TORONTO, SATURDAY, 10TH MARCH, 1877.

A Most Remarkable Change.

As might be sung by Mr. John Macdonald, Member for Toronto.

Oh, it's true that I yelled for Protection, Against Free Trade I let my tongue range Not long since, which secured my election For Toronto, but there's been a change. Oh, there's been a remarkable change, Au extremely remarkable change, How it came to occur you yours alves may infer, But I've took a remarkable change.

And I see this remarkable thing, sir, Since the States manufacture at home, And few foreign goods need now to bring, sir, They've less ships than before on the foam.
They've less shipping; but that isn't strange,
And has not worked my wonderful change From my speech you'd think so; but it didn't; no, no. It's from elsewhere, my wonderful change.

And although I declared the depression In the States was as bad as 'tis here, Yet there's no need to make the confession That it sprung from the war, though that's clear. Not from thence my remarkable change, My extremely remarkable change. you don't as yet guess, my last verse may express Whence it came, my remarkable change.

But be warned, when you members are sending Your industries to represent here And importers you choose, such an ending As I've made, you have always to fear.

For they're apt to remarkably change Oh, its catching, this wonderful change, From our pockets it spreads till it reaches our beads, And it's got us-this wonderful change.

The Globe on the Hard Times.

"When the rabid organ of the malign MACDONALD," thus wrote the "When the rabid organ of the malign MACDONALD," thus wrote the Globe editor, in his sanctum, when he stopped, remembering that he had not yet a subject. He looked around; no help appeared. He looked above; but withdrew his gaze with a jerk which told no help was to be expected from that quarter. He looked below; he saw a pipe; 'twas of tin. A bright thought struck him; he struck the pipe-gong. "I'll ask the Devil," quoth he, and applying his mouth to the pipe he spoke.

gong. "I'll ask the Devil," quoth he, and applying his mouth to the pipe, he spoke.

Three and a five-eighths of a second later, a personage was in the apartment. He was black; he was small; his eyes rolled; his teeth (perhaps we should say his faigs) glistened. There was a smell of sulphur about him. Was it infernal? No; he had incautiously, by over close managerial contact, acquired a national and cuticular exacerbation.

ctose managerial contact, acquired a national and cultular exacerbation. Speak not of it; 'tis harmless; nay, 'tis healthy.

The editor spoke; "I want," he said, in hollow tones, "a subject." The diminutive personage answered, "'Most any Hemperor 'ud give yer one, anyway. The Porty 'ud have let yer have Midhat cheap."

"A subject to write on," shrieked the editor, "To illustrate, to expatiate, to fill columns of the Globe, and pockets of mine own. Thing, tell me what is that which now engrosses attention. Of what do the people think?

"Of the 'ard times," said the being inquired of. "There are no hard times," yelled the editor. "This is the beneficent and glorious reign of MACKENZIE, the prosperity-bestowing period of BLAKE. Did we not say, did we not promise all happiness at this conjuncture as certain? Speak not of hard times. The times are soft—they are soft. SOFT! I say!" and he defily caught the creature by the northern ear, and cast him through the door. "Begone, and wait at the pipe below!" And the door closed, and the editor opened, as follows:—

"THE IMAGINARY HARD TIMES.

"When the fiendish journal of the sardonic and annihilated Sir JOHN dares to say the times are hard, does it know what it means? It does not? Does it, we ask, does it; and we demand that it reply; we wish an answer, and will have it; does it remember the year 1857? Does it dare to say these times are hard in comparison?" (thinks how many to make hard times?" Answer comes up, "Guess six hundred might."—

"Ah,"—writes on). "Does it for a moment dare to say that, at any time during the panie of '57, six hundred tailors might not have been found out of work in Toronto? Does it contradict that well-known fact? (Shouts down pipe—"How many carpenters?" Answer, "Guess four hundred." "Ah, yes," (writes)—"Is it not a fact, verified by every annal of the period that there were never less than four hundred." dred carpenters out of employ? And the others—all the others—were they not all out of work? Would the infatuate organ say that was but they not all out of work? Would the infatuate organ say that was but one year, while the present depression lasts for many, and shows no sign of change? Imbecile nonsense! There are no hard times! If there were, would not their extension for years mitigate it, by becoming habitual? Of course. Depression—under MACKENZIE?—Nonsense! People out of work! What if they are?—lots of ways." (Shouts down pipe, "What would you do if you couldn't get anything to eat in town?" Answer, "Cut off into the country." "Of course," writes), "plenty of ways. Is there not the fertile soil of the boundless prairie? is there not the beneficent free grant in the mellow land of Muskoka? Food, food in plenty. Let the workmen, the tailors, the shoemakers, beat their needles into ploughshares; let the tailors sow the grain, let the shoemaker bind the sheaves. Who said these men will fall sick at such work? that they could not endure it—that they the grain, let the shoemaker bind the sheaves. Who said these men will fall sick at such work? that they could not endure it—that they will sooner go to the States? They must endure it. The toil is strengthening and wholesome. And if the vile newspaper of the imbecile TUPPER dares to contradict this plain statement of well-known fact, let it understand that—"(shouts down pipe, "Can a mechanic turn farmer?" Answer, "Yes; nothing to hinder him; free country," writes),—"The unanimous voice of all history, fortified by the opinions of the most able medical men of this and past centuries, declares that the artificers of the critics can with each advancement. the artificers of the cities can with ease, pleasure and comfort, become the farmers of the soil, that the road to opulence, dignity, and luxury is open to all who leave the city for the country; that it is a way of pleasantness and all its paths are peace. The hardships of the settler exist but in the epics of romance and the columns of the Mail; the early struggles in the bush are but the imaginations of the first colonists, early struggles in the busin are but the imaginations of the first colonisis, after dinner, when, gorged with roast beef and plum pudding, with champagne and sherry, they dream impossible and unheard of things. Let, then, all those who are out of work go to the country. It will only take a few hundred dollars to start on a bush farm. Does the hireling penny trumpet of the infamous McCARTHY say that they have not got that sum? Such paltry evasions— such contemptible statements, are of a piece with its usual course, which will inevitably plunge the country in misery, deluge it with debt, let the demons of discort! loose on our peaceful plains, rouse the fiends of civil war, precipitate internal commotions, invite foreign attack, destroy peace, crush prosperity, until the spirits of desolation and horror wave their black pinions over the frenzied land, and the hideous eye of PATTESON, gloating diabolic above the chaos, views triumphant the ruin he hath made."

The Catastrophe of the Rink.

Too LIGHT, too jocund for this dismal world has often been the ever animated strain of the sprightly GRIP. We would now narrate a tale of grievous woe.

They flew over the smooth ice, round and round the ample and glittering circle, dreamingly, joyfully, almost unconsciously, careless of the crowding and gyrating hundreds who skimmed, brilliant in fancy costume, before and after, round and round. "Ah, thus through life!" said Universes. "Thus through life!" sighed EMMELIANNA.

Who was Unicerus?

Who was Emmelianna?

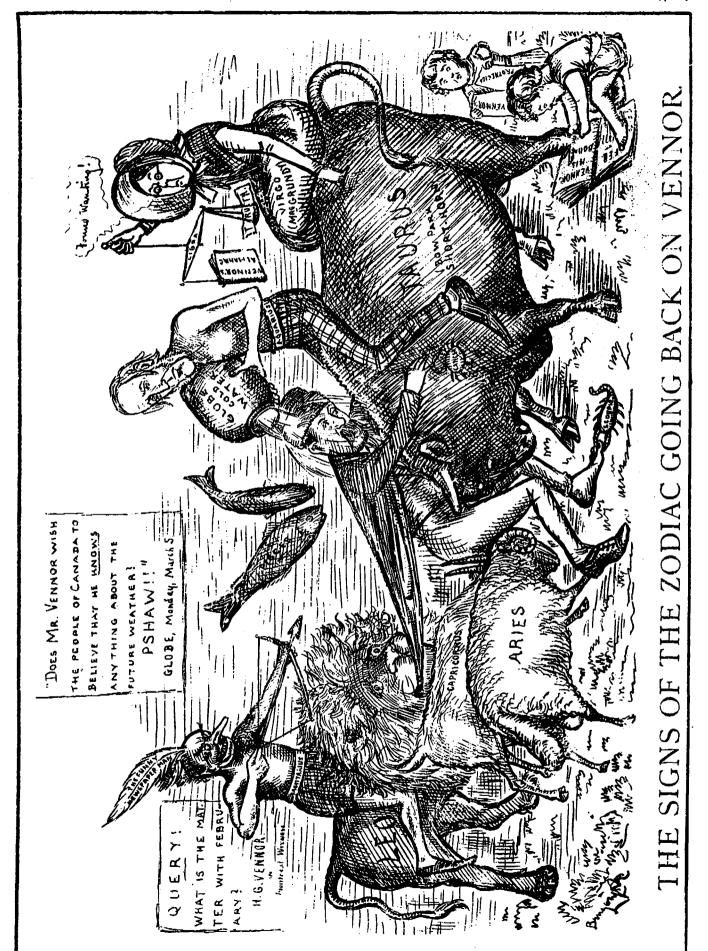

He was UNIDSKUS SQUINES, Esq., student of Trinity (it is on Queen street), with legal intentions. She was the only daughter of the fat and grocery-selling Gunp, Esq., (he is of Yonge street). But these were not thus then. Uniushus was then a rover of the Caribbean Seas, blue-jacketed, big-whiskered, broad-beited, pistolled, cutlassed, fierce, and season blue-jacketed, big-whiskered, broad-beited, pistolled, cutlassed, fierce, burneled by Statistical was the Gunna of Night worked. murderous, horrible. EMMELIANNA was the Queen of Night, masked, shrouded, dark, sombre, graceful, flitting, relieved by one gross of tin silver stars, three dozen pale pink crescents, and one dozen copperbacked glass-fronted full moons.

And they flow on, ever on, on, on, and round Turks, and athwart Ethiops, and between, among, past, through and by Henry the Eightlas, Rochosters, Flames, Stars, Clowns, Kings, Queens, Jacks, Journals, Bishops, Priests, Deacons, and others. And the lights flashed, and the colours glanced, and the music played, and ineffable affection and happiness arose in their souls, and a pain in Ennemanna's left little toe, which the buckle squeezed. But suddenly she cast her toe from her mind, and threw her eye across the room. Then she said:

But in order to explain what she said, we must say what she saw :-

And a woman.

He was Gynosus Johns, Esq., neophyte of Toronto University,

(Medical), and for the time being another Rover, even such a Rover as was also Uniuskus, only more so.

She was CICIFILIATA FORDS, distantly related to the FORDSES of Adelaide street, who kept a laundry, and were her parents. And she was a Night also, gloomier than the former Night, and having six more moons, and a white galaxy.

All this time Emmelianna has been waiting to speak. We hasten to relieve her. She said:—

What did she say?

We must prepare the reader by explaining that the purity of EMMELIANA's grammar was owing to her being educated at a Toronto public school on the Polyglot principle. She said:— " It's THEM !"

UNIUSEUS said, "It's mean! He knew I—" EMMELIANNA said, "Sho knew I—" And added, "Wish they'd get tripped!"

A dark cloud hovered lightly around the brow of the Rover Uniuseus.

It settled. His magnificently false monstache quivered. He said:-

At headlong speed they flashed forward, and bore down to meet their Hated Rivals!

Uniusgus meant to trip Gynosus. He did not succeed.

What did he do?

This was it :-

Alas, why are skate fancifully terminated at the toe. The heel was Gyno-vs gyrated; so did Unitskis. There was a supreme and thrilling moment of terrible teetotumizing—an agonizing crash—and the Rival students, affiliated now, spun horizontally over the polished supreme like a reaching shein, shet, because teams in their contents of the prophyling shein, shet, because teams in their contents of the prophyling shein, shet, because teams in their contents. surface like a revolving chain-shot, bearing terror in their course. Down had gone the rival Nights—great had been the crash, as the celestial bodies struck the terrestrial—down went Moors, Jews, and Turks, all swearing like devont Christians; on flew the Siamezed states of the course of the cou Turks, all swearing like devoit Christians; on liew the Siamezed students, experiencing the roost anazing panorama of sky-rockets, meteors, and fireworks that ever cranium meeting ice gave rise to, through which one only conviction remained to them, namely, that they were perpetual motions squaring the circle. But all things have an end; an iron broke, they separated, stopped, and were helped to perightness and consciousness; but, alas, not to happiness. The Nights had gone.

The two students lie on two sofas; their heads are enveloped in brown paper; they emit opprobrious terms, and fumes of vinegar. The Nights have changed their dresses and their admirers; the students the Nights have changed then the state of the Nights have goographics for torrid places where no ice is, and darkly plot to go thither. Afflicted Humanity drops the curtain on their Woes, and shields from the Unpitying Mockery of a Heartless World the Crushed Victims of Crooked Ironnongery and Unsteadfast Love!

The Rival Universities.

TORONTO UNIVERSITY

All who would true knowledge win At our gates may enter in. Ancient are the grants we hold, Had much land—and much have sold. Got the cash, and with it fee Good examiners, you see. Good exautments, you see.

Staffs like ours you know cannot Elsewhere in the land be got.

Would you be a lawyer keen?

Wise in pulpit would be seen?

Surgeon be of skill most rare? Fill the editorial chair? Save our stranded Ship of State?
Splendid stepping-stones, you know,
Are the honors we bestow. Are the hours we which may,
As remarks the poet GRAY,
"Freeze your souls;" know, students live On the scholarships we give.

DENOMINATIONAL UNIVERSITY.

Very true their standard's high, That's a thing we don't deny. Medals such as they give out Education prove, no doubt. High their honors we respect, But we wish you to reflect, Nothing needs to hinder you Getting theirs and ours too, Come along and free receive What we hold: you have our leave. Then you get examined there, Take their golden medal fair,

Take their scholarships, and get All you can into your net. Here you only need begin Enter, and both prizes win.

Very fair the last we heard. Come, we'll take them at their word; We shall take a good degree In this University. First their medals we shall nab Then Toronto's medals nab. Very silly we should show Chances such away to throw.

STUDENTS. - (Some years after.)

Bother; needn't go to two, This diploma here will do. Come to think, the chance is small There, of getting much at all. Life is short, and quickly we Working in its ranks would be. Let the further honors go, We shall start with what we know.

CONCLUSION.

GRIP would ask his readers, "Pray, Were it not a better way At the head of all should be One chief University? Honors thence, and thence alone, Will throughout the world be known. While, if every college still Issue, them, be sure it will Far and wide depreciate What we wish should carry weight, What we wish the world should tell "This Canadian studied well." What we wish the world should hold, True and pure as purest gold." GRIP would yet a little say,
Ere he close his humble lay:
"Small and weak the land we own, Little 'mong the nations known. Poor in riches though we be, Wealth there is to us as free As unto the broadest land, As unto the strongest hand. Learning's store is open still. Youth of Canada; it lies
Open. Know, the richest prize
Of the richest land on earth Were beside it nothing worth. It the talisman shall be Power to give o'er land and sea.
Yet, if seeking with the will,
But your trough and sty to fill,
But to eat, and sleep, and die,
As the hog, most certainly
You shall win your hoped-for store—
Wis its how shall win Win it; but shall win no more. Win, and winning, from you throw All there is to win below."

Do You observe any similarity between VENNOR'S ALMANAC and himself? Yes, they are both weather profits, and frequently sold.

WHAT can be the matter with the Port Hope Guide man? He always was a Reformer; but that can't be it? Why is he lately so furious against all the Rulers of the Earth?
