, was that approval of the whole project would have been touch and go in Congress with power as a lever, and that the waterway had no chance when the support of those who favoured the whole project only because it would provide cheap power was removed.

10. Fraser said that, following his re-check with his informant, he now understood that the Canadian Government was not opposed to separate power development on principle, but was simply annoyed at the timing of the Ontario move. Another three months might have seen approval of the whole project by Congress. The Canadian Government's attitude towards Ontario was simply: "Why did you have to rock the boat right now and spoil everything?" Fraser went on to say that he thought Ontario's action was a manoeuvre to divert attention from the imminent power shortage this winter. By using it, however, Ontario would have to pay many millions of dollars more for its power, Canadians generally would have to pay many millions of dollars more for a waterway — if they ever got one — and St. Lawrence power would be developed no more rapidly. He said he understood that it would take several years for Ontario and New York to develop power on the St. Lawrence. I did not deny this. He said that proceedings before the International Joint Commission might last for years, while favourable action by Congress on the whole project could have permitted construction to get under way rapidly. He wanted confirmation regarding the time that the International Joint Commission would take to deal with the applications. I said I had no idea, but that it seemed unlikely that the usual procedure regarding hearings, etc., could be completed in less than a year.

11. Fraser then wanted to know what assistance I could give him in the matter of estimates. I said that the latest published figures I knew of in connection with the whole project were those used by the sub-committee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in 1947, which were derived from May, 1947, estimates submitted by the U.S. Army Engineers. I loaned Fraser a copy of the New York Power Authority's publication on the St. Lawrence project and pointed out where it contained these estimates. He asked what Ontario would have paid for power under the 1941 arrangements and I told him that the Canada-Ontario Agreement had specified $64,000,000. He then wanted to know what the separate power project would cost Ontario and New York. I said that I thought the figure submitted to the Federal Power Commission was $486,000,000. (After checking press clippings on the subject, I telephoned Fraser the following morning and corrected this figure to $463,000,000.)

12. Bearing in mind Mr. Eberts' injunction on the questions of Canadian stalling and Canada's hanging on U.S. coat-tails, I concluded by stressing that there were many factors involved in the application from both the Canadian and U.S. points of view, that these required a great deal of study and that an immediate decision by either Government could not reasonably have been expected. I also observed that the factors affecting support or opposition to the whole project were not static and could be expected to shift the emphasis of public opinion as economic conditions and world conditions changed.

13. Near the conclusion of our discussion, Fraser made some comment about the Canadian Government possibly being forced into agreeing to an application to the International Joint Commission, and said that this would completely prevent approval of the 1941 Agreement or conclusion of a new agreement on the waterway. I told him that I knew of nothing in the Boundary Waters Treaty which would prevent an agreement between the two high contracting parties from being concluded and superseding either an application before the Commission or a ruling by the Commission.

14. Fraser intimated that he would be writing something immediately on the St. Lawrence question, and that he was already past his deadline. I had the impression that he believed Ontario had made a stupid and costly move for political purposes, and that whatever he wrote would follow this line of argument. His conviction, however, was one he held before talking to Mr. Eberts and me, and we were both very careful not to give him any encouragement in believing that this represented the thinking of the Canadian Government. At one point, in fact, he became quite impatient with my obvious unwillingness to commit myself to any viewpoint, and remarked that the logic of the situation and the figures could support no other conclusion.

D. STANSFIELD

1022.

DEA/1268-U-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
au président de la Commission de l'énergie
hydro-électrique de l'Ontario*

*Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Chairman, Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario*

Ottawa, October 23, 1948

Dear Mr. Saunders,

A week ago you telephoned me to say that you would like me to send you this week a note on the present status of the Hydro Electric Power Commission's application to the International Joint Commission.

2. In his letter to you of August 11, 1948, Mr. St. Laurent told you that the Canadian Government had been making inquiries of the United States Government of its intentions with respect to the complementary application of the Power Authority of the State of New York. To date, we have not received a reply to this inquiry. We have not pressed for an answer on the assumption that a final decision in Washington would probably have to wait for the conclusion of proceedings by the United States Federal Power Commission on the New York Power Authority's licence application. Meanwhile, of course, officials of the two Governments are keeping in close touch with each other on all aspects of the question.

3. Officials of the Department of Justice here have been studying very carefully the important legal and procedural questions raised by your application. Mr. Guy A. Lindsay, the engineer in charge of the General Engineering Branch of the Department of Transport, is supervising the study of your application from the engineering and technical points of view.

4. I shall get in touch with Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Pearson on their return to Ottawa next week to find out if there is anything more which can be added at the moment to this "progress report".

5. It was very good of you to say that the next time you are in Ottawa you hope to be able to drop in and have a talk with me. I am looking forward to this.

With all best wishes,

Yours sincerely,
ESCOTT REID

1023.

DEA/1268-U-40

*Le président de la Commission hydro-électrique de l'Ontario
au premier ministre*

*Chairman, Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario,
to Prime Minister*

Toronto, December 3, 1948

Honourable and Dear Sir:

I address you today on a matter of great concern to this Commission and of vital concern to the welfare of the people of this Province — the St. Lawrence River Development. We, as a Commission, are of course interested both in the navigational and power features, but are directly interested in the power section.

A load increase of approximately 100,000 kilowatts per year is anticipated. It is our hope that by bringing in small steam and diesel plants and purchases from the Detroit-Edison Company to have sufficient power to take care of the load increase for the next year. We already have arranged for approximately 60,000 kilowatts. In 1950 we expect at least one section of the Des Joachims Ottawa River development will come into operation and possibly the whole 480,000 horsepower. In 1951 the Chenaux Development on the Ottawa River will bring an additional 120,000 horsepower, and the Windsor steam plant at least another 160,000 horsepower. In 1952 the LaCave development on the Ottawa River will bring in another 200,000 horsepower. We contemplate and hope that permission will be given for greater and more efficient use of the waters of the Niagara River which will give us another 400,000 to 500,000 horsepower. We contemplate also the construction of a second steam plant at either Hamilton or Toronto, ranging in size from 300,000 horsepower to 500,000 horsepower. The size of this plant will to some extent depend upon the outcome of negotiations regarding the Niagara River and our prospects for the St. Lawrence.

Beyond the projects mentioned, we must, in order to provide power for the future and have on hand a reserve of energy which will attract industry to this country, either look to the St. Lawrence River development or the development of additional steam units to give us the power that would otherwise have come from the St. Lawrence. We believe that the replacement of the St. Lawrence by steam would be economically unsound and not in the best interests of the people of this Province or of the Dominion as a whole. May I give you the basis for this opinion:

Our share of the St. Lawrence will give an average of some six billion kilowatt hours per year. It is estimated that about one pound of coal will be required for each kilowatthour: or a total of six billion pounds — three million tons annually, (one of the largest private electrical companies on the continent today uses 1.1 pounds per kilowatthour). Under existing conditions, this coal would be imported from the United States at a cost of say, six dollars per ton in the United States or eighteen million dollars annually — a very heavy drain on our national economy. If the St. Lawrence waterway is completed it may of course be economically possible to use Nova Scotia coal. On present estimates, the cost of power delivered at the power site on the St. Lawrence would be 2.6 mills per kilowatthour at 80 per cent load factor. On the other hand, the cost of generating steam power based on present prices and at 80 per cent load factor is estimated to be 7.7 mills at the plant. In other words, the St. Lawrence River project would, if completed, give us power at some 5.1 mills less per kilowatthour than steam units — or at about one third the price of steam.

From the above, you will, I am sure, agree that the St. Lawrence project is of the utmost importance to the future welfare of both Ontario and Canada. May I respectfully urge that your Government do everything in its power to expedite the St. Lawrence development in whole, or, at least, with regard to the part having to do with power.

Yours faithfully,

ROBERT H. SAUNDERS

1024.

DEA/1268-U-40

*Le premier ministre
au président de la Commission hydro-électrique de l'Ontario Prime Minister to Chairman, Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario*

Ottawa, December 9, 1948

Dear Mr. Saunders:

I wish to acknowledge, for your records, the due receipt of the letter which you handed to me on December 3rd, respecting the interest of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario in the St. Lawrence River Development. I have communicated the contents of your letter to my colleagues in the government, and reiterate my assurance that we fully share the desire of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission to see the earliest possible development of the St. Lawrence.

The government intends to do everything we consider consistent with the interests of the people of Canada as a whole which we believe will expedite this vast international undertaking, but, as you are well aware, the final decision is one which does not rest exclusively with the Government of Canada.

Yours sincerely,

L.S. ST. LAURENT

1025.

DEA/1268-U-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-3129

Washington, December 9, 1948

SECRET

Your EX-1992 and subsequent exchanges — St. Lawrence Project; New York—Ontario power plans.

We have been informed today in the strictest confidence that the White House will take no action on the New York application for reference of the separate power development plan to the International Joint Commission.

2. The President has decided to renew the battle for the joint power and seaway development. He feels, we understand, that his chances of success in the new Congress are about 50-50. The Department of State has been asked to prepare his case for him and a careful attempt will be made to avoid conflicting testimony when the interested Departments of Government present their views to Congress. Every effort will be made and the fight promises to be an energetic one.

3. The President has not yet decided whether he will include a paragraph on the seaway in his "State of the Nation" address or whether he will send a separate message to Congress. It has also not been decided whether the State Department will itself sponsor the legislation or whether it will be introduced by a group of interested Senators. An unofficial observer estimates that the success or failure of the President's effort will depend on the position which Senator Taft eventually takes. It is understood that the President feels that perhaps he can win without Taft.

4. A public reference to this matter by the President is not expected for some weeks yet.

1026.

PCO/Vol. 60

*Note du président du Comité interministériel
sur le projet de voie maritime du Saint-Laurent
pour le Comité de la défense du Cabinet*

Memorandum from Chairman, Interdepartmental Committee on St. Lawrence Waterway Project, to Cabinet Defence Committee

SECRET

[Ottawa], December 8, 1948

RE ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY AND POWER PROJECT

In accordance with the decision of the Cabinet Defence Committee at its meeting on September 14, 1948, the St. Lawrence Interdepartmental Committee has prepared a brief on the St. Lawrence Waterway and Power Project for the forthcoming meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. The brief is submitted herewith for consideration.

2. The brief has been prepared in such a way that it could be distributed to all the members of the Permanent Joint Board and, if desired, be included as an annex to the minutes of their meeting. Certain additional observations, which it would not be desirable to pass to the United States members of the Permanent Joint Board, are included in a personal letter to General McNaughton. A copy of this letter is also submitted herewith for consideration.

3. While the Interdepartmental Committee normally reports to the Cabinet Committee on Economic and Industrial Development, it has been considered preferable in this instance, in view of the very short time which remains before the meeting of the Permanent Joint Board, to submit this material directly to the Cabinet Defence Committee.<sup>59</sup>

D.M. JOHNSON

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

DRAFT LETTER TO GENERAL A.G.L. MCNAUGHTON

Dear General McNaughton,

RE ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY AND POWER PROJECT

In accordance with a decision reached by the Cabinet Defence Committee on September 14, 1948, the Interdepartmental Committee of which I am chairman has prepared a brief designed to set forth the reasons supporting early completion of the St. Lawrence Waterway and Power Project. The brief and this letter have been submitted to, and approved by, the Cabinet Defence Committee.

The brief has been prepared for distribution to all the members of the Permanent Joint Board, and it can, if this is desired, be attached as an appendix to the Board's minutes. While the brief is classified as "Secret", because of the nature of some of the information it contains, it can, with minor alterations, be made public in order to support such recommendations as the Board may wish to make.

Plan of Brief

The first part of the brief touches on the navigation and power potentialities of the Great Lakes—St. Lawrence System, and summarizes the history of the St. Lawrence project. More detailed consideration is then given to the 1941 Agreement, and to Senate Joint Resolution 111, the most recent of the measures introduced in the U.S. Congress calling for approval of the Agreement. Other sections deal with the financial arrangements in the 1941 Agreement and with the proposal

<sup>59</sup> À sa réunion du 14 décembre, le CDC décida que la disposition de ces notes d'instruction revenait à McNaughton et à Claxton.

At its meeting of December 14, CDC decided that the disposition of the brief was a matter for decision by McNaughton and Claxton.

put forward by Ontario and New York for separate development of the power resources in the International Rapids Section.

Part II of the brief gives the economic and defence arguments for early completion of the combined waterway and power project. This part is divided into three sections, covering (a) economic questions, (b) economic factors bearing on defence, and (c) the strategic implications. The brief concludes with a short statement of conclusions and recommendations for the consideration of the Permanent Joint Board.

The brief also includes appendices which give detailed physical data on the Great Lakes—St. Lawrence System, 1948 estimates, a chronological history of the St. Lawrence project, certain documents mentioned in the text, and a map of the system.

Additional Observations

The Interdepartmental Committee wishes to submit certain additional observations for your personal information. Most of these are not of an especially high security classification, but are of a nature which would make it impolitic to stress them in dealing with representatives of the United States Government. These observations are set forth in the following paragraphs; the headings refer to the corresponding headings in the main brief.

PART I

Senate Joint Resolution 111

The changes in the 1941 Agreement incorporated in this measure were designed to mollify railroad and eastern port transportation interests and an economy-minded Congress, by providing for tolls on the St. Lawrence Waterway. The regulation of the Chicago diversion which was provided for in the 1941 Agreement — a factor of interest to all Mississippi Valley states — was eliminated. In 1947, in the hope of obtaining U.S. approval for the waterway, Canada concurred “in principle” with the toll-scheme proposal. We would, however, prefer navigation on the St. Lawrence to be toll-free as at present.

Financial Arrangements Under the 1941 Agreement

It was not thought desirable, in the main brief, to complete the financial picture and thus emphasize the bargain Canada won in the 1941 Agreement. At 1948 prices, Canada would pay $211,156,500. If, under any new agreement with Ontario, that province agrees to the same proportional division of costs of the works in the International Rapids Section as was provided for in 1941, Ontario would assume approximately $149,000,000 of the total cost to Canada, resulting in a net cost to Canada for the completion of the entire project of $62,247,000.

New York—Ontario Separate Power Scheme

The introduction of this proposal has tended to separate those primarily interested in power development from the none-too-numerous Congressional supporters of the combined scheme. It is most unlikely that a new agreement on the waterway alone would be as favourable to Canada as the 1941 Agreement. Not enough work would remain in the international sections to balance Canada's expenditures in the Canadian sections, and Congress would not likely agree to pay for wholly Canadian navigation works. Finally, Ontario might present the Federal Government with a bill for 37½% of the Canadian "common" works in the International Rapids Section built at Ontario's expense — the compensation promised to Quebec in 1941 in connection with the Beauharnois development.

The Canadian Government is studying the technical and legal aspects of the Ontario application. To date, the United States Government has not made its intentions known to us, and it is believed that a definite decision is being delayed pending the outcome of the New York Power Authority's application to the U.S. Federal Power Commission for a license to carry out its share of the separate power scheme. It may be noted that President Truman has stated categorically on two occasions, both before and after the presidential election, that he would not approve the separate power scheme and that the waterway and power project would go through as a whole or not at all.

PART II

Economic Considerations

It might be argued that more attention should have been paid in the main brief to the implications of the Quebec—Labrador iron ore discoveries. This has swung important iron ore, steel and railroad interests behind the waterway. The point should not be overplayed, however, because Quebec—Labrador ore will never replace Mesabi ore in the central U.S. steel industry.

Strategic Implications

In the main brief, under this heading, the sheltered nature of the Gulf of St. Lawrence is stressed from the point of view of the protection which can be given to shipping. It should perhaps be mentioned, however, that A/S<sup>60</sup> conditions in the Gulf are in general not good. This, of course, does not outweigh the value of a naturally protected area, and the possibilities of sealing it off by minefields. In addition, in view of the long-term nature of the project, it is envisaged that the development of the A/S submarine may be of material assistance, as the employment of this type of A/S vessel will, to some extent, overcome the existing difficulty of dealing with the uneven water temperature gradients which constitute the main problem of A/S detection in these waters. (There is no reason, of course, why this particular piece of information should not be conveyed to all the members of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. In view of the wide distribution which the main brief is likely to receive, however, it was not thought advisable to include any statement on A/S conditions in the Gulf in that document.)

Yours sincerely,

D.M. JOHNSON

---

<sup>60</sup> anti-submarine.

1027.

C.D.H./Vol. 54

Extrait du journal de la Commission permanente canado-américaine de défenseExtract from Journal of Permanent Joint Board on Defence

SECRET

[Ottawa], December 16-17, 1948

. . .

16. St. Lawrence Project. With reference to Paragraph No. 21 of the Journal of the Board's meeting of August 19-20, 1948,† the Secretary of the U.S. Section gave the Board the latest political and legislative position of the U.S. Government in connection with this project. He stated that, on December 3, 1948, President Truman had written to the Secretary of State, informing him that he did not favour reference to the International Joint Commission at this time of the separate New York-Ontario power project. He desired, instead, that the combined project, essentially as embodied in the U.S.—Canadian agreement of 1941, be placed on the legislative programme of the State Department and that the State Department assume the responsibility for coordinating the testimony of the executive agencies.

The Canadian Chairman stated that the views of his Government in the matter were in accord with those expressed by President Truman and that the Cabinet Defence Committee had requested him to submit to the U.S. Section, for its information, a preliminary brief prepared by an interdepartmental committee in Ottawa, which not only outlined the history of the waterway and power project and a large number of the economic factors involved in it, but emphasized particularly the great importance of the combined project to the defence potential of the two countries.

After studying the Canadian brief and considering especially the defence aspects of the question (Begin Unclassified), the Board decided to amplify its statement of May, 1947, in favour of the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project, by setting forth the following conclusions:

(a) The completion of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway and power project will be of great value to the peacetime economy and to the defence potential of Canada and the United States.

(b) The development of both the navigation and the power features will enhance the value to be derived from the development of each; the project should therefore be carried out as a single undertaking, integrating navigation and power development.

(c) The benefits to be derived from the completion of the project may be expected far to outweigh the expenditures which will be required.

(d) The benefits to be derived from the completion of the project fully warrant the acceptance of a certain degree of risk from enemy attack.

(e) The strategic risk can be minimized to a large extent by the taking of reasonable precautionary and protective measures; the vital portions of the project can be given defence protection, on a reasonably economical basis, on a par with that accorded to other comparably vital installations.

It is accordingly recommended that every effort be made to overcome the obstacles which are now delaying the completion, by the United States and Canada, of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway and power project (End Unclassified).

1028.

DEA/1268-D-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, December 31, 1948

Dear Mr. Pearson:

You mentioned to me during our conversation in New York on Wednesday that the government might be disposed to proceed with the St. Lawrence Waterway Agreement at the forthcoming session, provided that there was a good prospect of its adoption by Congress. I had a talk yesterday about this with Mr. Hickerson.

Hickerson told me that the President was determined to make a vigorous effort to secure the passage of the Agreement fairly early in the new Congress. He said that this would involve "an all-out effort" by the Administration and added that he himself, though a strong supporter of the Waterway, was not sure of the political wisdom of such an effort being made, on the ground that it would be a severe strain on party loyalty in a number of cases and might conceivably prejudice the attitude of these Members towards other and very important measures in the field of foreign policy.

He thought that it might be possible to secure a favourable majority in the Senate, but he was very uncertain about the prospects in the House of Representatives because of the pressure of local interests in the big centres of population on the Atlantic seaboard and the lack of enthusiasm for the project in the West and South. The President has, however, committed the Administration to at least one more try for the combined power and navigation project. If this try fails, Mr. Hickerson thought they would have to support strongly the separate power development.

It has been suggested from the White House that the State Department should assume responsibility for co-ordinating the presentation of the case to Congress. The State Department, however, is unwilling to undertake this, on the ground that the drive must be directed from the White House itself by someone with sufficient authority from the President to control the nature of the testimony given by other Departments. He said, for example, that the Chief of Engineers would have to be told not to express publicly his objection to the imposition of tolls and that the Secretary of the Army, if he gave evidence, would have to be more direct and enthusiastic than he was at the last session.

I suggested to him that the best person to direct the effort might well be Mr. Steelman, who is both the most influential of the personal assistants of the President and now the Acting Chairman of the National Security Resources Board. I remarked that Steelman, in the latter capacity, could put up a very strong case to Congress for both the power and navigation sides of the project based on the need for more power for industrial expansion and on the use of the Waterway, both for the movement of raw materials and for the development of the ship-building industry on the Great Lakes as important elements in national defence planning.

I suggested off-hand to you in New York that we might give some thought to the adoption of the Agreement by Parliament before its adoption by Congress. The main argument for this would be that it would remove any doubt about the Canadian attitude and would place the responsibility for delay squarely where it belongs, thus possibly serving to expedite action here. Hickerson said that he would like to think this over, but his first reaction was that the prior adoption by Parliament would be of real assistance towards passage by Congress. I shall make some further enquiries, putting the matter forward solely, of course, as a tentative suggestion of my own and making it clear that it has not even been considered by the Canadian Government.

Yours sincerely,
H.H. WRONG

SECTION D

COMMUNICATIONS ROUTIÈRES ET FERROVIAIRES AVEC L'ALASKA ROAD AND RAIL COMMUNICATION WITH ALASKA

1029.

DEA/50205-40

Note pour la section canadienne de la Commission permanente de défense

Memorandum for Canadian Section, Permanent Joint Board on Defence

SECRET

[Ottawa], February 16, 1948

PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF A RAILWAY THROUGH BRITISH COLUMBIA AND THE YUKON TO ALASKA

A. Wartime Developments

1. At the meeting of the Canada-United States Permanent Joint Board on Defence held in Montreal in April, 1942, the U.S. State Department Member of the Board indicated informally that his Government was planning to seek Canadian authority for the U.S. Army Engineers to make a survey between Prince George, B.C., and Fairbanks, Alaska, with a view to ascertaining whether the construction of a railroad between these two points would be practicable.

2. In an official note, dated April 16, 1942, the U.S. Minister in Ottawa requested the Canadian Government to authorize his Government to make a survey of a route that would follow the "Rocky Mountain Trench" i.e. north from Prince George along the valleys of the Parsnip, Finlay, Kechika, Frances and Pelly Rivers to Fairbanks. It was learned at the time that a railway over this route was being considered as either an alternative to, or as an adjunct of, the Alaska Highway. It was apparent from a memorandum obtained from the U.S. authorities that considerable quantities of rails, locomotives and rolling stock would be required from Canadian as well as United States sources. The Canadian Steel Controller indicated on April 25, 1942, that he doubted the availability of locomotives and rolling stock in Canada.

3. The U.S. request was also considered by the Departments of National Defence, Transport and Mines and Resources. All stated that they had no objection to the survey being carried out. The Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources added that, for the survey to be official, it must be made by a Provincial Land Surveyor in British Columbia and by a Dominion Land Surveyor in the Yukon and suggested that such officers should be attached to the U.S. survey parties.

4. On April 22, 1942, a reply was sent to the U.S. Minister to the effect that while, in view of shortages of manpower, equipment and steel, the Canadian Government doubted the practicability of the construction of a railway, it was agreeable to the proposed survey being carried out. It was made clear that this did not commit the Canadian Government to approval of construction and that the latter wished to be kept fully informed of the progress of the survey. It was also pointed out that a road survey previously made by the British Columbia-Yukon-Alaska Commission covered much the same territory.

5. The survey was commenced immediately with the assistance of four Canadian Army engineers. Mr. C.K. Le Capelain, Canadian Liaison Officer on the Alaska Highway Project, was designated in a similar capacity for the railway survey. Semi-monthly reports were submitted by the U.S. authorities until completion of the survey in October, 1942, and the official report on the survey, dated October 12, was sent by the U.S. Legation in Ottawa to the Government under cover of a Note dated November 20, 1942.

6. In September of that year the Canadian Government had been informed that the survey was almost complete but that no decision could be reached by the U.S. authorities without certain additional information from the Canadian Government. Before recommending the project, the U.S. Army wished to know whether 1500 miles of rails and other equipment could be provided by Canada and stated that, unless these were available within 45 days, they could not be distributed in time to permit construction to begin the following spring. Apparently it was intimated informally to the U.S. authorities that the rails were not available in Canada. On November 15, 1942, Lieut.-General Somervell, U.S. Army, informed the Rt. Hon. Mr. Howe that, after thorough consideration of the project, it had been decided to abandon the plan to construct the railroad, because of the lack of sufficient traffic to justify it. It appears, however, that the real explanation of this decision was the lack of rails and other equipment.

7. The official report on the survey is in the possession of the Department of Transport. Attached is a copy of a brief outline of it, dated December 9, 1942,† prepared in the Privy Council Office for the information of the members of the General Defence Construction Projects Panel. This summary states that the report made it clear that the Rocky Mountain Trench had been considered because it would permit the most rapid construction and that only a railway suitable for military needs (e.g. using second-grade ties and light rails, and with little provision for breaking up trains at intermediate points) had been contemplated. The report indicated that a railway to be used for long-term purposes would have to be of a higher standard and laid down on some route based on traffic potentialities. The railway planned was to be 1417 miles long — 530 miles in B.C. and 650 miles in the Yukon — and would cross 6 navigable rivers. It was believed 17,000 men working for 400 days and using 238,000 tons of materials, (including rails, track fittings, bridges, construction machinery, locomotives and rolling stock) would be required to complete the railway at a cost of U.S. $112,000,000.

8. Dr. Camsell, Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources, made a secret report on September 8th, 1942, copy of which is attached,† apparently supporting the view that the Rocky Mountain Trench route was the most practicable for military purposes.

B. Post-War Developments

9. In September, 1943, the U.S. Military Attaché in Ottawa sought and received authority from the Canadian Government to release the U.S. Survey Report and maps to private interests represented by J.R. Wemlinger, Consulting Engineer (the man chiefly responsible for the U.S. authorities considering the construction of a railway in 1942), who was interested in the construction of a railroad through British Columbia to Alaska. It was also agreed that the report and related documents should no longer be classified as “restricted”.

10. On November 13, 1947, the Edmonton Agent of the Northwest Territories Administration reported hearing on good authority that New York bankers were considering the extension of the Pacific and Great Eastern Railway, owned by the Government of British Columbia, from the neighbourhood of Prince George, B.C., to Fairbanks, Alaska. It was understood that the proposed railway would follow more or less the same route as the Alaska Highway and pass through either Pine Pass or Peace River Pass (where, incidentally, high grade bituminous coal had been under test for the past six months). On January 16th, 1947, the Canadian Ambassador in Washington reported that no information on this proposal was available in Washington. The President of the American Association of Railways was said to know nothing about it.

11. In November, 1947, Mr. Willis T. Batcheller, the head of a firm of Consulting Engineers in Seattle, had discussions about the possibilities of a B.C.-Yukon-Alaska railroad with the Vice-Chief of the General Staff, the Deputy Minister of Agriculture and the Right Honourable Mr. Howe. Apparently Mr. Howe expressed to him considerable interest in such a possibility from both the development and defence points of view.

12. In December, 1947, the Wilson Engineering Corporation, Denver, Colorado, wrote to External Affairs, referring, without giving any details, to “a plan to construct a railroad along the Alaska Highway” and requesting right-of-way permits from the Governments of Canada and British Columbia. On the advice of the Department of Transport, this company has since been informed that, in order to obtain the desired permits, it should apply for incorporation in Canada as a railway company.

13. At a meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence on November 20-21, 1947, it was noted that there was increased public and official interest in the development of North-Western Canada and Alaska and in the improvement of communications in that area for both economic and strategic reasons. It was agreed that available material regarding proposals for a railway through British Columbia and the Yukon to Alaska should be considered by the Board at its next meeting on February 19-20, 1948.<sup>61</sup> As a result, at a recent meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee, it was decided that a memorandum should be prepared by the Department of External Affairs on the subject for General McNaughton, Chairman of the Canadian Section of the Board. The latter has asked that it reflect the views of the other interested Departments.

C. Factors to be Considered

14. A memorandum containing the foregoing paragraphs was accordingly, sent by External Affairs to the Deputy Ministers of Transport, National Defence and Mines and Resources with a request for any comments they might care to make with a view to its improvement. At the same time, they were asked to state their views briefly and on a purely tentative basis, regarding certain considerations which will presumably have to be carefully weighed if and when the Canadian or U.S. military (or other) authorities decide that the possibility of constructing a railroad deserves serious study. These considerations are the following:

(1) Is there any really active interest or pressure in Canada or the U.S. in favour of a railway?

(2) Is there a present need or a probable need in the near future for a railway for either (a) civilian purposes, (b) military purposes or (c) a combination of these?

(3) What would be the best routes from the points of view of (a) availability of civilian and/or military traffic; (b) the availability of materials such as coal, timber, etc; (c) engineering problems, such as water and mountain barriers; (d) the greatest economy of construction; (e) speed of transportation for military purposes?

(4) Is there likely to be enough civilian and/or military traffic available in the near future to enable a private or public railway to operate without loss? If not, what is the probable annual cost of providing such a railway?

(5) If it is desirable to construct a railway should it be financed or operated by (a) private interests; (b) a public body; (c) on a semi-public basis?

(6) If the Canadian, British Columbia and U.S. Governments should assume any measure of financial responsibility, in what proportion should each contribute financially and exercise control?

<sup>61</sup> Le secrétaire de la section canadienne fit rapport à la CPCAD lors de ses réunions des 19 et 20 février sur la base de cette note. Les opinions des Chefs d'état-major canadiens tels que rapportés dans le paragraphe 17 furent communiqués à la CPCAD.

The Secretary of the Canadian Section gave a report to PJBD at its meetings of February 19-20 based on this memorandum. The views of the Canadian Chiefs of Staff as recorded in paragraph 17 were relayed to PJBD.

(7) If the U.S. Government should contribute anything to a railroad, what, if any U.S. personnel, should be allowed to work in connection with it on Canadian territory?

15. The following are the replies to these questions that have been received from Mr. J.C. Lessard, Deputy Minister of Transport and Mr. H.L. Keenleyside, Deputy Minister of Mines & Resources.

(1) Mr. Lessard. "To our knowledge, there is no really active interest or pressure in Canada in favour of a railway to Alaska. Our understanding is that the government of the Province of British Columbia is anxious to extend the Pacific Great Eastern, in order to develop the coal and forest resources on the projected extension north of Prince George. Naturally British Columbia is anxious that the Pacific Great Eastern form part of a railroad to Alaska."

Mr. Keenleyside. "So far as I know there is no very active interest or pressure in Canada for the construction of such a railway. A good many people have stated that they are in favour of a railway to Alaska, and there is, of course, strong pressure in British Columbia for the completion of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway as far as the Peace River area. There is not, however, any well informed and formally organized body of opinion pressing for a railway to Alaska."

(2) Mr. Lessard. "For purely civilian purposes, there is definitely no present need for such a railway. The maintenance of the Alaska Highway to all-year-round traffic is ample to take care of all civilian traffic originating and terminating between the British Columbia—Alberta boundaries and the Yukon. There are bus and truck routes operated on fairly regular schedules, and our understanding is that the traffic is very light. In addition, civilian air services operated by the Canadian Pacific Air Lines from Vancouver through Prince George and from Edmonton through Grande Prairie to the Yukon and Alaska are available for businessmen and emergency cases. Mention should also be made of the steamship services between Vancouver, Prince Rupert and Alaska."

Mr. Keenleyside. "A railway along the route indicated would be of great value for the development of the country traversed. Whether that value would be sufficient to justify the construction and the probable subsequent cost of operation is the kind of question that cannot be firmly answered. If the railway line were to cut across a new Sullivan Mine its construction would, of course, be justified. I know of no way, however, of forecasting such a result."

(3) Mr. Lessard. "This would be the subject of a full engineering report complementing survey made in 1942 and referred to in your memorandum."

Mr. Keenleyside. "The most practicable route is undoubtedly that along the Rocky Mountain trench to the Finlay River and over the Frances-Pelly River Divide to the Yukon Valley. As Dr. Camsell has pointed out this presents no serious engineering difficulties. Whether or not this is the best route from the standpoint of the ultimate value of the area to be opened up is again an unanswerable question. It has the advantages, however, of known resources of coal and timber, and of reducing to a minimum (among the routes suggested) the cost of construction and upkeep."

(4) Mr. Lessard. "There does not appear to be enough civilian and/or military traffic to enable a private or public railway to operate without loss. Depending upon frequency of service, the annual cost, (deficit) would vary between $25,000,000 to $50,000,000."

Mr. Keenleyside. "Neither I nor anyone else could answer this question with any assurance. It is probable, however, that for some considerable time at least the railway would operate at a loss. The measure of that loss will depend on discoveries during construction; on the military use that is made of the line; on the success of tourist campaigns that may be developed; and on a variety of other factors which I am not competent to assess." Mr. Keenleyside prefaced his replies to these questions with the remark that the experience of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway, which has been running at a loss, makes it very doubtful that a new line would do much better.

(5) Mr. Lessard. "Bearing in mind that costs have increased by at least 40% since 1942, it would appear that such a railway could not be built for less than $160,000,000 in 1948. We fail to see how a private company could finance the construction of such a railway, with traffic possibility at a minimum."

Mr. Keenleyside. "This is a matter of public policy, and the only answer that I would feel inclined to make would be that if the railway is to be constructed by private interests, they would be likely to demand so much in the way of public assistance and support that it would probably be simpler for the Government to finance and operate the railway itself — presumably through the Canadian National Railway."

(6) Mr. Keenleyside. "In my opinion control should be exclusively in Canadian hands. On the other hand, it might be reasonable to propose that the United States Government should make a very considerable payment towards the construction of this facility on the ground that it is a contribution to the development of Alaska. My inclination would be to suggest that contributions should be in the form of a one-time grant, and should not involve a recurring appeal to the United States Congress for funds to maintain a railway on Canadian territory."

(7) Mr. Keenleyside. "This would be a matter for negotiation, but in general it would be my view that the United States participation should be reduced to a minimum both as to numbers and time."

16. Mr. Lessard also pointed out that the Bureau of Transportation Economics is at present making a survey of the economic and commercial potentialities of the Alaska Highway, for the Department of Mines and Resources, which will be of interest in connection with the question of a railroad.

17. As a result of the enquiry addressed to the Deputy Minister of National Defence, the following reply has been received from the Secretary of the Chiefs of Staff Committee:

"The Chiefs of Staff have given preliminary consideration to this matter and are of the opinion that, from a long-term strategic viewpoint, the recommended railroad would be useful. However, it is felt that peacetime military requirements can be met by existing systems and that there is unlikely to be sufficient military traffic in the near future for such a railroad to operate without loss.

"You will appreciate that the time has not been available for the Chiefs of Staff to go into this matter fully. The views are, therefore, tentative . . . only and subject to such amendment as may seem desirable in the light of further study."

18. It should be emphasized here that all the views quoted in paragraphs 15 to 17 inclusive are, of course, purely tentative.

1030.

DEA/226 (S)

Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion du Comité des chefs d'état-major

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Chiefs of Staff Committee

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], July 18, 1948

. . .

PROPOSED B.C.—YUKON—ALASKA RAILROAD

11. The Committee had before them a report from the Joint Planning Committee examining the strategic aspects of the proposed railway from Quesnel, B.C., to Fairbanks, Alaska, with contributing laterals and connecting links. The Joint Planners concluded that requirements for Canadian military forces were insufficient to warrant the railway in the foreseeable future and pointed out that insufficient knowledge of U.S. requirements precluded a complete assessment of the value of the proposed railway. It was recommended that U.S. views be obtained regarding this proposal and that the Permanent Joint Board on Defence be requested to make a firm recommendation based on the requirements of both countries.

(Memorandum JPC 15-1 of 16th June, 1948, from Joint Planning Committee — CSC 5-1-15 of 24th June, 1948)†

12. The Chief of the Air Staff stated that, in his opinion, the construction of such a railway would have an important value for the United States in wartime since otherwise they were entirely dependent on sea transportation for shipment of the bulk of their supplies to Alaska. If these sea lines of communication were endangered by submarine activity or other factors, the railway would be of inestimable value.

13. The Chief of the General Staff suggested that, if the United States had a requirement, this should be put forward. It would be unwise for Canada to initiate any further action in this regard as, in his opinion, this should not be regarded as a joint defence project.

14. It was agreed, after further discussion:

(a) to note the conclusions of the Joint Planning Committee; and

(b) to forward the Joint Planners' paper to the members of the Canadian Section of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence for their information, it being understood, however, that no initiative would be taken by the Canadian Section toward raising this matter again.

. . .

1031.

DEA/403-AB-40

Note du secrétaire du Comité des chefs d'état-major pour le Comité de la défense du Cabinet

Memorandum from Secretary, Chiefs of Staff Committee, to Cabinet Defence Committee

Ottawa, October 15, 1948

HAINES CUT-OFF — WINTER USE

The United States State Department has advised that, as a result of the Maritime strike on the United States Pacific Coast, Alaska has been experiencing difficulty in obtaining sufficient supplies. The State Department has therefore asked informally:

(a) whether the Canadian Government would be willing to keep the Haines Cut-off open after the snow flies if the strike is still in progress at that time; or

(b) if unwilling to keep the Haines Cut-off open through the winter, whether Canada would be willing to allow the Alaska Roads Commission to keep the Cut-off open until the strike is settled.

2. In respect of these proposals, the Chief of the General Staff has the following report to make:

“From the information available it would appear that it is quite impossible to guarantee that traffic could be maintained at all times during the winter period. Snow to a depth of twenty to thirty feet has been experienced on the Southerly slopes, while glacial icings have occurred in patches up to one thousand yards long and eight to ten feet in depth. A major task of relocation would be required in order to remove the right-of-way from a dangerous slide area which is apt to completely bury the road in periods of thaw. It would not be possible under any circumstances to carry out this task of relocation before the snow flies this winter.

“It is understood that during the war years and shortly after the construction of the Haines Cut-off was completed, the United States Army authorities attempted to keep this road open during the winter. It is also understood that these authorities gave up this enterprise as being completely impracticable.

“In view of the above I recommend therefore that the Canadian Government do not accept the project of keeping open the Haines Cut-off once snowfall begins. As regards the willingness of the Canadian Government to allow the Alaska Roads Commission to keep the Cut-Off open, I would urge that the United States authorities be discouraged in attempting this project because there is every likelihood that if they engage in such a venture our meagre Canadian manpower resources will be called upon to assist in rescue operations should convoys become snow-bound in the Haines Cut-Off.”

3. The Chiefs of Staff are in agreement with these views and recommend therefore:

(a) that the Canadian Government not accept responsibility for keeping the Haines Cut-off open during the winter months under any circumstances; and

(b) that the U.S. Government be discouraged from attempting a similar course.<sup>62</sup>

W.W. BEAN

1032.

DEA/463-40

Note du secrétaire du Cabinet pour le Cabinet
Memorandum from Secretary to Cabinet to Cabinet

SECRET

Ottawa, December 6, 1948

U.S. REQUEST FOR MEETING TO DISCUSS ROAD AND RAIL
COMMUNICATIONS TO ALASKA

On November 3, the U.S. Embassy indicated that representatives of the Transportation Sub-Committee of the U.S. Inter-Agency Committee on Alaskan Development wished to have discussions in Ottawa, at the official level, on November 22-23, in order to bring forward the following proposals:

- (a) Hard surfacing and year-round maintenance of the Alaska Highway and of the road linking the Highway at Dawson Creek with the international boundary;
- (b) Hard surfacing and year-round maintenance of the Haines Cut Off (from Haines, Alaska, to a point 100 miles west of White Horse);
- (c) A comprehensive study of the question of constructing a railway to Alaska — apparently from the region of Prince George, B.C.

The United States request has been discussed at a meeting of departmental representatives from Mines and Resources, National Defence, Transport, Trade and Commerce, External Affairs, Finance, Labour and Public Works. During this meeting the following conclusions emerged:

- (a) There were indications that the U.S. proposals had been formulated chiefly by the Department of the Interior and that the latter was simply making use of the U.S. Defence Departments to further what is primarily its own cause.
- (b) If the United States were granted permission to perform or pay for a major portion of the proposed construction it would have an undesirable psychological

<sup>62</sup> Il n'y eut pas d'occasion propice pour présenter cette note au CDC avant que la proposition américaine de discussions élargies (voir document suivant immédiatement) ne soit reçue. Dans les circonstances, Claxton décida de ne pas la référer au CDC. Toutefois, les opinions des Chefs d'état-major furent communiquées au ministère des Affaires extérieures afin que l'on puisse en tenir compte dans toutes discussions avec les représentants américains.

No suitable opportunity arose to present this memorandum to CDC before the US proposal for broader discussions (see immediately following document) was received. In the circumstances, Claxton decided not to refer it to CDC. However, the views of the Chiefs of Staff were made known to the Department of External Affairs so that they could be taken into account in any discussions with US representatives.

effect on the population in the Canadian northwest which has already been impressed by U.S. activities in that area during the war.<sup>63</sup>

(c) The proposed meeting could not be held without giving rise to publicity and such publicity might lead to pressures in the western and northwestern regions of the continent in favour of the U.S. proposals and thereby force Canada's hand.

(d) Existing land and sea communications in the Canadian northwest are not being used to anything approaching the capacity that their present condition permits.

The meeting accordingly agreed to recommend that the reply to the U.S. Embassy indicate that there is no present need for discussions of projects of the type contemplated by the United States but that the Canadian government would be interested to have any reasonably firm estimates that the United States may have prepared of the military and civilian traffic they expect to move over existing sea and land routes to Alaska during the next several years.<sup>64</sup>

The attached draft reply† to the U.S. Embassy has been prepared in this sense and is submitted for approval.

A.D.P. HEENEY

---

<sup>63</sup> Selon Reid, ce n'était pas une «conclusion», mais une préoccupation exprimée par Keenleyside (non partagée par Clark).

According to Reid, this was not a "conclusion" but a concern expressed by Keenleyside (not shared by Clark).

<sup>64</sup> Le 8 décembre, le Cabinet endossa ces recommandations.

On December 8, Cabinet endorsed these recommendations.

4<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 4COMMISSION MIXTE INTERNATIONALE
INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

SECTION A

PERSONNEL ET TRAVAIL PERSONNEL AND WORK

1033.

DEA/2492-B-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieuresMemorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], October 7, 1948

RE VACANCIES RE INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

At the present time there are two vacancies on the Canadian Section of the International Joint Commission. The first of the present vacancies was created on December 6, 1946, as a result of the death of the Honourable Charles Stewart. The second vacancy was created as a result of the death of the Honourable Joseph E. Perrault which occurred June 15, 1948. Mr. George Spence, the present Canadian Commissioner, was appointed on October 1, 1947, to replace Mr. George W. Kwite who died November 16, 1940.

2. There is probably more business before the Commission at the present time than there has been since its creation in 1911. The cases now pending before the Commission are as follows:

(a) The application of the Creston Reclamation Company to construct and operate certain permanent works adjacent to the channel of the Kootenay River in order to reclaim approximately 10,000 acres of flood lands;

(b) An application for permission to increase the storage in Rainy Lake, Ontario, in order to provide additional hydro electric development;

(c) An application for the construction of a dam on Sage Creek, Alberta, in order to provide storage for irrigation purposes;

(d) A reference concerned with the apportionment of the waters of the Souris River among the Provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba and the State of North Dakota, and also with the regulation of the flow and use of the waters;

(e) A reference with respect to complaints arising on both sides of the international boundary line, in connection with the intensive drainage into the Roseau River in Minnesota and proposed improvements in the channel of the river in Manitoba;

(f) The application by the State of Washington for an investigation into the serious backwater condition existing at Osoyoos Lake;

(g) Under Article VI of the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909, the International Joint Commission is responsible for directing the measurement and apportionment of the waters of the St. Mary's and Milk Rivers for irrigation. This matter is again before the Commission for consideration;

(h) One of the biggest references before the Commission at the present time is the reference submitted to it in March, 1944, with respect to the Columbia River and the entire Columbia River Basin system. This reference requests the Commission's recommendations concerning navigation, power development, irrigation, flood control, and other beneficial public uses of the waters of this system;

(i) A reference in connection with the pollution of the international boundary waters of the St. Clair River, Lake St. Clair, the Detroit River and waters of the St. Mary's River from Lake Superior to Lake Huron;

(j) An application by veterans of the Province of British Columbia for the diversion of 4,800 acre feet of water per annum from the Similkamen River for the irrigation of orchard and farm lands to be cultivated by them. This is known as the Cawston project;

(k) Another important reference is that known as the Midwestern Watershed, a reference which was submitted by the two Governments on January 12, 1948. The first of these references covers the area from the Continental Divide on the west to the western limit of the St. Mary's River drainage basin on the east; and the other, the area from the eastern boundary of the Milk River drainage basin on the west to the drainage basin of the Red River of the North on the east.

3. Besides the above cases which are now before the Commission, the Government is now considering three further applications and references, two of which, if submitted to the Commission, will probably constitute the greatest projects ever to go before that body. These are as follows:

(a) A reference with respect to smoke pollution along the international boundary in the area of Detroit, Michigan, and Windsor, Ontario;

(b) The Passamaquoddy Tidal Project which will be a huge dam construction between Maine and New Brunswick to harness tidal waters for the development of hydro electric power;

(c) The joint application of the Ontario Hydro Commission and the Power Authority of the State of New York for the development of the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River as a hydro electric project.

4. The Legal Adviser points out that as a result of his knowledge and experience in connection with the work of the Commission and in consideration of the personalities of the American Section of the Commission, it would be most desirable for the Government in considering the appointments to give first consideration to a person, nationally and preferably internationally, recognized as an outstanding jurist. The second appointment should be a person having outstanding knowledge and experience in the field of hydraulic engineering. These are merely suggestions put forward by the Legal Adviser.<sup>65</sup>

5. I have just been advised by Mr. Harrington of the United States Embassy here that his Government has appointed a third Commissioner to the United States Section of the Commission in the person of Mr. Eugene W. Weber, who has been a prominent official of the Corps of Army Engineers. This brings the U.S. Section of the Commission up to its full complement and you will realize that the U.S. Commissioners now outnumber the Canadian Commissioners 3 to 1. Moreover, the Commission now has a quorum which means decisions, can be immediately taken with respect to a number of matters which are ready for a decision, including matters that will probably be discussed at the semi-annual meeting of the Commission in Ottawa, commencing October 12.

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

SECTION B

PROJET D'ÉNERGIE MARÉMOTRICE DE PASSAMAQUODDY PASSAMAQUODDY TIDAL POWER PROJECT

1034.

DEA/10011-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

[Ottawa], May 29, 1948

RE THE PASSAMAQUODDY TIDAL POWER PROJECT

Note No. 143 of May 20, 1948,† from the United States Embassy, appended hereto, resurrects the question of the Passamaquoddy Tidal Power Project, and suggests that it be referred to the International Joint Commission under Article IX of the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909.

2. A note on the scope and history of the Passamaquoddy Project is attached to this memorandum.

3. Also annexed hereto, for your signature if you concur, is a noncommittal note† to the United States Embassy, asking for information as to the exact nature of the

<sup>65</sup> De fait, le Cabinet nomma J.A. Glen, ancien président de la Chambre des communes et plus récemment ministre des Mines et des Ressources, pour remplir l'un des postes vacants à sa réunion du 21 décembre. Glen occupa le poste de président canadien de la Commission mixte internationale jusqu'à sa mort le 27 juin 1950.

In fact, Cabinet appointed J.A. Glen, former Speaker of the House of Commons and most recently Minister of Mines and Resources, to one of the vacancies at its meeting of December 21. Glen served as Canadian chairman of IJC until his death on June 27, 1950.

project the United States authorities have in mind, and stating that their proposal will receive due consideration.

4. The United States Embassy's note states that draft terms of reference will be forwarded in the near future for our consideration. In view of the many factors involved in a project of this type, you would probably agree that it will be necessary to refer the draft terms of reference to an interdepartmental committee. The committee would presumably require representation from this Department, Mines and Resources, Fisheries and Public Works, and possibly from Finance, Transport, Trade and Commerce, Reconstruction and Supply and National Defence. With your concurrence, therefore, I propose to furnish the Deputy Ministers of these Departments with copies of the notes exchanged between this Department and the United States Embassy and with our note on the history of the project.

5. I do not believe that there will be any need to set up an interdepartmental committee until the United States Government has given more specific information regarding the project it has in mind, and has forwarded draft terms of reference for our consideration.

L.B. P[EARSON]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note

Memorandum

[Ottawa], May 29, 1948

THE PASSAMAQUODDY TIDAL POWER PROJECT

The United States Embassy, in its Note No. 143 of May 20, 1948, has resurrected the question of the Passamaquoddy Tidal Power Project, and has suggested that it be made the subject of a joint reference to the International Joint Commission under Article XX of the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909.

2. The original Passamaquoddy project was to have been undertaken by private capital at a cost of approximately $100,000,000 and was designed to generate some three billion kilowatt hours of electricity per annum. It involved damming Passamaquoddy Bay, through which passes the International Boundary, between Maine and New Brunswick, and Cobscook Bay, which lies wholly in the State of Maine. The former would have been artificially maintained near high tide level, and the latter near low tide level, while a controlled flow between the two basins thus formed would have utilized the head created by the great tidal range in the Bay of Fundy for the continuous generation of hydro-electric power. A system of gates would have provided for the replenishment of Passamaquoddy Bay at high tide and for emptying Cobscook Bay at low tide, while locks would have been provided for shipping using the water inside the two basins.

3. The original project was sponsored by an engineer named Dexter P. Cooper, who formed companies in Canada and the United States. The "Act to incorporate the Canadian Dexter P. Cooper Company" (16-17 George V, c. 23, assented to June 15, 1926) provided that the construction of the necessary works in Canada should be commenced within three years and completed within six years. It further provided that the works could not be commenced until they had received the approval of the Ministers of Public Works, Marine and Fisheries, and of the Interior, of the International Joint Commission, and of the Governor in Council.

4. Opposition to this scheme developed in New Brunswick and, to some extent in Nova Scotia, principally because of an anticipated adverse effect on the herring-sardine industry of the area. (Other objections related to ice formation in Passamaquoddy Bay, and to possible changes in tidal levels, fishing conditions, water temperatures and climate conditions throughout the Bay of Fundy area.) The Company did not receive the necessary approval from the various authorities concerned (no reference appears to have been made to the International Joint Commission) and the authority for the Company to proceed with its undertaking lapsed on June 15, 1929, after a Bill to extend the time limit had been rejected by the Private Bills Committee of the House of Commons.

5. In a note dated May 15, 1929, the United States Legation in Ottawa sought further Canadian consideration for the extension of the time limit, and suggested that a Canadian Commission be appointed to examine the fisheries questions involved. The Canadian reply, dated June 1, 1929, said that further consideration could not be given to the rejected legislation at that time, but that the Canadian Government would be prepared to authorize additional study of the fisheries questions and to cooperate with the United States authorities to this effect.

6. In July, 1929, a sub-committee of the North American Committee on Fisheries Investigation recommended a two-year study of the probable effects of the power project, and in a note to the United States Minister, dated September 20, 1929, it was proposed that the two governments share the cost of such an investigation, estimated at $45,000 per annum.

7. The proposal was agreed to, and between 1931 and 1933 the "International Commission Appointed to Investigate the Probable Effects of the Damming of Passamaquoddy and Cobscook Bays on the Fisheries of that Region" carried on its work. In December, 1933, it brought in an inconclusive report. The report reaffirmed what was already known — that approximately 2.5 per cent of the $1,500,000-yearly herring industry of the area was carried on inside the portions to be dammed, and that this percentage would probably be obliterated by the project. The effect outside the dams could not be determined without further study, and quite possibly, without constructing the dams themselves.

8. No further serious attempt appears to have been made to advance the main Passamaquoddy scheme. Mr. Cooper, however, continued to seek federal aid in the United States for various smaller projects confined to Cobscook Bay. Federal agencies in the United States considered these proposals but rejected them principally on the grounds that there appeared to be no market for the power which would be developed. Finally, in 1935, a Public Works Administration allotment of $10,000,000 was made for the commencement of one of the Cobscook Bay projects. It is understood that approximately $7,000,000 was spent — mainly in the construction of a model community on the shores of Cobscook Bay — before the undertaking was finally abandoned in 1936. It may be noted that this project was popularly referred to as the Passamaquoddy Project, even though Passamaquoddy Bay itself was not directly affected.

9. No official correspondence appears to have been exchanged between Canada and the United States in connection with this latter project, even though the completion of the project might have affected tidal currents and fishing conditions in Canadian waters.

10. Restricted. A noncommittal note is being sent in reply to the United States Embassy's note of May 20, 1948, and it is planned to inform the other interested Government Departments of the exchange of notes. When, and if, draft terms of reference to the International Joint Commission are passed to us by the United States Embassy, it will probably be necessary to set up an interdepartmental committee to study them.

1035.

DEA/10011-40

*Note du chef de la Direction de l'Amérique et l'Extrême-Orient
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Head, American and Far Eastern Division,
to Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

[Ottawa], July 6, 1948

RE PASSAMAQUODDY TIDAL POWER PROJECT

The U.S. Ambassador's Note No. 195 of June 28, 1948,† enclosing draft terms of reference in connection with the Passamaquoddy Tidal Power Project, changes the situation created by the Embassy's Note No. 143 of May 20. Instead of referring the project itself to the International Joint Commission, the terms of reference now proposed would simply ask the Commission how much the resulting investigation would cost if the project were referred to the Commission.

2. Hon. George Spence, Canadian Commissioner, considers that a reference of this sort should not be made to the Commission. Norman Marr, assistant controller of the Dominion Water and Power Bureau, has suggested that the question now raised by the U.S. authorities could more conveniently be dealt with by an informal committee of Canadian and U.S. technical experts, and his suggestion has been incorporated in a draft reply to the U.S. Ambassador which is annexed to this memorandum. Mr. Spence has been shown this draft reply and concurs in the action proposed.

3. Teletype WA-1855 of June 25† suggests that the State Department, at least, has grave doubts as to whether the expense of a reference to the Commission would be justifiable. Under these circumstances, it is surprising that the draft terms of reference do not specifically ask the Commission whether the results to be anticipated from a full-scale investigation at this time would justify the expenditure involved.

This question is included in our counter-proposal. (While there appears to be little doubt that rising costs of steam power generation, and the full utilization of potential fresh-water power development sites, will eventually make tidal power development economically feasible, it is very doubtful whether that stage has yet been reached or will be reached within the next few years. From existing reports on this project and on other similar schemes, competent engineers should be able to determine whether there is any likelihood of the Passamaquoddy Project being found to be economically sound.)

4. If our counter-proposal should prove acceptable to the U.S. authorities, there would appear to be no need to set up an interdepartmental committee to consider draft terms of reference. Before any action is taken, however, I consider that we should seek the concurrence of the various Departments we consulted in connection with the first U.S. Note. A draft circular memorandum to these Departments, enclosing the draft reply to the U.S. Ambassador,† is also annexed for your consideration. If you concur, I shall have it prepared in final form and despatched.<sup>66</sup>

5. Legal Division has seen this memorandum and its enclosures and concurs in the action proposed.

D.M. JOHNSON

1036.

DEA/10011-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur des États-Unis*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador of United States

NOTE NO. 221

Ottawa, August 6, 1948

Excellency,

I have the honour to refer to your Note No. 195 of June 28, 1948,† with which you enclosed draft Terms of Reference to the International Joint Commission in connection with the Passamaquoddy Tidal Power Project.

I note that the draft Terms of Reference would call upon the International Joint Commission to review existing plans for power development in this area; to determine the scope of the investigation that would be necessary to enable the Commission to report whether any of these or other plans would be practicable and desirable; to report on the estimated costs of the investigation envisaged; and to recommend the basis for apportionment of these costs between the two countries.

<sup>66</sup> A.B. Foster, qui informa l'ambassade de l'initiative américaine, décrit le projet Passamaquoddy comme

A.B. Foster, who informed the Embassy of the US initiative, referred to the Passamaquoddy Project as "the most notorious boondoggle" of recent United States history.

(DEA/10011-40 : WA-1855, le 25 juin.†/DEA/10011-40: WA-1855, June 25.†)

Note marginale :/Marginal note:

I concur. E[scott] R[eid]

In considering this proposal, the Canadian Government has borne the following considerations in mind:

(a) That it would be unusual to make a reference to the International Joint Commission which in effect asked the Commission what expenditures would be incurred if a subsequent reference were made;

(b) That in dealing with a reference of this kind the International Joint Commission would, in all probability, rely almost entirely upon the estimates and opinions of the appropriate technical agencies of the two Governments;

(c) That it would be undesirable to burden the International Joint Commission with a problem which might more conveniently be dealt with, on a less formal basis, by other agencies.

The Canadian Government considers that it would be preferable to refer this matter to an informal committee composed of two or three technical experts appointed by the Canadian Government and an equal number appointed by the United States Government. This Committee could be instructed to examine all existing plans, estimates and reports, in the possession of either Government or which might be made available to either Government by other agencies, dealing with the Passamaquoddy Tidal Power Project or with similar or related projects. In the light of these plans, estimates and reports, the committee could submit to both Governments a further report, or, in the event of disagreement, reports, giving the opinions of the members of the committee on the following questions:

(a) Could it be anticipated that a useful purpose would be served by referring the Passamaquoddy Tidal Power Project to the International Joint Commission at this time?

(b) It if should appear that a reference would be desirable, what would be the scope of the investigation necessitated by the reference and what would be its estimated costs?

If, after consideration of the committee's report or reports, the two Governments agreed that a reference regarding the project itself should be made to the International Joint Commission, the basis for division of the costs of the resulting investigation could be considered in conjunction with the terms of reference.

The Canadian Government would appreciate receiving the views of the United States Government regarding this alternative proposal.

Accept, etc.

LOUIS S. ST. LAURENT

1037.

DEA/10011-40

*Note de la Direction de l'Amérique et l'Extrême-Orient
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from American and Far Eastern Division
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

Ottawa, August 26, 1948

In an A.P. report from Dexter, Me., of August 25, Senator Owen Brewster (Rep.) is quoted as saying that "The State Department has promised to enquire into Canada's delay in considering a proposal for U.S.—Canadian co-operation in reviving the suspended Passamaquoddy Tidal Power Project." Brewster went on to say that A.O. Stanley, Chairman of the U.S. Section, International Joint Commission, told him, in a letter, that the State Department had assured him that it would immediately make an additional effort to ascertain the cause of the inexplicable delay.

You know that this power project involves the damming of two bays on the N.B.—Maine boundary and that towards the end of June, we received a proposal from the U.S. Embassy that a reference be made to the International Joint Commission, asking it to review existing plans for the project; to determine the scope of the investigation which would be necessary to determine whether the scheme would be feasible and economical; and to recommend an apportionment of the estimated costs of that investigation.

In a Note of August 6, Mr. St. Laurent replied, suggesting that it would be unusual to make a reference to the Commission which, in effect, asked what expenditures would be required if a subsequent reference were made. The Note suggested, as an alternative proposal, that the preliminary questions be referred instead to a Committee of Government officials.

To the best of our knowledge, the character of this correspondence has never been made public. At the end of last week, Mr. Harrington rang us up to apologize for the fact that, throughout the week, the State Department had been informing enquirers that it had received no reply from Canada. Mr. Harrington explained that there had been a fumble in the transmission of our Note to Washington.

C. E[BERTS]

1038.

DEA/10011-40

*Note de la Direction de l'Amérique et l'Extrême-Orient
pour la Direction juridique*

Memorandum from American and Far Eastern Division to Legal Division

Ottawa, September 7, 1948

Attached herewith is Note No. 260 of September 7,† from the U.S. Embassy reaffirming their desire to make a reference of the Passamaquoddy Tidal Power Project to the I.J.C. This was delivered to me at 3:30 this afternoon by Mr. Byrd, First Secretary of the U.S. Embassy. He indicated privately that he had had instructions to submit the Note just as soon as possible and to let Washington know by telephone as soon as this was done.

From talking to him, my impression of the Note is confirmed. It appears that, while the U.S. authorities were quite pleased to have our reply of August 6, suggesting submission of the question to a joint committee of experts, the White House or other political circles have pressed them to stand by their original proposal in view of the election year. One gathers from the last sentence of page 2 of the Note that the U.S. authorities are still not sincere about the matter and probably merely want to get it on record that either (a) Canada has rejected a reference to the I.J.C., or (b) that such a reference has been made. It sounds as though, after November, they will not care whether a reference has been made or not.

Mr. Byrd, stating that he was enquiring only for his personal information, asked whether there would be anything to prevent the State Department from making a unilateral reference of the project to the I.J.C. I replied that it was my understanding that while, under the Boundary Waters Treaty, the State Department or this Department can make a unilateral reference, such a practice has been consistently avoided during the past forty years.

It will be seen that in the middle of page 2 of the Note, it was suggested that resort to a committee of experts would be a "time-consuming procedure". In preparing this Note, the State Department was presumably fully aware of the fact that the I.J.C. is not in any position to act on a reference for a considerable period since there are two vacancies in the Canadian Section.

During a large part of the period in which we have been waiting for a reply from the State Department to our Note of August 6, the State Department has, rather stupidly I think, given it out to the press that a reply was being awaited from Canada. The press interpreted this as meaning that Canada was pursuing delaying tactics, if not in fact trying to kill the whole project, with the result that we were faced with quite a lot of unnecessary press enquiries. I therefore took advantage of Mr. Byrd's visit to ask him to be good enough to suggest to his Department that the following line be taken with the press if it is essential for them to give out anything: that a reply has now been given to the Canadian Government. In view of the fact that the project is a large, technical one, it is not to be expected that the Canadian Government will be able to reply to the latest Note in a matter of days.

I suppose that the attached Note raises a question of whether we want to make the gesture of agreeing to the reference to the I.J.C. in order to assist Mr. Truman to maintain his position in the White House or whether we are going to maintain our attitude that such a submission would be a ridiculous waste of time and money. While I am not entirely familiar with procedure in connection with the I.J.C., it is possible that it is not compelled to act upon a reference made to it. If that is the case, we might conceivably agree to a joint reference if we could get a confidential assurance from the State Department that, after the elections, both sides will make it known to their commissioners that they do not want the investigation pursued.

Of course, if we simply refuse to make a joint reference, the Democratic leaders could show that they had done their best and that Canada was responsible for blocking the reference. Off hand, I should not think that the Canadian Government would feel terribly embarrassed at causing a group of U.S. politicians some disappointment. Moreover, our Maritime Provinces would presumably be delighted.

I assume that this matter will have to be taken up again with all the Departments concerned, with a view to preparing new recommendations to the Cabinet Committee on Economic and Industrial Development. In view of the personnel difficulties that I will have for the next three weeks, and which I mentioned this afternoon to Mr. [K.J.] Burbridge,<sup>67</sup> I should be very grateful if you could bear the main burden of furthering this question during that period. I will, of course, be very interested to know of any developments and will be glad to assist as much as possible.

I mentioned the substance of the foregoing to Mr. Burbridge before he left this afternoon. In Detroit, however, he plans to take the attitude that the matter has not yet come to his attention. (i.e. if approached by Sen. Stanley).<sup>68</sup>

C. EBERTS

1039.

DEA/10011-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], October 27, 1948

RE PASSAMAQUODDY TIDAL POWER PROJECT

Annexed hereto, for your signature if you concur, is a Note to the United States Embassy agreeing to the U.S. proposal for a joint reference to the International Joint Commission in connection with the Passamaquoddy Tidal Power Project, and suggesting a date for the simultaneous transmission of terms of reference.† The substance of this Note was approved by the Cabinet Committee on Economic and Industrial Development on October 22, following a recommendation signed by Mr. St. Laurent as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs on October 8.†

<sup>67</sup> Direction juridique/Legal Division.

<sup>68</sup> A.O. Stanley, président, section américaine, Commission mixte internationale.
A.O. Stanley, Chairman, US Section, International Joint Commission.

2. The Cabinet Committee also concurred in Mr. St. Laurent's recommendation that the U.S. authorities be told, informally, that the Canadian Government still does not favour the procedure of a preliminary reference to the Commission, and sees little difference in principle between an initial unilateral reference to the Commission and a prior commitment by the U.S. Government which leaves no alternative but a unilateral reference if the Canadian Government disagrees. Mr. St. Laurent's memorandum explained that President Truman had apparently promised a group of Main Congressmen, some time before the Canadian Government was first consulted, that there would be a reference to the Commission. The State Department had then proposed an innocuous — and, in the opinion of all Government Departments consulted, entirely inappropriate — reference. Canadian objections and a Canadian counter-proposal (not involving the Commission) had met with firm insistence on a reference. It appeared that continued objection on our part might endanger the precedent that references under Article IX of the Boundary Waters Treaty are always made jointly by both governments.

3. If you approve, we propose to hand Mr. Harrington the Note, and inform him verbally of the views of the Canadian Government as outlined in the preceding paragraph.<sup>69</sup>

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

5<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 5

PUBLICITÉ SUR LE CANADA AUX ÉTATS-UNIS
PUBLICITY IN UNITED STATES ABOUT CANADA

1040.

DEA/8100-F-1-40

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion
du Comité interministériel sur l'information canadienne à l'étranger*

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Interdepartmental Committee on Canadian Information Abroad

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, April 7, 1948

...

2. LIAISON WITH MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY

<sup>69</sup> Johnson vit Harrington le 29 octobre et lui remit la note de Pearson.

Johnson saw Harrington on October 29 and handed him the Note from Pearson.

The chairman [Rae] introduced Mr. [B.S.] Owensmith<sup>70</sup> of the Motion Picture Association of America who is doing liaison work in the current programme to expand the use in the United States of films on Canada. Mr. Owensmith explained that it was the hope that this year there would be an increase of 5% (or about $12,000,000) over the $225,000,000 spent by U.S. tourists in Canada last year. By close co-operation with the U.S. film industry it was hoped to increase the footage of Canadian film and the amount of information about Canada in U.S. movies and to assist in making Canadian films and subjects accessible to Hollywood. This work could be divided into five main phases:

(1) Catalogue phase — Plans are now being discussed with N.F.B. whereby their films can be made available to Hollywood, with credit given for Canadian footage either in a credit line at the beginning of the picture or in the dialogue throughout. In this way awareness of Canada as well as actual footage will be increased.

(2) Facilities phase — An examination of the lab, shooting and general technical facilities in Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto is underway to find out what and how much the Canadian film industry can handle.

(3) Newsreel phase — The Motion Picture Association (which represents 70% of the industry) is making a concentrated drive to increase the use of Canadian newsreel material. In two months this year there were 31 Canadian newsclips used in U.S. newsreels, compared with 10 all last year.

(4) Tourist phase — The possibility of providing leaflets about Canada at the showing of travel films is being discussed with Mr. Dolan. In this way people in the middle income brackets — a group with money to spend on holidays but not enough for the expensive hotels and trips usually advertised — will be reached.

(5) Production phase — Every attempt is being made to get more U.S. film production in Canada and to encourage the Canadian industry to stand on its own feet by having more things shown and used by the U.S. As an indication of progress, Mr. Owensmith mentioned two definite commitments for Canadian pictures: one on the Canadian Pacific which would be started in June; another, an R.C.M.P. story, to be shot in the fall and winter. Both would be medium priced movies with about two-thirds of the production cost spent in Canada.

Mr. Owensmith added that he would like to gather together detailed information from which he could answer specific queries on Canada from Hollywood producers. Mr. [B.C.] Butler<sup>71</sup> suggested that there should be some focal person in the government service who would be responsible for watching out for and forwarding to Mr. Owensmith all materials of possible interest to Hollywood, as it would be of considerable value to keep up a steady flow of Canadian-interest material. It was agreed that this could best be done by someone in the Film Board and that a collec-

---

<sup>70</sup> Agent de liaison avec Hollywood, projet canadien de coopération, Association cinématographique des États-Unis (Motion Picture Association of America).

Hollywood Liaison Representative, Canadian Cooperation Project, Motion Picture Association of America.

<sup>71</sup> Direction de publicité commerciale, ministère du Commerce.
Trade Publicity Division, Department of Trade and Commerce.

tion of printed material which might stimulate interest in Canada would be sent to Hollywood regularly. Mr. [R.] Foster<sup>72</sup> added that the Film Board representative would make a report at each inter-departmental committee meeting on all such information sent as well as material sent direct by Mr. Dolan and other interested persons.

Action: The chairman will write the Film Commissioner, asking him to designate someone to look after this work.

...

1041.

DEA/8100-F-1-40

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion
du Comité interministériel sur l'information canadienne à l'étranger
Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Interdepartmental Committee on Canadian Information Abroad*

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, June 30, 1948

...

2. CANADIAN CO-OPERATION PROJECT

Mr. [H.] Richardson<sup>73</sup> reported on the progress of the Canadian Co-operation Project — the program to increase the use of Canadian-made films in the U.S. and encourage more U.S. filming of Canadian subjects in Canada. The development is important commercially because of the increased use by U.S. companies of Canadian-produced film and production facilities in Canada; from an exchange point of view because of the greater use of American capital in Canada and the promotion of travel to Canada — one of the direct aims of the project; but most important of all from a long-range information point of view. The Bank of Canada feels that while it is difficult to estimate the direct financial returns, the information side may well turn out to be the biggest public relations project ever undertaken here. Also, any kind of successful economic integration depends to a large extent on American public opinion, and films provide the best method of reaching the people. Already the Minister of Trade and Commerce had been given a list of 18 or 19 films dealing with Canadian subjects that are either completed or in production; up to mid-June there were 64 newsreel mentions of Canada, as against 61 for the whole of last year. Therefore, in the newsreel field alone the project was worthwhile.

The new Paramount film on Canadian-American trade relations was mentioned as an excellent example of how Canada's story could be presented. It was produced by Stuart Legge, formerly of the Film Board, and approximately 50% of the footage comes from N.F.B. film files. This film is to be made available in 16 mm. prints for the use of speakers, at conventions etc. Mr. Richardson will find out whether the prints will be made available on a commercial basis or free of charge for information purposes.

<sup>72</sup> Office national du Film./National Film Board.

<sup>73</sup> La Banque du Canada./Bank of Canada.

Mr. Richardson said the movie industry had fulfilled its requirements very quickly in providing people to make recordings for radio use. The matter will be further discussed at the next meeting of the C.B.C. Advisory Committee.

Mr. Foster may be in a position to report on general liaison arrangements at the next meeting. He has been spending some time in New York talking to officials of the Motion Picture Association and newsreel people.

Mr. [A.] Field<sup>74</sup> reported that Mr. [J.] Grierson<sup>75</sup> was planning to produce a series of films similar to the "World in Action" done by the Film Board during the war and had offered to include in it some Canadian items. The U.K. series would be international in interest; Canadian films would be produced by the Film Board but distributed as part of the series and without credit line. The Chairman felt that while the widest distribution possible should be welcomed, it was important to ensure that appropriate credits were given in the U.S. to Canadian film material.

1042.

DEA/8100-F-1-40

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion du Comité interministériel
sur l'information canadienne à l'étranger*

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Interdepartmental Committee on Canadian Information Abroad

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, August 18, 1948

. . .

3. CANADIAN CO-OPERATION PROJECT

Mr. [A.] Newman<sup>76</sup> sketched the background of this project which has the dual aim of bringing American dollars into Canada by persuading U.S. producers to shoot film in Canada and use Canadian talent and production facilities, and of publicizing Canada in the U.S. by (a) increasing the general-interest material on Canada in U.S. films (b) advertising Canada as a tourist country, and (c) mentioning Canada and Canadian subjects in feature presentations wherever possible. He presented a progress report for the first half of 1948, outlining the films on Canadian subjects or shot in Canada which had been completed, were in process and were planned. Since the project had already brought in hundreds of thousands of American dollars, and only a bare beginning had been made as most of the plans could not show tangible results for some months yet, it was felt to be an unqualified success from every point of view. In addition the Canadian Co-operation Project had assisted several Canadian companies in obtaining good contracts from the U.S. The C.C.P.'s success was partly because of the enthusiastic co-operation of the Motion Picture Association of America and Hollywood in general and partly because the subjects or stories chosen were all good from the Canadian as well as the movie picture industry's point of view.

<sup>74</sup> Office national du Film./National Film Board.

<sup>75</sup> Ancien directeur à l'Office national du Film, qui devint directeur aux Communications de masse à l'UNESCO et plus tard contrôleur du secteur des films des services d'information du Royaume-Uni. Former National Film Board director who became Director, Mass Communications, UNESCO and later Controller of Films, Central Office of Information of United Kingdom.

<sup>76</sup> Ministère du Commerce./Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Newman mentioned several particular angles which were being developed:

(1) On the subject of publicity, the M.P.A.A. and the Canadian authorities agree that everything possible should be done to prevent publicity on the project as a project but to encourage publicity on the individual items. The policy of not publicizing the project is being followed because, if it is generally known that the scheme is backed by the Canadian Government, part of its value will be lost immediately. It is also feared that if other countries hear of the scheme, they may try to work out a similar arrangement.

The Committee urged that every care should be taken to see that publicity was handled carefully and suggested that all queries relating to the project be referred to Mr. Newman. Mr. [W.S.] Durdin<sup>77</sup> suggested that the Canadian Daily Newspapers Association be asked for cooperation in heading off publicity; individual publishers might issue directives to their staff to prevent stories from appearing through ignorance on the part of the writers or editors.

(2) Plans are underway for sending a series of 16 mm. Canadian films to the U.S. to be studied by representatives of 14 major women's organizations. Possibly 12 or 15 of the films will be sponsored by them. The films selected will be advertised in a special issue of the M.P.A.A. periodical which goes to some 20,000 women's organizations throughout the country. It was pointed out that as there would not be a sufficient number of prints available to satisfy the demand, more would have to be run off — all paid for in U.S. dollars.

(3) A Canadian night has been arranged in Hollywood by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences for September 12 and the head men of all studios — producers, directors and writers — are being urged to attend. Eric Johnston, head of the M.P.A.A., will speak on the C.C.P. and nine pictures will be shown. These include "Neighbor to the North", an especially fine film that is being distributed widely in the U.S., and other pictures designed to point up the possibilities of different parts of Canada for location use — e.g. British Columbia totem pole country, the Ukrainian settlement in Manitoba, Eskimo country, Quebec.

(4) A series of talks on various aspects of Canada have already been recorded by film stars for radio use. The scripts are all excellent and the talks are being used by 300 major stations throughout the U.S.

(5) In the newsreel field, already this year 61 Canadian items have been used, compared with 64 for the whole of last year. The M.P.A.A. is anxious to keep this up and even increase the use of Canadian material and is encouraging the newsreel companies to send their own photographers up to Canada.

Mr. Newman emphasized that this could only work out successfully if advance information on all possible stories of interest could be given him for passing on to the U.S. The Committee urged that the border crossing difficulties encountered by U.S. photographers bringing their equipment into Canada should be carefully considered and revised as part of the whole project. Mr. Durdin will arrange for Mr.

<sup>77</sup> Direction de l'information/Information Division.

Newman to discuss the problem with Mr. [D.R.] Menzies<sup>78</sup> of the Department of External Affairs.

(6) Hollywood has been given a complete list of all the producing facilities in Canada, a film catalogue showing the available Canadian film footage and a list of story suggestions prepared by William Arthur Deacon, President of the Canadian Authors' Association. A roster of Canadian acting talent is being prepared so that, wherever possible, Canadians will be used in film shot in Canada.

(7) An arrangement has been made to facilitate the submission of scripts by Canadian authors. Scripts are to be screened and vouched for in Canada by the Canadian Authors' Association and McLaren's Advertising Agency, then forwarded to the William Morris Agency in New York for possible placement in Hollywood. This arrangement is unique because ordinarily scripts submitted directly to Hollywood are returned unopened because of the danger and the difficulty of checking on plagiarism.

(8) Because of the success of the project so far the Bank of Canada is considering its extension to other publicity media and is starting to explore the magazine angle. An approach is being made to the American Publishers' Association.

Mr. Newman urged the Committee members to make suggestions on every possible aspect of the project and said he would be glad to receive ideas at any time.

1043.

DEA/8100-F-1-40

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion du Comité interministériel
sur l'information canadienne à l'étranger*

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Interdepartmental Committee on Canadian Information Abroad

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, November 10, 1948

. . .

CANADIAN CO-OPERATION PROJECT FOR AMERICAN PUBLISHERS

The Chairman read letters from the Canadian information offices in Washington† and New York† advising against the direct subsidizing of American writers so they might write on Canadian topics for American magazines.

The Chairman said that the Department of External Affairs was working on a programme to encourage writers to visit Canada to write on Canadian subjects. Consultations with the Canadian railways had established that free railway transportation is available to bona fide journalists from abroad who are employed full-time by large newspapers or news services. A despatch to the Canadian missions abroad was being prepared to outline the procedure for obtaining such free transportation.

Provision for the entertainment of such journalists locally was a matter which would have to be studied. Mr. Richardson said that the Bank of Canada had funds for such a purpose. Mr. [G.] Bannerman<sup>79</sup> said that the Canadian Government Exhibition Commission had no such funds.

<sup>78</sup> Direction de l'information./Information Division.

The Chairman thought that the Department of External Affairs might act as a coordinator for such visits of foreign journalists, so that they might get in touch with other Government Departments. All encouragement and assistance possible should be offered to them.

Mr. Field believed that unless there was a definite programme of encouragement under way no specific results would be obtained. He recalled that the Wartime Information Board's programme had been responsible for the publication of dozens of articles by American writers in American magazines.

Mr. Richardson suggested that a list of the names of prominent American writers be prepared with their particular interests. He thought that the very names of such writers would suggest to information officers possible articles they might write and which might be suggested to them.

Mr. Field pointed out that many American magazines are not located in New York and the contacting of these particular magazines would have to be done by mail.

The Chairman said that a list of prominent Canadian writers and speakers was being prepared in the Department of External Affairs and now numbered about 500. He thought it would be a useful directory for the missions, because requests for names of such writers and speakers were often received. The names were being obtained from Canadian magazines, the Press Gallery, speaking clubs, book publishers, the Canadian Authors Association, writers' clubs, other Government Departments, and other sources.

Mr. [J.F.] Grant<sup>80</sup> suggested that possibly the Canadian Authors Association would sponsor such a list. The Chairman also suggested the Canada Foundation.

Mr. Durdin said that editors and publishers should be encouraged to visit Canada. They might then be interested in story ideas and they would assign their own staff men or make use of the writers suggested by the Department of External Affairs to carry out these ideas.

The Chairman said that the Department of External Affairs was obtained a list of conventions at which American editors and publishers might be present. However, no funds are available to bring such editors and publishers to Canada.

The Chairman said that many clippings had been received as a result of the recent visit of Arnold Vas Dias, of the Nieuwe Rotterdamse Courant, to Canada. He thought that such visits were very profitable from the information point of view.

It was hoped that Canadian consular officials in the United States would have a meeting in the New Year, the Chairman said. Information work was one of the principal subjects to be discussed.

...

---

<sup>79</sup> Commission des expositions du gouvernement canadien.
Canadian Government Exhibition Commission.

<sup>80</sup> Ministère du Commerce./Department of Trade and Commerce.

1044.

DEA/10423-A-40

*Le chef de la Direction de l'information au directeur général de la programmation
de la Société Radio-Canada*

*Head, Information Division, to Director General of Programs,
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation*

Ottawa, November 18, 1948

Dear Mr. Bushnell,

We have been considering possible ways in which the principle of the Canadian co-operation project with the motion picture association could be adapted to other fields. It has been suggested that a similar project might be worked out with the major radio networks in the United States.

It seems to me that in so far as programmes are concerned there is great scope for a Canadian co-operation project in the field of radio. Such a programme might have for its objectives a marked increase in "mentions" of Canada in general programmes of all kinds; special programmes on topics like Canadian vacationing; talks by Canadians; Canadian news on American newscasts; commentaries from Ottawa or other Canadian points on round-the-world pickups; origination in Canadian cities of U.S. network shows (e.g. Town Hall of the Air, Information Please, etc.); purchase of scripts by Canadian writers, and the relaying of Canadian network programmes in the United States.

It has been suggested that before a Canadian co-operation project could be contemplated in the radio field, two basic questions would have to be answered:

(1) Does the same incentive for co-operation exist in the United States' radio industry as regards the balance of international payments as exists in the film industry?

(2) Does the organization of the U.S. radio industry permit the implementation of such a programme?

The following are some of the factors which appear to affect the balance of international payments:

(1) Payments to Canadian stations by American advertisers for station time for sponsored broadcasts

(2) Payment by Canadian stations for their pro-rata share of the cost of production of programmes

(3) Payment by Canadian stations for use of American sustaining programmes

(4) Payments by Canadian stations for use of American transcriptions

It has been suggested that items 2, 3 and 4 all result in an outflow of Canadian funds to the United States. I understand that as far as item 1 is concerned, there is in fact no transfer of funds from the United States to Canada by American advertisers to pay for station time for their sponsored broadcasts because they all have Canadian affiliates or subsidiaries through which station time is purchased, and no exchange of funds actually takes place. This means that there is a net outflow of funds from Canada to the United States, paralleling payments to the U.S. film industry. While I have no idea of the absolute amounts involved, they might be of sufficient magnitude to cause the American radio industry some concern regarding the retention of its Canadian market.

It has been suggested that the organization of the radio industry in the United States would lend itself to a project of this kind. Most of the radio audiences in the United States could be reached through the four major networks and through the National Association of Broadcasters. While the networks exercise control over their own sustaining programmes it is true, I suppose, that they have little to say about the programme content of most sponsored broadcasts. However, if a project were initiated with the networks themselves it would be possible to further our aims through the radio departments of the major advertising agencies and the larger firms concerned with the distribution of packaged transcriptions.

I have outlined at some length the factors which appear to us to be involved in this suggestion. There are undoubtedly many aspects of the question which have been overlooked and I feel that it would be most useful at this stage to have your comments on the feasibility of a Canadian co-operation project for radio.

Yours sincerely,
S.F. RAE

1045.

DEA/10423-A-40

*Le directeur général de la programmation
de la Société Radio-Canada
au chef de la Direction de l'information*
*Director General of Programs,
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation,
to Head, Information Division*

Toronto, December 6, 1948

Dear Mr. Rae,

I am now in a position to answer more fully your letter of November 18th re the costs involved in the importation of American programmes and transcriptions.

First let me say I doubt very much that the same incentive for cooperation exists in the U.S. radio industry with regard to the balance of international payments as exists in the film industry.

The following is the situation with regard to the points outlined in the second page of your letter:

(1) There is no actual transfer of American funds from the United States to Canada by American advertisers to pay for station time. In the case of network programmes, American networks are billed by the CBC and remittances are made through the Canadian Resident account. In other words, we are actually paid in Canadian dollars for the use of Canadian stations. The Canadian subsidiary does not pay the CBC direct but as I have indicated the parent company pays the American network which in turn reimburses us.

(2) Canadian stations or sponsors, so far as we are able to determine, do not pay a pro rata share of the cost of production of programmes. Therefore, the only cost involved so far as the Canadian end of the network is concerned is payment for the network facilities.

(3) Canadian stations make no direct payments for the use of American sustaining programmes.

(4) Canadian stations importing American transcriptions make payments but in exactly what manner I cannot say. This information with some facts regarding the volume could probably be obtained from All-Canada Radio Facilities, Victory Building, Toronto. This concern and a few others do import transcriptions from the United States but I do not think that the total amount of money involved in this operation is very large. The CBC has contracted for four transcription or library services, one of which only is payable in U.S. Funds to the amount of $126.00 a month. The other three are paid for in Canadian currency and I would imagine that most privately owned stations have made pretty much the same arrangement.

The situation with respect to the major American networks is that their saleable time, if not entirely filled up, is constantly subject to sale and fluctuations in availabilities. It is my opinion that no great success could be met with on a gratis basis with them, generous and all as they are in this respect. Some of the American networks, and more especially Mutual, in years past have carried some programmes ex CBC, but this has been quite limited in extent. Similarly, Town Hall of the Air and other American programmes occasionally originated at Canadian points. Scripts by Canadian writers also are purchased from time to time, but when such writers are found it often happens that they are transferred bodily to New York or Hollywood.

I do not suppose it fits in with the plan of conserving Canadian funds at the moment, but my impression over a good many years and from close contact with American broadcasters is that Canada has been missing a good bit by not carrying on behalf of its tourist or similar activities some sponsored campaigns in the United States over one of the big networks. We have depended too much, I think, on free publicity and might get a substantially larger degree of cooperation if we gave evidence of our readiness to do a little spending that way, not expecting too much for nothing.

For the reasons I have outlined above I do not think we could hope to organize the radio industry in the United States on anything like the same basis that has been done in the motion picture field. Indeed considerable harm could be done by stirring up a situation that has been riding along on a mutually satisfactory basis for a number of years. The net result might be that instead of receiving sustaining programmes free of charge from all four American networks the CBC and Canadian sponsors might be obliged to pay a pro rata share of production costs which might increase rather than decrease the flow of dollars across the border.

I hope this information is helpful and if I can add anything further please do not hesitate to ask.

Yours sincerely,

E.L. BUSHNELL

1046.

DEA/10423-40

Note

Memorandum

[Ottawa], December 15, 1948

MEETING OF SHORT SUBJECT AND NEWSREEL HEADS TO DISCUSS THE CANADIAN COOPERATION PROJECT FOR THE YEAR 1949

Present at the meeting were: company executives, Robert Mochrie, Chairman of the Distributors Committee; John O'Connor, Universal; Russell Holman, Paramount. For short subjects, J. Bonafield, Fox; Max Weinberg, Loew's; Maurice Grad, Columbia; Tom Mead, Universal; Oscar Morgan, Paramount; Allen Dibble, March of Time. For newsreels, A.J. Richard, Paramount; Tom Mead, Universal; Walton Ament, Warner-Pathé. For the Association, Francis S. Harmon; and Taylor Mills.

The purpose of the meeting was to present the report of the accomplishments of the Canadian Cooperation Project in 1948 and to discuss the program for 1949. Mr. Harmon opened the meeting with a short discussion of what the Canadian Cooperation Project had meant to the industry during the past year and how, in the words of Right Hon. C.D. Howe, a problem between a government and an industry had been "treated with more imagination and ingenuity than had been done by some of our overseas friends."

It was pointed out that to date the program had been a notable success with the delivering of 105 newsreel clips about Canada up to December 15, 1948, as compared to 61 clips in the entire year of 1947. Ten different short subjects featuring Canada have been released since the inception of the project. The efforts of Colonel Owensmith on the coast to feed story material and to encourage the inclusion of Canadian sequences in feature pictures were also described at the meeting. Mr. Harmon mentioned that this portion of the program in Hollywood is moving along and because of the time required in the production of feature pictures the actual "pay-off" on 1948 efforts on the coast will not be observed on the screen until 1949.

Newsreels

After Mr. Harmon's opening comments a discussion of what could be done with newsreels for next year was entered into. The newsreel men in the meeting pointed out that their efforts are definitely limited at the present time because, for the most part, they are entirely dependent upon the coverage that Associated Screen News can give them. They indicated that this was not entirely satisfactory and that if American newsreel men were free to move back and forth from the U.S. to Canada to cover important news events in Canada they felt that they would be able to present better quality newsreel coverage of such events.

Mr. Harmon requested that Mr. Mills discuss this problem with Mr. Henshaw and Mr. Fitzgibbons to see what could be done in 1949 to implement the wishes of the newsreel companies.

Mr. Harmon suggested the idea of a Canadian newsreel round-up of four or five hundred feet which might be prepared and released at the time of the opening of the Canadian Parliament. This important newsreel, he stated, could be built up with reference to some of the political and economic highlights of 1948, such as Mackenzie King's retirement and St. Laurent becoming Prime Minister; the signing of the Newfoundland pact wherein Newfoundland will become the tenth Canadian Province; the successful operation of the Canadian austerity program under the leadership of Mr. Abbott, and other events that we might be able to include in such a newsreel summary. The newsreel heads present indicated that they would look into this request and determine what could be worked out both for Canadian release and U.S. release.

The newsreel men indicated further that they felt that the Association was giving them enough newsreel material about Canada and rather than quantity they were more interested in better quality coverage.

Short Subjects

Mr. Harmon read a report on the number of short subjects which have been prepared and released by the member companies during the past year. He then mentioned eight subjects which are now completed and will be released in the next few months prior to the opening of the all-important tourist season. These subjects include:

Beauty and the Blade	Fox
Stuff for Stuff	MGM
Summertime in Quebec	MGM
Ontario Land of Lakes	MGM
Sitzmark the Spot	War.
Spring Comes to Niagara	War.
Rhapsody on Ice (Barbara Ann Scott)	Col.
A Little Bit North	Univ.

Discussion was then held on the two key short subjects which would carry Canada's important economic message to the American public which it was hoped would be as successful as Paramount's Neighbor to the North, released in 1948, and which will continue to play through 1949.

Subject #1 is being discussed now by RKO under the tentative title The New Canada. It is hoped that Mr. Bonafield and his writer will go to Canada early in 1949 to complete this important script and make arrangements for shooting early next spring.

As a second subject Mr. Harmon mentioned the title Things are Better in Canada which was suggested by Mr. Fitzgibbons. It is possible that The March of Time would make this subject provided sufficient photographic material and subject matter could be collated to make an outstanding two-reel motion picture. This subject would take a considerable amount of preliminary work on the part of all of us interested in the Canadian Cooperation Project.

Another subject which was suggested as a possible short was a film on the Canadian National Parks. A memorandum submitted by Mr. Scythes of the National Film Board of Canada was read, outlining a number of subjects which have been made in the past on individual parks. Footage from these subjects might be judiciously cut to make a compilation reel that would be most useful to the 1949 tourist program.

The possibility of a short subject on Newfoundland was presented to the group and interest was shown by both Columbia and Paramount. Mr. Holman suggested that the story of Gander and Newfoundland as an air base might make a subject for their Pacemaker Series. Mr. Holman also affirmed that Jerry Fairbanks was arranging to send a man to Canada in 1949 to obtain suitable material for his two series, Popular Science and Unusual Occupations.

Mr. Bonafield said that they were making a picture on U.S. National Defense and would like to include suitable footage that would indicate that Canada and the U.S. were working on joint operations for the defense of the northern areas of the continent. (A telephone call to Canada was put in immediately following the meeting and the footage is supposed to be on the way by diplomatic pouch today.)

It is hoped that a short subject may be made available this spring dealing with the Canadian International Trade Fair in Toronto. It is felt that such a subject should be released prior to the opening of the 1949 Fair. It may be that the Film Board or Associated Screen have sufficient footage on the 1948 Fair to make such a subject.

One of the interesting developments of this meeting was the suggestion by Mr. Weinberg, Mr. Holman and Mr. Mead that Canadian backgrounds and locations might be worked into cartoon subjects and singing shorts. Any suggestions on this theme which Mr. Henshaw or Mr. Newman might offer would be appreciated.

The overall feeling of all present was that each company representative wanted to do everything he possibly could to implement the Canadian Cooperation Project. The representatives were pleased with the fact that their efforts in 1948 had been successful and were appreciated by our friends in Canada. They hoped to make the 1949 program everything that Mr. Howe hopes it will be. As reported by Mr. Harmon his comments on the project were read to the assembled group at the opening of the meeting. Through Mr. Newman he expressed his pleasure with the success of the project and expressed the hope that it will be even more successful in the coming year.

CHAPITRE XII/CHAPTER XII
EUROPE, L'UNION SOVIÉTIQUE ET LE MOYEN-ORIENT EUROPE, THE SOVIET UNION AND THE MIDDLE EAST

PREMIÈRE PARTIE/PART I
TCHÉCOSLOVAQUIE<sup>1</sup>
CZECHOSLOVAKIA<sup>1</sup>

1047.

DEA/7121-40

*Le chargé d'affaires en Tchécoslovaquie
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chargé d'affaires in Czechoslovakia
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

DESPATCH 37

Prague, February 23, 1948

Sir:

Czechoslovakia is undergoing a political crisis in the form of a trial of strength between Communists and non-Communists, which, as this despatch is written, may be solved by a typical Czech compromise or by a Communist resort to direct action. There are many alarming rumours flying about Prague to the effect that the Communists are ready for a coup. On the other hand, the Communists, judged at least by the standards which their party has followed in other Eastern European countries, have been rather restrained or at any rate have not been as violent in their language as they could have been. They have not crawled too far out on a limb to be unable to return some distance in the direction of a constitutional settlement, and I am moderately optimistic of a compromise solution being reached, although prophecy is admittedly a risky business at this time and place. Presumably a good deal depends on the advice given by Moscow, perhaps through the Cominform in Belgrade. The more nervous see an ominous sign in the presence here of M. Zorin, former Soviet Ambassador to Czechoslovakia and now a Vice Minister of Foreign Affairs. He came here ostensibly for the celebrations of the Thirtieth Anniversary of the Founding of the Red Army, which included the welding into one large organization of various societies for friendship with Russia. Those who take the darkest view of the political situation claim that M. Zorin was sent here to "take over".

2. Pre-election fevers began to rise noticeably some two or three weeks ago and the word "nervousness" appeared in more and more political speeches and articles. A reading of the charges and counter-charges hurled at each other by the Communists and their opponents suggests that the worst case of nerves was suffered by the Communists who were alarmed at the vigour shown by the other parties and despondent of their chances of achieving their boast of 51% at the coming elections.

---

<sup>1</sup> Voir aussi les documents 227-229.
See also Documents 227-9.

3. The particular issues at stake in recent controversies, such as the size of a bonus for civil servants or details of land reform, are symptoms rather than causes of the present tension. The fundamental fact is that the non-Communists have been displaying altogether too much energy to suit the Communists, and the latter have therefore seized upon whatever convenient arguments lay ready to hand or could be manufactured. They accused the non-Communist parties of entering into secret agreements to form an anti-Communist bloc; they talked of a supposed non-Communist plan to form a government of officials which would hold "undemocratic" elections; they claimed that the non-Communists were obstructing the completion of the Constitution and the passage of certain vital bills. To these and allied charges, the other parties replied with reasonably well-argued rebuttals, and the Communists took matters a step further by talking darkly of finding ways of enforcing the will of the people.

4. The Trades Union Council, a strongly Communist organization, has taken a leading part in these activities. One of their leading officials told a meeting that there were two roads to socialism, the slow way of development or the quick way of revolution; if some people did not like the slow way, the quick way would be resorted to. Another said that it depended upon whether the Trades Union Council's demands (for a civil service bonus, etc.) were acceptable or not whether future developments would be peaceable or otherwise. He promised a nation-wide protest strike and a stoppage of all transport for five minutes. If not even Parliament would accept the Trades Union Council's demands, there would have to be a new demand — "Away with Parliament".

5. Disputes naturally took place in the Government as well as in the press and at public meetings. A Cabinet decision directing the Communist Minister of the Interior to make certain changes in the police (he was told to reverse himself on some particularly flagrant cases of firing non-Communists and replacing them with Communists) was not complied with. When non-Communist Ministers insisted on discussing this failure to carry out a Government decision, the Communist Prime Minister, M. Gottwald, found an excuse for breaking up the Cabinet meeting. The question was carried over to a meeting of the Council of the National Front, where a similar deadlock was reached after the non-Communists had vigorously accused the Communists of trying to divert attention from their efforts to gain complete control of the security machinery of the state. Communist control of the police, which has been actively debated for some time, became a critical issue and one on which eventually the Ministers from three parties submitted their resignations.

6. In the meantime, one of the more interesting items of news turned up by the non-Communist press was a report of a confidential meeting of Communist party leaders on February 8th which charted the following programme:

(1) The Chairman of the Trades Union Council would summon a conference of works councils;

(2) Rudé Pravo, the Communist daily, would start a campaign against private enterprise;

(3) The National Socialists and Social Democrats would be accused of making a secret anti-Communist pact;

(4) After suitable preparation in the press and on the radio, the Trades Union Council would demand that all industrial concerns with more than fifty employees should be nationalized.

One by one these steps, or something closely approximating them, were taken and Communist party officials throughout the country devoted themselves to violent agitation.

7. It was on February 20th that the Ministers from the National Socialist, People's and Slovak Democratic parties, twelve in all, submitted their resignations to the President as a protest against Communist intransigence — with particular regard to Communist control of the police — while the Social Democrats took a middle position by criticizing the actions of both sides and calling for compromise and continuation of the National Front Government. These resignations could hardly have been offered unless the dozen Ministers concerned were reasonably confident of being asked and being able to stay at their posts. To present the Communists with a chance to form a government, either with or without the Social Democrats, which would leave the three protesting parties powerless on the sidelines, does not make sense. The President refused to accept these resignations, and his point of view was undoubtedly ascertained quietly before they were submitted. Up to this point the non-Communists had forced the issue and put the Communists on the defensive. I think it fair to say that the Communists regained the offensive on the morning of February 21st by organizing a mass meeting in the city's largest open square, which was harangued by M. Gottwald and other party leaders. This was arranged at very short notice and was evidence of the discipline and capacity for organization that distinguishes the Communist party. The Prime Minister accused the resigning Ministers of representing domestic and foreign reaction (with much talk of spies and sabotage of the Slav alliances), and called for their replacement by people of good will from all political parties and national organizations. He concluded by calling for Action Committees of the National Front to be formed in every town and village by "democratic and progressive representatives of all parties and national organizations." As I said earlier, however, the speech could have been more inflammatory and could have demanded seizure of power by the Communists.

8. Following this mass meeting, which passed a pompous resolution of protest, a five-member deputation called on the President to demand the acceptance of the resignations of the twelve Ministers. Dr. Benes announced no decision on this question but pointed out that Czechoslovakia had a Parliamentary government and would continue to have one. He went on to say that the Communists, as the largest party, must participate in any government [that] was formed and that their leader, M. Gottwald, must be Prime Minister. Despite being pressed by the delegation for an immediate acceptance of the resignations, he said that he would have to discuss this with the Ministers in question and with the Prime Minister. "It is not for me to say that this or that person must or must not be in the government. There will be a Prime Minister and he will submit to me his proposals as to the members of the new government. I have always given serious consideration to the views of the Prime Minister. I repeat that I do not wish to weigh one intransigence against the other. I want only to tell you that we must tackle this problem objectively. It is my duty to persuade the parties to co-operate and not to set them against one another." A member of the delegation observed that the difficulties would spread from Prague to the provinces and that the working people did not think that the Ministers who had resigned could do successful work in the future. To this the President replied, "I understand your position, but you must also understand my own difficult situation. You may rely upon it that neither now nor in the future, in any circumstances whatever, will I accept anything that might mean the exclusion of this or that group from the government. I have already said that no one must think of the Communists being excluded from the government. That is something which I could never sign. I ask you to count on this fact, both now and in the future. I insist on this, but at the same time I ask everyone to bear in mind the difficulties that confront us and to help me in my work." Later in the day — it was a Saturday afternoon — the President left for his country seat to consider the critical issues at stake.

9. Thus ended a week of tense activity with nothing settled.

I have etc.

R.M. MACDONNELL

1048.

DEA/7121-40

*Le chargé d'affaires en Tchécoslovaquie
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chargé d'Affaires in Czechoslovakia
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

DESPATCH 41

Prague, February 26, 1948

Sir:

This despatch continues the account of the Czechoslovak political crisis begun in my Despatch No. 37 of February 24th [sic]. On Sunday, February 22nd, the tension was maintained by a congress of works councils in Prague. These groups, hand-picked by the Communists in such a way as to eliminate non-Communist representatives, had been slated for some time to come to Prague from all over the country in order to protest the refusal of the Government to accept Communist proposals on a number of subjects, such as the bonus for civil servants and a national insurance scheme. This plan to overawe non-Communist Ministers by a demonstration of working-class unity was pre-crisis in origin, and the resolution passed by the meeting was in general terms rather than directed towards the resignation of Ministers. As a compendium, however, of current Communist demands, the resolution passed by 7904 votes to 10 is worth summarizing:

(a) A national insurance scheme and various pension systems;

(b) Enactment of the Constitution including constitutional guarantees of all civil rights, together with the abolition of capitalist exploitation and continuation of nationalization;

(c) Nationalization of all internal wholesale trade, wholesale export and import firms, department stores, manufacture of spirits, production of pharmaceuticals and all private firms with more than 50 employees;

(d) Land reform and tax relief for farmers.

To lend weight to their demands the meeting decided to call a nation-wide one-hour token strike.

2. While the works councils were fulminating in one place, [Premier Klement] Gottwald was keeping himself in the limelight in another. A congress of Czechoslovak friendship societies was celebrating the Thirtieth Anniversary of the Founding of the Red Army with the assistance of M. Zorin, former Soviet Ambassador in Prague and now Vice-Minister for Foreign Affairs. Although M. Gottwald said nothing at this meeting except stock platitudes about Slav alliances and links between domestic reaction and anti-Soviet activity abroad, his presence on the same platform with M. Zorin at a time of crisis was noted uneasily by many as an inauspicious omen. As the day went on the Communists tightened up on their control of information. Communist "commissars" were added to the staff of the Slovak news agency and Slovak radio (both non-Communist) by M. Kopecky, the Communist Minister of Information, and he expressly denied permission for a broadcast by the Social Democrat Minister of Food, M. Majer. Permission to broadcast was similarly denied to the Slovak Commissioner of Information, a non-Communist. A number of non-Communist employees of the Prague radio were told not to report for work until further notice.

3. February 23rd brought a series of developments that showed the Communists less amenable to compromise than they had been the previous week. To begin with the police were ostentatiously armed with rifles and bayonets which had some effect in convincing the public that the Communists meant business. The secretariats of the National Socialists and People's Parties, both in Prague and in other towns, were searched by the police and relieved of a number of documents. An announcement was made by the Minister of the Interior that documents had been discovered showing that the National Socialists were plotting to seize control of the army, the police and the radio. On the strength of this, two army officers and a number of civilians were arrested. Other arrests were made of officials of the National Socialist and People's Parties. Revolutionary "action committees" were set up all over the country, including one in the Ministry of Foreign Trade. Exit from the country was prohibited except by special permission of the Ministry of the Interior, and then only in urgent cases of national interest. Parliament was suspended indefinitely. In Slovakia, the Communists caused all departments occupied by Commissioners from the Democratic Party to be occupied by police, and the resistance which was offered in some cases was overcome. Communist Commissioners took over the functions of the ejected Democratic Commissioners.

4. Uneasiness and dejection continued to increase on February 24th. At noon a one-hour token general strike was called by the Communists who claimed that 2½ million people went out. Further arrests were made and "spontaneous popular actions" forced some of the resigning Ministers to leave their offices where they had remained pending the President's decision to accept or refuse their resignations. A revealing and probably accurate statement was made by the Communist side that "we are much too strong to have to resort to brute force." As I said in my Telegram No. 22 of February 24th,† the Communists had shown that they were prepared to be tough and that their toughness could not be matched by anyone else. They could, therefore, pretty well write their own ticket. The National Socialist and People's Parties were badly depressed, while the Social Democrats showed signs of splitting with the Left Wing prepared to come to terms with the Communists. Everyone awaited the President's broadcast to the nation which was promised from day to day. His prestige and popularity, even among some members of the Communist party, are very considerable, but only congenital optimists expected that he could make the Communists accept the continuation in office of the National Socialist, People's Party and Slovak Democrat Ministers. The Communists had gone too far out on a limb for that.

5. In the end the President did not broadcast at all, but announced on February 25th that he had accepted the Ministers' resignations and approved a new Cabinet slate brought to him by M. Gottwald. Before today's bag leaves I can do no more than summarize the highlights of the depressing news. (Being single-handed, I have to try to combine political reporting with consular business, commercial reporting lectures to adult education institutes, speeches in connection with the Canadian Olympic hockey team and odd chores for the C.B.C. International Service.) The Communists have made a clean sweep and now control every Ministry of importance, except Foreign Affairs (Masaryk remains) and there they have the redoubtable Dr. Clementis as Under-Secretary and watch-dog. In addition to Interior, Information, Finance, Agriculture and Internal Trade, which they formerly held, the Communists now have Justice, Foreign Trade and Education. The non-Communist element in the Cabinet has been fatally weakened. In the first place none of the former Ministers from the National Socialist, People's or Slovak Democratic Parties have been allowed to return; with all charity, it can be said that they were not outstanding leaders and their replacements from those parties seem to be nonentities. In the second place two Right Wing Social Democrats have resigned rather than go along with this travesty of a coalition Cabinet, M. Majer, former Minister of Food, and M. Tymes, former Deputy Prime Minister.

6. The Cabinet is now made up as follows: Communists, 11 — Prime Minister, Deputy Prime Minister (Slovak), Interior, Information, Justice, Foreign Trade, Internal Trade, Finance, Agriculture, Education and Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs; Trade Unions, 2 (represented in the Cabinet for the first time, and indistinguishable from Communists) — Deputy Prime Minister and Social Welfare; Social Democrats, 3 — Deputy Prime Minister, Industry, Food; National Socialists, 2 — Public Works, Posts; People's Party, 2 — Transport, Health; Slovak Democrat, 1 — Under-Secretary of National Defence; Slovak Freedom Party, 1 — Unification; Non-Party, 2 — Masaryk at Foreign Affairs (a non-Communist) and Svoboda at National Defence, regarded as very friendly to the Communists. Thus, of a Cabinet of 24, the 13 Communist and Trade Union Members form a clear majority, Fierlinger and the Social Democrats who followed him can be expected to co-operate with the Communists, and the remainder are helpless. The iron curtain has begun to descend.

I have etc.

R.M. MACDONNELL

1049.

DEA/50165-40

*Le chargé d'affaires en Tchécoslovaquie
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chargé d'Affaires in Czechoslovakia
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 27

Prague, February 28, 1948

SECRET

Your telegram No. 32 of February 27th.†

Communists now firmly in power with control of all important Ministries. Only non-Communists in Cabinet of 24 are Masaryk, three Left Wing Social Democrats and six nonentities from other parties. Their influence will be negligible and they are merely unconvincing window dressing.

2. Technically, constitutional solution accepting former Ministers' resignation and approving Gottwald's new slate was forced on the President by the Communists demonstrated ability and willingness to use naked force. They made it plain that, if necessary, they would use their complete control of an armed police, which carried out daring arrests of opposition leaders, their stranglehold on trade unions and their possession of arms in "workers militias" to seize power. Decent democratic Czechs and Slovaks, who are in the majority but have no arms, were powerless. Once the Communists decided the moment was ripe for a coup the only choices were surrender or opposition which could not succeed.

3. All the grim mechanism of totalitarian State is being brought into play — arrests of political opponents, prostitution of justice, control of the press and intimidation of all non-Communists. Wholehearted purges of civil servants, editors, teachers, managers and all persons of influence or responsibility are carried out by "action committees" set up in every plant, office, Government department and other organizations. Minister of Education announces proudly that picture of Stalin will hang in every schoolroom.

4. What should be our attitude? I feel we should not hide detestation of this Moscow-directed overwhelming of a free and democratic people who loyally lived up to their obligations as an ally of the Soviet Union. They were threat to no one; they were steadily and sturdily rebuilding their economy on a basis of democratic socialism; yet their liberties have been ruthlessly wiped out to gratify Moscow's insatiable lust for power. I think we can express sympathy for those millions of Czechs and Slovaks whose ideals are akin to ours and who are now voiceless. As to future relations, these will resemble those with the Soviet Union, Poland and Yugoslavia.

I believe it is in the Canadian interest to maintain contact, transact intergovernment business, protect Canadian interests where possible and keep informed. Any cordiality with the regime is out of the question and this Legation will have to operate under iron curtain conditions. One thing western democracies can do is to supply our friends here with information and I urge news and political information be given high priority on C.B.C. Czech programmes.

1050.

DEA/7121-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

[Ottawa], March 2, 1948

RECENT EVENTS IN CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Last Friday, February 27th, Mr. Graydon<sup>2</sup> asked a question about Czechoslovakia. He said, "Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, of which I have given notice to his parliamentary assistant, having been unable to reach the minister. The minister may want to defer an answer until later or make a statement now. Does the government endorse and approve the three-power statement issued yesterday by Great Britain, France and the United States respecting Czechoslovakia? What immediate effects, if any, will the recent change in the Czechoslovakian government have on our relations with that power in the diplomatic, financial and trade fields?" To this you replied, "To the first question all I can say is that the statement published in the newspapers has not been before the government for consideration. To the second question, the matter of our future relations financial and otherwise, with Czechoslovakia is now under consideration, and that consideration probably will not be completed until we get more accurate and fuller official information. When it is completed and a decision has been arrived at, it will be announced to the house."

2. In view of the public interest in Canada in what has happened in Czechoslovakia, it may be that you will wish to make a fairly full statement to the House. I have, therefore, had the attached notes prepared for your use.†

The notes are based in part on the telegram which we have recently received from Mr. Macdonnell.

The notes conclude with an endorsement by the Canadian Government of the three-power statement, issued on February 26th, by the Governments of the United States, France and the United Kingdom. This passage is followed by a statement that it is not the intention of the Canadian Government to sever diplomatic relations with Czechoslovakia and that the nature of our future commercial relations is under review. We are, as you know, making inquiries in London and Washington as to what changes, if any, the Governments of the United Kingdom and United States intend to make in their commercial relations with Czechoslovakia.

<sup>2</sup> Gordon Graydon, député Conservateur au Parlement (Peel, Ontario).

Gordon Graydon, Conservative Member of Parliament (Peel, Ontario).

I have suggested in the notes that you might wish, towards the end of the statement on Czechoslovakia, to refer to the Prime Minister's recent attack on communism and to develop somewhat his point that so long as communism remains a menace it is vital to maintain a preponderance of military strength on the side of freedom and to secure that degree of unity among the nations that will ensure that they cannot be defeated and destroyed one by one. From this you might go on to state that the communist seizure of power in Czechoslovakia may hasten the creation within the United Nations of an association of democratic and peace-loving states which are willing to accept more specific international obligations in return for greater national security.

I am attaching an extra copy of this note and of the enclosure in case you wish to pass them on to the Prime Minister.

L.B. P[EARSON]

1051.

DEA/7121-40

*Le chargé d'affaires en Tchécoslovaquie
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chargé d'Affaires in Czechoslovakia
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

DESPATCH 45

Prague, March 3, 1948

Sir:

In hurriedly finishing my Despatch No. 41 of February 26th on the political crisis, I did not have time to include an account of the pressure exerted by the Communists as events moved to their swift climax. The technique of setting up "action committees" in the best revolutionary tradition (certainly going back as far as the committees of public safety of the French Revolution) enabled them to oust all "unprogressive" individuals from key positions and take complete control of the country's political and economic life.

2. These action committees, composed of determined Communists with a few hangers-on from other parties, have made themselves responsible for the purging of Czechoslovakia's political, economic and intellectual life. The fundamental bases of Communist power have been the armed police, the trades unions and the armed "works militias". Their ability to take over the country was made crystal clear as the crisis developed and made resistance appear to non-Communists as a futile gesture. The country having thus been frightened into submission, the way was open for the action committees to do whatever they pleased. A few details of the way in which they have operated may be useful for the record.

3. The original initiative in setting up the committees was, of course, taken by the Communists and they were quickly given official blessing, even before the formation of the new government, by the Ministry of the Interior. It instructed all local authorities to co-operate with the action committees, facilitate their work, heed their wishes and "enable them to mobilize the people, to strengthen the people's democracy economically and politically." The Prague action committee, to give an example of early activity, undertook to prevent the dissemination of printed matter directed against Gottwald's government and the people. It also authorized the Lord Mayor to fire all public officials whose attitude towards the Government and the people's democracy was not favourable. Action committees in the various Ministries concerned forced the withdrawal from the premises of the Ministers who had resigned.

4. On February 25th, the day on which Gottwald's new slate of Ministers was accepted by the President, action committees were springing up all over the lot. The biggest and most imposing was the central action committee of the National Front, under the chairmanship of Vice-Premier Zapotocky, the Communist Chairman of the Trades Union Council and one of the strong men of the party. Probably one of the least significant was that formed in the Alcron Hotel which deposed the management and placed one of the room service waiters in charge. An action committee was set up in the Foreign Ministry to purge it of reactionary elements without delay. In the university, an action committee undertook a purge of professors and students, and demanded representation in the academic senates of the university. In the Czech journalists' union an action committee expelled most of the prominent non-Communist journalists and assured the Minister of Information that it would never allow him to be so attacked in the press as he had been up to the present. The Minister of the Interior issued an edict that any member of a national committee (i.e. a municipal or local authority) would be dismissed if this were recommended by an action committee. In the judicial field an action committee formed by employees of the Supreme Court of Administration took steps to ensure that the Court would pronounce no more verdicts in nationalization cases until the situation had been further considered. The two leading football associations formed an action committee to purge Czechoslovak football of all elements incompatible with the new people's democratic regime.

5. Action committees, in short, are functioning in every branch of life. The list could be extended almost indefinitely, from the President's chancellery to the film world. The first step in most cases was to get rid of undesirable individuals, while in journalism the action committees appointed new editors, laid down editorial policy and in quite a number of cases discontinued publication. The first announcement by the action committee in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs gave a good example of the way in which the public service is being combed. Thirty-six officials were given compulsory leave of absence, nineteen were pensioned off and eight were transferred to less responsible positions. It is stated that the next step is to be changes in the staffs of Czechoslovak Missions abroad. Our information is that there are at least two more lists of officials in the Ministry who are to be purged and that there is to be a pause between each two purges.

6. A more far-reaching step has been taken by the central action committee of the National Front. It has decided that all political parties must be thoroughly purged and therefore reserves the right to pass upon the appointment of all officials and organs of all parties. Only those party functionaries who have been approved by the central action committee will be able to hold office. In parliament an action committee will ask Deputies to state in writing that they agree with the renascent National Front and the demands made by the Congress of Works Councils on February 22nd, which included nationalization of all concerns with more than fifty employees.

7. The efficiency of this system cannot be questioned. Since it is known to everyone that the Communists have abundant power to enforce the decisions of the action committees, no one dares to resist them. The committees are a convenient method of translating Communist policy into action at every level of Czechoslovak life, from the Parliament and the Supreme Administrative Court down to the football associations. The speed with which they were set up and the way in which they promptly set about purging long lists of people show that they have been organized well in advance and knew exactly what they were to do as soon as the signal was given. As I have said in other reports, the Communists would have manufactured a crisis if they had not been presented with one, and the machinery for seizing power was in a state of well-oiled readiness.

I have etc.

R.M. MACDONNELL

1052.

DEA/7121-40

*Le chargé d'affaires en Tchécoslovaquie
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chargé d'Affaires in Czechoslovakia
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

DESPATCH 46

Prague, March 4, 1948

SECRET

Sir:

It is now a week since the new Gottwald government was announced to a stunned and unhappy people. There is little new information that I can report, but one or two comments may help to put the facts in perspective.

2. The most remarkable feature of the coup was its speed. On February 20th when the twelve Ministers resigned there was nervousness and speculation about what the Communists might do, but most discussion was in terms of party manoeuvring and Parliamentary tactics under democratic rules. On February 25th the Communists, after demonstrating their ability and willingness to use force, were firmly in the saddle with the acquiescence of the President. It is therefore frequently asked whether the resigning Ministers were not criminally unwise in offering the Communists an excuse to demand that they be replaced by more co-operative politicians. Gottwald himself is said to be grateful to these Ministers for having made his task easy. I think the result would have been much the same whatever happened.

We now know that the Communists were ready to manufacture a crisis and planned to use the meeting of works councils on February 22nd as a first step to presenting revolutionary demands. Had the Ministers not resigned but merely protested against Communist activities, they would have been targets for exactly the same kind of pressure as was in the event applied, and would have been forced out in exactly the same way. What no one realized in advance was how far and how fast the Communists were prepared to go.

3. This is illustrated by the fact that President Benes, consulted privately in advance by the Ministers, advised them to resign and promised not to accept their resignations. I have had this direct from Czech sources whose accuracy cannot be questioned. This can only mean that the President and the Ministers were unprepared for a resort to violence and still believed that the issue would be decided by democratic methods; if the President and the Ministers stood firm they would be supported by a majority in Parliament and in the country, and the Communists would have to back down. Five days later the President accepted the fact that democratic processes had ceased to count, and by breaking his promise to refuse the resignations and by approving Gottwald's new cabinet, showed the country and the world that he saw no alternative to complete capitulation.

4. This has left many Czechs with a feeling of bitter bewilderment at having been let down by their one trusted leader and statesman. Benes made a promise and broke it; there is now no one whom the Czechs can trust who might be a rallying point for resistance. So runs the argument, and I find it hard to see what good Benes can accomplish by remaining President. He will have no influence on government policy and will be so closely watched by the Communists that he will be unable to speak frankly to the country or give advice and leadership to democrats. Although there are rumours that he will resign, or that he has resigned and the Government is keeping it secret, the best information appears to be that he is still undecided. He is a very sick man and the events of the crisis have nearly overwhelmed him. Moreover, he has been receiving conflicting advice from democratic leaders. But if blame for the President's passive acceptance of the situation be tempered with sympathy for the predicament of a sick and elderly man confronted with momentous decisions, no such consideration has applied in the case of Masaryk. He has accepted office in a gang of thugs whom he cannot possibly influence in any way, and is a helpless prisoner. He can justify his doing so on grounds that it may protect his liberty until he is able to escape. He cannot expect anyone to take seriously the argument which he has been putting to some diplomats that he will be a moderating influence. He was one in the previous government where he had support from other Ministers, but Foreign Affairs will now be handled entirely according to Communist doctrine.

5. The subject of Masaryk's liberty brings up the question of the trial and punishment of democratic political leaders. There are few here who doubt that the Communists will follow their policy in other Eastern European countries of making examples of those who have dared to oppose them. The most likely candidate for the role of Petkov is Dr. Petr Zenkl, head of the National Socialist party. He has been the most forceful and outspoken of the rather uninspiring opposition, and the Communists hate him. Dr. Ripka (National Socialist), former Minister of Foreign Trade, Dr. Lettrich (Slovak Democrat) former head of the Slovak National Council, and M. Majer (Social Democrat), former Minister of Food, are others who may find themselves in trouble, and indeed anyone may be arrested. But the Communist animus against Zenkl is so great that he is likely to be dealt with first. It is perfectly possible that after being tried as an enemy of the people's democracy and an agent of foreign reaction, he will be hanged. Information about the status of political leaders is hard to come by, but so far few seem to have been imprisoned though many are being constantly watched by the police and are pretty well confined to their homes. As of last night, I know that both Zenkl and Ripka were safe at home. Arrests have been confined to small fry who are usually released after three or four days questioning. The most tragic feature of this and every other aspect of the situation is that there appears to be nothing to prevent the Communists from going ahead as fast as they like. There is no force in Czechoslovakia capable of opposing them; no interference will come from outside, and the Communists are evidently no longer restrained by any regard for public opinion in the Western democracies. Repression can go ahead as fast as the Communists can organize it and there will have to be more of it than in Hungary or Roumania because of the much firmer roots which democracy has put down in Czechoslovakia.

6. A pattern familiar in other countries has been repeated, according to which the opposition parties have been willing to put hostages in a theoretically coalition Cabinet. These men are either nonentities or worse; the word "quisling" is being used by some Czechs. The first to be eliminated will be the National Socialist and People's Party Ministers. Then the attack will fall on Fierlinger and his Social Democrats, who will stay in office only so long as it suits the Communists. This is almost the only consolation left to the opposition; they regard Fierlinger as the arch-traitor to democracy and will enjoy seeing him purged. Ultimately it would not be surprising if there were changes in the Communist leadership itself. Gottwald is regarded as too mild by the fanatics in the party and might be displaced together with others. The really tough Communists like Slansky, Secretary-General of the party, Zapotocky, head of the trade unions, and Cepicka, Minister of Justice, may conduct the final purge in the Communist party itself.

7. Copies of this despatch have been sent to London and Moscow.

I have etc.

R.M. MACDONNELL

1053.

DEA/50165-40

*Le chargé d'affaires en Tchécoslovaquie
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chargé d'Affaires in Czechoslovakia
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

DESPATCH 55

Prague, March 11, 1948

SECRET

Sir:

There has been little change in the political situation since my Despatch No. 46 of March 4th was written. The tragic suicide of Jan Masaryk, the Foreign Minister, is a dramatic and shocking event, but I do not think it can be regarded as altering the balance of political forces appreciably. He was powerless in the new Cabinet, and even if he had been able to escape it is questionable how much his membership in any sort of émigré group would have affected events in Czechoslovakia. Émigré leaders are no doubt of some value to a resistance movement, but more important are organization and weapons which the Czechs do not possess. I should judge that the main effect of Masaryk's death has been to bring home the seriousness of the situation to people who were inclined to think that after a few purges things would go on much as before.

2. Adversity may break down some of the aloofness between the democratic parties, but I am struck by the lack of contact which seems to exist at present. The former leaders of the People's Party, the National Socialists, the Slovak Democrats and the dissident elements of the Social Democrats are naturally anxious about their own liberty and safety, and their followers are trying to plan their escape or disappearance, but each party appears to be working on its own. For example, if you ask a National Socialist whether Mr. X. of the People's Party has been arrested or has succeeded in escaping, he will probably know very little about it. One trustworthy individual who told me quite a lot about the movements of his own political friends was vague and even unconcerned about the fate of leaders of other parties. It is natural, of course, to look after your own friends first, but there is nothing to be gained for the future by maintaining this party particularism; the remark about hanging together to avoid hanging separately has grim relevance.

3. Purges by the action committees continue in every branch of life, although in reduced volume because of the ground already covered in the first two weeks of their existence. Some, at least, of the action committees will remain as a permanent part of the machinery of government according to Slansky, Secretary General of the Communist party, who publicly rebuked Fierlinger, leader of the pro-Communist Social Democrats, for saying the opposite. The Czechoslovak press has been reduced to pumping out news and comment of a nauseating obsequiousness and uniformity. Various foreign publications have been banned, either completely or for particular issues, but it is still possible to buy others and copies are quickly snapped up at the news-stands. Our copies of the London Times and the Paris edition of the New York Herald Tribune continue, as a rule, to be delivered by a local news agency, though we cannot count on this indefinitely.

4. Through the purges and the control of press and radio and also by carrying out extensive further nationalization of factories, the Communists are consolidating the power which they seized during the February 20th-25th coup. A digestive period may well be required before further mouthfuls are swallowed. At all events, no move has yet been made to arrest or try democratic leaders. Although they are watched by the police, the efficiency of the latter cannot have been brought to the high state expected in a totalitarian country, and people manage to get across the border into the United States Zone of Germany. The former Minister of Health, Dr. Prochazka (People's Party), and Dr. Ivo Duchacek (People's Party), former Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Assembly, are among those who have managed to escape. Other former Ministers and political leaders are living at home or moving about cautiously, wondering how long they will be allowed to do so. That rests entirely with the Communists and the advice they receive from Moscow.

5. The President's position remains unchanged, and rumours about his intentions are as thick as ever. There are grounds for believing, however, (this comes to us at third or fourth hand) that he contemplates resigning. According to this story, he will wait until he is presented with a particularly outrageous bill or other document requiring his approval and then resign with as much publicity as can be obtained in a country where all channels of information are in the hands of the Communists. On the other hand, Lias, the correspondent of the London Times, who has known the President for a long time and has written a biography of him, believes that he will stay on and do what he can to slow up the Communists. In my opinion, he can do very little.

6. On the surface, things quickly returned to normal once the Communists were in power. The police put away their rifles and tommy-guns and the "workers' militias" went back to work, so that in external Prague looks the same as before the coup and the commercial life of a busy capital continues. The more optimistic or lethargic sections of the public may be hoping that somehow things will turn out all right, and, as I have suggested above, Masaryk's suicide must have jolted them a good deal; but those with any real awareness of what is going on are in a desperate frame of mind. The number of callers at the Legation seeking help in getting out of the country is one among many indices of the pressure that is being exerted on non-Communists. Talk of war this year or next is to be heard on every hand.

I have etc.

R.M. MACDONNELL

1054.

DEA/50165-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], March 15, 1948

RELATIONS WITH CZECHOSLOVAKIA

I. Diplomatic

At present Canada is represented in Prague by a Chargé d'Affaires, Mr. R.M. Macdonnell, but action has been initiated to raise him to the rank of Minister, and the agrément for his appointment has been received from the Czechoslovak Government. The events of the past two weeks have prompted the decision which has been taken to postpone the announcement of Mr. Macdonnell's appointment, but there remains the possibility of this news leaking out from Prague, perhaps by design, with consequent embarrassment to us.

2. The development of the Czechoslovakian crisis since February 20th and the seizure of power by the Communists by technically constitutional means backed by the threat of force, gave rise to press reports from London, as early as February 26th, suggesting that the United Kingdom might refuse to recognize the new Communist regime. These reports proved to be without authority. On March 1st Mr. Robertson informed us that while the Foreign Office wished to keep the Czechs guessing a bit, it was not at present considering the withdrawal of the British Ambassador from Prague and would, in fact, deplore it. Similarly, from Washington Mr. Wrong reported on March 5th, that enquiries made at a low level in the State Department had elicited an assurance that the United States would only agree to the withdrawal of Ambassador on a tripartite basis; and that as Mr. Bevin was opposed to such a step and the State Department was not eager to take it, the idea was unlikely to be pursued.

3. In the absence of any indication that the United Kingdom and the United States will sever diplomatic relations with Czechoslovakia or even withdraw their ambassadors, there would seem to be no reason for Canada to consider withdrawing its mission from Prague and good reasons why it should not do so. The Canadian statement made at the General Assembly of the United Nations a year ago, in the debate on Spain, is relevant:

"In the view of the Canadian Government a break in diplomatic relations is a traditional but ineffective way of exerting pressure on a foreign government. It means that the outside world severs its connection with a government of which it disapproves at the very time that it is most important for the governments of the rest of the world to have direct knowledge of conditions in that country."

The maintenance of diplomatic relations with Czechoslovakia will enable us to maintain contact with the Czechoslovak Government, to transact intergovernmental business, to protect Canadian interests where possible, and to keep informed of what is going on in Czechoslovakia. In addition, it will serve to give some measure of encouragement to all those elements in Czechoslovakia whose hopes for the future welfare of their country are based on closer relations with the Western democracies.

4. I should be glad to know if you agree that we should maintain our mission in Prague.<sup>3</sup>

5. The other question is whether we should shortly announce Mr. Macdonnell's appointment as Minister to Czechoslovakia and Mr. Kirkwood's appointment as Minister to Poland. The royal approval and the agrément for Mr. Macdonnell's appointment have been received, but the Polish agrément for Mr. Kirkwood's appointment has not yet been received.

6. In order to hold the position, I would like to ask Mr. Macdonnell to inform the Czech Foreign Office that the Order-in-Council and other formalities in connection with his appointment have not yet been completed and that there may be some considerable delay.<sup>4</sup> At the same time, I would also ask, if you approve, Mr. Kirkwood to inform the Polish Foreign Office that in view of the fact that he may be transferred shortly they need not consider our request for agrément until they hear from us again, explaining for his personal information that the delay is occasioned by recent events in Czechoslovakia which make the announcement of appointments in satellite countries inopportune and adding that he need not take the suggestion of transfer too seriously.<sup>5</sup>

7. Since we already have a Minister in Yugoslavia, there is, of course, no reason, in principle, why we should not have a Minister in Prague. I had suggested to you, I think, that if the appointment were to be made, it might be wise to announce at the same time a number of other appointments, such as our consular officers for San Francisco and Detroit. However, it has occurred to me that a better way of making an announcement with the minimum of publicity might be to include in your statement on foreign affairs in the House a paragraph along these lines immediately following a paragraph on our decision to maintain diplomatic relations:

"With regard to the future of our diplomatic relations with Czechoslovakia, then, the Canadian Government does not consider, for the reasons I have given, that it would be in Canada's best interests to sever diplomatic relations with Czechoslovakia and does not propose to recall the Canadian mission from Prague. It proposes to maintain the present head of our mission in Prague, Mr. R.M. Macdonnell, as Minister just as long as it is to Canada's advantage to do so."

8. I should be glad to know if you agree or if you feel we should continue to defer the announcement of Mr. Macdonnell's appointment.<sup>6</sup>

9. So far as Mr. Kirkwood is concerned, the situation is not so difficult since we have not received the Polish agrément. Consequently we could leave the situation

<sup>3</sup> Les notes dans ce document sont des notes marginales écrites par Saint-Laurent le 16 mars :
The footnotes in this document are marginal notes written by St. Laurent on March 16:

For time being, yes.

<sup>4</sup> I agree.

<sup>5</sup> Yes

<sup>6</sup> I think we should continue to defer.

as it now is — that the Polish Government need not consider our request for an agrément until they hear from us again.

II. Economic

10. As a result of the recent Communist coup in Czechoslovakia, it is perhaps desirable to review our present economic relationship with that country, and consider whether any steps should be taken to alter that relationship.

11. As far as is now known, the United Kingdom is not contemplating altering its existing arrangements with Czechoslovakia, but of course will not go out of its way to make any concessions. The United Kingdom had been considering opening trade talks with the Czechs, but these have now been called off.

12. The United States has so far gone no further than to withhold the granting of export permits for recent purchases of approximately 5,000 tons of copper and a steel rolling mill, which has been under construction for some eight months, and is now ready for shipment. In the matter of United States Government credits to Czechoslovakia, no action is contemplated. An Export-Import Bank loan of $23 million has only $4,000 undisbursed. Of a $50 million surplus property credit granted to Czechoslovakia, $42 million remain unutilized, but this credit was suspended in September, 1946, because of reports that Czechoslovakia was then reselling this property to Roumania.

13. The United States Department of Commerce has suggested that it would be useful if we and the United States were to compare lists of exports to Czechoslovakia during the past year from the two countries, and also to examine, in so far as we could, what commitments by way of uncompleted contracts might exist in each country. It would appear that the United States Department of Commerce is under considerable Congressional pressure to adopt a firm export policy in respect of both the satellite countries and the Soviet Union itself. We are examining the Canadian situation in respect of private contracts in conjunction with the Department of Trade and Commerce.

14. The United States Department of State is already concerned over the problem of what should be done in the event that Czechoslovakia exercises its rights under the International Monetary Fund to purchase from the Fund its quota of United States dollars. There is some indication that the Czechs, who have not hitherto exercised this right, might shortly try to do so. At the moment, under the statute of the Fund and its regulations, the only means now apparent of preventing this purchase taking place would be to have Czechoslovakia removed from the Fund, something which clearly could not be done overtly, and which would not appear to be a very satisfactory step to take. It would not seem wise to push the Czechs and the Poles further into the arms of the U.S.S.R. by treating them as enemies.

15. The president of the World Bank has indicated that the change of Government in Czechoslovakia will make it difficult for the Bank's Economic Mission to proceed to Czechoslovakia in order to examine economic conditions there. As such an examination is a necessary prerequisite to a World Bank loan, it is not likely that the Czech application will be dealt with in the very near future.

16. As regards Canada, only $1.38 million of the $19 million credit granted to Czechoslovakia in 1945 remains unencumbered. A sum of $3.3 millions has been encumbered, but the commodities ordered against it have not, in large part, yet been delivered.

17. It would be difficult, and perhaps unwise, to endeavour to prevent delivery of the commodities represented by the $3.3 millions referred to above.<sup>7</sup> Most of the articles are not under export control, and it is not clear how contracts for delivery, placed direct with private suppliers, could be controlled under present regulations. As regards purchases made in Canada by the Czechs for cash and not through the export credit, the exercise of effective control would be even more difficult. Indeed, there seems to be no good reason to interfere with normal commercial relations between the two countries. It should be noted, also, that in the case of other Eastern European countries, whose governments are no less unacceptable to us, there is no effort made to prevent delivery to them of purchases made in Canada. The present policy of insisting upon cash payment for coarse grains, base metals and steel products generally, will preclude the Czechs from obtaining these commodities through the continuing operation of this credit.

18. It is probable that there would be sharp criticism in Canada if it became known that the Canadian Government had permitted a further advance from the Czech credit to the new Government of Czechoslovakia. If consideration is given to the cancellation of the unencumbered portion of the Czech credit, however, the following points should perhaps be borne in mind. The 1945 Credit Agreement with Czechoslovakia, which was renewed only last November, does not contain any provision for consultation or other escape clauses. Cancellation of the balance of this credit might therefore lead the Czechs to denounce the whole Agreement, and decline to repay the credit already used. There is little doubt but that in so doing, the Czech Government would make the most, from a propaganda point of view, of our unilateral action in respect of a solemn contract, and might succeed in damaging in Czechoslovakia the high reputation which Canada now enjoys. Our action might conceivably be seized upon by the Soviet Government as a precedent for cancelling their agreement with us on payment for the Petsamo Nickel Mines on which $10,000,000. is still outstanding. If it be argued that it appears wrong to be financing a government to which Canada is opposed, while experiencing such difficulty in extending credit to Britain, the answer might well be that the Czech Agreement is unconditional, whereas the British Agreement contains a clause, inserted at the instance of the United Kingdom, for periodic consultation as conditions change.

19. I should recommend, therefore, if you agree, that we should not cancel the balance of the loan but should put obstacles in the way of its use by the new Czech Government at the present time.<sup>8</sup> Perhaps the most effective way in which this could be done would be to compile a list of items which the Czechs would not be permitted to purchase out of their credit and to include on this list everything that the Czechs are known to be interested in purchasing and in particular any equipment that might be used in the manufacture of armaments.

---

<sup>7</sup> I agree.

<sup>8</sup> I agree.

L.B. P[EARSON]

1055.

DEA/50165-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], April 17, 1948

Mr. [F.] Nemeč<sup>9</sup> came to see me on April 14, 1948, to discuss a number of questions relating to the coup in Czechoslovakia.

He told me that he was now receiving a good deal of information direct from Czechoslovakia, which is apparently sent to him by some underground means. He is supplying the Department with this information as it comes to hand. He mentioned that a very complete report had been prepared by the former secretary of the Social Democratic Party who, he expected, would arrive in New York in the near future. He promised to let me have a copy of the report. He pointed out that he now had conclusive proof that the Czech coup was carried out under Soviet direction, and not merely by the local Communist Party.

Mr. Nemeč was very concerned with the kind of information which might be broadcast over the CBC International Service. He felt that it was important that the CBC should not broadcast to Czechoslovakia anything which could be used by the Communists to give the impression that Canada favoured in any way the present regime. He said that the CBC was highly regarded in Czechoslovakia, more so, he thought, than the BBC or the Voice of America. He thought, therefore, that it was important to use the CBC's position as an encouragement to the democrats without, however, doing this in such a way as to damage its reputation with its listeners in Czechoslovakia. He also expressed an interest in being allowed to broadcast over the CBC.

I said that I agreed with the importance of maintaining the CBC's reputation, and that we were giving some thought in the Department at the present time to the kind of broadcasts which might be made to Czechoslovakia in present circumstances. I said, however, that it was important for us to maintain a Canadian point of view and that while we would be very interested in using his services, he would of course appreciate that we would wish to exercise supervision over what was broadcast. He said he entirely understood this point, and has undertaken to prepare a script for submission to the Department dealing with the Sudeten German problem. In the latter connection, he pointed out that the Communist argument at the moment was that the Western powers intended to revive the German state, and would consequently wish to return Sudeten Germans to Czechoslovakia, which in the long run would lead to annihilation of the whole nation. Hence it was argued that it was important for Czechoslovakia to maintain a friendly policy towards the Soviet Union, which was the only country which would act as the protector of the Czech people. Mr. Nemeč felt that it was desirable to counteract propaganda of this kind.

<sup>9</sup> Ancien ministre de Tchécoslovaquie./Former Minister of Czechoslovakia.

When I have seen Mr. Nemeč's script I shall perhaps be in a better position to judge whether he might be useful to the CBC in preparing material. If so, such work might prove helpful to him financially. We are naturally anxious to help him in every possible way.

Mr. Nemeč also raised the question of the Czech foreign language press in this country. He pointed out that there was now only a Communist controlled newspaper printed in the Czech language and that no newspaper existed to counteract its propaganda. He felt that it was important from a Canadian point of view to rectify this situation. I pointed out that we were considering the possibility of encouraging some private interest to finance a middle-of-the-road newspaper which might help to counteract Communist propaganda in the Czech community. It might be that we would find that Mr. Nemeč could do useful work in this field as well.

L.B. P[EARSON]

2<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 2

FINLANDE

FINLAND

1056.

DEA/8508-40

Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion des chefs de direction

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Heads of Divisions

SECRET

[Ottawa], February 3, 1948

...

PETSAMO NICKEL MINES

13. Mr. Reid said that, at the request of the International Nickel Company of Canada, the Department had approached the British Minister in Helsinki with the request that he discuss with the Company's counsel there whether and in what way the Canadian Government might give diplomatic support to the International Nickel Company in its claim to priority in repayment of debts owed to it by the Petsamo Nickel Company over the claim of the Finnish Government. The British Minister has now replied that both he and the International Nickel Company's counsel consider that the claims of the two parties should be submitted to arbitration and that diplomatic negotiations would not be desirable in view of the Finnish Government's reluctance to make a decision involving the Finnish State in a large financial liability.

14. The Department has informed the International Nickel Company that, in view of these comments, it is felt that the Company should propose to the Finnish Government that the matter be settled by arbitration. If the Finnish Government is reluctant to agree, the Department might consider supporting the Company's proposal by an official note to the Finnish Government. If it were found that there had been any discrimination by the arbitration board the question of diplomatic support for the Company's claims would then arise.

...

1057.

DEA/9559-A-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour la Direction économique*

Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Economic Division

Ottawa, September 30, 1948

Mr. [Urho] Toivala, the Finnish Minister, mentioned to me today a problem which he has been discussing with you [H. Moran] and that is the extension by Canada to Finland of M.F.N. treatment.<sup>10</sup> He very much hopes that if there is going to be any delay in a multilateral grant of M.F.N. treatment Canada might be willing to go ahead on its own.

2. He said that the exports from Finland to Canada are infinitesimal at the present time and would not become great even if M.F.N. treatment were given.

3. My feeling from the conversation was that he would like Canada to take this action partly because it would demonstrate to his Government that he had been able to accomplish some specific task here and partly because it would indicate the sympathy of the Canadian Government to the Finnish Government.

4. On both these points I think we should go as far as we can with him. He himself is doing a good job of representation here and his Government has shown amazing courage in sailing so close to the wind in its relations with the Soviet Union. I think no one would have forecast a few months ago that it would have been possible for Finland to set up a government which contains no Communists, which has thoroughly investigated Communist penetration into its police and which is now engaging in purging the police.

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

<sup>10</sup> Cela fut accordé par C.P. 4978 du 29 octobre, qui fut révoqué et remplacé par C.P. 5203 du 17 novembre.

This was accorded by P.C. 4978 of October 29, which was revoked and replaced by P.C. 5203 of November 17.

3<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 3

FRANCE

1058.

DEA/1-AE (S)

*L'ambassadeur en France
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*
*Ambassador in France
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

DESPATCH 366

Paris, May 31, 1948

TOP SECRET

Sir,

The increasing tension between the Soviet Union and the West and particularly the situation which has developed in Berlin have inevitably had serious repercussions in France. It may therefore be of some value at this time to attempt to estimate the reactions of opinion in this country towards the possibility of war. Although at times I shall be discussing gloomy possibilities I should not like to give the impression that I believe an outbreak of war with the U.S.S.R. to be inevitable. I do feel, however, that the time has come when the state of French preparedness, both moral and material, is a very important factor in the struggle between East and West which should be considered with all its implications.

2. The attitude of the French people in the face of the threat of another war can only be understood if one bears in mind all they have been through in the last ten years. These have been years of strain and shock which have left the French not only materially weakened but emotionally exhausted. They are in no mood for heroic enterprises. On the contrary, they want to go about their own business and pleasure peaceably and in reasonably prosperous circumstances. Their principal preoccupation is with the multitude of daily difficulties and shortages which interfere with their return to normal life as they knew it before the war. Most of them are more interested in the price of food than in any Cause. A symptom of this state of mind is the passivity of the French under trials and provocations which in any other period of French history would probably have produced an explosion of popular feeling. Again and again in the last two or three years it has been freely prophesied that France was on the eve of civil war. Certainly the Communists have done their best to foment trouble, but the people have refused to respond. They seem to have lost their traditional taste for the barricades. They want to avoid trouble at home as well as abroad. If geography allowed them to be so, the French might be quite as isolationist in another war as the mid-West States of the United States were in 1939. Indeed the daydream of the French might well be to tow France out into the mid-Atlantic as far as possible from the Continent of Europe and there find a haven of rest. Failing this, as the widespread desire to emigrate shows, many Frenchmen would like to remove themselves physically from the soil of France.

3. But as France is obliged to remain part of the European Continent and as the French people are unable to leave their country in any numbers, they realize that if war comes they will be involved. They feel that they are trapped by geography. The doctrine which Petain endeavoured to inculcate that France was paying by her sufferings for her past sins is now less popular than ever before. But the vogue of existentialist philosophy (popularly understood, or misunderstood) reflects the fatalism and the claustrophobia which are the legacy of defeat and occupation. Indeed the last wars have left such scars on European civilization that many Europeans ask themselves whether anything, even submission to tyranny, could be worse than another war. Perhaps the fate of Jan Masaryk may be considered as symbolic of this state of mind. Masaryk was willing, in order to spare his people a civil war, to collaborate with the Communists. He preferred submission to fighting but in the end he preferred death to either.

4. It must be remembered too that the French have already experienced one crusade against Communism. The Vichy regime drew its support from those who believed that Communism was the principal danger to European civilization. The French now see Vichy personalities reappearing not only in the worlds of business and the arts, but even in political life and such people are in a position to say to their fellow Frenchmen — "We told you so. What was the use of defeating Germany in order to clear the way for a Soviet invasion of Western Europe? Why did you waste your time in resisting the Germans when if the counsels of Marshal Petain had been followed the Western nations, including Germany, would have united against the Communist peril, which is now exactly what they are attempting to do?" Such a swing, however slight, of the political pendulum so soon after the struggle of the Resistance against Vichy is apt to breed cynicism and bewilderment in the mind of the average man.

5. Apart from these psychological and political influences there are the more tangible questions of the pattern which war might be expected to follow and the state of French military preparedness. It seems to be very generally assumed in this country that war would mean the early occupation of France by the Soviet Armies, that, at any rate at the beginning, it would be waged by the United States primarily by means of air bombardment and the use of the atomic bomb. Whether such a conception of the war is tenable is for the moment beside the point. The important — and unfortunate — thing from the point of view of French morale is that it is widely held. Most French people would agree, I believe, that the United States would eventually win a war against the Soviet Union and that France would in the end be liberated. But this is a remote consolation.

6. The reports of our Service Attachés, based on information from French military and air sources, and the conversations which I have had with members of the Government and responsible officials, give the measure of French military weakness. The fact is that if war were to break out now the French authorities do not consider that it would be possible to defend the soil of France for more than a matter of weeks or, in the view of the more pessimistic, of days. I do not propose here to go into details concerning the weakness of the French in arms and equipment. Suffice to say that there is an appalling shortage of tanks, guns and ammunition and that little or no progress has so far been made in standardization of weapons between the British, French and Americans, so that the French could not be readily supplied from British or United States sources. The condition of the Air Force is deplorable. Almost all the planes are obsolescent and there are too few even of these. It would take months or even years to divert French factories to the production of equipment, ammunition and aeroplanes. In addition to the dangerous weakness of her defences, France suffers from the presence inside the country of a fifth column which in the event of war with the Soviet Union would be immeasurably more numerous and very much better organized than any which the Nazis could count upon in 1939 and 1940. The Communists gained first-hand experience of underground fighting in the Resistance. They are well trained in sabotage, expert in defeatist propaganda and in the technique of terrorism. It is more than probable that as the Soviet Armies advanced across the French frontiers or their airborne troops descended upon French cities, the Communists would rise, according to preconcerted plans, in all the principal centres of France. It is certain that in the event of Soviet occupation a French Communist Government would be installed in this country. The fate of France under Soviet occupation and with a Communist puppet regime in power is painful to contemplate. It is very doubtful whether France could ever recover from such a further ordeal. Certainly it would leave behind it a prostrate country in which divisions between Frenchmen had been intensified by all the horrors of ruthless class warfare.

7. I have emphasized the darkest possibilities in order to bring into relief the fears which haunt the French people when they contemplate the possibility of war. It is a remarkable fact that knowing the extent of their own weakness the French Government should have taken so firm an attitude in the face of recent Soviet pressure and they deserve a good deal of credit for their courage in doing so.

8. The only conclusion that one can draw from the present situation is that the French in their present state could not be effective allies in any war waged in the near future. Speedy rearmament and re-equipment of the French forces is therefore an urgent necessity, but decisions as to timing do not depend on the French Government alone. No Frenchman deludes himself that the Treaty of Brussels has any value as a weapon of defense against Soviet attack without the military backing of the United States. In fact, as M. Bidault said to me when I saw him on March 11th (see my Secret telegram No. 152 of that date),† without the support of the United States the Treaty might appear to be provocative without having sufficient backing to be effective. Meanwhile, it is of course all to the good that the staff talks between France, the Benelux countries and the United Kingdom provided for in the Brussels Treaty should go forward, that plans should be laid down, that the standardization of weapons in so far as this is practicable should be achieved and that the integration of defensive strategy should be arrived at. All this, France and the other Western European nations can do for themselves. But every month which leaves France and the other nations of the Western European Continent totally exposed to Soviet invasion is dangerous. The present situation presents a standing temptation to the Soviet Union to attack while there is nothing to block their path. There is no doubt that the formal adherence of the U.S. to the Brussels Treaty would be a valuable gesture of political and moral solidarity but the really important thing, from the point of view of the French, is that they should be furnished with the resources which would enable them to make a stand on their own frontiers and that they should know that the Americans will fight side by side with them in Europe to defend French soil from invasion.

9. The question of the future of Germany is so intimately linked with that of France that it is impossible to discuss one without considering the other. The French, as we all know, are still very frightened of the possibility of German military revival. They thus have a double cause for fear — from the Soviet Union and from Germany. In this, their position is different from that of the United Kingdom or the United States where there does not seem to be much real fear of Germany left. The pattern of French thought regarding Germany has come out again and again in conversations which we have had with members of the French Foreign Office. They dread the possibility that the United States and United Kingdom Governments, obsessed with the threat which the Soviet Union offers, will re-create a centralized and militarily powerful Western German state as a buffer against the Soviet Union. This possibility alarms the French for several reasons. In the first place, they fear that if the Germans once recovered their independence of action and their industrial and military power they might betray the cause of the West and ally themselves with the Soviet Union, as Hitler did in 1939. This is their more remote cause for alarm. In the more immediate future they are worried lest the re-creation of a powerful German state should prompt the Soviet Union to immediate counter-measures. On several occasions recently Frenchmen in responsible positions have expressed the view that the rearmament of Germany, if it ever occurred, would precipitate a Soviet attack on the West. Added to these two preoccupations about Germany which are in a sense contradictory, the French have a third source of anxiety. They are concerned lest a revived Western Germany should be favoured at their expense by the United States. French fear of Germany, however well justified, inevitably makes for divided aims in their long-term strategic thinking, for they cannot concentrate their whole attention on the Soviet danger so long as they are thinking in terms of the German menace also. Moreover, the German question has important repercussions in French domestic politics as it affords the Communist Party the opportunity to play on French fears of German revival and to represent the Anglo-Saxon countries as putting the interests of Germany above those of France. For all these reasons it is most desirable that the French point of view over the form of the future German Government should receive sympathetic consideration in London and Washington. Even if it does not prove possible to fall in with the main French demands (the French Government have already made very extensive concessions) every effort should be made to save the face of the French Government and not expose them to damaging Communist attacks on this sensitive subject.

10. Among the factors involved in French preparedness either to face the threat of war or to play their full part in a defensive alliance, not the least important is the political one. The reactions of the main French political parties are becoming more and more clearly defined as the crisis deepens, for the middle of the road attitude which sought to strike a balance between the United States on the one hand and the Soviet Union on the other in foreign affairs, and between General de Gaulle on the one hand and the French Communist Party on the other in domestic affairs, becomes more and more impossible to maintain. Every stage in the deterioration of relations between East and West strengthens the extreme elements in French politics to the disadvantage of the Troisième Force. This development accounts for the importance of General de Gaulle and the R.P.F.<sup>11</sup> in French political life. There is a strong probability that in the event of war, or even of an international situation which contained the direct threat of war, General de Gaulle would come to power in France. This is a prospect which certainly does not appeal to the United Kingdom Government nor, I should suppose, to the Government of the United States. General de Gaulle and the R.P.F. have had a bad press in Anglo-Saxon countries. I do not think that the United States or United Kingdom Embassies in Paris have much direct contact with R.P.F. circles. In this Embassy, however, we have made a point of keeping in discreet touch with members of the R.P.F. and, as you know, have reported at some length on the policy and personalities of the movement. Because they disapprove of much of General de Gaulle's political programme and of many of his entourage it would be unfortunate indeed if London and Washington were to underestimate the importance of the R.P.F. or the possibility of his coming to power in the event of an international crisis. For we may all find ourselves obliged one day to cooperate with General de Gaulle as the head of a French Government. The essential point about General de Gaulle's policy is that it is an emergency or war policy. His concentration on the idea of national unity, his appeals to French pride and patriotism, are intended to strengthen the will of France to resist Communist infiltration or invasion. This obsession may also account for the notorious weaknesses of the R.P.F. programme in its more constructive aspects. Granted his own premise — the inevitability of the struggle with Communism — the most damaging criticism that can be made against General de Gaulle is not that his policy is weak on the side of economic and social planning or even that it exalts the power of the executive, for in war long-term constructive planning must go to the wall and the executive inevitably takes on additional powers. The real question is whether General de Gaulle would be able to unify France in time of crisis or whether his presence at the head of the Government would not rather intensify existing divisions and make national unity even more difficult to attain.

11. General de Gaulle is no doubt fully informed of the weaknesses of the French military position. He is also evidently perturbed at the pessimistic attitude with which many Frenchmen regard the fate of their country in the event of war. With reference to the conception that war will mean the occupation of France and the departure of the French Army for North Africa, he said in a recent speech at Marseilles, "Nous tiendrions pour criminelle une politique et une stratégie qui sous prétexte qu'il existe ailleurs de foudroyantes bombes atomiques, abandonneraient délibérément le sol de la métropole d'abord à l'invasion des uns, puis aux bombardements des autres."

12. The significance of this statement is that General de Gaulle protested openly against the fatalistic acceptance of the idea of Soviet occupation in the event of war and demanded that plans should be made now for the defence of the soil of France.

---

<sup>11</sup> Rassemblement du peuple français.

As you know, M. Teitgen,<sup>12</sup> the Minister of National Defense, shares this view that the battle for Europe must take place in Europe itself and East of the Rhine if possible, and not in North Africa.

13. The M.R.P.<sup>13</sup> members of the Government need no prodding from General de Gaulle to realize the gravity of the present situation nor do they lack clear-sightedness in facing its implications. You will recall that in my Top Secret despatch No. 16 of the 12th January† I gave an account of a talk which I had had with M. Teitgen, in which he put the essentials of the problem with remarkable frankness and clarity. You will remember that he went straight to the point by saying that the United States must answer the question "do you mean to meet the Soviet attack in Germany itself or, if not in Germany, will you fight in any event on the Rhine?" M. Teitgen followed up his analysis of the situation with a series of suggested steps, some of which seemed bold and even startling at the time although since then the Western European powers have moved a long way in the direction which he indicated.

14. Unfortunately the Socialist Ministers in the Government do not show a similar degree of realism. Under pressure from the rank and file of their party they are still opposing the 18 months period for military training and their attitude on defense problems in general is less firm than that of their M.R.P. colleagues. In all probability the Socialist members of the Government appreciate the realities of the situation clearly enough but the fissures within the party are serious. In the event of a real show-down with the Soviet Union it seems very likely that the Socialist Party would split. The party leaders and M. Blum, foremost among them, have not yet dared to look the possibility of war in the face. It is symptomatic of this state of mind that in the last Socialist Congress the Party committed itself once again to a resolution condemning the Communist Party and General de Gaulle's R.P.F. movements as equal dangers to France. It is natural enough that British Socialists should have a special regard for the French Socialist Party — the leaders of the two parties have a long tradition of comradeship and share the same political ideals. It is to be hoped that this does not blind the United Kingdom Government to the increasing divisions in the French Socialist Party. It would be a mistake to lean too heavily on the French Socialists for support for they are apt to prove — if not a broken reed — a reed which would break under any undue strain.

15. I have already discussed the Communist attitude in the event of war. I need only add that every element of weakness and disunion is grist to the Communist mill.

16. If it is possible to draw any general conclusions from the above, I should like to emphasize that:

(a) France has perhaps never in her history been more helplessly exposed to foreign invasion as she is at the present;

<sup>12</sup> Paul-Henri Teitgen, ministre des Forces armées de France.

Paul-Henri Teitgen, Minister of Armed Forces of France.

<sup>13</sup> Mouvement républicain populaire.

(b) war in the near future might find the mass of the French people passive and acquiescent as they might feel that resistance in such conditions was an impossibility;

(c) the continuance of this situation is acutely dangerous;

(d) only the knowledge that the United States are prepared to arm and equip the French forces for the defense of French frontiers and to fight side by side with them to defend the soil of France from occupation will create a firm will to resistance in France;

(e) in the event of war it is probable that General de Gaulle will be at the head of the French Government whether we like it or not and that his importance and that of his movement should therefore not be under-estimated.

17. I have not touched on the part which Canada might play in strengthening the defensive alliance of the Western European powers against the danger of Soviet aggression. This is of course a matter of high policy but any indication which you might be able to give me from time to time of our Government's intentions in this respect would be of the utmost interest.

18. I am sending copies of this despatch to our Missions at London, Brussels and The Hague.

I have etc.

GEORGES P. VANIER

4<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 4

ISRAËL
ISRAEL

1059.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet
Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], May 18, 1948

...

RECOGNITION OF JEWISH STATE; APPLICATION OF FOREIGN ENLISTMENT ACT

5. The Secretary of State for External Affairs pointed out that U.K. responsibility for Palestine had ended on May 15th. A Jewish State had been proclaimed by the Jewish inhabitants and had already received recognition from the governments of the United States and the U.S.S.R.

In view of numerous uncertainties in the situation including imprecision in the matter of boundaries and the position under the U.N. Charter, it would not be desirable for Canada to reach any hasty decision in the matter of recognition.

In this connection, the question of application of the Foreign Enlistment Act to Palestine, which had been considered at the meeting on May 6th, should also be deferred for further consideration at a time when the present situation had taken more definite shape.

6. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted the Minister's report.

...

1060.

DEA/48 (S)

Extrait d'une note du chef de la Direction des Nations Unies
Extract from Memorandum by Head, United Nations Division

[Ottawa], May 27, 1948

Mr. Ignatieff and I had lunch with Mr. St. Laurent on Saturday, May 22. Mr. Ignatieff gave Mr. St. Laurent an extensive account of the discussions which have taken place in New York concerning Palestine, and particularly of the estimate which the Delegation made of the United Kingdom and United States position. In the course of the discussion Mr. St. Laurent made it clear that he had no intention of recommending immediate action in regard to the recognition of Israel, nor did he think that the Delegation should take any initiative other than to support as much as possible efforts at agreement between the United States and the United Kingdom. In regard to recognition, however, Mr. St. Laurent said that he thought there was some advantage to the action which the United States Government had taken in recognizing the new State of Israel. In spite of the fact that it was precipitate and apparently ill-considered, it had made clear to the sponsors of the new State that they could count on sympathetic consideration for their claims in the West. It was now apparent, he thought, that a Jewish State of some kind would be established. It was all to the good, therefore, that the leaders of this State could be assured of the support of the centre of power in the Western world and that they would not feel compelled to look to Moscow for sympathy.

...

R.G. R[IDDELL]

1061.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet
Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], August 3, 1948

...

RECOGNITION OF ISRAEL

8. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that he had, that morning, received a delegation who had urged that the Canadian government now give de facto recognition to the State of Israel, a move which, in their view, would have substantial benefits internationally and domestically.

In reply, it had been said that, for the present, it would not be possible to accede to their request. The matter would, however, be kept under review.

9. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted with approval the Minister's report.

...

5<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 5

POLOGNE POLAND

SECTION A

RELATIONS GÉNÉRALES GENERAL RELATIONS

1062.

DEA/8508-40

Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion des chefs de direction

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Heads of Divisions

SECRET

[Ottawa], January 20, 1948

...

EMPLOYMENT OF POLISH GIRLS AT THE DIONNE SPINNING MILLS

11. Mr. Reid said that for some time consideration had been given to preparing a suitable reply to a note of September 29, 1947, from the Polish Chargé d'Affaires asking for information about a number of adverse reports which he had received concerning conditions under which Polish girls were employed at the Dionne Spinning Mills. The Chargé stated that he had been informed that the girls were paid less than the minimum wage for Quebec, that they were kept under very strict supervision during leisure hours, that in the selection of girls the aim had been to choose only the most helpless kind of persons who would make docile workers, and that they were not allowed to learn English.

12. A misleading summary of this note had been published in the official bulletin of the Polish Foreign Ministry. This summary and stories which appeared in Polish newspapers suggested that the allegations had been proved true. The Department had therefore considered releasing to the press a copy of our reply to the Polish note and requesting that the Polish Government publish in the Foreign Office Bulletin a corrected summary of their note and a copy of our answer.

13. The Canadian Chargé d'Affaires in Warsaw had, however, reported that there had been a lessening of Polish press attacks on Canada; it was felt therefore that no useful purpose would be served by giving further publicity to the matter at this time. Accordingly, a note was sent on January 16, setting forth the facts concerning conditions of employment and making it clear that if any of the girls was dissatisfied with conditions in Canada and wished to return to Poland, neither the Canadian Government nor her employers would have any objection.

1063.

DEA/10258-40

*Le chargé d'affaires en Pologne
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chargé d'Affaires in Poland
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

Warsaw, May 24, 1948

Dear Mike [Pearson],

A few members of the Commons, in the External Affairs debates, seem to have rather deprecated the usefulness of diplomatic offices in the hostile countries behind the Curtain.

It is true that there seems little of positive character that can be accomplished on a frontier outpost such as this, since grand policy-making is centred elsewhere.

But even a moderation or a truce of provocative expression, in the press, radio, or Foreign Ministry, has some value and importance in allaying tension and animosity.

I am glad to realize that since last autumn, when the Polish Treasures, the Anders Poles, and the Dionne affair poisoned the amicable relations between Poland and Canada, there has been a very agreeable lull; in general, the Polish press has been quiescent on Canadian matters. It gave little notice to the Duplessis action concerning the Polish treasures; it has said nothing so far about Mr. Drew's introductory remarks of Mr. Mikolajczyk;<sup>14</sup> it has relaxed its comments on Canadian immigration matters. I regard this cessation of acrimony as, if not a cure, a sedative. Even if this is the most we can accomplish here diplomatically at the moment, in the face of the ideological gulf between East and West, it is, I think, beneficial. Any alleviation of provocations or provocative propaganda has, even in a negative and indirect way, a merit. While not guaranteeing what may break out hereafter at any time, I feel that the quieter attitude as regards Canadian-Polish matters over the past six months is fortunate.

Yours sincerely,

K.P. KIRKWOOD

<sup>14</sup> Le premier ministre Drew présenta Mikolajczyk comme le chef du gouvernement-en-exil polonais. Premier Drew introduced Mikolajczyk as leader of a Polish government-in-exile.

1064.

DEA/8508-40

Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion des chefs de direction
Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Heads of Divisions

SECRET

[Ottawa], June 1, 1948

. . .

POLAND

12. Mr. Drury said that on May 29, while calling on the Under-Secretary, the Polish Minister had expressed the dissatisfaction of the Polish Government concerning the slowness with which assets of residents of Poland, vested in the Canadian Custodian, were being released. Mr. Pearson took this occasion to mention the dissatisfaction of the Canadian Government about the settlement of claims of Canadians for property located in Poland which had been nationalized. In view of the decision taken in 1947 to delay the release of the assets of residents of Poland pending settlement of Canadian claims for nationalization, a reply to the Polish Minister regarding the release of these assets will be delayed, but in the meantime a note has been delivered to the Minister suggesting that negotiations for the settlement of claims arising out of the nationalization be started immediately.

1065.

DEA/10258-40

Le chargé d'affaires en Pologne
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Chargé d'Affaires in Poland
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL

Warsaw, November 6, 1948

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I refer to my letter of October 21st, on the subject of Canadian diplomatic relations with Poland.† Again this morning Dr. Leszcynski<sup>15</sup> broached the matter in a conversation I had with him in his office on other routine business.

He felt that Canada was not manifesting the cordiality toward Poland which Poland felt toward Canada. Poland, he said, had good will and friendly feelings and great admiration toward Canada. It had demonstrated this, among other things, by appointing two successive Ministers to Ottawa; and was interested in promoting some cultural and scholarship exchanges with Canada. It would like to send more Polish scholars to Canada, especially in the technological fields. It wished to establish better commercial connections.

But Canada had shown an unreasonable and somewhat incomprehensible coolness. He understood and allowed for the ideological differences, such as disagreement on Marxism, Communism and other "isms": these differences were in the nature of things to-day. Canada was a capitalist country; Poland was not. But the coolness was shown in other, more particular ways. Canada had closed down on its former generous and sympathetic aid and relief services to Poland, although Poland still required relief aid. The Art Treasures question was still an unsolved issue. Canada had not been enthusiastic about discussing a commercial accord which Poland desired. Canada had not appointed a Minister to Poland. Mr. Milnikiel, Dr. Leszczynski said, was so discouraged over these manifestations and this lack of friendly interest in Poland that he was talking of returning to Poland and leaving only a Chargé d'Affaires in Ottawa.

<sup>15</sup> Chef, Direction des Affaires américaines, ministère des Affaires étrangères de Pologne.
 Head, American Affairs Division, Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Poland.

I replied in a few interpolations that Canada was opening its doors to a number of Polish scholars through the Lady Davis Foundation and the Canada-UNESCO Fellowships; and that it proposed sending 2000 school boxes to Polish schools; and that some Canadian relief aid was still coming into the country. I pointed out that there were a number of other countries in which the appointment of Canadian Ministers had been delayed and in some cases including Sweden were still delayed. Dr. Leszczynski remarked that the failure to complete the arrangement for a Minister to Poland was more exceptional and noticeable because press announcements had been made and exchanges on notes had resulted in the Government's agrément. The deferment therefore was conspicuous, and aroused misgivings as to Canada's good will and good faith. "We Poles are a proud people," he said. They notice and feel the non-appointment as a slight to their country.

I closed further discussion on this topic by saying that I had, on each previous occasion, duly reported Dr. Leszczynski's sentiments on this matter to my Government, and would do so in this case.

Dr. Leszczynski also informed me that Dr. Bielski<sup>16</sup> has returned to Poland, and was now taking a holiday with his family. Later he would doubtless call on me. It was not yet certain whether he would continue in the Foreign Service, or might join in United Nations activities, or might take up some other form of official employment. He had been about three years in Canada, and had become a great admirer of things British and things Canadian.

Yours sincerely,
K.P. KIRKWOOD

---

<sup>16</sup> Z.R. Bielski, premier secrétaire, légation de Pologne.
Z.K. Bielski, First Secretary, Legation of Poland.

SECTION B
TRÉSORS D'ARTS
ART TREASURES

1066.

DEA/8508-40

Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion des chefs de direction
Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Heads of Divisions

SECRET

[Ottawa], January 6, 1948

...

POLISH ART TREASURES

26. In regard to Polish art treasures, Mr. Riddell referred to the fact that efforts made during the summer to reach a settlement by agreement had failed and the Canadian Government had been criticized in the Polish press for its endeavours in this regard. Inaccurate accounts of the proposals made had appeared in the Polish press. These statements were not only disagreeable but were also a breach of confidence. The Polish Government had subsequently requested the Canadian Government to institute judicial procedures for the return of the treasure. The Polish authorities have now been informed that the Government would request the police to locate the treasures if it were possible to do so but that it would not itself institute any legal proceedings. It was the intention to announce this decision, and at the same time to correct the misleading statements which had appeared in the Polish press on this subject. A copy of the draft press release was given to the Polish Chargé d'Affaires who had objected to its publication. Consideration is now being given to these objections and it is expected that some kind of public statement will be made shortly.

...

1067.

DEA/837-40

Le préfet de la Gendarmerie royale du Canada
au ministre de la Justice

Commissioner, Royal Canadian Mounted Police, to Minister of Justice

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], February 4, 1948

Dear Mr. Hsley:

RE POLISH ART TREASURES, OTTAWA, ONTARIO

With further reference to the matter of the missing Polish art treasures, attached are copies of Montreal Detachment report† of the 30th ultimo outlining the police enquiries made at St. Anne de Beaupré, P.Q. and Quebec City, which resulted in the location of a portion of the treasure, contained in twenty-three trunks and one box, which is presently stored in l'Hotel Dieu, a hospital and church institution situated in Quebec City. Also attached are copies of Ottawa C.I.B.<sup>17</sup> report† of December 31st last, which outlines the unsuccessful enquiries made in the Ottawa area with respect to the remaining missing portion of the treasure which is stated to be contained in eight trunks and for a time appears to have been stored in the Convent of the Precious Blood of Jesus, Ottawa. There are several other documents on our file concerning this matter which are not being forwarded as they do not seem to contain any relevant information not already included in the above-mentioned reports or on the file at the Department of External Affairs.

2. Briefly, it seems that in 1940 a collection of Polish art treasures was brought to Canada for safekeeping and after being lawfully entered into Canada, were stored in rooms at the Experimental Farm, Ottawa, the keys to which were in the possession of representatives of the then Polish Government. The treasure had been entered without Customs inspection, no inventory at the time was supplied to the Canadian Government and it seems clear that the Canadian Government did not at any time accept any responsibility as to the custody and safekeeping of the treasure. It further appears that during the spring of 1945 the greater portion of the treasure was removed to other storage places, two trunks being taken to the Bank of Montreal, Sparks Street, Ottawa, eight trunks to the Convent of the Precious Blood of Jesus, Ottawa, and twenty-three trunks and one wooden box to the Redemptorist Monastery in St. Anne de Beaupré, P.Q. A small and less valuable portion of the treasure was left at the Experimental Farm and subsequently was taken possession of by representatives of the present Polish Government. During the spring of 1946 a representative of the present Polish Government attempted to obtain possession of the portions of the treasure stated to have been stored in the two church institutions but was informed that these two portions of the treasure had been released to persons not identifiable but who had been in possession of proper receipts and the previously agreed upon password. The two trunks taken to the Bank of Montreal are apparently still there, it seems that the bank is refusing to release the same without the joint signatures of the original custodians or unless, on the other hand, a proper court order is produced.

3. An investigator from the Ottawa C.I.B. interviewed the Mother Superior at the Convent of the Precious Blood of Jesus and was informed that eight trunks had been stored in that institution by two persons named Zaleski and Polkowski but that in May or June, 1946, the trunks were removed by a person who was in possession of a copy of the original receipt and gave the previously agreed upon password. Our enquiries indicate that Polkowski is the person who later removed the trunks since Zaleski in the meantime apparently had gone over to the present Polish Government. The Mother Superior further stated that neither she nor any of the nuns saw the trunks at any time and added that the negotiations had been transacted through a small grill. It seems that the nuns in this institution are cloistered and are not permitted to leave the cloister under any circumstances. The files at the Department of External Affairs on this matter have been examined, representatives of the present Polish Government interviewed and Polkowski and Zaleski questioned, all with negative results insofar as determining the present location of the eight trunks. No doubt Polkowski knows the present location and probably so do other members of the former Polish Government but we have no authority to demand the truth or to conduct searches.

---

<sup>17</sup> Criminal Investigation Branch.

4. The police enquiries at the Redemptorist Monastery in St. Anne de Beaupré produced more positive results, it appearing that the Provincial Superior of that institution, Reverend Father Laplante, after communicating with higher church officials in Quebec City, informed our investigator that in May, 1946, on the written orders of the late Cardinal Villeneuve, he had turned over the portion of the treasure stored in his institution to a Mr. Babinski, who at the time was accompanied by a Mr. Polkowski and a Mr. Zurowski. The twenty-three trunks and one wooden box were transported at this time to l'Hotel Dieu by means of a truck, the property of the Redemptorist Monastery. Mr. Babinski was a member of the former Polish Government and Zurowski was apparently a former member of Mr. Babinski's staff. Mother Superior St. Henri, in charge of l'Hotel Dieu, was interviewed, stated that the trunks and box were presently in her custody and showed our investigator to the room in the institution where the trunks and box were stored. She stated that they had been brought to the institution by Babinski, Polkowski, Zurowski and a fourth person stated to be the latter mentioned person's son. The Mother Superior further stated that she would not turn over the trunks and case to any person without first notifying the Officer Commanding our Quebec Sub-Division, Sub-Inspector Belec. It would seem that the Mother Superior is being most cooperative and there is no reason to believe that the trunks will be removed without our Officer being first notified.

5. When the file on this matter in the Department of External Affairs was examined in the first instance, it was obvious that there was a dispute as to ownership or lawful possession and also it seems that some of the treasure may be the property of private individuals who formerly resided in Poland, other articles are stated to be church property in Poland and on the other hand, a portion is said to be the property of the Polish State. Under these circumstances there would not appear to be any reasonable grounds for believing that a criminal offence has taken place and that the matter is simply a dispute as to property rights and is one that properly should be settled by way of a civil action and it is presumed that the present Polish Government representatives may have access to a civil court in this country if they are willing to submit to its jurisdiction. Our enquiries have not brought to light any information that would properly justify a member requesting that a search warrant be granted, consequently no seizure action is being considered. In view of the fact that the late Cardinal Villeneuve had personal knowledge of the storage of the portion of the treasure at St. Anne de Beaupré, it is possible that some church official connected with the Archbishop's Palace in Ottawa may have information concerning the present location of the eight trunks formerly stored in the Convent of the Precious Blood of Jesus. An enquiry along this line is presently being made and the result will be reported to you in due course.

Yours faithfully,
S.T. WOOD

1068.

DEA/837-40

*Note du secrétaire privé
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Private Secretary
to Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], March 11, 1948

I am bringing to your attention hereunder some correspondence dealing with the removal of the Polish Art Treasures from the Hotel-Dieu to the Quebec Provincial Museum, which I have obtained from a reliable source. The following might be useful to have on file.

My informant has seen copy of a letter written by the Mother Superior of the Hotel-Dieu to Premier Duplessis, dated Feb. 25, 1948, in which she says first that Bielsky wrote her to say that the treasures should be returned to him without delay and then that Babinski told her that the said treasures should not be given to anyone but himself. She adds: "Babinski nous requiert maintenant de confier ces biens au conservateur du Musée;" and further: "pour satisfaire à la loi il ne semble nous rester comme alternative que celle de vous demander de bien vouloir accepter ces colis et d'en prendre le même soin que celui donné aux objets d'art que contient le Musée. Nous prenons pour acquis que les effets ne seront remis, pour aucune considération, que du consentement de monsieur Babinski ou sous l'autorité d'un jugement exécutoire d'un tribunal compétent. En autant que la communauté est concernée, elle entend demeurer étrangère à ce litige. Nous vous remercions, monsieur le Premier Ministre, de ce que vous voudrez faire pour dégager, comme nous le désirons, notre responsabilité dans cette affaire, et nous vous prions d'accepter l'expression de notre haute considération."

The very same day, Premier Duplessis replied to the Mother Superior as follows: "Je viens de recevoir votre lettre en date du 25 février courant au sujet des 24 colis déposés chez vous par monsieur Waclaw Babinski. Ces colis, dès aujourd'hui, seront déposés au Musée de la province, à Québec, et ne seront remis pour aucune considération à qui que ce soit sauf sous l'autorité d'un jugement exécutoire d'un tribunal compétent. Il est entendu cependant que la province n'assume aucune responsabilité quant à la garde de ces effets. Il fait plaisir au gouvernement de contribuer à rendre un nouveau service à votre noble communauté. Veuillez agréer, très Révérende Mère, nos sincères hommages."

Now, Guy Hudon, a Quebec lawyer, got in touch with Babinski to have him accept the transfer of the treasures to the Provincial Museum, as is shown by the following letter which he received from Babinski. The letter is dated Feb. 27, 1948 and reads as follows: "Conformément à notre entretien, j'ai l'honneur de confirmer par la présente mon télégramme d'Ottawa du 25 courant conçu dans les termes suivants:

“Guy Hudon, c/o Mgr Vandry, Université Laval, Quebec City. Requier transport et remise au conservateur du Musée tous mes droits réservés. Lettre suit.” Babinski.

Il est évident que le transport concerne 24 caisses déposées par moi à l'Hotel-Dieu, à Québec, en 1946, et que le “conservateur du Musée” signifie le conservateur du Musée provincial à Québec. Je comprends également que je garde tous mes droits à la disposition et au contrôle des caisses en question. Tout en vous remerciant sincèrement de vos soins, je vous prie, cher monsieur Hudon, de bien vouloir agréer les assurances de ma haute considération et gratitude. Bien cordialement à vous.” (Signed) W. Babinski.

G[UYY] S[YLVESTRE]

1069.

DEA/10258-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au chargé d'affaires en Pologne*

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Chargé d'Affaires in Poland

Ottawa, May 6, 1948

Dear Mr. Kirkwood,

The new Polish Minister, Mr. Milnikiel, called to see me on Wednesday of this week, accompanied by Dr. Bielski. I found him, as you suggested he would be, an amiable and agreeable person and I think that he will do his best to be as friendly and co-operative with us as his Government's policy permits.

After the usual amiabilities were exchanged I told him how sorry I was that the shadow of the Polish treasures had lain so long across the good relations between our two countries. I urged him to believe that the Government had done everything it appropriately could do to assist in this matter but there were limits beyond which it could not go. I emphasized that the steps that we had taken in discovering part of the treasure had been very severely criticized by certain provincial authorities, as he no doubt already knew. Mr. Milnikiel did not dispute our good intentions but emphasized, in his turn, the harmful effects the present situation was having on Polish-Canadian relations. He said that his people received a painful impression when they went into their National Museum and saw vacant places on the walls and in the showcases, with signs indicating that the treasures, formerly in these places, were now in Canada. Mr. Milnikiel was particularly disturbed at the possibility of certain perishable treasures, such as tapestries, deteriorating through lack of care. He said in a fortnight or so, when he became more familiar with the details of this problem, he hoped to discuss it with me officially in the hope that some solution could be reached. I told him that no one would be more pleased to see this done than I would and I would be glad to see him whenever he was ready. I added that Dr. Bielski had put the Polish case in this matter very effectively and continuously but that we had no reason to complain of his fairness. I think that Dr. Bielski was pleased at this reference to his own endeavours.

I repeated to Mr. Milnikiel the assurance that you no doubt have already given his Government, that the Canadian authorities do not associate themselves with the description of Mr. Mikolajczyk by the Premier of Ontario as "The Prime Minister of Free Poland."

Yours sincerely,
L.B. PEARSON

1070.

DEA/837-40

*Note du chef de la Direction des Nations Unies
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

Memorandum from Head, United Nations Division, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

[Ottawa, September 1], 1948

I attach the papers concerning Polish art treasures. You will recall that when we last saw the Polish Minister and Dr. Bielski we told them that other formal claims than those of the Polish Government had been made for part of the treasure and suggested that, even if the Canadian Government were prepared to take action in regard to the treasures, this action would at once be challenged on the basis of these other claims. The Polish Minister asked us if we could tell him the source of these other claims, and we said that we would consult the Minister and communicate with him later.

The other claims to which we referred were made on behalf of the Catholic Church in Poland. One of them reached Mr. St. Laurent from the Cardinal Sapieha by way of Archbishop Vachon. The other was sent to Mr. St. Laurent on behalf of the Polish clergy through the Apostolic Delegate in Ottawa.

We informed Mr. St. Laurent of our conversation with the Polish Minister, and he agreed that we might inform the Polish Legation concerning the source of the other claims to the treasure. It was understood, therefore, that I should get in touch with Bielski and give him this information. In spite of this direction, I have not communicated with the Polish Legation, although I have been on the point of phoning Dr. Bielski on a number of occasions. I have not done so because of a continued feeling of uneasiness. It seemed to me that, in informing the Poles concerning the approach of the Catholic Church in Poland we might not only be exposing the Polish clergy to attacks but we might also run the risk that the rumour would get abroad in Quebec that we had betrayed the confidence of the Catholic clergy and had thereby deliberately exposed them to their enemies. I mentioned these circumstances to you on the telephone yesterday morning and we agreed that I should turn the papers back to you.

Mr. [B.M.] Williams in this Division is familiar with the file. If you do decide to inform the Poles concerning the source of the other claims to the treasure, I would be grateful if you would let me know in Paris, since Lachs of the Polish Foreign Office may be there, and he will certainly raise the question with me.

R.G. RIDDELL

1071.

DEA/837-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

[Ottawa], September 14, 1948

RE POLISH ART TREASURES

The Polish Minister and Dr. Bielski came to see the Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, this morning. Mr. Mayrand was present at the interview.

2. Mr. Milnikiel explained that the Polish Government has asked the Legation to ship on the Sobieski the Polish treasures which were found at the Experimental Farm and remitted to the Polish Legation in 1946. The Sobieski will call at Halifax on Sunday, September 19th.

3. These treasures are contained in 3 boxes and 2 trunks. Moreover, the Polish Legation would like to take this opportunity to ship the personal belongings of two officers of the Legation who are to leave Canada next month: Dr. Bielski and Mr. Zalewski. Dr. Bielski's luggage will consist of some 10 boxes, whereas that of Mr. Zalewski (who has resided in Canada for many years) will probably consist of 20 boxes and 1 trunk.

4. The Polish Legation desires to send all these boxes and trunks by truck from Sparks Movers, which would leave Ottawa on Thursday morning, September 16th, in order to reach Halifax on Saturday the 18th.

5. Mr. Milnikiel did not conceal his apprehension that the Quebec authorities might endeavour to seize the Polish treasures involved, if they knew that they were passing through the Province.

6. In order to prevent the possibility of any difficulty at Halifax, the Polish Legation suggested that a Customs official might inspect all the luggage and seal every piece of it before it goes. Mr. Milnikiel even suggested that the seal might be affixed on the truck and that a Customs officer might travel on it to Halifax, at the expense of the Legation.

7. Mr. Mayrand has called upon the Deputy Minister of National Revenue, who has agreed to send a Customs officer to examine and seal the luggage as well as the truck. Mr. Sim will also give confidential notification to the authorities at Halifax, in order that the effects may go on board without further examination there. These arrangements are not exorbitant and could be made in favour of any other mission which would request them from the Department of National Revenue.

E. R[EID]

1072.

DEA/837-40

*Note du chef de la Direction européenne
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

Memorandum from Head, European Division, to Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

[Ottawa], September 28, 1948

RE POLISH TREASURES

When the Polish Minister came to see you on September 14th, he raised two accessory questions which, you said, we would examine. These questions concerned (1) the preservation of the Polish treasures now in the custody of the Quebec Government, and (2) the disclosure of the names of such persons or bodies which have filed counter-claim for these treasures.

2. For a summary of the facts, I may refer you to the attached draft memoranda dated September 18th† and 16th,† which were prepared by Mr. [E.H.] Gilmour on these two questions.

I. Preservation of the Treasures

3. Regarding the question of preservation, I am afraid it would be politically inadvisable to approach the Quebec Government with a view to organizing a multi-lateral inspection of the treasures, as Mr. Gilmour suggests. The occasion might be seized by Mr. Duplessis as one for further unnecessary and disagreeable publicity, and I do not think that such an inspection would actually take place.

4. Mr. Milnikiel has proposed that Mr. Zalewski be authorized to inspect himself the treasures before his departure for Poland, next month. This, in my opinion, would be refused by the Quebec Government if we raised the question officially and directly.

5. In the circumstances, it seems to me that the best we could do just now might be to ascertain what steps are actually being taken in Quebec towards the preservation of the treasures, and to inform the Polish Legation of the situation. I happen to have a very good friend in the person of the Assistant Under-Secretary of the Province, Mr. Jean Bruchési. I could approach him on a purely personal and confidential basis, and I am sure that nothing would be made public. I could even ask him, always confidentially, whether the Quebec Government would not allow Mr. Zalewski to see the treasures without it being known, for the sole purpose of his giving the Quebec curators the benefit of his advice on the question of preservation.

II. Disclosure of Counter-claims

6. It would obviously be delicate to disclose the counter-claim of the Archbishop of Cracow at present. On the other hand, it is undesirable to leave things as they are. Insofar as international law is concerned, it is clear to me that we must try positively to settle with the Polish Government, whatever our relations with a particular Province happen to be.

7. Since counter-claims have been made by (1) Mr. Babinski, etc., and (2) the Apostolic Delegate, on behalf of the Archbishop of Cracow, I submit that the first thing to do is to ask these people to furnish detailed lists of the objects which they claim. When we have the lists, we might ask them to agree formally to the release of the non-listed articles as belonging to the Polish State. In a memorandum on file dated December 3rd, 1947,† I find that in September of that year, the Polish authorities expressed their complete unwillingness to negotiate in any way with the representatives of the ex-Polish régime. From a general conversation which I had with Mr. Milnikiel in the course of a reception, a few days ago, I understand that he would now be willing to negotiate on a basis of this sort.

8. Once the Poles would agree among themselves, at least over part of the treasures — the Quebec Government would no doubt release such articles as would cease to be under litigation. Indeed, the Quebec Government would probably say that its action had prevented an injustice from being committed and brought the happy outcome.

III. Conclusion

9. Since Mr. Zalewski will be leaving soon, I should like to receive authorization to go to Quebec and discuss the matter with Mr. Bruchési at his home, during a week-end. Afterwards, in the light of my conversation with Mr. Bruchési, we might initiate the correspondence with Mr. Babinski and the Apostolic Delegate, as outlined above.<sup>18</sup>

LÉON MAYRAND

1073.

DEA/837-40

*Le chargé d'affaires en Pologne
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chargé d'Affaires in Poland
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

DESPATCH 627

Warsaw, October 21, 1948

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to state that Dr. Leszczynski, chief of the American Affairs Division of the Foreign Ministry, in an informal conversation with me to-day, referred again to the vexatious question of the Polish Art Treasures. He said that for well over a year the situation has been an impasse; and now that Mr. Duplessis had been reelected with a strong majority the possibilities of a solution were worse. Dr. Leszczynski was under increasing pressure of the Polish Government to solve the question or cut the Gordian knot. He felt he would have to take some determined

<sup>18</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

No action was taken on this memorandum. L. M[ayrand] and very positive action. Neither Dr. Fiderkiewicz nor Mr. Milnikiel had been able to make any headway; and it was likely that the Foreign Minister, Mr. Modzelewski, while in Paris, would raise the question, both in Assembly discussions, and with the senior Canadian representatives. It was becoming more essential that some positive action should be taken to settle the problem.

2. I emphasized the lack of jurisdiction of the Canadian Government in the matter, except through the Courts, and the constitutional inability of the Federal Government to interfere with acts of a provincial Government. Dr. Leszczynski said that this was a matter of "external relations", and therefore was within the exclusive and supreme competence of the Federal Government, even over the provincial Governments. The Polish authorities seem entirely reluctant to pursue the matter through the Canadian Courts.

3. I remarked that all the Canadian Government authorities concerned were sympathetic with the Polish difficulties of a solution, and would be glad to see the matter acceptably settled. But no new suggestions were made in this conversation. No reference was made to the shipment of boxes by the SS "Sobieski".

4. It is not unlikely that a new drive will be made on the matter; but I cannot say in what manner. Dr. Leszczynski feels that some strong action must be taken to end the impasse.

I have etc.

K.P. KIRKWOOD

1074.

DEA/837-40

*Note du chef de la Direction européenne
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

Memorandum from Head, European Division, to Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

[Ottawa], October 22, 1948

RE POLISH TREASURES

With reference to your memorandum of October 16th,† I did see Mr. Jean-Marie Gauvreau<sup>19</sup> in Montreal on the 21st October. I made it clear that I approached him in a purely personal and confidential manner, explained the problem of preservation about which I was concerned, and left with him a copy of our press release of March 4th, 1948, together with a clipping from La Presse of September 25th, 1948 (a copy of which is attached hereto).†

2. Mr. Gauvreau admitted that the matter was very "explosive" and promised to be extremely cautious in his proceedings. He said that Mr. Duplessis was exerting more and more direct control of everything and anticipated that it would be difficult to secure any authentic information except through the Premier's office.

3. I suggested to Mr. Gauvreau that he might:

<sup>19</sup> De/Of "École du meuble".

(1) endeavour to secure information as to the steps which have so far been taken with a view to preserving the treasures; and

(2) if there is need for it, that he might enlist the cooperation of a few friends who would raise the question of preservation with the Quebec Government for the pure sake of art.

4. Mr. Gauvreau said it may take some time before he is in a position to conclude this enquiry. He will probably begin by talking with his good friend Mr. Gérard Morisset, who is the head of the artistic patrimony of Quebec. In this capacity, Mr. Morisset may well have been present when the treasures were examined the last time.

5. In order to protect Mr. Gauvreau whose École du Meuble comes under the Quebec Government, I think it would be advisable not to leave any correspondence relative to his benevolent intervention on file.

LÉON MAYRAND

6<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 6

ESPAGNE

SPAIN

1075.

DEA/9939-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

[Ottawa], March 8, 1948

METEOROLOGICAL SERVICES: PROPOSED NEGOTIATIONS WITH SPAIN

The Consul-General of Spain, on February 26th, sent a note suggesting that the Canadian Government start negotiations with the Spanish Government with a view to arriving at a bilateral agreement on these services.

The Controller of the Canadian Meteorological Services was consulted and advised that from a technical point of view this bilateral agreement would serve no useful purpose since the receipt of meteorological information is on a regional basis. From a political point of view it is very possible that a bilateral agreement of this sort between Canada and the Spanish Government could be regarded as an evasion of the resolution of the General Assembly on Spain and of the Constitution of the World Meteorological Organization.

For these reasons, it has been considered impracticable to accept the proposal of the Consul-General of Spain. A note declining the invitation is attached for your signature, if you agree.<sup>20</sup>

L.B. P[EARSON]

7<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 7
UNION SOVIÉTIQUE
SOVIET UNION

SECTION A
VUES SUR L'URSS
ASSESSMENTS OF THE USSR

1076.

DEA/2-AE (S)

*Le chargé d'affaires en Union soviétique
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chargé d'Affaires in Soviet Union
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

Moscow, February 10, 1948

Dear Mr. Pearson:

There are several aspects of the Soviet attitude towards the United States as it appears in the press, which I find puzzling. As the Soviet calculation of United States policy may be the single most important fact determining whether or not there is to be a war, it seems important to come to the right conclusions. I need not bore you with a general description of Soviet comment concerning life in the United States and the policies of the United States Government. Suffice it to say that this comment has reached a pitch of hysteria which could scarcely be raised. It is no exaggeration to say that virtually every article in the Soviet daily press and in Soviet journals is either devoted to a full attack on the United States or given an anti-American twist. Every United States policy is described as unscrupulous, and every aspect of American life is described as decadent and depraved. Although the Americans are not yet "cannibals", the language used to describe them is now almost as strong as that used about the Germans in 1941. Whether the writers of these articles believe all they say or merely wish to delude Soviet citizens into believing that they live in the best of all possible worlds is a question which I do not propose to answer at the moment. For one reason or the other there is an obvious intention of persuading the Soviet citizen that he is in grave danger of aggressive attack from American imperialism.

<sup>20</sup> Saint-Laurent donna son accord.
St. Laurent agreed.

What puzzles me is the exception to this picture of American depravity provided by Henry Wallace and the Progressive Citizens of America. It is not surprising that the Soviet press has a certain fondness for Mr. Wallace, but I do not understand their reason for making such a tremendous fuss over him. From the day on which he announced his intention to establish a third party he has been front-page news in the Moscow press. The impression given is that the workers, the liberals, the down-trodden masses, the genuine American people, are devoted to Henry Wallace, but they are prevented from expressing their will by a small clique in Wall Street and Washington. This is familiar stuff. The question, however, is why does the Soviet Union wish its citizens to overestimate so grossly the "progressive" forces in the United States? If their present attitude to the Western powers is primarily intended, as is sometimes suggested, to spur the Soviet worker into greater activity, why let him think that there may be a revolution shortly in the United States and an end to the Truman doctrine?

Perhaps the explanation is simpler — the Soviet press merely wants to give a hand to a friend. If so, do they not realise that the applause of Pravda is for Henry Wallace the kiss of death? Is it possible that their intentions are still more devious? It was sometimes suggested that their purpose last November in France was to force a Right Wing Government on the country so that they might later exploit the reaction against it. Perhaps by the same process of reasoning they are pleased about Wallace's decision, because they think that it will result in the election of a Republican President, Rightist reaction and a capitalist explosion.

I find myself tempted to wonder if there is not more ignorance than calculation involved in Soviet policy towards the United States. The Swedish Ambassador, Mr. Sohlman, who is, I think, wise and well-informed, told me that when he was at the recent United Nations Assembly, he used, when he was listening to Vyshinski, to wonder whether Vyshinski really did want to prevent the Marshall Plan from being accepted by Congress, because he was so obviously going out of his way to make its adoption certain. However, both at Lake Success and after he returned to Moscow, Mr. Sohlman talked this matter over with some of his friends in the satellite countries and also a few Russians, and he was now convinced that the Russians simply do not realise the effect their speeches are having on American opinion. It seems to me not impossible that the leaders here, misled by their own doctrines and by their own misreporting of events in the United States, seriously thought at first that Wallace might have some success. At present they admit that Wallace will probably not be elected President, but their pessimism came after the defection of some of his former supporters. The only frank statement on the subject which I have seen was the remark made by a lecturer in the Institute of History of the Academy of Sciences several weeks ago. After lecturing on American expansionism, Mr. Zubok was asked what he thought were Wallace's chances at the forthcoming elections. His reply was as follows:

"A study of American history shows us no positive results for any third party even with a popular and progressive leader — take for example the case of La Follette in 1924. The appearance of a new party may influence the platforms of the other parties. The USA is fast becoming fascist. The greatest evil of all would be Eisenhower. I, personally, think a victory for Wallace very unlikely."

This answer is, of course, a personal opinion, but one need have no doubt that it reflects an authorised view. An open recognition that Wallace will not be elected is not to be found in the public press, but the reader is being prepared for his failure. The tone of current comment may be judged from the following quotation from an article in Pravda of 2nd February on the "Progressive Citizens of America":

"To judge from everything the Progressive Citizens of America soberly appraise the prospects of the unequal struggle at the forthcoming presidential elections. They are aware of the fact that the parties of Wall Street, commanding the apparatus of the state and possessing unlimited financial opportunities and a powerful propaganda machine, can still control a majority of votes. At the same time, however, progressive forces in the USA are boldly throwing down the challenge to their enemies in the knowledge that only in the harsh struggle with them will they acquire the necessary tempering and experience needed in the future."

I should like very tentatively to suggest consideration of the possibility that there is something of a crisis of confidence in their own theories among Soviet officials. Such a suggestion may be labelled ingenuous, but I think it is at least one possible explanation of some of the things which are happening here. The doctrine which is repeated endlessly is, of course, that imperialism is the final stage of capitalism on the eve of revolution. The United States, having reached this advanced stage of monopoly-capitalist imperialism, is certain to enter into a stage of acute depression. In the capitalist system booms are always followed by depressions. It has confidently been predicted for several years by Stalinists that the extraordinary war and immediate post-war boom in the United States would be followed by a devastating depression with greater unemployment than has ever been experienced before. Many intelligent observers have considered that Soviet policy during the past year has been based on the belief that they need be in no hurry to consolidate their gains in the form of final peace settlements, because in a very short time the depression will have set in in the United States, capitalist prestige will be lowered, American aid to Europe will cease, and the American people will again become isolationist. Whether the inscrutable ones in the Kremlin really believe this theory cannot, of course, be proved. Nevertheless, if the vast majority of Soviet citizens, including most of the "intelligentsia", do not believe this theory, they are much more sceptical of the propaganda fed to them than has usually been assumed. Unfortunately, however, for these theorists, the facts are not in accordance with what they predicted. The War has been over almost three years, and there is no sign of depression or serious unemployment in the United States. It is true that because of inflation the economy of the United States is not entirely healthy, but this is a different disease from what was expected. Even if the higher-ups are not surprised, the Soviet citizen must be getting a little impatient. What explanation is to be offered him if a depression does not come in the United States, and what is to be the alternative Soviet Policy in the light of unexpected circumstances?

At present the Soviet authorities seem to be grasping at any sign that the trend towards depression has set in. There has been a good sample of this wishful thinking in the past few days when the papers have featured exciting reports from New York about a drop in grain prices, which is said to have caused great alarm, about the inevitability of an economic crisis. The Washington authorities are said to be really worried about how to stop the fall, not the rise, of prices. We have not yet had an objective report of what has taken place in New York, but as I note that President Truman on February 5th emphasised the need of controls to halt the rise in prices, I take for granted that the Moscow interpretation is, to say the least, distorted. This anxiety to find signs of depression and unemployment has led also to an interest in Canadian developments. A good sample of the objectivity of the Soviet press is the fact that the same figures of unemployment emphasised in recent Canadian official statements because they are the lowest in history, have been torn from their context to prove to the Soviet reader that unemployment is, in fact, widespread in Canada.

There is a relevant argument going on in more learned circles at the moment. Some of the Soviet economists who have not completely abandoned scientific methods have been publishing examinations of recent economic developments in the United States and other countries. Although most of us would consider these Communist authors to be orthodox enough in their interpretations of capitalist developments, they have, in fact, been describing phenomena which were not foreseen by Marx or even Lenin. In particular, these economists have been describing the way in which in the United States the state planned and organised war production. They have been describing also the changes which have been taking place in the structure of capitalism, and emphasizing what has been called the "managerial revolution". They indicate a transformation of capitalism which contradicts the Stalinist-Leninist line because it indicates that the people, through the state, can control and plan their economy even in an admittedly capitalist country. They have shown, without venturing to underline the fact, that the power of Wall Street is by no means unlimited. For sowing these dangerous doubts in the minds of Soviet citizens, the counter-attack of orthodoxy has been swift and ruthless. It is not a caricature of the criticism of these economists to say that they have been accused primarily of coming to conclusions on the basis of the evidence rather than on the basis of the predictions of Stalin and Lenin twenty-five years ago. In the third paragraph of my letter to you of January 31st,† I quoted a sample of this kind of comment in criticism of the economist Varga. Varga has been the principal victim, possibly because he has undoubtedly been the best Soviet economist. What has, in fact, happened to him, is clothed in secrecy, but he has almost certainly been removed from his position by the closing down of the Institute of World Economy and World Politics, of which he was the head.

A further sample of the intolerance of the authorities is to be found in a long article in the magazine Bolshevik of 15th December, entitled "A Vicious Book on the United States Industry." This article attacks a book by M. Bakshitski entitled Technical-Economic Changes in United States Industry during the Second World War. This book was published also by the heretical Institute of World Economy and World Politics. The author is accused of blindly following prejudiced American authors, accepting United States official statistics, eulogising the technical and organizational changes in the industry of the United States, and of failing to expose to a sufficient degree the aggressive policy of American capital and the mad aim of American imperialism to attain world domination. "Unfortunately", says the reviewer, "instead of a Marxist analysis of the reactionary rôle of the monopoly companies, instead of a scientific analysis of the general crisis of capitalism, some Soviet economists are following the path of bourgeois methodology providing anti-scientific 'studies' on 'technical-economic changes' in capitalist industry. Such, for instance, is M. Bakshitski's book, which contradicts the chief propositions of Marxism-Leninism on imperialism. Instead of giving a serious analysis of the contradictions of American imperialism, Bakshitski describes the technical-economic 'changes' in United States industry, uncritically quoting the lying inventions of bourgeois literature. His book is imbued with obsequiousness to bourgeois culture and technique.

"In defiance of the requirements of Marxism-Leninism, the author examines the economy in isolation from politics: this means that he slurs over the principal contradictions of American imperialism — first and foremost, the conflict of interests between labour and capital. The book fails circumstantially to disclose that economic 'advances' in capitalist conditions result in the intensification of oppression on the part of the monopoly companies, it fails duly to expose the growth of anarchy of production and the aggravation of all the contradictions of imperialism. Bakshitski presents the capitalist economy of the United States in a rosy light.

"Proceeding from the erroneous view that the American wartime economy was imbued with a spirit of collaboration between the capitalists, Bakshitski describes the 'collaboration' and 'mutual aid' between the chief and subsidiary suppliers and associated producers, but says nothing of the main thing — the furious competition, the absorption and ruin of medium and small 'suppliers' by the big monopoly companies.

"The book wrongly describes the development of specialisation and co-operation in American industry. Bakshitski presents matters as if American capitalism were able to set up and co-ordinate the uninterrupted and organised work of a wide network of specialised and co-operated enterprises throughout the country. The book represents the United States capitalist economy as an organised production organism working according to plan.

"A two-page table inserted in the book advertises the mobility of American industry, blindly citing hundreds of figures from the eulogistic report of the United States War Production Board. The author does not even make an attempt to analyse the data taken from bourgeois sources. He by-passes the most acute contradictions, major failures and other significant phenomena that have taken place in the course of the mobilisation of American industry.

"The author wrongly explains the reasons for the delay in war reconstruction of industry and the sabotage of war production on the part of American monopoly companies. When dealing with this question, the author, as in other instances, overlooks the main thing — namely the reactionary aims of the American monopoly companies in the war and their efforts to prolong it, not only in order to get rid of their rivals in the markets (Germany, Japan) and attain world domination, but also to weaken the USSR."

These quotations are, I think, sufficient evidence of the fury which is being loosed on those who suggest that the explosion of American capitalism will not take place as predicted. It may be said that all this is propaganda intended to remove dangerous thoughts from the minds of Soviet citizens, and that it does not necessarily reflect in any way the views on world events of the directors of Soviet policy. If it is only propaganda, then one can only say that it may be as dangerous as the Nazi leaders' predictions that no bombs would fall on Berlin. The fact is that Messrs. Varga and Bakshitski are a good deal closer to the truth than those who denounce them. The truth can be hidden from Soviet citizens pretty successfully, but it is going to be hard to invent a full-scale United States depression which does not take place. There is something frenzied about these assertions of faith in Marx, Lenin, and Stalin. They could be interpreted as the shrill cries of those who are afraid to believe that what they have always considered fundamental truth may be error. The Soviet revolution does seem to have reached the inquisition stage. No deviation whatsoever is to be permitted in thinking, in science, economics or art. Orthodoxy is so severe that the faithful are even denouncing each other. The present phase of the Soviet state is frequently compared with the Counter-Reformation, but it lacks the heroic quality of the latter movement. The intellectual level of discussion seems to me about the same as the arguments between proper Mennonites and Amish Mennonites as to whether God prescribed the wearing of buttons or hooks-and-eyes. My knowledge of Russian history is not thorough, but I should think the obscurantism of the new orthodoxy has much in common with that of the "Old Believers" who resisted the Greek reforms in the Church in the 17th century — and who still stubbornly and hostilely practise their rites in Moscow. Is it possible that Soviet education and terror has produced a race of intellectual pygmies so soon? It would be going far to say so, but it is depressing to compare the ignorant, irrational, at best sophomoric, discussions which now appear in the best economic journals with the scope and logic of Lenin.

Before concluding this letter I should, of course, make one further reservation: perhaps the orthodox are right and there will be a devastating depression in the United States.

I am sending a copy of this letter to the High Commissioner in London.

Yours sincerely,

J.W. HOLMES

1077.

DEA/52-F (S)

*Le deuxième secrétaire au haut-commissariat au Royaume-Uni
au sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures*

Second Secretary, High Commission in United Kingdom, to Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET

London, February 26, 1948

Dear Mr. Reid,

I have just read the memorandum entitled "Influences Shaping the Policy of the United States Towards the Soviet Union",<sup>†21</sup> prepared in the Embassy in Washington, which you forwarded under cover of a letter of the 17th January to the High Commissioner.† I was impressed by the striking similarity which I see between many of these influences in the United States and the influences shaping Soviet policy towards the United States. I should like in this letter to offer a few comments for what they are worth, not as criticism, but rather as amplification of the memorandum.

The memo states that inexperience is partly responsible for several noticeable United States characteristics in international affairs, leading to abnormal sensitivity, among other things. This is combined with the habit of indulging in moral indignation over the machinations of imperial ambitions of other powers. This combination of inexperience and self-righteousness in international affairs does not make it any easier for the United States to see the point of view of others.

I think very much of the above would also apply to the Soviet Union. Certainly inexperience in international affairs leads to many of the diplomatic mistakes made by Moscow. This is combined with a very great shortage of qualified diplomats. But it is not just a question of shortage of individuals but a lack of experience of the outside world on the part of the leaders of the country, which is infinitely greater comparably than the lack of knowledge shown in the United States by the public and statesmen alike. Similarly the history of Soviet diplomacy up to 1939 permitted her to indulge in the same kind of moral indignation over European imperialisms as the United States. Abnormal sensitivity is also undoubtedly one of the supreme characteristics of the Soviet conduct of affairs. Whether there is the same justification as in the United States is probably irrelevant.

If there is a blinding, unbalanced fear and hatred of Russia and Communism in the United States, there is a similar fear of the United States and capitalism in the Soviet Union. There is not the same hatred among the people, but that is rapidly being rectified by the Soviet press. Furthermore, if the United States fear of attack seems exaggerated when she is the richest, most powerful and strategically most favourably situated nation in the world, similarly the Soviet Union's fear of attack seems equally psychopathic in view of her immense territory and war-time acquisitions. But this psychology does exist in both capitals.

<sup>21</sup> Voir le volume 13, la pièce jointe 2 du document 243.

See Volume 13, enclosure 2, Document 243.

In paragraph 17, the memo says that ignorance of history heightens United States difficulties in international affairs. I should say that the same applies in Russia, except that it is not necessarily an ignorance of history, but rather a distortion of history which prevents a true picture of international events being reached. There is probably also a definite distortion of events abroad presented to the Politburo by their foreign representatives who often send only stories which jibe with what they know their bosses want to hear. The recent fate of Professor Varga is a fair example of what happens if you don't.

In paragraph 18, it is stated that the danger of under-estimating the attachment of other nations to their own culture and institutions, while over-estimating the sales value of the American way of life, is also wrapped up in these influences. I think this would also definitely apply to the Soviet Union, and has been, in fact, one of their headaches in Eastern Europe. Combined with this is an unrealistic attachment to the belief in the international solidarity of the proletariat, a credo which dies hard.

If many of the influences shaping United States and Soviet policy vis-à-vis each other are in many respects similar, the problem of effecting a reconciliation in the relations of the two countries becomes that much more difficult. A Frenchman or Englishman can detect these influences and make allowances for them. I should think it much more difficult for an American or Russian.

I should be grateful to know if you think there is any validity in these suggestions.

Yours sincerely,

R.A.D. FORD

P.S. Isn't the statement that the foreign policy of the USSR can be "damned practically in toto" assuming a rather unorthodox basis for the critical examination of foreign policies? From the point of view of advancing Soviet interests I don't think Soviet foreign policy has been entirely unsuccessful. We can condemn it from the point of view of our own interests, of world peace, or of some international code in the conduct of foreign relations; we may not like Soviet foreign policy from any of these viewpoints, but I don't think we can necessarily damn it in toto. But perhaps this is quibbling.

1078.

DEA/2-AE (S)

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au chargé d'affaires en Union soviétique*

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Chargé d'Affaires in Soviet Union

SECRET

Ottawa, March 30, 1948

Dear Mr. Holmes:

I was very interested to read your analysis of the Soviet view of the United States as given in your letter of February 10th. The problem you have raised is a fundamental one and it is probable that no simple explanation would be adequate.

Whether there is, among Soviet leaders, a crisis of confidence in their theories or whether they are themselves misled by these theories is difficult to judge with certainty. I personally feel that the Soviet leaders are so confined within the strait-jacket of their Marxist-Leninist-Stalinist dogma that they can see no fact which is not coloured and distorted by it. It is in the nature of an organic, totalitarian society that the truth or rightness of a thing lies in its being willed to be true (and not, as in western society, which is based on the cultural inheritance of the western scientific method, in whether the new fact or development objectively verifies or alters the existing pattern of society in accordance with the free play of independent forces). This organic theme runs through Nineteenth Century German philosophy particularly Fichte and Hegel (in which Marxism has its roots). In Communist theory there is no fact or development within Communist society which does not fulfil a Communist purpose; and there is no fact or development outside the Communist society in the non-Communist world which is not intrinsically seen as the negation and the proof-of-the-rightness of the Communist creed.

To ask for a formal objective assessment of facts from the Soviet leaders is therefore to ask for something which is repudiated by the faith which they profess. If Communists were to view facts in this way they would have to renounce the basic tenet of their theory, i.e. the organic, dialectical view of life.

If communism could evolve and be less rigid, if it could view facts objectively, if it could, to take the phrase from the article in the Bolshevik, examine "the economy in isolation from politics" i.e. not coloured by Marxist dialectic, its high-priests in the Soviet Politburo would have been able to evolve a more successful and pliable post-war policy and would probably have made far less enemies in the three years since the war ended.

There does not appear, however, to be much evidence that the Soviet leaders are conscious of the re-action which their policy produces in the outside world or that they take such re-action into account in formulating their tactics or altering their theory. As you mention, they do not appear to realize that their support of Henry Wallace can do him no service with the United States public. Nor do they realize that the tactics of their representatives in the United Nations only serve to increase the determination of other states to oppose any Soviet proposals. They did not realize that the attempt to destroy the Marshall Plan in Western Europe by strikes aimed at dislocating the whole national economy of each of the western European states (especially France and Italy) could only lead to the formation of governments which could claim to safeguard the national interest; similarly, that the pressure on Iran could not but lead that country to orient itself towards states which did not threaten its national sovereignty. In the Soviet view, the struggle is a clearcut one between capitalism and the proletariat and all other problems have their roots in this economic conflict. In attacking capitalism, therefore, they fail to take into account the many other factors which form part of a nation's heritage, because, from their vantage point, such factors are but superficial manifestations of the underlying dialectic which is economic in its nature. Their view of the possibility of an economic depression in the United States might be interpreted in the same way. The Communist system demands that United States development be viewed as an ever-increasing exploitation of labour by capital. Orthodox Communist theory cannot take into account the influence of other factors on United States development — the free play of political and cultural forces and especially the re-action which Communist tactics throughout the world themselves produce, namely that if the national sovereignty of the United States is to be safeguarded no depression can be allowed to occur and economic activity must be guided by wider considerations of national survival.

The matter is certainly far more complex than I have made it out to be. But I venture the opinion that Soviet policy is not so much cleverly contrived as it is rigid, and that, though the Soviet leaders may be governed, in any particular instance, by considerations of expediency, their world strategy is bound and stultified — as is their domestic cultural policy — by the dogmatic tenets of the faith by which they are enslaved.

Yours sincerely,

L.B. PEARSON

1079.

W.L.M.K./J1/Vol. 438

*Le chargé d'affaires en Union soviétique
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chargé d'Affaires in Soviet Union
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Moscow, April 9, 1948

Dear Mr. Pearson:

Since we are obviously facing an extremely tense period in international relations, it may prove useful to you if I endeavour to assess the probable direction of Soviet policy as seen from this post. During the weeks since the Czech coup the United Kingdom and United States Embassies have been working to produce reports on this subject, and they have been good enough to let me keep in close touch with them at all stages. The United Kingdom report has taken the form of several despatches confined largely to political factors. The United States Embassy has, on the other hand, produced an exhaustive J.I.C. report analysing political, economic, and military factors. I have had the opportunity of reading all these reports and discussing them at length with Mr. Harrison, the United Kingdom Minister, and with General [Walter Bedell] Smith and his Counsellor, Mr. Durbrow. I did not wish, of course, to take notes on these highly confidential documents which I read in the Embassies, but it may be that they will come to your attention through other channels. What I propose to do in this letter is to outline the general nature of the argument. It is easier to do this in that, working quite independently, the two Embassies have come to substantially the same conclusions. Although my qualifications for expressing any views are considerably more limited, I might add that the conclusions are very much in accordance with my own thinking. You will find, I think, that there is nothing particularly novel in them except, perhaps, a sense of urgency.

Both the United States and United Kingdom interpretations are based on an acceptance of the view that the Soviet leaders consider inevitable a struggle between the "socialist" world led by the U.S.S.R. and the "anti-socialist" world led by the U.S.A. For them it is merely a question of when this will take place. The Soviet leaders could have tried friendly co-operation with their erstwhile allies, but they have deliberately turned their back on this policy. Since the beginning of 1946 all authoritative statements have made it indubitably clear that there would be a return, after the wartime honeymoon, to the basic principles of Lenin and Stalin on relations with capitalist-imperialist states. Both Embassies agree, however, that the U.S.S.R. do not want to provoke a shooting-war until they have exhausted all their other tactics. They are not likely to want deliberately to provoke a shooting-war in the immediate future because for a number of reasons they expect to be in a better position in several years to sustain a hard fight. On the other hand they have relative advantages at the moment over their opponents which may be dissipated if they wait too long. Herein lies the immediate danger. If the Russians come to the conclusion that their cold methods will achieve no more success in the West and that the West is beginning to consolidate its strength so that it will become invincible, then they may take the decision to strike while their striking force is still much greater than that of their opponents. The decision as to whether or not to resort to war is under constant review. Because their recovery is still far from complete and because they have by no means used up all their other tricks, it is not likely that the Russians would deliberately start a war in 1948. It is more likely that they would do so in a year or two years' time.

The Soviet armies could occupy Europe to the Atlantic coast in a few weeks. Their army consists of about 3,000,000 men, including about 400,000 M.V.D.<sup>22</sup> forces, but this could be increased to ten or twenty millions in several months. The air force is large but lacking in long-range bombers and bases. The navy has been developed, but it is hardly likely to be a serious opponent of the U.S. or British navies, although it might be able to exploit some of the later German submarine models. Whatever limitations these forces may have, they could not find adequate opposition to stop them in Europe now. Holding what they had conquered would, of course, be another matter. The Russians cannot be unaware of the formidable resistance they would meet in endeavouring to hold a continent, nor of the contamination their troops would suffer from such contact with a much higher standard of living. The Russians could not yet attack the United States or anywhere in North America except Alaska and possibly parts of Northern Canada. However, it would be, in General Smith's view, a year and a half to two years before the U.S. could assemble sufficient forces to launch a major offensive to liberate Europe. During this period the U.S.S.R. would have had an opportunity to exploit the conquered resources of Europe. The U.S. Embassy has no doubt, however, that because of their lack of technical capacity and the political problems they would face, the Russians could not possibly make as good use of that period as the Americans themselves. They have no doubts of their capacity to defeat the Russians eventually, but <sup>22</sup> Ministère des Affaires intérieures.

---

Ministry of Internal Affairs.

the effort required would be tremendous and there are some doubts as to whether their own people and their European allies would stand the strain.

The Americans do not underestimate the capacities of the U.S.S.R. for operations of at least a limited kind, although the British perhaps take a less rosy view of the Soviet economy. Soviet resources the Americans estimate to have reached a level slightly below that of 1940-41, but well above that of 1942-43 with lend-lease supplies included. The economy is unevenly developed, of course. Being well dispersed it is less vulnerable, but the dispersion on the other hand accentuates the grave problem of transport, which is the most serious bottleneck in Soviet production. (It is interesting to note throughout the U.S. memorandum great respect for the monolithic nature of the Soviet economy, and the strength the Soviet rulers derive from their absolute control over all production, as compared with the difficulties Washington would face in recreating its war-production machine — an attitude which would be of great interest to Mr. Varga and his critics). The economy, however, will be in a much better position to sustain a war in several years' time, after the completion of the current Five Year Plan and the further exploitation of the industrial resources and technical developments of Eastern Europe, not to mention, of course, those of Eastern Germany. It is believed that the Soviet economists would certainly recommend delay to the political leaders. As for agriculture, the U.S. Embassy consider this country to be in good shape to sustain a war. It is believed that they must have reserve stores of food; production is on a considerable scale, and the prospects for future crops are good. On the other hand, it is doubtful if the Russians could feed Europe well enough to keep it submissive. Furthermore, their agricultural surpluses are perhaps their most powerful short-of-war weapon, and their existence may be a further argument for continuing this kind of struggle.

As for the question of popular support for a war policy, there are many considerations. There cannot be much doubt that the Soviet people do not want a war and that there is a good deal of apathy and cynicism in the country. Such is the complete control of Soviet propaganda, however, that the people could probably be whipped up to another great effort — particularly by an appeal to their Russian patriotism. The fact that the war would probably begin with easy victories would have a considerable effect on morale. Nevertheless the morale of the country would probably be better after a couple of years in which the people had enjoyed a few more fruits of their own produce. This breathing-space is even more necessary in order to bring the satellite states into shape. The Soviet leaders realise the strength of the opposition in all the satellite countries and the need for it to be systematically reduced by the new regimes. A little post-war prosperity at home might also improve the attitude of the dissident elements in the Union itself. Even though it is unwise to think of an organised opposition in this country, one cannot forget how many Soviet citizens rallied to the Germans when they had a chance. There is a bitter and desperate spirit of resistance to the regime among the non-Russian peoples, particularly along the Western frontier from the Ukraine to the Baltic States.

As for the immediate prospects, everyone seems agreed that very much depends on the Italian elections, the results of which will probably be known by the time this letter reaches you. If the Popular Front get over 40% of the votes, whether or not they get into the Government, it is considered that the Soviet policy will be one of intensified cold war in the West. Their principal aim will be to prevent the success of the Marshall Plan by industrial and civil disturbances. Successes of this kind, the U.S. Embassy think, will be infectious in France. In both France and Italy it is considered that one of the gravest dangers is the outbreak of civil war, provoked perhaps as much by right-wing as by left-wing extremists. (The Embassy takes what may be an unnecessarily despondent view of the situation in France, an attitude which is due to some extent at least to General Smith's own prejudices, the historical origins of which are not hard to seek.) The Americans see Soviet strategy as designed to proceed through Italy to France and up into the Low Countries, thus leaving Greece well isolated in the first stage and Western Germany in a later stage. General Smith thinks it likely the next step after the Italian election is the firmer establishment of an Eastern German government in Leipzig — unless the Allies can be driven out of Berlin. He doubts, however, if they will put special pressure on Western Germany when they can hope to isolate it. With all these possibilities of cold action, both Embassies seem to doubt if the Soviet leaders are likely to consider it necessary in the immediate future to try for a sudden decision. They will probably want to wait, at least until they see how E.R.P. is getting along.

In these calculations the situation in Asia cannot be left out of account. Here the prospects of success without direct military intervention are so promising that they might well affect over-all Soviet policy. The Russians are not likely to turn away from Europe to concentrate on Asia — at least not yet — but they will continue to apply pressure round their whole periphery. Hence the renewed though relatively mild pressure on Iran, considerably increased interest and a more decisive policy in India and in South-East Asia generally. As for China and Korea, the chances of development are obviously good, and the Chinese Communist party is a strong and capable ally. The Americans think that the chosen instrument of Soviet policy in Japan is the Japanese Communist Party rather than diplomatic negotiations over a peace treaty.

The dilemma at the moment seems to be that although the consolidation of the economic, political and military strength of the democratic countries is of urgent importance, the determination with which it is done may provoke the Russians into action while they retain their present advantages. It seems unlikely, however, that they will underestimate their prospects in a cold war. Even, if their party receives a reverse in Italy, they have all of Asia, the Middle East, and Africa to work on and their agents are already active. What is more, there is the prospect of capitalist collapse to count on. How seriously the Politburo take their own propaganda about the immediate collapse of monopoly-capitalism is a matter of much dispute here. They are probably not as simple-minded as their propaganda suggests, but they almost certainly do over-estimate both the prospects of a depression in the United States and the strength of the domestic opposition to the present foreign policies of all the Western countries. The British reports place special emphasis on the decisive — almost panic — effect on Soviet calculations of the formulation of the Marshall Plan. The British think that, in spite of their propaganda, the Soviet leaders do realize that this Plan represents an unforeseen development of monopoly capitalism and a real possibility of postponing its collapse and the internecine struggles which are an expected feature of the imperialist stage.

Our best hope, therefore, as General Smith has put it, is to confront the Russians with such decisive action in the West that they will realise they could not win in the end or that their own regime would be threatened in the process of military action. Having come to such a conclusion the Soviet leaders might well decide to consolidate their gains in Europe, bore away in Asia and Africa, build up their fifth columns, and with that patience which has characterised the Russian Communists wait for the collapse of capitalism and a situation generally more favourable. It would, of course, be quite out of line with Leninist thought to think of such waiting as being passive, as Communists have always been told that capitalism will not collapse simply of its own weight.

I have said nothing here of the role in these calculations which might be played by decisive weapons of destruction. You will, I think be in a better position to estimate this factor than I would. I know the views of the United States and United Kingdom Embassies on the subject, but I am inclined to wonder if they are very well informed even about their own resources. The United Kingdom Embassy frankly say they are not, and would not want to be. It would certainly seem reckless to me to provide such information to a post in Moscow. The tendency of the United States Embassy, however, is to be cautious in estimating their capacity at present to knock out this country with atom or other bombs. They have no doubt that they could eventually do so, however great the immediate gains of the Soviet armies. What is important about their opinion is, I think, that they are hardly likely to recommend a "preventive war". It is frequently said here among Westerners that the real danger of war in the near future comes from the trigger-happy U.S. military, who argue that the best way to prevent the next war is to drop an atom-bomb on the Kremlin. Such a policy, if it is to succeed, must be decisive, and the U.S. Embassy seems to doubt if it would be decisive.

An interesting point in these discussions has been made to me by Geoffrey Harrison, the United Kingdom Minister, who was in the Berlin Embassy up until the outbreak of war in 1939. He has pointed out the danger of seeing too close parallels between Stalinist Russia and Hitlerite Germany. That there are many similarities is obvious, but it is important also to see the differences. The difference which is of primary importance to our calculations is that Hitler did not mind provoking a hot war and counted on only limited gains from his cold war. Hitler wanted to fight when he was ready, and there was nothing in his philosophy to lead him to believe that the opposition would collapse. Perhaps this argument should be qualified somewhat, but I think the fact does remain that there is more encouragement for patience in the Stalinist-Leninist than in the Hitlerite textbooks. It is important also that Hitler did not have nearly so good a line for export as Stalin, and the strength of the Soviet Fifth Column and the chances of success by methods short of war are infinitely greater in the latter case.

The British here are inclined to emphasise that, ever since they were prematurely rash in 1905, the Soviet Communists have been essentially cautious. I should not have considered the Bolshevik seizure of power in 1917, or the collectivisation of the farms in 1930, for example, as characterized by undue caution, but there are many examples of cautious manoeuvring in order to avoid being stranded on a limb, particularly in relations with foreign countries. The British point out that it has been a cardinal point of Soviet policy never to risk the Socialist homeland. Even of late they have not infrequently retreated, as from Aserbaijan, even though they have, of course, had no intention of abandoning their ultimate aims. There is plenty of evidence to suggest that the Soviet leaders are still not satisfied with the extent to which the regime at home is established in the hearts and minds of the people, and they may well hold back from too rash a course lest they lose everything they have worked so hard to build. Stalin is, of course, generally supposed to exert a restraining influence, but it is impossible to tell whether this is in fact the case, or to what extent. I asked General Smith what the sum total of their views was on the distribution of power and influence in the Kremlin. He said that in fact they knew nothing at all. They had a few hunches but nothing more. There was some evidence to the effect that Stalin has less and less to do with policy, which was more and more under control of Molotov, Zhdanov<sup>23</sup> and Beria, but they did not really know. He reminded me, however, that they were arrogant, fanatical, ignorant men, and one could never count too much on their behaving sensibly. Both the Embassies emphasize in their estimates the fact that we have reached a stage when "any damn fool with a gun" could start a spark. They also agree that the Soviet leaders might miscalculate how far they dare go without provoking their opponents.

There are certain differences in emphasis between the United Kingdom and the United States estimates of the situation. The British report is more reassuring on the whole, but one important reason for their greater confidence is that they have a higher opinion of the striking power of the United States than the Americans have themselves. The British do, however, place more emphasis on the caution which has characterized Soviet policy in the past, and they have supported their thesis with an impressive historical analysis. The Americans do not dispute this interpretation, but are somewhat less certain that the Russians might not risk a desperate move to occupy all of Europe in the expectation that they could render themselves impregnable against counter-attack from the United States. The British, however, are very doubtful if the Soviet leaders would take the leap until they were sure of their overwhelming strength and their ability to make a direct attack on American power at its base.

I should say, I think, that it would be unwise to attach too much weight to these opinions out of Moscow. Because we are on the spot, it by no means follows that we are in a better position to judge Soviet aims. Our representatives in New York who come in contact with Soviet representatives every day are in a much better position to assess Soviet aims. I cannot emphasize too much how completely contact has ceased between Western diplomats and Soviet officials. We meet on social occasions and we meet officially to discuss (if one can properly use the verb) certain administrative and consular matters, but not even the most distinguished Western ambassadors have any way of finding out what Soviet officials are thinking. It is no longer possible even to establish contact with the satellite ambassadors. In this respect, I think, the U.S. Embassy report is deceptive. It is an extremely competent and lucid statement, but it is too categorical and perhaps too lucid. I have grave doubts if the Embassy officers, although they are undoubtedly all very able, can know as much as they appear to know about the state of this country. Nothing could possibly be more valuable than a clean-cut and accurate estimate of the capacities of the U.S.S.R., but it would be dangerous to invent it because we want it. I think the United States estimate is probably the best that could be produced, but it is not the final word. I should have no basis on which to argue that it overestimates or underestimates Soviet strength, but it is as dangerous to do one as the other.

<sup>23</sup> A.A. Zhdanov, président, Commission des Affaires étrangères de l'Union soviétique; L.P. Beria, vice-président, Conseil des ministres.

A.A. Zhdanov, Chief, Commission on Foreign Relations of Soviet Union; L.P. Beria, Deputy President, Council of Ministers.

If I might presume to draw one conclusion concerning Canadian policy from this report, it is that we should in the next few months take particular care to leave the Russians grounds for retreat. Certainly we should leave them no room to advance. Whatever the risks of firmness, the risks of weakness are greater. If we accept, however, the premise that the Russians will go as far as they possibly can but will not want to start a war, we must be particularly careful that we have not drawn them on to ground from which they cannot retire without a loss of face they could not contemplate. I think this has been a guiding principle of our policy in the Security Council, and I do not pretend that mine is a new suggestion. It seems to me, however, of desperate importance that we use our considerable influence in the coming months to prevent the United States from taking heady action without calculating the consequences.

Both the United Kingdom and the United States Embassies have asked me to emphasize that any connexion between their views and those of their governments are purely coincidental. They ask that you should not quote these as the views of their Governments. I said that I was quite sure you would not quote the views at all. I should be grateful if you would give this letter an extremely limited circulation. It is an indication of the special position they accord to Canada that both Embassies have shown me — and I think no one else — their reports. The advantages of being on especially confidential terms with the two best-informed missions in Moscow are considerable, and I should not want them to think that our discretion could not be depended upon.

I am sending a copy of this letter to Mr. Robertson, but am not keeping a copy for our files.

Yours sincerely,
J.W. HOLMES

1080.

DEA/323 (S)

*Le délégué permanent aux Nations Unies
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Delegate to United Nations
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

New York, May 4, 1948

Dear Mr. Pearson:

I have your top secret and personal letter of 29 April, 1948† with which was enclosed a copy of Mr. J.W. Holmes' letter, also top secret and personal, dated from the Canadian Embassy, Moscow, 9 April, 1948.

I have read Mr. Holmes' letter with the greatest interest and I am impressed with the information which he gives, with his marshalling of the evidence and with the conclusions which he has drawn.

As you know our contacts here at Lake Success with the members of the delegations of the U.S.S.R. and their satellites are limited practically to our formal meetings with their representatives in the Committees where the discussions, even in the intervals, are mostly confined to the subjects on the agenda. In consequence, there is for all practical purposes no greater opportunity here than in Moscow to assess the situation behind the iron curtain on the basis of first-hand information gleaned from conversations with representatives of the countries in question.

I think that we here, as well as Mr. Holmes and his associates in the British and United States Embassies in Moscow, are driven to rest our views on the Soviet intentions largely on accumulated impressions rather than by logical reasoning from definite facts which have been verified with the certainty that one would wish.

However, when you live with a situation day after day and week after week you get impressions which perhaps transcend logic and which you feel though you cannot prove to be valid.

It is from this background that I have looked at Mr. Holmes' conclusions and I would say that I find myself in very close agreement with what he has said. In fact, as I have gone over his letter the second time I cannot find a major point on which I disagree.

I have valued the opportunity to read this correspondence and I hope you will let me see any further communications of the same sort which come from our Embassy in Moscow.

Yours sincerely,
A.G.L. McNAUGHTON

1081.

DEA/2-AE-1 (S)

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TOP SECRET

Ottawa, May 21, 1948

Dear Hume [Wrong],

Thanks very much for your letter of May 10 enclosing a memorandum recording your conversation with Lovett on relations with the Soviet Union.† You are quite right in thinking that Lovett's views are rather less depressing than most of the other views we have been getting recently.

2. While he may be right in his conclusion that there has been a lessening in the possibility that the Soviet Government might in the near future deliberately seek a trial of strength, I am somewhat sceptical about the validity of the illustrations which he gives to support this conclusion — the quiescence of the French Communist Party, the mildness of the terms imposed on Finland, etc. I would have thought that one could equally well argue from past experience in dealing with the Russians that a period of relative calm is a danger signal that can presage a storm. My impression is that their practice has been to press hard and be tough for some months or a year or so, then relax the pressure, only to renew it later when conditions are better for them.

3. Haven't we been told that this is the kind of technique which they use in the examination of political prisoners — periods of kindness alternating with periods of toughness? They are pretty adept in this carrot and whip technique and we shouldn't be fooled by it.

4. Another analogy might be of operations in war. As Nicolson<sup>24</sup> has pointed out, totalitarian powers conduct their diplomacy as all of us conduct war. An offensive is preceded by a probing of the weak spots in the enemy's position, a successful offensive is pressed as far as possible, and then a period of relative calm ensues while the gains of the offensive are being consolidated and the way is being prepared for another offensive. During that period of relative calm it may be a good idea to start some peace rumours floating in the hope that the enemy may be caught off guard when the next offensive starts.

5. Lovett's view of the offensive capabilities of the United States air force is encouraging, but, as you suggest, one should discount his opinion because he may have been trying to impress the Norwegian.

6. It is going to be extremely difficult to keep up the morale of the Western Europeans unless the United States can give them good grounds for believing that any period of occupation to which they might be subjected would be short. They will get little encouragement from a promise of ultimate victory if, by the end of the period of occupation, the conditions in their countries were approaching those which now exist in the Baltic republics.

<sup>24</sup> Harold Nicolson, auteur et critique britannique.
Harold Nicolson, British author and critic.

7. I do not believe that we and the United States can expect to secure for an indefinite period the wholehearted and loyal support of our allies in Western Europe unless we can demonstrate that we intend and are able to give them effective assistance in their defence against occupation.

8. I also shudder at the thought of the kind of political conduct of the war and of the peace making which would be likely to flow from a Soviet occupation of Western Europe. The only going concerns on the allied side would be the United States, the United Kingdom (if it were not occupied), Canada, and I suppose Australia, New Zealand and South Africa. The other allies would be represented by governments-in-exile, and the record of the United States in listening to the views of governments-in-exile is not very good. Moreover, governments-in-exile easily lose touch with opinions at home.

9. The danger would therefore be that virtually the whole of the political conduct of the war and of the peace making would be in the hands of the United States and, under the United States tradition, a great deal of that power would be lodged in the United States War Department. In the event of war, the United States is going to be the dominant partner, but, if the Western European countries are not occupied, they will be able to make some effective contribution to the political direction of the war. I have more confidence in the wisdom of their political views than in the wisdom of the political views of the United States in matters of this kind.

10. This brings me to another point about the Atlantic Union. One reason why we need an Atlantic Union is that we must establish in peace time some international constitutional machinery which could be used in war time as the basis for a supreme war council, or some such body. The existence of some sort of constitutional machinery enables governments which have wisdom and maturity to have greater influence on the formulation of policy than would be warranted by their mere power alone. Assistance to them by the United States without any organic connection through some machinery between the giver and receiver would not possess this important advantage.

11. I am sending to Norman [Robertson] a copy of your letter to me of May 10 and of this reply.

Yours sincerely,
MIKE [PEARSON]

1082.

W.L.M.K./J1/Vol. 443

*L'ambassadeur en Suisse
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in Switzerland
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Berne, May 25, 1948

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I wish to acknowledge with thanks receipt of your top secret and personal letter of April 29th, enclosing a copy of the most interesting personal letter of April 9th which you received from Mr. Holmes, and in which he assessed the probable direction of Soviet policy as seen from the Canadian Embassy in Moscow.

2. Like you, I have been most impressed with the carefully reasoned and well balanced analysis which Mr. Holmes has given of this all-important problem. It is extremely interesting for me to see the direction in which the thinking of the United States and United Kingdom Embassies in Moscow has been tending. The United States Embassy, in particular, has certainly become more pessimistic about the chances of an early war than they were when I was in Moscow.

3. I have given a lot of thought to this problem, and, as you know, have clung to the view that a major war is not likely in the near future because (1) it would not suit the Russians to start a war unless they knew for sure that they would win, and (2) it is not possible for the democratic countries to secure the necessary popular support to wage a preventive war.

4. To predict that there will be no war always involves greater risk than to predict that there will be a war. It is possible that my view may be disproved before you and others in the Department have had time to forget about it, whereas those who predict an early war can always continue to say, "not yet, but soon". However, at the risk of being classed with Sir Norman Angel, the State Department 1941 Japanese expert, and other false prophets, I still think a careful appraisal of the situation leads to the conclusion that the Soviet leaders are not likely to take the great risk involved in provoking a major war now or in the course of the next few years. The reason why I believe this is that the Soviet leaders know the war will be a protracted one and they want to be pretty sure that they will not only be able to stand a protracted war but also that they will win in the end.

5. I agree with the United States and United Kingdom Embassies' acceptance of the view that the Soviet leaders consider inevitable a struggle between the "Socialist" world, led by the U.S.S.R., and the "Anti-Socialist" world, led by the U.S.A. Their whole policy is to prepare for this struggle but their main obsession is to see that the struggle, when it comes, does not result in their undoing. They are fearful of anything which might threaten their own personal positions of power. Stalin, in particular, is sure of his position in history, and does not want to take any action which might undermine all that he has done to make Russia relatively the greatest power that she has ever been. Unlike the United States Embassy, I still believe that Stalin determines policy. He is, in every sense of the word, a dictator. Because representatives from the West have at times found Stalin more reasonable to deal with, they try to attribute the more nefarious aspects of Soviet policy to people like Molotov, Zhdanov and Beria. This only means that Stalin, like all men of great power, likes to give the impression of being amiable. The others, however, are only carrying out his instructions and it is he who determines Soviet policy.

6. What will happen when Stalin goes is, of course, a problem which only the future can decide. It is not likely to bring any change in the main lines of Soviet policy but may weaken the internal organization if the successor is unable to establish himself completely or match the marked capacity of Stalin.

7. I can quite understand General Smith feeling depressed when he considers the Red Army of three million men and with nothing effective to stop it on its marches to the English Channel, the Persian Gulf, the Suez Canal and the Skagerrak. He must also be considering the long time it took to place the United States economy on a war footing, the tremendous preparations that were required in order to land armies on the beaches of Normandy, and the difficulties encountered in advancing to the heart of the enemy's territory. This is how the coming war looks to an American soldier who has had personal experience of what is involved. I think, however, it is more profitable for us to look at the situation from the point of view of Stalin, because it will be he who will make the decision that will determine whether or not there will be a major war. The lessons Stalin must have learned from the last war are the following:

- (1) The successful invasion of Russia is not militarily practicable;
- (2) Long-range air bombing can be effective in disorganizing an enemy's economy even when that economy is widely dispersed;
- (3) The outcome of a modern major war depends largely upon the relative strengths of the military-industrial potential of the two antagonists;
- (4) It does not do to win battles and then lose the war.

It will be noted that the first two of the above points largely cancel out one another, so that it is the last two points that are likely to be decisive.

8. In line with the above thinking, Stalin must feel that it would be very easy for him to overrun all of Europe, except possibly the British Isles, most of Asia, and parts of Africa. This he would no doubt try to do in the shortest time possible. He particularly would endeavour to deprive the Western powers of any footholds on territory from which they might send long-range bombers to vulnerable centres in the Soviet sphere. He would want to be well supplied with harbours from which submarines could prevent aircraft carriers advancing near enough to launch bombers to attack objectives in Soviet territories. The war essentially would be one between a land power and a naval-and-air power. This will give great importance to those two waterways which lead into the heart of the Soviet sphere, viz., the Mediterranean and the Baltic, and of these two the former is the more important. To capitalize upon his internal position, Stalin would want to attack on all fronts, so as to disperse the attacks of the Western powers and to deprive them of as many footholds as possible from which they could bomb objectives in Soviet territory.

9. All of this needs tremendous preparation by the Soviet Union. They must have plenty of fighter aircraft to defend their more vulnerable targets and a large number of submarines to keep aircraft carriers away from the approaches to the Soviet Union. They must get their factories, which were badly run down during the war, into working order again, increase their supplies of oil, coal and steel, and, above all, assure the efficiency of their transport services.

10. I cannot believe that Stalin is satisfied that even a beginning has been made in this direction. He still sees the Soviet Union and its satellites as a long way behind the United States and its allies in military-industrial potential, and before staking everything on an all-out war he will want to lessen the gap between the relative industrial strengths until the superior military-industrial potential of the United States is not sufficient to offset Soviet advantages in manpower, their strategic location in the heart of Eurasia, and their monolithic organization geared to military objects.

11. We have also to take into account the question of popular support for a Soviet war policy, to which Mr. Holmes has referred. It is true the propaganda machine can whip up enthusiasm for a war by appealing to Russian patriotism, but there are limits to which this can be done. The Russian people have just emerged from a long war in which their sacrifices and suffering exceeded anything known in the West. Moreover, the morale of the Red Army has become disrupted by Occupation duty and by its contact with a superior civilization.

12. Another factor to be taken into account is the organization of the new countries. It is comparatively easy for the Soviet Union to secure complete submission from other Slav countries with low standards of living, like Bulgaria and Yugoslavia, but it will be a long time before Czechoslovakia, Poland, Hungary and the Baltic States can be brought into that absolute degree of submission which is necessary to make these territories complete assets, and not liabilities, in time of war.

13. What must impress itself particularly upon Stalin is the thought that whereas the United States can do a lot of harm to the Soviet Union there is not much direct damage the Soviet Union can do to the United States in a war with that country. The Soviet approach to a war with the United States is from the defensive aspect. Fighter aircraft and submarines figure largely in their calculations and their strategic aim would be to gobble up as much territory as necessary to keep the United States from hurting them.

14. Recently, when I have seen the Western European countries getting together for the purpose of forming a defensive alliance against Russia, I have thought it might be possible for Stalin to launch a preventive war on his own — that is, to conquer Western Europe before it has time to unite — but, when I have considered all the other factors, I have come to the conclusion that Stalin is not the kind of man to run such a risk. He would know that this would involve him in war with the United States, and would come to the conclusion that the Soviet Union is not yet ready to take on the United States.

15. The conclusion I derive from all this is that we are likely to see, for some time to come, a continuation of the "cold war", the purpose of which will be to divide and weaken the Western powers. Every possible advantage will be taken of international developments to provide an opportunity for causing embarrassment to the United States and creating differences between the Western powers themselves. Probes will be made here and there to see that further territory can be acquired without running the risk of a major war, but care will also be taken to prevent the "cold war" from turning into a "hot war".

16. Naturally, everything will be done to support and give encouragement to Communist parties in other countries. This is one of the best ways in which the Soviet Union can embarrass and weaken the Western powers. I think, however, it is a mistake to conclude that, because the Soviet Union has facilitated the seizure of power by the Communists in Czechoslovakia, the same tactics will be pursued in Italy, France and other countries. Czechoslovakia was entirely in the Soviet orbit of power and there was nothing which the Western powers could do to help the Czechoslovaks. Italy and France, however, are very much accessible to the Western powers, and the Soviet Union has to reckon that any overt help given to the Communists of these countries may bring about war with the United States.

17. I hope that you will not think I am trying to be unduly optimistic. Nor would I, for one minute, advocate that we should relax our efforts just because war is unlikely in the next year or two. On the contrary, I think it is more essential than ever that we should consistently bear in mind the possibility of a major clash between the two great powers some ten, fifteen, or twenty-five years hence. In particular, I would like to see the consolidation of that part of the world which Walter Lippman, in his book on "United States War Aims", called "The Atlantic Community". The chief distinction between the Soviet sphere and this part of the world is that the one is totalitarian and the other still believes in liberty for the individual. We should stress this distinction wherever possible and attempt to imbue into our peoples spiritual zeal for that ideal of individual liberty. This has recently been lacking.

18. As regards the Soviet Union, the best policy we could follow would be to treat Soviet isolationism with the neglect it deserves. Since they have erected the Iron Curtain, I would treat the Iron Curtain as a fact and I would consistently strive to ignore the Soviet Union. In other words, I would not have General Smith submit Notes explaining United States policy, because this only gives the Soviet leaders the opportunity for scoring propaganda points. I would resist firmly any efforts they might make to extend the territory under their control or to disrupt any of the countries of "The Atlantic Community", but I would not pay them the compliment of talking and writing so much about them as has been done in the past. Rather, by stressing our own virtues and the benefits that we derive from respect for individual liberty, we can make ourselves more immune to Soviet propaganda instead of following the more negative course of constantly trying to wage propaganda battles with the Soviet Union on grounds of their own choosing.

19. Just as during the period of appeasement efforts in North America were directed to white-washing the Bolsheviks, now nothing is spared in attempts to blacken them. Some anti-Soviet propagandists try to make out a case for criticizing Soviet foreign policy in the period between the wars, and contend that after the Rapallo Treaty the Russians re-armed the Germans when the reverse is the case.

Almost any Canadian dispassionately comparing the foreign policy of Litvinov in the thirties with that of Chamberlain would decide in favour of the former. Nor is it fair to claim that the Russians had no grounds to mistrust the West, when we all know that every Tory in England was hoping the Germans and Russians would fight it out and leave Western Europe in peace. Suggestions are also made that we should force the withdrawal of the Soviet Union from the United Nations when I can think of no better way of securing sympathy for the Russians among peace-circles in Western countries.

20. The danger of overstating the case against the Russians is that it is apt to defeat itself. It builds up the atmosphere in which one bold peace offensive by Molotov can throw confusion into the ranks of the Western countries. I remember well writing from Moscow a personal letter to Mr. Hume Wrong around Christmas, 1944, in which I foreshadowed a marked reaction against the Soviet Union after the war when it was discovered that they were as totalitarian as the Germans. I feared this as a reaction against the excessive adulation of the Soviet war effort. Now I fear the reaction the other way because so many in North America are going to the other extreme.

21. It is on these grounds that I would so much like to see us ignore the Soviet Union, except when their actions directly threaten us. It should be sufficient to let Kravchenko and the other escapees from Soviet terrorism state the case against the Soviet Union. Let us recognise that the Soviet Union is a totalitarian dictatorship and a police state in which there is no liberty, but constant fear, for the individual. Let us point out that Hitler Germany borrowed everything from Bolshevik Russia — the one-party system, the cell-system, the secret police system, the propaganda system, the youth-stimulation system, the forced-labour system and the concentration-camp system. In some cases German efficiency improved on Russian methods, but not often. The only thing original in Hitlerism was the basic philosophy, but as it was bogus it was less dangerous than the Russian. The latter was founded upon the thought of great thinkers, since although their fundamental premises were false Marx and Lenin built up a great philosophy upon the basis of these false premises. That is the reason why the Soviet doctrine is so much more dangerous than the German. It has an intellectual as well as a sentimental appeal to the frustrated.

22. Because of this danger of the Soviet appeal, we have to meet it with something positive — something better than a mere negative blackening of the Soviet Union. The best positive approach I see is emphasis on the ideal of liberty for the individual and stressing the material as well as the spiritual benefits which the pursuit of this ideal has already accorded, as witnessed by the accomplishments of our civilization up to date. As professor Rappard pointed out the other day at the Liberal International Congress at Zurich, "Liberty" has to be given an equal if not greater value than "Equality". I hope you will not think me conceited when I say that I hope more attention will be paid to the despatches I am now submitting from Switzerland than to the excellent analysis submitted by Mr. Holmes from Moscow. That, at least, illustrates what I mean when I advocate ignoring the Soviet Union and concentrating on the positive approach to the problems of "The Atlantic Community".

23. I hope I will not be misunderstood as advocating complacency or a repetition of that fatal state of mind which prevailed in the West during the period between the wars. On the contrary, we should keep ever before our publics the fact that the Soviet Union is concentrating on preparations for war with all the thoroughness their monolithic organization makes possible. This should be the justification for us also to concentrate on preparations for the war, but by our democratic methods. We should take care to show the Soviet leaders that we are not afraid, that we are confident in our own strength and in the justice of our own cause. Any effort on their part to expand their influence or the territory under their control should be resisted by direct opposition. Since Germany is the chief meeting place of the two conflicting systems, we should hasten efforts to capture the soul of Germany and to capitalise on German fear of and contempt for the Russians. In my view this can best be done by concentrating on the economics rather than on the politics of Western Germany. Since we preach the advantages of free enterprise over a planned economy, we should strive to make Western Germany an example of the benefits of that system over the other which the Russians will install in Eastern Germany. By reforming the currency and removing controls as rapidly as possible in our zones, we may demonstrate, not only to Germans but to the world, what material benefits can be derived from the pursuit of the ideal of liberty for the individual even in an occupied country without political freedom.

24. Otherwise I would leave the Russians alone behind their Iron Curtain, where their power is supreme. I would stop talking about meetings to resolve the differences between East and West, stop explaining our policies to the Russians, and stop the foolish propaganda battles in which the Russians, having fewer inhibitions, usually come off best. I appreciate that all this places a strain upon our self-restraint that may be difficult to bear, but I agree with those who feel that we have tried to get along with the Russians and failed. The corollary I see to this is to leave them alone.

25. I hope you will not think I have strayed too far in commenting upon the excellent letter of Mr. Holmes, but I have done the best I could in compliance with your request for comments on this difficult problem.

Yours sincerely,

L.D. WILGRESS

1083.

PCO/Vol. 107

Note

Memorandum

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], September 2, 1948

A REVIEW OF THE INTERNATIONAL SITUATION IN RELATION TO THE PROGRAMME OF THE CANADIAN ARMED FORCES FOR THE FISCAL YEAR
1949/50

(This memorandum was prepared recently under the direction of the Joint Intelligence Committee for the guidance of the Joint Planning Committee in planning a Canadian Armed Forces programme for the fiscal year 1949/50. It is felt that it provides a good appreciation of the present international situation. It should be understood that it has not yet been examined by the Chiefs of Staff who will only receive it when the Joint Planning Committee has completed its work.)<sup>25</sup>

1. The deep divergence between the USSR and the Western powers, which for three years has made it impossible to agree on peace settlements with the principal enemy states, is no nearer solution now than it was a year ago when the Armed Forces programme for 1948/49 was submitted. There is, indeed, a new element of crisis and a graver apprehension of the possibility of war. It is unlikely that the outstanding disagreements would be settled by another conference of the four great powers.

2. This cleavage has been reflected in every political and technical organ of the United Nations. In particular, it has nullified the attempts to form a United Nations Armed Force and to agree upon methods for the regulation and reduction of national armaments.

3. In both groups of states there has been a process of consolidation in the past twelve months. This has naturally been more difficult for the free countries than for those with Communist governments. Nevertheless, the measures which the Western powers have adopted for rehabilitation and consolidation must be regarded as the most important developments of the year.

4. Those developments include:

(a) The European Recovery Programme, which averted the threat of a disastrous shortage of food and raw materials in Western Europe and provided the basis for closer economic association among the sixteen participating states.

(b) The Brussels Treaty, by which the UK, France and the Benelux countries bound themselves to provide full mutual assistance against any attack in Europe.

(c) The London Agreement on Western Germany, by which the USA, UK, France and the Benelux countries agreed to proceed with the formation of a federal government for Western Germany.

(d) US Re-armament, including conscription for a period of 81 months of enough men to maintain the US Armed Forces at a strength of 2,006,000.

(e) The preliminary discussions by the USA, Canada and the Brussels Treaty powers on a North Atlantic pact. These were preceded by a resolution of the US Senate and a statement of the Canadian Government indicating agreement in principle.

5. From the Soviet point of view the most favourable developments have been:

(a) The gradual assimilation of the Communist-dominated countries to the Soviet prototype.

(b) The establishment of the Cominform, heralding an intensification of Communist political warfare against the European Recovery Programme.

---

<sup>25</sup> Une copie de cette note fut transmise au premier ministre pour son usage pendant la réunion des premiers ministres à Londres en octobre.

A copy of this memorandum was provided to the Prime Minister for his use during the meeting of Prime Ministers in London in October.

(c) The Warsaw declaration by the Communist governments, advocating the establishment of a centralized German state and the early withdrawal of occupation forces.

(d) A marked increase in the activity and influence of Communist elements in South East Asia, resulting in the diversion of considerable effort by the Western European powers.

On the other hand there have been trends which indicate a certain weakening of the Soviet position in Europe.

(a) There has been a perceptible recession of Communist influence in France, Italy and Greece.

(b) There is open dissension between the Yugoslav Communist Party and Moscow.

6. On balance, the developments of the past year must have proved disappointing to the Kremlin. The Soviet Government has therefore chosen to launch a political counter-attack at a point where the Western powers are particularly vulnerable. The blockade of Berlin cannot be regarded merely as an episode in the struggle for Germany. It indicates the determination of the USSR to prevent the rehabilitation and consolidation of Western Europe except under Communist control.

7. A direct confrontation of will and power, such as exists now in Berlin and may occur elsewhere, increases the risk of war. For as measures and counter-measures increase, even if neither side desires war, the combination of an incident and a rising belief that only force can settle the issue may produce a clash beyond control. The risk is further enhanced when the armed forces in presence are so unbalanced that one side can reasonably anticipate early and substantial military successes. This situation will prevail in Europe as long as the Western European countries are relatively defenceless.

8. While it must be recognized that war is possible in present circumstances, we are not aware of any evidence that the Soviet Government desires war at this time. It is evident that the Politburo has no intention of abandoning any of the gains made in 1945 and that it will continue to advance the interests of the USSR and of the world communism to the maximum possible extent. Soviet policy will probably be directed principally to consolidating the position in Eastern Europe, disrupting Western plans for Germany, and hampering the economic and political recovery of Western Europe in the hope of a "capitalist crisis" in the West and a disintegration of US foreign policy. An attempt to expand Soviet influence in the Middle East, especially in Iran, Iraq and the Levant states, would also be consistent with the USSR's interest in oil and its concern for defence in depth.

9. If this analysis is correct, it would be unwise to ignore the possibility that the Soviet Government, apprehensive of the ultimate success of the measures taken by the Western powers to strengthen their own position, may attempt to frustrate these measures by pursuing a policy containing a large element of calculated risk. Such a policy might at any time produce a crisis out of which war could develop. In the long run, however, the consolidation and strengthening of the West may be expected to redress the balance and thereby reduce the likelihood of an incautious policy on the part of the Soviet Union.

10. The fundamental factor in a war beginning before the end of the fiscal year 1949/50 would be allied ability to conduct overseas operations in areas contiguous to Soviet territory, and Soviet inability to conduct such operations against the North American Continent. The USSR would therefore be obliged to seize or neutralize these areas from which the Western powers could strike at Soviet territory by atomic bombing, conventional bombing, or land/air invasion. The minimum areas which the USSR would have to seize or neutralize in order to defend itself against these forms of attack are Western Germany, France and the Benelux countries, the United Kingdom, the Arab states and Iran, Greece and Turkey, Italy, Spain and Portugal. With the exception of the United Kingdom and the Nile delta, we consider that all these areas could be effectively occupied by the USSR in the first phase of a war in the immediate future. Before the outcome of such a war could be decided, however, a subsequent phase would have to follow, in which the Soviet object would logically be to develop the potential and the means for a major assault against the North American Continent.

11. We estimate that the USSR is capable of defeating the forces at present in Western Germany, France, the Benelux countries and Italy in two to three months, and the Spanish and Portuguese forces in a further three or four months. The defeat of the Greek army could hardly take more than a month, but it would require at least four months to overcome Turkish resistance. Progress in the Middle East would be governed largely by supply difficulties. Thus, while the Persian Gulf could probably be reached in six weeks, it is unlikely that Soviet forces could reach the Suez Canal in less than six months, even in the absence of allied reinforcements.

12. The seizure of Norway and Sweden and Western Pakistan would be of strategic advantage to the USSR, but it must remain an open question whether this gain would be worth the considerable effort involved. There would be no compelling reason in the initial phase for extensive operations against China.

13. During the period under consideration, the ability of the Soviet Union to carry the war to Canada and the remainder of the North American Continent would be limited by two factors. First, the bulk of the Soviet forces would be employed in Europe and the Middle East. Second, we consider the USSR would not possess the means of sustaining direct attacks capable of seriously reducing the war potential of Canada. Long range bombers of the Soviet Union would, however, be capable of damaging selected installations in Canada. Such attacks might be made in the hope of influencing Canadian public opinion and of diverting Canadian effort from overseas theatres. Soviet submarines also are capable of attacks on shipping in ports and harbours, particularly by mining. The more serious threat of submarine attack on the high seas would have to be considered in conjunction with the Soviet main effort against Europe and the Middle East rather than merely as diversionary action against this country.

14. The USSR is deemed capable of the following forms of offensive operations against Canada in the period 1949/50.

(a) Subversive activities of all kinds, from anti-war propaganda to strikes and acts of sabotage.

(b) Two-way air attacks on a limited scale from Siberia as far as Vancouver and Edmonton.

(c) Submarine and "sneak craft" attacks against shipping in naval bases and ports, including the use of mines.

(d) One-way air attacks on a limited scale reaching all industrial areas in Canada.

(e) Airborne troops in small units against Western Alaska and the Aleutian Islands.

(f) Bombardment by submarines of coastal targets.

(g) Landing of small sabotage parties from submarines.

(h) Chemical warfare on a scale limited by the ability to deliver by air.

(i) Biological warfare on an experimental scale.

(j) A token attack with a weapon of atomic type is considered a remote possibility, but one that cannot be completely dismissed.

CONCLUSIONS

A review of the international situation as it relates to the Canadian Armed Forces programme for 1949/50 leads us to the following conclusions:

(a) There is in present circumstances a definite risk that some incident may occur which will lead to war, even though it does not appear that the Soviet Government desires to provoke a war at this time.

(b) The risk of a war developing out of such an incident will be particularly great until the Western powers by strengthening and co-ordinating their forces have succeeded in redressing the balance of forces in Europe.

(c) Canada could expect air attacks of a diversionary nature during the first phase of a war commencing in the period under review. We could also expect serious threats to our shipping and our internal security.

(d) The main Soviet effort in a war occurring during 1949/50 would be made in Western Europe, the Middle East and against allied shipping.

SECTION B

RÉCIPROCITÉ DES PRIVILÈGES

RECIPROCITY OF PRIVILEGES

1084.

DEA/8508-40

Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion des chefs de direction

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Heads of Divisions

SECRET

[Ottawa], January 27, 1948

***

VISIT OF SERVICE ATTACHÉS TO CAMP SHILO

16. Mr. Crean said that the announcement by the Department of National Defence concerning the non-invitation of the Soviet Military Attachés along with other foreign service attachés to visit Camp Shilo had been made after reference to the Cabinet Defence Committee. In spite of repeated requests, Brigadier Allard, the Canadian Military Attaché in Moscow, had not been given opportunities to visit Soviet military establishments; in accordance with the principles of reciprocal treatment, it had therefore been decided that the Soviet Military Attachés would not be invited to visit military establishments in Canada unless similar privileges were accorded to the Canadian Military Attaché in Moscow. On receipt of this advice from the Director of Military Intelligence, the Soviet Attaché had expressed surprise that Brigadier Allard had not been given such opportunities and stated that he would take the matter up with his government. Mr. Crean added that the United Kingdom and the United States had already denied such privileges to Soviet Attachés in London and Washington. Mr. Reid remarked that it was unfortunate that this announcement should coincide with Brigadier Allard's return from Moscow for duty in Canada, because it might look as though he had been intentionally withdrawn from the U.S.S.R., whereas his posting had in fact been arranged some time ago. It was to be hoped that a new appointment would be made by the Chief of Staffs Committee in the near future to counteract such erroneous speculation.

...

1085.

DEA/2462-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures
Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

[Ottawa], February 11, 1948

Recent despatches from Moscow indicate that a conscious effort is being made by the Soviet Government to make the lives and activities of diplomats in Moscow as difficult and complicated as possible. I wonder whether we should not give serious consideration to the pros and cons of closing our diplomatic mission in Moscow. This would be easier in our case than in that of a Great Power, though the arguments against it may still be conclusive. Certainly the Russians gain infinitely more from their Embassy activities in Canada than we do in Russia and possibly the only way to secure equality would be on the basis of zero.

Will you look into the matter?<sup>26</sup>

[L.B. PEARSON]

<sup>26</sup> En réponse, Reid rédigea une longue note sur «La représentation diplomatique entre le Canada et l'Union soviétique» (13 février)†, mais le sujet semble avoir été mis de côté jusqu'à ce qu'il soit remis à l'ordre du jour à l'automne. (voir ci-dessous).

In response, Reid drafted a long memorandum on "Diplomatic Representation Between Canada and the Soviet Union" (February 13)†, but the subject appears to have been set aside until it was revived in the autumn (see below).

1086.

DEA/2462-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au chargé d'affaires en Union soviétique*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Chargé d'Affaires in Soviet Union*

DESPATCH 744

Ottawa, September 1, 1948

SECRET

Sir,

In your despatch No. 338 of August 19th,† enclosing a memorandum of August 17th† prepared by the Air Attaché concerning restrictions on travel by foreigners in Moscow, you raised the question of the possibility of taking some retaliatory action.

2. It is, I agree, unfortunate that the Western nations so far have had to accept passively the various restrictions placed upon foreign diplomatic personnel in Moscow by the Soviet Government. Although counter-action of some sort is certainly called for, it is difficult, having in mind the democratic nature of Western society, to find a method of retaliation which would succeed in forcing the Soviet Government to relax its restrictions or which would result in the imposition of real and equal burdens upon Soviet missions abroad. Your first suggestion, that we might intimate that we may have to close our Embassy, as restrictions on travel make it impossible for the Embassy to perform its function, is perhaps too drastic. A mere threat without the intention of going the limit would be a rather useless gesture, while a decision to close the Embassy would have to depend on considerations more weighty than the single factor of travel restrictions. We have already given consideration in the Department to the pros and cons of closing the Embassy in Moscow or at least of limiting the size of the Soviet Embassy here to correspond with that of the Canadian Embassy in Moscow. This problem arose in connection with the Soviet currency regulations at the beginning of this year and the various other Soviet measures designed to make life difficult in Moscow, such as customs inspection, import quotas, etc. It was decided, however, to postpone any action on this problem because we found that it would be very difficult for us to retaliate effectively and in like manner, and because the continued existence of the Embassy in Moscow does serve a useful purpose both as a source of reports on the U.S.S.R. and as training for officers of the Department.

3. As you mentioned, there would be little point in our acting alone to secure better travel facilities. In fact, we might find it difficult to take separate action when the Soviet authorities could point to the visit of Mr. and Mrs. [R.A.J.] Phillips<sup>27</sup> to Kiev and the Caucausus — in spite of the fact that the Phillips' success was due to their own perseverance and initiative rather than to the benevolence of the Soviet authorities.

<sup>27</sup> Deuxième secrétaire, ambassade en Union soviétique.
Second Secretary, Embassy in Soviet Union.

4. Before retaliation is considered, it would be desirable to elicit from the Soviet authorities a definite ruling as to whether or not travel is free. This, I understand, some of the Western missions are now attempting to do. Once this has been done, consideration might be given among the Western powers to the possibility of taking concerted retaliatory action. Retaliation, however, should be based not only on the travel restrictions, but also on the various other restrictions imposed on foreign missions in Moscow. In embarking on such a policy, we should have to be prepared to pursue that course of action even if it were to lead eventually to a withdrawal of missions. The whole problem, therefore, depends on serious political considerations.

5. I should be interested to learn in due course whether the United Kingdom or the United States Embassies intend to propose any concrete method of retaliation to their governments. While we should prefer not to take the initiative in this matter, we should be prepared to give favourable consideration to any measures which would be taken in concert with other governments and which would have a good chance of being effective.

I have etc.

L.B. P[EARSON]

1087.

DEA/8508-40

Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion des chefs de direction

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Heads of Divisions

SECRET

[Ottawa], October 12, 1948

...

TRAVEL RESTRICTIONS IN THE U.S.S.R.

17. Mr. Mayrand said that the Canadian Embassy in Moscow had received notification by a note of September 30, from the Soviet Foreign Ministry that movements of foreigners and members of diplomatic missions in the U.S.S.R. would be limited to a 50 kilometer radius of Moscow. Journeys outside this area might not be taken without the specific consent of the Soviet authorities and there are many areas, presumably inside, as well as outside the radius, for which consent could not be given at all. The Department is awaiting receipt of the complete text of the Soviet note before considering whether corresponding restrictions might not be placed on Soviet personnel in Ottawa.

1088.

DEA/2462-40

*Note de la Direction européenne
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

Memorandum from European Division to Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

[Ottawa], October 23, 1948

I attach a memorandum, dated October 23rd, which deals with reciprocity of privileges between Canada and the Soviet Union and its satellites.† The memorandum is divided into four sections, on

Reciprocity in the realm of publicity

Reciprocity in the realm of travel

Factors involved in a decrease in the status or size of our missions in Eastern Europe or in a withdrawal of representatives altogether

Conclusions and ultimate factors involved in all three of the above problems.

2. I regret that the memorandum is so long, but on a subject as important and complex as this, it was felt that you might wish to have all the facts.

3. A meeting was held on October 20th to discuss these problems. Mr. Measures, Mr. Rae, Mr. George, Mr. Erichsen-Brown, Mr. Mayrand and Mr. Wallis were present. The views expressed have been incorporated into the memorandum. Economic, Consular, and Legal Divisions have also contributed information on the questions for which they are responsible.

4. The memorandum attempts merely to give the factors involved in each alternative course of action with respect to each of the three problems. At the meeting, however, views were expressed on the merits of the alternatives.

5. With regard to publicity, it was felt that we should not try to circulate an information bulletin in the U.S.S.R. at the present time. We could take on publicity work in Yugoslavia and Poland, and probably in Czechoslovakia, provided the necessary staff (a responsible officer and translators) were made available. The Eastern European states, however, would be likely to make it difficult for us to give publicity to any political material. If we were to find that our bulletins were restricted to mere domestic news, we would have to decide whether to continue our publicity under those limitations, or discontinue it and ban the Communist bulletins in Canada. In the case of the U.S.S.R., we could decide to ban their propaganda by presenting them with publicity demands which they would refuse to accept and then retaliate by banning their bulletins. The Legal view was that we could find ways and means of putting the ban into effect. It was felt that we might get the benefit of the experience of the United Kingdom and United States, and also ask our missions in the Soviet Union and its satellites for their comments.

6. With regard to travel, it was felt that the Soviet restrictions do not prevent the Embassy from performing the work which it has performed in the past, since the Embassy's troubles stem from the totalitarian nature of the Soviet system in general, rather than from any particular restrictions. A ban on Soviet travel here would not seriously impede the Soviet Embassy, but it would, of course, be annoying. It was felt that we should not try to do anything on our own in this matter, but act jointly with the United Kingdom and the United States. (Mr. N.A. Robertson has expressed a similar view in his telegram No. 1773 of October 11th).† The Chargé in Moscow doubts if any positive action can be expected from the United Kingdom at the present time. He says that the United States Embassy were prepared to urge speedy retaliation if it were found that travel to “free” zones through “forbidden” zones was not permitted. However, two United States Embassy members have now been permitted to visit Tiflis and Stalingrad so it appears that travel through forbidden zones is permitted. Of course, this relative freedom may be taken away at any time in the future.

7. With regard to the size and status of our missions in Eastern Europe, the proposal to reduce the size of our missions was not favoured. If the missions were to continue, they should have the necessary complement of working officers, and appropriate staff; otherwise, their effectiveness would be seriously reduced. Whether the missions were to be called Legations and Embassies, or Consulates-General was perhaps more a question to be decided on domestic considerations and on whether we wished to express our disapproval of Communism by a gesture of that sort. A withdrawal of staff altogether would depend on domestic factors and on long term political considerations with respect to our policy towards Eastern Europe. The missions in Eastern Europe were performing a useful job of reporting on political and economic questions, and importance should be attached to our having listening posts in the one group of states with which we could conceivably be at war in the foreseeable future — a group whose policies had such an important bearing on the whole development and future of Canada.

8. In the conclusion of the memorandum, it is pointed out that a “tough” policy with respect to publicity, travel, and the status or existence of missions ultimately depends on (a) domestic considerations, and (b) a governmental decision concerning Canada’s long term foreign policy. Probably the majority of the Canadian public would support a tough and momentarily spectacular policy on the “diplomatic” front. The long term wisdom of such a policy would have to depend on whether we expect to reach an eventual modus-vivendi with the Soviet Union, whether we wish to close the door to all contact, official and otherwise, whether we wish to fight a diplomatic cold war as well as a political one, etc. Our missions in Eastern Europe are doing a useful job as “listening posts”. A cautious and gradual policy in the realm of ‘diplomatic’ restrictions, retaining our missions at their present strength and status, would be consistent with the following purposes: It would enable us to retain our “listening posts”; in the event of our engaging eventually, in concert with other Western Powers, in an active campaign in supporting anti-Communist forces in Eastern Europe, our missions there would take on additional importance; and at the same time the door would always be kept open for an improvement of relations in the future.

1089.

DEA/10-ET-40

Note du chef par intérim de la Direction de liaison avec la Défense pour le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Acting Head, Defence Liaison Division, to Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

[Ottawa], December 2, 1948

GRANTING OF VISAS TO SOVIET DIPLOMATS AND OFFICIALS

On October 29th we implemented a policy which Mr. Pearson had approved early in September and instructed our Embassy in Moscow to refer to the Department all future requests for visas for Soviet diplomats and officials except couriers. Mr. Watkins has strongly recommended reconsideration of this policy which he feels would involve us in a visa war with the Russians which we would not possibly win. He points out in his letter to Mr. Chance of November 19th† that we are at present getting comparatively good service from the Russians for entry and exit visas for our officials. If we start holding up visas for the Russians, even for a comparatively short time, they will reciprocate by delaying our requests for six or eight months, instead of the two or three months that it is at present taking.

2. While I am inclined to agree that we could not hope to win a visa war with the Russians, I do think that we are getting a poor bargain with them at present when they are taking two or three months to grant visas to us and we grant their visas in two or three days. It has never been my intention that we should delay granting visas to Soviet officials for a matter of months but I do think there are advantages in requests of this kind being referred to Ottawa for decision so that we know in advance who is coming. Then, if, as happened last August, the Russians suddenly decide to double the strength of their Military Attaché's office, we have the opportunity to refuse. In other cases we should not normally delay the granting of a visa by more than two or three weeks.

3. To make my proposal more concrete, I have drafted the attached telegram† in reply to Mr. Watkin's letter of November 19th and his telegrams Nos. 228† and 234†. Mr. Chance and Mr. Mayrand agree with my memorandum and the attached draft reply to Mr. Watkins, so does Mr. Measures.

- G.G. CREAN

SECTION C

ÉCHANGE D'INFORMATION EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION

1090.

DEA/8508-40

Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion des chefs de direction
Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Heads of Divisions

SECRET

[Ottawa], January 6, 1948

. . .

EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION WITH SOVIET UNION
(DISCUSSION OF DECEMBER 23, 1947)

23. Mr. Reid said that a review had recently been made of Departmental files dealing with the exchange of information with the Soviet Union in an effort to ascertain how the exchanges have worked in the past and whether or not any advantage might be gained by attempting to expand the exchanges in the future. The tentative conclusions set forth in a draft report are as follows:

(1) The Soviet authorities will not agree to supply any information which they consider to have a military significance. If any such exchanges are suggested by us, the Soviet Government will misinterpret our motives and will attempt to take what they can and to give little or nothing of value in return.

(2) The files indicate, however, that the Soviet authorities were anxious in the past to exchange information on non-military subjects of a purely scientific, technical, social or economic nature. Past exchanges in these fields have been, in general, from 33 1/3 to 50 per cent successful. However, it was found that, while many cases of failure could be attributed to the Soviet authorities, theirs was not the exclusive responsibility, for many exchange operations were left incomplete by the responsible Canadian authorities themselves. If the Departmental files give a complete picture of the operation of past exchanges, the conclusion may be drawn that, had these exchanges been dealt with more energetically, much more profit might have been derived from them than was in fact the case.

(3) Provided the present political conditions in general and the Soviet Decree on the Disclosure of State Secrets of June 1947 in particular, have not adversely affected the situation, it may be feasible to attempt to exchange information with the Soviet Union on non-military subjects (scientific, agricultural, etc.) in the future, with some hope of success.

(4) The exchange of cultural material presents a special problem. So far as Soviet material entering Canada is concerned, a distinction should be made between cultural material of a serious nature, which would be of value to Canadian libraries, universities, etc., and "cultural" material of a purely propagandistic character. So far as concerns Canadian cultural material entering the Soviet Union, such material in the past has not been given the publicity, circulation, or publication acknowledgement within the Soviet Union necessary for the exchanges to have proved satisfactory from the Canadian point of view.

24. As the Departmental files were incomplete, and did not indicate, in many instances, whether particular exchange operations had in fact progressed satisfactorily, and had been of real value, it has been decided to circulate the report (based on the Department's files) to the various Government Departments concerned, and to request the views of each Department on:

(1) The operation of past exchanges, and whether the material supplied by the Soviet authorities in the past had proved of real value;

(2) Whether it would be profitable and feasible to continue and to expand the exchange of material with the Soviet Union in certain specific fields.

25. The ultimate purpose of this enquiry is to formulate a firm policy regarding any future exchanges of information with the Soviet Union, and to ensure that any such exchanges are carried out on a strictly controlled basis, and subjected to periodic review so as to ensure that reciprocity is constantly maintained. (December 23, 1947)

1091.

DEA/50185-40

*Le chargé d'affaires en Union soviétique
au chef de la Direction de l'information*

*Chargé d'Affaires in Soviet Union
to Head, Information Division*

PERSONAL

Moscow, August 11, 1948

Dear Saul [Rae]:

We have been worrying here recently about the policy which should be adopted with regard to the presentation of Canadian publications to Soviet authorities or institutions. As I am by no means certain in my mind as to what we should do, I thought I would like to raise the matter first of all informally with you. Our latest discussions on the subject have been provoked by the receipt of your Despatch No. 664 of July 22nd,† asking us to present volumes of the Canadian Geographical Journal to the Academy of Sciences of the U.S.S.R. We have had several communications of this kind of late. In some cases both the Department and this Embassy are merely agents for carrying out the requests of private organizations like the Canadian Geographical Society or the Arctic Institute. In other cases the donor is more officially the Canadian Government.

2. There are certain inescapable facts in connection with this sort of activity. In the first place, as I am sure you realise, there is little likelihood of these donations being acknowledged or any information being given to us as to the disposition made of them. It is very doubtful, in fact, whether we can present such material to any Soviet institution except through the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Some time ago we received new instructions from the Ministry to the effect that foreigners could communicate with Soviet offices and institutions only through the Ministry.

Consequently, when we receive material such as the sets of the Canadian Geographical Journal, we will send them to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, asking them to pass them on to the Academy of Sciences. Whether they ever reach the Academy of Sciences, we have no way of knowing. The extent of our difficulties may perhaps be realized if I add that there is in Moscow no such thing as a telephone directory, a directory of institutions, or any way except by means of a gossip chain of finding out the names of persons associated with private or public offices. Consequently there is no such thing as an informal approach. When one makes a presentation of this kind, one simply sends the material off into a void.

3. Naturally one tends to become exasperated with the unfairness and the discourtesy with which one is treated. One is tempted to say that if the Russians cannot even thank us for what we give them, let alone show some desire to reciprocate, then we should cease to present any more gifts. I have no doubt that whether or not the sets of the Canadian Geographical Journal or the magazine "Arctic" reach the institutions for which they are intended, the Soviet authorities would be pleased to have them. It is extremely unlikely, however, that they would ever be made available to the general public, but they might well be useful for specialists.

4. There are, I think, three courses we can adopt, and I am by no means determined which is the right one. (1) We may continue our present policy of sending along materials with our compliments simply in the belief that, although there are no immediate rewards, we are making at least a gesture in the direction of good relations which may some day bear fruit. We might also be spreading a little propaganda which, however narrow its circulation, is perhaps sowing a few seeds of doubt in fanatical minds. (2) We could stop sending any complimentary material. The reasons for doing so would be that we see no reason why we should go on giving gifts to people who show no signs of appreciating them, and that by being so soft we are only making fools of ourselves. (3) We should try to force bargains — that is, we should definitely tie our presentation of certain materials to the presentation in exchange of some journal or document we should like to have. This, in principle, is a good idea, but it is very difficult to work. The Soviet authorities consider a good deal of their published material to be secret, and they are hardly likely to pass it on to us, regardless of what we offer in exchange. Nothing that is published in Canada is secret to them, because they can obtain copies through their own channels. However, in this country a good deal of material can actually be published and circulated without our being able to lay our hands on it. The trouble also with arranging an exchange is that the process is so arduous that it is scarcely worth while. One can never communicate direct with the particular Soviet authorities concerned. One can only send notes to the Ministry which may or may not be answered within six months or a year. I am inclined to wonder if this understaffed and overworked Embassy has not wasted too many man hours on this kind of useless correspondence.

5. You might also in this connexion like to consider the related question of presenting National Film Board films to Soviet government departments and other bodies. Our last correspondence on this subject was your letter of April 10th† concerning the proposal to give films to the Soviet Ministry of Agriculture.

6. Please don't assume that we have made up our minds here that we should definitely stop this one-sided cultural exchange. We think, however, that it is time to review our policy. I hope to discuss the subject with John Watkins who will probably have taken over by the time you have a chance to reply to this letter.

Yours sincerely,

JOHN [HOLMES]

1092.

DEA/50185-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au chargé d'affaires en Union soviétique*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Chargé d'Affaires in Soviet Union*

DESPATCH 851

Ottawa, October 29, 1948

SECRET

Sir,

For the past year or more we have been reviewing in the Department the question of the exchange of information with the Soviet Union with a view to finding out whether it would be feasible to expand such exchanges on a reciprocal basis. Our research into the operation of the exchanges from 1941 to 1947 revealed that:

(a) there was little hope that cultural material (films, art exhibits, etc.) would be given the necessary publicity and distribution in the Soviet Union to make such exchanges profitable;

(b) up to 1947, exchanges of scientific and social material were from 33-50% successful. While the Soviet authorities did not meet a number of requests submitted by us, Canadian government departments in turn did not reply to quite a few Soviet requests. Had the exchanges been efficiently carried out in all cases, the degree of success would have been greater;

(c) such scientific and social exchanges might prove reasonably successful in the future if vigorously and thoroughly carried out, provided the growing political tension and the Soviet decree on state secrets did not adversely affect the situation.

2. These conclusions were reached in November, 1947. Since then, political tension has developed to a point where it is highly doubtful whether any approaches which we might now make would have any chance of success. The present would appear to be a bad time to try to reach any agreement with the Soviet Union on expanding the exchange of information.

3. There still remains the problem of how to deal with the occasional exchanges with which we shall be faced from time to time. It is these exchanges which, I believe, Mr. Holmes has in mind in his letter of August 11th to Mr. Rae. In this letter, Mr. Holmes suggests that there are three alternative courses of action:

(a) to continue the present policy of sending Canadian material without making it conditional on the receipt of something in return;

- (b) to stop sending any material whatsoever;
- (c) to try to force bargains.

4. I am sure you will agree that we cannot continue sending material into the void. The second alternative, to stop sending any material at all, means that when a government department asks us to try to obtain Soviet material (whether it offers something to the Soviet authorities in return or not), we shall have to be prepared to inform the department concerned that there is no use in our forwarding the request or transmitting any material. I do not see how we can adopt this policy with a government department. We could, of course, suggest, as Mr. Holmes mentions, that the process is so arduous for the staff at the mission as to make it scarcely worthwhile, and that the Soviet authorities are hardly likely to supply any material even if we offer something in exchange. This will not meet the reply which the departments can make, namely, that one of the reasons why we have a mission in Moscow is to meet governmental requests even when they are arduous and frustrating, and that there is no harm in trying, especially when the department concerned is anxious to get certain specific material and is willing to offer something in return. In my view, we cannot refuse to take action on requests by Canadian government departments, and I feel that the only practical procedure is to try to "force bargains". While it is extremely unlikely that the Soviet authorities will meet the requests of the government departments, I think that it is better for the blame to fall on the Soviet Union for having refused to agree to a satisfactory reciprocal exchange.

5. Our exchanges with the Soviet Union are of three principal types, not all of which can be handled in the same way. These are:

(a) exchanges of government material of a scientific nature, for technical purposes;

(b) exchanges of government material of a cultural nature for information purposes;

(c) exchanges by non-governmental Canadian organizations (such as the Canadian Geographical Journal).

6. With regard to the exchange of government material of a scientific nature, we should rigidly adhere to the principle of reciprocity and should "force bargains" in all cases. This principle has already been laid down in general terms but has not always been strictly adhered to. From now on, when a government department sends us material (such as seeds, technical publications, etc.) for transmission to the Soviet Union, we shall inform the department that our policy is to make the supply of such material conditional upon prior agreement for a reciprocal exchange. We shall then request you to inform the Soviet Ministry of Foreign Affairs that Canadian government departments have certain material which they would like to exchange for certain Soviet material (or for any corresponding material of a general type if the Canadian department does not list any specific material which it would like to obtain). You would then ask the Soviet authorities whether they are interested in such an exchange and whether they agree to supply the information in which the Canadian government department is interested. If the Soviet reply is satisfactory, the Canadian material will be forwarded. In this way, the Canadian material will be given to the Soviet Government only after agreement is reached for the supply of Soviet material in return. If a government department requests us to obtain Soviet material and has nothing to offer in return, we shall forward the request to you for transmission. If the Soviet authorities ask for Canadian material, we shall advise the government department here that it would be desirable to make the exchange reciprocal.

7. With regard to government material of a cultural nature, we ordinarily supply such material to a country without asking for material in return, since it is to our advantage to have the Canadian material given publicity in the country concerned. However, there is little or no hope that Canadian cultural material will be given the necessary circulation in the Soviet Union — among the broad mass of Soviet citizens as opposed to the specialists or professional propagandists — to make the supply of such material worthwhile. As we shall never succeed in reaching an agreement for the circulation of Canadian cultural material in the Soviet Union under the present state of international relations, I think that the supply of such material (films, etc.) should be discontinued.

8. There is one way in which we might do useful information work in the Soviet Union and that is by supplying suitable material for publication in Britanski Soyuznik. A few months ago, for example, the Britanski Soyuznik had a two-page spread on Canadian agriculture. This one article has probably done more to make Canada known in the Soviet Union than any amount of films or other material which we may have supplied to the Soviet Government. I am aware of the useful work which the Britanski Soyuznik is doing, and I shall continue to have sent to you any features which might be suitable for insertion in that publication.

9. The problem becomes more complex in the case of material which non-governmental organizations wish to send to the Soviet Union. It is rather difficult for us not to forward material which a non-governmental agency might wish to send since the organization can always forward the material to the Soviet Union itself if it so wishes. On the other hand, it is regrettable when such material is sent into the void without the organization receiving an expression of thanks and without anything to show in return. In future, on receipt of a request by a non-governmental agency (such as the Canadian Geographical Journal for example), I intend to inform the agency of our policy of reciprocity, and to suggest that it might wish us to ask the Soviet authorities for suitable material in return before passing to the Soviet Union the Canadian material. If the agency indicates that it does not wish to make the supply of its material conditional upon the receipt of Soviet material, I think we shall have to transmit its material as requested (provided there is no objection on the grounds of security).

10. By adopting the procedure of "forcing bargains", it is still highly doubtful whether we shall succeed in obtaining the material we want from the Soviet Government. Perhaps the most fruitful method of obtaining technical information from the Soviet Union might be that of buying whatever technical publications are available in the Soviet bookshops. Although, as Mr. Holmes points out in his letter of August 11th, it is not easy to get hold of material in Soviet bookshops, I think that we should not rely entirely on the good graces of the Soviet Government. I suggest, therefore, that while continuing to offer exchanges on an official level, the Embassy should supplement this by trying to get whatever information it can from the bookshops, possibly in liaison with the United Kingdom or United States officers who are responsible for such work.

11. I should be pleased to receive your comments on this whole problem.

I have etc.

L.B. PEARSON

1093.

DEA/10591-AQ-40

Le président du Conseil national de recherches au sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures

President, National Research Council to Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, November 18, 1948

Dear Mr. Reid:

TECHNICAL INFORMATION FROM U.S.S.R.

A few months ago, the Council was approached by the Acting Commercial Counsellor of the Legation of the U.S.S.R. (Mr. N.S. Skvortsov) with regard to information on the testing of asbestos fibres. Since this was a purely technical inquiry, Mr. Skvortsov was directed to Mr. D. Wolochow, who is now the head of the Codes and Specifications Section of the Division of Building Research.

Before the war, Mr. Wolochow had been active in connection with research work on asbestos and had prepared a report in which were given details of a special testing device for use in connection with asbestos. One copy of this report (priced at $25.00) was still available, and after consultation with the appropriate officers of the Council, Mr. Wolochow gave this copy to Mr. Skvortsov with our compliments.

In so doing, he had an interesting conversation with this gentlemen and, at the request of Mr. R.F. Legget, the Director of the Division of Building Research, asked Mr. Skvortsov if it might be possible for the Council to obtain some information regarding current research work in the U.S.S.R. on snow and ice in which the work of the Council is greatly interested. Mr. Skvortsov stated that he thought it would be possible to obtain some information of this character and Mr. Wolochow stated that a written request would be made in due course.

Realizing the delicacy of such an inquiry, a check has been made with officers of your Department, who advise that such an inquiry should be directed through you. I therefore write to advise you of the foregoing facts and to ask if you would be good enough to transmit this inquiry to the Legation of the U.S.S.R. if you consider that it is entirely proper for such an inquiry to be made.

It might be helpful if I add that we know the U.S.S.R. have two or three research institutes devoted to the study of snow, ice and permafrost. No publications from these institutes are known to be available to us and it was this type of information which we hoped might be received in response to this inquiry.

Yours sincerely,

C.J. MACKENZIE

1094.

DEA/50185-40

*Le chargé d'affaires en Union soviétique
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chargé d'Affaires in Soviet Union
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

DESPATCH 485

Moscow, November 26, 1948

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 851 of October 29th concerning the exchange of information with the Soviet Union.

2. I fully agree with the views which you have expressed on the necessity of evolving a co-ordinated policy on the exchange of all types of information with the U.S.S.R. In paragraph 6 of your despatch, you stated that when a government department sends you technical material, you would take steps to see that there is an actual exchange and not a gift. I should be very interested to know the present scale of exchanges or gifts. As you no doubt know, nothing addressed to Soviet institutions passes regularly through this Embassy; I understand that Canadian departments send their publications or other materials directly through the ordinary post. We therefore have no idea of the present volume of exchanges, and we would be grateful to receive any lists of current transactions which may be available. If you do not have exhaustive lists of material being sent directly to the Soviet Union by Canadian government departments, I should suggest asking all departments concerned what is now being despatched to this country; it may well be that you have done this already. Obviously, the policy which you have in mind can be implemented only if government departments cease their present practice of sending their information directly through the open post.

3. I agree that there is little point in continuing to send cultural material to the Soviet Union, and I think we should stop doing so even though this will not impose any hardships on the Soviet authorities who are at liberty to supply themselves through Ottawa bookshops.

4. The material which non-governmental organizations send to the Soviet Union is not of great importance in either content or volume, and the Russians can certainly obtain it in Canada without any difficulty. Nevertheless, if it is possible to do so, it might be well to discourage Canadian organizations from continuing to make gifts of this nature, if only because in the Soviet mind it seems to weaken our insistence on reciprocity in all matters of scientific and cultural information.

5. We shall, of course, continue to use Britanski Soyuznik to the fullest possible extent. As you are aware, all Canadian material for that journal is supplied through this Embassy and we are making continuous efforts to interest the editor in printing Canadian features. Within the next two months I expect that there will be articles on Canadian tourism (which, I hope, will make points about the freedom of travel in Canada) and on Canadian scientific progress in artificial rain-making. The amount of material which we can insert is naturally limited by the fact that Britanski Soyuznik is a United Kingdom publication on which we have no voice and for which we have no responsibility. The Information Division has been very helpful in the past by keeping us supplied with Canadian photographs and articles. We should be glad to receive more contributions particularly pictures accompanied by textual material.

6. I think that it would be most unwise to ask the United States and United Kingdom Embassies to buy books for us. The United States Embassy has made it very clear that it would be reluctant to receive such a request which it would be forced to refuse. The United Kingdom Embassy does not have a regular bookbuying section and relies on its large staff, particularly members of the Russian secretariat, to make purchases. As I pointed out in my letter of November 3rd,† we are competing with other missions when we buy books in short supply. We can, I think, acquire a great deal of useful published information by subscribing to more technical periodicals and sending all periodicals which we buy to Ottawa for filing. My letter of November 17th† to Mr. Rae referred to this question, and I intend to submit to you an additional list of Soviet technical journals to which we might subscribe.

7. The experiences of the United Kingdom and United States Embassies in the exchange of information with the Soviet Union are very like our own. Neither of those Embassies has a clear idea what technical information is being exchanged by government departments at home, and neither knows what private organizations are sending material to the Soviet Union. In the case of both, all scientific and cultural exchanges which were carried out through the Embassies have broken down. The United States Library of Congress once agreed to a very comprehensive exchange of books with the Lenin Library, but the Russians did not cooperate satisfactorily; the scheme finally broke down when a nervous official of the Lenin Library refused to accept any more books of United States origin. The British Council had a similar experience, but it still carries on a small-scale exchange of medical books directly with a Soviet institution. Both the United States and United Kingdom Embassies have stopped sending films or other cultural material to Soviet institutions for general exhibition, although the British are lending some films with a view to arranging a sale of British films. Neither Embassy sends information publications to the Soviet Government, with the exception of Russian-language publications prepared for distribution in this country, and the daily United States Information Service Bulletin.

8. The policy which you have outlined raises a few minor questions:

(i) Films Although no further Canadian films will be sent for loan to VOKS, it is hoped that no change will be made in the practice of sending us films for showing in the Embassy or at the United Kingdom Embassy cinema. In view of our limited outlets, our needs would naturally not have high priority.

(ii) Films The Embassy once suggested offering to the Soviet Ministry of Agriculture certain old Canadian documentaries for which neither the Embassy nor the National Film Board has any further use. Your letter of April 10 refers. As these films are too slight to form the basis of any exchange, may we now destroy them? (The National Film Board has already agreed that we may either destroy them or give them away.)

(iii) Arctic We have on file a copy of the journal of the Arctic Institute of North America, which was sent under cover of your despatch No. 541 of June 2. It was not sent to a Soviet organization until the broad question of exchange of information was settled. May it now be left in the Embassy library?

(iv) Canadian Weekly Bulletin We have received no reply to our note of February 9th in which we asked the Ministry of Foreign Affairs what periodical we might receive in return for the Bulletin. Mr. Holmes' letter of May 7th to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs refers. Shall we take no further action until the Ministry answers our note?

(v) Books In view of the difficulties of buying specified books when they are requested, and in order to increase the amount of published information about the Soviet Union which we can acquire, could we have a small allotment of funds to use whenever the opportunity to buy useful books presents itself? An estimate of one hundred or two hundred dollars a year would probably be more than sufficient to buy all that it is possible to find of a useful nature.

9. I should be glad to receive your views and instructions on the matters which I have raised.

I have etc.

J.B.C. WATKINS

1095.

DEA/10591-AQ-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
au président du Conseil national de recherches*

Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to President, National Research Council

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, December 16, 1948

Dear Dr. Mackenzie,

In your note of November 18th informing me of the approach made by Mr. N.S. Skvortsov, Representative of the Commercial Counsellor of the Embassy of the U.S.S.R., for information on the testing of asbestos fibres, you mentioned that Mr. Skvortsov was given a report on this subject prepared by the Codes and Specifications Section of the Division of Building Research, and that he was asked at the same time if the National Research Council could be given information on research work in the U.S.S.R. on snow and ice. As requested in your letter, I have transmitted this request to the Soviet Embassy, and attach a copy of my note, No. 21 of December 16th, 1948.† As the Soviet authorities are neither noted for speed nor generosity in matters of this kind (especially when it concerns information on the Arctic), I doubt if we shall know their reply for quite some time. Nevertheless, I shall do my best to obtain from the Soviet Embassy the material requested.

The direct approach made by the Representative of the Soviet Commercial Counsellor to your Department raises a number of further problems pertaining to the channelling of communications to the Soviet authorities, which I discussed in general terms in paragraph 7 of my letter of April 9th, 1948.† In this letter, I mentioned the desirability of directing communications to the Soviet authorities in the U.S.S.R. through this Department so that we could judge the amount of information which government departments were supplying to the Soviet authorities in connection with the general policy concerning the exchange of information with the Soviet Union.

Experience in exchanging information with the Soviet Union has shown that the Soviet authorities, although anxious to get as much information as possible from Canadian government departments, try to supply as little as possible — if anything — of value in return. In view of the increasingly strained political situation, this Soviet attitude is likely to harden even more as time goes on. It is therefore our suggestion that government departments might consider adopting the policy of making the supply of information conditional on prior agreement being reached with the Soviet authorities for the receipt of some material of corresponding value in return. If this policy is agreed to, it could be made fully effective only if government departments which are approached, either verbally or in writing, with requests for material by the representatives of the Soviet Embassy in Ottawa, consult with the Department of External Affairs before meeting the requests. We propose that the departments approached should inform us of the request and signify what material they are willing to supply and what material they would like to receive from the Soviet authorities in return. This Department will then communicate with the Soviet Embassy and will offer the Canadian material in exchange for the Soviet material. If the Soviet authorities agree to supply this material, we shall forward to the Embassy the material supplied by the government departments. This will enable us to maintain control over the exchange of information with the Soviet Union and to ensure that Canadian government departments receive fully reciprocal treatment.

We propose that a similar procedure be adopted with regard to requests for Soviet material originating with Canadian government departments. These requests might be submitted to this Department with a list of material which can be given to the Soviet authorities in return. We shall pass this information to the Canadian Embassy in Moscow which will approach the Soviet Government regarding the mutual exchange of this material. If the Soviet authorities supply the information requested, the Embassy in Moscow will transmit the material supplied by the Canadian government departments.

I should be grateful if you would inform me whether you agree with the policy suggested and with the procedure proposed for its implementation. I am requesting the views of all other interested government departments and am referring a copy of our correspondence to the Chairman of the Security Panel for his information.

Yours sincerely,
ESCOTT REID

SECTION D

GUERRE PSYCHOLOGIQUE PSYCHOLOGICAL WARFARE

1096.

DEA/50182-40

Note
Memorandum

SECRET

[Ottawa], April 19, 1948

POLITICAL WARFARE

A meeting was held Friday, April 16, at 3.00 p.m. in Room 205 of the East Block. The following were present:

L.B. Pearson, Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
A.D. Dunton, Chairman, Board of Governors of the C.B.C.
E. Reid
G. de T. Glazebrook
R.G. Riddell
J.B.C. Watkins
S. Rae
G.C. Crean
G.H. Southam
M. Cadieux

A. DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION IN COUNTRIES DOMINATED BY COMMUNIST RÉGIMES

Mr. Pearson stated that in view of the existing international situation, it is now necessary to examine whether steps should be taken to disseminate information concerning Canada in communist dominated countries and to ensure that such information is presented in a suitable form, e.g., in line with the general objectives of our external policy. For instance, the C.B.C. should not give the impression, through their broadcasts to Czechoslovakia, that Canada is prepared to continue normal trade relations with that country under their present régime.

2. It seems clear that the only means which is now available to disseminate information in the countries under reference is, for all practical purposes, the international service of the C.B.C. Facilities for the distribution of films or printed material there are negligible. The question arises, however, whether there would be a large enough audience for C.B.C. broadcasts in these countries. It was agreed that the missions in Washington and London should endeavour to obtain from the

B.B.C.<sup>28</sup> and the F.C.C.<sup>29</sup> reports on jamming, the estimated number of listeners to foreign broadcasts in these countries. It may be that if the number of listeners is small, it would be preferable to concentrate our efforts on preparing broadcasts for friendly or marginal countries like Italy or Sweden.

3. If it is decided that broadcasts are to be directed systematically to communist controlled countries, close arrangements will have to be worked out with the C.B.C. so that their broadcasts are properly related to our policy objectives. This can only be done with the approval and the cooperation of the C.B.C. which is under no compulsion to accept advice tendered by this Department.

4. Mr. Dunton agreed that such liaison between the C.B.C. (I.S.) and External Affairs would be desirable. It was felt that while the Department could not undertake the actual drafting of scripts, cooperation could best be effected if the Department were to prepare for the international service guidance notes on matters of policy and on the interpretation of questions of current interest. No attempt should be made, however, to edit the scripts. C.B.C. writers and editors are specialists in their field and provided guidance is given to them in time on matters of policy, they should be left to deal with implementation in terms of their broadcasting technique.

5. In drafting these general guidance notes, Mr. Pearson suggested that the following principles might be taken into account:

(a) nothing should be done or said which might lead people in communist controlled countries to believe that Canada approves of their government;

(b) every opportunity should be used to give encouragement to the democratic elements;

(c) great care will have to be taken to avoid giving the governments of these countries valid grounds for protests, as technically Canada is on friendly terms with them.

6. Mr. Dunton reported that the C.B.C. had been giving some thought recently to the setting up of a small intelligence unit. If guidance notes prepared in the Department were accompanied by information material on conditions in these countries, the unit could make good use of this material. This would improve the value of the C.B.C. broadcasts and build up abroad their reputation for accuracy.

7. It was agreed that our missions in communist controlled countries should be consulted as to the general policy to be followed in preparing broadcasts. Their advice is also to be sought on the special interests of the groups which it is desired to reach in these countries.

8. The Department, in order to keep the guidance notes up to date and to ensure their usefulness as well as to check on their implementation, should receive the texts of the broadcasts. As some C.B.C. editors now prepare their scripts in foreign languages, translations are not always available. Mr. Dunton thought that if Miss Sullivan were assigned to the unit he mentioned above, she could check the scripts from the policy standpoint. It was agreed, however, that translations should be made available if possible.

---

<sup>28</sup> British Broadcasting Corporation.

<sup>29</sup> Federal Communications Commission.

B. CZECHOSLOVAKIA*1. Broadcasts

Mr. Pearson suggested that Mr. Nemeč, the former Czech Minister, might be invited to prepare talks. The scripts would, of course, be submitted in advance. Mr. Nemeč understands that this would be necessary.

In conversation with Mr. Pearson, Mr. Nemeč reported that the U.S.S.R. in their propaganda picture themselves as the protectors of the Czechs against the Germans. As the Czechs are concerned about a future German aggression, this line of propaganda is very effective. Mr. Pearson thought that Mr. Nemeč could explain very usefully that no one in Canada or in the western democracies intends to allow Germany to threaten again her neighbours.

2. Newspapers

It has been reported that at present the only Czech language newspaper in Canada is communist controlled. It was suggested that the Chamber of Commerce or some such organisation might be advised to interest itself in helping to establish a truly democratic Czech newspaper or in reviewing the one which suspended publication shortly before the coup in Prague. Such a newspaper would, in addition, provide useful material for broadcasts to Czechoslovakia.

3. At present the Czech editor on the C.B.C. (I.S.) programmes writes his scripts in the Czech language. While there is no question as to his loyalty, to ensure that his programmes conform to Canadian external policy, it would be advisable to arrange for English translations of these scripts. Mr. Dunton undertook to look into this matter.

C. DECISIONS

The Canadian missions in London and Washington are to be requested to obtain reports on jamming, estimated radio audiences in communist controlled countries.

2. The Canadian missions in communist controlled countries (U.S.S.R., Poland, Yugoslavia) are to be requested to give their views on the advisability of directing broadcasts to their respective countries and as to the lines which might usefully be followed in preparing these broadcasts if it is considered advisable to undertake them.

3. The Department of External Affairs is to prepare for the C.B.C. (I.S.) guidance notes on current developments on matters of foreign policy. These notes are to be supplemented by such information material as can be released.

4. The Canadian Chamber of Commerce is to be requested through appropriate channels to assist in the establishment of a Czech language newspaper which would be completely outside communist influence or control.

5. Mr. Nemeč is to be invited to prepare talks for the C.B.C. (I.S.).

1097.

DEA/50182-40

Note pour le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
Memorandum for Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET. PERSONAL.

[Ottawa], September 8, 1948

As I have not been very closely in touch with all the developments leading up to this morning's meeting and the discussions on Psychological Warfare generally, I may have got off the point somewhat without knowing it.

I think the meeting was very useful because the proposals made by Pidgeon were dealt with and, in the process, as far as I was concerned anyway, I came away with a few of the major points better sorted out in my mind.

As I said, I think there are two reasonably distinct joint operations between the C.B.C. International Service and ourselves. The first is the broadcasting of news and comment about Canadian affairs by the Service. This is primarily a C.B.C. responsibility and it takes the initiative and works out its plans for maintaining the proper standards of speed, accuracy and coverage. Except on the general principle that Canadian news sent abroad should serve this country well and reinforce its international policies as far as possible, there is no clear-cut plan, specified objective or specialized technique other than that of a regular news agency.

In the effort to maintain the standards mentioned, the Service has or will set up quick means of communication between their office and ours, has appointed a liaison officer to keep closely in touch with the Department for all checks and counter-checks, and through him and the Information Division is now going on to utilize further their liaison officer so that their news broadcasting may be better handled on all counts so far as this Department is concerned. It is proposed that a member of the Information Division should be appointed to work with him on this, and that selected material clearly usable by the C.B.C. should be forwarded to Montreal and that general directions for the handling of news under major current headings should be prepared in the appropriate divisions.

After this machinery has been whipped into shape and the people who compose it are quite sure how to work amongst themselves and together, it seems to me that the news broadcasting by the International Service should be in fair shape. No doubt it will have some propaganda character and in so far as our suggestions are adopted by the International Service news will be slanted to definite needs which we hope will further Canadian policy.

I still think, however, that what is called Psychological Warfare which is the second problem before us, can be clearly and usefully distinguished from news broadcasting. If it is properly so-called, it is an active use of ideas, news, commentary, to resist and overthrow counter-policies which endanger our country and social system. While the C.B.C. is one of the main weapons in carrying on this "warfare", the directing mind and the driving force should come from this Department. It is essentially the planned use of information calling for its selection, its timing, its phrasing and its continuity. It is not information in the ordinary sense of the word, that is, the liberal and objective diffusion of news and facts so as to inform other people about Canada. It is really the forging of verbal bullets and doodle-bugs to mess up the enemy's lines of communication and production centres.

Precedent to appointment of F.S.O's.<sup>30</sup> and establishing procedure for the flow of papers, I suggest that we try to list some of the main objectives of this attack, have them thoroughly discussed and agreed upon by the Heads of the Political, Economic and Consular Divisions and then draft a tentative opening programme.

This programme would include the use of news broadcasting of the C.B.C. but it should also allow for daily or periodical broadcasts based on a broad plan with long range and short range purposes and written according to clearly defined policy directives drawn up in the Department.

If we took this matter seriously, I think the Heads of Divisions concerned, or selected substitutes, with a continuing responsibility for the work, should meet every, say, Wednesday, and draft the outline of the directive for Thursday and the subsequent week. The executive officer of such a committee could be the F.S.O. appointed to the Information Division to deal jointly with the C.B.C. liaison officer on current news and on the planned Psychological Warfare.

As Gerry Riddell said this morning, this Psychological Warfare is a much more complicated and difficult undertaking than the other. Hence I think it will call for a good deal more preparation before it can be launched. Amongst others, Dunton and [I.R.A.] Dilworth<sup>31</sup> should be closely advised of this development from the beginning.

Speaking generally, I have the feeling that we are just beginning to realize how little conscious manipulation we have made of our foreign policy. I mean by this that while we have of course worked out and recommended a policy on a multitude of problems as they have arisen, we have done little or nothing to apply the general principles behind any one of these special policies to a general end. Some of the public utterances of the Minister and others have embodied in certain well-worn phrases our desire to act collectively in defence of the West, but I do not feel that this underlying principle of action has been much more than a passive element hitherto.

Knowing as little as I do, however, about Departmental policy on the big issues, I should perhaps not go any further on this point. I am chiefly concerned at the moment in shaking out what I regard as the rather muddled collection of ideas with which we were dealing this morning, though I realize that the muddle was mostly in my own mind and partly caused by the in and out policy I had to follow towards the meeting!

T.W.L. M[ACDERMOTT]

<sup>30</sup> Foreign Service Officer.

<sup>31</sup> Directeur général, Radio Canada (Service international).
General Supervisor, CBC(IS)

1098.

DEA/8508-40

Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion des chefs de direction
Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Heads of Divisions

SECRET

[Ottawa], October 12, 1948

. . .

INFORMATION DISTRIBUTED BY FOREIGN MISSIONS IN CANADA

18. Mr. Mayrand said that a number of complaints had been received from Canadians protesting the use of the mails for the circulation in Canada of news and propaganda bulletins by missions in Ottawa from Communist states. Articles in these bulletins have frequently been offensive. The Department is considering the possibility of circulating in those Communist countries whose missions issue a bulletin in Canada, a corresponding Canadian information bulletin which would contain news about Canada, excerpts from speeches made by government leaders, etc. If the Communist states protested the circulation of a Canadian bulletin and requested its discontinuation, we could similarly ban the circulation of that state's bulletin in Canada.

19. The Department is also considering the possibility of giving publicity in Canada to information about the Soviet Union, and the Communist states of Eastern Europe, received from Canadian missions in these countries. Communist censorship of the reports of press correspondents leads to a situation where the Canadian public is often ignorant of the true significance of developments in the Communist states. The release of material received by the Department through the diplomatic bag might help to correct this situation.

. . .

1099.

DEA/50182-40

Note de la Direction de l'information
pour le chef de la Direction européenne
Memorandum from Information Division
to Head, European Division

[Ottawa], November 9, 1948

At a meeting held in Mr. Pearson's office on April 16th, 1948, which was attended by various members of the Department and by Mr. A.D. Dunton, Chairman of the Board of Governors of the C.B.C., it was decided that the Canadian Missions in London and Washington be requested to obtain reports on jamming of broadcasts to communist controlled countries and estimates of radio audiences in those countries.

It was also decided that the Canadian Missions in communist controlled countries be requested to give their views on the advisability of directing broadcasts to their respective countries and their suggestions as to the lines which might usefully be followed in preparing broadcasts, if it were considered advisable to undertake them.

Another decision was that the Canadian Chamber of Commerce be requested, through appropriate channels, to assist in the establishment of a Czech language newspaper which would be completely outside of communist influence or control.

Still another decision was that Mr. Nemeč, the former Czech Minister, be invited to prepare talks for the C.B.C.(I.S.).

From the point of view of your Division, the most important decision was that the Department was to prepare for the C.B.C.(I.S.) guidance notes on developments in matters of foreign policy and to supply such supplementary information material as could be released.

I should be grateful if you would let me know whether your Division has implemented any of these decisions, and if so, if you would let me have the numbers of the relevant files so that I may see how matters stand.<sup>32</sup>

E. BENJAMIN ROGERS

1100.

DEA/50182-40

*Note de la Direction de l'information
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Information Division
to Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], December 15, 1948

PUBLICIZING INFORMATION REGARDING CONDITIONS BEHIND THE "IRON CURTAIN"

(This memorandum is marked Top Secret because of one statement which is clearly indicated. The rest of the memorandum should be classified as Secret.)

A memorandum entitled "Economic Heresy in the USSR", and other material on the subject have been sent to the Editor of the Canadian Journal of Economics and Political Science by Mr. MacKay.

In addition to the memorandum on Economic Heresy in the USSR, I have prepared an article on the Sovietization of the Baltic Republics, which I have sent to you, and another on the Government Policy Towards Trade Unions in Czechoslovakia. We have asked Moscow to bring up-to-date the information contained in a couple of despatches regarding the status of women in the USSR. Mr. Wallis is doing a memorandum on the purges of artists and scientists in the USSR.

We have just received a batch of reference papers on conditions in the USSR and communist-dominated countries from the U.K. High Commissioner. These were prepared in the Research Department of the Foreign Office, and are being fed

<sup>32</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Mr. [B.A.] Wallis tells me that, so far as Eastern Europe is concerned, nothing has been done.
E.B. R[ogers]. 10/11/48

surreptitiously and “unofficially” to trusted editors and other people in the U.K. and abroad. The Top Secret fact is that the U.K. Government has adopted the policy of engaging in anti-Soviet, anti-communist propaganda. We may be able to use the material here.

I am discussing with Mr. Rae means of getting material of this kind published. We shall let you have our views on the matter in the near future.

We have also received from the U.K. High Commissioner copies of a Digest of significant items of information on current relations with the Soviet Union, the satellites and the principal agencies or organizations involved. Information in the Digest is stated to be prepared under official auspices. It may be published, but without revelation of the source, on the responsibility of the user.

I think we might issue a monthly digest using some of the material that appears in the U.K. Digest and including a section entitled “Canada in the Soviet Press”; or we might exclude the U.K. material and entitle our digest Canada in the Soviet Press. We have requested the Embassy in Moscow to send us translations of all significant articles on Canada in the Soviet press — translations that we can publish.

The American Council of Learned Societies will soon commence publication of a Digest of the Soviet Press. The Digest will be edited by a Russian linguist who will use J.P.R.S.<sup>33</sup> translations as bases for his own translations and summaries. In every case he will check the J.P.R.S. version against the original. The Information Division is preparing a list of Canadian universities, societies, newspapers and periodicals, and individuals, to whom the A.C.L.S. will send its announcement of the Digest.

E. BENJAMIN ROGERS

1101.

DEA/50182-40

Note de la Direction de l'information pour le chef de la Direction de l'Amérique et de l'Extrême-Orient

Memorandum from Information Division to Head, American and Far Eastern Division

SECRET

[Ottawa], December 15, 1948

A couple of weeks ago we asked the Embassy in Washington to obtain details of any plans that might have been drawn up for the conduct of psychological warfare in the event of war. We have now received a reply, a copy of which I attach to this note.† You will observe that Mr. Snow of the State Department has expressed a willingness to talk to you about the subject during the meeting of the P.J.B.D. in Montreal.

Our own plans are still in a pretty embryonic stage. The trend of our thinking is, however, that psychological warfare should be the responsibility of External Affairs and that there should be set up within the department a section headed by a senior officer, probably an assistant under-secretary. There will also be an inter-departmental committee including representatives of External Affairs, National Defence, C.B.C., Economic Warfare, and any domestic information agencies that might be set up. This inter-departmental committee would advise the Secretary of State for External Affairs on matters of policy.

<sup>33</sup> Joint Publications Research Service.

The organization within the department would be responsible for operations, for liaison with corresponding agencies in other countries, for liaison with the military authorities, etc. The operating agencies would be the International Service of the C.B.C. and the Information Division of External Affairs. The production facilities of any domestic information organizations that might be established would doubtless be utilized.

We should emphasize that the above represents only the trend of our thinking. No decisions have been adopted as yet. It goes without saying that our activities in the field of psychological warfare would have to be on a very limited scale as we have only one shortwave transmitter.

I should be grateful if you would ascertain from Mr. Snow whether there is any information that he can give us in addition to that contained in despatch No. 2719 of December 9th, from the Embassy in Washington. † In particular we should like to know when it would be worth while for me to go to Washington to discuss matters with the appropriate people there.

E. BENJAMIN ROGERS

1102.

DEA/50182-40

*Note de la Direction de l'information
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Information Division
to Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

[Ottawa], December 18, 1948

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC INTELLIGENCE UNIT

I sent you a note a couple of days ago regarding my proposal for the establishment within the department of a political and economic intelligence section. The question naturally arises, What use would be made of the material that an intelligence section would collect?

My proposal was made with the needs of psychological and economic warfare primarily in mind. I therefore suggest that a start might be made by building up a set of files on the USSR and each of the satellite countries. It would be desirable to add files on the other European countries as quickly as possible.

I think that the information might be used in the following ways:

(1) It would be held in reserve for psychological and economic warfare.

(2) It could be used in determining the propaganda line that should be adopted in speeches in the United Nations and elsewhere, in broadcasts by the C.B.C. International Service, etc.

(3) Factual material might be used in speeches, radio programmes, etc.

(4) The information might be used in the preparation of articles on conditions in the USSR and satellite countries, for publication in Canada.

(5) Special kinds of information might be made available to anti-communist foreign language newspapers in Canada.

(6) Background information could be made available to the C.B.C. International Service.

(7) Certain types of information might be of interest to other departments of government.

I think that we should envisage the establishment eventually of a research division which would include the political and economic intelligence files, the library and possibly the old non-active files, or some of them. The research division would be staffed by foreign service officers whose duty would be to prepare memoranda or articles for propaganda purposes and, at the request of any division of the department, to dig up information on any subject that might be required.

E. BENJAMIN ROGERS

SECTION E

DÉTENTION DE WELD ET CLABON
DETENTION OF WELD AND CLABON

1103.

DEA/4494-B-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
aux chefs de poste à l'étranger
Secretary of State for External Affairs to Heads of Post Abroad*

CIRCULAR DOCUMENT SPECIAL NO. 4

Ottawa, February 9, 1948

SECRET

Sir,

You have already been advised in the Minutes of the Meetings of the Heads of Divisions† and in Press Releases Nos. 63† and 64† of November 21st and November 24th respectively of the detention on November 12th, 1947, of Mr. J.D.M. Weld and Captain A.W. Clabon of the Canadian Military Mission, Berlin, by the Soviet authorities after these officers had crossed into the Soviet-administered part of former East Prussia on their return journey from Warsaw to Berlin.

2. In a note to the Canadian Embassy in Moscow, dated November 23rd,† the Soviet Ministry of Foreign Affairs stated that the investigation made by the Soviet authorities into this incident showed that Mr. Weld and Captain Clabon had entered the territory of the Soviet Union illegally. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs protested this illegal crossing of the border by the members of the Canadian Military Mission and expressed its conviction that measures would be taken by the Canadian authorities to prevent a recurrence of such actions in the future. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs also informed the Embassy that, taking into consideration the Embassy's request, the Soviet authorities had given permission for Mr. Weld and Captain Clabon to leave for Poland.

3. After the release of these officers on November 23rd and their return to Berlin, a committee of senior officers of the Department was formed to investigate the circumstances surrounding this episode. On February 4th, on instructions from the Department, the Chargé d'Affaires of the Canadian Embassy in Moscow delivered a note to the Soviet Foreign Ministry in reply to the Ministry's note of November 23rd. The text of this note is attached. In presenting the note to the Soviet Foreign Ministry, the Chargé d'Affaires added orally that it was the intention of the Canadian Government to arrange for the transfer of Mr. Weld and Captain Clabon from the Canadian Military Mission in Berlin as soon as suitable replacements were available. He also stated that, although the Canadian Government appreciated that it had been informed without delay of the detention, and that the two telegrams from the detained officers had been delivered to the Embassy, the Canadian Government would have wished that the Soviet Government could have responded to the Embassy's requests for telephone communication and visiting facilities. It was stated in reply that the absence of telephone communication and the wilderness of the country made it difficult to meet the Embassy's requests.

4. It is a matter of good fortune that the episode was not developed by the Soviet Government as an attempt at espionage. The Soviet Government has always treated foreigners with suspicion, but lately even the most minor incident has been magnified and distorted into a pretext to accuse foreigners of unauthorized activities and to discredit them in the eyes of the Soviet people. It is hardly necessary, therefore, to impress upon the members of Canadian Missions the necessity of exercising extreme care and circumspection if they are travelling in Eastern Europe. While officers are usually aware of the special conditions which exist in Eastern Europe, it may not at times be realized that the smallest incident may have very wide repercussions and cause considerable embarrassment to the Canadian Government.

5. A member of a Canadian Mission should therefore not travel to any country of Eastern Europe in which there is a Canadian Mission without first, through his own Head of Mission, informing that Mission and securing its approval of his itinerary and other arrangements, and he should adhere strictly to his itinerary. These rules apply to the Soviet Zone of Germany, to Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, and the U.S.S.R. He should not travel in the Soviet Zone of Austria, to Bulgaria, Roumania or Hungary without first securing the permission of his Head of Mission and of this Department.

I have etc.

ESCOTT REID
for the Secretary of State
for External Affairs

TEXT OF NOTE DELIVERED TO THE SOVIET MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS
BY THE CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES, CANADIAN EMBASSY, MOSCOW,
ON FEBRUARY 4TH, 1948

The Canadian Embassy presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the U.S.S.R. and in reply to Note No. 40/2E-Ka of November 23 from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs concerning Mr. J.M. Weld and Captain A.W. Clabon has the honour to inform the Soviet Government of the results of the investigation which the Canadian Government has made of the circumstances attending the detention by the Soviet authorities of Mr. Weld and Captain Clabon, members of the staff of the Canadian Military Mission in Berlin.

2. The investigation reveals that Lt.-Gen. Maurice Pope, the Chief of the Canadian Military Mission in Berlin, gave permission to Mr. Weld and Captain Clabon to be absent from Berlin for the week-end of November 8 to 11 in order that they might pay a personal and unofficial visit to Warsaw where they wished to call on their friends at the Canadian Legation. It was General Pope's understanding that they would go to Warsaw via Wroclaw (formerly Breslau) and return to Berlin by a route no less direct. Before leaving Berlin they secured visas from the Soviet and Polish authorities.

3. While in Warsaw, without advising General Pope, Mr. Weld and Captain Clabon decided to return to Berlin by a northern route via Allenstein, Danzig, and Stettin. On arriving in Allenstein they were informed that they could not proceed to Danzig by highway 133 (the direct route) as the bridges were out. They therefore decided to proceed north on main highway 128, in order to connect with the auto-bahn to Danzig, which, they thought, would enable them to reach Berlin in the shortest time.

4. Their decision to take this route resulted in their crossing into that part of East Prussia which is now administered as part of the Soviet Union.

5. The evidence does not establish that either Mr. Weld or Captain Clabon knowingly or wilfully violated the regulations of the U.S.S.R. or that either of them was aware that he was entering territory not covered by his visas. Nevertheless, it is established that these officers did in fact cross into territory administered as part of the Soviet Union. This crossing would have been avoided if Mr. Weld and Captain Clabon had exercised better judgment.

6. Mr. Weld and Captain Clabon have been suitably admonished and counselled for the future. Measures have also been taken to prevent the recurrence of such happenings.

7. The Canadian Government regrets greatly the inconvenience to the Soviet Government which was occasioned by Mr. Weld and Captain Clabon and desires to take advantage of this opportunity to express to the Soviet Government its appreciation of the despatch with which the Soviet Government completed its investigation and facilitated the return of these persons to Berlin.

8<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 8YUGOSLAVIE
YUGOSLAVIA

1104.

DEA/9035-40

Note pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Memorandum for Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], June 22, 1948

You will perhaps recall that at the time of the campaign conducted largely by the Council of Canadian South Slavs for the repatriation to Yugoslavia of immigrants to Canada, there was publicized a scheme whereby funds were to be collected from sympathetic Canadian South Slavs, to be used to purchase relief and rehabilitation equipment for despatch to Yugoslavia, in order to assist in the rehabilitation of that country.

The drive for funds, a large portion of which were obtained from the departing repatriates, resulted in a substantial collection, from which some $280,000 has been used to purchase a miscellany of commodities for shipment to Yugoslavia. Of this total about $130,000 has been expended in the purchase of new machines and equipment, and about $150,000 for the purchase of articles from War Surplus through War Assets Corporation.

Permission to export these commodities has been withheld for sometime, for the following reasons:

(a) There was a suspicion that duress had been applied to individual Canadians in order to persuade them to subscribe.

(b) It was felt that, while during the period of collection the collectors stated that the purpose of the fund was partly to set up the repatriates in their new life, that in fact the repatriates as individuals would receive practically no benefit from the import of the articles in question.

(c) The activities of the Council of South Slavs and of the Yugoslav representatives in Canada were objectionable to the Canadian Government from many points of view.

Up to the present, permission to export has been withheld on the grounds that the regulations of the Foreign Exchange Control Board require that the value of all exports must be received in hard currency from the recipient, except in the case of gifts to a value of less than $100. Gifts to a value of more than $100 may be exported, but only with the specific consent of the Foreign Exchange Control Board.

Last week it was drawn to Mr. Howe's attention that the Council of South Slavs, some two years ago, had reached an understanding with the Foreign Exchange Control Board to the effect that the proceeds of such a collection could be used for the purchase of goods for export to Yugoslavia. In the light of this, Mr. Howe has come to the conclusion that we should not any longer withhold permission to export.

The Department of Trade and Commerce, however, intends to withhold permission for war-like materials such as parachutes and parachute cords, which have been purchased, and new equipment of United States origin, such as a Diesel engine which is also now in the hands of the representative of the Council.

The Department has not held very strong views on this subject. We have not opposed the sale of non-war-like goods to Yugoslavia in general, but we did, however, concur in the recommendation of the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy that permission to export in this particular instance should be withheld. As matters now stand, however, the prior agreement with the Foreign Exchange Control Board removes any argument we might advance to the Council of South Slavs for refusing permission to ship except for the categories mentioned above.

I would propose, if you agree, to instruct our Minister in Belgrade to inform the Yugoslav Government that the Canadian Government, in order to clean up this particular arrangement, has now granted permission to export, but add a word of caution so as to make it clear that the Canadian Government is not encouraging further exports to Yugoslavia of this nature.<sup>34</sup>

Last Friday the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy, after reviewing the facts, agreed that permission to export should now be granted.

1105.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], December 21, 1948

. . .

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS; COMPENSATION AGREEMENT; CLAIMS AGAINST YUGOSLAVIA

34. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said that in July 1947, the U.K. government had been informed that Canada accepted a U.K. offer to negotiate with Yugoslavia on behalf of Canadian claimants with respect to property nationalized in Yugoslavia. Subsequently, submission of claims from Canadians had been invited by public advertisement.

The U.K. and Yugoslavian representatives had now completed a general agreement for compensation. This agreement included settlement of the Canadian claims which had totalled in the neighbourhood of $7 million. Of these, the largest had been a claim for $5,600,000 for a nationalized mine.

<sup>34</sup> Ces instructions ont été envoyées le 24 juin.
This instruction was sent on June 24.

It was difficult to foresee the effect of the proposed settlement on the payment of individual claims but it appeared likely that the settlement would amount to about twenty to twenty-five cents on the dollar. Payments would be made in sterling to the United Kingdom and the Canadian government would have to make arrangements with the U.K. government regarding the use of this sterling.

(External Affairs memorandum, Dec. 20, 1948).†

35. Mr. Pearson pointed out that, failing acceptance of the agreement negotiated by the United Kingdom, the Canadian government would have to attempt to negotiate its own agreement with Yugoslavia, a course which offered virtually no prospects of success.

36. The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that the government concur in the compensation agreement negotiated with Yugoslavia by the U.K. government, on the understanding that the Secretary of State for External Affairs would satisfy himself that the government were fully authorized to act on behalf of individual Canadian claimants.

CHAPITRE XIII/CHAPTER XIII
EXTRÊME-ORIENT
FAR EAST

PREMIÈRE PARTIE/PART 1

CHINE
CHINA

SECTION A

ACTIVITÉS ÉLECTORALES CHINOISES AU CANADA
CHINESE ELECTORAL ACTIVITIES IN CANADA

1106.

DEA/9820-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], July 15, 1948

CHINESE POLITICAL ACTIVITIES IN CANADA

You will recall that on April 12 I sent you a memorandum† regarding elections of representatives of Overseas Chinese in Canada to the Chinese National Assembly and the Legislative Yuan which had taken place in December and January. I pointed out that the United Kingdom, French and Siamese Governments had protested to the Chinese Government that the extra-territorial application to their territories of the Chinese electoral law involved an unwarrantable interference with the sovereignty of the local territorial administration concerned. The Chinese had accordingly desisted from holding elections in those territories. I also informed you that the Department of Justice had indicated that the holding of these elections in Canada by the Chinese Consular Service was not contrary to any positive Canadian law. However, the Legal Advisor of this Department is of the opinion that the Chinese authorities should not engage in the application of the Chinese electoral law to Canada without the permission of the Canadian Government. I proposed, if you concurred, to call in the Chinese Ambassador and, in a friendly way, let him know that the Canadian Government did not approve such activities and ask for his assurance that no further attempt would be made to apply China's electoral law in Canada.

2. In commenting on this memorandum you agreed that Chinese residents of Canada should not constitute a constituency to send elected representatives to their National Assembly and Legislative Yuan. However, you could see no objection to a procedure by which Chinese residents of Canada, who would have the right to vote directly if they were in China, could send forward their ballots marked before the local Consular officials in the same manner in which they might exercise private rights with Consular authentication.

3. There are two observations which seem to me to be germane. The first is that Article 26 (5) of the Chinese Constitution provides for representation in the Chinese National Assembly and Legislative Yuan of "Overseas Chinese". This quota of representatives of Overseas Chinese has been selected by assigning one or two or more representatives to be elected by the Overseas Chinese in the various foreign countries in which they have principally congregated. I suppose that it would be possible for Overseas Chinese throughout the world to vote for certain representatives-at-large of all Overseas Chinese everywhere. This would only be a difference in degree from the direct election of one or two representatives to represent Overseas Chinese in Canada. The second observation is that Chinese representatives in Canada really have no right to attempt to organize or otherwise interfere with Chinese Canadian citizens or even long-time residents of this country who have some duties to this country by reason of their acceptance of certain rights and privileges here.

4. Quite a number of persons of Chinese descent in Canada are possessed of dual Canadian-Chinese nationality. Most of these are natural born Canadian citizens who have also acquired Chinese nationality through their Chinese fathers. In addition, there are an increasing number of Chinese citizens who have become naturalized Canadian citizens since February 13, 1947, and who have not yet relinquished their Chinese citizenship. This has been made possible by Order-in-Council P.C. 567 of February 13, 1947, which revoked P.C. 1378 of June 17, 1931 and P.C. 1760 of August 13, 1934. Under this new Order-in-Council Chinese no longer require to secure release from Chinese nationality through application to the Chinese Ministry of the Interior before applying for a certificate of Canadian citizenship.

5. Most writers on international law accept the principle that a person enjoying dual nationality is subject to the laws of the country in which he resides. This being the case, there would appear to be grounds for our objecting to Chinese Consular officers in Canada inviting dual nationals to participate in Chinese elections or in any other way making an effort to organize or interfere with such dual nationals in Canada. Our Embassy in China has consistently taken the attitude that it will not intervene on behalf of or otherwise attempt to exercise authority over Chinese-Canadians in China who are possessed of dual nationality.

6. In addition to the natural born and naturalized dual nationals mentioned above, there is the important group of Chinese residents who came to this country on immigrant visas with the implied intention of making their permanent homes in this country. These persons enjoy the advantages and privileges of Canadian domicile within the meaning of the Immigration Act, namely old age pensions, relief, free education, unemployment insurance, etc., even before they become naturalized Canadian citizens. It may be reasonably argued, therefore, that they have a strong moral obligation to this country of their voluntary adoption to conduct themselves from the very first as probationary Canadian citizens. While these people are still only Chinese citizens by nationality and we could not object to them having recourse to the Chinese Consular officials, I think that in view of the privileges which they enjoy and their intention of making this country their permanent home implied in their landing here as immigrants, we have a right to object to the Chinese Consular officials putting on any campaign to organize them with a view to maintaining their loyalty to China and their interest in Chinese domestic and political matters.

7. If we exclude the three categories mentioned above, the only Chinese in Canada whom we would have no reason to object to exercising their right to vote in Chinese elections through marking a ballot at their local Consular office would be those who come within the non-immigrant classes as defined in Section 2 (h) of the Immigration Act, namely diplomatic and consular officers, tourists and travellers, students, businessmen, etc., who are exclusively Chinese citizens and who are only in Canada temporarily. It is doubtful whether Article 26 (5) of the Chinese Constitution which states that "the number of delegates to be elected by Chinese nationals residing abroad shall be prescribed by law," is designed to provide for the representation of this particular group. Strictly speaking, they are not Overseas Chinese and should only vote for representatives of their native constituencies back in China. If we adopt the attitude that dual nationals and Chinese enjoying the rights of domicile in Canada should not be invited by the Chinese Consular Service to cast votes in the National Assembly and Legislative Yuan elections, I think the whole purpose of Article 26 (5) of the Chinese Constitution providing for representation of Overseas Chinese would be defeated in Canada and it would probably not be worthwhile for the Chinese Consular Service to extend polling facilities to the small transient group that would be left. From an administrative point of view, of course, it would be difficult to ensure that only Chinese non-immigrants went to the polls opened at the Chinese Consulates and cast their ballots.

8. While there is some doubt whether the holding of elections in Canada by the Chinese Consular Service in a manner not contrary to the positive law of Canada would be a violation of international law, nevertheless I suggest that we would be ill-advised to continue to overlook electoral activity on the part of the Chinese Consular Service in Canada. Such activity can only serve to perpetuate among communities of Chinese living in Canada political divisions which have no raison d'être in this country. I therefore recommend that, in accordance with the attitudes adopted by the United Kingdom, French, Dutch and Siamese Governments, we should let the Chinese know, through their Ambassador in Ottawa, that the Canadian Government regards the extraterritorial application of the Chinese electoral law in Canadian territory as an unwarrantable interference with Canada's territorial sovereignty. We should ask an assurance that no further attempt will be made to apply this law in Canada. In order to have our views on this subject recorded, I think it would be well to give an aide mémoire to the Chinese Ambassador on this subject and ask for a written reply from him. I am attaching a copy of an aide mémoire for your approval.†

9. I should like to take advantage of this talk with the Chinese Ambassador to touch also on two other aspects of Chinese political activity in this country: the sending of political organizers and newspaper editors to Canada. The Overseas Department of the Central Executive Committee of the Kuomintang is sending an inspector, Mr. Chang Wen-chung, to this country to investigate living conditions amongst the Overseas Chinese here. Our Embassy in Nanking suspects that he is a political organizer coming to inspect the various local headquarters of the Kuomintang. We instructed our Embassy to inform the Chinese Government that we would only issue a visa for this man to come to this country on the understanding that he would be subject to the authority of the Chinese Ambassador while in this country and that he would not engage in any activities exceeding those normally permitted diplomatic or consular officers. The Overseas Department of the Central Executive Committee of the Kuomintang has also made application to send a paid editor for the Chinese Daily News in Victoria, B.C. We are discussing with the Immigration Branch whether this man actually falls within any of the admissible non-immigrant classes. I am inclined to think that this type of political activity on the part of the Chinese in this country is undesirable and that it would be only proper that we should let the Chinese Ambassador know that we do not approve of their efforts to keep alive political organizations among their people in this country.<sup>1</sup>

L.B. P[EARSON]

1107.

DEA/9820-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

RESTRICTED

[Ottawa], September 29, 1948

At my request, the Chinese Ambassador called this morning to receive the aide-mémoire† outlining the Canadian Government's objections to the holding of Chinese elections in Canada. Mr. Menzies of the American and Far Eastern Division was present at the interview.

I told Dr. Liu that since the end of the war the Canadian Government had been disturbed by the activities in Canada of agents of the eastern European Communist-controlled governments. It had been necessary for the Government to warn the representatives of these governments on various occasions that attempts to perpetuate among residents of Canada political divisions existing in their countries of origin would not be tolerated by the Canadian Government.

Partly for this reason, it had been necessary for the Canadian Government to look a little more closely into the activities of the agents of other foreign governments among groups of Canadian residents of foreign extraction. On looking into this matter we had got the impression that the activities of some Chinese representatives in relation to the local residents of Chinese origin appeared to come pretty close to infringements of the type about which we had complained to the eastern European missions.

<sup>1</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:
Agreed. St. L[aurant] Aug. 3, 1948

I mentioned that the proposed tour of Canada by a representative of the Overseas Chinese Affairs Commission seemed to be open to some question. Then again we were not at all happy about the Overseas Department of the Kuomintang sending a paid editor to take charge of the Chinese Daily News in Victoria, B.C.

I had been authorized by the Government to hand him an aide-mémoire regarding the elections held in Canada in December and January. We had had this question under study for some time as we wished to look into the legal aspects of the problem and also see how it affected our policy toward other foreign groups in Canada. We would, of course, have let the Chinese Government know our views on the matter before the elections were actually held had we been informed or consulted about them in advance. The aide-mémoire, as the Ambassador would see, indicated that the Canadian Government felt that it would be ill-advised to continue to overlook electoral activity on the part of the Chinese Consular Service in Canada because such activity could only serve to perpetuate among communities of Chinese living in Canada political divisions which have no raison d'être in this country. Our aide-mémoire asked for assurance from the Chinese Government that it would refrain in future from sponsoring such electoral activity in Canada.

Dr. Liu said that these representations by the Canadian Government would place the Chinese Government in a difficult position vis-à-vis the Overseas Chinese in Canada. The Overseas Chinese occupy a very special position in the Chinese Republic as they had largely sponsored the revolutionary movement against the Manchu dynasty. Dr. Sun Yat-sen, the Founder of the Republic, had been compelled to carry on his revolutionary activities in exile and it was among the Overseas Chinese that he had found the truest understanding of the democratic principles for which he was fighting. The Overseas Chinese had also largely financed the revolutionary movement. These people therefore had a special claim on the Republic which it could not easily disregard. They felt that their moral and financial support of the Republic through the years of its growth from a tiny exiled revolutionary movement entitled them to representation in such bodies as the National Assembly and the Legislative Yuan. The Chinese Government would find it difficult to take any overt steps which would deny them this privilege.

Dr. Liu said that he hoped that we would not press for a written reply at an early date, and that we would appreciate the difficult position which the Chinese Government found itself in.

I told Dr. Liu that we were anxious to adjust this matter in as amicable a fashion as possible. However, we could not accord the Chinese a special position in Canada without creating difficulties for ourselves in our relations with other groups in Canada of foreign origin.

Dr. Liu said that after his return from meetings of the General Assembly in Paris he would like to discuss with us informally whether anything could be done to liberalize the regulations now applied to Chinese Nationals which prohibited them from bringing their wives and children into this country without first taking out citizenship papers. He said that the concessions that had been made so far were virtually worthless to the greater number of Chinese residents of this country. These people were concerned about seeing their number in this country falling off rapidly and hope that some liberalization of existing immigration regulations could be effected. I told Dr. Liu that I knew that both you and Mr. St. Laurent were sympathetic with the position of the Chinese in this country. The Government had already taken certain steps to alleviate the situation by repealing the Chinese Immigration Act and by making it possible for Chinese visitors and transients to enter Canada under the same regulations as all other foreign visitors and transients. The question of whether anything further could be done to improve the lot of the Chinese would have to be studied very carefully. I said that we would be glad to look into the matter with him on his return.

I am attaching a copy of the aide-mémoire handed Dr. Liu.†

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

1108.

DEA/9820-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

[Ottawa], December 30, 1948

CHINESE ELECTORAL ACTIVITIES IN CANADA

When the Chinese Ambassador called on me yesterday afternoon he reported that he had discussed with Dr. Wang Shih-chieh, the Chinese Foreign Minister, the aide-mémoire protesting against Chinese electoral activities in Canada which I had handed him on September 29.

2. Dr. Liu said that he had explained in detail to the Chinese Foreign Minister the position of the Canadian Government in this matter as he understood it. He reported that Dr. Wang was able to appreciate our view point and had assured him that he would take the matter up on his return to Nanking and see what could be done to modify the arrangements to conform to our views. Dr. Liu said that since then Dr. Wang had left the Cabinet and in view of the preoccupation of the Government with the deteriorating military situation he was not sure what action could or would be taken. He was going to send a written report to his Government on the subject. In the meantime he hoped that we would not press him for written assurances from his Government. He did not anticipate any further elections being called for some time. Furthermore, should they be called while he was Ambassador he would take it upon himself to review the situation at that time and discuss the matter further with us.

3. Dr. Liu said that he hoped that we understood the difficulties of the Chinese Government in this matter. Because the overseas Chinese had contributed so much to the establishment of the Chinese Republic and, because those in western countries were familiar with the democratic form of government, the Chinese Government felt that it could not deny its citizens overseas the right to assist in the formulation of national policy through the election of representatives to the National Assembly and the Legislative Yuan. There was no desire on the part of the Chinese Government to break the laws of foreign countries by holding elections against their expressed will, nor would they wish to interfere with Canadian citizens of Chinese origin. He intended to explore however methods by which Chinese citizens in Canada could, without breaking Canadian laws, participate in Chinese elections. He wanted to be quite open about any arrangements of this type that were made and would discuss them with us further.

4. I thanked Dr. Liu for giving this information and said I would pass it on to you. I also said that we quite understood the difficulties of the Chinese Government at this time giving us any written assurances that they would not engage in further electoral activities in Canada among the Chinese residents in Canada.<sup>2</sup>

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

SECTION B

ÉVACUATION DE CHINE DES CANADIENS EVACUATION OF CANADIANS FROM CHINA

1109.

DEA/50055-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], November 16, 1948

DETERIORATION OF THE CHINESE SITUATION AND EVACUATION OF CANADIANS

You may wish to make a report to Cabinet on the deterioration of the Chinese situation and the arrangements for the evacuation of Canadians.<sup>3</sup> The following notes have been prepared for your use.

2. The collapse of the Nationalist position in Manchuria on November 1st has brought on a series of disheartening events in China. Encouraged by their successes and faltering morale among Nationalist troops, indicated by wholesale surrenders

<sup>2</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

I don't think we need press the Ambassador further on this matter in present circumstances. We can have a look at the matter again in a few months. L.B. P[earson]

<sup>3</sup> Claxton fit ce rapport le 17 novembre. Le Cabinet endossa le jugement de Claxton qu'il fallait envoyer un avion de transport militaire canadien de sa base à Tokyo pour aider à l'évacuation des citoyens canadiens.

Claxton made this report on November 17. Cabinet endorsed Claxton's view that an RCAF transport plane based in Tokyo should be provided to assist in the evacuation of Canadians.

by units, the Chinese Communists evidently intend to try to capitalize on their successes by striking hard at the centre of Nationalist power, the lower Yangtze valley. Reports from China do not lend encouragement to hope that the Communists can be stopped short of the Yangtze. Speeding up of military supplies from the United States is not likely to affect the issue as the Nationalist forces are off balance and low in morale.

3. The military reversals brought on a collapse of the August economic reform measures in Nationalist China. The new gold yuan is slipping badly, with prices doubling daily. Rice riots have occurred in the larger cities. There is an atmosphere of panic. Premier Wong Wen-hao tried to resign but the Generalissimo would not accept his resignation. No political reforms have been announced. Chiang Kai-shek has just grimly announced that the Government will fight to the last.

4. It is difficult to predict developments in China in the next few months. All reports indicate that the Government of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek is in grave jeopardy. If the Communists break through to the Yangtze the Government may retreat to the South or the Generalissimo may be forced into retirement with men willing to negotiate with the Communists taking power. The United States is now considering what further aid can be sent to the National Government or provincial governments prepared to resist the Communists. Such aid could hardly affect the immediate crucial struggle now in progress in Central China. In addition the United States is reported to have proposed to Chiang Kai-shek that he take China's case to the United Nations. It is not known how the National Government will react to this proposal. It is evident, however, that Communist control is being rapidly extended over a great area of Northeast Asia. This development will have grave implications for the world.

5. On November 10th the Ambassador reported that there were 843 Canadians in China distributed as follows:

Manchuria	—	3
Peking — Tien-Tsin Area	—	42
North China — Kiangsu Area	—	105
Shanghai-Nanking Area	—	358
West China	—	201
South China	—	134
Total	—	843

6. The Communists are now in a position to dominate all China north of the Yangtse River. The probability of this situation arising was foreseen and as early as January 28th last Canadian missionaries were advised by the Ambassador that it might become increasingly difficult for them to work in the territory, and consequently they would be wise to withdraw. Further warnings were given to Canadians in the Peking — Tien-Tsin Area on November 1st and in the Nanking-Shanghai Area on November 11th.

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

1110.

DEA/50055-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], November 23, 1948

DETERIORATION OF THE SITUATION IN CHINA AND EVACUATION OF CANADIANS FROM CHINA

Since my report to you on November 16th the military situation north of Nanking appears to have been stabilized, at least temporarily. The Nationalist Forces are reported to have successfully resisted the Communist attacks about Hsuehow, with consequent improvement in morale. The temporary nature of the situation, however, should be emphasized as there are large bodies of both Communist and Nationalist troops on the move in the Central China plain. It seems almost certain that the southward thrust of the Communist Forces will be resumed in strength. Consequently the threat to the Nanking-Shanghai area still remains.

The Canadian Ambassador has reported that he is not at all optimistic about the ability of the Chiang Kai-Shek Government to maintain itself in Nanking for any appreciable length of time. This view is shared by informed Commonwealth and United States authorities.

The wives and children of the Canadian Embassy staff and the female personnel have left Nanking; those in Shanghai are remaining for the present. Full warning has been given to all Canadians in the area to depart. The Ambassador has been asked for a report showing numbers of Canadians who have left, who are leaving, or who intend to stay.

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

1111.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], December 1, 1948

...

SITUATION IN CHINA; EVACUATION OF CANADIANS

32. The Minister of National Defence as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that the situation in China was deteriorating rapidly.

It had now been found possible to charter an aircraft to evacuate Canadians from the danger area. For this purpose it would be necessary to guarantee payment of some $42,000 in U.S. funds. Passengers would, of course, undertake to repay the costs of their own transportation. In the circumstances it would not be necessary to maintain an R.C.A.F. plane in a full state of readiness.

It was recommended that authority be given to undertake the charter of a private aircraft on the terms indicated.

The wives and children of the Embassy in Nanking, and female employees, had already left the capital.

(External Affairs memorandum to the Acting Minister, Nov. 30, 1948).†

33. The Cabinet, after discussion, approved the Minister's recommendation for charter of a private aircraft, subject to approval of the Department of Finance with respect to the financial liability involved.

...

1112.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], December 8, 1948

...

SITUATION IN CHINA

11. The Minister of National Defence, as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, reported that the situation of the Nationalist Government was deteriorating rapidly.

It had been decided that the Canadian Embassy would remain in Nanking for the present at all events; all Canadian women and children had been evacuated.

The present position of Canadian credits to China had been reviewed with the Department of Finance; the course recommended by that department would be agreeable to External Affairs.

12. The Cabinet noted the Minister's report.

...

SECTION C

CRÉDITS COMMERCIAUX POUR LA CHINE
TRADE CREDITS TO CHINA

1113.

L.S.L./Vol. 39

Le ministre des Finances au premier ministre

Minister of Finance to Prime Minister

Ottawa, December 6, 1948

My dear Prime Minister:

In view of the recent developments in China, I feel it is expedient to bring to your attention for consideration the present position in respect of the credits made available to China in 1946 by the Canadian Government.

A direct Government credit, totalling $60 million, was extended to the Government of China by an agreement entered into in February 1946 under the authority of The Export Credits Insurance Act. Under supplementary arrangements set forth in an exchange of letters at the time of signing this agreement, $35 million of this credit was to be used to purchase Canadian goods and services for reconstruction and other general post-war purposes in China, and the use of the remaining $25 million was limited to supplies originally requested by China under Mutual Aid and other surplus war supplies, this being broadened later to include any surplus supplies purchased from War Assets Corporation.

Advances may be made under these credits up to the end of December this year, and are repayable in thirty equal annual instalments, the first instalment falling due December 31st this year, at which time approximately $2.3 million is due on principal and interest. Almost the whole of the $35 million portion and more than half of the $25 million portion of this credit has been advanced or committed. At the end of last month approximately $31.5 million had been advanced under the $35 million portion and an additional $3.5 million committed against outstanding orders placed by the Chinese Government through the Canadian Commercial Corporation; at the same date, advances under the $25 million portion amounted to approximately $16 million with additional commitments of approximately $10,000. Because most of the general credit has already been utilized and the Chinese have purchased most of the items they wish from War Assets stores under the $25 million portion, new applications for credit now being received from the Chinese from time to time by my Department are few and usually do not involve large amounts. Because the credit expires at the end of this month the Chinese Government, however, will undoubtedly wish to utilize as large a portion of the balance as possible and I have decided to withhold approvals on applications which involve additional commitments under this credit until this matter has received your attention.

A second and more involved aspect of our financial arrangements with China, is the Canadian Government Guarantee to a group of Canadian banks in respect of a credit provided by them to the Ming Sung Industrial Company, Ltd., a private Chinese company, and used by that company mainly to purchase specially designed ships built in Canada for use in its shipping operations on the Yangtze River. This credit, not to exceed $12,750,000, was guaranteed by the Government of China as a condition of the Canadian Government giving its guarantee and as required by The Export Credits Insurance Act under which the Canadian Government Guarantee was given. The Chinese company agreed to put up 15% in cash and to that extent have a direct equity in the total program of $15 million which has already been fully committed. The banks have to date established credits in favour of the Ming Sung Company totalling approximately $12.2 million and approximately $10.5 million of these credits have already been disbursed. Repayments on these credits are to be made in ten annual instalments commencing on June 30, 1951.

The most important purchases made by the Ming Sung Company under this program are six small (160-foot) and three larger (270-foot) passenger and cargo vessels specially designed for shallow water operation on the Yangtze River, constructed by two Canadian shipyards near Quebec City. The six smaller vessels have been completed and are being ferried to China, four of which have recently arrived in Shanghai or Hong Kong. Of the three larger vessels which have not yet left Canada and which in value account for approximately $7.3 million of the total program, one is due to leave Canada in a few days time.

The Canadian Ambassador to China has been requested to obtain from Ming Sung Company officials information regarding the use to which these vessels will be put and the precautions that may be taken to prevent them from falling into Communist hands. The Ambassador has been in touch with the President of the company and advises that the company does not propose to take any chances and that, if there is any danger, the ships which have already arrived in Shanghai will sail immediately for Hong Kong and the rest detained in Hong Kong pending developments in China.

Because of the situation which has now arisen in China, two questions present themselves at this time regarding the Chinese credit arrangements. In the first instance, we have to consider what effect the present political developments in China are likely to have upon the ability of the Chinese authorities to repay the credits in the future. If it is concluded that there is a strong likelihood that the present Chinese authorities or their possible successors will be unable, or unwilling, to repay the credits, we should consider whether it is desirable to continue to approve further applications for withdrawals from the credits.<sup>4</sup>

The second matter that has to be considered is whether in the light of overall political considerations shipments of goods already paid for out of the credits, such as the Ming Sung ships, are henceforth to be allowed to go forward.<sup>5</sup>

I feel that these are matters of some urgency, and shall be grateful if immediate consideration could be given to them.

Yours very truly,
D.C. ABBOTT

1114.

L.S.L./Vol. 39

Le premier ministre au ministre des Finances
Prime Minister to Minister of Finance

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, December 14, 1948

My dear Colleague:

You will perhaps wish to bring before Council the matter of further advances to China.

My own view is that it would not be desirable to continue to approve the further application for withdrawals from the credits but it would seem to me that we could

<sup>4</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:
No — but stall.

<sup>5</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:
Yes — for same reason Embassy remains in Nanking.

not easily prevent the shipments of goods already paid for out of the credits such as the Ming Sung ships.

To do so might imperil whatever chances we may have of ultimately collecting the amounts already advanced.

Yours sincerely,
L.S. ST. LAURENT

1115.

DEA/6993-C-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], December 15, 1948

CANADIAN CREDITS TO CHINA

The current crisis in China makes desirable a review of the position of the Canadian credits to China to determine

A. the likelihood of goods purchased with these credits, and which have not yet left Canada, being used for the purpose intended in the original agreements, i.e. will the munitions be used to stabilize the position of the National Government of China and the civilian goods for reconstruction purposes or are they likely to fall into the hands of a Communist dominated Popular Front Government; and

B. the prospects for repayment from a weakening National Government or from a Communist dominated Popular Front Government.

These questions were raised in a letter of December 6 from the Minister of Finance to the Prime Minister (attached Annex A) and were discussed briefly in Cabinet on December 8.

2. The items to be considered are the following:

A. Under the $35 million portion of the $60 million 1946 loan to the Government of China available for the purchase of civilian supplies.

(1) about $2½ million of non-military commodities as set forth in Annex B. Funds for their purchase have been encumbered but not yet paid. The steel railway bridges and telecommunications equipment totalling nearly $2 million likely would not be ready for shipment until next year.

(2) about $27 thousand balance not yet encumbered.

B. Under the $25 million portion of the $60 million 1946 loan that was to be used for the completion of the Mutual Aid programme and other purchases from War Assets Corporation.

(1) about $3,500 of ammunition not yet shipped but for which the money has been encumbered

(2) about $9 million unencumbered. The Chinese wish to spend this before the credit expires at the end of the year but find little of interest in the hands of War Assets. Two specific requests have been received:

(a) about 1000 Browning machine guns and some spare barrels worth $187 thousand

(b) about $5 thousand of drop copper wire

C. Under the $12.3/4 million loan extended by Canadian banks to the Ming Sung Industrial Company, Ltd., guaranteed by the Government of China and in turn by the Government of Canada under the terms of the Export Credits Insurance Act three 270 foot shallow draft vessels being built in Quebec shipyards and together worth $7.3 million. One of these vessels is ready to leave almost immediately but delivery is being delayed until next Monday, after which further delay will be difficult. The Chinese have requested delivery of a second vessel by December 24th. The third will not be ready until the spring.

D. About $5 million of small arms and ammunition ordered from the John Inglis Company by T.V. Soong, Governor of the South China provinces of Kwangtung and Kwangsi. Shipments are to begin at the end of the year and extend over a six month period. Payments will be made in United States currency as shipments are made. Cabinet approval for this export has already been given.

3. The National Government may be expected to continue to honour its obligations under the Loan Agreement. However, as it is pushed into smaller and smaller territory by the Communist offensive its real ability to repay the loan is obviously lessened. Initial payments may be made in order to protect the international credit position of the National Government. However, in view of the serious annual deficits in the balance of payments position of the National Government it would be a case of borrowing from Sam to pay Jack to make these payments.

4. In the event that a Communist dominated Popular Front Government is established in China, the question will arise as to the probability of its assuming the obligations of the National Government. While the National Government is in existence it is unlikely that a Communist dominated Popular Front Government will assume any responsibility for the former's debts. However, if such a Popular Front Government becomes the only Government of China and seeks international recognition the question of its assuming the obligations of the National Government of China will arise in more direct form. Statements issued by the Chinese Communist Party indicate that they will not recognize agreements concluded by the National Government against what the Chinese Communists consider to be Chinese interests. However, a Communist dominated Popular Front Government might come to the conclusion that it was in its own interest to recognize that portion of the $60 million Canadian loan to China that corresponded to the non-military equipment of permanent value to China that was in existence when they took over control of China and that could be identified as having been purchased in Canada under the Loan Agreement. Reasons for their taking this attitude might be (a) a desire to establish international credit with a view to trying to borrow more money (b) to encourage western governments to allow private trade with a Communist controlled China (c) to encourage western governments to support various international relief and aid programmes for China, and (d) so far as Canada is specially concerned, because we could bargain with them over release by the F.E.C.B.<sup>6</sup> of about $10 million annual remittances from Overseas Chinese in Canada and $1-2 million in missionary and charitable remittances. No obligation would be recognized for military or semi-military equipment. Wheat and other non-military items that had been consumed would be in a doubtful position, particularly since it is thought that some or all of the foodstuffs were used for provisioning the Nationalist army. Provided the Ming Sung vessels were still afloat at the time the Popular Front Government took over they would fall within the category of permanent assets that the Communists might permit payments to be made on, particularly since they will be looking for additional shipping to be built abroad.

5. The Chiefs of Staff have approved a Joint Intelligence Committee paper dated December 10 (attached) with the following conclusions:

"It is considered doubtful whether the Chinese National Government will remain in effective existence until 15 June, 1949, unless:

(i) Nanking can be held for a period of not less than three months to allow a successful military withdrawal to the South. On present information it seems unlikely that Nanking can withstand a well prepared assault.

(ii) Chiang Kai-shek retains the loyalty of the principal southern Generals.

(iii) Military morale is maintained. It is possible that it may improve if effective forces can be withdrawn to South China from which most of the troops were originally recruited.

(iv) Civilian morale can withstand the shock of further military disaster or the defection of some of the important members of Chiang's régime."

6. There would be the following disadvantages to withholding at this time promised military and civilian supplies from the National Government of China:

(a) It would seem undesirable for Canada to take the lead in withholding supplies from the National Government of China, thereby indicating that we had lost all confidence in it.

(b) If information that the Canadian Government was withholding promised supplies became public — and it would be difficult to prevent this — it would strike a further blow at Chinese morale at this critical time.

(c) It would also chill relations between the Canadian and Chinese Governments and make more difficult Ambassador Davis' position in Nanking, for instance in requesting police protection for the Embassy as the situation deteriorates and the danger of rioting increases.

(d) It is in the Canadian interest to support the National Government in its resistance to the Communist bid to dominate all China. Even if this resistance is only a delaying action in South China it would be useful in that it would postpone the establishment of direct and easy contacts between the Chinese Communists and the Communist movements of Southeast Asia.

---

<sup>6</sup> Foreign Exchange Control Board.

(e) Withholding promised supplies would lay the Government open to possible suits for breach of contract.

7. On the other hand, as the Chiefs of Staff have indicated that in their view it is doubtful whether the Chinese National Government will remain in effective existence for six months, the possibility of these supplies falling into Communist hands cannot be overlooked. If the Cabinet concludes that it would be undesirable to take action to prevent shipment of supplies whose purchase has already been approved, it may wish to consider whether it would be desirable to direct some agency of the Government to explore the possibility of supervising the shipment of these supplies to see that they are in fact delivered to the National Government in China.

8. In the light of the views expressed in the letter of the Minister of Finance dated December 6 and the considerations outlined above in this memorandum the following recommendations are submitted:

A. No action should be taken to interfere at this time with the production or shipment of items already approved, including the release of the Ming Sung Company ships, subject to

(i) any direction which Cabinet may give regarding possible measures to prevent shipments falling into Communist hands

(ii) continuing review of the delivery programme in the light of developments affecting China.

B. No further commitments should be made in respect of the 1946 loan to China except as may be necessary to give effect to commitments already made.<sup>7</sup>

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

1116.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], December 16, 1948

...

CHINA; SUPPLIES AND CREDITS FROM CANADA

1. The Prime Minister observed that, at the previous meeting, consideration had been given to the position of Canadian credits to China in relation to the current crisis in that country. The new factors involved were the possibility of goods purchased in Canada falling into the hands of a Communist-dominated government and the prospects of re-payment as the situation deteriorated.

The consensus of Cabinet opinion had been that the current situation did not justify interference by the government with deliveries of goods ordered and for which arrangements for payment had been made. On the other hand, it was generally felt that, in present circumstances, no further credit should be extended. However, no decision on the subject had been taken in the absence of the Minister of Finance.

<sup>7</sup> Claxton fit rapport au Cabinet sur ces événements le 15 décembre. En l'absence du ministre des Finances, une décision sur les recommandations fut reportée.

Claxton reported these developments to Cabinet on December 15. In the absence of the Minister of Finance, a decision on the recommendations was deferred.

2. The Minister of Finance expressed agreement with the views reported by Mr. St. Laurent.

Delivery programmes could be kept under review in the light of developments affecting China. For the present, however, no action should be taken to interfere with the production or shipment of items already approved.

3. The Cabinet, after further discussion, agreed that no action be taken to interfere at this time with the production or shipment of items for which arrangements for payment had already been approved, but that no further credits be extended to China for purchases in Canada.

...

1117.

DEA/6993-C-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur en Chine*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in China

TELEGRAM 305

Ottawa, December 30, 1948

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Yesterday afternoon the Chinese Ambassador saw the Acting Under-Secretary to make suggestions concerning the Chinese credit.

2. Firstly, he asked if it would be possible to extend beyond 31 December the credit under the 1946 Agreement. He was told that the Export Credit Insurance Act, under which the loan had been made, expired on that date, and that new legislation would be needed to extend the duration of the credit or to obtain fresh credit. It was also indicated that the prospects of Parliament authorizing fresh credits were slight.

3. Secondly, he pointed out that [Roy] Peers had endeavoured to make arrangements for payment of the next instalment to be made in antimony and tin, and wondered whether it might be possible to give effect to this proposal. The Ambassador was told that it would not be practicable to do so, and that we would hope for payment in cash. (Peers, on behalf of the Chinese National Resources Commission, had offered 550 tons of antimony at 35½ cents per pound, totalling $430,000; 200 metric tons of tin at $1 per pound, totalling $441,000; and 500 metric tons of tin at 94 cents per pound, totalling $1,036,000, all f.o.b.<sup>8</sup> Hong Kong.) We are unable to accept the tin because of our inability to secure the necessary allocation from the International Tin Committee until the New Year. The value of the antimony represents only a small proportion of the 2.3 million dollar instalment. It was suggested to the Ambassador that the Canadian Government might be interested in the purchase of antimony provided the price was satisfactory, and that we would be prepared to consider this early in the New Year, but that it would be preferable to keep the purchase on a commercial basis. He feared that the Chinese Government might have been led to believe that payment in commodities would be acceptable, but he would endeavour to correct any such misunderstanding. He thought that, owing to disorganization in China, there might be a slight delay in transmitting the payment.

<sup>8</sup> free on board.

4. Thirdly, the Ambassador desired to know what other arrangement might be made to permit the Chinese to make use before 31 December of the 8.3 million dollar unexpended balance of the credit. He recognized that this balance was reserved for the purchase of military supplies surplus to Canadian requirements, but there was a dearth of such items desired by the Chinese. Reid pointed out that any change in the arrangements for making use of the credit required a decision by Cabinet, that the Ministers concerned were out of town until after the end of the year, and that consequently it would not be possible to do anything in this regard.

5. I should be grateful if you would convey to the Chinese Government an explanation of our position in this matter, and point out that, under the circumstances, we expect a settlement in cash. Although this point was not made to the Ambassador, it might be pointed out to the Chinese Government, without in any way holding out any hope for fresh credit, that failure to meet this obligation would very seriously prejudice any possibility of obtaining future assistance.

2<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 2

CORÉE<sup>9</sup>
KOREA<sup>9</sup>

1118.

DEA/9908-CK-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

Ottawa, September 29, 1948

VISIT OF KOREAN MISSION TO OTTAWA

WA-2575 of September 28† from Washington reports that Dr. [Pyung-ok] Chough, Special Representative of the President of the Republic of Korea, would like to visit Ottawa on October 6 en route to Paris to discuss the Korean question, <sup>9</sup> Pour un rapport sur la discussion de la question coréenne aux Nations Unies, voir documents 92-140.

For the discussion about Korea at the United Nations, see Documents 92-140.

preferably with you and the Acting Prime Minister. The State Department has endorsed Dr. Chough.

Three reasons occur to me for your agreeing to see members of this Mission:

A. It would give evidence that Canada is a genuine, if perhaps somewhat cautious, supporter of Korean aspirations for independence. Refusal to receive the Mission would probably be taken by the Koreans to confirm the suspicions of Canadian policy which some newspapermen have spread.

B. We might learn something of what the Koreans are going to ask the General Assembly to do for them. So far we have not been able to learn anything from the State Department concerning the terms of the resolution they will introduce. By October 6 United States-Korean plans should be coordinated. We need not give any specific commitments on the attitude our delegation will adopt.

C. We may be able to give the Koreans a little friendly advice to be moderate in their claims and requests. For instance, if these South Korean delegates claim to represent the Government of all Korea — a national government — they will be inviting a rebuff. However, if they claim to represent the only Government in Korea with a right to be heard by the General Assembly because it has complied with the General Assembly Resolutions of November 14, 1947, then they will be on much safer ground. The Koreans might also be well advised to canvass delegations informally in advance to secure as wide a measure of support for their resolutions as possible.

The Korean Mission would appreciate, if at all possible, some indication by Thursday, September 30, when they leave for New York, as to whether this visit could be arranged.

Would you let me know if you can see Dr. Chough on October 6 and, if so, whether you think a small luncheon should be arranged for the four members of the Mission?

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

1119.

DEA/50068-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs*

[Ottawa], October 15, 1948

VISIT OF KOREAN MISSION TO OTTAWA

The Korean Mission finally arrived in Ottawa at a quarter to two on Saturday afternoon. As soon as they had been assigned their rooms at the Cnateau Laurier they were hurried to the luncheon which was attended by a number of the senior interested members of the Department. Rather than talk to Mr. Johnson and Mr. [A.R.] Menzies on Saturday afternoon they decided they would stay over the long weekend and make their calls on Tuesday morning. I am attaching three Notes on the conversations which they had here.

- (a) Conversation with Mr. Johnson and Mr. Menzies.
- (b) Conversation with officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce.
- (c) Interview with the Acting Prime Minister.

In their conversation with Mr. Johnson and Mr. Menzies they asked for Canadian Government recognition of the new Government of the "Republic of Korea" in Seoul as the National Government of Korea. They were informed that the Canadian Government had withheld any action on the question of recognition until the report of the Korean Commission had been submitted to the General Assembly and until there was evidence that full governmental powers had been transferred by United States authorities in South Korea. It was unlikely that the Government would be able to see its way clear to recognizing this Government as the National Government of Korea in any case. They were counselled to confer informally with all sympathetic national delegations at Paris to determine the maximum support they could expect to obtain. It would be unfortunate if a resolution were introduced in the General Assembly which was so strong in nature that many friendly delegations would consider it wise to abstain. They were assured of Canadian sympathy, friendship and support within the limits of prudence.

We are of course informing the Canadian delegation to the General Assembly, Dr. [G.S.] Patterson in New York and the Embassy in Washington about the visit of this Korean Mission.

Dr. Chough, the Head of the Delegation, left a personal letter addressed to you.† A proposed reply is attached for your consideration.†

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

[PIÈCE JOINTE 1/ENCLOSURE 1]

Note de la Direction de l'Amérique et l'Extrême-Orient
Memorandum by American and Far Eastern Division

[Ottawa, n.d.]

REPORT ON CONVERSATIONS BETWEEN OFFICIALS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE AND MEMBERS OF THE SOUTH KOREAN MISSION

On Tuesday morning, October 12, Mr. G.R. Heasman, Director of the Trade Commissioner Service of the Department of Trade and Commerce, received in his office members of the South Korean Mission. Mr. G.A. Newman of the Export Division and Mr. G.S. Hall of the Asia Desk, were the other officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce present.

2. Dr. Chough, Head of the Mission, began the discussion with a tribute to Canada's part in the successful outcome of the recent war, one of the results of which was to free Korea from Japanese domination. He then asked Mr. [Woo-pyung] Kim, his Economic Advisor, to speak concerning the economic situation in Korea.

3. Mr. Kim stressed the harmful economic effects which the division of Korea at the 38th parallel of latitude had had upon South Korea. He pointed out how the Japanese had built up industry in North Korea as a sea-side base of supply for the great area of Manchuria. The Japanese had not placed similar emphasis on industrial development in South Korea. What industry existed in South Korea now suffered from the cut-off of electric power from the north and a shortage of coal. While South Korea had a large hydro electric power potential, it had yet to be developed. A feature which would hamper the rapid industrialization of South Korea was the necessity of diverting a considerable volume of manpower at this time into the Armed Forces. South Korea was faced with the necessity of quickly organizing a strong defence force.

4. When Mr. Heasman asked in what way Canada could be of assistance, Dr. Chough interjected that political and economic matters were inextricably entwined. He asked Mr. Heasman to urge upon his Government the recognition of the new Korean Government as a necessary means of bettering the trade relations between Canada and his own Country.

5. Mr. Heasman asked whether there was any need on the part of South Korea for Canadian cereals. Mr. Kim replied in an unqualified negative. The production of cereals in South Korea was presently below normal primarily because of the lack of fertilizers. There existed a first class fertilizer manufacturing plant in the North, but South Korea was denied the opportunity of obtaining any portion of its present output. To meet the need for fertilizers in the South, the Government there had recently purchased some eighteen million barrels of fertilizer from the United States.

6. When Mr. Kim mentioned some valuable timber stands in South Korea, Dr. Chough pointed out that a considerable volume of Canadian timber had reached Korea during the Japanese occupation of that Country. He added, however, that the resumption of such trade might well be fostered if Canada extended recognition to his Government. Mr. Kim then stressed the present Korean need for wood pulp.

7. Mr. Kim also spoke of the reluctance of his Government to support the policy which was being proposed in some countries whereby Japan would be restored as the work-shop of Asia. He said that Japanese goods did not last and when Mr. Heasman remarked that Japan might soon be able to undersell Canadian and United States manufacturers, he said that higher priced manufactured goods from Canada and the United States were preferable to their Japanese counterparts.

8. Dr. Chough amplified Mr. Kim's remarks in this respect. He spoke of the common fear throughout Asia and the Pacific area of a revived Japanese industrial hegemony. He referred to the visits his Delegation had paid prior to its departure for the United States, to Government officials in both China and the Philippines. The Governments of both these States were not prepared to serve Japan by supplying her with raw materials and buying her finished products. Mr. Kim said that any such policy directed towards reviving Japanese industry would have the effect of making those countries which had been devastated by Japanese imperialism pay for Japanese reparations. Dr. Chough also talked of the common desire of Asiatic countries to increase their own industrial potential, — a desire which would be frustrated by the restoration of a powerful industrial Japan.

9. Mr. Kim spoke of conversations in Washington between the Korean Delegation and Mr. Hoffman, the Economic Cooperation Administrator. While Mr. Hoffman had not specified any sum which would be made available for the economic recovery of Korea, he did give the Mission reason to be optimistic about the sufficiency of the amount which would be forthcoming. Mr. Kim also discussed in Washington the wish of his Government to participate in the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. The time was not yet ripe for these matters to proceed beyond the discussion stage, although he had been given a sympathetic hearing.

10. Mr. Kim further told of the United States mission which would be conducting an economic survey of South Korea. This survey would be very complete and would form the necessary basis for the determination of the apportionment of United States financial aid. Among the projects which would be studied would be the possibility of developing hydro electric resources.

Conclusions:

The impression was received that the Head of the Mission intended to use this meeting more as a forum to advocate from a new angle the recognition of his Government by the Canadian Government, than as a means of fostering trade between the two countries. Dr. Chough took advantage of every opportunity to relate to recognition the value of Korean trade to Canada. He also emphasized the strength of the friendship between his Government and the Governments of China, The Philippines and the United States. The inference was that South Korea was not travelling alone. On matters such as the restoration of the Japanese economy where there have been differences between China and the United States, he emphasized his Government's unity of opinion with China. It would seem apparent that the foreign policies of these two Governments have a close affinity of purpose.

A.R. M[ENZIES]

[PIÈCE JOINTE 2/ENCLOSURE 2]

Note de la Direction de l'Amérique et l'Extrême-Orient

Memorandum by American and Far Eastern Division

[Ottawa, n.d.]

VISIT OF KOREAN MISSION TO OTTAWA

(Notes on interview between Dr. P.O. Chough, Head of Mission, Mr. W.P. Kim, Economic Advisor, Mr. I.H. Chyung, Counsellor and Mr. D.M. Johnson and Mr. A.R. Menzies of the Department of External Affairs on October 12, 1948.)

Dr. Chough stated that he had been instructed by President Syngman Rhee to come to Canada to express the gratitude of the Korean people for the part which Canada had played in the world wide struggle resulting in the liberation of Korea and for our accepting membership on the United Nations Temporary Commission.

2. Dr. Chough said that the newly established Government of the "Republic of Korea" wished to have at the earliest possible time recognition by all friendly governments. He asserted that in the Agreement of September 13th signed by Dr. Syngman Rhee and Mr. John Muccio, Special Representative of President Truman, effective governmental powers had in fact been transferred to the new "Republic of Korea" Government. After that date the United States Military Government in Korea had been dissolved.

3. While he had no definite information on the subject, Dr. Chough was given to believe that Dr. Patterson, the Canadian Representative on the United Nations Temporary Commission on Korea, held the view that the establishment of the "Republic of Korea" Government would perpetuate the division between North and South Korea. Dr. Patterson was also thought to hold the legalistic view that the General Assembly Resolution of November 14th, 1947 envisaged the establishment of a National Government of Korea. As it had not been possible to hold elections in North Korea, Dr. Patterson was believed to be opposed to recognizing the new "Republic of Korea" Government as the National Government of Korea.

4. The continued division of Korea was the cause for great heartache among the Korean people generally. Their ethnic, linguistic and historical unity could not easily be divided. Furthermore, it was urgent from an economic point of view that the country be reunited. However, the Koreans had to face the brutal fact that the world today was divided into two hostile camps. The Soviet Russians were bent upon imposing an alien social and economic system on Korea. Communism was only thirty years old, but Russian strategic designs upon Korea were far older than that. Ever since the extension of the Russian empire to the Pacific the Russians had realized that Korea occupied a strategic position in North-East Asia and wanted to dominate the peninsula.

5. So long as the Soviet Union was bent upon bringing Korea under its strategic control and so long as the Soviet Union was determined to impose an alien social and economic system on Korea, which the Korean people themselves did not want, then those Koreans who could escape Soviet control would resist the unification of Korea on Russian terms. There were twenty million people in South Korea. They preferred to have an independent state in South Korea rather than run the risk of being subjugated by the Russians. Gradually they would be able to build up the economy of South Korea and strengthen the national spirit there in such a way that it would, in time, have an influence over the residents of North Korea and even convince the Russians of the determination of the Koreans to have an independent country of their own.

6. Dr. Chough compared the position of South Korea to that of Western Germany. He thought that all Germans wished to see a united Germany. However, if the condition for unification was ultimate subjection to the Soviet Union then the people of Western Germany were opposed to unification. Dr. Chough thought that the people in the western world were probably more familiar with and concerned with the German problem than they were with the Korean problem. It was his responsibility to emphasize the strategic importance of Korea in the ramparts of the democratic world in the Western Pacific.

7. Dr. Chough said in conclusion that he hoped that the Canadian Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations would give its support to a resolution recognizing the Government of the "Republic of Korea" as the National Government of Korea envisaged in the General Assembly Resolution of November 14th, 1947. He hoped too that Canada would continue to lend moral and economic support to Korea in its effort to maintain independence.

8. Mr. Menzies said that he could assure Dr. Chough that the Canadian Government entertained very cordial relations toward the Korean people and sympathized with their aspirations for national unity and independence. He thought that it was unfortunate that certain newspapers had misinterpreted or exaggerated differences of opinion within the Korean Commission, particularly with respect to the position adopted there by Dr. Patterson. Dr. Patterson, as Canadian Representative, was acting throughout under instructions from the Government of Canada. It was possible that the Canadian Government did not have accurate information concerning developments in Korea. However, from the information available to us, we were attempting to pursue a cautious, consistent and helpful policy toward the Korean problem.

9. As regards recognition, Mr. Menzies said that the Canadian Government was postponing consideration of this question until the report of the Korean Commission had been submitted to the General Assembly of the United Nations. Furthermore, we were not entirely satisfied that full governmental powers had as yet been transferred to the new Government in Seoul. So far the Canadian Government had not been able to see the wisdom of the new Korean Government claiming to be the National Government of Korea. There were no legal or factual grounds for such a claim. He suggested that too close an analogy should not be drawn to the case of Germany as no decisions had yet been taken by governments in respect to recognition of the Government in Western Germany as the National Government of Germany. If such a decision were taken it would be taken on political rather than legal or factual grounds.

10. Mr. Menzies thought that the Koreans would be wise to discuss informally in advance with all National Delegations at the General Assembly the resolution or resolutions which they wished to have adopted there. Mr. Menzies thought that it was important that the Koreans should not press for the adoption of resolutions which would have only minimum support. The original resolution on Korea of November 14th, 1947 had the support of practically all countries except those in the Soviet bloc. It would give comfort to the Russians if ten or fifteen Delegations were to abstain on any new Korean resolution. He thought therefore that it might be wiser for the Koreans to propose a resolution which was broad enough in its terms to meet their requirements and yet leave sufficient room for National Delegations to adopt varying positions in regard to recognition. Mr. Menzies emphasized that these views were only personal as he was not in a position to state what instructions were being sent to the Canadian Delegation in Paris.

11. Mr. Johnson concluded by stating that the views which Dr. Chough had presented would be submitted to Mr. Pearson on his return to Ottawa. He was certain that the views of the Korean Mission would be given sympathetic consideration by the Canadian Government in their deliberations on the Korean question.

A.R. M[ENZIES]

[PIÈCE JOINTE 3/ENCLOSURE 3]

Note de la Direction de l'Amérique et l'Extrême-Orient

Memorandum by American and Far Eastern Division

[Ottawa, n.d.]

KOREAN MISSION'S INTERVIEW WITH THE ACTING PRIME MINISTER,
OCTOBER 12, 1948

Dr. Pyung-ok Chough, head of the Korean Mission and Dr. Yil-hyung Chyung, Counsellor, called on the Rt. Hon. Louis St. Laurent in the early afternoon of October 12. They were accompanied by Mr. A.R. Menzies of the Department of External Affairs.

2. After greeting the visitors, Mr. St. Laurent apologized for the short time at his disposal to talk with them. Prime Minister King's illness had upset schedule and it was necessary to crowd a lot of business into the short time before he left for London to replace Mr. King at the Conference of Commonwealth Prime Ministers. Mr. St. Laurent was glad, however, to have the opportunity of shaking hands with the visitors and assuring them of the friendship of the Canadian people and the sympathetic interest of the Government in Korea and its problems.

3. Dr. Chough said that he had been asked by President Syngman Rhee to come to Ottawa to thank the Canadian Government for the part Canada had played in the last war resulting in the liberation of Korea from Japan and also for our assistance in the United Nations Temporary Commission on Korea. He had also come to plead for Canada's continued friendship and support. He had explained his Government's position to officials of the Department of External Affairs and understood they would be reporting on the conversations to the Hon. L.B. Pearson. He had not come to ask us to change our policies; simply to thank us for our friendship and support in the past and to ask for its continuance.

4. Mr. St. Laurent said that while modern means of communications had greatly shortened distances, Korea was still quite a long way from Canada. The Canadian people generally were not very familiar with Korea's problems. Canadians cherished their own autonomy and were therefore sympathetic to the aspirations of other peoples for independence. We would be glad to see the Koreans achieve unity and independence. However in the present state of international tension it was important to consider very carefully any steps which might further aggravate relations between the Soviet Union and the rest of the world.

5. Mr. St. Laurent went on to say that he had been distressed by the misunderstanding of Canada's position with respect to the Korean problem evident in letters he had received from Roman Catholic dignitaries in Korea. They had criticized Dr. Patterson's activities and charged him with walking out on the Commission. These allegations were unfair. Dr. Chough said that this critical attitude toward Canada's representative on the Korean Commission was not widely held. He could assure Mr. St. Laurent that Koreans generally held Canadians in high esteem. Canada was regarded as one of the leading democratic nations.

6. Concluding the interview Mr. St. Laurent said that he could assure Dr. Chough that the Canadian Government would be glad to do anything to assist the Koreans within the limits of prudence.

A.R. M[ENZIES]

3<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 3

ASIE DU SUD-EST
SOUTHEAST ASIA

1120.

DEA/9030-40

L'ambassadeur en Chine
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in China
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

PRIVATE AND CONFIDENTIAL

Nanking, February 26, 1948

Dear Mike [Pearson]:

You may read my despatch No. 109 of Mar.1† wherein I cover in general terms the impressions I formed as a result of my visit to Hong Kong. That despatch is going forward by concurrent bag.

I came away having reached certain definite conclusions which I am not embodying in my general report but which I am conveying to you through the medium of this personal letter. These conclusions are as follows:

1. I am definitely of the opinion that Canada from the standpoint of trade and national prestige should definitely exhibit a greater interest in this part of the world. Burma, Siam, Malaya, Dutch East Indies, Hong Kong, China etc. to the ordinary Canadian are intriguing places with intriguing names located way out in a part of the world in which they have little interest. A trip to Hong Kong indicates the great business potentialities which exist in relation to the countries I have named. Canada is not much more than a name to these people. Our country is a nation and rapidly becoming a great one and we should be acting in a manner befitting our stature in the world. I am convinced that much more attention to these areas than we have ever paid before should now be paid.

2. I came away convinced, and my opinion was confirmed by a lot of prominent business people in Hong Kong including bankers, that at least one of our leading Canadian banks should open a branch in Hong Kong so that ultimately they may spread down through that part of the globe just as they have spread in the West Indies and South America. I would think this is a suggestion which might well be discussed with Cliff Clark, [W.C.] Graham Towers, and others. For instance I would like to see the Royal Bank move right in and open a branch in Hong Kong. The Chase National Bank, the National City Bank, the Hong Kong & Shanghai Bank are making a killing; and I can see no reason why a Canadian financial institution should not be doing business in that lucrative market.

3. The Canadian Pacific Railway has had a great standing all through these years, and everywhere people look forward to the day when C.P.R. ships are running again. I wish that they would get back into the Pacific trade and get back here fast; and anything that can be done to encourage their speedy return should be done. I would think that someone in the appropriate department of government might well bring every possible pressure to bear upon the C.P.R. to get back into operation.

4. I was amazed at the air traffic which is growing and growing in this part of the world. I know that as a matter of general policy the government looks to the T.C.A. as the instrument for flying world routes beyond the borders of Canada. I also know that Canadian Pacific Airways is largely restricted to the operation of feeder lines in Canada. I further know that the T.C.A. is interested in the South Pacific, namely Australia, New Zealand and intermediate points. I would think that inasmuch as the Canadian Pacific is one of the great merchant marine forces in the North Pacific, the Government should depart from its present policy and encourage the C.P.R. to expand its air service by providing a service to Japan, China, Hong Kong, Bangkok, Singapore, India and on to Britain via India. The name of the Canadian Pacific stands so high it could move into this air competition with great advantage to itself and to Canada.

5. On several occasions I have recommended that at least one unit of the Canadian fleet should cruise in these waters making official calls at Hong Kong, Shanghai, Tsingtao and other appropriate places. These naval units have to be maintained and the costs thereon paid. The additional cost of a cruise such as this would consequently be slight and the prestige to be gained for Canada by such a visit would, I am sure, indirectly compensate many times over for the cost involved.

Yours sincerely,
T.C. DAVIS

1121.

DEA/9030-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur en Chine*

*Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in China*

Ottawa, April 2, 1948

Dear Tommy [Davis]:

Your personal letter to me of February 26th contained a number of suggestions occurring to you as a result of your visit to the Hong Kong-Canton area. I think it is always a good idea for our representatives abroad to try to interpret in terms of immediate Canadian interest their experiences abroad. However, I am sure you will realize that it would be difficult for us to take any official action on most of your suggestions. They can more properly be taken up in the course of informal conversations.

You suggest that Canada should take more direct interest in Southeast Asia and I quite agree with you on this point. However, as you know, we have so many pressing diplomatic and consular commitments abroad now that we are compelled to respond to the most urgent needs only for the present. It has often been the case that commercial offices precede the establishment of diplomatic or consular offices. As you know, there is already a Trade Commissioner's Office in Hong Kong, which looks after a large part of the territory of which you speak. There is another office in Singapore. Eventually, we will be taking a greater interest in the countries of Southeast Asia but for the present we must wait upon more active development of Canadian commercial interests in that area.

You suggest that there would be a good opening for a branch of the Royal Bank of Canada in Hong Kong. That is probably quite true, especially if they were to handle a considerable part of the remittances of overseas Chinese in Canada to the Hong Kong-Canton area. However, I am inclined to think that the Royal Bank itself must judge their own interest in this matter.

I understand that the Canadian Pacific Steamships are anxious to get back into the Pacific passenger trade again. They are waiting for ships and until these are available there is not much that they can do about re-opening their service on the Pacific. I am sure you are aware that there is still a very acute shortage in the world of passenger shipping. Canadian national interests are probably still best served by maintaining such passenger shipping as is available on the North Atlantic run, trying to move some of the many thousand immigrants waiting their turn in Britain and on the Continent to come to Canada.

As regards extending a Canadian international air service to the Far East, I am inclined to think that this is something that will have to be left to develop naturally. As you know, T.C.A. hopes to open its service to the West Indies shortly. They will gain a good deal of overseas experience on this route and I am sure that, in time, they will be looking into the development of other airways and no doubt will give consideration to a line in the Pacific. However, they would be in competition with Pan-American, North West and other United States airways which have a great deal of capital behind them. I have not heard any reports that the Canadian Pacific Airways are interested in extending their operations into the Pacific.

You also suggest that some time a Royal Canadian Navy vessel should make a tour of Far Eastern ports. Training programmes for the Royal Canadian Navy are planned well in advance and cannot easily be changed. However, I will try to find a suitable opportunity to mention your suggestion to Mr. Claxton.

Yours sincerely,

L.B. PEARSON

CHAPITRE XIV/CHAPTER XIV
AMÉRIQUE LATINE ET L'ANTARCTIQUE
LATIN AMERICA AND ANTARCTICA

PREMIÈRE PARTIE/PART 1
ORGANISATION DES ÉTATS-AMÉRICAINS ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES

1122.

DEA/9671-40

*Note de la Direction de l'Amérique et l'Extrême-Orient
pour le chef de la Direction de l'Amérique et l'Extrême-Orient*

Memorandum from American and Far Eastern Division to Head, American and Far Eastern Division

[Ottawa], February 4, 1948

BOGOTA CONFERENCE, MARCH 30TH, 1948

I should like to conclude this series of memoranda† by presenting a brief outline of some of the possible implications for Canada with regard to the forthcoming Bogota Conference. At this time, this memorandum is perforce tentative. A more objective study will be made after the results of the conference are known.

As you know, Canada is not likely to receive an invitation to attend the conference, it now being well known in the United States and throughout Latin America that we are not seeking to be present in any capacity.

However, the question of Canadian participation in the Pan American Union will surely be discussed at Bogota (as it was at Chapultepec and Rio); consequently, it might be wise if Cabinet reviewed — sometime before the conference — the memorandum (October 14th, 1947) which we submitted to that effect so that a final decision may be taken.

It might also be wise if our Trade Commissioner in Bogota were briefed on Canada's general Inter-American policy in order to prevent his making any faux pas. If you agree, I could prepare material for him on the subject.

Since Canada will not attend the conference her interest is somewhat indirect. However, several of the items on the agenda do concern us more directly, at the present time. These are:

- (1) The outcome of the proposed strengthening of the Inter-American system;
- (2) The means projected to alleviate current Inter-American economic problems; and
- (3) The integration of specialized agencies and technical bodies within the structure of the "new" Pan American Union.

1. Strengthening of the Inter-American System

A probable outcome of the proposed strengthening of the Inter-American System will be the bolstering of United States leadership within the reorganized structure. This development, I think, should serve to increase Canada's present reluctance to associate more intimately with the Union and its activities.

2. Inter-American Economic Problems

Economic problems will undoubtedly play a large part at the conference. Possible results may be the creation of an Inter-American Bank, U.S. dollar loans to Latin America, increased American purchases of Latin-American goods for shipment to Europe and/or European purchases there with U.S. dollars supplied by virtue of ERP.

However, it is not expected that the United States will be the goose which lays the golden eggs for Latin America. In any case, even the slightest American aid will help Latin America along and a more solvent Latin America will undoubtedly increase Canadian exports there.

In view of the steps taken by various Latin-American nations to have United Nations set up a special economic Commission for Latin America — in which all American nations could participate — Canada may have some interest in watching developments along these lines at Bogota. Our Delegation to the Economic and Social Council in New York has been briefed along these lines. A copy is attached,† if you have not already seen it.

3. Inter-American Technical Bodies

There is a decided movement under way, at present, to place all Inter-American technical bodies under the aegis of the Pan American Union. If such a development should occur, we could perhaps take advantage of it in order to sever our ties with those technical bodies which do not fully suit our purposes e.g. The Inter-American Conference on Social Security. For the record, however, I doubt the wisdom of severing our ties completely with all Inter-American technical agencies.

NOTE: It is possible that Canada may be asked to represent the British colonies in the Western Hemisphere during discussions on the topic of colonies in the Americas. In my estimation, we should sidestep this issue, should it arise.

A[RTHUR] B[LANCHETTE]

1123.

DEA/9671-40

Note de la Direction de l'Amérique et l'Extrême-Orient
Memorandum from American and Far Eastern Division

[Ottawa], May 25, 1948

9TH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES,
 BOGOTA, COLOMBIA

On Sunday, May 2nd, the 9th in the regular series of international conferences of the American Republics was brought to a close in Bogota. It was inaugurated on March 31st last and had been expected to continue until mid-May. However, it was interrupted by a violent outburst of rioting from April 9th to April 14th and as a result, sessions and agenda were drastically curtailed.

The assassination of the leader of the Colombian Liberal Party, Sr. Gaitan, set off the revolt which left downtown Bogota in shambles. At first, it was felt that the uprising was Communist inspired. It is now generally conceded that the Communists did not inspire the riots but that they were at least well organized enough as to be able to take full advantage of them. It now appears that Gaitan's murder was the result of a personal grievance on the part of his aggressor and that the riots really commenced as a spontaneous outburst of emotion on the part of the populace.

Officially the Conference has been characterized as a great success. The unofficial reaction, however, has been much more reserved and probably more accurate. Such newspapers as the New York Times, The New York Herald Tribune, The Baltimore Sun and the Christian Science Monitor were editorially most unenthusiastic about the results achieved.

The Conference will undoubtedly be best remembered because of Latin-American agitation against European colonies in the Americas, Latin-American insistence on outright United States economic handouts, loans at advantageous rates etc., and for its disclosure of the extent of Communist penetration in Latin America.

It is fairly obvious that the greedy attitude of the Latin-American Governments with regard to the Marshall Plan and to European colonies in this hemisphere was most unsatisfactory and that this position was a disappointment to the United States. The chief concern of many Latin-American Governments at Bogota seems only to have been to secure maximum advantage for themselves under the Marshall Plan, as well as to take advantage of the weakened position of Great Britain, in particular, in order to increase their own territory.

Inasmuch as the United States refused to deviate from its policy of European reconstruction first and to lend its support to Latin-American territorial ambitions, a certain amount of friction between United States and Latin-American delegates arose during the Conference, especially as regards economic matters; this is likely to increase in the near future, chiefly at the forthcoming Inter-American Economic Conference, scheduled to be held in Buenos Aires next September, when Inter-American (largely Latin-American) economic problems are to be considered, and at Havana, also next September, when the question of European colonies in the Americas will be studied.

On April 22nd, the Bogota delegates approved a resolution which provides for the establishment of a permanent Commission at Havana "to study and recommend solutions for the pacific abolition of extracontinental administration and occupation of colonies and territories in the Western Hemisphere."

This resolution was adopted without dissent, but there were several important abstentions, notably the United States and Brazil. The United States abstained on the grounds that the European nations concerned did not have a chance to be heard in the matter. Brazil thought that this was a subject beyond the competence of the Conference.

The resolution was sponsored by Guatemala, had the active support of the Argentine and Venezuela, and was aimed chiefly at the Falklands, British Honduras, and British Guiana. There is little likelihood that the inhabitants of these colonies would wish to change their allegiance voluntarily. The delegates paid very little attention to the Danish, Dutch and French colonies in the Americas and to the Antarctic. Greenland, Newfoundland and St. Pierre and Miquelon were hardly mentioned. The only conclusion one can draw from this is that Argentine, Guatemalan and Venezuelan interests in the abolition of colonialism in this hemisphere is not motivated by humanitarian principles, but by greedy nationalism.

There has been virtually no comment on this resolution in the Canadian press. Most United States and many Latin-American commentators — other than Argentine, Guatemalan and Venezuelan, of course — agree that the resolution should not be taken too seriously. If, however, it should be implemented, it is felt that such action would tend to hasten the federation of the British West Indies as a self-governing unit of the Commonwealth.

A few tangible results were achieved during the Conference, though. These are:

(1) The acceptance of a centralizing Charter for the Organization of American States, as the members of the Pan American Union have now voted to call themselves;

(2) The Pact of Bogota, a codification of the principles and technical machinery developed during the past 20 years for the pacific settlement of disputes;

(3) A rather flamboyant declaration against totalitarianism (ironically enough) and, in particular, international Communism in this hemisphere; and

(4) The drafting of a preliminary economic agreement which may eventually lead to the long-term development of Latin-American industry by private investment and not by United States Government loans or handouts.

2<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 2

BRÉSIL BRAZIL

1124.

DEA/2216-Y-40

*Extrait d'une note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le premier ministre*

Extract from Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Prime Minister

SECRET

[Ottawa], April 22, 1948

APPOINTMENT OF CANADIAN AMBASSADOR TO BRAZIL

In view of the fact that the Governor General will be arriving in Brazil on June 11 and of the necessity of having a Canadian Ambassador established there before the Governor General arrives we have, as you know, been canvassing various possibilities. We have not, however, been able to find a suitably qualified person outside the service who would be willing or able to accept the appointment at short notice.

2. It has therefore occurred to me that you may wish to consider appointing Mr. Scott Macdonald, our present High Commissioner in Newfoundland, as Ambassador to Brazil. Mr. Macdonald has done an excellent job in Newfoundland and deserves promotion. He has been immersed in Newfoundland affairs for some time now and it would be good for him to have a complete change of scene and work.

3. His absence from Newfoundland in the period immediately preceding the plebiscite would have certain advantages since it would help to demonstrate our good faith in saying that we have no desire to interfere in the choice which the people of Newfoundland must make.

6. Mr. Macdonald, I think, would make a first-class Ambassador to Brazil. French is still, I understand, the second language of Brazil and Mr. Macdonald served at our Legation in Paris before the war and speaks French fluently. He and his wife would also be good at doing the entertaining which is so necessary in Brazil. He would also be a good reporter and that would be useful since the Brazilian Foreign office is very well informed and Brazil is much the most important country in Latin America.<sup>1</sup>

7. I enclose a short biographical note on Mr. Macdonald.†

L.B. PEARSON

3<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 3

NICARAGUA

1125.

DEA/6657-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

Ottawa, May 4, 1948

RE RECOGNITION OF GOVERNMENT OF NICARAGUA

The question has arisen whether any action should be taken to recognize the present Government of Nicaragua. Briefly the facts are as follows:

(a) Dr. Leonardo Arguello was elected President of Nicaragua on April 30, 1947, in succession to General Samoza who had been President for many years. Less than one month later General Samoza, in a military coup, overthrew his suc-

<sup>1</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

This seems to be a very good arrangement. I am wholly in accord. W.L.M. K[ing] 24-4-48 cessor and eventually made Dr. Roman Y Reyes President. General Samoza continues to be the power behind the throne.

(b) The United States, United Kingdom and Latin American states generally withheld recognition of the new Government.

(c) Canada has no diplomatic mission, consulate or trade commissioner in Nicaragua. We did, however, avoid taking any action which might be construed as recognition of the new régime. Specifically, we did not reply to telegrams from the Foreign Minister announcing the new Government and we did not acknowledge passports issued by the new Government.

(d) The United Kingdom informed us a short time ago that they proposed to recognize the present Government in Nicaragua as soon as the United States did. The United Kingdom Government asked us whether we would like the United Kingdom Minister to Nicaragua to communicate the recognition of the Canadian Government at the same time.

(e) The State Department yesterday informed our Embassy in Washington that the U.S. Government was likely to recognize the Government of Nicaragua some time this week. Some Latin American Republics, including Colombia, Costa Rica and the Dominican Republic, have already recognized the new Government.

2. It seems to me that we have four choices. We might:

(i) Formally recognize the new régime through the United Kingdom Minister at Nicaragua.

(ii) Formally recognize the new régime by means of a letter from you to the Foreign Minister of Nicaragua.

(iii) Informally recognize the new régime.

(iv) Take no action at the present time.

3. I suggest that the last course is the preferable one. Conditions in Nicaragua are far from settled. General Samoza, the real ruler of Nicaragua, is an unsavoury character and only about six weeks ago intervened in the Costa Rican rebellion. If conditions become more stable or if it becomes in our interest to accord recognition we could then do so. The most acceptable procedure would probably be informal recognition. We would then accept Nicaraguan passports and other documents signed by that Government and generally act towards Nicaragua in the same way as we do towards any other country with whom we have not exchanged diplomatic missions.<sup>2</sup>

L.B. P[EARSON]

<sup>2</sup>Note marginale :/Marginal note:

I agree. St. L[aurant] May 10, 1948

1126.

DEA/6657-40

*Note de la Direction de l'Amérique et l'Extrême-Orient
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from American and Far Eastern Division
to Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

[Ottawa], November 9, 1948

RECOGNITION OF THE GOVERNMENT OF NICARAGUA

The question of whether or not Canada should now recognize the present Government of Nicaragua has again arisen in connection with the granting of an Exequatur to Mr. Lucien Viau as Honorary Consul of Nicaragua in Montreal. Mr. Viau was granted provisional recognition in March 1947, but no action was taken with regard to issuing him with an Exequatur since by doing so we would have been considered as having granted recognition to the present Government of Nicaragua which, as you will recall, came into power after the elected President was overthrown by a military coup in May of that year.

You will also recall that for some time the United States, the United Kingdom and Latin American nations, with one or two exceptions, withheld recognition of this government and that we ourselves avoided taking any action which might be construed as recognition of the régime. Mr. St. Laurent approved the recommendation made in a memorandum dated May 4, 1948, that we should not recognize the government for the time being but that if "conditions become more stable or if it becomes in our interest to accord recognition we could then do so."

Since that date we have received no information which would indicate that the present government has been unable to exercise effective authority for the seventeen months it has been in power. There have been one or two minor revolts but these were put down without difficulty. Furthermore, this government has been recognized by the United States, the United Kingdom, Spain, France, Italy, Holland, the Holy See, Belgium, Denmark, Poland, Sweden, China, Israel, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Colombia, Peru, Ecuador, Honduras, Argentina, Mexico, Salvador, Panama, Brazil and Haiti. The only countries which recognized the previous government and which have not recognized the present government are Cuba, Guatemala and Venezuela.

It is felt that while we have little sympathy for this government on political grounds, it would be difficult to continue withholding recognition when the principal nations of the Hemisphere have already entered into official relations with it. Moreover, we have already granted a diplomatic visa to the wife of the Minister of War. Accordingly, it is now proposed that we extend informal recognition to the present Government of Nicaragua.

The issuance of the Exequatur to the Honorary Consul in Montreal, which has now been pending for a year and a half, would provide us with a convenient opportunity of extending informal recognition, and we would prefer that recognition be granted in this way rather than by a formal communication from the Minister to the Foreign Minister of Nicaragua or through the United Kingdom Minister in Managua.

The Legal Division has been consulted in the matter and concurs with the above recommendation.<sup>3</sup>

4<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 4

PÉROU
PERU

1127.

DEA/2347-40

*Note du chef de la Direction de l'Amérique et l'Extrême-Orient
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Head, American and Far Eastern Division,
to Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

[Ottawa], November 25, 1948

RECOGNITION OF THE PRESENT GOVERNMENT OF PERU

You will recall that the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs asked us to arrange for Canadian recognition of the present government of Peru at about the same time as the United Kingdom and the United States extended recognition. The United States did so on November 20th and the United Kingdom, yesterday. Other countries which have recognized this government are: The Holy See, Italy, China, Nicaragua, Sweden, Mexico, Spain, Argentina, the Dominican Republic, Bolivia, Paraguay, Haiti, Panama, Switzerland, France, Belgium and Ecuador.

You will also recall that our Ambassador in Santiago informed us of the Chilean Foreign Minister's request to him that we delay our extension of recognition of the present government of Peru until after Chile has done so. Briefly, it appears that Chile has certain reasons for withholding recognition but does not wish to be the last nation to act and so place herself in an embarrassing position vis-à-vis the new Peruvian Government. A copy of Mr. [C.F.] Elliott's telegram is attached.†

While the Chilean Foreign Minister's reasons may have some merit from Chilean point of view, it is felt that we should not delay our granting recognition any longer since we have our own interests in Peru to consider. Accordingly it is suggested that we proceed in accordance with our original intention. If you agree, a telegram could be sent to Mr. Elliott informing him of our decision and suggesting that he merely tell the Chilean Foreign Minister that Mr. [J.A.] Strong<sup>4</sup> has already received his instructions and that we regret it was not possible to alter them.

<sup>3</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:
I concur. E[scott] R[eid] Nov. 10/48

<sup>4</sup> Ambassadeur en Pérou/Ambassador in Peru.

Mr. Strong has suggested that our extension of recognition be communicated to the Peruvian Government by a personal visit to the Foreign Minister, leaving with him a note merely reiterating general sentiments of existing friendship between Canada and Peru, but without specific reference to the note addressed by the Foreign Minister to Mr. Strong informing him of the change in government, thus implying that no interruption in relations ever took place.

This Division would have no objection to Mr. Strong's proposal and Legal Division also concur.

I attach for your consideration a telegram of instruction to Mr. Strong.<sup>†5</sup> I also attach a suggested reply to Mr. Elliott.†

DAVID M. JOHNSON

5<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 5
URUGUAY

1128.

DEA/1499-A-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs*

[Ottawa], November 29, 1948

This afternoon, the Uruguayan Minister, Dr. Cesar Montero de Bustamante, called on me on instructions from his Government to leave the attached note and memorandum.† The Minister stated that he thought this memorandum was also being presented to the Foreign Offices of the countries of this Hemisphere with which Uruguay has diplomatic relations.

Briefly, the memorandum expresses Uruguay's concern for the consequences implied in the recognition of military governments which have achieved power by overthrowing lawfully constituted governments, and cites the recent example of Venezuela. It concludes by recommending against recognition of the present government of Venezuela and in favour of joint action being taken to study the problem.

Dr. Bustamante told me that although his government realized that Canada was not a member of the Pan American Union, it nevertheless wished us to be aware of Uruguay's views in this matter since it has always considered Canada as a member of the "American family". He went on to explain that Uruguay's traditional view with regard to recognition of governments which had come into power after over-

<sup>5</sup> Le 25 novembre, Strong fut autorisé à transmettre la décision canadienne de reconnaître la junte militaire ainsi qu'il l'avait proposé.

On November 25, Strong was authorized to convey Canada's decision to recognize the military junta as he had proposed.

throwing lawfully established governments is that recognition of such governments constitutes a direct intervention in the internal affairs of the State.

In the course of the conversation the Minister referred to the recent assumption of power by the Armed Forces in Peru and the military plot which was discovered earlier this month to overthrow the President of Chile. Although the Minister did not say so, the Chilean Government have reason to believe that this plot and the revolution in Peru last month received some assistance from the Argentine, and the fact that the recent revolution in Venezuela followed a similar pattern tends to give the impression that these uprisings are not unrelated. As a democratic country and as a neighbour of the Argentine, Uruguay's purpose in expressing the views contained in this memorandum is quite apparent.

In accepting the Minister's note, I promised him that I would refer it to you. After we have had an opportunity of studying it, a suggested reply will be submitted to you for your consideration.<sup>6</sup>

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

6° PARTIE/PART 6
VENEZUELA

1129.

DEA/3397-40

*Note du chef de la Direction de l'Amérique et l'Extrême-Orient
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

Memorandum from Head, American and Far Eastern Division, to Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

[Ottawa], December 29, 1948

VENEZUELA

On November 27 you authorized a telegram to our Acting Consul General in Caracas instructing him to abstain for the present from taking any action which might be considered to constitute recognition of the Military Junta as the Government of Venezuela.

2. Although this Military Junta, on the surface at least, appears to maintain substantial control over the country, only seven countries — Argentina, Honduras, Paraguay, Peru, Sweden, Switzerland, and the United Kingdom — have accorded it recognition.

3. At first the United States was inclined to extend early recognition, in accordance with Resolution 35 of the Bogota Conference, which declares that continuity of diplomatic relations among the American states is desirable and that the establishment or maintenance of diplomatic relations with a government does not imply any judgment upon the domestic policy of that government. It now appears that the

<sup>6</sup> Voir le document suivant./See the immediately following document.

United States is not likely to act for some time as it has become disturbed by the current tendency shown by some Latin American nations to overthrow popularly-elected or established régimes by violence. The United States is currently undertaking an exchange of views with certain nations of the hemisphere with a view to the adoption of "legitimate and appropriate action" within the inter-American system "to strengthen the democratic and constitutional framework of the governments of this continent."

4. You will recall that in the case of Peru we extended recognition very shortly after the United Kingdom and the United States. In this instance, the United Kingdom and the United States acted almost simultaneously. In the case of Venezuela, the United Kingdom, while at first intending to follow the lead of the United States, decided to act on its own and extended recognition on December 23. If you concur, we might continue to withhold recognition for a short while to see whether the United States is likely to act at an early date. If, however, the United States appears to be delaying its recognition unduly, we could agree to extend recognition without awaiting a lead from the United States.<sup>7</sup>

DAVID M. JOHNSON

7<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 7

SOUVERAINETÉ DANS L'ANTARCTIQUE
ANTARCTIC SOVEREIGNTY

1130.

DEA/50070-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], July 30, 1948

CANADIAN POLICY CONCERNING ANTARCTIC QUESTIONS

I. Introduction

During the past winter the recurrent controversial question of sovereignty in Antarctic territories was brought to the fore by a dispute between the United Kingdom and Argentina and Chile. In response to Argentine and Chilean naval expeditions to the Falkland Islands Dependencies, the United Kingdom Ambassadors in Chile and Argentina on December 17, 1947, delivered formal notes of protest to the two Governments involved. In spite of these protests the provocations continued.

<sup>7</sup> Notes marginales :/Marginal notes:

I concur. E.R. H[opkins]

Continue to withhold until U.S. recognizes but re-examine policy in about 10 days if U.S. hasn't recognized. E[scott] R[eid]

II. Areas Involved and General Background

2. The current difficulties involve three distinct though related areas:

(a) the Falkland Islands, where Argentina is challenging United Kingdom sovereignty;

(b) the Falkland Islands Dependencies and Graham Land, where Argentina and Chile are both challenging United Kingdom sovereignty; and

(c) the Antarctic mainland itself, where eight countries (Argentina, Australia, Chile, France, New Zealand, Norway, the United Kingdom, the United States) all have direct interests.

3. The dispute between Argentina and the United Kingdom with regard to the Falkland Islands, lying off the coast of Patagonia, dates back to 1833 when the United Kingdom took over — somewhat arbitrarily — the Islas Malvinas (Falkland Islands) from Argentina. Argentina has never recognized United Kingdom occupation of the Islands and has periodically laid claims to them since that date, the most vigorous being put forward last Autumn.

Following is the text of an amendment to paragraph 3 suggested by Mr. Chipman, Canadian Ambassador to Argentina:

“The dispute between Argentina and the United Kingdom with regard to the Falkland Islands lying off the coast of Patagonia is a sequel to the long-standing earlier dispute between the United Kingdom and Spain over the same territory, to which both laid claim on grounds of discovery and occupation. Later, after achieving its liberation from Spain by revolution, Argentina asserted the Spanish claims as a successor State on its own account. This led to a British protest in 1829. Following a second protest in 1832, the United Kingdom reoccupied the Falkland Islands by force in 1833.”

4. The Falkland Islands Dependencies lie south of Argentina, Chile and their namesake, the Falkland Islands. They comprise four groups of islands, the South Shetlands, the South Orkneys, South Georgia, and the South Sandwich Islands. Graham Land is a jutting peninsula which thrusts itself northward from the Antarctic mainland into the sea towards South America. This whole region was discovered, explored and in many instances has been effectively occupied by the United Kingdom, administration being carried out by the Governor of the Falkland Islands.

5. In 1940 Argentina and Chile laid claims to territorial sectors in this region and since last Autumn (Antarctic Spring) these countries established several weather stations and military bases in Graham Land and in the South Shetlands especially, in spite of United Kingdom protests. Argentina's claim to territory in the Falkland Islands Dependencies is partly based on the alleged ownership of the Falkland Islands.

6. The Antarctic mainland is a de facto res nullius and it is only a narrow coastal strip which has been explored to any extent. By carrying out only limited activities on the coastal fringe the various powers claim sovereignty over sectors of territory extending as far as the South Pole. The view has been expressed by some of the interested Commonwealth countries that problems arising in connection with contimental Antarctica should be treated separately from those arising in the surrounding islands and Dependencies.

7. A recent map of the whole region indicating the areas claimed by the different powers (Argentina, Australia, Chile, France, New Zealand, Norway, United Kingdom, and United States) is attached as Appendix I.†

8. As early as 1946 the United Kingdom Government realized that it would become necessary to take more positive steps to assert rights of sovereignty in Antarctic areas. In November of that year the United Kingdom expressed to Australia and New Zealand the "earnest hope" that those countries would review their policy with a view to the establishment of permanent bases in the Antarctic. It was pointed out that the Foreign Office Legal Adviser had stated that the necessity of continuity of effective possession and administration was emerging as a new requirement of international law, and that in the future, claims would probably not be upheld on the grounds of discovery, annexation or the application of the "sector principle". (At this point it is of interest to note that on recent maps Argentina has applied the "sector principle" to justify claims of Antarctic territory right up to the South Pole on the basis of claims to the Falkland Islands, the F.I.D. and Graham Land).

9. In the Autumn of 1947 the United Kingdom, anticipating the subsequent Argentine and Chilean activities in the Antarctic, initiated exchanges of views with other Commonwealth countries and expressed willingness to refer the question of Antarctic sovereignties to the International Court of Justice at The Hague for a decision. Australia and New Zealand concurred and Canada also stated "We have no objection to the course of action proposed."

10. The United Kingdom included the offer of recourse to The Hague Court in notes of protest delivered to Argentina and Chile on December 17, 1947. These notes were rejected and the presence of the cruiser "Nigeria" did not serve to discourage the provocative actions of the two countries.

11. The Argentine and Chilean refusal to submit the dispute to The Hague Court probably stems from their realization of the weakness of the legal basis of their claims. Because of this, they are in favour of a solution being reached through the medium of an international conference.

12. The recent establishment by Argentina of a new Division in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to deal with Antarctic and Falkland Islands questions emphasizes the serious nature of the approach to the dispute taken by that country. A further development along these lines was the announcement a short time ago of a Treaty to be signed in the near future between Argentina and Chile to define their respective territories in the Antarctic, and to establish joint action in furthering the interests of the two countries in the area.

III. Developments in 1948

13. In March 1948, following the rejection by Argentina and Chile of the United Kingdom protests, members of the United Kingdom Embassy in Washington had discussions with officials of the United States State Department, and at the same time, further exchanges of views took place between the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa.

14. As a result of these exchanges, it became apparent that the United States favoured some form of international control. Their first suggestion was for the establishment of a United Nations trusteeship, but following an unfavourable reception from the United Kingdom, this was replaced by a proposal for the creation of an eight-power condominium.

15. The chief United Kingdom objections to international control of the Antarctic at that time were (a) that without considerable study and a clear definition of the area involved, it would be difficult to establish a sound administration; (b) it would be difficult to exclude other countries such as the USSR from such international schemes; (c) direct strategic and commercial interests of the United Kingdom and other Commonwealth countries would suffer; (d) the scheme would require acceptance by Norway and France, both countries which have so far not been involved in any major disputes over sovereignty. Australia and South Africa agreed with these views, Australia being particularly opposed to a condominium or other similar arrangements. New Zealand favoured a United Nations trusteeship and was opposed to an international condominium.

16. As a result of these United Kingdom-United States talks in Washington, the United States came around to the view that a general eight-power conference would be desirable and it seemed at the time that the United Kingdom might agree to such a course.

17. In June however, the United States informed the United Kingdom that a revised plan for an international trusteeship for the Antarctic was being considered. The United Kingdom at once referred to the grave dangers, which had been stressed in previous discussions, that existed in such a plan and stated that an eight-power condominium would be a preferable solution (see Appendix II — memorandum from the Office of the High Commissioner for the United Kingdom in Ottawa).† It was learned later that the United States had presented the plan to Chile and that the initial Chilean reaction had been unfavourable.

IV. Latest U.S. Proposal

18. As a result of United Kingdom objections to the proposal for a trusteeship under the United Nations, the United Kingdom informed us that the United States have now prepared a revised scheme to set up a "special régime" for the Antarctic. The United States is expected to deliver the revised proposals to the other eight governments concerned within the next few days and at such time to announce its territorial claims to the Antarctic.

19. The essence of the United States scheme is the creation of an "International Antarctic Commission", the territorial scope of which would embrace the Antarctic Continent and all islands south of 60° south latitude. The eight countries concerned would merge and join their claims and interests in this "special régime". The Commission would cooperate with appropriate specialized agencies of the United Nations and with international scientific bodies on matters of mutual concern. It is to be observed that the United States proposal will not settle the Argentine-United Kingdom dispute about the Falkland Islands because these Islands lie north of the 60° south latitude. More complete details of the United States proposal are contained in C.R.O. circular D.157 of July 24, a copy of which is attached as Appendix III.†

20. The United Kingdom have decided, if other Commonwealth countries agree, to negotiate with the other seven governments on the basis of the United States proposal. The United Kingdom will not agree to any form of trusteeship under the United Nations, but would approve full cooperation and association with appropriate United Nations bodies. The United Kingdom would also hope to retain sovereignty over a limited area in the South Shetland Islands but, if necessary to ensure success of the eight-power discussions, they would not insist upon this.

21. The United Kingdom has asked for any comments the Canadian Government may have to offer in connection with the United States proposal and on the attitude the United Kingdom proposes to adopt towards the plan. An urgent request for Canadian views has also been received from the New Zealand Government through the Canadian High Commissioner in Wellington. A copy of despatch No. 267 of July 8 from Wellington is attached as Appendix IV.†

V. Canadian Interests

22. In formulating Canadian policy, the following considerations should be borne in mind:

(a) Canada has no claims to any territory in the Antarctic.

(b) Canada's main interest is to see an end to the long-standing and increasingly troublesome disputes over Antarctic territory. In particular, conflicting claims have soured relations between the United Kingdom on the one hand, and Argentina and Chile on the other. This is to be deplored at a time when it is important that there should be close cooperation between powers of Western Europe and those of the Western Hemisphere.

(c) Canada, therefore, would welcome any settlement which is acceptable to the interested countries.

(d) It is desirable that, in the first instance the interested countries should attempt to settle their differences by negotiation before any reference is made to the United Nations with a view to establishing an international trusteeship.

(e) It is possible, but not probable, that any international régime set up to administer the Antarctic might be considered a precedent for the establishment of a similar régime in the Arctic. The cases are not, of course, parallel and any attempt to treat them as such should be vigorously resisted. In any comments we may choose to make, I think it would be a mistake to make any reservations about the Arctic. If we did, it might suggest to others that we had some doubts about our legal rights there. The possibility, moreover, that any international organization for the Antarctic might be exploited to our disadvantage as regards the Arctic, makes it advisable for us to take no active role in the settlement of the Antarctic dispute.

(f) The United States proposals are only known in broad outline. It is not yet known what the attitude of the other interested countries will be or whether others in addition to the eight countries named in paragraph 2(c) will also assert claims to territory in the Antarctic.

VI. Conclusion

23. It is accordingly suggested that:

- (a) Canada take no active part in the settlement of this dispute,
- (b) the United Kingdom Government be informed:
  - (i) that we share their anxiety that disputes relating to the Antarctic should be settled,
  - (ii) that we hope that the countries with interests in the Antarctic will be able among themselves to reach a satisfactory settlement of their differences,
  - (iii) that the Canadian Government assumes that any international régime which is established in the Antarctic will not in any way contradict the obligations which participating States have accepted under the Charter of the United Nations, and that through the registration of the agreement with the United Nations, and in any other ways that may be appropriate, the agreement will be brought within the framework of the United Nations,
  - (iv) that at this time we have no other comments to offer on the United States proposals or on the policy of the United Kingdom with regard thereto but we may wish to make comments later on when the full United States proposals and the views of other interested countries are known.
- (c) communications be sent to the other interested Commonwealth countries, and especially to New Zealand in view of the request recently received, along the lines proposed for the reply to the United Kingdom.<sup>8</sup>

L.B. P[EARSON]

1131.

DEA/247 (S)

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], November 29, 1948

ANTARCTIC

As a result of the United Kingdom's request for Canada's views on a proposal which the United States was about to put forward as a solution to the current question of sovereignty in the Antarctic, a memorandum dated July 30 outlining developments was submitted to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Mr. St. Laurent agreed with the recommendation that Canada should take no active part in the settlement of these disputes and that the United Kingdom be informed that Canada had no comments to offer at that time.

<sup>8</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:
I agree. St. L[ Laurent ] Aug. 8, 1948

Recently, the dispute between the United Kingdom and Argentina over their respective claims to sovereignty over sections of the Antarctic was the subject of a conversation in London between Mr. Bevin and the Argentine Foreign Minister, Dr. Bramuglia. Mr. Bevin suggested that a deterioration in United Kingdom-Argentine relations should be prevented by a mutual agreement between the United Kingdom, Argentina and Chile to avoid naval demonstrations in the Antarctic during the coming Antarctic Summer. Dr. Bramuglia referred this suggestion to President Peron who subsequently expressed agreement in principle.

The United Kingdom High Commissioner in Ottawa has forwarded us the draft text of a proposed declaration on naval activities in Antarctica which is currently being discussed informally with the Argentine Embassy in London. The intention is that this or a similar declaration in agreed terms should be made simultaneously by the Governments of the United Kingdom, Argentina, and if agreeable, Chile. In this connection, the Chilean Government stated recently that they would probably wish to be associated with it.

The draft declaration is as follows:

"Being anxious to avoid any misunderstanding regarding the situation in the Antarctic which might affect the friendly relations between this country and the Argentine (and Chile), His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom are willing to inform the Argentine (Chilean) Government that in present circumstances they foresee no need to send warships south of latitude 60 degrees during the 1948-49 Antarctic season, apart of course from routine movements such as have been customary for a number of years."

The United Kingdom High Commissioner has stated that should we wish to make any comments on the text of the proposed declaration, he would be grateful to receive them as early as possible.

In view of Mr. St. Laurent's previous decision that Canada should take no active part in Antarctic disputes, if you agree, I shall inform the High Commissioner that we have no comments to make on the text of the draft declaration.<sup>9</sup>

E[SCOTT] R[EID]

---

<sup>9</sup> Ce fut fait le 2 décembre.

This was done on December 2.

INDEX

A

- ACCORD GÉNÉRAL SUR LES TARIFS DOUANIERS ET LE COMMERCE (GATT) : voir aussi sous Conférence des Nations Unies sur le commerce et l'emploi et l'application de la clause de la Nation la plus favorisée au Japon, 88-89, 1362
- ACCORDS AÉRIENS : voir sous aviation civile
- AÇORES : voir sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord
- AFFAIRES EXTÉRIEURES, MINISTÈRE DES : accréditation des délégations, 5; réorganisation du, 2-4, 6
- AFRIQUE DU SUD : voir aussi sous Commonwealth; et la déclaration provisoire sur les droits de l'homme, 356, 358, 363, 365; et le pont aérien de Berlin, 808, 811, 825
- ALASKA : voir sous États-Unis
- ALBANIE : adhésion aux Nations Unies, 96-99
- ALLEMAGNE : voir aussi crise de Berlin et sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord pourparlers des six puissances sur un accord quadripartite éventuel, 46-47; la reconstruction économique de l', 40-45; la reconstruction politique de, 35-37, 41-42; les revendications territoriales, 47; la Ruhr, 45-48 règlement de paix avec l' : participation en, 32-34, 38-41, 45-49 représentation à Francfort, 21-22
- AMÉRIQUE LATINE : voir aussi sous conférence des Nations Unies sur le commerce et l'emploi; inquiétude concernant l'aide du Programme pour le relèvement de l'Europe, 973
- ANTARCTIQUE : souveraineté sur, 1877-1883
- ANTILLES BRITANNIQUES : relations commerciales avec les, 1169-1177
- APPEL DES NATIONS UNIES EN FAVEUR DE L'ENFANCE, 366-368
- APPEL DU CANADA POUR L'ENFANCE, 366-368
- ARCTIQUE : voir aussi sous États-Unis; Comité consultatif sur la mise en valeur du Nord, 1511-1521; souveraineté dans l', 1524, 1539-1548
- ARGENTINE : accord aérien avec l', 1215; financement des importations du Royaume-Uni de l', 987; litige au sujet des îles Malouines, 1877-1881; pratiques concernant le financement par le Programme pour le relèvement de l'Europe, 993-996
- ARMEMENTS : approbation d'une licence à la firme Bofors, 1191, 1197-1198, 1200; approbation de la vente à l'Inde et au Pakistan, 1194-1195, 1198-1200; demande de la Chine de fourniture d', 1186-1187, 1190, 1195-1196; demande des Pays-Bas de fourniture d', 1185-1187; exportations aux pays signataires du Traité de Bruxelles, 1196-1197; interdiction des exportations par les États-Unis d', 1013; et politique du Royaume-Uni concernant l'Inde et le Pakistan, 1184-1185
- ASIATIQUES : politique d'immigration des, 1316-1326
- ASIE DU SUD-EST : possibilités en, 1863-1866
- ASSEMBLÉE GÉNÉRALE DES NATIONS UNIES : voir aussi sous Corée et question palestinienne Comité intérimaire, 90 : consultation avec l'UNTCOK, 155-172, 174-175, 182-184; rapports et recommandations des sous-comités du, 132-135 contingent de garde des Nations Unies, 334-335 session spéciale de l' : voir sous question palestinienne (débats) troisième session de l' : délégation à la, 91-92; instructions pour la, 126-131
- ASSOCIATION DU BARREAU CANADIEN : et projet de déclaration sur les droits de l'homme, 352-364 passim; et visite du premier ministre d'Irlande, 1487
- ATTACHÉS DE SERVICES EN UNION SOVIÉTIQUE, 7-12
- AUSTRALIE : voir aussi sous Commonwealth; à la conférence des Nations Unies sur le commerce et l'emploi, 900-902; et le pont aérien de Berlin, 805-808, 825; et la question indonésienne, 205, 215-216, 222, 227, 230
- AUTORITÉ INTERNATIONALE DE LA RUHR : projet de statut concernant l', 47-48
- AUTRICHE : voir aussi sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord adhésion aux Nations Unies, 96-99; représentation en, 13-17
- AVIATION CIVIL accords aériens, 1215-1221: pourparlers avec le Royaume-Uni, 1222-1225 coopération du Commonwealth dans la région du Pacifique : South Pacific Air Transport Council, 1234-1235, 1238-1242, 1245-1250; services du Canadian pacifique, 1226-1244
OACI : négociations sur le siège de l', 1204-1205; réalisations de l', 1209-1210; et les services de navigation en Islande, 1207-1209; statut diplomatique des membres du Conseil, 1205-1207

services aériens transpacifiques, 1226-1250 stations météorologiques, 1212-1214
AVIONS : vente d', 1161-1169

B

BALTIQUE : immigration des réfugiés politiques de la, 1308-1309
BELGIQUE : voir aussi sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord; acquisition de locaux en, 58-59; accord aérien avec la, 750; reconduction des crédits à la, 1013, 1026
BENELUX: voir aussi sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord et sous Conférence des Nations Unies sur le commerce et l'emploi; et la réunion des puissances occidentales à Londres, 32-33
BIRMANIE : admission à la Commission de l'Extrême-Orient, 76-77; admission aux Nations Unies, 97-99, 101-102
BLÉ : accord du blé anglo-canadien, 1114, 1151-1160; accord international du blé, 1148-1150
BLOC SOVIÉTIQUE : émissions vers le, 1823-1899; guerre psychologique, 1829-1833; réciprocité dans les relations, 1809-1810
BLOCS : Commonwealth, 1384; soviétique, 1809-1810, 1823-1834
BRÉSIL : voir aussi sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord; accord aérien avec le, 1216; nomination d'un ambassadeur au, 1870-1871; visite du Gouverneur général au, 1870
BULGARIE : statut des relations diplomatiques avec la, 29-30; adhésion à l'ONU, 96-99
BUREAU MIXTE DE RENSEIGNEMENTS, 1379-1380

C

CANADIAN CHRISTIAN COUNCIL FOR RESETTLEMENT OF REFUGEES, 1290, 1299
CEYLAN : voir aussi sous Commonwealth; admission aux Nations Unies, 100, 102-110; question de la souveraineté de, 102-110; représentation à, 8
CHILI : et le coup d'état de Tchécoslovaquie, 324-328
CHINE : activités électorales au Canada, 1438-1444; et l'admission aux Nations Unies des anciennes colonies, 109; et la Déclaration des droits de l'homme, 350, 353-354; et la demande d'achat d'armements de la, 1186-1187, 1190, 1195-1196; évacuation de canadiens, 1844-1847; liaison aérienne avec la, 1227, 1231, 1236; et le litige du Cachemire, 241-243; et la résolution sur Berlin, 823-824,

826-827; et la résolution sur la Corée, 196, 198-199; et la question d'Indonésie, 211-212, 215-216, 221-222; et l'utilisation des crédits, 1025-1026, 1847-1855

COMBINED DEVELOPMENT AGENCY : voir sous énergie atomique
COMBINED DEVELOPMENT TRUST : voir sous énergie atomique
COMITÉ CONSULTATIF SUR LA SCIENCE DE LA DÉFENSE, 1379, 1478-1481
COMITÉ MIXTE PERMANENT ANGLO-CANADIEN (COMMERCE), 1361-1371 passim
COMITÉ DES BONS OFFICES DES NATIONS UNIES : voir question indonésienne
COMITÉ INTÉRIMAIRE : voir sous Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
COMITÉ INTERMINISTÉRIEL DE L'IMMIGRATION ET DU TRAVAIL : rapport du, 1291-1294
COMITÉ POLITIQUE INTERALLIÉ : voir sous énergie atomique
COMITÉ STATISTIQUE DE LA ZONE STERLING, 1359, 1364, 1366, 1369, 1507
COMMISSION CONSULTATIVE SUR L'ÉNERGIE ATOMIQUE : voir sous énergie atomique COMMISSION DU DROIT INTERNATIONAL : nominations à la, 399; renvoi de la Déclaration provisoire sur les droits de la personne à la, 352, 355-358, 362
COMMISSION INDUSTRIELLE DE LA DÉFENSE : voir sous États-Unis (questions de défense)
COMMISSION MIXTE INTERNATIONALE : voir sous États-Unis COMMISSION PERMANENTE CANADO-AMÉRICAINNE DE DÉFENSE : voir sous États-Unis (défense) COMMISSION POUR L'EXTRÊME-ORIENT
admission à la : de la Birmanie, 76-77; du Pakistan, 73-75 politique à la : des États-Unis, 77-81; de l'Union soviétique, 77-81 et le statut du Tribunal militaire international, 84-86
COMMONWEALTH
Accord sur les télécommunications des pays du Commonwealth, 1482
Afrique du Sud : et la coopération économique, 1372; politique de la suprématie de la race blanche en, 1502-1503; relation avec le Commonwealth, 1412; traitement des ressortissants des Indes orientales en, 1345-1346, 1502-1503
Australie

- attitude concernant : la préservation des liens avec l'Irlande, 1444-1445; les programmes économiques, 1360, 1372; les relations étroites avec le Commonwealth, 1352, 1392-1393, 1406-1407, 1417-1418
- aviation civile : coopération dans les services du Pacifique, 1234-1250 passim
- Ceylan : liens avec, 109, 1346, 1372
- changements constitutionnels en, 1344-1347; concernant l'Inde et l'Irlande, 1390-1391
- consultation : dans les organisations internationales, 123; mécanismes, 1352-1354, 1364-1371, 1374, 1376-1383, 1386-1408, 1412-1414, 1479-1480
- défense
consultation et coopération, 1343-1344, 1347-1354, 1377, 1384-1387, 1390-1391, 1394, 1398-1401, 1478-1482 et le North Atlantic Security Pact, 1352 et la sécurité régionale, 1352, 1375-1382
- en tant que bloc, 1384-1386
- hauts commissaires : statut des, 1346, 1367, 1374, 1391, 1474-1478
- Inde
association avec la Couronne, 1412-1417, 1427-1443 passim industrialisation de l', 1372 relation avec le Commonwealth, 1334, 1346, 1386, 1390, 1412-1417, 1426-1441; et les droits en matière d'immigration, 1320, 1324-1329, 1430-1431, 1440; question de la citoyenneté, 1470-1471 note sur «les points figurant au 10(8)», 1427-1441 passim préférences commerciales, 1429, 1431-1435, 1437, 1440-1441
- Irlande
abrogation de la Loi sur les relations extérieures, 1345, 1418, 1442-1454 passim, 1459-1460; question de la citoyenneté après l', 1374, 1447-1472 passim; question des tarifs préférentiels après l', 1444, 1446-1458, 1462, 1464, 1467-1474
Loi sur la République d'Irlande, 1460-1461, 1465-1467, 1471 relation avec le Commonwealth, 1345, 1374, 1390-1391, 1412, 1416, 1433-1435, 1442-1474, 1487-1494 situation politique en, 1494-1498
- matières économiques, 1346
mécanismes de consultation, 1364-1371
- Royaume-Uni : conséquences du manque de dollars sur la politique étrangère, 1504-1510; Comité mixte permanent anglo-canadien, 1370-1371; programme à long terme, 1355-1356, 1358-1363, 1371-1373
- Nouvelle-Zélande : attitude concernant les relations avec le Commonwealth, 1406-1407, 1417-1418; pourparlers financiers avec la, 1498-1502; et l'Union douanière européenne, 1372, 1504-1510
- Pakistan: lien avec le Commonwealth, 1345; nécessité du développement économique, 1372
- relation : avec la Couronne, 1416, 1424; nature de la, 1350, 1408-1425, 1431-1432 réunion des premiers ministres : date de la, 1330-1341, 1343; ordre du jour, 1342, 1347; représentation à la, 1331-1334, 1337-1343 télécommunications, 1482-1483
- COMMONWEALTH TELECOMMUNICATIONS BOARD, 1483
- COMMUNAUTÉ DE L'ATLANTIQUE NORD : et l'Organisation européenne de coopération économique, 1008; relation entre l'accord commercial proposé Canada-États-Unis et les mesures pour créer, 1045-1053
- COMMUNISME : voir sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord
- CONFÉRENCE DE BOGOTÁ, 1867-1870
- CONFÉRENCE DE LA HAVANE SUR LE COMMERCE : voir conférence des Nations Unies sur le commerce et l'emploi
- CONFÉRENCE DES NATIONS UNIES SUR LE COMMERCE ET L'EMPLOI
Accord général sur les tarifs douaniers et le commerce (GATT) : loi de mise en oeuvre, 918-919; protocoles, 894-895
Acte final, 896 : modifications à l', 916-918
Commission intérimaire : mise sur pied de la, 914-915
Conférence de La Havane, 890-895 positions : de L'Amérique latine, 902-903, 907-908, 910-911; de l'Australie, 901-902; de Benelux, 905; des États-Unis, 900, 904, 906-907, 912-914; de la France, 906; de l'Inde, 902; du Royaume-Uni, 901, 904, 908, 912-913; de la Suisse, 912
Cour internationale de justice, 914 Organisation internationale pour le commerce, 890-916 passim pays sous-développés : traitement des, 900-904

- restrictions quantitatives, 908 subventions aux exportations, 907
- CONFÉRENCES INTERNATIONALES : représentation aux, 5, 378
- CONGRÈS : voir sous États-Unis (relations économiques) et Traité de l'Atlantique Nord (États-Unis)
- CONSEIL DE CONTRÔLE ALLIÉ, 783-784
- CONSEIL DE SÉCURITÉ DES NATIONS UNIES : voir aussi sous énergie atomique, litige au Cachemire, question indonésienne, question palestinienne, Tchécoslovaquie; renvoi de la crise de Berlin devant le, 804, 814-832; représentant au, 90-91, 118-126; rôle au, 118-126; vote au, 132-134
- CONSEIL DES MINISTRES DES AFFAIRES ÉTRANGÈRES, 32-34; réunion des sous-ministres, 43-45, 49-56
- CONSEIL ÉCONOMIQUE ET SOCIAL DES NATIONS UNIES (ECOSOC) : voir aussi Déclaration des droits de l'homme, liberté de l'information et de la presse, Fonds international des Nations Unies pour le secours de l'enfance, conférence des Nations Unies sur le commerce et l'emploi; ré-élection au, 131; septième session du, 336-340
- CONTRÔLES SUR LES EXPORTATIONS : consultation avec les États-Unis sur les, 1183-1184; politique sur les, 1182-1183; but des, 1180-1181
- CORÉE
- Corée du Nord : autorité de l'Union soviétique en, 153-158, 161-164, 177-178, 182-183, 191, 195, 198; mise sur pied du gouvernement de la République démocratique populaire de, 198
- Corée du Sud : formation et reconnaissance du gouvernement de, 184-197
- États-Unis : question des élections, 158, 163, 165-169, 172, 176, 183; et reconnaissance du gouvernement de la Corée du Sud, 189-193; et UNTCOK, 163-184 passim
- Nations Unies
- Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
- Comité intérimaire : consultation du président de l'UNTCOK avec le, 155-175, 182-184
- troisième session : débat à la, 196-201
- UNTCOK
- débat au Comité intérimaire, 155-171, 174-175, 182-183
- et les élections en Corée : observation des, 158-197; position du Canada, 151-155, 158, 160-161, 164, 167, 170-173
- établissement de la nouvelle commission, 197-201
- représentant du Canada sur l' : correspondance entre le président des États-Unis et le Premier ministre concernant, 136-151; instructions à, 151-160, 174-175; nomination du, 136-159; participation à, 160-161, 163, 167-172, 174-183, 185-189
- visite d'une mission officielle au Canada, 1855-1863
- COUR INTERNATIONALE DE JUSTICE : et l'admission de nouveaux membres à l'ONU, 100-101; compétence obligatoire de la, 395-397; représentation sur la, 397-398
- CPCAD : voir Commission permanente canado-américaine de défense sous États-Unis (question économiques)
- CRÉDITS D'AIDE MILITAIRE : règlement des, 58-65
- CRISE DE BERLIN
- pont aérien
- participation au,
- de l'Afrique du Sud, 808, 811, 825
- attitude concernant, 785, 787-798, 800-801, 805-808, 811-817, 819-820, 824, 827-832; et les difficultés diplomatiques, 824, 827, 831-832
- de l'Australie, 805-808, 825
- de la Nouvelle-Zélande, 825
- position des puissances alliées occupantes sur la, 783-784, 786-788, 792, 798-799, 803-804
- et la question allemande, 783-784, 786
- débat au Conseil de sécurité sur, 814, 817-818, 821-823, 826; négociations entre les membres «neutre», 821-824, 826-827, 830-832; réaction de l'Union soviétique, 822-823, 826-827
- évaluation de, 800-804
- pourparlers quadripartites (Moscou) sur, 802-804, 809-814; politique du Royaume-Uni, 803-804
- réunion des pays signataires du Traité de Bruxelles (Londres), 801
- statut des missions militaires à Berlin, 786, 793, 822-823, 827-829
- Union soviétique : intentions quant à la, 783-784, 786, 789, 791, 802-803, 812; politique concernant la, 802; réponse du

Royaume-Uni à la note de l', 803-804; pourparlers de Moscou sur la, 809-811, 813

CROIX-ROUGE INTERNATIONALE : 17<sup>e</sup> conférence de la, 391-395

CUBA : accord aérien avec, 1216

D

DANEMARK: voir aussi sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord acquisition de locaux au, 58-62; accord aérien avec le, 1216

DÉCLARATION DES DROITS DE L'HOMME, 351-366; et la compétence provincial, 351-362 passim; instructions à la délégation au Conseil économique et social sur la, 350

DÉFENSE: voir aussi sous Commonwealth et États-Unis; liaison avec le ministère de la Défense nationale, 6; plan d'urgence militaire (anglo-américain-canadien), 1349-1350

DÉSARMEMENT: voir aussi sous Assemblée générale; résolution franco-belge sur le, 332-333; et l'Autorité internationale de la Ruhr, 47-49; résolution de l'Union soviétique sur, 329-332

DÉTENTION DES REPRÉSENTANTS GOUVERNEMENTAUX DANS LES TERRITOIRES CONTRÔLÉS PAR LES SOVIÉTIQUES, 1832-1834

DROITS DE L'HOMME : voir Déclaration des droits de l'homme

E

É.-U. : voir États-Unis

ECONOMIC COOPERATION ADMINISTRATION (ECA) : voir aussi Programme pour le relèvement de l'Europe; association avec l', 970-984 passim; contrats avec l', 970-972; pourparlers avec l', 1014-1018; représentation à l', 959-961, 977-978

EIRE : voir Irlande

ÉNERGIE ATOMIQUE

brevets, 871

Combined Development Agency, 871

Combined Development Trust: voir Combined Development Agency ci-dessus

Commission de l'énergie atomique : voir Commission de l'énergie atomique des Nations Unies ci-dessous

Comité consultatif sur l', 834-836, 866

Comité politique interallié : attribution de matières premières, 871, 873-874; et poursuite de la coopération tripartite, 867; réunions du, 869-882

Conseil de sécurité et le débat sur la communication de trois rapports du Conseil de sécurité à l'Assemblée générale, 838-848; opposition de l'Union soviétique, 844-848

contrôle international de : l'attitude de l'Union soviétique, 833-837, 845-848; l'attitude des États Unis, 833-837; définition des exigences, 846

coopération tripartite, 868-884 et les déclarations d'intention, 868-873

États-Unis

veto du Conseil de sécurité sur leur résolution, 847-848

vues sur : communication de trois rapports de la Commission de l'énergie atomique du Conseil de sécurité à l'Assemblée générale, 834-850 passim; la résolution du Canada à l'Assemblée générale, 864; tactiques à l'Assemblée générale, 848-849; travaux futurs de la Commission de l'énergie atomique, 834-836, 839-841

France

vues : sur la communication de trois rapports de la Commission de l'énergie atomique du Conseil de sécurité à l'Assemblée générale, 838-841; sur les travaux de la Commission de l'énergie atomique, 833-834

Nations Unies

Assemblée générale

et les rapports de la Commission de l'énergie atomique, 837-844, 853-862; débats sur, 848-860; débat sur la résolution du Canada, 855-868

Comité d'état-major : et le troisième rapport de la Commission de l'énergie atomique 839-840, 851-853

Commission sur les armements de type classique, 833-838; résolution de l'Assemblée générale sur la, 851-852

Commission sur l'énergie atomique, 833-838; débat à l'Assemblée générale, 853-862; débat au Conseil de sécurité, 838-846

Royaume-Uni

vues : sur la Commission de l'énergie atomique, 833-834; sur la communication de trois rapports de la Commission de l'énergie atomique du Conseil de sécurité à l'Assemblée générale, 838-841; sur la question de tactiques à l'Assemblée générale, 848-850

- Union soviétique : attitude envers la Commission de l'énergie atomique, 833-837, 844-848
- ESPAGNE : voir aussi sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord et l'accord de météorologie avec l', 1776-1777
- ÉTATS-MAJORS DE LIAISON MILITAIRE, 1353-1355
- ÉTATS-UNIS : voir aussi crise de Berlin, question indonésienne, question palestinienne et sous Corée, énergie atomique, Traité de l'Atlantique Nord et l'admission de l'Italie à l'ONU, 115-118
Alaska : passage de Haines, 1705-1707; voie ferrée de Colombie-britannique en, 1698-1704
Arctique : activités en, 1539-1545; Comité consultatif sur le développement du Nord, 1511-1521; coopération avec le Conseil de recherches pour la défense sur l', 1596; souveraineté dans l', 1524-1525, 1539-1548; stations météorologiques en, 1515-1517, 1529-1530, 1543-1545, 1594, 1599-1600; survols de l'USAF au-dessus de l', 1559-1562
Commission mixte internationale, 1708-1710; et le projet Passamaquoddy, 1711-1719 Commission pour l'Extrême-Orient : politique à la, 51
défense
armes atomiques : importance des, 1598 arrangements de défense conjoints : contrôle du Cabinet sur, 119 brise-glaces, 1522-1532, 1548-1551; des États-Unis, 1537-1548
cartographie, 1595
Centre d'essai de Fort Churchill, 1518, 1594-1595
Centre d'études et de recherches sur les armements, 1546 chefs d'état-major : collaboration avec les, 1596-1597
Comité sur la coopération militaire : fonctions, 1564-1579, 1589-1593
Commission permanente canado-américaine de défense, 1564-1579, 1589-1593, 1597, 1600, 1606-1609, 1614, 1640, 1693-1696, 1701-1702 contrôle des projets au Canada, 1519-1527, 1538-1542 coopération industrielle, 1601, 1604-1605; comité de haut niveau sur la, 1606-1609, 1613-1614, 1621-1624 évaluation stratégique, 1564-1589
passim
forces armées : acquisition de matériel pour les, 1625-1627; rôle des, 1597-1600
Groenland : site Loran au, 1551; bases des États-Unis au, 1531
Industrial Defence Board, 1580, 1605-1624
ligne d'étape du Nord-Ouest, 1516
Loran, 1515-1516, 1551-1558, 1594-1600 passim militaires noires au Canada, 1631-1635 ministre de la Défense nationale : visite du, 1587-1593 mobilisation : industrielle, 1593, 1606-1609, 1615-1616, 1621-1624; plans à court terme, 1581-1582 normalisation, 1580-1581, 1601-1605 personnel : échanges de, 1596-1601 plan de sécurité de base, 1564-1577, 1579-1585, 1587-1588 plan d'urgence militaire (États-Unis-Royaume-Uni-Canada), 1349-1350 production, 1605-1627 passim
publicité concernant, 1627-1630
Sault St. Marie : défense des installations à, 1636-1641 secrétaire de la Défense : visite du, 1594-1605 terrains d'aviation, 1511, 1514-1518, 1529-1532, 1599-1600
Terre-Neuve : bases en, 1600-1603
Terre-Neuve et Labrador : exercices en, 1562 détournement de l'énergie issue du Niagara, 1656-1658 échanges de renseignements, 1719-1731
Japon : politique économique à l'égard du, 86-89
pêches, 1642-1654
Projet de voie maritime et d'aménagement hydro-électrique du Saint-Laurent, 1588-1589, 1602-1604, 1658-1698 passim questions économiques accord commercial : possibilité d', 1030-1037, 1045-1053, 1055-1072 achats à l'étranger pour le Programme pour le relèvement de l'Europe, 957-963, 1000-1008, 1028 et la Conférence des Nations Unies sur le commerce et l'emploi, 900, 904-907, 912-914 passim Congrès : attitude devant d'autres contributions au Programme pour le relèvement de l'Europe, 958, 961; et le

- calendrier du Programme pour le relèvement de l'Europe, 928-932
- contrôles sur les exportations : et consultation possible sur les listes, 1183-1184; de gaz naturel, 1039, 1053-1054, 1074-1075; imposition possible de, 1034-1035, 1037-1044, 1053-1054, 1074-1077
- et l'exportation d'armes, 1013
- exportations de produits : réglementation sur les, 1031-1033, 1037-1044
- Programme pour le relèvement de l'Europe : attitude à propos de l'association du Canada au, 893-1003 passim, 1014-1018, 1023-1024; conséquences pour les exportations canadiennes, 1078-1083
- relations commerciales : évaluation des, 1078-1083
- relations financières avec les, 1010-1021
- relations financières Royaume-Uni-Canada : vues concernant les, 941-942, 949-959, 966-969, 1005-1008, 1020-1021
- subventions agricoles, 1078-1083
- transport par camion de marchandises sous scellés, 1073-1074
- représentation consulaire en, 27-28
- EUROPE OCCIDENTALE : voir aussi Union de l'Europe occidentale sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord; capacités défensives de l', 1598
- F
- FINLANDE : voir aussi sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord; réclamations de la Compagnie International Nickel, 1752-1753; adhésion à l'ONU, 96-99, 115-118; application de la clause de la Nation la plus favorisée à la, 1753; promulgation du traité de paix avec la, 31
- FONDS INTERNATIONAL POUR LE SECOURS DE L'ENFANCE, 366-368
- FORCES ARMÉES : rôle des, 1597-1600
- FORCES MILITAIRES : pour appliquer les décisions du Conseil de sécurité, 118-126, 334-335
- FRANÇAIS : utilisation au ministère des Affaires extérieures, 7
- FRANCE : voir aussi sous énergie atomique, Traité de l'Atlantique nord et Conférence des Nations Unies sur le commerce et l'emploi; acquisition de locaux en, 58-63; accord aérien avec la, 1217; attitude concernant la situation internationale, 1754-1760; immigration de, 1310-1316; et la nécessité d'une aide du Programme pour le relèvement de l'Europe, 921-922, 930-931; et la question palestinienne, 276-310 passim
- FRANCFORT : représentation à, 21-22
- G
- GOVERNEUR GÉNÉRAL : visite au Brésil, 1870-1871
- GRÈCE : voir aussi sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord
- acquisition de locaux en, 58-64
- GROENLAND : voir sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord
- H
- HAUTS COMMISSAIRES : statut et désignation des, 1346-1371 passim, 1374, 1391, 1474-1478
- HONGRIE : adhésion à l'ONU, 96-100, proclamation du traité de paix avec la, 31
- I
- ÎLES MALOUINES : litige du Royaume-Uni avec l'Argentine, 1877-1882
- IMMIGRATION : admission de communistes notoires, 1251-1260; comité spécial du Cabinet sur l', 1264-1266, 1268-1272; modalité de refus, 1265-1272; des ressortissants de l'Inde, 1316-1329
- INDE : voir aussi sous Commonwealth et conférence des Nations Unies sur le commerce et l'emploi; position sur le litige concernant la Cachemire, 238-241; par le Royaume-Uni, 1184; vente d'armes à l', 1194-1195, 1198-1199
- INDES ORIENTALES, ressortissants des; immigration des, 1316-1329; et leur traitement en Afrique du Sud, 1345-1346, 1502-1503
- IRAN : voir sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord
- IRLANDE : voir aussi sous Commonwealth et sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord
- adhésion à l'ONU, 96-99
- ISLANDE : voir aussi sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord
- accord aérien avec l', 1216
- ISRAËL : adhésion à la FAO, 369; demande d'adhésion à l'ONU, 111-115, 316, 323; reconnaissance de l'État d', 111, 114, 302, 304, 323, 1760-1762
- ITALIE : voir aussi sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord; acquisition de locaux en, 58-65; influence communiste en, 115-116; nécessité de l'aide du Programme pour le relèvement de l'Europe, 922; représentation en, 21-24; retrait des anciennes colonies, 49-58

J

JAPON : application de la clause de la Nation la plus favorisée au, 88-89, 1362; et la Commission pour l'Extrême-Orient 73-81; service aérien au, 1236-1239; immigration du, 1318-1319, 1324; et les politiques des États-Unis au, 67-72, 86-88; procès pour crimes de guerre au, 82-86; redressement économique du, 86-88; traité de paix avec le, 67-72

L

LIBERTÉ DE L'INFORMATION ET DE LA PRESSE : conférence, 340-343, 348-349; sous-commission de l'ONU sur la, 344-348

LIGNES AÉRIENNES CANADIEN PACIFIQUE, 1226-1229, 1230-1240, 1245-1250

LIGNES AÉRIENNES TRANS-CANADA : et les services aériens transpacifiques, 1232-1234, 1238-1239; à titre de seule ligne aérienne internationale canadienne, 1229-1231

LITIGE SUR LE CACHEMIRE

Commission sur le Chachemire : participation à la, 236-238, 241-242, 246-247 évaluation, 232-234 position de divers pays, 235, 239; de l'Inde, 238-240; du Pakistan, 239
résolution des Nations Unies sur le, 235-246

LOI SUR L'ASSURANCE DES CRÉDITS À L'EXPORTATION (1944) : utilisation des soldes non engagés, 1177-1178

LOI SUR LA RÉPUBLIQUE D'IRLANDE, 1460-1471
passim

LUXEMBOURG : voir sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord

M

MONARCHIE : désignation et titres royaux, 1

N

NATION LA PLUS FAVORISÉE APPLICATION DE LA CLAUSE DE LA : à Finlande, 1753; du Japon, 86-8, 1362

NATIONS UNIES : voir sous Conseil économique et social des Nations Unies, Assemblée générale des Nations Unies, Conseil de sécurité des Nations Unies, Conférence des Nations Unies sur le commerce et l'emploi et sous énergie atomique, Traité de l'Atlantique Nord; admission de nouveaux membres, 96-117; Comité du budget, 93-95, 118-119; et la force de garde de l'ONU, 334-335; et mise sur pied du Centre européen (Genève), 93; et mise sur pied de la délégation permanente (New York), 91; et les relations avec l'Australie aux, 1484-1487

NAVIRES MARCHANDS, 1201-1203

NICARAGUA : reconnaissance du gouvernement du, 1871-1874

NORVÈGE : voir aussi sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord; accord aérien avec la, 1216; acquisition de locaux en, 58-63

NOUVELLE-ZÉLANDE : voir aussi sous Commonwealth; participation au pont aérien de Berlin, 825; et services aériens transpacifiques, 1232-1250 passim

O

OACI : voir sous aviation civile

OCI : voir Conférence des Nations Unies sur le commerce et l'emploi

OLÉOMARGARINE : traitement dans le cadre du GATT, 885-888

ONU : voir Nations Unies

ORGANISATION DES ÉTATS AMÉRICAINS : Conférence de Bogotá, 1867-1870

ORGANISATION DES NATIONS UNIES POUR L'ALIMENTATION ET L'AGRICULTURE (FAO) : et les demandes d'adhésion, 369; échelle des contributions à l', 369-370

ORGANISATION DES NATIONS UNIES POUR L'ÉDUCATION, LA SCIENCE ET LA CULTURE (UNESCO) commentaires sur la, 386-389; troisième session de la, 385-389

ORGANISATION EUROPÉENNE DE COOPÉRATION ÉCONOMIQUE : et le Programme pour le relèvement de l'Europe, 44-45, 981-982; aide aux membres de l', 1005-1008, 1011-1012

ORGANISATION INTERGOUVERNEMENTALE CONSULTATIVE DE NAVIGATION DES NATIONS UNIES, 370-377

ORGANISATION INTERNATIONALE DU COMMERCE : voir conférence des Nations Unies sur le commerce et l'emploi

ORGANISATION INTERNATIONALE POUR LES RÉFUGIÉS : Commission préparatoire de l', 377-379; élection au comité exécutif de l', 379-380

ORGANISATION MONDIALE DE LA SANTÉ : Assemblée mondiale de la santé, 390-391

P

PAKISTAN : voir aussi sous Commonwealth; admission à la Commission pour l'Extrême-orient, 73-75; développement économique du, 1372; vente d'armes au, 1184, 1194-1195, 1198-1199

PAYS SOUS-DÉVELOPPÉS : voir sous Conférence des Nations Unies sur le commerce et l'emploi

PAYS-BAS : voir aussi question indonésienne et sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord; accord aérien avec les, 1216; achats d'armes légères, 1185-1187; acquisition de locaux aux, 58-63; utilisation du solde créditeur, 1178-1180

PÊCHES : voir sous États-Unis

PÉROU : accord aérien avec le, 1216-1217; reconnaissance du gouvernement du, 1874-1875

PERSONNES DÉPLACÉES

immigration : des Arméniens, 1295-1296; des Ukrainiens, 1289-1290

PLAN MARSHALL : voir Programme pour le relèvement de l'Europe

PLAN MILITAIRE D'URGENCE (ROYAUME-UNI-ÉTATS-UNIS-CANADA), 1349-1350

POLOGNE : relations avec la, 1762-1765; statut de la mission en, 18-20; et les trésors d'arts, 1766-1776

PORTUGAL : voir aussi sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord
adhésion à l'ONU, 96-100

POURPARLERS EXPLORATOIRES DE WASHINGTON : voir sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord

PREMIER MINISTRE : calendrier de la retraite, 1340; participation à la réunion des premiers ministres du Commonwealth, 1357-1358; et représentation sur UNTCOK, 136-151

PROCÈS POUR CRIMES DE GUERRE EN EXTRÊME-ORIENT, 82-84 ; statut du tribunal militaire international, 84-86

PROGRAMME POUR LE RELÈVEMENT DE L'EUROPE, 32-33, 408-410, 412, 430; achat à l'étranger pour le, 957-959, 961, 1000-1008, 1028; association avec, 970-1003 passim; conséquences pour les exportations, 1078-1083; délibération du Congrès des États-Unis sur le, 928-932, 957-959, 961; opposition de l'Union soviétique au, 408; position sur le, 593-6; pourparlers avec l'ECA, 1014-1018; et le programme à long terme du Royaume-Uni, 1021-1023, 1028

PROJET DE VOIE MARITIME ET D'AMÉNAGEMENT HYDRO-ÉLECTRIQUE DU SAINT-LAURENT : voir sous États-Unis

Q

QUESTION INDONÉSIIENNE, 201-232

Comité des bons offices, 202-205, 210-219, 223-230 passim positions de divers pays, 206-220, 227-231; de l'Australie, 205, 215-216, 221-222, 227, 230; de la Chine, 211-212, 215-216, 221; des États-Unis, 211, 221-222, 225, 227-228; de l'Indonésie, 204-207, 215; des Pays-Bas, 204-207, 215, 219-220, 222-224, 230-231

QUESTION PALESTINIENNE

débats aux Nations Unies sur la au Conseil de sécurité, 247-286, 300-301, 303-306, positions : de la Belgique, 259, 265-267; du Canada, 254-257, 259-267, 270-273, 306, 309-310, 312; des États-Unis, 257-272, 278-284, 300-302, 304-306, 312; du Royaume-Uni, 251, 267-269, 274-277, 279, 291-292, 299-302, 306, 311-312; de l'Union soviétique, 269-271, 278-280

résolutions : sur l'adoption de mesures aux termes du chapitre VII, 301-306; sur un armistice, 320-321; sur la conciliation, 258; sur la définition de menace à la paix, 311-312; des États-Unis et du Royaume-Uni sur la Palestine, 300-301, 316; sur la restriction des mesures au chapitre VI, 306; sur la trêve, la tutelle et la réunion de la session spéciale, 270-272, 279-284; sur une trêve, 309-310, 314, 318-320 relations entre les États-Unis et le Royaume-Uni, 251, 258, 274, 290-292, 300-302, 304-309, 315-318

à la session spéciale de l'Assemblée générale, 287-302

résolutions : nomination d'un médiateur, 300-301; projet américain d'un accord de tutelle, 282-289, 294, 298-300 à la troisième session de l'Assemblée générale, 315-316, 321-323

résolutions : nomination de la Commission de conciliation, 114-115, 322-323; projet des États-Unis et du Royaume-Uni pour la réalisation des propositions du médiateur, 316-318

Égypte : intervention armée de l', 303-304, 308

Israël : admission à l'ONU, 111-113, 316, 323; reconnaissance d', 111, 114-115, 302, 323

médiateur : mort du, 313-314; nomination d'un, 300-301; travail du, 300-302, 310, 315

R

R.-U. : voir Royaume-Uni

RÉCLAMATIONS DE GUERRE, 65-7

RECUEIL DES MESURES DE GUERRE, 1615-1621

RÉFUGIÉS : immigration des, 1302-1309; réinstallation des Tchèques, 379

RELÈVEMENT DE L'EUROPE, 32-33, 40-41, 43-45

RÉPARATIONS, COMITÉ INTERMINISTÉRIEL SUR LES, 65-67

RÉPUBLIQUE POPULAIRE MONGOLE : adhésion à l'ONU, 96-99

ROUMANIE : adhésion à l'ONU, 96-100; proclamation du traité de paix avec la, 31

ROYAUME-UNI : voir aussi sous Commonwealth (défense, questions économiques, réunion des premiers ministres), crise de Berlin (pourparlers quadripartites), énergie atomique, question palestinienne (Conseil de sécurité), Traité de l'Atlantique Nord et l'admission de Ceylan à l'ONU, 103-105 aviation civile : entretiens sur l', 1222-1226; South Pacific Air Transport Council, 1234, 1238-1250 et le coup de Prague, 324-328 et le litige concernant les îles Malouines, 1877-1882 plan d'urgence militaire, 1349-1350 et la politique envers l'Europe, 1504-1510 et les résolutions sur le désarmement, 331-332 et la Transjordanie, 114

S

SECRÉTAIRE GÉNÉRAL : et l'intervention armée de l'Égypte en Palestine, 303-304, 308-309

SÉCURITÉ DE L'ATLANTIQUE NORD : voir Traité de l'Atlantique Nord (élaboration du)

SÉCURITÉ ET PLANIFICATION DE DÉFENSE RÉGIONAUX, 1353-1355, 1376-1383

SOUTH PACIFIC AIR TRANSPORT COUNCIL, 1235, 1240-1250

STATIONS MÉTÉOROLOGIQUES, 1212-1214

SUÈDE : voir sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord demande de fabrication d'armes sous licence, 1191, 1197-1198, 1200

SUISSE : voir aussi Traité de l'Atlantique Nord; position à la Conférence des Nations Unies sur le commerce et l'emploi, 905, 912

T

TCHÉCOSLOVAQUIE : voir aussi sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord émissions de radio vers la, 1823-1825, 1828-1829 immigration de réfugiés venant de, 1302-1308

représentation en, 18-20

situation en, 1732-1752; débat au Conseil de sécurité sur la, 324-328

TÉLÉCOMMUNICATIONS, 381-385, 1482-1483

TÉLÉGRAMMES : utilisation de désignations prioritaires, 4

TERRE-NEUVE : voir aussi sous États-Unis (défense); exportations de poisson au Royaume-Uni, 1115

TRAITÉ DE L'ATLANTIQUE NORD (ÉLABORATION DU)

Açores : défense des, 443, 543, 560, 723, 740

Afrique du Nord française : inclusion de l', 547, 741, 745-748, 753-755, 780

Allemagne : possibilité de l'admission de l', 452, 468, 482, 538-544; question allemande, 408-411, 482

Autriche : inclusion possible de l', 446, 449, 452, 468, 482, 540, 544

Belgique : participation de la, 459, 467, 480, 548-551, 563-564, 574-581, 592-595, 598, 721-726

Benelux : participation du, 405-410, 515, 537

Brésil : participation du, 547, 638

Commonwealth : possibilité de l'inclusion des membres du, 436; Royaume-Uni comme liaison avec, 414

communisme : influence du, 400-401, 403-404, 410-411, 420-422, 637

considérations de sécurité, 400-401, 413-416, 419-420, 430-432, 441-444, 448-452, 460-462, 467-468, 491, 548-550, 596-611, 628-632, 724, 756; défense nord-américaine, 485, 498, 502, 506; lien avec les considérations d'ordre économique 1009 consultation: provision sur la, 461, 467, 569, 607, 664, 732, 766

coopération économique et sociale, 452, 462-463, 573, 590, 605-606, 645-647, 664, 705, 725, 731-732, 742, 758, 765-766

crise de Berlin, 415-416 : réunion des pays signataires du Traité de Bruxelles sur le, 801

- Danemark : participation du, 435, 449, 452, 467, 740, 745, 771
- entretiens exploratoires de Washington pourparlers des ambassadeurs (y compris le groupe de travail) du 23 juin au 31 décembre, 514-550, 559, 564, 574-608, 632, 634, 642, 656-660, 674-760 passim, 763-772; pourparlers de l'état-major militaire, 516, 518, 531-536
- pourparlers Canada-États-Unis-Royaume-Uni du 22 mars au 1<sup>er</sup> avril, 426-486 passim
- Espagne : participation de l', 430-431, 444, 449, 468, 482, 521, 538-544
- États-Unis : politique des, 405-408, 412, 423-425, 442-446 passim, 449-450, 455-462, 477-478, 480-482, 493-496, 509, 551-552, 559-562, 568-571, 604-605, 655-657, 693, 717-719, 721-727, 747-749, 752-754, 757-759, 764; et la résolution Vanderberg, 497, 509, 518, 526-527, 551-552, 604, 729; rôle du Congrès dans le, 476, 488, 502-504, 516, 524, 632-633, 642
- Finlande, 430, 436
- forces armées : conséquences du Traité pour les, 627-632
- France: position de la, 408-411, 465-466, 480, 518, 530, 537, 548-549, 560, 563-568, 574-582, 592-595, 722, 725, 745-749, 752-754, 757-759, 764
- Grèce : besoin de protection de la, 428, 430-431, 441, 451, 459, 478, 481, 538-540, 724, 745, 764, 770, 779, 781
- Groenland : inclusion du, 560, 600, 740
- Iran, 428, 452, 459, 467, 478, 481, 540, 745, 764, 770, 781
- Irlande : participation de l', 435, 449, 452, 459, 467, 480, 537-545, 601, 634, 637, 701, 717, 722, 740, 745, 771
- Islande : participation de l', 435, 449-452, 467, 480, 538-543, 560, 600-601, 637-638, 701, 717, 722, 740, 745, 771
- Italie : participation de l', 428-431, 436, 442-443, 446, 448-449, 451, 458, 463-467 passim, 480, 483, 538-543, 572, 625, 634, 638, 693
- Luxembourg : participation du, 459, 467, 480, 598, 721-726, 747-749, 752-754, 757-759, 764, 770
- Nations Unies : et la Charte des, (articles 51 et 52) : 410-412, 425, 437, 448-458 passim, 466-467, 470, 481, 490, 554, 556, 603-605, 650-651, 727-730, 738, 765-766
- Norvège : participation de la, 419-420, 435, 467, 480, 538-543, 560, 600-601, 637, 740, 745, 771
- Pays-Bas : participation des, 459, 467, 480, 563-564, 574-581, 586, 592-598
- portée territoriale : 438, 456-460, 464-465, 471, 481-483, 538-540, 600, 615-617, 624, 638-639, 720, 728-729, 740-741, 746, 762
- Portugal : participation du, 435-444 passim, 449, 452, 467, 480, 521, 538-543, 572, 637, 649, 659, 665-666, 701, 721-723, 740, 745, 771
- Programme pour le relèvement de l'Europe, 408-410, 412, 421, 430
- Royaume-Uni : politique du, 400-401, 405-406, 408-410, 419-422, 435-436, 454-465 passim, 480-482, 492, 500-501, 590, 722-725 passim, 745, 747-749, 752-754, 757-759
- Suède : participation de la, 432, 449, 457, 459, 467, 480, 538-543, 560, 602, 634, 637, 656, 722, 740, 745, 771, 779
- Suisse : attitude de la, 449, 452, 459, 465, 470, 478, 538-543
- Tchécoslovaquie : événements en, 410-411, 423-425, 433
- Traité de Bruxelles : 431, 435-437, 440-447, 455-468 passim, 477-483 passim, 487-490, 509, 520, 541, 545-546, 568-570, 590, 636, 709
- Traité de Dunkerque, 407-408, 410, 424
- Traité de Rio, 452, 460, 464, 467, 546, 554, 556, 568, 573, 605-608, 639, 709, 715-716, 741
- Traité provisoire, 474-480, 539, 542, 550-559, 568-570, 605-619, 621-627, 636-641, 643-656, 664-666, 693, 727-736, 772-781
- Turquie : besoin de protection de la, 428, 441, 451-452, 459, 478, 481, 540, 724, 745, 764, 770, 779
- Union européenne occidentale, 405-412, 416-418, 431, 484, 558, 572, 599
- représentation : au comité des chefs d'état-major de l', 416-418; au comité militaire de l', 413-415; à la Commission d'approvisionnements militaires, 417-418
- Union Soviétique : politique de l', 400-401, 408, 419-422, 430-432, 483-484, 493-494, 504, 511-512, 521, 549-552, 565, 599-600
- TRAITÉ DE BRUXELLES : voir aussi sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord; comme base de reconstruction de l'Europe occidentale, 39

TRAITÉ DE DUNKERQUE : voir sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord

TRAITÉ DE PAIX : avec la Bulgarie, la Finlande, la Hongrie, l'Italie et la Roumanie, 29-31; avec le Japon, 67-72

TRAITÉ DE RIO : voir sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord

TRANSJORDANIE : adhésion à l'ONU, 96-100, 116-118

TURQUIE : voir sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord

U

UKRAINE : et l'admission de nouveaux membres à l'ONU, 65

UNION DE L'EUROPE OCCIDENTALE : voir sous Traité de l'Atlantique Nord

UNION DOUANIÈRE EUROPÉENNE : effet sur l'Australie et la Nouvelle-Zélande, 1504-1510; position sur l', 1361-1364

UNION INTERNATIONALE DES TÉLÉCOMMUNICATIONS, 381-385

UNION PANAMÉRICAINE : voir Organisation des États américains

UNION SOVIÉTIQUE : voir aussi crise de Berlin, Corée et sous Conseil de sécurité, énergie atomique, question palestinienne, Traité de l'Atlantique Nord; et l'admission de nouveaux membres à l'ONU, 98-111, 115-116; et les agences spécialisées de l'ONU, 384; attachés de service à Moscou, 7-12; attitude envers le Programme pour le relèvement de l'Europe, 408; coup d'État en Tchécoslovaquie, 324-328, 1732-1735; et la déclaration provisoire sur les droits de l'homme, 352, 358, 363, 365; détention de responsables dans les territoires contrôlés par les Soviétiques, 1832-1834; et l'échange d'informations, 1812-1823; et les élections en Italie, 115; intentions de l', 1786-1805; politique à la Commission de l'Extrême-Orient, 77-81; privilèges des responsables soviétiques, 1805-1806; et le Programme pour le relèvement de l'Europe, 408; relations avec les États-Unis, 1777-1795; et la résolution sur le désarmement, 329-333; restrictions pour les diplomates, 1806-1811; et les visas, 1811

UNTCOK : voir sous Corée

URUGUAY : reconnaissance du gouvernement de l', 1875-1876

V

VENEZUELA : reconnaissance du gouvernement du, 1876-1877

VETO AU CONSEIL DE SÉCURITÉ, 98-101, 108-111, 115-117; recommandation du Comité intérimaire sur le recours au, 134-135

Y

YOUgoslavie : acquisition de locaux en, 58-65; demandes de compensation contre la, 1136-1137; exportations vers la, 1135-1136

INDEX

A

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON DEFENCE SCIENCE, 1379, 1478-81

ADVISORY PANEL ON ATOMIC ENERGY: see under atomic energy

AIR AGREEMENTS: see under civil aviation

AIRCRAFT: sale of, 1161-9

ALASKA: see under United States

ALBANIA: membership in United Nations, 96-9

ALLIED CONTROL COUNCIL, 783-4

ARCTIC: see also under United States; Advisory Committee on Northern Development, 1512-22; sovereignty in, 1524-5, 1539-48

ANTARCTIC SOVEREIGNTY, 1877-83

ARGENTINA: air agreement with, 1215; dispute over Falkland Islands, 1877-81; financing of imports to UK from, 987; practices concerning ERP financing, 993-6

ARMED FORCES: role of, 1597-1600

ARMS: ban on US exports of, 1013; policy on, 1185-90, 1192; request from China for, 1186-7, 1190, 1195-6; request from Netherlands for, 1185-7; and UK policy concerning India and Pakistan, 1184-5; sale to India and Pakistan approved, 1194-5, 1198-1200; license to Bofors approved, 1191, 1197-8, 1200; export to Brussels Treaty countries, 1196-7

ASIANS: policy on immigration of, 1316-26

ATOMIC ENERGY

Advisory Panel on, 834-6, 866

Atomic Energy Commission: see United Nations Atomic Energy Commission below

Combined Development Agency, 871

Combined Development Trust: see Combined Development Agency above

Combined Policy Committee: allocation of raw materials, 871, 873-4; and continuation of tripartite cooperation, 867; meetings of, 869-82

France

views: on work of AEC, 833-4; on transmitting of three AEC reports from Security Council to General Assembly, 838-41 international control of: attitude of Soviet Union, 833-7, 845-8; attitude of United States, 833-7; requirements defined, 846 patents, 871

Security Council

and debate on transmitting three AEC reports from Security Council to General Assembly, 838-48; opposition of Soviet Union, 844-8

Soviet Union: attitude towards AEC, 833-7, 844-8 tripartite cooperation, 868-84; and declarations of intent, 868-73

United Kingdom

views: on AEC, 833-4; on transmitting three AEC reports from Security Council to General Assembly, 838-41; on tactics at General Assembly, 848-50

United Nations

Atomic Energy Commission, 833-8; debate in Security Council, 838-46; debate in General Assembly, 853-62

Commission on Conventional Armaments, 833-8; General Assembly resolution on, 851-2

General Assembly

and reports of AEC, 837-44, 853-62; debates on, 848-60; debate on Canadian resolution, 855-68

Military Staff Committee: and AEC Third Report, 839-40, 851-3

United States

resolution vetoed in Security Council, 847-8 views on: General Assembly resolution by Canada, 864; future work of AEC, 834-6, 839-41; tactics at General Assembly, 848-9; transmitting of three AEC reports from Security Council to General Assembly, 834-50 passim

AUSTRALIA : see also under Commonwealth; and Berlin airlift, 805-8, 825; and Indonesian question, 205, 215-6, 222, 227, 230; at United Nations Trade and Employment Conference, 900-2

AUSTRIA: see also under North Atlantic Treaty membership in United Nations, 96-9; representation in, 13-7

AZORES: see under North Atlantic Treaty

B

BALTIC: immigration of political refugees from, 1308-9

BELGIUM: see also under North Atlantic Treaty; acquisition of premises in, 58-9; air agreement with, 1215; extension of credits to, 1013, 1026

- BENELUX: see also under North Atlantic Treaty and under United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment (ITO) at London meeting of Western Powers, 32-3
- BERLIN CRISIS
 airlift participation in, 415-6 attitude towards, 785, 787-98, 800-1, 805-8, 811-17, 819-20, 824, 827-32; and diplomatic difficulty, 824, 827, 831-2 by Australia, 805-8, 825
   by New Zealand, 825
   by South Africa, 808, 811, 825 and German problem, 783-4, 786 assessment of, 800-4 debate in Security Council on, 814, 817-8, 821-3, 826; "neutral" members negotiations, 821-4, 826-7, 830-2; reaction of Soviet Union, 822-3, 826-7
   Four-Power talks on (Moscow), 802-4, 809-14; UK policy, 803-4 meeting of Brussels Treaty Powers (London), 801 position of Allied occupying powers in, 783-4, 786-8, 792, 798-9, 803-4 Soviet Union: intentions in, 783-4, 786, 789, 791, 802-3, 812; Moscow talks on, 809-11, 813; policy concerning, 802; UK reply to note of, 803-4 status of military missions in, 786, 793, 822-3, 827-9
- BLOCS: Commonwealth, 1384; Soviet, 1809-10, 1823-34
- BOGOTÁ CONFERENCE, 1867-70
- BRAZIL: see also under North Atlantic Treaty; air agreement with, 1216; appointment of Ambassador to, 1870-1; visit of Governor-General to, 1870
- BRITISH WEST INDIES: trade relations with, 1169-77
- BRUSSELS TREATY: see also under North Atlantic Treaty as basis for reconstruction of Western Europe, 39
- BULGARIA: membership in UN, 96-9; status of diplomatic relations with, 29-30
- BURMA: admission to Far Eastern Commission, 76-7; admission to United Nations, 97-9, 101-2
- C
- CANADIAN APPEAL FOR CHILDREN, 366-8
- CANADIAN BAR ASSOCIATION: and draft Declaration on Human Rights, 352-64 passim; and visit of Prime Minister of Ireland, 1487
- CANADIAN CHRISTIAN COUNCIL FOR RESETTLEMENT OF REFUGEES, 1290, 1299
- CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINES, 1226-9, 1230-40, 1245-50
- CEYLON: see also under Commonwealth admission to United Nations, 100, 102-10; question of sovereignty, 102-10; representation in, 17-8
- CHILE: and coup d'état in Czechoslovakia, 324-8
- CHINA: and admission of former colonial peoples to UN, 109; air service to, 1227, 1231, 1236; and Declaration on Human Rights, 350, 353-4; electoral activities in Canada, 1438-44; evacuation from, 1844-7; and Indonesian question, 211-2, 215-6, 221-2; and Kashmir dispute, 241, 243; and request to purchase arms, 1186-7, 1190, 1195-6; and resolution on Berlin, 823-4, 826-7; and resolution on Korea, 196, 198-9; and use of credits, 1025-6, 1847-55
- CIVIL AVIATION
 air agreements, 1215-21: discussions with UK, 1222-5
 Commonwealth cooperation in Pacific: South Pacific Air Transport Council, 1234-5, 1238-42, 1245-50; CPA services, 1226-44
 ICAO: achievements of, 1209-10; diplomatic status of Council members, 1205-7; headquarters negotiations, 1204-5, 1211-2; and navigation services in Iceland, 1207-9 trans-Pacific air services, 1226-50
 weather stations, 1212-4
- COMBINED DEVELOPMENT AGENCY: see under atomic energy
- COMBINED DEVELOPMENT TRUST: see under atomic energy
- COMBINED POLICY COMMITTEE: see under atomic energy
- COMMONWEALTH
 Australia
   attitude towards: close Commonwealth relations, 1352, 1392-3, 1406-7, 1417-8; economic programmes, 1360, 1372; preserving link with Ireland, 1444-5 as a bloc, 1384-6
   Ceylon: links with, 109, 1346, 1372

- civil aviation: cooperation in Pacific services, 1234-50 passim
- constitutional changes in, 1344-7; concerning India and Ireland, 1390-1
- consultation: in international organizations, 123; mechanisms, 1352-4, 1364-71, 1374, 1376-83, 1386-1408, 1412-4, 1479-80
- defence
- consultation and cooperation, 1343-4, 1347-54, 1377, 1384-7, 1390-1, 1394, 1398-1401, 1478-82
  - and North Atlantic Security Pact, 1352 and regional security, 1352, 1375-82
- economic matters, 1346
- consultative mechanisms, 1364-71
  - United Kingdom: impact of dollar deficit on foreign policy, 1504-10; long-term programme, 1355-6, 1358-63, 1371-3; UK-Canada Continuing Committee, 1370-1
- High Commissioners: status of, 1346, 1367, 1374, 1391, 1474-8
- India
- association with Crown, 1412-7, 1427-43 passim
  - industrialization of, 1372
  - relationship to Commonwealth, 1334, 1346, 1386, 1390, 1412-7, 1426-41; and immigration privileges, 1320, 1324-9, 1430-1, 1440; issue of citizenship, 1470-1
  - "10 (8) Points" memorandum, 1427-41 passim
  - trade preferences, 1429, 1431-5, 1437, 1440-1
- Ireland
- and relationship to Commonwealth, 1345, 1374, 1390-1, 1412, 1416, 1433-5, 1442-74, 1487-94
  - political situation in, 1494-8
  - repeal of External Relations Act, 1345, 1418, 1442-54 passim, 1459-60; issue of citizenship after, 1374, 1447-72 passim; issue of preferential tariffs after, 1444, 1446-58, 1462, 1467-74
  - Republic of Ireland Act, 1460-1, 1465-7, 1471
- New Zealand: attitude towards Commonwealth relations, 1406-7, 1417-8; and European Customs Union, 1372, 1504-10; financial discussions with, 1498-1502
- Pakistan: link with Commonwealth, 1345; need for economic development, 1372
- Prime Ministers' meeting: agenda, 1342, 1347; representation at, 1331-4, 1337-43, 1357-8; scheduling of, 1330-41, 1343
- relationship: nature of, 1350, 1408-25, 1431-2; to Crown, 1416, 1424
- South Africa: Commonwealth relationship, 1412; and economic cooperation, 1372; treatment of Indians in, 1345-6, 1502-3; "white supremacy" policy in, 1502-3
- telecommunications, 1482-3
- COMMONWEALTH TELECOMMUNICATIONS AGREEMENT, 1482
- COMMONWEALTH TELECOMMUNICATIONS BOARD, 1483
- COMMUNISM: see under North Atlantic Treaty
- CONGRESS: see under North Atlantic Treaty Organization (United States) and United States (economic relations)
- CONTINUING UK-CANADA JOINT COMMITTEE (TRADE), 1361-71 passim
- COUNCIL OF FOREIGN MINISTERS, 32-4; meeting of Deputies, 43-5, 49-51, 52-6
- CUBA: air agreement with, 1216
- CZECHOSLOVAKIA: see also under North Atlantic Treaty
- broadcasts to, 1823-5, 1828-9
  - immigration of refugees from, 1302-8
  - representation in, 18-20
  - situation in, 1732-52; debate in Security Council about, 324-8
- D
- DECLARATION ON HUMAN RIGHTS, 351-66; instructions to Delegation to ECOSOC on, 350; and provincial jurisdiction; 351-62 passim
- DEFENCE: see also under Commonwealth and United States; liaison with Department of National Defence, 6; Military Emergency Plan (UK-US-Canada), 1349-50
- DENMARK: see also under North Atlantic Treaty; acquisition of premises in, 58-62; air agreement with, 1216
- DETENTION OF OFFICIALS IN SOVIET-CONTROLLED TERRITORY, 1832-4
- DISARMAMENT: see also under General Assembly; Franco-Belgian resolution on, 332-3; and International Ruhr Authority, 47-9; resolution of Soviet Union on, 329-32
- DISPLACED PERSONS
- immigration: of Armenians, 1295-6; of Ukrainians, 1289-90
- DUNKIRK TREATY: see under North Atlantic Treaty

E

ECOSOC: see Economic and Social Council of the United Nations

ERP: see European Recovery Programme

ECONOMIC COOPERATION ADMINISTRATION (ECA): see also European Recovery Programme; association with, 970-84 passim; contracts with, 970-2; discussions with, 1014-8; representation at, 959-61, 977-8

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL OF THE UNITED NATIONS (ECOSOC): see also Declaration on Human Rights, Freedom of Information and of the Press, International Children's Emergency Fund, United Nations Trade and Employment Conference re-election to, 131; Seventh Session of, 336-40

EIRE: see Ireland

EUROPEAN CUSTOMS UNION: effect on Australia and New Zealand, 1504-10; position on, 1361-4

EUROPEAN RECOVERY, 32-3, 40-1, 43-5

EUROPEAN RECOVERY PROGRAMME (ERP), 32-3, 408-10, 412, 430, 919-51 passim, 955-77; association with, 970-1003 passim; deliberations by US Congress on, 928-32, 957-9, 961; discussion with ECA, 1014-8; implications for exports, 1078-83; off-shore purchasing for, 957-9, 961, 1000-8, 1028; position on, 936-46; Soviet opposition to, 408; and UK long-term programme, 1021-3, 1028

EXPORT CONTROLS: consultation with US on, 1183-4; policy on, 1182-3; purpose of, 1180-1

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE ACT (1944): use of uncommitted balances, 1177-80

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS, DEPARTMENT OF: approval of delegations, 5; re-organization of, 2-4, 6

F

FALKLAND ISLANDS: UK dispute with Argentina, 1877-1882

FAR EASTERN COMMISSION
admission to: of Burma, 76-7; of Pakistan, 73-5 policy in: of Soviet Union, 77-81; of US, 77-81 and status of International Military Tribunal, 84-6

FINLAND: see also under North Atlantic Treaty; International Nickel Co. claims, 1752-3; membership in UN, 96-9, 115-8; MFN extension to, 1753; proclamation of peace treaty with, 31

FISHERIES: see under United States

FOOD AND AGRICULTURE ORGANIZATION (FAO): and applications for membership, 369; scale of contributions to, 369-70

FRANCE: see also under atomic energy, North Atlantic Treaty and United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment; acquisition of premises in, 58-63; air agreement with, 1217; attitude toward international situation, 1754-60; immigration from, 1310-6; and need for ERP aid, 921-2, 930-1; and Palestine question, 276-310 passim

FRANKFURT: representation at, 21-2

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION AND OF THE PRESS: Conference, 340-3, 348-9; UN Sub-Commission on, 344-8

FRENCH: use in Department of External Affairs, 7

G

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE (GATT): see also under United Nations Trade and Employment Conference and MFN extension to Japan, 88-9, 1362

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED NATIONS: see also under Korea and Palestine question
Interim Committee, 90; consultation with UNTCOK, 155-72, 174-5, 182-4; reports and recommendations of Sub-Committees of, 132-5

Special Session of: see under Palestine question (United Nations debate)

Third Session of: delegation to, 91-2; instructions for, 126-31

UN Guard Force, 334-5

GERMANY: see also Berlin crisis and under North Atlantic Treaty peace settlement with: participation in, 32-4, 38, 39-41, 45-6, 47-9 representation at Frankfurt, 21-2

Six-Power talks on economic reconstruction of, 40-1, 43-5; eventual 4-Power agreement, 46, 47; political reconstruction of, 35-7, 41-2; about Ruhr, 45-6, 47-8; about territorial claims, 47

GOVERNOR-GENERAL: visit to Brazil, 1870-1

GREECE: see also under North Atlantic Treaty acquisition of premises in, 58-64

GREENLAND: see under North Atlantic Treaty

H

- HAVANA TRADE CONFERENCE: see United Nations Trade and Employment Conference
- HIGH COMMISSIONERS: status and designation of, 1346-71 passim, 1374, 1391, 1474-8
- HUMAN RIGHTS: see Declaration on Human Rights
- HUNGARY: membership in UN, 96-100, proclamation of peace treaty with, 31

I

- ICAO: see under civil aviation
- ILO: see under United Nations Trade and Employment Conference
- ICELAND: see also under North Atlantic Treaty air agreement with, 1216
- IMMIGRATION: admission of known Communists, 1251-60; of Indians, 1316-29; procedure for refusal, 1265-72; special Cabinet Committee on, 1264-6, 1268-72
- INDIA: see also under Commonwealth and United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment; position on Kashmir dispute, 238-41; sale of arms to, 1194-5, 1198-91; by UK, 1184
- INDIANS: immigration of, 1316-29; treatment in South Africa, 1345-6, 1502-3
- INDONESIAN QUESTION, 201-32
Committee of Good Offices, 202-5, 210-19, 223-30 passim national positions, 206-20, 227-31; of Australia, 205, 215-6, 221-2, 227, 230; of China, 211-2, 215-6, 221; of Indonesia, 204-7, 215; of Netherlands, 204-7, 215, 219-20, 222-4, 230-1; of US, 211, 221-2, 225, 227-8
- INDUSTRIAL DEFENCE BOARD: see under United States (defence issues)
- INTERDEPARTMENTAL IMMIGRATION-LABOUR COMMITTEE REPORT, 1291-4
- INTERIM COMMITTEE: see under General Assembly of United Nations
- INTERNATIONAL CHILDREN'S EMERGENCY FUND, 366-8
- INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCES: representation at, 5, 378
- INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE: and admission of new members to UN, 100-1; compulsory jurisdiction of, 395-7; representation on, 397-8
- INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION: see under United States

- INTERNATIONAL LAW COMMISSION: nominations to, 399; reference of draft Declaration on Human Rights to, 352, 355-8, 362
- INTERNATIONAL RED CROSS: 17th Conference of, 391-5
- INTERNATIONAL REFUGEE ORGANIZATION: Preparatory Commission of, 377-9; election to Executive Committee of, 379-80
- INTERNATIONAL RUHR AUTHORITY: draft Statute on, 47-8
- INTERNATIONAL TELECOMMUNICATIONS UNION, 381-5
- INTERNATIONAL TRADE ORGANIZATION: see United Nations Trade and Employment Conference
- IRAN: see under North Atlantic Treaty
- IRELAND: see also Republic of Ireland Act and under Commonwealth and North Atlantic Treaty membership in UN, 96-9
- ISRAEL: application for membership in UN, 111-115, 316, 323; membership in FAO, 369; recognition of State of, 111, 114, 302, 304, 323
- ITALY: see also under North Atlantic Treaty; acquisition of premises in, 58-65; Communist influence in, 115-6; disposition of former colonies, 49-58; need for ERP aid, 922; representation in, 21-4

J

- JAPAN: air service to, 1236, 1239; economic rehabilitation of, 86-8; and Far Eastern Commission, 73-81; immigration from, 1318-9, 1324; MFN extension to, 88-9, 1362; peace treaty with, 67-72; and US policies in, 86-8, 67-72; war crimes trials in, 82-6
- JOINT INTELLIGENCE BUREAU, 1379-80

K

- KASHMIR DISPUTE
assessment, 232-4
Kashmir Commission: membership of, 236-8, 241-2, 246-7 position, 235, 239; of India, 238-40; of Pakistan, 239
UN Resolution on, 235-46
- KOREA
North Korea: authority of Soviet Union in, 153-8, 161-4, 165-7, 177-8, 182-3, 191, 195, 198; establishment of People's Democratic Government of, 198
South Korea: formation and recognition of government in, 184-97
United Nations

General Assembly

Interim Committee: consultation of Chairman of UNTCOK with, 155-75, 182-4

Third Session: debate at, 196-201

UNTCOK

Canadian representative on: appointment of, 136-59; correspondence between US President and Prime Minister about, 136-51; instructions to, 151-60, 174-5; participation in, 160-1, 163, 167-72, 174-83, 185-9 debate in Interim Committee, 155-71, 174-5, 182-3 and elections in Korea: Canadian position, 151-2, 153-5, 158, 160-1, 164, 167, 170-3; observation of, 158-97 establishment of new Commission, 197-201

United States: question of elections, 158, 163, 165-7, 168-9, 172-3, 175-6, 183; and recognition of government in South Korea, 189-93; and UNTCOK, 163-70, 172-3, 174-5, 177-80, 182-4 visit of official mission to Canada, 1855-63

L

LATIN AMERICA: see also under United Nations Trade and Employment Conference concern about ERP aid, 973

LUXEMBOURG: see under North Atlantic Treaty

M

MFN EXTENDED: to Finland, 1753; to Japan, 86-9, 1362

MARSHALL PLAN: see European Recovery Programme

MERCHANT SHIPPING, 1201-3

MILITARY EMERGENCY PLAN (UK-US-CANADA), 1349-50

MILITARY FORCES: to enforce Security Council decisions, 118-26, 334-5

MILITARY LIAISON STAFFS, 1353-5

MILITARY RELIEF CREDITS: settlement of, 58-65

MONGOLIAN PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC: membership in UN, 96-9

N

NETHERLANDS: see also Indonesian question and under North Atlantic Treaty; acquisition of premises in, 58-63; air agreement with, 1216; small arms purchases, 1185-7; use of credit balance, 1178-80

NEWFOUNDLAND: see also under United States (defence issues); fish exports to UK, 1115

NEW ZEALAND: see also under Commonwealth; participation in Berlin airlift, 825; and trans-Pacific air services, 1232-50 passim

NICARAGUA: recognition of government of, 1871-4

NORTH ATLANTIC COMMUNITY: and OEEC, 1008; relationship between proposed Canada-US trade agreement and measures to create, 1045-53

NORTH ATLANTIC SECURITY: see North Atlantic Treaty below

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY (DEVELOPMENT OF) armed forces : implications of Treaty for, 627-32

Austria: possible inclusion of, 446, 449, 452, 468, 482, 540, 544

Azores: defence of, 443, 543, 560, 723, 740

Belgium: participation of, 459, 467, 480, 548-51, 563-4, 574-81, 592-5, 598, 721-6

Benelux: participation of, 405-10, 515, 537

Berlin crisis: meeting of Brussels Treaty Powers on, 801

Brazil : participation of, 547, 638

Brussels Treaty, 431, 435-7, 440-7, 455-68 passim, 477-83 passim, 487-90, 509, 520, 541, 545-6, 568-70, 590, 636, 709

Commonwealth: possible inclusion of members of, 436; UK as possible link with, 414

Communism: influence of, 400-1, 403-4, 410-11, 420-2, 637 consultation: provision for, 461, 467, 569, 607, 664, 732, 766

Czechoslovakia: developments in, 410-11, 423-5, 433

Denmark: participation of, 435, 449, 452, 467, 740, 745, 771

Draft Treaty, 474-80, 539, 542, 550-9, 568-70, 605-19, 621-7, 636-41, 643-56, 664-6, 693, 727-36, 772-81

Dunkirk Treaty, 407-8, 410, 424 economic and social cooperation, 452, 462-3, 573, 590, 605-6, 645-7, 664, 705, 725, 731-2, 742, 758, 765-6

European Recovery Programme, 408-10, 412, 421, 430

Finland, 430, 436

France: position of, 408-11, 465-6, 480, 518, 530, 537, 548-9, 560, 563-8, 574-82, 592-5, 722-5, 745-9, 752-4, 757-9, 764

French North Africa: inclusion of, 547, 741, 745-8, 753-5, 780

- Germany: possible admission of, 452, 468, 482, 538-44; problem of, 408-11, 482
- Greece: protection of, 428, 430-1, 441, 451, 459, 478, 481, 538-40, 724, 745, 764, 770, 779, 781
- Greenland: inclusion of, 560, 600, 740
- Iceland: participation of, 435, 449-52, 467, 480, 538-43, 560, 600-1, 637-8, 701, 717, 722, 740, 745, 771
- Iran, 428, 452, 459, 467, 478, 481, 540, 745, 764, 770, 781
- Ireland: participation of, 435, 449, 452, 459, 467, 480, 537-45, 601, 634, 637, 701, 717, 722, 740, 745, 771
- Italy: participation of, 428-31, 436, 442-3, 446, 448-9, 451, 458, 463-7 passim, 480, 483, 538-43, 572, 625, 634, 638, 693
- Luxembourg: participation of, 459, 467, 480, 598, 721-6, 747-9, 752-4, 757-9, 764, 770
- Netherlands: participation of, 459, 467, 480, 563-4, 574-81, 586, 592-8
- Norway: participation of, 419-20, 435, 467, 480, 538-43, 560, 600-1, 637, 740, 745, 771
- Portugal: participation of, 435-44 passim, 449, 452, 467, 480, 521, 538-43, 572, 637, 649, 659, 665-6, 701, 721-3, 740, 745, 771
- Rio Treaty, 452, 460, 464, 467, 546, 554, 556, 568, 573, 605-8, 639, 709, 715-6, 741
- security considerations, 400-1, 413-6, 419-20, 430-2, 441-4, 448-52, 460-2, 467-8, 491, 548-50, 596-611, 628-32, 724, 756; North American defence, 485, 498, 502, 506; relationship to economic considerations, 1009
- Soviet Union: policy of, 400-1, 408, 419-22, 430-2, 483-4, 493-4, 504, 511-2, 521, 549-52, 565, 599-600
- Spain: participation of, 430-31, 444, 449, 468, 482, 521, 538-44
- Sweden: participation of, 432, 449, 457, 459, 467, 480, 538-43, 560, 602, 634, 637, 656, 722, 740, 745, 771, 779
- Switzerland: attitude of, 449, 452, 459, 465, 470, 478, 538-43
- territorial scope: 438, 456-60, 464-5, 471, 481-3, 538-40, 600, 615-7, 624-5, 638-9, 720, 728-9, 740-1, 746, 762
- Turkey: protection of, 428, 441, 451-2, 459, 478, 481, 540, 724, 745, 764, 770, 779
- United Kingdom policy, 400-1, 405-6, 408-10, 419-22, 435-6, 454-65 passim, 480-2, 492, 500-1, 590, 722-5 passim, 745, 747-9, 752-4, 757-5
- and United Nations Charter (Articles 51 and 52): 410-12, 425, 437, 448-58 passim, 466-7, 470, 481, 490, 554, 556, 603-5, 650-1, 727-30, 738, 765-6
- United States: policy, 405-8, 412, 423-5, 442-6 passim, 449-50, 455-62, 477-8, 480-2, 493-6, 509, 551-2, 559-62, 568-71, 604-5, 655-7, 693, 717-9, 721-7, 747-9, 752-4, 757-9, 764; role of Congress in, 476, 488, 502-4, 516, 524, 632-3, 642; and Vandenberg Resolution, 497, 509, 518, 526-7
- Washington Exploratory Talks
- Ambassadorial meetings (including Working Group) (June 23-December 31), 514-50, 559-64, 574-608, 632, 634, 642, 656-60, 674-760 passim, 763-72; Military Staff talks, 516, 518, 531-6
- Canada-US-UK meetings (March 22-April 1), 426-86 passim
- Western European Union, 405-12, 416-8, 431, 558, 572, 599, 768-70
- representation: on Chiefs of Staff Committee of, 416-8; on Military Committee of, 413-5; on Military Supply Board, 417-8
- NORWAY: see also under North Atlantic Treaty; acquisition of premises in 58-63; air agreement with, 1216
- O
- OEEC: see Organization for European Economic Cooperation
- OLEOMARGARINE: treatment under GATT, 885-8
- ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES: Bogotá Conference, 1867-70
- ORGANIZATION FOR EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COOPERATION (OEEC): and ERP, 44-5, 981-2; assistance to members of, 1005-8, 1011-2
- P
- PJBD: see Permanent Joint Board on Defence under United States (defence issues)
- PAKISTAN: see also under Commonwealth; admission to Far Eastern Commission, 73-5; economic development for, 1372; sale of arms to, 1184, 1194-5, 1198-9
- PALESTINE QUESTION
- Egypt: armed intervention of, 303-4, 308
- Israel: admission to UN, 111-3, 316, 323; recognition of, 111, 114-5, 302, 303
- mediator: appointment of, 300-1; death of, 313-4; work of, 300-2, 310, 315
- United Nations debate on

- at General Assembly Special Session, 287-302 resolutions: appointing mediator, 300-1; US draft Trusteeship Agreement, 282-9, 294, 298-300
- at General Assembly Third Session, 315-6, 321-3 resolutions: appointing Conciliation Commission, 114-5, 321-3; US-UK draft to implement mediator's proposal, 316-8
- at Security Council, 247-86, 300-1, 303-6 positions: of Belgium, 259, 265-7; of Canada, 254-7, 259-67, 270-3, 306, 309-10, 312; of Soviet Union, 269-71, 278-80; of UK, 251, 267-9, 274-7, 279, 291-2, 299-302, 306, 311-2; of US, 257-72, 278-84, 300-2, 304-6, 312 resolutions: Armistice, 320-1; on conciliation, 258; on defining threat to peace, 311-2; on initiating action under Chapter VII, 301-6; on limiting action to Chapter VI, 306; Truce, 309-10, 314, 318-20; on truce, trusteeship and convening of Special Session, 270-2, 279-84; UK-US Resolution on Palestine, 300-1, 316
 UK-US relations, 251, 258, 274, 290-2, 300-2, 304-9, 315-8
- PAN-AMERICAN UNION: see Organization of American States
- PEACE TREATY: with Bulgaria, with Finland, with Hungary, with Italy and with Romania, 29-31; with Japan, 67-72
- PERMANENT JOINT BOARD ON DEFENCE (PJBD): see under United States (defence issues)
- PERU: air agreement with, 1216-7; recognition of government of, 1874-5
- POLAND: and art treasures, 1766-76; relations with, 1762-5; status of mission in, 18-20
- PORTUGAL: see also under North Atlantic Treaty membership in UN, 96-100
- PRIME MINISTER: attendance at Commonwealth Prime Ministers' meeting, 1357-8; and representation on UNTCOK, 136-51; timetable for retirement, 1340
- R
- REFUGEES: immigration of, 1302-9; resettlement of Czechoslovak, 379
- REGIONAL SECURITY AND DEFENCE PLANNING, 1353-5, 1376-83
- REPARATIONS, INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE ON, 65-7
- REPUBLIC OF IRELAND ACT, 1460-71 passim
- RIO TREATY: see under North Atlantic Treaty
- ROMANIA: membership in UN, 96-100; proclamation of peace treaty with, 31
- ROYAL STYLE AND TITLES, 1
- S
- ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AND POWER PROJECT: see under United States
- SECRETARY-GENERAL: and armed intervention of Egypt in Palestine, 303-4, 308-9
- SECURITY COUNCIL OF THE UNITED NATIONS: see also under atomic energy, Czechoslovakia, Indonesian question, Kashmir dispute, Palestine question; reference of Berlin crisis to, 804, 814-32; representative on, 90-1, 118-26; role in, 118-26; voting in, 132-4
- SERVICE ATTACHÉS IN SOVIET UNION, 8-13
- SOUTH AFRICA: see also under Commonwealth; and Berlin airlift, 808, 811, 825; and draft Declaration on Human Rights, 356, 358, 363, 365
- SOUTH EAST ASIA: opportunities in, 1863-6
- SOUTH PACIFIC AIR TRANSPORT COUNCIL, 1235, 1240-50
- SOVEREIGNTY: Antarctic, 1877-83
- SOVIET BLOC: broadcasts to, 1823-9; psychological warfare, 1829-33; reciprocity in relations, 1809-10
- SOVIET UNION: see also Berlin crisis, Korea and under atomic energy, North Atlantic Treaty, Palestine question, Security Council; and admission of new members to UN, 96-111, 115-6; attitude towards European Recovery Programme, 408; coup in Czechoslovakia, 324-8, 1732-52; detention of officials in Soviet-controlled territory, 1832-4; and disarmament resolution, 329-33; and elections in Italy, 115; and draft Declaration on Human Rights, 352, 358, 363, 365; and exchange of information, 1812-23; intentions of, 1786-1805; policy in Far Eastern Commission, 77-81; privileges for Soviet officials, 1805-6; restrictions on diplomats, 1806-11; relations with US, 1777-95; service attachés in Moscow, 7-12; and UN specialized agencies, 384; and visas, 1811
- SPAIN: see also under North Atlantic Treaty; and meteorological agreement with, 1776-7

STERLING AREA STATISTICAL COMMITTEE, 1359, 1364, 1366, 1369, 1507

SWEDEN: see under North Atlantic Treaty; request to manufacture arms under licence, 1191, 1197-8, 1200

SWITZERLAND: see under North Atlantic Treaty; position at United Nations Trade and Employment Conference, 905, 912

T

TRANS CANADA AIRLINES: as sole Canadian international operator, 1229-31; and trans-Pacific air services, 1232-4, 1238-9

TELECOMMUNICATIONS, 381-5, 1482-3

TELEGRAMS: use of priority designations on, 4

TRANSJORDAN: membership in UN, 96-100, 116-8

TURKEY: see under North Atlantic Treaty

U

UK: see United Kingdom

UN: see United Nations

UNESCO: see United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization

UNTCOK: see under Korea

US: see United States

UKRAINE: and admission of new members to UN, 96-7

UNDER-DEVELOPED COUNTRIES: see under United Nations Trade and Employment Conference

UNITED KINGDOM (UK): see also under atomic energy, Berlin crisis (Four Power talks), Commonwealth (defence, economic matters, Prime Ministers' meeting), North Atlantic Treaty, Palestine question (Security Council) and admission of Ceylon to UN, 103-5; civil aviation: discussions on, 1222-6; South Pacific Air Transport Council, 1234, 1238-50 and coup in Czechoslovakia, 324-8 and disarmament resolutions, 331-2 and dispute over Falkland Islands, 1877-82

Military Emergency Plan, 1349-50 policy towards Europe, 1504-10 and Transjordan, 114

UNITED NATIONS (UN): see also Economic and Social Council of the United Nations, General Assembly of the United Nations, Security Council of the United Nations, United Nations Trade and Employment Conference and under atomic energy, North Atlantic Treaty; admission of new members,

96-117; Budget Committee, 93-5, 118-9; establishment of European Centre (Geneva), 93; establishment of Permanent Delegation (New York), 91; Guard Force, 334-5; relations with Australia at, 1484-7

UNITED NATIONS APPEAL FOR CHILDREN, 366-8

UNITED NATIONS COMMITTEE OF GOOD OFFICES: see Indonesian question

UNITED NATIONS EDUCATION, SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION (UNESCO) comments on, 386-9; Third Session of, 385-9

UNITED NATIONS INTERGOVERNMENTAL MARITIME CONSULTATIVE AND ADVISORY ORGANIZATION, 370-7

UNITED NATIONS TRADE AND EMPLOYMENT CONFERENCE

export subsidies, 907

Final Act, 896: modifications to, 916-8

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT): legislation to implement, 918-9; Protocols, 894-5

Havana Conference, 890-916 positions: of Australia, 901-2; of Benelux, 905, of France, 906; of India, 902, of Latin America, 902-3, 907-8, 910-1; of Switzerland, 912; of UK, 901, 904, 908, 912-3; of US, 900, 904, 906-7, 912-4

Interim Commission: establishment of, 914-5

International Court of Justice, 914

International Trade Organization (ITO), 890-916 passim quantitative restrictions, 908 under-developed countries: treatment of, 900-4

UNITED STATES (US): see also Berlin crisis, Indonesian question, Palestine question and under atomic energy, Korea, North Atlantic Treaty and admission of Italy to UN, 115-8

Alaska: Haines Cut-Off, 1705-7; railway from British Columbia to, 1698-1704

Arctic: activities in, 1539-45; Advisory Committee on Northern Development, 1511-21; cooperation with Defence Research Board on, 1596; sovereignty in, 1524-5, 1539-48; USAF flights over, 1559-62; weather stations in, 1515-7, 1529-30, 1543-5, 1594, 1599-1600 consular representation in, 27-8 defence issues

airfields, 1511, 1514-8, 1529-32, 1599-1600

armed forces: role of, 1597-1600;
procurement for, 1625-7

atomic weapons: importance of, 1598 basic security plan, 1564-77, 1579-85, 1587-8

black servicemen in Canada, 1631-5

Chiefs of Staff: cooperation with, 1596-7 control of projects in Canada, 1519-27, 1538-42

Defense, Secretary of: visit of, 1594-1605

Fort Churchill Testing Establishment,
1518, 1594-5

Greenland: Loran site in, 1551; US bases in, 1531

icebreakers, 1522-32, 1548-51; US voyages, 1537-48

industrial cooperation, 1601, 1604-5;
high level committee on, 1606-9,
1613-4, 1621-4

Industrial Defence Board, 1580, 1605-24 joint defence arrangements: Cabinet control over, 119

Loran, 1515-6, 1551-8, 1594-1600
passim

mapping, 1595

Military Cooperation Committee: functions, 1564-79, 1589-93

Military Emergency Plan (US-UK-Canada), 1349-50

mobilization: industrial, 1593, 1606-9, 1615-6, 1621-4; short range plans,
1581-2

National Defence, Minister of: visit of,
1587-93

Newfoundland: bases in, 1600-3

Newfoundland and Labrador: exercises in, 1562

Northwest Staging Route, 1516

Permanent Joint Board on Defence,
1564-79, 1589-93, 1597, 1600, 1606-9, 1614, 1640, 1693-6, 1701-2 personnel: exchanges of, 1596-1601

production, 1605-27 passim

publicity on, 1627-30

Sault Ste. Marie: defence of installations at, 1636-41

standardization, 1580-1, 1601-5 strategic appreciation, 1564-89 passim

conomic issues agricultural subsidies, 1078-83 commodity exports: regulation of,

1031-3, 1037-44

Congress: attitude towards other contributions to ERP, 958, 961; and ERP
timetable, 928-32

European Recovery Programme: attitude towards association of Canada with, 893-1003 passim, 1014-8, 1023-4; implications for Canadian exports, 1078-83

financial relations with, 1010-21

export controls: on natural gas, 1039, 1053-4, 1074-5; and possible consultation about lists, 1183-4; possible imposition of, 1034-5, 1037-44, 1053-4, 1074-7

and export of arms, 1013

offshore purchases for ERP, 957-63, 1000-8, 1028

trade agreement: possibility of, 1030-7, 1045-53, 1055-72

trade relations: assessment of, 1078-83

trucking in bond, 1073-4

UK-Canada financial relations: views on, 941-2, 949-59, 966-9, 1005-8, 1020-1

and United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment, 900, 904-7,
912-4 passim

Far Eastern Commission: policy in, 51

fisheries, 1642-54

information exchanges, 1719-31

International Joint Commission, 1708-10;
and Passamaquoddy project, 1711-9

Japan: economic policy towards, 86-9

Niagara Power Diversion, 1656-8

St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project,
1558-9, 1602-4, 1658-98 passim

URUGUAY: recognition of government of, 1875-6

V

VENEZUELA: recognition of government of, 1876-7

VETO IN SECURITY COUNCIL, 98-101, 108-11, 115-7; Interim Committee recommendations on use of, 134-5

W

WAR BOOK, 1615-21

WAR CLAIMS, 65-7

WAR CRIMES TRIALS IN FAR EAST, 82-4: status of International Military Tribunal at, 84-6

WASHINGTON EXPLORATORY TALKS: see under North Atlantic Treaty

WEATHER STATIONS, 1212-4, 1575-7, 1529-30, 1543-5, 1594, 1599-1600

WESTERN EUROPE: see also Western European Union under North Atlantic Treaty defence capability of, 1598

WESTERN EUROPEAN UNION: see under North Atlantic Treaty

WHEAT: Anglo-Canadian Wheat Agreement, 1114, 1151-60; International Wheat Agreement, 1148-50

WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION (WHO): World Health Assembly, 390-1

Y

YUGOSLAVIA: acquisition of premises in, 58-65; compensation claims against, 1136-7; exports to, 1135-6

