For Daisie's Sake

CHAPTER XXXII.
 THE SPIDER'S WEB.

She got up, with a corpse-like face, and dragged herself out into the hall, thinking that she would go back to her own room and lie down, she felt so strangely ill; but with her foot on the first step she reeled and fell backward to the floor, crushed by the weight of her soul's despair.

Patrick was just admitting some callers—Mrs. Hill-Dixon and her cousin, Lord Werter—when the sound of the fall drew their attention, and the gentleman rushed to the prostrate form.

He saw her lying there like one dead, his life's love, and with a wild rush of tenderness, lifted the beautiful form in his arms, exclaiming:

"Oh, heavens! what shall I do?"

"Just carry her up to her own room, Dallas. Patrick will lead the way," said Mrs. Hill-Dixon, who had a very practical mind, and saw that Daisie had fainted.

Who could tell what thoughts rushed through his mind as he mounted the stairs with his lovely unconscious burden? The strongest one was a longing to crush her fondly against his breast and fly with her to the uttermost part of the earth, his beautiful love, of whom he had been so cruelly cheated.

He could not bear to lay her down, when the frightened maid came to his assistance, but his cousin reminded him of the proprieties by gently whispering in his ear:

"Go down, now, and wait in the drawing-room for news."

He was loath to obey—he longed to rebel, to cry out fiercely:

"I will not go until she opens her blue eyes and smiles on me, my lost love, of whom I was cheated by cruel lies!"

But at that moment Annette entered and touched his hand warningly, as she exclaimed:

"I am so glad to see you both. But now let us go down and leave Emma to care for Daisie. It is only a simple fainting fit. See, she is already opening her eyes."

It was true; and as they left the room Dallas could not resist the temptation of looking back. Yes, her eyes followed him with a wistful pain that pierced his heart to its center.

CHAPTER XXXIII.
 LOVE THAT WOULD LAST.

A very interesting party were grouped in Royall Sherwood's drawing-room.

First, there was the host, who had insisted on being wheeled into the room when he learned of Lord Werter's call.

"And there was Mrs. Fleming, who had entered with him, looking like a little girl in her jaunty bicycle suit, her fair locks gleaming under a seal-skin cap, her eyes beaming and her cheeks rosy, as she declared that she must go directly, it was really getting too cool to ride the bicycle home, but she really could not resist stopping a minute for a chat with dear Mrs. Hill-Dixon. That lady knew quite well that her titled cousin was the real attraction, but, of course, she was too polite to say so.

Then there was Reed Raymond, who had returned just a moment ago, and was watching Lord Werter devote himself to Annette with a sudden secret heart pang at what might possibly happen. To him, Annette was a queen among women. What if Lord Werter's heart wound should be healed by the glance of those saucy black eyes? What if he won her for his cherished bride?

The man's heart stood still a moment in its agony.

Then pride and despair came to the rescue, giving him:

"Hush! What is that to you? She was yours once, and you could not trust her true heart! You outraged her loving faith. Now she hates you. It is the part of some nobler man to make her happy."

He sighed, and tried not to watch them talking over there in that friendly undertone, nor to wonder what they were saying.

And there was Daisie, who had entered a little while ago very pale and lovely, making light of her sudden attack, and saying it was nothing but a swimming in the head, not a real fainting spell; she had scarcely been unconscious a minute, and she thought perhaps she had stayed out too long on her wheel, et cetera, all very vivaciously to Mrs. Hill-Dixon, but never once meeting the anxious glance of a pair of dark eyes that she felt burning on her face.

She could not meet his look, lest the crimson should fly to her face, for her form thrilled yet with the close pressure of the arms that had borne her so tenderly upstairs while consciousness was returning swiftly enough for her heart to recognize him, even if she had not heard Mrs. Hill-Dixon address him familiarly as Dallas.

Yes, she knew him now for her lost love, her true love, and she longed to cast herself on his broad breast and die there of her mingled joy and despair—joy that he had never been false, but had loved her truly—despair for the bond that held them asunder, the tie that made her Royall Sherwood's wife.

But she must not yield to her longing—she must not let them know the fire that consumed her heart. Her part was silence and patience—patience even at the cost of heartbreak.

What could anything avail now? They were parted forever. Perhaps he could console himself with the little witch Annette, who was smiling so sweetly on him now; and at the thought she, too, felt the arrow of love's jealous pain pierce her heart as it pierced that of Reed Raymond sitting yonder so pale and self-possessed, like a soldier under fire.

Yes, it was a strangely assorted group, and there was an element of tragedy in the very air. All felt it except Mrs. Hill-Dixon, the handsome, middle-aged woman who did not happen to be in the secret.

But they had all been talking for half an hour on careless society subjects quite as if everything was as it seemed on the surface, when suddenly the lady exclaimed:

"My dear Dallas, we must be going."

Instantly a quick tremor of excitement ran through the group.

Dallas was not a common name, and, coupled with his startling likeness to Dallas Bain, carried instant conviction of his identity to all.

Every face wore such a look of dismay that Mrs. Hill-Dixon cried in wonder:

"Why, what is the matter?"

No one heard her, for all were looking at Lord Werter, waiting for his answer.

They saw him give Annette one swift, deprecating look, then he turned to Royall and said:

"I meant to preserve my incognito among you all, but I forgot to caution my cousin not to call me Dallas, so she has betrayed me unwittingly—yes, I am Dallas Bain."

"But what does it all mean? I am in the dark?" cried Mrs. Hill-Dixon. Her cousin explained:

"Last year, when I crossed the sea, I made Mr. Sherwood's acquaintance, and was afterward his guest at Mrs. Fleming's summer home. Just for a whim I kept up a mystery about myself, and it rather amused me to find that my new friends believed me ashamed of my origin, on the principle that 'where there is secrecy is guilt.' So when circumstances terminated our friendship so abruptly that when we met again, after my brother died, and I succeeded to his title, I did not think it worth while to enlighten them as to my identity."

His voice was cold, proud, almost stern, and for a moment no one could find a word to say.

The weight of a guilty conscience kept Mrs. Fleming speechless, and Annette was struck dumb with fear of what might happen next. It was a tragic moment for all, even Mrs. Hill-Dixon, who began to see, from all those blanched faces and frightened eyes, that there was something uncommon in the air.

Royall Sherwood, his wan and wasted face as ghastly as a dead man's, stole a furtive glance at his wife.

Daisie did not return the anxious glance. She was lily-white, and her great blue eyes, dark with suppressed emotion, dropped to the little hands that were tightly clasped in her lap. The quivering red lip was held in by the convulsive pressure of pearly teeth.

Reed Raymond, pallid and alarmed, looked on in silence, like the rest, dreading, like Annette, what might happen next.

The silence was so profound and embarrassing that Mrs. Hill-Dixon had to come to the rescue with a tinkling little society laugh, as she exclaimed:

"Well, you have certainly given our friends a great surprise!"

Mrs. Fleming gasped, and recovered herself, twittering sweetly:

"Lord Werter, I saw through your flimsy disguise last night, and was only waiting for you to declare your identity and renew old friendships."

He laughed absently, without answering, and she saw that he was stealing a furtive glance at Daisie, who still did not look up from the little hands she seemed to be inspecting beneath her lowered lashes. She appeared indeed cold and indifferent.

But it was not hard to guess that she was putting the sternest restraints on herself, fighting down her rebel heart, lest she should cry out before them all that she had been tricked and deceived, torn asunder from the love of her life, and the cruel truth was breaking her tender heart.

Again Mrs. Hill-Dixon, seeing and wondering at the strange pallor on every face, came to the rescue, rising, with a rustle of silks and laces, and saying:

"Indeed, Dallas, we must be saying good-by, for I am due at a reception within ten minutes."

Every one rose with suppressed sighs of relief to see them go, and then Lord Werter said quietly:

"Give me five minutes of your time, Cousin Elinor, to shake hands with my friends, for I am leaving to-morrow for California, and shall not see them again before my return to Europe."

It was a promise to go out of their lives forever, and all understood it so; but did they guess that he touched hands with all just for the privilege of holding one minute in his own those cold fingers of his dear lost love, sweet Daisie? If they did, who could grudge him that small boon, when he had been cheated of so much?

She was the last one to whom he spoke, and his farewell words to her were brief as to the rest. Only the lingering handclasp, close and meaningful, told to her own heart a story plain as words of a love that, though hopeless, would last forever, and their swift farewell glance had in it all the pathos of life's despair.

British Coal Miners Defy Public Sentiment.

General Strike Plans Arranged For Monday---Irish Outbreaks Increasingly Numerous--A Wrangel Not Beloved by the Bolsheviks---Australian Political Situation in a Bad Mess.

STRIKE INEVITABLE.

LONDON, Sept. 21. Falling an eleventh hour development, virtually every coal mine in the United Kingdom will be idle next Monday, a meeting of delegates from all districts having this afternoon accepted the report of the executive committee of the federation, to the effect that nothing had been achieved by negotiations to prevent a strike.

NOTHING TO STOP STRIKE.

LONDON, Sept. 21. The Executive Committee of the Miners' Federation informed representatives of the men to-day, that in the opinion of the committee nothing had taken place during its negotiations with the government to justify the prevention of a strike of the miners at the expiration next Saturday of the strike notices previously handed in.

NUMEROUS OUTBREAKS IN IRELAND.

LONDON, Sept. 21. Numerous clashes, resulting in deaths and serious injuries, continue in various parts of Ireland. Latest reports received this morning recorded the shooting of Sergeant McGuire of Perbana, 11 1/2 miles south east of Athlone, while making an arrest. McGuire was taken to a hospital in a critical condition.

WRANGLER WINS STRATEGIC POSITION.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Sept. 21. General Wrangel's latest cavalry drive against the Bolsheviks in Russia has won his valuable strategic positions on the railway, and resulted in the capture of more than 2000 prisoners and quantities of supplies, it is reported in advices from Crimea.

MACSWEENEY'S CONDITION.

LONDON, Sept. 21. Mrs. MacSweeney, who visited her husband this evening, said that his condition was very bad indeed, he was in great pain and had not spoken all day. He was still conscious, however. A later bulletin issued by the Irish Self Determination League, says the Lord Mayor's condition is unchanged. He is still in a very prostrate condition but conscious.

AUSTRALIAN POLITICS IN CONFUSION.

LONDON, Sept. 21. The Times' Melbourne, Australia, correspondent says that Sir Joseph Cook, Navy Minister, will succeed Sir Andrew Fisher as Australian High Commissioner in London. A special correspondent of the Times wrote "confusion and uncertainty rule the federal politics of Australia. The party in power, the National party, is the survivor of a coalition formed by Premier W. H. Hughes in the days when the conscription controversy tore him from the bosom of labor and flung him into an alliance with his lifelong opponents, the Liberals, led by Sir Jos. Cook. With the war over the bond of that union seems to grow increasingly irksome."

FAVOURS IMPERIAL PREFERENCE.

TORONTO, Sept. 21. After a spirited discussion on the question of Free Traders Protection, the Congress of the Chambers of Commerce of the Empire to-day passed a resolution in favor of Imperial preference by a vote of 83 to 21. A. Barton Kent, of London, Eng., said: "It was not until a tariff was imposed that we became great, it was not until Germany imposed a tariff that she became great."

Depression in Sugar Market.

Was Hardly Looked for at This Time—More Sellers Than Buyers.

A decline of $2.00 per hundred announced in the price of sugar brings the price down to $22 basis, Montreal. The majority of those in the trade were hardly looking for this decline at the present time, says Canadian

Grocer, in view of the fact that the refiners had guaranteed prices to wholesalers and manufacturers until October 1st, and also that refiners had stated that they still had large quantities of raw material bought at the high figure. The Board of Commerce, who met the sugar refiners last Thursday, is taking the credit for this decline, but whether this is a fact, refiners' representatives refuse to say. In so far as the guarantee of prices is concerned, refiners' representatives in Toronto stated to Canadian Grocer that they were to live up to their agreement and reimburse any wholesaler or manufacturer who bought sugar from them at the high price after the guarantee went into effect. This then is the present situation. Everyone who has sugar is anxious to sell, whereas a few months ago everyone was buying. Wholesalers and refiners generally are of the opinion that it will take from four to six weeks to clear up the available second-hand supplies and by that time the heavy season for sugar will be past. This is the same condition that has brought the sharp break in the United States market. Refined sugar is quoted across the border by the refiners on a basis of 17 cents, although at the same time sugar has been selling from day to day from second-hands at varying prices from 14 1/2 cents to 16 1/2 cents.

Obituary.

ALICE MURPHY.

There passed away, at Bay de Verde, on Sept. 4th, Alice, the beloved partner of Patrick J. Murphy. Death was not unexpected, for during the past eleven months Mrs. Murphy had been a mild patient sufferer of that dread disease, Consumption. As the old proverb says, "In the midst of life we are in death," so with the deceased. At the early age of twenty-eight she was called to her eternal reward. In life she was kind, gentle, and charitable and beloved, her home being open to share its hospitality with all. It is with sincerity that we express our sympathies with her husband in this hour of his distress, when God has been pleased to call from him his life partner. Mr. Murphy, who was one of Bay de Verde's most popular and obliging citizens, has been dealt a very severe blow, one that it will take years for him to overcome.—Com.

Some Almanac.

Almanacs are by no means recent invention. In fact, there is one in the British Museum at present which was issued during the reign of Rameses the Great, and is above three thousand years old. In those good old days, almanacs were worth having. Instead of just telling you that Monday was the 1st of April, it went the whole hog, and said that on that day you mustn't start on a journey, or look at a rat, or go outdoors before daylight, as these things were unlucky. This useful little affair, which is written on papyrus, was prepared for a period of four years, and contained the dates of all the Egyptian feasts—of which there are a considerable number in each year.

League Football.

In the league football match, between the C.E.I. and Saints, played last evening, the game resulted in a draw, each side scoring one goal. Mr. J. Irvine acted as referee. Owing to the C.L.B. Sports taking place this evening the B.I.S. and Cadets game has been postponed.

Servants of the City.

HUMAN INTEREST STORY OF THE PART GAS AND OTHER PUBLIC UTILITIES PLAY IN DAILY LIFE.

By E. I. LEWIS.
(Chairman Indiana Public Service Commission.)

There was excitement, especially among the little folks, in our neighborhood this morning. The stork had brought Duffy a new little sister. The news was brought in at breakfast by Davy Willis. "It must have been the flapping of the stork's wings," was his version of it, "that woke me up at 2 o'clock."

All the electric lights were on over at Duffy's, and mother was called by telephone and hurried across. She told father that the stork was not expected so soon, but that the telephone girl had found him at Shelbyville, and he hurried home on the inter-urban. She told father that they had telephoned for two doctors and two nurses. She said they had plenty of light and water and that Mary—that the girl—had to heat water and that on the gas stove. At 4 o'clock mother came home and sent telegrams. They said "It's a girl!"

Just a simple, homely story. Life, death, sickness, accident, the unexpected or expected occurs every minute in a great city. Duffy's father may be away, but no matter the second, the telephone girl must be ready to answer the call; electricity must be at the wire's end, ready, at finger pressure, to give the surgeon "plenty of good light"—as Davy's mother had said was needed; pure water that will cleanse the newborn or soothe the wound, must gush forth when the faucet is turned; gas must stand ready to heat; the telephone to carry the message of joy or sorrow; transportation systems must hurry home the absent. At any moment, any hour, all those servants must respond.

Taxpayers maintain police and fire departments, schools, parks, libraries.

But when Duffy's little sister came unexpectedly between 2 and 4 o'clock this morning, or last week when Uncle Charles died, were any of these functions of the city brought into play? Or when Brother John was married last month?

Schools could be closed for some time, police courts and even council meetings dispensed with for some days, and it is possible that even the fire and police departments might take a day's vacation without anybody noticing it.

But—the instant pure water ceases to flow through a city, death summons the hearers. If anything—such, for example, as exhaustion of coal supply—should happen to the great electric plants, not only would lights go out, but machines in factories would go dead, elevators which be deprived of that work which is life not alone to them but life and order to the city.

If street cars do not move, the modern city becomes stagnant and disorganized.

Confusion would be born if telephones should go dead.

The city faces starvation when gas falls.

The modern city has become dependent on its water, gas, electric, street railway, telephone and other utilities. These are the modern city's vital functions—its great servants. They must be kept healthy so that when the call comes, no matter the moment or hour, they may meet the demand.

All stand through every minute of the year ready to serve, and they do serve, for very low wages. All of them, often for less than the lady for chocolates, or the family for the movies or for gasoline.

Ginger or Jinja.

Somehow Jinja seems to amuse people, as the name of a place, says a writer in Blackwood, at least he finds that when you speak of it to anyone unfamiliar with the place, he or she usually laughs and says, "Jinja? How do you spell it?" Yet Jinja is far from a joke, on a still night in the great heat, when there is a steep hill to climb; then indeed one is apt to wish that the little bungalows were not so far above the little pier that thrusts out into the still waters of the great Victoria Nyanna. It was from Jinja that the journey was made to Refaj, and we are given a picture of the country through which Andrew Balfour, C.B., C.M.G., passed to the source of the Nile. "The sward slopes gently to the west to the gorge where the Nile has its birth, where it leaps into being amongst black rocks, and spray, and cormorants and countless fish—where gliding from the mighty lake it gathers force and impetus—when penned between high banks it takes a river's form, and encounters the first of its many barrages, plunges over and across it. It is a wonderful sight, this birthplace of the Nile, wonderful as viewed from Busoga, as one journeys from Jinja."

Mrs. G. Stanley Garland will be at home to her friends at her mother's residence, 131 Casey Street, on Wednesday and Thursday, Sept. 22nd and 23rd, from 3 to 6 o'clock.—sep21,2t

Head Hunters

Now Peaceful.

The first tourist party ever to invade the mountain fastnesses of the headhunters of Formosa has just returned to Japan. The leader of the party, Dr. H. H. Powers, of the Bureau of Universal Travel, when seen at the Imperial Hotel, said that he received the impression that Japan in Formosa is doing one of the finest bits of colonial administration in the world.

The party which sailed from Nagasaki for Keelung on an O. S. R. steamship a few weeks ago consisted of ten persons. Four of the party remained in Taihoku, but Dr. Powers and five ladies, one of them 65 years old, penetrated into the interior of Nanto Province, practically in the centre of the island. They reached a village called Musha, inhabited by headhunting aborigines, fifty miles from a real railroad. Most of the journey from the railway was made on push cars, which run on light railway tracks, about 18-inch gauge, and are pushed by coolies. The last few miles the party had to walk. According to Dr. Powers, only two white women are known to have penetrated so far before.

In this village the American tourists were struck by the strange spectacle of the children of the headhunters in school doing their sums in both Arabic and Japanese numerals. One lad was sent to a large map of the United States, and when told where the members of the party came from pointed out the locality on the map. The schools are conducted in the Japanese language.

The Governor of Nante Province, Dr. Powers said, impressed him as a wide awake administrator with a real desire to help the people he governed. He conceived the idea that all the police administration of his province should be in the native tongue, and as a starter he sent one of his young policemen, a Japanese, up into one of the mountain villages and told him to stay there until he learned the language. The policeman returned safely after four months, having mastered the very primitive native tongue, and since then that policeman has instructed every other jussa that has gone into the district.

The headhunters are also being taught some of the principles of agriculture. Dr. Powers was shown a model truck garden in one of the villages in which the policemen of the post showed the natives how to cultivate vegetables and fruits. He was told of a new "police post" that was to be established, in which the force was to be composed entirely of graduates of the Imperial College of Agriculture and which would in reality be an agricultural experiment station.

The aborigine tribes of Formosa are, in Dr. Powers' opinion, fine racial stock fully worth the effort to civilize them. Dr. Powers, who is famous as a world traveler, said that he had always thought the efforts of more advanced races to "save" the few remnants of the savage races of the world were mere "puttering" and wasted effort, but that he came away from Formosa convinced that the Japanese are accomplishing this work in a manner that compares favorably with the best colonial administrative work to the credit of the British Empire or of the United States. Missionaries in the island had told him, he said, that it was impossible for one who had not seen it to conceive of the transformation that the Japanese have wrought in Formosa in the quarter of a century they have held it.

"I shall do everything I can," said Dr. Powers, "to encourage Americans to visit Formosa and see the work the Japanese are doing there. There is scenery there that compares with any in the world. It is a comfortable railway hotel in Taihoku and everywhere in the interior there are clean, comfortable Japanese inns. No matter how far one goes from the main track one is sure to find some sort of Japanese inn."

The party which Dr. Powers took to Formosa has now gone to Karuzawa for a month's stay. Meanwhile their leader will take another party of American tourists through Japan and then the two parties will be joined for a tour of China.

For Footballers.

The Rev. Canon Shearna, author of that entertaining book, "Lively Recollections," tells an amusing story of a certain footballing parson who was very popular in the Midlands with Aston Villa supporters, seeing that he occupied a front position on their stand most Saturdays.

Consequently a lot of them turned up to hear him when he preached a special sermon which time that famous club won the Association Cup.

It will be a good Biblical exercise (says the Canon) for readers to find the text he chose. It is in the Bible all right: "Then Elisha said 'Shoot!' and he shot."

Royal Authors.

From King David to the Queen of Roumania.

The Queen of Roumania, who is rehearsing her own play, is the latest in a long list of Royal writers which includes David at one end of time and the Mediterranean and George V. of England at the other. And between the collected poems of King David and the collected speeches of King George there are to be found Royal writers dabbling in every kind of authorship from classical poetry to "ad."-writing.

James I. of Scotland, who wrote a poem that has become a classic, occupies naturally the most considerable place in literature. On his way to France to be educated he was captured, and held prisoner here in England for eighteen years. His captivity was not too rigorous and gave him opportunity to read Dan Chaucer and to fall in love with Lady Joan Beaufort, a combination of events that made literature the richer by his finely-wrought love poem "The King's Quair."

A Nest of Singing Birds.

His household, too, was a nest of Royal singing birds. Three of his six daughters became famous; Marguerite, married to a neglectful Dauphin, wrote French rondeaux; Isabel, Duchess of Bretagne, wrote a fine elegy on Marguerite's death; whilst Eleanor, who married an Austrian Archduke, became the accepted model for German authors by her translation into the vernacular of an old French romance. It must not be forgotten, too, that the first English prose writer was a king: Alfred was his name. Asser his tutor, and Winchester his scriptorium. Eight centuries lapse into limbo before we reach the Royal "ad."-writer, Charles II. who, in the Mercurius Politicus of June 28th, 1680, advertised for "a smooth black dog, less than a greyhound, with white under his breast."

Henry VIII's Polemic.

The most successful Royal writer was undoubtedly Henry VIII, for his polemic against Luther extended the Royal title to "Fidel Defensor," which has been borne by every English monarch since it was bestowed by Leo X. in 1521. James I. of England, as well as James I. of Scotland, was a prolific writer, his best-known work being the "Counterblast to Tobacco."

But unfortunately courtiers have often been too kind to kings, and have ascribed to them credit which a more critical world has refused. For instance, just after Charles I. was beheaded there appeared "Eikon Basilike," which he was said to have written whilst in prison awaiting his doom; but the prayers and devout meditations were the work of John Gauden, Bishop of Exeter, "to vindicate the King's wisdom, honour, and piety." Louis XIV. also allowed to be published a work of which he was supposed to be the author. A critic into whose hands it fell handled it with tact as well as truth, for his critique ran: "If this work is by His Majesty, it is above criticism; if it is not, it is beneath notice."—John O'London.

A "Find" in Westminster Abbey.

A most interesting discovery has just been made in Westminster Abbey. On the north side of the great shrine of Edward the Confessor, that magnet of Royal tombs, some incised lines in the pavement have come to light. There is little doubt that they are the signature, so to speak, of one of the strangest episodes in our Royal history. Henry VI, who loved the Abbey, wished to be buried there, near the Confessor and near to his great father, the victor of Agincourt, who lay in a splendid tomb over which hung (as they still hang) his shield and helmet.

The King Orders His Tomb.

He had been King of England at the age of nine months, and was only thirty years of age when he began to think of his tomb, though he was to reign twenty years longer. He came to the Abbey again and again to choose the spot where his bones should lie. On the last occasion he entered the Chapel of the Confessor with Prior Plete, and then after praying at his son's tomb went up into the Chantry above it and spent an hour in thought. When the conversation was renewed it was agreed that the reliquary of Edward the Confessor should be moved, so as to give space for a new tomb on the north side of the shrine. The final scene, which is so strangely recalled to-day, is thus described by Dean Stanley in his "Memorials of Westminster Abbey":—

The master-mason, Think, by name, took an iron instrument, and traced the circuit of the grave on the pavement. Within three days the Relics were removed, and the tomb ordered. The "marbler" (as we should now say, the statuary) and the copper-smith received forty groats for their instalment, and gave one groat to the workmen, who long remembered the conversation of their masters at supper by this token.

After all, Henry never filled this grave. He died tragically in the Tower on the night in which Edward IV. entered London in triumph. Next day his body was lying in St. Paul's Cathedral, his face exposed for all to see, and afterwards was taken up the river on a barge to be laid in Chertsey Abbey. The marks of John of Thirsk's

The Association has been formed to build houses to rent. These houses will be let to tenants at reasonable rentals or will be sold to tenants on easy terms of payment.

Additional objects of the Association are: To remove tenants from houses which are unfit for human habitation to homes of health and comfort; to destroy all hovels within the city; to adopt a proper town planning scheme; to lay out modern streets with a perfect system of sanitation; and to rebuild certain sections of the city gradually so that workmen can live with their families amid cheerful surroundings.

The proceeds of the sales of houses bought by tenants will be reinvested in Government securities to provide a redemption fund to pay off the Capital.

The programme outlined by the Company is to build one hundred houses during the year 1921. In order to carry out this work the Directors make an appeal to the people of Newfoundland to take up the necessary Shares without delay, so that arrangements can be made with Lumber Mills and Contractors for work to be done. The one hundred houses will be built on Merry Meeting Road, in accordance with a Town Planning Scheme, prepared by the City Engineer and adopted by the Municipal Council in 1919. The thirty houses to be built by the Company this year and now nearing completion, will give the public an idea of the class of house to be erected. A more suitable site for a garden suburb would be difficult to find, it being situated in the country and yet within ten minutes' walk of Water Street.

To live in a suburb of this sort with pure air, plenty of space around the house, and modern interior sanitation and improvements is to ensure health for the residents who will realize to the full the advantages of good living. In a Garden Suburb children thrive, they grow up vigorous in mind and body; their daily association with trees and flowers, birds and all the manifold delights of nature develop in them a love of all things beautiful and a better understanding of life.

We appeal to the public to subscribe the Capital without delay for the erection of one hundred houses to be built and ready for occupation before the end of the year 1921.

BREAD ON THE WATERS.

RUTH CAMERON

Isn't it a funny feeling when things one has said come back to one out of the mouths of those to whom one has said them, in a way which shows the speakers have no idea where they got the opinions, or the facts, or what ever it is they are handing to like, you give away or pass on an opinion that you do like. And it's nice to have our opinions liked, isn't it? It is said that imitation is the sincerest form of flattery and of course his is a kind of imitation.

But to Be Guilty of It!

But whereas it is a form of flattery that one doesn't mind receiving, one hardly likes to give it, does one? It's a mighty good thing to pick one's audience carefully when one is going to air some borrowed or second-hand plumes. Not, of course, that anyone who reads this would need such a warning.

Meat Kiddies Should Not Eat.

Two friends of mine dropped in for afternoon tea the other day, and as usual we talked of shoes and ships and sealing wax, of cabbages and kings—and, of course, of books.

Sure Barrie Wrote It.

The immortal Daisy Ashford came up and one of my guests gave the opinion that her book was unquestionably written by Barrie or at least edited up by him, because there were too many of the funny little "double entendres" to have merely happened. For the rest, she thought it might have been the work of a child but that settled it. The other friend said little, but I noticed a quiet smile on her face as she listened. After the first woman had gone I asked her what she was smiling at, and whether she had any inside information.

"Oh, yes," she said. "What amused me was that every word Mrs. B. said was what I said to her a week ago at Mrs. B.'s tea. At that time she said she thought Daisy Ashford really wrote the book, but apparently she liked my opinion better than her own, 'certainly am flattered.'"

True Flattery.

She had reason to be, didn't she? In one way these opinions so gracefully returned to one are like the Christmas presents or the Christmas cards that occasionally return to their original givers by devious routes. But in another way they are quite different—for whereas you pass on a Christmas present you don't

Pork and veal should be rigorously barred from the children's menu as too rich and indigestible. If you have these for the grown-ups, it is better to let the kiddies do without meat for that meal, and substitute a vegetable soup or entree of some kind. Do not give children warmed-up meat. After a second cooking the goodness is out of it, and the children are merely eating a substance which is neither very tasty nor at all satisfying. If you "hash" cold meat, let the children have some of the gravy and vegetables, but do not give them the meat.

Rabbit is quite wholesome for children, and chicken, of course, is an ideal dish, but that is beyond the means of most of us.

This Week's Wisdom.

A woman who isn't curious is a curiosity. The mightiness of the pen is due to the ink. The wise man and the fool's money are soon united. The woman who buys things has but little time for shopping. Sometimes a man's past takes a short cut and heads off his future. "Try, try, try again" is the motto of many an actress who finds marriage a failure. It is difficult for a young man to understand what attractions his sister has for other young men.

Her Weight to an Ounce.

With a view to letting nothing escape her vigilance, Mrs. Muggins cross-examined the prospective housemaid, cook and general help all in one.

"You are quite certain you know your duties thoroughly?" she said, after deciding to engage her. "You will answer the door to visitors, and wait at table, and—"

"Oh, yes, mum," said Mary Jane. "I'm quite sure I will know how to go about them."

Mrs. Muggins was on the point of turning away when a thought struck her, and she suddenly swung round to the girl.

"Oh, by the way, do you know your way to announce?"

"Well, mum," replied Mary Jane, innocently, "I'm not sure about that, but I think I know my weight to a pound or so!"

THE BIG SIGN.

WALT MASON

They've put a monstrous wooden sign, where it obstructs my view; I cannot see the sunlight shine upon the waters blue. The sign appeals to passing rubes, and asks them for trade; it says, "Eat Bulger's Tires and Tubes—the Kind that Mother Made." Before I lay aside the lyres whose strings I madly scratch, I s'pose I'll buy a thousand tires, with inner tubes to match. But take this statement from my hand, and paste it on your chest: In tires that bear the Bulger brand I never will invest. For Bulger's sign offends my eye and makes my spirit sore, shuts out a section of the sky, degrades the blue sea's shore. I show that signboard to my friends, and they get mad with me, and say, "Our trade with Bulger ends, when crimes like this we see." Old Bulger's tires may be as fine as any casings made; but when he raised that beastly sign, he lost, for keeps, my trade. I'll toil along on weary limbs, or drive two claybank mares, or run my car upon its rims, before I'll buy his wares.

THE COMMON HOPE.

I don't know how to say it, but somehow it seems to me That with all our different habits, we are just one family. Underneath the robes of fashion or the overalls of toil The seeds of good are sproutin' in the self-same kind of soil. An' the weeds are there a-plenty, but the last, conclusive test Will show that everybody here has tried to do his best.

In the things that count, we're brothers. Though we differ as we will, An' some have more of money, an' some have greater skill, An' some know more than others, an' some face more of strife, We're all of us endeavorin' to make the most of life.

An' there's no man but is plannin' every minute of the day For his children an' their future an' their right to romp in play.

The humblest man among us takes his youngster on his knee An' dreams his splendid vision of the man he's going to be; The joys he wants to give him are the very self-same joys Which you hold to be the blight of your little girls an' boys. An' as you would slave to serve them through the years which are to be An' guarantee their comfort to the end, so, too, would he.

He shares the self-same sorrow when his loved ones suffer pain, Rejoices just as you do when they come to health again. Is hurt by disappointment and is cheered by happiness An' is striving just as you strive for the things men call success. Oh, I don't know how to say it, but how'er a man be dressed An' whatever be his failure, he has tried to do his best.

Fads and Fashions.

Wired tunics of metal lace will be worn over satin slips. Vestee, collar and cuffs should match in fine net or lace. Brilliant-colored wool capes are worn more than sweaters. Emerald green and mauve continue to be much in demand.

The Effect of the Government Fishery Regulations

ON THE TRADE OF NEWFOUNDLAND.

The fishery regulations put in force by the Government last year have been the cause of heavy losses on fish shipments. Last fall the appointment of George Hawes as the sole medium through which fish had to be sold to Italy proved very disastrous to Newfoundland shippers and was really the forerunner of the trouble. Mr. Hawes, on account of his position, made an attempt to fight the Consorzio of Italy. While the fight was going on, cargoes of fish which should have gone to Italy, were landed in Spain and kept the latter market well supplied, so that when the fish that was intended for Spain arrived it could not find buyers and had to go into the stores to be sold on consignment, with the result that a few weeks ago there were Sixty Thousand quintals of Newfoundland fish in Spain on which the shippers will lose not less than six dollars per quintal, or six hundred thousand dollars. This is based on the prices at which fish was selling in July. But with the new fish going in, the old is sold there will of necessity be a further decline in the value of old fish which will make the loss considerably more. There is, in Spain at the present time, fish that was shipped in September, 1919, which is not yet cleaned up.

If the fish which was intended for Italy in the early season had gone there, it would have left the Spanish market open for the Spanish fish, with the result that Spain would have been clear of old fish this spring and would be now asking for cargoes of new fish. The first steamer cargo of fish in casks sold to Italy last year was shipped by the s.s. Buchanan late in the season. This steamer was held up in Spain for some time under demurrage, waiting for George Hawes to fight the Consorzio, therefore the demurrage which the shippers had to pay Messrs. Job Bros, the owners or agents of the Consorzio, more than consumed the profit on the cargo, and the shippers came out with a loss. In every case in previous years the first steamer cargoes to Italy have returned to shippers handsome profits. After Mr. Hawes finally came down to the terms of the Consorzio, the quality of the fish which was sold was not suitable for Italy. It was a quality suitable only for Oporto. On some cargoes sold to the Consorzio, heavy claims were made. On one small saller cargo alone, in Italy, six thousand five hundred pounds sterling was allowed the buyers on account of unsuitable quality. There were also heavy allowances on cargoes in Italy.

The terms of payment enforced on Brazil buyers by the Government regulations, also caused the exporters to lose very heavily. There are two large houses in Pernambuco which have been practically taking all the fish which goes to Pernambuco and Macao. These houses are very wealthy. The payment for cargoes was always made by sixty days sight draft. Last year the Government made the terms of payment cash deposited here in St. John's. One of the buyers, as a result, imported 60,000 drums less than they did the year before. We lost the sale of over six thousand quintals to one buyer alone. When the most of the cargoes, which went forward, were paid for here in cash, exchange was about four dollars to the pound sterling, whereas those who were fortunate enough to have sold on the old terms received $4.50 to the pound when their drafts came due, valuing the fish at $5.00 per drum, which was the lowest price at which fish sold for Brazil, those who got cash here lost 50c. on the pound or two dollars and fifty cents on a drum—a cargo of five thousand drums, realising to dred dollars less than it should, the shipper twelve thousand five hundred thirty cargoes at this rate gave a loss on exchange alone $375,000.

There was no excuse in the world for enforcing such terms of payment on these wealthy concerns in Brazil, and at the same time allowing all shippers to Hawes to make sixty day draft on Hawes & Co. for only part of the value of the cargoes. At times Hawes & Co. must have had acceptance running into hundreds of thousands of dollars, many of these drafts being extended after the expiration date.

If there had been no interference in fish exports last year, Spain would have been clear of old fish this spring; Brazil would have consumed all the fish suitable for that market; we would have had foreign fish buyers, our friends instead of our enemies, and to-day shore fish would be selling in St. John's at twelve dollars per quintal, and all the merchants bidding against each other to get off the fish cargoes to catch the early market as in past years. Instead of twelve dollars, shore fish is averaging about seven dollars and very few buyers. Five dollars per quintal off our catch of fish, say 1,250,000 quintals, means a loss to the fishermen of this country and to the fishers of Six Million, Two Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars.

The whole trade is now demoralized, and exporters are afraid to stock up at even the present prices, fearing that fish will even yet be lower in St. John's, caused by the holding back of fish which should have been eaten. Exporters are also afraid to store fish subject to the dictation of Hon. W. F. Coaker, who might some day say, you have broken the regulations, and without troubling to investigate, cancel the export license and leave the fish in the hands of the exporters here.

The statement of Hon. W. F. Coaker, that the season is yet early for supplying fish, is wrong and misleading. Prior to the war and during the continuance of the war, when steamers were available for charter, the first cargoes of fish in casks left here about the first part of September. Sometimes whole cargoes went to Italy direct and were landed there in September. Spain also got steamer cargoes in September.

The Government regulations have taken the energy out of exporters, and they are afraid to speculate. They have also taken the energy and spirit out of the fishermen. All over this country to-day men who should be fishing, and always have fished in September and October, have hauled up their boats disheartened, and gone to the lumber woods and out of the country. From Placentia Bay, Trinity Bay and Bonavista Bay come the same reports. There is no doubt but that there will be at least a shortage of 250,000 quintals of shore fish for September and October, which estimated at only six dollars per quintal means a loss of another million and a half dollars.

What about the revenue for this year? Well, I am not a politician, so I will say nothing. Cargoes which were held back on the West Coast this spring, should have been marketed when exchange was $4.20 to the pound. Exchange is now $3.80, a loss of over $1.00 per quintal.

The Queen-of-the-Meadows.

English wild flowers have received all manner of names, both popular and scientific, some poetic, others prosy in the extreme, some logical reasons, others for no apparent reason at all, some well deserved, others absurdly flattering, but one plant at least has been singularly fortunate in the name bestowed upon it, and not praised one whit beyond its honest due. Happy indeed was the thought that gave to the commonest English spraea the well-merited title of queen-of-the-meadows, for no other flowers can vie with it in its tall, graceful plumes of creamy-white that spread in waving masses by the stream, and scent the very air with richest perfume. Perhaps, too, its close kinship with the royal rose has suggested its deserving so proud a title, though only the practiced eye can detect a family likeness to the queen of all the garden flowers. The likeness is there nevertheless, for all who would care to seek it, yet strangely enough the fragrance of both the rose and the meadow-sweet is to a certain degree deceptive. We have become so accustomed to associate the sweetness of such flowers as those of the clovers and honeysuckles with the richest production of delicious fragrance of the meadow spiraea, or of the pink-white roses along the hedgerow, must of necessity offer a rich feast of nectar for the bees. Such feeling, however, is really very far from the truth, for neither flower is known to produce honey-juice of any description, though bees certainly visit them and carry away their pollen. But to us it matters little just now whether nectar is

Householders are complaining of the quality of coal that is being delivered them from some East End premises. The coal is slack, wet and slaty, and not hardly good enough for a forge. Having to pay $20.00 per ton for coal is tough enough, but paying at that rate for water and rock, is beyond endurance. A visit to the Higher Levels would show that an immense amount of slaty rock has been sold, for coal. It is now scattered over the streets, householders not having any use for it will not put it in their cellars.

Trouble Brewing.

A number of cart loads of codfish from the nearby settlements were put off at various premises to-day. The cull is not at all pleasing to the owners. On the average it is half Madeira and half West Indies. Last year the Madeira would sell for No. 1, but under the new regulations, as a Torbay man remarked, "A number one fish must be glass framed." The general opinion is that in following the regulations the fish was either given too much or too little salt after washing from the knife.

One of the Litter.

There is a family in England whose patronymic is "Lindsay-Hogg." It is not a pretty name, but, with and without the prefix, there have been many famous men who have borne it, amongst them, Lords and Generals and Privy Councillors. Here is a Lindsay-Hogg story, told in an English newspaper:—

"Always try and catch the name of the lady you are introduced to for 'taking in to dinner.' It is worth while. "This is the advice of a gentleman who did not know who his dinner partner was when he asked her, with reference to a late dance that was being given a few miles off at Sir Lindsay-Hogg's country house, 'Are you going along to the Piggeries to-night?' "Oh, yes!" brightly replied Miss Lindsay-Hogg. You see, I'm one of the litter!"

Let the General Public in on the Big Event!

Editor Evening Telegram.
Dear Sir.—I understand that a subscription list has been opened to send our local marathons—Johnny Bell—to Halifax to compete in the Herald's annual 10 mile road race. Whoever was the originator of the happy idea to have St. John's represented, deserves all the encouragement and support it is in our power to give him. Now this is a matter that the general public would like to be interested in, as while some of us cannot afford to put our names on the list for anything substantial, still, at the same time, every Tom, Dick, and Harry of us would like to feel that we were given the chance of contributing our mite towards the fund.
I would therefore suggest to the management that as nearly the whole sport loving public will be present on Friday evening to see the Cadets and B.I.S. play off for the Football championship, that a good old fashioned shake-of-the-hat be taken up at half-time, and thus permit even the humblest of us to contribute our five or ten cents, and the youngsters their coppers. Feeling sure that he has the whole solid support of all shades and classes of citizens, Bell will doubtless be spurred to greater efforts in the forthcoming gruelling contest, when the pink of the long distance runners of the lower provinces will assemble for the annual meet.
Yours truly,
GIVE US A CHANCE.

The Toll of The Sea.

Gloucester's Memorial Service For Those Who do Not Return.

The annual memorial service for fishermen lost at sea was held at Gloucester, Mass., on Sunday, August 15th, and the beautiful ceremony of strewn flowers upon the water as a tribute to those who died in Gloucester's fisheries was carried out after the memorial service.

Gloucester's tribute to her lost fishermen has become famous throughout the world, and one of the most impressive passages in modern literature is Rudyard Kipling's description of the service in his "Captain's Courageous."

The roll of the dead for the year 1919 is twenty-three men, and of this number seventeen were natives of Nova Scotia, two were Newfoundlanders, two were natives of France, one Portuguese from the Azores, and one native-born American completed the tally of those who lost their lives or died while prosecuting the fisheries out of Gloucester.

Gloucester's roll of the dead invariably strikes home in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland more than it does in Gloucester itself. The men who man the Gloucester fleets are largely Canadians and Newfoundlanders, but it is pleasing to know that Gloucester's citizens pay their impressive and beautiful tribute to the fishermen lost from her port, irrespective of their nationality.

There is something indescribably sad in losing a shipmate through the perils of the sea. The suddenness of their going out into the Great Beyond makes realization of their loss difficult and the empty bunk, the vacant place at table, the flag at half-mast, and the dory without a crew all have a tragic significance to the others.

"Astray in the dory" takes a yearly toll, and is probably the most appalling of all fishermen losses. The victims leave the vessel in the bustle of "swinging 'em over" and pull off to their fishing berth with cheerful chaff and banter. Fog or sudden squalls come down and they fail to return. Hour after hour, the vessel combs the sea looking for the lost dory until at last the shipper reluctantly admits what he fears: "It's no use. They're gone." Gone! Aye, slipped out quietly, but no one dare imagine how they died!

Just as dreadful in another sense is the toll of strenuous action, when, in a reefing or furling job a man is swept overboard and drowned. Clad in heavy boots and oil-skins, the victim, washed from the mainboom footropes or off the exposed quarter by a boarding comber, has but little chance, and generally goes down ere his shipmates can swing a dory over to save him. In this case, the tragedy is visible and possibly less poignant than the quiet slipping away and never returning. Imagination conjures terrors in an unknown and unseen end.

The driving stem of the steamer crossing the Banks still remains a menace to the fishermen, and in 1919 six Canadians went to their last harbor through their vessel being run down and sunk. In this case, death came hurling out of the mist and ere the schooner's crew had time to even realize what had happened, they were struggling for life in the chill waters off Sable Island while their vessel was being ground to splinters under the bows of a large liner. Two brothers, one the skipper, and five fellows both, went "West" together that time, and the writer, penning this tribute voices his regrets in a personal way, having lived and worked in company with them during strenuous days at sea some years ago.

The grim reaper takes his toll in many ways, but invariably he plucks his victims suddenly and without warning. Maybe it is better thus, and theirs as a splendid glory in passing out with boots and oil-skins on in the flush of life, and finding a last resting place in the clear green depths upon which they lived and toiled. No headstones mark their graves, but the flowers cast upon the sea by the mourners in Gloucester are laid upon the mighty burial ground of the ocean and perchance a friendly drift may carry the blossoms to where they lie. Who knows? It is a pleasing fancy.

The list of the dead is as follows:— Patrick F. Murphy, 35 years old, single, native of Windsor Lake, Nfld., one of the crew of schr. Christine Cox, drowned in dock January 28.

Stephen McLean, 74 years old, widower, native of Guysboro, N.S., died at the Chelsea Marine hospital, February 15.

Frank Depaquar, 30 years old, native of France, one of the crew of schr. Catherine C., fell overboard in Gloucester harbor May 19, left widow and two children.

Lee Parish, 53 years old, native of Maine, single, one of the crew of schr. Helen B. Thomas, died on board the vessel off Provincetown, June 28.

Capt. Percy Ross, 30 years old, native of Digby, N.S., left widow; Ainsley Ross, 27 years old, native of Digby, N.S.; James Gardner, 50 years old, native of Argyle Sound, N.S., widower; Thomas Meuse, 42 years old, native of Belleville, N.S., left widow and eight children; Fred Fitzgerald, 25 years old, native of Comeau's Hill, N.S., single, and Joseph Harris, 28 years old, native of Comeau's Hill, N.S., left widow and three children, part of the crew of schr. Francis A., drowned by the vessel being run down by the steamer Lord Downshire off Sable Island, August 23.

Walter Brown, 28 years old, native of Nova Scotia, single, and Edmund Muise, 32 years old, native of Belleville, N.S., single, two of the crew of schr. Ethel B. Penney, went astray in their dory in a squall in South Channel, October 23.

Thomas Scott, 35 years old, native of Nova Scotia, single, one of the crew of schr. Athena, went astray in his dory in a squall in South Channel, October 23.

Fred Richards, 32 years old, native of Nova Scotia, single, Elsie Muise, 27 years old, native of Nova Scotia, single, Moses Sarette, 26 years old, native of Yarmouth, N.S., single, and Henry Merchant, 25 years old, native of New Bedford, left family, killed by an explosion of the boat Gleanser in New York Harbor, November 7.

Simon Godwin, 50 years old, native of Goldsboro, N.S., left widow and six children, one of the crew of schr. Bay State, dropped dead of heart failure on Western Bank, December 15.

John A. Simms, 21 years old, native of Newfoundland, single, one of the crew of schr. Elk, accidentally killed on board the vessel in Boston harbor, December 26.—The Canadian Fisherman.

Effects of Coal Strike.

British industry will be paralysed if the threatened coal miners' strike is not averted, and there seems little chance that it will be. Nearly a million and a quarter miners will cease labor and by doing so will force hundreds of thousands of other workers into idleness. An estimate of the number of workers in some of the industries that would be thrown out of employment gives the following figures: In the first week of the strike—chemical industry, 50,000, cotton industry 225,000, subsidiary cotton trades 75,000; in the second week—shipbuilding industry 300,000, silversmiths' trade 6,000, cotton industry an additional 225,000, and subsidiary cotton trades 75,000; in the third week—engineering works 45,000, brassfounders, 24,000, motor works 80,000, machine tool shops, 40,000, cable makers 30,000, explosive trades 30,000, boot and shoe trade 87,000, seaman 35,000, dock and riverside labor 109,000. The total, including the miners themselves, is 2,643,000. Many other trades and industries would be less seriously affected and it is probable that the coal strike would throw upwards of three million persons out of work. There is some relief, perhaps, to learn that Mr. Robert Smille, president of the British Miners' Federation has denied asking Canadian workers to join in the strike.—Sydney Post.

Wedding Anniversaries.

Roses white and roses red For the bride just one year wed. Five years wed—'tis understood Pretty presents all of wood. Ten, with jollity and din. Come the treasures made of tin. Twelve means linen soft and sheer. Fifteen, crystal bright and clear. Twenty, dishes patterned gay For the china wedding day. Twenty-five comes clear and shining. All its clouds have silver lining. Thirty is the year of pearls For the loveliest of girls. Forty is of amber mellow. Fifty is of gold so yellow. Sixty years together spent—Tenderness and sweet content. Sixtieth anniversary. Comes the diamond jubilee.

Household Notes.

Spinach molded in jelly makes an excellent salad. Whenever possible, make gravy; it saves butter. An excellent idea is to buy your soap by weight. Always cut the buttons off the discarded garment. Woolen clothing should be sunned and aired frequently. Save macaroni, rice and vegetable water for soups. Can fruit and vegetables as soon as possible after picking. Flour and cereals should be kept in mouseproof containers. Serve alligator pears with lima juice dressing. Excellent. It is said that stuffing destroys the true flavor of poultry. Even the smallest kind of fat should be saved and clarified. Creamed diced carrots are attractive served in turnip cups. For stewing use larger ones. For frying, use larger ones. Mayonnaise is the suitable dressing for a luncheon or party salad. It is economy to save the paraffin from your jelly from year to year. Raw pared apples will not discolor if sprinkled with lemon juice. Aluminum ware is best for camping—it is both serviceable and light.

Survivals in Cloths.

A large number of interesting survivals in dress illustrate the innate conservatism of humanity. Among these is the handkerchief, the original purpose of which was to hold a piece of cloth or linen around the head.

A picture exists of an Egyptian figure dated 3500 B.C., the headgear of which consists of a piece of linen with a hand tied round it that terminates in two tails at the back. A survival of that is to be found in the tails of the present day Scottish bonnet and of the sailor's cap.

Again, the clocks on stockings were originally a species of ornamentation put on to hide the seams where the stuff was joined together. The "points" on the backs of gloves were originally strips of braid to cover the seams in the gloves of early times.

Men of fashion, when they tired of particular suits of clothes, have always given them away to their servants, and the practice has resulted in some styles of servants' costumes familiar to us in modern days.

The groom, for instance, represents a gentleman of the beginning of the nineteenth century, and he still wears the belt that ladies used to hold on by when riding behind on the pillion.

The footman with plush breeches and powdered hair, is a gentleman of the time of George III.; the Sheriff's coachman, with full-skirted coat and wig, is a gentleman of the time of George II., and the Lord Mayor's coachman and suite are very fine gentlemen of the time of George III.

In the twentieth century we hand our evening clothes to the waiters who stand behind us at the dinner table.

This is to certify that I have used MINARD'S LINIMENT in my family for years and consider it the best liniment on the market. I have found it excellent for horse's flesh.

Coal Cargo on Fire.

The four-masted schooner George W. Wiswell, which was laying in the stream the past few days with a cargo of coal, which was destined for Rotterdam, will hardly proceed on her journey, as it was discovered yesterday that her cargo was on fire. A pipe that was sunk down in the centre of the coal was so hot when pulled up that it would burn one's hand. At present it has not been decided what to do with the cargo. A rumor was rife shortly before noon that the Dominion Company were negotiating for the purchase of it, but no confirmation could be had of this report. However, unless something is done quickly in the matter serious results will no doubt follow.—North Sydney Herald, Sept. 18.

No Hunger Strike Would Do for This Little N. B. Woman

Miss White Has Splendid Appetite And is Free Of Indigestion Now.

"I have never found any medicine to equal Tanlac and I would like everybody to know what a blessing it has been to me," said Miss Lillie White, of 114 Charlotte Street, St. John, N.B.

"I simply can't tell all I've suffered on account of indigestion during the last four years. Why, I couldn't even eat the lightest of foods without having terrible pains afterwards, and for hours after every meal I was bothered so much with gas that I was in perfect misery."

"I never ate anything for breakfast, and very little at other times because of what I knew I would suffer afterwards. My sleep at night never seemed to do me any good and I always woke up with a bad taste in my mouth. I had headaches that made me feel like I wanted to scream and at times became so dizzy I had to lie down to keep from falling. I always shall always be grateful to the friend who advised me to try Tanlac for to-day I am like a different woman entirely. My digestion has so improved that I can eat anything I want and don't know what it is to suffer from pains in my stomach or gas. The very first bottle did me a world of good and I have improved right along with every bottle I have taken since."

"I never have a touch of headache or dizziness now, sleep well at night, and get up in the morning feeling rested and refreshed. I have gained fully ten pounds, in weight and just feel as strong and well as can be. My mother has also been taking Tanlac with splendid results and we both think there's nothing like it."

Crime to Kiss Wife.

Madrid, Sept. 18.—A severe reprimand and warning not to let the misdemeanor occur again, has just been administered to a visitor to Madrid, who, when he assisted his wife into a cab at the door of his hotel on the Puerta Del Sol, kissed her good-bye.

A policeman led him off to face his captain, who informed the offender that ignorance of the law was no excuse, but that he had committed a serious offence against the laws of Madrid, which forbids a man to kiss any woman while in the streets of the city, with or without her consent. He, however, let the visitor off with a caution.

A Bishop's Wit.

The Rev. W. B. Money, in his newly-published "Humors of a Parish," tells an amusing story concerning Bishop Thorold.

He was (says the author) very fond of writing terse postcards. On one occasion a parson in the diocese had some curtains for the sanctuary presented to him. He was very much exercised in his mind as to whether he should put them up or not, and, like a goose, he wrote to the Bishop about it.

No reply came, so he wrote another and a longer letter. Back came the answer on a postcard: "My dear Vicar, hang the curtains."

Another Vicar wrote to him asking for leave of absence for three months to travel in the Holy Land. Back came this postcard: "My dear Vicar, you may go to Jericho."

A Fishery Not Worked.

GREAT POSSIBILITIES IN CAPTURE OF WHITE PORPOISE.

The capture of the white porpoise or the white whale or Beluga, which is said to abound in the lower Gulf of St. Lawrence, is a department of the fishing industry which presents possibilities and is particularly attractive to investors of a speculative turn of mind. In years gone by this fishery was carried on at odd times, most extensively by the Hudson Bay Company, but never on any systematic basis. It is not known that anyone is now prosecuting the industry and therefore, there is no standard to assure one that it could be carried on with success under prevailing conditions.

Some years ago the late Mr. Campbell McNab, associated with another gentleman, engaged in the industry. Their method of capturing the porpoise was quite novel, but most effective. A long lead was erected—a wall of stocks driven into the mud or sand—and so arranged that the schools when ascending the river with the tide were lead into shallow water and stranded by the receding tide. Then they were cut up, the skin and blubber removed and the flesh and bones used for fertilizer.

About thirty years ago it was reported that the most extensive fishery of the Hudson Bay Company was that of the white porpoise. At one time as many as 200 would be caught by the fishery trap described above, and as each porpoise was worth about $100, a small fortune was frequently left stranded by a single tide. From 200 to 400 pounds of blubber is yielded by each porpoise and oil of

Although the law does not prohibit the shooting of these creatures or place any restrictions on their capture, the fishery trap seems to be the only practical method. The white porpoise is an active and wily creature, and may elude other devices.

Haydn and His Misadventures in Love

(John O' London's Weekly.)
"Haydn," says Pohl, "was the first to assume absolute control in that realm of love which finds expression through musical instruments alone." But although love was the great inspiration of his art, and although he yearned for it as the crown of his life's happiness, it always either eluded him or brought in its train disillusion and disappointment.
"More Thrashings Than Food."
And yet few men have ever been better equipped to win and deserve love. It is true that he was "under-sized, with legs too short for his body." But with this physical drawback he had a handsome face, framed in his inevitable wig, "with side-curls and pigtail"—a face of great sweetness and refinement; with a broad, high brow, large and eloquent eyes; a well-moulded, aquiline nose; and beautifully shaped lips with a merry, mischievous dimple at each corner. He had, too, a manner of singular charm, a clever tongue tuned to the speech that women love, and an infectious gaiety.
"Born," to quote his own words,

"on the last day of March, 1732, in the market-town of Rohrau, in Lower Austria," the son of an illustrious wheelwright with "a spark of musical genius slumbering in his soul." Haydn began his life-struggle before he had seen his sixth birthday, when he was sent to Hamburg, to be trained in music by his relative, Johann Frankh, who gave the child "more thrashings than food."
The Hairdresser's Daughter.
Then followed years of hard work, made bitter by cruelty and semi-starvation.
Haydn carried an untouched heart to his twenty-seventh year through "innumerable mild flirtations," and then found himself helplessly and hopelessly in love with one of his pupils, daughter of a hairdresser named Keller, who, it is said, had given him a home in the days of his destitution. "She was," we are told, "a girl of no little beauty, with a very sweet, lovable nature; but she had no love to give to the young musician. Her heart and life was dedicated to the Church, and she chose the convent, not the altar."
The blow to Haydn was crushing. It is doubtful, indeed whether he ever fully recovered from it. In his grief and bitterness he vowed that he would never love again. And when the hairdresser proposed that he should marry his other daughter, he acquiesced, partly in despair and utter indifference, partly from a "sense of gratitude to his benefactor, who had fallen on evil days."
Haydn married Maria Anna Keller

in 1760. The marriage was the prelude to one of the most miserable wedded lives on record. "The lady's caprices," Carpani says, "changed the bond to chains, the pleasure to torment; and the affair went so ill that, after suffering many years, this modern Socrates finally separated from his Xanthippe."
A Tragic Failure.
Seldom, indeed, has a union been so foredoomed to tragic failure as this between the heart-broken musician and his shrewish bride. She was older than himself, and plain almost to repulsiveness; she was without a solitary grace of mind or character; "a demon of jealousy, bigoted and extravagant." Her volcanic temper and vitriolic tongue drove her husband to distraction; her outspoken contempt of his gifts was a daily humiliation and insult.
"It was all the same to her," Haydn declared, "whether I was an artist or a cobbler." His compositions she would us, one day, for curl-papers; the next, she would give them away to her cronies, the priests. For thirty-two years Haydn's life was made an inferno by this virago.
Always Trouble.
Soon after his ill-fated marriage we find Haydn blossoming into vice-chapel-master to Prince Esterhazy, attired in the splendour of light-blue and silver, with knee breeches, and peated and fussed by the ladies. But love never brought anything but trouble to the unhappy Haydn. For a time he lost both head and heart to the lovely Boselli, one of the great singers of his day. He lavished affection and costly presents on her; he ministered, an abject slave, to her vanity and her extravagance—only to be laughed at and ridiculed for his pains. And it was with relief and thankfulness that he at last turned his back on the "heartless coquette," to bask in the smiles and platonic affection of Mme. von Genzger, in whom, too late, he found his ideal woman.

Mrs. Billington and the Angles.
And thus it always was with Joseph Haydn. Love always came to him to mock him, either by its falseness and cruelty or with the fatal words "too late"—as when, during one of his triumphal visits to England, he once more lost his heart—this time to Mrs. Billington, of the beautiful face and divine voice, of whom the following story is told.
One day he went to Sir Joshua Reynolds's studio to see the portrait he had painted of Mrs. Billington as Cecilia listening to celestial music. "What do you think of it?" asked the artist. "It is indeed a beautiful picture," Haydn answered. "It is just like her, but there's a strange mistake." "What is that?" "Why, you have painted her listening to the angels, when you should have painted the angels listening to her."
Mrs. Billington was to Haydn, in his old age, an angel—as worthy of adoration, and as remote.

Quick Return to Youth.

Mr. J. J. Tobias, chancellor of the Chicago Law School, is one of the happiest men in the United States to-day, for although 71 he has found the foundation of youth through the transplanting of the interstitial glands made famous by Voronoff. But Dr. J. R. Brinkley, of Milford (Kansas), who performed the operation, has no use for monkeys like his Paris colleague. He obtained the essential gland from the more homely goat.
Dr. Brinkley's patients include a judge, an alderman, a realty man, and a journalist, but these so far have shrunk from publicity. Not so, Chancellor Tobias, who, throwing out his chest and squaring his shoulders, told an interviewer: "I feel 25 years younger. I'm a new man, full of 'pep,' strong, healthy, and ready to go on with my work. I was ill, old, and played out, but the operation has revived me." The chancellor added in a serious vein: "There has been levity over the news of gland operations, but the method should be treated with the greatest respect and admiration."
Dr. Brinkley says:—The operations are not painful. There is a simple incision. No part of the body is removed. The goat gland is simply planted to take the place of the old one. Fifteen to twenty minutes is all the time required.
TYPHOID FEVER IN CITY.—During the week three cases of typhoid fever were reported in the city. The patients were removed to hospital.

These two sketches are from photographs of Signor Frisco's amazing act, now being billed over the Keith and Affiliated vaudeville circuits.

Then the curtains of the back-drop part. The New Edison is revealed. It has taken up Signor Frisco's performance and is RE-CREATING it alone.

You can hear it in our store

—the phonograph that is featured in Vaudeville's strangest act

Perhaps you've seen it—Signor Frisco's "Magic" Xylophone Act. It's the hit of vaudeville's "Big-Time." Signor Frisco's "magic" is an Official Laboratory Model of the New Edison. We have one exactly like it. Signor Frisco's instrument is an exact duplicate of the original Official Laboratory Model, which cost Mr. Edison three million dollars to perfect. Our instrument is also an exact duplicate of this famous three million dollar original. We guarantee it to be able to give the same marvelous RE-CREATIONS of music, which Signor Frisco's Official Laboratory Model gives in vaudeville. Come in and test the astonishing realism of this instrument for yourself—in Mr. Edison's Realism Test.

The NEW EDISON

"The Phonograph with a Soul"

You've read how the New Edison has proved its perfect realism. Four thousand tests have been given, in which more than 50 different artists compared their art with its RE-CREATION by the New Edison. Leading newspapers conceded that there was no difference between the two.

Has any one suggested to you that these comparison tests are "faked"—that the artist imitates the New Edison?

Signor Frisco's performance makes such an assertion positively ridiculous. Every week, 20,000 people see his hammers ripple over the xylophone keys. Suddenly he holds them aloft—still.

The rippling music continues.

Slowly, the gorgeous curtains of the back-drop part. The audience gasps. The New Edison stands revealed. It has taken up Signor Frisco's performance, and is now RE-CREATING it alone. The effect of this extraordinary magic can rest upon only one fact: No one can distinguish any difference between Signor Frisco's performance and its RE-CREATION by the New Edison. Signor Frisco could not possibly imitate the New Edison, because the xylophone can not be made to imitate any other instrument, so as to deceive its hearers.

Signor Frisco's act is not an Edison enterprise. He has simply been clever enough to use the New Edison for what it is worth. Why don't you?

PRICES

The price of the New Edison (United States price) has increased less than 15% since 1914. This includes the War Tax.

Mr. Edison has staved off price advances by personally absorbing more than half of the increased cost of manufacture.

Because of the exceptionally high quality of materials and workmanship demanded by the Edison Laboratories, and the continued scarcity of both, it may be necessary to advance prices. But rest assured that this will not occur, unless Mr. Edison is forced to it.

Our Budget Plan—the thrift way of spending—will help you buy now. Let us tell you about it.

Railway Commissions and Other Things.

Editor Evening Telegram

Dear Sir,—With your permission I would like to refer to a matter which is no doubt of considerable public interest at the present time. Last year this Dominion was visited by an epidemic of Spanish Flu and no doubt this year of grace will go down in Newfoundland History as the year of the Commission Epidemic, the latest of which is the Railroad Commission. About a month or so ago this so styled commission took a jaunt over our Railway System, presumably to enquire into its condition and has brought back for the public to swallow, the news that the Railroad is in fair condition all over the system, and that the special train which took them along actually travelled at the rate of thirty miles per hour over some sections, but the sections affording this rate of speed—and how far the joy ride lasted—is not told. Perhaps this terrific rate of speed is accountable for one of the freight trains turning bottom up on the Port aux Basques end of the line some six weeks ago, from which the engineer and fireman had a miraculous escape, also the 10-12 hour delay occasioned one of our express trains near Millertown Junction some five weeks ago, and even of more recent date did one of our trains have some delay not many hundred miles from Kelligrews. It is wonderful! Can you imagine, Mr. Editor, a local train actually travelling thirty miles per hour. What an awful lot of grease it must have been necessary to carry on that special, to afford such speed. The most illuminating news of course is the extensive report on our coal, and at last the Reids after many years moving up and down our earth have (so we are told by the Commission) located an abundant supply of coal at South Branch; no shortage this winter Mr. Editor, no going to the Minister of Shipping with your hat in your hand for a little more than the usual allowance.

And the Commission also tells us that they actually saw four feet of coal in the Jukes Seam, and two feet in the Cleary, but more important still the Cleary areas are partly on the Reid Co. lands, in spite of the fact that these coal areas were under private ownership for twenty years before this Country had heard of the Reids. There though, Mr. Editor, we are living in such an age of enlightenment that some day we must not be surprised if we wake up and find that there was some error in planning the universe, and that when lines are run again we will really be a part of Canada.

Since the Commission condescended to tell us so much as a result of the joy ride, perhaps it will also be good enough to give us the following information:

- (1) The section of road travelled over at such a fast clip.
- (2) Full list of people who travelled on the special train at any time during the trip.

When the above information is given public, it would be interesting to know if Mr. Coaker and the Government Engineer are the only two representing the Colony in this Commission, and if so what about appointing Mr. Hawes as a third party, as he doesn't seem to be doing much with fish at the present time, and could probably combine both.

This suggestion is not made through doubt of Mr. Coaker's ability or because he is the only Newfoundlander on that commission, for I am sure no one could doubt the ability of the Poor Man's Friend and worthy exponent of fishermen's rights.

"O wad some Pow'r the giftie gie us To see oursel's as others see us; It wad frae many a blunder free us, And foolish notion."

During the next few days the public will probably be afflicted through the columns of the press with Mr. Coaker's Diary of the recent Joy Ride. Of course it is only natural to expect it. He did, you know, write of a trip to Ottawa not many years ago, in which we have been told through the columns of the press that some of the Reids were also interested.

One other individual at one time made a fast trip writing a diary of it in verse, Casey Jones to wit. But:—

"Casey said before he'd die, There were two more lines he would like to try. There were two more lines he would like to see. The Newfoundland Railway and the Santa Fee."

Casey Jones was also an authority on Railroads, and a regular speed merchant, but he died poor man; however, it will be a great disappointment if we do not find a Casey Jones in the list of guests on that thirty mile per hour special train.

In my next I will discuss sleepers and spikes, not the sleepers in the cars, oh no, excuse me, but the sleepers under the Railway Irons, and I might, if space permits, refer to Banks and Banking as referred to in the Columns of the Advocate of August 24th. Thanking you for space Mr. Editor,

Yours truly,
STEAM SHOVEL,

Beware the Soap That Leaves a Scum

You can't be too careful what soap you use, if you have fine linens, laces or other dainty, washable clothes.

Impure soaps may look just as good as the best, and just as much is promised for them. But it is the washing that counts in a soap.

If a soap is not readily soluble and is hard to rinse, leaving a film or scum—then you know that it contains fillers to load up its weight and other impurities that eventually rot the fabric.

KIRK'S

is a solid white cake of pure concentrated soap. It is readily soluble in warm or cold, or soft or hard water and cleanses, saponifies and dissolves to the last atom. For washing the most delicate fabrics, as well as for every other sort of work, Flake White is the safest and most economical soap to use. It washes quickly and thoroughly and always leaves the clothing lily white, sweet smelling and clean. Wonderful for use in washing machines.

Merinos, Llamas and Alpacas.

There are plenty of wool-bearing animals in Bolivia, merino sheep in flocks ranging from a few sheep herded by an Indian shepherd to as many as 8,000 under a single ownership; llamas, probably about 500,000 of these little cousins of the camel, and at least 200,000 alpacas, much like their near relatives, the llamas, but shorter in the legs and endowed with a softer, silkier wool. Yet it is only recently that Bolivia has begun developing a wool industry that reaches out beyond the local consumption of wool for the manufacture of woollen garments worn by the natives and exports the product to foreign markets.

Indian women, weaving in primitive fashion, shawls, ponchos, and other articles of wear, use yearly about 1,000,000 pounds of wool; and Indian men still shear the sheep with pieces of glass or sharpened tin, and so far refuse to be converted to the use of anything so modern as a pair of shears. A few years ago, says a recent examiner of the Bolivian sheep and wool situation, a hundred shears were imported, but, try as he might, the importer, could not persuade the shepherds to buy them. Methods, in short, are practically as old as the line of sheep, for the flocks that pasture throughout the highland region are descendants of the sheep brought into the country by the Spanish conquerors.

Why You Are Waterproof.

The human skin, which forms a protective covering over the whole of the body, consists of two layers, an outer one and an inner one.

The epidermis, or outer skin, is so constructed that no moisture from outside can penetrate it so long as the skin itself is not torn or cut. At the same time the pores of the skin are so formed that the sweat is freely discharged through the skin, thus ventilating the body and keeping it at an even temperature.

If someone could invent a material possessing the properties of the human skin, a material which would keep out all moisture, however heavy the downpour of rain, and yet allow for the free escape of the heat and moisture of the body, his fortune would be made.

The Legion of Honor.

Often hear about the Legion of Honor, the French order established in 1802, but we sometimes forget that the President of the Republic is ex-grand master of the order. It was in the consulship of Napoleon and the first consul was by terms of the decree "Chief of the Legion of Honor and president of the Council of Administration." The order confirmed by the Orleans and the Bourbon princes, Louis XVIII. taking the title of "Chief and Protector," the advent of Louis Napoleon, the order became Napoleon III, the order was continued and in 1853 it was signed wherein the Prince-

President was described as "Sovereign Chief and Grand Master of the Legion of Honor," and so the President of the French Republic is qualified to do.

These words gave rise to a discussion in Parliament, a subcommittee holding its first meeting in 1909 at the Ministry of Justice. It was proposed to suppress the word "sovereign" as contrary to the spirit of the republic and the speaker that raised the question called the word "dangereux." It was argued against this contention that the adjective might be "a little archaic," but did no harm to any one and besides should be retained with a view to foreign opinion. Finally, by an 11-to-3 vote, the subcommittee proposed to eliminate "sovereign," but this recommendation has never been given force and the grand master of the order is still its sovereign chief.

The grand master's collar which M. Deschanel wore as President, was made in 1881, by the Jeweler Lomolme. It is of handsome design of chased gold. The medallions enclosed in the double chain bear some of them the names of presidents that have worn it; neither Mr. Thiers nor the Marshal Del Mac Mahon's name appears on it, as the collar was not then in existence in its present shape.
