Failure of a Pittsburg Bank. PITTSBURG, May 21 .- The Pennsylvania bank suspended to-day in consequence of a bank has been doing the largest business in Pittsburg. President Riddle got up from a sick bed this morning, having been prostrated by hemorrhages, and is now at the bank. He says the run is due to unfounded reports circulated by interested and inalicious persons. Deposits have been decreased between from $500,000 to $700 000.

President Riddle to night in an official statement says: The board of directors in an examination of the affairs of the bank

THURSDAY MORNING, MAY 22, 1884 PRICE ONE CENT MACDONNELL AND LASH.

AROUND THE CITY HALL.

There was a good deal of talk among the THREE OF THE STANDING COMlawyers yesterday as to what the question was that John Greenfield Macdonnell wished to ask Sir Richard Cartwright at the meeting on Tuesday night, but which he was prevented doing by reason of the hissing of the audience. According to what the lawyers said yesterday, the point that Mr. Macdonnell wished to make a was one against Mr. Lash, a partner in Mr. Blake's firm. It will be remembered that Mr. Lash was depaty-minister of justice, and, while he held that office, she contract for section B had to be passed by him. One of the clauses in the contract (the regular printed form) called for certain conditions. The contractors objected thereto, and with the consent of Mr. Lash it was removed on the ground, as he said, that the conditions therein provided were equally provided in other clauses, and therefore this one was unnecessary. So amended the contract was signed. The work was completed, and when the settlement came to be made it was found that the contractors and to emade it was found that the contractors are cepted a retainer from the contractors and to emade it was found that the contractors and the contractor was greated that the contractors and been struck out, the government could not claim the protection which it was supposed to give them. The arbitrators took this is view of it, and awarded the contractors as large amount of more. What Mr. Macedonnell contends is that Mr. Lash should be a struck out, the government could not have taken a brief in a case on which he had already passed his opinion, and in of which he was taking a view contrary to what he had advised when deputy minister of justice.

The annual meeting of the methodist book committee was also held yesterday. The report of the business done by the book room, both in the sales of books and publication business was satisfactory. The Christian hardian and other periodicals have been prosperous. A grant of $2000 was given to the superannuation fund from the profits of the business. The increase of business has rendered the enlargement of the premises necessary. In the absence of Rev. Dr. Rice, Rev. The committee were of the opinion that Inglis & Hunter had acted strangely and decided to return the communication along with another of a similar character from the Holley company. The committee then adjourned. Wm. James Staley, aged 17, who stole $350 from Robert Hill, a Ballantrae storekeeper, was sentenced to four months in keeper, was sentenced to four months in the central prison yesterday by Judge Boyd. Hugh Littleton, for fraudulent ap-propriation of his employer's goods, was fined $20. Arthur Owen, aged 19, has been robbing the till of W. Thompson, milk dealer of Queen street west, with whom he boarded for a long time past. He was en-trapped by stealing thirty cents in marked coin. Owing to his previous good record Judge Boyd let him off with 30 days in jail.

THURSDAY MORNING, MAY 22, 1884. The Pumping Engine. Another week has passed and yet definite action has been taken by the waterworks committee in the purchase of an engine. We are surprised at this delay, and would draw the attention of the committee to the report made to the board of underwriters as to what would happen in case of accident to the present engine. We understand that the city engineer visited Cleveland in company with Mr. Venables to inspect an engine which Mr. Venables is much interested in. Of course, as he has inspected this particular engine he will and cause more expense. This latter we of some members of the committee who are interested only in that which is for the city's good. These men should stop their prograstination. They should tell corporation employes to lattend to their duties, and recommend an engine to the council. We are informed that there is at least one man who has done little work for nearly two years since he got a seat at the council board. He is very outspoken against he were seen less with contractors and, by his actions rather than words, proclaim his in saying that we believe an attempt is being made to foist an inferior engine on our city. The Prospects of Fall Wheat.

Reports received from over six hundred correspondents of the bureau of industries look forward to. show that the condition of fall wheat in the province is much more satisfactory than it was in May of last year. Yet it is not uniformly good, and there are some districts in which the outlook is somewhat gloomy. This is noticeably the case in the extreme ends of the province-westward of the meridian of London, and eastward of the meridian of Kingston. For the large middle district the accounts are on the whole favorable, and the weather of this month has caused a marked improvement turns of the acreage under crop have not yet been received, but as far as they have been obtained they indicate an area twenty per cent less than last year.

Highland Landlords. Naturally enough Scotch landlords not like the rousing reception given to Henry George in the "land of the mountain and the flood," but they have themselves to blame for it. A deputation from the Highland land law reform association of London has waited upon the lord advocate complaining that the crofters who had paid their rent, adhered to the terms of the covenants, and whose only offence was that they had given evidence before the association from which the deputation came, had been evicted and served with eviction summonses in very large numbers. This had even been done in cases of witnesses to whom a special indemnity against such a result had been given, but the deputation confended that the mere fact of a man having given evidence should suffice to secure his protection. If the people found themselves subjected to oppression and their right of legitimate political organiza- of rival electric light companies to illumin- evening, entitled An Unwholesome Inflution interfered with, they would be likely ate the streets of the city for three months ence, is so strongly condemnatory of the to be influenced by the counsels of those as a test of the relative merits of the lights.

who advocated stronger measures, and his would be followed by the most serious results. An association for obtaining, by nook or by crook, the confiscation of the land had already 150,000 members, and during the past month the influence of the and law reform association, who counselled moderate measures, had considerably waned. The deputation advised that the any removals from holdings until the whole questions had been dealt with. The lord advocate promised to inquire into the individual cases which the deputation had aid before him. It is surely in the greed, and spite, and folly of landlords like thos eferred to that the strength of such agitators as Henry George lies.

Inspector of Model schools.

Mr. J. J. Tilley, for many years public school inspector of Durham, has been appointed inspector of model schools for the rovince. Mr. Tilley was one of those who took an active part in devising the model school system of Ontario, in connection with the present minister of education. He was a member of the central committee for five years and examiner for the normal schools for a long period. With this extensive experience the new inspector enters upon his duties with every opportunity of greatly increasing the utility of the model schools of Ontario.

A cable despatch from London says that feel, for appearance sake at least, that he William H. In support of this theory they say that he received a deluge of cablegrams on the arrival of the Baltic at Queenstown, and that he smiled very significantly as he leisurely read the despatches. Enforcing Contracts

To the Editor of The World.

SIR: The expediency of providing for the report on a bill to protect shareholders in the division court, to which you refer in collection of small debts by the machinery of joint stock companies, said that he did not your article of to-day, is but part of the much larger question, how far it is expedient to provide for the enforced fulfilment of any contracts between private parties. There are undoubtedly strong seasons for abolishing the division court, in other words, for withdrawing from the creditor the power to invoke the aid of the law to enable him to collect small debts; but why stop there? The same reasoning which applies to the enforced fulfilment of that the year 1884, coming in with com-mercial dulness and disaster, is to go out with business booming and colors flying? to the enforced fulfilment of contracts Already this view of the probabilities is which may be caused on appeal to the privy council.

Late advices from London state that at the last meeting of the directors of the Canada Northwest Land converted to the conclusion that some change is necessary in our law of contract, and that the matter is bethe last meeting of the directors of the Canada Northwest Land company the board recommended the reduction of the capital of the company to £5 per share, fully paid up, thereby doing away with the liability of £5 per share uncalled. It would not be surprising were the shares to take a rise when the fact becomes generally known that holders have no more calls to look forward to.

Mr. W. Scarth says the talk of pauper emigration to the Northwest amounts to nothing. The class of people who are settling there have more or less means, and the punishment of criminals are legitimate functions of the courts. Person and property must be protected, and the way to protect them is to bring the heavy hand of the law to bear on the evildoer. Any act of my, neighbor's which deprives me of the control of my property, without my consent, comes under the head of theft, and should be punished as such, not by civil, but by criminal process. But if I entrust my property to my neighbor on certain pleages of his to me, why should the state be forced to come to my aid to secure either its restoration or an equivalent.

There are two very important reasons why it should not, and I merely state them here in the hope that some other person may be able to show cause for the maintenance of our present law of contract in the face of them. In the first place, as any knows, by far the greater part of their time is taken up with litigation under the law of contracts. If the operation of that law were contracts. that law were even considerably restricted by limiting the classes of contracts enforce-able in the courts, we could get along with fewer judges and court officials. We assume in certain cases now, under insol vency laws, to say that a man need not fulfil his contracts with his creditors. Why not extend this principle to other cases of large contracts, and, as you suggest, abolish altogether the enforceability of small ones.

In the second place, I am perfectly satisfied that the operation of the law of con-tracts has an injurious effect on public morality. The man who enters into an obligation is very apt to think that he is morally bound only so far as he is legally bound to discharge it, and we all know how elastic a thing legal obligation, as defined by the courts, often is. Rather than fulfil a contract which he is morally bound to fulfil, a debtor will frequently prefer to take his chances as defendant in a civil suit in the hope of cetting a snap morality. The man who enters into a civil suit, in the hope of getting a snap judgment in his favor or of wearying his creditor by appeals.

If the garnishing process must go, why should any part of the law of contract stay? And if that law must be retained, where shall we draw the line?

That the mania for rapid passages exists entirely in an important number of the traveling public, and not in the steamship owner, I can prove, at least as far as the White Star company is concerned. I had the honor to command in their employment since the commencement of the company in 1870, in all parts of the world, and that I may free myself from the suspicion of prejudice and the natural partiality I may have as an employe of theirs, especially when writing on the defensive, I will quote verbatim from the instructions: "Commanders are enjoined to remember on the canal if the water continues as high "Commanders are enjoined to remember that they must run no risk which might Six: If the food which God has always prepared for man's use was used as He has prepared it, and as He designed it should be used, the teeth would find proper employment, as well material in the blood for their proper nourishment. courses have been suggested for our consideration. Practically, as everybody knows, there is always in the background, men nor nations live by bread alone, nor by mere material considerations; and therefore, though I cannot ignore the fact that there are among us some, and there may be among us more particularly under the pressure of misfortune who may desire to seek that refuge, I can only say that I should regard it as a distinct lowering of our position, as much so as if one of you owning a small farm were to sell it to a richer neighbor and agree to become a tenant of the land which you formerly held and controlled. [Cheers.] Then there is what is a natural and obvious thing—the what is a natural and obvious thing—the possibility of Canada in a speedy period becoming an independent power, and acquiring an independent existence.

[Loud cheers.] That is a matter to be discussed, to be seriously and gravely discussed.

1 will venture to say that if Canada desires it, and when Canada thinks herself fit for that independence and chooses to ask for it, no English statesman will be found in the least degree disposed to place barriers in the way. (Renewed cheers.) But 1 am bound as an honest man to tell you this, that in my judgment and in the judgment of those well entitled to speak, that that time has hardly as yet come. (Renewed cheers.) Canada is not, as I have pointed out, a very homogeneous country. A very considerable, needless weight has been placed upon us; needless impediments have been placed in our way by that mis-called national policy, which, as I have shown, has greatly and grievously exhausted the resources of the dominion.

Although I quarrel with no man who discusses the question, although I do not believe it is just to accuse any man of disloyalty because he does so, yet I point out to you that at the present moment there is probably in many portions of Canada rather a sentiment of loyalty to the province to which men belong, rather a sentiment of loyalty to the British empire, of which these provinces are a part, than, as yet at all events, a sentiment of loyalty to the should give some certain sign or indication of their desire if the change is to be agitated for, have as yet bestowed but little attention upon the matter. [Hear, hear.] Though I say the thing deserves discussion, though it is a thing which there is no reason whatever why we should not seriously consider, I admit, in this case, that there are considerable difficulties in the way.

But ladies and gentlemen there is another plan which has been whispered, and only whispered as yet, which all those men who are not frightened by the magnitude of a proposition, who are not necessarily led to regard a scheme as Utopian because it promises great results, admit to be worthy of mature consideration. I present it to you as a suggestion. It has appeared the promise great results, and to be worth the consideration. I present it to you as a suggestion. It has appeared to me for a very considerable time—I speak as an individual mind and not in any respect as a member of a party—that our confederation, which in some important respects has no doubt been a considerable success [cheers], might be made the stepping stone to a project which would be of much greater magnitude and importance—the project of a confederation of all the English speaking countries in the world. [Loud cheers.] I do not mean to suggest to you the possibility of these countries being combined under one government as we are, but I say this is a fitting time to consider whether such a union might or might not be.

Within a few weeks you are about to

[Cheers.]

There is one point on which I differ from many who have more or less discussed the matter. I entertain no desire to see these nations combined under one sovereign. What I desire is simply to see a union which would remove it possible every risk of hostility between the great branches of the race. [Cheers.] I look to a sort of defensive alliance something like (only better organized) the old Germanic bund which subsequently ripened into the German empire. I know that the amplest powers of self-government must be given to all the points of such combination. There are already many bonds of union. We speak the same language, we enjoy substantially the same laws, we have in many respects similar institutions, we have a common knows, there is always in the background, situated as we are, a small country along side a great one, the possibility, and in the minds of some people the desirable possibility, that we may be absorbed into our great republican neighbor. For myself, I say frankly that to me that has always appeared as an ignominious surrender. [Loud cheers.] As only one form of national suicide. [Renewed cheers.] I say that, however great the people of the United States may be—and I do not desire to diminish their greatness one whit—however excellent their institutions, I think there is enough vitality and strength in Canada to enaure more than the mere merging of our national existence in that of United States. I am not in favor, even if I were better convinced than I am, that it would be for our material advantage of bartering our birthright for a mess of pottage. [Loud cheers.]

What I desire is simply to see a union which would remove if possible every risk of hostility between the great branches of the race. [Cheers.] I look to a sort of defensive alliance something like (only better organized) the old Germanic bund which subsequently ripened into the German empire. I know that the amplest powers of self-government must be given to all the points of such combination. There are larguage, we enjoy substantially the same laws, we have a common literature, and if it were possible to add a few further points, such as a common navy, a common dag, a common consular system, all of which could be done without infringing on the independence of any of the powers, and which would be sufficient for a start, there is enough vitality and strength in Canada to end if it were possible to add a few further points, such as a common lag, a common consular system, all of which would be done without infringing on the independence of any of the powers, and which would be sufficient for a start, there is enough vitality and strength in Canada to end in the same laws, we have a common flag, a common consular system, all of which would be sufficien

In many important respects that is a project which Canada might well enough begin, and which Canadians might set before themselves. Neither of the older reciate the ma itude of a confeder ation of this kind. I see great benefits to the whole world arising from such a union. This would be no confederacy for conquest, no confederacy for taking away the liberties of other people; but where in all the world would you find a nation or a combinsevered the great branches of the English race. [Loud cheers].

It is either of these plans be possible, if it be not possible to carry out such a confederation of Canada. [Cheers]. Still, 1 say, these are subjects to be discussed and thought over, and if the people really feel within themselves that they are fit for the new position, then they havelonly to say so and their wish will be very speedily accomplished. There is another possible course which has also been consideration at your hands—that is the question whether it is or is not possible for us to further confederate the whole British empire. [Loud cheers.] In a short time, in all human probability, we will be stretching out our hands from the other side of the continent to our brethren in New Zealand and Australia—[cheers] and no doubt, and there is no doubt whatever, that much may be said for the project of the confederation of the British empire. At the same time you must remember that our colenics are very widely scattered; you must also remember that the Rivers that much may be said for the project of the confederation of the British empire. At the same time you must remember that our colenics are very widely scattered; you must also remember that the British people themselves, who in this matter, I think, should give some certain sign or indication in the present domain of Canada. There is no forther of the forty-sixth parallel, and included mainly within the present domain of Canada. The province of the forty-sixth parallel, and included mainly within the present domain of Canada. The province of the British people themselves, who in this matter, I think, and the propendance. [Loud cheers]. In a short time, is another possible to carry out such a confederation of the British empire, I think we define not present the confederation of the British empire. At the same time you must remember that our colenia to our breather in the propendance. [Loud cheers]. In a short time, and the propendance. [Loud cheers]. In a short time, and the propendance. [L worthy the attention of every Canadian:

North of Lakes Erie and Ontario and the River St. Lawrence, cast of Lake Huron, south of the forty-sixth parallel, and included mainly within the present dominion of Canada, there is as fair a country as exists on the American continent—nearly as large in area as New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio combined, and equal, if not superior as a whole, to those states in agricultural capacity. It is the natural habitat on this continent of the combing-wool sheep, without a full, cheap and reliable supply of the wool of which species the great worsted manufacturing industry of the country cannot prosper, or we so ould rather say exist. It is the region where grows the finest barley, which the brewing interests of the United States must have. If it ever expects to rival Great Britain in its present annual export of over $11,000,000 worth of malt products. It raises and grazes the finest of cattle, with qualities especially desirable to make good the deterioration of stock in other sections; and its climatic conditions, created by an almost encirelement of the greater lakes, especially fit it to grow men. Such a country is one of the greatest gifts of Providence to the human race; better than bonanzas of silver or rivers whose sands run gold.

The statements made in The World few days ago in regard to matters at the collège have perhaps been a little misleadcollege have perhaps been a little misleading to those interested, and no doubt also to the general public. The chief misunderstanding is in connection with the chair of romance languages. For some time past, D. R. Keys has been lecturing at University college on Italian and J. Squair on French, and the choice of a lecturer or professor lies between these two. Mr. Keys has, we understand, been engaged during the past three or four years in teaching the romance languages, and in studying them abroad; while Mr. Squair has been during the past year lecturing on French at the college. Thus lecturing on French at the college. Thus the matter now rests. As regards the deanery, no doubt but that Mr. Baker will be appointed, especially as he has served his alma mater so well and so faithfully the alma mater so well and so faithfully the last ten years. The classical tutorship seems to be still open to candidates, and there is a possibility that the services of Mr. Dale may be secured, should some additional salary be attached to the position, which at present is not paid as well as it might be. The president of the college seems to think that the classical tutorship should go along with the deanery, although why is not very annavent.
