DUFFERIN PARADED STRONGLY

Last Night Was sion of An- Prize Giving

Last night the armories were the scene of not only a parade but the sion of rifle competitions for 1915.

The galleries were filled and the Dufferin Rifles, after one hour's drill in the open and exercising in company and platoon work marched inside and forming into a hollow square with their bands in front under Bandmaster John Johnson and Sergeant Mellor.

Seated near and present at this "house of presentations" were many prominent people connected with the civic and military life of Brantford. Mayor Spence, Capt. M. E. B. Cutcliffe and Mrs. Cutcliffe, Capt. and Mrs. Duntlop, Capt. G. and Mrs. Watt, Mrs. (Col.) M. Colquhoun and Capt. C. E. Jenkins, Capt. A. MacLean, Capt. Emmons and Major C. P. Ballachey of the 58th C. E. F., Mrs. (Capt.) Joyce.

THE PRIZE-GIVING At the call of Capt. Cutcliffe, Mayor Spence came forward and spoke a few words. The Dufferin Rifles, said his Worship, had made a proud name for themselves and the gallantry the first contingent had shown would be an inspiration for the others. Four popular officers had given from the battalion and become commanding officers. One of whom they were all proud, Colonel Colquhoun had achieved his honors on the field of battle and those yet to be tried, he felt sure would give a good account of themselves.

The Second Division was now in France with many we know and respect in its ranks. He was proud to be able to robe a few members of a regiment which had given so much for King and Country and made Brantford's name famous. He then turned to a round of applause was accorded the Mayor for his remarks, who then made way for the prize giving. Mrs. M. E. B. Cutcliffe and Mrs. Jenkins then took the place of honor and alternately handed to each man as he came forward, the trophy he had earned. Capt. Emmons read the prize list and as the teams came forward the band struck up a "right" tune. "The company, led by Capt. Joyce on two occasions paraded to obtain prizes, for section and company competition. SECOND DIVISION REPRESENTATIVE OF CANADIAN CITIES

Last of Battalions Now With First Contingent in France.

Ottawa, Sept. 20.—The 2nd Canadian Division, which now has arrived in France, and which will soon take its place with the veteran first contingent and the Royal Canadian Dragoons, the Strathconas and the Princess Patricia's, on the battle front, is representative in its composition of the whole Dominion of Canada.

The division is under the command of General Turner, V.C., D.S.O., who did splendid service in South Africa, and who more recently distinguished himself in command of one of the brigades of the 1st Division during the furious fighting of St. Julien, Festubert and Givenchy.

COMPOSITION OF BRIGADES. The division is composed of three infantry brigades. The brigades and battalions follow, the name of the city or town given being that of mobilization headquarters for the battalion: Fourth Infantry Brigade, commanded by Lord Byng, and comprising the following battalions: 18th Battalion, London, commanded by Lieut.-Col. E. S. Wigle. 19th Battalion, Toronto, Lieut.-Col. J. T. McLaren. 20th Battalion, Toronto, Lieut.-Col. J. A. V. Allen (Col Allan, it is understood, is now in command, but his successor has not been announced). 21st Battalion, Kingston, Lieut.-Col. W. S. Hughes.

The 5th Infantry Brigade is under the command of Brigadier-General Dave Watson of Quebec, and is composed of the following battalions: 22nd Battalion, St. Jean, P.Q., Col. P. J. Sauter (French-Canadian Battalion). 24th Battalion, Montreal, Lieut.-Col. J. A. Gunn. 25th Battalion, Halifax, Lieut.-Col. G. A. Le Cain. 26th Battalion, St. John, N.B., Lt. Col. J. L. McAvity.

The 6th Infantry Brigade is commanded by Lieut.-Col. E. O. Ketchen of Winnipeg, and is composed of the following battalions: 27th Battalion, Winnipeg, Lieut.-Col. J. R. Snider. 28th Battalion, Winnipeg, Lieut.-Col. F. L. Embury. 29th Battalion, Vancouver, Lieut.-Col. J. S. Tobin. 31st Battalion, Calgary, Lieut.-Col. A. H. Bell. 23RD AND 30TH REINFORCEMENTS.

The 23rd and 30th Battalions, which are not in the division were drafted as reinforcements to the 1st Division several months ago, and have already appeared frequently in the casualty lists.

AND THE SUN SHONE Black clouds emitting chilly rain squalls have been drifting lower, by down from the north. But as the cavalcade centres over the green sward in front of the massed battalions, the sun bursts forth in full splendor. General salutes! Up come a forest of bayonets. Flashing in the rays for a few seconds, then turning bluish grey as dark clouds again obscure the sun. Drum and trumpet render Canada's national anthem. "The Maple Leaf's" stirring bars reverberate among the ancient oaks. Next comes "O Canada." Meanwhile the Royal reviewer and his train have trod the length of the line and back. "God Save the King" blare the bands and like one man all come to attention. Major-General Turner, one of the most modest and efficient men in the Canadian forces sits on horseback at the head of his army, stiff at the salute. Facing him, where this Royal standard floats, the Monarch returns the greeting.

CHEERS FOR THE KING Three cheers for the King! Twenty thousand voices blend in a deep roar and service caps are waved aloft. Regimental discipline has prevented any outburst hitherto. Hurray! hurrah! hurrah! The King rides forward to meet General Turner and tell him what a magnificent body of men he is leading. More strength to his arm. Then away canter his Majesty and staff once more, crossing the road to inspect members of the Army.

CAVILING GRADUALLY CEASING

Over the Munitions Clause in Respect to Allied Billion Loan.

New York, Sept. 21.—Negotiations toward the establishment of a credit loan of from $600,000,000 to $800,000,000 to Great Britain and France, moved smoothly today, it was said, with virtual elimination of the matter of providing a method of paying for munitions and with the reported determination of both sides not to tie up the whole sum at one time in New York.

Substitution of the troublesome question of providing a way for paying for munitions of war has not simply postponed a decision on this point, in the opinion of all American financiers. The Anglo-French commission as reflected by its cables, but will result in its gradual disappearance.

These bankers have assumed that the big credit would undoubtedly not be intended to cover every dollar's worth of exports, but that Great Britain and France would continue to remit gold to America and also sell American securities in this market. These methods, it was thought could amply provide a way of taking the munitions question out of negotiations. The matter out of the American associates view it was to stabilize exchange. This could be done by

ROYALTY REVIEWS CANUCKS

Douglas Robertson Sends Description of the Last Review.

(By Douglas Robertson) Shorncliffe, Sept. 20.—"Here comes the King!" Far up the road a cavalcade has just appeared. Nearer and nearer they advance. In at the gateway they swing and at their head rides George the Fifth, on a beautiful coal-black charger. At the King's right hand bestriding a great white war horse, gallops Kitchener. After these follows a splendid staff in be-ribboned khaki, including a naval captain, evidently more at home on his quarter-deck than in the saddle, and a frock-coated top-hatted civilian gentleman-in-waiting, who truth to tell, suggests the leader of a Toronto Twelfth of July parade.

Mid an amphitheatre of green hills and with a background of noble oak trees more than twenty thousand of Canada's soldiery are drawn up for inspection. The broad acres of Sir Arthur Markham's estate make a noble setting for the scene. It is just on eleven o'clock.

U. S. MAY ASK RECALL OF VON NUBER

ALEXANDER NUBER

Count von Bernstorff's action in intrusting a communication to the Berlin Foreign Office to James F. Archibald, an American, for delivery has been taken under consideration by the State Department. The department also has the assembling of evidence relating to the activities of Alexander von Nuber, Austro-Hungarian Consul General at New York city. Robert Lansing, the secretary of State, said that the American government views the sending of any communication in the manner employed by Dr. Constantin Theodor Dumba, the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador, as an abuse of an American passport.

MEETING TO-NIGHT REGARDING THE RECRUITING DEPOT

Committee Headed by the Mayor Meets in the Y.M.C.A. To-night.

In connection with the establishment of a Recruiting Depot in Brantford for city and county, the sub-committee composed of Mayor Spence, W. S. Brewster, J. H. Ham, R. Scarle and W. N. Andrews have been busy drafting an organization representative of all classes and callings. They have devoted a great deal of care to the work and a meeting of those notified will take place to-night at 8 o'clock in the Y.M.C.A. No doubt there will be a very large attendance, one worthy of the splendid object which the gathering has in view.

MET FATAL MISHAP WHILE SHOOTING Son of a Former Brantfordite is Killed at Slocan City.

The many Brantford friends of Capt. Curtis, formerly of this city, will be sincerely sorry to hear of a fatal mishap which befell his eldest son. The Daily News of Nelson, B.C., gives these particulars of the sad occurrence. "As the result of the accidental discharge of a single-barreled shotgun in the hands of a 15-year-old lad which he received in the abdomen on Saturday afternoon Herbert, the 14-year-old son of H. B. Curtis of Slocan City, died at 4:30 o'clock on Sunday morning.

PERCING RUSSIAN FRONTAGE

Task is Given to Leopold of Bavaria—A Perilous Position.

London, Sept. 21.—Dealing with the Russian retreat from Vilna the Petrograd correspondent of The Times says the most dramatic development of the entire German plan is the task given Prince Leopold of Bavaria, who has been called upon to pierce the Russian centre at Slonim, where Russian rearguards are making a stand and where the fiercest pressure is being exerted.

Fortunately for the Russians, says the correspondent, they have been able to check the enemy's advance beyond the shore of the river, but in spite of all the gallantry they are displaying their line of retreat is daily narrowing. The interval between the enemy's columns and the Polish marshes gradually is growing smaller and we must not blind ourselves to the fact that this greatly complicates the task of the general staff in connection with the retreat. It probably explains the slowness of the Russian movements.

On the other hand it is equally evident that the Germans are unable to push forward their advantage in the most profitable manner which doubtless is due to the immense difficulties they are encountering in provisioning their respective armies. According to the latest news from Dvinsk, the enemy apparently has captured some of our positions but has achieved no decisive result.

General Ivanoff apparently has adopted the present course in suspending the advance on the Sereth in view of the enemy's enormous numerical superiority produced by reinforcements from the operations of Field Marshal von Mackensen's widely scattered army. Incidentally the Russian success at Kolkiis is important as indicating the defeat of the enemy's attempt to gain possession of Sarry and the railway which would have enabled Von Mackenson to link up his various armies.

SIR I. HAMILTON SENDS THRILLING DESPATCH HOME

Summer of Hard and Desperate Fighting Vividly Described.

London, Sept. 21.—How the British and French through the summer kept at grips with the Turks in Gallipoli, with terrible losses on both sides in the arid, congested area, where the glare of a few yards of trenches measured the tide of battle, and the dead lay so thick that a temporary armistice was imperative, is related by General Sir Ian Hamilton, commander of the British forces, in a despatch to Lord Kitchener made public in London last evening.

Covering the fighting in the Dardanelles from May 5 to July 1, the account sheds a light on the general military situation, being mainly noteworthy as a soldier's description of what the contenders endured. Indirectly it pays a tribute to the gallantry and fighting qualities of the Turks.

Going back to May 5, soon after the allies obtained their first footing on the peninsula, General Hamilton relates how the commanders, hard pressed for reinforcements, found it necessary to mix the French and British troops "to an extent even of the French on our right having a British battalion holding their own most extreme point."

THREE DAYS' BATTLING Following then three days of terrible fighting, with Krithia as the objective. "The steady advance of the British," says the General, "could be followed by the sparkle of bayonets, until the long lines entered the smoke-clouds. The French at first made no move; then, their drums beating and bugles sounding the charge, they suddenly darted forward in a stream of skirmishers, which seemed for a moment to cover the whole southern face of the ridge of Kereves Dere."

Against these the Turkish gunners turned their heaviest pieces, and, as the leading troops stormed the first Turkish redoubt, in black bursts, explosive shells blotted out both assaults and assailed.

MAJ. BALLACHEY IS RECIPIENT OF A FINE ADDRESS

Gallant Soldier is Honored by His Colleagues of Board.

After the 38th Dufferin Rifles had completed their drill last evening the members of the Board of Education met in an officer's room at the Armories for the purpose of making a presentation to Major Ballachey. A beautiful illuminated address was read and presented to him, after Chairman Coulbeck's opening remarks, by Mr. W. Norman Andrews, and a purse of gold presented by Capt. Cutcliffe.

Major Ballachey replied that he was grateful to the Board for this mark of esteem. During his term of eight years as a member of the board, he had tried to do his duty and he was loath to leave his old fellow members. However, the call to duty had come to him, and so he was now under Colonel Genet at Niagara. He hoped that the improvement in the dental clinic for which he had fought so hard, would be continued, and that the board would see fit to employ two male teachers on the staff of each Public school. These should be many men, so that the boys quickly growing into young manhood should be taught to lead good examples.

Then each member of the board in turn spoke a few appropriate words about the excellent character and work of their departing fellow member. He had made himself prominent as a straightforward and honorable gentleman ever since his boyhood days and the city was losing a valuable man. In school matters, he always knew what was right and would fight for the good of the board and school children, no matter what were the odds against him. Through his strong and determined will, the schools and children had received many things which contributed toward their welfare. In military circles in the city, he had also been a strong and enthusiastic worker. He had proved that he had the right stuff in him when the call to duty came, and sacrificing everything dear to him, he had answered it. In so doing, he set a better example for the young manhood of Brantford to follow than he could do by any number of brilliant deeds on the school board.

After every gentleman had expressed his regret at the departure of the Major, a pleasant, informal time was spent.

GERMANS APPOINTED MAJOR

RUSSIANS HELD TOO LONG, HE THINKS TO-DAY

For Vilna Before It Fell Into Their Hands.

Times Correspondent Says Grand Duke's Strategy Should be Followed.

Berlin, Sept. 21.—via London, September 21.—The appointment of Mayor Bohi of Tilsit as mayor of Vilna, has been announced. This announcement following so quickly on the capture of Vilna is regarded here as showing the certainty with which the Germans counted on the taking of Vilna and the German progress according to the schedule of Field Marshal Von Hindenburg's campaign.

Count von Reventlow, the naval expert of The Tages Zeitung, in an article to-day on the comparative strength of the British and German fleets says in part: "No one cognizant of the circumstances doubted an instant at the beginning of the war or before that it would be impossible to dispute with success British mastery of the ocean. If the building program of the German fleet has been further advanced at the beginning of the war, and instead of a slackening in the building in consequence of Viscount Haldane's negotiations, the buildings had been accelerated and if it had been possible to continue this acceleration for a series of years the situation unquestionably would have been better. But the British may thank their supremacy not alone because of their great numerical superiority but because of their geographical position."

The British, Count Reventlow says, has a base a long line of coast with many harbors and supporting points against which the Germans have only one point in the restricted Helgoland triangle and the German fleet therefore will always be in a position of

MUNITIONS INCREASE SIX-FOLD

So Informs Pierre Bark, the Russian Finance Minister

Paris, Sept. 21.—The mission of Pierre Bark, finance minister of Russia, who is now in Paris to confer with Minister of Finance Ribot and later will go to England to consult Reginald McKenna, chancellor of the exchequer, is to study financial questions, notably that of 'change, he told newspaper correspondents last night.

"The stability of the franc and pound, M. Bark declared, are as important to the allies as that of the ruble and Franco-British mission to America marks a great step. The solidarity of the allies thus able to demonstrate to the whole world and the intrigues of Germanophiles in New York proves the far-reaching bearing of these negotiations. It is to be hoped the bonds of sympathy and solidarity between the allies' government will be extended to the great banks of the nations. We have seen the fruitful results of the convention between the banks of France and Russia last winter to liquidate outstanding accounts with regard to Russia.

"We are doing everything we can to encourage export trade, but under the present circumstances of our country there is great difficulty in sending out its principal riches—cereals and naphtha. This is not less important than to facilitate the flow of capital to the treasury coffers."

"We lend a willing ear to suggestions reaching us from the United States. Americans thoroughly grasped the fact the finest prospect in the world is the falling in Russia in view of the easy successes obtained there by Germans in the financial field. Therefore the Russian Government is fully prepared to welcome and assist American initiative in this direction.

"Concerning munitions it suffices for me to say that in the past semester the output has increased six-fold. To remedy the falling in the number of munitions workers, the government has given formal orders that all labor requirements by mines and factories working for the nations defense shall be placed at their disposal immediately."

HESTER, AND A LEGACY

He had stopped and was waiting for her to say whatever it was she wanted to say. She could tell that, though she had not the courage to raise her eyes from the ground. A painful silence ensued, which she felt she could not break, as she stood there, to her dismay, she felt two big tears overflow her eyes and run down her pale cheeks.

"I wanted to tell you," she began brokenly, "how very unhappy I am about this dreadful will. I had no idea—"

A sob put an end to this sentence too, and the tears streamed down her cheeks. He made not the smallest reply, but stood waiting for whatever she might be coming.

"I want you to believe that I knew nothing about it," she added at last, raising her tear-laden eyes to his. "Oh you cannot think so badly of me as to suppose—"

Again she broke off, and this time, without waiting for anything further he turned on his heel and left her without ceremony, without a word. A moment afterwards she heard a door bang, and realized that he had refused to listen to her explanations, and treated her with such scant courtesy that nothing short of absolute dislike could have prompted such behaviour. This is what she told herself and the agony of it was worse than anything that had gone before.

That same afternoon Lord Lymouth chanced to come across Doctor Turner in the village. For a few minutes they walked up and down in an unfrequented by-path.

"There is one thing I wanted to ask you," said Lord Lymouth. "Were you perfectly satisfied as to the cause of your mother's death by a natural one? Were you entirely in agreement with the other doctors about it?"

"There was certainly conclusive evidence of disease of the heart," replied Doctor Turner.

"Quite sufficient to account for death?"

"Quite sufficient."

They paced the sunny path a while in silence, Lord Lymouth with his eyes on the ground. Then he spoke again.

"Would it have been possible that a narcotic could have hastened her death in any way?"

"There was no evidence of a narcotic having been taken," Dr. Turner turned and looked at Lord Lymouth. "I hope, my lord, you have no suspicions—no doubts as to—as to—"

"Oh, none whatever," Lord Lymouth replied hastily. "I merely wished to understand the case. You have no suspicion yourself, I presume?"

"No; as I said before, the actual disease of the heart was quite enough to account for her ladyship's death."

Lord Lymouth turned the subject and soon after parted from him and rode slowly home—a dark, brooding cloud—on his brow.

That afternoon he took it into his head to examine those of the servants who had been chiefly connected with the circumstances preceding his mother's death.

Accordingly he took possession of the library and called in the servants one by one. The first who was interviewed were Mathews and Mrs. Williams—old, respectable family servants who could tell Lord Lymouth very little with which he was not already acquainted and nothing of importance.

Fanny Payne, Lady Lymouth's maid, next entered the room, but she was in such a state of abject terror that she was almost incapable of answering his questions, and he dismissed her hastily a few moments later when she suddenly burst into tears.

She was a young girl and rather pretty, and perhaps in consequence of these two facts he did not put a harsh construction on her foolish fright of him.

Mrs. Vavasour's maid, Kate, was a very different sort of person—a bright, dark-eyed, pert girl, who gave her information without hesitation. She had met Fanny on the stairs on the morning of the 28th, she said, looking like a ghost, with her face as white as a sheet, and she had clutched hold of her arm and told her that her ladyship looked very strange and wouldn't move. She had got a cup of coffee in her hand and was spilling it all down her dress. She had told the girl to come back with her and see what was the matter, but she had said she did not dare, and so she went up alone. She found a ladyship lying apparently dead. She took hold of her arm and shook her, but without the slightest effect. She then called Miss Phillips, who slept in the adjoining room. She came at once in her dressing gown, looked at Lady Lymouth, and said at once that she was dead. Then she rang the bell and the whole house was aroused.

Lord Lymouth hesitated a moment then he said, rather evading than seeking the girl's eyes—

"Did Miss Phillips appear upset—show much agitation?"

"I really can't say, my lord, I was so upset myself that I hardly noticed her. She gave her orders very quiet and decided, as far as I remember. But the night before she was not at all like herself."

"The night before?" he repeated, looking up with a sudden startled expression in his eyes. "What do you mean? When did you see her?"

"It must have been past twelve at night, my lord, and my mistress, Mrs. Vavasour sent me to Miss Phillips to get some croosote for her toothache, which was very bad, and—"

"Why did she send you to Miss Phillips?"

"Because the medicine-chest is kept in her ladyship's dressingroom, and Miss Phillips could get at it easier than any one else."

"Well?"

"I went to Miss Phillips's door and tapped twice before she opened it, and then I couldn't help being struck with how she looked. I thought it strange then, and I've thought it strange ever since, for when she came to the door I saw at once as there was something up—her eyes were shining most brilliant, and her hair was rough, and her cheeks quite flushed—for she's generally so pale-like—and I think she'd been crying."

"I asked her for the croosote, and she told me to wait there while she got it, and when she gave it to me she said as she hoped my mistress would soon be better, but I thought her voice sounded odd, and her hands were trembling when she gave me the bottle."

"Would she have to go through Lady Lymouth's room to get to the medicine-chest?"

"Yes, my lord, it is kept in the dressing-room."

"Did you go into Miss Phillips's room?"

"No, my lord, I waited on the landing, and she shut the door while she went to get it."

"This was all the information that could be gathered from Mrs. Vavasour's maid, and Lord Lymouth dismissed her. As she was leaving the room he said suddenly—

"Do you know where Miss Phillips is?"

"The first part of the afternoon she was with my mistress, my lord, but I think she's in her own room now."

"Will you tell her that she is quite liberty should be glad to speak with her a few minutes?"

"Yes, my lord," replied the girl, and she went away to give Hester his lordship's message.

CHAPTER XXX.

When Lord Lymouth was left alone, after giving his message to the girl Payne that he desired to have an interview with Hester Phillips, he went over to the fireplace and stood there leaning against the mantelpiece, staring across the room with unseeing eyes, lost in thought.

Ten minutes, a quarter of an hour ticked away on the face of the clock, and still Hester had not made her appearance. He was getting impatient; twice he stretched his hand towards the bell rope, but withdrew it on second thoughts. At last he heard her at the door and, turning his back, pretended to be unaware of her presence.

"Did you want to speak to me?" she asked at the open door.

"If you will be good enough to spare the time," he replied, half turning round, but yet not looking at her.

"Certainly! I am sorry I kept you waiting, but I was detained."

"Don't mention it," he said formally. She closed the door and came forward in the shadowy room.

"Please sit down," he said, indicating a chair, and she sat down obediently and waited for him to speak. Apparently he found it difficult to begin, for several minutes elapsed before he altered his position or broke the silence. He remained standing with his elbow on the mantelpiece and his face turned away from her and in the shadow. She, however, showed no signs of impatience, but sat with her hands in her lap, now and then looking anxiously at the profile of the face that she could not actually see.

"Miss Phillips, you know more about this affair than you choose to say," he said at last suddenly.

"I never mind upon what grounds I may have. Am I right?"

"Indeed?" she said, with self-possession, "you make the assertion very decidedly, but I don't know upon what grounds."

"Never mind upon what grounds I may have. Am I right?"

"If you were right I should not be likely to admit it."

"Why not?"

"I had motives for concealing anything that would do you credit, and I should do it at all costs."

"At all costs? Do you know that you run—or rather ran—a tremendous risk in concealing any facts in connection with my mother's death?"

"That may be."

"And I cannot imagine any reason strong enough—except one—to keep you silent?"

"What is that reason?" she asked, after a little pause.

"He did not reply, and as he stood looking at her from the shadow there was a hazardous anxiety in his face that made him appear ten years older than he had done a few days before."

"Can't you tell me the truth?" he asked with entreaty in his voice. "Is not anything better than concealing things? For my own part I could bear any fate rather than the weight of a secret—a living falsehood!"

She was silent, but her eyes had dropped and her hands were clasped tightly on her lap. He saw that she was agitated, and his own agitation grew stronger.

"Can't you tell me?" he went on.

"Have you no reasons for thinking that perhaps the doctors were mistaken in their verdict and that the death was not entirely natural?"

"I am only too thankful to believe what the doctors said—that she died from disease of the heart," she replied in a low voice.

No Drugs. Not Medical. No knife. The cause of disease removed by spinal adjustments based on a thorough knowledge of the nervous system. All the cells and tissues of the human body are controlled by the brain, which generates a nerve stimulus or electricity which passes from the brain through the nerves to the organs and tissue cells of the body. The nerves pass from the brain through the spinal cord and branch off in pairs, passing through the small opening between the vertebrae where a slight subluxation of one or more of these vertebrae causes pressure on the nerve and restricts the flow of nerve stimulus, thus causing a diseased condition of the part controlled by the impinged nerve. Subluxation may be caused by a fall, wrench, or strain of exposure to drafts. Thus by adjusting the subluxation and freeing the nerve the effected part is restored. We have had years of experience with diseases and ailments that other methods of healing have failed to cure, and in a short time we have restored them to health by spinal adjustments. We can give reliable references in the city. We also give electric vibrations.

BRANT THEATRE.

An exceedingly fine bill is being shown at the Brant Theatre this week. Jessie Keller and Tommy Weir offered an attractive singing act after which Miss Keller presented her class attraction, "Venus on Wheels." There have been many fine acts of this nature played here, but none of them can compare to this skillful and beautiful exhibition.

Fields, Winhill and Green call themselves the three nuts, but they are born comedians, and their act is full of original and clean comedy.

An extra film is shown in "The Greyhound." This is a five-act drama with a powerful plot. This is the first of a series of the greatest five-reel dramas produced, each of which the management will personally guarantee and recommend. The next feature picture will be "The Ordeal," a recruiting war drama, to be shown on Monday.

The Situation.

Matters still remain in the balance with regard to the successful evasion or otherwise by the Russians in connection with the latest enveloping movement which the Kaiserites are now attempting since the evacuation of Vilna.

There should be a large turnout at the meeting in the Y.M.C.A. to-night in connection with the fact that Brantford has been made a recruiting depot. This war is every bit as much the concern of every resident of Canada as it is of those of Great Britain.

They had a fierce time at a Toronto City Council meeting in connection with a reorganization of the fire department, and "jobbery and trickery" were openly charged.

A Swiss statistician says that Germany now has four million men on the fighting line, with a million and a quarter in reserve to make good the losses and half a million young soldiers in training of the class of 1916.

The following despatch comes from Guelph: "In the annual initiation festivities at the Ontario Agricultural College this afternoon the freshmen turned the tables on the sophomores. Stal-eggs and decayed tomatoes were used in the attack, and in the resulting rush two of the students received broken ribs and another had his jaw broken.

This sort of blackguard rowdism should be stopped in connection with all colleges. Offenders ought to be hauled before the police court on charges of aggravated assault, just as anybody else would be.

The loan in the States. A despatch says that discussion over the inclusion of war munitions with reference to the war loan is gradually becoming eliminated.

Leading bankers and financiers across the border fully realize that the loan, while helpful to the Allies, has also a direct bearing upon the welfare of the commerce and the industries of the United States.

King Ferdinand. Bulgaria has still further complicated the already tense Balkan situation by assuming control in Macedonia.

Another Spy to be Shot. London, Sept. 21.—Two more spies have been convicted by court martial. Official announcement was made today that a man and a woman of German origin, whose names were not given, were found guilty yesterday of attempting to communicate information concerning the fleet.

his first wife, Princess Marie Louise of Parma, he agreed that their children should be brought up in the faith of Rome. But when all else had failed to placate Russia, he had his son Boris converted to the Orthodox Church, in spite of the scorn of the world, and the flight of his wife, with his younger son, to escape the outrage to her faith.

This is the individual upon whom the Kaiser and his agents have exercised their blandishments, and to whom they have made their promises, with results now commencing to unfold.

Notes and Comments.

It is quite correct to speak of the financial commission now in New York as on the loan trail.

DUFFERIN MEDAL

The Commanding Officer then took occasion in presenting the Dufferin Medal to pay a tribute of some worth to the recipient Captain Emmons, whose name will now go on record on the Roll of Honor as winner for 1915.

The ladies took it in turns to deliver the prizes. Mrs. G. Watt and Mrs. M. A. Colquhoun, Mrs. Dunlop and Mrs. Joyce.

CHEERS FOR "OLD BOYS"

A pleasant feature of the evening was when Captain Cutcliffe called on the battalion to give three cheers for the Colonel and his regiment now on active service—with hats overhead in their right hands the whole unit gave three cheers and a tiger.

CAPT. C. E. JEAKINS SPEAKS

Called on to address the ranks the Rector of St. Judes was in his usual vein of patriotism and fine sentiment. "It was a proud thing to be a Canadian before the war, but it was a vastly prouder thing to be a Canadian after the dark days of Festubert and St. Julien and crawling to-day the name Canadian and soldier, we have one of the noblest of designations, any man can bear."

He hoped the Dufferin Rifles would still respond as in the past and that an ever increasing stream of young men would come forward to help keep the unit at strength and be ready if ever for home service to bear a part.

Every soldier under Napoleon carried a Field Marshal's baton and it was demonstrated that every soldier in the C. E. F. had if he used his ability an opportunity to gain distinction. There is a need of strong, willing hearts for the Empire's sake, and all who can respond," he concluded.

Then after prize-giving being over the parade was dismissed after the playing of the National Anthem, and the evening was at an end.

PARADE STATEMENT

The parade statement of the 38th Dufferin Rifles was as follows:—A, 51; B, 50; C, 48; D, 48; Brass, 28; Bugle, 21; Signal, 13; stretcher, 14; S. S. 3; Staff 2. Total 297.

PHYSICAL DRILL

"C" Platoon, one of the largest in the battalion, had an innovation last night in commencing under one of its subalterns, physical drill.

The request that such be held on another night of this week is under consideration and those members of the platoon who would care to organize a class should hand in their names to platoon commanders next Monday night and if sufficient number is enrolled a start could be made next week.

establishing a credit covering food stuffs and cotton alone, hardly reckoning manufactured articles or munitions. With exchange stabilized, it was thought there would be little difficulty in paying for munitions.

Proposals before the commission also were said to provide for installment payments by banks guaranteeing the big loan and the deposit in the subscribing banks of all subscriptions, without interest, until such time as they are needed.

Another feature said to have come up for discussion was whether the short term bonds, of which the loan is to be issued could not be held to include the privilege of conversion to long term (fifty or one hundred years) bonds which would pay four and one-half per cent interest. There, it was thought would be a favor-ite investment in the bond markets, inasmuch as they would be virtually a first mortgage on the British Empire and France.

Met Fatal

Young Curtis and a party of boys were out shooting about 2 1/2 miles from Slocan City on Saturday afternoon when the gun carried by William Greenwood, 15 years of age, was accidentally discharged, the full charge striking Curtis, who was standing about five feet away, in the abdomen.

The injured boy was carried to his home and Dr. W. C. Rose of Nelson and Dr. J. E. Brouse of New Denver were summoned and worked over the boy in an attempt to save his life. The wound inflicted by the gunshot, however, proved fatal and at 4:30 o'clock on Sunday morning he died.

An inquest was held yesterday morning and evidence was taken which showed that although Greenwood, in whose possession the gun was when the accident occurred, was only 15 years of age, he was the possessor of a gun license. The jury consisted of P. Swan, foreman; William Clough, James Rae, J. Pinchbeck, W. A. Hicks and James Holt.

HESTER, AND A LEGACY

"A queer thing," he said to himself. "Who would have supposed that a girl in that position would have so strongly objected to becoming the owner of a fine old family property. She is sensitive to the point—evidently a lady in all her instincts. And, after all, it is a disgraceful will, as I told her ladyship as plainly as I dared when she had drawn up. She should have pressed it more strongly if I had not felt sure that she would annul it when her anger had blown over, as she had done once or twice before. But her strange sudden death prevented that, and it must remain as it stands, unjust as it is, bequeathing everything to a comparative stranger. Of course, if I should turn out that there is a doubt as to the cause of her ladyship's death, it would be very unpleasant for both the heiress and the disinherited son, but I sincerely hope it will prove otherwise."

"If I thought about it for a hundred years I should never feel any different," she declared hotly. "I have made up my mind thoroughly; nothing would ever induce me to change it."
"It is a very serious thing to do," he said.
"The only question is how it is to be done," she answered impatiently.
"You do not wish to accept any, not even a small share out of the whole property left you?"
"Not a particle or a penny!" she replied.
"Then you will have to make a deed of gift to the person you wish should take possession."
"Can I make it now?"
She took up a pen as she spoke and seemed about to write the necessary deed on the spot. Mr. Broadbent checked her haste.
"To whom shall you make out the deed?"
"To Lord Lynnmouth of course! He is the heir!"
"Everything?"
"This is a strange proceeding," said the lawyer, "but we must not be too hasty. You are to speak to the lordship first and hear what he says."
"It will make no difference what he says."
"Still, I should prefer to speak to him about it. Have you any objection?"
"None whatever. It can make no difference."
She threw down the pen and left the room, and Mr. Broadbent, collecting his papers, followed her.
Later in the day he tapped at the door of the morning-room and asked permission to enter. He found Hester alone, seated at the table, writing letters. She looked up as he entered and laid down her pen with an air of eager questioning in her face.
"I have a deed of gift to make for you, and I asked him if he had given himself time to think the matter over, and he replied almost in the very words you used yourself, 'I could never come to any other decision.'"
"What am I to do, then?" asked Hester. "I do not choose to inherit Lord Lynnmouth's estate."
"The lawyer smiled.
"You are a lady—you are both lady and heiress. Think the matter over again; there is no hurry. There are ways; there is a way that perhaps might clear up the difficulty satisfactorily, but it lies out of my province altogether."
"What is that?" inquired Hester innocently.
"Mr. Broadbent hummed and hawed a little and shuffled the papers in his hand.
"A combination might solve the difficulty. The natural heir and the lawful heiress might possibly agree to some arrangement, but it is under certain conditions, of course—under certain conditions."
"Still Hester did not understand him, and she asked "How?" as innocently as before.
"It is obvious," replied Mr. Broadbent, "that a marriage between the two parties would—"
He ended with an embarrassed cough, as Hester observed considerably looking away from her embarrassed face. "If you will not accept all, you would be wise to accept a part. I can understand your feeling of delicacy with regard to Lord Lynnmouth, and it certainly does you great credit; but a part, a small part—say, an annuity of one hundred or two hundred pounds a year, and I should advise you to dismiss your scruples and accept gratefully, at any rate, a part of what has been left you in recognition of your many services to her ladyship."
"It was all a mistake," said Hester wearily, dismissing the lawyer's fine speech without giving it a second thought, "and I have already told you that I will never touch a penny of it. Nothing you or any one else can say will ever make me change my mind."
There was nothing more to be done, and yet Mr. Broadbent found the matter an awkward one. Neither Lord Lynnmouth, the ladyship's only son, nor natural heir, nor Miss Phillips, her companion and legal heiress, would accept the property. Both had made their refusals with such absolute decision that there appeared little likelihood of either altering his or her mind.

On the contrary, she felt like an interloper, a designing and intriguing creature in some ways as bad as a thief, and believed that she was regarded in that light by the family whose rights had been set aside for her sake. Lady Monfreeth took no notice of her whatever; Mrs. Vavasour made use of her as in the old days, and Lord Lynnmouth avoided her as carefully as she avoided him.

She decided that this state of things should not last longer than she could help. She meant to leave the Chase at the earliest possible opportunity, but during the first few days after Lady Lynnmouth's death she had been too fully occupied to have time for the consideration of her own affairs. Now that the funeral was over however, she set to work to make her arrangements without delay but advertisements for a new situation in the papers, and wrote to her mother telling her she was coming home for a few days at the establishment at the Chase was in different hands and of course her duties there were ended. She meant to get a new post as soon as possible. Lady Lynnmouth's death had deprived her of her livelihood for the time being, and in spite of the strange will that had been made in her favour she since she felt she could accept nothing of what had been left her, was worse off than she had been before, and had to begin all over again among strangers. It was a strange fate, a strange chance, but she seemed to see her way clear before her in spite of all the trials and difficulties that surrounded her, and never once did she waver in her determination to leave the Chase for ever.

Lord Lynnmouth's attitude towards her caused her more suffering than anything else perhaps. In the few chance times that she had met him on the staircase or at meals she had looked at him eagerly for some little sign of friendliness, or forgiveness, but none had been given her. If he spoke to her at all—and he only did so when necessity compelled him—his words were brief and to the point, and his manner was cold and constrained. She could not tell whether this was to be accounted for by her merciless refusal of him the summer before, or whether it was the newer cause of complaint he had against her—the unjust will. Perhaps he regarded her as a designing and intriguing woman, in spite of her persistent refusal to inherit his property; perhaps it was a sense of outrage or an inveterate dislike. She had heard of love sometimes turning to hatred when not returned, and he might now hate her; indeed, she was sure he did, and she felt that her heart and caused her many unavailing tears.

On the day after the reading of the will she chanced to meet him in one of the long galleries, and as he was about to pass her she stopped him by uttering his name.
"Lord Lynnmouth!" she exclaimed. "I—"
And then her voice grew unmanageable. She made one or two efforts to finish the sentence, but the words would not come, and she could only stand trembling before him.
