The Little Mischief.

Only a wee little mortal, Asleep on the nursery floor, 'Mid a pile of neglected playthings, Which litter the whole room o'er, Two little fat arms lying Over a curly head.

And smiles which awaken the dimples Parting the lips so red.

Here's dolly with arms and legs broken, And a terrible crack in her head, And her cheeks washed as white as a lily, That once were so rosy and red; Poor Fido—the puppy—is whining; Poor Fido—the puppy—is whining; Poor Fido—the puppy—is whining; Poor Fido—the puppy—is whining; Fasted that cup to your till!

It was only that wee little mortal, Asleep on the nursery floor, 'Mid a pile of neglected playthings, Which litter the whole room o'er, Two little fat arms lying Over a curly head.

And nurse stands aghast at the litter Which covers the whole room o'er, Well, pick them up patiently, nurse, Over and over again, Even though that bundle of mischief Will make all your labor but vain.

Better a home with a baby, And a floor all littered with toys, Than one that is empty forever Of childish prattle and noise, So here's a kiss for the darling! On forehead, and mouth, and chin, And whenever I find a dimple, I'll smudge the kisses in.

YOUTH'S COMPANION.

THE WHITE LILY.

"Please," said a wistful voice, "give me a flower. Tom is fond of flowers."

Ella Bronson was on her way to a friend's with a bouquet of choice flowers. She stopped at this appeal and looking down, saw a little girl about twelve years old.

"And who is Tom?" asked Ella, touched.

"My little brother. He fell and hurt his back and now he can't move himself. The doctor says he'll never get well; and he does wish for flowers so."

Ella hesitated for a moment, but only for a moment. To take a single flower from her bouquet would spoil it, so perfectly had it been arranged; and it was for a friend, moreover, who was about to be married. But the pleading face of the child and the thought of the sick brother, were more than she could bear. She remembered too, the words of Scripture, "Inasmuch as ye have done unto me, I will do unto you."

She selected the finest flower in the bouquet—a large, white lily—and gave it to the child.

"There," she said, "put it in water and it will keep ever so long. And here," she added, as the girl, with grateful looks, turned to run away, "is something to buy a few cakes for your brother. Where do you live?"

The child told her, adding, "Oh, won't Tom be glad!" and then disappeared.

It was not long before the little thing reached her home. It was a close, hot room, at the top of the house, looking into a dirty inclosure behind.

"Is that you, Lizzy?" asked a weak voice; "I'm so glad."

The speaker was lying on a straw bed on the floor and he looked up, smiling, into his sister's face.

"See here, Tom, said his sister, producing the lily; "these are the very kind you like; but that's not all," she added, triumphantly producing the lily; "just look at this!"

Tom's eyes fairly glistened with delight. In his eagerness he half rose in the bed, exclaiming, "Oh, what a beauty! Where did you get it?" But the exertion was too much for him, and almost as soon as he had grasped the bud he fell back on his bed.

"How pure it looks," he added weakly, after a pause; "it makes me think of the angels. You good, good Lizzy!"

"See, I'll put it in a bottle," said Lizzy, "with some water, and it shall stand on the floor close by you. It will last ever so long, now. But why don't you eat the cakes?"

"Tom shut his eyes. 'I can't, Lizzy,' he said. 'I ain't hungry. You must eat yourself. I will lie and look at the flower.'"

Lizzy was frightened. Tom must be very bad, she knew, if he could not eat cakes.

"Eat a little bit, dear," she begged. "It will make you feel better."

"I don't think I shall ever be better," answered Tom.

The tears rolled down the sister's face; "don't talk so, Tom," she sobbed, "you shan't go. I can't live without you. Who will be here to take care of me?"

"I've been thinking," said Tom, gravely, "I think a great deal here, that when I'm gone, father will be different. 'You know'—and here he dropped his voice and looked carefully around, as if to see lest any one might be listening. 'You know that father drinks, and that's why he comes home so late, and says he can't afford to send you to school; and why he is so cross; and why, sometimes, he beats you—'

"Don't speak of it, dear," sobbed the sister, "I wouldn't mind if it wasn't for you."

"But I do mind it, Lizzy; and it breaks my heart to lie here and see it. But sometimes I think, when I die father will be different. He says he loves me, and it may make him good. What is it the Bible says? 'Through much tribulation we win the crown. What was the verse we learnt at school? I keep forgetting. The one about being tried.'"

"Oh! I know," said Lizzy—"Come unto me all that are weary and heavy laden and I will give you rest."

"Come unto me," he does not deceive, Lizzy. He loves you and me too, and he will take care of us. He is going to give me rest up in heaven."

But the sister was not to be comforted. Tom was all the world to her. To lose him was to lose everything. The day wore on. Night came. Tom lay looking at the lily, and no one knows how many sweet thoughts it suggested to him. Now and then his sister left her work and came to see if he wanted anything. He always thanked her with a sweet smile.

"Father is late to-night," he said at last, when darkness came; and he sighed.

"He will be here soon," said Lizzy, uttering words of hope, in which she hardly believed herself. "Try to sleep a little, dear."

So Tom at last fell off into a doze. Worn out with fatigue and anxiety, Lizzy crept into bed by her brother's side, and sank to sleep also.

It was midnight when the father came in. The noise woke Tom up. His half rose on his elbow and looked around. At this moment the moon emerged from a cloud, and its light, falling through the window, lit up the sick boy's face with a glory as of a seraph's.

The father started back, sobered at once. It seemed to him as if a halo direct from heaven encircled his boy's head.

"Father," said Tom, "come here please."

The man went softly to his son's bedside, sank on his knees and took the lad's hand tenderly in his own. He was awed.

"Be kind to Lizzy," said Tom, wistfully, looking into his father's face. "She won't have any but you when I am dead, father. Let her go to school again, please; she is so fond of school."

"Oh! my son, my son," interrupted the now penitent father, bursting into tears. "You will get well yet."

"I shall never get well," said Tom. "But don't cry, father. I shall see mother, you know. And by-and-by—a strange look came on his face, a look of faith and joy unexpressed—'by-and-by we'll meet again, shan't we? Kiss me, please, and then go to bed, or we'll wake sister.'"

The father, choking back his sobs, kissed the boy. "I promise to be kind to Lizzy," he whispered. "She shall go to school. I will never drink another drop. As God's my witness, he added solemnly, 'I never will.'"

Tom took his little thin arms from around his father's neck, where he had put them for the last time, and then sank back on his pillow very much exhausted.

"How sweet the flower looks in the moonlight!" thought Tom. "What a happy boy I am to have it! And to have father promise to do better," he went on, "and to say he'll love Lizzy and that he'll send her to school!"—and then he forgot himself in sleep.

The night passed. Morning dawned. Lizzy woke before the sun rose. Her first thought was of Tom.

"I've slept all night," she said reproachfully, and I didn't mean to sleep five minutes. Wonder if Tom is better or he's had a cold. He must be better or he'd have called."

He was better. As she leaned to look back at him, Lizzy was startled by the strange yet beautiful look on his face, a look of divine joy, as when a martyr had passed through fire into everlasting rest. He would never suffer more.

The lily has done its work. It had sweetened the last hours of the suffering boy, suggesting pure and beautiful thoughts; and as Ella Bronson called early in the morning to see Lizzy, she found it lying on the breast of the dead child, clasped in his two thin waxen hands; and she thought of the lilies of paradise and of the saints who held them and of the words of scripture again, "Inasmuch as ye have done unto the least of one of these, ye have done unto me."

A better work even had been done also. The last words of Tom were never forgotten by his father who, from that night, became a reformed man. Lizzy went to school, and more than that, never again heard a harsh word at home.

Ella and Lizzy became great friends. The former, from her superior position was able to do much for the latter. He was not chance rely on it, that made Ella give away, at some sacrifice at the time, that lily.

"As ye sow, so shall ye reap."

Frightful Explosion in a Welsh Coal Mine.

(By Cable to the Mail.) London, July 15.

An explosion occurred early this morning in the London and South Wales Colliery Company's new block vein pit at Risca, six miles from Newport. The shock was very violent. It is supposed a hundred and nineteen men were in the pit. It is scarcely probable any will be saved. One body was found at the bottom of the shaft. Ventilation is being restored in the mine with a view of exploring for bodies.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-EIGHT GONE.

A Cardiff despatch says as hundred and twenty-eight men were in the pit of the London and South Wales Colliery Company's mine at the time of the explosion. It is believed all perished.

THE PIT OF DEATH.

There is some confusion regarding the number of men in the pit. A recent calculation lessens it to eighty, but it is not impossible that over two hundred colliers had gone down. The pit is 280 yards deep. All the machinery was new, but the block vein seam is an old one, and is well known in connection with previous explosions, one of which, in 1860, killed 145 persons.

ONE HUNDRED AND SEVEN.

Another account of the colliery explosion at Risca gives the number of men in the pit at the time at 107. Three bodies have thus far been discovered.

NO HOPES OF ONE.

The bodies of three unfortunate miners were found near the bottom of the shaft, but not brought up. The force of the explosion was terrific, blowing to atoms the ventilating fan in the upcast air blast. While the men were at work yesterday, the atmosphere was noticed to be heavy and overcharged. The scenes about the mines are reported as heartrending. A large throng was present. Everything possible is being done to expedite the rescue of the men, but scarcely anyone hopes to find one of the miners alive.

AN OFFICIAL STATEMENT.

A careful examination of the company's books show 130 men descended into the pit for the night shift. Sir William Harcourt (Home Secretary), replying to an enquiry in the Commons to-day, said he believed 118 men perished in the explosion.

Farm, Garden & Household.

The Farmer's Boy.

The sun set behind the hills,
And o'er the dreary moor,
When tired and lame, a boy there came
Up to the farmer's door—
"Oh, can you tell me if there be
To plow, to sow, to reap, to mow,
To be a farmer's boy?"

"My father's dead; my mother's left
With her five children small;
I'm the oldest of them all;
And though I'm small I fear no work,
If you will give me help;
To plow, to sow, to reap, to mow,
To be a farmer's boy."

"Or if you cannot give employ,
One favor yet I ask—
That you will shelter me this night,
From this cold, wintry blast;
And when the sun is bright,
Elsewhere to seek employ,
For to plow, to sow, to reap, to mow,
And to be a farmer's boy."

Balky Horses.

The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, puts forth a set of rules for the treatment of balky horses.

1. Pat the horse on the neck: examine the harness carefully, first on one side and then on the other, speaking encouragingly while doing so; then jump into the wagon and give the word go; generally he will obey.
2. A teamster in Maine says he can start the worst balky horse, by taking him out of the shafts and making him go round in a circle till he is giddy. If the first dance of this sort doesn't cure him, the second will.
3. To cure a balky horse, simply place your hand over the horse's nose and shut off his wind until he wants to go.

4. The brain of a horse seems to entertain one idea at a time; therefore continued whipping only confirms his stubborn resolve. If you can, by any means, give him a new subject to think of, you will generally have no trouble in starting him. A simple remedy to take a couple of turns of stone twine around the foreleg, just below the knee, and tie in a bow knot. At the first check he will generally go dancing off, and after going a short distance you can get out and remove the string, to prevent injury to the tendon in your further drive.

Hide-Bound Horses.

A writer in the Prairie Farmer says:—Where the skin is covering unyielding structures, it is tightly bound down, but over the greater part of the body it is loose, and in parts thrown into folds. In a healthy animal, even a thick skin is supple and yielding. It is loose and elastic in the young ox that is laying on flesh without difficulty; but in the horse, ox, or other animal out of condition, or suffering from disease, the skin becomes tight and unyielding, it cannot be raised, and the animal in such case is called hide-bound. As the causes of this so-called hide-bound are various, the same treatment cannot always be effectual or afford relief. In some cases dietetics will be necessary, in others alternative medicine will be required; or both may be used alternately. The following powders will act on the kidneys and secretory organs:—Nitre of potash, two ounces and a half; sulphate of iron, common resin, of each ten drachms; juniper berries, six ounces. All in powder, to be well mixed and divided into twelve parts, one of which to be given night and morning in mixed feed. The following alternative powders may be given the following week, viz.:—Flowers of sulphur, one pound; sesquiphosphure of antimony, half a pound; powdered nitrate of potash, a quarter of a pound. Mix, and divide into twelve parts, one part to be given morning and evening in mixed feed.

Josh Billings on Strawberries.

The strawberry is one of nature's sweet pets. She makes them worth fifty cents the first she makes, and never allows them to be sold at a mean price.

The color of the strawberry is like the setting sun under a thin cloud, with a delicate splash of rain in it; its fragrance is like the breath of a baby when it first begins to eat wintergreen lozengers. Its flavor is like the nectar of an old-fashioned goddess used to leave at the bottom of the tumbler when Jubbiter stood treat on Mount Ida.

There is many breeds up this delightful vegetable, but not a mean one in the bunch.

I think I have stole them, laying around loose, without any pedigree, in somebody's tall grass, when I was a lazy school boy, that eat dreadful sick without any white sugar on them, and even a big mixed with them in the hurry up the moment. Cherry is good, but they are too much like sucking a marble that has got a handle too. Peaches is good, if a don't get enny up the pin feathers into your lips. Watermelons will suit anybody who is satisfied with self-watered drink; but the man who can eat strawberries besprikled with cream (at somebody else's expense), and not lay his hand on his stomach and thank the author of strawberries and stummaks and the pheloh who pays for the strawberries, is a man whose mouth tastes like a hole in the ground, and don't care what gets down.

For Bells—A Sure Cure.

Dr. Simon, a physician of Loraine, states that, as soon as the characteristic culminating point of a boil makes its appearance, he puts in a saucer a thimbleful of camphorated alcohol, and dipping the ends of his middle fingers into the liquor, rubs the inflamed surface, especially the middle portion, repeating the operation eight or ten minutes, continuing the rubbing at each time for about half a minute. He then allows the surface to dry, placing a slight coating of camphorated olive oil over the affected surface. He states that one such application in almost all such cases causes boils to dry up and disappear. The application should be made at morning, noon and in the evening. He avers that the same treatment will cure whitlows, and all injuries of tips of fingers. As soon as pain and redness appear, the finger should be soaked for ten minutes in camphorated sweet oil. The relief said to be immediate, and these applications are generally enough to effect a cure.

How to Feed a Horse.

As a general rule, too much food is given and too much of this is hay. Ten pounds of hay and twelve of oats constitute a good day's fodder for a working horse, whether the work be fast or slow. Herbert's advice in regard to feeding horses, is to give a lock of hay and half a pail of water the first thing in the morning. After grooming, give the other half-pail of water, and if he is not going out, four quarts of oats, after eating which he may have four or five pounds of hay. If going out, feed six quarts of oats and no hay. If to be put to work in the afternoon, they should be again watered and have four quarts of oats and the remainder of their hay. Half a bushel of washed carrots a week, given at a time, will improve the coat and be beneficial to the stomach. This feeding is ample to keep horses in good working order.—Vt. Chronicle.

Greasing of Axes.

The Canada Farmer gives the following directions:—Lard should never be used on a wagon, for it will penetrate the hub and work its way around the tendons of the spokes and spoil the wheel. Castor oil is a good material for use on an iron axle; just oil enough should be applied to so as to give it a light coating; this is better than more, for the surplus put on will work out at the ends and be forced by the shoulders and nut into the hub around the outside of the boxes. To oil the axle-tree, first wipe the spindle clean with a cloth wet with turpentine, if it won't wipe without it. On a buggy or carriage, wipe and clean off the back and front ends of the hubs, and then apply a very small quantity of castor oil, or more especially prepared lubricator, near the shoulder's point.

A Wonderful Lightning Freak.

Glen Sutton, P. Q., was visited the other day by about the fiercest and most versatile stroke of lightning ever heard of. During a heavy shower there, the lightning struck a house owned, we believe, by a man named Larock, and occupied by a Mr. Odette. At the time of the shower Odette was sitting at the dinner table, and there were five or six persons besides in the house. The lightning struck the chimney first, tearing it away down to the first floor and scattering the bricks and plastering in all directions; it disjoined all the rafters on one side of the roof, struck a clock in the room, tore the inside all out of it, melted the link connections of a watch-chain which hung, with the watch, under the clock; threw the watch into another room, knocked a saucer from Odette's hand and burned a hole in the table-cloth just in front of him, took a prop-clip from an upstairs window and carried it through a down-stairs room, tore a big stone out of a cellar wall and knocked a pork barrel into splinters, besides making itself conspicuous in other ways. Strange as it may seem no one in the house was hurt, though Odette was considerably astonished; and the school-teacher who was there at the time was so shocked that she fainted after the lightning had finished its capers and withdrawn. Altogether, it was a wonderful performance, such as occurs very seldom.—St. Alban's Advertiser.

New York, July 14.—A terrible accident occurred this morning between Pearsons Station and Parrockway, by which 21 laborers were injured, several fatally. About 12 a. m. a general train, composed of 7 flat cars, was going East at a rapid rate of speed between the Points named having on board at the time 85 laborers, chiefly Italians. On the right side of the track stands an immense derrick which has been used in digging large wells, from some unexplained cause, the rope or guy, which sustained the track, struck up as the train approached, derricking the whole of the engine and sweeping the cars. The unfortunate men were thrown violently upon the ground, and their screams of pain and fright rent the air for half a mile around. The engineer stopped the train as soon as possible; the engine was detached from the cars, and ran back to Pearsons, where assistance was procured from among citizens and railroad people, who hastened to the scene of the accident. The poor Italians, many of whom were maimed in a shocking manner, were placed on the cars and were dispatched to the depot. Without research, but the men who can eat strawberries besprikled with cream (at somebody else's expense), and not lay his hand on his stomach and thank the author of strawberries and stummaks and the pheloh who pays for the strawberries, is a man whose mouth tastes like a hole in the ground, and don't care what gets down.

CANADIAN FOUR OAKED CREW.

The Argonaut four, although beaten seem to have done nobly at Philadelphia, and to have earned many friends for themselves by their pluck. To have rowed a dead heat with such a crew as the University of Pennsylvania can and did turn out, and to have got within half a length of the famous Wyandottes, under the second best amateur four in America, were most creditable performances, not calculated to inspire dismay in other Canadian crews, but rather to greatly encourage them. The Argonauts have worked hard to the position they hold, but there are several crews in Canada, after all, who will not concede to them in endurance. Therefore, a tough and keen struggle may be expected when the Forest City, Leander, Nautilus, Peterboro', Ottawa, Lacine, Toronto, Argonaut and other Canadian fours come together in the senior race on August 4th.—Mail.

One of the IMMIGRANTS.—A gentleman of Mount Denison, who emigrated from the County of West, Ontario, in 1871, to better his fortunes, is one of the disgraced ones. He bought a promise to him heeded the "Land of Promise," but the prospects of that farm were "too many" for him, and nothing green was suffered by him to live. He sadly wishes he was back in Nova Scotia.—Windsor Mail.

The figures of the Mercantile Agency are suggestive of the character of the business outlook. In the first six months of 1879, the failures in the Dominion were 1,067, involving a capital to the extent of $17,435,065. In the first six months of 1880, the failures in the Dominion were 649, involving $5,660,848, a reduction of 41% in number, and a reduction of $11,774,217 in the amount.

The first quarter of 1880, gives the number of failures at 503, and the amount at $4,816,277. The statistics of the second quarter indicate that the failures were 146 in number, and $844,871 in amount.

These figures show that the corner has been fully turned, within three months after the application of the N. P.

Yet there are men who for party purpose would revise the N. P. It is doing its work well, and it is doing it vastly better as soon as the initial difficulties are removed.—Herald.

The Acadia Foundry is doing a flourishing business.

Their men are now working both night and day. Rapid progress is being made with the erection of the new machine shop which will shortly be completed.—Eastern Chronicle (GRIFF).

A GOOD ACCOUNT.

"To sum it up, six long years of bed-ridden sickness and suffering, costing $200 per year, total $1,200—of which I was stopped by three bottles of Hop Bitters taken by my wife, who has done her house-work for a year since, without the loss of a day, and I want everybody to know it for their benefit."
